with the feeling of the iust vengeance of God sure affiance of fauour: which things do yet very well agree together, if the onely goodnesse of God raise vs vp being oppressed with our owne euils. For, as wee haue before taught that repentance and faith are knit as companions together with an vnseparable bonde: of which yet the one afrayeth vs, the other cheareth vs: so in prayers they must mutually meete together. And this agreement Dauid expresseth in fewe wordes: I (saith he) will in the multitude of thy goodnesse enter into thy house: I will worship in the temple of thy holines with feare. Vnder the goodnes of God he comprehendeth faith, in the meane time not exclud ing feare: because not only his maiestie driueth vs to reuerence, but also our owne vnworthinesse holdeth vs in feare forgetting all pride and assurednes. But I meane not such an affiance which should stroke the mind loosed from all feeling of carefulnesse with a sweete and full quietnesse. For, to rest so peafably is the doing of them which hauing all things flowing as they would wish it, are touched with no care, are kindled with no desire, do swell with no feare. And it is a very good spurre to the holy ones to call vpon God, when being distressed with their owne necessitie, they are vexed with most great vnquietnesse, and are almost dismayed in themselues, till faith come in fit time to their succours, because in such distresses the goodnesse of God so shineth to them, that they do in deede grone being wearied with weight of present euils, they are also in paine & grieued with feare of greater, yet being so vpholden by it, they both relieue & comfort y hardnes of bearing them, & do hope for escape & deliuerance. Therefore the prayer of a godly mā must arise out of both affectiōs, must also contein & shew both: namely to grone for present euils, and to be carefully afraide of new, and yet therewithall to fly to God, not douting that he is ready to reach his helping hand. For God is maruelously prouoked to wrath by our distrustfulnesse, if we aske of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothing more agreeable with the nature of prayers, than y this law be prescribed and appointed to them, that they breake not forth rashly, but folow faith going before them. To this principle Christ calleth vs al with this saying: I say vnto you, whatsoever things ye require, beleeue y ye shall receiue them, and they shal happē to you. The same also he cōfirmeth in an other place. Whatsoever ye aske in praier beleeuing, ye shal receiue. Wherwith agreeth Iames saying, If any need wisdom, let him aske it of him which giueth to al mē freely, and vpbraideth not: but let him aske in faith no douting. Wherein setting douting as contrary to faith, he doth most fitly expresse the nature of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he addeth, that they obtain nothing which call vpon God in wauering and dout, and doe not determine in their hearts whether they shalbe heard or no. Whom he also compareth to waues which are diuersly tossed and driuen about of the winde. Whereupon in an other place he calleth a right prayer, the prayer of faith. Again when God so oft affirmeth that he will giue to euery one according to his faith, he signifieth that we obteine nothing without faith. Finally it is faith that obtieineth whatsoever is graunted by prayer. This is meant by that notable saying of Paul, which the foolish menne doe take nō heede vnto. Howe shall any man call vppon him, in whome he hath nō beleeued? But who shall beleue, vnlesse he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the word of God. For conueying by degrees the beginning of prayer from faith, he plainly affirmeth that God can not be sincerely called vpon of any other, than them to whom by the preaching of the Gospel his mercifulnesse and gentlenesse hath bin made knownen, and familiarly declared.

12 This necessity our aduerfaries do not thinke vpon. Therefore when we bid the faithful to holde with assured confidence of minde that God is favorable and beareth good will to them, they thinke y we speake a most great absurdity. But if they had any vse of true prayer, they woulde truly vnderstande that God can not be rightly called vpon without that stedfast feeling of Gods good will. Sith no man can well perceiue the force of faith, but he which by experience feeleth it in his heart: what may a man profite by disputing with such men which do openly shew, that they neuer had any thing but a vaine imagination? For of what force, & how necessary is that assurednes which we require, is chieflie learned by inuocation. Which who so seeth not, he bewraiet h^y he hath a very dul cōscience. Let vs therfore, leauing this kinde of blindmen, sticke fast in that saying of Paul, that God can not be called vpon of any other, but them that know his mercy by the Gospel, and are surely perswaded that it is ready for them. For what maner of saying should this be: O Lord, I am verily in dout whether thou wilt heare me: but because I am distressed with carefullnes, I flee to thee, y thou maist help me if I be worthy. This was not the wonted maner of all the holy ones, whose praiers wee read in the Scriptures. Neither hath the holy Ghost thus taught vs by y Apostle which biddeth vs to go to the heauenly throne with confidence, y we may obtaine grace & when in an other place he teacheth that we haue boldnes & access to cōfidence by the faith of Christ. We must therfore holde fast with both handes this assurednes to obtaine what we aske (sith both y Lorde with his owne voyce so commandeth vs, & all the holy ones teach it by their example) if we wil pray with fruit. For, y only praier is pleasing to God which springeth out of such a presumption of faith (as I may so call it) & is grounded vpon a dreadles certainty of faith. He might haue bin content with the bare name of faith, but he not only added confidence, but also furnished the same with liberty or boldnes, by this marke to put difference betweene vs & vnbeleuers, which do in deede also pray to God as we doe, but at aduenture. place by the Prophet: In what day I shall cry, this I knowe that God is with me. Againe, In the morning I will direct my selfe to thee, & I will watch. For of these wordes we gather, that praiers are in vaine cast into the aire, vnlesse hope be adioyned, from whence as out of a watchtoure we may quietly waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeth the order of Paules exhortation. For before that he moue the faithful to pray in spirit at all times with wakefulness and diligence, he first of all biddeth them to take the shilde of faith, the helmet of saluation, and the sworde of the spirite, which is the worde of God. Now let the readers here call to remembrance that which I haue before said, that faith is not ouerthrowen where it is ioyned with acknowledging of our misery, needinesse, and filthines. For with how heauy weight focuer of euill doings the faithfull feele themselues to be ouerladen or grieued, and y they be not only veide of al thinges which may procure fauour with God, but also that they be burdened with many offences which may worthily make him dread ful to them: yet they ceasse not to present themselues, neither doth this feeling make them so afaire but that they still resort to him, forasmuch as there is no other way to come to him. For, prayer was not ordained, whereby we should arrogantly aduance our selues before God, or esteeme at great value any thing of our owne, but whereby confessing our guiltines, we should bewaile our miseries to him, as children do familiarly open their complaints to their parents. But rather the vnmeasurable heap of our euils ought to be full of spurres or prickes to pricke vs forwarde to pray. As also the Prophet teacheth vs by his example, saying: Heale my soule, because I haue sinned against thee. I graunt in deede y in such sayings shoulde be deadly prickings vnlesse God did helpe: but the most good father of his incomparable tender kindnes hath brought remedy in fit season, wherby appeasing all trouble, assuaging all cares, wiping away feares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea, & taking away all doutes (much more all stoppes) hee might make vs an easie way.

Psal. 64. 5.

13 And first when he commandeth vs to pray, he doth by the very same commaundement accuse vs of wicked obstinacy, vnlesse we obey him. Nothing could be more precisely commanded, than that which is in the Psalm: call vpon me in the day of trouble. But forasmuch as among all the duties of godlines, the Scripture commendeth none more often, I neede not to tarry longer vpon this point. Aske (saith our master) & ye shall receiue: knocke, it shalbe opened to you. Howbeit here is also with the commaundement ioynd a promise as it is necessarie. For though all men confesse y the commaundement ought to be obeyed, yet the most part would flee from God when hee calleth, vnlesse he promised y he would be easie to be entreated, yea & wold offer himselfe. These two things being stablished, it is certaine that whosoever make delayes y they come not straight to God, are not only rebellious & disobedient, but also are proued guiltie of infidelitie, because they distrust y promises. Which is so much more to be noted, because hypocrits vnder the colour of humilitie & modestie do aswell proudly despise the commaundement of God, as discredite his gentle calling, yea & defraud him of y chiefe part of his worship. For after that he hath refused sacrifices, in which at that time all holinesse seemed to stand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing & most precious to him aboue al other, to be called vpon in the day of need. Therefore where he requireth his owne, & encourageth vs to cheerefulnes of obeying, there are none so gay colours of douting that may excuse vs. Wherefore how many testimonies are commonly founde in the scriptures whereby we are commanded to cal vpon God, so many standers are set vp before our eyes to put affiance into vs. It were rashnes to rush into the sight of God, vnlesse he did preuent vs with calling vs. Therefore he openeth vs the way with his owne voice, saying: I wil say to them, Ye are my people: and they shall say to mee, thou art our God. Wee see howe he preuenteth them that worship him, and willeth them to followe him, and therefore it is not to be feared that this should not be a verie sweete melodie which he alluring, than that God be garniſhed with this title which may aſcertain vs him. Yea, and this wee may note in the Pſalmes, that as it were breaking his courſe of praying he paſſeth ouer ſometime to the power of God, ſome-time to his goodneſſe, ſometime to the truth of his promiſes. It might ſeem that Dauid by vnreaſonable thruſting in of theſe ſentences, made mangled prayers: but the faithfull knowe by uſe and experience, that ſeruentnes fainteth vnleſſe they put newe nowriſhments vnto it, and therefore in praying the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his worde is not ſuperflu-ous. And ſo by the example of Dauid; let it not grieue vs to thruſt in ſuch things as may reſreſh fainting hearts with new liuely ſtrength.

14 And it is wonderfull that with ſo great ſweeteneſſe of promiſes wee are either but coldly or almoſt not at all mooued, that a great parte of men wandring about by compaſſes had rather leauiug the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge for themſelues drie pittes, than to embrace the liberalitic all the places, but to chooſe out the chiefe, by which wee may take a taſte howe kindly God allureth vs vnto him, and with howe ſtreight bondes our vnthankfulneſſe is bounde, when among ſo ſharpe prickings our ſluggiſhnes ſtill maketh delay. Wherefore let theſe ſayinges alway ſounde in our eares: The Lorde is nie to all them that call vpon him, that call vpon him in him. This singular fruite wee receiue of the promises of God, when wee make our prayers not doutingly and fearfully: but trusting vpon his word, whose maicstie would otherwise make vs afraid, wee dare call vpon him by the name of Father, forasmuch as he vouchsafeth to put this moste sweete name into our mouthes. It remaineth that wee hauing such allurements should knowe that wee haue thereby matter enough to obtaine our prayers: forasmuch as our prayers stande vpon no merite of our owne, but all their worthines and hope of obtaining are grounded vpon the promises of God, and hang vpon them: so that it needeth none other vnderpropping, nor looketh vpward hither or thither. Therefore we must determine in our mindes, that although wee excell not in like holinesse as is praised in the holy fathers, prophets and Apostles, yet because the commaundement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is also common, if wee rest vpon y^e worde of God, in this right wee are fellowes with them. For, God (as we haue before shewed) promising that he will bee gentle, and mercifull to all, giueth cause of hope to all euen the most miserable that they shall obtaine what they aske. And therefore the generall formes are to bee noted, from which no man (as they say) from the first to the last is excluded: onely let there be present a purenes of heart, misliking of our selues, humilitie, and faith: let not our hypocrisie vnholily abuse the name of God with deccitfull calling vpon it: the most good father will not put backe them, whom he not onely exhorteth to come to him, but also moueth them by all the meanes that hee can. Hereupon commeth the maner of praying of Dauid which I haue euen now rehearsed. Lo thou hast promised, Lord, to thy seruauant: for this cause thy seruant at this day gathereth courage, and hath found what praier he might make before thee. Now therefore O Lord God, thou art God, and thy words shalbee true. Thou hast spoken to thy seruant of these benefits: begin therefore, and doe them. As also in another place, Perfourme to thy seruant according to thy worde. And all the Israclites together, so oft as they arme the selues with remembrance of the couenant, doe sufficiently declare that wee should not pray fearefully, whereas the Lord so appointeth. And herein they followed the examples of the fathers, specially of Iacob, which after that he had confessed that he was vnworthie of so many mercies which he had receiued at the hand of God, yet he saith that he is encouraged to require greater things because God had promised y^e he would doe them. But what soeuer colours the vnbeleeuers do prehend, when they flee not to god so oft as necessitie presseth them, when they seeke not him nor craue his helpe, they do as much defraud him of his due honor as if they made to the selues new Gods, & idols: for by this meane they deny y^e he is to them y^e author of all good things. On the other side, there is nothing stronger to deliuer the godly from all dout, than to be armed with this thought, y^e no stop ought to stay them while they obey the commandement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleasing to him than obedience. Here againe that which I saide before more clearly appeareth, that a dreedles spiuite to pray agreeth well with feare, reuerence, and carefulnes: and that it is no absurditie to say y^e God raiseth vp the ouerthrowen. After this maner those formes of speach agree well together which in seeming are contrarie.

and Daniell say that they throwe downe prayers before God. In another place Ieremie sayeth: Let our prayer fall downe in the sight of God, that he may haue mercie on the remnant of his people. On the other side, the faithfull are oftentimes said to lift vp prayer. So speaketh Ezechias, requiring the prophet to make intercession for him. And Dauid desireth y^e his prayer may ascend as incense. For although they being perswaded of the fatherly loue of God, cheerefully commit themselues into his faithfull keeping, and doubt not to craue the help which he freely promiseth; yet doth not an idle carelesnesse lift them vp, as though they had cast away shame, but they ascende so vppward by degrees of promises, that they stil remaine humble suppliants in the abacement of themselues.

Luk. 9. 55.

15 Here are questions objected more than one. For the scripture reporteth that the Lord granted certaine desires which yet brake forth of a mind not quiet nor well framed. Verily for a iust cause: Ioatham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichern; to the destruction which afterward came vpon the: but yet God kindled with feruentnes of anger & vengeance following his execration seemeth to allowe it tempered violent passions. Such heat also caried Samson when he said, Strenthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the vncircumcised. For though there were some piece of good zeale mingled with it: yet a hote, and therefore faultie greedines of vengeance did beare rule therein. God graunted it. Whereupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the prayers be not framed according to the prescribed rule of the word, yet they obtaine their effect. I answer first that a general law is not taken away by singular examples; again, y^e sometime special motions haue bene put into a few men, wherby it came to passe y^e there was another consideration of them than of the common people. For y^e answer of Christ is to be noted, when the disciples did vndiscretely desire to counterfai the example of Elias, y^e they knewe not with what spirite they were endued. But we must go yet further, and say that the prayers do not alway please God which he granteth: but that, so much as serueth for example that is by clere praise made plaine which the scripture teacheth, namely that he succoureth the miserable, heareth the gronings of them which being vniustly troubled do craue his helpe: that therefore hee executeth his iudgements, when the complaints of the poore rise vp to him, although they be vnworthie to obtaine any thing be it neuer so litle. For how oft hath hee raking vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lustes, & other wicked doings of y^e vngodly, subduing their boldnes & rage, & also ouerthrowing their tyrannous power, testified y^e he helpeth the vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beat the aire with praying to an vncertaine godhead? And one Psalme plainly teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet do not pearce into heauen by faith. For he gathereth together those prayers which necessitie wringeth no lesse out of the vnbeleeuers than out of the godly by the verie feeling of nature: to which yet he proueth by the effect that God is fauourable. Is it because he doth with such gentlenes testifie y^e that they be pleasing to him? No. But to enlarge or to set out his mercie by this circumstance, for that euen to vnbeleeuers their praers are not denied: and then the more to prick forward his true worshippers to pray, when they

they see that prophane wailings sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithfull should swarue from the lawe layd vpon them by God, or should enuie the vnbeleuers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they haue obtained their desire. After this manner we haue sayd, that the Lord was bowed with the repentance of Achab, that he might shewe by this example howe easie he is to entreate towards his elect, when true turning is brought to appease him. Therefore in the Psalm he blameth the Iewes, that they hauing by experience proued him so easy to grant their prayers, yet within a litle after returned to the stubbornesse of their nature. Which also plainly appeareth by the historie of the Iudges: namely that so oft as they wept, although their teares were deceitfull, yet they were deliuered out of the handes of their enemies. As therefore the Lorde indifferently bringeth forth his sunne vpon the good and the euill: so doth he also not despise their weepings, whose cause is righteous and their miseries worthy of helpe. In the meane time he no more heareth these to saluation, than herein ministreth foode to the despisers of his goodnes. The question seemeth to be somewhat harder of Abraham and Samuel: of whom the one being warranted by no word of God, prayed for the Sodomites: the other against a manifest forbidding prayed for Saul. Likewise is it of Ieremie, which prayed that the citie might not be destroyed. For thogh their requests were denied, yet it seemeth hard to take faith from them. But this solution shall (as I trust) satisfie sober readers: that they being instructed with the generall principles, whereby God commandeth them to be mercifull euen also to the vnworthy, were not altogether without faith, although in a speciall case their opinion deceived them. Augustine writeth wisely in a certaine place. Howe (sayth he) do the holy ones pray by faith, to aske of God contrarie to that which he hath decreed? Euen because they pray according to his will: not that hidden and vnchangeable will, but the will which he inspireth into them, that he may heare them after an other maner: as he wisely maketh difference. This is well said: because after his incomprehensible counsel he so tempereth the successes of things, y^e the prayers of the holy ones be not voyde which are wrapped both with faith and errour together. Neither yet ought this more to auaille to be an example to followe, than it excuseth the holy ones themselues, whome I denie not to haue passed measure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promise, wee must aske of God with a condition adioyned. To which purpose serueth that saying of Dauid. Watch to the iudgement which thou hast commaunded: because he telleth that he was warranted by a speciall oracle to aske a temporall benefite.

16 This also it is profitable to note, that those things which I haue spoken of the fower rules of right prayer, are not so exactly required with extreme rigor, that God refuseth the prayers in which he shall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a seruentnes of zeale and well ordered requestes. We haue said that although prayer be a familiar talke of the godly with God, yet we must keepe a reuerence & modestie, that wee giue not loose reines to all requestes whatsoever they be, and that wee desire no more, than God giueth leaue: and then, least the maiestie of God should growe in contempt with vs, that we must lift our mindes vpwarde to a pure and vndefiled worshipping of him. This no man hath euer performed with such purenesse as it ought to bee. For (to speake nothing of the common sort) how many complaintes of Dauid do fauor of vntemperance: not that he meant of purpose to quarell with God, or carpe against his iudgements: but because he fainting for weakenesse, found no other better comfort, than to cast his sorrowes into his bosome. Yea and God beareth with our childish speech and pardoneth our ignorance, so oft as any thing vnadvisedly escapeth vs: as truely without this tender bearing, there shoulde be no libertie of praying. But although Dauids minde was to submit himselfe wholly to the will of God, and he prayed with no lesse patience than desire to obtaine: yet there arise yea boile out sometimes troublous affections, which are much disagreeing from the first rule that wee haue set. Specially we may perceiue by the conclusion of the xxxix. Psalme, with howe greate vehemence of sorrowe that holy man was carried away, that he could not keepe measure. Cease (sayth he) from me, till I goe away and be not. A man would say that he like a desperate mā desireth nothing els but that the hand of God ceassing, he might rot in his euils. Hee sayth it not for that he with an auowed minde runneth into such outrage, or (as the reprobate are wont) would haue G O D to depart from him: but onely he complaineth that the wrath of G O D is too heauie for him to beare. In these tentations also there fall out oftentimes requestes not well framed according to the rule of the worde of God, and in which the holy ones doe not sufficiently weye what is lawfull and expedient. Whatsoeuer prayers are spotted with these faultes, they deserue to be refused: yet if the holy ones doe bewaile, correct themselues, and by and by come to themselues again, God pardoneth them. So they offende also in the seconde rule, because they are oftentimes driuen to wraastle with their owne coldenesse, and their neede and miserie doth not sharply enough pricke them to pray earnestly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes do slippe aside, and in a maner wander away into vanity. Therefore in this behalfe also there is neede of pardon, least our faint, or vnperfect, or broken and wandering prayers haue a deniall. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with mindes lifted vpwarde. Hereupon came the ceremonie of lifting vp of handes, as we haue before sayde, which hath bene vsed in all ages and nations, as yet it is in vre. But how many a one is there, which when he listeth vp his hands, doth not in his own conscience find himselfe dull, because his heart resteth vpon the ground? As touching the asking of forgiuenesse of sinnes, although none of the faithfull do ouerpasse it, yet they which are truely exercised in prayers do feele that they bring scarcely the tenth parte of that sacrifice, of which Dauid speaketh. An acceptable sacrifice to God is a troubled spirite: a broken and humbled heart O God thou wilt not despise. So there is alway double pardon to be asked, both because they knowe themselues guilty in consciences of many faultes, with feeling whereof they are not yet so touched, y they mislike themselues so much as they ought: and also that, so much as it is giuen them to profit in repentance and in the feare of G O D, they being throwen downe with iust sorrowe for their offences,

shoulde pray to escape the punishment of the iudge. Cheefely the feeblenes or imperfection of faith corrupteth the prayers of the faithfull, vnlesse the tender mercie of God did helpe them. But it is no meruel that God pardoneth this default, which doeth oftentimes exercise them that bee his with sharp instructions, as if he shoulde of purpose quench their faith. This is a most hard tentation, when the faithfull are compelled to crie: how long wilt thou be angrie vpon the praier of thy seruaunt? as though the verie prayers made God more angrie. So when Ieremie saith: The Lorde hath shut out my prayer, it is no dout that he was shaken with a violent pange of trouble. Innumerable such examples are comonly found in the scriptures, by which appeareth y the faith of the holy ones was oftentimes mingled & tossed with doubtings, that in beleeuing & hoping they bewrayed yet some vnfaithfulness: but because they come not so far as it is to be wished, they ought to indeuour so much the more that their faultes being amended, they may dayly come neerer to y perfect rule of praying, & in the mean time to seele in how great a depth of euils they bee drowned, which euen in the very remedies do get to themselues new diseases: sith there is no prayer, which the Lord doth not worthilie loth, vnlesse he winke at the spots wherewith they are all besprinkled. I reherse not these things this end y the fathfull should carelesly pardon themselues any thing, but y in sharply chastising theselues they shold trauel to ouercome these stops, and although Satan labour to stop vp al the wayes, that he may keepe them from praying, yet neuertheles they shoulde breake through, being certainly perswaded, that although they bee not vncumbred of all hinderances, yet their indeuours doe please God, and their prayers are allowed of him, so that they trauel and bend themselues thitheward, whither they do not by and by attaine.

Psal. 80.
Lam. 3. 8.

17 But forasmuch as there is no man worthie to present himselfe to God, and to come into his sight: the heauenly Father himselfe to deliuer vs both from shame and feare which shoulde haue throwne downe all our courages, hath giuen to vs his son Iesus Christ our Lorde, to be an aduocate and mediator with him for vs, by whose leading we may boldly com to him, trusting that we haue such an intercessor, nothing shall be denied vs which we aske in his name, as nothing can be denied him of the father. And herevnto must all bee referred whatsoeuer we haue hecretofore taught concerning faith: because as the promise setteth out vnto vs Christ for our Mediator, so vnlesse our hope of obteyning stay vpon him, it taketh from it selfe y benefite of praying. For so soone as the terrible maiestie of God commeth in our minde, it is impossible but that we shoulde tremble for feare, and the acknowledging of our owne vnworthinesse shoulde driue vs farre away, till Christ come meane betweene vs and him, which may change the throne of dreadfull glorie into the throne of grace: as also the Apostle teacheth that we may bebolde to appeare with all confidence which shall obtaine mercy and finde grace in helpe comming in fit season. And as there is a lawe set y we shoulde call vpon God like as there is a promise giuen, that they shal be heard which call vpon him: so are wee peculiarly commaunded to cal vpon him in the name of Christ, & we haue a promise set forth, y we shal obtaine y which we shal aske in his name. Hitherto (saith he) yett haue not asked any thing in in my name: aske and ye shall receiue. In that day ye shall aske in my name, and whatsoeuer ye aske, I will doe, that the father may bee glorified in the sonne. Hereby it is plaine without controuersie, that they which call vpon God in any other name than of Christ, do stubbornly breake his commandementes, and regarde his will as nothing, and that they haue no promise to obteyne any thing. For (as Paul saith) all the promises of God are in Christ, yea and Amen, that is to say, they are confirmed and fulfilled.

2. Cor. 1. 20.

18 And the circumstance of the time is diligently to be marked, where Christ commaundeth his disciples to flee to intercession to him after that he is gone vp into heauen. In that houre (saith he) ye shal aske in my name. It is certaine that euen from the beginning none were heard that prayed, but by meane of the mediator. For this reason the Lord had ordeined in the law, that the Prieste alone entering into the sanctuarie, should beare vpon his shoulders the names of the tribes of Israel, and as many precious stones before his breast: but the people should stande a farre of in the porch, and from thence should ioyne their prayers with the priest. Yea and the sacrifice auailed hereto, that the prayers should be made sure and of force. Therefore that shadowish ceremonie of the law taught that we are al shut out from the face of God, and that therefore wee neede a Mediatour, which may appeare in our name, and may beare vs vpon his shouldiers, and holde vs fast bound to his brest, that we may be heard in his person: then by sprinkeling of blood: our prayers are cleansed, which (as we haue already saide) are neuer voyde of filthinesse. And wee see that the holy ones, when they desired to obteyne any thing, grounded their hope vpon sacrifices, because they knewe them to be the stablishinges of all requestes. Let him remember thy offering (saith David) and make thy burnt offering fat. Herevpon is gathered y God hath bin from the beginning appeased by the intercession of Christ, to receiue the praiers of the godlie. Why then doth Christ appoint a newe heire, when his Disciples shall beginne to pray in his name, but because this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, so deserueth more commendation with vs. And in this same sense he had saide a litle before. Hitherto yee haue not asked any thing in my name, nowe aske. Not that they vnderstoode nothing at all of the office of the Mediator (whereas all the Iewes were instructed in the principles) but because they had not yet clearly knowen that Christ by his ascending into heauen should be a surer patron of the Church than hee was before. Therefore to comfort their griefe of his absence with some speciall fruite, hee claimeth to him selfe the office of an aduocate, and teacheth that they haue hitherto wanted the cheife benefite, which it shall be graunted them to enioye, when being ayded by his mediation, they shall more freely call vpon GOD: as the Apostle sayth that his newe way is dedicate in his blood. And so much lesse excusable is our frowardnesse, vnlesse wee doe with both armes (as the saying is) embrace so inestimable a benefite, which is properly appointed for vs.

Heb. 10. 20.

19 Nowe whereas he is the onely way, and the onely entrie by which it is graunted vs to come in vnto God: who so doe swarue from this way and forsake this entrie, for the there remaineth no way nor entrie to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, iudgement, and terrour. Finally sith the Father hath marked him for our heade, and guide, they which do in any wise swarue or go away from him, do labour as much as in them lieth to race out and disfigure the marke which God hath imprinted. So Christ is set to be the only Mediator, by whose intercession the Father may be made to vs fauorable and easie to be entreated. Howe be it in the meane time the holy ones haue their intercessions left to them, whereby they doe mutually commende the safetie one of an other to God, of which the Apostle maketh mention: 1. Tit. 2. 1. but those be such as hange vpon that one onely intercession: so farre is it of, that they minish any thing of it. For as they spring out of the affection of loue, wherewith we embrace one an other, as the members of one body: so they are also referred to the vnitie of the head. Sith therefore they also are made in the name of Christ, what doe they else but testifie that no man can be holpen by any prayers at al, but with the intercession of Christ? And as Christ with his intercession withstandeth not, but that in the Church we may with prayers be aduocates one for an other: so let this remaine certaine, that all the intercessors of the whole Church ought to be directed to that only one. Yea and for this cause wee ought specially to beware of vnthankfulness, because God pardoning our vnworthines, doth not only giue leaue to euery one of vs to pray for himselfe, but also admitteth vs to be entreaters one of an other. For, where God appointeth aduocates for his Church which deserue worthily to be reiected if they pray priuately euery one for himselfe: what a pride were it to abuse this libertie to darken the honour of Christ?

20 Now it is a meere trifling, which the Sophisters babble, that Christ is the Mediatour of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediatours of intercession. As though Christ hauing performed a Mediation for a time, hath giuen to his seruantes that eternall Mediatourshippe which shall neuer die. Full curteously forsooth they handle him, that cutte away so litle a portion of honour from him. But the Scripture sayth farre otherwise, with the simplicitie whereof a godly man ought to be contented, leauing these deceiuers. For where Iohn saith, that if any do sinne, wee haue an aduocate 1. Iohn, 2. 2. with the Father, Christ Iesus: doth he meane that he was once in olde time a patrone for vs, and not rather assigneth to him an euerlasting intercession? Howe say we to this that Paul also affirmeth, that he sitteth at the right hand of G O D the Father and maketh intercession for vs? And when in an other place he calleth him the onely Mediatour of God and men: meaneth he not of praiers, of which he had a litle before made mention? For when he had before sayde that intercession must be made for all men: for prooffe of that saying, he by and by addeth, that of all men there is one God and one Mediatour. And none otherwise doth Augustine expounde it, when he saith Lib. contra Par. 2. ca. 1. Christian men do en mutually commende themselues in their prayers. But he for whome none maketh intercession, but he for all, hee is the onely and true Mediatour. Paul the Apostle, though he were a principal member vnder the heade (yet because he was a member of the body of Christe, and knewe that the greatest and truest priest of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inward places of the vaile, to the holy of holy places, but should mutually pray for him: because the members are careful one for an other: and if one member suffer, the other suffer with it. And that so the mutuall prayers one for an other of all the members yet trauailing in earth; may ascende to the heade which is gone before into heauen, in whome is appeasement for our sinnes . For if Paul were a Mediatour, the other Ephe. 4. 3. Apostles should also be Mediatours: and if there were many Mediatours, then neither should Paules owne reason stande fast, in which he hadde said,

 For there is one God, one Mediatour of one G O D and mee, the man Christe, in whome we also are one if wee keepe the vnitie of faith in the bonde of peace . Againe in an other place. But if thou seeke for a Priest, In Psal. 94. he is aboute the heaucns, where hee maketh intercession for thee, which in earth dyed for thee. Yet doe we not dreame that he falleth downe at the fathers knees and in humble wise entreateth for vs: but we vnderstande with the Apostle, that hee so appeareth before the face of G O D, that the vertue of his death auaileth to be a perpetuall intercession for vs: yet so that being entered into the sanctuarie of heauen, vnto the ende of the ages of the world he alone carrieth to God the prayers of the people abiding a farre off in the porch.

21 As touching the Saintes, which beeing dead in the fleshe doe liue in Christ, if we giue any prayer at all to them, let vs not dreame that they theselues haue any other way of asking, than Christ which onely is the way, or that their praiers be acceptable to God in any other name . Therefore sith the Scripture calleth vs backe from all to Christ onely: sith the heauenly fathers will is to gather together all in him: it was a point of too much dulle-nesse, I will not say madnesse, so to desire to make for our selues an entrie by them, that we should be led away from him without whome euen they them selues haue no entrie open . But, that this hath bene vsually done in certaine ages past, and that it is at this day done wheresoeuer Papistry reigneth, who can denie? Their merites are from time to time thrust in, to obtaine the good will of God: and for the most part, Christ being passed ouer, God is prayed to by their names . Is not this, I beseech you, to conuey away to them the office of that onely intercession, which we haue affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Againe, what Angell or Deuill euer reueiled to any man any one syllable of this their intercession which these men faine? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? Truly when the witte of man so seeketh for it selfe succoures, wherewith we are not certified by the word of God, it plainly bewrayeth his owne distrustfulnesse . If we appeale to all their consciences that are delited with the intercession of saintes, we shal finde that the same cometh from no other ground, but because they are greued with carefulnesse, as though Christ were in this behalfe either too weake or too rigorous. By which doubt-fulnesse first they dishonour Christ, and robbe him of the title of only Media-tour, which as it is giuen him of the Father for a singular prerogatiue, so ought

ought not also to be conueied away to any other. And in this verie doing they darken the glorie of his birth, they make voide his crosse, finally whatsoever he hath done or suffered they spoyle and defraude of the due prayse thereof: for all tend to this end that he may be indeede and bee accounted the onely Mediator. And therewith they cast away the goodnesse of God, which gaue himselfe to be their Father. For he is not their father, vnles they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they vtterly denie vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection toward them, than which there can nothing bee more kinde or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth only him to vs, sendeth vs to him, and stayeth vs in him. Hee (saith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we speak to the Father: our eye, by which we see the Father: our right hand, by which wee offer vs to the father, otherwise than by whose intercession neyther we nor all the Saints haue any thing with God. If they aunswere that the common prayers which they make in Churches, are ended wth this conclusion adioyned, Through Christ our Lord: this is a trifling shift: because the intercession of Christ is no lesse prophaned when it is mingled with the prayers and merites of dead men, than if it were vtterly omitted and onely dead men were in our mouth. Againe, in all their Letanies, Hymnes, and Profes, where no honour is left vngiuen to dead saintes, there is no mention of Christ.

22 But their foolish dulnesse proceeded so farre, that here we haue the nature of Superstition expressed, which when it hath once shaken off the bridle, is wont to make no end of running astray. For after that men once begun to looke to the intercession of Saints, by litle and litle there was giuen to euery one his speciall doing, that according to the diuersitie of busines, sometime one and sometime another should be called vpon to be intercessor: then they to themselues euerie one his peculiar Saint, into whose faith they committed themselues as it were to the keeping of safeguarding Gods. And not onely (wherewith the prophet in the olde time reproched Israel) Gods were set vp according to the number of Cities, but euen to the number of persons. But sith the Saintes referre their desires to the onely will of God, & beholde it and rest vpon it: he thinketh foolishly, and fleshly, yea and slanderously of them, which assigneth to them any other prayer, than whereby they pray for the comming of the kingdom of God: from which that is most farre distant which they faime to them, that euerie one is with priuate affection more partially bent to his owne worshippers. At length many abstained not from horrible sacriledge, in calling nowe vpon them not as helpers but as principall rulers of their saluation. Loe wherevnto foolish men do fall when they wander out of their true standing, that is, the worde of God. I speake not of the grosser monstruousnesse of vngodlinesse, wherein although they be abominable to God, Angels, and men, they are not yet ashamed nor wearie of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catherine, and such other, doe mumble Pater noster, Our father. This madnes the Pastors doe so not care to heale or restraine, that being allured with the sweete sauour of gaine they allowe it with reioysing at it. But although they turne from themselues the blame of so hainous an offence, yet by what colour will they defende this that Loy or Medard are prayed

vnto, to looke downe vpon and helpe their seruantes from heauen? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to commaunde her sonne to do that which they aske? In the olde time it was forbidden in the Councill at Carthage, that at the altar no direct prayer shoulde bee made to Saintes. And it is likely that when the holy men could not altogether suppress the force of y^e naughtie custome, yet they added at least this restraint that the publike prayers shold not bee corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter pray for vs. But howe much further hath their deuclish importunacie ranged, which sticke not to giue away to deade men that which properly belonged onely to God and Christ?

23 But whereas they trauel to bring to passe that such intercession may seeme to bee grounded vpon the authoritie of Scripture, therein they labor in vaine. We reade oftentimes (say they) of the prayers of Angels: and not that onely: but it is saide that the prayers of the faithfull are by their handes caried into the sight of God. But if they list to compare holy men departed out of this present life, to Angels: they shoulde proue that they are ministring spirits, to whom is committed the ministerie to looke to our safetie, to whom the charge is giuen to keepe vs in all our wayes, to go about vs, to admonish and counsell vs, to watch for vs: all which thinges are giuen to Angels, but not to them. How wrongfully they wrap vp dead holy men with Angels, appeareth largely by so many diuerse offices, wherby the scripture putteth difference betweene some and other some. No man dare execute the office of an aduocate before an earthly iudge, vnlesse he be admitted, from whence then haue wormes so great libertie, to thrust vnto God those for patrons to whome it is not read that the office is enioyned? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to looke vnto our safetie, wherefore they doe both frequent holy assemblies, and the Church is a stage to them, wherein they wonder at the diuerse and manifold wisdom of God. Who so conuey away to other that which is peculiar to them, verily they confound and peruert the order set by God, which ought to haue ben inuiolable. With like handsomnesse they proceede in alleaging other testimonies. God said to Ieremie: If Moses and Samuel should stand before me, my soule is not to this people. How (say they) could he haue spoken thus of dead men, vnlesse he knew that they made intercession for the liuing? But I on the contrary side gather thus, that sith it thereby appeareth that neither Moses nor Samuel made intercession for the people of Israell, there was then no intercession at all of dead mē. For which of the saintes is to be thought to be careful for the safetie of the people, when Moses ceaseth, which in this behalfe farre passed all other when he liued? But if they follow such slight fittleties, to say that the deade make intercession for the liuing, because the Lorde saide, If they shoulde make intercession: I wil much more colorablie reason in this manner: In the extreme necessitie of the people Moses made not intercession, of whome it is said, if he shal make intercession. Therefore it is likely that none other maketh intercession, sith they are al so farre from the gentlenesse, goodnes, and fatherly carefulnesse of Moses. This forsooth they get with cauilling, that they bee wounded wth the same weapons, wherewith they thought them selues gayly fensed. But it is verie fonde that a simple sentence shoulde so bee wrested, because the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not spare the offences of the people, although they had seene Moses to be their patron, or Samuel, to whose prayers he had shewed him selfe so tender. Which sense is most clearly gathered out of a like place of Ezechiel. If (saith the Lorde) these three men were in the citie, Noe, Daniel, and Iob, they shall not deliuer their sonnes and daughters in their righteousnes: but they shall deliuer onely their owne soules. Where it is no dout that he meant if two of them should happen to reuiue againe, for the third was then aliue, namely Daniel, who (as it is known) did in the first flourishing of his youth shewe an incomparable example of godlinesse: let vs then leaue them whom the Scripture plainly sheweth to haue ended their course. Therefore Paul, when he speaketh of Dauid, teacheth not that he doth with praiers helpe his posterity, but only that he serued his owne time.

Act. 13. 36

24 They answered againe: shall we then take from them all prayer of charitie, which in the whole course of their life breathed nothing but charity & mercie? Verily as I will not curiously search what they doe, or what they muse vpon: so it is not likely, that they are caried about hither & thither wth diuerse and particular requestes: but rather that they do with a stayed and vn-moued will, long for the kingdom of God, which standeth no lesse in the destruction of the wicked than in the saluation of the godly. If this be true, it is no dout that their charitie is contained in the communion of the bodie of Christ, & extendeth no further, than the nature of that communion beareth. But nowe though I graunt that they pray in this manner for vs, yet they doe not therefore depart from their owne quietnesse, to be diuersly drawn into earthly cares: and much lesse must wee therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby followe that they must so doe, because men which liue in earth may commend one an other in their praiers. For this doing serueth for nourishing of charity among them, when they doe as it were parte and mutually take vpon them their necessities among themselues. And this they doe by the commaundement of the Lorde, and are not without a promise, which two things, haue alway the chiefe place in praier. All such considerations are far from the dead, whom when the Lord hath conueied from our companie, he hath left to vs no enterchange of doinges with them, nor to them with vs, so farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man allege, that it is impossible but that they must keepe the same charitie toward vs, as they be ioyned in one Faith with vs: yet who hath rueil'd that they haue so long eares to reach to our voyces? and so pearcing eyes to watch our necessities? They prate in their shadowes I wot not what of the brightnesse of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on hie behold the matters of me^e beneath. But to affirme that, specially with such boldnesse as they dare, what is it else but to goe about by the drunken dreames of our owne braine, without his worde to pearce & breake into the hidden iudgements of God, and to treade y^e Scripture vnder feete which so oft pronounceth that the wisdome of the flesh is enemy to the wisdome of God, which wholly condeneth the vanity of our naturall wit, which willet all our reason to be throwen downe, and the only will of God to be looked vnto of vs.

Ecc. 9. 5. & 6

Rom. 8. 6.

25 The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defend this their lie, they most naughtily wrest. But Iacob (saide they) praieth that his name and the name of his Fathers Abraham & Isaac bee called vpon ouer his posteritie. First let vs see what forme of calling vpon this is among the Israelites. For they call not vpon their Fathers, to help them: but they beseech God to remember his seruants Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for them y^e speake to the Saints themselues. But because those blockes (such is their dulnes) neither vnderstand what it is to call vpon the name of Iacob, nor why it is to be called vpon: it is no marueil if in the very forme also they so childishly stumble. This maner of speech is not feldome found in the Scriptures. For Esaye sayeth that the name of the men is called vpon ouer the women, when they haue them as their husbands vnder whose charge & defence they liue. Therefore the calling vpon the name of Abraham vpon the Israelites, standeth in this when they conuey their pedegree from him, & do with soleimne memorie honor him for their author & parent. Neither doth Iacob this because he is careful for the enlarging of the renoume of his name: but for asmuch as he knewe that y^e whole blessednesse of his posteritie consisted in the inheritance of the couenant which God had made with him: he wisheth that y^e which he seeth should be the chiefe of all good things to them, that they be accounted in his kinred: For, that is nothing else but to conuey to them the succession of the couenant. They againe when they bring such remembrance into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of dead men: but do put the Lord in mind of his couenant, wherby the most kinde father hath promised y^e he wil be fauorable & beneficial to them for Abrahams, Isaacs, & Iacobs sakes. How litle the holy ones did otherwise leane vpon the merites of their father, y^e common saying of the Church in the Prophet testifieth, Thou art our Father, & Abraham knewe vs not, & Israel was ignorant of vs. Thou Lord art our Father & our redeemer. And when they say thus, they adde therewithall, Returne O Lord for thy seruants sakes: yet thinking vpon no intercession, but bending their mind to the benefite of the couenant. But nowe sith wee haue the Lord Iesus, in whose hand the eternall couenant of mercie is not onely made but also confirmed to vs: whose name should we rather vse in our prayers? And because these good masters wil haue the Patriarches to be by these wordes made intercessors, I woulde faine knowe of them why in so great a route Abraham the Father of the Church hath no place at al among them. Out of what sinck they fetch their aduocates, it is not vnknown. Let them answer me, how fit it is y^e Abraham, whom God preferred aboue al other, & whom he aduanced to the hiest degree of honor, should be neglected and suppressed. Verily when it was euident that such vse was vnknown to the old Church, they thought good for hiding of the newnesse to speak nothing of the olde Fathers: as though the diuersitie of names excused the new and forged maner. But whereas some object that God is prayed vnto, to haue mercie on the people for Dauids sake, it doth so nothing at all make for defence of their error, that it is a most strong profe for the confutation thereof. For if we consider what person Dauid did beare: he is seuered from all the assembly of the Saints, that God should stablish the couenant which he hath

made in his hand. So both the couenant is rather considered than the man, and vnder a figure the only intercession of Christ is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belonged only to Dauid, in so much as he was y^e image of Christ, accordeth not with any other.

26 But this forsooth moueth some, that it is often times red that the prayers of Saintes haue bene heard. Why so? Euen because they prayed. They trusted in thee (saith the Prophet) & they were saued: they cried, and they were not confounded. Therefore let vs also pray as they did, y^e wee may be heard as they were. But these men, otherwise than they ought, do wrongfully reason, that none shalbe heard but they that haue once bene heard. How much better doth Iames say? Elias (saith he) was a man like to vs: and he prayed with prayer y^e it should not raine, & it rained not vpon the earth in three yeres & sixe moneths. Againe he prayed, & the heauen gaue raine, & the earth gaue her fruite. What doth he gather any singular prerogatiue of Elias, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is the continual strength of godly & pure praier, to exhort vs likewise to pray. For wee do niggardly construe the readines & gentlenesse of God in hearing them, vnlesse we be by such experiences confirmed into a more sure affiance of his promises, in which he promifeth that his eare shalbe enclined not to one, or two, nor yet to a fewe, but to all y^e call vpon his name. And so much lesse excusable is this foolishnes, because they seeme as it were of set purpose to despise so many admonitions of Scripture. Dauid was oft deliuered by the power of God. Was it y^e he should draw y^e power to himself, y^e we should be deliuered by his help? He himself affirmeth farre otherwise: The righteous loke for me, til thou render to me. Againe, The righteous shall see, & they shal reioyce, & trust in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, & hee hath answered him. There be in the psalmes many such prayers, in which to craue that which he requireth, he moueth God by this maner, that the righteous be not made ashamed, but many by his example be raised vp to hope wel. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore euery holy one shal pray to thee in fit time. Which place I haue so much the more willingly rehearsed, because the loud babblers which doe let out to hire the seruice of their waged tongue haue not bene ashamed to alleage it to prooue the intercession of the dead. As though Dauid meant any thing else, than to shewe the fruite that shal come of the mercifulnes and gentlenes of god, when he shalbe heard. And in this kinde wee must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well towarde our selues as other, is no slender helpe to confirme the credite of his promises. I leaue vnrehearsed many places, where Dauid setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of confidence, because the readers of the Psalmes shal commonly find them without seeking. This selfe same thing had Iacob before taught by his own example: I am vnworthie of all thy mercies, and of the truth which thou hast performed to thy seruauant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Iordane, & now I come forth with two bands. Hee alleageth in decde the promise, but not alone: but he also ioyneth the effect, that he may the more courageously in time to come trust that God will be the same toward him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are wearie of their liberalitie, or whose abilitie is wasted: but he is to be weyed by his owne nature, as Dauid wisely doth where he saith, Thou hast redeemed me, O God that speakest truth. After that he hath giuen to God the praises of his saluation, he addeth y^e he is a true speaker: because vnles he were continually like himself, there could not be gathered of his benefites a sufficiently strong reason of affiance & calling vpon him. But when we knowe that so oft as he helpeth vs, he sheweth an example and prooffe of his goodnes, we neede not to feare that our hope shalbe put to shame or disapoint vs.

27 Let this be the summe. Whereas the Scripture setteth out this vnto vs for the chiefe point in the worshipping of God, (as refusing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this duetic of godlinesse) praier is not without manifest sacrifice directed to other. Wherefore also it is said in the Psalme. If we stretch forth our hands to a strange God, shall not God require these things? Again, whereas GOD will not be called vpon, but of Faith, and expressly cōmandeth praier to be framed according to the rule of his word: finally whereas Faith founded vpon the word, is the mother of right praier: so soone as wee swarue from the word, our praier must needes be corrupted. But it is already shewed, y^e if the whole Scripture be sought, this honor is therein chalenged to God only. As touching the office of intercession, we haue also shewed y^e it is peculiar to Christ, and y^e there is no praier acceptable to God, but which that mediator halloweth. And though y^e faithfull do one for an other offer praier to God for their brethren, we haue shewed that this abateth nothing from the only intercession of Christ: because they altogether standing vpon it do commend both theselues and other to God. Moreouer we haue taught that this is vnfitly drawn to dead men, to whom we neuer read y^e it hath bin cōmanded that they should pray for vs. The Scripture doth oftentimes exhort vs to mutuall doings of this dutie one for an other: but of dead men there is not so much as one syllable: yea and Iames ioyning these two thinges together, that we should confesse our selues among our selues, and mutually pray one for an other, doth secretly exclude dead men. Therefore to condemne this errour, this one reason sufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, springeth out of Faith, and that Faith commeth of the hearing of the worde of God, where is no mention of the fained intercession, because superstition hath rashly gotten to it self patrons which were not giuen them of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many formes of praier, there is no example founde of this patronship, without which in the papacy they beleue y^e there is no praier. Moreouer it is certaine that this superstitiō hath growen of distrustfulnes either because they were not content with Christ to be their intercessour, or haue altogether robbed him of his praise. And this later point is easily proued by their shamelesnes: because they haue no other stronger argument to proue y^e we haue neede of the intercession of Saints, than when they obiect y^e we are vnworthy of familiar accessē to God. Which we in deed grant to be most true: but therupō we gather, y^e they leaue nothing to Christ, which esteeme his intercession in nothing worth, vnlesse there be adioyned George, Hypolite, or such other visors.

Iam. 5. 8.

28 But although prayer properly signifieth only wishes and petitions: yet there is so great affinity betwene petition & thankesgiuing, that they may be

fitly comprehended both vnder one name. For, these speciall sortes which Paul rehearseth, fall vnder the first part of this diuision. With asking & crauing wee poure foorth our desires before G O D, requiring as wel those things that seeme to spread abroade his glorie and set foorth his name, as the benefits y are profitable to our vse. With giuing of thanks, we doe with due praise magnifie his good doings toward vs, acknowledging to be receiued of his liberalitie whatsoeuer good things do come to vs. Therefore Dauid comprehended these two partes together, saying: Call vpon mee in the day of necessitie: I wil deliuer thee, & thou shalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vaine commandeth vs to vse both. For we haue said in another place, y our needines is so great, & the experience it self crieth out y we are on euery side pinched & pressed with so many & so great distresses, y al haue cause enough why they should both sigh to God, & in humble wise call vpon him. For though they be free from aduersities, yet the giltines of their wicked doings, & their innumerable assaults of tentations ought to prick forward the most holy to aske remedy. But in the sacrifice of praise & thanksgiuing there can be no interruption without hainous sinne, forasmuch as God cesseth not to heape vpon diuerse men diuerse benefites to driue vs though we be slack and slowe, to thankfulnes. Finally so great and so plenteous largesse of his benefites doth in a manner ouerwhelme vs: there are so many and so great miracles of his scene on euery side which way soeuer thou turne thee, y wee neuer want ground and matter of praise & thanksgiuing. And, that these things may be somewhat plainlier declared: sith all our hopes and wealth stand in God (which we haue before sufficiently proued) that neither we nor all our things can be in prosperitie but by his blessing: we must continually commit our selues and all our things to him. Then, whatsoeuer we purpose, speake, or do, let vs purpose, speake, & do vnder his hand & wil, finally vnder the hope of his help. For, all are pronounced accursed of God, which deuise or determine any purposes vpon trust of themselues or of any other, which without his will, & without calling vpon him do enterprife or attempt to begin any thing. And whereas we haue diuerse times already said, that he is duely honored when he is acknowledged the author of all good things: therupon followeth that all those things are so to be receiued at his hande, that we yeld continual thanks for them: & that there is no other right way for vs to vse his benefites, which flow & proceed from his liberalitie to no other end, but y we should be continually busied in confessing his praise & giuing of thanks. For Paul, when he testifieth that they are sanctified by the word & prayer, doth therewithal signifie that they are not holy & cleane to vs without the word & praier, vnderstanding by y word, faith by figure. Therfore Dauid saith very wel, when hauing receiued y liberalitie of the Lord, he declareth that there is giuen him into his mouth a new song: wherby verily he signifieth that it is a malicious silence, if wee passe ouer any of his benefites wout praise: sith he so oft giueth vs matter to say good of him, as he doth good to vs. As also Esay setting out the singular grace of God, exhorteth the faithful to a new & vnwonted song. In which sense Dauid saith in another place, Lorde open thou my lippes, & my mouth shall shewe foorth thy praise. Likewise Ezechias and Ionas testifie that this shalbe to them the end of their ing to murmure, he commaundeth that our affections be so tempered, that the faithful ere they haue obtained that which they desire, should neuer-thelesse cherefully blesse God. If this knot ought to haue place in thinges in a maner contrarie, with so much more holy band doeth God binde vs to sing his praises, so oft as he maketh vs to enioy our requestes. But as wee haue taught that our prayers are hallowed by the intercession of Christ, which otherwise should be vncleane: so the Apostle, where he commaundeth vs to offer a sacrifice of praise by Christ, putteth in minde y we haue not a mouth

 ously bewitched in the papacie, where the greater part marueileth y Christ
 1. Thess. 5. 13 is called an aduocate. This is the cause why Paul commandeth both to pray and to giue thanks without cessing: namely for that he willeth that with so great continuing as may be, at euery time in euery place, in all matters and businesse, the payers of al men should be lifted vp to God, which may both looke for all things at his hand & yeld to him the praise of al thinges, as he offreth vs continuall matter to praise and pray.

29 But this continuall diligence of praying, although it specially concerne the proper and priuate prayers of euery man, yet somewhat also pertaineth to the publike prayers of the Church. But those can neither be continuall, nor ought otherwise to be done than according to the politike order deede. For therefore certaine houres are set & appointed, as indifferent with God, so necessary for the vses of men, that the commoditie of all men may be prouided for, & all things (according to the saying of paul) may be com-

 ly and orderly done in the Church. But this maketh nothing to the contrary but that euery Church ought both from time to time to stirre vp it selfe to often vse of prayers, end when it is admonished by any greater necessitie, to be feruent with more earnest endeouour. As for perseverance which hath a great affuinity with continuall diligence, there shall be a fitte place to speake of it about the ende. Nowe these make nothing for the much babling which Christe willed that we should be forbidden. For he forbiddeth not to continue long, nor oft, nor with much affection in praiers, but that wee should not trust that we may wring any thing out of God, by dulling his eares with much babling talke, as if he were to be perswaded after the manner of men. For we knowe that Hypocrites, because they doe not consider that they haue to doe with God, doe no lesse make a pompous shewe in their prayers than in a triumph. For, the Pharisee which thanked God that hee was not like to other men, without doubt reioysed at himselfe in the eyes of men, as if hee would by prayer seeke to get a fame of holinesse. Hereupon came that much babling, which at this day vpon a like cause is vsed in the papacy: while some do vainely spend the time in repeating the same praiers, and other some doe set out themselues among the people with a long heape of wordes. Sith this babling childishly mocketh God, it is no maruell that it is forbidden out of the Church, to the ende that nothing should there be vsed but earnest and proceeding from the bottome of the heart. Of a neere kinde and like to this corruption is there an other, which Christe condemneth with this, namely that hypocrites for boasting sake doe seeke to haue many witnesses, and doe rather occupy the market place to pray in, than their prayers should want the praise of the worlde. But whereas we haue already shewed that this is the marke that praier shooteth at, that our mindes may be carried vwarde to God, both to confession of praise and to crauing of helpe: thereby we may vnderstande that the chiefe duties thereof doe stande in the minde and the heart, or rather that praier it selfe is properly an affectiō of the inward heart, which is poured forth & laid open before God the searcher of hearts. Wherefore (as it is already sayde) the heauenly schoolemaister, when he minded to set out the best rule of praying, commanded vs to goe into our chamber, and there the doore being shut to pray to our Father which is in secret, that our Father which is in secret may heare vs. For when he hath drawn them away from the example of hypocrites, which with ambitious boasting shew of prayers sought the fauour of men, he therewithal addeth what is better, namely to enter into our chamber, and there to pray the doore being shutte. In which words (as I expound them) he willed vs to seeke solitary being, which may helpe vs to descende and to enter thrughly with our whole thought into our heart, promising to the affections of our heart that God shalbe neere vs whose temples our bodies ought to be. For hee meant not to deny but that it is expedient also to pray in other places: but he sheweth that prayer is a certaine secret thing, which both is chiefly placed in the soule, & requirereth the quiet thereof far from all troubles of cares. Not without cause therefore the Lorde himfelfe also, when he was disposed to apply himfelfe more earnestly to praier conueied himfelfe into some solitarie place far from the troublefome cōpany of men: but to teach vs by his example that these helps are not to be despised, by which our mind being too slippery of it selfe is more bent to earnest applying of praier. But in the mean time euen as he in y^e midst of the multitude of men, abstained not from praying, if occasion at any time so serued: so should we in al places where need shalbe, list vp pure hands.

1. Tim. 2. 8.

Finally thus it is to be holden, that whosocuer refuseth to pray in the holy assembly of the godly, he knoweth not what it is to pray apart, or in solitarines, or at home. Again, that he that neglecteth to pray alone or priuately how diligently soeuer he haunt publike assemblies, doth there make but vain praier: because he giueth more to the opinion of men than to y^e secret iudgment of God. In the meane time, that the common praier of the Church should not growe into contempt, God in olde time garnished them with glorious titles, specially where he called the temple the house of praier. For, by this saying he both taught that the chiefe parte of the worshipping of him is the duty of praier: and that to the end that the faithful should with one cōsent exercise themselues in it, the temple was set vp as a standarde for them. There was also added a notable promise: There abideth for thee, O God, praise in Sion: & to thee the vow shalbe paid. By which words the Prophet telleth vs, that the praier of the Church are neuer voide: because the Lorde alway ministreth to his people matter to sing vpon with ioye. But although the shadowes of the lawe are ceased: yet because the Lordes will was by this ceremony to nourish among vs also the vnity of faith, it is no doubt that the same promise belongeth to vs, which both Christ hath stablished with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

Esa. 56. 7.

30 Now as the Lorde by his word commandeth the faithful to vse common praier: so there must be cōmon temples appointed for the vsing of them: where who so refuse to cōmunicate their praier with the people of God, there is no cause why they shoulde abuse this pretence, that they enter into their chamber that they may obey the cōmandement of the Lord. For he that promisseth that he will do what soeuer two or three shall aske being gathered together in his name, testifieth that he despiseth not praier openly made: so that boasting and seeking of glorie of men be absent, so that vnfaigned and true affection be present which dwelleth in y^e secret of the heart. If this be the right vse of temples (as truly it is) we must againe beware that neither (as they haue begon in certaine ages past to be accounted) we take them for the proper dwelling places of God from whence he may more neerely bend his eare vnto vs: nor faine to the m I wor e not what secret holinesse, which may make our praier more holy before God. For sith we our selues be the true temples of God we must pray in our selues if we will call vpon GOD in his owne holy temple. As for that grossenesse, let vs which haue a commaundement to call vpon the Lorde in Spirite and trueth without difference of place, leaue it to the Iewes or the Gentiles. There was in deede a temple in old time by the commaundement of God for offering of praier and sacrifices: but that was at such time as y^e truth lay hid figured vnder such shadows, which being nowe liuely expressed vnto vs doth not suffer vs to sticke in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Iewes themselues with this condition, that they should inclose the presence of God, within the walles thereof, but whereby they might bee exercised to beholde the image of the true temple. Therefore they, which in any part thought that God dwelleth in temples made with hands, were sharply rebuked of Esay and Stephen.

A. 7. 48.

31 Here moreouer it is more than euident, that neither voyce nor song, if they be vsed in prayer, haue any force, or doe any whit profite before God, vnlesse they proceede from the deepe affection of the heart. But rather they prouoke his wrath against vs, if they come onely from the lippes and out of the throte: forasmuch as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockerie of his maiestie: as wee gather out of the words of Esay, which although they extende further, yet pertaine also to reprocue this fault. This people (saith he) commeth neere to me wth their mouth, and honoreth me with their lippes: but their hearte is farre from mee: and they haue feared me with the commaundement and doctrine of men. Therefore beholde I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at. For, wisdom shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neither yet doe wee here condemne voice or singing, but rather doe hiely commende them, so that they accompanie the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and holde it intentiue in thinking vpon God: which as it is slipperie and rolling, easily slacketh and is diuersely drawen vnlesse it be stayed with diuerse helpes. Moreouer whereas the glorie of God ought after a certaine manner to shine in al the partes of our bodie, it specially behoueth that the tongue bee applied and auowed to this seruice both in singing and in speaking which is properly created to shewe foorth and display the praise of God: But the cheefe vse of the tongue is in publike prayers, which are made in the assemblie of the godly: which tende to this ende, that we may all with one common voice, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God whome we worshippe with one Spirite and one faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, euerie one of his brother, may receiue the confession of Faith, to the example whereof they may bee both allured and stirred.

Esa. 9. 13.
Mat. 15. 8.

32 As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is certayne that it is not onely most auncient: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, we may gather by these words of Paul, I will sing in Spirite, I will sing also in minde. Againe to the Colossians, Teaching and admonishing you, mutually in hymnes, Psalmes, and spirituall songes, singing with grace in your heartes to the Lorde. For in the first place hee teacheth that wee shoulde sing with voyce and heart: in the other hee commendeth spirituall songes, wherewith the Godly doe mutually edifie themselues. Yet that it was not vniuersall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the Church of Millain first began to sing, when while Iustina the mother of Valentinian cruelly raged against the true faith, the people more vsed watchings than they were wont: and that afterwarde the other westerne Churches followed. For he had a little before sayde that this manner came from the Easterne Churches. Hee telleth also in his seconde booke of Retractions that it was in his time receiued in Africa. One Hilarie (saith he) a ruler did in euery place wheresoeuer he coulde, with malicious blaming raile at the manner which then began to bee at Carthage, that the hymnes at the altar should be pronounced out of the booke of Psalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had ben offered was distributed to the people. Him I answered at the commaundement of my brethren. And truly if song be tempered to that grauitie which becommeth the presence of God and Angels, it both procureth dignitie and grace to the holy actions, and much auaieth to stirre vp the mindes to true affection, and feruentnes of praying. But we must diligently beware that our cares bee not more heede fully bent to the note, than our mindes to the spirituall sense of the wordes. With which perill Augustine in a certain place sayth that he was so moued, that hee sometime wished that the manner which Athanasius kept should be stablished, which commaunded that the reader should sound his words with so small a bowing of his voice, that it should be liker to one y readeth than to one that singeth. But when he remembred howe much profite he himselfe had receiued by singing, he inclined to the other side. Therefore vsing this moderation, there is no doubt that it is a most holy and profitable ordinance. As on the other side what songes so euer are framed onely to swetenesse and delight of the eares, they both becomie not the maiestie of the Church, and can not but hiely displease God.

33 Whereby it also plainly appeareth that common prayers are to be spoken not in Greeke among Latine men, not in Latine among Frenchmen or Englishmen (as it hath heretofore bene ech where commonly done) but in y peoples mother tongue, which comonly may be vnderstood of the whole assemblie: forasmuch as it ought to bee done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receiue no fruite at all of a sound not vnderstanded. But they which haue no regarde neither of charitie nor of humanitie, should at leaste haue bene somewhat moued with the autorite of Paul, whose wordes are nothing doubtful. If thou blesse (saith he) in spirit, howe shall he that filleth the place of an vnlearned man answere Amen to thy blessing, sith he knoweth not what thou sayst? For thou indeede giuest thanks, but the other is not edified. Who therefore can sufficiently wonder at the vnbridled licentiousnes of the Papistes, which, the Apostle so openly crying out against it, feare not to roare out in a strange tongue most babling praiers, in which they themselues sometime vnderstande not one syllable, nor woulde haue other folkes to vnderstand it? But Paul teacheth that wee ought to doe otherwise. How then? I will pray (saith he) with spirite, I will pray also with mind: I will sing with spirit: I wil sing also with minde: signifying by the name of spirite, the singular giste of tongues, which many being endued with, abused it, when they seuered it from the mind, that is, from vnderstanding. But this we must altogether thinke, that it is by no meane possible, neither in publike nor in priuate prayer, but that the tongue without the heart must highly displease God. Moreouer we must think that the mind ought to be kindled with feruentnes of thought, that it may far surmount all that the tongue may expresse with vtterance. Finally that the tongue is not necessary at all for priuate prayer, but so farre as the inwarde feeling either is not able to suffice

10. cap. 33.

1. Cor. 14. 16

to enkindle it self, or the vehemence of inkindling violently carrieth the work of the tongue with it. For though very good prayers sometime be without voice, yet oftentimes betideth, that when the affection of the minde is feruent, both the tongue breaketh forth into voyce, and the other members into gesturing without excessiue shewe. Hereupon came the muttering of Hanna, & such a like thing al the holy ones alway feele in themselues, when they burst out into broken & vnperfect voices. As for y gestures of the body which are wont to be vsed in prayer (as kneeling & vncovering of the head) they are exercises by which we endeuour to rise vp to a greater reuerencing of God.

1. Sam. i. 13.

34 Nowe we must learne not onely a more certaine rule, but also the verie forme of praying: namely the same, which the heauenly father hath taught vs by his beloued soone: wherein we may acknowledge his vnmeasurable goodnes and kindnesse. For beside this hee warneth and exhorteth vs to seek him in al our necessitie (as children are wont to flie to their fathers defence, so oft as they be troubled with any distresse) because hee sawe that he did not sufficiently perceyue this, howe slender our pouertie was, what were meete to be asked, and what were for our profite: he prouided also for this our ignorance, and what our capacitie wanted, he supplied and furnished of his owne. For he hath prescribed to vs a forme wherein he hath as in a Table set out whatsoeuer we may desire of him, whatsoeuer vayleth for our profite, and whatsoeuer is necessarie to aske. Of which his genulenesse we receiue a great frute of comfort, that we vnderstande that wee aske no inconuenient thing, no vnseeming or vnfit thing, finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, sith we aske in a maner after his owne mouth. When Plato saw the follie of men in making requestes to God, which beeing graunted, it many times befell much to their owne hurt: he pronounced that this is the best maner of praying taken out of the olde Poete, King Iuppiter giuen vnto vs y best things both when we aske them, and when we doe not aske them, but commaunde euil things to be away from vs euen when we aske them. And verily the heathen man is wise in this, that he iudgeth howe perillous it is to aske of the Lord that which our owne desire moueth vs: and therewithall he bewrayeth our vnhappy case, that we can not once open our mouths before God without danger, vnlesse the Spirite doe instruct vs to a right rule of praying. And in somuch greater estimation this priuilege is worthie to bee had of vs, sith the onely begotten Sonne of G O D ministrerth words into our mouth which may deliuer our mind from all doubting.

Matt. 6. 9.

Luk. 12. 9.

Alcib. vel de voto.

Rom. 8. 6.

35 This whether you call it forme or rule of praying is made of fixe petitions. For, the cause why I agree not to them that diuide it into seuen parts, is this, that by putting in this aduerfatiue word (But) it seemeth that the Euangelist ment to ioyne these two peeces together, as if he had said: Suffer vs not to be oppressed with tentation, but rather help our weakenesse, and deliuer vs, that we faint not. The olde writers also thinke on our side, so y nowe that which is in Matthew added in the seuenth place, is by way of declaration to be ioyned to the sixt petition. But although the whole praier is such that in euerie part of it regarde is specially to be had of the glorie of God, yet the three first petitions are peculiarly appointed to Gods glorie, which alone we ought ought in them to looke vnto without any respecte (as they say) of our owne profite. The other three haue care of vs, and are properly assigned to aske those things that are for our profit. And when we pray y^e name of God be hallowed: because God will prooue whether he bee loued and honoured of vs freely or for hope of rewarde, we must then thinke nothing of our owne commoditie, but his glorie must be set before vs, which alone we must beholde with fixed eyes: and no otherwise ought wee to bee minded in the other prayers of this sorte. And euen this turneth to our great profite, that when it is sanctified as wee pray, it is also likewise made our sanctification. But our eyes (as it is saide) must winke and after a certaine maner bee blinde at such profite, so as they may not once looke at it: that if all hope of our priuate benefite were cut off, yet we shoulde not cease to wish & pray for this sanctification and other things which pertaine to the glorie of God. As it is seene in the examples of Moses and Paul, to whome it was

Exo. 32. 32.
Rom. 9. 3.

not greuous to turne away their mindes and eyes from themselues, & with vehement and inflamed zeale to wish their owne destruction, that though it were with their owne losse they might auance the glorie and kingdome of God. On the otherside when wee pray that our dayly breade bee giuen vs: although we wishe that which is for our owne commoditie, yet here also we ought cheefely to seeke the glorie of God, so that wee shoulde not aske it vnlesse it might turne to his glorie. Nowe let vs come to the declaring of the prayer it selfe.

Our Father which art in heauen.

36 First in the verie entrie wee meete with this which wee saide before that all prayer ought none otherwise to be offered of vs to God than in the name of Christ, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For since we call him father, truely wee alleadge for vs the name of Christ. For by what boldnesse might any man call God, Father? who shoulde burst forth into so great rashnesse, to take to himselfe the honour of the Sonne of God, vnlesse we were adopted the children of grace in Christ? Which being the true Sonne, is giuen of him to vs to be our brother: that that which he hath proper by nature, may by the benefite of adoption be made ours, if we doe with sure faith embrace so great bountifullnesse. As Iohn saith, that power is giuen to them which beleue in y^e name of the onely begotten Son of God, that they also may be made the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himselfe our Father, and will be so called of vs, by this sweetnesse of name deliuering vs from all distrust, sith there can no where be founde any greater affection of loue than in a father. Therefore hee coulde by no surer example testifie his vnmeasurable deare loue toward vs than by this that wee are named the sonnes of God. But his loue is so much greater & more excellent toward vs than all loue of our parentes, as hee passeth all men in goodnesse and mercie: that if all the fathers that are in the earth, hauing shaken off al feeling of fatherly naturalnesse, wolde forsake their children, yet hee will neuer fayle vs, because he can not denie himselfe. For wee haue his promise, If you beeing euill can giue good giftes to your children,

howe much more can your Father which is in heauen? Againe in the Prophet, Can a mother forget her children? Though she forget them, yet I will not forget thee. If we be his childrē: then as a child can not giue himself into the tuition of a stranger & forein man, vnlesse he cōplaine either of the cruelty or pouerty of his father: so we can not seeke succours from els where thā from him alone, vnlesse we reproch him with pouerty and want of ability, or with cruelty or too extreeme rigorousnesse.

37 Neither let vs alleage that we are worthily made fearefull with conscience of finnes, which may make a Father be he neuer so mercifull and kinde, daily to be displeas'd. For if among men the sonne can with no better aduocate pleade his cause to his father, and by no better meane get and recouer his fauour being lost, than if he himselfe humbly and lowly, acknowledging his fault, do beseech his fathers mercy (for then the fatherly bowels can not hide theselues but must be moued at such prayers) what shall that father of mercies do, and the God of all comforte: shall not he rather heare the teares and gronings of his children intreating for themselues (specially sith hee doth call and exhorte vs to do so) than any other intercessions whatsoever they be: to the succour whereof they doe so fearefully flee, not without some shewe of despeire, because they distrust of the kindenes and mercifulnesse of their father? This ouerflowing plenty of fatherly kindenes he depainteth and setteth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father louingly embraceth the sonne that had estranged himselfe from him, that had riotously wasted his substance, that had euery way grieuouly offended against him: and he tarieth not till he do with wordes craue pardon, but he himselfe preuenteth him, knoweth him a farre off returning, of his owne will goeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueth him into fauour. For, setting out in a man this example of so great gentlenes, he minded to teach vs how much more plentiful kindenes we ought to looke for at his hande, who is not onely a Father, but also the best and most mercifull of all Fathers, howsoever we be vnkinde, rebellious and naughty children: so that yet we cast our selues vpon his mercy. And that he might make it to be more assuredly beleeued, that he is such a Father to vs, if we be Christians: he willed not onely to be called Father, but also by expresse name Our Father: as if we might thus talke with him, O Father which hast so great naturall kindenesse toward thy children, so great easinesse to pardon, wee thy children call to thee and pray to thee, being assured and fully perswaded, that thou bearest no other affection to vs than fatherly, howsoever we be vnworthy of such a Father. But because the small capacities of our heart conceiue not so great vnmeasurablenesse of fauour, not onely Christ is to vs a pledge and earnest of our adoption, but also he giueth vs the Spirit for witnesse of the same adoption, through whom we may with a free and lowd voyce cry Abba, Father. So oft therefore as any delay shall withstand vs, let vs remember to aske of him, that correcteth our fearefulness he wil set before vs that Spirit of couragiousnes to be our guid to pray boldely.

38 Whereas we are not so taught that euery one should seuerally cal him his owne father, but rather that we should al in common together call him Our Father: thereby we are put in minde, how great affection of brotherly loue

Esa. 49. 15.

Gal. 4. 6.

loue ought to be among vs, which are altogether by one same right of mercy and liberality, the children of such a Father. For we all haue one common Father, from whome commeth whatsoeuer good thing may betide vnto vs: there ought to be nothing feuerall among vs, which wee are not readie with great cheerefulnesse of minde to communicate one to an other, so much as neede requireth. Nowe if we bee so desirous, as we ought to be, to reach our hand and help one to an other, there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commend them to the care and prouidence of the most good Father, who being well pleased and fauoring, nothing at all can be wanted. And verily euen this same we owe to our Father. For as he y^e truly & hartily loueth any Father of household, doth also embrace his whole household, with loue and good will: likewise what loue and affection wee beare to this heauenly Father, we must shew toward his people, his household and his inheritance, which he hath so honored, that he hath called it the fulnesse of his onely begotten Sonne. Let a Christian man therefore frame his praier by this rule, that they be common, and may comprehend all them that be brethren in Christ with him: and not onely those whome he presently seeth and knoweth to be such, but al men that liue vpon earth: of whom, what God hath determined, it is out of our knowledge: sauing that it is no lesse godly than naturall to wish the best to them, & hope the best of them. Howbeit we ought with a certaine singular affection to beare a special inclination to them of the household of faith, whome the Apostle hath in euery thing peculiarly commended vnto vs. In a summe, All our praier, ought to bee so made, that they haue respect to that community which our Lorde hath stablished in his kingdome and his house.

39 - Yet this withstandeth not, but that wee may specially pray both for our selues and for certaine other: so that yet our minde depart not from hauing an eye to this community, nor once swarte from it, but apply all things vnto it. For though they be singularly spoken in forme, yet because they are directed to that marke, they cease not to be common. All this may be easly vnderstoode by a like example. The commandement of God is generall, to relieve the neede of all poore: and yet they obey this commandement which to this end doe helpe their pouerty whom they knowe or see to be in deede, although they passe ouer many whom they see to be pressed with no lesse necessitie: either because they can not knowe all, or be not able to helpe al. After this manner they also do not against the will of God, which hauing regard vnto & thinking vpon this common fellowship of the Church, do make such particular praier, by which they do with a comon mind in particular words, commend to God themselues or other, whose necessitie God willed to bee more neerly known to them. Howbeit all things are not like in praier and in bestowing of goods. For, the liberality of giuing cannot be vsed but toward them whose neede we haue perceiued: but with praier we may helpe euen them y^e are most strange & most vnknowē to vs, by how great a space of ground soeuer they be distant from vs. This is done by the general forme of prayer, wherein all the children of God are contained, among whome they also are.

1. Tim. 3. 8. Hereto we may apply y^e which Paul exhorteth the faithfull of his time, y^e they lift vp euery where pure hands without strife: because when he warneth the y^e

Arise shutteth the gate against prayers, he willeth them with one mind to lay their petitions in common together.

40 It is added, that he is in heauen. Wherupon it is not by and by to be gathered that he is bound fast inclosed and cōpassed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon also confesseth that the heauēs of heauens can not containe him. And he himselfe saith by the Prophet that heauen is his seate, and the earth his foote stoole. Whereby verily he signifieth that he is not limited in any certaine coast, but is spred abroad throughout all thinges. But because our minde (such is the grossenesse of it) coulde not otherwise conceiue his vnspeakeable glorie, it is signified to vs by heauen, than which there can nothing come vnder our sight more ample or fuller of maiestie. Sith therefore wheresoeuer our senses comprehend any thing, there they vse to fasten it: God is set out of all place, that when we will seeke him we should be raised vp aboue all sense both of body & soule. Again by this manner of speaking he is lifted vp aboue all chaunce of corruption & change: finally it is signified that hee comprehendeth and containeth y whole world and gouerneth it with his power. Wherefore this is all one as if he had ben called of infinite greatnes or height, of incomprehensible substance, of vnmeasurable power, of euerlasting immortalitie. But while we haue this, we must lift vp our minde hier when God is spoken of, that we dreame not any earthly or fleshy thing of him, y we measure him not by our smal proportions, nor draw his will to the rule of our affections. And therewithal is to be raised vp our affiance in him, by whose prouidence and power wee vnderstand heauen and earth to be gouerned. Let this be the summe, that vnder the name of father is set before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, that he may be called vpon with assured faith: & that y familiar name of Father is not onely applied to stablish affiance, but also auaieth to holde fast our mindes y they be not drawn to doubtful or fained Gods, but should from y only begotten sonne climbe vp to y only father of Angels & of the Church: then, y because his seat is placed in heauen, we are by the gouernance of the world put in mind y not without cause wee come to him which with present care commeth of his owne wil to meete vs. Who so come to God (saith the Apostle) they must first belceue y there is a God: then that he is a rewarder to al them that seeke him. Both these things Christ affirmeth to be proper to his father, that our faith may be staied in him: then, that we may be certainly perswaded y he is not careles of our safetie: because he vouchsaueueth euen to vs to extend his prouidence. With which introduction Paul prepareth vs to pray rightly. For before that he biddeth our petitions to be opened before God he saith thus, Be ye careful for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Whereby appeareth that they doubtfully & with perplexity tossē their prayers in their mind which haue not this wel settled in them, that the eye of God is vpon the righteous.

41 The first Petition is, That the name of God be hallowed, the need whercof is ioyned with our great shame. For what is more shamefull than y the glory of God should be partly by our vnthankfulnes, partly by our maliciousnes darkened: and (so much as in it lieth) by our boldnesse and furious stubbornesse, vtterly blotted out? Though all the wicked would burst themselves.

themselves with their wilfulnesse full of sacriledge, yet the holinesse of the name of God gloriously shineth. And not without cause the Prophete cri-eth out, As thy name O God, so is thy praise into all the endes of the earth.
 For where soeuer the name of God is knowen, it cannot be but that his stren-gthes, power, goodnesse, wisdom, righteousnesse, mercie, and trueth must shewe forth themselves, which may drawe vs into admiration of him, and stirre vs vp to publishe his prayse. Sith therefore the holinesse of God is so shamefully taken from him in earth, if we bee not able to rescue it, wee bee at the least commaunded to take care of it in our prayers. The summe is, that wee wishe the honour to be giuen to God which he is worthie to haue, that men neuer speake or thinke of him without most hie reuerence: where-vnto is contrarie the vnholly abusing, which hath alway bene too common in the worlde, as at this day also it rangeth abroad. And herevpon commeth the necessitie of this petition, which if there liued in vs any godlines, though it were but a litle, ought to haue bene superfluous. But if the name of God haue his holinesse safe, when being seuered from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, here we are commaunded not onely to pray that God will deliuer that holy name from all contempte and dishonour, but also that he will subdue all mankinde to the reuerence of it. Nowe whereas GOD discloseth himselfe to vs, partly by doctrine, and partly by workes, hee is no otherwise sanctified of vs, than if we giue to him in both behalves that which is his, and so embrace whatsoeuer shall come from him: and that his seueritie haue no lesse praise among vs than his mercifulnesse, forasmuch as hee hath in the manifolde diuersitie of his works imprinted marks of his glorie which may worthilie drawe out of all tongues a confession of his prayse. So shall it come to passe that the Scripture shall haue ful authoritie with vs, and that no successe shall hinder the blessing which God deserueth in the whole course of the gouerning of the world. Again the petition also tendeth to this purpose, that all vngodlinesse which defileth this holy name, may be destroyed and taken away: that whatsoeuer things do darken and diminish this sanctifying, as well slanders as mockings, may be driuen away: and when God suddueth all sacrileges, his glory may thereby more and more shine abroad.

43 The seconde petition is, that The kingdome of God may come:
 which although it conteyne no newe thing, is yet not without cause seuered from the first: because if we consider our owne drowlines in a thing greatest of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it selfe to haue bene most well knowen, be with many wordes oft beaten into vs. Therefore after that we haue bene commaunded to pray to God to bring into subiection, and at length vterly to destroye whatsoeuer spotteth his holy name: nowe is added a like and in a manner the same request, that his kingdome come. But although wee haue already set forth the definition of his kingdome, yet I nowe breesly rehearse, that God reigneth when men as wel with forsaking of themselves as with despising of the world and of the earthly life, doe so yelde themselves to his righteousnesse, that they aspire to the heauenly life. Therefore there are two parts of this kingdome: y one, that God correct with the power of his Spirit al corrupt desires of the flesh, which

which do by multitudes make warre against him: the other, that he frame all our senses to the obedience of his gouernement. Therefore none doe keepe right order in this prayer, but they which beginne at themselues, that is to say, that they be cleansed from all corruptions which trouble the quiet state of the kingdome of God, and infect the purenesse thereof. Now because the worde of God is like a kingly scepter, wee are here commaunded to pray that he will subdue the mindes and heartes of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the seeret instinct of his Spirite he vttereth the effectuall force of his worde, that it may be auanced in such degree as it is worthie. After ward we must come downe to the wicked which do obstinately and with desperate rage resist his authoritie. God therefore setteth vp his kingdome by humbling the whole world: but that in diuerse maners: because he tamerh the wantonnesse of some, and of other some he breaketh the vntamed pride. This is daily to be wished that it be done, that it may please God to gather to himselfe Churches out of all the coastes of the worlde, to enlarge and encrease them in number, to enrich them with his giftes, to stablish right order in them: on the other side to ouerthrowe all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to scatter abroade their counsels, to cast downe their enterprises. Whereby appeareth that the endeuour of daily proceeding is not in vaine commaunded vs: because the matters of men are neuer in so good case, that filthinesse being shaken away and cleansed, full purenesse flourisheth and is in liuely force. But the fulnesse of it is deferred vnto the last comming of Christ, when Paul teacheth that God shalbe all in all. And so this prayer ought to withdrawe vs from all the corrupt ones of the world, which do seuer vs from God that his kingdome shoulde not flourish in vs, and also to kindle our endeuour to mortifie the flesh, finally to instruct vs to the bearing of the crosse: forasmuch as God will in this wise haue his kingdome spread abroad. Neither ought we to take it miscon-
I. Cor. 15. 28
tentedly that the outward man be destroyed, so that the inward man be renewed. For this is the nature of the kingdome of God, when wee submit our selues to the righteousnesse thereof, to make vs partakers of his glorie. This is done when brightly setting forth his light and trueth with alway newe encreases, whereby the darknesse and lies of Satan and his kingdome, may vanish away, be destroyed and perish, he defendeth them that be his, with the help of his Spirite, directeth them to vprightnesse, and strengtheneth them to continuance; but ouerthroweth the wicked conspiracies of his enemies, shaketh abroad their treasons and deceites, preuenteth their malice, and beareth downe their stubbornnesse, till at length he kill Antichrist with the Spirite of his mouth and destroy all vngodlinesse with the brightnesse of his comming.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth as it is in heauen. Which although it hangeth vpon his kingdome, and cannot be seuered from it, is not in vaine added seuerally, for our grossenesse, which doeth not easily or by and by conceiue what it is that G O D reigne in the worlde. It shall therefore be no absurditie if this be taken by way of plainer exposition: that God shall then be king in the worlde when all things shall submit themselues to his will. Nowe here is not meant of his secrete will, whereby he gouerneth all things & directeth them to their ende. For though Satan & men are troublefomly carried against him, yet he can by his incōprehensible counfel not only turne aside their violent motions, but also driue them into order that he may do by them that which he hath purposed. But here is spoken of an other will of God, namely that, whereunto aunswereth willing obedience: and therefore the heauen is by name compared with the earth: because the Angels, as it is saide in the Psalme, do willingly obey God & are diligently bent to doe his commandements. Wee are therefore commanded to wish that as in heauen nothing is done but by the becke of God, & the Angels are quietly framed to all vprightnesse: so the earth, all stubbornnesse & pcruernesse being quenched, may be subiect to such gouernement. And when we require this, we renounce the desires of our owne flesh: because whosoever doth not resigne and yeld his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth set himselfe against him, forasmuch as nothing cometh out of vs but faultie. And we are againe by this prayer framed to the forsaking of our selues, that God may gouerne vs after his wil: & not that only, but that he may also create in vs newe mindes & newe hearts, our old being brought to nought: that we may feele in our selues none other motion of desire than a mere consent with his will: summarily that we may will nothing of our selues, but that his Spirite may gouerne our heartes, by whome inwardly teaching vs we may learne to loue those things that please him, & to hate those things that displease him. Whereupon this also followeth, that whatsoeuer affections fight against his will, he may make them vaine and voyd. Loe here be the first three chiefe points of this prayer, in asking whereof wee ought to haue the onely glorie of God before our eyes, leaving the respect of our selues, and hauing no regard to any of our owne profit, which although it come hereof largely vnto vs, yet we ought not here to seeke it. But albeit al these things, though we neither thinke of them, nor wish them, nor aske them, must neuerthelesse come to passe in their due time, yet wee must wish them and require them. And this to doe is no small profit for our trauaile, that we may so testifie and professe our selues to be the seruautes and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeuouring and being truely and throughly giuen to set forth his honour, which is due to him being both a Lorde and a Father. Who so therefore doe not with affection and zeale of auaucing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God be hallowed, that his kingdome come, that his will be done: they are not to be accounted among the children and seruautes of God: and as all these things shalbe done against their willes, so they shall turne to their confusion and destruction.

44 Now followeth the second parte of the prayer, in which wee come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding fare well to the glorie of God (which as Paul witnesseth, is to be regarded euen in meate & drinke) wee should seeke onely what is profitable for our selues: but wee haue already giuen warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himselfe doeth draw vs to himselfe wholly, that he may in this wise proue our godlinesse. Then he graunteth vs also to haue an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition, that wee aske

nothing for our selues but to this end that whatsoeuer benefits he bestoweth vpon vs, they may set foorth his glory: forasmuch as nothing is more rightfull than that we liue and die to him. But in this petition we aske of God generally all things which the vse of the body needeth vnder the elements of this worlde, not onely wherewith we may be fed and clothed, but also whatsoeuer he foreseeeth to be profitable for vs, that we may eat our bred in peace. By which prayer briefly we yeelde our selues into his care, and commit vs to his providence, that he may feede, cherish, and preserue vs. For the most good Father disdaineth not to receiue also our body into his faithfull sauegarde and keeping, to exercise our Faith in these small things, when we loke for all things at his handes euen to a crumme of bread and a droppe of water. For whereas it is come to passe I wote not howe by our iniquitie, that we be moued and vexed with greater care of the flesh than of the soule: many which dare trust to God for their soule, are yet carefull for their flesh, are yet in doubt what they shall eat, and wherewith they shalbe clothed: and if they haue not plentie of wine, wheate, and oyle aforehande, they tremble for feare. So much more doe we esteeme the shadow of this life which lasteth but a moment, than that euerlasting immortalitie. But who so trusting to God haue once cast away that carefulnesse for the prouision of the fleshe, doe also by and by looke for saluation and euerlasting life at his hand, which are greater things. It is therefore no small exercise of Faith, to hope for those things of God, which otherwise doe so much holde vs in care: and we haue not smally profited, when we haue put of this vnbeleeuingnes which sticketh fast within the bones almost of all men. As for that which some doe here teach of transubstantiall bread, it seemeth but smally to agree with the meaning of Christ: yea but if we did not euen in this fraile life giue to God the office of a nourishing Father, our praier should be vnperfect. The reason which they bring is too much prophane: that it is not meete that the childe of God, which ought to be spirituall, shoulde not onely cast their minde to earthly cares, but also wrappe GOD there in with them. As though his blessing and fatherly fauour doth not also appeare in the sustenance of our life, or as though it were written in vaine that godlinesse hath promises not onely of the life to come, but also of this present life. 1. Tim. 4. 8. But although the foregiuennesse of sinnes is of much greater value than the sustenances of the body, yet Christ hath set the inferior thing in the first place, to the entent to lift vs vp by degrees to the other two petitions which do properly belong to the heauenly life, wherein he had regarde to our grossnesse. We are commaunded to aske Our breade, that we should be contente with the quantitie which our heauenly Father vouchsafeth to giue to vs, & should not seeke for gaine by vnlawfull crafty meanes. In the meane time we must learne that it is made Oures by title of gifte, because neither our diligence, nor our trauaile, nor our handes (as it is sayde in Moses) doe by themselves get vs anie thing, vnlesse the blessing of God be present: yea the plenty of bread should nothing at all profite vs, vnlesse it were by God turned into nourishment. And therefore this liberalitie of GOD is no lesse necessary for the riche than for the poore: because hauing their cellers and their barnes full, they should yet fainte for drinesse and emptinesse; vnlesse they did by his grace enioy their bred. The worde This day, or Euery day as it is in the other Euangilist, and also the adiectiue Daily, do bridle the too much greedinesse of fraile things, wherwith we are wont to burne out of measure, and whereunto are ioyned other euils: sith if we haue plentifull abundance, we do gloriously powre it out vpon pleasure, delites, boasting, and other kindes of riotous excesse. Therefore we are commaunded to aske only so much as is enough for our necessity, & as it were from day to day, with this affiance, that when our heauenly Father hath fedde vs this day, he will also not faile vs to morrowe. Therefore how great plenty of things soeuer do flow vnto vs, yea when our barnes be stuffed and our cellers full: yet wee ought alway to aske our dayly bread: because we must certainly belecue that all substance is nothing, but in somuch as the Lorde doth by pouring out of his blessing with continuall encrease make it frutefull: & that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but insomuch as he doth euery houre giue vs a portion and graunt vs the vse of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardely suffer it selfe to be perswaded: the Lorde testifieth that he hath shewed a singular example therof for all ages, when he fed his people with Manna in the wildernesse, to teach vs that man liueth not in breade onely, but rather in the worde that commeth out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that it is his power alone by which our life and strengthes are susteined, although he do minister it vnto vs vnder bodily instrumentes. As he is wont also to teach vs by the contrary example, when hee so oft as hee will, breaketh the strength and (as he calleth it) the staffe of breade, that men eating may pine with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But whoso not being contented with daily bread, but with vnbrideled greedinesse are gaping for endlesse store, or who so being full with their abundance, and carelesse by reason of the heape of their riches, doe neuerthelesse sue to GOD with this prayer, they doe nothing else but mocke him. For, the first sort of such men aske that which they would not obtaine, yea that which they most of all abhorre, that is, to haue onely dayly bread, and so much as in them lieth they dissemblyngly hide from GOD the affection of their couetousnesse: whereas true prayer ought to powre out before him the very whole minde it selfe, and whatsoeuer inwardely lieth hidden. But the other sorte doe aske that which they looke not for at his hande, namely that which they thinke that they haue with themselues. In this that it is called Ours the bountifullnes of God (as we haue sayde) so much more appeareth, which maketh that ours that is by no right due to vs. Yet that exposition is not to be reiected which I haue also touched, that by our bread is meant that which is earned with rightful & harmelesse trauaile, and not gotten with deceites and extortions: because that is alway other mens which we get to our selues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be giuen vs, therby is signified that it is the only and free gift of God, from whence soeuer it come to vs, yea when it shal most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne policy and trauaile, and earned with our owne handes: forasmuch as it commeth to passe by his only blessing that our labours prosper well.

Matt. 3. 4.

Leu. 26. 26.

45 Nowe followeth, Forgiue vs our dettes: in which petition and the nexte

next following, Christ hath briefly contained whatsoeuer maketh for the heauenly life: as in these two partes aboue standeth the spirituall couenant which God hath made for the saluation of his Church, I will write my lawes in their hearts, and I will be mercifull to their iniquitie. Here Christ beginneth the forgiuenesse of sinnes: after this, he will by and by adioyne the second grace, that God defend vs with the power of his Spirit, & sustaine vs wth his help, that we may stand vnouercome against all tentations. And sinnes he calleth dettes, because we are detbound to pay the penaltie of them, & were by no meanes able to satisfie it, vnlesse we were acquitted by this forgiuenesse. Which pardon is of his free mercie, when he himselfe liberally wipeth out these dettes, taking no payment of vs, but with his owne mercie satisfying himselfe in Christ, which hath once giuen himselfe for recompence. Therefore who so trust that God shalbe satisfied by their owne or other mennes merites, and that with such satisfactions the forgiuenesse of sinnes is recompensed and redeemed, they haue no parte of communicating of this free forgiuenesse: and when they call vppon God in this manner, they doe nothing but subscribe to their owne accusation, yea and seale their owne condemnation with their owne witnesse. For they confesse them selues detters, vnlesse they be acquitted by the benefit of forgiuenesse, which yet they do not receiue, but rather refuse, when they thrust vnto God their own merites and satisfactions. For, so they do not beseech his mercie, but do appeale to his iudgement. As for them that dreame of a perfection in themselues, which taketh away neede to craue pardone, let them haue such disciples whome the itching of their eares driueth to errours: so that it be certaine that so many disciples as they get, are taken away from Christ: forasmuch as he instructing all to confesse their guiltinesse, receiue none but sinners: not for that he cherisheth sinnes with flatterings, but because he knew that the faithfull are neuer throughly vnclouted of the vices of their flesh, but that they alway remaine subiect to the iudgement of God. It is in dede to be wished, yea and to be earnestly endeouored, that we hauing performed all the partes of our dutie may truely reioyce before God that we are cleane from all spot: but forasmuch as it pleaseth God by litle and litle to make againe his image in vs, that there alway remaineth some infection in our flesh, the remedie ought not to haue bene despised. If Christ by the authoritie giuen to him of his Father, commaundeth vs throughout the whole course of our life, to flee to crauing of pardon of our guiltinesse: who shalbe able to suffer these new masters, which go about with this imagined ghost of perfect innocencie to dasel the eyes of the simple, to make them to trust y^e they may be made free from all fault: Which, as Iohn witnesseth, is nothing else but to make God a lier. And withall one worke these lewd men by cancelling one article do teare in sunder & by y^e meane do weaken from the verie foundation the whole couenant of God, wherein wee haue shewed y^e our saluation is contained: so as they be not only robbers of God, because they seuer those things so conioyned, but also wicked and cruell because they ouerwhelme poore soules with dispaire: and traitours to themselues and other, that be like them, because they bring themselues into a slothfulnesse directly contrarie to the mercie of God.

in wishing the comming of the kingdome of God, wee doe also aske the putting away of sinne: that is too childish, because in the first table of this praier is set forth vnto vs most hie perfection, but in this part is set forth our weaknesse. So these two things do fitly agree together, that in a spring toward the marke we despise not the remedies which our necessitie requireth. Finally, we pray that we may be forgiuen as wee our selues do forgiue our detters, that is, as we do forgiue and pardon all of whomesoeuer wee haue beene in any thing offended, either vniustly handled in deede, or reprochfully vsed in word. Not that it lieth in vs to pardon the giltinesse of the fault & offence which pertaineth to God alone: but this is our forgiuing, of our owne willingness to lay away out of our mind wrath, hatred, and desire of reuengement, and with voluntary forgetfulness to treade vnder foote the remembrance of iniuries. Wherefore we may not aske forgiuenesse of sinnes at the hande of God, if wee do not also forgiue their offences towarde vs which either do or haue done vs wrong. But if wee keepe any hatreds in our hearts, and purpose any reuengementes and imagine by what occasion wee may hurt, yea, and if wee do not endeuour to come into fauour againe with our enemies, and to deserue well of them with all kind of friendly doinges, & to winne them vnto vs: we do by this prayer beseech God that he doe not forgiue vs. For we require that he graunt to vs the same forgiuenesse which we graunt to other. But this is to pray that he graunt it not to vs, vnlesse wee grant it to them. Whoso therefore be such, what doe they obtaine by their prayer but a more grieuous iudgement? Last of al it is to be noted, y^e this condition y^e he forgiue vs as we forgiue our detters, is not herefore added for y^e we deserue his forgiuenesse by the forgiuenesse which we graunt to other, as if that cause of forgiuenesse to vs were there expressed: but by this worde partly the Lords will was to comfort the weakenesse of our Faith, for he added this as a signe whereby we may be assured that he hath as surely graunted to vs forgiuenesse of our sinnes, as we surely know in our conscience that we haue graunted the same to other, if our mind be voide and cleansed of all hatred, enuie and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a marke, hee wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not bee bolde to call vpon him as their Father, which being headlong hasty to reuenge, & hardly entreated to pardon, do vse stiffely continuing enmities, and do cherish in themselues the same displeasure towarde other which they pray to be turned from themselues. Which is also in Luke expressly spoken in the wordes of Christ.

46 The sixth petition (as we haue said) answereth to the promise of engrauing the lawe of God in our heartes. But because we do not without continuall warrefare and harde and great struiings obey to God, wee doe here pray to be furnished with such weapons and defended with such succor, that wee may be able to get the victorie: whereby wee are warned that wee stand in neede not onely of the grace of the Spirit, which may soften, bow, and direct our hearts to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby hee may make vs inuincible against both all the traiterous entrappings and violent conflictes of Satan. But now of tentations there are many and diuerse

Ja. 1. 2. & 14. sortes. For, both the peruerse thoughtes of minde prouoking vs to trespasing

trespassing against the law, which either our owne lust doth minister vnto vs, or the diuell stirreth vp, are tentations: and also those things which of their owne nature are not euill, yet by the craft of the deuill are made tentations, when they are so set before our eyes, y^e by the occasion of them we be drawen away or doe swarue from God. And these tentations are either on the right hande or on the left. On the right hand, as riches, power, honours, which commonly doe with their glistering and shewe of good so daselle the sight of men, and catche them with the baited hooke of their flatteringes, that being entrapped with such deceites, or dronke with such sweetenesse, they may forget their God. On the left hand, as pouertie, reproches, despisings, troubles, and such other: that they being grieued with the bitternes & hardnes thereof may be vtterly discouraged, cast away faith and hope, and finally be altogether estranged from God. To these tentations of both sortes, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our owne lust, or being set against vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heauenly Father that he suffer vs not to yeelde. But rather that he vpholde vs and raise vs vp with his hande, that being strong by his strength, wee may stande fast against all the assaults of the malicious enemy, whatsoeuer thoughtes he put into our minde: then, that whatsoeuer is set before vs on either side, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with prosperitie, nor throwen downe with aduersitie. Neither yet doe we here require that wee may feele no tentations at all, with which we haue great neede to be stirred vp, pricked, and pinched, least by too much rest wee growe dull. For not in vaine did Dauid wishe to be tempted: and not without cause the Lorde dayly tempteth his elect, chastising them by shame, pouertie, trouble, and other kindes of crosse. But God tempteth after one manner, and Satan after another: Satan, to destroye, damne, confounde, and throwe downe headlong: but God, that by prouing them that be his he may haue a triall of their vnfaignednesse, and by exercising them may confirme their strength, to mortifie, purge by fier, and feare their flesh, which vnlesse it were in this wise restrained, woulde waxe wanton and would wildely outrage aboue measure. Moreouer Sathan assaileth men vnarmed and vnready, that hee may oppresse them vnware: God euen with tempting worketh the effect, that they which be his may patiently beare whatsoeuer he sendeth vpon them. By the name of the Euill, whether we vnderstande the Deuill or sinne, it maketh litle matter. Satan in deede himselfe is the enemy that lieth in waite for our life: but with sinne he is armed to destroy vs. This therefore is our request, that we may not be ouercome or ouerwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lorde stande strong against all contrary powers wherewith we are assailed: which is, not to yelde vs vanquished to tentations, that being receiued into his keping & charge, and being safe by his protectiō: we may endure vnovercome ouer sinne, death, the gates of hel, and the whole kingdom of the deuill: which is to be deliuered from euil. Where it is also to be diligently marked, that it is aboue our strength to matche with the deuill so greata warriar, and to beare his force and violence. Otherwise we should but vainly or as it were in mockage ask that which we had already in our selues. Surely, they which prepare them to such a battle with trust of themselves, doe not sufficiently vnderstande with how fierce and wel armed an enemy they haue to doe. Nowe wee pray to be deliuered from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad and raging Lyon, whereas we should be torne in peeces with his teeth and pawes, and swallowed with his throte, vnlesse the Lorde do deliuer vs out of the midst of death: yet therewithall knowing this that if the Lorde shall stande by vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrowen, we shall in his strength shewe strength. Let other trust as they list to their owne abilities and strengthes of free will, which they thinke that they haue of them selues: but let it suffice vs that we stande and are strong by the only strength of God. But this praier containeth more than at the first sight it beareth in shewe. For if the Spirit of God be our strength to fight out our combate with Satan, we shall not be able to get the victorie vntill we being filled with that Spirit shal haue put off all the weakenesse of our flesh. When therefore we pray to be deliuered from Satan and the Deuill, wee pray to be from time to time enriched with newe encreases of the grace of God, till being fully stuffed with them we may triumph ouer all euill. It seemeth harde and rough to some, that we craue of God that he leade vs not into tentation, forasmuch as it is contrary to his nature to tempt, as James witnesseth. But this question is already partly affoiled, where we saide that our owne lust is properly the cause of all the tentations wherewith wee are ouercome, and therefore worthily beareth the blame thereof. Neither doth James mean any thing else, but that the faultes are without cause and wrongfully layed vpon God, which we are driuen to impute to our selues, because we knowe our selues in our conscience guilty of them. But this withstandeth not but that God may when it pleaseth him make vs bonde to Satan, cast vs away into a reprobate sence, and to filthy lustes, and so leade vs into tentation by his iudgement which is righteous in deede but yet oftentimes secret: forasmuch as y^e cause of it is often hid from men, which is yet certainly knowen with him. Wherupon is gathered that this is no vnfit maner of speaking, if we be perswaded that he doth not without cause so oft threaten, that whē the reprobate shalbe striken with blindenesse and hardning of heart, these shalbe sure tokens of his vengeance.

47 These three petitions, wherewith we do peculiarly commend vs and our thinges to God, do evidently shewe this which we haue before said, that the praier of Christians ought to be common and to tende to the common edifying of the Church, and to the encrease of the communion of the faithful. For there doth not euery man pray to haue any thing priuately giuen, but all in common to gether do pray for Our bread, for forgienesse of sins, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euil. There is furthermore adioyned a cause why we haue both so greate boldnesse to aske, and so great trust to obtaine: which although it be not in the latine copies, yet it agreeth more fitly in this place than that it should seeme worthy to be omitted, namely that his is the kingdome, and the power and the glorie for euer. This is the perfect and quiet rest of our soule. For if our prayers were to be commended to God by their owne worthinesse, who should be so bolde, as once to open his mouth before him? Now howsoeuer we be most miserable, howsoeuer most vnworthie of all men, howsoeuer voyde of all commendation: yet we shall neuer want cause to pray, & neuer be destitute of confidence: forasmuch as our father can not haue his kingdome, power, and glory taken away from him. At the ende is added Amen, whereby is expressed our seruente of desire to obtaine those things that we haue asked of God, and our hope is confirmed that all such things are already obtained and shall surely be giuen vs because they are promised of God, which can not deceiue. And this agreeth with that manner of prayer which we haue here before rehearsed, Doe it Lorde for thy names sake, not for our sakes or our righteousnesse: whereby the holy ones do not only expresse the end of their praier, but also confesse that they are vnworthy to obtain vnlesse God fetch the cause from himselfe, and that their trust to speede commeth of the onely nature of God.

48 Thus haue wee whatsoeuer we ought yea or in any wise may aske of God, set forth in this forme & as it were a rule of praying taught by the best scholemaister Christe, whome the Lorde hath set ouer vs to be our teacher, and whom alone he hath willed to be harkened vnto. For he both alway hath bene his eternall wisdom, and being made man is giuen to men the Angell of great counsell. And this prayer is in all pointes, so fully perfect, that whatsoeuer forcine or strange thing is added which can not be referred to it, it is vngodly and vnworthy to be allowed of God. For in this summe he hath set foorth, what is meete for him, what is pleasing to him, what is necessary for vs: finally what he will grant. Wherefore who so dare go further, and to aske any thing of God beside these, first they will adde of their owne to the wisdom of God (which can not be done without mad blasphemie) then they holde not themselues vnder the will of G O D, but despising it doe with greedinesse wander further: finally they shall neuer obtaine any thing; forasmuch as they pray without faith, And there is no dout that al such praier are made without faith, because here wanteth the word of G O D, vpon which vnlesse faith be grounded, it can in no wise stand. But they which forsaking the maisters rule, do followe their owne desires, are not onely without the worde of God, but also so much as they be able with their whole endeour, are against it. Therefore Tertullian no lesse fity than truly hath called this a lawefull praier, secretly signifying that all other are lawlesse and vnlawfull.

49 We would not haue these things so taken asthough we were so bound with this forme of prayer, that we may not change a worde or a syllable. For there are echwhere read many prayers in the Scriptures, farre differing from this in wordes, yet written by the same Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vsed of vs. Many are continually put into y^e mouthes of the faithfull by the same Spirit, which in likenesse of wordes doe not so much agree. This onely is our meaning in so teaching, that no man shoulde seeke, looke for, or aske any other thing at all than that which is summarily comprehended in this prayer, & which though it most differ in words yet differeth not in sense. Like as it is certaine that all the prayers which are founde in the Scriptures, & which do come out of godly hearts, are applied to this, so verily none can any where be found, which may match, much lesse passe, the perfectnesse of this praier. Here is nothing left out, that might be thought vpon to the praises of God, nothing that ought to come into the mind of man for his owne profits: and the same so fully that all hope is worthily taken away from all men to attempt to make any better. In a summe, let vs remember that this is the doctrine of the wisdom of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needefull.

50 But although we haue aboue sayd, that we ought alway to breath vppward with mindes lifted vp to God, and pray without ceasing: yet forasmuch as such is our weakenesse, as needeth to be vpholden with many helpe: such is our dulnesse, as needeth to be pricked forward with many spurres: it is good that euery one of vs appoint to himselfe priuately certain houers which may not passe away without prayer, and which may haue the whole affections of our minde throughly busied to that purpose: as, when wee rise in the morning, before that we goe to our dayes worke, when wee sitte downe to meate, when we haue beene fedde by the blessing of God, when we take vs to rest. Onely let this not be a superstitious obseruing of houers, by which, as paying a taske to God, we may thinke our selues discharged for the other houres: but a training of our weakenesse, whereby it may so be exercised and from time to time stirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to looke that so oft as either wee our selues are in distresse, or wee see other to be in distresse with any hardnesse of aduersitie, we runne streight way to him, not with feet but with heartes: then, that we suffer not any prosperitie of our owne or other mens, to passe but that we testifie that we acknowledge it to be his with prayse and thankesgiuing. Finally, this is diligently to be obserued in all prayer, that we go not about to binde God to certaine circumstances, nor to appoint to him, what he shall doe, at what time, in what place, and in what maner: as by this prayer we are taught to make to him no lawe, nor to appoint to him any condition, but to leaue to his will that those chinges which he will do, he may doe in what maner, at what time, & in what place it pleaseth him. Wherefore ere wee make any prayer for our selues, we first pray that his will be done: where wee doe already submitte our will to his: with which when it is restrained as with a bridle put vpon it, it may not presume to bring G O D into rule, but make him the iudge and governour of all her desires.

51 If we do with mindes framed to this obedience, suffer our selues to be ruled with the laws of Gods Providence, we shall easily learne to continue in praier, and with longing desires patiently to waite for the Lorde: being assured that although he appeare not, yet hee is alway present with vs, and will when he seeth his time declare howe not deafe eares he gaue to the prayer, which in the eyes of men seemed to be despised. And this shalbe a most present comfort, that we faint not & fall downe by despaire, if at any time God doe not answere at our first requestes. Like as they are wont to do, which while they are caried with their sodaine heate, doe so call vpon G O D, that if hee come not to them at their first bruntes and bring them present helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angry and hatefully bente against them, and casting away all hope of obtaining do cease to call vpon him. But rather differing our hope with a well tempered euennesse of minde, let vs goe forward in that perseuerance which is so much commended to vs in Scriptures.

For in the Psalmes wee may oftentimes see howe Dauid and other faithfull men, when they seeme in a maner wearied with praying, did beate the aire, because they threwe away their wordes to God that hearde them not, & yet they cease not from praying: because the worde of God hath not his full authoritie maintained, vnlesse the credite thereof be set aboute all successes of things. Moreouer let vs not tempte God and prouoke him against vs being wearied with our importunacie, which many vse to doe, which do nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and bind him to the lawes of their couenancing, as though he were seruant to their desires: which if hee doe not presently obey, they disdain, they chafe, they carpe against him, they murmure, they turmoile. Therefore to such oftentimes in his furor he being angrie graunteth that, which to other in his mercie he being fauorable denieth. An example hereof are the children of Israell, for whom it had beene better not to haue beene heard of the Lord, than with fleshe to eate vp his wrath.

52 But if yet at length after long looking for it our sense do not perceiue what we haue preuailed with praying, and seeleth no fruite thereof: yet our faith shall assure vs of that, which can not be perceiued by sense, namely y^e wee haue obtained that which was expedient for vs, forasmuch as the Lord doeth so oft and so certainly take vpon him that he will haue care of our greues, after that they haue beene once laide in his bosome. And so he wil make vs to possesse aboundance in pouertie, comfort in affliction. For howsoeuer all other things doe faile vs, yet God wil neuer faile vs, which suffreth the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. Hee alone shall suffice vs in steede of all things, forasmuch as hee conteyneth in himselfe all good things, which he shall one day disclose vnto vs at the day of iudgement when he shall plainly shewe foorth his kingdome. Beside this although God grant to vs, yet he doeth not alway aunswere according to the expresse forme of our request, but holding vs after outwarde seeming in suspense, yet by a meane vnknown he sheweth y^e our praier were not vain.

This is meant by the words of Iohn, if we know that he heared vs when we aske any thing of him, we knowe that wee haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weake superfluousnesse of wordes: but it is a singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doeth not followe our desires, is yet gentle and fauorable to our prayers, that the hope which resteth vpon his worde may neuer disappoint vs. But with this patience the faithfull doe so farre neede to bee susteined, that they shoulde not long stande vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lord doth by no light trialls prooue them that bee his, and not tenderly doeth exercise them: but oftentimes driueth them into the greatest extremities, and when they are driuen thither hee suffereth them long to sticke fast in the mire, ere hee giue them any taste of his sweetenesse: and, as Hanna sayth, he slayeth, and quickeneth: hee leadeth downe to the helles, and bringeth backe againe. What coulde they heere doe but bee discouraged, and fall headlong into despayre: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and alreadie halfe deade, this thought did rayse them vp, that God doeth looke vpon them, and that there shall be at hande an ende of their euilles: But how-holde backe and restraine vs from all rashnesse. For wee shall knowe that so soone as we be gone out of the boundes of the worlde, we runne out of y way, and in darkenesse, in which race wee must needes oftentimes stray, slippe, and stumble. First therefore let this be before our eyes, that to conie any other knowledge of Pre destination than that which is set foorth by the worde of God, is a point of no lesse madnesse than if a man haue a will to go by an vnpassable way, or to see in darkenesse. Neither let vs bee ashamed, to be ignorant of somwhat in it wherein there is some learned ignorance. But rather let vs willingly abstein from the searching of that knowledge, where- of the excessiue coucting is both foolish & perillous, yea & deadly. But if the wantonnesse of wit prouoke vs, it shall be profitable alway to set this against it, whereby it may bee beaten backe, that as too much of honie is not good, so y searching of glorie doth not turne vnto glorie to the curious. For there is good cause why we shoulde be frayed away from that boldnes, which can do nothing but throw vs downe headlong into ruine.

Pro. 25. 27.

3 There be other which when they haue a will to remedie this euil, do commaund all mention of Predestination to bee in a manner buried, at the least they teach men to flec from euery manner of questioning thereof as from a rock. Although the moderatiō of these men be hercin worthily to be praised that they iudge that mysteries should be tasted of with such sobrietie: yet because they descend too much beneath the meane, they litle preuaile w y wit of man, which doth not lightly suffer it selfe to be restrained. Therefore, that in this behalf also we may keepe a right end, we must return to the word of the Lord, in which we haue a sure rule of vnderstanding. For the Scripture is the schoole of the holy Ghost, in which as nothing is left out which is both necessary and profitable to be knowne, so nothing is taught but that which is behouefull to learne. Whatsoeuer therefore is vttered in the Scripture concerning Predestination, wee must beware that wee debarre not the faithfull from it, least we should seem either enuiously to defraud them of the benefit of their God, or to blame & accuse the holy Ghost who hath published those things, which it is in any wise profitable to be suppressed. Let vs (I say) giue leaue to a Christian man, to open his minde and his eares to all the sayings of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, that so soone as the Lorde hath closed his holy mouth, hee may also foreclose to himselfe all the way to enquire further. This shall be the best bond of sobrietie, if not onely in learning we alway followe the Lorde going before vs, but also when he maketh an ende of teaching, wee cease to will to learne. Neither is the danger which they feare of so great importance, that we ought therefore to turne away our minds from the oracles of God. Notable is the saying of Salomon, that the glorie of God is to conceale a worde. But sith both godlinesse and common reason teacheth that this is not generally meant of euerie thing, wee must seeke a difference, least brutish ignorance shoulde please vs vnder colour of modestie and sobrietie. That difference is in fewe wordes plainly set out by Moses. To the Lorde our God (saith he) belong his secretes: but to vs and to our children hee hath disclosed these things. For we see how he commendeth to the people the study of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it

pleased God to publish it : and how he withholdeth the people within those bounds, by this only reason, because it is not lawful for mortal men to thrust themselves into the secretes of God.

4 Prophane men (I grant) do in the matter of Predestination sodainly catch holde of somewhat which they may carpe, or cauill, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their waywardnes do fray vs away from it, the chiefe articles of the faith must be kept secrete, of which there is almost none which they or such as they be do leaue vntouched with blasphemie. A frowarde wit will no lesse proudly outrage when heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if he heare that God foresawe what shoulde become of man when he created him. Neither will they absteine from laughing, when they shall vnderstande that there is litle more than fise thousande yeares passed since the creation of the world: for they wil aske why the power of God was so long idle and a sleepe. Finally there can be nothing brought foorth, which they will not scoffe at. For the restraining of these sacrileges, must wee hold our peace of the Godhede of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost? or must we passe ouer in silence the creation of the world? Yea but the the truth of god is both in this behalfe and euery where mightier than that it neede to feare the euill speaking of the wicked: as Augustine strongly maineteyneth in his work of the good of Perseuerance. For we see y the false Apostles could not by defaming and slandering the true doctrine of Paul, make him to be ashamed of it. But whereas they say y this whole disputation is perillous also for godly minds, because it maketh against exhortations, because it shaketh faith, because it troubleth the heart it selfe: this is vaine. Augustine sticketh not to confesse that for these causes he was wont to be blamed, for that hee did too freely preach Predestination: but, as he had in readines wherewithal, he largely confuteth them. But we, because manie and diuerse absurdities are thrust into this place, had rather to reserue euery one to be wiped away in place fit for it. Onely this I desire generally to obtaine of them, that those things which the Lord hath laid vp in secret, we may not sear ch: those things which he hath brought opely abroad, we may not neglect: least either on y one part we be condemned of vaine curiositie, or on the other part, of vnthankfulness. For, this also is verie well said of Augustine, that wee may safely followe the scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth stoupingly, least it should for sake our weakenes. But who so are so ware and so fearefull that they would haue Predestination to be buried, least it should trouble weak soules: with what colour, I beseech you, will they couer their arrogancie, when they indirectly accuse God of foolish vnaduisednesse, as though hee foresawe not the danger, which they thinke themselves to haue wisely met with? Whosoever therefore trauellet to bring the doctrine of Predestination into misliking, he openly saith euill of God: as though somewhat had vnaduisedly slipped from him which is hurtful to the Church.

5 Predestination whereby God adopteth some into the hope of life, and iudgeth some to eternal death, no man that would be accounted godly dare simply deny: But they wrap it vp with many cauillations, specially they which make foreknowledge the cause of it. We indeed doe say that they be both in God, but wee say that the one is wrongfullie made subiecte to the other.

When

Gen. ad lit.

When we giue foreknowledge to God, we meane that all things alway haue beene and perpetually doe remaine vnder his eyes, so that to his knowledge there is nothing to come or past, but all things are present, and so present that hee doeth not imagine onely by conceiued formes (as those things are present to vs, whereof our minde holdeth fast the remembrance) but hee truly beholdeth and seeth them as set before him. And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compasse of the world and to all creatures. Predestination we cal the eternal decree of God, whereby he had it determined with himselfe what he willed to become of euery man. For all are not created to like estate: but to some eternall life, and to some eternall damnation is foreappointed. Therefore as euery man is created to the one or other end, so we say that he is predestinate either to life or to death. But this predestination God hath not onely testified in euery seuerall person, but hath shewed an example thereof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might playnly appeare that it lieth in his will what shalbe the estate of euery nation. When the Hiest diuided the nations, and seuered the children of Adam, his parte was the people of Israell, the corde of his inheritance. The separation is before the eyes of all men: in the person of Abraham as in a drie stocke one people is peculiarly chosē, all other being refused: but the cause appeareth not, sauing that Moses, to cut off all occasion of glorying from posteritie, teacheth that they excell onely by the free loue of God. For he assigneth this to be the cause of their deliuerance, for that God loued the Fathers, & chose their seede after them. More plainly in an other Chapter: He was pleased in you to chose you, not because you passed other nations in number, but because he loued you. The same admonition is often repeated with him, Beholde, to the Lorde thy God belongeth the heauen, the earth, and whatsoever things are in it: and hee hath pleased himselfe onely in your Fathers, and hath loued them, and hath chosen you their seede. Againe in an other place sanctification is commaunded them, because they are chosen to bee a peculiar people. And againe in an other place, Loue is affirmed to bee the cause of protection. Which also the faithful doe declare with one voice, saying: He hath chosen for vs our inheritance, the glory of Iacob, whom he hath loued. For they doe all impute to free loue al the gifts wherewith they were garnished of God: not only because they knew that they themselves had obtained them by no deseruings, but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he could purchase to himselfe and his posteritie so great a prerogatiue of honour. And, the more strongly to tread down al pride, he vpbraided them y they haue deserued no such thing, forasmuch, as they are a stubborne and heard necked people. And oftentimes the Prophets doe hatefully and as by way of reproche cast the Iewes in the teeth with this election, because they had fowly departed from it. Whatsoeuer it be, now let the come forth which wil bind the electiō of God either to yworthinesse of men, or to the merits of workes. When they see one nation to bee preferred before all other, and when they hear that God was led with no respect to be more fauorable bent to a few and vnnoble, yea and froward and disobedient men: wil they quarell with him, because his will was to shewe such an example of mercy? But they shall neither with their prating voices hinder his work, not with throwing stones of tauntes into heauen shal hit or hurt his righteousnes, but rather they fall backe vpon their owne heads.

Moreouer the Israelites are called backe to this principle of the free couenant, when either thanks are to be giuen to God, or their hope to be raised vp against the time to come. He made vs, & not we our selues (saith the Prophet) his people & the sheepe of his pastures. The negatiue is not superfluous, which is added to exclude vs, that they may knowe that of all the good things wherwith they excell, God is not onely the author, but fetched the cause thereof from himselfe, because there was nothing in them worthie of so great honor. Also he biddeth them to be contented with the meere good pleasure of God, in these words. The seede of Abraham are his seruantes: the children of Iacob his elect. And after y^e he hath rehearsed the continuall benefits of God as fruires of the election, at length he concludeth, y^e he delt so liberally because he remembered his couenant. With which doctrine agreeth the song of the whole Church, Thy right hande & the light of thy countenance gaue the land to our Fatliers, because thou wast pleased in them. But it is to be noted, that where mention is made of the land, it is a visible signe of the secret seuering wherin the adoption is contained. To the same thankfulnessse Dauid in another place exhorteth the people, saying, Blessed is the nation whose God the Lord is, the people which he hath chosen for an inheritance to himselfe. And Samuel encourageth them to good hope, saying, The Lorde wil not forsake you, for his owne great names sake, because it pleased him to create you for a people to himselfe. Likewise Dauid when his faith is assailed, armeth himselfe to fight, saying, Blessed is hee whome thou hast chosen, he shall dwell in thy courtes. But forasmuch as the election hidden in God was stablished as well by the first deliuerance as by the second, and other meane benefits: in Esay the word of Electing is transferred to this. God shall haue mercie on Iacob, and he shal yet choose out of Israel: because he signifying the time to come, saith that the gathering together of the remnant of the people which he seemed to haue forsaken, shal be a signe of the stable and stedfast election, which once seemed to haue bene fallen away. When also it is said in another place, I haue chosen thee & haue not cast thee away: he setteth out the continuall course of the notable liberalitie of his fatherly good wil. And yet more plainly the Angel saith in Zacharie, God shall yet choose Ierusalem: as though in hardly chasting it, he had reiected it: or as though the exile were an interrupting of the election: which yet remaineth inuolable, although the signes thereof do not alway appeare.

6 There is to be added a second degree more narrowly restrained, or in which was seene a more speciall grace of God: when of the same kinred of Abraham God refused some, & other som by nourishing them in the church he shewed that he retained among his children. Ismael had at the beginning obtained egall degree with his brother Isaac, because the spirituall couenant had beene no lesse sealed in him by the signe of Circumcision. He is cut off, and then, Esau: at the last an innumerable multitude and almost Israel. In Isaac was the seede called: the same calling endured in Iacob. A like exáple God shewed in reiecting Saul: which thing is also gloriously set forth

Gal. 78. 69. in the Psalm, He hath put backe the tribe of Ioseph, & the tribe of Ephraim he hath not chosē, but he hath chosē the tribe of Iuda. Which the holy historie diuerse times repeateth, that the wonderful secret of the grace may the better appeare in this change. Ismael, Esau, and such other, (I graunt) fell from the adoption by their owne fault & giltines: because there was a condition adioyned, y they should faithfully keepe the couenant of God, which they falsely brake. But this was yet a singular benefit of God, that he vouchsafed to preferre them aboue the other Gentiles: as it is said in the Psalme, Psal. 47. 20. He hath not so done to other nations, nor hath opened his iudgements to them. But here I haue not without cause saide y there be two degrees to be noted: because now in the choosing of the whole nation God shewed y he is in his owne meere liberalitie bound to no lawes: but he is free, so that egall portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequalitie whereof sheweth that it is truly of free gift. Therefore Malachie amplifieth the vnthankfulnesse of Israel, because they beeing not onely chosē out of all mankind, but also seuered out of a holy house to be a peculiar people, doe vnfaithfully and wickedly despise God so beneficiall a Father. Was not Esau the brother of Iacob? (saith he) and yet Iacob I loued, but Esau I hated. For, God taketh it for confessed, that when either of them was borne of a holy Father, and successour of the couenant, finally a branch of the holy roote: nowe the children of Iacob were more than commonly bond, which were taken into that dignitie. But when Esau the first begotten being refused, their Father which was by nature inferiour was made the heire, he proeueh them doublely vnthankfull, and complaineth that they were not holden with that double bond.

Mal. 1. 2.

7 Although it be already sufficiently euident, that God doth by his secret counsell freely choose whome he will, reiecting other, yet his free election is hitherto but halfe shewed, till we come to all particular persons, to whome God not only offereth saluation, but so assigneth it, that the certaintie of the effect thereof is not in suspense or doubtfull. For, these are accounted in that onely seede, whereof Paul maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet because many of his posteritie were cut off as rotten members: that the election may be effectually and truly steadfast, we must needs ascend to the head, in whome the heauenly Father hath bound together his elect one with another, and hath knit them to himselfe with a knot impossible to be loosed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, shined the liberall fauour of God, which he denied to other men: yet in the members of Christ, appeareth a much more excellent strength of grace, because they being grafted into their head do neuer fall away from saluation. Therefore Paul doth fitly reason out of the place of Malachie which I euen now alleaged: that where God with making a couenant of eternall life calleth any people to himselfe, there is in part a speciall manner of election, that he doth not choose all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is saide, I haue loued Iacob, this pertaineth to the whole issue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there setteth in comparison against y posteritie of Esau. Yet this withstandeth not but y in the perso of one man was set foorth to vs an example of the election, which cannot slippe away, but must come to the marke that it tendeth to. These Paul doth not vainly note to be called remnants: because experience teacheth that of a great multitude many slide and vanish away, so that oftentimes there remaineth but a small portion. But why the general election of a people is not alway firme and steadfast, there is a reason offering it selfe in readinesse: because with whome God couenanteth he doth not by and by giue to them the Spirit of regeneration, by the power whereof they may continue in the couenant to the ende: but the outward changing without the inward effectualnesse of grace, which might be of force to holde them in, is a certaine meane thing betweene the forsaking of whole mankind, and the election of a small number of the godly. The whole people of Israell was called the inheritaunce of GOD, of whom yet there were many strangers. But because God had not for nothing made couenant with them that he would be their Father and redeemer, hee rather hath respect to his owne free fauour than to the vnfaithfull falling away of many: by whom also his trueth was not abolished: because where he reserued any remnant, it appeared that his calling was without repentance. For whereas God did from time to time choose vnto himselfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, hee had regarde to his couenaunt, which beeing broken of the whole multitude he restrained to a fewe, that it should not vtterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the seede of Abraham was a certain visible image of a greater benefitte, which God hath youchsafed to graunt to fewe out of many. This is y^e reasoⁿ why Paul so diligently putteth differēce betweene y^e children of Abraham according to the flesh, and his spiritual children which were called after the example of Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and vnfrutefull thing simply to be y^e childe of Abraham (which might not be sayde without dishonour of the couenaunt) but because the vnchangeable counsell of God, whereby he hath predestinate whome he would, is by it selfe effectually onely to this latter sorte vnto saluation. But I warne the readers that they bring not a foreconceiued iudgement on either side, till it appeare by the places of Scripture brought forth what is to be thought. That therefore which the Scripture cleerely sheweth, we say y^e God by eternall and vnchangeable counsell hath once appointed whome in time to come he would take to saluation, and on the other side whome hee woulde condemne to destruction. This counsell as touching the elect, wee say to bee grounded vpon his free mercie without any respect of the worthinesse of man: but whome hee appointeth to damnation, to them by his iust in deede and irreprehensible, but also incomprehensible iudgement, the entry of life is foreclosed. Now in the elect we set vocation, to be the testimony of Election: and the iustification to be an other signe of the manifest shewing of it, till they come to glory wherein is the fulfilling of it. But as by vocation and election God maketh his elect: so by shutting out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name, or from the sanctification of his Spirit, he doth as it were by these markes open what iudgement abideth for them. I will here passe ouer many fained inuentions, which foolish men haue forged to ouerthrowe predestination. For they neede no confutation, which so soone as they are brought forth, do largely bewray their owne falsenesse. I will tary onely vpon those, which either are in controuersie among the learned, or which may bring any hardinesse to the simple, or which vngodlines with faire seeming show pretédeth, to scoffe at the righteoufnesse of God.

The xxii. Chapter.

A confirmation of this doctrine by testimonies of the Scripture.

AL these things which we haue set are not without controuersie among many, specially the free election of the faithfull: which yet can not be weakened. For the common sorte doe thinke that GOD, as he foreseeth that euerie mans deseruings shalbe, so maketh difference betweene men: that therefore whome he foreknoweth that they shall be not vnworthy of his grace, them he adopteth into place of children: and whose natures hee espieth that they will be bent to wickednesse and vngodlinesse, them he appointeth to the damnation of death. So by cloking it with the veile of foreknowledge they doe not onely darken election, but faine that it hath beginning from else where. And this opinion receiued of the common sorte is not the opinion of the common sorte alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I doe plainly confesse, to the entent that no man should trust that it shall much hurte our cause if their names be objected against vs. For, the truth of GOD herein is more certaine, than that it may be shaken: more cleare, than that it may be darkened with the authoritie of men. But some other neither exercised in the Scripture, nor worthy of any voyce, doe raile at this doctrine with greater malituousnesse, than that their frowarde pride ought to be suffered. Because God choosing some after his owne will, leaueth other some, they picke a quarell against him. But if the thing it selfe be known for true, what shall they preuaile with brawling against God? We teach nothing but that which is approued by experience, that it was alway at libertie for GOD to bestow his grace to whome he will. I will not enquire whereby the posteritie of Abraham excelled other, but by that vouchsafing, whereof there is founde no cause elsewhere than in GOD. Lette them aunswere why thy be men rather than oxen or asses. When it was in the hande of God to make them dogges, he fashioned them after his owne image. Will they giue leau to bruit beastes to quarell with God for their estate, as though the difference were vnrighteous? Truly it is no more righteous, y they should enioy the prerogatiue which they haue obtieued by no deseruings, than for God diuersly to deale abroad his benefites according to the measure of his own iudgement. If they skippe ouer to persons, where the inequality is more hatefull to them, at the least at the example of Christ, they ought to be afraid to prate so boldly of so hie a mystery. He is conceiued of the seede of Dauid, a mortal mā: by what vertues will they say that he deserued to be in the very wombe made the heade of Angelles, the onely begotten sonne of God, the image and glory of the Father, the light, righteousnesse, and saluation of the worlde? This thing Augustine wisely noted, that in the very heade of the Church is a most cleere mirror of free election, least it should trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by righteously liuing made the sonne of God, but y^e he had so great honour freely giuen him, that he might afterward make other partakers of his giftes. Here if any man aske why other were not the same that he was, or why all wee are so farre distant from him, why al we be corrupt & he purenes: such a man shal bewray not only his madnesse, but therewithall also his shamelesnesse. But if they go forward to labor to take from God the free power to chose & refuse, let them also take away that which is giuen to Christ. Now it is worth the trauaile to consider what the Scripture pronounceth of euery one. Paul verily, when he teacheth that we were chosen in Christ, taketh away all respect of our owne worthinesse.

 For it is all one as if he had said: because in the whole seede of Adam the heauenly father found nothing worthie of his election, he turned his eyes vnto his Christ, to choose as it were members out of his body them whome he would take into the felowship of life. Let this reason then be of force among the faithful, that wee were therefore adopted in Christ into the hea-uenly inheritance, because in our selues we were not able to receiue so great excellencie. Which also he touched in another place, when he exhorteth y^e Colossians to giuing of thanks, for this that they were by God made fit to be partakers of the estate of the holy. If election go before this grace of God that he made fit to obtaine the glory of the life to come: what shal God himselfe now finde in vs wherby he may be moued to elect vs? My meaning shall yet be more openly expressed by another saying of his. He hath chosen vs (saith he) ere the foundations of the world were laid, according to y^e good pleasure of his will, that we might be holy, and vnspotted, and vnreprouable in his sight: where he setteth the good pleasure of God against all our deseruings whatsoeuer they be.

2 That the prooffe may be more strong, it is woorth the labour to note all the partes of that place, which being coupled together do leaue no doubt.
 Where he nameth the elect, it is no dout that he speaketh to the faithfull, as he also by and by afterward affirmeth. Wherefore they doe with too foule a glose abuse that name, which wrest it to the age wherin the Gospel was first published. Where he saith that they were elect before the beginning of the world, he taketh away all respect of worthines. For, what reason of differēce is there betweene them which yet were not, and those which afterwarde should in Adam be egall? Now if they be elect in Christ, it followeth that not onely euery man is seuered without himselfe, but also one of them from another, forasmuch as we see that not all are the members of Christe. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holy, plainly con-futeh the error which deriueh election from foreknowledge, foras much as Paul cryeth out against it and sayeth that whatsoeuer vertue appeareth in men, it is the effect of election. Now if a hier cause be sought, Paul an-swereth, that God hath so predestinate, yea and that according to the good pleasure of his will. In which wordes he ouerthroweth whatsoeuer meanes of their election men do imagine in themselues. For he also teacheth that whatsoeuer things God giueh rowarde spirituall life, they flowe out of this one fountaine, because G O D hath chosen whome he would, and ere they were borne he had seuerally laid vp for them the grace which he vouchsaf-ued to giue them.

3 But wheresoeuer this pleasure of God reigneth, there no workes come to be considered. He doth not here in deede pursue the comparison of contraries, but it is to be vnderstanded such as he himselfe declareth. Hee hath called vs (saith he) with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpose and the grace which is giuen of Christ before the times of the world. And we haue alreadie shewed that all doubt is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holy and vnspotted. For if thou say, because he foresawe that we should be holy, therefore he chose vs, thou shalt peruert the order of Paul. Thus therefore thou maist safely gather. If he chose vs y^e we might be holy: then he chose vs, not because he foresawe y^e we would be such. For these two thinges are contrarie the one to the other: that the godly haue it of election that they be holy, and that they come to it by meane of workes. Neither is their cauillation here any thing worth to which they commonly flee, that the Lord doth not render the grace of election to any workes going before, but yet granteth it to workes to come. For when it is said that the faithfull were chosen, that they might be holy: therewithall is signified that the holinesse which was to come in them tooke beginning at election. And how shall this saying agree together, that those thinges which are deriued from election gaue cause to election? The same thing which he said he seemeth afterward to confirm more strongly, where he saith, According to the purpose of his will which he had purposed in himselfe. For, to say that God purposed in himselfe, is as much in effect as if it had bene said, that without himselfe he considered nothing whereof hee had any regard in decreeing. Therefore he by and by addeth y^e the whole summe of our election tendeth to this end, y^e we should be to the praise of the grace of God. Truly the grace of God deserueth not to be praised alone in our election, vnlesse our election be free. But free it shal not be, if God in electing his, do consider what shalbe the works of euey one. Therefore we find that that which Christ said to his disciples, hath place vniuersally among all the faithfull, Ye haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. Where hee not onely excludeth deseruings past, but also signifieth that they had nothing in themselves why they should be chosen, if hee had not preuented them with his mercie. Like as this saying of Paul is also to be vnderstood: Who first gaue to him, & shal receiue recompence? For he meaneth to shewe that y^e goodnesse of God so preuenteth men, that it findeth nothing in them neither past nor to come, whereby he may be wonne to be fauourable to them.

4 Now to the Romanes, where he fetcheth this question further of, & followeth it more largely, he denieth that all they are Israelites, which are issied of Israel: because although by right of inheritance they were all blessed, yet the succession did not egally passe to them all. The beginning of this disputation proceeded of the pride & deceitful glorying of the Iewish people. For when they claimed to themselves the name of the Church, they would haue the credit of the Gospel to hang vpon their wil: as the Papistes at this day would gladly with this fained colour thrust themselves into the place of God. Paul, although he grant y^e the offspring of Abraham is holy by reason of the couenant, yet affirmeth y^e the most part of them are strangers in it: & y^e not only because they swarue out of kind, so that of lawfull childre they they become bastardes, but because the especial election of God standeth about & reigneth in the hiest top, which alone maketh the adoption therof sure. If their owne godlinesse stablished some in the hope of saluation, and their owne falling away alone disherited other some: Paul verily shoulde both fondly and vnconueniently lift vp the readers euen to the secrete election. Now if the will of God (the cause whereof neither appeareth nor is to be sought without himselfe) maketh the one sort differing from the other, so y^e not all the children of Israel be true Israelites, it is vainly fained y^e every mans estate hath beginning in himselfe. Then he further followeth the matter vnder the example of Iacob & Esau. For when they both were the sonnes of Abraham, both togither enclosed in one mothers wombe, it was a monsterlike change that the honor of first birth was removed to Iacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of y^e one, and the reprobation of the other. The originall & cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will haue to be set out in the vertues, & vices of men. For this is an easie short way with them, that God shewed in the person of Iacob, that he chooseth the worthie of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeeth to be vnworthie. Thus they say boldly. But what saith Paul? when they were not yet borne, & had not done any good or euill, that according to election the purpose of God might abide, not of workes, but of him that calleth, it is said: The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is written, Iacob I haue loued, but Esau I haue hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were vnfitly made of the time. Let vs graunt that Iacob was chosen, because he had worthines gotten by workes to come: to what purpose shoulde Paul say that he was not yet borne? And this now should be vnadvisedly added, that he had yet done no good: because this shalbe a readie answer, that nothing is hidden from God, & that so the godlines of Iacob was present before him. If workes do win grace, they should then worthily haue had their price before that Iacob was borne as if he had been growen to full age. But the Apostle goeth forward in vndoing this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Iacob was not made of workes, but of the calling of God. In workes he enterlaceth not the time to come or time past: & then he directly setteth them against the calling of God, meaning by stablishing of y^e one expressly to ouerthrowe the other: as if he had said that it is to be considered what hath pleased God, not what men haue brought of themselves. Last of all it is certaine that by the words of Election & Purpose, all causes whatsoever men are wont to faine elsewhere than in the secret counsell of God, are quite removed from this matter.

5 What colour will they bring to darken these things, who in election assigne some place to workes either past or to come? For this is vterly to mocke out that which the Apostle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not vpon any consideration of workes, but vpon the mere calling of God, because it was put betweene them when they were not yet borne. Neither had he bene ignorant of this their suttletie, if it had had any soundnes in it: but because he very wel knew y^e God can foresee no goodnes in man, but y^e which he hath first determined by the benefit of his election to giue him: he fleeth not to that vnorderly order, to set good workes before the cause of themselues. Thus haue we by the wordes of the Apostle that y^e saluation of the faithfull is founded vpon the will of the onely election of God: and that the same fauour is not gotten by works, but commeth of free calling. We haue also as it were an image of that thing set before vs. Esau & Iacob are brethren, issuing both of the same parents, enclosed yet both in one wombe, not yet brought out into the worlde: In them all things are egall, yet of them the iudgement of God is diuerse. For he taketh the one & forsaketh the other. There was nothing but the onely first birth, by right whereof the one excelled the other. But this also being passed ouer, y^e thing is giuen to the yonger which is denied to the elder. Yea, and in other also God seemeth alway as of set purpose to haue despised first birth, to cut off from the flesh all matter of glorying. Refusing Ismael, he cast his minde to Isaac. Plucking backe Manasse, he more honored Ephraim.

6 If any man interrupt me with saying that wee must not by these inferior & smal benefits determine of the summe of the life to come, that hee which hath bin aduanced to the honor of first birth, should therefore be reckoned to be adopted into the inheritance of heauen: (for there bee some which spare not Paul himself, as though in aleaging these testimonies he had wrested the scripture to a strange sense.) I answer as I haue don herebefore, y^e the Apostle neither slipped by vnaduisednes, nor wilfully abused the testimonies of the Scripture. But he saw (which they cannot abide to consider) y^e God minded by an earthly signe to declare the spiritual election of Iacob, which otherwise was hidden in his inaccessible throne. For vlesse we refer the first birth graunted to him vnto the world to come, it should be a vaine & fond forme of blessing whereby he obtained nothing but manifold miseries, discomforts, griefefull banishment, and many bitternesse of sorrow and cares. Therefore when Paul saw without douting, that God by outward blessing testified the blessing which he had in his kingdome prepared spirituall and neuer decaying for his seruant: he doubted not for prooffe of this spiritual blessing, to fetch an argument from that outward blessing. This also we must remember that to the land of Canaan was adioyned the pledge of the heauenly dwelling: so that it ought not at all to be doubted that Iacob was grafted with the Angels into the body of Christ, that he might bee partaker of the same life. Iacob therefore is chosen, when Esau is reiected: and by the predestination of God is made different from him from whome hee differed not in any deseruings. If you aske a cause, the Apostle rendreth this because it is said to Moses, I will haue mercie vpon whome I will haue mercie: and I will vouchsafe to graunt mercy, to whom soeuer I will vouchsafe to graunt mercy. And what, I beseech you, meaneth this? Verily, the Lorde himselfe most plainly pronounceth y^e men haue in themselues no cause why he should do good to them, but he fetcheth the cause from his owne mercie only: & therefore y^e the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluation in himselfe alone, why wilt thou descende to thy selfe? When he appointeth to thee his mercie alone, why wilt thou runne to thine owne deseruings? When he holdeth thy thought wholly in his mercifulnes alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine owne workes? Therefore we must needs come to that lesser people, which Paul in an other place said Rom. 11. 3. to haue bene foreknowen to God: not in such sort as these men imagine, to foreknowe out of an idle watchtoure the thinges that he worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft reade. For truly when Peter saith in Luke, y^e Christ was by the determined counsel & foreknowledge of God appointed to death: he doth not bring God as a looker on but the authour of our saluation. So the same Peter also, where he sayth that the faithful to whom he wrote were chosen according to the foreknowledge of G O D, properly expreffeth that secret Predestination whereby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And y^e word Purpose, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expreffing all one thing, forasmuch as it doth euery where signifie a stedfast determination as they commonly call it, vndoubtedly teacheth that G O D when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he sayth in the same Chapter that Christ was the lambe foreknowen before the creation of the worlde. For what is more sonde or trifling, than to say that God from on hie did stande looking whence saluation should come to mankind? Therefor in Paul the foreknowen people is as much as a small portion mingled with the multitude which falsly pretendeth y^e name of God. In an other place also Paul to beate down their boasting which being but couered with a visor, do take vpon themselues the chiefe preeminence among the godly before the word, sayth that God knoweth who be his. Finally by that saying Paul pointeth vnto vs two sortes of people: the one, of the whole kinred of Abraham: the other, seuerally chosen out of it, and which being laid vp vnder the eyes of God, is hidden from the sight of men. And it is no doubt that he rooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth y^e God will be mercifull to whom he wil (although he there spake of the elect people, whose estate in outward seeming was equal) as if he should haue sayd, y^e in the common adoption is included with him a speciall grace toward som, as it were a more holy treasure: and that the common counaunt withstandeth not but that the same small number may be exempt in degree: and he willing to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely denieth that he will be mercifull to one rather than to another, for any other reason, but for that it so pleaseth him: because when mercy cometh to him that seeketh it, though he in deede suffer not a deniall, yet he either preuenteth or partly getteth to himselfe the fauour whereof God claimeth to himselfe the praise.

7 Now let the souereigne Iudge & maister pronounce of the whol matter. When he saw so great hardnes in his hearers, that he did in a maner wast his wordes without fruite among the multitude: to remedy this offence, he cryeth out, Whatsoeuer my Father giueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoeuer my Father hath giuen me, I shall not loose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gifte, that we may be deliuered into the faithfull keeping and defence of Christe. Iohn. 6. 37. Here some man peradventure will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they onely are accounted in the proper possession of the Father, whose yeelding hath bene voluntarie by faith. But Christ standeth onely vpon that pointe, that although the fallinges away of great multitudes doe shake the whole worlde, yet the counsell of G O D shall be stedfaste and stande faster than the heauen's themselues, that his election may neuer faile. They are said to haue beene the elect of the Father, before that hee gaue to them his onely begotten Sonne. They aske whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were strangers he made his owne by drawing them to him. There is a greater cleareness in the words of Christ, thā can by shifting be couered with any darkeness. No man (sayth he) can come to mee, vnlesse my Father drawe him. But who so hath heard and learned of my Father, he commeth to mee. If all generally without difference should bow their knee before Christ, then the election were common: but nowe in the fewnesse of the beleeuers appeareth a manifest diuersitie. Therefore after that Christ had affirmed that the disciples which were giuen him, were the peculiar possessiō of God the Father, within a litle after he added, I pray not for the world, but for those whō thou hast giuen me, because they are thine. Whereby is proued that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, sauing that grace deliuereth a few from the wrath of God, and from eternal death, which otherwise should haue perished: but the world it selfe is left in his owne destruction to which it was appointed. In the meane time although Christ put himselfe meane betweene, yet he claimeth to himselfe the power of choosing in common with the Father. I speake not (sayth he) of all: I know whom I haue chosen. If any man aske from whence he hath chosen them, he answereth in an other place, Out of the world; which he excludeth out of his prayers when he commendeth his disciples to his Father. This is to be holden, that when he affirmeth y he knoweth whom he hath chose, there is signified some speciall sorte in the generall kinde of men: then, y the same speciall sort is made to differ not by the qualitie of their own vertues, but by the heauenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excel by their owne force or diligence, when Christ maketh himselfe the author of election. For when in an other place he reckoneth Iudas among the elect, whereas he was a deuill, this is referred onely to the office of Apostleshippe which although it be a cleere mirror of the fauour of God (as Paul so oftentimes acknowledgeth in his owne person,) yet it containeth not in it selfe the hope of eternall saluation. Iudas therefore, when he did vnfaithfully beare the office of an Apostle, might bee worse than the deuill: but of those whom Christ hath once grafted into his body, he will suffer none to perish: because in preseruing their saluation he will performe that which he hath promised, that is, he will stretch forth y power of God which is greater than all. For whereas he sayth in an other place, Father, of those whom thou hast giuen me, I haue lost none but the sonne of perdition: although it be an abusue speeche by figure, yet it hath no doubtfull meaning. The summe is that God maketh them his children by free adoption whom he wil haue to be his children: and that the inward cause thereof is in himselfe: because he is content with his owne secret good pleasure.

3 But Ambrose, Origene, and Hierome thought that G O D distributeth his grace among men, as he foreseeth that euery man will vse it well: Yea and Augustine was once in the same opinion. But when he had better profited in knowledge of the Scripture, hee not onely reuoked it as evidently false, cannot maruell that the Apostle knewe not this most suttle sense? For when he had set out a thing to be wondred at of these brethren, while they were not yet borne, and afterwarde objected a question against himselfe, saying:

 what then? Is there vniustice with God? Here was fit place for him to aunswere, that God foresawe the merites of them both: yet he saith not this, but flyeth to the iudgements and mercie of God. And in another place, when he had taken away all merites before election, Here (saith hee) is confuted their vaine reasoning which defendy foreknowledge of God against y grace of God, and therefore say that we are chosen before the making of y worlde because God foreknewe that wee would be good, not that he himselfe wold make vs good. He saith not this, which saith, Ye haue not chosen mee, But I haue chosen you. For if he had therefore chosen vs, because he foreknewe y we would be good: he shoulde therewithall also haue foreknownen that we would choose him: and so forth as followeth to that effect. Let the testi-monie of Augustine be of force among them that willingly rest in the authority of the Fathers. How be it Augustine suffreth not himselfe to bee seuered from the rest: but by clere testimonies sheweth that this disagreement is false with the malice whereof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the xix. chapter of his booke of the predestination of Saints, he allegeth out of Ambrose, Christ calleth whome he hath mercy on. Againe, If he had willed, of the vndeuout he might haue made deuout. But god calleth whom he vouchsaueth, & whome he will he maketh religious. If I listed to knit together a whole volume out of Augustine, I could readily shewe to the readers that I neede no other words but his: But I will not load them with tediousnesse. But go to, let vs imagine that they speake not at all: but let vs giue heede to the matter it selfe. A hard question was moued, whether God did righteously in this that he vouchsaued to graunt his grace but to some: Of which question Paul might haue vncombred himself with one word if he had alleadged y respect of workes. Why therfore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a discourse which abideth in the same hardenesse? Why, but because he ought not? For the Holy ghost which spake by his mouth, had not the disease of forgetfulnes. Therefore without any circumstances he answereth, y God therefore fa-uoureth, his elect, because he will: therefore hath mercie, because he wil. For this Oracle of God, I will haue mercie vpon whome I will haue mercie, and I will shew mercie to whom I will shew mercie, is as much in effect as if it had ben said, y God is moued to mercy by no other reaso but because he wil haue mercie. Therefore this saying of Augustine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fit to be chosen, but maketh them.

9 Neither do we any thing passe vpon the suttletie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of deseruings, is not indeed the cause of Predestination on the behalfe of the acte of him that doeth predestinate, but on our behalfe it may after a certayne manner bee so called, that is, according to the particular weying of Predestination: as when it is saide that God predestina-teth glorie to man by deseruings, because hee hath decreed to giue to him grace by which hee may deserue glorie. For sith the Lorde will in election haue vs to looke vnto nothing but his meere goodnesse, if any man shall couet here to see any more, it shalbee a wrongfull greedines. If wee lusted to striue in suttletie, wee want not wherewith to beate backe this silly suttletie of Thomas. Hee affirmeth that to the electe glorie is after a certain maner predestinate by deseruings, because the Lord doth after a certain e manner predestinate to them the grace, by which they may deserue glorie. What if I aunswere on the contrarie side and say that predestination vnto grace, serueth election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting maid after it? that grace is predestinate to them, to whome the possession of glorie hath beene long agoe appointed: because it pleaseth the Lorde to bring his children from election into iustification? For therevpon it shall followe that the predestination of glorie was rather the cause of the Predestination of grace, the contrariwise. But away with these striuings as thinges superfluous for such as shal think that there is wisdom enough for them in the word of God. For this was in olde time truely written of an Ecclesiastical writer, that they which asigne the election of God to merites are more wise than they ought to be.

10 Some doe obiect that God shoulde bee contrarie to himselfe if hee shoulde vniuersally call all men to him, and receiue but a fewe elect. So by their opinion the vniuersalnesse of the promise taketh away the difference of speciall grace. And thus certaine sober men speake, not so much to oppresse the the trueth, as to debarre crabbed questions, and to bridle the curiositie of many. Their will is prayse worthie, but their counsell is not to be allowed: because dallying by shuftes is neuer excusable. But their obiecting of it which do more railingly inuete against it, is verily too fonde a cauillation, or too shameful an error. How the Scripture maketh these two to agree together, that by outwarde preaching all men are called to Repentance & faith, and yet not to all men is giuen the Spirite of Repentance and faith, I haue in an other place already declared, and by and by somewhat of it must be repeated againe. Nowe that which they require I denie to them, sith it is two wayes false. For, he that threatneth that while it raineth vpon one citie, there shall be drought vpon an other: Hee that pronounceth that there shall in an other place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not himselfe with a certaine lawe to call all men egally. And he which forbidding Paul to speake in Asia, and turning him from Bithinia draweth him into Macedonia, sheweth that it is in his owne power to distribute this treasure to whomsoever it shall please him. Yet more plainly he sheweth by Esay, howe he peculiarly directeth to the elect the promises of saluation: for he sayth of them onely, and not of all mankind indifferently, that they shalbe his Disciples. Whereby it is certaine that the doctrine of saluation is wrongfully set open in common to all men to profite effectually, which is saide to bee seuerally layde vp onely for the children of the Church. Let this suffice at this present, that although the voyce of the Gospell speake generally to all, yet the gifte of faith is rare. Esay assigneth the cause, for that the arme of the Lord is not open to all men. If he had saide that the Gospell is maliciously and frowardly despised, because many doe stubbornly refuse to heare: peradventure this colour touching vniuersall calling should preuaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminish the fault of men, when he teacheth that the fountaine of blindness is, that God vouchsafeth not to open his arme to them: onely he giueth warning, that because faith is a singular gift, the eares are beaten in vaine with outward doctrine. But I would faine know of these doctoures, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainly when it is sayd in the first chapter of Iohn, Whosoever beleeue in the only begotten Sonne of God, are themselues also made the children of God, there is not in that place a confused heap iumbled vp together: but a speciall order is giuen to the faithfull, which are borne not of bloude, nor of the will of the fleshe, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (saye they) there is a mutuall consent of faith with the worde. Namely wherefoever is faith. But it is no new thing that seele fall among thornes or in stony places: not onely because the greater part appeareth in deede obstinate against God, but also because not all men haue eyes and eares. How then shal it agree that God calleth to him them who he knoweth will not come? Lette Augustine answer for me. Wilt thou dispute with me? Maruaile with me, & cry out, O depth. Let vs both agree in feare, lest we perish in error. Moreover if election (as Paul witnesseth) bee the mother of faith, I turne backe the argument vpon their owne heade, that faith is therefore not generall, because election is speciall. For by y orderly hanging together of causes and effectes, it is easily gathered that where Paul sayth, that we are full of all spirituall blessing, as God had chosen vs before the creation of the world: therefore these riches are not common toal, because God hath chosen only whom he would. This is the reason why in an other place he comendeth the faith of the elect, least it should be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himselfe: but that this glorie may remayne with GOD, that they are freely enlightened of him, whome he had chosen before. For Bernarde sayth rightly, Friends doe seuerally heare, to whom he also saith, Feare not thou small flocke: for to you it is giuen to know the mysterie of the kingdom of heauen. Who be these? euen they whom he hath foreknown and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great & secret counsel is made known. The Lorde knewe who be his: but that which was knowen to God, is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a mystery, but those selfe same men whom he hath foreknown and predestinate to be his. A litle after he concludeth. The mercy of God is from eternitie euen to eternitie vpon them y feare him: from eternitie, by reason of predestinatio: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, the other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernarde for witness, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none do see but they which are of God? By which wordes he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of God, doe dasell at the brightnesse of his countenance. And to election faith in deede is fittly ioyned, so that it keepe the seconde degree. Which order the wordes of Christ do cleerely expresse in an other place, This is the will of my Father, that I lose not y which he hath giuen. For this is his wil, that whosoever beleeueth in the Sonne, shall not perish. If he would haue all saued, he would appoint ouer them his Sonne to be their keeper, and would grasse them all into his body with the holy bond of faith . Nowe it is certaine that faith is a singular pledge of his fatherly loue, laide vp for his children whome he hath adopted . Therefore Christ in an other place sayth that the sheepe followe the shepheard, because they knowe his voyce : but they followe not a stranger , because they knowe not the voyce of strangers . Whence commeth this difference, but because their eares are boared by God ? For no man maketh himselfe a sheepe : but hee is made one by the heauenly grace . For which cause also the Lorde teacheth that our safetie shall alway be certaine and free from daunger , because it is kepte by the inuincible power of God . Wherefore he concludeth that the vnbeleéues are not of his sheepe : namely because they are not of the number of them, whom God hath promised by Esaie that they shall be his disciples . Nowe because in the testimonies which I haue alleaged is expressed perseuerance, they doe therewithall testifie the vn moucable stedfastnesse of election.

Rom. 9. 13.

IT Nowe let vs speake of the reprobate, whom the Apostle ioyneth there together . For as Iacob, hauing yet with good wordes deserued nothing, is taken into grace : so Esau, beeing yet defiled with no wicked doing, is hated . If we turne our eyes to workes, we doe wrong to the Apostle, as though he sawe not the same thing which we cleerely see . It is prooued that hee sawe it not, forasmuch as he expressly enforceth this pointe , that when they had not yet done any good or euill, the one was chosen , and the other refused, to prooue that the foundation of the predestination of G O D is not in workes . Againe when he moued the obiection, whether God be vnrighteous, he allegeth not that which had bene the most certaine and plaine defence of his righteousness, namely that God reduced to Esau according to his euilnesse : but he was content with an other solution, that the reprobate are stirred vp to this ende, that the glory of God may be set forth by them. Last of all he adioyneth a concluding sentence, that God hath mercie vpon whome he will, and hardeneth whom he wil . See you not howe he impureth both to the onely will of God ? Therefore if we can not declare a reason why he vouchsafeth to graunt mercie to them that be his, but because it so pleaseth him : neither also shall we haue any other cause in reiecting of other, than his owne will. For when it is sayd that God hardeneth, or sheweth mercie to whome he will, men are thereby warned to seeke no cause else where than in his will.

The xxiii. Chapter.

beeue wrongfully burdened.*

BVt when the witte of man heareth these things, the frowardnesse thereof can not be restrained, but that by and by as at the bloody blast of a trumpet, sounding to battaile, it diuersly and excessiueyly turmoyleth . And many in deede, as though they would driue away the malice from G O D, doe so graunt election, that they denie that any man is reprobate : but they do too ignorantly and childishly : forasmuch as election it selfe could not stande vnlesse it were set contrary to reprobation : God is sayd to seuer them whom he adopteth

adopteth vnto saluation: it shoulde be more than foolishly said that other do either by chaunce or by their owne endeouour obtaine that which onely election giueth to a fewe. Therefore whome God passeth ouer, he reiecteth: and for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predestinate to his children. Neither is the waiwardnesse of men tolerable, if it suffer not it selfe to be bridled with the worde of God, where the incomprehensible counsell of God is intreated of, which the Angels themselues doe worshippe. But we haue already heard, y^e hardening is no lesse in the hand & wil of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men do y^e I haue spoken of) busily labor to excuse God with a lying defence: but onely he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarell with him that formed it. Now who so doe not admit that any are reiected of God, how wil they vncomber themselues from that sayng of Christ Euery tree which my father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the root? They playnely heare that all they are adiudged and auowed to destruction, whome the heauenly Father hath not vouchsaued to plant as holy trees in his ground. If they denie this to be a signe of reprobation, then is there nothing so cleare y^e it may be proued to them. But if they cease not to wrangle, let the sobrietie of faith be contented with this admonition of Paul, that there is no cause to quarell with God, if he willing on the one side to shew his wrath and to make his power knowen doe with dumme sufferance, and lenitie beare wth the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: and on y^e other side he make knowen the riches of his glorie toward the vessels of mercie which he hath prepared to glorie. Let y^e Readers marke, how Paul to cut off occasion from whisperinges and backbitings, giueth the cheefe rule to the wrath and power of God: because it is vniust that those deepe iudgements which swallowe vp all our senses, should be made subiect to our determination: Our aduersaries aunswere is verie trifling, that God doth not vtterly reiect them whome he suffereth in lenitie, but abideth with a minde hanging in suspence toward them, if peradventure they may repent. As though Paul giueth to God a patience, to looke for their turning, whome he saith to be made to destruction. For, Augustine saith rightly where hee expoundeth this place, where power is ioyned to sufferance, God doth not suffer; but gouerne with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing saide that the vessels of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, that God hath prepared the vessels of mercie: because by this meane he ascribeth & chalengeth y^e praise of saluation to God, but the blame of destruction hee casteth vpon them which by their owne will doe bring it vpon themselues. But although I graunt to them that Paul by the diuerse manner of speaking did soften the roughnesse of the firste parte of the sentence, yet is it not meete to assigne the preparing vnto destruction to any other thing than to the secreete counsell of God: which also is affirmed a litle before in the rest of the text, That God stirred vp Pharao: Then that he hardeneth whome hee will. Where vpon followeth that the hidden counsell of God is the cause of hardning. This at the least I get which Augustine sayth, that when GOD of wolues maketh sheepe, hee doth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardnes may be tamed: and therefore God for this cause doth not conuert

the obstinate, because he doth not shew foorth in them the mightier grace, which he wanteth not if he would shew it forth.

2 These sayings in deede should be sufficient for the godly and sober, & them which remember themselves to be men. But forasmuch as these venomous dogges doe cast vp not onely one sorte of venime against God, we will as the matter shall serue, aunswere to euerie one particularly. Foolishe men doe diuerse wayes quarrell with God, as though they had him subiecte to their accusations. First therefore they aske, by what right the Lord is angry with his creatures, of whome he hath not ben first prouoked by any offence: for to condemne to destruction whom he will, agreeth rather with the wilfulness of a tyrant, than the lawfull sentence of a iudge. Therefore they say that there is cause why men should charge God, if by his bare will, without their owne deseruing, they be predestinate to eternal death. If such thoughts doe at any time come into the minde of the godly, to breake their violent assaults they shalbe sufficiently armed with this although they had no more, if they consider howe great wickednesse it is, euen so much as to inquire of the causes of the will of God: sith of all things that are, it is the cause, & worthily so ought to be. For if it haue any cause, then somewhat must goe before it, whereto it must bee as it were bound: which it is vnlawfull once to imagine. For, the will of God is so the highest rule of righteousnesse, that whatsoever he willeth, euen for this that he willeth it, it ought to be také for righteous. When therefore it is asked, why the Lord did it: it is to be aunswered, because he willed it. But if thou goe further in asking why he willed it, thou askest some greater and hier thing than the will of God: which can not be found. Let therefore the rashnesse of man restrain it selfe, and not seeke y^e which is not, least peraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridle (I say) he shall be well withholden whosoeuer hee be that wil dispute of the secretes of God with reuerence. As for the boldnesse of the wicked, which dread not openly to speake euill of God: against it the Lorde with his own righteousnesse, without any our defense shal sufficiently defende himselfe, when he shall take all shifting from their consciences, and holde them fast conuincéd, and condemne them. Neither doe we yet thrust in the fained deuise of absolute power, which as it is prophane, so worthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faine not God lawlesse, who is a lawe to himselfe: because (as Plato sayth) men stand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull lustes: but the will of God is not onely pure from all fault, but also is the hiest rule of perfection, yea and the lawe of all lawes. But wee denie that he is subiect to yelde accompt. Wee denie also that we are meete iudges, which woulde pronounce of this cause after our owne sense. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawfully may, let that threatening of the Psalm bring vs in feare, that God shall ouercome so oft as he is iudged of any mortall man.

3 So can God in keeping silence, put his enemies to silence. But, that we may not suffer them freely to scorne his holy name, he deliuereth to vs out of his worde weapons against them. Wherefore if any man assaile vs with such words: why God hath from the beginning predestinate some to death, which when they were nor, coulde not yet deserue the iudgement of death:

we in steede of aunswere may againe on our side aske of them, what they thinke that God oweth to man, if he will iudge him by his owne nature. In such sort as we be all corrupted with sinne, we cannot but be hatefull to god: and that not by tyrannous crueltie, but by most vpright reason of iustice. If all they whome the Lorde doeth predestinate to death, are by the estate of nature subiect to the iudgement of death: of what vniustice against themselves, I beseech you, may they complaine? Let al the sonnes of Adam come: Let them striue and dispute with their creator, for that by his eternall prouidence they were before their generation condemned to euerlasting miserie. What shall they bee able onçe to mutter against this defence, when God on the other side shall call them to reknowledging of themselves? If they be all taken out of a corrupt masse, it is no marueile if they be subiect to damnation. Let them not therefore accuse God of vniustice, if by his eternall iudgement they be appointed to death, to which they themselves doe feele whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appeareth how wrongfull is the desire of their murmuring, because they do of set purpose hide the cause of damnation which they are compelled to acknowledge in themselves, y^e the laying of the blame vpon God may acquite thē. But though I do a hundred times confesse, as it is most true y^e God is the author of it, yet they do not by and by wipe away y^e guiltines which being engrauen in their consciences from time with oft recourse, presenteth it selfe to their eyes.

4. Againe they except & say: were they not before predestinate by the ordinance of God to the same corruption which is nowe alleaged for the cause of damnation? When therefore they perish in their corruption, they do nothing but suffer the punishment of that miserie into which by his predestination Adam fell and drewe his posteritie headlong with him. Is not he therefore vniust, which doth so cruelly mocke his creatures? I grant in deed that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miserie of state wherein they be nowe bounde: and this is it that I saide at the beginning, that at length we must alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cause whereof is hidden in himselfe. But it followeth not by and by that God is subiect to this slander. For we will with Paul answere them in Rom. 9. 10. this manner, O man, what art thou that contendest with God? doeth the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed mee so? Hath not the potter power to make of the same lump one vessel to honor, and another to dishonor? They will say that the righteousness of God is so not truely defended, but that wee seeke a shift, such as they are wont to haue that want a iust excuse. For what else seemeth here to be saide, than y^e God hath a power which cannot be hindered from doing any thing whatsoever it be as he will himselfe? But it is farre otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought than when wee are commaunded to thinke what a one God is? For howe should he commit any vniustice, which is iudge of the world? If it properly pertaine to the nature of God to doe iudgement, than hee naturally loueth righteousness, and abhorreth vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though he were ouertaken, looke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousness of God is hier than that it either is to be measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the slender capacitie of the wit of man. The Apostle in deed confesseth that there is such depth in the judgements of God, wherewith y^e mindes of men should be swallowed, if they endeououred to pearce into it.

Pro. 26. 10.

But he teacheth also how hainous wrong it is, to binde the workes of God to such a law, that so soone as we vnderstand not the reason of them, wee may be bolde to disallow them. It is a knowen saying of Salomon (which yet fewe do rightly vnderstand) The great creator of all rendreth rewarde to y^e foole, and rewarde to transgressors. For he cryeth out concerning the greatnes of God: in whose will it is to punish fooles and transgressors, although hee doe not vouchsaue to let them haue his Spirite. And monstrous is the madnesse of men, when they so couet to make that which is vnmeasurable, subiect to y^e small measure of their reason. The Angels which stode stil in their vprightnesse, Paul calleth elect. If their stedfastnes was grounded vpon the good pleasure of God, the falling away of the other proueth that they were forsaken: Of which thing there can no other cause be alleaged than reprobation, which is hidden in the secret counsell of God.

1. Tim. 5. 22.

5 Go to: let there now be present some Manichee, or Celestine, a slanderer of the prouidence of God: I say with Paul that there ought no reason to be rendred thereof: because with the greatnesse of it, it farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. What maruile? or what absurditie is it? Would he haue the power of God so limited, that it may be able to worke no more, than his minde is able to conceiue? I say with Augustine, that they are created of the Lord, whome he without douring foreknewe that they shoulde go into destruction: and that it was so done because he so willed: but why he willed, it is not our part to aske a reason of it, who cannot comprehend it: neither is it meete that the will of God should come downe into controuersie among vs, of which so oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named the hiest rule of righteousnesse. Why therfore is any question moued of vnrighteousnesse where righteousnesse clearly appeareth? Neither let vs be ashamed, after the example of Paul, so to stoppe the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time so oft as they shalbee bolde to barke against it, to repeat this, Who be ye miserable men, that lay an accusation to Gods charge, and doe therefore lay it to his charge, because he doeth not temper the greatnesse of his workes to your dulnesse? As though they were therefore wrongfull, because they are hidden from flesh. The vnmeasurablenesse of the iudgements of God is by cleare experiences knowen vnto you. Ye knowe that they are called the deepe bottomlesse depth. Nowe aske of the narrow capacities of your wit, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himselfe. What good doth it you therefore with mad searching to plunge your selues into the bottomlesse depth, which reason it selfe teacheth you that it shalbe to your destruction? Why are ye not at the least restrained wth some feare of that which both the historie of Iob and the bookes of the prophets do report of the incomprehensible wisdom, and terrible power of God. If thy minde be vnquieted, let it not grieue thee to embrace the counsell of Augustine. Thou being a man lookest for an aunswere at my hande: and I also am a man. Therefore let vs both heare him that sayeth:

O man,

O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than rash knowledge. Seeke merites: thou shalt finde nothing but paine. O depth! Peter denieth: the Theefe beleueeth. O depth! Seekest thou a reason? I will tremble at the depth. Reason thou, I will wonder. dispute thou, I will beleuee: I see depth, but I reache not the bottome. Paul rested, because he found wondering. He calleth the iudgements of God vnsearchable: and art thou come to search them? He saith that his wayes are impossible to be traced out: and doest thou trace them? with proceeding further wee shall nothing profite: For neither wee shall satisfie their way wanton curiousnesse, neither doeth y^e Lord neede any other defence, than which he hath vsed by his Spirit, which spake by the mouth of Paul: and wee forget to speake well, when wee cesse to speake with God.

6 Their other obiection also ariseth out of vngodlinesse, which yet tendeth not so directly to the accusing of God as to the excusing of the sinner. Howbeit the sinner which is condemned of God cannot bee justified without dishonor of the iudge. Thus therefore prophane tounge doe barke against God, saying: why should God impute those things for sinne to men, whereof he hath by his predestination layde necessitie vpon men? For, what should they do? Should they wrastle with his decrees? But so should they do it in vaine, sith they cannot doe it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully punished for those things, whereof the chiefe cause is in Gods predestination. Here I will abstaine from that defence, wherunto the Ecclesiasticall writers do commonly flee, namely that the foreknowledge of God withstandeth not but that man may be accounted the sinner: because God foreseeeth the euils of man, not his own. For so the cauillation would not stay here, but will rather presse vs further with saying that God might if hee had woulde, haue prouided remedie for those euils which he foresaw: & that sith he hath not so done, he hath of determined purpose created men to that end that he should so behaue himself in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man was created to this condition, that he should do al those things that he doeth then he is not to be blamed for that which he cannot auoide, and which hee enterprised by the will of God. Therefore let vs see howe this knot ought to bee well loosed. First of all this ought to bee holden certaine among all men which Salomon saith, that God hath created all things for himselfe, and the wicked man to an euill day. Behold, when the despising of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of safetie and death: hee so ordereth them by his counsell and becke, that among men there are borne some adjudged cuen from their mothers wombe to death, which with their destruction may glorifie his name. If any man answer, that there is no necessitie layde vpon them by the prouidence of God, but rather that hee created them in such estate, because he foresaw their peruersnesse to come: he neither saith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deede somtimes to vse this solution: but as it were doutingly. But the scholmen rest vpon it, as though nothing could be objected against it. In deede I will willingly graunt, that foreknowledge alone bringeth no necessitie to creatures, although al men do not so agree: for there be some that will haue it also to be the cause of things. But it seemeth to mee that Valla, a man otherwise not much practised in holy writings, sawe both more deeply and more wisely, which shewed that this contention is superfluous; because both life and death are rather the doings of Gods wil than of his foreknowledge. If God did but foresee the successes of men, and did not also dispose and order them by his will, then this question should not without cause be moued, whether his foreseeing any thing auailed to the necessitie of them." But sith he doth none otherwise foresee the things that shall come to passe, than because he hath decreed that they should so come to passe: it is vaine to moue controuersie about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that all thinges doe happen rather by ordinance and commandement.

7 They say that this is not written in expresse words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam should perish by his falling away. As though the same God, whome the Scripture reporteth to do whatsoeuer he will, created the noblest of al his creatures to an vncertaine end. They say he had freewill, y^e he might shape to himselfe his own fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his deseruing. If so colde a deuise bee receiued, where shalbe that almightinesse of God, whereby he gouerneth all things according to his secrete counsell, which hangeth vpon none other thing than it selfe? But predestination, whether they will or no, sheweth him selfe in Adams posteritie. For it came not to passe naturally that all men should lose saluation by the fault of one parent. What hindereth them to confesse of one man, that which against their willes they confesse of al mankind? For why should they lose their labour with dallying shifts? The Scripture crieth out that all men were in the person of one man made bonde to eternall death. Sith this cannot be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceeded from the wonderous counsell of God. But it is too much absurditie that these good Patrones of the righteousnes of GOD doe so stumble at a strawe, and leape ouer great beames. Againe I aske: how came it to passe, y^e the fall of Adam did wrap vp in eternall death so many nations with their children being infants without remedie, but because it so pleased God? Here their tongues which are otherwise so pratling, must of necessitie be dumme. It is a terrible decree, I graunt: yet no man shalbe able to denie, but y^e God foreknewe what end man should haue, ere he created him, and therefore foreknewe it because he had so ordeined by his decree. If any man here inuey against the foreknowledge of God, he rashly & vndiscretely stumbleth. For, what matter is there, I beseech you, why the heauenly iudge should be accused for that he was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be any either iust or colourable complaint, it toucheth predestination. Neither ought it to seeme an absurditie which I say, that God foresawe not onely the fall of the first man, and in him the ruine of his posteritie, but also disposed it after his owne will. For as it belongeth to his wisdom, to foreknow all things that shalbe: so it belongeth to his power, to rule and gouerne all things with his hande. And this question Augustine verie well discusseth, as he doth other, saying: Wee most holsomly confesse that which we most rightly belecue, that the God and Lorde of all thinges, which created all things very good, & foreknewe that euil things shoulde spring out of good, and knewe that it more pertained to his almightie good.

goodnesse euen of euil things do well, than not to suffer them to be euil: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shewe what free will could doe, and then what the benefit of his grace and iudgement of iustice could do.

8. Here they runne to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will haue it graunted that the wicked do perish, God onely permitting but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitteth it, but because he so willerh: Howbeit it is not likely that man by himselfe, by the only permission of God, without any his ordinance, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God appointed not, of what condition he would haue the chiefe of his creatures to be. I therefore will not dout to confesse simply with Augustine, that the will of God is a necessitie of things, and that what hee willeth, it must of necessitie come to passe: as those things shall truely come to passe which he hath foreseene. Nowe if for excuse of themselves and of the vngodly, either the Pelagians, or Manichees, or Anabaptistes, or Epicurians (for with these foure sects we haue to do in this question) shall obiect against vs necessitie wherewith they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing else but a dispensation of righteousnes of GOD, which is hidden in deede, but yet without fault: For asmuch as it is certaine that they were not vnworthie to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as certaine that the destruction is most righteous which they enter into by predestination. Morcouer their destruction so hangeth vpon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is found in themselves. For the first man fell, because the Lord so iudged it to be expedient: why he so iudged, is vnknown to vs: yet it is certaine that he so iudged for no other reason but because he sawe that thereby the glorie of his name shoulde be worthily set forth. When thou hearest mention of the glorie of God, there thinke of his righteousnes: For it must be righteous that deserueth praise. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordeining it: but he falleth by his owne fault. The Lorde had a little before pronounced, that all the things which he had made were very good. Whence therefore commeth that peruersnesse to man, to fall away from his God? Least it should be thought to be of creation, the Lorde with his commendation allowed that which came from himselfe. Therefore by his owne euilnesse he corrupted the nature which he had receiued pure of the Lorde, and by his fall he drew his whole posteritie with him into destruction. Wherefore let vs rather beholde an euident cause of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankind, which is neerer to vs, than search for a hidden and vterly incomprehensible cause thereof in the predestination of GOD. Neither let it grieue vs so farre to submit our wit to y vnmeasurable wisdom of God, that it may yeelde in many secretes of his. For, of those things which it is neither graunted nor lawfull to knowe, the ignorance is well learned: the coueting of knowledge, is a kinde of madnesse.

9 Some man perhaps will say, that I haue not yet brought enough to subdne that wicked excuse. But I verily confesse that it can neuer be brought to passe, but that yngodlinesse will alway grudge and murmure against it:

De Gen. ad lite. lib. 6.
cap. 15.

Gen. 1. 31.

yet I thinke that I haue spoken so much as might suffice to take away not on-ly all reason but also all colour of gainesaying. The reprobate would be thought excusable in sinning, because they cannot escape the necessitie of sinning: specially sith such necessitie is cast vpon them by the ordinance of God. But we denie that they are thereby well excused, because the ordinance of God, by which they complaine that they are destinate to destruction, hath his righteousness, vnknown in deede to vs, but yet most certaine. Whereupon we conclude, that they beare no euil which is not laide vpon them by the most righteous iudgement of God. Then, we teach that they do ouerthwartly, which to seeke out the beginning of their damnation, doe bend their eyes to the secret closets to the counsel of God, and winke at the corruptiō of nature, from whence their damnation springeth. And this withstandeth that they cannot impute it to God, for that hee witnesseth of his owne creation. For although man is creat by the eternall prouidence of god to that calamitie, whereunto he is subiect: yet the matter thereof he tooke of himselfe, not of God: forasmuch as he is by no other meane so lost, but because he went out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt & vnpure peruersnesse.

10 Now the aduersaries of Gods predestination doe slander it also with a third absurditie. For when we impute it to nothing else but to the choise of the will of God, that they are made free from the vniuersall destruction, whō he maketh heires of his kingdome, thereby they gather that there is within accepting of persons, which the Scripture euery where denieth: and therefore, that either the Scripture disagreeeth with it selfe, or that in the election of God there is respect of deseruings. First, the Scripture in another sense denieth, that God is an acceptor of persons, than as they iudge it. For by the name of Person, it signifieth not a man, but those things which being seene with eyes in man are wont to procure either fauour, grace, and dignitie, or hatred, contempt, and shame: as, richesse, wealth, power, nobilitie, office, countrey, excellencie of beautie, and such other: on the other side, pouertie, neede, basenesse, vilenesse, contempt, and such other. So Peter & Paul do teach that the Lord is not an acceptor of persons, because he putteth not difference between the Iew and the Grecian, to refuse the one and embrace the other for only respect of nation. So James vseth the same wordes when he mindeth to affirme, that God in his iudgement nothing regardeth richesse. But Paul in another place speaketh thus of God, that in iudging hee hath no consideration of freedome or bondage. Wherefore there shalbe no contrarietie if we shall say that God according to the will of his good pleasure without any deseruing chooseth to his sonnes whome he will, reiecting and refusing other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may be more fully satisfied. They aske how it commeth to passe, y^e of two betweene whome no deseruing putteth any difference, God in his electing passeth ouer the one and taketh the other. I on the other side doe aske them, whether they thinke that in him that is taken there is any thing that may make the minde of God to encline towards him. If they confesse (as they needes must) that there is nothing, it shal followe that God looketh not vpon mā, but from his owne goodnesse fetcheth a cause why to doe good to him.

Whereas

Whereas therefore God chooseth one man, refusing another, this cometh not of respect of man, but of his mercy alone, which ought to haue liberty to shewe forth and vter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in another place also shewed, y^e there were not from the beginning many called noble, or wise, or honorable, that God might humble the pride of flesh: so farre is it of; that his fauour was bound to persons.

lib. 1. cap. 7.
1. Col. 1. 26.

11 Wherefore many do falsly and wickedly accuse God of partial vnrigh-teousnesse, for that he doth not in his predestination keepe one selfe course toward all men. If (say they) he finde all guilty, let him equally punish all: if he finde them vngilty, let him withhold the rigor of his iudgement from all.
But so they deale with him, as if either mercy were forbiddē him, or when he woulde haue mercy he be compelled altogether to giue ouer his iudgement.
What is it that they require: if all be guilty, that all may together suffer all one paine. We graunt the guiltines to be common, but we say y^e the mercy of God helpeth some. Let it help all, say they. But wee aunswere, that it is rightfull that he should also in punishing shewe himselfe a rightfull iudge. When they suffer this: what do they else but either go about to spoyle God of his power to haue mercy, or at least to graunt it him vpon this condition, that hee vtterly giue ouer his iudgement. Wherefore these sayings of Augustine do very well agree together. Sith in the first man the whole masse of mankinde fell into condemnation, these vessels that are made of it to honour, are not the vessels of their owne righteousnesse, but of the mercy of GOD: and whereas other are made to dishonour, the same is not to be imputed to vnrightfulnesse but to iudgement, &c. That to those whome he refuseth, God rendereth due paine: to those whome he calleth, hee giueth vnderferued grace: that they are deliuered from all accusation, after the maner of a creditour, in whose power it is, to forgieue to the one, & aske of the other. Therefore the Lorde also may giue grace to whome he will, because he is merciful: and giue it not to all, because he is a iust iudge. He may by giuing to some that which they do not deserue, shewe his free grace: & by not giuing to all, declare what all deserue. For whereas Paul writeth that God enclosed al vnder sin, that he might haue mercy vpon all, it is therewithall to be added that he is detter to no man: because no man first gaue to him, that he may require like of him.

12 This also they often say, to ouerthrowe predestination, that while it standeth, all carefulnesse and endeouour of well doing falleth away. For who (say they) shal heare that either life or death it certainly appointed for him by the eternall decree of God, but that it will by and by come into his minde that it maketh no matter how he behaue himselfe, sith the predestination of GOD can by his worke bee nothing hindered or furthered? So shall all men dissolutely throwe foorth themselues, and after a desperate manner runne headlong whither their lust shall carry them. And verily they saye not altogether falsly, for there be many swine, which with filthy blasphemies defile the doctrine of predestination, and by this pretence also do mocke out all admonishmentes and rebukings, saying, God knoweth what he hath once determined to doe with vs: if hee haue decreed our saluation, he will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he haue predestinate our death, we shoulde

travaile in vaine to the contrary. But the Scripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reuerence and religiousnesse we ought to think of so great a mysterie, doth both instruct the godly to farre other sense, and wel confute these mens outrage. For it doth not speake of predestination to this ende, that we should be encouraged to boldnesse, and with vnlawfull rashnesse attempt to search the vnattained secretes of God: but rather that being humbled & abased we should learn to tremble at his iudgemēt, and reuerently to looke vp to his mercy. To this marke the faithfull will leuell themselues. As for that filthy groning of swine, it is well confuted of Paul. They say that they go carelesly forwarde in vices: because if they be of the number of the elect, their vices shall nothing hinder them, but that they shall at length be brought to life. But Paul telleth that we be to this end, that we should leade a holy and faultlesse life. If the marke that electiō is directed vnto be holines of life, it ought more to awake and stirre vs vp cherefully to practise that holinesse, than to serue for a cloking of slouthfulness. For how greatly do these thinges differ the one from the other? to cease frō wel doing, because election sufficeth to saluation: and that the appointed ende of election is that wee should apply our selues to the endeuor of good doings. Away therefore with such sacrileges which doe wrongfully misturne the whole order of election. Where they stretch their blasphemies further, when they say that he which is reprobate of God, shall loose his labour if he go about to make himselfe alloweable to him with innocencie and honesty of life: therein they are taken with a most shamelesse lye. For, whence could such endeuour come but of election? For whosoeuer be of the number of the reprobate, as they are vessels made to dishonour, so they cease not with continuall wicked doings to prouoke the wrath of God against themselues, and by euident tokens to confirme the iudgement of God which is already pronounced vpon them: so far be they from striuing with him in vaine.

13 But other do maliciously and shamfully slander this doctrine, as though it did ouerthrowe all exhortations to godly liuing. For which matter in old time Augustine was burdened with a greate malice. Which hee wiped away with his booke of correction and grace written to Valentine, the reading whereof will appease all godly and tractable men: yet I will touche a fewe thinges, which (as I trust) shall satisfie them that be honest and not contentious. We haue already seene howe open and loude a preacher of the free election Paul was: was he therefore cold in admonishing and exhorting? Lette these good zealous men compare their earnestnesse with his, and it shalbe founde in them ise in comparison of his incredible heate. And truly this principle taketh away all doubtles, that we are not called to vncleannesse, but that euery man should possesse his vessell in honor, &c. Againe, that we are the handy worke of God created to good workes, which he hath prepared that we should walke in them. Summarily, they that are euen but meanly exercised in Paul, shall without longe declaratiō easily perceiue how suly he maketh these thinges to agree, which they faine to disagree. Christ commandeth y men beleeuē in him: Yet is his definitiue sentence neither false nor contrary to this commandement, where he sayth: No man can come to mee, but he to whome it is giuen of my father. Let preaching therefore haue haue his course, which may bring men to faith, and with continuall profiting holde them fast in perseuerance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predestination be hindered, y^e they which obey may not be proude as of their owne, but may glorie in the Lord. Christ not for nothing saith: Who so hath eares of hearing, let him heare. Therefore when we exhorte and preache, they that haue eares doe willingly obey: but who so lacke eares, in them is fulfilled that which is written, That hearing they heare not. But why (saith Augustine) shoulde some haue, and other some not haue? Who hath knowe the minde of the Lord? Must that therefore be denied which is open, because that cannot be comprehended which is hidden? These sayings I haue faithfully reported out of Augustin: but because paraduecture his words shal haue more authoritic than mine, goe to, let vs bring foorth the verie wordes that are read in himselfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dullnesse and sluggishnesse, and being inclined from labour to lust doe go after their desires: ought that therefore to be accompted false which is spoken of y^e foreknowledge of God? If God haue foreknown y^e they shal be good, shal they not be good, in howe great euilnesse soeuer they nowe liue? and if hee haue foreknown that they will be euill, shal they not be euil in howe great goodnesse soeuer they be now seen? shal therefore those things which are truly spokē of the foreknowledge of God, be for such causes either to be denied or to be left vnspoken of? namely then when if they be not spoken of, men goe into errors? The rule (saith he) to keep truth vnspoken of, is one thing, & the necessitie to speake truth is an other. As for the causes of leauing truth vnspoken, it were long to search them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worse which vnderstand it not, while we mean to make them more learned that vnderstande it, who when we speake any such thing are indeede not made more learned, nor yet are made worse. But whē a true thing is in such case, that when we speake it, he is made worse that cannot conceiue it: and when we speake it not, he is made worse that can conceiue it: what thinke we nowe to be done? is not the truth rather to be spoken, that hee may conceiue it, that can conceiue it: than to keepe it vnspoken, that not onely neither of them may conceiue it, but also hee y^e more vnderstandeth may be the worse? whereas if he did heare and conceiue it, by him also many shoulde learne. And we will not say that which, as the scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might haue spoken. For we feare forsooth least when we speake, he be offended that can not conceiue it: but wee feare not least while we hold our peace, he y^e can conceiue truth be deceived with falsehood. Which sentence he at the last shortly knitting vp, more plaine also confirmeth. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the Church did both, namely both godlily preach of the eternall election of God, and holde the faithfull in awe vnder the discipline of godly life: why doe these our aduersaries being confuted with inuincible violence of truth, thinke that they say well in saying that that which is spoken of predestination is not to be preached to y^e people although it be true. Yea it must in any wise be preached, y^e he which hath eares to heare may heare. But who hath eares if hee hath not receiued them from him that promiseth that hee will giue them? Truly let him that receiueth not, refuse it: so that yet he which receiue it, do take and drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlines is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predestination, that he which hath cares to heare of the grace of God, may glory in god and not in himselfe.

14 And yet that holy man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the manner of teaching the trueth, that offence be wisely auoided so far as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those things which are truly sayd, may also be conueniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleue not, the cause is for that ye are already predestinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulness, but also maintaine wickednes. If any man also stretch his saying to y^e time to come, and say that they which heare shal not beleue, because they are reprobate: this shalbe rather a cursing then a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not vnworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as foolish teachers, and vn-lucky and ill prophesying Prophets. In an other place he truly affirmeth that it is to be holden that a man then profiteth with rebuking, when hee hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profite whome he will, euen without rebuking. But why some thus and some otherwise? God forbid that, y^e we shoulde say that the power of iudging belongeth rather to the clay than to the potter. Againe afterwarde. When men by rebuking either come or returne into the way of righteousness, who worketh saluation in their hearts, but hee, which when any whosoeuer he be planteth and watereth, giueth the increase, whom when he wil saue, no freewill of man resisteth? It is therefore not to be doubted that the wils of men can not resist y^e will of God (which both in heauen and earth hath done whatsoeuer he woulde, and which hath also done those things that are to come) but that he may doe what he will, foras much as euen of the verie wils of men hee doeth what he will. Againe, when he will leade men to him, doeth he binde them with corporall bonds? Hee inwardly worketh, inwardly holdeth heartes, inwardly moueth heartes, and draweth them with their wils which hee himselfe hath made in them, But, that which hee by and by addeth ought in no wise to be omitted: that because wee knowe not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predestinate, we ought so to be affectioned that we woulde all men to be saued. So shall it come to passe, that whom soeuer we find, we shall trauell to make him partaker of peace. But our peace shall rest vpon the children of peace. Therefore for our part, we must applie holtsome and sharpe rebuking to al men like a medecine, that they perish not, nor destroy other, but it shalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to them whom he hath fore-knownen and predestinate.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

That election is established by the calling of God, but that the reprobate doe bring vpon themselves the iust destruction whereunto they are appointed.

BUT, that the matter may more plainly appeare, we must intreat both of the calling of the elect, and of the blinding and hardening of the wicked. Of the first of these I haue alreadie spoken somewhat, when I confuted their error, which thinke that the generalnesse of the promises extendeth egally to all mankinde. But this election which otherwise God hath hidden with himselfe he doth not without choise at length disclose by his calling, which a man may therefore call the testifying of it. For, whom hee hath foreknown, them he hath also foreappointed to be fashioned like the image of his sonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath also called: whom he hath called, the he hath also iustified, that in time to come he may glorifie them. When the Lorde hath by electing alreadie adopted his into y number of his children: yet we see howe they enter not into possession of so great a benefite, but when they be called: on the otherside, how being called they doe now enjoy a certaine communicating of his election. For which reason Paul calleth the spirite which they receiue, both the Spirite of adoption, and the seale, and earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doeth with the testimonie thereof stablishe and seale to their heartes the assurednes of the adoption to come. For though the preaching of the Gospel spring out of the fountaine of election: yet because it is also comon to y reprobate, therefore it coulde not by it selfe be a sure prooffe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as we haue before alleadged out of the wordes of Christ, Who so is of God, he and none other seeth the Father. Againe, I haue shewed thy name to the me nwhome thou hast giuen me: Whereas he saith in an other place, no man can come to me, vnlesse my Father drawe him. Which place Augustine wisely weyeth, whose wordes are these. If (as Truth saith) euery one that hath learned, commeth: whosoever commeth not, certainly neither hath he learned. It doeth not therefore followe that he which can come, also commeth, vnlesse he haue both willed and done it. But euery one that hath learned of the Father, not onely can come, but also commeth, when nowe there is present both y profite of comming, and the affection of willing, and the effect of doing. Also in an other place more plainly. What is this else, Euery one that hath heard of the father, and hath learned, commeth to me, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to me? For if euery one which hath heard of the father and learned, commeth: truly euery one that commeth not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he woulde come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the fleshe, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a litle after. This grace which is secretly giuen to the heartes of men, is receiued of no hard hart: for it is therefore giuen, that the hardnesse of the heart may first bee taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the stonie heart, and giueth a fleshy heart. For so he maketh the children of promise and vessels of mercie, which he hath prepared to glory. Why therefore doth hee not teach all, that they may come to Christ, but because all whome he teacheth, by mercie he teacheth: whom he doeth not teach, by iudgement he doeth not teach: because he hath mercie vpon whome he will, and hardeneth whome he will. Therefore God assigneth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whome he hath chosē. Nowe by calling he bringeth them into the householde, and vniteth himselfe to them, that they may be one together. But, when Calling is ioyned to election, in that manner the scrip-

Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothing is to be required but γ mercie of God. For if wee aske, whome he calleth and for what reason: hee aunswereth, whome he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the onely mercie of God appeareth on euery side. And here that saying of Paul truly hath place, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that hath mercie: Neither yet that same so as they commonly take it, which part it betweene the grace of God, & the willing and running of man. For they expounde it, that the desire and induour of man haue in deede no force of themselves, vnlesse they be prospered by the grace of god: but when they are holpen by his blessing, then they affirme that they haue also their partes in obeynting saluation. Whose cauillation I had rather confute with Augustines words than mine owne: If the Apostle meant nothing else but that it is not of him onely that willeth or runneth, vnlesse the Lorde be there present mercifull: wee may contrariwise turne it against them and say that it is not of onely mercie, vnlesse there be present willing & running. Bnt if this be openly wicked, let vs not doubt that the Apostle giueth all to the mercie of the Lorde, and leaueth nothing to our willes or endeouours. To this effect speaketh that holy man. And I set not a strawe by that nice subtletie, that they say that Paul woulde not haue so saide vnlesse there had ben some induour: and some will in vs. For he did not consider what was in man: but when he sawe that some did assigne part of saluation to the endeouour of men, he simplicie condemned their error in the first part of the sentence, and in the second he challenged the whole sum of saluation of the mercie of God. And what other thing doe the Prophets trauel about but continually to preach the free calling of God?

2 Moreouer the very nature also & dispensation of calling doth clearly shewe it, which consisteth not in the onely preaching of the worde, but also in the inlightening of the Spirite. To whome God offereth his word, is shewed vs in the Prophete: I am founde of them that sought me not: I haue openly appeared to them that did not aske for me. To a people which hath not called vpon my name I haue saide, Loe I am present. And least the Iewes shoulde thinke that this kindnesse belonged onely to the Gentiles, he doth also put them in remembrance from whence hee tooke their Father Abraham, when hee vouchsafed to ioyne him to himselfe, namely from meere idolatric, in which he was drowned with all his. When hee first shineth with the light of his worde to men not deseruing it, he therein sheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodnesse. Here therefore the vnumeasurable goodnesse of God sheweth foorth it selfe, but not vnto saluation to all: because for the reprobate there abideth a more greuous iudgement, for that they refuse the testimonie of the will of God. And God also, to set foorth his glorie, withdraweth from them the effectuall force of his spirite. Therefore this inwarde calling is a pledge of saluation, which can not deceiue vs. For which purpose maketh that saying of Iohn, Thereby we knowe that we are his children, by the spirite which hee hath giuen vs. And least fleshe shoulde glorie, that it did at the least aunswere to him when hee called and of his owne will offered himselfe, hee affirmeth that it hath no eares to heare, no eyes to see, but which hee hath made: and that hee maketh keth them, not according to euery mans thankfulness, but according to his owne election. Of which thing you haue a notable example in Luke, where both Iewes and Gentiles in comon together heard the preaching of Paul and Barnabas. Whereas they were at that time al taught with one selfe same word, it is sayde that they beleued which were ordained to euerlasting life. With what face may we deny that the calling is free, in which euen to the very last part election reigneth alone? A.C. 13. 14.

3 But here wee must beware of two errors: because many make man a worker together with God, that he by his consent may make the election to be of force: so by their opinion, the will of man is about the counsell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is onely giuen vs that we may beleue, and not rather faith it selfe. Other some, although they do not so weaken the grace of the holy Ghost: yet being led by I wor not what reason, hang election vpon faith as though it were doubtfull, yea and vneffectuall vntill it be confirmed by faith. It is in deede certaine y it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we haue already shewed y the secret counsell of God beginneth to shine out, which was before hidden: so that by this word you vnderstand nothing else, than that it is approued which was vnknown, & is as it were sealed with a seale. But it is falsely sayd, that election is then and not till then effectual, when we haue embraced y Gospell, and y therof it taketh liuely strength. We must in deede from thence fetch the certaintie of it: Because if wee attempt to reache vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomlesse depth will swallowe vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, wee must climbe vp hier, least the effect should drowne the cause. For what greater absurdity or shamefull vniustice is there, than that when the Scripture teacheth that wee are enlightened as God hath chosen vs, our eyes should be so daseled with this light, that they should refuse to looke vpon election? Yet in the meane time I deny not, that to the ende we may be certaine of our saluation, we must beginne at the word, and that our affiance ought therewith to be cotented, that we may call vpon God by the name of Father. For some quite contrary to right order, y they may be certified of the counsell of God (which is neere vnto vs, in our mouth and in our heart) do couet to flie about the cloudes. Therefore that rashnesse is to be restrained with sobrietie of faith, that it may suffice vs that God in his outward worde is a witnessse of his hidden grace: to that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drinke, doe not hinder but that the springhead may haue his due honour. Deut. 30. 14

4 Therefore as they do wrongfully, which hang the strength of election vpon the faith of the gospel, by which faith we feele that election pertaineth to vs: so we shall keepe the best order, if in seeking y certaintie of our election, we sticke fast in these latter signes, which are sure witnessings of it. Satan doth with no tentation either more greuously, or more dangerously astonish the faithfull, than when disquieting them with doubt of their election, hee doeth also moue them with a peruerse desire to seeke it out of the way. I call it seeking out of the way, when a wretched man enterpriseth to breake into the hidden secretes of the wisdom of God, and to pearce euen to the highest eternity to vnderstande what is determined of himselfe at the iudgement seate.

seate of God . For then he throweth himselfe headlong to be swallowed vp into the depth of the vnmeasurable deuouring pit: then he wrappeth himself with innumerable snares and such as hee can not winde out of: then hee ouerwhelmeth himselfe with the bottomlesse depth of blinde darkenesse. For so is it rightfull that the foolishnesse of the witte of man be punished with so horrible raine, when he attempteth of his owne force to rise vp to the height of the wisdom of God . And so much more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which we are commonly all more bent. For there is mozt rarely any man to be founde, whose mind is not somtime striken with this thought. Whence hast thou saluation, but of the election of G O D ? And of Election what reuelation hast thou ? which thought, if it haue once taken place in any man, either perpetually vexeth the miserable man with terrible torments, or vtterly dismayeth him . Truly I would haue no surer argument than this experience to prooue, howe wrongfully such men imagine of predestination. For the minde can be infected with no errour more pestilent, than that which plucketh downe and thrusteth the conscience from her peace and quietnesse towarde God . Therefore if we feare shipwracke , wee must diligently beware of this rocke, which is neuer striken vpon without destruction . And though the disputing of predestination be esteemed like a dangerous sea, yet in passing through it there is founde a safe and quiet yea and pleasant sayling, vnlesse a man doe wilfully couet to be in daunger . For as they doe drowne themselues in the deadly bottomlesse depth , which to bee certified of their election doe enquire of the secret Counsell of God without his worde : so they which doe rightly and orderly search it in such sorte as it is contained in the worde , receiue thereof a singular fruite of comforte. Let this therefore be our way to search it, that wee beginne at the calling of God, and ende in the same . Howbeit this withstandeth not, but that the faithfull may thinke that the benefites which they daily receiue at the hand of G O D, doe discende from that secrete adoption : as they say in Esaye, Thou hast done maruels, thy thoughtes are olde, true, and faithfull: forasmuch as by that adoptio as by a token, the Lords will is to confirme so much as is lawfull to be knowen of his counsell . But least any man shoulde thinke this a weake testimonie, let vs consider howe much both clearenesse and certainty it bringeth vs . Of which thing Bernarde speaketh fitly . For after that he had spoken of the reprobate, he sayth: The purpose of God standeth, the sentence of peace standeth vpon thē that feare him, both couering their euils, and rewarding their good thinges : so as to them after a maruelous manner not onely good thinges, but also euil doe worke tog:ther vnto good. Who shall accuse the elect of God ? It sufficeth me to all righteousnesse , to haue him alone mercifull, to whom alone I haue sinned. Al y he hath decreed not to impute to mee, is so as if it neuer had bin . And a litle after: O place of true rest, and to which not vnworthily I may giue the name of a bedchamber, in which G O D is scene not as troubled with wrath , nor as withholden with care: but his will is prooued in him good , and well pleasing, and perfect . This sight doth not make afraide, but calmeth : doth not stirre vp vnquiet curiosnesse, but appeaseth it : doth not weary the senses, but quieteth them : Here is quiet truly taken. God being appeased, appeaseth all things;

and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet.

5 First if wee seeke a fatherly kindnesse and fauorable minde of God, we must turne our eyes to Christ, in whome alone the soule of the father resteth. If we seeke saluation, life, and the immorralitie of the heauenly kingdom, we must the also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both fountayne of life, and author of saluation, and heire of the kingdome of Heauen. Nowe whereto serueth election, but that being adopted of the heauenly father into the degree of children, we may by his fauour obteyne saluation & immortalitie? Howsoever in seeking thou toss it and shake it, yet thou shalt finde y^e vttermost marke of it extended no further. Therefore whom God hath taken to his children, it is not said that he hath chosen them in themselves, but in his Christ: because he could not loue them but in him, nor giue them the honour of the inheritance of his kingdome, vnlesse they had first bene made partakers of him. If we be chosen in him, we shal not finde in our selues the certaintie of our election: no, nor yet in God the father, if we imagine him naked without the sonne. Christ therefore is the mirror, in whome we both must, and without deceite may behold our election. For sith it is he into whose body the Father hath appointed to graffe all them whom from eternitie hee hath willed to bee his, that hee may take for his children so many as hee reknowledgeth among his members: we haue a witnesse plaine and sure inough, that wee are written in the booke of life, if wee communicate with Christ. And that sure communion of himselfe hee gaue vs, when by the preaching of the Gospell hee testified that hee was giuen to vs of the father, that hee with all his good things shoulde bee ours. We are said to put on him, and to grow together into him, that we may liue: because he liueth. So oft is this doctrine repeated, The Father spared not his onely begotten sonne, that whosoever beleueeth in him, may not perishe. But hee that beleueeth in him, is saide to haue passed from death into life. In which sense he calleth himselfe the breade of life, which whoso eateth, he shal not die for euer. He (I say) hath bene a witnesse to vs, that they shal be receiued of the heauenly father in place of his children, of whom hee hath bene receiued by faith. If wee couete any more than to bee accompted among the children and heires of God, then we may climbe aboute Christ. If this be our vttermost marke: howe much be we mad in seeking without him that which we haue already obteyned in him, and which may bee found in him alone? Moreouer sith hee is the eternall wisdome, the vchangeable trueth, and fast settled counsell of the father: it is not to be feared least that which he declareth to vs in his worde, shoulde vary any thing be it neuer so litle from that will of the Father which wee seeke: but rather he faithfully openeth it vnto vs, such as it was from the beginning, & euer shal be. The practise of this doctrine ought also to be in vre in prayers. For though the faith of election doeth encourage vs to call vpon God: yet when we make our prayers, it were vnorderly done to thrust it into the presence of God, or to cōuenant with this condition. Lord if I be elected, heare mee: for as much as hee willet vs to be content with his promises, and no where else to seeke whether he wil be intreatable to vs or no. This wisdom shal deliuer vs fro many snares, if we can skill to applie that to a right vse which hath bene

rightly written: but let vs not vndiscretly draw hither and thither that which ought to haue bene restrained.

6 There is also for stablishing of our affiance an other stay of election, which we haue saide to be ioyned with our calling. For, whome Christe taketh being inlightened with the knowledge of his name into the bosome of his Church, them he is saide to receiue into the faith and protection. And whome soeuer he receiueth, they are saide to bee committed to him of the father & deliuered to his trust, that they may be kept into eternall life. What meane wee? Christ crieth out with a loude voice, that so many as the Father willethe to bee saued, he hath deliuered them into his protection. Therefore if we list to knowe whether God hath care of onr safetic, let vs seeke whether he hath committed vs to Christ, whome he hath made the onely Saviour of all his. Nowe if we doubt whether we be receiued of Christ into his Faith and keeping, he preuenteth our doubting, when he voluntarily offereth him selfe to be our sheepearde, and pronounceth that wee shall bee in the number of his sheepe if we heare his voyce. Let vs therefore embrace Christ, being liberally set open for vs, and comming to meete vs: hee shall number vs in his flocke, and shall keepe vs inclosed within his folde. But there entreteth into vs a carefulnesse of our state to come. For as Paul teacheth that they are called, which were before chosen: so Christ sheweth that many are called, but fewe are chosen. Yea and also Paul himselfe in an other place dishorteth vs from carefulnesse: Let him that standeth (saith he) looke that he fall not. Againe, Art thou graffed into the people of God? Be not proude, but feare: for God is able to cut thee of againe that he may graffe other. Finally we are sufficiently taught by experience it selfe, that calling and faith are of small value, vnlesse there be adioyned continuance which happeneth not all men. But Christ hath deliuered vs from this care: for verily these promises haue respect to the time to come. All that my father giueth me, shal come to me: and him that shal come to me, I wil not cast him out of dores. Againe, this is the will of him that sent me, the Father, that I loose nothing of all thinges that hee hath giuen mee, but may raise them vp againe in the last day. Agayne, My sheepe heare my voice, and they followe me: I knowe them, and I giue them eternall life, and they shall not perishe for euer, neither shall any man take them out of my hand. The father which gaue them to me, is greater then al: & no man can take the out of y hand of my father. Nowe when he pronounceth, euery tree which my Father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp by the root: he signifieth on the contrarie side, that they can neuer be plucked from saluation, which haue roote in God. Wherewith agreeth that saying of Iohn, If they had bene of vs, they had not at al gone out from vs. Herevpon also commeth that noble glorying of Paul against life and death, present thinges and thinges to come: which glorying muste needes be grounded vpon the gifte of continuance. Neither is it any doubt that he directeth this saying to all the faithfull. In an other place the same Paul saith. He that hath begonne in you a good worke, shall end it euen vntill the day of Christ. As also Dauid, when his faith fainted, leaned vpon this stay: Thou shalt not forsake the worke of thy handes. And nowe neyther is this doubtfull, that Christ when he prayeth for all the faithfull, asketh

the same thing for them which he asketh for Peter, y^e their faith may neuer faint. Whereby we gather, that they are out of danger of falling away, because the sonne of God, asking stedfast continuance for their godlinesse, suffered no deniall. What would Christ haue vs to learne hereby, but that we should trust that we shal perpetually be safe, because we are once made his? Luke. 22. 32.

7 But it daily happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, do againe reuolt from him & fall. Yea & in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were giuen him of the Father, yet he excepteth the sonne of perdition. That is true in deede: but this is also as certaine, that such did neuer cleaue to Christ with y^e affiance of heart with which I say that the assurednesse of our election is stablished. They went out from vs (saith Iohn) but they were not of vs. For if they had been of vs, they had stil taried with vs. Neither do I denie that they haue like signes of calling as the elect haue: but I do not graunt that they haue that sure stablishment of election which I bid the faithfull to fetch out of the worde of y^e Gospel. Wherefore let not such examples moue vs but that wee quietly rest vpon the promise of the Lord, where he pronounceth, that al they are giuen to him of the Father, which receiue him with true faith, of whome sith he is their keeper & Pastor, none shal perish. Of Iudas wee shall speake hereafter. Paul doth not counsel Christians from assurednes altogether, but from carelesse and loose assurednesse of the flesh, which draweth with it, pride, presumption, & disdain of other, and quenchem humilitie & the reuerence of God, and bringeth forgetfulnesse of grace receiued. For he speaketh to the Gentiles, whome he teacheth, that they ought not proudly & vngently to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes being disherited, they were set in their stead. Feare also he requireth not wherwith they should be dismaied & stagger, but which framing vs to the humbler receiuing of the grace of God, should abate nothing of the affiance thereof, as wee haue saide in another place. Beside that, he doth not there speake to euery man particularly, but to the sectes themselues generally. For when the Church was deuided into two parts, & enuie bred dissension, Paul putteth the Gentiles in mind y^e their being supplied into the place of the peculiar & holy people, ought to bee to them a cause of feare & modestie. And among them there were many puffed vp with glorie, whose vaine boasting it was profitable to beat downe. But we haue in another place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come euen beyond death, and that nothing is more contrary to the nature of it, than to dout what shal become of vs. Ioh. 16. 12.

8 That saying of Christ, of many being called but fewe chosen, is very ill taken after that maner. There shalbe nothing doubtful if we hold fast that which ought to be cleare by the things aboue spoken, that there are two sortes of calling. For there is an vniuersall calling whereby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altogether to him, euen them also to whom he setteth it forth vnto the fauor of death, & vnto matter of more grieuous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling which for the most part he vouchsafeth to giue only to the faithfull, when by the inward enlightening of his spirit he maketh y^e the word preached is settled in their hearts. Yet sometime he maketh them also partakers of it whome he enlighteneth

but for a time, & afterward by the deseruing of their vnthankfulnesse forsaketh them, and striketh them with greater blindnesse. Now when the Lorde saw the Gospel to be published farre and wide, and to be despised of many, but to be had in due price of fewe: he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a king, which preparing a solemne feast sendeth his messengers round about to bid a great multitude to be his gastes, and yet can get but a fewe, because euery one alleageth lettes for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled vpon their refusall, to cal out of the hie wayes euery one that he meeteth. Hitherto euery man seeth that the parable must be vnderstand of the outward calling. He addeth afterward that God doeth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheere his gastes. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, hee will not suffer him with his vncleanlinesse to dishonor the solemnitic of the feast. This parte of the parable, I graunt, is to be vnderstande of them which enter into the Church by the profession of faith, but are not clothed with the sanctification of Christ. Such dishonors and as it were botches of his Church, the Lord will not suffer for euer: but, as their filthinesse deserueth he wil cast them out. Therefore fewe are chosen out of a great number of them that are called, but yet not with that calling by which wee say that the faithful ought to iudge their election. For, that generall calling is also common to the wicked: but this speciall calling bringeth with it the spirite of regeneration, which is the earnest and seale of the inheritance to come, wherewith our heartes are sealed vp against the day of the Lorde. In a summe sith hypocrites boast of godlinesse as well as the true worshippers of God, Christ pronounceth that at length they shalbe cast out of the place which they wrongfully possesse: as it is said in the Psalme, Lorde, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? The innocent in handes, and the man of a pure heart. Againe, in another place. This is the generation of them that seeke God, of them that seeke the face of the God of Iacob. And so doth the Spirit exhort the faithful to sufferance, that they take it not grieuously that the Israelites be mingled with them in the Church: for at length their visor shalbee plucked from them and they shalbe cast out without shame.

Ephe. 1. 13.

Psal. 22. 2.

8 The same reason is of the exception euen now alleaged, where Christ saith y none perished but the sonne of perdition. It is in deede an vnproper speeche, but yet not darke. For he was not accounted among the slichepe of Christ, for that he was one in deede, but because he kept the place of one. And where in another place the Lord affirmeth that he was chosen with the Apostles, that is spoken only in respect of the ministerie. Twelue (saith hee) haue I chosen, and one of them is a Deuil: that is, he had chosen him to the office of an Apostle. But when he speaketh of choosing to saluation, he denieth him farre away from the number of the chosen, saying: I speake not of all: I knowe whome I haue chosen. If a man do in both places confound the worde of Choosing, he shall miserably entangle himselfe: if hee make difference, nothing is more plaine. Therefore Gregorie teacheth very ill & pestilently when he saith that wee knowe onely our calling, but are vncertaine of our election: whereby hee moueth all men to feare and trembling: vsing also this reason, but because we knowe what we be to day, but what wee shalbe we know not. But in that place he sufficiently declareth, how he stūbled at this blocke . For, because he hanged election vpon the merites of workes, he had matter enough: and more to discourage the mindes of men:

but he could not strengthen them, which did not remoue them from themselues to the affiance of the goodnesse of God . Hereof the faithfull haue some tast of that which we haue determined at the beginning that predestination if it be rightly thought vpon, bringeth not a shaking of faith, but rather the best strengthening of it. And yet I deny not, y^e the holy Ghost framed his talkes to the smal measure of our sense . As when he sayth, In the secret of my people they shal not be, and in the roule of my seruants they shal not be written. As though God did beginne to write in the booke of life, them whom he rekeneth in the number of his: whereas yet we know, euen by the witnes of Christ, that the names of the childre of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in these words is only expressed the casting away of them which seemed the chiefe among the elect: as it is sayde in the Psalme.
Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, and let them not be written with the righteous.

time, by calling gathered together into the flocke of Christ, but as it pleaseth God to distribute his grace to them . But ere they be gathered together to that chiefe shepheard, they are scattered abroad and stray in the common deserte, and differ nothing from other, sauing that they be defended by the singular mercie of God, from falling into the extreme headlong downefall of death . Therefore if you looke vpon them selues, you shall see the of-spring of Adam, which sauoreth of the common corruption of the whole masse. That they be not carried into extreme & despeired vngodlines, this commeth not to passe by any goodnesse naturally planted in them, but because the eye of God watcheth, and his hande is stretched out to their saluation. For they that dreame that from their very natiuitie there is planted in their heartes I wote not what seede of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway enclined to godlinesse and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to proue it by the authoritie of Scripture, and also are confuted by experience it selfe. They do in deede bring forth a fewe examples to proue that the elect euen before their enlightning, were not vterly strangers from religion: that Paul in his being a Pharisee liued vnreprouable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and such other . Of Paul, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, wee say that they are deceiued . For it appeareth that he was then already enlightned and regenerate, so that hee wanted nothing but the cleere reuiciling of the Gospel . But what will they wring out by these few examples? that al the elect are alway endued with the spirit of goodlinesse? No more than if a man by shewing the vprightnesse of Aristides, Socrates, Zenocrates, Scipio, Curius, Camillius, and other, should thereof gather that all they that are left in blindness of idolatrie, were desirous followers of holinesse and honestie . Yea and the Scripture in more places than one, openly crieth out against them . For, the state which Paul describeth of the Ephesians before their regeneration, sheweth not one graine of this seede . Ye were (sayth he) dead with defaultes and sinnes, in which ye walked according to the time of this world, according to the prince of the aire, which nowe worketh in the obstinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuerfante in the lustes of our fleshe, doing those thinges that liked our flesh and minde. And we were by nature the children of wrath, as other also were. Againe, Remember that ye were sometime without hope, and lacked God in the worlde. Againe, Ye were sometime darknesse: but now ye are light in the Lorde: walke as the children of light. But paraduenture they will haue these thinges to be referred to the ignorance of the true God, wherewith they denie not that the elect are holden before that they be called. Albeit this were a shamelesse cauilling, sith he therof concludeth, that they ought nowe no more either to lie or to steale: yet what will they answere to other places? as is that place to the Corinthians, where whē he had pronounced that neither whoremongers, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor weakelings, nor buggers, nor theeues, nor couetous men, shalbe heires of the kingdome of God: he by and by addeth that they were wrapped in the same hainous offences before that they knewe Christ: but nowe that they are both washed by his bloud & made free by his Spirit. Againe an other place to the Romaines. As ye haue giuen your members bonde to vncleanesse, and to iniquitie vnto iniquitie, nowe yelde them in bondage to righteousness. For what fruite had you of these thinges, in which yee are nowe worthily ashamed, &c?

11 What maner of seede of election, I pray you, did then budde in them, which being manifoldly defiled in all their life, as it were with desperate wickednes, wallowed in the most abhominable and accursed sinne of all? If hee would haue spoken after their opinion, hee should haue shewed howe much they were bond to the bountifullnesse of God, by which they had beene preferred from sliding into so great filthinesse. So Peter also should haue exhorted his to thankfulnessse for the perpetuall seede of election. But he contrarywise putteth them in minde that the time past sufficed to make an ende of the lustes of the Gentiles. What if we come to examples? what budde of righteousness was there in Rahab the harlot, before faith? in Manasse, when Hierusalem was dipped and in a manner drowned in the bloude of the Prophets? in the Theefe, which among his last gaspings began to thinke of repentance? Away therefore with these argumentes, which silly curious men do rashly deuise to themselues without the Scripture. But let that abide certaine with vs, which the Scripture hath, that al haue strayed like lost sheepe, euery one hath swarued into his owne way, that is, perdition. Out of this gulfe of perdition, whome the Lord hath determined once to plucke forth, them he differreth til his fit time: onely he preferueth them, that they fall not vnto vnardonable blasphemy.

12 As the Lorde by the effectualnesse of his calling towards the electe, maketh perfect the saluation, where vnto hee hadde by eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his iudgementes against the reprobate, whereby he executeth his counsell of them. Whom therefore he hath created vnto the shame of life, and destruction of death, that they should beē instruments of his wrath, and examples of his seueritie: from them, that they may come to their ende, sometime he taketh away the power to heare his worde,

and sometime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amaseth them. Of the first maner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs choose out one more cleare & notable than all the rest. There passed away about foure thousand yeares afore Christ, in which he hid from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man answereth that he therefore made them not to enjoy so great a benefit because he iudged them vnworthie, they which come after shall not be proued any more worthie. Of which thing, beside the experience, Malachie is a substantiall witness, which Mal. 4. 1. reprobuing infidelitie mingled with grosse blasphemies, yet declareth y^e there shall come a redeemer. Why therefore is he rather giuen to these than to those? He shall trouble himselfe in vaine, that shall here search for a cause hier than the secret and vnsearchable counsell of God. Neither is it to be feared least any scholer of Porphyrie, should freely gnawe at the righteousness of God while wee aunswere nothing in defence of it. For when wee say that none perish vnderferuing, & that it is of the free bountifullnesse of God that some be deliuered, there is largely enough said for the setting forth of his glorie, so that it needeth nor our shifting. The soueraigne iudge therefore maketh away for his predestination, when whome he hath once reiected, them being deprivied of the communicating of his light he leaueth in blindness. Of the other maner there are both daily examples, and also many contained in the Scripture. One selfesame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twentie receiue it with readie obedience of faith: the rest doe either set naught by it, or scorne it, or hisse it out, or abhorre it. If any man answereth that this diuersitie proceedeth of their malice and peruersnesse, hee shall not yet satisfie vs: because the others wit also shoulde bee possessed wth the same malice, vnlesse God did amende it with his goodnesse. Therefore we shall stil be encombred, vnlesse wee call to minde that which Paul saith, 1. Cor. 4. 7. Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he signifieth that some excell other some, nor by their owne vertue, but by the only grace of God.

13 Why therefore doth he in granting grace to those passe ouer these? Of those Luke sheweth a cause, Because they are ordeined to life. Of these, what shall we thinke, but because they are the vessels of wrath vnto dishonor? Wherefore let it not grieue vs to say with Augustine. God (sayeth hee) might turne the will of the euil into good, because he is almightie. He might in deede. Why therefore doeth he it not? because he would not. Why hee would not, is in himselfe. For we ought to be no more wise than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to shift with Chrysostome, and say that he draweth him that is willing and reacheth his hand, that the difference may not seeme to stand in the iudgement of God, but in the onely will of men. Truly it so standeth not in the proper motion of man, that euen the godly and they that feare God haue neede of a singular instruction of the Spirit. Lidia the purple seller feared God, & yet it behoued that her heart shoulde be opened, that shee might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profit in it. Ho. de con. uers. Paul. A Q. 16. 14. This is not spoken of one woman alone, but that wee should knowe that the profiting of euery man in godlinesse is the secreete worke of the Spirit. This verily cannot bee brought in question, that the Lorde sendeth his worde to many, whose blindness hee will haue to be more enforced. For, to what what purpose doth he bid so many commaundementes to be carried to Pharao? was it because he hoped that with often repeted messages he would be appeased? No, but before he began, he foreknewe and foretolde the ende.

Exod. 21.
12. 2.

Go (said hee to Moses) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that he obey not. So when he stirreth vp Ezechiel, hee warneth him afore hande that he sendeth him to a rebellious and stubborne people: to the ende that he shoulde not be afrayde if he perceiue himselfe to sing to deaf men. So he foretelleth to Ieremie, that his doctrine should become a fire, to destroy and wast the people like stubble. But the prophecie of Esaie yet more enforceth it. For he is thus sent of the Lorde: Go and saye to the children of israell: With hearing heare ye, and vnderstand not: With seeing see ye, and knowe nor. Make obstinate the heart of this people, and make heauie their eares, and ouerplaister their eyes: least peradventure they may see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with their heart, that being turned they may be healed. Behold he directeth his voice to them, but that they may waxe more deaf, he lighteth a light, but that they may be made more blinde: he sheweth forth doctrine, but that they may be made more dull: he layeth to them a remedie, but not that they may be healed. And Iohn alleaging this prophecie, affirmeth that the Iewes could not beleue the doctrine of Christ, because this curse of God lay vpon them. Neither can this also be in controuersie, that who God wil not haue to be enlighten'd, to them he deliuered his doctrine wrapped vp in darke speeches, that they may nothing profite thereby but to be thrust into greater dulnesse. Christ also testifieth, that he doth therefore expound onely to the Apostles the parables in which he had spoken to y multitude, because to them it was giuen to knowe the mysteries of the kingdom of God, but to the common people not so. What meaneth the Lorde (wilt thou say) in teaching them, of whome he prouideth that he may not be vnderstanded? Consider whence is the fault, and thou wilt ceasse to ask. For in y word how great darknes soeuer there be, yet there is alway light enough to conuince the conscience of the wicked.

Matt. 13. 11.

14 Now remaineth for vs to see, why the Lorde doeth that which it is plaine that he doth. If it be answered that it is so don because men haue so deserued by their vngodlinesse, wickednesse, & vnthankfulnes: the same shal in deede be well and truly saide: but because there appeareth not yet the reason of this diuersitie, why when some are bowed to obedience, others som continue hardened, in searching it wee must needes go to that which Paul hath nored out of Moses, namely that God hath raised them vp from the beginning, that he might shewe his name in the whole earth. Whereas therefore the reprobate do not obey the worde of God opened vnto them, that shalbe well imputed to the malice and peruersnesse of their heart, so that this be therewithall added, that they are therefore giuen into this peruersnesse, because by the righteous but yet vnsearchable iudgement of GOD they are raised vp to set forth his glorie with their damnation. Likewise whē

Rom. 9. 17.

3. Sam. 2. 25.

it is said of the sonnes of Hely, that they harkened not to holosome warnings, because the Lord willed to kill them: it is not denied that the stubbornesse proceeded of their owne naughtinesse: but it is therewithall touched why they

they were left in stubbornesse, when the Lord might haue softened their heartes, namely because his vnchangeable decree hadde once appointed them to destruction. To the same purpose serueth that saying of Iohn, When he had done so great signes, no man beleeued in him: that the word of Esay might be fulfilled, Lorde, who hath beleued our saying? For though he do not excuse the stiffnecked from blame, yet he is content with that reason, that the grace of God is vnfaurie to men, till the holy Ghost bring tast. And Christ alleaging the prophetic of Esay, They shall all be taught of God, tendeth to no other ende but to prooue that the Iewes are reprobate and strangers from the Church, because they are vnapt to learne: and he bringeth no other cause thereof, but for that the promise of God doth not pertain to them. Which thing this saying of Paul confirmeth, that Christ which to the Iewes is an offence, and to the Gentiles foolishnesse, is to the called the strength and wisdom of God. For when hee hath tolde what commonly happeneth so oft as the Gospell is preached, namely y^e some it maketh more obstinate, and of some it is dispised, he sayth that it is had in price of them onely which are called. Hee had in deede a litle before named them beleeuers, but hee meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before faith, but rather hee addeth this seconde saying by way of Correction, that they which had embraced the Gospell shoulde giue the praise of their faith to the calling of God. As also a litle after he teacheth that they are chosen of God. When the vngodly heare these thinges, they erie out that God with inordinate power abuseth his poore creatures for a sport to his crueltie. But we which knowe that all men are so many wayes endangered to the iudgement seate of God, that beeing asked of a thousande thinges they can not satisfie in one, doe confesse that the reprobate suffer nothing which agreeth not with the most iust iudgement of God. Whereas we doe not clearly attaine the reason thereof, let vs not be discontent to be ignorant of somewhat, where the wisdom of God listeth vp it selfe into so great heighth.

15 But forasmuch as there are a fewe places of scripture wont to be objected, in which God seemeth to denie that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked doe perish, but by this that, he crying out against it, they wilfully bring death vpon themselues: let vs briefly declaring these places, shew that they make nothing against the sentence aboue set. There is brought foorth a place of Ezechiell, that God will not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may be turned and liue. If they will extend this to all mankind: why doth he not moue many to repentance, whose mindes are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his daily allurementes waxe harder and harder? With the Sodomites (as Christ witnesseth) the preaching of the Gospell and miracles would haue brought foorth more fruite than in Iuric. How commeth it to passe therefore, if God will all to be saued, that hee openeth not the gate of repentance to those miserable men that would haue beene more ready to receiue grace? Hereby we see that the place is violently wrested, if the will of GOD, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be sette against his eternall counsel, whereby he hath seuered the elect from the reprobate. Nowe if we seeke for the true naturall meaning of the Prophete: his purpose is to bring hope of pardon to the penitent. And this is the sum, that it is not to be doubted but that God is ready to forgiue so soone as the sinner turneth. Therefore he willeth not his death, in so much as hee willeth his repentance. But experience teacheth that he so willeth them to repent who he generally calleth to him, that yet he to toucheth not all their hearts. Yet is it therefore to be sayde that hee dealeth deceitfully, because although the outwarde voyce doe but make them vnexcusable which heare and doe not obey it, yet it is truly accounted the testimonie of the grace of God, by which testimonie he reconcileth men to himselfe. Therefore let vs holde this for the meaning of the Prophete, that the death of a sinner pleaseth not God: that the godly may haue affiaunce, that so soone as they shalbe touched with repentance, there is pardon ready for them with GOD: and the wicked may feele that their fault is doubled, because they answere not to so great mercifull kindenesse and gentlenesse of God. The mercy of God therefore will alway meete repentance, but to whom repentance is giuen, both all the Prophetes, and Apostles, and Ezechiell himselfe doe plainly teach. Secondly there is alleged a place of Paul, where he sayth that God willeth all men to be sau'd, which although it haue a diuerse meaning from the other, yet in some thing they agree together. I aunswere, first that by the rest of the text it is made plaine howe he willeth. For Paul coupleth together, that he willeth them to be sau'd, and to come to the acknowledging of the truth. If they will haue this to be determined by the eternall counsell of GOD that they receiue the doctrine of saluation, what meaneth that saying of Moses, What nation is so noble, that God commeth neare to it as hee doth to thee? Howe came it to passe that GOD restrained from many peoples the light of the Gospell, which other enjoyed? Howe came it to passe that the pure knowledge of godlinesse neuer came to some, and some scarcely tasted so much as any darke principles of it? Hereof it shall nowe bee easie to gather, whereto Paul tendeth. He hadde commaunded Timothee to make solemne prayers in the Church for kinges and princes. But when it seemeth somewhat an absurditie that prayers should be made to GOD for a kinde of men in a manner despaired (because they were not onely strangers from the body of Christe, but also endeoured with all their forces to oppresse his kingdome) he added, that the same is acceptable to GOD which willeth all men to be sau'd. Whereby verily hee signifieth nothing else but that he hath stopped vp the way vnto saluation to no degree of men: but rather that he hath so poured out his mercie that he willeth no man to be voyde of it. The other sentences doe not declare what God hath by his secrete iudgement determined of all men: but doe shewe that there is pardon ready for all sinners which doe onely turne themselues to require it. For if they more stiffely stande vpon this that it is sayde that he wil haue mercie vpon all, I will on the contrarie side aunswere them with that which is written in another place, That our God is in heauen where hee doeth whatsoeuer he will. This worde therefore must so be expounded that it may agree with the other, I will haue mercie vpon whome I will haue mercy, and I will shewe mercie to whom I will shew mercie. He that chooseth out them whome he will haue mercie on, doth not giue it to all. But sith it clearly ap-peareth that in that place is spoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we will make no longer disputing about it. Howbeit it is also to be noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alway & euery where and in all men: but leaueth it to him at his libertie at length to make kinges and magistrates partakers of the heauenly doctrine, although by reason of their blindenesse they doe nowe rage against it. They seeme to presse vs more strongly with objecting the place of Peter, that God willeth none to perishe, but receiue all to repentance. But the vndoing of his knot doth by and by offer it selfe in the seconde worde, because the will to receiue can not be vnderstanded to be any other than that which is euery where taught. Truely the turning is in the hande of God: whether he will turne all or no, let himselfe be asked, when he promisseth that he will giue to a certaine fewe men a fleshly hearte, leauing to other some a stony heart. It is true in deede, that vnlesse he were ready to receiue them which call vpon his mercy, this saying should be false. Turne to me, & I will turne to you. But I say that none of all mortall men doth come to God but he \dot{y} is preuented of God. And if repentance were in the wil of man, Paul would not say, If peraduenture he giue the repentance. Yea vnlesse the same God which with worde exhorteth all men to repentance, did with secret mouing of his spirit bring the chosen to it: Ieremie would not say, Turne me, Lord, and I shalbe turned: for when thou hast turned me, I haue repented.

Eze. 36. 26.

Iere. 31. 18.

16 But (thou wilt say) if it be so, there shalbe small truth in the promises of the Gospell, which when they testifie of the will of GOD, affirme that he willeth that which is against his inuolable decree. Not so. For howsoeuer the promises of saluation be vniuersal, yet they nothing disagree with the predestination of the reprobate, so that wee direct our mindes to the effect of them. We knowe that then and not till then the promises are effectuell to vs, when wee receiue them by faith, on the other side when faith is made voyde, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these thinges disagree together: that it is sayde that God hath from eternitie ordeined whome he will embrace with loue, and vpon whome he will exercise wrath: and that he promisseth saluation to all without difference. Truely I say that they agree verie well. For in so promising he meaneth nothing else than that his mercie is set open for all which doe couet and craue it: which thing none doe but they whome he hath enlightned. And them he enlightneth, whom he hath predestinate to saluation. They (I say) haue the truth of the promises sure and vnshaken, so as it can not be sayde that there is any disagreement betweene the eternall election of God, and the testimonie of his grace which he offereth to the faithful. But why nameth he all verily that the consciences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they vnderstande that there is no difference of sinners, so that faith be present: and that the wicked may not cauill for their excuse, that they want a sanctuary wherunto they may withdraw themselues from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfulnes they refuse it being offred them. Therefore when the mercy of God is by the Gospell offred to both sorts, it is faith, that is to say the enlightning of God, which maketh difference between the godly and vngodly, so as the one sort seeleth the

effectualnesse of the Gospel, and the other sort obtaine no fruite thereof. The enlightning it selfe also hath the eternal election of God for the rule thereof.

Mat. 23. 37. The complaint of Christ, which they allege, Ierusalem, Ierusalem, howe oft haue I willed to gather together thy chickens, but thou wouldest not? maketh nothing for them. I graunt that Christ there speeketh not onely in the person of man, but also reprocheth them that in all ages they haue refused his grace. But we must define that will of God which is entreated of. For neither is it vnknown, how diligently God endeoured to keepe stil that people, and with how great stiffenesse they euen from the first to the last being giuen to their wandering desires refused to be gathered together: but it followeth not thereof that the counsell of God was made voyde by the malice of men. They aunswere and say that nothing lesse agreeth with the nature of GOD than to haue a double will in him. Which I graunt to them, so that they fitly expounde it. But why doe they not consider so many testimonies, where God putting vpon him the affectiones of man descendeth beneath his owne maiesty? He saith that he hath with stretched out armes called the rebellious people, that he hath early and late trauailed to bring them backe to him. If they will apply all these thinges to God, and not consider the figure, there shall arise many superfluous contentions, which this one solution bringeth to agreement, that the propertie of man is figuratiuely applied to GOD. Howe be it the solution which wec haue brought in an other place largely sufficeth, that although the will of God be, as to our sense manifolde: yet he doth not in himselfe diuersly wil this and that, but according to his wisdom, which is diuersly manifolde (as Paul calleth it) he amaseth our senses, till it shall be giuen vs to knowe that he maruelously will th that which now seemeth to be against his will. They also mocke with cauillations, that sith God is the father of all, it is vnrighteous that he should disherit any that hath not before with his own fault deserued this punishment. As though the liberalitie of God stretcheth not euen to hogges and dogges. But if they speake onely of mankind, let them answere why God bounde himselfe to one people, to be the father thereof: and why also out of the same people he picked a small number as it were a floure. But their owne lust of euill speaking hindereth these railers that they consider not that God so bringeth forth his sunne to shine vpon the good and euill, that the inheritaunce is layde vp for a fewe, to whome it shall one day be sayde, Come ye blessed of my Father, possesse the kingdome, &c. They obiect also that God hateth none of these thinges that he hath made. Which although I graunt them, yet this remaineth safe which I teach, that the reprobate are hatefull to God, and that verie rightfully, because they being destitute of his Spirite can bring forth nothing but cause of curse. They say further, that there is no difference of the Iewe and the Gentile, and therefore that the grace of God is without difference sette before all men: namely if they graunt (as Paul determineth) that GOD calleth as well out of the Iewes as out of the Gentiles, according to his good pleasure, so that he is bound to no man. After this maner also is that wiped away which they obiect in an other place, that God hath enclosed all thinges vnder sinne, that he may haue mercie vpon all: namely because hee will that the saluation of all them that are saued be ascribed to his mercie, although fect felicitie: yet least it should be greuous vnto vs to be exercised vnder this hard warfare, as though we had no fruire of the victorie which Christ hath gotten, we must hold fast that which is in an other place taught of the nature of hope. For, because wee hope for those thinges which appeare not, and (as it is saide in an other place) faith is a demonstration of thinges inuisible:

 so long as we are inclosed in the prison of the flesh, wee are wayfaring from the glorie of the great God, and of our Sauour Iesus Christ. Here we neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied and either turne backe our course or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoeuer hath beene hitherto set our concerning our saluation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that wee may loue Christ whome we haue not seene, and beleeuing in him may re-thing is more harde to our dulnesse than through innumerable steppes to climbe vp aboute them with endeuouring forwarde to the price of our hea-uenly calling: To the great heape of miseries wherewith wee bee almost ouerwhelmed, are added the mockinges of vngodlie men, wherewith our simplicitie is rayled at, when voluntarilie forsaking the allurements of present good thinges, wee seene to followe the blessednesse hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing shadowe. Finally aboute and beneath vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations beseege vs, to the susteining of the feare whereof our courages shoulde be farre too weake, vnlesse being vncumbred of earthly things they were fast bounde to the heauenly life, which in seeming is farre from vs. Wherefore only he hath soundly profited in the Gospell, which is enured to a continual meditation of the blessed resurrection.

2 Of the foueraigne ende of good things, the philosophers haue in olde time curiously disputed, and also strued among themselues: yet none except Plato, acknowledged the foueraigne good of man to bee his conioyning with God. But what maner of conioyning that was, he could not perceiue so much as with any small tast, and no maruell, sith he had neuer learned of the holy bond thereof. To vs the only & perfect felicitie is knowen euen in this earthly wayfaring: but, such as dayly more and more inkindleth our heartes with desire of it, till the full enjoying may satisfie vs. Therefore I saide that none receive frute of the benefites of Christ, but they that list vp their mindes to the resurrection. For, Paul setteth vp this marke to the faithfull, towarde which he saith that hee endeuoreth, and forgetteth all things till he come to it. And so much the more cheerefully ought wee to trauel toward it, least if this world withhold vs, wee suffer greuous punishment for our slouthfulnesse. Wherefore in an other place he marketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conuersation is in heauen, from whence also they looke for their Sauour. And that their courages should not faint in this race, he ioyneth all creatures companions with them. For, because euery where are scene deformed ruines, he saith that all things in heauen and earth doe endeuour to the renewing. For sith Adam by his fall dissolved the perfect order of nature to the creatures, their bondage is painfull & greuous, wherevnto they are subiect by reason of the sinne of man, not for that they are indued with any feeling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect estate from which they are fallen. Therefore Paul sayth that they grone, and are as in paine of childe bearing, that wee to whome are giuen the first frutes of the Spirite, may be ashamed to pine away in our corruption, and not at the least to followe the deade elementes, which beare paine of an others sinne. And the more to pricke vs forward, he calleth the laste comming of Christ our redemption. It is true indeede that all the partes of our redemption are already fulfilled: But because Christ hath once bene offered for sinnes, he shalbe seene againe without sinne vnto saluation. With what miseries focuer we be pressed, let this redemption sustein vs euen vntil the performance of it.

2 The verie weight of the thing it selfe shal whette our endeuour. For neither doeth Paul without cause affirme that the whole Gospell is voide & deceitefull, vnlesse the dead doe rise againe: because our state shoulde bee more miserable than the state of all men, namely sith we lying open to the hatreds and reproches of many, are euerie houre in daunger, yea and are as sheepe appointed to the slaughter: and therefore the authoritie thereof should fal away not only in one part, but also in the whole sum which both our adoption and the effecte of our saluation conteineth. And so let vs be heedfully bent to the most earnest thing of all, that no continuance of time time may make vs wearie. For which purpose I haue differred to this place which I had breefely to entreate of it, that the readers may learne, when they haue receiued Christ the authour of their saluation, to rise vp hier, and may knowe that he is clothed with heauenly immortalite and glorie, that the whole bodie may be made like fashioned to the heade, as also the holy Ghost oftentimes setteth foorth in his person an example of the resurrection. It is a thing harde to bee beleueed, that bodies when they haue beene consumed with rottenesse, shall at their appointed time rise vp againe. Therefore where many of the Phylosophers haue affirmed soules to be immortal, the resurrection of the flesh hath beene allowed of fewe: wherein although there was no excuse, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is too hard a thing to drawe mans senses to beleuee it. That faith may ouercome so great a stoppe, the scripture ministrerth two helpe: the one is in the likenesse of Christ, the other is the almightinesse of God. Nowe so oft as the resurrection is thought of, let the image of Christ come into our mindes: which in the nature that he tooke of vs, so ranne out the race of mortall life, that nowe hauing obtained immortalite, he is to vs a pledge of the resurrection to come. For in the miseries wherewith we are besieged, wee carie about his mortifying in our fleche, that his life may bee openly shewed in vs. And wee may not seuer him from vs, neither can wee possiblic, but that he must be torne in sunder. Whereuppon commeth that argument of Paul, If the deade doe not rise againe, then neither is Christ risen againe: because verily hee taketh that principle for confessed, that Christ was not made subiect to death, nor obteyned victorie of death by rising againe, priuately for himselfe: but, that that was begun in the heade which must needs bee fulfilled in all the members, according to the degree and order of euery one. For it were not right that they should in all pointes be made egall with him. It is saide in the Psalmc. Thou shalt not suffer thy meeke one to see corruption. Although a portion of this trust pertaine to vs according to the measure of gifte, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Christ, which being free from all rotting hath receyued againe his body whole. Nowe least the fellowshippe of blessed resurrection with Christ shoulde bee doubtfull to vs, that wee may be contented with this pledge, Paul expressly affirmeth that he therefore sitteth in heauen, and shall come at the last day a iudge, that he may make our base and vile body like fashioned to the glorious body. In another place also hee teacheth, that God rayfed not vp his sonne from death to the intent to shewe a token of his power: but to stretch out the same effectuall force of the spirite towarde vs which are faithfull: whome he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, because he was giuen to this ende that he should make aliue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a briefe abridgement those things which might both be more largely handled and are worthie to be more gorgiously set out: and yet I trust that the godly readers shal in fewe words find matter enough which may suffice to edifie their faith. Christ therefore is risen againe, that hee might haue vs companions of the life to come. Hee was raised vp of the father, in so much as hee was the heade of the Church, from which he doeth in no wise suffer himselfe to be plucked away. He was raised vp by the power of the Spirite, which is common to vs vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raised vp, that he should be resurrection and life. But as we haue saide that in this mirrour, their is to be seene of vs a liuely image of the resurrection, so let it bee to vs a sure substance to stay our minde, so that yet wee be not loothfull or wearie of long tarrying: because it is not our part to measure the seasons of times by our will, but patiently to rest, till God at his owne fit time repaire his kingdome.

To which purpose seemeth that exhortation of Paule: The first fruites is Christ: and then they that are Christes, euery one in his order. But that no question should be moued of the resurrection of Chrst, vppon which the resurrection of vs al is founded, we see by howe many and how diuerse meanes hee hath made it approued by witnesse to vs. Fine nosed men will laugh at the history which the Euangelistes rehearse, as at a childish mockery. For of what imporrance shall the message be which fearefull silly women bring, and afterward the disciples confirme being in a manner astonished? Why did not Christ rather sette vp the triumphing ensignes of his victorie in the midst of the temple & the market place? Why came he not forth terrible in to the sight of Pilate? Why doth he not also proue himself to the priests, and to whole Ierusalem that he is risen vp alieue againe? As for y^e witnesses which he choose, prophane men will scarcely grant them to be sufficient. I answere that although in these beginnings the weaknesse thereof was contemptible, yet al this was gouerned by the wonderful prouidence of God: that partly the loue of Christ and zeale of godlinesse, and partly their owne hardnes of beleefe should carrie them in hast to the sepulchre which had lately been dismaied for feare, that they might not only be seeing witnesses of the thing, but also shoulde heare of the Angels that which they sawe with their eyes. Howe shall we suspect their credite, who thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the women, til they were brought to the present sight of y^e thing it selfe? As for all the people and the Ruler himselfe, after that they had bin largely conuincid, it is no maruell if as wel y^e sight of Christ, as other signes, was not graunted them. The sepulchre was sealed vp, the watchmen watched it, the thirde day the body was not founde, The souldiers corrupted with mony scatered a rumor that his disciples had stolen him away, As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armure, or were practised men to interprise any such feate. If the soldiars had not courage enough to driue them away, why did they not pursue them, that with y^e helpe of the people they might haue taken some of them? Pilate therefore with his ring truly sealed the resurrection of Christ: & the watchmen which were set at the sepulchre both in their holding their peace and in their lying, were made publishers of the same resurrection. In the meane time the voice of Angels sounded, He is risen, he is not here. The heauenly glistering plainly shewed y^e they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any doubting, Christ himselfe tooke it away. The disciples sawe him often than once, and also felt his fete and his hands, and their hardnes of beleuing not a litle profited to the strengthening of our faith. Hee disputeth among them of the mysteries of the kingdom of God, and at the last in their sightes beholding him, he ascended into heauen. And not onely this sight was shewed to the xi. Apostles, but also he was seene at once of mo than fise hundred brethren. Nowe when he sent the holy Ghost, he shewed a sure prooffe not onely of life, but also of the souereigne power: as hee had saide before, It is profitable for you that I go: otherwise the holy Ghost shal not come. But now Paul was ouerthrowen by the way not by the strength of a deade man, but he felt him whome he persecuted to haue most hie power. To Stephen hee appeared for an other end, namely that with assurednesse of life he might ouercom the feare of death. To discredit so many authentike witnesses, is not onely a part of distrustfulnesse, but also of frowarde and furious stubbornnesse.

4 This which we haue saide, that in prouing the resurrection our senses must be directed to the infinite power of God, Paul briefly teacheth, that he may make (saith he) our vile body like fashioned to the body of his brightnesse, according to the working of his power, by which hee may subdue all things to himselfe. Wherefore nothing is more vnmeet, than here to haue respect what may naturally be done, where an inestimable miracle is set before vs, which with the greatnesse thereof swalloweth vp our senses. Yea Paul by setting forth an example of nature, reprooueth their dulnes which denie the resurrection. Thou foole (saith hee) that which thou sowest is not quickened vnlesse it first dy, &c. He saith that in seed is seene a forme of the resurrectiō, because out of rottennes groweth corne. Neither were it so hard a thing to beleue, if we were as heedfull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout all the coastes of the worlde doe offer themselues to our eyes. But let vs remember that none is truly perswaded of the resurrection to come, but he which being rauished into admiration, giueth to the power of God his glorie. Esay lifted vp with this affiance, crieth out, Thy deade shall liue, my carcase shal rise againe. Awake ye, and praise, ye dwellers of the dust. In despaired case he listeth vp himselfe to God the author of life, in whose hand are the ends of death, as it is saide in the Psalme. Iob also being liker to a carrion than to a man, trusting vpon the power of God sticketh not as though he were whole and sound to lift vp himselfe to that day saying, I knowe that my redeemer liueth: and in the last day hee shall rise vpon the dust (namely to shew foorth his power therein) and I shal againe be compassed with my skinne, and in my flesh I shall see God, I shall see him, and none other. For albeit y some do suttely wrest these places, as though they ought not to be vnderstande of the resurrection, yet they strengthen that which they couer to ouerthrow: because the holy men in their euils seeke comfort from no where else, than from the likenesse of the resurrection. Which better appeareth by the place of Ezechiell. For when the Iewes beleued not the promise of their returne, and objected that it was no more likely that a way shoulde bee made open for them, than that deade men should come out of their graue: there was a vision shewed to the Prophete, a field full of drie bones: those the Lorde commanded to take agayne flesh and sinewes. Although vnder that figure hee raiseth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping hee gathereth of the resurrection: as it is to vs an examplar of the deliucraunces which the faithfull doe feele in this worlde. So Christ, when hee hadde taught that the voyce of the Gospell giueth life: because the Iewes receyued not this, he by and by saide further: Maruell not at this, because the houre commeth in which all that are in the graues sh all heare the voyce of the sonne of God, and shall come foorth. Therefore after this example of Paul, let vs alreadie cherefully triumph in the midst of battels, because he which hath promised life to come, is mightie to keepe that which is left with him: and so let vs glorie y a crowne of righteousnesse is layde vp for vs, which the iust iudge shall deliuer vs. So shall it come to passe, that whatsoeuer greues wee suffer, they shal be to vs a shewing of the life to come, because it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vniustly afflicted, rest at the appearing of Christ with the Angels of his power, in a flame of fire. But that is to be holden which he addeth by and by afterward, that he shal come that he may be glorified in his saints, and be made wonderful in al them that haue beleued, because the Gospel hath beenc beleued.

5 But although the mindes of men ought to haue bene continually occupied in this studie: yet as though they woulde of set purpose destroy all remembrance of the resurrection, they haue called death the vttermost bond of al things and the destruction of man. For verily Salomon speaketh of the common and received opinion, when he saith that a liuing dogge is better than a deade Lyon. And in another place: Who knoweth whether the soule of a man goe vpwarde, and the soule of a beast goe downewarde? But in all ages this brutish senselesse error hath beenc common in the worlde, yea and hath broken into the Church it selfe: for, the Sadduces haue presumed to professe openly that there is no resurrection, yea and y soules are mortall. But that this grosse ignorance should not help to excuse any man, y infidels euen by verie instinct of nature haue alway had an image of the resurrection before their eyes. For to what purpose serued that holy and inuiolable manner of burying, but to bee an earnest of newe life? Neither may it bee answered that this spring of error: because the religiousnesse of buryall was alway in vre among the holy Fathers, and God willed the same maner to remaine among the Gentiles, that an image of the resurrection set before them might awake their drowfines. But although that ceremony wanted his vse of profiting, yet it is profitable for vs if we wisely marke the end of it, because it is no slender confutation of vnbeleefe, that altogether professed that which no man beleued. But Satan hath not only astonished the senses of men, so that they haue buried with the bodies the remembrance of y resurrection, but also hath practised to corrupt this part of doctrine with diuerse fained inuentions, y at length it might vtterly die. I passe ouer, howe in Pauls time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a litle after there followed y Millenaries, which limited y raigne of Christ to a thousand yeares. This error is so childish y it needeth not or is not worthy of any confutation. Neither doth y Reuelation make on their side, by which it is certaine that they colored their error: for as much as in the place where he mentioneth the number of a thousande, hee intreateth not of the eternall blessednes of the Church, but onely of the diuerse troubles which were to come vpon the Church while it yet trauelled in earth. But the whole Scripture cryeth out that there shal bee no ende of the blessednesse of the electe, nor of the punishment of the

the reprobate. Now of all things which both are hidden from our sight and do farre passe the capacite of our minde, either wee must fetch the credite out of the certaine oracles of God, or we must vterly cast it away. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeres to enioy the inheritance of the life to come, do not marke how great a dishonor they do both to Christ and his kingdom. For if they shal not be clothed with immortalitie: then neither is Christ himselfe, to whose glory they shalbe newly fashioned, receiued into the immortal glorie. If their blessednesse shall haue any end: then the kingdom of Christ, vpon the stedfastnes whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally, either they are most vnskillful of all matter concerning God, or they go about with crooked maliciousnes to ouerthrow the whole grace of God & power of Christ, the fulfilling wherof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blotted out & death swallowed vp, eternal life is fully restored. But very blind men may see how fondly they play the fooles: which feare that they should ascribe to God too greate crueltie if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lorde forsooth shall doe wrong, if hee deny his kingdom to them which haue by their vnthankfulness made themselues vnworthy of it. But (say they) their sinnes endure but for a time. I graunt: but y^e maiestie, yea & the righteousnes of God which they haue offended by sinning, is eternall. Worthily therefore the remembrance of iniquitie dieth not: But so the paine exceedeth the measure of the fault. This is a blasphemie not to be suffred, when the maiestie of God is so litle serby, when the despising thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one soule. But let vs leaue these trifles, least contrary to that which we haue before saide, we may seeme to iudge their dotages worthy of contutation. R

6 Beside these, there haue bin two other doting errors brought in by men peruersly curious. The one sorte thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they graunt that the soules be immortall spirites, say that they shalbe clothed with new bodies: whereby they deny the resurrection of the flesh. Of the first sort, because I haue touched somewhat in speaking of the creation of man, it shalbe enough for me to warne the readers againe, howe beastly an error it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishing blast which doth nothing but quicke the bodie in this fraile life, & to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing: Finally, to spoile that parte of vs wherein diuinenesse chiefly shineth & markes of immortalitie appeare, to spoile it (I say) of this gift: so that the estate of the body should be better & more excellent than y^e estate of the soule. The Scripture teacheth far otherwise, which compareth the bodie to a cottage, out of which it sayeth that wee remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that parte which maketh vs differing from brute beastes. So Peter beeing nic to death, sayeth that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent. And Paul speaking of the faithfull, after that he hath said: That when our earthly house shalbe dissolved, there is a building for vs in heauen, adioyneth that wee are wayfaring from the Lorde so long as wee abide in the bodie, but do desire the presence of God in the absence of the bodie. If the soules doe not ouerliue the bodies. R dies, what is it that hath God present when it is seuered from the body? But the Apostle taketh away all doubting, when hee teacheth that wee are ioyned in fellowship to the spirites of the righteous. By which wordes he sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holy fathers, which euen beeing dead do keepe the same godlinesse with vs, so that wee cannot be the members of Christ vnlesse we growe together with them. Vnlesse also the soules being vnclodeth of the bodies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receiue blessed glorie, Christ would not haue said to the thiefe: This day thou shalt be with me in paradise. Hauing so cleare testimonies, let vs not dout after the example of Christ when we are dying, to comend our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen, to commit them to Christ to keepe, which not vnworthily is called a faithfull shepheard and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meane state, is neither lawful nor expedient. Many doe much comber themselues with disputing what place they keepe, and whether they do now enioy the heauenly glorie or no. But it is folly & rashnes, to search deepe of vnknown things, than God doeth giue vs leaue to knowe. When the Scripture hath said that Christ is present with them, and receiuet them into paradise that they may enioy comfort, on the other side that the soules of the reprobate doe suffer such paines as they haue deserued: it goeth no further. What teacher or master shall nowe open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the question is no lesse fonde & vaine: forasmuch as we know that there is not the same dimension of y^e soule which is of the bodie. Whereas the blessed gathering together of holy spirites is called the bosome of Abraham, it is enough for vs after this wayfaring to be receiued of the common father of the faithfull, that he may communicate with vs the fruite of his faith. In the meane time sith the Scripture euery where biddeth vs to hang vpon the expectation of Christs comming, and differreth the crowne of glorie til then: let vs bee content with these bondes appointed vs of God: namely, that the soules of the godly hauing ended the labour of their warfare do go into a blessed rest, where with happy ioyfulness they looke for the enioying of the promised glorie: and that so al things are holden in suspense til Christ the redeemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no dout that they haue the same estate which Iude assigneth to the deuils, to be holden bound with cheines, til they be drawn to y^e punishment whereunto they are condemned.

7 No lesse monstrous is their error, which imagine that soules shall not receiue againe the same bodies wherwith they are now clothed, but shal haue newe and other bodies. And the reason of the Manichees was verie trifling, that is, that it is not meere that flesh which is vnclene shoulde rise againe. As though there were no vnclannesse of soules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of euerlasting life. It was therefore all one as if they should say that that which is infected with the filth of sinne cannot be cleansed by God. For I now passe ouer that dotage, that flesh was naturally vnclene, because it was creat of the Diuel: Onely I shewe that whatsoeuer is now in vs vnworthie of heauen, it hindereth not the resurrection. And first wheras Paul biddeth the faithfull to cleanse themselues from al defiling of the fleshe and of the Spirite, thereupon followeth the iudgement which which he in an other place pronounceth, that euery man shall receiue by his body either good or euill. Wherewith agreeth that which he writeth to the Corinthians, That the life of Iesus Christ may be openly shewed in our mortall fleshe. For which reason in an other place hee doth no lesse praye that God preserue the bodies whole vnto the day of Christ, than the soules and spirits. And no maruell, because it were a most great absurditie that the bodies which God hath dedicate to bee temples to himselfe, shoulde fall away into rottensse without hope of rising againe. What say we to this, that they are also the members of Christ? that GOD commaundeth all the partes of them to be sanctified to himselfe? that hee willetch his name to bee prayed with tongues, pure handes to be lifted vp to him, sacrifices to bee offered? What madnesse is it therefore that that parte to which the heauenly iudge hath vouchsafed to grant so great honour, shoulde be brought from a mortall man into dust without any hope of restoring? Likewise when Paul exhorteth vs to suffer the Lorde as well in body as in soule, because both belong to God, verily he suffereth not that which hee chalengeth to God as holy, to be adiudged to eternall rottenesse. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the rising againe of this fleshe which we beare. This corruptible (sayth Paul) must put on vncorruption, and this mortall must put on immortalitie. If God did make newe bodies, where is this changing of qualitie? If it had bin sayd y we must be reued, the doubtfull speeche peradventure mought haue giuen occasion to their cauillation. But nowe when pointing with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiseth to them vncorruption, he plainly enough denieth any newe bodies to be made. Yea he could not (sayth Tertullian) speake more plainly, vnlesse he had holden his owne skinne in his hande. And they can by no cauillation escape from this, that where in an other place he sayth that Christ shalbe the iudge of the worlde, he allegeth this testimonie of Esay, I liue (sayth the Lorde) euery knee shall bow to me: for asmuch as he plainly pronounceth that they to who he speaketh shalbe subiect to yeld an account of their life, which could not agree, if new bodies shoulde be brought before the iudgement seate. Now in the wordes of Daniel there is no doubtfullnesse: And many of them that sleepe in the earth of dust, shall awake, some to eternall life, and some to reproches and to euerlasting contempt: sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elements to make men, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plain reason teacheth. For if mortality which tooke beginning at the fall of man, be accidentall: then the repaying which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same body which beganne to bee mortall. And truly, wheras the Athenians laughed when Paul affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what maner of resurrection he preached: and that same laughing not smally auaieth to strengthen our faith. The saying of Christ also is worthy to bee noted: Feare not them which kill the body, & can not kill the soule: but feare him which can throwe both the soule and the body into hell fire. For there is no cause to feare, vnlesse the body which we nowe beare be subiect to punishment. And no lesse plaine is an other saying of the same Christ. The houre commeth, when all they that are in graues, shall heare the voyce of the sonne of God, and shall come forth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they \bar{y} haue done euill, into the resurrection of iudgement. Shall we say that soules rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christe? and not rather that at his commaundement the bodies shall returne into the liuelinesse which they had lost? Moreouer if we shall haue new bodies giuen vs, where is the like fashioning of the head and the members? Christ rose again: was it with forging to himselfe a newe body? No, but as hee had sayde before, Destroy this temple, & in three dayes I will build it vp: he tooke againe the same body which he hadde before borne mortall, For he had not much profited vs, if a newe body being put in place, the old body had bene destroyed which was offered vp for a sacrifice of satisfactory cleansing. We must also hold fast that fellowship which the Apottle preacheth: That wee rise againe, because Christe hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable than that our fleshe in which we beare about the mortifying of Christ, should be deprived of the resurrection of Christ. Which verily appeared by a notable example, when at the rising againe of Christ many bodies of the Saintes came out of the graues. For it can not be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which wee hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth New possessors of the resurrection: because they being in body and soule deliuered from corruption, were receiued into the keeping of God.

8 I am ashamed in so cleare a matter to spende so many wordes: but the readers shall contentedly beare this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for frowarde and bolde wittes to deceiue the simple. The fleeing spirits with whom I now dispute, bring forth a fained inuention of their own braine that at the resurrection there shall be a creation of newe bodies. What reason moueth them to thinke so, but because it seemeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with so long rottenness should returne into his auncient state? Therefore onely vnbelieve is the mother of this opinion. But vs on the other side \bar{y} Spirit of God ech where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrection of our flesh. For this reason baptisme (as Paul witneseth) is to vs a seale of the resurrection to come: and likewise the holy Supper allureth vs to the trust thereof, when wee receiue with our mouth the Signes of spirituall grace. And truely the whole exhortation of Paul, that wee giue our members to be weapons vnto the obedience of righteousness, should be colde vnlesse that were ioyned which he addeth afterwarde; He that hath raised vp Christ from the dead, shall quicken also your mortall bodies. For, what should it profite to applye our feete, handes, eyes, and tongues vnto the seruice of G O D, vnlesse they were partakers of the fruite and reward? Which thing Paul plainly confirmeth with his owne wordes, saying: The bodie not to fornication, but to the Lorde: and the Lorde to the bodie. And he that hath raised vp Christe, shall also raise vp vs by his power. More plaine are those wordes which followe: that our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost and the members of Christ. In the meane time wee see howe he ioyneth the resurrection with chastitic and holinesse, as a litle after he sayeth that the price of redemption pertaineth also to the bodies. Nowe it were not reasonable that the body of Paule, in which hee hath borne the prints of Christ, & in which he honorably glorified Christ, Gal. 6. 17. should loose the rewarde of the crowne. Whereupon also came that glorying, We looke for the redeemer from heauen, which shall make our vile body like fashioned to the bodie of his brightnes. And if this be true, that we must by many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God, no reason suffreth to debarre the bodies from this entrie, which God both exerciseth vnder the standerde of the crosse, and honoreth with the praise of victorie. Therefore of this matter there arose among the Saints no douting, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remoueth into his own person all the afflictions wherewith we are proued, to teache that they bring life. Yea and vnder the law he exercisid the holy fathers in this faith with an outward ceremony. For to what purpose serued the vsage of burying, as we haue already shewed, but that they should knowe that there is newe life prepared for the bodies that are layd vp? Hereunto also tended the spices & other signes of immortalitie, wherewith vnder the law the darknes of faith was holpen euen as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that maner bredde by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the Spirit doeth no lesse diligently rehearse burials than the chiefe mysteries of faith. And Christ commendeth that worke as a speciall worke, truly for none other reason but because it listeth vp our eyes from beholding of y^e graue which corrupteth & destroyeth all, to the sight of the reuiving. Moreouer the so diligent obseruing of the ceremonie which is praised in the Fathers, sufficiently proueth that it was to them a rare and pretious helpe of faith. For neither would Abraham haue so carefully prouided for the burying place of his wife, vnlesse there had bene set before his eyes a religion and a profite hyer than the world, namely that garnishing the dead bodie of his wife with the signes of the resurrection he might confirme both his owne faith and the faith of his housholde. But a clearer prooue of this thing appeareth in the example of Iacob, which to testifie to his posteritie that the hope of the promised lande was not euen by death fallen out of his minde, commaunded his bones to be carried thither. I beseech you, if he was to be clothed with a newe body, shoulde hee not haue giuen a sonde commaundement concerning dust that shoulde be brought to nothing? Wherefore if the authoritie of the Scripture be of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a more cleare or more certaine prooue. For this euen children vnderstand by the words of Resurrection, and raising vp againe. For neither can we call it the Resurrection of that which is nowe first created, neither shoulde that saying of Christ stand fast, Whatsoeuer the Father hath giuen me, it shall not perish, but I will raise it vp in the last day. To the same purpose serueth the worde of Sleeping, which pertaineth onely to the bodies. Whereupon also burying places were called Cæmeteria, Sleeping places. Nowe it remaineth that I speake somewhat of the maner of the resurrection. I vse this worde, because Paul calling it a mystery, exhorteth vs to sobrietie, and bridleth the libertie to dispute like Philosophers freely & suttelly of it. First we must hold, as we haue saide, that wee shall rise againe in the same flesh which wee beare, as touching the substance, but the qualitie shall be other. As when y^e same flesh of Christ which had bene offered for sacrifice, was raised vp againe, yet it excelled in other qualities as if it had bene altogether another flesh. Which thing Paul declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one substance of the flesh of a man, & of a beast, but not all one qualitie: as all starres haue like matter, but not like brightnes: so he teacheth that though we shal keepe stil the substance of our body, yet there shalbe a change, that the state of it may be much more excellent. The bodie therefore, that we may be raised vp againe, shal not perish nor vanish away: but putting off corruption, it shall put on vncorruption. But forasmuch as God hath all the elements ready at his beck, no hardinesse shal hinder him, but y he may cōmand both y earth & waters & fire, to render that which seemeth to bee consumed by them.

Esa. 26. 21.

Which also Esay testifieth though not without a figure, where hee saith, Behold, the Lord shall go forth of his place, that he may visite the iniquitie of the earth: & the earth shal discover her bloud, & shal no more hide her dead. But there is to be noted a difference betweene them that haue bene deade long before, and those whome that day shal finde aliue. For wee shal not all sleepe (as Paul saith) but we shal all be changed: that is to say, it shall not bee of necessitie that there be a distāce of time between death & the beginning of the second life: because in a moment of time, & in the twinkling of an eye, the sound of the trumpet shal pearce, to raise vp the dead vncorruptible, and with a soudaine change to fashio againe the liuing into the same glorie. So in another place he comforteth the faithfull which must die: because they which shall then remaine aliue shal not go before the dead, but rather they shall first rise againe which haue slept in Christ. If any obiect that saying of the Apostle, that it is appointed to all mortall men once to die, it is easie to answere it with saying that when the state of nature is changed, it is a kinde of death, and is fitly so called. And therefore these things agree wel together, that all shalbe renued by death when they shall put of their mortall body: & yet that it is not necessaric that there be a seuering of the body & the soule where there shalbe a soudaine changing.

9 But here ariseth a harder question: by what right the resurrection which is the singular benefit of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accur sed of God. We knowe that all were in Adam condemned to y death. Christ came the resurrection & life. Came he to giue life to al mankind vniuersally without choise? But what is more against reason, than that that they shoulde by their obstinate blindness obtaine that which the godly worshippers of God do obtaine by onely faith? Yet this remaineth certaine, that there shal be one resurrection of iudgement, and another resurrection of life, and that Christ shall come to seuer the Lambes from the Goates. I answere, that this ought not to seeme strange, the likenes whereof wee see in daily experience.

Iohn 11. 25.

Matt. 25. 31.

We see that in Adam wee were deprived of the inheritance of the whole world, & that we are by no lesse iust reason debarred from common soode, than from the eating of the tree of life. Whence then commeth it to passe,

Matt. 5. 45.

that God doth not onely make his sunne to rise vpon the good & euil, but also as touching the vses of this present life, his inestimable liberalitie continually floweth forth to them with large plentifulnesse? Hereby verily we knowe that those things which properly belong to Christ and his members, do also ouerflowe to the wicked, not that it is their rightful possession, but that

that they may be made the more inexcusable. So the wicked do oftentimes finde God beneficiall, by more than meane prooves, yea such as sometime doe darken all the blessings of the Godly, but yet doe turne to their greater damnation. If any man obiect, that the resurrection is not fitly compared to fading and earthly benefitee: here also I aunswere that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountaine of life, they deserued the death of γ Diuel, whereby they shoulde be vtterly destroyed: Yet by the marueilous counsell of God there was founde a meane state that out of life they might liue in death. No more absurditie ought it to seeme, if the resurrection happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their willes to the iudgement seate of Christ, whome nowe they refuse to heare for their maister and teacher. For it were a small paine to bee consumed away with death, if they were not to suffer punishment for their obstinacie, brought before γ iudge, whose vengeance they haue without ende and measure prouoked against themselves. But although wee must holde that which wee haue saide, and which that notable confession of Paul before Felix containeth, that he looketh for the resurrection of the righteous & wicked: yet the Scripture oftentimes setteth foorth election together with the heauenly glorie to the onely children of God: Because Christ properly came not to the destruction, but to the saluation of the worlde. Therefore in the Creede there is made mention of the blessed life only.

Act. 24. 15. 1

10 But forasmuch as the Prophecie of death swallowed vp by victorie, shall then and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicitie, the ende of the resurrection: of the excellencie whereof, if all things were spoken which the tongues of men were able to speake, yet scarcely the smallest parcel thereof should be expressed. For howsoeuer we truely heare that the kingdome of God shalbe stuffed full with brightnesse, ioy, felicitie, and glorie: yet those things that are spoken of are most farre removed from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speeches, vntill that day come when he himselfe shal giue to vs his glorie to be scen face to face. We knowe (saith Iohn) that wee are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeared. But when we shalbe like to him, then we shall see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophets, because they could by no words expresse the spirituall blessednesse in it selfe, did in a manner grossly portray it out vnder bodily things. But forasmuch as the feruentnesse of desire must with some tast of that sweetenesse be kindled in vs, let vs chiefly continue in this thought, that if God do as a certaine fountaine which cannot be drawn drie, containe in him the fulnesse of all good things, nothing is beyond him to be coueted of them that tende toward the soueraigne good & the full perfection of felicitie: as wee are taught in many places. Abraham, I am thy rewarde exceeding great. With which saying accordeth Dauid, The Lorde is my portion, the lor hath very well fallen to mee. Againe in another place, I shalbe satisfied with thy countenance. But Peter pronounceth that the faithfull are called to this ende, that they may be made partakers of the nature of God. How so: because he shalbe glorified in all his saintes, and shalbe made wonderfull in them that haue beleeued. If the Lorde will enterparten his glory, power, & righteousnesse with his elect, yea & wil giue himselfe to them to be enjoyed, and (which is better) will after a certaine manner growe into one with them: let vs remember that vnder this benefit is contained all kinde of felicitie. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowledge that wee yet stay beneath at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiuing of our minde be compared with the highnesse of this mysterie. Wherefore in this behalfe wee must keepe sobrietie, least with how much greater boldnes we shal fly vp on hie being vnmindful of our owne small measure, so much more the brightnesse of the heauenly glorie ouerwhelme vs. We feele also howe the vnmeasurable gredinesse to knowe more than is lawfull, tickleth vs: from whence both trifling & hurtfull questions do spring from time to time: trifling I call those of which there can no profite be gathered. But this seconde kinde is worse, because they which giue themselues to them, do entangle themselues with pernicious speculations, and therefore I call them hurtfull. That which the Scriptures doe teach, ought to be out of all dout with vs: namely that as God diuersly distributing his giftes to the Saintes in this worlde, doeth vnequally enlighten them, so the measure of glorie shall not be equall in heauen where God shal crowne his giftes. For neither doth this belong indifferently to all which Paul saith, Ye are my glorie and crowne in the day of Christ: nor also that saying of Christ to the Apostles: Ye shall sit iudging the twelue tribes of Israel. But Paul (which knew that as God enricheth the holy ones with spirituall giftes in earth, so hee beautifieth them with glorie in heauen) douteth not that there is a peculiar crowne layde vp for him according to the rate of his labours. And Christ to set forth to the Apostles the dignitie of the office which they did beare, telleth them that the fruite thereof is layde vp for them in heauen. So Daniel also sayeth, But the wise shal shine as the brightnesse of the firmament, and they which iustifie many, as Starres to the worldes ende and for euer. And if a man heedefully consider the Scriptures, they doe not onely promise eternall life to the faithfull, but also speciall rewarde to euery one. Whereupon commeth that saying of Paul, The Lorde render to him in that day. Which the promise of Christ confirmeth, Ye shall receiue a hundred folde in the the eternall life. Finally, as Christ beginneth in this worlde the glorie of his body with manifolde diuersitie of gift, and encreaseth it by degrees: so he shall also make it perfect in heauen.

II But as all the godly will receiue this with one consent, because it is sufficiently testified by the worde of God: so on the other side leauing crabbed questions, which they shall know to be a hinderance to them, they will not passe their appointed boundes. As for my part, I do not onely priuately forbear superfluous searching of vnprofitable things, but I also thinke that I ought to beware that I do not with aunswering nourish the lightnesse of other. Men hungrie of vaine knowledge do aske howe great shall be the distance betweene the Prophetes and the Apostles, and againe betweene the Apostles and the Martyrs: howe many degrees Virgines differ from married folkes: finally, they leaue no corner of heauen vnsearched. Then it commeth in their mindes to enquire to what purpose serueth the repairing of the worlde, sith the children of GOD shall neede nothing of all this.

this so great and incomparable plenty: but shalbe like to the Angels, whose not eating is a signe of the eternall blessednesse. But I answere that in the very sight there shalbe so great pleasantnesse, so great sweetenesse in the onely knowledge without any vse, that this felicitie shall farre passe all the helpes wherewith we be now holpen. Let vs imagine our selues to be sette in the most wealthie coast of the worlde, and where we shall want no pleasure: yet who is there whom his sicknesse do not sometime hinder and nor suffer to vse the benefites of God? Who is there whose course his owne intemperance doth not oft breake in sunder? Whereupon followeth that a cleare enjoying and pure from all fault, although there be no vse of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicitie. Some go further & aske whether drosse and other corruptions in metalles, be not farre from restoring and are contrarie to it. Which though in some respectes I graunt them, yet I looke with Paul for the repairing of these faults which tooke their beginning at sinne, towards which repayinge they grone and are in trauaile. Yet they proceede further, and aske what better estate is prepared for man, sith the blessing of issue shal then be at an ende. This knot is also easie to be loosed. Whereas the Scripture so honorably setteth out that kinde of blessinge, that is referred to the encreases wherewith God continually draweth forward the order of nature her marke: but in the perfection it is knowen that there is an other manner. But sith the vnware are easily taken with allurementes, and then the maze draweth them in deeplier, & at length when euery mans deuises please himselfe there is no end of struiuing: therefore let this be a short way for vs, to be contented with the glasse & darke speech vntill we shall see face to face. For fewe of a great multitude care which way they may go to heauen: but all do before their time couet to knowe what is done there. All being commonly sluggish and slowe to enter into battailes, do already paint out to themselues imagined triumphes.

12 Nowe because no description can match the grieuoufnesse of the vengeance of God vpon the reprobate, their tormentes and paines are figured to vs by bodily thinges, namely by darkenesse, weeping, gnashing of teeth, vnquenchable fier, and a worme endeleffely gnawing the hearte. For by such manners of speech it is certaine that the holy Ghost meant to trouble al our senses with horreur: as when it is sayde that there is prepared from eternitie a deepe Hell, that the nourishmentes thereof are fire and muche woode: that the blast of the Lorde, as a streame of brimstone, doeth set it on fire. As by such thinges wee must be holpen after a certaine manner to conceiue the miserable state of the wicked, so we ought cheefely to fasten our thought vpon this howe wretched a thing it is to be estranged from the fellowshippe of God: and not that onely, but also to feele the maiestic of God so bent against thee, that thou canst not escape but be fast strained of it. For first his displeasure is like a most violent fire, with touching wherof all things are deuoured and swallowed vp. Then, all creatures so serue him to execute his iudgement, that they to whome the Lorde shall so shewe his wrath, shal feele the heauen, earth, sea, & beastes, as it were with cruell indignation enflamed against them and armed to their destruction. Wherefore it is no small thing that the Apostle pronounceth when he saith that the vnbeluying shall suffer eternall punishment by dying from the face of the Lorde, & from the glorie of his power. And so oft as the Prophetes doe cast vs in feare with bodily figures, although they speake nothing excessiue for our dulnesse, yet they adde foreshe winges of the iudgemente to come, in the sunne and the moone and the whole frame of the worlde. Wherefore the vnhappy consciences do finde no rest, from being vexed and tossed with a terrible whirlewinde, from feeling themselues to be torne in peeces by God being angerly bent against them, from being peared and launched with deadly stings, from trembling at the lightning of God, and being broosed with the weight of his hande: so that it is much more ease to enter into all bottomlesse depths and deuouring pittes, than to stand one moment in those terrours. What & how great then is this, to be pressed with euerlasting and neuer ceassing siege of him? Of which thing the 90. Psalme containeth a notable sentence: that although with only sight he scatter abroad all mortall men and bring them to nought, yet his worshippers, how much more feareful they are in the world, so much more he enforceth them and pricketh them forward loden with the crosse, vntill he be all in all.

THE FOURTH BOOKE

OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, which intreateth of the outward meanes or helpes, whereby God allureth vs into the fellowship of Christ and holdeth vs therein.

The first Chapter.

Of the true Church vwith vvhich vve ought to keepe vnitie, because as is the mother of all the godly.

That by Faith of the Gospel Christ is become oures, and we be made partakers of the saluation brought by him and of eternall blessednes, is already declared in y last booke. But because our rudenes, & slouthfulnes, yea and vanity of wit, doe need outward helps wherby Faith in vs may both be engendred, and growe & encrease in proceeding toward the mark wherunto it tendeth: God hath also added the therby to prouide for our weaknes. And y the Preaching of the Gospel might flourish, he hath left this treasure with y Church. He hath appointed Pastors & teachers, by whose mouth he might teach them y be his: he hath furnished the with authority, finally he hath left nothing vndone that might auaille to the holy consent of faith and right order. First of all he hath ordained Sacramentes, which we feele by experience to be more than profitable helpes to nourish & confirme Faith. For because becing enclosed in the prison of our flesh, wee doe not yet attaine to the degree of Angels, God applying himself to our capacity according to his wonderfull

wonderfull Prouidence, hath appointed a meane whereby we being farre distant from him might come vnto him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we entreate of the Church, and of the gouernment, orders and power of it, and then of the Sacraments, and lastly of the ciuill order: & therewithall that we call away the godly readees frō those corruptions wherewith Satan in the Papacie hath depraued all things that God hath appointed for our saluation. I will beginne at the Church, into whose bosome God will haue his children to be gathered together, not onely that they shoulde by her helpe and ministerie be nourished while they are infantes and young children, but also be ruled by her motherly care till they growe to riper age, and at length come to the marke of faith. For it is not lawfull that those things be seuered which God hath conioyned, that to whome hee is a Father, the Church be also their mother: and that not onely vnder the lawe, but also since the comming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth that we are the children of the new and heauenly Hierusalem.

Matt. 10. 9.
Gal. 8. 26.

2 In the Creede, where we professe that we beleue the Church, that is not spoken onely of the visible Church wherof wee nowe entreate, but of all the elect of God, in whose number they are also comprehended that are departed by death. And therefore this word Beleue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference bee noted betwene the children of God and the vngodly, betweene his peculiar flocke and sauage beastes. For whereas many doe interlace this word, In, that is without probable reason. I graunt indeede that it is the more commonly vsed, and also wanteth not the consenting testimonie of antiquitie, forasmuch as euen the Nicen Creed, as it is reported in the Ecclesiasticall historie, addeth the preposition, In. But there withall wee may marke by the writings of the auncient Fathers, that it was receiued without controuersie to say, that they beleued the Church and not in the Church. For Augustine, and that ancient writer whatsoeuer he was, whose work remaineth vnder the name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Creede, doe not onely so speake themselves, but also doe expressly note that it shoulde be an vnproper manner of speaking if the preposition were adioyned, & they confirme their opinion with no trifling reason. For we therefore testifie that wee beleue in God because vpon him as a true speaker our mind reposeth it selfe, and in him our confidence resteth which could not so conueniently be spoken to saye in the Church no more than it coulde be saide, I beleue in the forgiuenes of sinnes, or in the resurrection of the flesh. Therefore although I woulde not strue about wordes, yet I had rather followe the proprietie of speaking that shoulde be fittest to expresse the matter, than curiously to seeke for formes of speach whereby the matter may without cause be darkened. But the end is, y we should know that although the deuil attempt al meanes to ouerthrow the grace of Christ, and though the enemies of God be carried with violent rage to the same intent: yet it cannot be extinguished, nor the bloode of Christ be made barren, but that it will bring forth some fruite. And so is both the secrete election of G O D and his inwarde calling to bee considered: because hee alone knoweth who bee his, and holdeth them inclosed vnder a seale as Paul termeth it: saying that they beare his tokens whereby they may bee

scue-

generally knowne from the reprobate. But because a small and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, and a fewe graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onely is to be lefte the knowledge of his Church, the foundation whercof is his secrete election. But it is not sufficient to conceiue in thought and minde the multitude of the electe, vnlesse we thinke vpon such an vnitie of the Church into which wee be truly perswaded that we our selues be ingrafted. For vnlesse we be vnder our head Christ vnited together with al the rest of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of y inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or Vniuersal, because we cannot find two or three Churches but that Christ must bee torne in sunder, which cannot be done. But all the elect of God are so knit together in Christ, that as they hang vpon one heade, so they may growe together as it were into one body, cleauing together with such a compacting of ioyntes as the members of one selfe body: being truly made one, which with one hope; Faith, Charitic, with one selfe Spirit of God doe liue together, being called not onely into one inheritance of eternall life, but also into one partaking of one God and Christ. Wherefore although the sorrowfull desolation that on eche side presenteth it selfe in sight, crieth out that there is nothing left of the Church, yet let vs knowe that Christes death is fruitefull and that God maruellously as it were in secrete corners preserveth his Church. As it was said to Elias, I haue kept to my selfe seuen thousand men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

1. Reg. 19. 18.

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doeth in some respect belong to the outwarde Church, that euerie one of vs shoulde holde himselfe in brotherly consent with all the children of God, shoulde yeelde vnto the Church that authoritie which it deserueth, finally shoulde so behaue himselfe as a sheepe of the flocke. And therefore is adioyned the communion of Saintes.

Which parcell, although commonly the olde writers doe leaue it out, yet is it not to bee neglected: because it verie well expresseth the qualitie of the Church: as if it had bene sayde that the Saintes are gathered together into the fellowship of Christ with this condition, that whatsoever benefites God bestoweth vpon them, they shoulde continually communicate them one to another. Whereby yet the diuersitie of graces is not taken away, as we know that the gifts of the holy Ghost are diuersly distributed: neither is the order of ciuil gouernement disturbed, by which it is lawfull for euerie man priuately to enioy his owne possessions, as it is necessary, that for preservation of peace among men, they should haue among themselues peculiar & diuided properties of things. But there is a cōmunitie affirmed such as Luke describeth, y of the multitude of y beleuers there was one hart & one soule: & Paul, when he exhorreth the Ephesians to be one body, one Spirit, as they be called in one hope. For it is not possible, if they be truly perswaded y God is the cōmon father, & Christ the common head to thé al, but y being conioined among théselues with brothely loue, they should continually cōmunicate those thinges that they haue. Nowe it much behoueth vs to know what profite thereupon returneth vnto vs. For wee beleecue the Church to this ende, that wee may be certainly perswaded that wee are the members of it. For by this meane, our saluation resteth vpon sure sound staires, that

Act. 4. 31.
Eph. 4. 4.

that it, although the whole frame of the worlde be shaken, can not come to ruine and fall downe. First it standeth with goddes election, neither can it vary or faile but together with his eternall Prouidence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioyned with the stedfastnesse of Christ, which will no more suffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his owne members to be rent and torne in peeces. Beside that, we are assured that trueth shal alway abide with vs, so long as we are holden in the bosome of the Church. Last of al that we feele that these promises belong to vs, there shalbe saluation in Syon, God shall for euer abide in Hierusalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the Church doe, that it holdeth vs in the fellowship of God. Also in the very worde Communion is much comfote: because while it remaineth certaine, that whatsoeuer the Lorde giueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good thinges confirmed. But in such sort to embrace the vnitie of the Church, it is not needfull (as wee haue already sayde) to see the Church it selfe with our eyes, or feele it with our handes: but rather by this that it consisteth in Faith, we are admonished that wee ought no lesse to thinke it to bee, when it passeth our vnderstanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our faith therefore the worse, because it conceiueth it vnknown: for as much as wee are not herein, commaunded to discerne the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God onely, and not oures) but to determine assuredly in our minds, that all they that by the mercifull kindenesse of God the father through the effectuall workinge of the holy Ghoste, are come into the partaking of Christ, are seuered into the peculiar right and proper possession of Christe: and that, for asmuch as we be in the number of those, wee are partakers of so great a grace.

4 But sith it is now our purpose to entreate of the visble Church, let vs learne euen by this one title of Mother, how much the knowledge thereof is profitable, yea necessary for vs: for asmuch as ther is no other cuntry into life, vnlesse she conceiue vs in her wombe, vnlesse she bring vs forth, vnlesse shee feede vs with her breastes, finally vnlesse shee keepe vs vnder her custody and gouernance, vtill such time as being vnclouted of mortall fleshe wee shalbe like vnto Angels. For our weakenesse suffereth vs not to be dismissed from schoole, till we haue bene scholars throughout the whole course of our life. Beside that out of her bosome there is no forgiuenes of sinnes, and no saluation to be hoped for, as witnesseth Esay and Ioel, with whome agreeth Ezechiel when he declareth y they shal not be in the number of Gods people whome he putteth away from the heauenly life. As on the contrary side, they are sayd to write their names among the citizens of Hierusalem, y turne themselves to the following of true godlinesse. After which manner it is also sayd in an other Psalme: Remember me, Lorde, in the good will of thy people: visite me in thy saluation that I may see the benefites of thy elect, that I may bee merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may reioyce with thy inheritance. In which wordes the fatherly fauour of God, & the peculiar testimony of the Spirituall life is restrained to his flocke, so y the departing from the Church is alway damnable.

place. Paul writeth that Christ, that he might fulfill all thinges, gaue some Apostles, some Prophetes, some Euangelistes, and some Pastors and teachers, to the restoring of the holy ones, into the worke of ministerie, vnto the edification of the body of Christ, vntill we all come into the vnyty of Faith, and of the acknowledging of the sonne of God, vnto a perfecte man, and to the measure of the full grown age of Christ. We see howe God, which was able to make them that be his perfect in a momente, yet will not haue them growe into manly age but by the bringing vp of the Church. Wee see the meane expressed, for that vnto the Pastors is enioyned the preaching of the heauenly doctrine. We see howe all, not one excepted, are brought into one rule, that they shoulde with milde Spirit and willing to learne, yeelde themselues to the teachers appointed for that vse. And by this marke Esay had long before set out the kingdome of Christ, where hee sayeth: My Spirit which is in thee, and the wordes that I haue put in thy mouth shall neuer departe, neither out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seede and thy childrens children. Whereupon followeth that they are worthie to perishe with famine and pining hunger, whosoever they be that refuse the Spirituall meate of the soule reached vnto them of God by the handes of the Church.

G O D doeth breath faith into vs, but by the instrument of his Gospell, as Paul sayeth that faith is by hearing. As also with God remaineth his power to saue, but (as the same Paul witnesseth) he vttereth and displayeth the same in the preaching of the Gospell. For this reason in olde time he willed that there should be made holy assemblies to the sanctuarie, that doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Priest should nourish the consent of faith. And to no other ende those glorious titles haue respect, where the temple is called the rest of God, and the sanctuarie his house, where he is sayde to sit betweene the Cherubines, but to bring estimacion, loue, reuerence and dignitie to the ministerie of the heauenly doctrine, which otherwise the sight of a mortall and despised man would not a litle diminishe. inestimable treasure, God himselfe commeth forth, and in as much as he is author of this degree, so he will haue himselfe to be acknowledged present in his institution. Therefore after that he hath forbidden his to giue themselues to iudgement by flying of birdes, to south sayings, magical artes, necromancy and other superstitions, he immediatly addeth that hee will giue them that which ought to suffice in steede of all, that is to say, that they shall neuer be destitute of Prophetes. But like as he sent not the olde people to Angels, but raised vp teachers out of the earth, which might truely performe the office of Angels: so at this day also his will is to teach vs by men. And as in the olde time hee was not contente with the onely lawe, but added Priestes for expositors, at whose lippes the people should enquire for the true meaning thereof: so at this day he not only willeth vs to be heede fully bent to reading, but also appointeth maisters ouer vs, by whose trauaile wee may be holpen: whereof commeth double profitte. For on the one part by a very good triall it proueth our obedience, where we heare his ministers speaking euen as it were himselfe. On the other side it also prouideth for our weaknesse, while after the manner of menne he hadde rather speake

vnto vs by interpreters to allure vs vnto him, than with thundring driue vs away from him. And truly howe expedient this familiar manner of teaching is for vs, all the goodly doe feele by the feare wherwith the maiestie of God doth worthily astonish them. But they that thinke that the authoritie of the doctrine is abaced by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, doe bewray their vnthankfulnesse: because among so manie excellent giftes wherewith God hath garnished mankind: this is a singular prerogatiue, that he vouchsafeth to consecrate the mouthes and tongues of men to himselfe, that his owne voice shoulde sounde in them. Wherefore on our behalues let vs not bee greued obediently to embrace the doctrine of saluation set forth by his commaundement and by his owne mouth: because although y power of God is not bound to outwarde meanes, yet he hath bounde vs to the ordinarie maner of teaching: which whyle phrentike men refuse to keepe, they wrappe themselues in many deadly snares. Either pride, or disdainefulnes, or enuic moueth many to perswade themselues that they can sufficietly profite by their owne priuate reading and studie, and so to despise publik assemblies, and to accompte preaching superfluous. But sith they doe as much as in them is loose or breake in sonder the holy bonde of vnitie, no man escapeth the due punishment of this diuorce, but hee bewitcheth himselfe with pestilent errors and most wicked dotages. Wherefore, that the pure simplicitie of faith may flourish among vs, let vs not be greued to vse this exercise of godlinesse, which God by his institution hath shewed to be necessarie for vs and so earnestly commendeth. But there was neuer yet found any euen of the most wanton dogges which would say that we ought to stoppe our eares against God: But in all ages the Prophetes and godlie teachers haue had a harde strife against the wicked, whose stubbornesse can neuer come vnder this yoke, to be taught by the mouth of the ministerie of men. Which is as much as to blotte out the face of God which shineth vnto vs in doctrine. For in olde time the faithfull were commanded to seeke the face of God in the Sanctuarie, and the same is so ofte repeated in the lawe for no other cause but for y the doctrine of the law and the exhortations of the Prophetes were to them a liuely image of God: as Paul affirmeth that in his preaching shineth the glorie of God in the face of Christ. Howe much the more detestable are the Apostates, which greedily seeke to deuide Churches, as though they did driue sheepe from their foldes and cast them into the mouthes of wolues. But we must holde that which he hath alleaged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwise builded but by outwarde preaching, and that the holy ones are holden together with no other bonde but when with learning and profiting with one consent they keepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this ende principally, as I haue saide, the faithfull in olde time vnder the lawe were commaunded to resort to the sanctuarie. Because when Moses speaketh of the dwelling place of God, hee doeth therewithall call it the place of name, where God hath set the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainly teacheth that without the doctrine of godlinesse there is no vse thereof. And it is not doubtful but that for the same reason Dauid with great bitterness of Spirite complayneth that hee is by the tyrannous crueltie of his enemies kepte from enuing into the Tabernacle. It seemeth commonly to many a childish lamentation, because it shoulde be but a verie small losse, and also no great pleasure should be for-gone thereby, to want the entrie of the temple, so that there were enough of other delightful things. But he bewayleth y with this one grieefe, anguish and sorrowe, he is fretted and vexed and in a manner wasted. For nothing is of greater estimation with the faithfull, than this helpe whereby God by degrees listeth vp his on hie. For this is also to be noted, that God in the mirror of his doctrine alway so shewed himself to the holy Fathers, y the knowledge was spirituall. Wherefore the temple is called not onely his face, but also (to take away all superstition) his foote stoole. And this is that happie meeting into vnitie of faith, while from the hiest euen to the lowest al do aspire to the head. All the temples that euer the gentiles vpon any other purpose builded to God, were but a mere prophaning of his worship: whereunto though not with like grossehes, yett some what the Iewes fell. Whereof Stephen out of the mouth of Esay reprocheth them where hee saith, that God dwelleth not in temples made with handes, &c. Because onely God doeth by his worde sanctifie to himselfe temples to the lawfull vse. And if wee rashly attempt any thing without his commaundement, by and by to an euill beginning do cleaue new deuises by which the euill is spread abroad without measure. Yet Xerxes, when by the counsell of the Magitians hee burned vp or plucked downe all the temples of Greece, vndiscretly saide, that the gods to whom all thinges ought to be freely open were inclosed within wals and tiles. As though it were not in the power of God, to the entente he might bee neere vs, after a certaine manner to descende vnto vs, and yet neither to change place, nor to fasten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certayne chariotes to carrie vs vp to his heauenly glorie, which with the inmeasurable greatnesse thereof filleth all thinges, yea and in heigh surmounteth the heauens.

6 Nowe forasmuch as at this time there hath beene great strife about the effectualnesse of the ministerie, whyle some excesssiuely amplifie the dignitic thereof; and some other affirme that that which is properly belonging to the holy Ghost is wronfully giuen away to mortall man, if wee thinke that ministers and teachers do pearce to the mindes and heartes, to amend as well the blindnesse of the mindes as the hardnesse of heartes: it is meete that we giue a right determination of this controuersie. All that they contende on both partes shal easily be accorded by expressly noting the places where God the author of preaching ioyning his spirit w it promiseth fruite therof: again, when seuering himselfe from outward helps he chalengeth to himselfe alone as wel the beginnings of faith as the whole course therof. It was the office of the seconde Elias (as Malachie witnesseth) to enlighten the mindes, and to turne the heartes of Fathers to the children, and vnbeleuers to the wisdome of the righteous. Christ pronounceth that hee sendeth the Apostles, that they shoulde bring fruite of their labor. But what that fruite is Peter shortly defineth, saying that wee be regenerate with incorruptible seede. And therefore Paul glorieth that hee by the Gospell begate the Corinthians, and that they were the seale of his Apostleshippe: yea that hee was not a literall minister, such as did onely beate the eares with with sound of voice, but that there was giuen him an effectualnesse of Spirit, that his doctrine should not be vnprofitable. In which meaning also in another place hee sayeth, that his Gospell was not in worde onely, but in power. He affirmeth also that the Galathians by hearing receiued the Spirit of faith. Finally in many places he maketh himselfe not onely a worker together with God, but also assigneth himselfe the office of giuing saluation. Truly he neuer brought fourth all these things to this extent to giue vnto himselfe any thing were it neuer so little seuerally from God: as in another place he shortly declareth, saying, our labour was not vnprofitable in the Lorde, according to his power mightily working in me. Againe in another place, he that was mightie in Peter toward the circumcision, was also mightie in me toward the Gentiles. But how he leaueth nothing seuerally to the ministers, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but God that giueth the encrease. Againe: I haue laboured more than al: not I, but the grace of God that was with me. And truly we must holde fast those sayings, where God ascribing to himselfe the enlightening of the mind, and the renewing of the heart, teacheth that it is a robbie of God if man take vpon himselfe any parte of either of them. In the meane time if any man offer himselfe to the ministers whome God ordeineth, willing to learne, he shall knowe by the fruit, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleased God, and that this yoke of modestie was not in vaine layde vpon the faithfull.

7 But as for the Church visible and which is within the compasse of our knowledge, what iudgement is meete to be giuen thereof, I thinke it already appeare euidently by that which we haue before saide. For we haue said, that the holy Scripture speakech of the Church after two sortes. Sometime, when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is in deede before God, into which none are receiued but they that are both by grace of adoption the children of God, and by sanctification of the Spirite the true members of Christ. And then truly it comprehendeth not onely the holy ones that dwell in earth, but also all the elect that haue bene since the beginning of the worlde. But oftentimes vnder the name of the Church it significeth the vniuersall multitude of men scattered abroad in the world, which professe that they worship one God and Christ, by Baptisme enter into his faith, by partaking of the supper testifie their vnitie in true doctrine, & charitie, haue an agreement in the worde of the Lorde, and for the preaching thereof do keepe the ministerie ordeined by Christ. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Christ but the name and outward shew: there be many ambitious, couetous, eniuous, euill speakers, some of vncleane life: which be suffied for a time, either because they cannot by lawfull order of iudgement be conuincid, or because there is not alway in vre that seueritie of discipline that ought to be. Therefore as we must needs beleue that the Church which is inuisible to vs, is to be seene with the eyes of GOD onely: so are wee commaunded to regarde this Church which is called a Church in respect of men, and to keepe the communion of it.

out by certaine markes and as it were signes vnto vs. This is in deede the singular prerogatiue of God himselfe, to knowe who be his, as wee haue already alleaged out of Paul. And truly that the rashnesse of men should not creepe so farre, it is provided, by the very successe of thinges dayly putting vs in minde, howe farre his secret iudgements do surmount our vnderstanding. For euen they that seemed most desperate, and accounted vterly past hope, are by his goodnesse called backe into the way: and they that seemed to stand fast in comparison of other, do oftentimes fall. Therefore according to the secret predestination of God (as Augustine sayeth) there be many sheepe without, and many weales within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that knowe neither him nor themselues. But of those that openly beare his badge, his onely eyes doe see who be both holy without faining, and who will continue euen to the ende, which is the verie chief point of saluation. Yet on the other side, forasmuch as hee foresawe it to be somedeale expedient, that we should knowe who were to be accounted his children, he hath in this part applyed himselfe to our capacitie. And because the certaintie of faith was not necessarie, he hath put in place thereof a certaine iudgement of charitie: whereby we shoulde acknowledge for members of the Church those that both with confession of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of sacramentes, doe profess the same God and Christ with vs. But as for the knowledge of the body thereof, howe much more that he knewe it to be necessarie for our saluation, with so much the more certaine markes he hath set it out.

Hom. in

Matt. 18. 20.

9 Lo hereupon groweth & ariseth vnto vs, a face of the Church visible to our eyes. For wheresoever we see the word of God to be purely preached and heard, and the sacraments to be ministred according to the institution of Christ, there it is in no wise to be doubted that there is som church of God: forasmuch as his promise can not deceiue, Wheresoever two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the middes of them. But if we may evidently vnderstand the summe of this matter, we must proceede by these as it were degrees: that is to say, if the vniuersall Church is a multitude gathered together out of all nations whatsoeuer they be, which beeing sundered & seuerally scattered by distances of places, yet doth agree in one truth of godly doctrine, & is bound together with the bonde of one selfe religion: And that so vnder this are comprehended all particular Churches, which are in all townes & streetes according to the order of mens necessitie, so that euery one of them may rightfully haue the name & authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profession of godlines are reckened among such Churches, although they be in deede strangers from the Church, yet do after a certaine maner belong vnto it, til by publike iudgement they be banished out of it. Howbeit there is somewhat a diuers manner in iudging of priuate men and of Churches. For it may fall in experience, that such men as we shal thinke not to be altogether worthie of the company of the godly, yet we must vse like brethren, & account the among the faithfull, for the common consent of the Church, whereby they are suffered and borne withall in the bodie of Christ. Wee do not by our testimonie allow such to be members of the Church: but wee leaue them the place that that they haue among the people of God, til it be by orderly right of Lawe taken away from them. But of the verie multitude wee must otherwise thinke; which if it hath and honoreth the ministerie of the Word, & the administration of Sacraments, it deserueth without dout to bee esteemed and iudged a Church: because it is certaine that those things are not without fruite. So we doe also preserue to the vniuersall Church her vnitie, which diuclish spirits haue alway trauailed to cut in sunder: neither do wee defraude of their authoritie those lawfull assemblies which are disposed according to the fittest of places.

10 We haue set for signes to discern the Church by, the preaching of the Word, and the obseruing of the Sacraments. For those can be no where but they must bring foorth fruite, and bee prospered with the blessing of God. I do not say, that wheresoeuer the worde is preached, there by and by springeth vp fruite; but I say that no where it is receiued and hath a stayed seate, but that it bringeth forth the effectualnesse thereof. Where the preaching of the Gospell is reuerently heard, and the Sacramentes are not neglected, howsoeuer it be, there for that time appeareth a not deceitfull and not doutfull face of the Church, where of no man may vnpunished either despise the authoritie, or refuse the admonitions, or resist y^e counsels, or mocke at the corrections: much lesse to departe from it, and to breake in sunder the vnitie of it. For the Lorde so hieley esteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he counteth him for a traitorous runaway and forsaker of Religion, whosoeuer shall stubbornly estrange himselfe from any Christian fellowship, so that it be such a one as hath the true ministerie of the Worde and Sacramentes. He so commendeth the Churches authoritie, that when it is violatē, he iudgeth his owne diminished. Neither is it of small importance, that the Church is called the pillar and strong stay of trueth and the house of God. By which wordes Paul signifieth, that to the end the trueth of God shoulde not decay in the worlde, the Church is a faithfull keeper thereof: because Gods will was to haue the preaching of his word kept pure and to shewe himselfe vnto vs a father of housholde by her ministerie and labour, while shee feedeth vs with spirituall nourishmentes, and procureth all things that make for our saluation. It is also no slender praise, that it is saide that shee is chosen and seuered by Christ to be his spouse, that shoulde be without wrinkle and spot, the body and fulnesse of him. Wherupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God & of Christ. Therefore so much the more wee must beware of so wicked disagreement. For while wee go about, so much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of Gods trueth, wee are worthie that hee should sende downe his lightning with the whole violent force of his wrath to destroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any fault more hainous, than with wicked breach of faith to defile the marriage that the onely begotten sonne of God hath vouchsafed to contract with vs.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

Ephes. 5. 17.
Ephes. 1. 23.

11 Wherefore let vs diligently keepe these markes empainted in our mindes, and let vs esteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeoureth than to take away and abolish y^e one of these, or both: sometime that when these markes are rased and blotted out, he may take away the true and naturall distinction of the Church: sometime that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages past, the pure preaching of the worde hath vanished away: and now he doth with as great importunacie trauaile to ouerthrowe the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But now, howe dangerous, yea howe deadly a tentation is it when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation, wherein are seene the signes & tokens by which the Lorde thought his Church sufficiently described? We see how great heede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we should not be deceiued vnder the title of the Church, euery congregation that pretendeth the name of the Church must be examined by that maner of trial, as by a touchstone. If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lord, it will not deceiue vs: let vs boldly yelde vnto it the honour due to Churches. But contrariwise if it boast it selfe without the worde and Sacramentes, wee must no lesse with fearefull conscience beware of such deceites, than on the other side we must flee rashnesse and pride.

12 Where as wee say that the pure ministerie of the worde & the pure vsage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a sufficient pledge & earnest, so that we may safely embrace as the Church any fellowship wherein both these shalbe: this extendeth so farre, that it is neuer to be cast of, so long as it shall continue in those, although it swarme full of many other faultes. Yea & there may some faultinesse creepe into it, in the administration either of doctrine, or of the Sacraments, which ought not to estrange vs from the Communion of it. For all the articles of true doctrine be not of one sort. Some be so necessarie to be knowen, that they ought to be certaine and vndoubted to all men, as the proper principles of Religion: of which sort are, That there is one GOD. That Christ is God, and the sonne of God: that our saluation consisteth in the mercie of God: and such like. There bee other that being in controuersie betweene Churches, yet doe not breake the vnitie of faith. For those Churches that disagree about this one point, if without lust of contention, without stubbornnesse of affirming, the one thinke that soules when they departe from the bodies doe flee vp into heauen, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainly holdeth that they liue to the Lorde. The wordes of the Apostle are: Let all vs that bee perfect thinke all one thing: but if ye thinke any thing otherwise, this the Lorde shall also reueale vnto you. Doeth he not sufficiently shewe that diuersitie of opinions about these matters, that bee not so necessarie, ought to bee no ground of disagreement among Christians? It is in deede a principall point, that wee agree in all thinges. But for as much as there is no man that is not wrapped with some litle clowde of ignorance: either wee must leaue no Church at all, or we must pardone a being deceiued in such things as may be vnknown without violating the summe of religion, and without losse of saluation. But I meane not here to defend any errours be they neuer so lide, so as I woulde thinke that they shoulde bee cherished with flattering and winking at them: but I say that wee ought not rashly rashly for every light dissension forsake the Church, in which at least that Doctrine is retained safe & vncorrupted, wherein standeth the safetie of godlines, and the vse of Sacraments is kept as it was institute by the Lorde. In y^e meane time if we endeouour to amend that which displeaseth vs, we do therein according to our dutie. And hereunto belongeth that saying of Paul: If any thing better be reuealed to him that sitteth, let the first hold his peace. 1. Cor. 14. 30 Whereby it is euident, that all the members of the Church are every one charged with endeouour to publike edification, according to the measure of his grace, so that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that wee neither do forsake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, do trouble the peace & well ordred discipline thereof.

13 But in bearing with the imperfektion of life, our gentle tenderneffe ought to go much further. For herein is a very slipperie easinesse to fall: and herein with no small deuises doth Satan lay wayt for vs. For there haue ben alway some, which filled with false perswasion of perfect holinesse as though they were alreadie made certaine aery spirits, despised the company of all men, in whome they sawe remaining any thing of the nature of man. Such in olde time were the Cathary, and they that were as mad as they, the Donatistes. Such at this day are some of the Anabapristes, which would seeme to haue profited aboute the rest. Some there be that offende more by an vndiscrete zeale of righteousnesse, than by that mad pride. For when they see among them to whome the Gospel is preached, the fruite of life not agreably aunswering to the doctrine thereof, they by and by iudge that there is no Church. It is in deede a most iust displeasure, and such a one whereunto in this most miserable age of the worlde, wee giue too much occasion. Neither may we excuse our accursed slouthfulnesse, which the Lorde will not suffer vnpunished: as euen alreadie he beginneth with grieuous scourges to chastise it. Wo therefore to vs, which with so dissolute licentiousnes of wicked dooings, make that weake consciences be wounded by reason of vs. But in this againe they offende whome I haue spoken of, because they cannot measure their being displeased. For where y^e Lord requireth clemencie, they leauing it, do giue themselues wholly to immeasurable rigorousnes. For, because they thinke y^e there is no Church where there is no sound purenesse & vprightnesse of life, for hatred of sinnes they depart from the lawfull Church, while they thinke that they swarue from a company of wicked men. They alleage that the Church of Christ is holy. But that they may also vnderstande that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them heare this parable out of the mouth of Christ, wherein it is compared to a nette, Matt. 13. 47 in which fishes of all kindes are gathered together: and are not chosen out till they be laide abroade vpon the shoare. Let them heare that it is like Matt. 3. 12. vnto a corne fild, which beeing sown with good graine, is by the enemies fraude scattered with tares, of which it is not cleansed vntill the crosse be brought into the barne floore. Finally, let them heare that it is like vnto Matt. 13. 23 a floore, wherein the wheat is so gathered together, that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till beeing cleansed with fanne and syue it be at length laide vp in the grainer. If the Lorde pronounce that the Church shall cuen to the day of Iudgement bee troubled with this euill, to bee burdened with mingling of euil men: they doe in vaine seeke for a Church sprinkled with no spotte.

14. But they crie out that it is an intollerable thing, that the pestilence of vices so rangeth abroad. What if the saying of the Apostle do here also aunswere them? Among the Corinthians not onely a fewe had gone out of the way, but the infectiō had in a maner possessed the whole body: There was not onely one kinde of sinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certaine horrible outrageous doings: it was not onely corruption of manners, but also of doctrine. What in this case saith the holy Apostle, that is to say, the instrument of the Holy Ghost, by whose testimonie y^e Church standeth and falleth? Doeth he require a diuision from them? Doeth he banish them out of the kingdome of Christ? Doeth hee strike them with the extremest thunderbolt of curse? Hee not only doth none of all these things: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Christ & fellowship of saintes. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, sectes, and enuious partakings do broile: where quarels & braylings be in vre, with a greedinesse of hauing, where that wicked dooing is openly allowed, which were abhominable among the very Gentiles: where Pauls name is vniustly railed at, whome they ought to haue honoured as their father: where some scorne at the resurrection of the dead, with ruine whereof the whole Gospell falleth: where the gracious giftes of God serue to ambition, and not to charitie: where many things are vncomely and vnorderly done: and if therefore there still remaine a Church, because the ministerie of the worde and of the Sacramentes is there not refused, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that cannot be charged with the tenth parte of these faultes? They that with so great precisenesse deale so cruelly against the Churches of this present time: what (I pray you) would they haue done to the Galathians, which were almost vter forsakers of the Gospell, among whom yet the same Apostle found Churches?

15 They obiect also, howe that Paul grieuoussly rebuketh the Corinthians for suffering in their company a man that was a hainous sinner, and then he setteth a generall sentence wherein he pronounceth, that it is vnlawfull euen to eate bread with a man of reprochfull life. Here they crie out: If it be not lawfull to eate common breade, howe may it be lawfull to eate with them the bread of the Lorde? I confesse in deede that it is a great dishonour, if hogges and dogges haue place among the children of God: it is also a much more dishonour if the holy body of Christ be giuen forth to them. And truly if they bee well ordred Churches, they will not suffer wicked men in their bosome, and will not without choise admitte both worthie and vnworthie together to that holy banquet. But forasmuch as the Pastours doe not alway so diligently wathe, yea and sometime are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to bee, or are hindered so that they can not vse that seueritie that they would: it commeth to passe that euen they that are openly euill, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holy ones. This I graunt to bee a faulte: neither will I diminish it, sith Paule doeth so sharply rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church be slacke in her duetic, it shall not bee therefore immediimmediatly in the power of euery priuate man, to take vpon him selfe the iudgement to seuer him. I doe in deede not denie that it is the doing of a godly man to withdrawe himselfe from all priuate companie of euill men, to entangle himselfe in no willing familiaritie with them. But it is one thing to flice the companie of euill men, and an other thing for hatred of them to forsake the communion of the Church. But where as they thinke it sacrilege to be partakers of the Lordes bread with them, they are therein much more rigorous than Paul is. For where he exhorteth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine an other, or euery man the whole Church, but that they should ech one proue himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnworthy man, then truly Paul woulde bid vs to looke circumspectly whether there were any in the multitude, by whose vncleanesse we might be defiled. Nowe when he requireth onely of euery man the prooffe of themselves, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if anie vnworthie doe thrust themselues in among vs. And nothing else is ment by this which he sayeth afterwarde. He that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himselfe. And rightfully. For it ought not to stand in the choise of euery particular man, who be to be receiued, & who to be reiected. The knowledge hereof belongeth to the whole Church, which knowledge can not be had without lawfull order, as hereafter shall be sayde more at large. Therefore it should be vnrighteous, that any priuate man shoulde be defiled with the vnworthynesse of an other, whom he neither can nor ought to keepe backe from coming to it.

1. Cor. 11. 29

16 But although by this vndiscret zeale of righteousness this tentation doth sometime also enter into good men: yet this we shall find that too much preciseness groweth rather of pride, disdainefulnesse, and false opinion of holinesse, than of true holinesse and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are bolder than other, and as it were stander d bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the most part doe it vpon no other cause, but in despising of all men to boast themselues to bee better than other. Therefore Augustine sayeth well and wisely: When godly order and manner of Ecclesiasticall discipline ought principally to haue regarde vnto the vnitie of Spirite in the bonde of peace: which the Apostle commaunded to be kept by bearing one with an other: and which being not kept, the medicine of reuenge is proued to be not onely superfluous, but also pernicious, and therefore now to be no medicine at all: those euill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affection of their own contentions, do greedily labour either wholly to drawe or at least to diuide the weake common people entangled with the boasting of their name, swelling with pride, madde with stubbornnesse, traiterous with sleaunders, troublesome with seditions, least they should seeme to want the light of truth, doe pretende a shadow of rigorous seueritie: and those thinges that are in the holy Scriptures commaunded to be done with a gentler kinde of healing, sauing the syncretitie of loue, & keeping the vnitie of peace, to correct the faults of brethré, they abuse it to sacrilege of schisme, and to occasion of cutting of. But to godly and quiete men he giuerh this counsell, that they mercifully correct that which they can, and that which they can not, patiently beare, and grone and mourne with loue, vntill God either amend and correct them, or at the haruest roote vp the tares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly trauail to fortifie themselves with these armutes, least while they seeme to themselves strong and couragious reuengers of righteousness, they departe from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of righteousness. For sith it is Gods will to haue the communion of his Church to bee kept in this outwarde fellowship: he that for hatred of euill men doth breake the token of that fellowship, entreth into a way whereby is a slippery falling from the communion of Saintes. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truly holy and innocent before the eyes of the Lord, whom they see not. Let them thinke that euen of them that be diseased there be many that doe not please or flatter themselves in their faultes, but being now & then awakened with earnest feare of GOD doe aspire to a greater vprightnesse. Let them thinke that iudgement ought not to be giuen of a man by one deede: forasmuch as the holiest do sometime fall away with a most grieuous fal. Let them thinke that to gather a Church there lyeth more weight both in the ministerie of the worde and in the partaking of the holy mysteries, than that all that force should vanish away by the fault of some wicked men. Last of all let the consider, that in iudging the Church, the iudgement of God is of greater value than the iudgement of man.

17 Where also they pretende y^e the Church is not without cause called holy, it is meete to wey with what holinesse it excelleth: least if we will admit no Church but such a one as is in all pointes perfect, we leaue no Church at all: It is true in deede which Paul saith, y^e Christ gaue himselfe for the Church to sanctifie it: that he clesed it with the lauer of water with the word of life, to make her vnto himselfe a glorious spouse hauing no spot or wrinkle, &c. Yet this is also nothing lesse true, that the Lord daily worketh in smothering her wrinkles and wiping away her spottes. Whereupon followeth that her holines is not yet fully finished. Therefore the Church is so holy, that it dayly profiteth and is not yet perfect: daily proceedeth, and is not yet come to the mark of holines: as also in an other place shalbe more largely declared. Whereas therefore the Prophets prophetic that there shall be a holy Hierusalem, through which straungers shall not passe: and a holy temple wherinto vn-cleane men shall not enter: let vs not so take it, as if there were no spot in the members of the Church: but for that with their whole endeuour they aspire to holinesse and sounde purenesse, by the goodnesse of God cleannesse is ascribed to them, which they haue not yet fully obtained. And although oftentimes there be but rare tokens of such sanctification among men: yet wee must determine that there hath bene no time since the creation of y^e worlde wherein the Lord hath not had his Church, & that there shall also be no time to the verie ende of the worlde, wherein hee shall not haue it. For all be is immediatly from the beginning the whole kinde of men is corrupt and defiled by the sinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted masse, God alway sanctifieth some vesselles vnto honour, that there shoulde be no age without feeling of his mercie. Which he hath testified by certaine promises: as these: I haue ordained a testament to my elect. I haue sworne to Dauid my

Hier. 31. 35.

18 Hereof Christ himselfe, the Apostles, and in manner all the Prophetes haue giuen vs example. Horrible are those descriptions wherein Esay, Hieremie, Ioel, Abacuc, and the other doe lament the sickeneses of the Church of Hierusalem. In the common people, in the magistrate, in the Priestes all things were so corrupt, that Esay doubteth not to match Hieralem with Sodom and Gomorra. Religion was partly despised, partly defiled: in their maners are commonly reported theftes, extortions, breaches of faith, murders and like mischeeues. Yet therefore the Prophets did neither erect to themselues new Churches, nor builde vp newe altars on which they might haue seuerall sacrifices: but of whatsoeuer maner men they were, yet because they considered, that God had leste his word with them, and ordayned Ceremonies whereby he was there worshipped, in the middest of the assembly of the wicked they held vp pure handes vnto him. Truly if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they woulde rather haue died a hundred times than haue suffred themselues to be drawn thereunto. Therefore nothing withheld them from departing, but desire to the keeping of vnity. But if the Prophets thought it against conscience, to estrange themselues from the Church for many and great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in maner of the whole people: then we take too much vpon vs, if we dare by and by depart from the communion of the Church, where not all mens maners do satisfie either our iudgement, yea or the Christian profession.

19 Nowe what manner worlde was there in the time of Christ and the Apostles? And yet that desperate vngodlines of the Pharisees, and the dissolute licentiousnes of liuing, which then eche where reigned, coulde not hinder, but that they vsed the same Ceremonies with the people, and assembled with the rest into one temple to the publike exercises of religion. Whereof came that, but because they knewe that the fellowshippe of euill men did not defile them, which with a pure conscience did communicate at the same Ceremonies? If any man be litle moued with the Prophetes and Apostles, let him yet obey y^e authoritic of Christ. Therefore Cyprian wel saith though there be seene tares or vncleane vessels in the Church, yet there is no cause why we shoulde daparte from the Church: wee must onely labour that we may bee wheate: we must vse diligence and indeuour as much as we may that we may be a golden or siluer vessell. But to breake the earthen vessels, is the onely worke of the Lorde, to whome also is giuen an iron rodde. And let no man challenge to himselfe that which is properly belonging to y^e Sonne onely, to bee able alone to fanne the floore, and cleanse the chaffe, and seuer all the tares by mans indgement. This is a proude obstinacie, and presumption full of sacriledge, which a peruerse furor taketh to it selfe, &c. Therefore let both these thinges remaine certainly fixed. First that he hath no excuse, that of his owne will forsaketh the outward communion of the Church. Where the worde of God is preached and the sacramentes ministred: then that the faults of a fewe or of many are no hindrance, but that we may therein rightly professe our faith by the Ceremonies institute by god: because a godly conscience is not hurt by y vnworthines of any other either pastor or priuat man, and the mysteries are to a holy & vpriight man neuertheles pure and holosome because they are together handled of vnclene me.

20 Their precisenesse and disdainfulnesse proceedeth yet further because they acknowledge no Church but such a one as is pure from al spots be they neuer so small: yea they are angrie with good teachers, for that in exhorting the faithfull to goe forwarde, they teach them all their life long to grone vnder the burden of vices, and to flee vnto pardon. For they prate that by this meane men be led from perfection. I graunt in deede, that in earnest calling vpon perfection we ought not slowly or coldly to trauell, much lesse to be idle: but to fill our mindes with confidence thereof while we be yet in our course, I say, it is a diuelish inuention. Therefore in the Creede the forgiuenesse of sinnes is aptly ioyned next after the Church. For none doe attaine it, but only they that are citizens and of the houshod of the Church as it is read in the Prophct. Therefor the building of the heauenly Hierusalem ought to goe before, wherein afterward this mercifulnes of God may haue place, y whatsoeuer come vnto it, their iniquitie may be taken away. I say that it ought first to be builded, not for that there can be any Church without the forgiuenesse of sinnes, but because the Lorde hath not promised his mercie but in the Communion of Saints. Therefore the first entrie for vs into the Church and kingdome of God, is the forgiuenesse of sinnes, without which wee haue no couenant or conioyning with God. For thus hee saith by the Prophet, In that day I wil strike you a couenant with the beast of the felde, with the foule of the aire, and with the vermine of the earth. I will breake the sworde of warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to sleepe without feare. I will espouse you vnto me for euer. I wil espouse you (I say) in righteousness, in iudgemēt, in mercie, & in compassions. We see how by his mercie the Lorde reconcileth vs to himselfe. And so in an other place, when he foresaith y the people shal be gathered together againe, whom hee had scattered abroad in his wrath, he saith, I will cleanse them from all wickednesse wherewith they haue sinned against me. Wherefore by the signe of washing we enter into the fellowshippe of the Church, whereby we may bee taught that there is no entrie open for vs into the houshold of God, vnles our filthines be first wiped away with his goodnes.

21 But by the forgiuenesse of sinnes the Lord doth not onely receiue & adopt vs once into the Church, but by the same he also preserueth & maintaineth vs still in it. For to what purpose were it, to haue such a pardon granted vs, as shoulde serue for no vse? But euery one of the godly is a witnesse to himselfe that the mercie of God shoulde be vaine and mocking, if it shold be graunted onely but once: because there is none that is not in his owne conscience priuate through out his whole life of many weakenesses, which neede the mercy of God. And truly not in vaine God promiseth this grace peculiarly to them of his owne houshold: and not in vaine hee commaundeth deth the same message of reconciliation to be daily offered vnto them. Therefore as throughout all our life wee catie about vs the remnantes of sinne, vnlesse wee be sustained with the continuall grace of the Lorde in forgiuing our sinnes, we shal scarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternall saluation. Therefore they ought to thinke that there is pardon alwayes readie for their sinnes. Wherefore we ought to hold assuredly, that by y^e liberalitie of God by meane of Christs deserting through the Sanctification of the Spirite, Sinnes hath beene and are dayly pardoned to vs which be called and grafted into the body of the Church.

22 To deale this benefite vnto vs, the keyes were ginen to the Church. For when Christ gaue the Apostles commaundement, and deluered them power to forgiue sinnes, he meant not this onely, that they shoulde loose them from sins that were from vngodlines conuerted to the faith of Christ: but rather that they should continually execute this office among the faithfull. Which thing Paul teacheth, when he writeth that the embassage of reconciliation was left with the ministers of the Church, whereby they shold oftentimes in Christes name exhorte the people to reconcile themselues to God. Therefore in the Communion of Saints, by the ministerie of y^e Church it selfe, sinnes are continually forgiuen vs, when the Priestes or Bishops, to whome that office is committed, doe with the promises of the Gospell confirme godly consciences in hope of pardon and forgiuenes: and that as well publicly as priuately, according as necessitie requireth. For there be verie many, which for their weakenesse do neede a singular atonement. And Paul reporteth that not onely in common preaching, but also in houses hee had testified the Faith in Christ, and seuerally admonished euery one of the doctrine of saluation. Therefore wee haue here three thinges to be noted: First that with howe great holinesse fouer the children' of God doe excell, yet they bee alway in this estate, so long as they dwell in a mortall body, that without forgiuenesse of sinnes they can not stande before God. Secondly, that this benefite is so proper to the Church, that we cannot otherwise enioy it, but if wee abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is distributed vnto vs by the ministers and Pastors, either by preaching of the Gospell, or by ministring of the Sacramentes: and that in this behalse principally appeareth the power of the keyes, which the Lorde hath giuen to the fellowship of the faithfull. Wherefore let euery one of vs thinke this to bee his duetie, no where else to seeke forgiuenes of sinnes, than where y^e Lord hath set it. Of pnblike reconciliation which belongeth to discipline we shal speake in place fit for it.

23 But forasmuch as those phrentike spirites that I haue spoken off, doe go about to plucke away from the Church this onely anchor of saluation, consciences are the more strongly to be confirmed against a so pestilent opiniõ. The Nouatians in old time trouble the Church with this doctrine: but not much vnlike to the Nouatians our age also hath many of the Anabaptistes which fall to the same dotages. For they faine that the people of God are in Baptisane regenerate into a pure and Angelike life, that is corrupted with no filthinesse of the fleshe. But if any man offende after baptisme, they leaue vnto him nothing but the vnappealable iudgemēt of God. Briefly they grant no hope of pardon to a sinner fallen after grace receiued: because they acknowledge no other forgiuencsse of finnes but that whereby wee bee first regenerate. But although there bee no lie more clearly confuted by the Scripture: yet because these men finde some whome they may deceiue (as also in olde time Nouatus had many followers) let vs shortly shewe howe mad they bee to their owne and others destruction. First, whereas by the commaundement of the Lorde, the holy ones doe dayly repute this praier, Mat. 6. 11. forgiue vs our dettes: truely they doe confesse themselues detters. Neither doe they craue it in vayne because the Lorde hath alway appointed no other thing to be asked, than that which hee himselfe woulde giue. Yea whereas he hath testified that the whole prayer shall bee hearde of his father, yet he hath also sealed this absolution with a peculiar promise. What wil we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones al their life long a confession of finnes, yea and that continuall, and promiseth pardon. What boldnesse is it, either to exempt them from sinne, or if they haue stumbled, vtterly to exclude them from grace? Nowe whome doeth he will vs to forgiue seuentie times seuen times? nor to our brethren? To what ende did hee commaund it, but that we shoulde followe his clemencie? He forgiueth therefore, not once or twise: but as often as being striken downe with the acknowledging of finnes they sigh vnto him.

24 But that (we may beginne in a manner at the verie swadling cloutes of the Church) the Patriarches were circumcised, being allured into partaking of the couenant, hauing vndoubtedly by their fathers diligence bene taught righteousnes and innocencie, when they conspired to murder their brother: this was a mischeeuous acte, to be abhorred euen of the most desperate theeues. At the last being meekened with the monitions of Iudas, they solde him: this was also an intollerable haynousnesse. Simeon and Leui, with wicked reuenge, and such as was also condemned by their owne fathers iudgement, vsed crueltie against the Sichemites. Ruben with moste vncleane lust defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when hee woulde giue himselfe to fornication against the lawe of nature, went in to his sonnes wife. And yet so farre are they from being wiped out of the chosen people, that they be rather raised vp to be heades of it. But what did Dauid? when he was a gouernour of iustice, with howe great wickednesse did hee by shedding of innocent bloode open the way to his blinde lust? Hee was already regenerate and among the regenerate garnished with notable praises of the Lorde: neuertheless hee committed that haynous offence, which is horrible euen among the Gentiles: and yet he obteyned pardon. And (that wee may not tarie vpon single examples) howe many promises there are in the lawe and the Prophetes of Gods mercie towards the Israelties, so oft it is proued that the Lorde sheweth himselfe appeaseable to the offences of his deople. For Deut. 30. 3. what doth Moses promise to come to passe, when the people being fallen into Apostasie shall returne vnto the Lorde? He shall bring thee backe out of captiuitie, and shall haue mercie on thee, and shall gather thee together out of the peoples to whome thou hast beene desperfed. If thou bee scattered euen to the borders of the heauen, I wil from thence againe gather thee together.

25 But I will not beginne a recitall that should neuer be ended. For the Prophetes are full of such promises, which doe yet offer mercie to the people couered with infinite wicked doings. What offence is there more hainous than rebellion? for it is called a diuorce betweene God and the Church. But this is ouercome by the goodnesse of God. What man is there (sayth he by Jer. 1. 3. & 12) that if his wife giue foorth her body in common to adulterers, can abide to returne into fauour with her? but with thy fornications all the wayes are polluted, O Iuda, the earth hath bin filled with thy filthy loues. But returne vnto me, and I will receiue thee. Returne thou turne away, I will not turne away my face from thee: because I am holy, and am not angry for euer. And truely he can be no otherwise minded, which affirmeth that he willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather \bar{y} he should be conuerted & liue. Therefore when Salomon did dedicate the temple, he appointed it also to this vse, that the prayers made for obtaining pardon of sinnes should be hearde from thence. If (sayde he) thy sonnes shall sinne (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou being angry shalt deliuer them to their enemies, and they shall repent in their heart, and being turned shall entreate thee in their captiuitie, saying, we haue sinned, we haue done wickedly, and shall pray toward the lande which thou hast giuen to their fathers, and rowarde this holy temple: thou shalt heare their praier in heauen, and shalt be made mercifull to thy people that hath sinned against thee, and to all their wickednesses wherewith they haue offended thee. And not vainely the Lord ordained in the law daily Sacrifices for sinnes. For if the Lord had not foreseene that his people should be troubled with continuall diseases of sins, he would neuer haue appointed these remedies for them.

26 Was this benefite taken away from the faithfull, by the comming of Christ, wherein the fulnes of grace was shewed foorth, so that they dare not now pray for pardon of sinnes? that if they offende the Lorde they may not obaine any mercie? What shall this be else, but to say that Christe came to the destruction of them that be his, and not to their saluation, if that mercifulnesse of God in pardoning sinnes which in the olde testament was continually ready for the holy ones, be now sayd to be vterly taken away? But if we beleue the Scriptures which expresly cry out, \bar{y} in Christ only the grace and kindenes of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifulnes of mercy was powred out, that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not dout that there floweth vnto vs a more bountifull mercifullnes of the heauenly father, than that it is cut of or shortned. And hereof there want not examples. Peter which had heard that he should be denied before the Angels of God that confessed not the name of Christ before men, denied him thrise in one night, and that not without execration: yet hee was not put away from pardon. They that liued inordinately among the Thessalonians are so chastised, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Euen Simon the Magician himselfe is not cast in desperation, but he is rather commaunded to hope well, when Peter counsellereth him to flee to prayer.

27 Yea most hainous sinnes haue sometime possessed whole Churches, out of which Paul rather gently vnwrapped them, than pronounced them accursed. The falling away of the Galathians was no meane offence. The Corinthians were so much lesse excusable than they, as they abounded in mo and those nothing lighter sinnes: yet neither of them are excluded from the mercie of God. Yea euen they that had sinned about the rest in vncleanness, fornication & vnchastity, are namely called to repentance. For the covenant of the Lord remaineth and shall remaine for euer inuiolable, which he solemnly made with Christ the true Salomon and his members, in these words: If his sonnes shall forsake my law, & shall not walke in my iudgements, if they shall despise my righteousnes, and not keepe my commandments; I will visit their iniquities with a rod, and their sins with stripes: But my mercie I will not take away from him. Finally by the very order of the Creede we be taught, that there remaineth in the Church of Christ continual pardon of sinnes: for that when the Church is as it were stablished, yet forgiuenesse of sinnes is adioyned.

28 Some that be somewhat wiser, when they see the doctrine of Nouatus to be confuted with so great plainnesse of Scripture, make not euery sinne unpardonable, but wilfull transgressing of the law, into which a man wittingly and willingly falleth. Now they that say so, do vouchsafe to graunt pardon to no sinne, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lorde in the lawe commaundeth one sorte of Sacrifices to be offred for cleansing of the wilfull sinnes of the faithfull, and other to redeeme their ignorances: how great lewednesse shall it be to graunt no cleansing to wilful sinne? I say that there is nothing plainer, than that the onely Sacrifice of Christ auaileth to forgiue the wilful sinnes of the holy ones: forasmuch as the Lord hath testified the same by carnall Sacrifices as by signes. Againe who can excuse Dauid by ignorance, whom it is euident to haue bin so well instructed in the lawe? Did Dauid not know how great was the fault of adultery and manslaughter, which daily punished the same in other? Did brother slaughter seeme to the Patriarkes a lawfull thing? Had the Corinthians so ill profited y they thought that wantonnesse, vncleannes, whordome, hatredes and contentions pleased God? Did Peter being so diligently admonished not know how great a matter it was to forswear his maister? Therefore let vs not with our owne enuiousnesse stop vp the way against the mercie of God that so gently vttereth it selfe.

29 Truly I am not ignorant that the olde writers expounded those sins that are daily forgiuen to the faithfull, to be the light offenses that creepe in by weakenesse of the fleshe: and that they thought that the solemn repentance which was then required for hainous misdeedes might no more bee iterate than Baptisme. Which saying is not so to bee taken, as though they would either throwe them downe headlong into desperation that after their first repentaunce hadde fallen againe, or extenuate those other sinnes as though they were small in the sight of GOD. For they knewe that the holy ones doe oftentimes stagger by infidelity, that superfluous othes doe sometimes fall from them, that they nowe and then are chafed vnto anger, yea that they breake out euen into manifest raylings, and beside these be troubled with other euilles which the Lorde not scenderly abhorreth: but they so called them, to put a difference betweene them and publike crimes that with great offence came to the knowledge of the Church. But wheras they did so hardly pardon them that had committed any thing worthie of Ecclesiasticall correction, they did not this therefore, because they thought that such shoulde hardly haue pardon with the Lorde: but by this seueritie they meant to make other afraide that they shoulde not rashly runne into wicked doings, by the deseruing whereof they might be estranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truely the worde of the Lorde which herein ought to be the only rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of discipline is so far to bee extended, that hee that ought cheefly to be prouided for be not swallowed vp with heatines: as we haue before declared more at large.

The ij. Chapter.

A comparison of the false Church with the true Church.

OF how great value the ministry of the worde and Sacramentes ought to be with vs, and howe farre the reuerence of it ought to proccede, that it be vnto vs aperpetuall token wherby to discern the Church, it hath bin already declared. That is to say, wherefoeuer that ministry abideth whole and vncorrupted, there the faulrs or diseases of maners are no impediment put that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the very ministry it selfe is by small errors not so corrupted, but that it may be esteemed lawfull. Moreouer we haue shewed that the errors that ought so to be pardoned are those wherby the principall doctrine of religion is not hurt, wherby those cheefe pointes of religion that ought to bee agreably holden among the faithfull are not destroyed, and in y^e Sacrament, those that doe not abolish nor empaire the lawfull institution of him that ordained them. But so soone as lying is broken into the cheefe tower of religion, so soone as the summe of necessarie doctrine is peruerted, and the vse of the Sacramentes falleth: truely the destruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an ende, when his throte is thrust through or his heart deadly wounded. And this is clearly proued by the wordes of Paul, when he teacheth that the foundation of the Church is laide vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophetes, Christ himselfe being the heade corner stone. If the foundation of the Church be the doctrine of the Prophetes and Apostles, by which the faithfull are commaunded to repose their saluation in onely Christ: then take away that doctrine, and howe shall the building stande any longer? Therefore the Church must needes fall downe where that summe of religion falleth which is onely able to vpholde it. Againe, if the true Church bee the pillar and stay of the trueth, it is certaine, that there is no Church, where lying and falshehoode haue vsurped the dominion. Ephe. 2. 20.

2 Sith it is in such case vnder the Papistrie, wee may vnderstand howe much of the Church is there remaining. In stead of the ministerie of y^e word, there reigneth a peruerse government and made of lies mingled together, which partly quençeth and partly choaketh the pure light: into the place of the Lordes Supper is entred a most filthie sacriledge: the forme of 1. Tim. 3. 15.

worshipping God is deformed with a manifolde and intolerable heape of superstitions: the doctrine, without which Christianitie cannot stande, is altogether buried and driuen out: the publike assemblies are the schooles of idolatric and vngodlinesse. Therefore there is no peril least in departing from a damnable partaking of so many mischieues, we be plucked from y^e Church of Christ. The communion of the Church was not ordeined to this ende that it should be a bond whereby we should be intangled with idolatric, vngodlinesse, ignorance of God, and other kindes of euils: but rather whereby we should be fast holden in the feare of God and obedience of trueth. They doe indeed gloriously set out their Church vnto vs, that there should seeme to bee no other Church in the worlde: and afterwarde, as though the victorie were gotten, they decree that all the Schismatikes that dare withdraw themselves from the obedience of that Church that they paint out: and that all be heretikes that dare once mutter against the doctrine thereof. But by what prooues doe they confirme that they haue the true Church? They alleadge out of the auncient Chronicles, what in olde time was in Italie, in Fraunce, in Spaine. They say that they fetch their beginning from those holy men that with sound doctrine founded and raised vp Churches, and stablished the same doctrine and edifying of the Church with their blood. And that so the Church hath bene among them so consecrate both with spirituall giftes, and with the bloode of martyrs, and preserued with continuall succession of Bishops, that it might not fall away. They rehearse howe much Irenaeus, Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, and other esteemed this succession. But howe trifling these things be, and howe they be but very mockeries, I will make them verie easie to vnderstande that will be content a litle to wey them with me. Truly I woulde also exhorte themselves earnestly to take heede hereunto, if I did trust that I might any thing preuaile with them by teaching. But for as much as they, leauing all regarde of trueth, doe bende themselves to this onely purpose, by all the wayes that they can, to defende their owne cause, I will onely speake a fewe things whereby good men and those that loue the trueth, may winde themselves out of their futile cauillations. First I aske of them, why they doe not alleadge Aphrike, and Egypt, and all Asia? Euen because in all those countries this holy Succession of Bishops hath ceased, by meane whereof they boast that they haue preserued Churches. They come therefore to this point to say, that they therefore haue a true Church, because since it first began to be, it hath not bene destitute of Bishoppes: for in perpetuall course they haue succeeded one another. But what if I cast Greece in their way? Therefore I aske againe of them, why they say that the Church is lost among the Grecians, among whome that succession of Bishoppes was neuer interrupted, which in their opinion is y^e onely keeper and preteruer of the Church. They make the Grecians Schismatikes, but by what right? because in departing from the Apostolike sea, they haue lost their priuilege: what? Doe not they much more deserue to loose it that departe from Christ himselfe? It followeth therefore, that the pretence of succession is but vaine, vnlesse the posteritie doe keepe fast & abide in the trueth of Christ, which they haue receiued of their fathers from hand to hande.

3 Therefore the Romanistes at this day doe alleage nothing else but \bar{y} which it appeareth that the Iewes in old time alleaged when they were by the Prophets of the Lord reproofed of blindness, vngodlinesse and idolatry. For they gloriously boasted of the temple, Ceremonies & priesthoods, by which things, by great reason as they thinke they measured the church. So in steede of the Church, they shewe certaine outward visors, that oftentimes are farre from the Church, and without which the Church may very well stand. Therefore we neede to confute them with no other argument, then that wherewith Hieremy fought against the foolish presumptuousnes of the Iewes: that is, that they should not boast in lying wordes, saying, The temple of the Lorde, the temple of the Lorde, it is the temple of the Lorde. Forasmuch as the Lord doeth no where acknowledge any thing for his, but where his word is hearde and reuerently obserued. So when the glorie of God did sit betweene the Cherubins in the Sanctuarie, & hee had promised them that that should be his stedfast seat: yet when the Priestes once corrupted the worshipping of him with peruerse superstitions, he remoued else where, & left the place without any holinesse. If the same temple which seemed to be holily appointed to the perpetual dwelling of God, might be forsaken of God and become vnholie: there is no cause why these men shoulde faine to vs that God is so bounde to persons or places, and so fast tied to outward obseruations, that he must needs abide with them that haue only the title and shewe of the Church. And this is it about which Paul contendeth in the Epistle to the Romanes, from the 9. chapter to the 12. For this did fore trouble weakē consciences, that the Iewes when they seemed to be the people of God, did not onely refuse the doctrine of the Gospel, but also persecute it. Therefore after that he hath set out the doctrine, hee remoueth this doubt, and denieth that those Iewes being enemies of the truth are the Church, howsoeuer they wanted nothing that otherwise might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, because they embraced not Christ. But somewhat more expressely in the Epistle to the Galathians: wherein comparing Ismael with Isaac, he saith that many hold place in the Church, to whome the inheritance belongeth nor, because they are not begotten of the free mother. From whence also he descendeth to the comparison of two Hierusalems. Because as the lawe was giuen in the mount Sina, but the Gospell came out of Hierusalem. So many being seruilly borne and brought vp do without douting boast themselues to be \bar{y} children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly despise the naturall children of God, when themselues be but bastards. On the other side also, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heauen: Cast out the bond woman and her sonne, let vs, standing vpon this inuolable decree, boldly despise their vsuery boastings. For if they bee proud by reason of outward profession, Ismael was also circumcised: if they contende by antiquitie, hee was the first begotten, and yet we see that he is put away. If the cause be demaunded, Paul assigneth it, for that none are accounted children, but they that are begotten of the pure lawfull seede of doctrine. According to this reason God denieth that he is bounde to wicked priestes by this that he covenanted with their Father Leui that he should be his Angel or interpreter:

yea, he turneth against themselves their false boasting, wherewith they were wont to rise vp against the Prophets, that the dignitie of Priesthood was to be had in singular estimation. This he willingly admitteth, and with y^e same condition he debateth with them, because hee is readie to keepe his covenant, but when they do not mutually performe their parte to him, they deserue to be reiected. Loe what succession auaieth, vnlesse therewithall bee also ioyned an imitation and euenly continuing course: euen to this effect, y^e the successors, so soone as they be proued to haue swarued from their originall, be deprived of all honor. Vnlesse perhaps because Caiphaz succeeded many godly Bishops (yea there was euē from Aaron to him a continual vnbroken course of succession) therefore that same mischieuous assembly was worthie the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euen in earthly dominions, that the tyrannie of Caligula, Nero, Heliogabalus and such other, should be called a true state of Common weale, for that they succeeded the Brutes, Scipions, & Camilles. But specially in the gouernement of the Church there is nothing more fonde, than leauing the Doctrine to set the succession in the Persons onely. But neither did the holy doctours whome they falsely thrust in vnto vs, meane any thing lesse, then to proue that precisely as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there where Bishops are successiue placed one after another. But where as it was then out of controuersie, that from the very beginning to that age nothing was changed in Doctrine, they alleaged that which might suffice to make an ende of all newe errours, that is, that by those was that doctrine oppugned, which had bene euen from the Apostles constantly and with one agreeing consent retained. There is therefore no cause, why they should any longer go forward to deceiue by pretending a false colour vnder the name of y^e church which wee do reuerently esteeme as becommeth vs: but when they come to the definition of it, not onely water (as the common saying is) cleaueth vnto them, but they sticke fast in their owne myre because they put a stinking harlot in place of the holy spouse of Christ. That this putting in of a changeling should not deceiue vs, beside other admonitions, let vs remember this also of Augustine. For speaking of the Church, he saith: It is it that is sometime darkened, & couered with multitude of offences as wth a cloude: sometime calmenesse of time appeareth quiet & free: sometime is hidden and troubled with waues of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, that oftentimes the strongest pillars either valiantly suffred banishment for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world.

4 In like maner the Romanistes do vex vs, and make afraide the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Christ. Therefore although they pretend the temple, the priesthood & the other such outward shewes, this vaine glistring wherewith the eyes of the simple be daseled ought nothing to moue vs to graunt that there is a church where the Worde of God doeth not appeare. For this is the perpetual mark wherewith God hath marked them y^e be his. He that is of the tructh (sayth he) heareth my voice. Againe, I am that good sheepeheard, & I knowe my sheepe, & am knowen of them. My sheepe heare my voice, & I knowe them, & they follow me. And a litle before he had said, that the sheepe follow their sheepe.

shepherd, because they knewe his voice: but they follow not a stranger, but runne away from him because they knew not the voice of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfully mad in iudging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoutfull signe, which whersoever it is seene can not deceiue, but that it certainly sheweth the Church to bee there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing that can giue a true signification of the Church. For Paul rehearseth that y^e church was builded, not vpon the iudgements of men, Eph. 2. 20. not vpon priesthoodes, but vpon the doctrine of the Apostles and Prophets. But rather Hierusalem is to be seuerally knowen frō Babylon, & the Church of Christ from the conspiracy of Satan, by y^e difference wherewith Christ hath made them different one from the other. He that is of God (saith he) heareth the wordes of God. Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a sum, forasmuch as the church is the kingdom of Christ, and he reigneth not Iohn. 8. 47 but by his word, can it be now doutfull to any man, but y^e those be the words of lying, by which Christs kingdome is fained to be without his scepter, that is to say without his holy word?

5 But now where as they accuse vs of Schisme & heresie, because we both preach a contrary doctrine to them, and obey not their lawes, and haue our assemblies, to Prayers, to Baptisme, to the ministracion of the Supper, & other holy doings, seuerally from the: it is in deede a very sore accusation, but such as needeth not a long or laborious defence. They are called heretikes and schismatikes, which making a diuision, do breake in sunder the communion of the Church. And this cōmunion is holden together with true bonds, that is to say, the agreement of true doctrine, and brotherly charitie. Whereupon Augustine putteth this difference betweene heretikes and schismatikes, that heretiks in deede do with false doctrines corrupt the purenes of faith, but the schismatikes sometime euen where there is like faith, do breake the bonde of fellowshipp. But this is also to be noted, that this conioyning of charitie so hangeth vpon the vnitie of Faith, that Faith ought to be y^e beginning therof, the end, and finally the only rule. Let vs therefore remember that so oft as the vnitie of the Church is commended vnto vs, this is required, that while our minds agree in Christ, our wils also may be ioined to gether with mutual wel willing in Christ. Therefore Paul, when he exhorteth vs to that wel willing, taketh for his foundation that there is one God, one Faith, and one Baptisme. Eph. 4. 5. Yea whersoever he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, he by and by addeth in Christ, or according to Christ: meaning that it is a factious Phi. 2. 2. & 5 company of the wicked, and not agreement of the faithfull which is without the worde of the Lord.

6 Cyprian also following Paul deriueth the whole fountaine of the agreement of the Church, from the only bishoprik of Christ. He afterward addeth the Church is but one, which spredeth abroad more largely into a multitude with encrease of frutefulnessse: like as there be many sunne beames, but one light: and manie branches of a tree, but one bodie grounded vpon a fast roote: And when many streames do flow from one fountaine, although the number seeme to be scattered abroad by largeness of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnyty abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the sunne from the body, the vnitie can suffer no diuision. Breake a branch from the tree, De simpl. præla

the broken branch can not spring. Cut of the streame from the spring head, being cut off it drieth vp. So also the church being ouerspred with y^e light of the Lord, is extended ouer the whole world: yet there is but one light that is spred euery where. Nothing could be said more fitly to expresse that vndiuidable knitting together, which all the members of Christ haue one with another. We see howe he continually calleth vs backe to the very head. Wherupon he pronounceth that heresies & schismes doe arise hereof, that men do not returne to the original of truth, nor do seeke y^e hed, nor kepe the doctrine of the heauenly master. Now let them go and cry y^e we be heretiks that haue departed from their church: sith there hath bin no cause of our estrāging frō them but this one, that they can in no wise abide the pure professing of the truth: but I tell not how they haue driuen vs out with cursings and cruel execrations. Which very selfe doing doth abundantly enough acquite vs, vnlesse they will also condemne the Apostles for Schismatikes, with whome we haue all one cause. Christ (I say) did foresay to his Apostles, y^e the time should come when they should be cast out of the Sinagogues for his names sake. And those Sinagogues of which he speaketh, were then accounted lawefull Churches. Sith therefore it is euident that we be cast out, and we be ready to shew that the same is done for the names sake of Christ, truly the cause ought first to be inquired of, before that any thing be determined vpon vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they wil, I am content to discharg the of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behoued that we shoulde depart from them, that we might come to Christ.

7 But it shall appeare yet more certainly in what estimation we ought to haue al the Churches whom the tyranny of that Romish idol hath possessed, if it be compared with the olde Church of the Israelites, as it is described in the Prophetes. There was then a true Church among the Iewes and Israelites, when they continued in the lawes of the couenant, for they obteyned those thinges by the benefit of God, wherupon the Church consisteth. They had the truth of doctrine in the lawe: the ministerie thereof was among the Priestes and the Prophetes: with the signe of circumcision they entred into religion: by other Sacramentes they were exercised to the confirmation of Faith. It is no doubt that those titles wherewith the Lorde hath honored his Church, fitly pertained to their fellowship. After that, forsaking the lawe of the Lord, they went out of kind to idolatrie and superstition, they partly lost that prerogatiue. For who dare take away the name of the Church frō them, with whome God hath left the preaching of his word and obseruation of his mysteries? Againe, who dare call that the Church without any exception, where the worde of the Lord is openly and freely troden vnder foote? where the ministry thereof, the chiefe sinewe, yea the very soule of the Church is destroyed?

8 What then? will some mā say: was there therefore no parcel of a Church remaining among the Iewes after that they fel away to idolatry? The answer is easie. First I say that in the very falling away there were certaine degrees. For wee will not say that there was all one fall of Iuda, and Israell, at such time as they both first swarted from the pure worshipping of God. When Iarobcam first made calues, against the open prohibition of G O D, and did dedicate dedicate an vnlawfull place for worshipping, he did vtterly corrupt religiō. The Iewes did first defile themselues with wicked and superstitious maners before that they wrongfully changed the order in the outward forme of religion. For although vnder Rechabem they had already gotten them many peruerse Ceremonies: yet because there taried at Hierusalem both the Doctrine of the Law, and the Priesthood, & the Ceremonious vsages in such sort as God had ordained them, the godly had there a tolerable state of Church. Among the Israelites vnto y^e reigne of Achab, there was no amendment of things, and from thence forth they fell from worse to worse. They that succeeded afterward, to the verie destruction of the kingdome, partly were like vnto him, & partly (when they minded to be somewhat better than he) they folowed the example of Iarobeam: but they al euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were now & then diuerse changes, while some kings peruerted the worshipping of God with false & forged superstitions, some other restored religion that was decayed: vntill the verie priestes themselues defiled the temple of God with prophane and abominable vsages.

9 Nowe let the Papistes if they can howe much soeuer they extenuate their owne faults, deny that among them the state of religion is as corrupt and defiled as it was in the kingdom of Israel vnder Iarobeam. But they haue a grosser idolatrie: and in doctrine they are not one drop purer: vnlesse peradventure euen in it also they be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane judgement, shalbe witnesses with me, & the thing it selfe also declareth, how herein I tell nothing more than truth. Nowe when they will driue vs to the communion of the Church, they require two things of vs; first, that we shoulde communicate with all their prayers, sacraments, and Ceremonies: then that whatsoeuer honor, power and iurisdiction Christ giueth to his Church, wee shoulde giue the same to their Church. As to the first point, I graunt that all the Prophets that were at Hierusalem, when things were there very much corrupted, did neither seuerally sacrifice, nor had assembles to pray seueral from other men. For they had a commaundement of God, whereby they were commaunded to come together into Salomons temple: they knewe that the Leuitical priests, howe soeuer they were vnworthie of that honor, yet because they were ordeined by the Lord ministers of the holy Ceremonies, and were not as then deposed, did yet stil rightfully possesse that place. But (which is the chiefe point of this question) they were compelled to no superstitious worshipping, yea they tooke in hand to do nothing but that which was ordained by G O D. But among these men, I meane the Papistes, what like thing is there? For we can scarcely haue any meeting together with them, wherein wee shal not defile our selues with open idolatrie. Truly the principall bond of their communion is in the masse, which we abhorre as the greatest sacrilege. And whether we do this rightfully or wrongfully, shalbe seene in another place. At this present it is enough to shewe that in this behalfe wee are in other case than y^e Prophets were, which although they were present at the Ceremonies of the wicked, were not compelled to beholde or vse any Ceremonies but such as were institute by God. And, if they wil needs haue an example altogether like, let vs take it out of the kingdome of Israel. After the ordinance of Ierobeam Circumcission remained, the sacrifices were offered, the lawe was accounted holy, the same God was called vpon whome they had receiued of their Fathers: but for the forged & forbidden formes of worshipping, God disallowed and condemned all that was there done. Shewe mee one Prophet, or any one godly man that once worshipped or sacrificed in Bethell. For they knewe they coulde not do it, but that they shoulde defile themselues with some sacrilege. Wee haue then thus much, that the communion of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it should degenerate to prophane and filthie vsages, they shoulde forthwith of necessitie follow it.

10 But about the other point we contende yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whose iudgement wee ought to reuerence, whose authoritie to regarde, whose monitions to obey, with whose chastisements to be moued, whose communion in all things wee ought religiously to obserue, then we cannot grant them a Church, but that wee must of necessitie be bound to subiection & obedience vnto it. Yet we wil willingly graunt them that which the Prophets granted to the Iewes & Israelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or in better state. But wee see how eche where they crie out, that their assemblies are vnholie, to which it is no more lawfull to consent than it is to denie God. And truely if these were Churches, it followeth therefore that in Israel Helias, Micheas and such other: in Iurie, Efaie, Ieremie, Osee and other of that sort, whome the

11 But as in the olde time there yet remained among the Iewes certaine peculiar prerogatiues of the Church, so at this day also wee take not from y the Papistes such steppes as it pleased the Lorde to haue remaining among them

them after the dissipation of the Church. The Lorde had once made his couenant with the Iewes. That same rather being vpholden by the stedfastnesse of it selfe did continue with striuing against their vngodlinesse, than was preferred by them. Therefore (such was the assurednesse and constancie of Gods goodnesse) there remained the couenant of the Lord, neither could his faithfulness be blotted out by their vnfaithfulness: neither could Circumcision be so prophaned with their vncleane hands, but that it stil was the signe and sacrament of that couenant. Whereupon the children that were borne of them, the Lord called his own, which vnlesse it were by speciall blessing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his couenant in France, Italy, Germany, Spaine, Englande: since those prouinces haue beene oppressed with the tyranny of Antichrist, yet that his couenant might remaine inuiolable, first he there preferred Baptisme, the testimonie of his couenant, which being consecrate by his own mouth retaineth her own force notwithstanding the vngodlines of man: then, with his prouidence he hath wrought that there should remaine other remnantes, least the Church shoulde be vtterly destroyed. And as oftentimes buildinges are so pulled downe, that the foundations & ruines remaine: so he hath not suffred his Church either to be ouerthrowen by Antichrist from the very foundation, or to be layd cuen with the ground (howsoeuer to punish the vnthankfulness of men that had despised his worde, he suffereth horrible shaking and dissipation to chance) but euen after the very waisting hee willed that the building halfe pulled downe should yet remaine.

12 Whereas therefore we will not simply graunt to the Papistes the title of the Church, we do not therefore deny that there be Churches among the: but onely we contend of the true and lawfull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the sacramentes which are the signes of profession, but also specially of doctrine. Daniel and Paul foretolde that Antichrist should sitte in the temple of God. With vs wee account the Bishoppe of Rome the captaine and standarde bearer of that wicked and abominable kingdome. Whereas his seate is placed in the temple of GOD, thereby is meant that his kingdome shalbe such as can not abolish the name of Christ nor of his Church. Hereby therefore appeareth, that we doe not deny but that euen vnder his tyranny remaine Churches, but such as he hath prophaned with vngodlinesse full of sacrilege, such as he hath afflicted with outrageous dominion, such as he hath corrupted and in manner killed with euill and damnable doctrines, as with poysoned drinks: such wherin Christ lieth halfe buried, the Gospell ouerwhelmed, godlinesse banished, the worshipping of God in a manner abolished: such finally wherin all things are so troubled, that therein rather appeareth the face of Babylon than of the holy citie of God. In a summe, I say that they be Churches, in respect that the Lorde there maruelously preserveth the remnauntes of his people howe soeuer they were dispersed and scattered abroad, in respecte that there remaine some tokens of the Church, specially these tokens, the effectualnesse whereof neither the craft of the deuill, nor the malitiousnesse of man can destroy. But on the other side because these markes are blotted out, which in this discourse we ought principally to haue respect vnto, I say that euery one of their assembles and the whole body wanteth the lawfull forme of a Church.

The iii. Chapter.

Of the teachers and ministers of the Church, and of their election and office.

NOwe it is meete that we speake of the order, by which it was the Lordes will to haue this Church gouerned. For although in his Church hee onely must rule and reigne, yea and beare preeminence or excell in it, and this gouernment to be vsed or executed by his onely worde: yet because he dwelleth not among vs in visible presence, so that hee can presently with his owne mouth declare his will vnto vs, we haue sayde that in this he vseth the ministerie of men, and as it were the trauaile of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth hee might doe his owne worke, like as a workeman to doe his worke vseth his instrumente. I am compelled to repeate againe those things that I haue already declared. He might in deede doe it either by himselfe without any other helpe or instrument, or also by meane of Angelles: but there are many causes why he had rather doe it by men. For by this meane first he declareth his good will towarde vs, when he taketh out of men them that shall doe his message in the worlde, that shalbe the interpreters of his secrete wil, finally that shall represent his owne person. And so by experience he pro-ueth that it is not vaine that commonly hee calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men, as out of his sanctuarie, he giueth aunsweres to men. Secondly, this is the best and most profitable exercise to humilitie, when hee accustometh vs to obey his worde, howe so euer it bee preached by men like vnto vs, yea sometime our inferiours in dignitie. If hee himselfe spake from heauen, it were no marueile if his holy Oracles were without delay reuerently receiued with the eares and mindes of all men. For who would not dreede his power being in presence? who woulde not be thrown downe at the first sight of so greate maicstie? who woulde not be confounded with that infinite brightnesse? But when some silly man risen out of the dust speaketh in the name of GGD, herewith verie good restimonie we declare our godlinesse and reuerent obedience towarde God himselfe, if to his minister we yeelde our selues willing to learne, which yet in nothing excelleth vs. Therefore for this cause also hee hath hidden the treasure of his heauenly wisdom in bricke and earthen vessels, that he might haue the certainer prooffe howe much he is esteemed of vs. Moreouer there was nothing fitter for the cherishing of mutuall charitie, than that men shoulde be bounde together one to an other with this bonde, when one is made a pastor to teach the rest, and they y are commanded to be schoolers receiue all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euery man were able enough to serue himselfe, and needeth not the heipe of an other: such is the pride of mans nature, that euery one woulde despise other, and shoulde againe be despised of them. Therefore the Lorde hath bounde his Church with that knotte, which he foresawe to be the strongest knotte to houlde vnity together, when he hath left with men the doctrine of saluation, and of eternall life, that by their handes he might communicate it to the rest. Hereunto Paul had respect when he wrote to the Ephesians, One body one spirit, as also ye be called in one hope of your calling. One Lorde, one faith, one Baptisme. One God, and the father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is giuen according to the measure of the gifte of Christ. Wherefore he sayeth: When he was gone vp on hie, he ledde captiuitie captiue, he gaue giftes to men. He that went downe is the selfe same he, that went vp, that he might fulfill all things. And the same hath giuen some to be Apostles, and some Prophetes, and some Euangelistes, and other some Pastors and teachers, vnto the restoring of the holy ones, to the worke of ministracion, to the edifying of the body of Christ, vntill we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the Sonne of G G D, into a perfect man, into the measure of full growen age: that we be no more children that may bee carried about with euery winde of doctrine: but following trueth in charitie, let vs in all things growe into him that is the heade, euen Christ, in whome the whole body conioyned and compacted together by all the ioynt of subministracion, according to the working in measure of euerie parte, maketh encrease of the body, vnto the edifying of it selfe by charitie.

2 By these wordes he sheweth, that that ministerie of men, which God vseth in governing his Church is the chiefe sinew, whereby the faithful cleaue together in one body: and also hee sheweth that the Church can not otherwise be preserued safe, but if it be vpholden by these staies, in which it pleased the Lorde to repose the saluation of it, Christ (sayth hee) is gone vp on hie, that he might fulfill all things. This is the maner of fulfilling, that by his ministers, to whom he hath committed that office, and hath giuen the grace to execute that worke, he disposeth and distributeth his gifts to the Church, yea and after a certaine manner giueth himselfe present, with extending the power of his spirit in this institution, that it should not be vaine or idle. So is the restoring of the holy ones performed: so is the body of Christ edified so doe we by all things growe into him that is the head, and doe grow together among our selues: so are we all brought into the vnitie of Christ, if propheticie flourish among vs, if we receiue the Apostles, if we refuse not the doctrine ministred vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the dissipation, or rather the ruine and destruction of the Church, whosoeuer he be that either endeuoreth to abolish this order of whom we speake, & this kinde of government, or miniseth the estimation of it as a thing not so necessarie. For neither the light & heate of the sun, nor meat and drinke are so necessary to nourish and susteine this present life, as the office of Apostles and pastors is necessary to preserue the Church in earth.

3 Therefore I haue aboue admonished, that God hath oftentimes with such titles as he could, commended the dignitie thereof vnto vs, that wee should haue it in most hy honour and price, as the most excellent thing of all. He testifieth that he giueth to men a singular benefite, in raising them vp teachers, where he commaundeth the Prophete to crie out thai faire are the secte, and blessed is the comming of them that bring tidinges of peace: and when he calleth the Apostles the light of the worlde, and salte of the earth. Neither could this office be more honorably aduanced, than it was when he sayde: He that heareth you, heareth me. He that despiseth you, despiseth me. But there is no place more plaine, than in Paul in his seconde Epistle to the Corinthians, where hee as it were of purpose entreateth of this matter. He affirmeth therefore, that there is nothing in the Church more excellent or glorious than the ministry of the Gospell, forasmuch as it is the administration of the Spirit, and of righteousnesse, and of eternal life. These and like sayings serue to this purpose, that that order of gouerning and preserving the Church by ministers, which y^e Lo:rd hath stablished for euer, should not growe out of estimation among vs, and so at length by very contempt grow out of vse. And howe great is the necessity thereof, he hath declared not onely by wordes, but also by examples. When his will was to shine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his trueth, he sent an Angell from heauen to sende Peter vnto him. When his will was to call Paul to the knowledge of himselfe, and to engrasse him into the Church, he spake not to him with his owne voyce, but sent him to a man, of whome he should receiue both the doctrine of saluation, and the sanctification of Baptisme. If it bee not done without cause, that an Angel, which is the interpreter of God, do himselfe abstein from declaring the wil of God, but commandeth that a man be sente for, to declare it: and not without cause that Christ the onely schoole-master of the faithfull committeth Paul to the schooling of a man, yea euen that same Paul whom he had detemined to take vp into the third heauen, and to vouchsafe to graunt him miraculous reuelation of things vspeakeable: who is there nowe that dare despise that ministerie, or passe it ouer as a thing superfluous, the vse wherof it hath pleased God to make approved by such examples?

4 They that haue rule of the government of the Church accordinge to the institution of Christ, are named of Paul first Apostles, then Prophetes, thirdly Euangelistes, fourthly Pastors, last of all teachers. Of which, the two last alone haue ordinarie office in the Church: the other three the Lorde raised vp at the beginning of his kingdome, and sometime yet also raiseth vp, as the necessitie of times requireth. What is the Apostles office, appeareth by that commaundement: goe, preach the Gospell to euery creature. There are not certaine bounds appointed vnto them: but the whole world is assigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Christe: that in spreading the Gospell among all nations wheresoeuer they shall bee able, they may eche where raise vp his kingdome. Therefore Paul, when hee wente about to prooue his Apostleshippe, rehearseth that he hath gotten to Christ not some one citie, but hath farre and wide spread abroade the Gospell: and that he hath not layde his handes to an other mans foundation, but planted Churches where the name of the Lorde hadde neuer bene heard of. Therefore the Apostles were sent to bring backe the worlde from falling away, vnto true obedience of G O D, and eche where to stablish his kingdome by preachinge of the Gospell: or (if you like that better) as the first builders of the Church, to lay the foundations thereof in all the worlde. Prophetes he calleth, not all expositors of Goddes will whatsoeuer they bee, but those that by singular reuelation excelled, such as at this time either bee none, or are lesse notable. By Euangelistes I vnderstande those, which when in dignitie they were lesse than the Apostles, yet in office were next vnto them, yea and occupied their roomes. Such were Luk, Timothie, Titus and other like: and paradventure also the seuentie Disciples, whome Christ appointed in the seconde place after the Apostles. According to this exposition (which Luke. 10. 1. Luke. 11. seemeth to mee agreable both with the wordes and meaning of Paul) those three offices were not ordeined in the Church to this ende that they should be perpetuall, but onely to serue for that time wherein Churches were to be erected, where were none before, or at least to bee remooued from Moses to Christ. Albeit I denie not, but that afterwarde also the Lorde hath sometime raised vp Apostles, or at least in their places Euangelistes, as it hath ben done in our time. For it was needfull to haue such, to bring backe y^e Church from the falling away of Antichrist. Yet the office it selfe I doe neuer theles call extraordinarie, because it hath no place in the Churches alreadie well set in order. Next after these are Pastors and Teachers, whome the Church may neuer lacke: betweene whome I think that there is this difference, that the Teachers are not appointed to beare rule of discipline, nor for the ministracion of Sacramentes, nor admonishentes or exhortations, but onely to expounde the Scripture, that pure and sounde doctrine may bee kepte among the faithfull. But the office of Pastor containeth all these thinges within it.

5 Now we haue, which were those ministeries in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were those that were ordeyned to endure perpetually. If we ioyne the Euangelistes with the Apostles, wee shall haue remaining two couples after a certaine manner answering the one to the other. For as our Teachers are like to the olde Prophetes, in such sorte are our Pastors like to the Apostles. The office of Prophetes was more excellent, by reason of the singular gift that they had of reuelation: but y^e office of teachers hath in a manner like order, and altogether the same end. So those xij. whom the Lord did choose, that they should publish abroad to the world the new preaching of the Gospell, in degree & dignitie went before the rest. For although by the meaning and propertie of the word, all the ministers of the Church may be rightly called Apostles, because they are sent of the Lord, & are his messengers: yet because it was much behouefull, that there should be a certaine knowledge had of the sending of them y^e should bring a thing newe and vnheard of, it was necessarie that those xij. (to whose number Paul was afterward added) should be garnished wth some peculiar title about the rest. Paul himselfe indeed in one place giueth this name to Andronicus and Iunias, whom he saith to haue bene notable among the Apostles: but when he meaneth to speake properly he refereth it to none other but to that principall degree. And this is the common vse of the Scripture. Yet the Pastors (sauiug that each of them do gouerne severall Churches appointed to them) haue all one charge with the Apostles. Now what maner of thing this is, let vs yet heare it more plinely.

6 The Lorde when he sent the Apostles, gaue them commaundement (as we saide euen nowe) to preach the Gospell, and to baptise them that beleeue vnto forgiveness of sinnes. Hee had before commaunded, that they should shoulde distribute the holy signes of his bodie and bloode, as he had done. Loe here is a holy, inuioable and perpetuall lawe laid vpon them that succeed in the Apostles place, wherby they receiue commandement to preach the Gospell, and minister the Sacramentes. Whereupon wee gather, that they which neglect both these thinges, doe falsely say that they beare the person of the Apostles. But what of the Pastors? Paul speaketh not of himselfe onely, but of them all, when hee saith: let a man so esteeme vs as the ministers of Christ, and distributors of the mysteries of God. Againe in another place, a Bishoppe must be a fast holder of that faithfull worde which is according to doctrine: that he may bee able to exhort by sounde doctrine, and to conuince the gainsayers. Out of those and like places, which are ech where to be founde, we may gather, that also in the office of the Apostles these bee the two principall partes, to preach the Gospell, and to minister the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it consisteth not onely in publicke Sermons, but belongeth also to priuate admonitions. So Paul calleth the Ephesians to witnes that he hath not fled from doing of any of those things that were for their profit, but that he preached and taught them both openly and in euerie house, testifying both to the Iewes and Grecians, repentance and faith in Christ. Againe a little after: that hee hath not ceased with teares to admonish euery one of them. Neither yet belongeth it to my purpose at this present to expresse all the qualities of a good Pastor, but onely to point out what they professe that call themselues Pastors: that is, that they are so made rulers of the Church, nor that they shoulde haue an idle dignitie, but that they shoulde with the doctrine of Christ instruct the people to true godlinesse, minister the holy mysteries, and preferue and exercise vpright discipline. For whosoever be set to be watchmen in the Church, the Lord declareth vnto them, yf any by their negligence perish through ignorance, hee will require the bloode at their handes. That also pertaineth to them all, which Paul saith of himselfe: woe to me vnlesse I preach the Gospell, forasmuch as the distributing thereof is committed to mee. Finally what the Apostles performed to the whole worlde, the same ought euery Pastor to performe to his flocke, to which he is appointed.

7 Albeit when we assigne to euery one their seuerall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bound to one Church may helpe other Churches, if any troublesome thing doe happen that requireth his presence, or if he be asked counsel of any darke matter. But forasmuch as for the keeping of the peace of the Church, this policie is necessarie, that there be set foorth to euery man what hee shoulde doe, least all be confusedly disordered, runne about without calling, or rashly runne altogether into one place, and least such as are more carefull for their owne commoditie than for the edification of the Church, shoulde at their owne will leaue their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to be kept so neere as may bee, that euery man contented with his owne boundes shoulde not breake into an other mans charge. And this is no inuention of man, but the ordinance of God himselfe. For we reade that Paul and Barnabas created Priestes in al the seuerall Churches of Listra, Antioche, Iconium: and Paul himselfe commaundeth Titus that he should appoint Priestes in euery town. So in one place he speaketh of the Bishoppes of Philippes, and in an other place of Archippus Bishop of the Colossians. And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Priestes of the Church of Ephesus. Whosoever therefore shall take vpon him the gouernement and charge of the Church, let him knowe that hee is bounde to this lawe of gods calling: not that as bounde to the soile (as the lawyers tearme it) that is, made bounde and fastened vnto it, hee may not once moue his foot from thence, if the common profite doe so require, so that it be done well and orderly: but hee that is called into one place ought not himselfe to thinke of remoouing, nor seeke to be deliuered as he shall thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then, if it be expedient that any be remooued to an other place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne priuate aduise, but to tarie for publike authoritie.

8 But whereas I haue without difference called them Bishoppes, and Priestes, and Pastors, and ministers, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vsage of the scripture, which indifferently vseth these wordes. For whosoever doe execute the ministerie of the worde, to them hee giueth the title of Bishops. So in Paul, where Titus is commanded to appoint Priestes in euery towne, it is immediatly added, For a Bishop must be vnreprovable, &c. So in an other place he saluteth many Bishops in one Church. And in y^e Acte it is rehearsed, that he called together the Priestes of Ephesus, whom he himselfe in his owne sermon calleth Bishops. Here nowe it is to be noted, y^e hitherto we haue recited none but those offices that stande in the ministry of the worde: neither doth Paul make mention of any other in that fourth chapter which we haue alleaged. But in the Epistle to the Romanes, and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, he reckoneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernment, caring for the poore. Of the which I omitted those that endured but for a time, because it is to no profitable purpose to tary vpon them. But there are two that doe perpetually abide, that is to say, gouernment and care of the poore. Gouernours I thinke were the Elders chosen out of the people, that shoulde together with the Bishoppes, haue rule of the iudgement of manners, and the vsing of discipline. For a man cannot other wise expounde that which he sayth: let him that ruleth doe it with carefulnesse. Therefore at y^e beginning euerie Church had their Senate, gathered of godly, graue and holy men: which had that same iurisdiction in correcting of vices, whereof wee shal speake hereafter. And that this was the order of more than one age, experience it selfe declareth. Therefore this office of gouernment is also necessarie for all ages.

9 The care of the poore was committed to the Deacons. Howbeit to y^e Romanes there are set two kindes. Let him that giueth (saith Paul in that place) doe it in simplicitie: let him that hath mercy, doe it in chearefulnesse. Forasmuch as it is certain that he speaketh of y^e publike offices of y^e Church, it must needs be that there were two seuerall degrees. Vnlesse my iudgement deceiue mee, in the first point hee meaneth Deacons, that distributed the almes: in the other he speaketh of them that had giuen themselues to looking to the poore and sicke: of which sort were the widowes of whome hee maketh mention to Timothie. For women coulde execute no other pubpublike office, but to giue themselues to the seruice of the poore. If we grant this, (as we must needs grant it) then there shalbe two sortes of Deacons: of which one sort shall serue in distributing the thinges of the poore, the other in looking to the poore of the Church themselues. But although the very worde Diaconia, Deaconrie extendeth further: yet the Scripture specially calleth them Deacons, to whom the Church hath giuen the charge to distribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were stewardest of the common treasure of the poore: whose beginning, institution and office, is described of Luke in the Actes. For when a murmuring was raised by the Grecians: for that in the ministerie of \bar{y} poore their widowes were neglected, the Apostles excusing themselues with saying that they coulde not serue both offices, both the preaching of the word and the ministring at tables, required of the multitude, that there might bee choosen seuen honest men, to whome they might comit that doing. Lo what manner of Deacons the Apostolike Church had, and what Deacons it were meete for vs to haue according to their example.

1. Tim. 5. 10.

Aa. 6. 3.

10 Nowe whereas in the holy assemblie all things are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherein that ought to bee more diligently obserued, than in stablishing the order of government: because their is no where greater perill if any thing be done vnorderly. Therefore to the ende that vnquiet and troublefome men (which otherwise would happen) should rashly thrust in themselues to teach or to rule, it is expressly prouided, that no man shoulde without calling take vpon him a publike office in \bar{y} Church. Therefore \bar{y} a man may be iudged a true minister of the Church, first he must bee orderly called: then hee must aunswere his vocation, that is to say, take vpon him and execute the dueties enioyned him. This we may oftentimes marke in Paul: which when he meaneth to approoue his Apostleship, in a manner alway with his faithfulness in executing his office hee allegeth his calling. If so great a minister of Christ dare not take vpon himselfe the authoritie that hee shoulde be hearde in the Church, but because hee both is appointed thereunto by the commaundement of the Lorde, and also faithfully performeth that which is committed vnto him: how great shamefulness shall it be, if any man wanting both or either of these, shal challenge such honour to himselfe? But because wee haue aboue touched the necessitie of executing the office, nowe let vs entreate onely of the calling.

11 The discourse thereof standeth in foure pointes: that wee shoulde knowe, what manner of ministers, howe, and by whome ministers ought to bee institute, and with what vsage or what ceremonie they are to be admitted. I speake of the outward and solemne calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that secrete calling, whereof euery minister is priuie in his owne conscience before God, and hath not the Church witness of it, I omitte it. It is a good witness of our hearte, that not by any ambition, nor couetousnesse, nor any other greedie desire, but with pure feare of God and zeale to edifie to the Church, wee receiue the office offered vnto vs. That indeede is (as I haue saide) necessarie for euery one of vs, if we will approoue our ministerie allowable before God. Neuertheless hee is rightly called in presence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euil conscience, so that his wickednes be not open. They are wont also to say y^e euen priuate men are called to the ministerie, whome they see to be meete and able to execute it: because verily learning ioyned with godlinesse and with the other qualities of a good Pastor, is a certain preparation to the verie office. For whome the Lord hath appointed to so great an office, he first furnisheth them with those armours that are required to fulfill it, that they shoulde not come emptie and vnprepared vnto it. Wherevpon Paul also to the Corinthians, when he meant to dispute of the verie offices, first rehearsed the gifts which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But because this is the first of those fower pointes that I haue propounded, let vs now go forwarde vnto it.

12 What manner of Bishoppes it is meete to choose, Paul doth largely declare in two places, but the summe commeth to this effect, that none are to be choosen, but they that are of so sounde doctrine, and of holy life, and not notable in any vice, which might both take away credite from them, & procure slander to the ministerie. Of Deacons and Elders there is altogether like consideration. It is alway to be looked vnto, that they bee not vn-able or vnfit to beare the burden that is laide vpon them, that is to say, that they may be furnished with those powers that are necessary to the fulfilling of their office. So when Christ was about to sende his Apostles, he garnished them with those weapons and instrumentes which they could not want. And Paul when hee had painted out the image of a good and true Bishop, warneth Timothie, that he woulde not defile himselfe with choosing any man that differeth from it. I referre this worde Howe, not to the Ceremonie of choosing, but to the reuerent feare that is to be kept in the choosing. Herevpon come the fastinges and praiers, which Luke reciteth that the faithfull vsed when they made Priestes. For whereas they vnderstood that they medled with a most earnest matter, they durst attempt nothing, but with greate reuerence and carefulnes. But they cheefly applied themselves to prayers, whereby they might craue of God the spirite of counsell and discretion.

13 The thirde thing that we haue set in our diuision was, by whom ministers are to be chosen. Of this thing no certaine rule can bee gathered out of the institution of Apostles, which had some difference from the common calling of the rest. For because it was an extraordinarie ministerie, that it might be made discernable by some more notable marke, it behooued that they which shoulde execute it, shoulde bee called and appointed by y^e Lords owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hande their doing, being furnished by no mans election, but by the onely commandement of God & of Christ. Herevpon commeth that when the Apostles would put an other in the place of Iudas, they durst not certainly name any one man, but they brought forth two, that the Lorde shoulde declare by lot, whether of them hee woulde haue to succede. After this manner also it is meete to take this, that Paule denieth that he was create Apostle of men or by man, but by Christ & God the father. That first point, that is to say of men, he had common with all the Godly ministers of the worde. For no man coulde rightly take vpon him that execution, but he that were called of God. But the other poynte

was proper and singular to him selfe. Therefore when hee glorieth of this, he doth not onely boast that he hath that which belongeth to a true & lawfull Pastor, but also bringeth foorth the signes of his Apostleshippe. For when there were some among the Galathians, which traouelling to diminish his authoritie, made him some meane disciple, put in office vnder them by the principall Apostles: he, to defend in safetie the dignitie of his preaching, which hee knewe to be shot at by those suttile deuises, needed to shewe himselfe in all pointes nothing inferiour to the other Apostles. Therefore he affirmeth that hee was chosen, not by y judgement of men, like some common Bishoppe, but by the mouth and manifest Oracle of the Lord himselfe.

Gal. 1. 1. 14 But no man that is sober will denie, that it is according to the order of lawful calling, that Bishops shoulde be appointed by men: forasmuch as there are so many testimonies of the scripture for prooffe thereof. Neither doeth that saying of Paul make to the contrarie, as it is saide, that hee was not sent of men, nor by men: forasmuch as he speaketh not there of the ordinary choosing of ministers, but chalengeth to himselfe that which was speciall to the Apostles. Howebeit God also so appointed Paul by himselfe by singular prerogatiue, that in the meane time hee vsed the discipline of Ecclesiasticall calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apostles were fasting and praying, the Holy Ghost said: Separate vnto me Paul and Barnabas to the worke to which I haue seuerally chosen them. To what purpose serued that separation and putting on of handes, sith the Holy Ghost hath testified his owne election, but that the discipline of the Church in appointing ministers by men, might be preferued? Therefore the Lorde could by no plainer example approue such order, than he did when hauing first declared that he had ordeined Paul Apostle for the Gentiles, yet hee willeth him to be appointed by the Church. Which thing wee may see in the choosing of Mathias. For, because the office of Apostleshippe was of so great importance, that they durst not by their owne iudgement choose any one man into that degree, they did set two men in the middes, vpon the one of whome the lot shoulde fall: that so both the election might haue an open testimonie from heauen, and yet the policie of the Church shoulde not bee passed ouer.

15 Nowe it is demaunded whether the minister ought to bee choosen of the whole Church, or onely of the other of the same office, and of the Elders that haue the rule of discipline, or whether he may be made by the authoritie of one man. They that giue this authoritie to one man, alleadge that which Paul saith to Titus: Therefore I haue left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest appoint in euery towne Priests. Againe to Timothie: lay not hands quickly vpon any man. But they are deceiued if they thinke, y either Timothie at Ephesus, or Titus in Creta, vsed a kingly power, y either of the shold dispose all things at his owne will. For they were aboue the rest, onely to goe before the people with good and hollosome counsels: not that they onely, excluding all other, should doe what they listed. And that I may not seeme to faine anie thing, I will make it plaine by a like example. For Luke rehearseth that Paul and Barnabas appointed priests in diuers Churches: bur hee also expresseth the order or manner howe, when hee saith that it was done by voices: ordaining Priestes (saith he) by lifting vp of hands in euery Church. Therefore they two did create them: but the whole multitude, as the Grecians manner was in elections, did by holding vp their hands, declare whome they would haue. Euen in like maner the Romaine histories doe oftentimes say, that the Consul which kept the assemblies, created newe officers, for none other cause but for that he receiued the voices and gouerned the people in the election. Truly it is not likely that Paul granted more to Timothee and Titus than he tooke to himself. But we see that he was wont to create Bishops by voices of the people. Therefore the places aboue are so to be vnderstanded, that they minish nothing of the common right & libertie of the Church. Therefore Cyprian sayeth well, when he affirmeth y^e it commeth from the authoritie of God, that the Priest shoulde bee chosen in presence of the people before the eyes of all men, and shoulde by publike iudgement and testimonie be allowed for worthie and meete. For wee see y^e this was by the commaundement of the Lorde obserued in the Leuiticall Priests, that before their consecration they shoulde be brought into the sight of the people. And no otherwise is Mathias added to the fellowship of y^e Apostles: and no otherwise the seuen Deacons were created: but the people seeing & allowing it. These examples (saith Cyprian) doe shewe, that the ordering of a Priest ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people standing by: that the ordering may be iust and lawfull, which hath ben examined by the witnessse of all. We are therefore come thus farre, y^e this is by the word of God a lawfull calling of a minister, when they that seem meete are created by the consent & allowance of the people, And y^e other pastours ought to beare rule of the election, that nothing be done amisse of y^e multitude either by lightnesse, or by euil affections, or by disorder.

16 Now remaineth the forme of ordering, to which we assigned the last place in the calling. It is euident that the Apostles vsed no other ceremonie when they admitted any man to the ministerie, but the laying on of hands. And I thinke that this vsage came from the manner of the Hebrues, which did as it were present vnto God by laying on of hands that which they wold haue blessed and hallowed. So when Iacob was about to blesse Ephraim and Manasse, he layed his hands vpon their heds. Which thing our Lord followed, when he prayed ouer the infants. In the same meaning (as I thinke) the Iewes, by the ordinance of the lawe, layde handes vpon the Sacrifices. Wherefore the Apostles by laying on of handes did signifie that they offered him to God, whome they admitted into the ministerie. Albeit they vsed it also vpon them, to whome they applyed the visible graces of the Spirite. Howsoeuer it be, this was the solemne vsage, so oft as they called any man to the ministerie of the Church. So they consecrated Pastors and teachers, and so also Deacons. But although there be no certaine commaundement concerning the laying on of handes, yet because wee see that it was continually vsed among the Apostles, their so diligent obseruing of it ought to be to vs in steede of a commaundement. And truly it is profitable, that by such a signe, both the dignitie of the ministerie shoulde be commended to the people, and also that he which is ordered shoulde bee admonished, that hee is not nowe at his owne libertie, but made bonde to God and the Church.

Act. 19. 6.

Moreouer it shal not be a vaine signe, if it be restored to the natural beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordeined nothing in the Church in vaine, wee must thinke that this Ceremonie, sith it proceeded from him, is not vnprofitable, so that it be not turned into a superstitious abuse. Last of all this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did lay their handes vpon the ministers, but the Pastors onely. Howbeit it is vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their handes or no. But it is euident that that was done in the Deacons, in Paul and Barnabas, and a fewe other. But Paul himselfe in an other place reporteth, that he, and not many other, did lay his handes vpon Timothee. I admonish thee (saith he) y^e thou raise vp the grace which is in thee by laying on of my handes. For, as for that which in the other Epistle is spoken of the laying on of the handes of the degree of Priests, I doe not so take it, as though Paul did speake of the company of the Elders, but I vnderstande by that worde the verie ordinance it selfe: as if hee had sayde: Make that the Grace, which thou hast receiued by laying on of hands when I did creat thee a priest, may not be void.

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the state of the olde Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vse before the Papacie.

Hitherto wee haue intreated of the order of gouerning the Church, as it hath bene deliuered vs out of the pure worde of God, and of the ministeries, as they were instituted by Christ. Nowe that all these things may be more clearely and familiarly opened, and also be better fastened in our mindes: it shal be profitable in these things to consider the forme of the olde Church, which shall represent to our eyes a certaine image of gods institution. For although the Bishops of those times did set forth many Canons, wherein they seemed to expresse more than was expressed in the holy Scripture: yet they with such heedfulnesse framed all their order after the onely rule of Gods worde, that a man may easily see that in this behalfe they had in a manner nothing disagreeing from the worde of God. But although there might be somewhat wanting in their ordinances, yet because they with sincere zeale endeouored to preferue Gods institution, and they swarued not much from it, it shal be very profitable here shortly to gather what manner of obseruation they had. As we haue declared that there are three sortes of ministers commended vnto vs in the Scripture: so all the ministers that the olde Church had, it deuided into three Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly chosen Pastors and teachers: the rest of them had the rule of the iudgement and correction of manners. To y^e Deacons was committed the care of the poore, and the distributing of y^e almes. As for the Readers and Acolythes, were not names of certaine offices: but those whome they called Clerkes, they trained from their youth vpward in certain exercises to serue the church, that they might the better vnderstand to what purpose they were appointed, & might in time come the better prepared to their office: as I shal by & by shew more at large. Therefore Hierom, when he had appointed five orders of the Church, reckoneth vpon Bishoppes, Priests, Deacons, Belceuers, and Cathecumeni; to the rest of the Clergy and monkes he giueth no proper place. In Esa. ca. 6;

2 Therefore to whom the office of teaching was enioyne, all them they named Priestes. In euery city they chose out of their owne number one man, to whom they specially gaue the title of Bishop: that dissentiens should not grow of equalitie, as it is wont to come to passe, Yet the Bishop was not so about the rest in honor and dignitie, that he had a dominion ouer his felowes. But what office the Consul had in the Senat, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to go before the other with counselling, monishing, and exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authority, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counsell: the same office had the Bishop in the assembly of the Priests. And the olde wyters themselues confesse, that the same was by mens consent brought in for the necessitie of the times. Therefore Hierome vpon the Epistle to Titus saith: The same was a Priest which was a Bishop. And before that by the instinction of the Diuill, there were dissentiens in religion, and it was said among the people, I am of Paul, I am of Cephas: Churches were gouerned by common counsell of Elders. Afterward, that the seedes of dissentiens might be plucked vp, all the care was committed to one man. As therefore the Priests do know, that by custome of the Church they are subiect to him that is set ouer them: so let the Bishops know, that they are about the Priests, rather by custome, than by the truth of the Lords disposing, and that they ought to gouerne the church in common together. But in an other place he teacheth, how auncient an institution it was. For he sayth that at Alexandria, from Marke the Euangelist euen to Heraclias and Dionisius, the Priestes did alway choose out one of themselues, & set him in a hyer degree, whom they named a Bishop. Therefore euery city had a company of Priests which were Pastors and Teachers. For they all did execute among the people that office of teaching, exhorting and correcting, which Paul appointeth to the Bishops: and that they might leaue secede after them, they trauailed in teaching the younger men, that had professed themselues souldiours in the holy warfare. To euery city there was appointed a certaine countrey, that shoulde take their Priestes from thence, and be accounted as it were into the bodie of that Church. Euerie company (as I haue before sayde) only for preseruation of Policy and Peace were vnder one Bishop: which was so about the rest in dignitie, that he was subiect to the assemblie of his brethren. If the compasse of ground y was vnder his Bishoprike were so great, that hee could not suffice to serue alij offices of a Bishop in euery place of it, in the countrey it selfe there were in certaine places appointed Priestes which in small matters should execute his authoritie. Them they called countrey bishops, because in the countrey they represented the Bishop. Epi. ad Eua.

3 But, so much as belongeth to the office, whereof we now speake, as well the Bishops as the Priests were bound to apply the distributing of the worde and Sacraments. For it was ordained onely at Alexandria, (because Arrius had there troubled the Church) that the priest should not preach to the people, as Socrates sayth in the 9. booke of the Tripartite hystory. Which yet Epi. ad Eua, Hierom confesseth that hee misliketh not. Truly it should be counted monstrous, if any man had giuen out himselfe for a Bishop, that had not also in verry deepe shewed himselfe a true Bishop. Therefore such was the seueritie of those times, that all ministers were driuen to the fulfilling of such office, as the Lord requireth of them. Neither do I rehearse the manner of one age alone: For euen in Gregories time, when the Church was now almost decayed (certainely it was much degenerate from the auntient purenesse) it had not bin tollerable y any Bishop should abstaine from preaching. The Priest (saith he in one place) dieth if there be no sound heard of him: because he asketh against himselfe the wrath of the secret iudge, if he go without sound of preaching. And in an other place: When Paul testifieth that he is cleane frō the bloud of all: in this saying we be conuincied, wee be bounde, we be shewed to be guilty, which are called Priests, which beside the euils that wee haue of our owne, adde also y deathes of other: because we kill so many as we being luke warme and silent do daily see to go to death. He calleth himselfe & other silent, because they were les diligent in their work than they ought to be. Whē he spareth not them, y did halfe performe their duty: what thinke you he would haue done, if a man had altogether sit idle? Therefore this was a greate while holden in the Church, that the chiefe duty of the Bishop was to feede Gods people with the word, or both publikly & priuatly to edifie the Church with sounde doctrine.

4 But whereas euery prouince had among their Bishops one Archbishop: also where in the Nicene Synode there were ordained Patriarches, which should in degree and dignity be aboute the Archbishops, that pertained to the preseruing of discipline. Howbeit in this discourse, that which was most rarely vsed may not be omitted. For this cause therefore chiefly these degrees were ordained, that if any thing happened in any Church, that could not wel be ended by a fewe, might be referred to a prouinciall Synode. If the greatnesse or difficultie of the matter required a greater discussing, the Patriarches were also called to it with the Synodes, from whō there might be no appell but to a generall Counsell. The government so ordered many called a Hierarchie, by a name (as I think) vnproper, & truly vnused in the Scriptures. For the holy Ghost willed to prouide, that no man, should dreame of a principallitie or dominion when y government of the Church is spoken of. But if, leauing the word we looke vpon the thing, we shal finde that the old Bishops ment to forge no forme of ruling the Church, differing from that which the Lorde appointed by his word.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other thē it was vnder the Apostles. For they receiued the daily offrings of the Faithfull, and the yearely reuenues of the Church, to bestow them vpon true vses, that is to say, to distribute them to feede partly the ministers, and partly y poore: but by the appointment of the Bishop, to whome also they yearely rendered accountes of their distribution. For whereas the Canons doe euery where make the Bishop distributer of all the goods of the Church, it is not so to be vnderstanded, as though he did by himselfe discharge that care: but because it was his parte to appoint to the Deacon, who shoulde bee receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whome it should should be giuen, & how much to euery one : because he had an ouersceing whether the Deacon did faithfully execute that which belonged to his office. For thus it is read in the canons which they ascribe to the Apostles : Wee commaund that the Bishoppe haue the goods of the Church in his owne power . For if he be put in trust with the soules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that he haue charge of money : so that by his power al things may be distributed to the poore by the Elders and Deacons : that they may be al ministr'd with feare and carefulnes. And in the Council of Antioche it is decreed, that the Bishoppes should be restrained that meddle with the goods of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point we neede to make no longer disputation, sith it is euident by many epistles of Gregorie, that euen at that time, when otherwise the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this obseruation continued, that the Deacons should vnder the Bishop be the stewardest of the poore. As for Subdeacons, it is likely that at the beginning they were ioyned to the Deacons, that they should vse their seruice about the poore: but that difference was by litle and litle confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plentie of the goods, required a newe and more exact maner of disposing them : Albeit Hierome doth say, that it was euen in his age. In their charge was the summe of their reuenues, possessions, & store, and the collection of the daily offerings. Whereupon Gregory declarcth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he should be holden guiltie if any of the goods of the Church, perished either by his fraud or negligence. But whereas it was giuen to them to read the Gospel to the people, & to exhort them to prayer : and whereas they were admitted to deliuer the Cup in the holy Supper, that was rather done to garnish their office, that they should execute it with the more reuerence, when by such signes they were admonished that it was no prophane bailiwike that they exercised, but a spirituall function and dedicate to God.

Cap. 35.

Epi. ad Nep.

Ep. 10. lib. 1.

6 Hereby also we may iudge what vse there was, and what manner of distribution of the Church goods. Ech where both in the decrees of the Synodes, and among the old wryters it is to be found, that whatsoeuer the Church possesseth either in lands or in money, is the patrimonie of y^e poore. Therefore oftentimes there this song is sung to the Bishops and Deacons, that they should remember, that they meddle not with their own goods, but the goods appointed to the necessitie of the poore : which if they vnfaithfully suppress or wast, they shalbe guiltie of bloud. Whereby they are admonished, with great feare & reuerence, as in the sight of God, without respect of persons, to distribute them to whome they be due . Hereupon also come those graue protestations in Chrysofome, Ambrose, Augustine, & other like Bishops, whereby they affirme their owne vprightnesse to the people. But sith it is equitie, and established by the law of the Lord, that they which employ their seruice to the Church, should bee fed with the common charges of the Church, and also many priestes in that age, consecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the distributing was such, that neither the ministers wanted sustenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the meane time it was provided, that the ministers themselues, which ought to giue example of honest sparing to other, should not haue so much, whereby they might abuse it to riotous excesse or delicioufnes, but onely wherewith to sustaine their owne neede. For those of the Clergie (saith Hierome) which are able to liue of the goods of their parentes, if they take that which is the poores, do commit sacrilege, and by such abuse they eate and drinke to themselues damnation.

ought

7 First the ministracion was free and voluntarie, whereas the Bishops and Deacons were of their own wil faithful, and vprightnesse of conscience and innocencie of life were to them in steade of the lawes. Afterward when euil examples grew of the greedinesse or peruerse affections of some, to correct those faultes, the canons were made, which diuided the reuenues of the Church into foure parts: of which they assigned one part to the Clergie, the second to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildinges, the fourth to the poore as well strangers as of their owne countrey. For whereas the other canons, giue this last part to the Bishop, that varieth nothing from my abouesaide diuision. For they meane not that that part should be his owne, that either he himselfe alone should deuoure it, or poure it out, vpon whom or what he list, but that it should suffice to mainteine the Hospitalitie which Paul requireth of that order. And so doe Gelasius and Gregory expound it. For Gelasius bringeth no other reason why the bishop should chalenge any thing to himselfe, but that he might giue it prisoners and strangers. And Gregory speaketh yet more plainely. It is the maner (saith he) of the sea Apostolike, to giue commaundement to the Bishop when he is ordred, that of all the reuenuie that ariseth, there be made foure portions: that is to say, the one to the Bishop and his family for Hospitalitie, and entertainment: the second to the Clergie: y third to the poore: the fourth to the repairing of Churches. Therefore it was lawfull for the Bishop to take nothing to his owne vse, but so much as were enough for moderate and meane foode and clothing. If any began to exceed, either in riotous expence, or in ostentation & pompe, he was by & by repressed by his felowes, and if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignitie.

8 As for that which they bestowed vpon garnishing of holy thinges, at the first it was verie litle. Afterward when the Church became somewhat richer, yet in that behalfe they stil kept a meane. And yet all the money that was bestowed therupon, remained safe for the poore, if any greater necessitie happened. So when famine possessed the prouince of Hierusalem, & the neede could not otherwise be relieued, Cyrillus sold the vessels & garments and spent them vpon sustenance of the poore. Likewise Acatius bishop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Persians, in a maner starued for hunger, called together the Clergie, and when hee had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither dishes nor cuppes, because he neither eateth nor drinketh, he molt the vessels, to make thereof both meat and ransome for men in miserie. Hierom also, when he inuyceth against y too much gorgeousnes of temples, doth with honour make mention of Exuperius bishop of Tholosa in his time, which caried the Lords bodie in a wicker basket, and his blood in glasse, but suffred no poore man to be hungrie. That which I eue now said of Acatius, Ambrose rehearseth of himselfe. For when the Arrians char-charged him, for that he had broken the holy vessels to ransom prisoners, he used this most godly excuse: He y sent the Apostles without golde, gathered Churches together without gold. The Church hath gold, not to keepe it, but to bestowe it, and to giue reliefe in necessities. What neede is to keepe that which helpeth not? Do we not know, how much gold & siluer the Assyrians rooke out of the temple of the Lorde? Doth not the Priest better to melt the for the susteinaunce of the poore, if other reliefes do faile, than an enemy a robber of God to beare them away? Will not the Lorde say: Why hast thou suffred so many needy to dy for hunger? and verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightst haue ministred them susteinaunce. Why were so many led away captiue, & not ransomed? why were so many slaine by the enemy? It had bin better that thou shouldest saue the vessels of liuing men, than of mettalles. To these things thou shalt not bee able to aunswere. For what wouldest thou say? I feared least Gods temple should want garnishing. He would answere: Sacramentes require not gold: neither do those things plese with gold y are not bought with gold. The ransoming of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacramentes. In summe, we see that it is most true which the same man sayeth in an other place, that whatsoeuer the Church then possessed was the store of the needie. Againe: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poores.

cap. 28.Lib. 5. epist.

9 These that we haue rehearsed were the ministeries of the Old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiasticall writers make mention, were rather certaine exercises and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might leaue a store for the Church after them, receiued into their charge, gouernance and discipline, young men which with the consent and authoritie of their parentes, professed themselues souldiours of the spirituall warfare: and they so framed the from their tender age, that they should not come vnskillfull & rawe to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called Clerkes. I woulde in deede that some other proper name had rather beene giuen the. For this name grew in error, or of corrupt affection: for asmuch as Peter calleth the whole Church the Clergie, that is to say, the Lords inheritance. But the institution it selfe was very holy and profitable, that they which woulde consecrate themselues & their seruice to the Church, should be so brought vp vnder the keeping of the bishop, that none should minister to y Church, but he that were well informed aforehand, & that had from his very youth both sucked holy doctrine, and by seure discipline put in a certaine continuing qualitie of grauitie and holy life, & were estranged from worldly cares and were accustomed to spirituall cares & studies. But as yong souldiours are by certaine counterfait skirmishes instructed to learne true and earnest fight, so there were also certaine rudimentes, whereby they were exercised while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the very offices. Therefore first they committed to the Clerkes the charge to open and shut the Church, & they named them Ostiaij, dorekeepers. Afterward they called them Acoluthi, folowers, which waited vpon the Bishop in his household seruices, and did continually accompanie him, first for honors sake, & then that no suspicion should arise of the. Moreouer that by litle & litle they might become knowne to the people, and get to themselves commendation: also that they might learne to abide the sight of all men, and to speake before all men: that being made priestes, when they came forth to teach, they should not be abashed with shame: therefore place was appointed the to read in the pulpet. After this maner they were promoted by degrees, to shew prooffe euery one of their diligence in all their seuerall exercises, till they were made Subdeacons. This only is my meaning, that those were rather grosse beginnings, than such offices as were accounted among the true ministers of the Church.

10 Whereas we said y^e the first & second point in the calling of ministers, are, what maner of men they ought to choose, & how great a religious carefullnes they ought to vse in that matter: therein the olde Church hath followed the prescribed order of Paul, & the examples of the Apostles. For they were wont to come together to choose the pastors with most great reuerence, & careful calling vpon the name of God. Beside this they had a forme of examination, whereby they tried the life & doctrine of them that were to be chosen by y^e rule of Paul. Only they somewhat offended herein with too great seueritie, because they would require more in a Bishop than Paul required, & specially in proesse of time they required vnmarried life. But in the other points their obseruation was agreeing with Pauls description. But in this which we made the third point, that is to say, who ought to institute ministers, they kept not alway one order. In olde time, none was receiued into y^e company of Clerkes, without the consent of all the people: insomuch that Cyprian laboureth earnestly to excuse that he appointed one Aurelius to be a Reader without asking aduise of the Church, because that was don beside the custome, though not without reason. For this he saith before: In ordering of Clerkes, dere brethren, we are wont first to aske you aduise, & by common counsell to wey the maners and deseruings of euery one. But because in these lesser exercises there was not much peril: because they were chosen to a long prooffe, & not to a great office, therefore the consent of the people therein cessed to be asked. Afterward in the other degrees also, except the Bishoprike, the people commonly left the iudgement & choise of them to the Bishop and the priestes, that they shoulde examine who were meete & worthie: sauing peraduenture when new Priestes were appointed for paroches: for then it behoued that the multitude of that place namely should consent. Neither is it any maruel, that the people in this behalfe was litle carefull in keeping their owne right: For no man was made a Subdeacon, that had not shewed a long prooffe of himselfe in his being a Clerk, vnder that seueritie of discipline, which then was vsed. After that he had bene tried in that degree, he was made a Deacon. From thence he came to the honor of priesthood if he had behaued himselfe faithfully. So no man was promoted, of whome there had not bene in deede a triall had many yeres before the eyes of the people. And there were many canons to punish their faultes: so y^e the Church could not be troubled with euil Priests or Deacons, vnles it neglected the remedies. Howbeit in the Priests also there was alway required the consent of them of the same citie: which the verie first canon testifieth in the 67. distinction, which is fathered vpo Anacletus. Finally, all the admissions into orders were therefore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no man shoulde priuily creepe in without the consent of the faithfull, or should with too much easinesse be promoted without witnesses.

11 In choosing of Bishops the people had the libertie long preferued, that none should be thrust in that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the counsell at Antioch, that none should be thrust in to them against their will. Which thing also Leo the first doth diligently confirme. Hereupon came these sayings: Let him be choosen, whome the Clergye, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule ouer all, be chosen of all. For it must needes be, that he that is made a ruler being vnknownen and not examined, is thrust in by violence. Againe, Let him be chosen, that is both chosen by the Clerkes, and desired by the people: and let him be consecrate by them of that Prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitan. The holy Fathers tooke so great heede that this libertie of the people should by no meane be diminished, that when the generall Synode gathered together at Constantinople did order Nestarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the Clergy and people, as they testified by their epistle to the Synode of Rome. Therefore when any Bishop did appoint a successor to himselfe, it was not otherwise stablished vnlesse the whole people did confirme it. Whereof you haue not onely an example, but also the very forme in Augustine in the naming of Eradius. And Theodorite, when hee rehearseth that Peter was named by Athanasius to be his successor, by and by addeth, that the order of Priests confirmed it, and the magistrate, and nobilitie, and the people approued it with their allowing shewte.

12 I graunt in dedde that this also was by very good reason stablished in the Council at Laodicea, that the Election should not be left to multitudes. For it scarcely happeneth at any time, that so many heads should wel order any thing with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the vncertain commualtie is diuided into contrarie affections. But for this perill there was vsed a very good remedy. For first the Clerkes onely did choose: whom they had choosen they presented to the Magistrate, or to the Senate and chiefe men of the people. They, after consultation hadde, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did choose an other, whom they did rather allowe. Then the matter was moued to the multiude, which although they were not bounde to those foreiudgements, yet thereby they could the lesse be disordered. Or if they began at the multiude: that was don only to learne whom they did chiefly desire. When the desires of the people were heard, then they of the Clergy did chose him. So neither was it lawfull for the Clergy to appoint whom they listed, neither were they bounde to obey the foolish desires of the people. Leo appointeth this order in an other place, when he sayth: There are to be looked for, both the desires of the citizens, the peoples testimonies, the iudgement of the honorable, and the election of the clerks. Againe, Let there be holden the testimonie of the honorable, the subscription of the clerkes, the consent of the order & commualty. No reason (sayth hee) suffreth it to be otherwise done. And nothing else meaneth that decree of the Synode at Laodicea, but that the clergy and chiefe of the people, shoulde not suffer themselues to be caried away by the vndiscrete multitude: but rather that with their wisdom and grauitie they should repressse the peoples foolish affections, if at any time need should so require.

13 This order of choosing was yet in force in the time of Gregory: and it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epistles of his, that giue euident testimonie of this matter. For so oft as he hath to doe with the creating of any newe Bishop, he vseth to write to the clergy, to the order, and to the people, & somtime also to the ruler, according as the government of the city is appointed. But if by reason of the disordered state of y^e Church, he committeth to any Bishop adioyning, the charge of ouerseding in the election, yet he alway requircth a solenne decree strengthened with the subscriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Constantius create Bishop at Milaine, and that many of the Milaneis were by reason of the inuasion of the barbarous nations fled to Genua: he thought that the election could not otherwise be lawful, vnlesse they also were called together & gaue their assent. Yea there are not yet fise hundred yaeres past, since Pope Nicolas decreed thus of the election of the Bishop of Rome: that the Cardinal Bishops should beginne, then that they should ioyne to them the rest of the clergy, last of all that the election should be confirmed by the consent of the people. And in the ende he reciteth that decree of Leo, which I euen nowe alleaged, and commaundeth it from thence forth to bee in force. But if the malice of wicked men shal so preuaile, that the clerkes to make a true election be compelled to departe out of the citie: yet he commaundeth that some of the people be present with them. As for the Emperours consent, so farre as I can perceiue, was required only in two Churches, that is, Rome and Constantinople: because there were the two seates of the Empire. For whereas Ambrose was sent to Milaine with a power from Valentinian to gouern the election of the new Bishop: that was extraordinarily done, by reason of grievous factions wherewith the citizens then boyled among themselues. But at Rome in old time the Emperours authoritie was of so great force in creating of the Bishop: that Gregorie sayeth, that hee was set by his commaundement in the government of the Church: when yet by solenne vsage hee was desired by the people. This was the maner, that when the clergy and the people had appointed any bishop, the clergy should forthwith moue it to the Emperor, y^e he should either by his allowance confirme y^e election, or by disallowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnāt to this custome: wherein is nothing else sayd, but that it is in no wise to be suffred, that taking away the canonicall election, a king should appoint a Bishop after his own lust: and that the Metropolitan should consecrate none that were so promoted by violent powers. For it is one thing to spoyle the Church of her right, that all should be transferred to the lust of one man: and an other thing to graunt this honour to a king or an Emperor, that by his authoritie he may confirme a lawfull election.

14 Now it followeth, that we entreat, with what forme the ministers of y^e Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordination or Consecration: the Greekes haue called it Cheirotonia, listung vp of handes, and some time also Cheirothesia, laying on of handes. Howbeit Cheirotonia is properly called that kinde of election, where mens consentes are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth a decree of the Nicene councell, that the Metropolitane should meete together with all the Bishops of the prouince to order him which is chosen. But if some of them be hindered either by length of the way, or by sicknes, or by any necessitie, that yet three at the least should meet: and that they that are absent shoulde by letters testifie their consent. And this Canon, when with discontinuance it grew out of vse, was afterwarde renewed with many Synodes. But all, or at least so many as had no excuse, were therefore commaunded to be present, that they might haue the grauer triall of the learning and manners, of him that was to be ordered: for the matter was not done without trial. And it appeareth by Cyprians words, that in the olde time they were wont not to be called after the election, but to be present at y^e election: & to this end y^e they shoulde be as it were gouernors, y^e nothing shoulde be troublesome done in y^e multitude. For where he saide y^e the people haue power either to choose worthy Priests, or to refuse vnworthie, win a litle after he addeth: Wherefore according to y^e tradition of God & of the Apostles, it is to be diligently kept & holden (which is yet holden w^{ch} vs also & in a maner throughout al prouinces) y^e for the right celebration of orderings, al the Bishops adioyning of y^e same prouince shoulde come together to that people for which a gouernour is ordered, & that the Bishop be chosen in presence of the people. But when they were sometime slowly gathered together, and there was perill least some woulde abuse that delay to occasion of ambitious suing: it was thought that it shoulde be enough if after the election made, they shoulde meet and after allowance vpon lawfull examination consecrate him.

15 When this was ech where done without exception, by litle and litle a diuerse maner grew in vse, that they which were chosen shoulde resort to the Metropolitane citie to fetch their ordering. Which came to passe rather by ambition, and by deprauiō of the first institution, than by any good reason. And not long after, when the authoritie of the sea of Rome was now increased, there came in place yet a worse custome, that the Bishops almost of all Italy shoulde fetch their consecration from thence. Which wee may note out of the Epistles of Gregorie. Only a few cities, which did not so easily giue place, had their auncient right preserued: as there is an example had of Milaine. Paraduventure the only Metropolitane cities kept their priuiledge. For all the Bishoppes of the Prouince were wont to come together to the cheefe citie to consecrate the Archbishoppe. But the Ceremonie was laying on of handes. For I read of no other Ceremonies vsed: sauing that in the solempne assemblie the Bishops had a certaine apparrell whereby they might bee distinctly knowen from other Priestes. They ordered also Priestes & Deacons with only laying on of hands. But euery Bishop with the companie of priests ordered his owne Priestes. But although they did all the same thing: yet because the Bishop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guiding, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the old writers haue ofte this saying: that a Priest differeth from a Bishoppe in no other thing, but because he hath not the power of ordering.

Epi. 4. lib. 1.

Lib. 2. Epist. 69. 46.

The v. Chapter.

That the olde forme of government is vtterly ouerthrowen by the tyrannie of the Papacie.

NOW it is good to set before mens eyes the order of governing y^e Church that the sea of Rome and all the champions thereof doe keepe at this day, and the whole image of that Hierarchie which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the first and olde Church which we haue described: that by the comparision it may appeare what manner of Church they haue, which vse this onely title to charge or rather to ouerwhelm vs. But it is best to be ginne at Calling, that we see both who, and what manner of men, and by what order they be called to this ministerie. And then afterwarde wee shall consider howe faithfully they execute their office. We will giue the first place to Bishops: to whom I would to God this might be an honor, to haue the first place in this discourse. But the matter it selfe doeth not suffer mee, once to touch this thing be it neuer so lightly, without their great shame. And yet I will remember, in what kinde of writing I am nowe occupied: and will not suffer my talke, which ought to bee framed onely to simple doctrine, to flow abroad beyonde due bonds. But let some one of the that haue not vtterly lost al shame, answere me, what manner of bishoppes are at this day commonly chosen. Truly it is nowe growen too much out of vse, to haue any examination had of their learning: but if there be had any respect of learning, they choose some lawyer that can rather brawle in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certain, that these hundred yeres there hath scarcely bin euery hundreth man chosen that vnderstoode any thing of holy doctrine. I doe not therefore spare the former ages, for that they were much better, but because we haue nowe onely the present Church in question. If iudgement be had of their manners, we shall finde that there haue bene fewe or almost none, whome the olde Canons woulde not haue iudged vnworthie. Hee that was not a dronkarde, was a whoremonger: he that was also cleane from this wickednesse, was either a dycer, or a hunter, or dissolute in some parte of his life. For there be lighter faultes, which by the olde Canons doe exclude a man from being a Bishop. But this is a most great absurditie, that verie children scarcely tenne yeares old, are by the Popes grant made bishops. They are growen to such shamelesnes & senses dulnes, that they dreaded not that extreeme yea and monstrous wicked doing, which is vtterly abhorring from the verie sence of nature. Hereby appeareth how religious their elections were, where the negligence was so carelesse.

2 Nowe in election, all that right of the people is taken away. Their desirings, their assenting, their subscribinges, and all such things are vanished: the whole power is transferred to the Canons only. They bestowe the Bishopricke vpon whome they will, and afterwarde bring him fourth into the sight of the people, but to bee worshipped, not to bee examined. But Leo cryeth on the other side, that no reason suffereth it, and hee pronounceth ceeth that it is a violent imposition. Cyprian, when hee testifieth that it proceedeth from the lawe of God that it shoulde not bee done but by the consent of the people, sheweth that the contrary maner is repugnant to y^e worde of God. The decrees of so many Synodes do most seuerely forbid it to bee otherwise done: and if it be done, they comaund it to be voide. If these things be true, there now remaineth in the Papacie no Canonical election, neither by Gods lawe nor by the Ecclesiasticall law. But although there were no other euil, yet how shall they be able to excuse this that they haue so spoyled the Church of her right? But (say they) the corruption of times so required, that because in appointing of bishops, hatreds and affections more preuailed with the people and the Magistrates, than right and sounde judgement, therefore the rule thereof shoulde be giuen to a fewe. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedie of a mischiefe in dispaired case. But sith the medicine it selfe hath appeared more hurtfull than the very disease, why is not this newe euil also remedied? But (say they) it is exactly prescribed to the Canons, what they ought to followe in the election, But do we dout, but that the people in olde time did vnderstand that they were bounde to most holy lawes, when they saw y^e they had a rule set them by the worde of God, when they came together to choose a bishop? For that onely voice of God, whereby he describeth the true image of a bishop, ought worthily to bee of more value than infinite thousands of Canons. But neuerthelesse the people, corrupted with a most euil affection, had no regarde of the lawe or of equitie. So at this day though there be verie good lawes written, yet they remaine buried in papers. Yet for the most part it is vsed in mens maners, yea and allowed as though it were done by good reason, that dronkardes, whoremongers, dycers, are commonly promoted to this honor: (It is but litle y^e I saye) that bishoprikes are the rewards of adulteries and bawderies. For when they are giuen but to hunters and falconers, it is to be thought to be gaily well bestowed. Any way to excuse so hainous indignity, it is too much wicked. The people (say I) had in old time a very good Canon to whome Gods worde prescribed, that a bishop ought to bee vnreprouable, a teacher, no fighter, &c. Why therefore is the charge of choosing remoued from the people to these men? Because forsooth the word of God was not heard among the tumults & seditious partakings of the people. And why should it not at this day be remoued againe frō these men, which not only do breake all lawes, but casting away all shanie, do wantonly, couetously, ambitiously, mingle and confound Gods and mens matters together?

1. Tim. 3. 1.

3. But they ly, when they say, that this was deuised for a remedie. We oftē read that in old time Churches were in tumultes at the choosing of bishops: yet neuer any man durst think of taking away the authority from the people. For they had other wayes whereby they might either preuent these faultes, or amend them if they were already comitted. But I wil tell what it is. When the people began to bee negligent in making the elections, and did cast that care vpon the Priestes as litle belonging to them, they abused this occasion to vsurpe a tyranny to themselues, which afterwarde they stablished by new Canons set forth. As for their ordering, it is nothing else but a meere mockery. For the shew of examination that they there set out is so vaine and hungry, gry, that it wanteth euē al colour. Therefore whereas in some places Princes haue by couenāt obtainēd of y^e bishops of Rome, that they themselues might name bishops, therein the Church suffered no new losse: because the election was taken away, only from the Canons, which had by no right violētly taken it, or verily stolen it. Truly this is a most foule example, that out of the court are sent bishops to possesse Churches: and it should be y^e worke of godly Princes to absteyne from such corruption. For it is a wicked spoiling of the Church, when there is thrust vnto any people a bishop, whom they haue not desired, or at leyst with free voice allowed. But y^e vnorderly māner which hath long ago bin in the Churches, gaue occasion to Princes to take the presentation of bishops into their owne handes. For they had rather that it should be their gift, than those mens, to whom it nothing more belonged, and which did no lesse wrongfully abuse it.

4 Loe here is a noble calling, by reason whereof the bishops boast themselues to be the successors of the Apostles. But they say that the authoritie to create Priests belongeth to them only. But in this they most lewdly corrupt the old institution: because they doe not by their ordering create Priestes to rule & feede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewise when they consecrate Deacons, they do nothing of their true & proper office, but they ordaine them only to certayne Ceremonies about the chalice & the paten. But in the Synode at Chalcedon, it is contrariwise decreed, y^e the orderings should not be absolutely giuen, that is to say, but that a place should be therewithall assigned to them that are ordered, where they shal exercise their office. This decree is for two causes verie profitable. First, that the Church shoulde not be burdēd with superfluous charges: nor that that should be spent vpon idle men which should be giuen to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, shoulde thinke that they be not promoted to an honour, but that there is an office committed vnto them, to the execution whereof they are bounde by solemne protestation. But the Romishe maisters (which thinke that there is nothing in religion to bee cared for, but their bellie) first doe expounde title to be the reuēue that may suffice to sustaine them, whether it be by their owne liuelyhoode or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Prieste, without taking care where they ought to minister, they giue them the order, if they bee riche enough to finde themselues. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Counsell requireth, should be the yearly reuēue for their sustenance? But nowe because the later Canons condemned the bishoppes with penaltie to finde them whom they had ordered without sufficient title, by this meane to restraine their too much easie admitting: there hath beene also a sutletie deuised to mocke out this penaltie. For hee that is ordered, naming any title whatsoeuer it be, promiseth that he wilbe content therewith: by this shift he is driuen from his action for his finding. I passe ouer a thousand fraudes that are herein vsed: that when some doe falsely name vaine titles of benefices, whereupon they can not make fīue shillings by yeare: other some vnder secret couenant do borrow benefices, which they promise that they wil by & by restore againe, but sometime they restore not at all. And such other mysteries.

5 But although these grosser abuses were taken away, is not this alway an absurditie, to appoint a Priest to whome you assigne no place? Also they order no man but to sacrifice. But the true ordinance of a Priest is, to be called to the gouernment of the Church: and a Deacon to be called to the gathering of the almes: they doe indeede with many pompes shadowe their doing, that in the verie shew it may haue a reuerence among the simple. But among men that haue their sounde wit, what can these disguisings auaille, if there be no sound stufte or truth vnderneath them? For they vse ceremonies about it, either fetched out of Iewishnes, or fained of them selues: which it were better to forbear. But of true examination, (for I nothing passe vpon that shadowe which they retaine) of the peoples consent, and of other things necessarie, they make no mention. I call a shadowe their foolish gesturings meete to be laughed at, framed to a sonde and colde counterfainting of antiquitie. The bishops haue their deputies which before y ordering may enquire of their learning. But what? whether they can read their masses whether they can decline a comon noun, y they shal light vpon in reading, coniugate a verb, or do know the significatiō of one word, for it is not necessary y they be cunning enough to construe a verse. And yet they be not put back frō Priesthood which faile euen in the childish rudiments, so that they bring any mony or commendation of fauor. Of like sort it is, y when they are brought to the altar to be ordered, it is asked thrise in a tongue not vnderstanded, whether they be worthie of that honour. One aunswereth (which neuer saw them: but because nothing should want of the forme, he hath that part in the play) They are worthie. What may a man blame in these reuerende fathers, but that with mocking in so open sacrileges, they doe without shame laugh to scorne both God and men? But because they are in long possession thereof, they thinke that now it is lawfull for them. For whosoeuer dare once open his mouth against these so euident and so haynous wicked doings, he is forthwith haled by them to punishment of death, as though it were one y had in old time disclosed abroad the holy mysteries of Ceres, would they do this if they thought that there were any God?

6 Nowe howe much doe they behaue themselues better in bestowing of benefices: which thing was once ioyned with the ordering, but nowe it is altogether separate? There is among them a diuerse manner. For the Bishops onely doe not conferre benefices: and in those whereof they are saide to haue the conferring, they haue not the full right: but other haue the presentation, and they reteine only the title of collation for honors sake. There are also nominations out of scholes, and resignations, either simple, or made for cause of eschange, commendatorie writings, preuentions, and whatsoever is of that sort. But they also behaue themselues that none of them can reproche an other with any thing. So I affirme, that scarcely euery hundredth benefice, is bestowed at this day in the papacie without Simonie, as the olde writers defined Simonie. I doe not say that they all buy them with readie monie: but shew me one of twentie that commeth to a benefice without some by commendation, some either kinred or alliance promoteth, and some the authoritie of their parentes: some by doing of pleasures doe get themselues fauor. Finally benefices are giuen to this ende, not to provide for.

for the Churches, but for them that receive them. Therefore they call them benefices, by which wordes they doe sufficiently declare, that they make no other account of them, but as the beneficial gifts of princes, whereby they either get the fauour of their souldiers or reward their seruices. I omitte howe these rewardes are bestowed vpon barbars, cookes, moile keepers, and such dreggish men. And nowe iudiciall courtes doe ring of no matters more, thā about benefices: so that a man may say that they are nothing else but a pray cast afore dogges to hunt after. Is this tollerable euen to be heard of, that they should bee called Pastors, which haue broken into the possession of a Church as into a ferme of their enemye? y have gotten it by brawling in the lawe? that haue bought it for monie? that haue deserued it by filthie seruices? which being children yet scantly able to speake, haue receiued it, as by inheritance from their vncles and kinsmen, and some bastardes from their fathers?

7 Woulde euer the licentiousnesse of the people, though they had bene neuer so corrupt & lawelesse, haue gone so farre? But this is also more monstrous, that one man, (I will not say what maner of man, but truly such a one as cannot gouerne himselfe) is set to gouerne five or sixe Churches. A man may see in these dayes in Princes courtes, young men that haue three abbacies, two Bishoprikes, one Archbishoprike. But there bee commonly Canons with five, sixe or seuen benefices, whereof they haue no care at all, but in receiuing the renenues. I will not obiect, that it is ech where cried out against by the worde of God, which hath long agoe ceased to be of any estimation at all among them. I wil not obiect, that there haue bene many most seueren penall ordinances in manie counsels made against this wickednesse: for those also they boldly despise as oft as they list. But I say that both are monstrous wicked doinges, which are vtterly against God and nature and y government of the Church, that one robber shall oppresse many Churches at once, and that he should be called a Pastor, which cannot be present with his flocke though hee woulde: and yet (such is their shamefulnesse) they couer such abhominable filthinesse with the name of the Church to deliuer themselues from all blame. But also (and God will) in these lewdenesse is contained that holy succession, by the merite whereof they boast that it is wrought that the Church may not perish.

8 Nowe (which is the seconde marke in iudging a lawfull Pastor) let vs see howe faithfully they exercise their office. Of the Priestes that be there created, some be Monkes, some bee (as they call them) Secular. The firste of these two companies was vnknown to the old Church: and it is so against the profession of Monkes, to haue such a place in the Church, that in olde time when they were chosen out of Monasteries into the clergie, they ceased to be Monkes. And Gregorie, whose time had much dregges, yet suffred not this confusion to bee made. For he willeth that they bee put out of the Cleargie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly be together both a Monke and a clearge: sith the one is a hinderance to the other. Nowe if I aske, howe hee well fulfilleth his office, whome the Canons declare to bee vnmeet, what I pray you, will they aunswere? They will forsooth alleadge vnto mee those vntimely borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby

by Monkes are so receiued into the honour and power of Priesthood, that they might still abide in their Monasteries. But what reason is this, that euery vnlearned asse, so soone as he hath once possessed the sea of Rome, may with one worde ouerthrowe all antiquitie? But of this matter we shal speake hereafter. Let this suffice for this time, that in the purer Church it was holden for a great absurditie, if a Monke did execute the office of Priesthoode. For Hierome sayeth that he doth not execute the office of a Priest, while he is conuersant among Monkes; and maketh himselfe one of the common people to be ruled by the Priestes. But, although we graunt them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the mendicantes some do preache: all the other Monkes either sing or mumble vp masses in their dennes. As though either Christ willed, or the nature of the office suffereth Priests to be made to this purpose. Whereas the Scripture plainly testifieth, that it is the priestes office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne an other way, yea vtterly to change the holy institution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expressly forbidden to doe the things that God commaundeth all priests. For this song is song to them: let a Monke content wth his cloister, not presume to minister the Sacramentes, nor to execute any thing belonging to publike office. Let them deny, if they can, that it is an open mockerie of God, that any priest should be made to this purpose, to absteyne from his true and naturall office: and that he which hath the name, may not haue the thing.

Act. 10. 23.

9 I come to the secular priests: which are partly beneficed men, (as they call them) that is to say, haue benefices whereupon to liue: and partly do let out their daily labour to hire, in massing, or singing, and liue as it were of a stipend gathered thereupon. Benefices haue either care of soules, as bishop-riks, and cure of paroches: or they be the stipends of deintie men, that get their liuing with singing, as prebendes, Canonships, personages, and dignities, chaplainships, and such other. Howbeit, since things are nowe turned vpside downe, Abbacies and priories are giuen to very boyes, by priuilege, that is to say by common and vsuall custome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their liuing from day to day, what should they doe otherwise than they do? that is in seruile and shamefull maner to giue out them selues for gaine, specially sith there is so great a multitude as nowe the worlde swarmeth with. Therefore when they dare not beg openly, or forasmuch as they thinke they shoulde but litle profite that way, they go about like hungrie dogges, and with their importunacie, as with barking, they enforce out of men against their willes somewhat to thrust into their belly. Here if I would go about to expresse in wordes, how great a dishonor it is to the Church, y^e the honor and office of priesthood is come to this point, I shoulde haue no ende. Therefore it is not meete that the readers should looke for at my hande such a long declaration as may be proportionall to so hainous indignitie. Briefely I say, if it be the office of priesthod, (as the worde of GOD prescribeth, and the auncient canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the spirituall kingdome of Christ: all such sacrificers as haue none place assigned them to teach: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally, there is nothing left to them, but the altar, wherupon to sacrifice Christ: which is not to offer to God, but to diuels, as we shal see in another place.

1. Co. 4. 21

10 I do not here touch the outward faultes, but only the inwarde euill, which sticketh fast by the roote in their institution. I will adde a saying, which wil found il in their cares: but because it is true, I must speake it: that in the same degree are to be accounted Canons, Deanes, Chaplaines, Prouostes, and all they that are fedde with idle benefices. For what seruice can they do to the Church? For they haue put from themselues the preaching of the worde, the care of discipline, and ministracion of Sacramentes, as too much troublesome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boast themselues to be true priests? Singing forsooth, and a pompe of Ceremonies. But what is that to the purpose? If they alleage custome, if vse, if prescription of long time: I againe on the other side do lay vnto them the definition of Christ, whereby he hath expressed vnto vs both true priestes, and what they ought to haue that wil be accounted such. But if they cannot beare so harde a lawe, to submit themselues to Christes rule: at the least let them suffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitiue Church. But their case shalbe neuer the better, if their state be iudged by the olde canons. They that haue degenerate into Canons, should haue beene priestes, as they were in olde time, that should rule the Church in common with the Bishop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Pastor.

Those Chapter dignities as they call them, do nothing at all belong to the gouerning of the Church: much lesse, chapleiships, and the other dregges of like names. What account then shall wee make of them all? Truely both the worde of Christ, and the vsage of the Church excludeth them from the honour of priesthood. Yet they stiffely holde that they be priestes: but wee must plucke of their visour: so shall wee finde, that their whole profession is moste strange and farre remoued from that office of priestes, both which y^e Apostles describe vnto vs, and which was required in the primitiue church. Therefore all such orders, with what titles soeuer they be notified, sith they be newe, being verily neither vpholden by the institution of God, nor by y^e auncient vsage of the Church, ought to haue no place in the description of the spirituall gouernment, which the Church hath receiued consecrate with the Lordes owne mouth. Or (if they wil rather haue me to speake more simply and grossely) for as much as chaplaines, canons, Deanes, Prouostes, and other idle bellies of the same sorte, do not so much as with their litle finger touch any small parcel of that office, which is necessarily required in priestes, it is not to bee suffred, that in wrongfully taking a false honour vpon themselues, they should breake the holy institution of Christ.

11 There remaine Bishops, and persons of Paroches: who, I woulde to God they did striue to reteine their office. For wee woulde willingly graunt vnto them, that they haue a godly and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accounted Pastors, while they forsake the Churches committed to them, and cast the care of them vpon other, they doe as if it were the Pastors office to doe nothing. If an vsurer that neuer stired his foote out of the citie, woulde professe himselfe a plowman, or a keeper of a vinevineyarde: if a souldiour that had bene continually in the battaile and in the campe, and had neuer seene iudiciall court or bookes, would boast himselfe for a lawyer, who could abide such stinking follies? But these men doe somewhat more absurdly, that will seeme and be called lawfull Pastors of the Church, and yet will not be so. For howe many a one is there, that doeth so much, as in shewe, exercise the gouernement of his Church? Many doe all their life long deuoure the reuenues of Churches, to which they neuer come so much as to looke vpon them. Some other do once by yeare either come themselves, or sende their stewarde, that nothing should bee lost in the letting to farme. When this corruption first crept in, they that woulde enioy this kinde of vacation, exempted themselves by priuileges: nowe it is a rare exemple, to haue one resident in his owne Church. For they esteeme them none otherwise than farmes, ouer which they set their vicars as bailies or farmers. But this very naturall reason reiecteth, that he should be pastor of a flocke, that neuer sawe one sheepe thereof.

12 It appeareth that euen in the time of Gregorie, there were certaine feedes of this mischiefe, that the rulers of Churches, began to be negligent in teaching: for he doeth in one place grieuouly complaine of it. The world (sayeth he) is full of priestes: but yet in the harvest there are seldome workmen founde: because in deede wee take vpon vs the office of priest, but we fulfill not the worke of the office. Againe, because they haue not the bowels of charitie, they will seeme Lordes: they acknowledge not themselves to bee fathers. They change the place of humilitie into the aduancing of lordlinesse. Againe, but what do wee, O pastours, which receiue the rewarde, and are no workemen? We are fallen to outwarde businesse, and wee take in hande one thing, and performe an other. We leaue the ministry of preaching: and to our punishment, as I see, we are called Bishops, that keep the name of honour and not of vertue. Sith he vseth so great sharpnesse of wordes against them, which were but lesse continuing and lesse diligent in their office: What I pray you, would he say, if he sawe of the Bishops almost none, or truely very fewe, and of the rest scarcely euery hundreth man once in all his life to goe vp into a pulpet? For men be come to such madnesse, that it is commonly counted a thing too base for the dignitie of a Bishoppe, to make a sermon to the people. In the time of Bernard, thinges were somewhat more decayed: but we see also with howe sharpe chidings he inuiceth against the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue bene then much purer than it is nowe.

Hcm. 17.

13 But if a man doe well wey and examine this outwarde forme of ecclesiasticall gouernment that is at this day vnder the papacy, he shall finde that there is no theeuish corner wherein robbers do more licentiously range without lawe and measure. Truely all thinges are there so vnlike the institution of Christ, yea so contrary to it, they are so degenerate from the auncient ordinances and manners of the Church, they are so repugnant to nature and reason, that there can be no greater iniurie done to Christ, than when they pretende his name to the defence of so disordered gouernment. Wee (say they) are the pillars of the Church, the chiefe Bishoppes of religion, the vicars of Christ, the heades of the faithfull: because the power of the Apostles is by succession come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of these follies, as though they talked vnto stockes. But so oft as they shall boast of this, I will aske of them againe, what they haue common with the Apostles. For wee speake not of any inheritably descending honour that may be giuen to men euen while they lie sleeping: but of the office of preaching, which they so much flee from. Likewise when we affirme that their kingdome is the tyranny of Antichrist, by and by they aunswere, that it is that reuerende Hierarchie, so oft praised of notable and holy men. As though the holy fathers, when they commended the Ecclesiastical Hierarchie or spirituall gouernement, as it was deliuered them from hande to hande from the Apostles, did dreame of this mishapen and waste disordered heape, where the Bishops are for the most part, either rude asses, which know not the verie first & common principles of faith, or sometime children yet newe come from y^e nurse: and if any be learnede (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a Bishop-rike to be nothing els but a title of gloriousnesse and magnificence: where the perones of Churches thinke no more of feeding the focke, than a shoemaker doth of plowing: where all things are confounded with more than Babilonicall dispersing, that there remaineth no more any one steppe whole of that ordinance of the Fathers.

14 What if we discende to their maners? where shalbe that light of the world, which Christ requireth? where is the salte of the earth? where is that holinesse, which may be as a perpetual rule to iudge by? There is no degree of men at this day more ilspoken of for riot, wantonnesse, deintinesse, finally all kinde of lustes. There are of no degree men either fitter, or cunninger maisters of all deceit, fraude, treason, and breach of faith: there is no where so great cunning or boldnesse to do hurt. I passe ouer their disdainfulnesse, pride, extortion, crueltie. I passe ouer the dissolute licentiousnesse in all the parts of their life. In suffering wherof the world is so wearied, y^e it is not to be feared, that I should seeme to enforce any thing too much. This on thing I say, which they themselues shall not be able to denie: that of bishops there is almost none, of the Parsons of paroches not the hundreth man, but if iudgement should be giuen of his maners according to the olde Canons, he should be either to be excommunicate, or at least to be put from his office. I seeme to say somewhat incredible: so farre is that auncient discipline growen out of vse, that commanded an exacter triall to be had of the maners of the clergy: but the truth is so. Nowe let them goe, that fight vnder the standerd and guiding of the sea of Rome, and lette them boast among themselues of the order of Priesthoode. As for the order that they haue, truely it is euident, y^e it is neither of Christ, nor of his Apostles, nor of the fathers, nor of the olde Church.

15 Now let the Deacons come forth, & that most holy distributing that they haue of the goods of the Church. Howbeit they doe not now create their Deacons to that purpose, for they enioyne them nothing els but to minister at the altar, to reade & sing the Gospel, and do I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almies, nothing of the care of the poore, nothing of all that function which they in olde time executed. I speake of the very institution. For if we haue respect what they do, in deede it is not to them an office, but onely onely a steppe toward priefthood. In one thing, they that keepe the Deacons place at the masse, do represent a voide image of antiquitie. For they receiue the offrings before the consecration. This was the ancient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did kisse one another, and offer their almes at the altar: so first by a signe, and afterwarde by very liberalitie they shewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mens steward, receiued that which was giuen, to distribute it. Now of those almes, there commeth no more to the poore, than if they were throwen into the sea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truly therein they haue nothing like, neither to the institution of the Apostles, nor to the auncient vsage. But the very distribution of the goods they haue conueyed another way: & haue so framed it, y^e nothing can be deuised more vnorderly. For as the eues, when they haue cut mens throtes, do deuide the pray among them: so these, after the quenching of the light of Gods word, as though the Church were slaine, do thinke y^e whatsoeuer was dedicate to holy vses is laide for pray and spoile. Therefore making a diuision, euery one hath snatched to himselfe as much as he could.

16 Here all these old orders, that we haue declared, are not onely troubled, but vtterly wiped out and rased. The Bishops and priefstes of cities, which being made riche by this pray, were turned into canons, haue made hauocke of the chiefe part among them. But it appeareth that the partition was vnorderly, because to this day they striue about the bounds. Whatsoeuer it be, by this diuision it is prouided, that not one halspeny of the goods of the Church should come to the poore, whose had bene the halfe parte at least. For the canons do giue them the fourth part by name: and the other fourth part they do therefore appoint to the Bishops, that they shoulde bestowe it vpon hospitalitie, and other duties of charitie. I speake not what the clerkes ought to do with their portion, and to what vse they ought to bestowe it. For we haue sufficiently declared, that the rest which is appointed for temples, buildings and other expenses, ought to be open for the poore in necessitie. I pray you, if they had one sparke of the feare of God in their hart would they abide this burden of conscience, that all that they eate, & wherewith they be clothed, commeth of theft, yea of sacrilege? But sith they are litle moued with the iudgement of God, they should at least thinke, that those be men endued with wit and reason, to whome they woulde persuaide, that they haue so goodly & well framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boast. Let them aunswere mee shortly, whether deaconrie be a licence to steale and robbe. If they denie this, they shall also be compelled to confesse, that they haue no deaconrie left: for as much as among them, all the disposition of the goods of the Church is openly turned into a spoiling full of sacrilege.

17 But here they vse a verie faire colour. For they say, that the dignitie of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomlily vpholden. And they haue of their sect some so shamelesse, y^e they dare openly boast, that so onely are fulfilled those prophecies, whereby the olde Prophets describe y^e gloriousnesse of the kingdome of Christ, when that kingly gorgeousnes is seene in y^e pristly order. Not in vain (say they) God hath promised these things to his Church: Kings shall come, they shall worship in thy sight, they shall bring thee giftes . Arise, arise, cloth thee with thy strength, O Syon: cloth thee with the garments of thy glory, O Hierusaleni: Al shall come from Saba, bringing golde and incense, and speaking praise to the Lorde . All the cattell of Cedar shall be gathered together to thee . If I should tary long vpon confuting this lewdenesse, I feare least I should seeme sonde . Therefore I wil not lose wordes in vaine . But I aske : if any Iewe would abuse these testimonies, what solution would they giue ? Verily they would reprehende his dulnesse, for that he transferred those thinges to the flesh and the worlde, that are spirituallly spoken of the spirituall kingdome of Christ . For we knowe, that the Prophets, vnder the image of earthly thinges, did paint out vnto vs the heauenly glorie of God, that ought to shine in the Church . For the Church had neuer lesse abundaunce of these blessings, which their words expresse, than in the time of the Apostles: and yet all confesse, that the force of the kingdome of Christ then chiefly florished abroad. What then meane these sayings ? Whatsoeuer is any where precious, hie, excellent, it ought to be made subiect to the Lorde . Where as it is namely spoken of kinges, that they shall submit their scepters to Christ, that they shall throwe downe their crownes before his feet, that they shall dedicate their goods to the Church: when (will they say) was it better & more fully performed, than when Theodosius, casting away his purple robe, leauing the ornaments of the empire, as some one of the common people: submitted himselfe before God and the Church, to solemne penance ? then whē he & other like godly princes bestowed their endeouers and their cares to preferue pure doctrine in the Church, and to cherish & defende sound teachers ? But how priests at that time exceeded not in superfluous riches, that only sentence of the Synode at Aquileia, where Ambrose was chiefe, sufficiently declareth : Glorious is pouertie in the priestes of the Lorde. Truly the Bishops had at that time some riches, wherwith they might haue set out the Churches honor, if they had thought those to be the true ornaments of the Church. But when they knew y there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glister & shew themselves proudly with deintinesse of fare, with gorgiounes of garments, with great traine of seruantes, with stately palaces, they followed and kept the humblenes and modestie, yea the very pouertie which Christe holily appointed among his ministers.

18 But that wee may not be too long in this point, let vs againe gather into a short summe, howe farre that dispensation or dissipation of y goods of the Church, that is nowe vsed, differeth from the true deaconrie, which both the worde of God commendeth vnto vs, and the auncient church obserued. As for that which is bestowed vpon the garnishing of temples. I say it is ill bestowed, if that measure be not vsed, which both the verie nature of holy thinges appointeth, and the Apostles and other holy fathers haue prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seene at this day in the temples ? whatsoeuer is framed, I will not say after that auncient sparing, but to any honest meane it is reiected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which saoureth of riot and the corruption of times . In the meane time they are so farre from hauing due care of the liuely temples, that they would rather suffer many thousandes of the poore to perish for hunger, than they would breake the least chalice or cruet, to relieue their neede. And that I may not pronounce of my self any thing more greuously against them, this only I would haue the godly readers to thinke vpon: if it shoulde happen that same Exuperius bishop of Tholosa, whom we euen now rehearsed, or Acatius, or Ambrose, or any such to be raised from death, what they would say. Truly they woulde not allowe that in so great necessitie of the poore, riches in a manner superfluous shoulde bee turned another way. Admit I speake nothing how these vses vpon which they be bestowed, (although there were no poore) are many wayes hurtfull, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leaue to speake of men. These goods are dedicate to Christ: therefore they are to be disposed after his will. But they shall in vaine saye, that this part is bestowed vpon Christ, which they haue wasted otherwise than he commanded. Howbeit, to confesse the truth, there is not much of y^e ordinary reuenue of y^e Church abated for these expenses. For there are no bishoprikes so welthy, no abbaties so fatte, finally neither so many, nor so large benefices that may serue to fil the glutony of priests. But while they seeke to spare themselves, they perswade the people by superstition, to turne that which shoulde be bestowed vpon the poore, to builde temples, to sette vp images, to buy iewels, to gette costly garmentes. So with this gulfe are the daily almes consumed.

19 Of the reuenue, that they receiue of their landes and possession, what else shall I say, but that which I haue already sayde, and which is before all mens eyes? We see with what faithfulness they which are called bishops and Abbors do dispose the greatest part. What madnesse is it, to seeke here for an ecclesiasticall order? Was it meere that they, whose life ought to haue ben a singular example of frugalitie, modestie, continence, and humilitie, should contende with the royaltie of princes in number of goods, in gorgiousnesse of houses, in deintinesse of apparell and fare? And howe much was this contrarie to their office, that they, whome the eternall and inuiolable commandement of G O D forbiddeth to bee desirous of filthy gaine, and biddeth to be content with simple liuing, should not onely laye handes vpon townes and castles, but also violently enter vpon the greatest lordshippes, finally possesse forceably very empires? If they despise the worde of G O D: what will the y^e aunswere to those auncient decrees of the Synodes: whereby it is decreed that the bishop should haue a smal lodging not far from the Church, meane fare and houshoulde stuffe? what will they saye to that praise of the Synode at Aquileia: where pouertie is reported glorious in the Priestes of the Lorde? For perhappes they will vtterly refuse as too muche rigorous, that which Hierome aduiseeth Nepotianus, that poore men and strangers, and among them Christe as a guest, may knowe his table. But that which he by and by addeth, they will be ashamed to denie, that it is the glory of a bishoppe to prouide for the goods of the poore: that it is the shame of all priestes to studie for their owne richesse. But they can not receiue this, but they must all condemne themselves of shame. But it is not needefull in this place to speake more hardely against them, sith my meaning was nothing else, but to shewe, that among them the lawefull order of deaconrie is long ago taken away: that they may no more glory of this title to the cōmendation of their Church: which I thinke I haue already sufficiently shewed.

The vi. Chapter.

Of the Supremacie of the Sea of Rome.

Hitherto we haue rehearsed those orders of the Church, which were in the government of the olde Church: but afterwarde corrupted in times, and from thenceforth more and more abused, doe nowe in the Popish Church reteine onely their name, and in deede are nothing else but visours: that by comparison the godly reader might iudge, what manner of Church the Romanistes haue, for whose sake they make vs schismatickes, because we haue departed from it. But as for the heade and toppe of the whole order, that is to say, the supremacy of the sea of Rome, whereby they trauaile to prooue that they onely haue the catholike Church, we haue not yet touched it: because it tooke beginning neither from the institution of Christe, nor from the vse of y^e old Church, as those former parts did: which we haue shewed to haue so proceeded from antiquitie, y^e by wickednes of times they are vtterly degenerate, and haue put on altogether a newe forme. And yet they go about to perswade the worlde, that this is the chiefe and in a manner only bonde of the vⁿity of the Church, if we cleaue to the sea of Rome, and continue in the obedience thereof. They rest (I say) principally vpon this stay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themselves, for y^e they keep the head, vpon which the vⁿitie of the Church hangeth, and without which the Church must needs fall a sunder and be broken in peeces. For thus they thinke, that the Church is as it were a maimed and headlesse body, vnlesse it be subiect to the sea of Rome, as to her heade. Therefore when they talke of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the bishop of Rome (as the vicar of Christ, which is the hed of the Church) is in his steede President of the vniuersall Church: and that otherwise the Church is not well ordered, vnlesse that Sea do holde the Supremacy aboue all other. Therefore this also is to be examined of what sort it is: that we may omit nothing that pertaineth to a iust gouernment of the Church.

2 Let this therefore be the principall point of the question: Whether it be necessary for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they cal it) or ecclesiastical order, that one Sea should be aboue the other both in dignitie and in power, that it may be the head of the whole body. But we make the Church subiect to too vniust lawes, if we lay this necessity vpon it, without the word of God. Therefore if the aduersaries will proue y^e which they require, they must first shewe that this disposition was ordeined by Christ. For this purpose they alledge out of the law the hie priesthoode, also the hie iudgement, which God did institute at Hierusalem. But it is easie to giue a solution, and that many wayes, if one way doe not satisfie them. First no reason compelleth to extende that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole worlde shall be farre different.

Because

Because the Jewes were on each side compassed with idolaters: y they shoulde not be diuersely drawn with varietie of religions, God appointed the place of worshipping him in the middest parte of the lande: there he ordeined ouer them one heade Bishoppe, whome they should haue al regard vnto, that they might bee the better kept together in vnitie. Nowe when religion is spred abroade into the whole worlde, who doeth not see that it is altogether an absurditie, that the government of the East & West be giuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man shoulde affirme that the whole worlde ought to bee gouerned by one ruler, because one peece of lande hath no moe rulers but one. But there is yet an other reason, why that ought not to be made an example to be followed. No man is ignorāt that y hie Bishop was a figure of Christ. Now, since the Priesthood is remoued, y right must also be remoued. But to whom is it remoued? Truly, not to the Pope (as he himselfe is so bold shamelesly to boast) when he draweth this title to himself: but to Christ, which as hee alone susteyneth this office, without any vicar or successor, so hee resigneth the honour to none other. For the Priest-hood consisteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appeasing of God, which Christ hath fully wrought by his death, & in that intercession which he now vseth with his father.

Heb. 7. 12.

3 There is therefore no cause why they shoulde binde vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which wee haue seene to bee enduring but for a time. Out of the newe Testament they haue nothing to bring foorth for prooffe of their opinion, but that it was sayde to one: Thou art Peter, and vpon this stone I will builde my Church. Agayne, Peter, Louest thou mee? Feede my sheepe. But admitting that these be strong proues, they must first shewe, that hee which is commaunded to feede the flocke of Christe, hath power committed to him ouer all Churches; and that to binde and to loose is nothing else but to bee ruler of all the worlde. But as Peter had receiued the commaundement of the Lord, so hee exhortheth all other priests to feede the Church. Hereby wee may gather, that by this saying of Christ, there was either nothing giuen to Peter more than to the rest, or that Peter did egally communicate with other the power that he had rece.ued. But, that we striue not vainely, wee haue in an other place a cleare exposition out of the mouth of Christ, what is to binde and loose: that is to say, to reteyne and to forgiue sinnes. But the manner of binding and losing, both y whole Scripture eche where sheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when he saith that the ministers of the Gospell, haue commaundement to reconcile men to G O D, and also haue power to punish them that refuse this benefite.

Matt. 16. 18.
Ioh. 21. 15.1. Pet. 5. 2.
Ioh. 20. 23.2. Cor. 5. 18.
& 10. 16.

4 Howe shamefully they wrest those places, that make mention of binding and loosing, I both haue already shortly touched, and a little after I shall haue occasion to declare more at large. Nowe it is good to see onely, what they gather of that famous aunswere of Christ to Peter. Hee promised him the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: he saide that whatsoever he bounde in earth, shoulde bee bounde in heauen. If we agree vpon the word keyes, and the manner of binding, all contention shall by and by cease. For the Pope himselfe will gladly giue ouer the charge inioyned to the Apostles, postles, which being full of trauell and greefe, shoulde shake from him his pleasures, without gaine. For as much as the heauens are opened vnto vs by the doctrine of the Gospell, it is with a verie fit metaphore expressed by the name of keyes. Now men are bounde and loosed in no other wise, but when faith reconcileth some to God, and there owne beleefe bindeth other some. If the Pope did take this only vpon him: I thinke there will be no man that woulde either eniue it or striue about it. But because this succession being trauelsome and nothing gainefull pleaseth not the Pope, hereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Christ promised to Peter.

Therefore I gather by the very matter it selfe, that there is nothing meant by the dignitie of the office of an Apostle, which cannot be seuered from the charge. For if that definition which I haue rehearsed, be receiued (which cannot but shamelesly be reiecte) here is nothing giuen to Peter, y^e was not also common to his other fellowes: because otherwise there shoulde not only wrong be done to the persons, but y^e very maiestic of doctrine shoulde halt. They cry out on the other side: what auayleth it, I pray you, to run vpō this rocke? For they shall not proue, but as the preaching of one same gospel was enioyned to all y^e Apostles, so they were also alike furnished wth power to bind & loose. Christ (say they) appointed Peter Prince of y^e whole church, when he promised that he would giue him the keyes. But y^e which he then promised to one, in an other place he gaue it also to all the rest, and deliuered it as it were into their hands. If the same power were granted to al, which was promised to one, wherein shall hee be aboue his fellowes? Herein (say they) hee excelleth, because he receiued it both in common together with them, and seuerally by himselfe, which was not giuen to the other, but in common.

Matt. 18. 20.

De sim. prel.

What if I aunswere with Cyprian and Augustine, that Christ did it not for this purpose, to prefer one man before other, but so to set out the vnitie of y^e Church. For thus saith Cyprian, that God in the person of one gaue y^e keyes to all, to signifie the vnitie of all: and that the rest were the same thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honor & power: but y^e the beginning is taken at vnitie, that the Church of Christ may bee shewed to bee one. Augustine saith: If there were not in Peter a mysterie of the Church, the Lorde woulde not say to him, I will giue thee the keyes. For if this was saide to Peter, the Church hath them not: but if the Church haue them, the Peter, when receiued the keyes, betokened the whole Church. And in an other place. When they were all asked, onely Peter aunswered, thou arte Christ: and it is saide to him, I will giue thee the keyes, as though he alone had receiued the power of binding and loosing: whereas both hee being one saide that one for al, and he receiued the other with al, as bearing the person of vnitie. Therefore one for all, because there is vnitie in all.

5 But this, Thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I wil build my Church, is no where red spokē to any other. As though Christ spake there any other thing of Peter, than y^e which Paul and Peter himselfe speaketh of al Christians. For Paul maketh Christ the cheefe and corner stone, vpon which they are builded together that growe into a holy temple to the Lord. And Peter biddeth vs to bee liuely stones which being founded vpon that chosen & precious stone, doe by this ioynt and coupling together with our GOD, cleave also together among our selues. He (say they) about the rest: because hee liath the name peculiarly. Indeede I doe willingly graunt this honour to Peter, that in the building of y^e Church hee be placed among the first, or (if they wil haue this also) the first of all the faithfull: but I will not suffer them to gather therevpon, that he shoulde haue a Supremacie ouer the rest. For what manner of gathering is this? Hee excelleth other in feruentnesse of zeale, in learning, and courage: therefore hee hath power ouer them. As though we might not with better colour gather, that Andrewe is in degree before Peter, because hee went before him in time, and brought him to Christ. But I passe ouer this. Let Peter truly haue the first place: yet there is great difference betweene the honour of degree and power. We see that the Apostles commonly graunted this to Peter, that hee shoulde speake in assemblies, and after a certayne manner go before them with propounding, exhorting, and admonishing: but of his power we read nothing at all.

and 42.

6 Howebeit we be not yet come to dispute of that point: onely at this present I woulde prooue, that they doe too fondly reason, when by the onely name of Peter they would builde an Empire ouer the whole Church. For those olde follies wherewith they went about to deceiue at the beginning, are not worthy to be rehearsed, much lesse to be confuted, that the Church was builded vpon Peter, because it was saide vpon this rocke. &c. But some of the Fathers haue so expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrarie, to what purpose is their authoritie alleadged against God? Yea, why doe we striue about the meaning of these wordes, as though it were darke or doubtfull, when nothing can bee more plainly nor more certainly spoken? Peter had confessed in his owne and his brethrens name that Christ is the sonne of God. Vpon this rocke Christ buildeth his Church: because it is (as Paul sayth) the onely foundation, beside which there can be layde none other. Neither doe I here therefore refuse the authoritie of the Fathers, because I want their testimonies, if I listed to alleadge them: but (as I haue saide) I will not with contending about so cleare a matter trouble the readers in vaine, specially sith this point hath beene long agoe diligently enough handled and declared by men of our side.

7 And yet indeede no man can better assoile this question, than the Scripture it selfe, if we compare all the places, where it teacheth, what office & power Peter had among the Apostles, howe he behaved himselfe, & howe he was accepted of them. Runne ouer all that remaineth written, you shall finde nothing else, but that he was one of the xii. egall with the rest and their fellowe, but not their Lorde. Hee doth indeede propounde to the counsell, if any thing bee to be done, and giueth warning what is meete to be done: but therewithall he heareth other, and doeth not onely graunt them place to speake their minde, but leaueth the iudgement to them: when they had determined, he followed and obeyed. When he writeth to the Pastors, he doth not commaunde them by authoritie, as Superior: but he maketh them his companions, and gently exhorteth them, as egalles are wont to doe. When he was accused for that hee had gone in to the Gentiles, although it were without cause, yet he answered and purged himselfe. When hee was commaunded by his fellowes, to goe with Iohn into Samaria, hee refused not. Whereas the Apostles did sende him, they did thereby declare that they helde him not for their superior. Whereas hee obeyed and tooke vppon him the embassage committed to him, hee did thereby confesse that he had a fellowship with them, and not an authoritie ouer them. If none of these things were, yet the onely Epistle to the Galathians may easily take al doubting from vs: where almost in two whole Chapters together Paul trauelleth to prooue nothing else, but that hee himselfe was egall to Peter in honour of Apostleshippe. Then he rehearseth that he came to Peter, not to professe subiection, but onely to make their consent of doctrine approued by testimonie to all men: and that Peter himselfe required no such thing, but gaue him his right hande of fellowshipe, to worke in common together in the Lords vincyarde: and that there was no lesser grace giuen to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Iewes: Finally that when Peter dealt not verie faithfully, hee was corrected by him, and obeyed his reproofing. All these thinges doe make plaine, eyther that there was an equalitie betweene Paul and Peter, or at least that Peter had no more power ouer the rest, than they had ouer him. And (as I haue already saide) Paul of purpose laboureth about this, that none shoulde preferre before him in the Apostleshippe either Peter, or Iohn, which were fellowes, not Lordes.

8 But, to graunt them that which they require concerning Peter, that is, that hee was the Prince of the Apostles, and excelled the rest in dignitie: yer there is no cause why they should of a singular example make an vniuersall rule, and drawe to perpetuities that which hath bene once done: sith there is a farre differing reason. One was cheefe among the Apostles: forsooth, because they were few in number. If one were the cheefe of twelue men, shall it therefore follow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thousand men? It is no meruell that twelue had one among them y^e should rule them all: For nature beareth this, and the witte of men requireth this, that in euery assemblie, although they be all egall in power, yet there bee one as a gouernour, whome the rest may haue regarde vnto. There is no court without a Confull: no session of iudges without a Pretor, or Propounder, no companie without a Ruler, no fellowshipe without a Maister. So shoulde it bee no absurditie, if wee confessed that the Apostles gaue to Peter such a supremacie. But that which is of force among fewe, is not by and by to bee drawn to the whole worlde, to the ruling whereof no one man is sufficient. But (say they) this hath place no lesse in the whole vniuersalitie of nature, than in all the partes, that there bee one soueraigne heade of al. And hereof (and God will) they fetch a prooffe from cranes and bees, which alway choose to themselues one guide, not many. I allowe indeede the examples which they bring foorth: but doe bees resorte together out of al the worlde to choose them one king? euerie feuerall kinge is content with his owne hye. So among cranes, euerie heard hath their owne king. What else shall they prooue hereby, but that euery Church ought to haue their owne feuerall Bishoppe appointed them? Then they cal vs to ciuil examples. They allage that saying of Homer, It is not good to haue many gouernours: and such thinges as in like sense are read in prophane writers to the commendation tion of Monarchie. The answer is easie. For Monarchie is not praised of Vlysses in Homere, or of any other, in this meaning, as though one ought to be Emperour of the whole worlde: but they meane to shew that one kingdome can not hold two kinges: and that power (as he calleth it) can abide no companion.

9 But let it bee, as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole world be holden vnder Monarchie, which yet is a very great absurdity: but let it be so: yet I will not therefore graunt that the same should take place in the gouernment of the Church. For the Church hath Christ her only head, vnder whose dominion we all cleaue together, according to that order and that forme of policie which he hath prescribed. Therefore they do a great wrong to Christ, when by that pretence they will haue one man to bee ruler of the vniuersal Church, because it can not be without a head. For Christ is the head of whom the whole body coupled and knit together in euery ioint, wherwith one ministrerh to another, according to the working of euery member in the measure thereof, maketh encrease of the body. See you not, how he setteth all men without exceptiō in the body, and leaueth the honor & name of head to Christ alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certain measure, and a determined & limited function: whereby both the perfection of the grace & the soueraigne power of gouernance may remain with Christ only? Neither am I ignorant what they are wont to cauil, whē this is objected against them: they say that Christ is properly called the only head, because he alone raigneth by his owne authority & in his owne name: but that this nothing withstandeth, but that there may be vnder him an other ministeriall head (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this cauillation they preuail nothing, vnlesse they first shew that this ministry was ordained by Christ. For the Apostle teacheth, that the whole ministracion is dispersed through the members, & that the power floweth from the one heauenly head. Or if they will haue it any plainer spoken, sith the Scripture testifieth that Christ is the head, & claimeth that honor to him alone, it ought not to be trāsferred to any other, but whom Christ himselfe hath made his vicar. But that is not only no where red, but also may be largely confuted by many places.

10 Paul somtimes depainteth vnto vs a liuely image of the Church. Of one head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his description we may gather, that it is disagreeing from the institution of Christ. Christ at his ascending tooke from vs the visible presence of himselfe: yet he went vp to fulfill all things. Now therefore the Church hath him yet present, and alway shal haue. When Paul goeth about to shewe the meane whereby hee presenteth himselfe, he calleth vs backe to the nunisteries which hee vscth. The Lorde (sayth he) is in vs all, according to the measure of grace that hee hath giuen to euery member. Therefore he hath appointed some Apostles, some Pastors, some Euangelistes, other some Teachers, &c. Why doth he not say, that he hath set one ouer all, to be his vicegerent? For the place required that principally, and it could by no meanes haue bin omitted, if it had bin true. Christ (sayth he) is with vs. How? by the ministry of men, whom he hath appointed to gouerne the Church. Why not rather by the ministeriall head, to whome he

he hath committed his steede: He nameth vnicity: but in GOD, and in the faith of Christ. He assigneth to men nothing but common ministerie, and to euery one a particular measure. In that commendation of vnicity, after that he had sayd that there is one body, one Spirit, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptisme, why hath he not also immediatly added one chiefe bishop, that may hold the Church together in vnicity? For nothing could haue beene more fildy spoken, if it had beene true. Lette that place be diligently weyed. It is no dout but that hee meant there altogether to represent the holy and spirituall government of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. As for Monarchie among ministers, he not only nameth none, but also sheweth y^e there is none. It is also no dout but that he meant to expresse the manner of conioyning, whereby the faithfull cleaue together with Christ their head. There he not onely speaketh of no ministerial head, but appointeth to euery of the members a particular working according to the measure of grace distributed to euery one. Neither is there any reason why they should suttley dispute of the comparison of y^e heauenly & earthly Hierarchie. For it is not safe to know beyond measure of it. And in framing this government we must folow no other figure, than the Lord himselfe hath painted out in his word.

11 Now although I graunt them an other thing, which they shall neuer win by prooffe before sober men, that the supremacy of the Church was so stablished in Peter, that it should alway remaine by perpetuall succession: yet howe will they prooue, that his seate was so placed at Rome, that whosoever is Bishop of that Church, should be set ouer the whole worlde? By what right doe they binde this dignitie to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (say they) liued and died at Rome. What did Christ himselfe? Did not he, while he liued, exercise his Bishoprike, and in dying fulfill the office of Priesthood, at Hierusalem? The Prince of Pastors, y^e soueraigne Bishop, the heade of the Church, could not purchase honor to the place: and could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not these follies more than childish? Christ gaue the honor of supremacy to Peter: Peter sate at Rome: therefore he there placed the sea of supremacy. By this reason, the Israelites in olde time might haue sette the seate of Supremacy in the deserte, where Moses the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophetes executed his ministry and died.

12 Let vs see how trimly they reason. Peter (say they) had the Supremacy among the Apostles: therefore the Church where he sate ought to haue that priuilege. But where sate he first? At Antioche, say they. Therefore the Church of Antioche doth rightly claime to it selfe the supremacy. They confesse that it was in olde time the first: but they say, y^e in remouing thence he remoued to Rome the honour that hee brought with him. For there is an Epistle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the bishoppes of Antioche, where he sayeth thus: Peters seate was at the beginninge with you, which afterwarde by the Lordes commaundement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioche, which was once the cheife, hath giuen place to the sea of Rome, But by what Oracle had that good man learned, that the Lorde so commanded? For if this cause be to be determined by the law, it is necessary that that they aunswere, whether they will haue this priuiledge to bee personall, or reall, or mixt. For it must bee one of these three. If they say that it is personall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they say that it is real, then when it is once giuen to the place, it is not taken away by reason either of the death or departure of the person. It remaineth therefore that they must say it is mixt: but then that place shall be not simplie to be considered, vnlesse the person doe also agree. Let them choose which soeuer they will, I will by and by inferre and easily proue, that Rome can by no meane take the supremacy vpon it selfe.

13 But be it, that as (they triflingly say) the supremacy was remoued frō Antioche to Rome: yet why did not Antioche keepe the second place? For if Rome haue therefore the first place, because Peter sate there to the end of his life: to whome shall the second place rather be graunted, than where he had his first seate? Howe came it to passe then, that Alexandria went before Antioche? How agreeth it, that the Church of one disciple shoulde bee aboue the seat of Peter? If honor be due to euery Church, according to the worthines of the fōuder, what shal we say also of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that seemed to be pillers, James, Peter, and Iohn. If y^e first place were giuen to the sea of Rome in the honor of Peter: do not the seas of Ephesus, & Hierusalem, where Iohn and James sate, deserue the second and third place? But among the Patriarches Hierusalem had the last place: Ephesus coulde not sit so much as in the vttermoſt corner. And other Churches were left out both al those that Paul founded, and those that the other Apostles were rulers of. The seat of Mark, which was but one of their disciples, obtained the honour. Therefore they must either confesse that that was a preposterous order, or they must graunt vs that this is not a perpetuall rule, that there bee due to euery Church the same degree of honour which the fōuder had.

Gal. 2. 9.

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters sitting in y^e Church of Rome, I see not what credite it ought to haue. Truly that which is in Eusebius, that he ruled there fīue and twentie yeares, is verie easily confuted. For it is euidēt by the first and seconde Chapter to the Galathians, that about twentie yeares after the death of Christ, hee was at Hierusalem, and that then he went to Antioch: where howe long he was, is vncertaine. Gregorie reckoneth seuen yeares, and Eusebius twentie and fīue. But from the death of Christ, to the ende of Neros Empire, (in whose time they say that he was slaine) there shall be founde but thurte and seuen yeares. For y^e Lorde suffered vnder Tiberius, the eighteenth yere of his Empire. If you rebate twentie yeares, during the which Paul is witnesse that Peter dwelte at Hierusalem, there wil remain but seuentene yeares at the most, which must nowe be deuided betweene two bishoprikes. If he taried long at Antioch he coulde not sit at Rome, but a verie little while. Which thing we may yet also more plainly proue. Paul wrote to the Romanes, when hee was in his journey going to Hierusalem, where he was taken & from thence brought to Rome. It is not likly y^e this Epistle was written foure yeares before y^e he came to Rome. Therein is yet no mention of Peter, which shoulde not haue bin left out, if Peter had ruled y^e Church. Yea & in the end also, when he rehearseth a great number of the godly, whom he biddech to be saluted, where verily he gathereth.

gathereth together all those that he knew, he yet sayth vterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it needefull here to make a long or curious demonstration to men of sound iudgement; for the matter it selfe, and the whole argument of the Epistle crieth out, that he should not haue ouerpasse Peter, if he had bin at Rome.

A. 2. 1. 1. 16.

15 Then Paul was brought prisoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that hee was receiued of the brethren, of Peter he sayth nothing. He wrote from thence to many Churches: and in some places also hee writeth salutations in the names of certaine: but he doth not in one worde shew that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you shall thinke it likely, that he could haue passed him ouer with silence, if he had bene present? Yea to the Philippias, where he sayd that he had none that so faithfully looked vnto the worke of the Lord, as Timothie, he complained that they did all seeke their owne. And to the same Timothie he maketh a more greuous complaint, that none was with him at his first defence, but al forsook him: where therfore was Peter then? For if they say that he was then at Rome, how great a shame doth Paul charge him with, that hee was a forsaker of the Gospell? For hee speaketh of the beleeuers: because he addeth, God impute it not vnto them. Howe long therefore, and in what time did Peter keepe that seate? But it is a constant opinion of writers, that he gouerned that Church euen to his death. But among the writers themselues it is not certaine who was his successor, because some say Linus, and othersome say Clement. And they tell many fonde fables, of the disputation had betweene him and Simon the Magician. And Augustine sticketh not to confesse, when he cntreateth of superstitions, that by reason of an opinion rashly conceyued, there was a custome growen in vse at Rome, that they shoulde not fast that day that Peter got the victorie of Simon the Magician. Finally the doinges of that time are so entangled with diuersitie of opinions, that we ought not rashly to beleue where wee finde any thing written. And yet by reason of this consent of writers, I striue not against this, that hee died there: but yet that hee was Bishop there, and specially a long time, I cannot bee perswaded, neither doe I much passe vpon that also: for as much as Paul testifieth that Peters Apostleship did peculiarly belong to the Iewes, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that fellowship which they couenaunted betweene themselues, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghost may stand in force among vs, wee ought to haue respect rather to the Apostleship of Paul and Peter. For the holy ghost so diuided the prouinces betweene them that he appointed Peter to the Iewes, and Paul to vs. Nowe therefore let the Romanistes go and seeke their supremacie else where than in the word of God, where it is found not to be grounded.

August. ad
Sannar.

16 Nowe let vs come to the olde Church, that it may also bee made to appeare plainely that our aduersaries doe no lesse causelessly, and falsely boast of the consent thereof, than they doe of the witnessse of the worde of God. When therfore they bragge of that principle of theirs, that the vnitie of the Church cannot otherwise be kept together, but if there one supreme heade in earth, to whom all the members may obey, and that therefore the Lorde gaue the supremacie to Peter, and from thence soorth to the sea of

Rome by right of succession, that the same should remaine in it to the ende: they affirme, that this hath bene alway obserued from the beginning. But forasmuch as they wrongfully wrest many testimonies, I wil first say this aforehande, that I deny not but that the writers doe eche where giue greate honor to the church of Rome, & do speake reuerently of it. Which I thinke to be done specially for three causes. For y^e same opinion, which I wote not how was growen in force, that it was founded and ordeined by the ministry of Peter, much auailed to procure fauour & estimation vnto it. Therefore in the East partes it was for honors sake called the see Apostolike. Secondly, when the head of the Empire was there, & that therefore it was likely, that in that place were men more excellent both in learning & wisdom, & skill, & experience of many things, than any where else: there was worthily consideration had thereof, that both the honor of the citie, & also the other more excellent gifts of God should not seeme to be despised. There was beside these also a third thing, y^e when the Churches of the East, and of Grecia, yea & of Affrica, were in tumults among themselues with disagreements of opinions, the Church of Rome was quieter & lesse full of troubles than the rest. So came it to passe, that the godly & holy Bishops, being driuen out of their seates, did oftentimes flee thither as into sanctuarie or certaine hauen. For as the Westerne men are of lesse sharpnesse & swiftnesse of wit, than the Asiatics or Affricans be, so much are they lesse desirous of alterations. This therefore added much authoritie to the Church of Rome, that in those doutfull times it was not so troubled as the rest, and did hold the doctrine once deliuered them, faster than all the rest as we shal by and by better declare. For these three causes (I say) it was had in no small honor, & commended with many notable testimonies of the old writers.

17 But when our aduersaries will thereupon gather that it hath a supremacie & soueraigne power ouer other churches, they do to much amisse, as I haue already said. And that the same may the better appeare, I wil first briefly shewe what the olde fathers thought of this vnitie which they enforce so earnestly. Hierome, writing to Nepotianus, after that he had recited many examples of vnitie, at the last descended to the Hierarchie of the Church. Eche Bishop of euery seueral church, eche Archpriest, eche Archdeacon, & all the ecclesiasticall order, do rest vpon their own rulers. Here a Romaine Priest speaketh, he commendeth vnitie in the ecclesiasticall order, why doth he not rehearse that all Churches are knit together with one head as with one bond? Nothing could haue more fitly serued the matter that he had in hand: & it cannot be said that it was for forgetfulness, that he omitted it: for he would haue done nothing more willingly if the matter had suffred him. Hee sawe therefore without dout, that that is the true reason of vnitie which Cyprian excellently wel describeth in these words: The bishoprick is one, whereof eche hath a part wholly: & the Church is one, which is with increase of fruitfulnessse more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many sunbeames & one light, and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded on a fast holding roote: and like as from one fountaine flowe many streames, & though the multitude seeme to be diuersly spread abroad wth largenessse of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnitie is kept whole in y^e original: De sim. p. 9.

so the Church also being ouerspread with the light of the Lorde, extendeth her beames abroad throughout the whole world, yet is it but one that is ech where poured forth, and the vnitie of the bodie is not seuered: she spreadeth her brāches ouer the whole world, she sendeth out her ouerflowing streams: yet is there but one head and one beginning, &c. Afterward: The spouse of Christ cannot be an aduultresse: she knoweth one only house, she keepeth the holinesse of one only chamber with chaste shamefastnesse. You see howe he maketh the vniuersall bishoprike to be Christ onely, which comprehendeth the whole Church vnder him: and saith that all they that execute the office of bishop vnder this heade, haue their partes thereof wholly. Where is the supremacie of the sea of Rome, if the whole bishoprike remaine with Christ onely, and ech bishop hath his part thereof wholly? These things therefore make to this purpose, that the reader may vnderstande by the way, that the olde fathers were vtterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanistes do take for confessed & vndouted, concerning the vnitie of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

The vij. Chapter.

Of the beginning and encreasing of the Papacie of Rome, vntil it aduanced it selfe to that height, vnder which both the libertie of the Church hath bin oppressed, and all the rights gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

AS concerning the auncientnesse of the supremacie of the see of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquitie to stablish it, than the decree of the Nicene Synode, wherein the bishop of Rome both hath the first place among the Patriarches giuen vnto him, and is commaunded to looke vnto the Churches adioyning to the citie. When the Council maketh such diuision betweene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euery one their boundes: truely, it doeth not appoint him the heade of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vitus and Vincentius in the name of Iulius, which then gouerned the Church of Rome: to them was giuen y fourth place. I beseech you, if Iulius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legates bee thrust into the fourth seate? Should Athanasius bee chiefe in the Council, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to be seene? In the Synode at Ephesus it appeareth, that Celestinus which was then bishop of Rome, vsed a crooked suttile meane, to provide for the dignitie of his seate. For when hee sent his deputies thither, he committed his steede to Cyrillus of Alexandria, which should notwithstanding otherwise haue bene the chiefe. To what purpose was that same committing, but that his name might by what meane soeuer abide in the first place? For his Legates sate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the rest, and subscribed in their order: in the meane time the Patriarch of Alexandria ioyned Celestines name with his own. What shall I say of the second council at Ephesus: where when Leos Legates were present, yet Dioscorus Patriarche of Alexandria sate y chiefe as by his owne right? They will take exception that it was no vpright council, by which both the holy man Flavianus was condemned, and Eutyches,

acquited, and his vngodlines allowed. But when the Synode was gathered when the bishops tooke their places in order, verily the Legates of the bishop of Rome sate there among the rest none otherwise than in a holy and lawfull Councell. Yet they striued not for the first place, but yelded it to another: which they would neuer haue don, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the bishops of Rome were neuer ashamed to enter into the greatest contentions for their honors, and for this only cause oftentimes to vexe and trouble the Church with many and hurtfull strifes. But because Leo sawe that it should be a too much vnreasonable request, if he should seek to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he surcessed it.

2 Then folowed the Council of Chalcedon, in which by the grant of the Emperour the Legates of the Church of Rome sate in the chiefe place. But Leo himselfe confesseth y^e this was an extraordinary priuilege. For when he made petition for it to the Emperour Marcianus, and Pulcheria y^e Empreffe, he did not affime y^e it was due to him, but only pretended, that the Easterne Bishops, which sate as chiefe in the councell at Ephesus, troubled all thinges and ill abused their power. Whereas therfore it was needefull to haue a graue gouernour, & it was not likely y^e they should be meet for it, which had once bin so light and disordered: therfore he prayed, that by reason of the default and vnfitnesse of other, the office of gouerning might be removed to him. Truly that which is gotten by singular priuilege and beside order, is not by common lawe. Where this only is pretended, that there needeth some newe gouernour, because the former gouernours had behaued themselues ill, it is euident that it neither was so before, nor ought to continue so for euer, but is don onely in respect of present danger. The Bishop of Rome therefore had the first place in the Council at Chalcedon: not because it was due to his see, but because the Synode was at that time destitute of a graue and fitte gouernour, while they that ought to haue bin the chiefe, did through their own intemperance and corrupt affection, thrust themselues out of place. And this that I say, Leos successour did in deede proue. For when he sent his Legates to the fift Synode at Constantinople, which was holden long time after, he brauled not for the first seate, but easily suffred Menna the Patriarch of Constantinople to sit as chiefe. So in the counsell at Carthage, at which Augustine was present, we see that not the Legates of the see of Rome, but Aurelius Archbishop of that place sate as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the authorite of the Bishop of Rome. Yea there was also a generall council holden in Italy it selfe, at which the bishop of Rome was not present. Ambrose was chiefe there, which was in very great authority with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the bishop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to passe by the dignity of Ambrose, that the see of Millain was more noble than the see of Rome.

3 As concerning the title of supremacy, & other titles of pride, wherupon it now maruelously boasteth it selfe, it is not hard to iudge, when and in what sort they crept in. Cyprian oftentimes maketh mention of Cornelius. He setteth him out wth no other name, but by y^e name of brother, or fellow bishop, or fellow in office. But when he writeth to Stephen the successor of Cornelius, he doth not only make him egal with himselfe and y^e rest, but also speaketh more hardly to him, charging him sometime with arrogancie, sometime with ignorance. Since Cyprian we haue what all the Church of Africa iudged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbid that any shoulde bee called Prince of Priests, or chiefe Bishop, but only bishop of the chiefe sea. But if a man turne ouer the antienter monuments, he shall finde that the Bishop of Rome at that time was content with the common name of brother. Certainly so long as the face of the Church continued true and pure, all these names of pride, wherewith since y^e time the sea of Rome hath begun to waxe outrageous, were vtterly vnheard of: it was not knowen, what was the hiest bishop and y^e only head of the church in earth. But if the bishop of Rome had bin so bold to haue taken such a thing vpon him, there were stout and wise men that would haue by & by repressed his folly. Hierom forasmuch as he was a priest at Rome, was not ill willing to set out the dignitie of his own Church, so much as the matter and state of his time sufficed: yet we see how he also bringeth it downe into fellowship with the rest. If authority (sayth he) be sought for, the world is greater than a city. Why doest thou alleage to me the custom of one city? Why doest thou defende smalnes of number, out of which hath growē pride, against the lawes of the Church? Whersoever there be a bishop, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Constantinople, or at Rhegium, he is of the same merite and of the same Priesthood. The power of riches or basenes of pouerty maketh not a bishop hier or lower.

Ep. ad Euag.

4 About the title of vniuersall bishop the contention first began in y^e time of Gregory, which was occasioned by the ambition of Iohn bishop of Constantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) woulde haue made himselfe vniuersall bishop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alleage that the right is taken away which was due to himselfe: but stoutly crieth out against it, that it is a prophane name, yea ful of sacrilege, yea the forwarner of Antichrist. The whole Church (sayth he) falleth downe from her state, if he fall, which is called vniuersal. In an other place: It is very sorrowfull, to suffer patiently, that our brother & fellowe bishop, despising all other, should only be named bishop. But in this his pride what els is betokened but the times of Antichrist nere at hand: because verily he foloweth him, y^e despising the fellowship of Angels, went about to climbe vp to the top of singularity. In an other place he writeth to Eulolius of Alexandria, and Anastasius of Antioche. None of my predecessors at any time would vse that prophane word: for if one be called vniuersall Patriarch, the name of Patriarches is abated from the rest. But farre may this be from a christian minde, that any should haue a will to take that vpon him, whereby he may in any part, be it neuer so litle, diminish the honor of his brethren. To consent in this wicked word is nothing else but to leese the faith. It is one thing (sayth he) that we owe to the preferuing of the vnyty of faith, and an other thing that we owe to the keeping downe of pride. But I say it boldly, because whosocuer calleth himselfe or desireth to bee called vniuersall bishop, he doth in his proude aduancing run before Antichrist, because he doth with shewing himselfe proud preferre himselfe aboue the rest. Againe to Anastasius bishop of Alexandria: I haue said y^e he can not haue peace with vs, vnlesse he amended the aduancing of the superstitious and proud worde, which the first apostata hath inuented.

And (to speake nothing of the wrong done to your honor) if one bee called vniuersall Bishop, the vniuersall Church falleth when that vniuersall² one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honor was offered to Leo in the Synode at Chalcedon, it hath no colour of truth. For neither is there any such thing recd in the actes of that Synode. And Leo himselfe, which with many Epistles impugne the decree there made in honor of the see of Constantinople, without doubt would not haue passed ouer this argument, which had bene most to be liked of all other, if it had bene true, that hee refused that which was giuen him: & being a man otherwise too much desirous of honor, he would not haue omitted that which made for his praise. Therefore Gregorie was deceiued in this, that he thought that that title was offered to the see of Rome by the Synode at Chalcedon: to speake nothing, howe fond it is, that he both testifieth it to haue proceeded from the holy Synod, & also at the same time called it wicked, prophane, abhominable, proude, & full of sacrilege, yea deuised by the diuel, & published by the crier of Antichrist. And yet he addeth that his predecessor refused it, least all Priestes should be deprivied of their due honor, when any thing were priuately giuen to one. In another place: No man at any time hath willed to be called by y^e word. No man hath taken to himselfe that presumptuous name: least if hee should in the degree of bishoprike take to himselfe a glory of singularitie, he should seeme to haue denied the same to all his brethren.

Li. 7. epi. 79.

5 Now I come to the iurisdiction, which the bishop of Rome affirmeth that he hath ouer all Churches. I knowe howe great contentions haue bene in olde time about this matter: For there hath bene no time wherein the see of Rome hath not coueted to get an Empire ouer other Churches. And in this place it shall not be out of season, to search by what meanes it grew then by tittle & litle to some power. I do not yet speake of that infinite Empire, which it hath not so long ago taken by force to it selfe: for we will differre y^e to a place conuenient. But here it is good to shewe briefly, howe in olde time & by what meanes it hath aduanced it selfe, to take to it selfe any power ouer other Churches. When the Churches of the East were deuied & troubled with the factions of the Arrians vnder the Emperours, Constantius & Constans the sonnes of Constantine the Great, and Athanasius the chiefe defendour there of the true faith was driuen out of his see: such calamitie compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authoritie of the see of Rome he might both after a sort repress the rage of his enemies, & confirme the godly that were in distresse. He was honourably receiued of Iulius then Bishop, and obtained that the Bishops of the West took vpon them the defence of his cause. Therefore when the godly stode in great neede of foreine aide, & saw that there was verie good succour for them in the Church of Rome, they willingly gaue vnto it the most authoritie y^e they could. But al y^e was nothing else, but y^e the communion thereof should be hiely esteemed and it should be counted a great shame, to be excommunicate of it. Afterward euil & wicked men also added much vnto it. For, to escape lawful iudgements, they fled to this sanctuarie. Therefore if any priest were condemned by his Bishop, or any Bishop by the Synode of his prouince, they by and by appealed to Rome. And the Bishops of Rome receiued such appellations more greedily than was meet: because it seemed to be a forme of extraordinary power, so to entermeddle with matters far & wide about them. So whē Eutyches was condemned by Flavianus bishop of Constantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wrong done vnto him. Leo without delay, no lesse vndiscretely than suddenly, tooke in hand the defence of an euil cause: he grieuouſly inueyed against Flavianus, as though he had, without hearing the cause, condemned an innocent: and by this his ambition he caused that the vngodlinesse of Eutyches was for a certaine space of time strengthened. In Affrica it is euident that this oftentimes chaunced. For so soone as any lewde man had taken a foile in ordinarie iudgement, he by and by flew to Rome, and charged his countreimen with many slanderous reports: & the sea of Rome was alway ready to entermeddle. Which lewdnes compelled the bishops of Affrica to make a lawe, that none vnder paine of excommunication should appeale beyond the sea.

6 But whatsoeuer it were, let vs see what authoritic or power the sea of Rome then had. Ecclesiasticall power is conteyned in these foure points, ordering of bishops, summoning of Councils, hearing of appeales or iurisdiction, chastising admonitions or censures. All the old Synodes commaunde bishops to be consecrate by their owne Metropolitans: and they neuer bid the bishop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by litle and litle it grewe in vse, that all the bishops of Italy came to Rome to fetche their consecration, except the Metropolitans, which sufficed not them selues to be brought into such bondage: but when any Metropolitane was to be consecrate, the bishop of Rome sent thither one of his priestes, which should only be presēt, but not president. Of which thing there is an example in Gregoric: at the consecration of Constantius bishop of Millain after the death of Laurence. Howbeit I do not thinke that that was a verie auncient institution: but when at the beginning for honor & good wils sake they sent one to another their Legates, to be witnesses of the consecration, and to testifie their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntarie, began to be holden for necessarie. Howsoeuer it bee, it is euident that in olde time the bishop of Rome had not the power of consecrating, but in the prouince of his owne Patriarchie, that is to say in the Churches adioyning to the ciue, as the canon of the Nicene Synode saith. To the Consecration was annexed the sending of a Synodicall Epistle, in which he was nothing aboue the rest. For the Patriarches were wont immediatly after their consecration, by solemne writing to declare their faith, whereby they professed y they subscribed to the holy & catholike Councils. So rendring an account of their Faith, they did approue themselues one to another. If the bishop of Rome had receiued of other, and not himselſe giuen this confession, he had thereby bin acknowledged superior: but when he was no lesse bound to giue it, than to require it of other, and to be subiect to the common lawe: truly y was a token of fellowship, not of dominion. Of this thing there is an example in Gregories Epistle to Anastasius and to Cyriacus of Constantinople, & in other places to all the Patriarches together.

7 Then follow admonitions or censures: which as in old time y bishops of Rome vsed toward other, so they did againe suffer them of other. Ireneus greuously reproofed Victor, because he vndiscretly for a thing of no value, trouble d the Church with a pernicious dissention. Victor obeyed, & spurned not against it. Such a liberty was then in vre among the holy bishops, y they vsed a brotherly authority toward the bishop of Rome; in admonishing and chastising him if he at any time offended. He againe, when occasion required, did admonish other of their duety: & if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cyprian, when he exhorteth Stephen to admonish the bishoppes of France, fetcheth not his argument from the greater power, but from the common right that priests haue among themselues. I beseech you, if Stephen hadde then bin ruler ouer Fraunce, would not Cyprian haue sayd: Restraine them, because they be thine? but he sayth farre otherwise. This (sayth he) the brotherly fellowship, wherewith we be bound one to an other requireth that we should admonish one an other. And we see also with how greate sharpnes of words he being otherwise a man of a milde nature inueyeth against Stephen himselfe, when he thinketh him to be too insolent. Therefore in this behalfe also there appeareth not yet, that the bishop of Rome had any iurisdiction ouer them that were not of his owne prouince.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of e-uery Metropolitane, at certaine appointed times to assemble a Prouinciall Synode. There the bishop of Rome had no authority. But a generall council the Emperor only might summon. For if any of the bishops had attempted it, not only they y were out of his prouince, would not haue obeyed his calling, but also there would by and by haue risen an vprore. Therefore the Emperor indifferently warned them all to be present. Socrates in deed reporteth, that Iulius did expostulate with the bishops of the East, because they called him not to the Synode of Antioch, wheras it was forbidden by the Canons, that any thing should be decreed without the knowledge of the Bishop of Rome. But who doth not see that this is to be vnderstanded of such decrees as binde the whole vniuersall Church? Now it is no maruell, if thus much be granted both to the antiquity and honor of the city, & to the dignity of the sea, that there should be no generall decree made of religion, in the absence of the bishop of Rome, if he refuse not to be present. But what is this to the dominion ouer the whole Church? For we deny not, that he was one of the chiefe: but we will not grant, that which the Romanistes now affirme, that he had a dominion ouer all.

Tripar. hist.

9 Nowe remaineth the fourth kind of power, which standeth in appeales. It is euident that hee hath the chiefe power, to whose iudgement seate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appelled to the bishop of Rome: and he himselfe also went about to draw the hearing of causes to himselfe: but he was alway laughed to scorne, when he passed his owne boundes. I will speake nothing of the East and of Grecia: but it is certaine that the bishops of France stoutly withstoode him, when hee seemed to take to himselfe an empire ouer them. In Affrica there was long debate about that mater. For where at the Meleuitane Council, at which Augustine was presente, they were excommunicate that appelled beyonde the sea, the bishoppe of Rome trauailed to bring to passe, that that decree might be amended. He sent his legates to shew that that priuilege was giuen to him by the Nicene Council:

The Legates brought forth the actes of the Nicene Counsell, which they had fetched out of the storehouse of their own Church. The Africans withstood it, and denied that the bishops of Rome ought to be credited in their owne cause: and sayd that therefore they would sende to Constantinople, & into other cities of Grecia, where copies were to be had that were lesse suspicious. It was founde, that therein was no such thing written, as the Romans had pretended. So was that decree confirmed, which tooke the chiefe hearing of causes from the bishop of Rome: In which doing y^e lewd shamelesnes of the Bishoppe of Rome himselve appeared. For when he guilefully did thrust in the Synode at Sardos in steed of the Nicene Synode, he was shamefully taken in a manifest falsehoode. But yet greater and more shamelesse was their wickednes, that added a forged Epistle to the Counsell, wherein I wote not what bishop of Carthage, condemning the arrogance of Aurelius his predeceffour, for that he was so bolde to withdrawe himself from the obedience of the sea Apostolike, and yeelding himselve and his Church, humbly craueth pardon. These be the goodly monumentes of antiquitie, wherupon the maiestie of the sea of Rome is founded, while they so childishly lie, vnder the pretence of Antiquity, y^e very blinde men may finde it out by groping. Aurelius (sayth he) puffed vp with deuellish boldenesse and stubbornnesse, rebelled against Christ, and saint Peter, & therefore to be condemned with curse. What sayd Augustine? But what said so many fathers that were present at the Mileuitane Council? But what neede is it to spende many wordes in confuting that foolish writing, which the Romanistes themselues, if they haue any face left, can not looke vpon without great shame? So Gratian, I cannot tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearsed that decree, that they should be excommunicate that appell beyond the sea, addeth an exception: Vnlesse peraduenture they appell to the sea of Rome. What may a man do to these beasts, which are so voyd of comon reason, that they except y^e only thing out of the law, for whose cause euery man seeth y^e the law was made? For the Counsell when it condemneth appels beyond the sea, forbiddeth only this, that none should appell to Rome. Here the good expositor excepteth Rome out of the common lawe.

2. quest. c. 4.

10 But (to determine this question at once) one history shal make plaine what maner of iurisdiction the bishop of Rome had in olde time. Donate of y^e blackhouses had accused Cecilian bishop of Carthage. The man accused was condemned, his cause not heard. For when he knew that the bishops had conspired against him, he would not appeare. Then the matter came to the Emperour Constantine. He, forasmuch as he willed to haue the matter ended by ecclesiasticall iudgement, committed the hearing of it to Melciades bishoppe of Rome. To whom he adioyned fellowe commissioners: many bishops of Italy, Fraunce and Spaine. If that belonged to the ordinary iurisdiction of the sea of Rome, to heare an appelle in an ecclesiasticall cause: why doth he suffer other to be ioyned with him at the will of the Emperour? Yea why did he himselve take the iudgement vpon him rather by the Emperours commaundement, than by his owne office? But let vs heare what hapned afterwarde. There Cecilian got the victory. Donat of the blacke houses was condemned for sleaughter: he appelled: Constantine comitted the iudgment of

of the appell to the bishop or Orleance He saie as iudge, to pronounce what he thought, after y^e bishop of Rome. If the sea of Rome hath the chief power without appellation: why doth Melciades suffer himsele to receiue so great a shame, that the bishop of Orleance shold be preferred aboute him? And what Emperour doth this: euen Constantine of whom they boast that he employed not only all his endeour, but in a maner al the riches of the empire to increase the dignity of their sea. We see therefore nowe, howe farre the bishoppe of Rome was at that time by all meanes from that supreme dominion, which he: firmeth to be giuen vnto him by Christ ouer al Churches, and which he lyingly sayth that he hath in all ages possessed by the consent of the whole worlde.

11 I knowe howe many epistles there bee, howe many writings and decrees, wherein the bishops do giue much, and boldly challenge much vnto it. But this also al men that haue but a verie litle wit & learning do know, that the most part of those are so vsfauerie, that by the first tast of them a man may soone finde out of what shop they came. For what man of sounde wit & sober, will thinke that that goodly interpretation is Anacletus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anacletus: that is, that Cephas is a head? The Rōmanistes doe at this day abuse for defence of their see, many such trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without iudgement: and yet still in so great light they will sell such smokes, wherewith in olde time they were wont to mocke out the ignorant in darkenesse. But I wil not bestowe much labour in confuting those things, which do' openly confute themselues by reason of their vsfauoury follie. I graunt that there remaine also true epistles of the old bishops, wherein they set forth the honor of their see with glorious titles: of which sort are some epistles of Leo. For that man, as he was learned and eloquent, so was he also about measure desirous of glorie and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleued his testimony when hee so aduanced himselfe, that in deede is it that is in controuersie. But it appeareth that many offended with his ambition, did also withstande his greedie desire. Sometimes he appointed in his steede the Bishop of Thessalonica throughout Grecia and other countries adioyning: sometime hee appointed the bishop of Orleance, or some other throughout France. So he appointed Hormisdas bishop of Hispalia to be his vicar in Spain but euery where he excepted, that he giueth out such appointementes vpon this condition, that the Metropolitans may haue their ancient priuileges remaining safe and whole. But Leo himselfe declareth, that this is one of their priuileges, that if any doubt happen about any matter, the Metropolitan should first be asked his aduise. Therefore those appointementes of vicars in his steede were vpon this condirion, that neither any bishop should be letted in his ordinary iurisdiction, nor any Metropolitan in being iudge of Appelles, nor any prouincial Councell in ordering of their Churches. What was this else but to abstain from all iurisdiction: but to entermedle to the appeasing of discordes, only so farre as the lawe and nature of the communion of the Church suffreth?

12 In Gregories time that auintient order was already much changed. For when the Empire was shaken, and torne in peeces, when Fraunce and Spaine.

Spaine were afflicted with many ouerthrowes receiued, Slaunonia wasted, Italy vexed, and Affrica in a maner destroyed with continuall calamities. that in so great a shaking of ciuill affaires, at least the integritie of faith might remaine, or yet not vterly perish, all the bishops from ech part did the rather ioyne themselues to the bishop of Rome. Therby it came to passe, that not onely the dignitie, but also the power of that sea greatly encreased. Howbeit I doe not so much passe by what meanes it was brought about. Truly it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from being an vnbridled dominion, that one man might beare rule ouer other after his owne will. But the sea of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie subdue & repress the lewde and obstinate that could not by the other bishops be kept within their duetie. For Gregory doth oftentimes diligently testifie this, that he doth no lesse faithfully preferue to other men their rights, than he requireth his own of them.

Li. 1. epi. 68. Neither doe I (sayth he) prick on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I desire in all things to honour my brethren. There is no saying in his writings wherein he doth more proudly boast of the largesse of his Supremacie, than this: I knowe not what bishoppe is not subiect to the sea Apostolike when he is founde in faulte. But he by and by adioyneth, Where fault requireth not all according to the order of humilitie are equall. He giueth to himselfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all doe their duetie, he maketh himselfe equall with the rest. But he himselfe giueth himselfe this power: and they assented to it that woulde: and other that liked it not, might freely gainsay it, which it is well known that the most part of them did. Beside that he speaketh there of the Primacie of Constantinople: which when hee was condemned by the prouinciall Synode, refused the whole iudgemente. His fellowe bishoppes informed the Emperour of this stubbornnesse of him. The Emperour willed Gregorie to be iudge of the cause. We see therefore that he both attempteth nothing, wherby he may breake the ordinary iurisdiction, and the same thing that he doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the commaundement of the Emperour.

13 This therefore was then all the power of the bishop of Rome, to sette himselfe against obstinate & vntamed heads, whē there needed any extraordinary remedy: & that to helpe and not to hinder other bishops. Therefore he raketh no more to himselfe ouer all other, than in an other place he granteth to all other ouer himselfe, when he confesseth that hee is ready to be corrected of all, to be amended of all. So in an other place hee doth in deede commaunde the bishoppe of Aquileia to come to Rome, to pleade his cause in a controuersie of faith that was risen betweene him and other: but hee doth not commande him of his owne power, but because the Emperour had so commaunded. Neither doeth he giue warning that hee alone shall be iudge, but promised that hee will assemble a Synode by whome the whole matter may be iudged. But although there was yet such moderation, that the power of the sea of Rome had her certaine boundes, which it might not passe, & the bishop of Rome himselfe was no more aboute than vnder other: yet it appeareth howe much Gregory misliked such state. For he nowe and then complaineth, that vnder color of bishoprike hee was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had serued them while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppressed with tumult of wordly affaires. In an other place: so great burdens (saith he) of busines do holde me downe, that my minde can nothing at all be raised vp to things aboue. I am shaken with many waues of causes: and after those leisures of rest I am tossed with tempestes of troublesome life, so that I may rightly say, I am come into the depth of the sea, and the tempest hath drowned me. Hereby gather, what hee woulde haue saide, if hee had happened to be in these times. Although hee fulfilled not the office of a Pastor, yet he was doing it. Hee absteined from the gouernment of the ciuil Empire, and confessed himselfe to be subiect to the Emperour as other were. He did not thrust himselfe into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by necessitie. And yet he thinketh himselfe to be in a maze, because hee cannot applie himselfe altogether onely to the office of a bishop.

14 At that time the bishop of Constantinople strued with the bishoppe of Rome for the Supremacie, as it is already saide. For after that the seat of the Empire was stablished at Constantinople, the maiestie of the Empire seemed to require that that Church also should haue the second place of honor after y^e Church of Rome. And truly at the beginning, nothing more auailed to cause y^e Supremacie to be giuen to Rome, but because the head of y^e Empire was there at that time. There is in Gratiā a writing vnder the name of Pope Lucinus, where hee saith, y^e cities were no otherwise diuided, where Metropolitanes and Primates ought to sit, than by the reason of the ciuill gouernement that was before. There is also an other vnder y^e name of Pope Clement, where he saith, the Patriarches were ordeined in those cities that had had the cheefe Flamines in them. Which, although it be false, yet is taken out of a trueth. For it is certaine, that, to the end there should be made as litle change as might be, the prouinces were diuided according to y^e state of things that then were: and that Primates and Metropolitanes were set in those cities that excelled the other in honors and power. Therefore in the Councel at Taurinum it was decreed, y^e those Cities which in y^e ciuill gouernment were the cheefe cities of euerie prouince, should be the cheefe sees of Cap. 1. Bishops. And if it happened the honour of the ciuill gouernment to be removed from one citie to an other, y^e then the right of the Metropolitan citie should therewithall be removed thither. But Innocentius bishop of Rome, when he sawe the auncient dignitie of his citie to growe in decay, after that the seate of the Empire was removed to Constantinople, fearing the abacement of his see, made a contrarie lawe: wherein he denieth it to be necessarie that the ecclesiasticall mother cities should be changed as the Imperial mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synode ought of right to be preferred aboue one mans sentence. Also we ought to suspect Innocentius himselfe in his owne cause. Howfocuer it be, yet by his own prouiso he sheweth, y^e from the beginning it was so ordered, that the Metropolitan cities should be disposed according to the outward order of the Empire.

Dist. 80. c. 6.

15 According to this auncient ordinance, it was decreed in the firste coun-

councelat Constantinople, that the Bishop of the Citie should haue the priuileges of honor next after the Bishop of Rome, because it was a new Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalcedon, Leo stoutly cried out against it. And he not onely gaue himselfe leaue to esteeme as nothing that which sixe hundred Bishops or moe had decreed: but also bitterly taunted them, for that they tooke from other seas that honour which they were so bolde to giue to the Church of Constantinople. I beseech you, what other thing could moue a man to trouble the world for so smal a matter, but meere ambition? He saith that that ought to bee inuiolable, which the Nicene Synode hath once decreed. As though forsooth the Christian faith were endangered, if one Church be preferred before an other: or as though Patriarchies were there diuided to any other ende, but for policies. But we knowe that policie receiueth, yea requireth diuerse changes, according to the diuersitie of times. Therefore it is sonde that Leo pretendeth, that the honour, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synode was giuen to the sea of Alexandria, ought not to be giuen to the sea of Constantinople. For common reason telleth this, y^e it was such a decree, as might be taken away according to the respect of times. Yea none of the bishops of the East w^ostooode it, whome that thing most of all concerned. Truly Proterius was present, whome they had made Bishoppe of Alexandria in the place of Dioscorus. There were present other Patriarches, whose honour was diminished. It was their part to withstande it, not Leos which remained safe in his owne place. But when all they holde their peace, yea assent vnto it, and onely the Bishop of Rome resiteth: it is easie to iudge, what moueth him: that is, he foresawe that which not long after happened, that it woulde come to passe, that, the glory of old Rome decaying, Constantinople not contented with the seconde place, woulde striue with Rome for the supremacie. And yet with his crying out hee did not so much preuaile, but that the degree of the councell was confirmed. Therefore his successors, when they saw themselues ouercome, quietly gaue ouer y^e stiffenes: for they suffered that he should bee accompted the seconde Patriarch.

16 But within a litle after, Iohn which in Gregories time ruled y^e Church of Constantinople, brake forth so farre that he called himselfe the vniuersall Patriarch. Here Gregorie, least hee should in a very good cause faile to defende his owne sea, did constantly set himselfe against him. And truly both the pride and madnes of Iohn was intollerable, which desired to make the boundes of his bishopricke egall with the bondes of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himselfe, that which he denieth to an other: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abhominable, whosoever take it vpon him. Yea and also in one place hee is angrie with Eulolius Bishoppe of Alexandria, which had honoured him with such a title. Behold (saith he) in the preface of the Epistle which he directed to my self that haue forbidden it, yee haue cared to imprinte the worde of proude calling, in naming mee vniuersall Pope, which, I pray that your holinesse will no more doe because that is withdrawn from you, which is giuen to an other more than reason requireth. I count it no honour, wherein I see the honour of my brethren to bee diminished. For my honour is the honour of the vniuersall fall Church, and the sounde strength of my brethren. But if your holines call mee the vniuersall Pope, it denieth it selfe to be that which it confesseth me to be wholly. Truly Gregorie stode in a good and honest cause. But Iohn holpen by the fauour of Maurice the Emperour, could neuer bee remooued from his purpose. Cyriacus also his successor neuer suffered himselfe to be intreated in that behalfe.

17 At the last Phocas, which when Maurice was slaine, was set in his place (I wote not for that cause being more friendly to the Romanes, but because he was there crowned without strife) granted to Boniface the third that which Gregorie neuer required, that Rome shoulde be the head of all Churches. After this manner was the controuersie ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperour, could not so much haue profited the sea of Rome, vnlesse other thinges also had afterward happened. For Grecia and all Asia were within a little after cut off from the communion of Rome. France so much reuerenced him, that it obeyed no further than it listed. But it was then first brought into bondage when Pipine vsurped the kingdome. For when Zacharie Bishop of Rome had beene his helper to the breach of his faith, and to robbrie, that thrusting out the lawfull king, hee might violently enter vpon the kingdome as laid open for a pray: he receiued this reward that the sea of Rome should haue iurisdiction ouer the Churches of France: As robbers are wonted in parting to deuide the commo spoile: so these good men ordered the matter betweene themselues, that Pipine should haue the earthly and ciuill dominion, spoiling the true king: and Zacharie should be made head of all bishops and haue the spirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake, (as it is wont to be in newe thinges) was afterwarde confirmed by the authoritie of Charles, in manner for a like cause. For hee was also indetted to the bishop of Rome, for that by his endeouour hee had attained to the honour of the Empire. But although it bee credible, that Churches ech where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certayne that the olde forme of the Church was then first vtterly defaced in France and Germanie. There remaine yet in the records of the courte of Parise breefe notes of these times, which, where they intreate of the matters of the Church, make mention of the couenant both of Pipine and of Charles with the bishop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then was an alteration made of the old state.

18 Since that time, when thinges did ech where daily fall from worse to worse, the tyrannie of the sea of Rome was nowe and then also stablished and increased, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the slouthfulness of the bishops. For when one man tooke all thinges vpon him, and without measure proceeded more and more to aduaunce himselfe againste lawe and right: the Bishops did not with such zeale as they ought, endeouour themselues to restraine his lust, & though they wanted not courage, yet they were destitute of true learning and knowledge: so that they were nothing fit to attempt so great a matter. Therefore we see what and howe Monstruous anvnholly defiling of all holy thinges, and a scatterring abroad of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernardes time. He complaineth that there resort by heapes to Rome out of all the worlde, ambitious men, couetous, Simonimonians, robbers of God, keepers of concubines, committers of incest, & all such monsters, to obtaine or retaine ecclesiasticall honours by the Apostolike authoritie: and that fraude and vndermining, and violence were growe in force. He saith that that maner of iudging which then was vsed, was abhominable, and vnseemely, not onely for the Church, but also for a iudiciall court. He crieth out that the Church is ful of ambitious men: and that there is none that more dreadeth to commit mischieuous acts, than robbers do in their caue, when they deuide the spoyles of waifaring men. Fewe (saith he) do look vnto the mouth of the lawgiuer, but vnto his hands. But not without cause. For those hands do all the Popes businesse. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the spoiles of Churches, that say to thee, oh well done, wel done? The life of the poore is sowne in the streetes of the rich: siluer glistereth in the mire: men run to it from all places: not the pore, but the stranger taketh it vp, or he peradventure that runneth fastest before. But this maner, or rather this death, came not of thee, I would to God it might ende in thee. Among these things thou a Pastor goest forward compassed with much and precious aray. If I durst say it, these are rather the Pastors of diuels, than of shepe. Forsooth Peter did thus, Paul played thus. Thy court is more accustomed to receiue men good than to make them good. For the ill do not there profit, but the good do decay. Now as for the abuses of appeales that he rehearseth, no godly man can reade them without great horror. At the last he thus concludeth of that vnbridled greedinesse of the sea of Rome in the vsurping of iurisdiction: I speake the murmour and common complaint of the Churches. They crie out that they bee mangled and dismembred. There are either none or few that do not either bewaile or feare this plage. Askest thou what plage? The Abbots are plucked from the bishops, the bishops from the Archebishops, &c. It is marueilous if this may be excused. In so dooing ye prooue that ye haue fulnesse of power, but not of righteousnesse. Ye do this, because ye can do it: but whether ye also ought to do it, is a question. Ye are set to preferue, not to enuie to euery man his honour and his owne degree. These fewe things of many I listed to rehearse, partly that the readers may see, howe sore the Church was then decayed, and partly that they may knowe in howe great sorrowe and mourning this calamitie helde all the godly.

19 But nowe, albeit that wee graunt to the Bishop of Rome at this day that preeminence and largenesse of iurisdiction, which that sea had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregorie: what is that to the present state of the Papacie? I doe not yet speake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuile power thereof, which wee will afterwarde consider in place fit for it: but the verie spirituall gouernement that they boast of, what hath it like to the state of those times? For they define the Pope none otherwise than the Supreme head of the Church in earth, and the vniuersall bishop of the whole worlde. And the bishops themselues, when they speake of their owne authoritie, doe with greate stoutnesse of countenance, pronounce that to them belongeth the power to commaunde, and other are bound to the necessitie to obey, that so all their decrees are to bee holden as confirmed with the diuine voice of Peter: that the prouinciall Synodes,

are without force, because they want the presence of the Pope: that they may order clerkes of any Church that they will: and may call them to their sea that haue bene ordered els where. Innumerable of that sorte are in Gratiens pack, which I do not now rehearse, least I should be too tedious to y^e Readers. But this is the summe of them, that only the Bishop of Rome hath the Supreme hearing and dete rmining of al ecclesiasticall causes, whether it be in iudging and defining of doctrines, or in making of lawes, or in stablishing of discipline, or in executing of iudgments: It were also long and superfluous to rehearse the priuileges that they take to themselues in reseruations, as they call them. But, (which is most intollerable of all other) they leaue no iudgement in earth to restraine and bridle their outrageous lust, if they abuse so immeasurable power. It is lawfull for no man (say they) to reuoke the iudgement of that sea, because of the Supremacie of the Church of Rome. Againe, The iudge shalbe iudged neither by the emperor, nor by kings, nor by all the Clergie, nor of the people. That is in deed tno imperiously done, that one man maketh himselfe iudge of all men, and suffereth himselfe to obey the Iudgement of no man. But what if he vse tyranny ouer the people of God? if he scatter abroad and wast the kingdome of Christ? if he trouble the whole Church? if he turn the office of Pastor into roberie: Yea though he be neuer so mischeiuous, he sayeth that he is not bounde to yelde accompte. For these be the sayings of the bishops: Gods wil was to determine the causes of other men by men, but he hath without question reserued the bishop of this sea to his owne iudgement. Againe. The doinges of subiectes are iudged of vs but ours of God onely.

20 And that such decrees might haue the more weight, they haue falsly thrust in the names of the olde bishops, as though things had bene so ordeined from the beginning: whereas it is most certaine, that it is new and lately forged whatsoeuer y^e bishop of Rome giueth to himselfe more than we haue rehearsed to be giuen him by the ancient Councils. Yea they are come to so great shamelesnesse, that they haue set forth a writing vnder the name of Anastasius Patriarch of Constantinople, wherein he testifieth that it was decreed by the olde rules, that nothing shoulde be done euen in the furthest prouinces, that were not first moued to the sea of Rome. Beside this that it is certaine that this is most vaine, what man shall thinke it likely, that such a commendation of the sea of Rome proceeded from the aduertary and inuier of honour and dignitie thereof? But verily it behoued that these Antichristes shoulde be carried on to so great madnesse and blindness, that their lewdnes might be plaine for al men to see, at least so many as wil open their eyes. But the decretall epistles heaped together by Gregorie the ix. againe the Clementines, and Extrauagants of Martine, doe yet more openly and with fuller mouth ech where breath forth their outrageous fiercenesse and as it were the tyrannie of barbarous kings. But these bee the oracles, by which the Romanistes will haue their papacie to bee weyed. Herevpon arose those notable principles, which at this daye haue euery where in the papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope canne not erre: that the Pope is aboue the Councelles: that the Pope is the vniuersall bishop.

bishop of all bishops, and the Supreme heade of the Church in earth: I passe over the much absurder follies, which the foolish Canonistes babble in their schooles: to which yet the Romish diuines do not onely assent, but doe also clap their hands at them, to flatter their idole.

21 I will not deal with them by extremitie of right. Some other man would against this their so great insolence set the saying of Cyprian, Which he vsed among the Bishops, at whose councill he sate as cheefe. None of vs calleth himselfe Bishop of Bishops, or with tyrannous feare compelleth his fellowe bishoppes to necessitie to obey. He woulde obiect that, which a little afterwarde was decreed at Carthage. That none shoulde be called prince Priestes, or cheefe bishop. He would gather many testimonies out of Histories, Canons out of Synodes, and many sentences out of the bookes of olde writers, by which the bishop of Rome shoulde be brought downe into the fellowship of the rest. But I passe over all these, least I should seeme too precisely to presse them. But let the best patrones of the sea of Rome aunswere mee, with what face they dare defende the title of vniuersall Bishop, which they see so oft to be condemned with curse by Gregorie. If Gregories testimonie ought to be of force, they doe thereby declare y^e Antichrist is there Bishop, because they make him vniuersall. The name also of heade was no more vsuall. For thus he saith in one place: Peter is the cheefe member in the body, Iohn, Andrewe and Iames the heades of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Church vnder one heade: yea the holy ones before the lawe, the holy ones vnder the lawe, and the holy ones vnder grace, are set among members, altogether making vp the body of the Lord: and no man euer willed to haue himselfe called vniuersall. But whereas the bishoppe of Rome taketh vpon himselfe the power of commanding, y^e thing smally agreeth with that which Gregorie saith in an other place. For whereas Eulolivs biship of Alexandria, had saide that hee was commaunded by him, hee answered in this wise, I pray yee, take away this worde of commanding from my hearing. For I knowe what I am, and what ye bee. In place, ye be to me brethren: in manners ye be to mee fathers. Therefore I commaunded not but I cared to tell you those thinges that I thought profitable. Whereas hee so extendeth his iurisdiction without ende, he doeth therein great and haynous wrong, not onely to the other bishops, but also to all particular Churches, which he so teareth and plucketh in peeces, that he may build his seat of their ruines. But whereas he exempteth himselfe from all iudgements, and will so raigne after the manner of tyrantes, that he accounteth his owne onely lust for lawe, that verily is so haynous, and so farre from ecclesiastical order, that it may in no wise be borne: for it vtterly abhorreth not onely from all feeling of godlinesse, but also from all humanitie.

22 But that I be not compelled to goe through and examine all thinges particularly, I doe againe appeale to them, that will at this day be accompted the best and most faithfull patrones of the see of Rome, whether they be not ashamed to defende the present state of the Papacie: which it is certain to be an hundred times more corrupte, than it was in the times of Gregorie and Bernarde: which state yet did then so much displease those holy men.

men. Gregorie eche where complaineth, that he is too much diuersly drawn away with foraine busines: that he is vnder the colour of bishoprike brought backe to the world: wherein he serueth so many cares of the world as he neuer remembreth that he serued when he was a lay man: that hee is pressed downe with tumult of worldly affaires, that his mind is nothing raised vp to things aboue: that he is shaken with many waues of causes, & tossed with tempestes of troublesome life: so that he may worthily say, I am come into the depth of the sea. Truly among those earthly busineses, he might yet teache the people with Sermons, priuately admonishe and correct such as it behoued, order the Church, giue counsell to his fellowe bishops & exhort them to their dutie: beside these things there remained some time to write: and yet hee lamenteth his calamitie, that hee is drowned in the deepest sea. If the gouernement of that time was a sea: what is to be sayed of the papacie at this time? For what likenesse haue they together? Here be no preachings, no care of discipline, no zeale to the Churches, no spirituall doing, finally nothing but the worlde. Yet this maze is praised, as though there could nothing be founde more orderly and better framed. But what complaints doeth Bernarde poure out, what groanes doth he vtter, when he looketh vpon the faultes of his age? What then woulde he do, if he beleide this our age of iron, and worse if any be worse than iron? What obstinate wickednesse is this, not onely stiffly to defende as holy & diuine, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but also to abuse their testimonie to the defence of the papacie, which it is certaine that they neuer knewe of? Howbeit of Bernardes time I confesse, that then the corruption of all things was so greate, that it was not much vnlike our time. But they are without all shame, that fetch any pretence for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregorie, and such other. For they doe like as if one, to stablish the Monarchie of Emperours, would praise the old state of the Empire of Rome: that is, would borrow the praises of libertie, to set forth the honor of tyrannie.

23 Finally, although all these things were graunted them: yet there ariseth of fresh a newe strife for them, when wee deny that there is a church at Rome, in which such benefites may be resident: when we deny that there is a bishop, which may beare these priuileges of dignitie. Admit therefore all those things to be true, (which yet we haue already wrung from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Christ appointed head of the vniuersall church: and that he left the honour that was giuen him, in the see of Rome: that the same was stablished by the authoritie of the auncient Church, and confirmed with long continuance: that the Supreme power hath beene alway by one consent giuen of all men to the bishop of Rome, that he hath beene the iudge of all both causes and men, and himselfe subiect to the iudgement of none: let them haue also more, if they will: yet I aunswere in one worde, that none of these things auaille, vnlesse there bee at Rome a Church and a bishop. This they must needs graunt mee, that it cannot be the mother of Churches, which is not it selfe a Church: that he cannot be chief of bishops, which is not himselfe a bishop. Will they therefore haue the see Apostolicke at Rome? Then let them shewe me a true and lawfull Apostleship. Will they haue the chiefe Bishop? Then let them shewe me a bishop. But what? where will they shewe vs any face of a Church? They name one in deede, and haue it oft in their mouth. Truly the Church is known by her certain markes: and bishoplike is a name of office. I speake not here of the people: but of the gouernement it selfe, which ought continually to shine in the Church. Where is the ministerie in their Church, such as Christes institution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before bene spoken of the office of Priestes and of a bishop. If wee shall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, wee shall confesse that they are nothing lesse than Priests. As for the chiefe bishop himselfe, I woulde faine knowe what one thing at all he hath bishoplike. First it is the principall point in the office of a bishop, to teach the people with the worde of God: another and the next point to that is, to minister the sacraments: the thirde is to admonish and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to holde the people together in holy discipline. What of these things doeth he? yea, what doeth he faine himselfe to do? Let them tell therefore, by what meane they would haue him to bee counted a bishop, that doeth not with his litle finger, no not once so much as in outwarde shewe, touche any parte of a bishops office.

24 It is not so of a bishop as it is of a king. For a king, although he doe not execute that which belongeth to a king, doeth neuerthelessse retaine the honor and title. But in iudging of a bishop respect is had to Christes commandement, which alway ought to be of force in the Church. Therefore let the Romanistes loose me this knot. I deny that their hie bishop is y chief of bishops, forasmuch as he is no bishop. They must needs proue this last point to be false, if they will haue the victorie in the first. But how say they to this, that he not onely hath no propertie of a bishop, but rather all things contrarie? But here, O God, whereat shall I beginne? at his learning, or at his maners? What shall I say, or what shall I leaue vnsaide? where shall I make an ende? This I say: that whereas the worlde is at this day, stuffed with so many peruerse and wicked doctrines, full of so many kindes of superstitions, blinded with so many errors, drowned in so great idolatrie: there is none of these any where, that hath not either flowed from thence, or at least bene there confirmed. Neither is there any other cause, why the bishops are carried with so great rage against the doctrine of the Gospel newly springing vp againe, why they bende all their strengthes to oppresse it, why they kindle vp kings and princes to crueltie, but because they see that their whole kingdome decayeth and falleth downe, so soone as the Gospel of Christ commeth in place. Leo was cruell: Clement was bloudie: Paul is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not so much moued them to fight against the truth, as for that this was their onely meane to maintain their power. Therefore sith they cannot be safe, till they haue driuen away Christ, they trauaile in this cause, as if they did fight for their religion and countreys, & for their owne liues. What then? Shal that be to vs the see Apostolike, where wee see nothing but horrible Apostasie? Shal he be Christes vicar, which by persecuting the Gospel with furious enterprises, doth openly professe himselfe to bee Antichrist? Shall hee bee Peters successour, that rangeth with

sworde and fire, to destroy all that euer Peter hath builded? Shall he be head of the Church that cutting of and dismembriing the Church from Christ the only true head thereof, doth in it selfe plucke and teare it in peeces. Admitte verily that in the olde time Rome was the mother of all Churches: yet since it hath begunne to be the seate of Antichrist, it hath ceased to be that which it was.

25 We seeme to be too much euill speakers and railers, when we call the bishop of Rome Antichrist. But they that so thinke, do not vnderstand that they accuse Paul of immodestie, after whom we so speake, yea out of whose mouth we so speake. And least any man obiekt, that we doe wrongfully wrest against the bishoppe of Rome, these wordes of Paul that are spoken to another entent, I will breefly shewe, that they can not be otherwise vnderstanded, but of the Papacie. Paul writeth, that Antichrist shall sitte in the temple of God. In another place also the holy Ghost describing his image in the person of Antiochus, sheweth that his kingdome shall consist in hautes of speech, and blaspheminges of God. Hereupon we gather, that it is rather a tyrannie ouer soules, than ouer bodies, that is raised vp against the spirituall kingdome of Christ. Then, that it is such, as doeth not abolish the name of Christ and the Church: but rather should abuse the pretence of Christe, and lurke vnder the title of the Church, as vnder a disguised visour. But although all the heresies and sectes that haue bin from the beginning, belong to the kingdom of Antichrist: yet wheras Paul prophecietieth, that there shall come a departing, by this description he signifieth, that that seate of abomination shall then bee raised vp, when a certaine vniuerfall departing shall possesse the Church: howfocuer many members of the Church here and there continue in the true vnity of faith. But where hee addeth, that in his time he began in a mysterie to set vp the worke of iniquitie, which he would afterward shewe openly: thereby we vnderstand, that this calamity was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Now wheras he doth set out Antichrist by this marke, y he should plucke away from God his due honor, to take it to himselfe: this is the chiefe token that we ought to followe in seeking out of Antichrist, specially where such pride proceedeth euen to the publike dissipation of the Church. Sith therefore it is certain, that the bishop of Rome hath shamelessly conueyed away to himselfe that which was the chiefe proper thing to God alone and Christ, it is not to be doubted but that he is the captaine and standerbearer of the wicked and abominable kingdome.

26 Now let the Romanists go, and obiekt antiquitie against vs: As if in so great alteration of all things, the honor of the Sea might stand where there is no sea. Eusebius telleth, how GOD, that there might be place for his vengeance, remoued the Church that was at Hierusalem to Pella. That which we heare to haue bene once done, might be offer done. Therefore so to binde the honour of supremacie to a place, that hee which is in deede the most hatefull enemy of Christe, the hiest aduersarie of the Gospel, the greatest waster and destroyer of the Church, the most cruell slaughterman and butcher of the saintes, shoulde neuertheless be accounted the vicar of Christ, the successor of Peter, the chiefe bishop of the Church, only because he occupieth the sea that was once the chiefest of all: that verily is too much to be scorned and foolish. I speake not, how great difference there is between the popes chauncerie, and a well framed order of the Church, Howbeit this one thing may well take away all dout of this question. For no man that hath his right wit, will thinke the bishoprike enclosed in leade & bulles: much lesse in that schoole of fraudes and deceites, in which thinges the Popes spirituall gouernment consisteth. Therefore it was very well sayd by a certaine man, that that Church of Rome which is boasted of, is long ago turned into a court which only is now seen at Rome. Neither do I here accuse the faults of men: but I shewe that the Papacie it selfe is directly contrary to the true order of a Church.

27 But if we come to the persons of men, it is well enough known what maner of vicars of Christ we shall finde. Iulius forsooth, and Leo, & Clement and Paul, shall be pillars of the christian faith, and the chiefe expositors of religion, which neuer knewe any other thing of Christ, than that which he had learned in Lucians schoole. But why doe I reckon vp three or fower Popes? as though it were doutfull, what manner of forme of religion the Popes with their whole college of Cardinals haue since long agoe professed, and at this day do professe. For first this is the principall article of that secret Diuinitie that reigneth among them, That there is no God: the seconde, That all thinges that are written and taught concerning Christ, are lies and deceites: the thirde, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the laste resurrection, and meere fables. They doe not all thinke so: and fewe of them speake so. I grant. But this hath long ago begun to be the ordinarie religion of Popes. Whereas this is verie well known to all that knowe Rome, yet the Romish Diuines cease not to boast, that by Christes priuilege it is prouided, that the Pope can not erre, because it was sayde to Peter: I haue prayed for thee, that thy fayth shoulde not faynt. What, I pray you, win they by mocking so shamelessly, but that the whole world may vnderstande, that they are come to that extremity of wickednesse, that they neither feare God, nor stande in awe men?

28 But let vs imagine, that the vngodlines of those Popes whome I haue spoken of, is hidden, because they haue neither published it by preaching, nor by writings: but only haue bewrayed it at their table, and in their chamber, or at least within walles of houses. But if they will haue this priuilege to bee of force, which they pretende, they must needs wipe Iohn the xxij. out of the number of Popes, who openly affirmed that soules are mortal, and that they die together with the bodies vntill the day of resurrection. And, that you may perceiue that the whole Sea with her principall staves was then wholly fallen: none of all the Cardinals withstoode so great a madnesse, but the schoole of Parise moued the king of Fraunce to compell him to recante it. The king forbad his subiectes to communicate with him, vnlesse he did out of hande repent: and the same, as the manner it, he proclaimed by a heralde. The Pope compelled by this necessitie, abiured his error. This example maketh that I neede not to dispute any more with my aduersaries about this that they say, that the sea of Rome and the bishops therof, can not erre, in the faith, because it was saide to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may may not faint. Truly, hee fell with so foule a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which succede after Peter in the bishoprike. Howbeit this is also of it selfe so childish, that it needeth no aunswere. For if they wil drawe to Peters successours whatsoever was spoken to Peter, it shall followe that they are all Satans, forasmuch as the Lorde saide this also to Peter: Go behind, thou Satan, because thou art an offence to mee. For it shall be as easie for vs to turne backe this latter saying against them, as it shall be for them to obiect the other against vs. Mat. 16. 23

29 But I list not to striue with them in playing the foole. Therefore I returne thither from whence I made digression. So to binde the place, and Christ, and the holy Ghost, and the Church together, that whosoever sit in that place, although he be the diuel, yet he must be iudged y vicar of Christ, and the head of the Church, because it was once the seat of Peter: I say this is not onely wicked and slanderous to Christ, but also too great an absurditie and against common reason. It is alreadie long ago since the bishops of Rome are either without al religion, or the greatest enemies of religion. Therefore they are no more made the vicars of Christ, by reason of y seate which they occupie, than an idol, when it is set in the temple of God, is to be taken for God. Nowe if their maners be to be iudged vpon, let the Popes themselues aunswere for themselues: what one thing at all there is in them, wherein they may be knowne for bishops. First, whereas there is such life at Rome, they not onely winking at it, but also as it were with secrete countenance allowing it, this is vtterly vnmeet for bishops, whose duitie is with seueritic of discipline to restraine the licentiousnesse of the people. But I will not be so rigorous against them, to charge them with other mens faults. But whereas they themselues, with their own household, with almost the whole college of Cardinals, with the whole flock of their clergie, are so giuen forth to all wickednesse, filthinesse, vncleannesse, to all kindes of lewde & mischieuous doings, that they resemble rather monsters than men: therein truly they bewray themselues to be nothing lesse than bishops. And yet they need not to feare lest I should further disclose their filthines. For both I am verie to haue to do in so stinking mire, and I must fauour chaste eares, and I thinke that I haue alreadie enough & more proued that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in olde time beene the head of Churches, yet at this day shee is not worthie to bee iudged one of the smallest toes of the Churches feete. 2. Thess. 1. 4

30 As concerning the Cardinals, (as they call them) I can not tell howe it is come to passe, that they be so sodeinly risen vp to so great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to bishops onely. For so oft as he maketh mention of Cardinals, he meaneth it not of them of the Church of Rome, but of any other: so that briefly, a Cardinall Priest is nothing else but a bishop. In the writers before that age I finde not this name at al. But I see that they were then lesse than bishops, whome they bee nowe farre aboute. This saying of Augustine is wel knowne: Although according to the names of honour, which the vse of the Church hath alreadie obtained, bishoprik is greater than priesthood, yet in many things Augustine is lesse than Hierome.

Here in deede hee maketh difference betweene a priest of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently setteth them al behinde the bishops. And that was so long obserued, that in the Council at Carthage, when there were present two legates of the see of Rome, the one a bishop, the other a priest, the priest was thrust backe into the last place. But not to followe too old examples; there remaineth a Council holdē vnder Gregorie at Rome, at which the priestes sate in the lowest place, & subscribed seuerally by themselves, as for the Deacons, they had no place at al in subscribing. And truly they had then no office, but to be present & vnder the bishop at ministring of doctrine & of the sacraments. Now the case is so changed, that they are become the cousins of kings & Emperors. And it is no doubt but y they grewe vp, by litle and litle together with their head, til they were aduanced to this hie top of dignitie. But this also I thought good to touch shortly by the way, that the readers might the better vnderstande, that the See of Rome, such as it is at this day, doth much differ from that auncient one, vnder pretence whercof, it doth now maintaine and defend it selfe. But of what sort soeuer they were in olde time, forasmuch as they haue nowe nothing of the true & lawfull office in the Church, they retaine onely a deceitful colour and vaine visage: yea forasmuch as they haue all thinges vtterly contrarie, it was necessary that that should happen to them, which Gregorie writeth so oft. I say it (saith he) weeping: I giue warning of it, groning: that sith the order of priesthood is fallen within, it shall also nor be able to stand long without. But rather it behoued that this should be fulfilled in them which Malachie saith of such: Ye haue gone backe out of the way, and haue made many to stumble in the law. Therefore ye haue made void the couenant of Leui, saith y Lorde. Therefore behold, I haue giuen you out of estimation, and vile to all the people. Nowe I leaue it to all the godly to thinke of what sort is that supreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papists with abominable shamelesnesse sticke not to make subiect the very worde of God, which ought to haue bene honourable and holy both to heauen and earth, men and Angels.

The viii. Chapter.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of Faith: and vish how vnbriyled licentiousnes is hash in the Papacie bin vvested so corrupt all purenesse of Doctrine.

NOW followeth the thirde place of the power of the Church, which partly consisteth in all the bishops, and partely in the Councelles, and those either prouinciall or general. I speake onely of the spirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That consisteth either in doctrine, or in iurisdiction, or in making of lawes. Doctrine hath two partes, the authoritie to teache articles of doctrine, and the expounding of them. Before that wee beginne to discourse of euery one of these in specialtie, wee will that the godly readers be warned, that whatsoeuer is taught concerning the power of the Church, they must remember to applie it to that end, wherunto (as Paul testifieth) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to destruction: which who so lawfully vse, they thinke themselues no more than the ministers of Christ, and therewithall the ministers of the people in Christ. Nowe of the edifying of the Church, this is the onely way, if the ministers themselues endeouour to preferue to Christ his authoritie, which can not otherwise be safe vnlesse that be left vnto him, which hee receiued of his Father: that is, that he be the onely schoolemaister of the Church. For it is written, not of any other, but of him alone, Hearc him. The power of the Church therefore is not to bee sparingly set forth, but yet to be enclosed within certaine boundes, that it be not drawen hither and thither after the lust of men. Hereunto it shalbee much profitable to note, howe it is described of the Prophetes and Apostles. For if wee simply graunt vnto men such power as they list to take vpon them, it is plaine to all men, what a slipperie readinesse there is to fall into tyranny, which ought to be farre fro the Church of Christ.

and 13. 10.

Matt. 17. 5.

2 Therefore here it must be remembred, that whatsoeuer authoritie or dignitie the holy Ghost in the scripture giueth either to the priestes or to the Prophets, or to the Apostles, or to the successours of the Apostles, al that same is giuen, not properly to the men themselues, but to the ministerie ouer which they are appointed, or (to speake it more plainly in one worde) whereof the ministerie is committed to them. For if wee go through them al in order, we shal not finde that they had any authoritie to teach or to answer, but in the name and worde of the Lorde. For when they are called to the office, it is also enioyned them, that they should bring nothing of themselues, but speake out of the mouth of the Lorde. And he himselfe doeth not bring them forth to be heard of y^e people, before y^e he haue giuen them instructions what they ought to speake, to the entent that they should speake nothing beside his word. Moses himselfe, y^e prince of all the Prophets, was to be heard aboute the rest: but he was first instructed wth his commaundementes, y^e he might not declare any thing at al, but from the Lorde. Therefore it is said, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, beleueed in God & in his seruant Moses. Also y^e the authoritie of y^e priestes should not grow in contépt, it was stablished with most grieuous penalties. But therewithal the Lord sheweth vpon what condition they were to be heard, when he saith that he hath made his couenant with Leui, y^e the law of truth should be in his mouth. And a litle after he addeth: The lips of the priest shal keepe knowledge, & they shal require the law at his mouth: because he is the angel of y^e God of hostes. Therefore if the priest wil be heard, let him shewe himselfe the messenger of God: y^e is, let him faithfully report the commaundements that he receiued of his author. And where it is specially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expressly set, That they may answer according to the law of God.

He y^e is commaunded to heare out of the mouth of the Lorde, is he not forbidden to inuent any thing of himselfe? he hath brought? The selfe same thing is in Hieremie, in other wordes. Let Hier. 23. 28. the Prophet (saith he) with whome is a dreame, tel a dreame: & let him that hath my word speake my worde true. Certainly he appointeth a lawe to the all. And that is such, that he permitteth not any to teach more than he is comaunded. And after he calleth it chaffe, all that is not come from himselfe only. Therefore none of the Prophets themselues opened his mouth, but as Efa. 6. 5. the Lord told him the wordes before. Whereupon these sayings are so oft Ioh. 1. 6. found among them: the worde of the Lord, the burden of the Lord, so sayth the Lord, the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. And worthily. For Esay cried Efa. 6. 5. out that he had defiled lips. Jeremie confessed that he could not speake, be-Jer. 1. 6. cause he was a child: What could proceede from the defiled mouth of the one, and the foolish mouth of the other, but vnclene & vnwise, if they had spoken their owne speech? But his lips were holy & pure, when they began to be the instruments of the holy Ghost. When the Prophetes are bound with this religion, that they deliuer nothing, but that which they haue receiued, then they be garnished with notable power and excellent titles. For when the Lorde testifieth, that hee hath set them ouer nations and kingdomes, to Jer. 1. 10. plucke vp and to roote out, to destroy and plucke downe, to builde and to plant, he by and by adioyneth the cause: because he hath put his wordes in their mouth.

4 Now if you looke to the Apostles: they are in deede commended w many and notable titles, that they are the light of the world, and the salt of the earth, that they are to be heard in steede of Christ, that whatsoeuer they binde or loose in earth shalbe bound or loosed in heauen. But in their very name they shewe howe much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be Apostles, that they should not prate whatsoeuer they list: but shold Matt. 28. 9. faithfully report his commaundements from whom they are sent. And the words of Christ are plaine enough, in which he hath determined their em-bassage: when he commanded them to go & teach al nations, al those things that he had commanded. Yea & he himselfe also receiued this law, & laid it vpon himselfe, that it should be lawful for no man to refuse it. My doctrine Ioh. 7. 16. (saith he) is not mine, but his that sent me, my fathers. He that was alway the only & eternall counsellor of the Father, & he that was appointed by the Father the Lord and schoolemaister of all men, yet because he executed the ministerie of teaching, prescribed by his owne example to all ministers what rule they ought to follow in teaching. Therefore the power of the church is not infinit, but subiect to the word of the Lord, & as it were enclosed in it.

5 But sith this hath from the beginning bin of force in the church, & at this day ought to be in force, that the seruants of God should teach nothing which they haue not learned of him: yet according to the diuersitie of times they had diuers orders of learning. But that order which is now, much dif-fereth from those that were before. First if it be true which Christ saith, that Matt. 11. 27. none hath seene the Father, but the Sonne, and he to whom it hath pleased the Sonne to shew him: it behoued verily that they shoulde bee alway directed by that eternal wisdom of the Father, which wold come to y knowledge of God. For how should they either haue comprehended in mind, or vttered the mysteries of God, but by his teaching, to whome alone the secretes of the

the Father are open? Therefore the holy fathers in old time knew God no other wise but beholding him in the Son as in a glasse. When I say this, I mean that God did neuer by any other meane disclose himselfe to men but by the Son, that is, his only wisdom, light & truth. Out of this fountaine did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the other draw al the knowledge that they had of heauenly doctrine. Out of the same fountaine haue also all the Prophetes themselues drawn all the heauenly Oracles that they vttered. For verily this wisdom hath alway disclosed it selfe by moe wayes than one. To the Patriarches he vsed secret reuelations: but therewithall to confirm their mindes, he adioyned such signes, that it could not be doutfull to the, that it was God that spake. The Patriarches conueyed ouer from hand to hande to posterity, y^e which they had receiued. For y^e Lord left it with them to this content, that they should so spread it abroad. But the children & childrens children, by God secretly informing them, did know that that which they heard was from heauen, and not from the earth.

6 But when it pleased God, to raise a more apparant forme of a Church, he willed to haue his worde put in writing and noted, that the priestes should fetch from thence what they might deliuer to the people, and that al the doctrine that should be taught should be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publishing of the lawe, when the priestes are commanded to teach out of the mouth of the Lord, the meaning is, that they should teach nothing straunge or differing from that kinde of learning which the Lorde comprehended in the lawe: and to adde and diminish was vnlawfull for them. Then followed the Prophetes, by whom in deede the Lorde published new oracles to be added to the law: but yet not so new, but that they came out of the law, and had respect vnto it: For, as touching doctrine, they were onely expositors of the law, and added nothing vnto it, but prophecies of things to come. Those excepted, they vttered nothing else but a pure exposition of the law. Because it pleased the Lorde that there should be a plainer and larger doctrine, y^e weake consciences might be the better satisfied: he commaunded that the Prophecies also should be put in writing, & accounted part of his worde. And here vnto were added the histories, which are also the workes of the Prophetes, but made by the ending of the holy Ghost. I reckon the Psalmes among the Prophecies, because that which we attribute to the prophecies is also common to the Psalmes. Therefore that whole body compacted of the law, prophecies, psalmes and histories, was the word of the Lorde to the olde people, by y^e rule wherof the priests and teachers euen vnto Christs time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawfull for them to swarue either to the right hand or to the left: because all their office was enclosed within these boundes, that they should aunswere the people out of the mouth of G O D. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindefull of the law, & to giue heede to it, euen to the preaching of the Gospell. For thereby hee forbiddeth them all newe founde doctrines, and graunteth them no leaue to swarue neuer so litle out of the way which Moses had faithfully shewed them. And this is the reason why Dauid so honorably setteth out the excellencie of the lawe, and rehearseth so many prayses of it: that is, that the Iewes should couet no forein thing without it, sith within in:

Mal. 2. 7.

was all perfection enclosed.

7 But when at last the wisdom of God was openly shewed in the flesh, that same Wisdome with full mouth declared vnto vs all that euer can with mans wit be comprehended, or ought to be thought concerning the heauenly Father. Now therefore, since Christ the sonne of righteousness hath shined, we haue a perfect brightnes of the truth of God, such as the clearenesse is wont to be at midde day, when the light was before but dimmie. For verily the Prophet meant not to speake of any meane thing, when he wrote that GOD in olde time spake diuersly and many wayes to the fathers by the Prophetes: but that in these last daies he began to speake to vs by his beloued Son. For he signifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not hereafter, as he did before, speake sometime by some and sometime by other, nor will adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or reuelations to reuelations: but that he hath so fulfilled all the partes of teaching in the Sonne, that they must haue this of him for the last and eternall testimonie. After which sorte all this time of the newe Testament wherein Christ hath appeared to vs with \bar{y} preaching of his Gospel euen to the day of iudgement, is expressed by the last hour, the last times, the last dayes: to the ende verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Christ, we should learne neither to faine vs any newe beside it, or receiue it fained of other. Therefore not without cause the Father hath by singular prerogatiue ordained the Sonne to be our Teacher: commaunding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did in deede in few wordes set out his schoolemaistership vnto vs, when he sayd, Hearc him: but in which there is more weight & force than men commonly thinke. For it is as much in effect, as if leading vs away from all doctrines of men, he should bring vs to him only, and commaunde vs to looke for all the doctrine of saluation at him alone, to hang vpon him alone, to cleaue to him alone, finally (as the very wordes do sound) to harken to the voyce of him alone. And truely what ought there nowe to be either looked for or desired at the hande of man, when the very worde of life hath familiarly and openly disclosed himselfe vnto vs? Yea but it is meete that the mouthes of all men be shut, after that hee, in whome the heauenly Father willed to haue all the treasures of knowledge & wisdom to be hidden, hath once spoken, and so spoken as became both the wisdom of God (which is in no part vnperfect) and Messias at whose hand the reuelation of all thinges is hoped for: that is to say, that he left nothing afterward for other to be spoken.

8 Let this therefore be a stedfast principle: \bar{y} there is to be had no other word of God, wherunto place should be giuen in the Church, than \bar{y} which is contained first in the law and the Prophetes, and then in the writings of the Apostles: and that there is no other maner of teaching rightly, but according to the prescription and rule of that worde. Hereupon also we gather, that there was no other thing graunted to the Apostles, but that which the Prophetes had had in olde time: that is, that they shoulde expounde the olde Scripture, and shewe that those thinges that are therein taught are fulfilled in Christ: and yet that they should not doe the same but of the Lorde, that is to say, the Spirit of Christ going before them, and after a certaine maner enditing wordes vnto them. For Christ limited their embassage with this condition condition when he commaunded them to goe and teach, not such things as they themselves had rashly forged, but all those things that he had commaunded them. And nothing could be more plainly spoken, than that which he saith in an other place: but be not ye called maisters, for onely one is your master, Christ. Then, to emprint this more deeply in their minde, he repeateth it wise in the same place. And because their rudenes was such, that they could not conceiue those things that they had heard and learned of the mouth of their maister, therefore the spirit of truth is promised them, by who they shoulde be directed to the true vnderstanding of all things. For y same restraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is assigned to the holy Ghost, to put them in minde of al those things that he before taught the by mouth.

9 Therefore Peter who was very well taught howe much he might lawfully doe, leaue nothing either to himselfe or other, but to distribute the doctrine deliuered of God. Let him that speaketh (saith hee) speake as the wordes of God, that is to say, not doubtingly, as they are wont to tremble whose owne conscience misgiueth them, but with sure confidence, which becometh the seruāt of God furnished with assured instructions. What other thing is this, but to forbid all inuentions of mans minde, from what heade soeuer they haue proceeded, that the pure worde of God may be heard and learned in the Church of the faithfull? to take away the ordinances or rather the fayned deuises of al men, of what degree soeuer they be, that the decrees of God only may remaine in force? These be those spirituall armures, mightie through God to cast downe holdes: by which the faithfull seruantes of God may throwe downe counsellors, and all height that aduanceth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and may leade all knowledge captiue to obey Christ. Loc this is the soueraigne power, wherewith it behoueth the Pastors of the Church to bee endued, by what name soeuer they bee called, that is, that by the worde of God they may with confidence be bold to do al things: may compell all the strength, glorie, wisdom & height of the world to yeld and obey to his maiestie: being vpholden by his power, may commaunde all euen from the hiest to the lowest: may build vp the house of Christ and pull downe the house of satan: may feede the sheepe & driue away y wolues: may instruct and exhort the willing to learne: may reprove, rebuke and subdue the rebellious & stubborne: may binde, and loose: finally may thunder & lighten, if neede be: but all things in the word of God. Howbeit there is, as I haue said this difference betweene the Apostles and their successors; y the Apostles were the certaine & authentike secretaries of the holy Ghost, and therefore their writings are to be esteemed for the Oracles of God: but the other haue none other office, but to teach that which is set foorth and written in y holy Scriptures. We determine therefore, y this is not now left to faithfull ministers, y they may coine any new doctrine, but y they ought simplie to cleaue to the doctrine, whereunto the Lorde hath made all men without exception subiect. When I say this, my meaning is not onely to shewe what is lawfull for all particular men, but also what is lawfull for the whole vniuersall Church. Nowe as touching all particular men: Paul verily was ordeyned by the Lorde Apostle to the Corinthians: but hee denieth that hee

1. Pet. 4. 21.

2. Cor. 10. 4.

2. Cor. 1. 14. hath dominion ouer their faith. Who nowe dare take a dominion vpon him selfe, which Paul testifieth that it belonged not to him? If hee had acknowledged himselfe to haue this libertie of teaching, that what soeuer the Pastor teacheth hee may therein of right require to be beleued: he woulde neuer haue taught y^e Corinthians this discipline, that while two or three Prophets speake, the rest shoulde iudge, and if it were reuealed to any that fate, the first should hold his peace. For so he spared none, whose authoritie he made not subiect to the iudgement of the worde of God. But, will some man say, of the whole vniuersall Church the case is otherwise. I aunswere that in an other place Paul meeteth with this doubt also, where hee sayth, that Faith is by hearing, and hearing by the worde of God. Truly if Faith hang of the word of God only, hath respect vnto and resteth vpon it alone, what place is there now left to y^e word of the whole world? For herein no man may doubt that hath wel knownen what Faith is, For Faith ought to bee staied vpon such assurednes, wherby it may stand inuincible against Satan, and al the engines of the hels, and against the whole world. This assurednes wee shall nowhere find but in the only word of God. Again, it is a general rule which wee heere ought to haue respect vnto: that God doth therefore take frō men the power to set forth a new doctrine, that he only may be our scholemaster in heauenly learning, as he only is true which can neither ly nor deceiue. This rule belongeth no lesse to the whole Church than to euery one of the faithful.

Rom. 10. 10 But if this power of the Church, which we haue spoken of, bee compared with that power, whereof the spirituall tyrantes, that haue falsly called themselues Bishops and Prelates of Religion, haue in certaine ages past boasted themselues among the people of God, the agreement shalbe no better than Christ hath with Belial. Yet it is not in this place my purpose to declare in what sort and with how wicked meanes they haue exercised their tyranny: I will but rehearse the doctrine, which at this day they defende, first with writings, & then with sword and fire. Because they take it for a thing confessed, that a general Council is the true image of the Church, when they haue taken this principle, they doe without doubt determine, that such councils are immediatly gouerned of the holy Ghost, & that therefore they cannot erre. But whereas they themselues doe rule the councils, yea and make them, they doe in deede chalenge to themselues whatsoeuer they affirme to be due to the Councils. Therefore they wil haue our Faith to stand and fal at their wil y^e whatsoeuer they shal determine on the one side or the other, may bee stablished and certain to our minds: so that if they allow any thing we must allow the same without douting: if they cōdemn any thing we must also hold it for cōdemned. In the mean time after their own lust, & despising the word of God, they coyne doctrines, to which afterwarde they require by this rule to haue faith giuen. For they also say that he is no Christian, that doth not certainly consent to all their doctrines as wel affirmatiue as negatiue: if not with expressed yet with vnexpressed faith: because it is in the power of the Church, to make newe articles of the Faith.

11 First let vs heare by what argumentes they proue that this authoritie is giuen to the Church: and then we shall see howe much that maketh for them which they alleage of the Church. The Church (say they) hath notable

table promises, that it shall neuer be forsaken of Christ her spouse, but that it shall be guided by his Spirit into all truth. But of the promises which they are wont to allege, many are giuen no lesse to euery one of the faithfull particularly, than to the whole Church vniuersally. For though the Lord spake to the twelue Apostles, when he sayd: Beholde I am with you euen to the ende of the worlde: Againe: I will aske my Father, and hee shall giue you an other comforter, namely the Spirit of truth: yet he made the promise not only to the whole number of the twelue, but also to euery one of them: yea to the other disciples likewise, either those that he had already receiued, or those that should afterwarde be added to them. But when they expounde such promises full of singular comfort, as though they were giuen to none of the Christians, but to the whole Church together: what doe they else, but take away from all Christians that confidence which they al ought to receiue therby to encorage them? Yet I doe not here deny, but that the whole fellowship of the faithfull furnished with manifolde diuersity of gifts, is endued with much larger and more plentifull treasure of the heavenly wisdom, than ech one severally: neither is it my meaning, that this is spoken in common to the faithfull, as though they were all a like endued with the Spirite of vnderstanding and doctrine: but because it is not to be granted, to the aduersaries of Christ, that they should for the defence of an euil cause wrest y Scripture to a wrong sense. But, omitting this, I simply confesse that which is true, that the Lorde 1. Cor. 1. 12. is perpetually present with his, and ruleth them with his Spirit. And that this Spirite is not the Spirit of error, ignorance, lying or darknesse: but of sure reuelation, wisdom, truth, and light, of whome they not deceitfully may learne those things that are giuen them, that is to saye, what is the hope of their calling, and what be the riches of the glorie of the inheritance of Ephe. 1. 18. GOD in the Saintes. But whereas the faithfull, euen they that are endued with more excellent giftes about the rest, doe in this fleshe receiue onely the first frutes and a certaine tast of that Spirite: there remaineth nothing leeuier to them than knowing their owne weakenes, to hold themselues carefully within the boundes of the worde of God: least, if they wander far after their owne sense, they by & by stray out of the right way, insomuch as they be yet voyde of that Spirit, by whose only teaching truth is discerned from falsehood. For all men do confesse with Paul, that they haue not yet attained to Phil. 3. 11. the marke. Therefore they more endeuour to daily profiting, than glory of perfection.

12 But they will take exception, and say that whatsoever is particularly attributed to euery one of y holy ones, y same doth throughly & fully belong to the Church it selfe. Although this hath some seeming of truth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth in deede so distribute to euery one of the members the giftes of his Spirit by measure, that the whol body wanteth nothing necessarie, when the giftes are giuen in common. But the riches of the Church are alway such, that there euen wanteth much of that hiest perfection, which our aduersaries doe boast of. Yet the Church is not therefore so lesse destitute in any behalfe, but that she alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lorde knoweth what her necessitie requireth. But, to holde her vnder humilitie and godly modestie, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be expedient.

Ephe. 5, 25.
1. Tim. 3, 15

expedient. I knowe what here also they are wont to obiekt, that is, that the Church is clesed with y washing of water in the worde of life, that it might be without wrinkle and spot, and y therefore in an other place it is called the piller and stay of trueth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ daily worketh in it, than what he hath already done. For if hee daily sanctifieth, purgeth, polisheth, wipeth from spots all them that be his: truly it is certaine that they are yet besprinkled with some spots and wrinkles, and that there wanteth somewhat of their sanctification. But howe vaine and fabulous is it, to iudge the Church already in cuety part holy and spotlesse, wherof all the members are spotty & very vncleane? It is true therefore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But only the beginning of that sanctifying is here seene: but the end and full accomplishment shalbe, when Christ the holiest of holy ones shall truly and fully fill it with his holinesse. It is true also that the spots and wrinkles of it are wiped away: but so that they be daily in wiping away, vnill Christ with his comming doe vtterly take away all that remaineth. For vnlesse we grant this, we must of necessitie affirme with the Pelagians, that the righteousnesse of the faithfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathari and Donatistes we must suffer no infirmitie in the Church. The other place, as we haue else where seene, hath a sense vtterly differing from that which they pretende. For when Paul hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishoppe, he sayeth that hee did it to this purpose, that he shoulde knowe howe hee ought to behaue himselfe in the Church. And that he should with the greater religiousnesse and endeour bende himselfe thereunto, he addeth that the Church is the very piller and stay of trueth. For what else doe these wordes meane, but that the trueth of God is preferued in the Church, namely by the ministerie of preaching? As in an other place he teacheth, y Christ gaue Apostles, Pastors and Teachers, that we should no more be caried about with euery winde of doctrine, or be mocked of men: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Sonne of God, we should altogether nicete in vnitye of Faith. Whereas therefore the trueth is not extinguished in the worlde, but remaineth safe, that same commeth to passe because it hath the Church a faithfull keeper of it, by whose helpe and ministry it is susteined. But if this keeping standeth in the ministry of the Prophetes & Apostles, it foloweth that it hangeth wholly hereupon, if the worde of the Lorde be faithfully preferued and doe keepe his puritie.

Ephe. 4, 11.

13 But that the readers may better vnderstande, vppon what point this question chiefly standeth, I wil in few words declare what our aduersaries require, and wherein we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth hereunto, and thus they expound it, that forasmuch as it is gouerned by the Spirit of God, it may go safely without the word: that whithersoever it goeth, it can not thinke nor speake any thing but trueth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside Goddes worde, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine Oracle of God. If we graunt that first pointe, that the Church can not erre in things necessarie to saluation, this is our meaning, that this is therefore because forsaking all her owne wisdom, she suffereth her selfe to be taught of the holy Ghost

Ghost by the worde of God. This therefore is the difference. They set the authoritie of the Church without the worde of God, but we wil that it be annexed to the worde, and suffer it not to bee seuered from it. And what maruell is it, if the spouse and scholar of Christ bee subiect to her husbände and schoolemaster, that shee continually and earnestly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a well gouerned house, that the wife shoulde obey the authoritie of the husbände: and this is the rule of a wel ordered schoole, that the teaching of the schoolemaster alone should there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wise of her selfe, not thinke any thing of her selfe: but determine the ende of her wisdome where he hath made an end of speaking. After this maner she shall also distrust all the inuentions of her owne reason: but in those thinges wherein it standeth vpon the word of God, she shall wauer with no distrustfulnes or doubting, but shall rest with great assurednesse and stedfast constancie. So also trusting vpon the largenesse of those promises that she hath, she shall haue wherevpon abundantly to susteine her faith: that she may nothing doubt that the best guide of the right way, the holy spirit, is alway present with her: but therewithal she shall keepe in memorie what vse the Lord woulde haue vs to receiue of his holy spirite. The spirit (saith he) which I wil send from my father shall leade you into all trueth. But how? because (saith he) he shal put you in mind of al those things that I haue tolde you. Therefore he giueth warning y^e there is nothing more to bee looked for of his spirit, but that he should inlighten our minds to perceiue the trueth of his doctrine. Therefore Chrysostome saith excellently well. Many (saith he) do boast of the holy spirite: but they which speak their owne doe fallily pretende that they haue him. As Christ testified y^e hee spake not of himselfe: because he spake out of the law and the Prophetes: so if any thing beside the Gospel be thrust in vnder the title of the spirit, let vs not beleue it, because as Christ is the fulfilling of the lawe and the Prophetes: so is the Spirit, of the Gospel. These be his wordes. Now it is easie to gather howe wrongfully our aduersaries do, which boast of the holy Ghost to no other end but to set forth vnder his name strange and foraine doctrines from y^e worde of God: whereas hee will with vnspeakeable knot be conioyned with y^e word of God, and the same doth Christ professe of him when hee promiseth him to his Church. So is it truely. What sobrietie the Lord hath once prescribed to his Church, the same he will haue to be perpetually kept. But he hath forbidden her, that she should not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing from it. This is the inuiolable decree of God & of the holy Ghost, which our aduersaries go about to abrogate, when they faine that the Church is ruled of the spirite without the word.

14 Here againe they murmure against vs, and say that it behoued that the Church should adde some thinges to the writings of the Apostles, or that they themselues shoulde afterwarde with liuely voice supplie many thinges which they had not clearely enough taught, namely sith Christ laide vnto them: I haue many thinges to be saide to you, which you cannot nowe beare: and that these be the ordinances, which without the scripture haue bene receiued onely in vse and maner. But what shamelesnes is this? I grant the disciples were yet rude, and in a maner vnapt to learne, when the Lord saide saide this vnto them. But were they then also holden with such dulnes, when they did put their doctrine in writing, that they afterward needed to supplie with liuely voice that which they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their writings? But if they were already led by the spirite of trueth into all trueth when they did set forth their writings: what hindred y they haue not therein contained and left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the gospel? But go to: let vs graunt them that which they require. Only let the point out what bee those things that it behoued to be reuealed without writing. If they dare enterprise that, I wil assaile them with Augustines words: that is, When the Lord had said nothing of them, which of vs dare say, these they be or those they be? or if any dare say so, wherby doth he proueit? But why doe I strue about a superfluous matter? For a very childe doeth know, that in the writings of the Apostles, which these men doe make in a manner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the fruit of that reuelation which the Lord did the promise them.

Hom. in
Ioh. 56.

Matt. 18. 17.

15 What? say they, did not Christe put out of controuerfie whatsoever the Church teacheth and decreeth, when he commandeth him to be taken from a heathen man and a Publicane that dare say against her? First in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but onely the authorie of the censures is established for correcting of vices, that they which haue bene admonished or rebuked should not resist her iudgemēt. But omitting this, it is much maruell, that these losels haue so litle shame, y they dare be proude of that place. For what shall they get thereby, but y the consent of the Church is neuer to be despised, which neuer consenteth but vnto the trueth of the worde of God? The Church is to be heard, say they. Who denieth it? forasmuch as it pronounceth nothing but out of the word of the Lord. If they require anie more let them knowe that these wordes of Christ do nothing take their part therein. Neither ought I to be thought too much contentious because I stand so earnestly vpon this point, That it is not lawfull for the Church to make any newe doctrine, that is, to teach and deliuer for an Oracle any more than that which the Lord hath reuealed by his word. For men of sound wit do see howe great daunger there is, if so great authoritie be once graunted to men. They see also how wide a window is opened to the mockings and caullations of the wicked, if we say that y which men haue iudged is to be taken for an Oracle among Christians. Beside that, Christ speaking according to the consideration of his owne time, giueth this name to the Synagoge, that his disciples should afterward learne to reuerence holy assemblies of the church. So should it come to passe that euery citie and village should haue egall authoritie in coyning of doctrines.

16 The examples which they vse, doe nothing helpe them. They say that the Baptising of infantes, proceeded not so much from the expresse commandement of the scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a verie miserable succour, if wee were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defence of the Baptisme of infantes: but it shall in another place sufficiently appeare that it is far otherwise. Likewise whereas they object that that is no where founde in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Nicene Synode, that the sonne is consubstantiall with the father

ther: therein they do great wrong to the fathers, as though they had rashly condemned Arius, because he would not sweare to their wordes, when he professed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles. This word, I graunt, is not in the Scripture: but whé therein is so oft affirmed, that there is but one God, againe, Christ is so oft called the true and eternall God, one with the Father: what other thing do the fathers of the Nicene council when they declare that he is of one substance, but simply set out the natural sense of the Scripture? But Theodorit reporteth that Constantine vsed this preface in their assembly. In disputations (saith he) of diuine matters, there is a prescribed doctrine of the holy Ghost: the bookes of the Gospels and of the Apostles, with the Oracles of the Prophets, do fully shewe vs the meaning of God. Therefore laying away discorde, let vs take the discussing of questions out of the words of the Spirit. There was at that time no man that spake against these holy monitions. No man tooke exception, that the Church might adde somewhat of her owne: that the Spirit reuealed not all things to the Apostles, or at least vttered them, not to those that came after: or any such thing. If it bee true which our aduersaries would haue: first, Constantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authoritie: then, whereas none of the Bishops at that time rose vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their faith: for so they were betrayes of the right of the Church. But sith Theodorite rehearseth that they willingly embraced that which the Emperour saide, it is certaine that this newe doctrine was then vtterly vnknown.

Histo. Eccl.
lib. 1. cap. 5e

The ix. Chapter.

Of Councils and of their authoritie.

NOwe, although I graunt them all things concerning the Church: yet they shall thereby not much preuaile for their intent. For whatsoeuer is saide of the Church, the same they by and by giue to the Councils, forasmuch as in their opinion those represent the Church. Yea, where they so stiffely contend for the power of the Church, they doe it of no other purpose, but to giue all that they can get to the Bishop of Rome and his garde. But ere I begin to discusse this question, I must needs here make protestation of two things aforehand. First, that where I shall in this point be somewhat rough, it is not because I lesse esteeme the olde Councils than I ought to do. For I reuerence them from my heart, & wish them to be had in their due honor with all men. But herein is some meane, that is, that there be nothing withdrawn from Christ. Nowe this is the right of Christ, to bee the head in all Councils, and to haue no man fellowe with him in this dignitie. But I say that then onely he is the head, when he gouerneth the whole assembly with his worde and Spirit. Secondly, whereas I giue lesse to Councils than the aduersaries require, I do it not for this cause that I am afraide of the Councils, as though they did make for their side, and were against ours. For as we are abundantly furnished with the worde of the Lorde to the full prooffe of our own doctrine fully, and to the ouerthrow of the whole

Ecc.

Papistris

Papistrie that wee neede not much to desire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the olde Councils do for a great part minister vnto vs so much as may suffice for both.

2 Now let vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it bee sought of the Scriptures, what is the authoritie of Councils: there is no plainer promise than in this saying of Christ: Where two or three shall be gathered together in my name, there I am in the midst of them. But that doeth no lesse belong to euery particular assembly than to a generall Council. But the doubt of the question standeth not therein: but because there is a condition added, that God will so onely be in the midst of the Council, if it be gathered together in his name. Therefore although our aduersaries do a thousand times name Councils of bishops, they shall little preuaile: neither shall they make vs to beleue that which they affirme, that is, that they be governed of \bar{y} holy Ghost, vntill they haue proued that they are gathered together in the name of Christ. For it is as possible \bar{y} wicked & euil Bishops may conspire against Christ, as good & honest bishops may come together in his name. For a verie cleare prooffe hereof are many decrees that haue proceeded from such Councils. But this shall be seene hereafter. Now I do but answere in one word that Christ promiseth nothing, but to them that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I deny that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the commaundement of God, wherein he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken fro it, do decree euery thing after their owne will: which being not contented wth the Oracles of the Scripture, that is to say the only rule of perfect wisdō, do imagine some new thing of their own head. Surely, such Christ hath not promised \bar{y} he wil be present at all Councils, but hath adioyned a peculiar marke, whereby to make true & lawfull Councils different from other: it is meeete that we should not neglect this difference. This is the couna^t, which in old time God made with the Leuiticall priests, \bar{y} they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the Prophets: this lawe also wee see to haue bin laid vpon the Apostles. Who so breake this couenant, God doeth not vouchsafe, to let them haue the honor of Priesthood, nor any authority. Let the aduersaries vndo me this knot, if they wil make my faith boū^d to the decrees of men beside the worde of God.

3 For whereas they think not that truth remaineth in the Church, vnlesse it be among the Pastours: and that the Church it self standeth not, vnlesse it appeare in generall Councils: that is farre from hauing bene alway true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esaie a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the pastours he saith thus: The watchmen are all blinde, neither know they any thing. They are all dumme dogges, neither are they able to barke. They lie along & sleepe, & loue sleeping: & the Pastors themselues knowe nothing, nor do vnderstand; and they do altogether lōke backe vnto their own wayes. After the same maner Osee sayth: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the snare of the fouler, hatred in the house of God. Where ioyning them with God by way of mockage, he teacheth that their pretense of the priesthood is vaine. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremie. Let vs heare what he sayeth of the Pastors . From the Prophet euen to the priest, euery one followeth lying . Againe : The Prophets do prophetic a lye in my name, when I haue not sent them, nor commaunded them. And least wee should be too long in reciting his words, let those things be read that he hath written in the whole xxiii. and xl. chapters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuey against the same men. The conspiracie (saith he) of the Prophets in the mids of her as a roaring lyon, and that violently taketh his pray. Her priests haue broken my law, and haue defiled my holy thinges, and haue made no difference betweene holy and prophane: & the rest that he adioyneth to y^e same effect. Like complaints are euery where in the Prophets, so that nothing is offer found in them.

4 But perhaps it might be that that was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euil. I woulde to God in dedde it were so: but the Holy Ghost hath giuen warning that it shalbe farre otherwise . The wordes of Peter are plaine. As (saith he) there were in the old people false Prophets, so shall there also be among you false teachers, slyly bringing in sectes of perdition . See you not how he sayeth, that there is danger to com, not by men of the common people, but by them that shall boast themselues with the title of teachers and Pastors? Morcouer howe oft hath it bin fore-spoken by Christ and his Apostles, that there shoulde verie great daungers hang ouer the Church by the Pastors? Yea, Paul plainly sheweth, that Antichrist shall sit in no other place than in the temple of God. Whereby hee signifieth, that the horrible calamitie of which he there speaketh, shal come from no where else but from them y^e shall sit in steede of Pastors in y^e church. And in another place he sheweth, that the beginnings of so great a mischief are euen alre dy nere at hand. For when he speaketh to the bishops of Ephesus, I knowe (saith he) that after my departure there shall enter into you rauening wolues not sparing the flocke. And they shalbe of your owne felues, that shall speake peruerse things, to leade away disciples after them. Howe much corruption might a long course of yeres bring among Pastors, when they could so farre go out of kind in so small a space of time? And, not to fill much paper with rehearsing them by name: wee are admonished by the examples in a manner of all ages, that neither the trueth is alway nourished in the bosome of the pastors, nor the safetic of the Church doeth hang vppon their state. They ought in dedde to haue beene the gouernors & keepers of the peace & safetic of the Church, for preseruatiō whereof, they are ordeined: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which he ought, and another thing to owe that which he perfourmeth not.

5 Yet let no man take these our wordes in such part, as though I woulde euery where and rashly without any choise diminish the authoritie of Pastors. I do but onely admonish that euen among Pastours themselues there is a choise to be had, that wee should not immediatly thinke them to be pastours that are so called. But the Pope with all his flocke of bishops, vppon none other reason, but because they are called Pastors, shaking away the obedience of the worde of God, do tumble & tesse all things after their owne lust: and in the meane time they trauaile to persuaide, that they cannot bee destitute of the light of truth, that the spirit of God perpetually abideth in them, y^e the Church consisteth in them & dieth with them. As though there be now no iudgements of the Lord, whereby he may punish the worlde at this day with the same kinde of punishment, wherewith sometime he tooke vengeance of the vnthankfulnes of the old people, that is, to strike the Pastors with blindnes & amased dulnesse. Neither do they most foolish men vnderstand, that they sing the same song, which those in olde time did sing that warred against the worde of God. For the enimies of Hieremie did thus prepare themselues against the truth: Come, & we will imagine imaginati- ons against Hieremie: forasmuch as the law shal not perish from the Priest, nor counsell from the wise man, nor the word from the Prophet.

6 Hereby it is easie to aunswere to that other obiection concerning generall counsels. It cannot be denied but that the Iewes had a true Church in the time of the Prophets. But if there had then bene a generall counsel gathered together of the priestes, what maner face of the Church had there appeared? We heare what God saith, not to one or two of them but to y^e whole order: The priestes shalbe astonied, and the prophets shalbe made astraide. Againe, the law shal perish from the priest, and counsell from the Elders. Againe, Night shalbe to you in steede of a vison, and darkenesse in steede of prophecieng: and the sunne shal fall downe vpon the Prophets, and bee darkened vpon these dayes &c. Well if all such had then bene gathered together in one, what Spirit should haue governed in that assemblie? of that thing we haue a notable example in that counsell which Achab called together. There were present foure hundred Prophets. But, because they were come together of no other minde but to flatter the wicked king: therefore Satan was sent of the Lorde to be a lying spirite in the mouth of them all. There by all their voices the truth was condemned. Micha was condemned for an heretike, striken and cast in prison. So was done to Hieremie, so to the other Prophets.

7 But let one example suffice for all, which is more notable than the rest. In that counsell which the bishops and Pharisees gathered at Hierusalem against Christ, what can a man say that there wanted, in so much as pertained to the outward shewe? For if there had not then bene a Church at Hierusalem, Christ would neuer haue communicate with their sacrifices & other ceremonies. There was made a solemne summoning of them together: the hie bishop sate as chiefe: the whole order of priestes sate by him: yet Christ was there condemned, & his doctrine driuen away. This doing is a prooffe y^e the Church was not enclosed in that counsel. But there is no perill that any such thing should happen to vs. Who hath giuen vs assurance thereof? For it is not without fault of sluggishnesse, to be too carelesse in so great a matter. But where the Holy Ghost doth with expresse words prophecie by y^e mouth of Paul, that there shall come a departing (which cannot come but that the Pastours must be the first that shall forsake God) why are we herein wilfully blinde to our owne destruction? Wherfore it is in no wise to bee graunted, that the Church consisteth in the companie of Pastours, for whome the Lord hath no where vnder taken that they shall perpetually be good, but he hath pronounced that they shall sometime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the danger, he doth it to this entent to make vs the warer.

8 What then wilt thou say: Shall the counceles haue no authoritie in determining? Yes forsooth. For neither do I here argue that all counceles are to be condemned, or all their actes to be repelled, or (as the saying is) to be defaced with one blotte. But (thou wilt say to mee) thou bringest them all into subiection, that it may bee free for euery man to receiue or refuse that which the counceles haue determined. Not so. But so oft as the decree of any counsell is brought forth, I would haue it first to be diligently weyed, at what time it was holden, for what cause it was holden, what manner of men were present: and then the very thing that is intreated of, to be examined by the rule of the Scripture: and that in such sort as the determination of the counsell may haue his force, and be as a foreiudged sentence, and yet not hinder the aforesaid examination. I would to God all men did keep that moderation which Augustine prescribeth in the third booke against Maximinus. For when he minded briefly to put to silence this heretike contending about the Decrees of counceles: Neither (saith he) ought I to obiekt against thee the Synode of Nice, nor thou against mee the Synode of Ariminum, as to the entent to conclude one another by foreiudged sentence, neither am I bound by the authoritie of the one, nor thou of the other. By authorities of Scriptures, nor such as are proper to either one, but such as are common to both, let there striue matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. So should it come to passe, that counceles shoulde haue the maicstie that they ought: but in the meane season the Scripture shoulde be alone in the hier place, that there might be nothing that should not be subiect to the rule thereof. So these olde Synodes, as of Nice, of Constantino-ple, the first of Ephesus, of Chalcedon, and such other, which were holden for confuting of errors, wee willingly embrace and reuerence as holy, so much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they containe nothing but the pure and naturall exposition of Scripture, which the holy fathers with spirituall wisdome applied to the subduing of the enemies of religion that then rose vp. In some of the later counceles also, we see to appeare a true zeale of godlinesse, and plaine tokens of wit, learning, and wisdome. But as things are wont commonly to growe to worse, wee may see by the latter counceles, how much the Church hath nowe and then degenerate from the purenesse of that golden age. And I dout not but that in these corrupter ages also, counceles haue had some bishops of the better sort. But in these the same happened which the Senatours themselues complained to be not well done in making of ordinances of the senate of Rome. For while the sentences are numbred, not weyed, it is of necessitie that oftentimes the better parte is ouercome of the greater. Truely they brought forth many wicked sentences. Neither is it here needefull to gather the speciall examples, either because it should be too long, or because other haue done it so diligently that there cannot much be added.

9 Now, what neede I to rehearse Counceles disagreeing with counceles? And it is no cause that any should murmure against mee, and say, that of those counceles that disagree the one is not lawfull. For, howe shall we iudge that? By this, if I be not deceiued, that wee shall iudge by the Scriptures, that the decrees thereof are not agreeable with true doctrine. For this is the onely certaine lawe to discern them by. It is nowe about nine hundred yeares ago, since the Synode of Constantinople gathered together vnder Leo the Emperour, iudged that images set vp in Churches should be ouerthrowen, and broken in pieces. A litle afterward, the council of Nice, which Irene the Empreffe assembled in spite of him, decreed that they should bee restored. Whether of these two shal we acknowledge for a lawfull council? The later which gaue images a place in Churches, hath preuailed among the people. But Augustine saith that that cannot be done without most present peril of idolatrie. Epiphanius which was before in time, speaketh much more sharply: for he saith that it is wickednesse and abomination to haue images seene in a Church of Christians. Would they that so speake, allowe that councill, if they were aliue at this day? But if both the historians tell trueth, and the verie actes be beleueed, not onely images themselues, but also the worshipping of them was there receiued. But it is euident that such a decree came from Satan. How say you to this, that in deprauing and tearing the Scripture, they shew that they made a mocking stocke of it? Which thing I haue before sufficiently made open. Howsoeuer it be, wee shall no otherwise be able to discern betweene contrarie and disagreeing Synodes, which were many, vnlesse we trie them all by that balance of all men and angels, that is, by the worde of the Lorde. So wee embrace the Synode of Chalcedon, refusing the seconde Synode of Ephesus, because in this latter one the wickednesse of Eutiches was confirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue iudged none otherwise but by the scripture: whome wee so follow in iudging: that the worde of God which gaue light to them doeth also nowe giue light to vs. Now let the Romanistes goe and boast, as they are wont, that the Holy Ghost is fastened and bound to their councils.

10 Howbeit there is also somewhat which a man may well thinke to bee wanting in those auncient and purer councils: either because they that then were at them, beeing otherwise learned and wise men, wholly bent to the businesse then in hand, did not foresee many other things, or for that many things of lighter importance escaped them beeing busied with weightier & more earnest matters: or for that simply, as being men they might bee deceiued with vnskillfulnesse: or for that they were sometime carried headlong with too much affection. Of this last point (which seemeth the hardest of all) there was a plaine example in the Nicene Synode, the dignitie whereof hath by consent of all men, as it was worthie, bene receiued with most hie reuerence. For when the principall article of our faith was there in daunger, Arrius the enimie was present in readinesse, with whom they must fight hande to hande, and the chiefe importance lay in the agreement of them that came prepared to fight against the error of Arrius, this notwithstanding, they carelesse of so great dangers, yea, as it were hauing forgotten grauitie, modestie and all humanitie, leauing the battail that they had in hand, as if they had come thither of purpose to doe Arrius a pleasure, began to wounde themselues with inwarde dissentions, and to turne against themselues the stile that shoulde haue been bent against Arrius. There were heard foule obiections of crimes, there were scattered bookes of accusations and there would haue bin no end made of contentions, vntill they had with mutual wounds one destroyed an other, vnlesse y^e Emperor Constantine had preuented it, which professing that the examining of their life was a matter about his knowledge, and chastised such intemperance rather with praise than with rebuking. Howe many wayes is it credible that the other councelles also failed, which followed afterwarde? Neither doeth this matter neede long prooffe. For if a man reade ouer the actes of the councelles, hee shall note therein many infirmities: though I speake of nothing more greuous.

11 And Leo bishoppe of Rome sticketh not to charge with ambition and vnadvised rashnesse, the Synode of Chalcedon, which yet he confesseth to be sounde in doctrines. He doth in deede not deny that it was a lawfull Synode; but he openly affirmeth, that it might erre. Some man peradventure will thinke me fonde, for that I busie my selfe in shewing such errours: forasmuch as our aduersaries do confesse, that councels may erre in those things that are not necessaric to saluation. But this labour is not yet superfluous. For although because they are cōpelled, they do in deede confesse it in word: yet when they thrust vnto vs the determination of all councels in euery matter whatsoeuer it be, for an oracle of the holy Ghost, they do therein require more than they toke at the beginning. In so doing what do they affirme, but that councels can not erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawfull for vs to see the truth, or not to sooth their errours? And I intende nothing else, but that it may thereby be gathered that the holy Ghost, so gouerned the godly and holy Synodes, that in the meane time hee suffered somewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, least wee shoulde too much trust to men. This is a much better sentence, than that of Gregoric Nazianzene, y^e he neuer saw a good end of any councel. For he that affirmeth that all without exception ended ill, doth not leaue them much authoritie. It is nowe nothing needefull to make mention seuerally of prouinciall councels: forasmuch as it is easie to iudge by the generall, how much authoritie they ought to haue to make newe articles of faith and to receiue what kinde of doctrine soeuer it pleaseth them.

12 But our Romanistes, when they see that in defence of their cause all helpe of reason doth faile them, doe resort to that extreme & miserable shift: that although the men themselues be blockish in wit and councell, and most wicked in minde and will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commandeth to obey Rulers. Is it so? what if I deny that they be rulers that are such? For they ought to take vpon themselues, no more than Iosua had, which was both a Prophete of the Lorde, and an excellent pastor. But let vs here with what wordes he is set by the Lorde into his office. Let not (sayth he) the volume of this lawe depart from thy mouth: but thou shalt studie vpon it dayes and nightes. Thou shalt neither bowe to the right hande nor to the left: then shalt thou direct thy way & vnderstand it. They therefore shalbe to vs spiritual rulers which shal not bow from the law of the Lord, neither to the one side nor to the other. But if the doctrine of all pastors whatsoeuer they bee, is to be receiued without any doubting, to what purpose was it that wee should so oft and so earnestly be admonished not to harken to the speech of false prophetes. Heare not (sayth he by Hieremie) the words of the prophets that prophetic to you. For they teach you vanity, and not out of the mouth of the Lorde. Again, Beware you of false prophetes, that come vnto you in sheepes clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues. And Iohn should in vain exhort vs, that we should proue the Spirites, whether they be of God. From which iudgement the very Angels are not exempted, much lesse Satan with all his lies. What is to be said of this saying: if the blinde lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch? Doth it not sufficiently declare, y^e it is of great importance what maner of prophetes be heard, and that not all are rashly to be heard? Wherefore there is no reason that they should make vs affraide with their titles, thereby to draw vs into partaking of their blindnes: forasmuch as wee see on the other side, that the Lorde had a singular care to fray vs away from suffering our selues to be led with other mens error, vnder what visor of name soeuer it lurketh. For if the answer of Christ be true, then all blinde guides, whether they be called fathers of the Church, or prelates, or bishops, can doe nothing but draw their partners into the same headlong downefall. Wherefore let no names of counsels, Pastors, bishoppes, (which may as well be falsely pretended as truely vsed,) hinder vs, but that being taught by lessons both of wordes and examples, we may examine all spirites of all men by the rule of the worde of God, that wee may prouue whether they be of God or no.

13 Forasmuch as we haue proued that there is not giuen to the Church a power to set vp a newe doctrine, nowe let vs speake of the power which they attribute vnto it in expounding of Scripture. Truely we do willingly graunt, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better nor surer remedy thā if a Synode of true bishops assemble together, where the doctrine in controuersie may be discussed. For such a determination, whereunto y^e Pastors of Churches shall agree in common together, calling vpon the Spirit of Christ, shall haue much greater force, than if euery orie seuerally shoulde conceiue it at home, and so teach it to the people, or if a fewe priuate men should make it. Again, when bishoppes are gathered in one, they doe the more commodiously take aduise in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, least diuersitie should breede offence. Thirdely Paul prescribeth this order in discerning of doctrines: For whereas he giueth to euery seuerall Church a power to discern, he sheweth what is the order of doing in weightier causes: that is, that the Churches should take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And so doth the very feeling of godlinesse instruct vs, that if any man trouble the Church with an vnwonted doctrine, and the matter proceede so farre that there bee perill of greater dissention, the Churches should first meete together, and examine the question propounded: at least, after iust discussing had, bring forth a determination taken out of the Scripture, such as may both take away douting out of y^e people, & stop the mouthes of wicked and greedy men, y^e they may not be so hardy to proceed any further. So when Arius was risen, the Nicene Sinode was gathered together, which with the authoritie thereof both did breake the wicked endeouours of the yngodly man, and restored peace to the Churches

which he had vexed, and defended the eternall godheade of Christ, against his blasphemous doctrine. When afterwarde Eunomius & Macedonius stirred vp newe troubles, their madnesse was resisted with like remedie by the Synode of Constantinople. In the Council at Ephesus the wickednes of Nestorius was banished. Finally this hath beene from the beginning the ordinarie meane in the Church to preferue vnitie, so oft as Satan began to worke any thing. But let vs remember, that not in al ages or in all places are found Athanasies, Basiles, Cyrilles, and such defenders of true doctrine whom the Lorde then raised vp. But let vs thinke what happened at Ephesus in the seconde Synode, where the heresie of Eutiches preuailed, the man of holy memory Flavianus was banished with certaine other godly men, and many such mischeeues committed: euen because Dioscorus a seditious man & of a very naughty nature, was there the cheefe, and not the spirite of the Lorde. But there was not the Church. I graunt. For this I determine vtterly that y^e trueth doeth not therfore die in the Church, although it be oppressed of one councill: but that the Lorde meruellously prserueth it, that it may againe in due time rise vp, and get the ouerhande. But I denie that this is perpetuall, that that is a true and certaine exposition of scripture which hath beene received by consentes of a councill.

14 But the Romanistes shoote at another marke, when they teach that the power to expound the Scripture belongeth to the councelles, yea and that without appellation from them. For they abuse this colour, to call it an exposition of the scripture whatsoeuer is decreed in the councells. Of purgatorie, of the intercession of saintes, of auricular confession, and such other there cannot be founde one syllable in the scriptures. But because al these thinges haue beene stablished by the authoritie of the Church, that is to say (to speake truely) receiued in opinion and vse, therefore euery one of them must be taken for an exposition of scripture. And not that onely: But if a councell decree any thing, though scripture crie out against it, yet it shall beare the name of an exposition thereof. Christ commaundeth all to drinke of the cup, which hee reacheth in the Supper. The councill of Constance forbad that it shoulde not be giuen to the lay peop'e, but willed that the priest onely shoulde drinke of it. That which so directly fighteth against the institution of Christ, they will haue to bee taken for an exposition of it. Paul calleth the forbidding of marriage, the hypocrisie of diuels: And the holy Ghost in an other place pronounceth that marriage is in all men holy and honourable. Whereas they haue afterwarde forbidden priestes to marrie, they require to haue that taken for the true & naturall exposition of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more against it: If any dare once open his mouth to the contrarie, hee shall be iudged an heretike: because the determination of the Church is without appellation: and to doubt of her exposition, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why shoulde I inuey against so great shamelesnesse? For the very shewing of it is an ouercomming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allowe the scripture, I wittingly passe it ouer. For in such sorte to make the Oracles of God subiect to the iudgement of men, that they shoulde therefore be of force because they haue pleased men, is a blasphemie vnworthie to be rehearsed: and I haue before touched the same matter already. Yet I will aske them one thing: If the authoritie of the scripture be founded vpon the allowance of the Church, what counsels decree will they alledge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius suffer himselfe to be ouercom at Nice with testimonies brought out of the Gospel of Iohn? For after these mens saying, it was free for him to haue refused them, forasmuch as there had no allowance of a general counsell gone before. They alledge the old rolle, which is called the Canon, which they say to haue proceeded from the iudgemēt of the church. But I aske them againe, in what counsell that Canon was set foorth. Here they must needs be dumme. Howbeit I desire further to knowe, what manner of Canon they thinke that was. For I see that the same was not very certaynely agreed among the olde writers. And if that which Hierome sayth ought to bee of force, the bookes of Machabees, Tobie, Ecclesiasticus & such other shall be thrust among the Apocrypha: which those canons doe in no wise suffer to be done.

The x. Chapter.

Of the power in making of Lawes: vvherein the Pope and his haue vsed a most cruell tyrannie and butcherie vpon soules.

NOwe followeth the seconde parte, which they will haue to consist in making of lawes, out of which spring haue flowed innumerable traditions of men, euen so many snares to strangle poore soules. For they haue had no more conscience, than had the Scribes and Pharisees to lay burdens vpon other mens shoulders, which they themselues woulde not touch with one finger. I haue in an other place taught howe cruell a butcherie is that which they commaunde concerning auricular confession. In other lawes there appeareth not so great violence: but those which seeme the most tolerable of all, doe tyrannously oppresse consciences. I leaue vnspoken howe they corrupt the worshipp of God, and do spoile God himselfe of his right, which is the onely lawmaker. This power is nowe to be intreated of, whether the Church may binde consciences with her lawes. In which discourse the order of policie is not touched, but this onely is intended, that God bee rightly worshipped according to the rule which himselfe hath prescribed, & that the spiritual libertie, which hath regard vnto God, maye remaine safe vnto vs. Vse hath made that all those decrees bee called traditions of men, whatsoever they bee that haue concerning the worshipping of God proceeded from men beside his worde. Against these doe we striue, not against the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preseruacion eyther of discipline or honestie or peace. But the end of our striuing is, that the immeasurable and barbarous Empire may bee restrained, which they vsurpe vpon soules, that woulde bee counted pastors of the Church, but in very deede are most cruell butchers. For they say that the lawes which they make are spirituall, and pertaining to the soule, and they affirme them to bee necessarie to eternall life. But so (as I euen nowe touched) the kingdome of Christ is inuaded, so the libertie by him giuen to the consciences of the faithfull is vtterly oppressed and throwen abroade. I speake not nowe with how great vngodlinesse they stablish the obseruing of their lawes, while out of it they teach men to seeke both forgiuenesse of sinnes, and righteousnesse, and saluation, while they set in it the whole summe of religion & godlinesse. This one thing I earnestly holde, that there ought no necessitie to bee laide vpon consciences in those things wherein they are made free by Christ, and vnlesse they bee made free, as we haue before taught, they can not rest with God. They must acknowledge one onely king Christ their deliuerer, and be governed by one lawe of libertie, euen the holy worde of the Gospell, if they will keepe still the grace which they haue once obteyned in Christ: they must be holden with no bondage, and bound with no bonds.

2 These Solons do indeede faine y^e their constitutions are lawes of libertie, a sweete yoke, a light burden: but who can not see that they bee meere lies? They themselues indeede doe feele no heauinesse of their owne lawes, which casting away the feare of God, doe carelesly and stoutly neglect both their owne and Gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their saluation, are farre from thinking themselues free so long as they bee intangled with these snares. We see with how great warenesse Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he durst not so much as in any one thing lay vpon men any snare at all, and that not without cause. Truly he foresawe with howe great a wounde consciences shoulde be stricken, if they shoulde bee charged with a necessitie of those things whereof the Lord had left them libertie. On the other side the constitutions are almost innumerable, which these men haue most greuously stablished with threatning of eternal death, which they most seuerely require as necessary to saluation. And among those there are many most hard to bee kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be laid together) are impossible: so great is the heape. Howe then shall it bee possible, that they vpon whom so great a weight of difficulty lieth, shoulde not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguise & terror? Therefore my purpose is here to impute such constitutions, as tende to this ende, inwardly to bind soules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things necessarie to saluation. 1. Cor. 7. 2 5.

3 This question doth therefore incumber the most part of men, because they doe not luttelie inough put difference betwene the outward court (as they call it) and the court of conscience. Moreouer this increaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to be obeyed, not onely for feare of punishment, but for consciences sake. Wherevpon foloweth, that consciences are also bound with the politike lawes. But if it were so, then all should fall that we haue spoken in the last chapter and intende nowe to speake concerning the spirituall government. For the losing of this knot, first it is good to learn what is conscience. The definition is to be gathered of the proper deriuation of the word. For, as when men doe with mind and vnderstanding conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby saide scire, to knowe, whereupon is deriued the name of science knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of Gods iudgement as a witness adioyned with them which doeth not suffer them to hide their sinnes, but that they bee brought accused to the iudgement seate of God, that same feeling is called conscience. Rom. 13. 5.

For

Rom, 2. 15. For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man: because it suffereth not man to suppressēy which he knoweth, but pursueth him so far til it bring him to guiltines. This is it that Paul meaneth when he teacheth that conscience doeth together witness with men, when their thoughtes doe accuse or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A simple knowledge might remayne in man as inclosed. Therefore this feeling which presenteth man to the iudgement of G O D, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and watche all his secretes, that nothing shoulde remaine buried in darkenesse. Wherevpon also commeth that olde prouerbe, conscience is a thousande witnesses. For the same reason also Peter hath set the examination of a good conscience, for quietnesse of minde, when wee being perswaded of the grace of Christ, doe without feare present our selues to God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, vseth these wordes, to haue no more conscience of sinne, in steede of, to be deliuered or acquitted, that sinne may no more accuse vs.

4 Therefore as workes haue respect to men, so the conscience is referred to God: so that conscience is nothing else but the inwarde purenesse of the hearte. In which sense Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the lawe, out of a pure conscience, & faith not fained. Afterwarde also in the same chapter hee sheweth howe much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had suffered shipwracke from the faith, because they had forsaken good conscience. For in these words he signifieth, that it is a liuely affection to worshippe God, and a syncere desire to liue godlily and holily. Sometime indeede it is referred also to men, as in Luke, when the same Paul testifieth, that he induored himselfe that he might walke with a good conscience towarde God and men. But this was therefore saide, because the fruites of good conscience doe flowe, and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God onely, as I haue already saide. Herevpon commeth that a lawe is saide to binde conscience, which simple bindeth a man, without regarde of men, or not hauing any consideration of them. As for example. God commaundeth not onely to keepe the minde chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth all manner of filthinesse of wordes and outwarde wantonnesse what soeuer it bee. To the keeping of this lawe my conscience is subiect, although there liued not one man in the world. So hee that behaueth himselfe intemperately, doth not onely sinne in this that he giueth euill example to his brethren, but he hath his conscience bounde with guiltinesse before God. In things that are of themselves meane, there is an other consideration. For wee ought to abstaine from them, if they breade any offence, but the conscience still being free. So Paul speaketh of fleshe consecrate to idoles. If any (saith hee) make doubre, touch it not, for consciences sake. I say for conscience, not thine owne, but the others. A faithfull man shoulde sinne, which being first warned should neuertheless eate of such fleshe. But howe soeuer in respect of his brother, it bee necessarie for him to abstaine, as it is prescribed of God, yet hee ceaseth not to keepe still the libertie of conscience. Wee see howe this lawe binding the outwarde worke, leaueth the conscience vnbound.

5 Nowe let vs returne to the lawes of men. If they bee made to this end, ende, to charge vs with a religion, as though the obseruing of them were of it selfe necessary, then wee say that that is layde vpon conscience which was not lawfull to be layd vpon it. For our consciences haue not to do with men, but with God only: whereunto pertaineth that common difference between the earthly court and the court of conscience. When the whole worlde was wrapped in a most thicke mist of ignorance, yet this small sparcke of light remained, y^e they acknowledged a mans conscience to be aboue all iudgements of men. Howebeit the same thing that they did with one worde confesse, they did afterwarde in deede ouerthrowe: yet it was Goddes will that there should then also remaine some testimonie of Christian libertie, which might deliuer consciences from the tyranny of men. But y^e difficulty is not yet dissolved, which ariseth out of the wordes of Paul. For if we must obey Princes not onely for penalties sake, but also for conscience, it seemeth thereupon to folow that Princes lawes haue also dominion ouer conscience. If this be true, then the same also ought to be said of the lawes of the Church. I answere that first here we must put a difference betwene the generaltie & specialtie. For though all special lawes do not touch the conscience, yet we are bounde by the generall commaundement of God, which commendeth vnto vs the authoritie of magistrates. And vpon this point standeth the disputation of Paul that magistrates are to be honored because they are ordained of God. In the meane time he teacheth not that those lawes that are prescribed by them, do belong to the inwarde gouernment of the soule: whereas he eche where extollet both the worshipping of God and the spirituall rule of liuing righteously, aboue all the ordinances of men whatsoever they be. An other thing also is worthy to be noted, (which yet hangeth vpon the former) that y^e laws of men, whether they be made by the magistrate or by the Church, although they be necessary to be kept, (I speake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therefore do not by themselves binde conscience, because the whole necessitie of keeping them is referred to the generall ende, but consisteth not in the things commanded. From this sort do farre differ both those that prescribe a newe forme of the worshipping of God, and those that appoint necessitie in things that be at libertie.

Rom. 13. 1.

6 But such are those that at this day be called Ecclesiastical constitutions in the Papacie, which are thrust in, in steede of the true and necessarie worshipping of God. And as they be innumerable: so are there infinite bondes to catch and snare soules. But although in the declaration of the lawe we haue somewhat touched them: yet because this place was fitter to entreate fully of them, I will now trauaile to gather together the whole summe in the best order that I can. And because we haue already discoursed so much as seemed to be sufficient, concerning the tyranny which the false bishops doe take vpon themselves, in libertie to teach whatsoever they list, I will now omitte all that part: and I wil here tarry only vpon declaring the power, which they say they haue, to make lawes. Our false bishops therefore do burden consciences with new lawes, vnder this pretence, that they are ordained of the Lord spirituall lawmakers, since the gouernement of the Church is committed vnto them. Therefore they affirme that what so euer they commaunde and prescribe, ought necessarily to be obserued of the Christian people: and that he that that breaketh it, is guilty of double disobedience, for y^e he is rebellious both to God and to the Church. Certainly, if they were true bishops, I would in this behalfe graunt to them some authoritie, not so much as they requite, but so much as is requisite to the well ordering of the policy of the Church. Nowe sith they are nothing lesse than that which they wold be accounted, they can not take any thing to them, be it neuer so litle, but y^e they shal take too much. But because this hath bene else where considered, let vs grant them at this present, that whatsoever power true bishops haue, y^e same rightly belongeth to them also: yet I deny that they be therefore appointed lawmakers ouer the faithfull, that may of themselves prescribe a rule to liue by, or compell to their ordinances the people committed vnto them. When I say this, I meane, that it is not lawfull for them, to deliuer to the Church to be obserued of necessity, y^e which they haue deuised of themselves without the word of God. Forasmuch as that authoritie both was vnknownen to the Apostles, and so oft taken away from the ministers of y^e Church by the Lords own mouth: maruel who haue bin so bolde to take it vpon them, and at this day are so bold to defend it, beside the example of the Apostles, and against the manifest prohibition of God.

7 As touching that that pertained to the perfect rule of well liuing, the Lord hath so contained al y^e in his law, that he hath left nothing for men that they might adde to that sum. And this he did first for this purpose, y^e because the whole vprightness of liuing standeth in this point, if all workes be gouerned by his will as by a rule, he should be holden of vs the only maister and director of life: then, to declare y^e he requireth of vs nothing more than obedience. For this reason James saith: he that iudgeth his brother iudgeth y^e law: he that iudgeth the law, is not an obseruer of the law, but a iudge. But there is one only lawmaker, that can both saue & destroy. We heare that God doth claime this one thing as proper to himself, to rule vs with the gouernment & lawes of his worde. And the same thing was spoken before of Esay, although somewhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, y^e Lord is our lawmaker, the Lord is our iudge, he shall saue vs. Truly in both these places is shewed, that hee that hath power ouer the soul, hath the iudgement of life & death. Yea James pronounceth this plainly. Now, no man can take that vpon him. Therefore God must be acknowledged to be the only king of soules, to whom alone belongeth the power to saue & destroy, as those words of Esay expresse, and to be the king, and iudge, and lawmaker & Sauour. Therefore Peter, when he admonisheth the Pastors of their duetie, exhorteth them so to feede the flocke, not as vsing a Lordship ouer the Clergy, by which word Clergy he signifieth the inheritance of God. y^e isto say the faithful people. This if we rightly wey, that it is not lawfull, that that should be transferred to man, which God maketh his owne only: we shall vnderstand that so all the power is cut off whatsoever it be that they challenge, which aduance themselves to command any thing in the Church without the word of God.

8 Nowe, forasmuch as the whole cause hangeth thereupon, that if God be the only lawmaker, it is not lawfull for men to take that honour to themselves: it is meete also therewithall to keepe in minde those two reasons which we haue spoken, why the Lorde claimeth that to himselfe alone.

The

Iani. 4. 12.

Esa. 33. 22.

1. Pet. 5. 2.

The first is, that his wil may be to vs a perfect rule of al righteousnes & holinesse: and that so in the knowing of him may bee the perfect knowledge to liue well. The other is, that (when the maner is sought howe to worship him rightly and well) he onely may haue authoritie ouer our soules, whom wee ought to obey, and vpon whose becke wee ought to hang. These two reasons being well marked, it shall be easie to iudge, what ordinances of mé are contrarie to the worde of God. Of that sort be al those which are fained to belong to the true worshipping of God, and to the obseruing whereof consciences are bounde, as though they were necessarie to be obserued. Let vs therefore remember that all lawes of men ought to bee weyed with this balance, if wee will haue a sure tryall that may neuer suffer vs to erre. The first of these reasons Paul in the Epistle to the Colossians vseth in contending against the false Apostles that attempted to oppresse the Churches with new burdens. The seconde reason he more vseth with the Galathians in the like case. This therefore he trauelleth to prooue in the Epistle to the Colossians, that the doctrin concerning the true worshipping of God is not to be sought at mens hands: because the Lord hath faithfully and fully instructed vs how hee ought to bee worshipped. To prooue the same in the first Chapter, hee saith that in the Gospell is contained all wisdome, whereby the man of God may be made perfect in Christ. In the beginning of the seconde chapter hee saith, that all y^e treasures of wisdom and vnderstanding are hidden in Christ. Therevpon he afterward concludeth, let the faithfull beware that they bee not by vaine Philosophie led from the flocke of Christe, according to the constitutions of men. But in the end of the chapter he doth yet with greater boldnes condemne all Etheothreskias, that is to say, al fained worshippings, which men deuise to themselues, or receiue of other, and whatsoeuer precepts they dare of themselues giue concerning the worshipping of God. We haue therefore, y^e all those ordinances are wicked, in obseruing whereof the worshipping of God is fained to be. As for y^e places in the Galathians wherw^h he earnestly affirmeth y^e consciences, which ought to be ruled of God onely, ought not to be intangled with snares, they are open enough, specially in the fifth chapter. Therefore, let it be sufficient to haue but noted them.

Col. 1. 8.

9 But because the whole matter shal better be made open by examples, before that we go any further, it is good also to applie this doctrine to our own times. We say that the constitutions which they call Ecclesiasticall, wherewith the Pope and his doe burden the Church, are pernicious, and wicked: our aduersaries defende that they be holy and auailable to saluation. There be two kinds of them: for some concerne Ceremonies and rites, other some perraine more to discipline. Is there then a iust cause to moue vs to impugne them both? Truly a iuster than we would. First doe not the authors themselves clearly define, y^e the very worshipping of God is contained in thé? To what purpose do they apply their Ceremonies, but that God should be worshipped by them? And that commeth to passe not by the onely error of the ignoraunt multitude, but by their allowaunce that haue the place of teaching. I doe not touch the grosse abominations, wherewith they haue gone about to ouerthrowe all godlinesse. But it shoulde not be imagined among them to bee so hainous an offence, to haue sayled in any of the least tradititraditions, vnlesse they did make the worshipping of God subiect to their fained deuises. What doe wee then offende, if at this day wee cannot beare that, which Paul taught to be intollerable, that the lawful order of the worshipping of God shoulde be reduced to the will of men: specially when they commaund men to worship according to the elementes of this world, which Paul testifieth to be against Christ? Againe it is not vnknownen, with howe precise necessitie they binde consciences to keepe whatsoeuer they commaunde. Here when wee criue out to the contrarie, we haue al one cause with Paul, which in no wise suffereth faithfull consciences to be brought into bondage of men.

10 Moreouer this worst of all is added, that when religion hath once begun to be defined with such vaine inuentions, there euer followeth after that peruersnesse an other abominable frowardnesse, whereof Christ reproched the Pharisees that the commaundement of God is made voide for the traditions of men. I will not vse mine owne wordes in fighting againste our lawemakers at these dayes. Let them haue the victorie, if they can by any meane purge theselues from this accusation of Christ. But how shoulde they excuse them, when among them it is thought infinitely more haynous, to haue omitted auricular confession when the time of yeare commeth about, than to haue continued a most wicked life a whole yeare together? to haue infected their tongue with a little tasting of fleshe on a Friday, than to haue defiled their body with whoredome all the dayes of the weeke? to haue put their hand to an honest worke vpon a day consecrate to I wot not what petie Sainctes, than to haue continually exercised their members in moste wicked offences? for a Priest to be coupled with one lawfull marriage, than to be entangled with a thousande adulteries? not to haue performed a vowed pilgrimage, than to breake faith in all promises? not to haue wasted somewhat vpon monstuous and no lesse superfluous and vnprofitable excessive gorgiounesse of temples, than to haue failed to helpe the extreme necessities of the poore? to haue passed by an idol without honour, than to haue dispitefully intreated all kindes of men? not to haue mumbled vp at certaine houres a great number of words without vnderstanding, than neuer to haue conceiued a true prayer in their heart? What is to make voide the commaundement of God for the traditions of men, if this be not: when commending the keeping of Gods commaundements but coldly and as it were lightly by the way, they doe no lesse earnestly and busily exact the obeying of their own, than if they contayned in the whole pith of godlines? when reuenging the transgressing of Gods lawe, with light penalties of satisfactions, they punish the verie least offence of one of their owne decrees with no lesse paine than with prisonment, banishment, fire or sworde? Being not so sharpe and harde to intreate against the despisers of God, they persecute the despisers of themselues with vnappeaseable heated to the extremitie: and doe so instruct all those, whose simplicite they holde captiue, that they would with more contented mind see the whole lawe of God ouerthrowen, than one smal title (as they call it) in the commaundements of y church to be broken. First in this pointe is greuous offence committed, that for small matters, and such as (if it shoulde be tried by Gods iudgement) are at libertie, one man despiseth, iudgeth and casteth away an other. But nowe as though that were not cuill enough, those trifling elements of the worlde (as Paul calleth them in his writing to the Galatians) are weyed of more value than the heavenly Oracles of God. And he that is in a maner acquitted in adulterie, is iudged in meate: hee that hath leaue to vse a harlot, is forbidden to haue a wife. This profite verily is gotten by that transgressing obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men.

11 There be also other two not slender faultes, which we disallow in the same ordinances. First, because they prescribe for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also fond obseruations; then, because godly consciences are oppressed with the infinite multitude of them, & being rouled backe into a certain Iewishnes, they so cleaue to shadowes, y^e they cannot attain to Christ. Whereas I cal them fond and vnprofitable, I know that y^e wil not seeme credible to the wisdome of the flesh, which so well liketh them, that it thinketh y^e church to be vtterly deformed when they be taken away. But this is it y^e Paul writeth of, to haue a resemblance of wisdome in counterfaite worshipping, in humilitie, and in this that they thinke that with their sharpenesse they be able to tame their flesh. This is truely a most wholesome admonition, such as ought neuer to slip away from vs. Mens traditiōs (saith he) do deceiue vnder the shew of wisdome, whence haue they this colour? because they are fained of men, therefore the wit of man doth therein acknow his owne, and acknowing it doth more gladly embrace it, than any thing were it neuer so good, that lesse agreed with his vanitie. Againe, they haue hereby an other commendation, because they seeme to be fit introductions to humilitie, for that with their yoke they hold the minds of men pressed downe to y^e ground. Last of all, because they seeme to tend to this end to restrain the daintinesse of the flesh, and to subdue it wth rigor of abstinence, therefore they are thought to be wisely deuised. But what saith Paul to these things? doth hee not shake off those visors, least the simple should be deceiued with false pretense? Because he iudged this enough for confutation of them, that he had saide that they were the inventions of men, hee passeth ouer all these things without confutation, as though he esteemed them for nothing; Yea, because he knew that all fained worshippings in the Church were condemned, & are so much more suspicious to the faithfull as they more delight the wit of man: because he knew that that fained image of outwarde humilitie doeth so much differ from true humilitie, as it might easily be discerned: finally because he knew that that childish introduction was no more esteemed thā an exercise of the bodie: therefore hee willed that the very same things should be to the faithfull in steade of a confutation of mens traditions, by fauour of which they were commended among the ignorant.

12 So at this day not only the vnlearned common people, but euery mā as hee is most puffed vp with worldly wisdome, so is hee most maruelously delighted with beholding of Ceremonies. But hypocrites and foolish women thinke that there can be nothing deuised more glorious nor better. But they which doe more deeply searche, and more truely weie according to y^e rule of godlinesse, of what value so many and such Ceremonies are, do vnderstand first y^e they are trifles, because they haue no profit: thē, that they are deceits,

They will denie that good things are corrupted with such forein errors: forasmuch as in this behalfe a man may no lesse offend in the very works also commanded of God. But this hath more hainousnes, that so much honor is giuen to workes rashly fained by the will of man, that they are thought to be things deseruing eternall life. For the workes commanded of God haue reward therefore, because the lawmaker himselfe in respect of obedience accepteth them. Therefore they receiue not their value of their own worthines, or of their owne deseruing, but because God so much esteemeth our obedience toward him. I speake here of y^e perfection of workes which is commanded of God, and is not performed of men. For therefore the very workes of the law which we do, haue no thanke but of the free goodnes of God, because in the our obedience is weake & lame. But because we do not here dispute, of what value workes are without Christ, therefore let vs passe ouer that question. I come backe againe to y^e which properly belongeth to this present argument, that whatsoeuer commendation workes haue in them, they haue it in respect of the obedience, which only the Lord doth look vpon, as he testifieth by the Prophet: I gaue not commandement of sacrifices and burnt offrings, but only that ye should with hearing, heare my voyce. But of fained workes he speaketh in an other place, saying: Ye wey your siluer and not in bread. Againe, they worship me in vaine with the precepts of men. This therefore they can by no waies excuse, that they suffer the silly people to seeke in those outward trifles the righteousnes wherby they may stand against God, & vphold themselves before the heauenly iudgement seat. Moreouer, is not this a fault worthy to be inueyed against, that they shewe forth Ceremonies not vnderstanded as it were a stage play, or a magicall enchantment? For it is certain that all ceremonies are corrupt & hurtful, vnles men be by the directed to Christ. But the Ceremonies y^e are vsed vnder the Papacy, are scuered from doctrine, that they may the more hold men in signes without all signification. Finally (such a cunning craftsman is the belly) it appeareth that many of them haue bin inuented by couetous sacrificing priests, to be snares to catch mony. But what beginning soeuer they haue, they are all so giuen forth in common for filthy gaine, that we must needs cutte off a great parte of them, if wee will bring to passe that there be not a prophane market, and full of sacrilege vsed in the Church.

16 Although I seem not to teach a continual doctrine concerning the ordinances of me, because this speaking is altogether applied to our own time: yet there is nothing spoken y^e shall not be profitable for all times. For so oft as this superstition creepeth in, that men will worship God with their owne fained deuises, whatsoeuer the lawes be that are made to that purpose, they do by & by degenerate to those grosse abuses. For y^e Lord threatneth not this curse to one or two ages, but to all ages of the worlde, that hee wil strike them with blindnesse and amascd dulnesse that worshippe him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that they flee from no kinde of absurdity, which despising so many warnings of God, do wilfully wrap themselves in those deadly snares. But if, setting aside circumstances, you will haue simply shewed what be the mens traditions of all ages, which it is mete to be reiected of the Church, and to be disallowed of all the godly, that same

shalbe a sure and plaine definition which we haue about set : that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this end , either to prescribe a manner of worshipping God, or to binde consciences with religion, as though they gaue commaundement of things necessary to saluation. If to the one or both of these there be adioyned other faults: as, that with their multitude they darken the brightnesse of the Gospell: that they nothing edifie, but be rather vnprofitable and trifling occupations than true exercises of godlines: that they be laide abroade to filthinesse and yn honest gaine: that they be too hard to be kept: that they be defiled with euill superstitions : these shall bee helps that we may the more easily finde how much euill is in them.

17 I heare what they answere for themselves, that their traditions are not of themselves, but of God For, they say that the Church is gouerned of the holy Ghost, that it cannot erre: and that the authoritie thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it therewithall foloweth, that their traditions are the reuelations of the holy Ghost, which cannot bee despised but wickedly & with the contempt of God. And that they should not seeme to haue attempted any thing without great authoritie, they will haue it beleeued that a great part of their obseruations came from the Apostles: and they affirme that by one example is sufficiently declared what the Apostles did in other things, when being assembled in one Councell, they did by the decree of the Councell commande the Gentiles to absteyne from things offered to idols, from bloud and strangled. Wee haue already in an other place declared, howe falsely for boasting of them selues they lyingly vsurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this present cause: if, plucking away visors, and deceitfull colours, we truly looke vpon that which we ought principally to care for, and which chiefly is for our behoofe, that is, what manner of Church Christ wil haue, that we may fashion and frame our selues to the rule thereof: it shall easily be euident vnto vs, that it is not the Church, which passing the boundes of the worde of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in making of newe lawes. For doeth not that lawe which was once prescribed to the Church, remaine eternall? What I commande thee, that thou shalt keepe that thou maist doe it. Thou shalt not adde any thing nor take any thing from it. And in an other place: Adde not to the worde of the Lord, nor minish any thing: least he peraduenture reprove thee, & thou be found a lyer. Sith they can not denie that this was spoken to the Church, what do they else but report the stubbornnes of that Church, which they boast to haue bin so bold as after such prohibitions neuerthelessse to adde & mingle of her owne with the doctrine of God? But God forbid that we should assent to their lies, whereby they burden the Church with so great a sleaunders: but let vs vnderstande, that the name of the Church is falsly pretended, so oft as this lust of mens rashnesse is spoken of, which can not hold it selfe within the prescribed bounds of God, but y^e it wildly rangeth and runneth out into her own inuentions? There is nothing entangled, nothing darke, nothing doutfull in these wordes, in which the whole Church is forbidden to adde to the word of God, or to take any thing from it, when the worshipping of God, and preceptes concerning saluation, are entreated of. But this (say they) was spoken of the lawe onely, after which followed the prophecies and the whole ministracion of the Gospel. I graunt in deede; and I adde also, which are rather fulfillings of the law, than additions or diminishings. But if y^e lord suffred nothing to be added to or taken from the ministerie of Moses, which was (as I may so terme it) darke by reason of many doutfull enwrappings, til by his seruants the Prophets, and at length by his beloued Sonne, he ministred a clearer doctrine: why should we not thinke it much more seuerely forbidden vs, that we shoulde adde nothing to the lawe, the Prophetes, the Psalmes, and the Gospell? The Lorde is not gone out of kinde from himself, which hath long ago declared, that he is with nothing so hiely offended, as when he is worshipped with the inuentions of men. Whereof came those notable sayings in the Prophets, which ought to haue continually sounded in our eares: I spake no wordes to your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of Aegypt, concerning sacrifice and burnt offering. But this worde I commaunded them, saying: With hearing heare my voice: and I will be your God, and you shalbe my people, and you shal walke in all the way that I shall commaund you. Againe, I haue with protesting protested vnto your fathers, Heare my voyce. And other like sayings: but this is notable aboue the rest. Will God haue burnt offerings & sacrifices, and not rather that his voice be obeyed? For obedience is better than sacrifice, and to harken is better than to offer the fat of rammes. For, to resist is as the sinne of soothsaying: and not to obey is as the wickednesse of idolatrie. Therefore whatsoeuer inuentions of men are in this behalfe defended with the authoritie of the church, forasmuch as the same cannot be excused from the crime of vngodlines, it is easie to proue that it is falsly imputed to the Church.

18 After this sort wee freely inueye against this tyranny of mens traditions, which is proudly thrust in among vs, vnder the title of the Church. For neither do we scorne the Church (as our aduerfaries', to bring vs in hatred, do vniustly ly vpon vs) but we giue vnto her the praise of obedience, than which she knoweth no greater praise. They rather are very sore wrong doers to the Church, which make her obstinate against her Lorde, while they saine that she hath proceeded further than she lawfully might do by y^e word of God: though I speake nothing howe it is a notable shamelesnesse ioyned with as great malice, continually to crie out of the authoritie of the Church, & in the meane time dissemblingly to hide both what is commaunded her by the Lord, & what obedience shee oweth to the commaundement of the Lord. But if we haue a minde, as it is meete we should haue, to agree with the Church, this pertaineth rather to the purpose, to haue an eye vnto & remember what is commaunded by the Lord both to vs and the Church, that wee should with one agreement obey him. For there is no dout but we shal very well agree with the Church, if wee do in all things shewe our selues obedient to the Lorde. But now to father vpon the Apostles, the originall of the traditions wherewith the Church hath bene hitherto oppressed, was a point of mere deceit: forasmuch as the doctrine of the Apostles trauaileth wholly to this end, that consciences should not be burdened with new obseruatiōs, nor the worshipping of God be defiled wth our inuentions. Moreouer if there be any faithfulness in histories and ancient monumēt, the Apostles not onely neuer knewe, but also neuer heard of this that they attribute vnto them.

Neither

Neither let them prate, that the most part of their decrees were receiued in vse & in mens behaiours, which neuer were put in writing: euen those things forsooth, which, while Christ was yet liuing, they could not vnderstande, after his ascending they learned by the reuelatiō of the holy Ghost. Of the exposition of that place we haue else where already scene. So much as is sufficient for this present cause: truly they make theselues worthy to be laughed at, while they saine ȳ those great misteries, which so long time were vnknown to the Apostles, were partly obseruatiōs either Iewish or Gentle (of which all the one sort had bin long before published among the Iewes, & all the other sort among the Gentiles) and partly foolish gesturings and vaine petie Ceremonies, which foolish sacrificing Priests that can neither skill of swimming nor of letters, vse to do very trimly: yea such as children & fooles doe so aptly counterfaite that it may seeme ȳ there be no fitter ministers of such holy mysteries. If there were no histories at all: yet men that haue their souē wit might consider by the thing it selfe, that so great a heape of Ceremonies and obseruatiōs did not suddēly burst into the Church, but by litle & litle crept in. For when those holier Bishops, which were next in time to the Apostles, had ordained some things that belonged to order & discipline, afterwarde there followed men, some after other, not discreet enough, and too curious and greedy: of which the later that euery one was, so he more strived with his predecessors in foolish enuious counterfaiing, not to giue place in inuenting of new things. And because there was peril least their deuises would shortly grow out of vse, by which they coueted to gette praise among their posterity, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpon the keeping of them. This wrongful zeale hath bredde vs a great part of these Ceremonies which they set out vnto vs for Apostolike. And this also the histories doe testifie.

19 Least in making a register of them we should be too tedious, we will be content with one example. In the ministring of the Lords supper, there was in the Apostles time great simplicity. The next successors, to garnish the dignity of the mysterie, added somewhat that was not to be disallowed. But afterward there came those foolish counterfaiers, which with now and then patching of peeces together, haue made vs this apparell of the priest which we see in the Masse, those ornamentes of the altar, those gesturings, and the whole furniture of vnprofitable things. But they obiect, that this in olde time was the persuasion, that those things which were with one consent done in the vniuersall Church, came from the Apostles themselues, whereof they cite Augustine for witnesse. But I will bring a solution from no other where than out of the wordes of Augustine himselfe. Those things (sayth hee) that are kept in the whole worlde, we may vnderstande to haue bene ordained either of the Apostles themselues, or of the generall Councelles, whose authoritie is most healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lordes passion, and resurrection, and his ascending into heauen, and the comming of the holy Ghost, are celebrate with yearely solemnitie: and whatsoeuer like thing be founde, that is kept of the whole Church, which way soeuer it be spreade abroad. When hee reckoneth vppē so fewe examples, who doeth not see that he meant to impute to authours worthy of credit and reuerence, the obseruations that then were vsed, euen none but those simple, rare, and sober ones, with which it was profitable that y^e order of the Church should be kept together? But how far doth this differ from that which the Romish maisters would enforce men to graunt, that there is no petie Ceremony among them that ought not to be iudged Apostolike.

20 That I be not too long, I wil bring forth only one example. If any man aske them, whence they haue their holy water: they by and by answer, from the Apostles. As though the histories do not attribute this inuention to I uo not what Bishop of Rome, which truly, if he had called the Apostles to counsell, would neuer haue defiled Baptisme with a strange and vnfitte signe. Albeit I doe not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that halowing is so olde as it is there written. For, that which Augustine sayth, that certaine Churches in his time did shun that solemne following of Christs example in washing of secte, least that vsage shoulde seeme to pertaine to Baptisme, secretly sheweth that there was then no kinde of washing that had any likenes with Baptisme. Whatsoeuer it be, I wil not graunt that this proceeded from an Apostolike Spirite, that Baptisme, when it is with a daily signe brought into remembrance, should after a certaine maner be repeated. And I passe not vpon this, y^e selfe same Augustine in an other place ascribeth other things also to the Apostles. For sith he hath nothing but coniectures, iudgement ought not vpon them to be giuen of so great a matter. Finally, admit that we grant them also, that those thinges which he rehearseth came from the time of the Apostles: Yet there is greate difference betweene instituting some exercise of Godlinesse, which the Faithfull with a free conscience may vse, or if the vse of it shall not be profitable for them, they may forbear it: & making a law that may snare consciences with bondage. But now, from what author soeuer they proceeded, sith we see that they are slidden into so great abuse, nothing withstandeth, but that we may without offence of him abolish them: forasmuch as they were neuer so commended, that they must be perpetually immoueable.

21 Neither doth it much helpe them, that to excuse their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apostles. The Apostles (say they) and the elders of the first Church, made a decree beside the cōmandement of Christ, wherein they commanded all the Gentiles to abstaine from things offred to idols, from strangled, and from bloud. If that was lawfull for them, why is it not also lawfull for their successors, to follow y^e same so oft as occasion so requireth? I would to God, they did both in all other things and in this thing follow the. For I denie that the Apostles did there institute or decree any newe thing, which is easie to be proued by a strong reason. For whereas Peter in that counsell pronounceth, that God is tempted, if a yoke be layde vpon the neckes of the disciples: hee doth himselfe ouerthrowe his owne sentence, if he afterward consent to haue any yoke layd vpon them. But there is a yoke layde, if the Apostles do decree of their owne authoritie that the Gentiles shoulde be forbidden, that they shold not touch things offred to idols, bloud, & strangled. In deede there yet remaineth a dout, for that they doe neuer thelesse seeme to forbid. But this dout shal easily be dissolued, if a man do more neerely consider the meaning of the decree it selfe: in the order and effect whereof the chiefe point is, that to the Gentiles their libertie is to be left, and that they ought not to be troubled, nor accombred about the obseruations of the law. Hitherto it very well maketh of our side. But the exception that immediatly foloweth, neither is any new law made by the Apostles, but the diuine and eternall comādement of God, that charitie ought not to be broken, nor doth diminish one title of that libertie: but onely admonisheth the Gentiles, how they should temper themselues to their brethren, that they abuse not their liberty to the offence of them. Let this therefore be the second point, that the Gentils should vse a harmlesse liberty, and wout offence of their brethré. But yet they prescribe some certaine thing: that is, they teach and appoint, so far as was expedient for the time, by what things they might run into the offēce of their brethren, that they might beware of those thinges: but they adde no new thing of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

22. Like as if the faithfull Pastors which gouerne the Churches not yet well reformed, should commande al their people, y^{till} the weake with whom they liue do growe stronger, they should not openly eate flesh on Friday, or openly labour vpon holy dayes, or any such thing. For although these things setting superstitiō aside, are by themselues indifferent: yet when there is added offence of brethren, they can not be done without a fault. But the times are such, that the faithfull can not shewe such a sight to the weake brethren, but that they shall fore wound their consciences. Who, but a cauiller, wil say that so they make a newe lawe, whereas, it is certaine that they doe onely preuent offences, which are expressly enough forbidden of the Lorde? And no more can it be sayd of the Apostles, whose purpose was nothing els, but in taking away the matter of offences, to call vpon the lawe of God concerning the auoyding of offence: as if they had sayde: It is the Lordes commandement that ye offende not a weake brother. Yee can not eate thinges offred to images, strangled and bloud, but that the weake brethren shalbe offended. Therefore we commande you in the word of the Lord, that ye eate not with offence. And that the Apostles had respect to the same thing, Paul himselfe is a very good witnesse, which writeth thus, verily none otherwise than according to the meaning of the Councell: Concerning meates that are offered to Idols, we knowe that the Idole is nothing. But some with conscience of the Idole, do eate it as offred to Idols, and their conscience, forasmuch as it is weake, is defiled. See that your libertie bee not made an offence to the weake. He that shal haue wel weyed these things, shal not afterward be deceiued with such a false colour as they make, that pretende the Apostles for defence of their tyranny, as though the Apostles had begunne w^{ith} their decree to breake the liberty of the Church. But, that they may not be able to escape, but be driuen euen with their owne confession to allowe this solution, lette them aunswere mee, by what right they were so bolde to abrogate the same decree. Because there was no more perill of those offences and dissensions, which the Apostles meant to prouide for, and they know that the lawe was to be weyed by the ende thereof. Forasmuch as therefore this lawe was made in respect of charitie, there is nothing prescribed in it, but so much as ascertaineth to charity. When they confesse y^e the transgressing of this lawe is nothing but a breaking of charity, do they not therewithal acknowledge, that it is not a forged addition to the law of God, but a naturall and simple appliance to the times and maners whereunto it was directed?

1. Cor. 8. r.

23 But although such lawes be a hundred times vniust and iniurious vnto vs, yet they affirme that they must be heard without exception: for they say that this is not here intended, that we should consent to errors, but only that being subiectes we should beare the hard commaundementes of our gouernours, which it is not our partes to refuse. But here also the Lorde very well resisteth them with the truth of his word, and deliuereth vs out of such bondage into the liberty, which he hath purchased for vs with his holy bloude, the benefit whercof he hath more than once confirmed with his worde. For that is not here onely intended (as they maliciously faine) y^e we should suffer some greiuous oppression in our body, but that our consciences being spoiled of their liberty that is of the benefit of the bloud of Christ, should bee seruilely tormented. Howbeit let vs passe ouer this also, as though it made litle to the matter. But of how great inportance do we thinke it is, that the Lords kingdom is taken away from him, which he claimeth to himself with so great feuerity? But it is taken away so oft as hee is worshipped with the lawes of mens inuentions, whereas he will be holden for the onely lawemaker of his owne worship. And least any man should thinke it to be a matter of nothing, let vs heare how much the Lord esteemeth it. Because (sayth he) this people hath feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men: behold I will astonish them with a great and wonderous miracle. For wisdom shal perish from the wisemen therof, & vnderstanding shal depart from the elders. In an other place, They worship me in vaine, teaching doctrines, the commaundements of men. And truly whereas the children of Israell defiled themselues with many idolatries, y^e cause of all that euil is ascribed to this vnclane mixture, y^e transgressing the commaundementes of God, they haue forged newe worshippings. And therefore the holy hystorie reherseth y^e the new strangers y^e had bin transplanted by the king of Babilon to inhabite Samaria, were torn in peeces & consumed of wilde beastes, because they knew not y^e iudgements or statutes of the God of that land. Although they had nothing offended in the Ceremonies, yet God would not haue allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meane time he ceased not to take vengeance of the defiling of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Whereupon it is afterward sayd, that they being made afraide with that punishment, receiued the Ceremonies prescribed in the lawe: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twise repeated that they did feare him & did not feare him. Whereupon we gather, y^e the part of reuerence which is giuen to him, consisteth in this, while in worshipping him wee simply followe what he commaundeth with mingling none of our inuentions. And therefore the godly kings are oftentimes prayesd, because they did according to al the commaundementes, and declined not to the right hande nor to the left. I go yet further: although in some fained worshipping there do not openly appeare vngodlines, yet it is seuerely condemned of the holy Ghost, so soone as men depart from the comaⁿdement of God. The Altar of Achaz, the pattern whercof was brought out of Samaria, might haue seemed to encrease y^e garnishment of the temple, whereas his deuiſe was to offer Sacrifices there-vpon to God onely, which hee ſhoulde doe more honourable than vpon the firſt and olde Altar: yet wee ſee howe the Spirite deteſteth that boldenes, for none other cauſe but for that the inuentions of men in the worſhipping of God are vnclene corruptions. And howe much more clearly the will of God is opened vnto vs, ſo much the leſſe excuſable is our frowardneſſe to attempt any thing. And therefore worthily with this circumſtance the crime of Manaſſes is inforced, for that hee builded a newe altar in Ieruſalem, of which God had pronounced I wil there ſet my name, becauſe the authoritie of God is nowe as it were of ſet purpoſe reſuſed.

3. Kin. 21. 3.

24 Many doe maruell why God ſo ſharpely threat eneth that he wil do things to be wondred at to the people of whome he was worſhipped with comunaundements of men, and pronounceth that he is worſhipped in vaine with the precepts of men. But if they conſidered, what it is in the cauſe of religion, that is to ſay of heavenly wiſedome, to hange vpon the onely mouth of God, they woulde therewithall ſee, that it is no ſclender reaſon why God ſo abhorreth ſuch peruerſe ſeruices, that are done to him according to the luſt of mans wit. For although they that obey ſuch lawes for the worſhipping of God, haue a certaine ſhewe of humilitie in this their obedience, yet they are not humble before God, to whō they preſcribe the ſame lawes which they themſelues doe keepe. This is the reaſon why Paul willeth vs ſo diligently to beware, that we be not deceiued by the traditions of men, and that which he calleth ethelothreſkian, that is, Wilworſhip inuented of men beſide the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wiſedome, & all mens wiſe-dome muſt be fooliſh vnto vs, that we may ſuffer him alone to be wiſe. Which way they keepe not which do ſtudy with perie obſeruations fained by the wil of men to commend themſelues vnto him, and do thruſt vnto him as it were againſt his will a tranſgreſſing obedience towarde him, which is indeede gi-uen to men. As it hath ben done both in many ages heretofore, and in y^e time within our own remēbrance, & is alſo at this day done in thoſe places where the authorite of the creature is more eſteemed than of the creator: where religion (if yet the ſame be worthy to be called religion) is defiled with more & more vnſauorie ſuperſtitious, than euer was any Paynime wicke dnes. For what could the wit of men breed but al things carnll and fooliſh and ſuch as truely reſemble their authors?

Col. 2. 9. 24.

25 Whereas alſo the Patrons of ſuperſtitious alleadge, that Samuel ſacrificed in Ramatha, and although the ſame was done beſide the law, yet it pleaſed God: the ſolution is eaſie, that it was not a certaine ſeconde altar to ſet againſt the one onely altar: but becauſe the place was not yet appointed for the arke of couenant, he appointed the towne where he dwelled for ſacrifices, as the moſt conuenient place. Truly the minde of the holy prophet was not to make any inuocation in holy thinges, whereas God had ſo ſtrait-ly forbidden any thing to be added or miniſhed. As for y^e exāple of Menoha, I ſay y^e it was an extraordinary and ſingular caſe. He being a priuate man offered ſacrifice to God & not without the allowance of God: verily becauſe he interpriſed it not of a raſh motion of his own mind, but by a heauely inſtin-to worship him withall, an other not inferior to Gedeon is a notable example, whose Ephod turned to destruction not only to him and his family, but to the whole people. Finally ebery newe founde inuention, wherewith men coeuct to worship God, is nothing else but a defiling of true holines.

26 Why then (say they) did Christ will that those intollerable burdens shoulde be borne, which the Scribes and Pharisees bounde vppon men? But why in an other place did the same Christ will that men shoulde beware of the leauen of the Pharisees: calling leauen (as Mattheue the Euangelist expouideth it) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the purenes of the worde of God? What woulde wee haue more plaine, than that we be commaunded to flee and beware of al their doctrine? Whereby it is made most certain vnto vs, that in y other place also the Lord willed not, that the consciences of his shoulde be vexed with the Pharisees owne traditions. And the very wordes, if they be not wrested, sounde of no such thing. For the Lorde purposing there to enuie sharpely against y manners of the Pharisees, did first simplic instruct them that hearde him, that although they saw nothing in their life meet for the to folow, yet they should not cease to doe those thinges which they taught in wordes, whyle they sat in the chaire of Moses, that is, to declare the lawe. Therefore hee meante nothing else but to prouide that the common people shoulde not with the euill examples of the teachers bee brought to despise the doctrine. But forasmuch as many are nothing at all mooued with reasons, but alway require authoritie, I will alleadge Augustines wordes, in which the verie same thing is spoken. The Lordes sheepefolde hath gouernours, some faithfull, and some hirelings. The gouernours that are faithful, are true Pastors: but heare ye, y the hirelings also are necessarie: for many in the Church folowing earthly profits, do preach Christ, and by them the voice of Christ is hearde: and the sheepe doe followe, not a hireling, but the Pastor by the meanes of a hireling. Heare ye that hirelings are shewed by the Lorde himselfe. The Scribes (sayth hee) and the Pharisees sit in the chaire of Moses. Doe yee those thinges that they say, but doe not those thinges that they doe. What other thing saide hee, but heare the voice of the Pastor by the hirelings? For in sitting in the chaire they teach the lawe of God: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, heare it not, doe it not. This saith Augustine.

In Ioh.
Tra. 46.

27 But whereas many vnskilfull men, when they heare that consciences are wickedly bounde and God worshipped in vaine with the traditions of men, doe at once blot out altogether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is set in frame: therefore it is conuenient also to meete with their errour: Verily in this point it is easie to bee deceyued, because at the first sight it doeth not by and by appaere what difference is betweene the one sorte and the other. But I will so plainly in few words set out the whole matter, that the likenesse may deceiue no man. First let vs holde this, that if wee see in euery fellowshippe of men some policie to bee necessary, that may serue to nourishe the common peace and to retayne concord: if wee see that in the doing of thinges there is alway some orderly forme, which is behoouefull for publike honestie and for verie humanitie not to bee refused: the

the same ought chiefly to be obserued in Churches, which are both best maintained by a well framed disposition of all things, and without agreement are no Churches at all. Therefore if wee will haue the safetic of the Church well prouided for, we must altogether diligently procure that which Paul commaundeth, that all things be done comely and according to order. But forasmuch as there is so great diuersitie in the manners of men, so great varietie in mindes, so great disagreement in iudgements and wits: neither is there any policie stedfast enough, vnlesse it bee stablised by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vsage can be obserued without a certaine appointed forme: Therefore wee are so farre off from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpose, that we affirme that when those bee taken away, Churches are dissolued from their sinewes, and vtterly deformed and scattered abroad. For this which Paul requireth, that all things be done decently and in order, cannot bee had, vnlesse the order it selfe and comelinesse bee established, with obseruations adioyned as with certaine bondes. But this onely thing is alway to bee excepted in those obseruations, that they bee not either beleued to be necessarie to saluation, and so bind consciences with religion, or, be applied to the worshipping of God, and so godlines be reposed in them.

1. Cor. 14-49

H

28 We haue therefore a very good and most faithfull marke, which putteth difference betweene those wicked ordinaunces, by which we haue saide that true religion is darkened and consciences subuerted, and the lawfull obseruations of the Church: if wee remember that the lawfull obseruations tende alway to one of these two things or to both together, that in the holy assemblie of the faithfull all things bee done comely and with such dignitie as becometh: and that the verie common fellowship of men should bee kept in order as it were by certaine bondes of humanitie and moderation. For when it is once vnderstoode that the lawe is made for publike honesties sake, the superstition is nowe taken away, into which they fall that measure the worshipping of God by the inuentions of men. Agayne when it is knowen that it perteyneth to common vse, then that false opinion of bonde and necessitie is ouerthrowen, which did strike a great terror into consciences, when traditions were thought necessarie to saluation. For herein is nothing required but that charitie shoulde with common duetifull doing be nourished among vs. But it is good yet to define more plainely, what is comprehended vnder that comelinesse which Paul commendeth, and also what vnder order. The ende of comelinesse is, partly that when such Ceremonies are vsed as may procure a reuerence to holy things, wee may by such helpes be stirred vp to godlinesse: partly also that the modestie and grauitie which ought to be seene in all honest doings may therein principally appeare. In order, this is the first point, that they which gouerne may knowe the rule and lawe to rule well: and the people which are gouerned may bee accustomed to obeying of God, and to right discipline: Then, that the state of the Church being well framed, peace and quietnesse may be prouided for.

note.

H

29 Therefore wee shall not say that comelinesse is, wherein shall bee nothing but vaine delectation: such as we see in that playerlike apparel, which

th c

the Papistes vse in their ceremonies, where appeareth nothing else but an vnprofitable visor of gainesse, and excesse without fruite. But wee shal account that to be comelinesse which shall so bee meete for the reuerence of holy mysteries, that it be a fit exercise to godlinesse, or at least such as shall serue to conuenient garnishing for the celebrating thereof: and the same not without fruite, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with howe great modestie, religiousnesse and reuerence, they ought to handle holy things. Nowe, that ceremonies may be exercises of godlinesse, it is necessarie that they leade vs the streight way to Christ. Likewise wee may not say that order consisteth in those trifling pomps that haue nothing else than a vanishing gaynes: but that it standeth in such an orderly framing as may take away all confusion, barbarousnesse, obstinacie, and all strives and dissentions.

1. Cor. 11. 21
and 5.

Of the first sort are these examples in Paul: y^e prophane bankettings shoulde not bee mingled with the holy Supper of the Lorde: that women shoulde not come abroade, but couered: and many other which wee haue in common vse: as this, that wee pray kneeling and bare headed: that we minister the Lordes Sacramentes not vncleanely, but with some dignitie: that in the burying of the deade we vse some honest shewe: and other things that are of the same sorte.

1. Co. 14. 34

Of the other kinde are the houres appointed for publike prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of mysteries: at Sermons, quietnesse and silence, places appoynted, singing together of Hymnes, dayes prefixed for celebrating of the Lorde Supper, that Paul forbiddeth that women should reach in the Church, and such like. But specially those things that concerne discipline, as the teaching of the Catechisme, the censures of the Church, excommunication, fastinges, and such as may be reckened in the same number. So all the constitutions of the Church, which wee receiue for holy & wholesome, wee may referre to two cheefe titles: for some pertaine to rites, and ceremonies, and the other to discipline and peace.

30 But because here is peril, least on the one side the false Bishops should thereby catch a pretence to excuse their wicked and tyrannous lawes, and least on the other side there bee some men too feareful, which admonished with the aforesaide euils doe leaue no place to lawes bee they neuer so holy: here it is good to protest, that I allow only those ordinances of men which be both grounded vpon the authoritie of God, & taken out of the scripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Let vs take for an example the kneeling which is vsed in time of common prayer. It is demanded, whether it bee a tradition of man, which euerie man may lawfully refuse or neglect. I say that it is so of men, that it is also of God. It is of God, in respect that it is a part of that comelinesse, the care and keeping whereof is commended vnto vs by the Apostle: it is of men, in respect that it specially betokeneth that which had in generaltie rather bene pointed to, than declared. By this one example wee may iudge, what is to bee thought of that whole kinde: verily because the Lorde hath in his holy Oracles both faithfully contained and clearly set forth both the whole summe of true righteousnesse, and all the partes of the worshipping of his diuine Maiestie, and whatsoeuer was necessarie to saluation: therefore in these things hee is onely to bee hearde as our Schoolemaster.

1. Co. 14. 40.

But because in outward discipline and Ceremonies his will will was not to prescribe each thing particularly what wee ought to followe (because hee foresawe this to hang vpon the state of times, and did not thinke one forme to bee fitte for all ages) herein wee must flee to those generall rules which hee hath giuen, that thereby all those things shoulde be tried which the necessitie of the Church shall require to bee commaunded for order and comelinesse. Finally, Forasmuch as hee hath therefore taught nothing expressely, because these things both are not necessarie to saluation, and according to the manners of euery nation and age ought diuersely to be applied to the edifying of the Church: therefore as the profite of the church shall require, it shall bee conuenient as well to change and abrogate those that be vsed, as to institute newe. I graunt indeede, that we ought not rashly, nor oft, nor for light causes to runne to innouation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie shal best iudge: which if we wil suffer to be the gouernesse, all shall be safe.

31 Nowe it is the dutie of Christian people, to keepe such things as haue bene ordeyned according to this rule, with a free conscience & without any superstition, but yet with a godly and easie redinesse to obcy, not to despise them, not to passe them ouer with carelesse negligence: so farre is it of, that they ought by pride and obstinacie openly to breake them. What manner of libertie of conscience (wilt thou say) may there bee in so great obseruation and warenesse? Yea, it shall stande excellently well when wee shall consider, that they are not stedfast and perpetuall stayed lawes, wherunto wee be bounde, but outwarde rudimentes for the weakenesse of men: which although wee doe not all neede, yet wee doe all vse them, because we are mutually one bound to an other, to nourish charitie among vs. This we may reknowledge in the examples aboue rehearsed. What? Doeth religion stande in a womans veile, that it is not lawfull to goe out of doers with her heade vncouered? Is that holy decree of his concerning silence, such as can not be broken without most hainous offence? Is there any mysterie in kneeling, or in burying of a deade carcase, that may not be omitted without sinne? No, For if a woman need, for the helping of her neighbor, to make such hast as may not suffer her to couer her head, she offendeth not if shee runne thither with her heade vncouered. And it may sometime befall that it may be no lesse conuenient for her to speake, than at an other time to holde her peace. And there is no cause to the contrarie, but that he which by reason of disease cannot bow his knees may pray standing. Finally, it is better to burie a deade mā speedely in time, than when they lack a winding sheet, or when there be not men present to comey him, to tarrie till he rot vnburied. But neuerthelesse in these things there is somewhat which the maner and ordinances of the countrie, and finally very naturall honestie and the rule of modestie appointeth to be done or auoided: wherin if a mā swarue any thing from them, by vnwarenesse, or forgetfulnessse, there is no crime committed: but if vpon contempt, such stubborneesse is to bee disallowed. Likewise the dayes themselues, which they bee, and the houres, and howe the places be builded, and what Psalmes be song vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is meete that there bee both certaine daies, and appointed houres, and a place fit to receiue all, if there bee regarde had of the preser-uati-

uation of peace. For howe great an occasion of brawlinges shoulde the confusion of these things be, if it were lawfull for euerie man as he list, to change those things that belong to common state: forasmuch as it will neuer come to passe that one same thing shall please all men, if things be lefte as it were in the middest to the choice of euerie man? If anie man doe carpe against vs, and will herein bee more wise than hee ought, let him see himselfe by
 1. Cor. 11. 16 what reason hee can defende his owne precisenesse to the Lorde. As for vs, this saying of Paul ought to satisfie vs, that we haue not an vse to contend, nor the Churches of God.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to bee induored, that no error creepe in, that may corrupt or obscure this pure vse. Which shall bee obtained, if all obseruations, whatsoeuer they shall bee, shall haue a shewe of manifest profite, and if verie fewe bee receiued: but principally if there bee adioyned a faithfull doctrine of the Pastor, that may stoppe vp the way to peruerse opinions. This knowledge maketh that in all these things euerie man may haue his owne libertie preferred, and neuertheless shall willingly charge his owne libertie with a certaine necessitie, so farre as either this comelineffe that wee haue spoken off, or the order of Charitie shal require. Secondly, y^e both we our selues should without any superstition be busied in the obseruing of those things, and should not too precisely require them of other, so as wee shoulde thinke the worshipping of God to be the better for the multitude of Ceremonies: that one Church shoulde not despise an other for the diuersitie of discipline: last of all that setting herein no perpetuall lawe to our selues, wee shoulde refer the whole vse and ende of obseruations to the edification of the Church, that when it requireth we may without any offence suffer not onely somewhat to be changed, but all the obseruations that were before in vse among vs, to bee altered. For this age is a present experience, that certaine rites, which otherwise are not vngodly nor vncomely, may according to the fit occasion of the matter, be conueniently abrogate. For (such hath beene the blindness and ignorance of the former times) Churches haue heretofore, with so corrupt opinion and with so stiffe affection, sticked in Ceremonies, that they can scarcely be sufficiently purged from monstrous superstitions, but that manie Ceremonies must be taken away, which in olde time were peradventure ordeined not without cause, and of themselues haue no notable vngodlines in them.

The xj. Chapter.

Of the iurisdiction of the Church, and the abuse thereof, such as is seene in the Papacie.

NOwe remaineth the thirde part of the power of the Church, yea & the cheefe part in a well ordered state, which we haue saide to consist in iurisdiction. The whole iurisdiction of the Church pertaineth to the discipline of maners, of which we shal intreate by & by. For as much as no citie or no town can stand wout Magistrate & policie: so the Church of God (as I haue

I haue already taught, but now I am compelled to repeat it againe) needeth her certaine spirituall policie: but such as is utterly seuered from the ciuile policie, and doth so nothing hinder or minish it, that it rather doeth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of iurisdiction shall in a summe be nothing else but an order framed for the preservation of spirituall policie. To this ende from the beginning were ordeined iudiciall orders in Churches, which might vse examination of maners, correct vices, & exercise the office of the keyes. This order Paul speaketh of in the Epistle to the Corinthians, when he nameth gouernements. Againe, to the Romanes, when hee saith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefulnes. For he speaketh not to the magistrates, (for at that time there were no Christian magistrates) but to them that were ioyned with the Pastors for the spiritual gouernment of y^e church. Also in the Epistle to Timothee, he maketh two sorts of Elders: some, that labor in the word: other some, that do not vse the preaching of the word, and yet do rule well. By this later sort it is no dout that he meaneth them y^e were appointed to loke vnto maners, and to the whole vse of the keyes. For this power, of which wee nowe speake, hangeth wholly vpon the keyes which Christ gaue to the Church, in the xvij. Chap. of Mattheue: (where he commaunders, that they should be sharply admonished in the name of y^e whole Church, that haue despised priuate monitions: but if they goe forwarde in their obstinacie, he teacheth that they should be put out of the fellowship of the faithful. But these monitions and corrections cannot be without knowledge of the cause: therefore there needeth both some iudgement and order. Wherefore vnlesse we wil make void the promise of the keyes, & take utterly away excommunication, solemne monitions, & all such things whatsoever they be: we must needs giue to the Church some iurisdiction. Let the readers marke that that place entreateth not of the generall authoritie of doctrine, as in the xvj. Chapter of Mattheue, and the xxj. of Iohn: but that the power of the Synagoge is for the time to come transferred to the flocke of Christ. Vntill that day the Iewes had their order of gouerning, which Christ stablisheth in his Church, and that with great penaltie, so much as concerneth the pure institution of it. For so it behoued, forasmuch as otherwise the iudgement of an vnnoble and vnregarded congregation might be despised of rash and proude men. And that it should not encomber the readers, that Christ doeth in the same wordes expresse things somewhat differing one from the other, it shalbe profitable to dissolue this dout. There be therefore two places, that speake of binding and loosing. The one is in the xvi. Chapter of Mattheue, where Christ, after that he had promised that he woulde giue to Peter the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, immediatly adde, that whatsoever he shall binde or loose in earth, shalbe confirmed in heauen. In which wordes he meaneth none other thing, than hee doeth by other wordes in Iohn, when sending his disciples to preache, after that hee had breathed vpon them hee said: whose sinnes ye forgiue, they shalbe forgiven: and whose ye retaine, they shalbe retained in heauen. I will bring an exposition not subtle, nor enforced, nor wrested: but naturall, flowing, and offering it selfe. This commaundement of forgiuing and reteining sinnes, & that promise of binding and loosing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the ministerie of the worde: which when the Lorde committed to the Apostles, he did therewith also arme them with this office of binding and loosing. For what is the summe of the Gospel, but that we all being the bondseruants of sinne and of death, are loosed and made free by the redemption that is in Christ Iesus: and that they which doe not receiue nor acknowledge Christ their deliuerer and redeemer, are damned and adiudged to euerlasting bondes; When the Lord deliuered this message to his Apostles, to be carried into all nations: to approue that it was his owne & proceeding from himself, he honored it with this noble testimonie: and that to the singular strengthening both of the Apostles themselues, and of all those to whome it should come. It behoued that the Apostles should haue a stedfast and sounde certaintie of their preaching, which they should not onely execute with infinite labours, cares, troubles and daungers, but also at the last seale it with their blood. That they might (I say) knowe the same to bee not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behoued that in so great carefulnesse, in so great hardnesse of things, and in so great daungers, they should be perswaded that they did the businesse of God: that when all the worlde withstoode them and fought against them, they should knowe that God stood on their side: that hauing not Christ the auctour of their doctrine present by sight in earth, they shoulde vnderstande him to be in heauen, to confirme the trueth of the doctrine which he had deliuered them. It behoued againe that it should also be most certainly prooued by testimonie to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Gospel was not the worde of the Apostles, but of God himselfe: not a voice bred in earth, but come downe from heauen. For these thinges, the forgiuenesse of sinnes, the promise of euerlasting life, the message of saluation, cannot bee in the power of man. Therefore Christ hath testified, that in the preaching of the Gospell there is nothing of the Apostles, but the onely ministerie: that it was hee himselfe that spake and promised all thinges by their mouthes as by instruments: and therefore that the forgiuenesse of sinnes which they preached, was the true promise of God: and the damnation which they pronounced, was the certaine iudgement of God. But this testifying is giuen to al ages, and remaineth in force, to certifie and assure all men, that the worde of the Gospel, by what man soeuer it be preached, is the verie sentence of God, published at the soueraigne iudgement seate, written in the booke of life, ratified, firme and fixed in heauen. Thus wee see that in those places the power of the keies is nothing but the preaching of the Gospel: and that it is not so much a power as a ministerie, if we haue respect to men. For Christ hath not giuen this power properly to men, but to his owne worde, whereof he hath made men ministers.

2 The other place which we haue said to bee, concerning the power of binding and loosing, is in the xvij. Chapter of Matthewe, where Christ saith: Mat. 18, 17. If any brother heare not the Church, let him be to thee as a heathen man or a publicane. Verily I say vnto you: whatsoeuer ye bind vpon earth, shalbe bounde also in heauen: whatsoeuer ye loose shalbe loosed. This place is not altogether like the first, but is a litle otherwise to be vnderstanded. But I do not so make them diuerse, that they haue not great affinitie together.

This

This first point is like in both, that either of them is a general sentence: that in both there is alway all one power of binding and loosing, namely by the word of God, all one commaundement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that the first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the ministers of the worde doe execute: this later place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the Church. The Church bindeth, whom she excommunicatech: not that she throweth him into perpetuall iuine and desperation, but because she condemneth his life and manners, and vnlesse he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She loseth whom she receiuech into communion: because she doth make him as it were partaker of the vnicie which shee hath in Christe Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinately despise the iudgement of the Church, or litle regard that he is condemned by the consenting voyces of the faithfull: the Lord testifieth that such iudgement of the faithfull is nothing else but a publishing of his own sentence: and that whatsoeuer they do in earth, is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the worde of GOD, whereby they may condemne the peruerse: they haue the worde, whereby they may receiue the repentant into grace. And they can not erre, nor dissent from the iudgement of God: because they iudge not but after the law of God, which is not an vncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy wil of God, & a heauenly Oracle. Out of these two places, which I thinke I haue both briefly & familiarly and truly expounded, those furious men without difference as they be caried with their owne giddinesse, go about to stablish sometime confession, sometime excommunication, sometime iurisdiction, sometime the power to make lawes, sometime pardons. But the first place they alledge to stablish the supremacy of the Sea of Romie: they can so well skill to fit their keyes to all lockes and doores, that a man may say they haue practised smithes craft all their life

3 For whereas many thinke that those things endured but for a time, when the Magistrats were yet strangers from the profession of our religion: they are deceiued in this, y they consider not, howe greate difference and what maner of vnlikenesse there is of the Ecclesiasticall & ciuill power. For the Church hath not the power of the sworde to punish or restraime, no empire to commande, no prison, no other paines which the Magistrate is wont to lay vpon men. Againe, it tendeth not to this ende, that he that hath sinned should be punished against his will, but should with willing chastisement professe his repentance. Therefore there is a farre diuers order: because neither doth the Church take to it selfe any thing which properly belongeth to the Magistrate, nor the magistrat can execute that which the Church doth. This shalbe made plainer by an example. Is any man dronke? In a wel ordered citie prison shalbe his punishment. Hath he committed fornication? He shall haue like, or rather greater punishment. So shall both the lawes, & the magistrat, & outward iudgement be satisfied: But it may be that he shal giue no signification of repentance, but rather murmure & grudge against it. Shal the Church in this case doe nothing? But such can not bee receiued to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Christ and his holy institution. And reason requireth this, that hee which offendeth the Church with an euil example, should with solempne declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raised. The reason which they bring that are of contrary opinion, is too colde. Christ say they committed these doings to the Church, when there was no magistrate to execute them. But it happeneth often times that the magistrate is more negligent, yea sometime peradventure that himselfe is to be chastised, which happened to the Emperor Theodosius. There may beside this as much be said of the ministerie of the word. Now therefore after their sentence, let Pastors cesse to blame manifest wicked doinges, let them cesse to chide, to reprove, to rebuke: for there be Christian magistrates, which ought to correct these things with the lawe & with the sword. But as the Magistrate ought by punishing, & by restraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: so likewise the minister of the worde for his part ought to helpe the magistrate that there may not so many offend. So ought their workings to be conioyned that the one may be a help, not a hinderance to the other.

4 And truly if a man more nereley wey the words of Christ, he shal easily perceiue that in these places, is described a stayed state, and a perpetuall order of the Church, not such as endureth but for a time. For it is not meete that we should accuse them to the magistrate, that wil not obey our monitions: which yet should be necessarie if the magistrate succeeded into the office of the Church. What is this promise? Shal wee say that it is a promise of one or a fewe yeres? Verily verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer yee bind in earth. Moreouer Christ did here institute no newe thing, but followed the custome alway obserued in the auncient Church of his owne nation: whereby he signified that the Church cannot want the spirituall iurisdiction, which had beene from the beginning. And this hath beene confirmed by the consent of all times. For when Emperors and magistrates began to professe Christ, the spirituall iurisdiction was not by and by abolished: but only so ordred, that it should diminish nothing of the ciuile iurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrate, if he be godly, wil not exempt himselfe from the common subiection of the children of God, whereof it is not the last part to submit himselfe to the Church, iudging by the worde of God: so farre it is off, that he ought to take away that order of iudgement. For what is more honorable (saith Ambrose) for the Emperor, than to be called the sonne of the Church? For a good Emperor is within the Church, not aboute the Church, Therefore they, which to honor the magistrate doe spoile the Church of this power, do not onely with false exposition corrupt the sentece of Christ, but also do not slenderly condemne so many holy bishops which haue beene from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vsuped the honor & office of the Magistrate.

5 But on the other side it is good to see this, what was in olde time the true vse of the iurisdiction of the Church, and how great abuse is crept in, that we may know what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquitie, if we will ouerthrowe the kingdome of Antichrist, and set vp the true kingdome of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shot at, that offences be preuented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may be abolished. In the vse two things are to be considered: first, that this spirituall power be altogether seuered from the power of the sworde: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull assembly. Both these things were obserued in the purer Church. For the holy Bishops did not exercise their power with fines, or imprisonments, or other ciuile punishments: but they vsed the onely word of the Lord, as they ought to doe. For the seuearest reuenge, and as it were the vttermost thunderbolt of the Church is excommunication, which is not vsed but in necessitie. But this requireth neither force nor strong hand, but is content with the power of the word of God. Finally, the iurisdiction of the old Church was nothing els but a declaration in practise (as I may so call it) of that which Paul teacheth concerning the spirituall power of Pastors. There is (saith he) power giuen to vs, whereby we may throwe downe strong holdes, whereby we may make low all height that lieth vp it selfe against the knowledge of God, whereby wee may subdue all thought, & may leade it captiue into the obedience of Christ, and wee haue in readinesse a reuenge against all disobedience. As this is done by the preaching of the doctrine of Christ: so, least the doctrine should bee scorned, according to that which is taught ought they to be iudged which professe themselves of the household of faith. But that cannot be done, vnlesse there be ioyned with the ministerie a power to call them that are to bee priuately admonished, or to be more sharply corrected, and also a power to exclude them from the communion of the Supper, which can not be receiued without prophaning of so great a mystrie. Therefore when in an other place he saith, that it belongeth not to vs to iudge strangers, he maketh the children subiect to the censures of the Church, which may chaustice their faultes, and he secretly signifieth that there were then iudiciall orders in force from which none of the faithfull was free.

2. Cor. 10. 4.

1. Cor. 5. 12.

6 But such authoritie (as we haue declared) was not in the power of one man, to do euery thing according to his own will: but in the power of the assembly of the Elders, which was the same thing in the Church that a Senat is in a citie. Cyprian, when he maketh mention by whome it was exercised in his time, vseth to ioyne the whole clergie with the bishop. But in another place also he sheweth, that the verie clergie so gouerned, that in the meane time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus he writeth: Since the beginning of my bishoprike I haue determined to do nothing without the counsell of the clergie and consent of the people. But this was the common and vsuall manner, that the iurisdiction of the Church should be exercised by a Senate of Elders: of whome (as I haue saide) there were two sortes: For some were ordeined to teaching, and other some were onely iudges of maners. By litle and litle this institution grewe out of kinde from the first beginning of it: so that euen in the time of Ambrose onely clerkes were iudges in ecclesiasticall iudgements. Which thing he himselfe complaineth of in these wordes: The olde Synagoge (saith he) and since that time the Church hath had Elders, without whose counsell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is grown out of vse, I knowe not, vnlesse peraduenture by the slouthfulnesse or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone woulde be thought to be somewhat. Wee see howe much the holy man is displeas'd, that any thing of the better state is decayed, when notwithstanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the least tolerable. What then woulde he doe if hee sawe these deformed ruines that shewe almost no signe of the olde building? What bewailing woulde he vse? First, against lawe and right, the bishop hath claimed to himselfe alone, that which was giuen to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Consul, dringing out the Senate, should take the empire vpon himselfe alone. But as he is aboute the rest in honour, so in the whole assemblie is more authoritie than in one man. Therefore it was too wicked a deede, that one man, removing the common power to himselfe, hath both opened an entrie to tyrannous lust, and hath taken from the Church that which belonged vnto her, and hath suppressed and put away the assemblie ordeyned by the Spirite of Christ.

7 But (as of one euill alway groweth another) Bishops disdainig it as a thing vnworthie of their care, haue committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officials to serue that roome: I doe not yet speake what kinde of men they be, but onely this I say, that they nothing differ from prophane Iudges. And yet they still call it a spirituall iurisdiction, where men contend about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more euill, with what face dare they call a brawling court the iudgement of the church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doeth a poore man owe a litle money? he is cited: if he appeare, he is condemned. When he is condemned, if he doe not satisfie it, he is monished: after the seconde monition they proceede one steppe towarde excommunication: if he appeare not, he is monished to come and yeld himselfe to iudgement: if he then make delay, he is monished, and by and by excommunicate. I beseech you, what is there any thing like either to the institution of Christ, or to the auncient manner, or to an Ecclesiastical order? But there is also correccion of vices. But how? verily they not onely suffer but with secrete allowance do after a certaine maner cherish and confirme adulteries, wantonnesse, drunkennesse & such kind of mischieuous doings: & y not only in the common people, but also in the clergie themselues. Of many they call a fewe before them, either that they should not seeme slouthfull in winking at them, or that they may milke out some money. I speake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, & sacrileges that are gathered thereby, I speake not what maner of men are for the most part chosen to this office. This is enough & too much, that when the Romanistes doe boast that their iurisdiction is spirituall, it is easie to shewe that there is nothing more contrarie to the order institute of Christ, and that it hath no more likenesse to the auncient custome than darkennesse hath to light.

8 Although we haue not spoken al things that might be alleged for this purpose, and those things that we haue spoken of are knit vp in fewe words: yet I trust that we haue so fought it out, that there is nowe no more cause why any man should dout, that the spirituall power whereof the Pope with all his kingdome proudly glorieth, is wicked against God, and an vniust tyranny ouer his people. Vnder the name of spirituall power I comprehend both boldnesse in framing newe doctrines, wherewith they haue turned away the sily people from the naturall purenesse of the worde of God, and the wicked traditions wherewith they haue snared them, and also the false ecclesiasticall iurisdiction which they execute by Suffraganes and Officials. For if we grant vnto Christ a kingdome among vs, it is not possible but that all this kinde of dominion must immediatly be ouerthrowen and fall downe. As for the power of the sworde which they also giue to themselues, because it is not exercised vpon consciences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to entreate of it. In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alway like themselues, verily nothing lesse than that which they wold be taken for, that is to say, Pastors of the Church, Neither doe I blame the peculiar faultes of men, but the commo wickednes of the whole order, yea the very pestilence of the order: forasmuch as it is thought that the same should be maimed, vnlesse it be gloriously set forth with wealth and proude titles. If we require the authority of Christ concerning this matter, it is no dout but that his mind was to debar the ministers of his word from ciuill dominion and earthly gouernement, when he sayde, The kinges of the Gentils beare rule ouer them: but you shall not so. For he signifieth not only that the office of Pastor is distinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be things so seuered, that they can not meete together in one man. For whereas Moses did beare both the offices together: First that was done by a rare miracle: againe, it was but for a time till things were better sette in order. But when a certaine forme was once prescribed of God, the ciuill gouernment was left vnto him, & hee was commaunded to resigne the priesthoode to his brother. And worthily. For it is aboue nature, that one man should suffice to beare both burdens. And this hath in all ages bin diligently obserued in the Church. And there was neuer any of the Bishops, so long as the true forme of the Church endured, that once thought of vsurping the power of the sworde: so y^e this was a common prouerbe in the time of Ambrose, that Emperours rather coueted the priesthood, than priestes the empire. For this which he afterward sayth, was emprinted in the mindes of al men: that palaces pertained to the Emperour, and Churches to the Priest.

9 But since that a way hath bin deuised, wherby bishops might hold the title, honor & riches of their office without burden or care: least they should be left altogether idle, the power of the sworde was giuen them, or rather they did by vsurpation take it vpon themselues. By what colour will they defende this shamelesnesse? Was this the duerie of Bishops to wrappe themselues with iudiciall hearing of causes, with the gouernementes of cities and prouinces, and through large circuites to meddle in businesse so vnpertaining to them: which haue so much worke and businesse in their owne office, that if they where wholly & continually occupied in it, and were withdrawen with no callinges away from it, yet they were scarcely able to satisfie it? But (such is their waiwardnesse) they sticke not to boast, that by this meane the Church doth flourish according to her worthinesse, and that they themselues in the meane time are not too much drawen away from the duties of their vocation. As touching the first point: if this be a comly ornament of the holy office, that they bee aduanced to such height, that the hiest monarches may stande in feare of them: then they haue cause to quarell with Christe, which hath in such sort grieuouly pinched their honor. For, at least in their opinion, what could haue bin spoken more dishonorably than these wordes:

 Matt. 20. 25. The kings of the Gentiles and princes beare rule ouer them, but you shall Luke. 22. 25 not so? And yet he laid no harder lawe vpon his seruants than he first laide Luke. 12. 14. and receiued vpon himselfe. Who (saith he) hath made me a iudge or deui-der among you? We see that he plainly putteth away from himselfe the office of iudging, which he would not do if it were a thing agreeing with his office: wil not the seruants suffer themselues to bee brought into that order, whereunto the Lorde hath yelded himselfe subiect? As for the other point,
 I would to God they coulde so proue it in experience as it is easie to speake Act. 6. 2. it. But forasmuch as the Apostles thought it not good, to leaue the worde of God and minister at tables: thereby, because they will not bee taught, they are conuincd, that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good bishop & a good prince. For if they (which according to the largenesse of the giftes wherwith they were endued, were able to satisfie mo and greater cares than any men that haue bene borne since them) haue yet confessed that they cannot at once applie the ministerie both of the worde and of tables, but that they shoulde faint vnder the burden: howe coulde these that bee men of no valor in comparison of the Apostles a hundred folde excell the indu-stric of the Apostles? Truly, to attempt it was a point of moste shamelesse and too presumptuous boldnesse: yet wee see that it hath bene attempted:
 but with what successe, it is euident. For it coulde not otherwise come to passe, but that forsaking their owne office they shoulde remoue into other mens charge.

10 And it is no dout but that of small beginning they haue by litle and litle growen to so great encreases. For it was not possible that they shoulde at the first step clim vp so hie. But sometime with suttletie and croked craf-tie meanes they priuily auanced themselues, so as no man coulde foresee that it woulde come to passe till it was done: sometime when occasion ser-ued they did by terror and threatenings wring from princes some augmentation of their power: sometime when they sawe Princes not hard laced to giue, they abused their fond and vnaduised gentlenesse. In olde time if any controuersie happened, the godly, to escape the necessitie of going to lawe, committed the arbitrement to the bishop, because they douted not his vprightnesse. With such arbitrementes the olde bishops were oftentimes encombred, which in deed greatly displeaseth them (as Augustine in one place testifieth) but least the parties should runne to contentious lawing, they did though against their willes take that encumbrance vpon them. These men haue of voluntarie arbitrementes, which were altogether differing from the noise of iudiciall courtes, made an ordinarie iurisdiction. In a litle while after when cities and countries were troubled with diuerse harde distresses, they resorted to the protection of bishops, to be sauegarded by their faith-full succour: the bishops by marueilous suttletie, of protectours made themselues Lordes. Yea, and it cannot be denied that they haue gotten the possession of a greate parte by violent seditious partakinges. As for the Princes, that willingly gaue iurisdiction to bishops, they were by diuerse affections moued thereunto. But admitting that their gentlenes had some shewe of godlinesse: yet with this their wrongfull liberalitie they did not verie well

well prouide for the profit of the Church, whose auncient and true discipline they haue so corrupted, yea (to say truth) haue vtterly abolished. But those bishops y^e haue abused such goodnes of princes to their own commodity, haue by shewing of this one exaple enough and too much testified y^e they are not bishops. For if they had had any sparcle of an Apostolike spirite, they would without dout haue answered out of the mouth of Paul: The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual. But they being rauished with blind greedines, haue destroyed both themselues, their successours, and the Church.

II At length the bishop of Rome not contented with meane lordships, first laid hand vpon kingdoms, & afterward vpon the very empire. And that he may with some color whatsoeuer it be retain y^e possession gotten by mere robbérie, he sometime boasteth that he hath it by the law of God, he sometime pretendeth the gift of Constantine, sometime some other title. First I answer with Bernard: Admit that he do by any other reason whatsoeuer, claime this vnto him, yer he hath it not by Apostolike right. For Peter could not giue that which he had not: but he gaue to his successors y^e which he had, the care of churches. But when the Lord and maister sayth, that he is not appointed iudge between two, a seruant and scholar ought not to thinke scorne if he be not iudge of all men. But Bernard speaketh of ciuill iudgements. For he addeth: Therefore your power is in crimes, not in possessions: because for those & not for these ye haue receiued the keies of the kingdom of heauen. For which seemeth to thee the greater dignity to forgiue sinnes, or to diuide landes? There is no comparifon. These base and earthly things haue Kinges and Princes of the earth their iudges. Why do ye inuade the bounds of other? &c. Againe, Thou art made a superior: (he speaketh to Pope Eugenius) but wherunto? Not to beare lordship, I thinke. Therefore how much soeuer of our selues, let vs remember that there is a ministry layde vpon vs, not a lordship giuen vs. Learne that thou hast need of a weedhooke not of a scepter, that thou maist do the worke of a Prophet. Againe, it is plaine: Lordship is forbidden to the Apostles. Go thou therefore, & presume to vsurpe to thy self either being a Lord, an Apostleship: or being an Apostle, a Lordship. And by & by after: the form of an Apostleship is this, Lordship is forbidden them, ministérie is bidden them. Whereas these things are so spoken of a man, y^e it is enident to all men that the very truth speaketh them, yea where as the very thing it selfe is manifest without all wordes: yet the Bishoppe of Rome was not ashamed in the Council at Orlearne to decree, that the supreme power of both the swordes belong to him by the lawe of God.

12 As for the gift of Constantin, they that be but meanly practised in the histories of those times neede not to be taught how much this is not only fabulous, but also to be laughed at. But to passe ouer histories, Gregoric himselfe is both a sufficient & most full witness hereof. For so oft as he speaketh of the Emperor, he calleth him most noble Lord, and himselfe his vnworthy seruant. Againe in another place: Bur let not our Lord by the earthly power be the sooner angry with the priestes: but with excellent consideration, for his sake whose seruantes they be, let him so rule ouer them, that hee also giue them due reuerence. We see howe in common subiection he woulde be accounted as one of the people. For he there pleadeth not any other mans cause, but his owne. In another place, I trust in the almighty God, that he will giue a long life to our godly Lordes, and will dispose vs vnder your hande according to his mercie. Neither haue I therefore alleaged these thinges, for that it is my purpose throughly to discusse this question concerning the gift of Constantine: but onely that the Readers shoulde see by the way how childishly the Romanists doe lie, when they goe about to chalenge an earthly Empire to their bishop. And so much the more fowle is y^e shamelesnes of Augustine Steuchus, which in such a dispeired cause hath beene so bolde to sell his trauaile and tongue to the bishop of Rome. Valla (as it was not hard for a man learned and of a sharp wit) had strongly confuted that fable. And yet (as a man litle exercised in ecclesiasticall matters) he had not saide al that might haue made for that purpose. Steuchus burst in, and scattered stinking trifles to oppresse the cleare light. And truely he doth no lesse coldly handle the cause of his master, than if some mery conceited fellowe faining himselfe to do the same, would in deede take Vallas parte. But verily it is a worthie cause, for which the Pope should hyre such patrones for monney: and no lesse worthie are those hyred losels to be deceiued of their hope of gaine, as it happened to Eugubinus.

13 But if any man require to knowe the time, since this fained Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed siue hundred yeres, since y^e bishops yet remained in subiection of the Princes, neither was the Pope created without the authoritie of the Emperour, The Emperour Henry the fourth of that name, a light and rash man, and of no forecast, of great boldnes and dissolute life, gaue first occasion to Gregorie the seuenth to alter this order. For when he had in his court the bishoprikes of all Germany partly to bee sold, & partly laide open for spoile: Hildebrand, which had receiued displeasure at his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to reuenge himself. But because he seemed to pursue an honest & a godly cause, he was furthered wth the fauor of many. And Henric was otherwise, by reason of his insolent manner of gouerning, hated of the most part of Princes. At the length Hildebrád, which called himselfe Gregorie the seuenth, as hee was a filchie & naughty man, bewrayed the malice of his heart: which was the cause that hee was forsaken of many that had conspired with him. But he thus much preuailed, y^e his successours might freely without punishment not onely shake off the yoke, but also bring Emperors in subiection to them. Hereunto was added y^e from thence forth there were many Emperors liker to Henry than to Iulius Cesar: whome it was no hard thing to subdue, while they saie at home carelesse of all things & slothfull, when they had most neede with vertue & lawfull meanes to repress, the greedines of the bishops. Thus wee see with what colour that same godly gift of Constantine is shadowed, whereby the Pope faineth that the Empire of the West was deliuered vnto him.

14 In the meane time the Popes cessed not, sonetime with fraud, sometime with treason, and sometime with force to inuade other mens dominions; & the very citie it selfe, which before was free, within a hundred & thirtie yeres, or there about they brought into their subiection, til they grew to y^e same power which they haue at this day: & for the obtaining or encreasing wherof, whereof they haue so troubled Christendome by the space of two hundred yeares, (for they beganne before that they tooke to them the dominion of the Citie) that they haue almost destroyed it. In the olde time when vnder Gregorie the keepers of the goods of y^e church, did take possession of y^e lands which they reckened to belong to the Church, and after the maner of seasing to the vse of the Prince did set titles vpon them for tokē of claime, Gregorie assembling a councell of bishops, inueying sore against that prophane manner, asked whether they did not iudge that Clerke accursed which did of his owne will by writing of any title attempt to enter vpon any possession. They all pronounced, accursed. If to claime a peece of grounde by writing of a title be in a Clarke an offence worthie of accursing: when whole two hundred yeres together Popes do practise nothing else but batels, shedding of blood, destructions of armies, sackings of some cities, racing of other, ouerthrowes of nations, wastings of kingdomes, onely that they might catch holde of other mens possessions: what cursinges can be enough to punishe such examples? Truly it is very plaine that they seeke' nothing lesse than y^e glorie of Christ. For if they of their owne will doe wholly resigne al the secular power that they haue, therin is no daunger to the glory of God, no daunger to sounde doctrine, no daunger to the safetie of the Church: but they are caried blinde and headlong with only greedinesse of dominion: be cause they thinke nothing safe, vnles they may beare rule with rigorousnes (as the Prophet saith) and with power. Reg. lib. 4. cap. 88. Eze. 34. 4.

15 To iurisdiction is annexed immunitie, which the Romish Cleargie tooke to themselues. For they thinke it against their dignitie, if they answer in personall causes before a temporall iudge: and therein they thinke both y^e libertie and dignitie of the Church to consist, if they be exempt from common iudgements and lawes. But the olde bishoppes, which otherwise were most rigorous in defending the right of the Church, iudged themselues and their order to bee nothing hurt, if they were subiect to them. And the godlic Emperours, without gaine saying of any man, did alway cal Clarke's to their iudgement seats so oft as need required. For thus sayth Constantine in his Epistle to the Nicomedians: If any of the bishoppes shall vndiscretely disorder him selfe, his boldnes shal be restrained by the execution of the minister of God, that is by my execution. And Valentinian saith: good bishoppes do not speake against the power of the Emperour, but doe syncerely both keepe the commandementes of God the great king, and also obey our lawes. At that time all men were perswaded of this without controuersie. But Ecclesiasticall causes were referred to the iudgement of the Bishop. As if any Cleike had offended nothing against the lawes: but only was accused by y^e Canons: he was not cited to y^e comon iudgement seat, but in y^e cause had y^e bishop for his iudge. Likewise if there were a questiō of Faith in controuersie, or such a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the iudgement thereof was committed to the Church. So is y^e to be vnderstanded, which Ambrose writeth to Valentinian: Your father of honourable memorie, not onely answered in worde, but also decreed by lawes, that in a cause of Faith he ought to be iudge that is neither vnfit in office nor vnlike in right. Againe: If we haue regarde to the Scriptures or olde examples, who is there that canne denie that Epi. 31.

that in a cause of Faith, in a cause (I say) of Faith, bishops are wont to iudge of Christian Emperours, and not Emperours of bishops? Again: I would haue come, O Emperour, to your consistory, if either the bishops or the people would haue suffred me to goe: saying, that the cause of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a spirituall cause, that is to say the cause of religion, ought not to be drawen into y^e remporall courte where prophane causes are pleaded. Worthily do all men praise his constancie in this behalfe. And yet in a good cause he proceedeth but thus farre, that if it come to violence and strong hand, he saith that hee will giue place. Willingly (saith he) I wil not forsake the place committed vnto me: but when I am enforced, I knowe not how to resist: for our armour are prayers and tears. Let vs note the singular modestie and wisdom of the holy man, ioyned with stoutnesse of courage and bouldnesse. Iustina the Emperours mother, because she could not drawe him to the Arrians side, practised to driue him from the gouernement of the Church. And so shoulde it haue come to passe, if hee had come when he was called to the palace to pleade his cause. Therefore hee denieth the Emperour to be a competente iudge of so great a controuersie. Which manner of doing both the necessitie of that time, and the continuall nature of the matter required. For hee iudged that hee ought rather to die, than y^e such an example should by his consent be giuen to posteritie: & yet if violence be offred, he thinketh not of resistace. For he denieth it to be bishoplike, to defende the faith and right of y^e church with armes. But in other causes hee sheweth himselfe readie to doe whatsoever the Emperour shall commaunde him. If hee demaund tribute, (saith hee) wee denie it not: the landes of the Church doe pay tribute. If hee aske landes, hee hath power to claime them, none of vs resisteth. After the same manner also speaketh Gregorie. I am not ignorant (saith hee) of the minde of our most noble soueraigne Lorde, that hee vseth not to intermeddle in causes pertaining to Priestes, lest hee shoulde in any thing be burdened with our sinnes. Hee doeth not generally exclude the Emperour from iudging of Priestes: but he saith that there be certaine causes, which hee ought to leaue to the iudgement of the Church.

16 And by this verie exception the holy men sought nothing else, but that Princes lesse zealous of religion shoulde not with tyrannous violence and wilfulnesse interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they disallowe, if princes sometime did vse their authoritie in Ecclesiastical matters, so that it were done to preserue the order of the Church, not to trouble it, to stablishe discipline, not to dissolue it. For sith the Church hath not the power of compelling, nor ought to require it (I speake of ciuill constraining:) it is the office of Godly kinges and princes to maintaine religion with lawes, proclamations, and iudiciall proceedings. After this maner, when the Emperour Maurice had commanded certaine bishops that they shoulde receiue their felowe Bishoppes that were their neighbours and driuen out by the barbarous nations: Gregorie confirmeth that commaundement, and exhorteth them to obey it. And when he himselfe is admonished by the same Emperour to come to attonement with Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, hee doeth in deede render a reason why hee ought not to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunity from the secular court, but rather promiseth y^e he will be obedient, so far as his conscience wil giue him leaue: and therewithall he sayeth this, that Maurice did as became a godly Prince, when he gaue such commandementes to the Priestes. The xii. Chapter.

Of the discipline of the Church, vvhich of the chiefe vse is in the censures and excommunication.

THe discipline of the Church, the entreating whereof wee haue differred vnto this place, is briefely to be declared, that wee may at length passe ouer to the rest. But that same for the most parte hangeth vpon the power of the keyes and spirituall iurisdiction. That this may be the more easily vnderstood, let vs diuide the Church into two principall degrees, that is to say the Clergy, and the people. Clerkes I call by the vsuall name those that execute publike ministry in the Church. First wee will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to be subiect: then wee will come to the Clergy, which beside y^e common discipline, haue a seueral discipline by themselves. But because many for hatred of discipline do abhorre the very name therof, let them heare this: If no fellowship, yea no house though it haue but a small householde, can be kept in right state without discipline, the same is much more necessary in the church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth saluation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in steede of sinewes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the body hang together euery one in his fit place. Wherefore whosoeuer do either desire to haue discipline taken away, or hinder the restoring therof, whether they do it of set purpose or by vnadvisednes, verily they seeke the extreeme dissipation of the Church. For what shall betide, if what is lustfull be lawfull to euery man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preaching of doctrine adioyned priuate admonishments, corrections, & such other helps which susteine doctrine and suffer it not to be idle. Discipline therefore is as it were a bridle wherwith they may be holden backe & tamed which coltishly resist against Christe: or as it were a pricke, wherwith they y^e are not willing enough may be stirred vp: and somtime, as a fatherly rod, wherewith they which haue more grievously fallen may be chastised mercifully and according to the mildenes of the Spirit of Christ. Sith therefore we do nowe see at hande certaine beginnings of a horrible wastnesse in the Church, because there is no care nor order to keepe the people in awe, very necessitie crieth out that there is neede of remedy. But this is the only remedy, which both Christ hath commanded, and hath alway bin vsed among the godly.

2 The first foundation of discipline is, that priuate monitions shoulde haue place: that is to say, that if any man of his owne accorde doe not his duty, if he behaue himselfe licentiously, or liue not honestly, or haue committed any thing worthy of blame, he shoulde suffer himselfe to be admonished: and that euery man should study to admonish his brother when occasion shall require. But specially let the Pastors and Priestes bec watchfull to do do this, whose office is not onely to preach to the people, but in euery house to admonish & exhort if at any time they do not sufficiently preuaile by generall doctrine: as Paul teacheth, when he rehearseth that he taught priuately & in houses, and protesteth that he is cleane from the bloud of all men, because he hath not ceased with teares day and night to admonish euery one. For doctrine doth then obtain force & authority when the minister not only doth declare to all together what their ducie is to Christ, but also hath power & order to require the keeping therof of thē whom he marketh to be either not obedient to doctrine, or slothfull. If any man do either stubbornly refuse, or in going forward in his faultes, do despise such admonishmentes: when he hath bin the second time admonished with witnesses called to it, Christ commandeth them to be called to the iudgement of the Church, which is the assembly of Elders: and y there they should be more greuously admonished as it were by publike authoritie, that if he reuerence the Church he may submit himselfe & obey. But if he be not hereby subdued, but do continue in his wickednes, then he commandeth him, as a despiser of the Church, to be put away from the felowship of the faithfull.

3 But because he speaketh here onely of secret faults, we must make this diuision: that some sinnes be priuate, and some publike or openly manifest. Of the first sort Christ sayth to euery priuate man, Reproue him betweene thee and him alone. Of manifest sins Paul sayth to Timothee, Reproue him before all men, that the rest may haue feare. For Christ had sayde before, If thy brother haue offended against thee. Which wordes (against thee) vnles thou wilt be contentious, thou canst not otherwise vnderstande than vnder thine owne secret knowledge, so that there be no moe priue to it. But the same thing which the Apostle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that sinne openly, he himselfe followed in Peter. For when Peter sinned euen to publike offence, hee did not admonishe him a parte by himselfe, but brought him forth into the sight of the Church. Therefore this shalbe the right order of doing, if in secreete faultes wee goe forward according to those degrees that Christ hath set: but in manifest faultes, we immediately proceede to the Churches solemne rebuking, if the offence be publike.

4 Let this also be an other distinction: that of sinnes some be defaultes, other some be wicked doinges, or hainous offences. To the correcting of this later sort, not only admonishment or rebuking is to be vsed, but also a seuerer remedy: as Paul sheweth which not only chastised with words the Corinthian that had committed incest, but also punished him with excommunication, so soone as he was certified of his wicked deede. Now therefore we beginne better to see howe the spirituall iurisdiction of the Church, which punisheth sinnes according to the word of the Lord, is the best maintenance of health, and foundation of order, & bonde of vnitie. Therefore when the Church doth banish out of her company manifest adulterers, whormongers, theeves, robbers, seditious persons, periured men, false witnesses, and such other, againe, obstinate men, which being orderly admonished euen of small faultes, do scorne God and his iudgement, she taketh nothing vpon her selfe without reason, but executeth the iurisdiction giuen her of the Lorde.

Moreouer, that none should despise such iudgement of the Church, or lightly regarde that hee is condemned by the consenting voices of the faithfull: the Lorde hath testified, that the same is nothing else but a pronouncing of his owne sentence, and that whatsoever they doe in earth is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the word of the Lord, whereby they may condemne the frowarde: they haue the worde, whereby they may receiue the repentaunt into fauour, They I say that trust that without this bonde of discipline Churches may long stande, are deceiued in opinion: vnlesse perhaps we may want that help which the Lord foresawe that it should be necessary for vs. And truly how great is the necessitie therof, shalbe better perceiued by the manifolde vse of it.

5 There be three endes which the Church hath respecte vnto in such corrections and excommunication. The first is, that they shoulde not, to the dishonour of God, be named among Christians, that leade a filthie and sinfull life, as though his holy Church were a conspiracie of naughtie and wicked men. For sith the Church is the body of Christ, it cannot bee defiled with such filthie and rotten members, but that some shame must come to ſy head. Therefore that there shoulde not bee any such thing in the Church, whereby his holy name may be spotted with any reproch, they are to be driuen out of her household, by whose dishonestie any slaunder might redound to the name of Christians. And hercin also is consideration to be had of the Supper of the Lord, that it be nor profaned w^{ch} giuing it to all without choise. For it is most true, that he to whome the distribution of it is committed, if he wittingly and willingly admit an vnworthy man whome he might lawfully put backe, is as guiltie of Sacriledge, as if hee did giue abroad the Lords body to dogges. Wherefore Chrysofome greeuously inueyeth against ſy priests, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debarre no man. The bloode (saith he) shalbe required at your hands. If yee feare man, hee shall laugh you to scorne: but if ye feare God, ye shalbee reuerenced also among men. Let vs not feare maces, nor purple, nor crownes: we haue here a greater power. I verily wil rather deliuer mine owne body to death, and suffer my blood to be shed, than I wil be made partaker of this defiling. Therefore least this most holy mystery be spotted with slaunder, in the distributing thereof choise is greatly requisite: which yet can not be had but by the iurisdiction of the Church. The second end is, least (as it is wont to come to passe) with the continuall company of the euill, the good should be corrupted. For (such is our readie inclination to go out of the way) there is nothing easier than for vs to be led by euill examples from the right course of life. This vse the Apostle touched, when he commanded the Corinthians to put the incestuous man out of their companie. A litle leauen (saith he) corrupteth ſy whole lūpe of doae. And he foresaw herein so great danger, that hee forbade him euen from all felowship. If any brother (saith he) among you bee named either a whoremonger, or a couetous man, or a worshipper of Idols, or a dronkarde, or an euill speaker, with such a one I graunt you not leaue so much as to eate. The third end is, that they themselves confounded with shame may begin to repente of their filthi nesse. So it is profitable for them also to haue their owne wickednesse chastised, that with feeling of the rodde they may be awaked, which otherwise by tender bearing with them woulde haue become more obstinate. The same thing doth the Apostle meane whē he saith thus: If any doe not obey our doctrine, marke him, and keepe no companie with him, that he may be ashamed. Againe in an other place, when hee writeth that he hath deliuered the Corinthian to Satan, that his Spirite might be saued in the day of the Lorde: that is (as I expounde it) that he went into a damnation for a time, that hee might be saued for euer. But he therefore saith that he deliuereth him to Sathan, because the deuill is out of y^e church, as Christ is in the Church. For whereas some doe refer it to a certaine vexing of the flesh, I thinke that to be very vncertaine.

6 When these endes be set foorth, nowe it remaineth to see howe the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in iurisdiction. First let vs keepe the diuision aboue ser, that of sinnes some bee publike, and other some be priuate or more secrete. Publike are those that haue not onely one or two witnesses, but are committed openly and with the offence of y^e whole Church. Secrete I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of Hypocrites, for those come not into the iudgement of the Church, but those of the meane kinde which are not without witnesses, and yet are not publike. The first kinde requireth not those degrees which Christ rehearseth: but when any such thing appeareth, the Church ought to do her duetie in calling the sinner and correcting him according to the proportion of the offence. In the seconde kinde according to the rule of Christe, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacie added. When it is once come to knowledge, then is that other diuision to bee noted betweene wicked doinges and defaultes. For in lighter sinnes there is not to bee vsed so great seueritie, but chastisement of wordes sufficeth, and the same gentle & fatherly, which may not harden nor confound the sinner, but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more reioyce than be sorie that he was corrected. But it is meete that hainous offences bee chastised with sharper remedy. For it is not enough, if hee that by doing a wicked deed of euil example hath greuously offended the Church, shoulde bee chastised onely with wordes, but he ought for a time to be depriued of the communion of the supper, till he haue giuen assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthian Paul vseth not onely rebuking of wordes, but driueth him out of y^e church, and blameth the Corinthiās that it had so long born him. The old & better Church kept this order, when rightfull gouernment flourished. For if any man had done any wicked deed wherupon was growen offence, first he was commaunded to absteyne from partaking of the holy Supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, and to testifie his repentance before the Church. There were also certain solemne vsages, which were enioyned to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had so done, that the Church was satisfied, then by laying on of hands hee was receiued into fauor. Which receiuing is ofteentimes called of Ciprian peace, who also briefly describeth this vsage. They do penance (saith he) in a certain full time: thē they come to confession, and by the laying on of handes of the bishop & the Cleargie they receiue power to come to the communion. Howebeit the Bishop and his cleargie had so the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therewith-withall require the consent of the people: as he sheweth in another place.

7 From this discipline there was no man exempted, that euen the Princes together with the common people did submit themselues to beare it. And rightfully, sith it was euident that it was the discipline of Christ, to whō it is meete that al scepters and crownes of kinges bee submitted. So when Theodosius was deprivied by Ambrose of power to come to the communion because of the slaughter committed at Thessalonica, he threwe down all the royall ornament wherewith he was clothed: he openly in the Church bewailed his sinne, which had crept vpon him by fraud of other men: hee craued pardon with groning and teares. For great kinges ought not to think this to be any dishonor to them, if they humbly throw downe themselues before Christ the king of kinges, neither ought it to displease them y they be iudged by the Church. For sith in their court they heare nothing else but mere flatteries, it is more than necessary for them to be rebuked of the Lorde by the mouth of the priestes. But rather they ought to wish, that the priestes should not spare them, that the Lorde may spare them. In this place I omit to speak by whome this iurisdiction is to bee exercised, because it is spoken of in another place. This onely I adde that that is the lawfull manner of proceeding in excommunicating a man, which Paul sheweth: if the Elders doe it not alone by themselues, but with the Church knowing & allowing it: that is, in such sort that the multitude of the people may not gouerne the doings, but may mark it as a witnes & a keper y nothing should be done of a fewe by wilful affection. But the whole maner of doing, beside the calling vpon the name of God, ought to haue such grauitie, as may resemble y presēce of Christ y it may be vndouted y he there sitteth for ruler of his owne iudgement.

8 But this ought not to be passed ouer, that such seueritie becommeth y Church as is ioyned with the spirite of mildnes. For we must alway diligently beware as (as Paul teacheth) that he which is punished be not swallowed vp of sorrow: for so should of a remedie be made a destruction. But out of the end may better be gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the sinner should bee brought to repentance, and euil examples taken away, least either the name of Christ should be euil spoken of, or other men be prouoked to folow them: if we shal haue an eye to these things, we shalbe able easily to iudge how farre seueritie ought to proccede & where it ought to end. Therefore when the sinner giveth a testimonie of his repentance, & doth by his testimonie, as much as in him lieth, blot out the offence: he is not to be enforced any further: but if he bee enforced, rigorousnes doth then excede measure. In which behalf the immeasurable seueritie of the old fathers cannot be excused, which both disagreed from y prescribed order of the Lord, & also was marueilously dangerous. For when they charged a sinner with solemne penance, & deprivation from the holy communion sometime for seuen yeres, sometime foure yeres, sometime three yeres, sometime for their whole life: what other thing could folowe thereof but either great hipocrisie or most great desperation? Likewise whereas no mā y had fallen the second time was admitted to seconde penance but was cast out of the Church euen to the ende of his life: that was neither profitable nor agreeing to reason. Therefore whosoever shal wey the matter with sound iudgement, shall herein perceiue want of their discretion. Howbeit I do here rather disallow the publike manner, than accuse all them that vsed it, whereas it is certaine that many of them misliked it: but they did therefore suffer it, because they could not amende it. Truly, Cyprian declareth, how much beside his owne will he was so rigorous. Our pacience (saith he) and easines and gentlenes is readie to them that come. I wish all to returne into the Church: I wish all our fellowfoldiars to be enclosed within the tentes of Christ & in the houses of God the father. I forgiue al things, I dissemble many things: for zeale & desire to gather brotherhood together, I examine not with full iudgement those things that are committed against God in pardoning defaults more than I ought, I am my selfe almost in default: I do wth readie and full loue embrace them that returne with repentance, confessing their sinnes with humble & plaine satisfaction. Chrysostome is somewhat harder, and yet he saith thus: If God be so kind, why will his Priest see me so rigorous? Moreouer we know what gentlenesse Augustine vsed towards the Donatistes, in so much that he sticke not to receiue into bishoprike those that had returned from schisme, euen immediatly after their repentance. But because a contrarie order had growe in force, they were compelled to leaue their owne iudgement to follow it.

9 But as this mildnes is required in the whole body of the church, that it should punish them that are fallen, mercifully & not to the extremitie of rigor, but rather according to the precept of Paul, should confirme charitie toward them: so euery priuate man for himselfe ought to temper himselfe to this mercifulnes & gentlenes. Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the elect such as are driuen out of the Church, or to dispaire of them as though they were already lost. We may in deed iudge them strangers from the Church, & therefore strangers from Christ: but that is onely during the time y^e they abide in diuorce. But if then also they shew a greater resemblance of stubbornnes than of gentlenes, yet let vs commit them to y^e iudgement of the Lord, hoping better of them in time to come than wee see in time present, & let vs not therefore cease to pray to God for them, & (to comprehend all in one worde) let vs not condemne to death the person it selfe, which is in the hand & iudgement of God alone, but let vs rather weye by the law of the Lord of what sort euery mans workes be. Which rule while we follow, wee rather stande to the iudgement of God than pronounce our owne. Let vs not take to our selues more libertie in iudging, vnlesse wee will binde the power of God within boundes, & appoint a lawe to his mercie, at whose pleasure when he thinketh it good, very euil men are turned into very good, strangers are graffed & foreins are chosen into the church. And this y^e Lord doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, & rebate their rashnes: which if it be not restrained, presumeth to take to it selfe power of iudging more than it ought.

10 For where as Christ promiseth that that shall be bounde in heauen, which they that be his shall bind in earth, he limiteth the power of binding, to the Censure of the church: by which they y^e are excommunicate, are not thrown into euerlasting ruine & damnation: but hearing their liues & manners to be condemned, they are also ccrused of their owne euerlasting condemdenation, vnlesse they repent. For excommunication herein differeth from accursing, that accursing taking away al pardon doth condemne a mā and adiudge him to eternall destruction: excommunication rather reuengeth and punisheth maners. And though the same doe also punish the man, yet it doeth so punish him, that in forewarning him of his damnation to com, it doeth call him backe to saluation. If that be obtained, reconciliation & restoring to the communion is readie. But accursing is either very seldome or neuer in vse. Therefore, although ecclesiasticall discipline, permitteth not to liue familiarly, or to haue friendly conuersation with them that bee excommunicate: yet wee ought to endeouour by such meanes as we may, that returning to amendement, they may returne to the fellowship and vnitie of the Church: as the Apostle also teacheth. Do not (saith he) thinke them as enemies, but correct them as brethren. Vnlesse this gentlenesse be kept as wel priuately as in common, there is danger lest from discipline we foorthwith fall to butcherie.

2. Thess. 3:15

11 This also is principally required to the moderation of discipline, which Augustine entreateth of in disputing against the Donatistes: that neither priuate men, if they see faultes not diligently enough corrected by the Councel of Elders, should therefore by and by departe from the Church: nor the Pastors themselues, if they cannot according to their hearts desire purge all things that neede amendment, should therefore throw away the ministrie, or with vnwonted rigorousnes trouble the whole Church. For it is most true which he writeth: that he is free & discharged from curse, whosocuer he be that either by rebuking amendeth what he can: or what he cānot amend, excludeth, sauing the bond of peace: or what he cannot exclude, sauing the bond of peace, he doth disallow with equitie, and beare with stedfastnes. Hee rendreth a reason thereof in another place: because all godly order & manner of ecclesiasticall discipline ought alway to haue respect vnto the vnitie of the Spirit in the bond of peace: which the Apostle commaundeth to bee kept by our bearing one with another: and when it is not kept, the medicine of punishment beginneth to be not only superfluous, but also hurtfull, and therefore ceaseth to be a medicine. He that (saith he) doth diligently thinke vpon these things doth neither in preseruing of vnitie neglect the seueritie of discipline, nor doth with immeasurablenesse of correction breake y bond of fellowship. He graunteth in deede that not onely the Pastours ought to trauaile to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church, but also that euery man ought to his power to endeouour therunto: and he plainly declareth that he which neglecteth to monish, rebuke, and correct y euill, although he do not fauour them, nor sinne with them, yet is gilty before the Lord. But if he be in such degree, that he may also seuer them from the partaking of sacraments, and doth it not, now he sinneth not by an others euill, but by his own. Only he willeth it to be done, with vsing of discretion, which the Lord also requireth, least while the tares be in rooting out, the corne bee hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Cyprian, Let a man therefore mercifully correct what he can: & what he cannot, let him patiently suffer, & with loue grone and lament it.

Lib. 3. cap. 1

Cap. 2.

Cap. 10

Matt. 13:29

12 This he saith because of the precisenes of the Donatistes, who when they saw faults in the Churches which the bishops did in deede rebuke wth words, but not punish with excommunication, (because they thought that they could this way nothing preuaile) did sharply enuey against the bishops as betrayers of discipline, and did with an vngodly schisme deuide theselues from the flocke of Christ. As the Anabaptistes doe at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to bee of Christ, vnlesse it do in euery point shine with angelike perfection, do vnder pretence of their zeale ouerthrowe all edification. Such (saith Augustine) not for hatred of other mens wickednes, but for desire to maintaine their owne contentions, do couet either wholly to draw away, or at least to deuide the weake people snared with the boasting of their name: they swelling with pride, mad with slubbornnes, traitorous with slaunders, troublesome with seditions, least it should openly appeare that they want the light of trueth, do pretend a shadow of rigorous seueritie: & those things which in scripture are commaunded to be done with moderate healing for correcting of the faultes of brethren, preferuing the syncerenes of loue, & keeping the vnitie of peace, they abuse to sacriledge of schisme & occasion of cutting off. So doth Satan transforme himselfe into an angell of light, when by occasion as it were of iust seueritie he persuadeth vnmercifull crueltie, coueting nothing else but to corrupt & break the bond of peace & vnitie: which bond remaining fast among Christians, al his forces are made weake to hurt, his traps of treasons are broken, & his counsels of ouerthrowing do vanish away.

2. Cor. 11. 14.

13 This one thing he chiefly commendeth, that if the infection of sin haue entred into the whole multitude, then the seuer mercie of liuely discipline is necessarie. For (saith he) the deuises of separation are vaine, and hurtful & ful of sacrilege, because they are vngodly & proud, & do more trouble the weake good ones, than they amend the stout euil ones. And y^e which he there teacheth other, he himselfe also faithfully folowed. For writing to Aurelius bishop of Carthage, he complaineth that drunkennes which is so fore condemned in scriptures, doth range vnpunished in Affrica: & he aduiseeth him, that assembling a Councel of bishops hee shoulde prouide remedie for it. He addeth by and by after: These things (as I thinke) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, not after an imperious maner, but more by teaching than by commaunding, more by admonishing than by threatning. For so must we deal with a multitude of sinners, but seueritie is to be exercised vpon the sinnes of fewe. Yet he doeth not meane that Bishops shoulde therefore winke or hold their peace at publike faultes, because they cannot seuerely punish them: as he himselfe afterward expoundeth it: But he willeth that the measure of correction be so tempered, that so farre as may be, it may rather bring health than destruction to the body. And therefore at length he concludeth thus: Wherfore both this commandement of the Apostle is in no wise to be neglected, to seuer y^e euil, when it may be don without peril of breking of peace: & this is also to be kept, y^e bearing one with another, we should endeouour to preferue vnitie of the Spirit, in the bond of peace.

Lib. 3. cont.
parm. cap. 2.1. Cor. 5. 7.
Ephe. 4. 2.

14 The part that remaineth of discipline, which properly is not contained in the power of keies, standeth in this, y^e according to the necessitie of times the Pastors should exhort the people either to fasting, or to common suppli-

supplications, or to other exercises of humility, repentance, & faith, of which things there is neither time, nor measure, nor forme prescribed by the word of God, but is left in the iudgement of the church. The obseruing of this part also, as it is profitable, so hath alway bin vsed of the olde church euen from y^e verie Apostles. Howbeit the Apostles themselues were not the first authors of them, but they tooke example out of the law & the Prophets. For wee see that there so oft as any weightie businesse happened, the people were called together, common prayers enioyned, & fasting commanded. Therefore the Apostles followed that which both was not new to the people of God, & they foresawe that it should be profitable. Likewise is to be thought of other exercises, wherewith the people may either be stirred vp to their duetie, or be kept in awe and obedience. There are examples eche where in holy histories, which we neede not to gather together. In summe this is to be holdē, that so oft as there happeneth any controuersie of religion, which must bee determined either by a Synode or by ecclesiastical iudgement, so oft as they be about choosing of a minister, finally, so oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doing: againe, when there appeare tokens of the wrath of God, as pestilence, & warre, & famine: this is a holy ordinance & profitable for all ages, that the Pastors should exhort the people to common fasting, & to extraordinarie prayers. If any man doe not allowe the testimonies which may be alleaged out of the old testament, as though they were not meete for the Christian Church, it is certaine that the Apostles also did the same. Howbeit of praiers I thinke there wil scarcely any be founde that will moue any question. Therefore let vs say somewhat of fasting: because many when they vnderstand not what profit it hath, do iudge it not so necessarie: some also do vtterly refuse it as superfluous: and when the vse of it is not wel known, it is easie to slide into superstition.

15 Holy & true fasting hath three endes. For wee vse it, either to make leane and subdue the flesh, that it should not waxe wanton, or that wee may be better disposed to prayers & holy meditations, or that it should be a testimonie of our humbling before God, when we be willing to confesse our guiltinesse before him. The first end hath not so often place in common fasting, because al men haue not like estate of body, nor like health: therefore it rather agreeth with priuate fasting. The second end is common to both, for as well the whole Church as euery one of the faithfull hath neede of such preparation to prayer. The third also is likewise common. For it shall sometime befall that God shal strike some nation with warre, or pestilence, or wth some calamitie. In such a common scourge the whole people must accuse themselues, and openly confesse their owne guiltinesse. But if the hand of the Lord do strike any priuate man, he ought to do the same, either alone, or with his own familie. That standeth chiefly in the affection of the mind. But when the minde is affected as it ought to be, it is scarcely possible, but that it will breake out into outward testifying: and then chiefly if it turne to common edifying, that altogether in openly confessing their sinne should yelde praise of righteousness to God, and euery one mutually exhort other with their example.

 publicly,

publikely, than among priuate men, howsoeuer it be common, as is alreadye saide. Therefore as touching the discipline whercof we now entreate: so oft as we must make supplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to commaunde fasting together with prayer. So when the Antiochians laide hands vpon Paul and Barnabes, that they might the better commend to God their ministry which was of so great importāce, they ioyned fasting with prayer. So both they afterward, when they made ministers ouer Churches, were wont to pray with fasting. In this kinde of fasting they had regard to none other thing, but that they might bee made fresher and more vncombred to pray. Verily this wee finde by experience, that when the bellie is full, the minde is not so lifted vp to God, that it can both with heartie and feruent affection be carried to prayer, and continue in it. So is that to be vnderstoode which Luke rehearseth of Anne, that shee serued the Lorde in fastinges and prayers. For he doeth not set the worshipping of God in fasting: but signifieth that the holy woman did after that manner exercise her selfe to continuance of prayer. Such was the fasting of Nehemias when he did with earnestly bent zeale pray to God for the deliuerance of his people. For this cause Paul saith that the faithfull do well, if they abstaine for a time from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply prayer and fasting. Where ioyning fasting to prayer in steede of a helpe, he putteth vs in minde that it is of no value but so farre as it is referred to this ende. Againe, when in the same place hee giueth a rule to married folkes, that they shoulde mutually render good will one to another, it is plaine that hee doeth not speake of daily prayers, but of such prayers as require a more earnest intenueness.

17 Againe, if either pestilence, or famine, or warre beginne to range abroad, or if any calamitie otherwise seem to hang ouer any country & people: then also it is the dutie of Pastors to exhort the Church to fasting, y they may humbly beseeche the Lord to turne away his wrath. For he giueth warning that he is prepared and in a manner armed to reuenge, when hee maketh any danger to appeare. Therefore as accused men in time past with long hanging beard, with vncombed haire, with blacke array, were wont humbly to abace them selues, to procure the mercie of the iudge: so when we are accused before the iudgement seate of God, it behoueth both for his glorie, & for common edification, and also is profitable and heakhfull for vs, that we should in piteous array craue to escape his seueritie. And that this was vsed among the people of Israel, it is easie to gather by the wordes of Iocel. For when he commandeth a trumpet to be sounded, the congregation to be gathered together, fasting to be appointed, and the rest that followe: he speaketh of things receiued in common custome. Hee had a litle before said, that examination is appointed of the wicked deedes of the people, and had declared that the day of iudgement was nowe at hande, and had summoned them beeing accused to pleade their cause: then hee crieth out that they shoulde hast to sacke cloth and ashes, to weeping and fasting: that is, that they shoulde also with outwarde testifyings throwe themselues downe before the Lorde, Sacke cloth and ashes peraduenture did more agree with those times: but there is no dout that the calling together, and weeping, and fasting & such like do likewise pertaine also to our age, so oft as the state of our things doth so require. For sith it is a holy exercise, both to humble men, and to confesse humilitie, why should we lesse vse it than the olde people did in like necessitie? We reade that not onely the people of Israel, which were informed and instructed by the worde of GOD, but also the Niniuites which had no doctrine but the preaching of Ionas, fasted in token of sorowe. What cause is there therefore why we should not doe the same? But it is an outwarde ceremonie, which was with the rest ended in Christ. Yea rather euen at this day it is, as it alway hath beene, a very good helpe to the faithfull, and a profitable admonition, to stirre vppe them selues, that they should not with to great carelesnesse & sluggishnes more and more prouoke God when they are chastised with his scourges. Therefore Christ when he excuseth his Apostles for that they fast not, doth not say that fasting is abrogate: but he appointeth it to times of calamity, and ioineth it with mourning. The time shall come (sayeth hee) when the bridegrome shall be taken away from them.

18 But that there should be no error in the name, let vs define what fasting is. For we do not here vnderstande by it only abstinence and sparing in meate and drinke, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godly ought in deede to be tempered with honest sparing & sobrietie, that so neere as is possible it may in the whole course thereof beare a certain resemblance of fasting. But beside this there is an other fasting for a time, when wee withdrawe any thing of our woted diet, either for one day or for a certain time, & do charge our selues with a straiter and seuerer abstinence in diet than ordinarie. This consisteth in three things, in time, in qualitie of meates, and in smalnes of quantitie. I meane by time, that we should vse those doings fasting, for which fasting is ordined. As for example, if a man fast for common prayer: that he come emptie vnto it. Qualitie standeth in this, that all deintinesse should be absent, & being content with common and baser meates, we should not stirre vp appetite with delicates. The rule of quantitie is in this, that we eate more sparingly and lesse than we be wont, only for necessitie, and not also for pleasure.

19 But we must alway principally beware, that no superstition creepe vpon vs, as it hath heretofore happened to the greate hurt of the Church. For it were much better that there were no vse at all fasting than that it should be diligently kept, and in the meane time be corrupted with false and hurtful opinions, whereunto the world sometime falleth, vnlesse the Pastors do with great faithfulness and wisdom prevent it. The first point therefore is, that they should alway enforce that which Ioell teacheth, that they should cut their heartes and not their garmentes: that is, that they should admonishe the people, that God doth not greatly esteeme fasting of it selfe, vnlesse there be an inward affection of the hearte, a true misliking of sinne and of himselfe, true humbling, & true sorow through the feare of God: yea that fasting is profitable for no other cause, but for that it is ioyned to these as an inferior helpe. For GOD abhorreth nothing more than when men in setting signes and an outwarde shewe in steede of innocencie of heart, do labor with false color to deceiue themselues. Therefore I haue most sharply inueyeth against this hypocritic, that the Iewes thought that they had satisfied God, when they had onely fasted, howsoeuer they did nourish vngodlines and vn-cleane thoughts in their heart. Is it (saith he) such a fasting which the Lord requireth? and so forth as followeth. Therefore the hypocriticall fasting is not only an vnprofitable and superfluous wearying, but also a great abominati-on. An other euill nere vnto this is chiefly to be taken heede of, that it be not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worshipping God. For sith it is a thing of it selfe indifferent, & hath no value but by reason of those endes which it ought to haue respect vnto, it is a most hurtfull superstition, to confounde it with the workes commanded of God and necessary of them-selues without other respect. Such was in olde time the dotage of the Mani-chees: whome when Augustine confuteth, he doth plainly enough teache, that fasting is to be iudged by no other endes than those which I haue spoken of, and is no otherwise allowed of G O D, vnlesse it be referred to the same. The thirde errour is in deede not so vngodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keeping of it more precisely and rigorously as it were one of the chiefe duties, and so to aduance it with immeasurable prayes, that men shoulde thinke they haue done some excellent thing when they haue fasted. In which behalfe I dare not altogether excuse the olde fathers, but that they haue sowed some seedes of superstition, and giuen occasion to the tyrannie which hath risen since. There are founde in deede sometimes in them- founde and wise sentences, of fasting, but afterward we now and then mee- with immeasurable praises of fasting which aduance it among the chiefe vertues.

20 And at that time the superstitious obseruing of lent was ech where gro-wen in vse: because both the common people thought that they did therein some notable seruice to God, and the Pastors did commende it for a holy following of Christ: whereas it is plaine, that Christ did not fast to prescribe an example to other, but that in so beginning the preaching of the Gospell, he might in very deede proue that it was not a doctrine of men, but descended from heauen. And it is merueilous, that so grosse an errour, which is confuted with so many and so euident reasons, could creepe into men of so sharpe iudgement. For Christ did not fast oft (which hee must needes haue done if he would haue set forth a lawe of yearely fasting) but only once when he prepared himselfe to the publishing of the Gospell. And he fasted not after the manner of men, as it was mee- that hee shoulde haue done if hee would haue prouoked men to followe him: but rather he sheweth an example, whereby he may rather drawe men to wonder at him than stirre them vp to followe him. Finally there is none other cause of this fasting, than of that which Moses fasted (when hee receiued the lawe at the hande of the Lorde. For sith that miracle was shewed in Moses to stablish the authoritie of the Lawe, it ought not to haue bene omitted in Christ, least the Gospell should seeme to giue place to the lawe. But since that time it neuer came in any mans minde vnder colour of following of Moses to require such a forme offasting in the people of Israel. Neither did any of the holy Prophets and fathers follow it, when yet they had minde and zeale enough to godly exercises. For, that which is sayde of Helias, that he passed forty dayes without meat:

meate and drinke, tended to no other ende but that the people should know that he was stirred vp to be a restorer of the lawe from which almost al Israel had departed. Therefore it was a mere wrongful zeale and ful of superstition, y they did set foorth fasting with the title & color of following of Christ. Howbeit in the manner of fasting there was then great diuersitie, as Cassiodorus rehearseth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his histo ric. For the Romanes (saith he) had but three weeks, but in these three there was a cōtinual fasting, except on the Sunday and Saturday. The Slaunions and Grecians had sixe weekes: other had seuen: but their fasting was by deuided times. And they disagreed no lesse in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: some added herbes: some did not forbear fish and fowles: some had no difference in meates. Of this diuersitie Augustine also maketh mention in the latter Epistle to Ianuarie.

21 Then followed worse times, and to the preposterous zeale of the people was added both ignorance and rudenesse of the Bishops, and a lust to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked lawes, which straine consciences with pernicious bonds. The eating of fleshe was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of sacrilege one vpon an other, til they came to the bottome of all errors. And that no peruersenesse should be omitted, they began with a most sonde pretence of abstinence to mocke with God. For in the most exquisite deintines of fare is sought the prayse of fasting: no delicacies doe then suffice, there is neuer greater plentie, or diuersitie or sweetnesse of meates. In such and so gorgious preparation they thinke that they serue God rightly. I speake not howe they neuer more sowly glutte themselues, than when they would be counted most holy men. Briefely, they count it the greatest worshipping of god to absteyne from fleshe, and (these excepted) to shewe full of al kinde of deinties. On the other side they thinke this the extremest vngodlinesse, & such as scarcely may be recompensed with death, if a man tast neuer so little a peece of bacon or vnfaucry flesh with browne breade. Hierome telleth, that Ad Nepotiā. euen in his time were some y with such follies did mock with God: which because they would not eate oyle, caused most deintie meats from euery place to be brought them: yea to oppresse nature with violence, they abstained from drinking of water, but caused sweete and costly suppings to be made for them, which they did not drinke out of a cup, but out of a shell. Which faulte was then in a fewe, at this day it is a common fault among all rich mē that they fast to no other ende but that they may banket more sumptuously and deintily. But I will not wast many wordes in a matter not doutfull. Only this I say, that both in fasting and in al other partes of discipline, the papistes so haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing wel framed and orderly, whereby they may haue any occasion to be proud, as though there were any thing remaining among them worthy of praise.

22 There followeth another parte of discipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the cleargie. That is contained in the canons which the olde Bishops haue made ouer themselues and their order. As these be: y no clearke should giue himselfe to hunting, to dicing, nor to banketting: that none

shoulde occupie vsurie, or marchandise: that none should be present at wanton dauncings: and such other ordinances. There were also added penalties wherby the authoritie of the canons was stablished, that none should breake them vnpunished. For this ende to euery Bishop was committed the gouernment of his owne cleargie, that they should rule their clerkes according to the canons, and holde them in their ducie. For this ende were ordeyned yearly ouerseeinges and Synodes, that if any were negligent in his dutie, he shoulde be admonished: if any had offended, he shoulde be punished according to the measure of his offence. The Bishops also themselues had yere-ly their prouinciall Synodes, and in the olde time yearly two Synodes, by which they were iudged if they had done any thing beside their ducie. For if any Bishop were too harde or violent against his cleargie, they might appeale to those Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The feuerest punishment was that he which had offended should bee remooued from his office, & for a time be deprivied of the communion. And because y^e same was a continual order, they neuer vsed to dismiss any Synode, but that they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Council, pertained to the Emperour onely, as al y^e old summonings of Councils do testifie. So long as this feueritie florished, y^e clerks did require in word no more of y^e people, than themselues did perform in example & deed. Yea they were much more rigorous to themselues than to the people. And verily so it is meete, that the people should be ruled with a gentler and looser discipline, as I may so tearme it: but the clerkes should vse sharper iudgements among themselues, and should lesse beare with themselues, than with other men. How all this is growen out of vse, it is no neede to rehearse, whē at this day nothing can be imagined more vnbridled and dissolute than the clergie, and they are broken foorth to so great licentiousnes, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie should not seeme to be vterly buried among them, I graunt indeede that they doe with certaine shadowes deceiue the eies of the simple: but those are such as come no neerer to the auncient manners, than the counterfaiting of an ape approacheth to y^e which men do by reason and aduise. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth how fowly the Persians had swarued from y^e ordinances of their Elders, and were fallē from the rigorous kind of life, to softnes & daintines, y^e yet they couered this shame, saying that they diligently kept y^e ancient vsages. For when in the time of Cyrus sobrietie and temperance so far flourished that men needed not to weepe, yea and it was accounted a shame: with posteritie this continued a religious obseruation, that no man should drawe snotte out at his nosethrilles, but it was lawful to sucke it vp, and secde with in euen till they were rotten the stinking humors which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the olde order it is vnlawfull to bring winepots to the borde: but to swill in wine that they neede to be caried away dronken is tollerable. It was ordeined to eat but once in a day: this these good successors haue not abrogate, but they gaue leaue to continue their surfettings frō mid day to mid night. The custome was that men should make an end of their dayes journey fasting. But it was at libertie and vsedly the custome, for auoiding of wearinesse, to shorten their iourney to two houres. Whensoever the Papistes shall pretende their bastarde rules, to shewe themselues to bee like to the holy fathers: this example shall sufficiently reprocue their sonde counterfeiting, that no paynter can more liuely expresse it.

23 In one thing they bee too rigorous and vntreatable, that they giue not leaue to Priestes to marrie. But howe great libertie there is among them to vse whoredome vnpunished, is not needfull to bee spoken: and bearing them bolde vpon their stinking vnmarried life, they haue hardened themselues to all wicked doinges: But this forbidding doeth plainly shewe, howe pestilent all their traditions are, forasmuch as it hath not onely spoiled the Church of good and fitte Pastors, but also hath brought in a horrible sincke of mischceues, and throwen many soules into the gulfe of desperation. Truly whereas marriage hath bene forbidden to Priestes, that same hath bene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely against the worde of God, but also against all equitie. First to forbidde that which the Lorde had left at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againc, that GOD hath expressely prouided by his worde that this libertie shoulde not be broken, is so euident that it needeth no long demonstration. I speake not how Paul in many places willeth a Bishoppe to bee the hus bande of one wife. But what coulde bee more vehemently spoken, than where hee pronounceth by the holy Ghost, that there shal be in the last times wicked men that shal forbidde marriage: and hee calleth them not onely deceiuers, but diuelles? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holy Oracle of y^e holy Ghost, wherewith hee willed to arme the Church aforehande against daungers, that the forbidding of marriage is the doctrine of Diuels. But they thinke y^e they haue gayly escaped when they wrest this sentence to Montanus, the Tatrans, Encratites, and other olde heretikes. They onely (say they) condemned marriage: but wee doe not condemne it, but debarre the cleargie from it, for whome wee thinke it not to bee conuenient. As though albeit this prophecie was first fulfilled in those aforefaide men, it might not also bee applied to these: or as though this childishe sonde subtletie were worth the hearing, that they say that they forbidde it not, because they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a tyraunt woulde affirme that it is not an vniust lawe, with vniustice whercof one parte alone of the Citie is oppressed.

24 They obiect, that the Priestes doeth by some marke differ from the people. As though the Lorde did not also foresee this, with what ornamentals Priestes ought to excell. So they accuse the Apostle of troubling the order and confounding the comelinesse of the Church, which when hee portrayed out the absolute forme of a good Bishoppe durst set marriage among the other gifts which he required in him. I know how they expound this, namely that none is to bee choosen that hath had a second wife. And I grant that this is not a new exposition: but that it is a false exposition, appeareth by the text it self, because he by & by after setteth out of what qualities the wiuers of Bishops and Deacons ought to be. Paul reckeneth mariage among y^e vertues of a Bishop: these men teach that it is an intollerable fault in the order of y^e cleargie. And, on Gods name, not contented with this generall dispraise they call it in their canons vncleannesse and defiling of the flesh. Let euerie man thinke with himselfe out of what workeshoppe these things be come: Christ vouchsaueh so to honour marriage that he willeth it to bee an image of his holy conioyning with the Church. What coulede be spoken more honourably to set out the dignitie of Mariage? With what face therefore shall that be called vncleane or defiled wherein shineth a likenesse of the spirituall grace of Christ?

25 But nowe when their forbidding so euidently fighteth with the word of God, yet they finde in the scriptures wherewith to defende it. The Leuiticall Priestes were bound to lie a sunder from their wiues, so oft as it came to their turnes to minister, that they might handle the holy things pure & vndefiled. Therefore it were verie vncomely, that our holy things, sith they be both much more noble and dayly, should be handled of married men. As though there were all one person of the minister of the Gospel, as was of the Leuiticall Priesthood. For they, as figures, represented Christ, which being y mediator of God & men should with most absolute purenes reconcile y Father vnto vs. But when sinners could not in euery behalfe expresse the figure of his holinesse, yet that they might with certaine grosse draughtes yelde a shadowe of him, they were commaunded to purifie themselues beyonde the manner of men, when they came to the Sanctuarie: namely because they then properly figured Christ, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the tabernacle the image of the heauenly iudgement seate. For asmuch as the Pastors of the Church do not beare this person at this day, therefore they are vainely compared with them. Wherefore the Apostle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that marriage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers and adulterers abideth the iudgement of God. And the Apostles themselues did with their owne example approue that marriage is not vnmeete for the holinesse of any office be it neuer so excellent. For Paul witnesseth that they did not onely keepe wiues, but also caried them about with them.

26 Againe it was a meruellous shamelesnesse that they durst set out this comelines of chastitie for a necessarie thing, to the great reproch of the old Church: which when it abounded with singular learning of God, yet excelled more in holinesse. For if they passe not vppon the Apostles, (as they are wont sometime stoutely to despise them) what I beseech you will they doe to all the olde fathers, whome it is certayne to haue not onely suffered but also allowed marriage in the order of Bishoppes? They forsooth did nourishe a filthy profaning of holy things, forasmuch as so the mysteries of the Lord were not rightly reuerenced among them. It was moued indeed in the Nycene Synode to haue vnmarried life commaunded: as there alway want not some superstitious men, which doe euer inuente some new thing, to bring themselues in admiration. But what was decreed? The sentence of Paphnutius was assented to, which pronounced that a mans lying with his owne wife is chastitie. Therefore marriage remained holie among them: neither did it turne them to any shame nor was thought to spot the ministerie.

Li. 2. cap. 14.

27 Then followed times, in which too superstitious obseruation of single gle life grew in force. Hereupon came those often and vnmeasurable aduanced prayſes of virginitic, ſo y^e ſcarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to be compared with it. And although mariage was not condemned for vnclane, yet the dignitie thereof was ſo diminished, and the holi- neſſe of it obſcured, that hee ſeemed not to aſpire with a courage ſtrong enough to perfection, that did not refraine himſelfe from it. Hereupon came thoſe canons whereby it was firſt forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Prieſthoode ſhould not contract mariage: then, that none ſhould be taken into that order but vnmarried men, or ſuch as did for- ſake mariage together with their wiues. Theſe things, becauſe they ſeemed to procure reuerence to Prieſthoode, were (I graunt) euen from anti- quitie receiued with great wel liking. But if the aduerſaries obiect antiqui- tie againſt me, firſt I aunſwere that this libertie remained both vnder the A- poſtles and in certaine ages after them, that Biſhops might be married: that the Apoſtles themſelues, and other Paſtors of great authoritie which ſucce- ded in their places, vſed the ſame without ſticking at it. The example of that ancients Church ought worthily to be of greater weight with vs, than that we ſhould thinke that to be either vnlawefull or vncomely for vs which was then with prayſe receiued and vſed. Secondly I ſay that that age which for immeaſurable affection to virginitic began to be partiall againſt mariage, did not ſo lay vpon Prieſtes the lawe of vnmarried life, as though it were a thing neceſſarie of it ſelfe, but becauſe they preferred vnmarried men aboue the mar- ried. Finally I anſwere that they did not ſo require it that they did with force and neceſſity conſtraine them to continence which were not fit to keepe it. For when they puniſhed whoredomes with moſt ſeuere lawes, of them that contracted mariage they decreed no more but that they ſhould giue ouer the execution of their office.

28 Therefore whenſoever the defenders of this newe tyranny ſhall ſeek the pretence of antiquitie to defende their vnmarried life: ſo oft we ſhall an- ſwere them with requiring them, that they reſtore the old chaſtneſſe in their Prieſtes: that they remoue adulterers and whoremongers: that they ſuffer not thoſe in whom they ſuffer not honeſt and chaſt uſe of mariage bed, to run vnpuniſhed into all kinde of luſt: that they call againe the diſcontinued diſ- cipline, whereby all wantonneſſes may be reſtrained: that they deliuer the Church from this ſo wicked filthinneſſe, wherewith it hath bene long deſor- med. When they haue graunted this, then they muſt againe be put in mind that they boaſt not that thing for neceſſarie, which being of it ſelfe at liber- tie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I ſay not this for that I thinke that in any condition place is to be giuen to thoſe canons which lay the bond of vnmarried life vpon the order of Prieſtes: but that the wiſer ſorte may vnderſtande with what face our enemies doe ſclaunder holy mariage in Prieſts by obiecting the name of antiquitie. As touching the fathers, whoſe wri- tings remaine, euen they when they ſpeake of their owne iudgement, ex- cept Hierome, did not with ſo great ſpitefulneſſe deſace the honeſtie of ma- riage. We ſhalbe content with one commendation of Chryſoſtom: becauſe

But sith some things are by gods goodnesse giuen vs, and other some things by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paul commaundeth) haue respect to the measure of grace giuen vnto him. Therefore I doe here meane nothing else, but that vowes must bee tempered to that measure which the Lorde prescribeth there in his giuing: least if thou attempt further than hee permitteth, thou throw thy selfe downe headlong with taking too much vpon thee. As for example. When those murtherers, of whome mention is made in Luke, vowed that they woulde taste of no meat till Paul were slain: although the deuise had not bene wicked, yet the rashnesse it selfe was not to be suffered, that they made the life and death of a man subiect to their power. So Iephthe suffered punishment for his follie, when with headlong heate he conceiued an vnaduised vowe. In which kinde vnmarried life hath the cheefe place of mad boldnesse. For sacrificing Priestes, monkes, and Nonnes, forgetting their owne weakenesse, thinke themselues able to keepe vnmarried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they shall haue chastitie throughout all their life, to the very ende whereof they vowe it? They heare the worde of God concerning the vniuersall state of men, It is not good for man to be alone. They vnderstande, and woulde to God y they did not feele, that sinne remaining in vs is not without most sharp pricks. With what confidence dare they shake of that generall calling for all their life long: whereas the gift of continence is oftner graunted for a certaine time as opportunitie requireth? In such stubbornesse let them not looke for God to bee their helper: but let them rather remember that which is saide. Thou shalt not tempt the Lorde thy God. And this is to tempt God, to endeuour against the nature put in vs by him, and to despise his present gifts as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely doe: but also marriage, it selfe, which God thought it not against his maiestie to institute, which hee hath pronounced honourable in all men, which Christ our Lorde hath sanctified with his presence, which hee vouchsafed to honour with his first miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduaunce with maruellous commendations a certaine vnmarried life of what sort soeuer it bee. As though they themselues did not shewe a cleare example in their life, that vnmarried state is one thing, and virginie an other: which their life yet they most shamelesly call Angelike, doing herein verily too great iniurie to the Angels of God, to whom they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and somewhat else much worse and filthier. And truly here need no arguments when they are openly confuted by the thing it selfe. For wee plainly see, with howe horrible paines the Lorde doeth commonly take vengeance of such arrogance, and contempt of his giftes by too much trust in themselues. I spare for shame to speake of the more secrete faultes, of which euen this that is already perceiued is too much. It is out of controuersie that we ought to vowe nothing, that may hinder vs from seruing of our vocation. As if a householder shoulde vowe, that he will leaue his wife and his children and take other charges in hand: or if hee that is fit to beare office, when hee is chosen doe vowe that he will be a priuate man. But what is meant by this, that our libertie shoulde not be despised, hath some difficultie if it bee not declared. Therefore thus in fewe words I expounde it. Sith God hath made vs Lords of all things, and hath so made them subiect vnto vs that we should vse them all for our commoditie: there is no cause why we should hope that it shalbe an acceptable worke to God if we yelde our selues into bondage to the outward things which ought to be a helpe vnto vs. I say this for this purpose, because many do hereby seeke praise of humilitie, if they snare themselves with many obseruations, from which God not without cause willed vs to be free & discharged. Therefore if we wil escape this danger, let vs alway remember that wee ought not to departe from that order which the Lorde hath ordeined in the Christian Church.

4 Now I come to that which I did set in the thirde place: y it is much material with what minde thou makest a vowe, if thou wilt haue it allowed of God. For sith the Lorde regardeth the heart, not the outwarde shewe, it commeth to passe that the selfe same thing, by changing the purpose of the mind, doth sometime please him and is acceptable vnto him, and sometime hiely displeaseth him. If thou so vowe the abstaining from wine, as though there were any holinesse in it, thou art superstitious: if thou haue respect to any other ende which is not euil, no man can disallowe it. But in my iudgement there be foure endes, to which our voves shalbee rightly directed: of which for teachings sake I referre two to the time past, and the other two to the time to come. To the time past belong those voves, whereby wee do either testifie our thankfulness to God for benefites receiued: or to craue y turning away of his wrath, wee our selues do punish our selues for the offences that wee haue committed. Let vs call the first sort, if you will, the exercises of thankesgiuing, the other of repentance. Of the first kinde we haue an example in the tithes which Iacob vowed, if the Lorde did bring him home safe out of banishment into his country. Againe in the olde Sacrifices of the peace offerings, which godly kinges and captaines, when they tooke in hande righteous warre, did vowe that they would pay if they had obtained the victorie, or at least when they were oppressed with any great distresse, if the Lorde had deliuered them. So are all those places in the Psalmes to bee vnderstoode which speake of voves. Such voves may at this day also bee in vse among vs, so oft as the Lord hath deliuered vs either out of any calamitie, or from a hard sicknesse, or from any other danger. For it is then not against the dutie of a godly man, to consecrate to God his vowed oblation, as a solemne token of his reknowledging, least he should sceme vnthankful towarde his goodnesse. Of what sort the seconde kinde is, it shall suffice to shewe with one onely familiar example. If any by the vice of gluttonie bee fallen into any offence, nothing withstandeth but that to chastice his intemperance hee may for a time forsake all deintie meates, and may do the same with a vowe adioyned, that hee may binde himselfe with the straiter bonde. Yet I doe not so make a perpetuall lawe to them that haue likewise offended: but I shewe what is lawfull for them to doe, which shall thinke such a vowe profitable for themselves. I doe therefore so make such a vowe lawfull, that in the meane time I leaue it at libertie.

5 The voves that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we haue alreadie said) do tende to this end that we may be made the warer: & partly

Gen. 28. 20.
Psal. 22. 27.
& 56. 13. &
116. 14. 18.

that as it were by certaine spurres we may be pricked forward to our dutie. Some man seeth himselfe to be so inclined to some certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwise is not euill hee cannot temper himselfe from falling forthwith into an euill: hee shall doe nothing inconueniently if he doe for a time by vowe cut off from himselfe the vse of that thing. As if a man knowe that this or that apparell of bodie is perilous vnto him, and yet entised with desire he earnestly couet it, what can he do better, than if in putting a bridle vpon himselfe, that is in charging himself with necessitie of absteyning from it, he deliuer himselfe from all douting? Likewise if a man bee forgetfull or slowe to necessarie duties of godlinesse, why may he not by taking a vowe vpon him both awake his memorie & shake off his slothfulnes? In both I graunt that there is a forme of childish schooling: but euen in this that they are helpes of weakenesse, they are not without profit vsed of the rawe & vnperfect. Therefore we shal say that those vowes are lawfull which haue respect to one of these ends, specially in outward things, if they both be vpholden with the allowance of God, and do agree with our vocation, & be measured by the power of grace giuen vs of God.

6 Now also it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes. There is one common vowe of all the faithfull, which being made in baptisme wee do confirme and as it were stablish by Catechisme and receiuing of the Supper. For the Sacramentes are as charters, by which the Lord deliuereth to vs his mercie and thereby euerlasting life, and we againe on our behalves do promise him obedience. But this is the forme or verily the summe of the vowe, that forsaking Satan we yelde our selues into seruice to God, to obey his holy commaundements, and not to follow the peruerse desires of our flesh. It ought not to be doubted but that this vowe, sith it hath testimonie of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to saluation. And it maketh not to the contrary, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the law which God requireth of vs. For sith this forme of couenancing is comprised within the couenant of grace, vnder which is contained both forgiuenes of sins and the Spirit of sanctification: the promise which we there make is ioyned both with beseeching of pardon and with crauing of helpe. In iudging of particular vowes, it is necessarie to keepe in minde the three former rules, whereby wee may safely weye of what sort euery vowe is. Neither yet thinke that I so commende the verie same vowes which I affirme to bee holy, that I woulde haue them to be daily. For though I dare teache no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my counsel, he shall take vpon him none but sober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake forth into making of many vowes, all religiousnes will with verie continuance growe out of estimation with thee, and thou shalt come to a bending readinesse to fall into superstition. If thou bind thy selfe with a perpetuall vowe, either for great paine and tediousnesse thou shalt vndo it, or beeing wearied with long continuance thou shalt at one time or other, be bolde to breake it.

7 Now also it is plaine with how great superstition in this behalfe the world hath in certain ages past bin possessed. One man vowed y hee woulde abstaine

abstaine from wine: as though abstaining from wine were of it selfe a worship acceptable to God. An other bound himself to fasting, an other to abstaining from flesh for certaine dayes, in which he had with vaine opinion fained to be a singular holines about the rest. And some things also were vowed much more childish, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wisdom, to take vpon them vowed pilgrimages to holier places, and sometime either to go all their journey on foote, or with their body halfe naked, that by their werines the more merite might be gotten. These & such other, with incredible zeale whereof the world hath a while swelled, if they be examined by those rules, which we haue about set, shalbe founde not only vaine & trifling, but ful of manifest vngodlines. For howsoeuer the flesh iudge, God abhorreth nothing more than fained worshippings. There are beside this those pernicious & damned opinions, y^e hypocrits when they haue such trifles think that they haue gotten no small righteousnes: they repose the summe of godlinesse in outwarde obseruations: they despise all other that are lesse carefull of such thinges.

8 To reckon vp all the particular formes, is nothing to purpose. But forasmuch as the monkish vowes are hadde in greater reuerence, because they seeme allowed by the common iudgement of the church: of those it is good to speake briefly. First least any should by prescription of long time defende monkery, such as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in monasteries a far other order of liuing. Such as were disposed to exercise themselves to greatest seuerity and patience, went thither. For what maner of discipline they say that the Lacedemonians had vnder the lawes of Lycurgus, such was at that time among the monks, yea and much more rigorous. They slept vpon the ground: their drinke was water: their meate was bread, herbes and rotes: their chiefe deinties were in oyle and eiches. They abstained from all delicate diet and trimming of body. These things might seeme about trueth, if they were not written by witnesses that saw & proued them, as Gregory Nazianzen, Basile, and Chrysostome. But with such introductions they prepared themselves to great offices. For, that y^e colleges of monks were then as it were the seedplots of the order of ministers of the Church, both these whom we haue now named are a prooffe plaine enough, (for they were all brought vp in monasteries and from thence called to the office of bishops) and also many other singular and excellent men in their time. And Augustine sheweth that this was also vsed in his time, that monasteries yeelded clerkes to the Church. For hee speaketh thus to the monkes of the Isle of Caprarea: But you brethren we exhort in the Lord, that ye kepe your purpose & continue to the end: and if at any time our mother the Church shall require your traual, do ye neither with greedy pride take it vp^o you, nor with flattering slothfulnesse refuse it: but with a meeke heart obey to God. Neither preferre ye your own quiet leasure about the necessities of the Church: to whome if no good men would haue ministered in her trauaile, you should not haue founde howe you should haue bene borne. He speaketh there of the ministerie, by which the faithfull are spiritually borne againe. Also to Aurelius: There is both occasion of falling giuen to themselves, and most haynous wrong done to the order of the Clergy, if forsakers of monasteries be chosen to the soldiery of the Clergy: when euen of those y^e remain in the monastery, we vse to take into the Clergy none but the most approoued and best. Vnlesse perhaps as the cōmon people say, he is an euill piper but a good fidler : so it shall also be iestingly sayd of vs, he is an euill monke, but a good Clerke. It is too much to be lamented, if we list vp monks into such a ruinous pride, and thinke Clerkes worthy of so great reproche, whereas sometime euen a good monke maketh not a good Clerke, if he haue sufficient cōrinence, and yet want necessarie learning. By these places it appeareth, y^e godly men were wont with the discipline of monkes to prepare theselues to the gouernment of the Church, that they might the fitter and better instructed take so great an office vpon them. Not that they all attained to this end, or yet tended toward it, when for y^e most part they were vnlearned men: but such were chosen out as were meete for it.

9 But chiefly in two places he painteth out vnto vs the forme of the olde monkerie. In the booke Of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he setteth the holinesse of that profession against the sclaunders of the Manichees : & in an other booke which he entituled Of the work of monkes, where he inuiceth against certaine degendred monkes, which beganne to corrupt that order. I will here so gather a summe of those things which he sayeth, that so neere as I may I will vse his owne wordes. Despising (sayth he) the entisements of this world, gathered into one most chaste and holy life, they spende their time together, liuing in prayers, readings, and disputations, not swelling with pride, not troublesome with stubbornnesse, not wanne with enuiousnesse. None possesseth any thing of his owne, none is burdenous to any man. They get by working with their handes those things wherewith both their body may be fedde, and their minde may not be hindered from God. Their woike they deliuer to them whome they call Deanes. Those Deanes despising all thinges with great carefulnesse make account thereof to one whom they call Father. These fathers not onely most holy in maners, but also most excellent in godly doctrine, hie in all thinges, do with no pride prouide for them whom they call children, with great authoritie of them in cōmanding, and great willingnes of the other in obeying: They come together at the very last time of the day, euery one from his dwelling, while they be yet fasting, to heare that Father: and there meete together to euery one of these fathers at y^e least three thousand men, (he speaketh chiefly of Ægypt, and of the east) then they refresh their body, so much as suffiseth for life and healthfulnesse, euery man restraining his desire, not to take largely euen of those things that they haue present very spare & vile. So they do not only abstaine from flesh and wine, so much that they may be able to tame their lusts, but from such thinges which doe so much more greedily prouoke appetite of the belly and throte, how much they seeme to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour whereof the filthy desire of exquisite meates, which is not in fleshe, is wont to be fondly and fowly defended. Whatsoeuer remaineth aboue necessarie foode (as there remaineth oftentimes much of the workes of their handes and pinching of their fare) is with greater care distributed to the poore, than it was gotten by them that distribute it. For they doe in no wise trauaile that they may haue abundance of these thinges, but they by all by all meanes endeouour that that which they haue abounding may not remaine with them. Afterward when he hath rehearsed the hardnes, whereof hee himselſe had ſcene examples both at Millaine and elſe where : among theſe things (ſaith hee) no man is enforced to hard things which hee cannot beare: no man is charged with that which he refuseth : neither is hee therefore condemned of the reſt, becauſe hee confeſſeth himſelſe to want ſtrength in following of them: for they remember howe much charitie is commended: they remember that all things are cleane to the cleane . Therefore all their diligence watcheth , not to the reſuſing of kindes of meate as vncleane , but to tame luſt , and to retaine the loue of brethren. They remember, meate for the bellic, and the bellie for meates. &c. Yet many ſtrong do abſtaine for the weakes ſakes. Many of them haue no neede to do thus: but becauſe it pleaſeth them to ſuſtaine themſelues with baſer diet and nothing ſumptuous . Therefore they themſelues, which being in health do forbear, if conſideration of their health compell, when they are ſicke do take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, & yet they thinke not themſelues deſiled with it: for they moſt gently cauſe it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that cannot get the health of their bodie without it: and ſome which fooliſhly reſuſe it, they do brotherly admoniſh that they be not with vaine ſuperſtition ſooner made weaker than holier. So they diligently exerciſe godlines: but they knowe that the exerciſing of the body pertaineth but to a ſhort time. Charitie is chiefly kept: to charitie the diet, to charitie the ſpeech, to charitie the apparel, to charitie y^e countenance is fitted. They meet and conſpire into one charitie. To offend it is accounted as haynous as to offende God. If any reſiſt charitie, he is caſt out and ſhunned. If any offende charitie, he is not ſuffred to abide one day. For aſmuch as in theſe wordes, as in a painted table, that holy man ſeemeth to haue ſet out what maner of life monkerie was in olde time , although they were ſomewhat long, yet I was content to enterlace them here: becauſe I ſaw that I ſhould haue bene ſomewhat longer if I had gathered the ſame things out of diuerſe, how much ſoeuer I ſtudied for brieſeneſſe.

10 But my pürpoſe here is not to go through this whole matter, but on-ly by the way to point out, not only what maner of monkes the old Church had, but what maner of thing the profeſſion of monkes was at that time: ſo as the ſound witted readers may iudge by the compariſon, what face they haue which alleage antiquitie to maintaine the preſent monkerie. Auguſtine when he depainteth vnto vs a holy & true monkerie, woulde haue to be abſent all rigorous exacting of thoſe things which by the word of the Lord are left vs at libertie. But there is nothing that is at this day more ſeuereſly requi- red. For they count it a miſchiefe that can neuer be purged, if any do neuer ſo litle ſwarue from the preſcribed rule in colour or faſhion of garment, in kind of meat, or in other trifling & cold ceremonies. Auguſtine ſtoutly main- taineth, y^e it is not lawful for monks to liue idle vpon other mens. He denieth y^e there was euer in his time any ſuch example of a wel ordered monaſterie. Our men ſet the chiefe part of their holineſſe in idleneſſe. For if you take idlenes from them, where ſhalbe y^e contemplatiue life whereby they boaſt y^e they excel al other men, & approach nere vnto Angels? Finally, Auguſtine requireth such a monkerie, as should be nothing but an exercise & help to the duties of godlines which are commended to al Christians. What when he maketh charitie the chiefe, yea & almost only rule therof, do we thinke y he praiseth a conspiring, wherby a fewe men being bound together, are seuered from y whole bodie of the church? But rather he willeth them w their example to giue light to other to keepe the vnitie of y church. In both these points there is so much difference of the monkery at this present, that a man can scarcely find any thing more vnlike, I wil not say contrary. For our monkes not contented with that godlines, to the studie of which alone Christ commandeth them y are his continually to apply, doe imagine I wote not what new godlines, by meditation wherof they may be perfecter than other.

11 If they denie this, I would know of them why they vouchsaue to giue to their owne order alone the title of perfection, and take away the same fro all the callings of God. Neither am I ignorant of that sophistical solution, y it is not therefore so called because it doth containe perfection in it, but because it is the best of all other to attaine perfection. When they are disposed to boast themselues before the people, when to snare vnskillfull and vnware yong men, when to maintaine their priuileges, when to aduance their owne dignitie to the reproch of other, then they boast that they are in the state of perfection. When they are so nye driuen that they cannot defende this vaine arrogancie, then they flee to this starting hole, that they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the same state wherein they aspire vnto it aboue other. In the meane time that admiration among y people remaineth, as though the only monkish life were angelike, perfect, and clesed from all fault. By this pretence they make most gainful markets, but that same moderation lieth buried in a few bookes. Who doth not see y this is an intollerable mockerie? But let vs so reason with them, as though they gaue no more to their professio than to cal it a state of attaining perfection. Verily in giuing it this name, they do as by a speciall mark make it differing from other kinds of life. And who can abide this, that so great honor should be giuen away to an ordinance that is no where by any one syllable allowed: and that by the same all other callings of God, which are by his owne holy mouth not onely commaunded, but also commended with notable titles of praise, are by the same accounted vnworthie? And how great wrong (I beseech you) is done to God, when I wote not what new found thing is preferred aboue all the kinde of life ordained by himselfe, and praised by his owne testimonie?

12 But go to, let them say that it is a slander which I haue before saide, that they are not contented with the rule preferibed of God. Yet though I holde my peace, they themselues do more than enough accuse themselues. For they openly teach, that they take vpon them more burden than Christ laid vpon his: because forsooth they promise to keepe the counsels of y gospel concerning louing their enemies, not coueting of reuenge, not swearing, &c. To which things Christians are not generally bounde. Herein what antiquirie wil they shewe foth against vs? This neuer came in any of the olde fathers mindes. They all criue out with one voice that there was no one litle worde at al vttered of Christ, which ought not necessarily to be obeyed. And with-without any doubting they do echwhere teach, that these very same thinges by name were commandements, which these good expositors triflingly say, that Christ did but counsell. But forasmuch as we haue before taught y this is a most pestilent errour, lette it suffice here to haue briefly noted that the monkery which is at this day, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthily to abhor: which is, that there should be imagined some perfecter rule of life, than this common rule which is giuen of God to the whole Church. Whatsoever is builded vpon this foundation, can not be but abhominable.

13 But they bring an other prooffe of their perfection, which they thinke to be most strong for them. For the Lorde sayde to the yong man that asked him of the perfection of righteousnes, If thou wilt be perfect, sell al that thou hast and giue it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I do not yet dispute: but graunt them that for this present. Therefore they boast that they be made perfect by forsaking all theirs. If the summe of perfection stande in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth, that he which hath distributed al his goods to the poore, vnlesse he haue charitie, is nothing? What maner of perfection is this, which if charity be absent, is brought with man to nothing? Here they must needs answer, that this is the chiefest in deede, but not the only worke of perfection. But here also Paul crieth against them, which sticke not to make charitie the bonde of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it be certaine that betweene the master and the disciple is no disagreement, and the one of them clearely denieth the perfection of man to consist in this that he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see howe that saying of Christ is to be taken, if thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast. Nowe, it shalbe no darke sence, if we wey (which we ought alway to marke in all the preachinges of Christ) to whom these wordes be directed. A yong man asketh, by what workes hee shall enter into euerlasting life. Christ, because hee was asked of workes, sendeth him to the lawe, and rightfully: for it is the way of eternall life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bring saluation vnto vs but by our owne peruersenesse. By this answer Christ declared, that he teacheth no other rule to frame life by, than the same that had in olde time bin taught in the lawe of the Lord. So did he both giue witnesse to the law of God, that it was the doctrine of perfecte righteousnesse: and therewithall did meete with sclanders, that hee shoulde not seeme by any newe rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the lawe. The young man being in deede not of an euill minde, but swelling with vaine confidence, answered that he had from his childehoode kept all the commaundementes of the lawe. It is most certaine that hee was an infinite space distant from that to which hee boasteth that he had attained. And if his boasting had bene true, he had wanted nothing to the hiest perfection. For wee haue before shewed, that the lawe containeth in it selfe perfect righteousnesse: and the same appeareth hereby that the keeping of it is called the way of eternall saluation. That he might be taught to knowe howe litle he had profited in that righteousnesse, which he had too boldly answered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake out a familiar fault of his. When he aboundeth in riches, he had his heart fastened vpon them. Therefore because he felt not this secret wound, Christ launced him. Go (sayth he) sell all that thou hast. If he had beene so good a keeper of the lawe as he thought he was, he would not haue gone away sorrowfull when he heard this worde. For who so loueth God with al his heart, whatsoeuer disagreeeth with the loue of him, he not onely taketh it for dong, but abhorreth as bringing destruction. Therefore whereas Christ commaundeth the couetous riche man to leaue all that he hath, it is all one, as if hee should commaunde the ambitious man to forsake all honours, the voluptuous man all delites, and the vnchast man all the instrumentes of lust. So consciences that are touched with no feeling of generall admonition, must be called backe to the particular feeling of their owne euill. Therefore they do in vaine drawe this speciall case to generall exposition, as though Christ did set the perfection of a man in forsaking of goods: whereas he meant nothing else by this saying, than to driue the yong man that stood too much in his owne conceite, to feele his owne sore, that he might vnderstand that he was yet a great way distant from perfect obedience of the lawe, which otherwise he did falsely take vpon him. I grant that this place hath bin euill vnderstanded of some of the fathers, and that thereupon grew this coueting of wilfull pouerty, whereby they only were thought to be blessed, which forsaking all earthly thinges, did dedicate themselues naked to Christ. But I trust that all the good & not contentious men will be satisfied with this my exposition, so that they shall no more dout of the meaning of Christ. Howbeit the Fathers thought nothing lesse, than to stablish such a perfection, as hath since bin framed by the cowed Sophisters, thereby to raise vp a double Christianity. For that doctrine full of sacrilege was not yet borne, which compareth the profession of monkery to Baptisme, yea and openly affirmeth, that it is a forme of second Baptisme. Who can dout that the Fathers with al their heart abhorred this blasphemy? Nowe as touching that last thing, which Augustine sayeth to haue bin among the olde Monkes, that is, that they applied themselues wholly to Charity: what neede I to shewe in wordes that it is most far from this new profession? The thing it selfe speaketh, that all they that goe into Monasteries, depart from the Church. For why? Doe not they seuer themselues from the lawful fellowship of the faithful, in taking to themselues a peculiar ministry and priuate ministracion of Sacramentes? What is it to dissolue the Communion of the Church, if this be not it? And (that I may follow the comparison which I beganne to make, and may once conclude it) what haue they in this behalfe like to the old monkes? They although they dwelt seuerally from other men, yet hadde not a seuerall Church: they did partake of the sacramentes together with other: they appeared at solemne assemblies: there they were a part of the people. These men, in erecting to themselues a priuate altar, what haue they else done but broken the bond of vnity? For they haue both excommunicate themselues from the whole body of the Church, and haue despised the ordinary ministerie, whereby the Lord willed to haue peace & charity kept amōg his. Therefore how many ministeries there be at this day, I say y there be so many assemblies of schismatiques, which troubling the order of the Church, are cut of from the lawful fellowship of the faithfull. And y this departing should not be secret, they haue giuen to theſelues diuers names of ſects. Neither were they aſhamed to boſt of that, which Paul doth ſo deteſt ȳ he can not ſufficiently amplifie the hay-nouſnes of it. Vnleſſe perhap we thinke ȳ Chriſt was diuided of the Corinthi-ans, when one gloried of one teacher, & an other of an other: and ȳ now it is don wout any iniury to Chriſt, ȳ in ſteed of Chriſtians we heare ſome called Benedictines, ſome Franciſcanes, ſome Dominicanes: and that they are ſo called, that they theſelues when they couet to be ſeuerally knownen from the common ſort of Chriſtians, do with great pride take theſe titles to them for the profeſſion of their religion.

15 Theſe differences which I haue hitherto rehearſed betweene the old monkes and the monkes of our age, are not differences in maners, but in the profeſſion it ſelfe. Therefore let the readers remember that I haue rather ſpo-ken, of monkery than of monkes, & haue touched thoſe faultes, not which ſtick in the life of a few of them, but which can not be ſcuered from their ve-ry order of liuing it ſelfe. But what difference is in their maners, what neede I particularly to declare? This is certaine, ȳ there is no degree of men more defiled with all filthineſſe of vices: no where more are factions, hatredes, af-ſectiōs of parties, ambitions whotter than among them. In deed in a few mo-naſteries they liue chaſtly, if it be to be called chaſtitie where luſt is ſo farre kept downe that it be not openly euill ſpoken of: yet a man ſhall ſcarcely find euery tenth monaſtery which is not rather a ſtewes than a holy houſe of cha-ſtity. But what honeſt ſparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwiſe fattēd in ſties. But leaſt they ſhould complaine that I handle them too vnghently, I go no further. Howbeit in thoſe fewe things which I haue touched, whoſe-uer knoweth the thing it ſelfe will confeſſe that there is nothing ſpoken ac-cuſerlike. Auguſtine, when according to his teſtimonie monkes excelled in ſo great chaſtity, yet complaineth that there were many vagabundes, which with euill craſtes & deceits wiped ſimple men from their money, which with carying about the reliques of martyrs did uſe filthy marchandilinges, yea & in ſteede of the reliques of martyrs did ſhewe foorth the bones of any other dead men, & which with many ſuch wicked doings ſclandered the order. As he reporteth that he ſaw no better men than theſe which haue profited in mo-naſteries, ſo he lamenteth that he hath ſeene no worſe men than thoſe ȳ diſ-profited in monaſteries. What would he ſay if at this day he ſaw all monaſte-ries to ſwell, and in a maner to burſt with ſo many and ſo deſpeired vices? I ſpeake nothing but ȳ which is well knownen to all men. Yet doth not this diſ-prayſe pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule & diſcipline of liuing ſo holily ſtabliſhed in monaſteries, but that there remained ſome drōnes much vnlike the reſt: ſo I doe not ſo ȳ monkes are at this day ſo run out of kinde from that holy antiquitie, but that they haue yet ſome good men in their flocke. But they lye hidden a fewe and ſcattered in that huge multitude of naughty & wicked men: and they are not only deſpi-ſed, but alſo lewdly railed at, & ſometime cruelly handled of other, which (as the Mileſians prouerbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any hone-ſt man among them.

16 By this compariſon of the olde and preſente monkery, I truſt I haue brought to paſſe that which I purpoſed, that it may appeare that our cowed men do fallſly pretende the example of the firſt Church for defence of their profeſſion: forasmuch as they no leſſe differ from them than apes from men. In the mean time I ſticke not to declare, that euen in that olde forme which Auguſtine comendeth, there is ſomewhat which litle pleaſeth me. I grant that they were not ſuperſtitious in exacting the outward exerciſes of rougher diſcipline, but I ſay that there wanted not to much affectatiō & wrongſul zeale. It was a goodly thing, forſaking their goods, to be without al earthly carefullneſſe: but God more eſteemeth care to rule a houſeholde godlily, when a holy houſholder being looſe and free from all couetouſnes, ambition, & other deſires of the fleſh, trauaileth to this purpoſe to ſerue God in a certain vocation. It is a goodly thing to play the Phyloſopher in wilderneſſe far from the company of men: but it agreeth not with Chriſtian gentleneſſe as it were for hatred of mankind to fly into deſart and ſolitarineſſe, & therewithall to forſake thoſe duties which the Lorde hath chiefly commaunded. Although wee graunt that there was no other euill in that profeſſion, yet this verily was no ſmall euill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perillous example into the Church.

17 Nowe therefore let vs ſee what manner of vowes they be, wherewith monkes at this day are profeſſed into this goodly order. Firſt, becauſe their minde is to inſtitute a newe and fained worſhipping to deſerue Gods fauour: I concluded by the thinges afore ſpoken that whatſoever they vowe is abhominable before GOD. Secondly without any regard of Gods calling, without any his allowaunce, they inuent for them ſuch a kinde of lying as pleaſeth them ſelues. I ſay that it is a raſhe and therefore an vnlawefull enterpriſe: becauſe their conſcience hath nothing whereupon it may vpholde it ſelfe before GOD, and whatſoever is not of faith, is ſinne. Moreouer when they binde themſelues to many peruerſe and wicked worſhippinges, which the monkery at this day containeth in it. I affirme that they be not conſecrate to God, but to the Deuill. For why was it lawefull for the Prophete to ſay, that the Iſraelites offered their children to Deuils and not to God: only for this that they had corrupted the true worſhipping of God with prophane Ceremonies: and ſhall it not bee lawefull for vs to ſay the ſame of monkes, which with their cowle doe put vpon themſelues a ſnare of a thouſande wicked ſuperſtitions? Nowe what ſortes of vowes are there? They promiſe to GOD perpetuall virginitic, as though they hadde bargayned with God before, that he ſhoulde deliuer them from neede of marriage. There is no cauſe why they ſhoulde alleage, that they do not make this vowe but truſting vpon the grace of GOD. For ſith hee pronounceth that he giueth it not to all men, it is not in vs to conceiue a confidence of a ſpeciall giſte. Lette them that haue it, vſe it. If at any time they feele themſelues to be troubled of their fleſhe, let them flie to this helpe by whoſe only power they may reſiſt. If they preuaile not, let them not deſpiſe the remedy that is offered them. For they by the certaine word of God are called to marriage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not wherby the body is onely kept cleane from whoredome, but wherby the minde keepeth chaſtitie vndefiled. For Paule commaundeth not ſonely outwarde wantonneſſe, but alſo the burning of the minde, to be auoyded. This (ſaye they) they) hath from furthest time of memorie beene obserued, that they which would dedicate themselues wholly to the Lorde, shoulde binde themselues to the vowe of continence. I graunt indeede that this manner hath also bin of auncient time receiued: but I do not graunt that that age was so free from all fault, that whatsoeuer was then done must bee taken for a rule. And by litle and litle this vnappeasable feueritie crept in, that after a vowe made there was no roome for repentance. Which is euident by Cyprian. If virgins haue of faith dedicate themselues to God, let them continue shamefastly, and chastly without any faining. So being strong and stedfast, let them loke for the rewarde of virginity. But if they will not or can not continue, it is better that they shoulde marrie than with their delights fall into the fire. What reproches would they nowe spare to teare him withall, that would with such equitie temper the vowe of continence? Therefore they are departed farre from that auncient manner, which will not onely admit no moderation or pardon if any be found vnable to performe his vowe: but they do without all shame pronounce that hee sinneth more greuously if he remedy the intemperance of the flesh with taking a wife, than if he defile both his body and soule with whoredome.

18 But they still enforce the matter, and goe about to shewe that such a vowe was vsed in the Apostles time: because Paul saith that the widowes which hauing beene once receiued into the Publike ministerie did marrie, denied their first faith. But I doe not denie to them, that the widowes, which bounde themselues and their seruices to the Church, did therewithall take vpon them the bonde of continuall vnmarried life: not because they reposed any religion therein, as it afterward began to be vsed: but because they coulde not beare that office but being at their owne libertie and loose from yoke of mariage. But if, when they had once giuen their faith, they looked backe to newe mariages, what was this else but to shake off the calling of God? Therefore it is no maruel that with such desires he saith that they waxe wanton against Christ. Afterwarde to amplifie the matter hee saith, that they doe so not performe that which they haue promised to the Church, that they doe also breake and make void their first Faith giuen in Baptisme: in which this is comprehended, that euery man shoulde answere his calling. Vnlesse perhap you had rather vnderstande it thus, that hauing as it were lost all shame, they did from thence forth cast away all care of honestie, did giue forth themselues to all wantonnesse and vnchastitie, and did in licentious and desolute life resemble nothing lesse than Christian women: which sense I like very well. Therefore we aunswere, that those widowes which were then receiued to publike ministerie, did lay vpon them selues a bond to continue vnmarried: if they afterward married, wee easily perceiue that that happened to them which Paul speaketh of, that casting away shame they became more wanton than befemed Christian women. That so they not onely sinned, in breaking their Faith giuen to the Church, but swarued from the common law of Godly women. But first I denie that they did professe vnmarried life for any other reason, but because marriage agreed not with y^e ministerie which they took in hand: and I deny that they did binde themselues at all to single life, but so far as y^e necessity of their vocatiō did bere.

1. Tim. 5. 12.

Againe

Againe I doe not graunt that they were so bounde, but that it was then also better for them to marrie, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the fleshe, or to fall into any vncleanenesse. Thirdly I say that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commonly out of danger: specially sith he commaundeth the onely to be chosen, which contented with one marriage haue already shewed a token of their continencie. And wee doe for no other reason disallowe the vow of vnmarried life, but because it is both wrongfully taken for a seruice of God, and it is rashly vowed of them to whome power of continencie is not giuen.

19 But howe was it lawfull to drawe this place of Paul to Nunnes? For there were created deaconisses, not to delight God with singing & with mūbling not vnderstanded, and liue the rest of their time idle: but y they should execute publike ministracion towarde the poore, that they shoulde with all studie, earnestnes and diligence, endeouour themselues with the duties of charitie. They did not vowe vnmarried life, to yeelde thereby any worship to God because they absteyned from marriage: but onely because they were thereby the more vncombred to execute their office. Finally they did not vowe it, either in the beginning of their youth, or yet in the midst of their flowing age, that they might afterwarde learne too late by experience into howe great a headlong dowe fall they had throwen themselues: but whē they seemed to haue passed all danger, then they vowed a no lesse safe than holy vowe. But (not to enforce their first two pointes) I say it was not lawfull to haue women receiued to vowe continence before the age of three score yeares: forasmuch as the Apostle admitteth onely women of sixtie yeares: olde, and commaundeth the younger to marrie and bring forth children. Therefore neither that release made of 12. yeares, and then 20. and afterwarde of thirtie yeares, can bee any way excused: and much lesse is it tollerable, that sillie maides, before that they can by age knowe themselues, or haue any experience of themselues, are not onely trained by fraud, but constrained by force and threatenings to put on those cursed snares. I will not tary vpon confuting the other two voves. Onely this I say: beside this that they be intangled with not a fewe superstitions, (as the matter is noweadaies) they seeme to be made to this purpose, y they which vow them should mocke both God & men. But least we should seeme too maliciously to shake vp euery smal parcel, we will be content with that general confutation which is aboue set.

20 What manner of voves be lawfull and acceptable to God, I thinke is sufficiently declared. Yet because sometime vnskillfull and fearefull consciences, euen when they mislike or disallow any vowe, do neuertheles doubt of the binding, & are greuously tormented, when they both dread to breake their faith giuen to God, & on y other side they feare least they shold more sin in keeping it: here they are to be succoured, that they may winde themselues out of this distresse. But, to take away all doubt at once: I say y al voves being not lawfull, nor rightly made, as they are nothing worth before God, so ought to be void to vs. For if in contractes of men those promises only do bind, in which he with whom we contract, wold haue vs bound: it is an absurditie, that we should be driuen to y keeping of those things which God doth not require of vs: specially sith our workes are no otherwise right, but when they please God, & when consciences haue this testimonie that they please him. For this remaineth certaine, whatsoeuer is not of faith, is sinne. Whereby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hande with doubting, is therefore faultie, because faith is the roote of al good workes, by which wee are assured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it be lawfull for a Christian man to goe about nothing without this assurednesse: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hande, why should they not afterward giue it ouer when they be deliuered from errours? Sith vowes vnadvisedly made are such, they do not only nothing bind, but are necessarily to be vndone. Yea what if they are not onely nothing esteemed, but also are abominable in the sight of God, as is aboue shewed? It is needlesse to discourse any longer of a matter not needfull. This one argument seemeth to mee to bee enough to pacifie godly consciences and deliuer them from all doubt: y whatsoeuer works do not flow out of the pure fountaine and bee not directed to the lawful end, are refused of God: and so refused that he no lesse forbiddeth vs to goe forward in them, than to beginne them. For hereupon followeth, that those vowes which proceede of error and superstition, are both of no value before God, and to be forsaken of vs.

Rom. 14. 23.

21 Moreouer he that shall know this solution, shall haue wherewith he may defende against the slaunders of the wicked, them that depart from monkerie to some honest kind of life. They are greuously accused of breach of Faith and periurie, because they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the insoluble bonde wherewith they were bound to God and to the Church. But I say y there was no bond, where god doeth abrogate y which man confirmeth. Moreouer, admitting that they were bond, when they were holden intrangled with not knowing of God: and with error: nowe since they are lightened with the knowledge of the trueth, I say that they are therewithal free by the grace of Christ. For if the crosse of Christ haue so great effectualnesse, that it looseth vs from the curse of the law of God, wherewith we were holden bound, how much more shall it deliuer vs from forcine bonds, which are nothing but the snaring nets of Satan? To whomsoeuer therefore Christ shineth with the light of his Gospell, it is no doubt that he looseth them fro al snares which they had put vpon themselues by superstition. Howbeit they want not yet an other defence, if they were not fit to liue vnmarried. For if an impossible vow be a sure destructiō of the soule, whom the Lord would haue saued and not destroyed: it followeth that we ought not to continue therein. But howe impossible is the vowe of continence to them that are not indued with a singular gifte, wee haue alreadie taught, and experience speaketh it though I holde my peace. For neither is it vnknown with howe great filthinesse almost all monasteries doe swarme. And if any of them seeme honest, and more shamefast than the rest: yet they are not therefore chaste because they suppress and keepe in the fault of vnchastitie. So verily God doth with horrible examples take vengeance on the boldnes of men, which forgetting their owne weakenes, doe against nature couet that which is denied them, and dispising the remedies which the Lorde had giuen them at hande, do trust that they can with stubbornesse and obstinacie overcome y disease disease of incontinence. For what else shall we call it but stubbornesse, when one being warned that he needeth marriage, and that the same is giuen him of the Lord for a remedy, doth not onely despise it, but also bindeth himselfe with an oth to the despising of it?

Gal. 3.

The xiiii. Chapter.

Of Sacramentes.

Beside the preaching of the Gospell, and other helpe of like sorte is in the Sacramentes: of which to haue some certaine doctrine taught, is much behoouefull for vs, whereby we may learne both to what end they were ordeined, and what is nowe the vse of them. First it is meete to consider what is a Sacrament. It seemeth to mee that this shall bee a plaine and proper definition, if wee say that it is an outwarde signe, wherewith, the Lorde sealeth to our consciences the promises of his good wil toward vs, to susteine the weakenesse of our Faith; and we againe on our behalves doe testifie our godlinesse toward him as well before him and the Angels as before men. We may also with more briefenesse define it otherwise: as to call it a testimonie of Gods fauour toward vs confirmed by an outward signe, with a mutuall testifying of our godlinesse toward him. Whethersoever you choose of these definitions, it differeth nothing in sense from that definition of Augustine, which teacheth that a sacrament is a visible signe of a holy thing, or a visible forme of inuisible grace: but it doeth better and more certainly expresse the thing it selfe. For whereas in that breefenes there is some darknes, wherein many of the vnskilfuller sort are deceiued, I thought good in moe words to giue a fuller sentence, that there should remaine no doubt.

2 For what reason the old writers vsed this worde in that sense, it is not hard to see. For so oft as the old translater would render in latine this greeke worde Mysterion mysterie, specially when diuine matters were intreated of, hee translated it Sacrament. So to the Ephesians, That hee might make knowen vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Againe, if yet yee haue heard the distribution of the grace of God, which is giuen to mee in you, because according to reuelation the Sacrament was made knowen to me. To Colossians, The mystery which hath bin hidden from ages & generations, but now is manifested to his Saints, to whom the Lord would make knowen the riches of this Sacrament. &c. Againe, to Timothie, A great Sacrament of godlinesse: God is openly shewed in the flesh. He woulde not say a secreete, least he should seeme to say somewhat vnder the greatnesse of the things. Therefore hee hath put Sacrament in steed of Secrete, but of a holy thing. In that signification it is sometime found among the ecclesiasticall writers. And it is well enough knowen, that those which in Latine are called Sacraments, in Greeke are Mysterics: which expressing of one thing in two feuerall wordes endeth all ŷ contention. And hereby it came to passe that it was drawn to those signes which had a reuerende representation of hie and spirituall things. Which Augustine also noteth in one place. It were long (saith he) to dispute of the diuersitie of signes, which when they per-pertaine to diuine things, are called Sacramentes.

3 Nowe of this definition which wee haue set, wee vnderstande that a Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before it, but rather is adioined as a certaine addition hanging to it, to this ende that it shoulde confirme and seale the promise it selfe, and make it more approoued vnto vs, yea after a certaine manner ratified. Which meane the Lorde foreseeeth to be needefull first for our ignorance and dulnes, and then for our weakenes: and yet (to speake properly) not so much to confirme his holy worde, as to stablishe vs in the Faith thereof. For the trueth of God is by it selfe sounde and certaine enough, and cannot from any other where receiue better confirmation than from it selfe. But our Faith, as it is small and weake, vnlesse it be stayed on euery side, and bee by all meanes vpholden, is by and by shaken, wauereth, staggereth, yea and fainteth. And herein verily the mercifull Lorde according to his great tender kindenesse tempereth himselfe to our capacitie: that, whereas we be naturall men, which alway creeping vpon the grounde and sticking fast in the fleshe, doe not thinke nor so much as conceiue any spirituall thing, hee vouchsafeth euen by these earthly elementes to guide vs vnto himselfe, and in the fleshe it selfe to set forth a mirror of spirituall good things. For if we were vnbodily (as Chrysostome saith) he woulde haue giuen vs the verie same things naked and vnbodily. Now because we haue soules put within bodies, he giueth spirituall things vnder visible things. Not because there are such giftes planted in the natures of the things which are set forth to vs in the Sacraments; but because they were signed by God to this signification.

Hom. 6c. &
popul.

4 And this is it which they commonly say, that a Sacrament consisteth of the worde and the outward signe. For wee must vnderstande the word to bee, not that which being whispered without meaning and faith, with onely noise as it were with a magicall enchauntment hath power to consecrate the element: but which being preached maketh vs to vnderstande what the visible signe meaneth. Therefore that which was vsually done vnder the tyrannie of the Pope, was not without a great profaning of the mysteries. For they thought it ynough, if the Priest, while the people stood amasedly gazing at it without vnderstanding, did mumble vp the forme of consecration. Yea they offer purpose prouided this, that no whit of doctrine shoulde thereof come to the people: for they spake all thinges in Latine before vnlearned men. Afterwarde superstition brake out so farre, that they beleued that the consecration was not formally made, vnlesse it were with a hoarse whispering sounde which fewe might heare. But Augustine teacheth farre otherwise of the Sacramentall worde. Let the worde (saith hee) bee added to the element, and there shall bee made a Sacrament. For whence commeth this so great strength to the water, to touch the bodie and washe the soule, but by the worde making it? not because it is spoken, but because it is beleued. For in the verie worde it selfe the sounde which passeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is an other. This is the word of Faith which wee preach, sayth the Apostle, Whercupon in the Actes of the Apostles it is saide, by faith cleansing their hearts. And Peter the Apostle saith, So baptisme also saueth vs: not the putting away of the filthines of the flesch,

Hom. in

fleshe, but the examination of a good conscience. This is the worde of faith which we preach: by which without doubt, that it may bee able to cleanse, Baptisme also is halowed. You see howe it requireth preaching, wherevpon faith may grow. And we neede not to trauell much in proofe hercof, forasmuch as it is cleare what Christ did, what he commaunded vs to doe, what the Apostles followed, what the purer Church obserued. Yea euen from the beginning of the worlde it is knowen, that so oft as God offered any signe to the holy fathers, there was added an vnseparable knor of doctrine, without which our senses should be made amased with bare beholding. Therefore when wee heare mention made of the Sacramental word, let vs vnderstand the promise, which being with a loude voice preached of the minister, may leade the people thither as it were by the hande, whither the signe tendeth and directeth vs.

5 Neither are some to bee heard which trauel to fight against this, with a double horned argument rather suttile than sounde. Either (say they) wee knowe, or we knowe not, that the worde of God which goeth before the sacrament, is the true will of God. If wee knowe it, then wee learne no newe thing of the sacrament which foloweth after. If we know it not, then neither wil the sacrament teach it, whose whole force standeth in the word. Wherevnto let this briefly be for an answer: that the seales which are hanged at parentes and other publike instrumentes, taken by themselues are nothing, forasmuch as they should be hanged in vaine if the parchment had nothing written in it: yet they doe not therefore not confirme and seale that which is written, when they be added to writings. Neither can they say that this similitude is lately fained by vs, which Paul himselfe vsed, calling Circumcision a seale, where he purposely trauelleth to prooue, that Circumcision was not righteousnes to Abraham, but a sealing of that couenant, by faith wherof he had already beene iustified before. And what, I besech you, is there y may much offend any man, if we teach y the promise is sealed with sacramentes, when of the promises themselues it is euident that one is confirmed with an other? For as euery one is manifeste, so is it more fit to vpholde faith. But the Sacramentes doe both bring most cleare promises, and haue this peculiar more thā the word, that they liuely represent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that distinction any thing to moue vs, which is wont to bee obiected, betweene Sacraments and seales of parentes: that whereas both consist of carnal elements of this worlde, those can not suffice or be meet to seale the promises of God, which are spiritual & euerlasting, as these are wont to be hanged to, for sealing of the grants of Princes concerning fading and fraile thinges. For a faithfull man, when the sacramentes are present before his eyes, sticketh not in that fleslike sight, but by those degrees of proportion, which I haue spoken of, hee riseth vp with godly consideration to the hie mysteries which lie hidden in the Sacramentes.

6 And sith the Lorde calleth his promises, couenantes: and his Sacramentes, seales of couenantes: a similitude may well bee brought from the Gen. 6. 18. & 9. 9. & 17. 22 couenantes of men. What can a sowe killed work, if wordes were not vsed, yea vnlesse they wet before? For sowes are many times killed without any more in-inwarde or hier myſterie. What can the giuing of a mans right hand doe, ſith often times handes are matched with enmitie? But when wordes haue gone before, by ſuch ſignes the lawes of leagues are ſtabliſhed, although they were firſt conceiued, made, and decreed in wordes. Therefore Sacramentes are exerciſes which make the credit of the worde of God certainer vnto vs: and becauſe we are carnall, they are deliuered vnder carnall thinges, that ſo they ſhould inſtruct vs according to the capacitie of our dulneſſe, and guide vs by the hande as ſcholmaſters guide children. For this reaſon Auguſtine calleth a Sacrament, a viſible worde: becauſe it repreſenteth the promiſes of God as it were painted in a table, & ſetteth them before our ſight cunningly expreſſed & as in an image. Other ſimilitudes alſo may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly ſet out, as if wee call them pillers of our Faith. For as a building ſtandeth and reſteth vpon the foundation: yet by ſetting vnder of pillers, it is more ſurely ſtabliſhed: ſo, Faith reſteth vpon the worde of God, as vpon a foundation: but when Sacramentes are added, it ſtaieſt yet more ſoundly vpon them as vpon pillers. Or if wee call them looking glaſſes, in which wee may beholde the richeſſe of the grace of God, which he giueth vs. For (as we haue alreadie ſaid) he doeth in them manifeſtly ſhewe himſelfe to vs, ſo much as is giuen to our dulneſſe to knowe, and doeth more expreſſely teſtifie his good will and loue towarde vs than by his worde.

7 Neither do they reaſon fitly enough to the purpoſe, when they labour to proue hereby that they are not teſtimonies of the grace of God, becauſe they are alſo giuen to the wicked, which yet do thereby feele God nothing more fauorable to them, but rather procure to themſelues more grieuous damnation. For by the ſame argument neither ſhoulde the Goſpell, which is heard and deſpiſed of many, be the teſtimonic of the grace of god: nor yet Chriſt himſelfe, which was ſcene and knowne of many, of whom verie fewe receiued him. The like wee may alſo ſee in patentes. For a great partie of the multitude laugheth at and ſcorneth that authentike ſeale, howſoever they knowe that it proceeded from the Prince to ſeale his wil withall: ſome regarde it not, as a thing not pertaining to them: ſome alſo abhorre it: ſo that conſidering this ſo egall relation of both, that ſame ſimilitude which I haue aboue vſed, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certain that the Lorde doeth offer vnto vs mercie and a pledge of his grace both in his holy worde and in the Sacraments: but the ſame is not receiued but of them which receiue the worde and Sacraments with ſure faith. like as Chriſt is offered of the Father vnto ſaluation, to all, yet he is not acknowledged and receiued of all. Auguſtine in one place minding to declare the ſame, ſaide that the effectualneſſe of the worde is ſhewed forth in the Sacrament: not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is belieued. Therefore Paul, when hee ſpeaketh to the faithfull, ſo entreateth of Sacraments that he includeth the communion of Chriſt in them, as when he ſaith: all ye that are baptiſed, haue put on Chriſt. Againe, we are all one bodie and one Spirit, which are baptiſed in Chriſt. But when he ſpeaketh of the wrongfull vſe of Sacramentes, he giueth no more to it than to colde and void figures. Whereby hee ſignifieth, that howſoever the wicked and hypocrites with their peruerneſſe

do either oppresse or darken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraments, yet that withstandeth not but that where and so oft as it pleaseth God, both they may bring a true testimonie of the communicating of Christ, and the Spirit of God himselfe may deliuer and perform that which they promise. We determine therefore that Sacramentes are truly called testimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine scales of the good will which he beareth towarde vs: which by sealing it vnto vs, doe by this meane sustaine, nourish, confirme, and encrease our faith. As for the reasons which some are wont to obiect against this sentēce, they are too trifling and weake. They say that if our Faith be good, it cannot be made better: for they say that it is no Faith, but which without shaking, stedfastly, and without withdrawing, resteth vpon the mercie of God. It had beene better for such to pray with the Apostles that the Lorde woulde encrease their Faith, than carelesly to pretende such a perfection of faith, which neuer any of the sonnes of men hath obtained, nor any shall obtaine in this life. Let them answer, what maner of faith they thinke that hee had which said: I beleeuē Lorde, helpe my vnbeleuingnesse. For euen that faith, howsoeuer it was but a begon faith, was a good faith, and might bee made better when vnbeleuingnesse were taken away. But they are confuted by no certainer argumēt than by their owne conscience. For if they confesse themselues sinners, (which whether they will or no they cannot denie) they must needes impute the same to the imperfection of their faith.

8 But (say they) Philip answered the Eunuch, that he might be Baptized, if he beleued with all his hart. What place here hath the confirmation of Baptisme, where faith filleth the whole heart? Againe I aske them whether they do not feele a good part of their heart voide of faith: whether they do not daily acknowledge newe encreases. The heathen man gloried that he waxed old with learning. Therefore we Christians be thrise miserable, if we waxe olde with profiting nothing, whose faith ought to go forward by all degrees of ages, till it growe into a perfect man. Therefore in this place to beleue with all the heart, is not perfectly to beleue Christ, but onely from the heart and with a syncere minde to imbrace him: not to be full with him, but with feruent affection to hunger, and thirst, and sigh towarde him. This is the maner of the Scripture, to say that that is done with the whole heart, which it meaneth to be done syncerely and hartily. Of this sort are these sayings: I haue in all my heart sought thee: I will confesse to thee in al my heart, and such other. As on the other side, where he rebuketh guilefull and deceitfull men, he vseth to reproch them with heart and heart. Then they say further, that if faith be encreased by Sacraments, the Holy Ghost is giuen in vaine whose strength and worke it is to begin, mainteine, and make perfect faith. To whome in deede I graunt, that faith is the proper & whole worke of the holy Ghost, by whome being enlightened wee know God and the treasure of his goodnesse, and without whose light our minde is so blind, that it can see nothing, so senselesse, that it can smell nothing of spirituall things. But for one benefit of God which they set foorth, we consider three. For first the Lord teacheth & instructeth vs with his worde: then he strengtheneth vs with Sacraments: last of all he shineth into our mindes with the light light of his holy Spirit, and openeth an entry for the word and Sacraments into our hearts, which otherwise should but strike our eares, & be present before our eyes, and nothing moue the inward partes.

9 Wherefore as touching the confirmation and encrease of faith, I would haue the reader warned (which I thinke I haue already in plaine wordes expressed) that I do so assigne that ministerie to the Sacraments, not as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wote not what secret force, by which they may of themselues be able to further or confirme faith: but because they are ordained of the Lord to this end, that they should serue to the stablishing and encreasing of faith. But then onely they do truely performe their office, when that inward schoole-master the Spirit is come to them, with whose onely power both the hartes are pearced, and affections are moued, and the entrie is set open for the Sacramentes into our soules. If he be absent, Sacraments can do no more to our minds, than if either the brightnesse of the sunne should shine vpon blinde eyes, or a voyce sounde to deafe eares. Therefore I so make diuision betweene the spirit and sacraments, that the power of working remaine with the spirit, and to the sacramentes bee left onely the ministracion, yea and the same voyde and trifling without the working of the spirit: but of much effectualnesse, when hee inwardly worketh and putteth forth his force. Nowe it is plaine in what sort according to this sentence, a godly minde is confirmed in the faith by sacraments: that is to say, euen as the eyes see by the brightnesse of the sunne, and the eares heare by the sounde of a voyce: of which neither the eyes shoulde any white perceiue any light, vnlesse they had a sight in themselues that might naturally bee enlightened: and the eares should in vaine be knocked at with any crying whatsoeuer it were, vnlesse they were naturally made and fitte to heare. But if it bee true, which ought at once to bee determined among vs, that what the sight worketh in our eyes to seeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiuing of a voyce, the same is the worke of the holy Ghost in our hartes, both to the conceiuing, and sustaining, and cherishing and stablishing of faith: then both these things doe likewise followe: that the sacramentes doe nothing at all profite without the power of the holy Ghost: and that nothing withstandeth but that in hartes already taught of that scholemaster, they may make faith both stronger and more encreased. Onely this difference there is, that the power of hearing & seeing is naturally set in our eares and eyes: but Christ beside the measure of nature doth by speciall grace worke the same in our mindes.

10 Whereby those obiections also, which comber some men, are dissolved: That if we ascribe to creatures either the increase or confirmation of faith, there is wrong done to the Spirit of God, whom wee ought to acknowledge the onely author thereof. For neither doe wee in the meane time take from him either the praise of confirming or increasing it: but rather we affirme, that euen this that he encreaseth and confirmeth faith, is nothing else but with his inward enlightening to prepare our mindes to receiue that confirming which is set forth by y^e sacraments. But if it be yet too darkly spoken, it shalbe made very cleare by a similitude which I will bring. If thou purpose with wordes to persuaade a man to doe any thing, thou wilt search out all the reasons, whereby he may be drawn to thy opinion, and may be in a manner subdued to obey thy counsel. But thou hast hitherto nothing prevailed, vnlesse he likewise haue a percing & sharp iudgement, whereby he may weye what pith is in thy reasons: vnlesse also hee haue a tractable wit and ready to harken to teaching: finally vnlesse he haue conceiued such an opinion of thy faithfulness and wisdom, as may be to him like a certaine foreiudgement to cause him to subscribe. For both there are many stubborne heads, which a man can neuer bowe with any reasons: and also where credite is suspected, where authoritie is despised, litle good is done euen with the willing to learne. On the other side let all those thinges be present, they will truely bring to passe that y^e hearer, to whom thou giuest counsell, will obey the selfe same counsels which otherwise he would haue laughed to scorne. The same worke also the Spirite worketh in vs. For least the worde should beate our eares in vaine, least the Sacramentes shoulde strike our eyes in vaine, hee sheweth vs that it is God which speaketh therein, hee softenth the stubbornes of our heart, and frameth it to the obedience which is due to the worde of the Lorde. Finally he conueyeth those outward words and Sacramentes from the eares into the soule. Therefore both the word and the Sacraments do confirme our faith, when they set before our eyes y^e good will of the heauenly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole stedfastnes of our faith standeth fast, & the strength of it encreaseth: the spirite confirmeth it, when in engrauing the same confirmation in our minds he maketh it effectuell. In the meane rime the father of lightes can not bee forbidden, but as he enlightneth the bodily eyes with the beames of the sunne, so hee may enlighten our mindes with sacramentes, as with a brightnesse set meane betweene.

II Which propertie the Lord taught that there was in his outward word, when in the parable he called it seede. For as seede, if it fall vpon a deserte and vntilled peece of ground, wil do nothing but die: but if it be thrown vpon arable lande well manured and tilled, it will bring forth her fruit with very good encrease: so the word of G O D, if it light vpon a stiffe necke, it will grow barren as that which is sown vpon sand: but if it light vpon a soule manured with the hande of the heauenly Spirite, it will be most frutefull. But if there be like reason of seede and of the worde: as wee say that out of seede corne both springeth and encreaseth, and groweth vppe to ripenesse: why may wee not saye that faith taketh out of the worde of G O D both beginning, encrease, and perfection? Paul very well expresseth both these thinges in sundry places. For when hee goeth about to put the Corinthians in remembrance how effectually God vsed his trauaile, he glorieth that he hath the ministerie of the Spirite, as though the power of the holy Ghost were with an vnseparable knot ioyned with his preaching, to enlighten and thoroughly moue the minde. But in an other place when he mindeth to admonish them, of what force the worde of God is of it selfe beeing preached by man, he compareth the ministers them selues to husbandemen, whiche when they haue bestowed their labour and trauaile in tilling the earth, haue no more to do. But what should tilling, and sowing, & watering profit, vnlesse that which is sown should receiue liuelinesse by heauenly benefite?

Therefore

Matt. 13.4.
Luke, 8.15.

3. Cor. 2.4.
3. Cor. 3.6.

3. Cor. 3.6.

Therefore he concludeth, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing; but that all things are to be ascribed to God, which alone giueth the encrease. Therefore the Apostles do in their preaching utter the power of the Spirit, so farre as God vseth the instruments ordeined by himselfe to the setting forth of his spirituall grace. Yet we must keepe stil that distinction, that we remember, what man is able to do by himselfe, and what is proper to God.

12 Sacraments are so confirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lord meaneth to take away the confidence of the very things that are by him promised in the Sacraments, he taketh away the sacramentes themselves. When he spoyleth and thrusteth away Adam from the gift of immortalitye, he saith: Let him not eate of the fruite of life, least he liue for euer. What saith he? Could that fruite restore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he was now fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had saide: Least hee should enjoy a vaine confidence if he keepe stil the signe of my promise, let that be shaken away from him which might bring him some hope of immortalitye. After this manner when the Apostle exhorteth the Ephesians to remember that they were forein gesses of the testaments, strangers from the fellowship of Israel, without god, without Christ, he saith, that they were not partakers of Circumcision. Whereby he doth (by figure of transnominatiō) signifie that they were excluded from the promise it selfe, which had not receiued the signe of the promise. To their other obiection, that the glorie of God is conueyed to creatures, to whome so much power is ascribed, & that thereby it is so farre diminished, we haue in redinesse to answer that we see no power in creatures. Onely this we say, that God vseth meanes and instruments, which he himselfe seeth to be expedient: that all things may serue his glorie, forasmuch as he is Lorde and iudge of all. Therefore as by bread and other nourishments hee feedeth our body: as by the sunne he enlighteneth the world: as by fire he warmeth: yet neither bread, nor the sunne, nor fire, are any thing but so farre as by those instrumentes he doeth distribute his blessings vnto vs: so spirituallly he nourisheth faith by the Sacramentes, whose onely office is to set his promises before our eyes to be looked vpon, yea to be pledges vnto vs of them. And as it is our ducie to fasten none of our affiance in other creatures, which by the liberalitie and bountifulnesse of God are ordeined to our vses, and by the ministerie whereof he giueth vs his gistes, nor to haue them in admiration, & praise them as causes of our good. so neither ought our confidence to sticke fast in the Sacramentes, nor the glorie of God to be remoued vnto them: but leauing all thinges, both our faith and confession ought to rise vp to him the author both of the sacraments and of all thinges.

13 Whereas some bring an argument out of the verie name of a Sacrament, it is nothing strong. A Sacrament (say they) whereas it hath among allowed authors many significations, yet it hath but one which agreeth with the signes: that is, whereby it signifieth that solemne othe which the soldior maketh to his capitaine when he entreth into profession of a soldior. For as by that othe of warfare new soldiors do bind their faith to the capitaine, & professe to be his soldiors: so by our signes we professe Christ our capitaine, and do testifie that we serue vnder his banner. They ad similitudes to make thereby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romanes seuerally knownen from the Greekes which did weare clokes: as the verie degrees of men at Rome were discerned by their seuerall signes: the degree of Senators from the degree of knightes, by purple cote & piked shooes: againe a knight from a commoner, by a ring: so wee beare our signes that may make vs seuerally knownen from prophane men. But by the thinges aboute saide it is euident enough that the olde writers, which gaue to the signes the name of Sacraments, had no regarde how this worde was vsed among Latine writers, but for their owne purpose fained this new signification, whereby they signified onely holy signes. But if wee will search the matter more deeply, it may seeme that they haue with the same relation applied this worde to such a signification, wherewith they haue remoued the name of faith to that sense wherein it is nowe vsed. For whereas faith is a trueth in performing promises: yet they haue called faith an assurednesse, or sure persuasion which is had of the trueth it selfe. Likewise whereas a sacrament is the soldiors part whereby he voweth himselfe to his captaine: they haue made it the capitaines parte, whereby he receiueh soldiors into roomes of seruice. For by the sacrament the Lorde doth promise that hee wil bee our God, and that wee shall be his people. But wee passe ouer such sutleties: for asmuch as I thinke I haue proued with arguments plaine enough, that they had respect to nothing else but to signifie that these are signes of holy and spirituall things. We receiue in deede the similitudes which they bring of outwarde tokens: but wee allowe not that that which is the last point in the sacramentes, is by them set for the chiefe, yea and onely thing. But this is the first point, that they should serue our faith before God: the later point that they should testifie our confession before men. According to this later consideration those similitudes haue place. But in the meane time let that first point remaine: because otherwise (as we haue already proued) the mysteries should be but colde, vnlesse they were helps to our faith, & additions to doctrine ordeined to the same vse and ende.

14 Againe we must be warned, that as these men doe weaken the force, and vtterly ouerthrowe the vse of sacraments: so on the contrarie side there be some, which faine to sacraments I wote not what secret vertues, which are no where red to be put in them by God. By which error the simple and vnskilfull are dangerously deceiued, while they are both taught to seeke the giftes of God where they cannot be found, & are by litle and litle drawn away from God, to embrace mere vanitie in steede of his vertue. For the Sophisticall schooles haue taught with great consent, that the Sacramentes of the newe lawe, that is to say those which are nowe in vse in the Christian Church, do iustifie and giue grace, so that we do not lay a stoppe of deadly sinne. It cannot be expresse howe pernicious and pestilent this opinion is, and so much the more, because in many ages heretofore, to the great losse of the Church it hath preuailed in a great part of the worlde. Truly it is vtterly diuinish. For when it promiseth righteousness without faith, it driueth soules headlong into destruction: then because it fetcheth the cause of righteousness from the sacraments, it bindeth the miserable mindes of men already readie of their owne accord to much bending to the earth, with this superstition that they rather rest in the sight of a bodily thing than of God himselfe. Which two things I wold to God we had not so proued in experience, so litle neede they any long prooffe. But what is a sacrament taken without faith, but the most certaine destruction of the Church? For whereas nothing is to be looked for thereof without the promise, & the promise doeth no lesse threaten wrath to the vnlawful, than it offreth grace to the faithfull: he is deceiued that thinketh that there is any more giuen to him by the sacraments, than that which being offered by the word of God, hee receiueth by faith. Whereupon another thing also is gathered, y^e the affiance of saluation hangeth not vpon the partaking of the sacrament, as though Iustification consisted therein: which we know to be reposed in Christ only, and to be communicated vnto vs no lesse by the preaching of the Gospel, than by the sealing of the sacrament: and that without that it cannot wholly stand. So true is that which Augustine also writeth, y^e inuisible sanctification may be without a visible signe, and againe that a visible signe may be without true sanctification. For (as he also writeth in another place,) men do put on Christ sometime vntill the receiuing of a sacrament, sometime euen vntill the sanctification of life. And that first point may be common both to good and to euill: but this other is proper to the good & godly.

15 Hereupon cometh that distinction if it be well vnderstanded, which the same Augustine hath often noted, betweene a sacrament, and the thing of the sacrament. For it not onely signifieth, that the figure and truethe are there contained, but that they do not so hang together, but that they may be scuered: and that euen in the verie conioyning the thing must alway be discerned from the signe, that wee giue not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He speaketh of the separation, when he writeth that y^e sacraments do worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the sacramentes were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the sacramentes. So nowe also the washing of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it selfe, whereby the members of Christ are regenerate with their hed, is not common to all. Againe, in another place of the Supper of the Lorde, We also at this day receiue visible meate. But the sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament another thing. What is this, that many receiue of the altar and dy, and in receiuing do dy? For the Lordes morsell was poison to Iudas: not because he receiued an euill thing, but because he being euill receiued a good thing euilly. A litle after: The sacrament of this thing, that is of the vnitie of the bodie and bloud of Christ, is somewhere prepared on the Lordes table daily, somewhere by certaine distances of dayes: and thereof is receiued vnto life to some, and vnto destruction to some. But the thing it selfe whereof it is a sacrament, is receiued vnto life to all men, but vnto destruction to no man, whosoever is partaker of it. And a litle before hee had saide, He shall not dy which eateth: but he which pertaineth to the power of the sacrament, not to the visible sacrament, which eateth within, not without: which eateth with heart, not he which preffeth with tooth. Thus you heare euery where, that a sacrament is so scuered from his owne truethe by the vnworthinesse of the receiuer, y there remaineth nothing but a vaine & vnprofitable figure. But y thou maist haue not a signe void of trueth: but the thing w the signe, thou must conceiue by faith the word which is there enclosed. So how much thou shalt by the sacraments profite in communicating of Christ, so much profite shalt thou take of them.

16 If this be somewhat darke because of the shortnes, I will set it out in mo wordes. I say that Christ is the matter, or (if thou wilt) the substance of all sacraments: forasmuch as in him they haue all their perfectnesse, and do promise nothing without him. So much lesse tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expressly make them causes of righteousnesse and saluation, whereof they be partes. Therefore bidding all causes farewell which mans wit doeth faine to it selfe, we ought to stay in this one cause. Therefore how much wee be by their ministerie holpen to the nourishing, confirming, and encreasing of the true knowledge of Christ in vs, and to the possessing of him more fully, and to the enioying of his richesse, so much effectualnesse they haue with vs. But that is done when wee doe with true faith receive that which is there offered. Do the wicked then (wilt thou say) bring to passe by their vnthankfulnesse, that the ordinances of God be voided and turne to nothing? I answere that that which I haue saide, is not so to be taken, as though the force and trueth of the sacrament did hang vpon y state or will of him that receiue it. For that which God hath ordeined remaineth stedfast and keepeth still his nature, howsoeuer men do varie. But sith it is one thing to offer, an other to receiue: nothing withstandeth but that the signe halowed by the worde of God may be in deede that which it is called, and keepe his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profite to an euil doer and wicked man. But Augustine doeth in fewe wordes well assoile this question. If (saith he) thou receiuest carnally, it ceaseth not to be spirituall: but it is not to thee. But as Augustine hath in the foresaid places shewed that a sacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be seuered from the trueth thereof: so in another place he giueth warning that euen in the verie conioyning needeth a distinction, least we sticke too much in the outward signe. As (saith he) to followe the letter, and to take the signes in steede of the thinges, is a point of a seruile weakenesse: so to expound the signes vnprofitably is a point of euill wandring error. Hce nameth two faultes which are here to bee auoided: The one when we so take the signes as though they were giuen in vaine, and when with abacing or diminishing their secrete significations by our eniuousnesse, we bring to passe that they bring vs no profite at all. The other, when in not raising our mindes beyond the visible signe, wee giue away to the sacrament the praise of all those good things which are not giuen vs but of Christ onely, and that by the Holy Ghoste, which maketh vs partakers of Christ himselfe: and in deed by the helpe of the outward signes: which if they allure vs to Christ, when they bee wrested an other way, the whole profite of them is vnworthily ouerthrowen.

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the sacraments than of the worde of God: which is to offer and set foorth Christ vnto vs, and in him the treasures of heauenly grace: but they auaille or profit nothing, but being receiued by faith: euen as wine, or oyle, or any other liquor, though you powre it on largely, yet it will run beside and perish, vnlesse the vessels mouth be open to receiue it, and the vessell though it bee weite rounde about on the outside, shall neuerthelessse remaine emptie and voyde within. Beside this we must beware, least those things which haue bin written by the olde writers somewhat too gloriously to amplifie the dignitie of sacraments, should leade vs away into an error neere to this: namely that we should thinke that there is some secret power knit and fastened to the sacraments, that they may of themselues giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost, like as wine is giuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to testifie and stablish to vs the good will of GOD toward vs, and doe profite no further vnlesse the Holy Ghost ioyne himselfe to them, which may open our mindes and heartes, and make vs partakers of this testimonie, wherein also doe clerely appeare diuers and seueral graces of God. For the sacramentes, as we haue aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are messengers of ioyfull thinges, or earnestes in stablishing of bargaines: which doe not of themselues giue any grace, but doe tell and shewe vs, and (as they be earnestes & tokens,) do ratifie vnto vs those things that are giuen vs by the liberalitie of God. The Holy Ghost (whome the sacramentes do not in cōmon with out difference bring to all men, but whom the Lorde peculiarly giueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of GOD with him, which giueth to the sacramentes place in vs, which maketh them to bring foorth fruite. But although wee doe not denie that God himselfe with the most present power of his Spirit is present with his owne institution, least the ministracion which he hath ordained of the sacramentes should be fruitlesse and vaine: yet we affirme that the inwarde grace of the Spirit, as it is seuered from the outward ministerie, so ought to be seuerally weyed and considered. God therefore truely performeth in deede whatsoeuer he promiseth and figureth in signes: neither doe the signes want their effect, that the author of them may be prooued true and faithfull. The question here is onely whether GOD worketh by his owne and by inwarde power (as they call it) or doe resigne his office to outward signes. But wee affirme, that whatsoeuer instruments he vse, his originall working is nothing hindered thereby. When this is taught concerning the sacramentes, both their dignitie is honorably set out, and their vse is plainly shewed, and their profitableness is abundantly reported, and the best meane in all these thinges is retained, that neither any thing bee giuen to them which ought not, nor againe any thing be taken from them which is not conuenient to be taken from them. In the meane time that fained deuise is taken away, wherby the cause of iustification and power of the holy Ghost is enclosed in elementes as in vesselles or waggons, and that principall force which hath beene omitted of other is expressly set out. Here also it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh that which the minister figureth & testifieth by outward doing: least that be drawn to a mortall man, which God claimeth to himselfe alone. The same thing also doth Augustine wisely touch. Howe (sayth he) doth both Moses sanctifie, and God? Not Moses for GOD: but Moses with visible sacramentes by his ministerie; but GOD with inuisible grace by his holy Spirit: where also is the whole fruit of visible sacraments. For without this sanctification of inuisible grace, what doe those visible sacraments profit?

Gen. 1. 1.

18 The name of sacrament, as we haue hitherto entreated of the nature of it, doth generally contain all the signes that euer God gaue to me, to certifye and assure them of the truth of his promises. Those he sometime willed to remaine in naturall things, sometime he deliuered them in miracles. Of the first kinde these bee examples, as when he gaue to Adam and Eue, the tree of life for an earnest of immortalitie, that they might assure themselves of it, so long as they did eate of the frute thereof. And when hee did set the heauenly boawe for a monument to Noe and his posteritie, that hee woulde no more from thence forth destroy the earth with ouerflowing of water. These Adam & Noe had for sacramentes. Not that the tree did giue them immortalitie, which it coulde not giue to it selfe: nor that the Boawe (which is but a striking backe of a sunbeame vpon the cloudes against it) was of force to hold in the waters: but because they had a marke grauen in them by the worde of God, that they shoulde be examples and scales of his testaments. And the tree was a tree before, and the boawe a boaw. When they were written vpon with the worde of God, then a newe forme was put into them, that they should beginne to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these things spoken without cause, the boawe it self is at this this day also a witnes of that couenant, which God made with Noe: which boawe so oft as we beholde, wee reade this promise of God written in it, that the earth shall neuer be destroyed with ouerflowing of waters. Therefore if any fond Philosopher, to scorn the simplicitie of our faith, do affirme that such varietie of colours doeth naturally arise of reflected beames and a cloude sette against them: lette vs graunt it in deede, but lette vs laugh to scorne his senselesse follie, which doth not acknowledge God the Lorde and gouernour of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elementes to the seruice of his owne glorie. If he had emprinted such tokens in the sunne, the starres, the earth, stones, and such like, they shoulde all haue bene sacramentes to vs. Why are not vncoyned & coyned siluer both of one value, sith they are both one metall? euen because the one hath nothing but nature: when it is striken with a common marke, it is made money, and recciueth a newe valuatiō. And shal not God be able to mark his creatures with his word, that they may bee made sacraments, which before were naked elementes? Of the second kinde these were examples, when hee shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when hee watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining drie: againe hee watered the earth, the fleece being vntouched, to promise victorie to Gedcon: when he drew the shadow of the dial ix. lines backward, to promise safetie to Ezechias. These things, when they were done to relieue and stablish the weakenesse of their faith, were then also sacramentes.

19 But our present purpose is, to discourse peculiarly of those sacramentes, which the Lorde willed to bee ordinarie in his Church, to nourishe his worshippers and seruantes into one faith and the confession of one faith. For (to vse the wordes of Augustine) men can bee congeled together into into no name of religion either true or false, vnlesse they bee bounde together with some fellowship of visible signes and sacraments. Sith therefore the most good father foresawe this necessitie, he did from the beginning ordeine certaine exercises of godlinesse for his seruantes, which afterwarde Satan by turning them to wicked and superstitious worshippings, hath many waies deprauid and corrupted. Hereupon came those solemne professions of the gentiles into their holy orders, and other bastarde vsages: which although they were full of error and superstition, yet they also were therewith a prooffe that men coulde not in profession of religion bee without such outward signes. But because they neither were grounded vpon the worde of God, nor were referred to that trueth wherevnto all signes ought to bee directed, they are vnworthie to be rehearsed where mention is made of y^e holy signes which are ordeined of God and haue not swarued from their foundation, that is, that they shoulde be helpes of true godlinesse. They consist not of bare signes, as were the boawe and the tree, but vpon Ceremonies, or rather the signes that be here giuen are Ceremonies. But as it is before saide, that they be on the Lords behalfe testimonies of grace and saluation: so they be againe on our behalfe markes of profession, by which we openly sweare to the name of God, for our partes binding our faith vnto him. Therefore Chrystostome in one place fitly calleth them couenantinges whereby God bindeth him selfe in league with vs, and wee be bounde to purenesse & holinesse of life, because here is made a mutuall forme of couenanting betweene God and vs. For as the Lorde therein promiseth that hee will cancell and blot out whatsoeuer guiltines and penaltie we haue gathered by offending, and doth reconcile vs to himselfe in his only begotten sonne: so we againe on our behalves doe by this profession bind our selues vnto him to the following of godlinesse and innocence: so that a man may rightly say that such sacramentes are ceremonies, by which God will exercise his people first to the nourishing, stirring vp, and strengthening of faith inwardly, then to y^e testifying of religion before men.

20 And euen these sacraments also were diuerse, after the diuerse order of time, according to the distribution whereby it pleaseth the Lorde to shewe himselfe after this or that manner to men. For to Abraham and his posteritie Circumcision was commaunded: whereunto afterwarde purifyinges and Sacrifices, and other Ceremonies were added out of the lawe of Moses. These were the Sacramentes of the Iewes vntill the comming of Christ: at which comming those beinge abrogate, two sacramentes were ordeined, which nowe the Christian Church vseth, Baptisme, and the Supper of the Lord. I speake of those that were ordeyned for the vse of the whole Church. For as for the laying on of handes, whereby the ministers of the Church are entred into their office, as I doe not vnwillingly suffer it to bee called a Sacrament, so I doe not reckon it among the ordinarie sacramentes. As for the rest which are commonly called sacramentes, what they are to bee accounted, wee shall see by and by. Howebeit the olde sacramentes also had respecte to the same marke, whereunto ours doe tende, that is, to direct and in a manner lead by the hande to Christ: or rather as images to represent him, and shewe him forth to be knowen. For whereas wee haue alreadie

1. Cor. 1. 20. die taught, that they are certaine seales wherewith the promises of God are sealed: and where it is most certaine, that there was neuer offered any promise of God to men but in Christ: that they may teach vs of some promise of God, they must needs shewe Christ. Whereunto pertayneth that heauenly paterne of the tabernacle and of the worshipping in the lawe, which was giuen to Moses in the mount. One onely difference there is, that those did shadowe out Christ beeing promised, when hee was yet looked for: these doe testifie him already giuen and deliuered.

21. When these things shal be particularly and eche one seuerally declared, they shall bee made much plainer. Circumcision was to the Iewes a signe, whereby they were put in minde, that whatsoever commeth of the seede of man, that is to say the whole nature of man, is corrupte, and hath neede of proying. Moreouer it was a teaching, and token of remembrance whereby they shoulde confirme themselues in the promise giuen to Abraham, concerning that blessed seede in whome all the nations of the earth were to bee blessed, from whome they had their owne blessing to bee looked for. Nowe that healthfull seede (as wee are taught of Paul) was Christ, in whome alone they hoped that they shoulde recouer that which they had lost in Adam. Wherefore Circumcision was to them the same thing which Paul saith that it was to Abraham, namely the seale of the righteousnesse of faith: that is to say, the seale whereby they shoulde bee more certainly assured, that their faith, wherewith they looked for that seede, shoulde bee accounted to them of God for righteousnesse. But wee shall vpon a better occasion in another place goe through with the comparison of Circumcision & Baptisme. Baptisings and purifyings did set before their eyes their owne vncleannesse, filthinesse and pollution, wherewith they were defiled in their own nature: but they promised an other washing, whereby al their filthinesse should be wiped and washed away. And this washing was Christ, with whose blood we being washed doe bring his cleannesse into the sight of G O D, that it may hide all our defilinges. Their Sacrifices did accuse them of their owne wickednesse, and therewithall did teach, that it was necessaie that there shoulde bee some satisfaction which shoulde bee paide to the iudgement of God. That therefore there shoulde bee some one cheefe Bishoppe, a mediatur betweene God and men, which shoulde satisfie God by shedding of blood, and by offering of a Sacrifice which shoulde suffice for the forgiuenesse of sinnes. This cheefe Priest was Christ: hee himselfe shed his owne blood: hee himselfe was the Sacrifice: for hee offered himselfe obedient to his father vnto death: by which obedience hee tooke away the disobedience of man, which had prouoked the displeasure of God.

22. As for our sacramentes, they doe so much more cleerly present Christ vnto vs, as hee was more necerly shewed to men, since he hath bin truly deliuered of his father such as hee had bene promised. For Baptisme doeth testifie vnto vs that wee are cleaned and washed, y^e Supper of thanksgiving testifieth that wee bee redeemed. In water, is figured washing: in blood, satisfaction. These two thinges are founde in Christe, which (as 1. Iohn 5. 6. Iohn saith) came in water and blood, that is to say that hee might cleanse and redeeme. Of which thing the spirit of God also is a witnesse. Yea there are three witnesses in one, Water, Blood, and Spirit. In water and bloud we haue a testimonie of cleansing and redeeming: but $\hat{\text{y}}$ Spirite the principall witnesse bringeth vnto vs assured credit of such witnessing. This hie mysterie hath notably well been shewed vs in the crosse of Christ, when water and bloud flowed out of his holy side: which side for that cause Augustine rightfully called the fountaine of our Sacramentes: of which yet we must enreat somewhat more at large. There is no doubt but that more plentifull grace also of the Spirite doeth here shewe foorth it selfe if you compare time with time. For that pertaineth to the glory of the kindom of Christ, as we gather out of many places, but specially out of the 7. Chapter of Iohn. In which sense we must take that saying of Paul, that vnder the lawe were shadowes, but in Christ is the body. Neither is it his meaning to spoyle of their effect the testimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the olde time to prooue himselfe to the Fathers a true speaker, euen as at this day he doeth to vs in Baptisme and in the holy Supper. But onely his purpose was by way of comparison to magnifie that which was giuen vs, least any should thinke it maruelous, that the Ceremonies of the lawe were abolished by the comming of Christ.

23 But that same schoole doctrine (as I may also briefly touch this by the way) is vtterly to be hissed out, whereby there is noted so great a difference betweene the Sacramentes of the olde and new law, as though those did nothing but shadowe out the grace of God, and these do presently giue it. For the Apostle speaketh no lesse honorable of those than of these, when hee teacheth that the Father did eate the same spirituall meate which we eate, and expoundeth that same meate to be Christ. Who dare make that an emptie signe, which deliuered to the Iewes a true communion of Christe? And the grounde of the cause which the Apostle there handeleth, doeth plainly fight on our side. For, that no man trusting vpon a colde knowledge of Christ, and empty title of Christianitie, and outward tokens, should presume to despise the iudgement of God: hee sheweth foorth examples of Gods seueritie to be seene in the Iewes: that we should knowe that the same paines which they haue suffered, hang ouer vs, if wee followe the same faultes. Now that the comparison might be fitte, it behoued that he shoulde shew that there is no vnequalnesse betweene vs & them in those good things whereof he did forbidde vs to boast falsely. Therefore first he maketh vs equall in the Sacramentes, and leaueth to vs not so much as any small peece of prerogatiue, that might encourage vs to hope of escaping vnpunished. Neither verily is it lawefull to giue any more to our Baptisme, than he in another place giueth to circumcision, when he calleth it the seale of the righteousnesse of Faith. Whatsoeuer therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacramentes, the same thing the Iewes in olde time receiued in theirs, that is to say, Christ with his spirituall riches. What power our sacramentes haue, the same they also felt in theirs: that is to say, that they were to them seales of Gods good will towarde them, into the hope of eternall saluation. If they had bene apt expositors of the Epistle to the Hebrues, they woulde not haue so bene blinded. But when they reade there, that sinnes were not cleansed by the Ceremonies of the lawe, yea that the olde shadowes had no ling force to righteoufnesse: they neglecting the comparifon which is there handled, while they tooke hold of this one thing, that the lawe of it felfe nothing profited the folowers of it, thought fimplly that the figures were voide of trueth. But the Apostles meaning is to bring the ceremoniall lawe to nothing, vntill it come to Chrif, vppon whom alone hangeth all the effectualnesse of it.

24 But they wil obieft thofe things which are read in Paul concerning \bar{y} circūcifion of the letter, that it is in no estimation with God, that it giueth nothing, that it is vaine. For fuch fayings feeme to preffe it downe fare beneath Baptifme. Not fo. For the very fame might rightfully bee faide of Baptifme. Yea and alfo the fame is faide, firft of Paul himfelfe, where hee fheweth that God regardeth not the outward washing whereby wee enter into profefion of religion, vnleffe the minde within bee both cleaned and continue in cleannesse to the ende: againe of Peter, when he tctified: that the trueth of baptifme standeth not in the outward washing, but in a good witnessing: of confcience. But hee feemeth alfo in an other place vtterly to defpife the circūcifion made with hande, when hee compareth it with the circūcifion of Chrif. I anfwere that euen in this place nothing is abated of the dignitie of it. Paul there difputeth againft them, which required it as neceffarie when it was now abrogate. Therefore hee warneth the faithfull, that leauing the olde shadowes they fhould ftande faft in the trueth. Thefe mafters (faith he) inftantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circūcifed. But ye are fpirituallly circūcifed according to the foule and bodie. Ye haue therefore the deliuerance of the thing in deede, which is much better than the shadowe. A man might take exception to the contrary and fay that the figure is not therefore to be defpifed becaufe they had the thing in deed: forasmuch as the putting off of the olde man, of which he there fpake, was alfo among the Fathers, to whom yet outward circūcifion had not bin fuperfluous. He preuenteth this obiection, when he by and by addeth, that the Coloffians were buried with Chrif by Baptifme. Whereby hee fignifieth that at this day Baptifme is the fame to Chriftians, which circūcifion was to the old people: and therefore that circūcifion cannot bee enioined to Chriftians without wrong done to Chrif.

25 But that which followeth and which I euen nowe alleaged, is harder to affoyle, that all the Iewifhe ceremonies were shadowes of things to come, and that in Chrif is the bodie: but moft hard of all is that which is entreated in many Chapters of the Epiftle to the Hebrues, that the blood of beafts, attained not to confciences: that the lawe had a shadowe of good things to come, not an image of things: \bar{y} the folowers of it obtined no perfection of \bar{y} Ceremonies of Moses & fuch other. I go back to \bar{y} which I haue already touched, that Paul doth not therefore make the Ceremonies shadowifh, becaufe they had no found thing in them: but becaufe the fulfilling of them was after a certaine manner hanged in fufpense vntill the deliuering of Chrif. Againe I fay that this is to be vnderftanded not of the effectualnesse, but rather of the manner of fignifying. For till Chrif was manifefly fhewed in the flefh, all the fignes did shadowe him out as abfent, howfoeuer hee did inwardly vtter to the faithfull the prefence of his power and of himfelfe.

But

But this we ought chiefly to marke, that in all those places Paul doeth not speake simplie, but by way of contention. Because he strived with the false Apostles, which would haue godlinesse to consist in the Ceremonies onely without any respect of Christ: to confute them, it sufficeth onely to intreate, of what value Ceremonies are by themselves. This marke also the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes followed. Let vs therefore remember y^e here is disputed of Ceremonies, not as they bee taken in their owne and naturall signification, but as they bee wrested to a false and wrongfull exposition: not of the lawfull vse of them, but of the abuse of superstition. What maruell is it therefore if ceremonies being seuered from Christ, are vnclouted of al force? For all signes whatsoever they be, are brought to nought, when the thing signified is taken away. So when Christ had to doe with them which thought that Manna was nothing else but meat for the bellie, he applyeth his speech to their grosse opinion, and saith that he ministrereth better meat, which may feede soules to hope of immortalitie. But if you require a plainer solution, the summe of all tendeth to this: First, that all that furniture of ceremonies, which was in the lawe of Moses, is a vanishing thing and of no value, vnlesse it be directed to Christ. Secondly, that they so had respect to Christ, y^e when he at length was manifestly shewed in the flesh, they had their fulfilling. Finally that it behooued that they should bee taken away by his comming, euē as a shadowe vanisheth away in the cleare light of the sunne. But because I doe yet differre longer discourse of that matter vnto that place where I haue purposed to compare bapuzime with circumcision, therefore I do now more sparingly touch it.

Ioh. 6. 27.

26 Perhappes also those immeasurable praises of Sacraments, which are read in olde writers concerning our signes, deceiued those miserable Sophisters. As this of Augustine. That the Sacramentes of the olde lawe did onely promise the Sauour, but ours doe giue saluation. When they marked not that these and such other formes of speaking were spoken: they also published their excessiue doctrines, but in a cleane contrarie sense from the writing of y^e old fathers. For Augustine ment no other thing in y^e place, than as the same Augustine writeth in an other place, That the Sacramentes of the lawe of Moses did foretell of Christ, but ours do tell of him present. And against Faustus. That those were promises of things to be fulfilled, these were tokens of things fulfilled: as if hee should say, that those figured him when hee was looked for, but ours doe as it were shew him present which hath bin already deliuered. Moreouer he speaketh of the manner of signifying, as also he sheweth in an other place. The lawe (saith hee) and the Prophers had Sacramentes, foretelling of a thing to come: but the Sacraments of our time doe testifie that that is already come, which those did declare to be to come. But what he thought of the thing and effectualnesse, hee expoundeth in many places: as when he saith, that the Sacraments of the Iewes were in signes, diuerse: but in the thing signified, egall with ours: diuerse invisible forme, but egall in spirituall power. Againe: In diuerse signes is all one faith: so in diuerse signes, as in diuerse wordes: because wordes chaunge their soundes by times: and truely wordes are nothing but signes. The Fathers did drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they dronke not the same bodily drinke.

See ye therefore, Faith remaining one, the signes varied. To them the rocke was Christ: to vs that is Christ which is set vpon the altar. And they dronke for a great Sacrament, the water flowing out of the rocke: what we drinke, the faithfull knowe. If thou consider the visible forme they dronke an other thing: if an vnderstandable signification they dronke the same spirituall drinke. In an other place, in the mysterie the same is their meate and drinke which is ours: but the same in signification, not in forme: because the selfe same Christ was figured to them in the rocke, and shewed to vs in the flesh. Howbeit in this behalfe also we grant that there is some difference. For both sacramentes doe testifie that the fatherly good will of God and the graces of the holy Ghost are offered vs in Christ: but our Sacraments testifie it more clearly and brightly. In both is a deliuering of Christ: but in these more plenteous and fuller, namely as that difference of the olde and newe Testament beareth, of which we haue entreated before. And this is it that the same Augustine meant (whom we more often alleage as the best and faithfulllest witnessse of all the olde writers) where he teacheth, that when Christ was reuealed, Sacraments were ordeyned both in number fewer, in signification hier, in force more excellent. Of this thing also it is expedient that the readers briefly be warned, that whatsoeuer the Sophisters haue triflingly taught concerning the worke wrought, is not onely false, but disagreeeth with the nature of the sacramentes, which God hath ordeined, that the faythfull being voyde and needie of all good thinges shoulde bring nothing thither but beggerie. Whereupon followeth that in receiuing them, these men doe nothing whereby they may deserue praise: or that in doing (which in this their respect is meere passiuie) no worke can be ascribed vnto them.

The xv. Chapter.

Of Baptisme.

Baptisme is a signe of the entring wherewith we are receiued into fellowship of the Church, that being grafted into Christ, we may bee reckened among the childrin of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I haue taught to be common to all the mysteries) first, that it should serue to our faith with him, and to our confession before men. Wee will orderly declare the manner of both purposes. Baptisme bringeth three things to our Faith, which also must bee seuerally intreated off. This is the first which the Lorde setteth out vnto vs, that it shoulde be a token and prooffe of our cleansing: or (to expresse my minde better) it is like to a certaine sealed charter, whereby hee confirmeth vnto vs, that all our sinnes are so defaced, cancelled, and blotred out, that they may neuer come in his sight, not be rehearsed, not be imputed. For he willeth that all they that beleue, should be baptised into forgiuenesse of sinnes. Therefore they which thought that baptisme is nothing else but a marke and token whereby wee professe our religion before men, as souldiers beare the conufance of their captaine for maark of their profession, wey not that which was the cheefe thing in Baptisme. That is this, that wee shoulde receiue it with this promise, that whosoever

beleue & are baptised, shalbe saued.

2 In this sense is that to be vnderstoode which Paul writeth, that the Church is sanctified of Christ her spouse, and cleansed with washing of water in the word of life. And in another place, that we are saued according to his mercie by the washing of regeneration and of the rening of the holy Ghost. And that which Peter writeth, that baptisme saueth vs. For Pauls will was not to signifie, that our washing and saluation is perfectly made by water, or that water containeth in it selfe the power to cleanse, regenerate, & reue. Neither did Peter meane the cause of saluation, but onely the knowledge and certaintie of such giftes to bee receiued in this Sacrament: which is evidently enough expressed in the wordes themselues. For Paul knitteth together the worde of life, and baptisme of water: as if he had said, that by the Gospel the message of washing and sanctifying is brought vs, & by baptisme such message is sealed. And Peter immediatly adioyneth, that that baptisme is not the putting away of the filthines of the flesh, but a good conscience before God, which is of Faith. Yea baptisme promiseth vs no other cleansing, but by the sprinkling of the bloud of Christ: which is figured by water, for the likenesse of cleansing and washing. Who therefore can say that wee be cleansed by this water, which certainly testifieth that the bloud of Christ is our true and onely washing? So that from no where else can be fetched a surer reason to confute their blinde error which referre all things to the power of the water, than from the signification of Baptism it selfe: which doeth withdrawe vs as well from that visible element which is set before our eyes, as from all other meanes, that it may bind our mindes to Christ alone.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptisme is applied only to the time past, that for newe fallings, into which we fall backe after Baptisme, we must seeke newe remedies of cleansing in I wote not what other Sacramentes, as though the force of Baptisme were worne out of vse. By this error it came to passe in olde time, that some woulde not bee baptised but in the vttermost perill of life, and at their last gaspings, that so they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Against which waywarde suttile prouision the olde Bishops so oft inuey in their writings. But thus wee ought to thinke, that at what time soeuer we be Baptised, we are at once washed and cleansed for all our life. Therefore so oft as we fall we must go back to the remembrance of Baptisme, & therewith we must arme our mind, that it may be alway certaine & assured of the forgiuenes of sinnes. For though when it is once ministred, it seemeth to be past, yet by later sinnes it is not abolished. For the cleannes of Christ is therein offred vs: that alway flourisheth, is oppressed wth no spots, but ouerwhelmeth & wipeth away all our filthines: yet ought we not to take therof a libertie to sinne in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to such boldnes) but this doctrine is giuen onely to them, which when they haue sinned, do grone w^{eried} & oppressed vnder their sinnes, that they may haue wherewith they may raise vp & comfort themselues, least they should fall into confusion & desperation. So Paul saith, that Christ was made to vs a propitiator, vnto the forgiuenes of faults going before. Wherein he denyeth not y^t therein is obtained perpetuall & continuall forgiuenesse of sinnes euen vnto death: but he meaneth that it was giuen of the Father, onely to poore sinners, which wounded with the searing iron of conscience, doe sigh to the Phisitian. To these the mercie of God is offred. They which by escaping of punishment do hunt for matter & libertie to sinne, do nothing but prouoke to them selues the wrath and iudgement of God.

4 I know in deede that it is commonly thought otherwise, that by the benefite of repentance & of the keies we do after Baptisme obtaine forgiveness, which at our first regeneration is giuen vs by only Baptisme. But they which devise this do erre herein that they do not remember y^e the power of the keies, whereof they speake, doth so hang vpon baptisme that it ought in no wise to be seuered. The sinner receiueth forgiveness by the ministerie of the Church, namely not without the preaching of the Gospel. But what manner of preaching is that? That wee be cleansed from sinnes by the bloud of Christ. But what signe & testimonie is there of that washing, but Baptisme? We see therefore how that absolution is referred to Baptisme. And this error hath bred vs the fained Sacrament of penance: of which I haue touched somewhat before, & the residue I will make an end of in place fit for it. But it is no marueile if men, which according to the grossenesse of their wit were immeasurably fast tied to outward things, haue in this behalf also bewrayed that fault, that not contented with the pure institution of God, they did thrust in newe helps fained of themselves. As though baptisme it self were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force also of baptisme ought to be extended to the same boundes. Wherefore it is also no dout but that all the godly throughout all their life long, so oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conscience of their owne sinnes, dare call backe themselves to the remembrance of baptisme, y^e thereby they may confirme themselves in the affiance of that only & continuall washing which we haue in the bloud of Christ.

5 It bringeth also another frute, because it sheweth vs our mortification in Christ, & new life in him. For (as the Apostle saith) wee are baptised into his death, being buried together with him into death, that wee may walke in newnesse of life. By which wordes he doth not only exhort vs to the following of him (as though he did say, that we are by baptisme put in minde, that after a certaine example of the death of Christ, wee should die to our lustes: and after the example of his resurrection, we should bee raised vp to righteousness,) but he fetcheth the matter much deeper: that is to say, that by baptisme Christ hath made vs partakers of his death, that wee may bee grafted into it. And as the grasse receiueth substance and nourishment of the roote into which it is grafted: so they that receiue baptisme with such faith as they ought, do truly feele the effectualnesse of the death of Christ in the mortifying of their flesh: and therewithall also they feele the effect of his resurrection in the quickening of the Spirite. Hereupon he gathereth matter of exhortation: that if wee be Christians, we ought to be dead to sinne, and to liue to righteousness. This selfe same argument he vseth in another place: that wee be circumcised, and haue put off the olde man, since that wee be buried in Christ by Baptisme. And in this sense, in the same place which wee haue before alleaged, hee called it the washing of regeneration and of renewing.

Rom. 6. 3.

Col. 2. 12.
Tit. 3. 5.

ning. Therefore first free forgiveness of sinnes and imputation of righteousness is promised vs, and then the grace of the holy Ghost, which may reforme vs into newnesse of life.

6 Last of all our Faith receiveth also this profit of baptism, that it certainly testifieth vnto vs, that we are not onely grafted into the death & life of Christ, but that we are so vnited to Christ himselfe that wee are partakers of all his good things. For therefore he hath dedicated and hallowed Baptisme in his owne bodie, that he might haue it common with vs, as a moste strong bond of the vnitie and fellowship which he vouchsafed to enter into with vs: so that Paul proueth therby that we be the children of God, because wee haue put on Christ in baptism. So we see that the fulfilling of baptism is in Christ, whome also for this reason we call the proper obiekt of baptism. Therefore it is no marueile if it be reported that the Apostles baptised into his name, which yet were commaunded to baptise into the name of the Father also and of the holy Ghost. For whatsoever giftes of God are set foorth in baptism, are founde in Christ alone. And yet it cannot bee, but that hee which baptiseth into Christ, doe therewithall call vpon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghost. For wee are therefore cleansed with his blood, because the mercifull Father according to his incomparable kindnes, willing to receiue vs into fauour, hath set him a mediator in the middest to procure to vs fauour with him. But regeneration wee so onely obtaine by his death and resurrection, if being sanctified be the Spirite we be endued with a newe and spirituall nature. Wherefore both of our cleansing & regeneration: we obtaine and after a certaine maner distinctly perceiue the cause in y^e Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the holy Ghost. So Iohn first baptised, so afterward the Apostles, with the baptism of repentance into the forgiveness of sinnes: meaning by this word repentance, such regeneration: and by forgiveness of sinnes, washing.

7 Whereby also it is made most certaine, y^e the ministerie of Iohn was altogether the same which was afterwarde committed to the Apostles. For the diuerse hands wherewith it is ministred, make not the baptism diuers: but the same doctrine sheweth it to be the same baptism. Iohn and the Apostles agreed into one doctrine, both baptised into repentance, both into the forgiveness of sinnes, both into the name of Christ, from whome was both repentance and forgiveness of sinnes. Iohn said y^e he was the lamb of God, by whome the sinnes of the worlde should be taken away: where hee made him the Sacrifice acceptable to the Father, the propitiator of righteousness, the author of saluation. What could the Apostles adde to this confession? Wherefore let it trouble no man, that the old writers labor to seuer the one from the other, whose voice wee ought not so much to esteeme that it may shake the certaintie of the Scripture. For who wil rather harken to Chrysostome denying that forgiveness of sinnes was comprehended in the baptism of Iohn, than to Luke contrariwise affirming y^e Iohn preached the baptism of repentance into the forgiveness of sinne? Neither is that suttletie of Augustine to be receiued, that in the baptism of Iohn, sinnes were forgiven in hope, but in the baptism of Christ they are forgiven in deede. For whereas the Euangelist plainly testifieth, that Iohn in his baptism promised the forgiuenes of finnes: what neede we to abate this title of commendatiō, when no necessitie compelleth vs vnto it? But if any man seeke for a difference out of the worde of God, he shall finde none other but this, that Iohn baptised into him that was to come, the Apostles into him that had alreadie presented himselfe.

8 As for this that more abundant graces of the Spirite were poured out since the resurrection of Christ, it maketh nothing to stablish a diuersitie of baptismes. For the Baptisme which the Apostles ministred while he was yet conuerfant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifulnesse of the Spirite, than the baptisme of Iohn. Yea, euen after his ascension, the Spirite was not giuen to the Samaritans about the common measure of the faithfull before the ascension, although they were baptised into the name of Iesus, till Peter and Iohn were sent vnto them to lay their handes vpon them. This onely thing, as I thinke, deceiued the olde writers, that they saide that the baptisme of Iohn was but a preparation to the baptisme of Christ, because they reade, that they were baptised againe of Paul, which had once receiued the baptisme of Iohn. But how much they were herein deceiued, shall else where be plainly declared in place fit for it. What is it therefore that Iohn saide, that he baptised in deede with water, but that Christ should come which should baptise with the holy Ghost, and with fire? This may in fewe wordes be assoyled. For he meant not to put difference betweene the one baptisme and the other, but he compared his owne person with the person of Christ, saying that himselfe was a minister of water, but y^e Christ was the giuer of the holy Ghost, and should declare his power by visible miracle the same day that he should sende the holy Ghost to the Apostles vnder fyrie tongs. What could the Apostles boast of more than this? What more could they also that baptise at this day? For they be onely ministers of the outward signe, and Christ is the author of the inward grace: as the same olde writers themselues do euery where teach, & specially Augustine, whose principall stay against the Donatistes is this, that what a one soeuer he be, y^e baptiseth, yet onely Christ is ruler of it.

9 These things which we haue spoken both of mortification & of washing, are shadowed out in the people of Israel, whome for the same cause the Apostle saith to haue bene baptised in the cloude and in the sea. Mortifying was figured, when the Lord deliuering them out of the hande of Pharao and from cruell bondage, made for them a way through the red sea, and drowned Pharao himselfe, and the Aegyptians their enemies, that followed them harde at their backes, and were euen in their necks to ouertake them. For after the same maner also he promiseth to vs in baptisme, and by a signe giuen sheweth vs, that we are by his power brought forth and deliuered out of the thraldome of Aegypt, that is to say, out of the bondage of sinne: that our Pharao is drowned, that is to say the diuel, although euen so also hee ceaseth not to exercise & wearie vs. But as that Aegyptian was not throwe downe into the bottome of the sea, but being ouerthrowen on the shore, did yet with terrible sight make the Israclites afraid, but could not hurt them: so this our enemy yet in deede threateneth, sheweth his weapons, is felt, but cannot overcome. In the cloud was a signe of cleansing. For as then the lord covered couered them with a cloude cast ouer them, and gaue them refreshing cold, Num. 9. 14. least they should faint and pine away with too cruell burning of the sunne: so in baptisme wee acknowledge our selues couered and defended with the bloud of Christ, least the seueritie of God, which is in deede an intollerable flame, should lie vpon vs. But although this mysterie was then darke & known to fewe: yet because there is none other way to obtaine saluation, but in those two graces, God would not take away the signe of them both from y^e old fathers, whome he had adopted to be heires.

10 Nowe it is cleare, how false that is which some haue lately taught, & wherein some yet continue, that by baptisme wee bee loosed and deliuered from originall sinne, and from the corruption which was from Adam spread abroade into his whole posteritie, and that wee bee restored into the same righteousnes and purenes of nature, which Adam should haue obtained, if he had stand fast in the same vprightnesse wherein he was first created. For such kinde of teachers neuer vnderstood what was originall sinne, nor what was originall righteousnesse, nor what was the grace of baptisme. But wee haue alreadie proued, that originall sinne is the peruersnesse and corruption of our nature, which first maketh vs guiltie of the wrath of God, and then also bringeth forth workes in vs, which the Scripture calleth the workes of the flesh. Therefore these two points are seuerally to be marked, namely that we being in all partes of our nature defiled and corrupted are alreadie for such corruption only, holden worthily condemned & conuicted before God, to whome nothing is acceptable but righteousnes, innocencie and cleannesse. Yea, & verie infants themselues bring their owne damnation with them frō their mothers wombe. Who, although they haue not yet brought forth the frutes of their iniquitie, yet haue the seede thereof inclosed within them. Yea, their whole nature is certaine seede of sinne, therefore it cannot but be hatefull and abhominable to God. The faithfull are certified by baptisme y^e this damnation is taken away, and driuen from them: forasmuch (as wee haue alreadie said) the Lord doth by this signe promise vs that full and perfect forgiuenesse is graunted both of the fault which should haue bene imputed to vs, & of the paine which wee should haue suffred for the fault: they take hold also of righteousnes, but such as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to say by imputation only: because the Lord of his own merce taketh them for righteous and innocent. Gal. 5. 19.

11 The other point is, that this peruersnesse neuer ceaseth in vs, but continually bringeth forth new frutes, namely those workes of y^e flesh which we haue before described: none otherwise than a burning fornace continually bloweth out flame & sparcles, or as a spring infinitely casteth out water. For lust neuer vterly dyeth & is quenched in men, vntill being by death deliuered out of the bodie of death, they haue vterly put off themselues. Baptisme in deede promiseth vs y^e our Pharao is drowned, & the mortification of sin: yet not so y^e it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but onely y^e it may not ouercome vs. For so long as we liue enclosed within this prison of our body, the remnants of sinne shall dwell in vs: but if we holde fast by faith the promise giuen vs of God in baptisme, they shall not beare rule nor reigne. But let no man deceiue himselfe: Let no man flatter himselfe in his own euil, when he heareth that sinne alway dwelleth in vs. These things are not spoken to this ende, that they should carelesly sleepe vpon their sins, which are otherwise too much enclined to sinne: but onely, that they should not faint & be discouraged, which are tickled & pricked of their flesh. Let them rather thinke that they are yet in the way, and let them beleue y they haue much profited, when they feele that there is daily somewhat diminished of their lust, til they haue attained thither whither they trauaile, namely to y last death of their flesh, which shalbe ended in the dying of this mortall life. In the meane time let them not cesse both to striue valiantly, and to encourage them to go forward, and to stirre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeouours, that they see y after that they haue long trauailed, they haue yet no small businesse remaining. This wee ought to holde: we are baptised into the mortifying of our flesh, which is begon by baptisme in vs, which we daily follow: but it shalbe made perfect when wee shall remoue out of this life to the Lord.

12 Here we say no other thing, than the Apostle Paul in the seventh Chapter to the Romanes most clearly setteth out. For after that he had disputed of free righteousnes, because some wicked men did thereof gather, that we might liue after our owne lust, because we should not be acceptable to God by the deseruings of woikes: he addeth, that al they that are clothed with the righteousnes of Christ, are therewith regenerate in Spirite, & that of this regeneration wee haue an earnest in baptisme. Hereupon he exhorteth the faithfull, that they suffer not sinne to haue dominion in their members. Now because he knewe that there is alway some weaknesse in the faithfull: that they should not therefore be discouraged, he adioyneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the lawe. Because againe it might seme, that Christians might growe insolent, because they are not vnder the yoke of the lawe, he entreateth what maner of abrogating that is, and therewithal what is the vse of the lawe: which question he had nowe the seconde time differed. The summe is, that wee be deliuered from the rigour of the lawe, that wee should cleaue to Christ: but that the office of the lawe is, that wee being conuincd of our peruersnesse, should confesse our owne weaknesse and miserie. Nowe forasmuch as that peruersnesse of nature doeth not so easily appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his own lustes without feare of God: he setteth an example in a man regenerate, namely in himselfe. He saith therefore that he hath a continuall wrastring with the remnants of his flesh, and that he is holden bounde with miserable bondage, that he cannot consecrate himselfe wholly to the obedience of the law of God. Therefore he is compelled with groning to crie out: Vnhappie am I. Who shall deliuer me out of this body subiect to death? If the children of God be holden captiue in prison so long as they liue, they must needes be much carefully grieued with thinking vpon their owne peril, vnlesse this feare be met withall. Therefore he adioyneth to this vse a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Christ Iesu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lorde hath once receiued into fauour, engrafted into the communion of his Christ, hath by baptisme admitted into y fellowship of his church, while they continue in the faith of Christ, although they bee besieged.

of sinne, yea and carie sinne about within them, yet are acquitted from guiltines & condemnation. If this be the simple and naturall exposition of Paul, there is no cause why we should seeme to teach any new vnwonted thing.

13 But Baptisme so serueth our confession before men. For it is a marke, whereby wee openly professe that we would be accounted among the people of God: whereby we testifie that wee agree with all Christians into the worshipping of one God and into one religion: finally wherby we openly affirme our faith: that not onely our hearts should breath out the praise of God, but also our tongue, and all the members of our bodie shoulde sounde it out with such vtterances as they be able. For so, as we ought, all our things are employed to the seruice of the glorie of God, wherof nothing ought to be void, and other may by our example be stirred vp to the same indeuours. Herevnto Paul had respect, when hee asked the Corinthians whether they had not bene baptised into the name of Christ: meaning verily, that euen in this that they were baptised into his name, they avowed themselues vnto him, swore to his name, and bounde their faith to him before men, that they coulde no more confesse any other, but Christ alone, vnlesse they would forsake the confession which they had made in baptisme.

1. Cor. 1. 2.

14 Now sith it is declared what our Lorde had regard vnto in the institution of baptisme: it is plaine to iudge what is the way for vs to vse and receiue it. For so farre as it is giuen to the raising, nourishing and confirming of our faith, it is to be taken as from the hande of the author himselfe: we ought to hold it certaine and fully persuaded, that it is he which speaketh to vs by the signe, that it is he which cleanseth vs, washeth vs, and putteth away the remembrance of our sinnes, that it is hee which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdome, which feebleth the forces of our lust, yea which groweth into one with vs, that beeing clothed with him we may be reckoned the children of God: that these things, I say, he doth inwardly so truly and certainly performe to our soule, as wee certainly see our bodie outwardly to be washed, dipped, and clothed. For this either relation, or similitude, is the most sure rule of Sacraments: that in bodily things we should behold spiritual things, as if they were presently set before our eyes, forasmuch as it hath pleased the Lord to represent the by such figures: not for that such graces are bound and enclosed in the Sacrament, that they should be giuen vs by the force thereof: but onely because y Lorde doth by this token testifie his will vnto vs, that is, that hee will giue vs all these things. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked sight, but he bringeth vs to the thing present, and together fulfilleth that which it figureth.

15 Hereof let Cornelius the captaine be an example, which was baptised, having before receiued forgiuennesse of sinnes and visible graces of the holy Ghost: seeking not by baptisme a larger forgiuennesse but a more certain exercising of faith, yea an encrease of confidence by a pledge. Per aduerture some man will obiect: why therefore did Ananias say to Paul, that he should washe away his sinnes by baptisme, if sinnes bee not washed away by the power of baptisme it selfe? I aunswere: Wee are saide to receiue, to obtaine, to get that which so farre as concerneth the feeling of our faith, is giuen vs

Act. 10. 48.

Act. 9. 17.

of the Lord, whether he doe then first testifie it, or being testified doth more and certainlier confirme it. This therfore only was the meaning of Ananias: that thou maiest be assured, Paul, that thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, be baptised. For the Lorde doth in baptisme promise forgiuenes of sins: receiue this, and be out of care. Howbeit I meane not to diminish the force of baptisme, but that the thing and the truth is present with the signe, so farre as GOD worketh by outward meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of all other, we obtaine nothing but so much as we receiue by Fayth. If we want faith, it shall be for a witness of our vnthankfulnesse, whereby we may be declared guilty before God, because we haue not beleued the promise there giuen. But so far as it is a signe of our confession, we ought by it to testifie that our affiance is in the mercie of God, and our cleanness is in the forgiuenesse of sinnes, which is gotten vs by Iesus Christ: and that by it we enter into the Church of Christe, that wee may with one consente of Fayth and charitie liue of one minde with al the faithfull. This last pointe didde Paule meane, when he sayeth that wee are all baptised in one Spirite, that wee may be one body.

1. Cor. 12. 13

16 Nowe if this be true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be weyed according to his hande of whom it is ministred, but as of the very hande of God, from whom without dout it proceeded: hereupon we may gather, that nothing is added to it nor taken from it by the worthynesse of him by whose hande it is deliuered. And euen as among men, if a letter be sent, so that the hand & the seale be well knowen, it maketh no matter who or what manner of man be the carrier: so it ought to suffice to acknowe the hande and seale of the Lorde in his Sacramentes, by what carriersfoeuer they be brought. Hereby the error of the Donatistes is very well confuted, which measured the force and value of the Sacrament by the worthynesse of the minister. Such at this day are our Catabaptistes, which denie that wee be rightly baptised, because we were baptised by wicked men & idolaters in the popish kingdome: therefore they furiously cal vpō vs to be baptised again. Against whose follies we shalbe armed with a reason strong enoughe, if wee thinke that wee were professed by baptisme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghost, and that therefore it is not the baptisme of man, but of GOD, of whomefoeuer it be ministred. Although they were neuer so muche ignorant or despisers of God and all godlinesse, which baptised vs: yet they did not baptise vs into the fellowshippe of their owne ignorance or sacrilege, but into the fayth of Iesus Christe: because they called not vpon their owne name, but the name of GOD, nor baptised vs into any other name. Nowe if it were the baptisme of God, it hath verily enclosed in it a promise of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, the mortifying of the flesh, the spirituall quickning, and the partaking of Christ. So it nothing hindered the Iewes, to haue bene circumcised of vnclean priestes and apostataes: neither was the signe therefore voyde, that it needed to bee done of newe: but it was sufficient to returne to the naturall beginning. Where they obiecte that baptisme ought to bee celebrate in the assemblies of the godly, that prouoeth not, that that which is faulty in part, should destroy the whole force thereof. For when we teache

what.

what ought to be done that baptisme may be pure, and voyde of al defiling, we doe not abolish the ordinance of God, although idolaters corrupt it. For when in old time Circumcision was corrupted with many superstitions, yet it ceased not to be taken for a signe of grace: neither did Iosias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of all Israel them that had departed from God, call them to a seconde Circumcision.

17 Nowe whereas they aske vs, what faith of ours hath yet followed baptisme in certaine yeares past, that they might thereby prooue that the baptisme is voyde, when it is not sanctified vnto vs, but by the worde of promise receiued by faith: to this question we aunswere that we indeede being blinde and vnbeleeuing, did in a long time not holde fast the promise giuen vs in baptisme: yet the promise it selfe, for as much as it was of God, continued alway stayed, stedfast, and true. Although all men be liers and faithbreakers, yet God ceaseth not to be true: although all men be lost, yet Christ remaineth saluation. We confesse therefore that Baptisme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: forasmuch as in it y^e promise offered vs, without which baptisme is nothing, lay nothing regarded. Nowe sith by the grace of God, wee haue begonne to waxe wiser, we accuse our owne blindnesse and hardnesse of heart, which haue so long beene vnthankfull to his so great goodnesse. But wee beleue that the promise it selfe is not vanished away: but rather thus wee consider, God by baptisme promiseth the forgiuenesse of sins, and sith hee hath promised it, will vndoubtedly performe it to all that beleue it. That promise was offered vs in baptisme: by faith therefore let vs embrace it. It hath indeede long beene buried from vs because of infidelitie: nowe therefore let vs receiue it by faith. Wherefore where the Lorde calleth the Iewish people to repentance, hee giueth them no commaundement of a seconde Circumcision, which being (as we haue saide) circumcised with a wicked and vngodly hande, liued a certaine time intangled with the same wickednesse. But hee earnestly calleth vpon the onely turning of the heart. Because, howe soeuer the couenant was broken of them, yet the signe of the couenant, by the ordinance of the Lorde, remained alway stedfast and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were restored into the couenant which the Lorde had once made with them in circumcision: which yet being receiued by the hand of a leaguebreaker priest, so much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

Rom. 3. 3.

18. But they thinke that they shake a fiery dart at vs, when they alleadge that Paul rebaptised them which were once baptised with the baptisme of Iohn. For if by our owne confession, the baptisme of Iohn was altogether the same that ours is nowe: euen as they hauing beene before peruersely instructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe baptised into it: so that baptisme, which was without true Doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newly baptised againe into y^e true religion, wherewith we are nowe first instructed. Some thinke, that there was some wrongfully affectioned man to Iohn, which had entred them with their first baptisme rather to a vaine superstition. Of which thing they secme to gather a coniecture herevppon, because they confessed themselues to bee vtterly ignorant of the Holy Ghost: whereas Iohn verily woulde neuer haue sent a way from himselfe scholers so vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes although they had not bene baptised at all, were destitute of all knowledge of the holy Ghost, which is famously spoken off by so many testimonies of the scripture. Whereas therefore they aunswere that they knowe not whether there bee a Holy Ghost, it is to be vnderstande as if they had said that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirit, of which Paul asked them, were giuen to the Disciples of Christ. But I graunt that that was the true baptisme of Iohn, and all one and the selfe same with the baptisme of Christ: but I denie that they were baptised againe. What then meane these wordes, they were baptised in the name of Iesus? Some doe expounde it, that they were but instructed of Paul with true doctrine. But I had rather vnderstande it more simplicie, to bee the baptisme of the holy ghost, that is to say, that the visible graces of the Spirit were giuen them by the laying on of handes: which to bee expressed by the name of baptisme, is no newe thing. As on the day of Pentecost it is saide, that the Apostles remembred the wordes of the Lorde, concerning the baptisme of fire and of the spirit. And Peter saith that the same came to his remembrance, when hee sawe those graces poured out vpon Cornelius, and his householde and kinred. Neither is that contrarie which is after adioyned, When he had laid his handes on them, the Holy Ghost came downe vpon them. For Luke doeth not tell of two diuerse thinges: but followeth the manner of telling commonly vsed among the Hebrewes, which do first propound the summe of the matter, and then doe set it out more at large. Which euery man may perceiue by the very framing together of the wordes. For hee saith, When they had heard these thinges, they were baptised in the name of Iesus. And when Paul had laide his handes vpon them, the Holy Ghost came downe vpon them. In this latter sentence is described, what manner of baptisme that was. If ignorance doe so corrupte a former Baptisme, that it must bee amended with a second baptisme: the Apostles should haue bene rebaptised first of all, which in whole three yeares after their baptisme, had scarcely tasted any small parcell of purer doctrine. And now among vs what riuers might suffice to renewe so many washinges, as there be ignorances by the mercie of the Lord daily amended in vs?

19 The force, dignitie, profit, and end of the mysterie if I be not deceiued, ought by this time to bee plaine enough. So much as concerneth the outwarde signe, I woulde to God the naturall institution of Christ had preuailed so much as was meet, to restrain the boldnes of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to bee baptised with water according to the precept of Christe, there is inuented blessing, or rather inchaunting, to defile the true halowing of y^e water. Afterward was added a taper with chresme: but the blowing semeth to open the gate to baptisme. But although I am not ignorant, howe auncient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawfull both for me and all the godly to refuse what soeuer thinges men haue presumed to adde to the ordinance of Christ. When Satan sawe that by the foolish light credite of the worlde at the verie beginnings of the Gospell his deceits were easilie receiued, he brake forth into grosser mockeries. Hereup on spic-

tle, and like trifles, were openly brought in with vnbridled libertie to the reproch of baptisme. By which experiences let vs learne that nothing is eyther holier, or better, or safer, thā to be content with the authoritie of Christ alone. Howe much better therefore was it, leauing stagelike pompes, which dasell the eyes of the simple, and dull their mindes, so oft as any was to bee baptised, that he should be presented to the assemblie of the faithfull, and be offered to God, the whole Church looking on as a witnesse: & praying ouer him: that the confession of faith shoulde be rehearsed, wherewith he that is to bee catechised shoulde be instructed: that the promises shoulde be declared which are contained in Baptisme: that the instructed shoulde be baptised in the name of the Father, and the sonne, and the holy ghost: at length that he be sent away with prayers and thankesgiuing. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely Ceremonie which proceeded from God the authour thereof, should most cleerely shine, being not ouerwhelmed with any forcine filthinesse. But whether he be wholly dipped which is baptised, & that thrise or once, or whether he be but sprinkled with water onely powred vpon him, it maketh very little matter: but that ought to be at libertie to Churches according to the diuersitie of countries. Howbeit the very worde of baptizing signifieth to dip, and it is certaine that the maner of dipping was vsed of the old Church.

20 This also perteyneth to the purpose, to know that it is done amisse if priuate men take vpon themselues the administration of baptisme. For as well the distribution of this as of the Supper is a part of the ecclesiastical ministerie. For Christ did not commaunde women, nor yet euery sort of men, that they shoulde baptize: but whom he had ordeined his Apostles, to them he gaue this commandement. And when he commanded his disciples to do that in the ministracion of the Supper which they had seene him doe, when he executed the office of a right distributor: he woulde without doubt, that they shoulde therein follow his example. As for this that in many ages past, yea and in a maner at the verie beginning of the Church, it hath beene receiued in vse, that lay men might baptise in peril of death, if the minister were not present in time. I see not with howe strong a reason it may be defended. The very old fathers themselues, which either helde or suffered this maner, were not sure whether it were well done. For Augustine seemeth to haue this doubt, when he saith: Although a lay man compelled by necessitie do giue baptisme, I can not tell whether a man may godlily say that it ought to be iterate. For if it be done when no necessitie compelleth, it is the vsurping of an other mans office: but if necessitie enforceth, it is either none or a veniall sinne. More ouer of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they should not presume to baptize at al. But there is daunger, least if hee which is sicke shoulde die without baptisme, hee shoulde be deprived of the grace of regeneration. Not so, God pronounceth that hee adopteth our infants to bee his owne, before they bee borne, when hee promiseth that hee will be a God to vs and to our seed after vs. In this word is contained their saluation. Neither shal any man dare to bee so reprochfull against God, to denie that his promise is of it selfe sufficient to worke the effect thereof. Howe much harme that doctrine being being euill expounded, y baptisme is of necessitie to saluation, hath brought in, fewe doe marke: and therefore they take lesse heed to themselues. For where this opinion is growen in force, that all are lost to whome it hath not happened to be washed with water, our state is worse thā the state of the old people, as though the grace of God were now more narrowly strengthened than it was vnder the lawe. For Christ shalbe thought to bee come, not to fulfill the promises, but to abolishe them: forasmuch as the promise which then was of it selfe effectuell enough to giue health before the eighth day, now should not be of force without helpe of the signe.

21 But howe the custome was before that Augustine was borne, first is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to speake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptise, nor to offer, that shee shoulde not claime to her selfe the execution of any mans office, much lesse of y Priestes. Of the same thing Epiphanius is a substantiall witnesse, where hee reprocheth Marcion, y he gaue women libertie to baptise. Neither am I ignorant of their aunswere which thinke otherwise, that is, that common vse much differeth from extraordinarie remedy, when extreme necessitie inforceth: but when he pronouncing that it is a mockerie to giue women libertie to baptise, excepteth nothing, it sufficiently appeareth that he condemneth this corruption, so that it is by no color excusable. Also in the third booke, where teaching that it was not permitted euen to the holy mother of Christ, he addeth no restraints.

22 The example of Sephora is vnseasonable alleaged. For whereas y Angel of God was appeased, after that she taking a stone, circumcised her sonne, thereuppon it is wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwise it ought to bee saide, that the worshipping which the nations that were brought out of Assyria raised vp, pleased God. But by other strong reasons it is prooued, that that which a foolish woman did, is wrongfully drawn to an example of imitation. If I shoulde say that it is a certaine singular case, which ought not to be made an example, & specially y sith it is no where red that in olde time there was giuen to the Priestes a speciall commaundement to circumcise, the order of Circumcision and Baptisme is vnlike: this shoulde bee strong enough to confute them. For the wordes of Christ are plaine: Goe ye, teach all nations, and baptise. When hee ordeined the selfe same men publishers of the Gospel, and ministers of Baptisme: and none (as the Apostle witnesseth) doeth take honour vpon himselfe in the Church, but hee that is called as Aaron: whosoever without lawfull calling baptiseth, hee rusheth into an other mans office. Euen in the smallest things, as in meate and drinke, whatsoeuer we enterprise with a doubtfull conscience, Paul openly cryeth out to bee sinne. Therefore in womens baptising is much more grieuously sinne, where it is euident that they brake the rule appointed by Christ: forasmuch as wee knowe that it is vnlawfull to plucke in sunder those things that God conioyneth. But all this I passe ouer. Onely I woulde haue the readers to note, that Sephoraes purpose was nothing lesse, than to doe any seruice to God. Seeing her sonne to bee in danger, she grudged, and murmured, and not without stomacking threwe the foreskinne vpon the ground, she so taunted her husbande, y she was also angry with God. Finally it is plaine that all this came of a furiousnesse of mind, because she murmured against God and her husband, for that she was compelled to shed the blood of her sonne. Moreouer if she had in all other things behaued her selfe well, yet herein is an vnexcusable rashe presumption y^e she circumcised her sonne, her husband being present, not any priuate man, but Moses the principal Prophet of God, than whom there neuer rose any greater in Isracc: which was no more lawefull for her to do, than at this day it is for women in the sight of the bishoppe. But this controuersie shall by and by be easily taken awaie by this principle, that infantes are not debarred from the kindome of heauen, whome it happeneth to departe out of this present life before y^e it be granted the to be dipped in water. But it is already proued that no small wrong is done to the couenante of God, if we do not rest in it, as though it were weake of it selfe: where as the effect thereof hangeth neither vpon baptism, nor vpon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a seale, not that it bringeth effectualnes to the promise of God as to a thing weake of it selfe, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Wherevpon foloweth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore baptised, that they may then first be made the children of God, which before were straungers from the Church, but rather that they be therefore receiued by a solemne signe into the Church, because by the benefit of the promise they did already belong to the body of Christ. Therefore if in omitting the signe there be neither slouthfulnesse, nor contempt, nor negligence, wee are free from all danger. It is therefore much more holy, to giue this reuerence to the ordinance of God, that we seeke Sacramentes from no where else, than where the Lord hath left them. When we may not haue them of the Church, the grace of God is not so bound to them, but that we may obtain them by faith out of the worde of the Lord.

The xvi. Chapter.

That the Baptisme of infantes doth very well agree with the institution of Christ and the nature of the signe.

BVt forasmuch as in this age, certaine phrentike Spirites haue raised v^p sore troubles in the Church for the Baptisme of infantes, and doe not yet cease to turmoile: I can not chose but I must ioyne here an addition to restrain their furiousnesse. If peradventure it shall seeme to some man to be very much too long, let him (I beseech him) wey with himselfe, that we ought so much to esteeme the purenesse of doctrine in a most great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be lothsomely receiued, which may auaille to procure them both. Beside that, I so studie to frame this discourse, that it shalbe of no small importance to the clearer declaration of the mystery of Baptisme. They assaile the baptisme of infantes with an argument in deede fauorable in shewe, saying that it is grounded vpon no institution of Christ, but that it was brought in only by the boldnes of men, and peruerse curiousnesse, & then afterwarde with sonde easinesse rashly receiued in vse. For a sacrament, vnlesse it rest vpon a certaine foundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a threed. But what if, when the matter is well considered, it shall appeare that the Lorde's holy ordinance is falsely and vniustly charged with such a slander? Let vs therefore search out the first beginning of it. And if it shall appeare, that it was deuised by the onely rashnesse of men, then bidding it farewell, let vs measure the true obseruation of baptisme by the onely will of God. But if it shall be proued that it is not destitute of his certaine authoritie, wee must beware, least in pinching the holy ordinance of God, we be also slanderous against the author himselfe.

2 First it is a doctrine well enough knowen, and confessed among all the godly, that the right consideration of the signes, consisteth not onely in the outward Ceremonies: but principally hangeth vpon the promise, and vpon the spirituall mysteries, for figuring whereof the Lorde ordeineth the Ceremonies themselues. Therefore hee that will perfectly learne of what value baptisme is, to what ende it tendeth, finally what it is: let him not stay his thought vpon the element and bodily sight: but rather let him raise it vp to the promises of God, which are therein offered vs, and to the inward secrets which are therein represented vnto vs. He that knoweth these thinges, hath attained the sound truth of baptisme, and the whole substance thereof as I may so call it: and thereby also he shall be taught, what is the reason, & what is the vse of the outward sprinkling. Againe hee that contemprouously passing ouer these, shall haue his minde wholly fastened and bound to the visible Ceremonie, shall vnderstande neither the force nor propertie of baptisme: nor yet so much as this, what the water meaneth, or what vse it hath. Which sentence is proued with so many & so cleare testimonies of scripture, that we neede not at this present to tarry long about it. Therefore it remaineth now, that we seeke out of the promises giuen in baptisme, what is the force and nature of it. The scripture sheweth, that the cleansing of sinnes, which we obteine of the blood of Christ, is here first shewed: then the mortifying of the flesh, which standeth vpon the partaking of his death, by which the faithfull are regenerate into newnesse of life, yea and into the fellowship of Christ. To this summe may be referred whatsoever is taught in the Scriptures concerning baptisme: sauing that beside this it is a signe to testifie religion before men.

3 But forasmuch as before the institution of baptisme, the people of God had circumcision in stead thereof: let vs see what these two signes differ the one from the other, and with what likenesse they agree together. Wherevpon may appeare what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lorde gaue circumcision to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his seede: adding, that with him is the flowing store and suffiance of all things, that Abraham should account that his hand should be to him a spring of all good things. In which wordes the promise of eternall life is contained: as Christ expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hence to proue the immortalitie of the faithfull, and the resurrection. For God (saith he) is not y God of the dead, but of the liuing. Wherefore Paul also shewing to the Ephesians from what destruction the Lorde had deliuered them, gathereth by this that they had not bene admitted into the couenant of circumcision, that they were without Christ,

without God, without hope, strangers from the testaments of the promise: all which things the couenante it selfe contained. But the first accessse to God, the first entrie to immortal life, is the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Whereupon is gathered, that this forgiuenesse aunswereth to the promise of baptisme concerning our clensing. Afterward the Lord taketh couenante of Abraham y he should walke before him in purenesse and innocencie of heart which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man should dour, that circumcision is a signe of mortifying, Moses in an other place doth more plainly declare it, whē he exhorteth the people of Israel, to circumsise the vncircumcised skinne of the hart, because they were seuerally chosen to be the people of God out of all the nations of the earth. As God, where he adoprth the posteritie of Abraham to his people, commaundeth them to be circumsised: so Moses pronounceth that the hartes ought to be circumsised, declaring verily what is the trueth of this circumsision. Then that no man should endeouour toward it by his owne strength, he teacheth that they neede the grace of God. All these things are so often repeted of the prophets, that I neede not to heape into this place many testimonies which do each where offer themselues. We haue proued therefore, that in circumsision a spirituall promise was vttered to the fathers, such as in baptisme is giuen: for as much as it figured to them the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and the mortifying of the flesh. Moreouer as we haue taught that Christ is the foundation of baptisine, in whomē both these things remaine: so it is euidēt that he is also of circumsision. For he is promised to Abraham, and in him the blessing of all nations. To the sealing of which grace, the signe of circumsision is added.

Deut. 10. 16.

Deut. 30. 6.

4 Now we may easily see, what there is like in these two signes, or what there is differing. The promises, whereupon we haue declared that the power of the signes consisteth, is all one in both, namely of the fatherly fauor of God, of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, of life euerlasting. Then, the thing figured also is all one and the same, namely regeneration. The foundation whereupon the fulfilling of these things standeth, is all one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inwarde mysterie, whereby the whole force and proprietie of the Sacramentes is to be weied. The vnlikenesse that remaineth, lyeth in the outwarde Ceremonie, which is the smallest portion: whereas the chiefest part hangeth vpon the promise and the thing signified. Therefore we may determine, that whatsoeuer agreeth with circumsision, doeth also belong to baptisme, except the difference of the visible Ceremonie. To this relation and comparison, the Apostles rule leadeth vs by the hande, whereby wee are commanded to examine all exposition of scripture by the proportion of faith. And truely the trueth doth in this behalfe almost offer it selfe to be selte. For as circumsision, because it was a certaine token to the Iewes, whereby they were certified that they were chosen to be the people and householde of GOD and they agayne on their behalues professed that they yelded themselues to GOD, was their first entrie into the Church: so nowe also wee by baptisme enter into profession of God, that wee may bee reckened among his people, and mutually sweare to his name. Whereby it appeareth out of controuersie, that baptisme is come into the place of circumcision, that it may haue the same office with vs.

5 Nowe if we list to search out, whether baptisme bee lawfully communicate to infantes: shall wee not say that he doth too much play the foole, yea dote, which will rest onely vpon the element of water, and the outward obseruation, but cannot abide to bende his minde to the spirituall mysterie? Whereof if there be any consideration had, it shall without doubt certainly appeare that Baptisme is rightfully giuen to infantes, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lorde in olde time did not vouchsaue to admit them to circumcision, but y^e he made them partakers of all those things which were then signified by circumcision. Otherwise hee should with mere deceites haue mocked his people, if hee had fed them with deceitful signes, which is horrible euen to bee hearde of. For he pronounceth expressly, that the circūcision of a little infant shoulde be instead of a seale to seale the promise of the couenant. But if the couenant remaine vnbroken and stedfast, it doth at this day no lesse belong to the children of Christians, than vnder the olde testament it pertained to the infantes of the Iewes. But if they bee partakers of the thing signified, why shall they be debarred from the signe? if they haue the truth, why shall they be put backe from the figure? Although the outward signe cleaue fast together with the worde in the Sacrament, so that they can not be plucked in sunder: yet if they be severally considered, whether of them, I pray you, shall wee esteeme of more value? Truly sith wee see that the signe serueth the worde, wee must say that it is vnder it, and must set it in the inferiour place. Sith therefore the word of Baptisme is extended to infantes: why shall the signe, that is to say, the addition hanging to the worde, be debarred from them? This one reason, if there were no moe, were abundantly enough to confute all them that wil speake to the contrarie. That which is obiected, that there was a day certainly set for circumcision, is altogether but a shifte. We graunt that wee bee not now bounde to certayne dayes, like the Iewes: but when y^e Lorde howsoever hee certainly appointeth no day, yet declareth that hee is pleased that infantes shoulde with a solemne formal vsage be receiued into his couenant: what seeke we more?

6 Howebeit the scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certainer knowledge of the truth. For it is most eident, that the couenant which the Lord once made with Abraham, is at this day no lesse in force to Christians, than it was in old time to the Iewish people: yea and that this word hath no lesse respect to Christians, than it then had respect to the Iewes. Vnlesse perhaps we thinke, that Christ hath by his comming diminished, or cut short the grace of his father. Which saying is not without abhominable blasphemie. Wherefore as euen the children of the Iewes were called a holy seed, because being made heires of the same couenant they were made differing from the children of the vngodly: for the same reason euen yet also the children of Christians are accompted holy, yea although they bee the issue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apostle witnesseth) they differ frō the vncleane seede of Idolaters. Nowe when the Lorde immediately after the couenant made with Abraham, commaunded the same to bee sealed in infantes with with an outward Sacrament : what cause will Christians alleage, why they should not at this day testifie and seale the same in their children ? Neither let any man object against me, that the Lord commaunded his couenant to be confirmed with no other signe than of circumcision, which is long agoe taken away. For we haue in readinesse to answere, that for the time of the old testament he ordeined circumcision to confirme his couenant: but circumcision being taken away, yet alway remaineth the same manner of confirming which we haue common with the Iewes. Wherefore we must alway diligently consider what is comon to both, and what they haue seuerall from vs. The couenaut is common, the cause of confirming it is common. Onely the maner of confirming is diuerse, because circumcision was that to them, in place whereof baptisme hath succeeded among vs. Otherwise if the testimonie, whereby the Iewes were assured of the saluation of their seed, be taken away from vs, it should be brought to passe by y^e coming of Christ, that the grace of God should bee darker and lesse approved by testimonies to vs, than it was before to the Iewes. If that cannot be saide without extreme slander of Christ, by whome the infinite goodnes of the Father hath more clearely and liberally than euer heretofore beene poured forth vpon the earth, and declared to men: wee must needes graunt, that it is at the least not more pinchingly to bee suppressed, nor to bee set forth with lesse testimonie, than it was vnder the darke shadowes of the lawe.

7 Wherefore the Lorde Iesus, minding to shewe a token whereby the worlde might vnderstande that hee was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercie of God, gently embraced children offred vnto him, rebuking the disciples which went about to forbid them to come to him : forasmuch as they did leade those, to whome the kingdom of heauen belongeth, away from him by whome alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will some man say) what like thing hath baptisme with this embracing of Christ. For neither is it reported that he baptised them, but that he receiued them; embraced them, and wished them well. Therefore if we list to follow his example, let vs helpe infants with prayer, but not baptise them. But let vs wey the doings of Christ somewhat more heedfully, than such kinde of men do. For neither is this to be lightly passed ouer, that Christ commaundeth infants to be brought vnto him, adding a reason why, because of such is the kingdome of heauen. And afterward he witnesseth his will with deede, when embracing them he commendeth them to his Father with his prayer and blessing. If it be meete that infants be brought to Christ, why is it not also meete that they be receiued to baptisme, the signe of our communion and fellowship with Christ? If the kingdome of heauen be theirs, why shall the signe be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entrie opened into the Church, that beeing admitted into it they may be adnumbred among the heires of the heauenly kingdome? How vniust shall we be, if wee driue away them whome Christ calleth vnto him? if we spoile them, whome he garnisheth with his giftes? if we shut out them whome he willingly receiueth? But if wee will examine howe much that which Christ there did, differeth from baptisme, yet of howe much greater price shall wee haue baptisme, (whereby wee testifie that infants are contained in the covenant of God) than receiuing, embracing, laying on of handes, and prayer, whereby Christ himselfe being present: declareth that they both are his, and are sanctified of him? By the other cauations, whereby they labor to mocke out this place, they do nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Christ saith. Let litle ones come to me, that they were in age good bigge ones which were alreadie able to go. But they are called of the Euangelistes, brephe, and paidia, by which wordes the Greekes doe signifie babes yet hanging on the brestes. Therefore this worde (to come) is simply set for (to haue access.) Lo what snares they are compelled to make, which are growen hard against the trueth. Nowe where they say, that the kingdome of heauen is not giuen to them, but to such as be like them, because it is saide to be of such, not of them: that is no sounder than \bar{y} rest. For if that be graunted, what maner of reason shall the reason of Christ be, whereby he meaneth to shewe, that infantes in age are not strangers from him? When he commaundeth that infantes be suffered to haue access vnto him, nothing is plainer than that verie infancie in deede is there spoken of. And that this shoulde not seeme an absurditie, he by and by addeth: of such is the kingdome of heauen. But if it must needes bee that infantes bee comprehended herein, it must be plaine that by this worde (such) are meant verie infantes themselues, and such as be like them.

8 Nowe there is no man that seeth not, that baptisme of infantes was not framed by man, which is vpholden by so great approuing of Scripture. Neither doe they colourably enough play the fooles, which obiekt that it is no where founde, that any one infant was baptised by the handes of the Apostles. For although it be not expressly by name rehearsed of the Euangelistes: yet because againe they are not excluded, so oft as mention happeneth to be made of the baptising of any householde: who, vnlesse he be madde, can reason thereupon that they were not baptised? If such argumentes were of any force, women shoulde be forbidden to partake of the Lordes supper, whome wee reade not to haue bene receiued vnto it in the time of the Apostles. But here wee be content with the rule of faith. For when wee consider, what the institution of the Supper requireth, thereby also wee may easily iudge to whome the vse thereof ought to be communicated. Which we obserue also in baptisme. For when wee marke, to what ende it was ordeined, wee euidently espie, that it belongeth no lesse to infantes, than to elder folkes. Therefore they cannot bee depriued of it, but that the will of the author must bee manifestly defrauded. But where as they spread abroade among the simple people, that there passed a long row of ycares after the resurrection of Christ, in which the baptisme of infantes was vnknown: therein they most fowly do lie. For there is no writer so old, \bar{y} doth not certainly referre the beginning thereof to the time of \bar{y} Apostles.

9 Nowe remaineth that we briefly shewe, what fruite commeth of this obseruation, both to the faithfull which present their children to the Church to be baptised, and also to the infantes themselues that be baptised with the holy water: that no man shoulde despise it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, vppon this pretence to mocke at the

baptisme of infantēs, he scorneth the commaundement of Circumcission giuen by the Lorde. For what will they bring foorth to impugne the baptisme of infantēs, which may not also be throwen backe against Circumcission? So the Lorde taketh vengeance of their arrogance, which doe by and by condemne that which they comprehend not with the sense of their owne flesh. But God furnissheth vs with other armures, whereby their foolishnesse may be beaten flatte. For neither this his holy institution, by which wee feele our sayth to be holpen with singular comforte, deserueth to be called superfluous. For Goddes signe communicated to a childe doeth as it were by an emprinted seale confirme the promise giuen to the godly parente, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lorde will be GOD not onely to him but also to his seede, and will continually shewe his good will and grace, not to him only, but also to his posteritie euen to the thousandth generation. Where when the great kindenesse of GOD vttereth it selfe, first it yeeldeth most large matter to aduance his glorie, and ouerspreadeth godly heartes with singular gladnesse, because they are therewithall more earnestly moued to loue againe so godly a Father, whome they see to haue care of their posteritie for their sakes. Neither doe I regarde, if any man take exception, and saye that the promise ought to suffice to confirme the saluation of our children: forasmuch as it hath pleased God otherwise, who as hee knoweth our weakenesse, willed in this behalfe so muche to beare tenderly with it. Therefore lette them that embrace the promise of Gods mercie to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their duetie to offer them to the Church to be signed with the signe of mercie, and thereby to encourage themselues to a more assured confidence, because they do with present eye behold the couenant of the Lord grauen in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receiue some commoditie of their baptisme, that being engraffed into the body of the Church, they be somewhat the more comended to the other members. Then when they are grown to riper age, they be thereby not scenderly stirred vp to earnest endeouour to worshippe God, of whom they haue been receiued into his children by a solemne signe of adoption, before that they could by age acknowe him for their Father. Finally that same condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraide, that GOD will take vengeance of it, if any man despise to marke his sonne with the signe of the couenant, because by such contempt the grace offred is refused and as it were foresworne.

Gen. 17. 14.

IO Now let vs examine the argumentes, wherby certaine furious beasts doe not cease to assaile this holy institution of God. First because they see that they be exceedingly neere driuen and harde strained with the liknesse of baptisme and Circumcission, they labour to plucke in sunder these two signes with great difference, that the one should not seeme to haue any thing common with the other. For they saye that both diuerse things are signified, and that the couenant is altogether diuerse, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they goe about to prooue that first point, they alleage that Circumcission was a figure of mortification and not of baptisme. Which verily we do most willingly graunt them. For it maketh very well for our side, Neither do we vse any other profe of our sentence, thā that Baptisme and Circumcision are signes of mortification. Herupon we determine y^e Baptisme is set in the place of Circumcision, that it should represent vnto vs the same thing which in old time it signified to y^e Iewes. In affirming the difference of the couenant, with how barbarous boldnesse doe they turmoile & corrupt the Scripture: and that not in one place alone, but so as they leaue nothing safe or whole? For they depaint vnto vs the Iewes so to be carnall y^e they be liker beastes than men: with whom forsooth the conenant made proceedeth not beyond the temporal life, to whom the promises giuen do rest in present & bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the nation of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefites of GOD, none otherwise than as they fatte a hearde of swine in a stie, that at length they should perish with eternal damnation. For so soone as wee alleage Circumcision and the promises annexed vnto it, they answer that Circumcision was a literall signe, and the promises thereof were carnall.

II Truly if Circumcision was a literall signe, there is no otherwise to be thought of baptisme. For the Apostle in the seconde Chapter to the Colossians maketh the one no more spirituall than the other. For hee sayeth that we are circumsised in Christ, with a circumcision not made with hande, putting away the body of sinne that dwelled in our flesh: which hee calleth the circumcision of Christ. Afterwarde for declaration of that saying, hee adioyneth, that we be buried with Christ by baptisme. What meaneth he by these words, but that the fulfilling and truth of baptisme, is also the truth & fulfilling of circumcision, because they figure both one thing? For he traualleth to shew, that baptisme is y^e same to Christians, which Circumcision had bene before to the Iewes. But forasmuch as we haue nowe evidently declared, that the promises of both the signes, and the mysteries that are represented in them, doe agree together, we will for this present tarry no longer vpon them. Onely I will put the faithfull in minde, that though I holde my peace, they shoulde weye with themselues whether it be taken for an earthly and literall signe, vnder which nothing is contained but spirituall and heauenly. But, that they should not sell their smokes to the simple, wee will by the way confute one obiection wherewith they colour this most shamelesse lie. It is most certaine that the principall promises, wherein was contained the couenant which in the Olde testament GOD stablished with the Israelites, were spirituall, and tended to eternall life: and then againe, that they were receiued of the fathers spirituall, as it was meete, that they might thereof receiue affiaunce of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their heart. But in the meane time wee denie not, but that hee witnessed his good will towarde them with earthly and carnall benefites: by which also wee say that the same promise of spirituall things was confirmed. As when hee promised euerlasting blessednesse to his seruaunt Abraham, that he might sette before his eyes a manifest token of his fauour, hee addeth an other promise concerning the possession of the lande of Chanaan. After this manner we ought to vnderstande all the earthly promises that are giuen to the Iewish nation, that the spirituall promise, as the hed, wherunto they are directed, should alway haue the chiefe place.

place. But sith I haue more largely entreated of these thinges in the difference of the newe and olde testament, therefore now I doe the more slightly knit it vp.

12 In the naming of the children they finde this diuersitie, that in the olde testament they were called the children of Abraham, which issued of his seede: but that now they are called by that name, which follow his faith: And that therefore that carnall infancie, which was by circumcision graffed into the fellowship of the couenant, figured the infants of the Newe testamēt, which are regenerate by the word of God to immortal life. In which wordes we beholde in deede a small sparkle of truth: but herein these light spirites grieuouly offend, that when they catch hold of that which first cometh to their hand, when they should go further and compare many things together, they stand stilly vpon one word. Whereby it cannot otherwise be but that they must sometime be deceiued which rest vpon the sound knowledge of nothing. We graunt in deed that the carnall seede of Abraham did for a time hold the place of the spirituall seede which is by faith graffed into him. For we be called his children howsoeuer there is no naturall kinred betweene him and vs. But if they meane, as they plainly shewe that they doe, y there was neuer spirituall blessing promised to the carnall seede of Abraham, herein they are much deceiued. Wherefore we must leuel to a better marke, whereunto we are directed by the most certaine guiding of the Scripture.

Gal. 4. 28.
Rom. 4. 12.

The Lord therefore promised to Abraham, that he should haue a seede, where in all nations of the earth shalbe blessed: and therewithall assureth him, that he would be a God to him & his seed. Whosoever do by Faith receiue Christ the author of blessing, are heires of this promise, and therefore are called the children of Abraham.

13 But although since the resurrection of Christ the bounds of the kingdom of God haue begun to be far and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that according to the saying of Christ, faithfull ones should bee gathered from euery part to sit downe in the heauenly glory with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: yet hee had many ages before extended that same so great mercie to the Iewes. And because passing ouer all other, hee had chosen out that onely nation, in which he would restraine his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying of such liberalitie, Circumcision was giuen by the signe whereof the Iewes might be taught y God is to them the author of saluation: by which knowledge their mindes were raised into hope of eternall life. For what shall he want, whome God hath once receiued into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaning to prooue that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this maner: Abraham (saith he) was justified by faith in vncircumcision. Afterwarde he receiued the signe of circumcision, the seal of the righteousnesse of faith, that he should be the father of all the faithfull, both of vncircumcision and of circumcision, not of them that glorie of onely circumcision, but of them that followe the faith which our father Abraham had in vncircumcision. Do not wee see that both sortes are made egall in dignitie? For during the time appointed by the decree of god, he was the father of circumcision. When, the wall being plucked downe (as the Apostle writeth in another place) by which the Iewes were seuered from the Gentiles, the entrie was made open to them also into the kingdome of God, he was made their father, and that without the signe of circumcision, because they haue baptisme in steede of circumcision. But where hee expressly by name denieth, that Abraham is father to them which are of circumcision only, that same was spoken to abate the pride of certain, which omitting the care of godlinesse, did boast themselues of onely ceremonies. After which maner at this day also their vanitie may bee confuted which seeke in baptisme nothing but water.

Matt. 8. 11.
Exod. 19. 5.

Rom. 4. 10.

14 But another place of the Apostle out of the 9. Chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes shalbe alleaged to the contrary, where he teacheth y they which are of the flesh, are not the children of Abraham: but they onely are counted his seede, which are the children of promise. For he seemeth to signifie, that the carnall kinred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we do set in some degree. But it is more diligently to be marked, what matter the Apostle there enteateth of. For, meaning to shewe to the Iewes how much the goodness of God was not bounde to the seede of Abraham, yea howe it nothing auaieth of it selfe, he bringeth foorth Ismael and Esau for example to prooue it: whome being refused, as if they were strangers, although they were according to the flesh the naturall offspring of Abraham, the blessing rested in Isaac and Iacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that saluation hangeth of the mercie of God, which he extendeth to whome it pleaseth him: and that there is no cause why the Iewes shoulde stande in their own conceit, or boast vpon the name of the couenant, vnlesse they keepe the lawe of the couenant, that is to say, do obey the worde. Againe when he hath throwen them downe from vaine confidence of their kinred, yet because on the other side he sawe, that the couenant which was once made of God with the posteritie of Abraham, could in no wise be made voide, in the 11. chapter, he argueth that the carnall kinred is not to be spoiled of his due dignitie: by the beneficiall meane whereof hee teacheth that the Iewes are the first and naturall heires of the Gospel, but in respect that by their vnthankfulnesse, they were forsaken as vnworthie: yet so that the heauenly blessing is not vtterly remoued from their nation. For which reason, howe much soeuer they were stubborne and couenant breakers, neuertheless hee calleth them holy (so much honor he giueth to the holy generation, with whome God had vouchsafed to make his holy couenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after born, yea or the vnrimely borne children of Abraham, & that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken off from his naturall tree, should be grafted into a strange stock. Therefore that they should not be defrauded of their prerogatiue, it behooued that the Gospel should be first preached to them: for they be in y householde of God as it were the first begotten children. Wherefore this honour was to be giuen them, vntil they refused it being offered them, and by their owne vnthankfulnesse brought to passe that it was carried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with howe great obstinacie soeuer they continue to make warre against the Gospell, ought they to bee despised of vs: if wee consider that for the promises sake, the blessing of G O D doeth yet still remain among them: as verily the Apostle testifieth that it shal neuer vterly depart from thence: because the gistes and calling of God are without repentance. Rom. 18. 29.

15 Beholde of what force is the promise giuen to the posteritie of Abraham, and with what balance it is to be weyed. Wherefore although in discerning the heires of the kingdom from bastardest & strangers, we nothing doubt that the onely election of God ruleth with free right of government: yet we also therewithal perceiue, that it pleased him peculiarly to embrace the seede of Abraham with his mercy, and that the same mercie might bee the more surely witnessed, to seale it with circumcision. Nowe altogether like state is there of the Christian Church. For as Paul there reasoneth that the Iewes are sanctified of their parents: so in another place he teacheth, that the children of Christians receiue the same sanctification of their parentes. Whereupon is gathered, that they are worthily seuered from the rest, which on the other side are condemned of vncleanness. Now who can doubt, but that it is most false which they do therupon conclude, y^e say that the infantes which in old time were circumcised, did onely figure spirituall infancie, which ariseth of the regeneration of the worde of God. For Paul doeth not so suttlyly play the Philosopher, where he writeth that Christ is y^e minister of Circumcision, to fulfill the promises which had bin made to the Fathers, as if he said thus: Forasmuch as the couenant made with Abraham hath respect to his seede, Christ, to performe and discharge the promise once made by his Father, came to saluation to the nation of the Iewes. See you not how also after the resurrection of Christ, he iudgeth that the promise of the couenant is to be fulfilled, not only by way of allegory, but as the very words do sound to the carnall seede of Abraham. To the same entent serueth that which Peter in the seconde Chapter of the Actes, declareth to the Iewes, that the benefit of the Gospel is due to them and their seede by right of the couenant, and in the Chapter next following he calleth them the children of the Testament, that is to say heires. From which also not much disaccordeth the other place of the Apostle aboue alleaged, where he accounteth and setteth Circumcision emprinted in infantes, for a testimonie of y^e communion which they haue with Christ. But if we harken to their trifles, what shalbe wrought by that promise, wherby the Lord in the second article of his law vndertaketh to his seruantes, y^e he will be fauorable to their seede euen to the thousandth generation? Shall we here flee to allegories? But y^e were too trifling a shift. Or shall we say y^e this is abolished? But so the law should be destroyed, which Christ came rather to stablish, so far as it turneth vs to good vnto life, Let it therefore be out of controuersie, y^e God is so good and liberal to his, that for their sakes, he will haue also their children, whom they shall beget, to be adnambred among his people. 1. Cor. 7. 14.

16 Moreouer y^e differences which they go about to put between baptisme and circumcision, are not only worthy to be laughed at, & voide of al colour of reason, but also disagreeing with themsclues. For when they haue affirmed that baptisme hath relation to the first day of the spirituall battel, but circumcision to the eighth when mortification is already ended, by and by forgetting the same, they turne their song, & call circumcision a figure of the first to be mortified, but baptisme they call buriall, into which none are to be put till they be already dead. What dotages of phrentike men, can with so great lightnesse leape into sundry diuersities? For in the first sentence, baptisme must go before circumcision: by the other, it is thrust backe into y^e later place. Yet is it no newe example, that the wits of men be so tossed vp and downe, when in steede of the most certaine worde of God they worship whatsoeuer they haue dreamed. We therefore say that that former difference is a meere dreame. If they list to expounde by way of allegory vpon the eighth day, yet it agreed not in that maner. It were much fitter, according to the opinion of the old writers, to referre the number of eight to the resurrection which was done on the eighth day, whereupon we knowe that the newnes of life hangeth: or to the whole course of this present life, wherein mortification ought alway to go forward, till when life is ended, mortification it selfe may also be ended. Howbeit God may seeme to haue minded to provide for the tenderesse of age, in differring circumcision to the eighth day, because the wound shold haue bin more dangerous to the children new borne and yet red from their mother. How much stronger is that, that we being deade before, are buried by baptisme: when the Scripture expresly cryeth to the contrary that we are buried into death to this entent, that we should die, and from thenceforth should endeouour to this mortification? Nowe, a likewise handling it is, that they cauill that women ought not to be baptised, if baptisme must be framed like to circumcision. For if it be most certaine y^e the sanctifying of the seede of Israell was testified by the signe of circumcision: therby also it is vndoubted, that it was giuen to sanctifie both males and females. But the only bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet so that the women were by them after a certaine maner companions and partners of circumcision. Therefore sending far away such follies of theirs, let vs sticke fast in the likenes of baptisme and circumcision, which we most largely see to agree in the inwarde mystery, in the promises, in vse, in effectualnesse.

17 They thinke also that they bring forth a most strong reason, why children are to be debarred from baptisme, when they alleage that they are not yet for age able to vnderstande the mysterie there signified. That is spirituall regeneration, which can not be in the first infancie. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be grown to age meete for a seconde birth. But the truth of God echwhere speaketh against all these thinges. For if they be to be left among the childre of Adam, then they are left in death: forasmuch as in Adam we can doe nothing but die. But contrariwise Christ commandeth them to be brought vnto him. Why so? because he is life: Therefore that he may giue life to them, he maketh them partakers of himselfe: when in the meane time these fellows driuing them far away do adiudge them to death. For if they say for a shift, that infantes do not therefore perish if they be accounted the children of Adam, their errour is aboundantly confuted by witnesse of the Scripture. For wheras it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it foloweth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Christ. Therefore that we may be made heires of life, we must communicate with him. Againe when it is written in an other place, that by nature we are all subiect to the wrath of God, and conceiued in sinne, whereunto damnation perpetually cleaueth: wee must depart out of our owne nature, before that the entrie bee open to vs into the kingdome of God. And what can be more plainly spoken, than that flesh & bloud can not possesse the kingdome of God? Therefore let all be done away whatsoeuer is ours (which shall not be done without regeneration) then we shall see this possession of the kingdome. Finally if Christ say truely, when he reporteth that he is life, it is necessarie that we be grafted into him, that we may be deliuered out of the bondage of death. But (say they) howe are infantes regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of euill? But we aunswere, that the worke of God is not yet no worke at all, although it be not subiect to our capacite. Moreouer it is nothing doubtful, that the infantes which are to be saued (as verily of that age some are saued) are before regenerat of the Lorde. For if they bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they must be purged ther of, before that they be admitted into the kingdome of God, wherinto nothing entred that is defiled or spotted. If they be borne sinners, as both Dauid and Paul affirme: either they remaine out of fauour and hatefull to God, or they must needes be iustified. And what seeke we more, when the iudge himselfe openly affirmeth that the entrie into heauenly life is open to none but to them that be borne again: And to put such carpers to silence, he shewed an example in Iohn the baptist, whom he sanctified in his mothers womb, what he was able to doe in the rest. Neither doe they any thing preuaile by the shift wherewith they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not by and by followe that the Lorde is wont commonly to do so with infantes. For neither doe we reason after that maner: only our purpose is to shew, that the power of God is by them vniustly & enioustly limited within those narrow boundes within which it suffreth not it selfe to be bounde. Their other by shift is euen of as great weight. They alleage that by the visuall maner of the Scripture, this word (from the wombe,) is as much in effect, as if it were said, from chuldhooe. But wee may clearly see, y^e the Angel when he declared the same to Zachary, meant an other thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, should be filled with the holy Ghost. Let vs not therefore attempt to appoint a lawe to GOD, but that he may sanctifie whom it pleased him, as he sanctified this child, for as much as his power is nothing minished.

1. Co. 15. 22.
Ephe. 2. 3.
Eial. 5. 1. 7.

18 And truly Christ was therefore sanctified from his first infancy, that he might sanctifie in himselfe his elect out of euery age without difference. For as, to do away the fault of disobedience which had bin committed in our flesh, he hath put on the same flesh vpon himselfe, that he might in it for vs and in our steede performe perfect obedience: so he was conceiued of y^e holy Ghost that hauing the holinesse thereof fully poured into him in the flesh which he had taken vpon him, he might powre foorth the same into vs. If we haue in Christ a most perfect paterne of all the graces which God continually sheweth to his children, verily in this behalfe also he shalbe a profe vnto vs, y^e the age of infancy is not so farre vnfit for sanctification. But howsoeuer it be, yet this we holde out of controuersie, that none of the elect is called out of this present life, which is not first made holy and regenerate by the Spirit of God. Whereas they obiect to the contrary, that in the Scriptures y^e Spirit acknowledgeth no other regeneration but of incorruptible seede, that is, of the word of God: they do wrongfully expounde that saying of Peter, wherein he comprehendeth only the faithfull which had bin taught by preaching of the Gospel. To such in deede we grant that the word of the Lord is the only seed of spirituall regeneration: but we deny y^e it ought thereupon to be gathered, that infantes can not be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as easie and ready as to vs it is incomprehensible and wonderfull. Moreouer it should not be safe enough for vs to take this away from the Lorde, that he may not be able to shewe himselfe to be knowen to them by whatsoeuer way he will.

19 But Faith, say they, is by hearing, whereof they haue not yet gotten the vse, neither can they be able to knowe God, whom Moses teacheth to be destitute of the knowledge both of good and euil. But they consider not that the Apostle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of faith, describeth only the ordinary distribution of the Lord & disposition which he vseth to keep in calling them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vse any other way. Which way verily he hath vsed in the calling of many, to whome he hath giuen the true knowledge of himselfe by an inward maner, by the enlightening of the Spirite, without any preaching vsed for meane thereof. But whereas they thinke it shalbe a great absurdity, if any knowledge of God be giuen to infantes, from whom Moses taketh away the vnderstanding of good & euill: I beseech them to answere me, what danger is there if they be sayde to receiue some part of that grace, whereof a litle after they shall enioye the full plentifulnesse. For if the fulnesse of life standeth in the perfect knowledge of God, when many of them, who in their very first infancy death by and by taketh away, do passe into eternal life, truly they are receiued to behold the most present face of God. Whom therefore the Lord will enlighten with the full brightnesse of his light, why may he not presently also, if it so please him, send out to shine vpon them som smal sparckle therof: specially if he do not first vnclouth them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the prison of the flesh? Not that I mean rashly to affirme that they be endued with the same Faith which we feel in our selues, or that they haue altogether like knowledge of faith: (which I had rather leaue in suspense) but somewhat to restraints their foolish arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulnes, doe boldly deny or affirme they care not what.

20 But that they may yet stande more strongly in this point, they adde that baptisme is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith, wherefore sith neither of these can befall in tender infancie, we ought to beware least if they be admitted to the communion of baptisme, the signification of it be made void and vaine. But these dartes are throwen rather against GOD than against vs. For it is most euident by many testimonies of Scripture, that circumcision also was a signe of repentance. Moreouer it is called of Paul the seale of the righteousnesse of Faith. Lette therefore a reason be required of God himselfe why hee commaunded it to be marked in the bodies of infantes.

For

1. Pet. 1. 23.

Deut. 1. 39.

Rom. 14. 11.

For sith baptisme and circumcission are both in one case, they can giue nothing to the one but that they must also therewithall graunt the same to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted starting hole, that then by the age of infancie were figured spirituall infantes, the way is alreadie stopped vp against them. We say therefore, sith God hath communicated to infantes circumcission a sacrament of repentance and faith, it seemeth no absurditie if they be made partakers of baptisme: vnlesse they list openly to rage against the ordinance of God. But both in all the doinges of God, and in this selfe same doing also shineth wisdom and righteousness enough, to beat downe the backbitinges of the wicked. For though infants, at the same instant that they were circumcised, did not comprehend in vnderstanding what that signe meant: yet they were truly circumcised into the mortification of their corrupt and defiled nature, in which mortification they shoulde afterwarde exercise themselues when they were growen to riper age. Finally it is verie easie to assoile this obiection, with saying that they bee baptised into repentance and Faith to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by secrete working of the Sprite the seede of both lyeth hidden in them. With this aunswere at once is ouerthrowen whatsoeuer they wrest against vs which they haue fetched out of the signification of baptisme. Of which sort is that title wherewith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the washing of regeneration & of renewing. Wherupon they gather y^e it is to be giuen to none but to such a one as is able to cōceiue those things. But we on the contrarie side may aunswere, that neither was circumcission which betokened regeneration, to be giuen to any other than to them that were regenerate. And so shall wee condemne the ordinance of God. Wherefore (as we haue alreadie touched in diuerse places) whatsoeuer arguments do tend to the shaking of circumcission, they haue no force in the assaying of baptisme. Neither doe they so escape away, if they say that wee ought to take y^e for determined and certaine, which standeth vpon the authoritie of God, although there appeare no reason of it: which reuerence is not due to the baptisme of infantes, nor to such other things which be not commended vnto vs by y^e expresse word of God: sith they are stil fast holden with this double argument. For the commaundement of God concerning infantes to be circumcised, was either lawfull and subiect to no cauillations, or worthie to be found fault withal. If there were no inconuenience nor absurdity in the commaundement of circumcission, neither can there any absurditie be noted in obseruing the baptisme of infantes.

21 As for the spot of absurditie which in this place they goe about to lay vpon it, we thus wipe it away. Whome the Lorde hath vouchsafed to elect, if hauing receiued the signe of regeneration, they depart out of this present life before that they become to riper age, he reneweth them with the power of his spirite incomprehensible to vs, in such manner as hee alone foreseeeth to bee expedient. If they chance to grow vp to age, whereby they may be taught the truth of baptisme, they shall hereby bee the more inkindled to the endeuour of renewing, the token whereof they shall learne to haue beene giuen them from their first infancie, that they shoulde exercise themselues in it throughout y^e whole course of their life. To the same entēt ought

that to bee applied which Paul teacheth in two places, that by baptisme wee are buried together with Christ. For he doeth not meane thereby, that hee which is to be baptised, must be alreadie first buried together with Christ: but simplie declareth what doctrine is contained vnder baptisme, yea and that to them that bee alreadie baptised: so that verie mad men would not affirme by this place that it goeth before baptisme. After this manner Moses and the Prophets did put the people in minde what circumcision meant, wherewith yet they had beene marked while they were infantes. Of the same effect also is that which hee writeth to the Galathians, that they when they were baptised, did put on Christ. To what ende? verily that they should from thence forth lue to Christ, because they had not liued before. And although in the older sort the receiuing of the signe ought to follow \bar{y} vnderstanding of the mysterie: yet it shall be by and by declared that infantes ought to be otherwise esteemed and accompted of. And no otherwise ought we to iudge of the place of Peter, in which they thinke that they haue a strong hold: whic he saith that it is not a washing to wipe away the filthinesses of the body, but the witnessse of a good conscience before God, by the resurrection of Christ. They indeede doe gather thereby, that nothing is left to the baptisme of infantes, but that it shoulde be a vaine sinoke, nainely from which this truth is far distant. But they often offend in this errour, that they will haue the thing in order of time to goe alway before the signe. For the truth of circumcision also consisted of the same witnessse of good conscience. If it ought of necessitie to haue gone before, infantes shoulde neuer haue beene circumcised by the commaundement of God. But hee shewing that the witnessse of a good conscience was contained vnder the truth of circumcision, and yet therewithall also commaunding infantes to be circumcised, doth in \bar{y} pointe sufficiently declare that circumcision is applied to the time to come. Wherefore there is no more present effectualnesse to be required in baptisme of infantes, than that it should confirme and stablish the couenant made by the Lorde with them. The rest of the signification of that Sacrament shal afterward folow at such time as God himselve foreseeh.

22 Nowe I thinke there is no man, that doeth not clearly see that all such reasons of theirs are mere misconstruings of scripture. As for the rest that bee of a neere kinde to these, we will lightly runne through them by the way. They obiekt that baptisme is giuen vnto the forgiuenes of sinnes: which when it is graunted, will largely make for defence of our sentence. For sith we be born sinners, we doe euen from our mothers wombe need forgiuenes and pardon. Nowe seeing the Lorde doth not cut off, but rather assure to \bar{y} age the hope of mercie: why shoulde we take from them the signe which is much inferiour than the thing it selfe? Wherefore that which they goe about to throwe against vs, we thus throwe backe against themselues: infantes haue remission of sinnes giuen them, therefore they ought not to haue the signe taken from them. They alleadge also this out of the Epistle to the Ephesians: that the Church is cleansed of the Lorde, with the washing of water in the worde of life. Than which there coulde nothing bee alleadged more fit to ouerthrowe their errour: for thereupon groweth an easie prooffe of our side. If the Lord will haue \bar{y} washing wherewith hee cleanseth his church to be testified by baptisme: it seemeth not rightfull that it shoulde want the testimonie of it in infantes, which are rightfully accompted part of the Church, forasmuch as they be called heires of the heavenly kingdome. For Paul speaketh of the whole Church, where hee saith that it was cleansed with the baptisme of water. Likewise of this that in an other place he saith that we be by baptisme graffed into the body of Christ, wee gather that infantes, whom he reckoneth among his members, ought to be baptised, least they be plucked away from his body. Beholde with what violence with so many engines they assault the fortresses of our faith. 1. Cor. 12. 17

23. Then they come downe to the practise and custome of the time of the Apostles, wherein none is founde to haue bene admitted to baptisme, but he which hath before professed Faith and repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repent, what was needful to be done, he counsell'd them first to repent, and then to be baptised, into the forgiveness of sinnes. Likewise Philip, when the Eunuch required to be baptised; answered that he might be baptised if he beleueed with all his hart. Hereby they thinke that they may winne, that it is not lawfull that baptisme be graunted to any, but where faith and repentance goe before. Truly if wee yeelde to this reason, the first of these two places where is no mention made of Faith, will proue that repentance alone sufficeth: & the other place, wherein repentance is not required, will proue that faith onely is enough. I thinke they will aunswere that the one place is holpen with the other, & therefore must be ioyned together. I say also likewise, that other places must be laid together which make somewhat to the vndoing of this knot: forasmuch as there be many sentences in scripture, the vnderstanding whereof hangeth vpon the circumstance of the place. As this presently is an example. For they to whome Peter and Philip spake these things were of age sufficient to haue practise of repentance and to conceiue faith. We earnestly denie that such ought to be baptised, vntill after perceiuing of their conuersion and faith, at least so farre as it may be searched out by the iudgemēt of men. But, that infantes ought to be accomped in an other number, it is more than euident enough. For in olde time if any man did ioyne himselfe into communion of religion with Israel, it behooued that hee shoulde first be taught the couenant of the Lord, & instructed in the law, before that he were marked with circumcision, because in birth he was a straunger from the people of Israell, with whome the couenant had bene made with circumcision stablished. A. 2. 37.

24. As also the Lorde, when he adopteth Abraham to himselfe, doth not begin at circumcision, hiding in the meane time what hee meaneth by that signe: but first he declarcth what couenant he intendeth to make with him, and then after faith giuen to the promise, he maketh him partaker of the Sacrament. Why dorth in Abraham the sacrament solow faith, & in Isaac his sonne it goeth before al vnderstanding? Because it is meet that he, which being in ful grownen age is receiued into fellowship of the couenāt, from which he had bene hitherto a stranger, should first learne the conditions thereof: but an infant begotten of him needed not so, which by right of inheritance according to the forme of the promise is euen from his mothers wombe cōtained in the couenaut. Or (that the matter may be more clearly and briefly Gen. 15. 10.

brecfely shewed) if the children of the faithfull, without the helpe of vnderstanding, are partakers of the couenant, there is no cause why they shoulde be debarred from the signe for this that they cannot swere to the forme of the couenant. This verily is the reason, why in some places God affirmeth that the infantes which are issued of the Israelites, are begotten and borne to him. For without doubt hee esteemeth as his children the children of the to whose seede hee promiseth that hee will be a father. But he which is vnfaithfull, issued of vngodly parentes, till he bee by faith vnited to God, is iudged a straunger from the communion of the couenant. Therefore it is no maruell if he be not partaker of the signe, the signification whereof shoulde be deceitful and voyde in him. To this effect Paul also writeth, that the gentiles so long as they were drowned in their idolatrie, were out of the Testament. With this short summe, (as I thinke) the whole matter may be clearly opened: that they which in growen age, embrace the faith of Christ, forasmuch as they were hitherto straungers from the couenant, are not to be marked with baptisme, but whereas faith and repentance come betweene, which onely can open them the entrie into fellowship of the couenant: but the infantes that are issued of Christians, as they are receiued of God into the inheritance of the couenant so soone as they be borne, so ought to be receiued to baptisme. Hereunto must that bee applied which the Euangelist speaketh of, that they were baptised of Iohn which confessed their sinnes. Which example at this day also we thinke meete to bee kept. For if a Turke offer himselfe to baptisme, he should not be rashly baptised of vs, namely not till after confession whereby he may satisfie the Church.

25 Moreouer they bring forth the words of Christ, which are rehearsed in the thirde Chapter of Iohn, whereby they thinke that a present regeneration is required in baptisme. Vnlesse a man be borne againe of water & the spirite, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Lo (say they) howe baptisme is by the Lordes owne mouth called regeneration. Them therefore whom it is more than enough knowen to be vnable to receiue regeneration by what colour we do admit to baptisme which cannot be wout regeneration? First they are, deceiued in this that they thinke that in this place mention is made of baptisme, because they heare the name of water. For after y^e Christ had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, and taught him, that men must be borne of new, because Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily newe birth, he there shewed the manner how God doeth regenerate vs, namely by water and the Spirite: as though he shoulde say by the spirite which in cleansing and watering faithfull soules, doeth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the spirite simplie for the spirite, which is water. Neyther is this a newe forme of speech, for it altogether agreeth with the same which is in the thirde Chapter of Mathewe: Hee that followeth me, it is hee that baptiseth in the holy Ghost and fire. Therefore as to baptise in the holy Ghost & fire, is to giue the Holy Ghost, which hath the office and nature of fire: so to be borne againe of water and the spirite, is nothing else but to receiue that power of the holy spirite which doth the same thing in the soule that water doeth in the bodie. I knowe that other doe otherwise expounde it: but I am out of doubt that this is the naturall meaning: because the purpose of Christ is none other, but to teach that all they must put of their owne nature which aspire to the heauenly kingdome. Howebeit if wee list to cauill vnfauorily as they doc, it were easie for vs (when we haue granted as they would haue it) to inferre vpon them that baptisme is before faith and repentance: for asinuch as in the wordes of Christ it goeth before the spirit. It is certaine that this is vnderstanded of spirituall gites: which if they come after baptisme, I haue obtained what I require. But leauing cauillations, we must hold fast the plaine exposition, which I haue brought, that no man till hee haue bene renewed with liuing water, that is, with the spirit, can enter into the kingdome of God.

26 Nowe hereby also it is euident that their fained inuention is to be hissed out, which adiudge all the vn baptisied to eternall death. Therefore let vs according to their request imagine baptisue to be ministred to none but to them that be growen in age: What will they say, shall become of a Childe, which is rightly and well instructed with the introductions of godlines, if when the day of Baptising is at hande, he happen to be taken away with sudden death beside all mens hope? The Lordes promise is cleare, that whosoeuer hath beleued in the sonne, shall not see death, nor shall come into iudgement, but is already passed from death into life: and it is no where founde that he euer damned him that was not yet baptisied. Which I would not haue so taken of mee as though I meant that baptisme might freely be despised (by which despising I affirme that the Lords couenant is defiled: so much lesse can I abide to excuse it) onely it is enough for mee to prooue, that it is not so necessary, that he should be immediately thought to be lost, from whome power is taken away to obteyne it. But if wee agree to their fained deuise, wee shall damne all them without exception, whom any chance withholdeth from baptisme, with howe great faith soeuer (by which Christ himselfe is possessed) otherwise they are endued. Moreouer they make all infantes guiltie of eternall death, to whome they denie baptisme, which by their owne confession is necessary to saluation. Nowe let them looke howe trimly they agree with the wordes of Christ, by which the kingdome of heauen is adiudged to that age. But, to graunt them euery thing so much as pertaineth to the vnderstanding of this place, yet they shal gather nothing thereof, vnles they ouerthrow the former doctrine which we haue stablished concerning the regeneration of infants.

27 But they glory that they haue the strongest holde of all in the verie institution of Baptisme, which they fetch out of the last Chapter of Mathew: where Christ sending forth his Apostles to all nations, giuerh them the first commaundement to teach them, and the second to Baptise them. Then also out of the last of Marke they adione this, He that beleueeth and is baptisied, shall be saued. What seeke we further (say they) when the Lords owne wordes doe openly sound, that we must first teach ere we baptise, and doe as-signe to baptisme the seconde state after Faith? Of which order the Lorde also shewed an example in himselfe, which would be baptisied not tilly thirtieth yeare. But here, O good God, howe many wayes doe they both entangle themselues, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childishly erre, that they fetch the first institution of Baptisme from thence

thence, which Christ had from y^e beginning of his preaching giuen in charge to his Apostles to minister. Therefore there is no cause why they should affirme that the lawe and rule of Baptisme is to be fetched out of these places, as though they contened the first institution thereof. But to beare with the for this fault, yet howe strong is this manner of reasoning? Truly if I listed to dally with them, there is not a litle lurking hole, but a most wide fielde offereth it selfe open for vs to escape them. For when they sticke so fast to the order of words, that they gather that because it is saide, Go, preach and baptise, Againe, he that beleeueth and is baptised, therefore they must preach before that they baptise, & beleue before y^e they require baptisme: why may not wee againe aunswere them with saying that we must baptise before that we must teach the keeping of those things that Christ hath commaunded: namely sith it is said, baptise ye, teaching them to keepe whatsoeuer things I haue commaunded you? which same things we haue noted in that saying of Christ which hath bin euen now alleadged concerning the regeneration of water and the Spirit. For if it be so vnderstoode as they would haue it, verily in that place baptisme must be before spirituall regeneration, because it is named in y^e first place. For Christ doth teach that wee must be regenerate, not of the Spirit & water, but of water and the spirite.

28 Nowe this inuincible reason wherevpon they beare themselues so bolde, seemeth to be somewhat shaken: but because trueth hath defence enough in simplicitie, I will not escape away with such light arguments. Therefore let them rake with them a full aunswere. Christ in this place giueth the cheefe commaundement concerning Preaching of the Gospell, wherevnto he adioineth the ministerie of baptisme as an addition hanging vpon it. Againe he speaketh none otherwise of baptisme, but so farre as the ministracion of it is vnder the office of teaching. For Christ sendeth the Apostles to publish the Gospell to all the nations of the worlde, that they shoulde from echwhere with the doctrine of saluation gather together into his kingdome men that before were lost. But whom, or what manner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of them that are able to receiue teaching. Afterwarde he addeth that such, when they are instructed, ought to bee baptised, adioyning a promise, that they which beleue and are baptised shall bee saued. Is there in all that saying so much as one syllable of infantes? What forme therefore of reasoning shal this be wherwith they aslaile vs: they which are of growen age, must first be instructed, that they may beleue, ere they be baptised: therefore it is vnlawfull to make baptisme common to infantes? Although they would burst themselues, they shall prooue nothing else by this place but that the gospell must be preached to them that are of capacitie able to heare it, before that they be baptised, forasmuch as he there speaketh of such only. Let them hereof, if they can, make a stoppe to debarre infantes from baptisme.

29 But that euen blinde men also may with groping finde out their deceites, I will point them out with a very cleare similitude. If any man cauill that infantes ought to haue meate taken from them, vpon this pretence that the Apostle suffereth none to eate but them that labor, shall hee not bee worthis that all men should spit at him? Why so? Because he with difference drawdraweth that to all men, which was spoken of one kinde & one certaine age of men. No whit handsomer is their handling in this present cause. For, that which euery man seeth to belong to one age alone, they drawe to infants, that this age also may be subiect to the rule which was made for none but the that were more growen in yeares. As for the example of Christ, it nothing vpholdeth their side. He was not baptised before that hee was thirtie yeares old. That is in deede true: but there is a reason thereof readie to be shewed: because he then purposed by his preaching to lay a sound foundatiō of baptisme, or rather to stablish the foundation which had beene before layde of Iohn. Therefore when he minded with his doctrine to institute baptisme, to procure y^e greater authoritie to his institution, he sanctified it with his owne bodie, and that in such fitnessse of time as was most conuenient, namely whē he began his preaching. Finally, they shal gather nothing else hereof, but that baptisme toke his original & beginning at the preaching of the Gospel. If they list to appoint the thirteenth yeare, why do they not keepe it, but do receiue euery one to baptisme as hee hath in their iudgement sufficiently profited? yea & Seruettus one of their masters, when he stiffely required this time, yet began at the 21. yeare of his age to boast himselfe to be a Prophet. As though he were to be suffred that taketh vpon himselfe the place of a teacher in the church, before that he be a member of the church.

Luk. 3. 23.

30 At the last they obiekt, that there is no greater cause why baptisme should be giuen to infants, than the Lordes supper, which yet is not granted them. As though the scripture did not euery way expresse a large difference. The same was in deede vsually done in the olde Church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Augustine: but that maner is worthily growen out of vsf. For if wee consider the nature and proper tie of baptisme, it is truely an entrie into the Church, and as it were a forme of admission, whereby we are adnumbred into the people of God, a signe of our spirituall regeneration by which we are borne againe into the children of God: wheras on the other side the Supper is giuen to them that be more growen in age, which hauing passed tender infancie, are nowe able to beare strong meate. Which difference is verie euidently shewed in the Scripture. For there the Lord so much as pertaineth to baptisme, maketh no choise of ages. But hee doeth not likewise giue the supper to all to take part of it, but onely to them which are fit to discern the bodie & bloud of the Lord, to examine their owne conscience, to declare the Lords death, to wey the power thereof. Woulde wee haue any thing plainer, than that which the Apostle teacheth whē he exhorteth that euery man should proue & examine himselfe, and then eate of this bread & drink of this cup? Therefore examination must go before, which shoulde in vaine be looked for of infants. Again, he that eateth vnworthily, eateth & drinketh damnation to himselfe, not discerning the Lords bodie. If none can partake worthily but they that can well discern the holinessse of the Lords bodie, why should we giue to our tender children, poyson in steede of liuely foode? What is that commaundement of the Lorde, ye shall do it in remembrance of mee? what is that other which the Apostle deriueth from the same, So oft as ye shall eate of this bread, ye shall declare the Lordes death till he come? What remembrance (I beseech you) shall wee require at our infants of the thing which they neuer attained with vnderstanding? what preaching of the crosse of Christ, the force and benefite whereof they do not yet comprehend in minde? None of these things is prescribed in baptisme. Therefore betweene these two signes is great difference: which we note also in like signes in the olde testament. Circumcision, which is known to answer to our baptisme, was appointed for infants. But the passeouer into whose place the Supper hath now succeeded, did not receiue all maner of gesses without difference, but was rightly eaten of them only that might by age enquire of the signification of it. If these men had remaining one crumme of sound braine, woulde they be blinde at a thing so cleare and offering it selfe to sight?

31 Although it grieueth me to lode the readers with a heape of trifles: yet it shall be worth the trauaile briefly to wipe away such gay reasons as Seruetus not the least of the Anabaptistes, yea the great glorie of that companie, thought himselfe to bring when he prepared him self to confist. He allegeth, that Christes signes as they be perfect, so doe require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the solution is easie: that the perfection of baptisme, which extendeth euen to death, is wrongfully restrained to one point of time. I say yet further, that perfection is foolishly required in man at the first day, wherunto baptisme allureth vs al our life long by continuall degrees. He obiecteth that Christes signes were ordeined for remembrance, that euery man should remember that hee was buried together with Christ. I answer that that which hee hath fained of his owne head, needeth no confutation: yea y^e which he draweth to baptisme, Pauls wordes shewe to be proper to the holy Supper, that euery man should examine himselfe: but of baptisme there is no where any such thing. Whereupon wee gather that they be rightly baptised which for their smalnesse of age, are not yet able to receiue examination. Whereas he thirdly allegeth, that all they abide in death which beleue not the Sonne of God, and that the wrath of God abideth vpon them: and therefore that infantes which cannot beleue lie in their damnation: I aunswere that Christ there speaketh not of the generall giltynesse wherewith all the posteritie of Adam are enwrapped, but onely threateneth the despisers of the Gospel, which doe proudly and stubbornly refuse the grace offered them. But this nothing pertaineth to infantes. Also I set a contrarie reason against them: that whomsoeuer Christ blesteth, he is discharged from the curse of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is known that infantes are blessed of him, it followeth that they are discharged from death. Then hee falsly citeth that which is no where red, that whosoever is borne of the spirite, heareth the voice of the spirit. Which although we graunt to be written, yet shall prooue nothing else but that the faithfull are framed to obedience, according as the spirite worketh in them. But that which is spoken of a certaine number, it is faultie to drawe indifferently to all. Fourthly, he obiecteth: because that goeth before which is naturall, we must tarrie ripe time for baptisme which is spirituall. But although I graunt that all the posteritie of Adam begotten of the flesh do from the verie wombe beare their owne damnation, yet I denie that that withstandeth but that God may presently bring remedie.

Iohn 3.36.

1. Cor. 15.46

For neither shall Seruettus proue that there were many yeres appointed by God that the spirituall newnesse of life may beginne. As Paule testifieth, although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by supernatural grace they are saued. Then he bringeth fourth an allegorie, that Dauid going vp into the toure of Sion, did leade neither blind men nor lame men with him but strong fouldiours. But what if I set a parable against it, wherein God calleth to the heauenly banket blinde men and lame men: howe will Seruettus vnwinde himselfe out of this knot? I aske also whether lame and maimed men hadde not first beene fouldiours with Dauid. But it is superfluous to tary longer vpon this reason, which the readers shall find by the holy historie to be made of meere falsehoode. There followeth an other allegorie, that the Apostles were fishers of men, not of litle children. But I aske, what that saying of Christ meaneth, that into the net of the Gospel are gathered all kindes of fishes. But because I like not to play with allegories, I aunswere that when the office of teaching was enioyned to the Apostles, yet they were not forbidden from baptising of infantes. Howebeit I wold yet know, when the Euangelist nameth the Anthropous, men, (in which worde is comprehended all man kinde without exception) why they should denie infantes to be men. Seuenthly he alleageth, that sith spirituall things agree with spirituall, infantes which are not spirituall, are also not meete for baptisme. But first it is plainly euident howe wrongfully they wrest the place of Paul. There is entreated of doctrine: when the Corinthians did too much stande in their owne conceite for vaine sharpenesse of witte, Paul rebuketh their sluggishnesse, for that they were yet to be instructed in the first introductions of heauenly wisdom. Who can thereof gather that baptisme is to be denied to infantes, whom being begotten of the flesh God doth by free adoption make holy to himselfe? Whereas he sayth, that they must be fedde with spirituall meate, if they be newe men, the solution is easie, that by baptisme they are admitted into the flocke of Christe, and that the signe of adoption suffiseth them, till beeing growen to age they be able to beare strong meate: that therefore the time of examination which GOD expressly requireth in the holy Supper, must be tarried for. Afterwarde he obiecteth that Christ calleth all his to the holy Supper. But it is certayne enough that he admitreth none, but them that be already prepared to celebrate the remembraunce of his death. Whereupon followeth that infantes whom he vouchsafed to embrace, do stay in a feuerall and proper degree by themselues till they growe to age, and yet are not strangers. Whereas hee sayth, that it is monstrous that a man after that he is borne, should not eate: I aunswere that soules are otherwise fed than by the outwarde eating of the Supper: and that therefore Christe is neuerthelesse meate to infantes, although they absteine from the signe. But of baptisme the case is otherwise, by which onely the gate into the Church is opened to them. Againe he obiecteth that a good Stuarde distributeth meate to the householde in due time. Which although I willingly graunt: yet by what right will he appoint vnto vs the certaine time of Baptisme, that he may prooue that it is not giuen to infantes out of time. Moreouer hee bringeth in that commaundement of Christ to the Apostles, that they should make hast into the haruest, while the fieldes waxe white. Verily Christ meaneth this onely, that the Apostles seeing the fruite of their labour present, should the more cheerefully prepare themselues to teach. Who shall therefore gather that the only time of haruest is the ripe time for baptisme? His eleuenth reason is, that in the first Church Christians and disciples were all one: but we see nowe that hee fondely reasoneth from the part to the whole. Disciples are called men of full age, which had beene already thoroughly taught, & had professed Christ: as it behoued that the Iewes vnder the lawe should be the disciples of Moses: yet no man shall thereof rightly gather, that infantes were strangers, whom the Lorde hath testified to be of his householde. Beside these he alleageth, that all Christians are brethren, in which number infantes are not vnto vs, so long as we debarre them from the Supper. But I returne to that principle, that none are heires of the kingdome of heauen, but they that are the members of Christ: then, that the embracing of Christ was a true token of the adoption, whereby infantes are ioyned in common with full growen men, and that the absteyning for a time from the Supper withstandeth not but that they pertain to the body of the Church. Neither did the theefe that was conuerted on the Crosse, cease to be brother of the godly, although he neuer came to the Supper. Afterwarde hee addeth, that none is made our brother but by the Spirite of adoption, which is giuen onely by the hearing of faith. I aunswere, that he still falleth backe into the same deceitfull argument, because he ouerthwartly draweth that to infantes which was spoken onely of growen men. Paule teacheth there that this is Gods ordinarie manner of calling to bring his elect to the faith, when hee stirreth vp to them faithfull teachers, by whose ministerie & trauaile he reacheth his hand to them. Who dare thereby appoint a lawe to him, but that he may by some other secret way graffe infantes into Christ? Where he obiecteth that Cornelius was baptised after that he had receiued the holy Ghost: howe wrongfully hee doeth out of one example gather a generall rule, appeareth by the Eunuch and the Samaritanes, in whome the Lorde kepte a contrarie order, that baptisme went before the giftes of the Holy Ghost. The fiftenth reason is more than foolishe. He sayeth that we are by regeneration made goddes: and that they be gods to whom the worde of God is spoken, which accordeth not to children that be infantes. Whereas hee faineth a Godheade to the faithfull, that is one of his dotages, which it pertaineth not to this presente place to examine. But to wrest the place of the Psalme to so contrary a sense, is a point of desperate shamelesnesse. Christ sayeth, that Kinges and Magistrates are called of the Prophet gods', because they beare an office appointed them of God. But, that which concerning the speciall commandement of gouernaunce is directed to certaine men, this handsome expositour draweth to the doctrine of the Gospell, that hee may banishe infantes out of the Church. Againe he obiecteth, that infantes can not be accounted newe men, because they are not begotten by the worde. But I doe nowe agayne repeat that which I haue often sayde, that to regenerate vs doctrine is the vncorruptible seede, if wee be fite to receiue it: but when by reason of age there is not yet in vs aptnesse to learne, God keepeth his degrees of regenerating. Afterwarde he commeth backe to his allegories, that in the lawe a sheepe and a goate were not offered in sacrifice so soone as they came out of the wombe. If I listed to draw figures to this purpose, I coulde likewise redily obiect against him, that all first begotten things were consecrate to God so soone as they had opened the wombe: then, that a lambe must be killed at a yeares age. Whereupon followeth that manly strength is not to be taried for, but rather that the newe and yet tender issues are chosen of God for sacrifices. Furthermore he affirmeth that none can come to Christ, but they that haue beene prepared of Iohn. As though Iohns office were not enduring but for a time. But, to omit this, truely that same preparation was not in the children whome Christ embraced & blessed. Wherefore let him go with his false principle. At length he calleth for patrones Trismegistus and the Sibylles, to proue that holy washings pertaine nor but to them that are of growen age. Lo how honorably he thinketh of the baptisme of Christ, which he reduceth to the Ceremonies of the Gentiles, that it may be no otherwise ministred than pleaseth Trismegistus. But wee more esteeme the authoritie of God, whome it hath pleased to make infants holy to himselfe, and to admitte them with the holy signe, the force whereof they did not yet by age vnderstand. Neither doe wee count it lawfull to borrowe out of the cleanings of the Gentiles any thing that may change in our baptisme the euerlasting and inuiolable lawe of God, which he hath stablised concerning circumcision. Last of all, he maketh this argument: that if it be lawfull to baptise infants without vnderstanding, then baptisme may enterlude-like and in sport be ministred of boyes when they play. But of this matter let him quarel with God by whose commandement circumcision was common to infants before that they had attained vnderstanding. Was it therefore a playing matter, or subiect to the follies of children, that they might ouerthrowe the holy ordinance of God? But it is no marueile that these reprobate Spirites, as though they were vexed with a phrensie, do thrust in al the grossest absurdities for defence of their errors: because God doth with such giddinesse iustly take vengeance of their pride and stubbornnesse. Verily I trust I haue made plain with how feeble succors Seruettus hath holpen his silly brethren the Anabaptists.

32 Nowe I thinke it wilbe doutfull to no sober man, howe rashly they trouble the church of Christ, that moue brawles and contentions for y baptisme of infants. But it is profitable to consider, what Satan goeth about with this so great suttletic: euen to take away from vs the singular fruit of affiance and spirituall ioy which is to be gathered hereof, and to diminish as much also of the glorie of the goodnesse of God. For howe sweete is it to godly mindes, to be certified not onely by worde, but also by sight to be seene with eyes, that they obtaine so much fauour with the heauenly father, that hee hath also care of their posteritie? For here it is to be seene, howe hee taketh vpon him the person of a most prouident Father of householde towarde vs, which euen after our death doeth not lay away his carefulnesse of vs, but prouideth and foreseeeth for our children. Ought we not here after the example of Dauid with al our heart to leape vp vnto thankesgiuing, that by such shewe of his goodnes, his name may be sanctified? This, verily Satan intendeth, in assailing with so great armies the baptisme of infants: namely, that this testifying of the grace of God being taken away, the promise which by it is present before our eyes, may at length by litle & litle vanish away. Whereupon should growe not only a wicked vnthankfulnesse toward the mercie of God, but also a certaine slothfulnesse in instructing our children to godlinesse. For by this spurre we are not a litle pricked forward to bring them vp in the earnest feare of God and in the keeping of his lawe, when we consider that euen immediatly from their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. Wherefore vnlesse wee list eniuously to darken the bountifullnesse of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whome he giueth a place among them that be of his familie and housholde, that is to say, the members of the Church.

The xvii. Chapter.

Of the holie Supper of Christ: and what it auaileth vs.

After that God hath once receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his seruants, but as his children: that he may fulfil the office of a most good father, and carefull for his issue, he taketh also vpon him to nourish vs throughout the whole course of our life. And not contented therewith, it pleased him by a pledge giuen to assure vs of this continuall liberality. To this ende therefore he hath giuen his Church an other Sacrament by the hande of his onely begotten Sonne, namely a spiritual banquet, wherein Christ testifieth himselfe to be the quickning bread, wherewith our soules are fed to true and blessed immortalitie. But forasmuch as the knowledge of so great a mysterie is verie necessarie, and according to the greatnesse thereof, requireth a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereaue the Church of this inestimable treasure, hath long ago spread mistes, and since that time darknesse, to obscure the light of it, and then hath stirred strifes and battailes that might estrange the mindes of the simple from tasting of this holie foode, and hath also in our time attempted the same craft: therefore when I shall haue briefly knit vp the summe for the capacitie of the vnlearned, I will vndo those knottes, wherewith Satan hath endeouored to snare the worlde. First, bread and wine are signes, which represent vnto vs the inuisible foode, which wee receiue of the flesh and bloud of Christ. For as in baptisme God againe begetting vs doeth graffe vs into the fellowship of his Church, and by adoption doeth make vs his owne: so wee haue saide that he perfourmeth the office of a prouident Father of householde, in this that he continually ministreth vs meate, that he susteineth and preferueth vs in that life whereinto he hath by his worde begotten vs. Nowe the onely meate of our soule is Christ, and therefore the heauenly Father calleth vs to him, that beeing refreshed with common partaking of him, wee may from time to time gather liuely force, vntil wee attaine to heauenly immortalitie. But forasmuch as this mysterie of the secreete vnitng of Christ with the godly is by nature impossible to be comprehended, he giueth the figure and image thereof in visible signes most fit for our small capacitie: yea, as it were by earnestnes and tokens giuen, hee maketh it so assured vnto vs as if it were seene with our eyes, because this so familiar a similitude entreth euen into the grossest mindes, that soules are so fed with Christ, as bread and wine doe susteine the bodily life. Nowe therefore wee haue it declared, & what ende this mysticall blessing tendeth, namely to assure vs, that the bodie of the Lorde was so once offred for vs, that we nowe eate it, and in eating it do feele in vs the effectual working of that onely sacrifice: that his bloude was so once shed for vs, that it is vnto vs continual drinke. And so found the words of the promise there adioyned. Take, this is my bodie, which is deli- uered for you. The body therefore which was once offred vp for our salua- tion, we are commaunded to take and eate: that when we see our selues to be made partakers of this, wee may certainly determine that the power of his death which bringeth life shalbe effectual in vs. Whereupon also he calleth the cup, the couenant in his bloud. For after a certaine maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the conenant which he hath once stablished with his bloud, so much as pertaineth to the confirming of our faith, so oft as he reacheth vnto vs that holy bloud to be tasted of.

Matt. 26. 26

Luk. 22. 19.

2 A great fruit verily of affiance and sweetenesse may godly soules gather of this Sacrament, because they haue a witnessse, that we are growe together into one bodie with Christ, so that whatsoeuer is his we may call ours. Hereupon followeth that we may boldly promise vnto our selues, that euerlasting life is ours, whereof he is heire: and that the kingdome of heauen, whercinto he is now entred, can no more fall away from vs than from him: againe that we cannot now be condemned by our sinnes, from the giltines whereof he hath acquitted vs, when he willed them to be imputed to himself as if they were his owne. This is the marueilous exchange, which of his immeasurable bountifulnes he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the sonne of man, hath made vs with him the sonnes of God: that by his coming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to go vp into heauen: that putting vpon him our mortalitie, he hath giuen vs his immortalitie: y taking on him our weakenesse, he hath strengthened vs with his power: that taking our pouertie to himselfe, he hath conueyed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnrighteousnes, wherewith we were oppressed, he hath clothed vs with his righteousnesse.

3 Of all these things we haue so full a witnessing in this sacrament, that wee must certainly determine, that Christ is truly giuen vs, as if Christ himselfe were set present lie before our eyes, and handled with our hands. For this worde can neither lie to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eate, drinke: this is my bodie which is deliuered for you: this is the bloud, which is shed into the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Whereas he commaundeth to take, he signifieth that it is ours. Whereas he commaundeth to eate, he signifieth that that is made one substance with vs. Whereas he saith of the bodie, that it is deliuered for vs: of the bloud, that it is shed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not so much his as ours: because hee tooke and laide away both, not for his commoditie, but to our saluation. And truly it is to bee diligently marked, that the chiefe and in a manner whole pith of the sacrament standeth in these wordes, Which is deliuered for you, Which is shed for you. For otherwise it should not much profit vs, that the bodie and bloud of our Lord are nowe distributed, vnlesse they had bene once giuen forth for our redemption and saluation. Therefore they are represented vnder bread and wine, that we should learne that they are not onely ours, but also ordeined for the nourishment of spirituall life. This is it that wee before sayde, that from the corporall things which are shewed forth in the Sacraments, we are by a certaine proportionall relation guided to spirituall things. So when bread is giuen vs for a signe of the bodie of Christ, we ought by & by to conceiue this similitude: As bread nourisheth, susteineth, and maintaineth the life of our bodie: so the bodie of Christ is the onely meate to quicken and giue life to our soule. When wee see wine set forth for a signe of his blood: wee must call to minde what vses wine bringeth to the body, that wee may consider that the same are brought to vs spirituallly by the blood of Christ: those vses be, to cherish, to refresh, to strenthen, to make mery. For if wee sufficiently weye, what the deliuering of this holy bodie, what the shedding of this holy blood, hath profited vs: we shall plainly perceiue that these things which are spoken of bread and wine, according to such proportionall relation doe verie well accorde with them towarde vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

4 Therefore the chiefe partes of the Sacrament are not simply and without hier consideration to reach to vs the bodie of Christ but rather that same promise, whereby he testifieth, that his flesh is verily meat, & his blood is drinke, with which we are fed into eternall life: whereby he affirmeth himselfe to be the breade of life, of which who so eateth, he shall liue for euer: to seale (I say) and confirme that promise: and for bringing the same to passe, to send vs to the crosse of Christ, where that promise hath beene truely perfourmed, and in all points fulfilled. For we do not well and healthfully eate Christ but crucified, when we do with liuely feeling conceiue the effectualnes of his death. For whereas he called himselfe the bread of life, he did not borrowe that name of the sacrament, as some do wrongfully expound it: but because he was giuen vs such of the Father, and perfourmed himselfe such, when being made partaker of our humane mortalitie, he made vs partners of his diuine immortalitie: when offering himselfe for sacrifice, he tooke our accursednesse vpon himselfe, that he might fill vs with blessing: when with his death he deuoured and swallowed vp death: when in his resurrection he raised vp this our corruptible flesh which he had put on, to glorie and vn-corruption.

5 It remaineth that by appliance all the same may come to vs. That is done, both by the Gospell, and more clearely by the holy Supper, where both he offereth himselfe to vs with all his good things, and wee receiue him by faith. Wherefore the sacrament maketh not that Christ first beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance, that he was made the bread of life, which we continually eate, and when it giueth vnto vs the taste and sauour of that bread, then it maketh vs to feele the strength of that bread. For it promiseth vs, that whatsoeuer Christ did or suffered, the same was done to giue life to vs. Then, that this giuing of life is euerlasting, by which wee may without ende be nourished, susteined, and preferued in life. For as Christ should not haue beene to vs the bread of life, vnlesse hee had beene borne and had died for vs, vnlesse hee had risen againe for vs:

so nowe he should not be the same vnlesse the effectualnesse and fruite of his birth, death and resurrection, were an euerlasting and immortall thing. All which Christ hath very well expressed in these wordes: The bread which I will giue, is my flesh, which I wil giue for y life of the world. By which words without dout he signifieth, that his body should therefore be to vs for bread, to the spirituall life of the soule, because it should be giuen forth to death for our saluation: and that it is deliuered to vs to eate of it, when by faith he maketh vs pattakers of it. Once therefore he gaue it, that he might bee made bread, when he gaue forth himselfe to be crucified for the redemption of the world: daily he giueth it, when by the worde of the Gospel he offereth it vnto vs to be receiued, so farre as it was crucified: where hee sealethe that deliuerance with the holy mysterie of the Supper: where he inwardly fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Nowe herein we must beware of two faultes, that neither doing too much in abasing the signes, we seeme to pluck them from their mysteries to which they are in a maner knitte fast: nor that being immeasurable in aduancing the same, wee seeme in the meane time somewhat to darken the mysteries themselves. That Christ is the breade of life, wherewith the faithfull are nourished into eternall saluation, there is no man but he granteth, vnlesse he be altogether without religion. But this point is not likewise agreed vpon among all men, what is the maner of partaking of him. For there be that in one worde define, that to eate the flesh of Christ, and to drinke his bloud, is nothing else but to beleue in Christ himselfe. But I thinke that Christ meant some certainer and hier thing, in that notable sermon where he commendeth to vs the eating of his flesh: namely, that wee are quickned by the true partaking of him: which also he therefore expressed by the wordes of eating and drinking, least any man shoulde thinke, that the life which we receiue of him is conceived by bare knowledge onely. For as not the sight, but the eating of bread suffiseth the body for nourishment: so it behoueth that the soule be truely & throughly made partaker of Christ, that by the power of him it may be quickened into a spirituall life. But in the meane time we confesse y there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined. But this is the difference betweene my words and theirs, that with them to eate is only to beleue: but I say y the flesh of Christ is eaten with beleueing, because by faith he is made ours, and I say that eating is the fruite and effect of faith. Or, if you will haue it plainer, with them eating is faith: and I thinke it rather to folowe of faith. In wordes verily the difference is but small: but in the thing it selfe, not small. For though the Eph. 3. 17. Apostle teacheth that Christ dwelleth in our hartes by Faith: yet no man will expounde this dwelling to be faith: but all men doe perceiue that there is expressed a singular effect of faith, for that by it the faithfull doe obtaine to haue Christ dwelling in them. After this maner, the Lorde meant, in calling Ioh. 6. 51. himselfe the bread of life, not only to teach that in the faith of his death and resurrection, saluation is reposed for vs: but also that by true partaking of himselfe it is brought to passe, that his life passeth into vs, and becommeth ours: like as bread, when it is taken for foode, ministereth liuelinesse to the body.

6 Neither did Augustine, whome they bring in for their patrone, in any other

Other meaning write that wee eate by beleeuing, than to shewe that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I also denie not: but yet therewithall I adde, that we doe by faith embrace Christ, not appearing a farre of, but making himselfe one with vs, that he may be our head, and we his members. Yet doe not I vtterly disallowe that manner of speaking: but onely I denie it to be a full declaration, if they meane to define what it is to eate the fleshe of Christe. Otherwise I see that Augustine hath oft vsed this forme of speeche: as when he sayeth in the thirde booke Of Christian doctrine, Vnlesse ye eate the fleshe of the sonne of man: this is a figure teaching that wee must communicate with the passion of the Lorde, and must sweetely and profitably lay vppe in remembraunce that for vs his fleshe was crucified and wounded. Againe when he sayeth, that the three thousande men whiche were conuerted at Peters sermon, did drinke the bloude of Christ by beleeuing, which they hadde shedde by cruell dealing. But in many other places he honorably setteth out that benefite of faith, that by it our soules are no lesse refreshed with the communicating of the fleshe of Christ, than our bodies are with the breade which they eate. And the same is it which in a certaine place Chrysostome wryteth, that Christ doeth not onely by sayth, but also in deede make vs his body. For he meaneth not that we doe from any other where than from faith, obtaine such a benefite: but this onely he meaneth to exclude, that none when hee heareth faith to bee named, should conceiue a naked imagination. As for them that wil haue the Supper to be only a marke of outward profession, I do now passe them ouer: because I thinke y I haue sufficiently confuted their error, when I entreated of Sacramentes generally. Onely this thing let the readers marke, that when the cup is called the couenant in the bloude, there is a promise expressed that may be of force to confirme faith. Whereupon followeth, that vnlesse wee haue respect to God, and embrace that which he offreth, we doe not rightly vse the holy Supper.

7 Moreouer they also do not satisfie me, which acknowledging that we haue some communion with Christ, when they mean to expresse it, do make vs partakers onely of the Spirite, without making any mention of fleshe and bloude. As though all those thinges were spoken of nothing, that his fleshe is verily meate, that his bloude is verily drinke: that none hath life, but hee that eateth that fleshe, and drinketh that bloude: and such other sayings that belong to the same ende. Wherefore if it be certaine that the full communicating of Christ proceedeth beyond their descriptiō, as it is too narrowly strained: I will nowe goe about to knit vp in fewe wordes, howe large it is and howe farre it extendeth it selfe, before that I spake of the contrarie fault of excesse. For I shall haue a longer disputation with the excessiue teachers, which, when according to their owne grossenesse they frame a maner of eating and drinking full of absurditie, doe also transfigure Christ stripped out of his fleshe into a fantasie: if yet a man may with any wordes comprehend so greate a mysterie, which I see that I can not sufficiently comprehend with minde: and therefore I do willingly confesse it, that no man shoulde measure the hinesse thereof by the small proportion of my childishnesse. But rather I exhorte the readers, that they do not restraine the sense of their minds within these too narrow bounds: but endeavour to rise vp much higher, than they can by my guiding. For I my selfe, so ofte as I speake of this thing, when I haue traueiled to say all, thinke that I haue yet saide but litle in respect of the worthinesse thereof. And although the minde can doe more in thinking than the tongue in expressing: yet with greatnesse of the thing, the minde also is surmounted and ouerwhelmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but y^e I must breake forth into admiration of that mysterie, which neither the minde can suffice to thinke of, nor the tongue to declare. Yet after such manner as I can, I will set foorth the summe of my sentence: which as I nothing doubt to be true, so I trust that it will not be disallowed of godly heartes.

8 First of all, wee are taught out of the scripture, that Christ was from the beginning that life bringing worde of the Father, the fountaine and originall of life, from whence all things euer received their hauing of life. Wherefore Iohn sometime calleth him the worde of life, and sometime writeth that life was in him: meaning that hee euen then flowing into all creatures, powred into them the power of breathing & liuing. Yet the same Iohn addeth afterward, that the life was then and not till then openly shewed, whē the Sonne of God taking vpon him our fleshe, gaue himselfe to be seene with eyes and felt with handes. For though he did before also spread abroad his power into the creatures: yet because man, being by sinne estranged from God, hauing lost the communion of life, sawe on euery side death hanging ouer him: that he might recouer hope of immortalitie, it behooued that he shoulde be receiued into the communion of that worde. For howe small a confidence maiest thou conceiue thereof, if thou heare y^e the word of God in deede, from which thou art most farre remooued, containeth in it selfe the fulnesse of life, but in thy selfe and rounde about thee nothing offereth it selfe and is present before thine eyes but death? But since that fountaine of life beganne to dwell in our fleshe, nowe it lieth not a farre off hidden from vs, but presently deliuereth it selfe to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very fleshe, wherein it resteth, to bee of power to bring life to vs, that by partaking thereof wee may bee fedde to immortalitie. I am (saith hee) Iohn 6.48^o and 58. the bread of life, y^e am come down from heauen. And the bread which I wil giue is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the worlde. In which wordes hee reacheth, not onely that he is life, in respect that hee is the eternall worde of G O D which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in coming downe he powred the same power into the fleshe which he did put on, that from thence the communicating of life might flowe foorth vnto vs. Hereupon also these things nowe follow, that his flesh is verily meat, and his blood is verilie drinke, with which sustentances the faithfull are fostered into eternall life. Herein therefore consisteth singular comfort to the godly, y^e nowe they finde life in their owne fleshe. For so they doe not onely with easie passage atteine vnto it, but haue it of it selfe laid abroad for them and offering it selfe vnto them. Onely let them hold open the bosome of their heart y^e they may embrace it being present, and they shall obteine it.

9 But although the flesh of Christ haue not so great power of it selfe, that it can giue life to vs, which both in the owne first estate of it was subiect.

Ioh. 5. 19.

iest to mortalitie, and now being endued with immortalitie, liueth not by it selfe: yet it is rightfully called lifebringing, which is filled with fulnesse of life to poure it into vs. In which meaning I doe with Cyril expounde that saying of Christ: as the father hath life in himselfe, so hee hath also giuen to the sonne to haue life in himselfe. For there he properly speaketh of his gistes, nor which hee from the beginning possessed with the father, but with which he was garnished in the same fleshe in which he appeared. Therefore hee sheweth that in his manhoode also dwelleth the fulnesse of life, that whosoever partaketh of his fleshe and bloode, may therewithall also enjoy the partaking of life. Of what sort that is, we may declare by a familiar example. For as out of a fountaine water is sometime dronke, sometime is drawen, sometime by forrowes is conueied to the watering of groundes, which yet of it selfe doeth not ouerflow into so manie vses, but from the verie spring it selfe which with cuerlasting flowing yeeldeth and ministreth vnto it from time to time newe abundance: so the fleshe of Christ is like a rich and vnausted fountaine which powreth into vs the life springing from the Godheade into it selfe. Nowe who seeth not, that the communion of the fleshe and bloode of Christ is necessarie to all that aspire to heavenly life? Hereunto renderth that saying of the Apostle, that the Church is the body of Christ and the fulfilling of it: and that he is the heade out of which the whole body coupled and knit together by ioyntes maketh encrease of the body: that our bodies are the members of Christ. All which thinges we vnderstande to be impossible to be brought to passe, but that hee must wholly cleaue to vs in Spirit and body. But that most neere fellowship whereby we are coupled with his fleshe, hee hath yet set out with a more glorious title, when he saide that we are members of his bodie, and are of his bones and of his fleshe. At the last, to declare it to be a matter greater than all wordes, he concludeth his saying with an exclamation, This is (saith hee) a great secret. Therefore it shoulde be a point of extreeme madnesse to acknowledge no communion of the faithfull when the fleshe and bloode of the Lorde, which the Apostle declareth to bee so great, that hee had rather wonder at it than expresse it.

10 Let the summe bee, that our soules are so fedde with the fleshe and bloode of Christ, as breade and wine doe maintaine and susteine the bodily life. For otherwise the proportionall relation of the signe shoulde not agree, vnlesse soules did finde their foode in Christ. Which can not be done, vnles Christ doe truly growe into one with vs, and refreshe vs with the eating of his fleshe and drinking of his bloode. But although it seeme incredible, that in so great distance of places the fleshe of Christ reacheth to vs that it may bee meate to vs: let vs remember howe much the secreete power of the spirit surmounteth about all our senses, and howe foolishe it is to goe about to measure his vnmeasurableness by our measure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the spirit truly kniteth in one those thinges that are seuered in places. Nowe that same holy communicating of his bodie and bloode, whereby Christ powreth his life into vs, euen as if hee pearced it into our bones and marowes, hee in the supper

Supper also testifieth and sealeth : and that not with setting before vs a vaine or voyde signe, but bringing forth there the effectuall working of his spirite whereby he fulfilleth that which he promiseth . And verily he there offreth & deliuereth the thing signified to all them that sit at that spirituall banquet: although it be receiued with fruit of the faithfull only, which receiue so great bountifulnesse with true faith and thankfulnessse of minde. After which manner the Apostle sayde, that the bread which we breake is the communion of the bodie of Christ : and that the cuppe which wee hallowe with the worde and prayers to that purpose, is the communion of his bloud. Neither is there any cause why any man should obieſt, that it is a figuratiue speech, by which the name of the thing signified is giuen to the signe. I graunt verily that the breaking of the bread is a signe, not the thing it selfe. But this beeing admitted, yet we shal rightly gather of the deliuerance of the signe, that the thing it selfe is deliuered . For vnlesse a man will call God a deceiuer, he can neuer be so bolde to saye that hee setteth before vs an emptie signe . Therefore if by the breaking of bread the Lorde doth truely represent the partakinge of his body, it ought to be out of dout that he truely performeth and deliuereth it. And this rule is alway to be holden of the godly, that so oft as they see the signes ordained of the Lord, they certainly thinke and perswade themselues that the trueth of the thing signified is there present . For to what purpose should the Lorde deliuer to thee into thy hande the signe of his body, but to assure thee of the true partaking of it ? If it bee true, that a visible signe is giuen vs, to seale the gift of an inuisible thing : when wee receiue the signe of the bodie, let vs no lesse certainly beleue that the body it selfe also is giuen vs.

II Ifay therefore (which both hath bin alway receiued in the Church, and all they teach at this day that think right) that the holy mysterie of the Supper consisteth of two thinges : that is to say, of the bodily signes, whiche beeing set before our eyes doe represent vnto vs inuisible thinges according to the capacitie of our weakenesse : and of spirituall trueth, which is by those signes both figured and deliuered . Of what sorte that is , when I meane to shewe it familiarlie, I vse to set three thinges : the signification, the matter which hangeth of y signification, the vertue or effect which foloweth of both. The signification consisteth in the promises, which are after a certaine manner wrapped together with the signe . The matter of substance I call Christ with his death and resurrection. By effect I vnderstand the redemption, righteousnessse, sanctification, and eternall life, and whatsoever other benefites Christ bringeth vs. Now although all these things haue respect to faith: yet I leaue no place to this cauillation: as though when I say that Christ is receiued by faith, I would haue him conceiued with vnderstanding only and imagination. For the promises offer him, not that wee should sticke fast in the sight alone and in bare knowledge : but that we shoulde enioy the true communicating of him . And truely I see not how any man may haue confidence that he hath redemption and righteousnessse in the crosse of Christ, and life in his death, but principally standing vpon the true communion of Christe himselfe. For those good thinges shoulde not come to vs, vnlesse Christ first made himselfe ours, I say therefore, that in the mysterie of the Supper, by the signes signes of bread and wine Christ is truly deliuered to vs, yea and his body and blood, in which he hath fulfilled al obedience for purchasing of righteousnes to vs: namely y first we should grow together into one body with him: & then being made partakers of his substance, we may also feele his power in the communicating of all his good things.

12 Now I come down to the excessiue mixtures, which superstition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath played with maruelous futtlecie, that withdrawing the mindes of men from heauen, he might fill them with peruerse error, as though Christ were fastened to the element of breade. And first we must not dreame such a presence of Christ in the Sacrament, as the craftesmen of the court of Rome haue fained: as though the body of Christ were made present with presence of place, to be handled with hands, to bee broosed with teeth, and swallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicolas endited to Berengarius, to bee a witnesse of his repentance: namely with words so farre monstrous, that the author of the glose crieth out y there is danger, if the readers do not wisely take heede to themselves, least they should sucke out of them an heresie worse than was that of Berengarius. In the seconde distinction, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he trauaile much in excusing the absurditie, yet more inclineth to the contrary sentence. For as wee nothing doubt that it hath limites according to the perperuall nature of the bodie of men, and is holden in heauen, into which it was once receiued, vntil hee returne to iudgement: so to drawe it backe vnder these corruptible elementes or to imagine it present euery where, we account it to be vtterly vlawfull. Neither verily is it so needefull to this that we may enioy the partaking of it: forasmuch as the Lorde giueth vs this benefit by his Spirit, that we be made one with him in body, Spirit, and soule. The bonde therefore of this conioyning is the spirit of Christ, by the knitting whereof we be coupled together, and as it were a certaine conduit, by which whatsoever Christ himselfe both is & hath, is conueyed to vs. For if we beholde the sunne shining foorth with his beames vpon the earth after a certaine manner to cast forth his substance vnto it to engender, nourishe, and quicken the fruites thereof: why should the extending of beames of the Spirite of Christ be inferiour to conuey the communion of his flesh and blood into vs? Wherefore the Scripture, when it speaketh of our partaking with Christ, referreth the whole force thereof to the Spirite. Yet in steede of many, one place shalbe sufficient. For Paul in the eight Chapter to the Romanes, sayth that Christ dwelleth in vs none otherwise than by his Spirite: whereby yet hee taketh not away that communion of his fleshe and blood of which we nowe speake, but teacheth that the Spirite alone worketh that wee possesse whole Christ and haue him dwelling in vs.

13 The schoolemen thought more shamefastly which were withholden with horrour of so barbarous vngodlinesse. Yet they also themselves do nothing but mocke with futtler deceites. They graunt that Christ is not contained there by way of circumscription nor after a bodily manner: but afterward they inuent a way, which neither themselves doe vnderstand, nor they can declare to other: yet it is such as falleth to this pointe that Christe must be sought in the forme of breade as they call it. For what is it? When they say that the substance of bread is turned into Christ, doe they not fasten him to the whitnes which they there leaue? But (say they) he is so contained in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heauen: and we determine no other presence but of habitude. But whatsoeuer wordes they bring in to clooke it with a deceitfull colour, this is the ende of all, that that is by consecration made Christ, which before was bread: that from thence forth Christ lieth hid vnder that colour of bread. Which also they are not ashamed in plaine wordes to expresse. For these be the wordes of Lombarde: that the body of Christ, which in it selfe is visible, when the consecration is ended, lieth hidden and is couered vnder the forme of bread. So the forme of that bread is nothing else but a visour, that taketh away the sight of the flesh from the eies. Neither neede wee many coniectures, to finde what snares they minded to lay with these wordes, sith the thing it selfe plainly speaketh it. For it is to be seene with howe great superstition in certaine ages past, not onely the common sort of men, but also the verie cheefe of them haue bene holden, and at this day be holden in popishe Churches. For hauing little care of true faith (by which alone we both come into the fellowship of Christ, and doe cleaue together with him) so that they haue a carnal presence of him, which they haue framed beside the worde, they thinke that they haue him present enough. Therefore in a summe, we see that this hath ben gotten by this wittie suttlety, that bread was taken for God.

Lib. 4. dist.

14 From hence proceeded y^e same fained transubstantiation, for which at this day they fight more earnestly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the first builders of that locall presence could not vnwinde themselves from this doubt howe the bodie of Christ shoulde be mingled with y^e substance of breade, but that by and by many absurdities did thrust the felues in place. Therefore they were driuen of necessitie to flee to this inuention, that there is made a turning of breade into the body: not that the body is properly made to God, but because Christ y^e he might hide himselfe vnder the forme, bringeth the substance to nothing. But it is meruellous, y^e they fell to so great ignorance, yea senselesse dulnesse, that not only y^e scripture but also the consent of y^e olde Church fighting against it, they brought abroad that monster. I grant indeed that some of the olde writers sometime vsed the name of turning: not for that they would destroy the substance in y^e outwarde signes, but that they might teach that the bread dedicate to y^e mysterie differeth farre from common bread and is now other. But ech where they plainly declare, that the holy supper consisteth of two partes, an earthly part, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they do without controuerse expound to be bread and wine. Truly whatsoeuer they babble, it is plaine that in confirming of this doctrine they want the defence of antiquitie, which they oftentimes presume to set against the euident worde of God. For it is not so long agoe since it was inuented: it was verily vnknown not only to those better ages, in which y^e purer doctrine of religion yet flourished, but also euen when that same purenesse was much defiled. There is none of the old writers y^e doth not in expresse words confesse y^e the holy signes in the Supper are bread and wine: although, as we haue saide, they sometime set it

it out with diuerse titles, to aduaunce the dignitie of \bar{y} mysterie. For whereas they say \bar{y} in the consecration is made a secrete turning, that now it is another thing than bread and wine: I haue euen nowe giuen warning \bar{y} they do not thereby meane \bar{y} the things themselues are brought to nought, but that they are now to be otherwise esteemed than common meates, which are appointed onely to feede the belly: forasmuch as in them is deliuered to vs the spirituall meat and drinke of the soule. This wee also denie not. If (say these men) there bee a turning, it must needes be that there is of one thing made an other thing. If they meane that there is some thing made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will drawe it to that their owne imagination, let them answere me what change they thinke to be made in baptisme. For herein the fathers also do determin a maruelous turning, when they say that of a corruptible element is made a spiritual washing of \bar{y} soule, yet none of them denieth that water remaineth. But (say they) there is no such thing in baptisme, as is \bar{y} in the supper. This is my body. As though the question were of those wordes, which haue a meaning plaine enough; and not rather of that worde of turning, which ought to signifie no more in the Supper thā in baptisme. Therefore farewell they with these snares of syllables, whereby they doe nothing else but bewray their owne hungtrinesse. For otherwise the signification would not agree together vnlesse the trueth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outward signe. Christes will was by the outward signe to testifie that his flesh is meate. If hee did fet before vs onely an emptie imaginatiue forme of bread not true bread, where were the correlatiō or similitude which should lead vs from the visible thing to the inuisible? For, that all thinges may agree together, the signification shall extende no further, but that we be fedde with the forme of the flesh of Christ. As, if in baptisme the forme of water shoulde deceiue our eyes, it shoulde not bee to vs a certaine pledge of our washing: yea by that deceitful shew there should be giuen vs an occasion of wauering. Therefore the nature of the Sacrament is ouerthrowen, vnles in the maner of signifying the earthly signe aunswer to \bar{y} heauenly thing. And therefore we loose the trueth of this mysterie, vnlesse true bread represent to vs the true body of Christ. I repeat it againe: Sith \bar{y} Supper is nothing else, than a visible testifying of that promise which is in the sixt Chapter of Iohn, namely that Christ is the breade of life, which came downe from heauen: there must be visible bread vsed for a meane, whereby \bar{y} same spirituall bread may be figured: vnles we will that wee loose all the fruit which in this behalfe God tenderly granteth to susteine our weakenes. Now by what reason shoulde Paul gather, that al we are one body and one bread, which doe together partake of one bread, if there remained onely an imaginatiue forme and not rather a naturall trueth of bread?

15 But they coulde neuer haue bene so fowly beguiled with \bar{y} deceites of Satan, but because they were already bewitched with this ertour, that the body of Christ inclosed vnder bread was by the bodily mouth sent downe into the belly. The cause of so brutish imagination was, that consecration signified as much among them as a magicall enchauntment. But this principle was drawn to them, that bread is a sacrament to none but to men, to whome the worde it directed: like as \bar{y} water of baptisme is not changed in it selfe, but so soone as the promise is adioyned, it beginneth to be that to vs which it before was not. This shall better appeare by example of a like Sacrament. The water springing out of the rocke in the desert was to the fathers a token and signe of the same thing, which the wine doeth figure to vs in the Supper. For Paul teacheth that they drunke the same spiritual drink. But it was a common watering for the beasts and catel of the people. Whereupon it is easily gathered, that in earthly elements, when they are applied to a spirituall vse, there is made no other turning but in respect of men, in so much as they are to them seales of the promises. Moreouer sith Gods purpose is (as I often repeate) as it were by handsome chariots to lift vs vp to himselfe, they do by their waywardnesse wickedly disapoint the same, which do in deede call vs to Christ, but lurking inuisibly vnder bread. For it is not possible that the minde of men, vncombring it selfe from the immeasurable bleness of places, should attaine to Christ euen about the heauens. That which nature denied them, they attempted to amende with a more hurtfull remedie: that abiding in earth, we should neede no heauenly neerenesse of Christ. Loe, this is the necessitie, that compelled them to transfigure the bodie of Christ. In Bernardes time, although a harder maner of speaking was growen in vse, yet transubstantiation was not then knowen. And in all ages before that, this similitude did flie about in euery mans mouth, that there is with bread and wine a spirituall thing ioyned in this mysterie. Of the words they aunswere, as they thinke, wittily: but bringing nothing fit for this present cause. The rod of Moses (say they) being turned into a Serpent, although it did get the name of a Serpent, yet keepeth still the old name, & is called a rod. So in their opinion it is as probable, that although the bread passe into a newe substance, it may be abusiuely and yet not vnaptly called that which it appeareth to the eyes. But what likelihoode or neerenesse finde they betweene a cleare miracle, and their fained illusion, of which no eye in earth is witnesse? The Magicians had mocked with deceits, so that the Aegyptiās were perswaded, that they excelled in diuine power to change creatures about the order of nature. Moses came foorth, and driuing away all their deceites, shewed that the inuincible power of God was on his side, because his own rod consumed al the rest. But forasmuch as that was a turning discernable with eyes, therefore as we haue said, it pertaineth nothing to this present cause: and in a litle time after, the rod visibly returned into his own forme. Beside that it is not knowen, whether that sudden turning was of substance or no. Also the alluding to the rods of the Magicians is to be considered, which the Prophet therefore would not call Serpents, least he should seeme to signifie a turning where none was: because those deceiuers had done nothing but cast a myst before the eyes of the beholders. What likenesse herewith haue these formes of speeche, The bread which we breake, So oft as ye shall eat this bread, They communicated in breaking of bread, & such other? It is certaine that their eyes were onely deceiued with y^e enchantment of the Magicians. As concerning Moses, the matter is more doutfull, by whose hand it was no more hard for God to make of a rod a Serpent, & againe of a Serpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleshy bodies, and by and by after to vncloth them. If the nature of this mysterie were the same or like, there were some colour for their solution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truely nor fitly promised vs that in the Supper the flesh of Christ is truely to vs for meate, vnlesse the true substance of the outward signe agree with it. And (as one error groweth of another) the place of Ieremie is so foolishly wrested to prooue transubstantiation, that it irketh me to rehearse it. The Prophet complaineth that wood is put in his bread: meaning that by the crueltie of his enimies, his bread was infected with bitternesse. As Dauid with a like figure bewaileth that his meate was corrupted with gall, and his drinke with vineger. These men will haue it that the body of Christ was by way of allegorie fastened to y^e crosse. But some of the olde fathers thought so. As though wee ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, and to burie their shame, than to adde shamelesnes to compell them yet still to fight like enemies with the naturall meaning of the Prophet.

16 Other, which see that the proportionall relation of the signe & the thing signified, can not be ouerthrowen, but that the truth of the mystery must fall, do confesse that the bread of the Supper is verily a substance of an earthly and corruptible element, and suffreth no change in it selfe, but hath vnder it selfe the body of Christ enclosed. If they did so declare their meaning, that when the bread is deliuered in the mysterie, there is adioyned the deliuering of the bodie, because the truth is vnseuerable from the signe: I woulde not much striue with them. But because they placing the body in the bread, do faine to it a being euery where contrarie to the nature thereof, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is necessarie a litle while to drawe such subtleties out of their dennes. For my mind is not yet as of set purpose to go through with al this point: but onely that I may lay the foundations of the disputation which shall by and by followe in place fit for it. They will therefore haue the body of Christ to be inuisible & immeasurable, that it may be hid vnder the bread: because they thinke they do not otherwise communicate with him than if he descend into the bread: but they comprehend not the maner of descending, whereby he listeth vs vpward to himselfe. They lay vpon it all the colours that they can: but when they haue said all, it sufficiently appeareth, that they stay vpon the local presence of Christ. Whence commeth that? euen because they can abide to conceiue no other partaking of the flesh & bloud, but which consisteth either of ioyning & touching of place, or of some grosse enclosing.

17 And, that they may obstinately defende the error once rashly conceiued, some of them sticke not to say, that the flesh of Christ had neuer any other measurings, but so farre & wide as heauen & earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a child out of the wombe, whereas he grewe, whereas hee was spread abroad on the crosse, whereas he was enclosed in the sepulchre, the same was done by a certaine dispensation, that he might be borne & die, and performe the other duties of man. Whereas after his resurrection he was seene in his wonted forme of body, whereas he was taken vp to heauen, whereas last of all also after his ascension he was seene of Stephen and Pauli it was done by the same dispensation, that it might appeare to the sight of men y^e he was made a king in heauen. What is this else, but to raise vp Mar-

cion out of hell: For no man can dour that the body of Christ was a fantasie or a fantastical thing, if he was of such state. Some slip away somewhat more suttelly, with saying that this bodie which is giuen in the Sacrament is glorious and immortall: and that therefore it is no absurditie, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the sacrament. But I aske what maner of bodie Christ gaue to the disciples, the day before th at he suffred: do not the wordes found that hee gaue the same mortall bodie, which was within a litle after to be deliuered? Hee had already before (say they) shewed his glorie to be seene to three of the disciples. That is true in deede, but his will was by that brightnesse to giue them a taste of immortalitie for an houre. In the meane time they shall not there finde a double bodie, but that one body which Christ did beare, garnished with newe glorie. But when he distributed his bodie at his first supper, the time was nowe at hand, when he being striken of God, and humbled shoulde lie without glorie as a leprous man: so farre is it off that he then would shewe foorth the glorie of his resurrection. And howe great a window is here opened to Marcion, if the bodie of Christ was seene in one place mortal & base, and in an other place was holden immortall & glorious: Howbeit if their opinion take place, the same happeneth daily: because they are compelled to confesse that the bodie of Christ being visible in it selfe, lieth hid inuisibly vnder the signe of bread. And yet they that vomit out such monstrousnes, are so not ashamed of their own shame, that they do vnprooked hainously raile at vs, because we do not subscribe to them.

18 - Now if they list to fasten the bodie & bloud of the Lorde to bread & wine: the one shall of necessitie be plucked in sunder from the other. For as the bread is deliuered seuerally from the cup, so the bodie vnited to y bread must needes be deuided from the bloud enclosed in the cup. For when they affirme that the bodie is in the bread & the bloud in the cup: and the bread & wine are by spaces of place distant the one from the other: they can by no shift escape, but that the bodie must be seuered from the bloud. But whereas they are wont to alleage, that by accompanying (as they faine) in the body is the bloud, & likewise in the bloud is the bodie, y verily is too trifling: forasmuch as the signes in which they are enclosed, are so seuered. But if wee bee lifted vp w our eyes & mindes to heauen, y we seeke Christ there in the glory of his kingdom: as the signes do allure vs to him whole, so vnder the signe of bread, we shalbe fed with his bodie, vnder the signe of wine we shall seuerally drinke his bloud, y at length we may enioy him whole. For although he hath taken away his flesh from vs, & in his bodie is ascended vp into heauen, yet he sitteth at the right hand of the Father, that is to say hee reigneth in the power, & maiestie, & glorie of the Father. This kingdome is neither bounded with any spaces of place, nor compassed about with any measurings, but y Christ may shew forth his might whersoever it please him both in heauen & in earth: but that he may shewe himselfe present with power & strength: but that he may alway be at hand with them y be his, breathing his life into them, may liue in them, strengthen them, quicken them, preferue them safe, euen as if he were present in body: finally, but that he may feede them with his owne body, the communion whereof hee doeth by the power of his Spirite powre into them. After this maner the bodie and blood of Christ is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

19 But we must appoint such a presence of Christ in the supper, as may neither fasten him to the element of bread, nor shut him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compasse him in, (for it is plaine that all these things abate his heauenlic glorie) finally such as may neither take from him his owne measure, nor diuersly draw him in many places at once, nor faine to him such an vnmeasurable greatnesse as is spread abroad throughout heauen and earth, for these things are plainly against the trueth of the nature of man-hood. Let vs (I say) neuer suffer these two exceptions to be taken away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glorie of Christ, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elements of this world, or is bound to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothing be by faining, applied to his bodie, that agreeth not with the nature of man: which is done, when it is either said to be infinite, or is set in many places at once. But these absurdities being taken away, I willingly receiue whatsoeuer may auaille to expresse the true and substantiall communicating of the body and blood of the Lorde, which communicating is deliuered to the faithfull vnder the holy signes of the supper: and so that they may be thought not to receiue it by imagination onely or vnderstanding of minde, but to enjoy it in deed to the foode of eternall life. Why this sentence is so hatefull to the worlde; and all defence taken away from it by the vniust iudgements of many, there is no cause at all, but for that the diuel hath with horrible bewitching madded their mindes. Truely that which we teach, doth in all points very wel agree with the Scriptures: it containeth neither any absurditie, nor darknesse, nor doubtfulnesse: it is not against true godlinesse and sound edification: finally, it hath nothing in it, that may offend, sauing that in certaine ages past, when that ignorance and barbarousnesse of Sophisters reigned in the Church, so cleare light and open trueth hath bene vnworthily oppressed. Yet because Satan at this day also trauaileth by troublesome spirites to spot it with all the slaunders and reproches that hee can, and bendeth himselfe to no other thing with greater endeouour: it is profitable the more diligently to defende and rescue it.

20 Now before that wee go any further, wee must entreate of the selfe institution of Christ: specially because this is the most glorious obiection that our aduersaries haue, that we depart from the wordes of Christ. Therefore, that we may be discharged of the false cause of malice wherewith they burden vs, our fittest beginning shall be at the exposition of the wordes. Three Euangelistes and Paul rehearse, that Christ tooke bread, when he had giuen thanks he brake it, gaue it to his disciples and saide, Take, eat: this is my bodie which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cuppe Matthewe and Luke say thus: This cuppe is the blood of the Newe testament, which shall be shedde for many vnto forgiveness of sinnes. But Paul and Luke say thus: This cuppe is the Newe testament in my blood. The patrones of transubstantiation will haue by the pronoune (this) the fourme of bread to be signified, because the consecration is made in the whole content of the sentence, and there is no substance that can be shewed. But if they bee holders with religious care of the wordes, because Christ testified, that that which he reached into the disciples hands, was his body: truly this their deuise, that that which was bread is nowe the bodie, is most farre from the proper meaning of them. That which Christ tooke into his handes and gaue the Apostles, he affirmeth to be his bodie: but he tooke bread: who therefore can not vnderstande that bread is yet shewed? and therefore there is no greater absurditie, than to remoue that to the forme, which is spoken of the bread. Other, when they expounde this worde (is) for (to be transubstantiate,) doe flee to a more enforced and violently wrested glose. Therefore there is no cause why they shoulde pretende that they bee moued with reuerence of words. For this was vnheard of among all nations and languages, that the word (is) should be taken in this sense, namely for to be turned into another thing. As for them that leaue bread in the Supper, and affirme that there is the bodie of Christ, they much differ among themselues. They which speak more modestly, although they precisely exact the letter, This is my bodie, yet afterward swarue from their precisenesse, and say that it is as much in effect as that the bodie of Christ is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the matter it selfe which they affirme, wee haue already touched somewhat, and wee shall by and by haue occasion yet to speake more. Nowe I dispute onely of the words, by which they say they are restrained that they cannot admit bread to be called the bodie, because it is a signe of the body. But if they shunne all figures, why do they leape away from the plaine shewing of Christ, to their owne maners of speaking farre differing from it? For there is great difference betweene this that bread is the bodie, and this that the bodie is with bread. But because they sawe it to be impossible, that this simple proposition might stande, that bread is the bodie: they haue attempted to scape away by those formes of speache, as it were by crooked turnings. Some more bolde sticke not to affirme that euen in proper speaking, bread is the bodie, and by this meane they truly proue themselues to be literall men. If it be objected, that therefore the bread is Christ, and is God: this verily they will deny, because it is not expressed in the wordes of Christ. But they shall nothing preuaile by denying it: forasmuch as all do agree that whole Christ is offred vs in the Supper. But it is an intollerable blasphemie, that it be without figure spoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Christ. Nowe I aske of them, whether these two propositions bee both of one effect, Christ is the Sonne of God, and bread is the body of Christ. If they graunt that they are diuerse, (which we will enforce them to graunt whether they will or no) then let them aunswere whence commeth the difference. I thinke they will bring none other but that the bread is after the sacramentall manner called the bodie. Whereupon followeth, that Christs wordes are not subiect to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammar. Also I aske of all the precise and stiffe requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paul do call the cuppe the testament in the bloud, whether they do not expresse the same thing which they did in the first parte, where they call bread the bodie. Truly the same religion was in the one parte of the mysterie that was in the other: and because shortnesse is darke, longer speech doth better open the meaning. So oft therefore as they shall affirme by one worde, that the bread is the bodie: I will out of moe words bring a fit exposition, that it is the Testament in the bodie. For why? Shal wee neede to seeke a more faithfull or surer expositor than Paul and Luke? Neither yet do I tende hereunto, to diminish any thing of that communicating of the bodie of Christ which I haue confessed: onely my purpose is to confute that foolish waiwardnesse, whereby they doe so hatefully brawle about wordes. I vnderstande, by the authoritie of Paul and Luke, that the bread is the bodie of Christ, because it is the couenant in the bodie. If they fight against this, they haue warre not with me, but with the spirite of God. Howsoeuer they crie out that they be touched with reuerence of the wordes of Christ, whereby they do not figuratiuely vnderstande those things that are plainly spoken: yet this is not a pretence rightfull enough, why they should so refuse all the reasons which wee obiekt to the contrarie. In the meane time, as I haue alreadie giuen warning, it is conuenient to learne, what manner of thing this is, The testament in the bodie and bloud of Christ: because the couenant stablished with the sacrifice of death, shoulde otherwise not profit vs, vnlesse there were adioyned that secret communicating whereby we growe into one with Christ.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinitie which the things signified haue with their signes, we confesse that the selfe name of the thing was giuen to the signe: figuratiuely in deede, but not without a most fit proportionall agreement. I leaue allegories and parables, lest any man should quarrell that I seeke startingholes, and wander out of the present purpose. I say that this is a speech by figure of transnomination which is commonly vsed in the Scripture, when mysteries are entreated of. For neither can you other wise vnderstand that which is said: that circumcision is a couenant: that the lambe is the Passeouer: that the Sacrifices of the lawe are expiations: finally that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the desert, was Christ: vnlesse you take it to be spoken by way of transferring of names. Neither are names transferred onely from the hier name to the lower: but contrariwise the name of the visible signe is also giuen to the thing signified: as when it is said that God appeared to Moses in the bushe: when the arke of couenant is called God, and the face of God: and the doue is called the holy Ghost. For though the signe differ in substance from the thing signified: because this is spirituall and heavenly, and that is corporall and visible: yet because it doth not onely figure the thing which it is holily appointed to represent, as a naked and empiric token, but doeth also truely deliuer it in deede: why may not the name of the thing rightly accorde with it? If signes deuifed by men, which are rather images of things absent, than markes of thinges present, which selfe absent thinges, they doe often, times deceitfully shadowe, are yet sometime garnished with the titles of the thinges: then those thinges that are ordeined of God, do by much greater reason borrowe the name of those thinges, of which they alway both beare a sure and not deceitfull signification, and haue the trueth adioyned with them. There is therefore so great likenesse and neerenesse of the one to the other, that it is easie to draw their names to & fro. Therefore let our aduersaries cease to heap vnfauourie scoffings against vs, in calling vs Tropists, because we expound y sacramental maner of speaking after the common vse of the Scripture. For whereas y^e Sacraments agree together in many things: in this transferring of names, they haue all a certaine community together. As therefore the Apostle teacheth, y^e stone out of which spiritual drinke did spring to y^e Israelites, was Christ, because it was a visible signe, vnder which that spirituall drinke was truly in deede but not discernably to the eye perceiued: so bread is at this day called the body of Christ, forasmuch as it is a signe wherby the Lord offereth to vs the true eating of his body. Neither did Augustin otherwise think or speake least any man should despise this as a newe inuention. If (sayth he) the Sacramentes had not a certaine likenes of those thinges whereof they are Sacramentes, they should not be Sacramentes at all. And of this likenesse oftentimes they take the names of the things themselues. As therefore after a certayne manner the Sacrament of the body of Christe, is the bodie of Christ: the Sacrament of the bloud of Christ, is the bloud of Christ: so the Sacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were superfluous to heap together, sith that same one sufficeth: sauing y^e the readers must be warned that the holy man teacheth the same thing in the Epistle to Enodius. But it is a trifling shift to say, that where Augustine teacheth, that when transferring is often and commonly vsed in mysteries, hee maketh no mention of the Supper: because if this shift were receiued, we might not reason from the generalltie to the specialtie, neither were this a good argument: Euery feeling creature hath power of mouing, therefore an ox and a horse haue power of moouing. Howbeit long disputation hereof is in an other place ended by the wordes of the same holy man, where he sayth, that Christ sticket not to cal it his body, when he gaue the signe of his body. Against Adimantus, the Manichean, in the twelfth Chapter. And in an other place, vpon the thirde Psalme. Maruelons (sayth he) is the patience of Christ, that he receiued Iudas to the banker, wherein he committed and deliuered to his disciples the figure of his body and bloud.

22 But if some precise man, being blinde at all the rest, do stand only vpon this worde (this is) as though it seuered this mysterie from all other; the solution is easie. They say that the vehemence of the substantiue verbe (is) is so great that it admitteth no figure. Which if wee graunt to them: euen in the wordes of Paul is reade the substantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communicating of the bodie of Christ. But the communicating is an other thing than the bodie it selfe. Yea commonly where Sacramentes are entreated of, we finde the same worde vsed. As: This shall be to you a covenant with me. This lambe shall be to you a passeouer. To rehearse no moe: when Paul sayeth that the rocke was Christe, why doe they take the substantiue verbe in that place to be of lesse vehemence than in the speeche of Christ? Let them also aunswere, where Iohn sayth, the holy Ghost was not yet, because Iesus was not yet glorified, of what force the substantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide fastened to their rule, the eternal essence of the holy Ghoste shall bee destroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the ascension of Christ. Finally lette them aunswere, what meaneth that saying of Paul, that baptisme is the washing of regeneration and renewing, which it is euident to bee vnprofitable to many. But nothing is stronger to confute them, than that saying of Paul, that y^e Church is Christ. For, bringing a similitude of the body of man, he addeth, So is Christ: in which place he vnderstandeth the only begotten son of God, not in him selfe, but in his members. Hereby I thinke I haue obtained that to soundwitted and vncorrupted men the sclanders of our enemies, are lothsome, when they spread abroad, that we withdrawe credite from the wordes of Christ: which we do no lesse obediently embrace than they, and doe wey them with more godly reuerence. Yea their negligent carelesnesse sheweth that they do not greatly care what Christ meant, so y^e it giue them a buckler to defende their obstinacie: like as our earnest searching ought to be a witnessse how much we esteem the authoritie of Christ. They odiously spreade abroad, y^e naturall sense of man withholdeth vs from beleeuing that which Christ hath vttered with his owne holy mouth: but how maliciously they burden vs with this slander, I haue a great part already made plaine, and hereafter it shall more clearly appeare. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleeuing Christ when he speaketh, nor from obeying so soone as hee doeth but with becke will this or that. Only this is the question, whether it be vnlawfull to enquire of the naturall meaning.

23 These good masters, that they may seeme wel lettered, do forbid men to depart be it neuer so litle from the letter. But I on the other side, when the Scripture nameth God a warlike man, because I see that without figuratiue translation it is too rough a maner of speaking, doe not dout that it is a comparison taketh from men. And truely vpon none other pretence in the olde time the Anthropomorphits troubled the true teaching Fathers, but that catching fast hold of these sayings, The eyes of God doe see, It went vp to his eares, His hande stretched out, The earth his foote stole, they cryed out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture assigneth vnto him. If this lawe be receiued, outrageous barbarousnesse shal ouerwhelme the whole light of faith. For, what monsters of absurdities may not phrenetike men picke out, if it be graunted them to alleage euery small tittle to stablish their opinions? That which they obiekt, that it is not likely, that when Christ prepared for his Apostles a singular comfort in aduersities, he did then speake in a riddle or darkely, maketh of our side. For if it had not come in y^e mindes of the Apostles, that bread was figuratiuely called the body, because it was the signe of the body, they had without dout bin troubled with so monstrous a thing. Almost at the same moment Iohn reporteth that they did sticke in perplexitie at euery of the least difficulties. They which striue among themselues, howe Christ will go to the Father: and do moue question, how he will goe out of the worlde: they which vnderstande nothing of those things that are spoken concerning the heavenly Father, till they see him: how would they haue bene so easie to beleue that which al reason refuseth, that Christ sitteth at the boorde in their sight, and is enclosed inuisible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the bread without douting, testified their consent, hereby appeareth that they tooke Christs wordes in the same sense that wee doe, because they remembered that which ought not to seeme strange in mysteries, that the name of the thing signified is transferred to the signe. Therefore it was to the disciples, as it is to vs, a certaine and cleare comfort, intangled with no riddle. Neither is there any other cause why some shoulde depart from our exposition, but because the inchantment of the deuill hath blinded them, namely that they should faine darknesse to themselues, where the exposition of an apte figure offereth it selfe. Moreouer if wee precisely stand vpon the wordes, Christ shoulde wrongfully haue spoken in one place seuerally an other thing concerning y^e bread than he speaketh of the cup. He calleth the bread his body, hee calleth the wine his blood: either it shall be a confused vaine repetition, or it shall bee such a partition as shall diuide the body from the blood. Yea it shall as truly be saide of the cup, This is my body, as of the bread it selfe, and it may likewise interchangeably be saide, that the bread is the blood. If they answer that we must consider to what ende or vse the signes were ordeined: I graunt it indeed: but in the meane time they shal not vnwinde themselues, but that their error must drawe this absurditie with it, that the breade is the blood, and the wine is the body. Nowe I wote not what this meaneth, when they grant the breade and the body to be diuerse things, yet to affirm that the one is spoken of the other properly and without any figure: as if a man should say that a garmēt is indeed a thing differing from a man, & yet that it is properly called a man. In the meane while as though their victorie consisted in obstinacie and railing, they say that Christ is accused of lying, if an exposition be sought of the wordes. Nowe it shalbe easie for vs to shewe to the readers how vniust wrong these catchers of syllables do to vs, when they fill y^e simple with this opinion, y^e we withdraw credite from the wordes of Christ, which we haue proued to be furiously peruerted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

24 But the slander of this lie cannot be vtter purged, till an other crime be wiped away. For they spread abroad, y^e we be so addicted to natural reason, that we giue no more to the power of God, than the order of nature suffereth and common sense teacheth. From so malicious sclanders I appeale to the verie doctrine it selfe which I haue declared: which doeth clearly enough shew, y^e I do not measure this mysterie by the proportion of mans reason, nor do make it subiect to the lawes of nature. I beseech you, haue we learned out of naturall philosophie, y^e Christ doth so from heauen feed our soules & bodies with his flesh, as our bodies are nourished with bread & wine? Whence commeth this power to flesh, y^e it may giue life? All men will say that it is not done naturally. It wil no more please mans reason, y^e the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs, y^e it may be food vnto vs. Finally whosoeuer hath tasted of our doctrine, shalbe rauished into admiration of the secrete power of God. But these good men that be so zealous of it, forge to themselues a miracle, which being taken away, God himselfe vanisheth with his power. I desire to haue y^e readers once againe warned, y^e they diligently wcy what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common sense, or with the winges of faith, surmounting the world, climbeth vp beyond it into the heauens. We say that Christ as wel with the outward signe as with his spirit, descendeth to vs, that he may truly quicken our soules with the substance of his fleshe and of his blood. In these fewe wordes he that perceiueth not to bee contained many miracles, is more than senselesse: forasmuch as there is nothing more beside nature, than that soules should borowe spirituall and heauenly life, of the fleshe which tooke her beginning of the earth, & which was subiect to death. Nothing is more incredible, than that thinges distant and a sunder by the whole space of heauen and earth, should in so great distance of places not onely be conioyned, but also vnited, that soules may receiue foode of the fleshe of Christ. Therefore let waywarde men cease to procure hatred to vs, by a filthie slander, as though we did enuiously reſtraine any thing of the immeasurable power of God. For they do either too foolishly erre or too maliciously lie. For it is not here in question what God could, but what he wold.

Heb. 4. 15.

We affirme that to be done which pleased him. But it pleased him, y^e Christ should be made like to his brethren in all thinges, except sinne. What manner of thing is our flesh? Is it not such as consisteth of the certaine measure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is seene? And why (say they) may not God make, that one selfe same fleshe may occupie many and diuers places, may be contained in one place, may be without measure and forme? Thou mad man, why requirest thou of the power of God, to make fleshe at one selfe time to be and not to be flesh? Like as if thou shouldst instantly require him to make at one selfe time the light to be both light and darkenes. But he willesh light to be light, darkenesse to be darkenesse, flesh to be flesh. He shall indeede when it pleaseth him, turne darkenes into light, and light into darkenesse: but when thou requirest that light and darkenesse may not differ, what doest thou else but peruert the order of the wisdome of God? Therefore fleshe must be flesh: and Spirit, Spirite: euerie thing in such lawe and condition as God hath created it. But such is the condition of flesh, that it must be in one yea and that a certaine place, and consist of her measure & of her forme. With this condition Christ tooke flesh vpon him, to which (as Augustine witnesseth) he hath giuen indeede vncorruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and truth.

Ep. adDard.

25 They aunswere, that they haue the word, whereby the wil of God is made plaine: namely if it be granted them to banish out of the Church y^e gift of expositiō, which may bring light to the word. I grant y^e they haue the words: but such as in old time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God hauing a body: such as Marcion and the Manichees had, when they fained y^e body of Christ to be either heauenly or fantastical. For they alleaged for testimonies, The first Adam was of the earth earthly: the second Adam is of heauen, heauenly. Again, Christ abaced himselfe, taking vpon him the forme of a seruant, and was found in likenes as a man. But the grosse eaters thinke y^e there is no power of God, vnles with the monster forged in their braines the whole order of nature be ouerthrowen: which is rather to limite God, when we couet with our fained inuentions to proue what hee can doe. For out of what word haue they taken, y^e the body of Christ is visible in heauen, but lurketh inuisible in earth vnder innumerable litle peeces of bread? They wil say y^e necessitie requireth this, y^e the body of Christ should be giuen in the supper. Verily because it pleased them to gather a fleshly eating out of the words of Christ: they being caried away by their owne foreiudgement, were driuen to necessity to coine this sutlerie, which the whole scripture crieth out against. But y^e any thing is by vs diminished of the power of God, is so false y by our doctrine the praise of it is very honorable set out. But forasmuch as they alway accuse vs, that we defraud God of his honour, when we refuse that which according to comon sense is hard to be beleueed, although it haue bin promised by the mouth of Christ: I make againe the same answer that I made euen now, that in the mysteries of faith wee doe not aske counsell of common sense, but with quiet willingnesse to learne, and with the spirite of mekenesse which Iames comendeth, we receiue the doctrin come from heauen. But in that when they perniciously erre, I denie not that wee follow a profitable moderation. They hearing the wordes of Christ, This is my body, imagine a miracle most farre from his mind. But when out of this fained inuention arise fowle absurdities, because they haue alredy with hedlong hast put snares vpon themselues, they plunge themselues into the bottomlesse depth of the almightinesse of God, that by this meane they may quench the light of trueth. Hereupon commerth that proude precisenes: We will not knowe howe Christ lyeth hid vnder the breade, holding our selues contented with this saying of his, This is my body. But we, as we doe in the whole Scripture, doe with no lesse obedience than care, studie to obtaine a sounde vnderstanding of this place: neither do we with preposterous heate rashly and without choice catch holde of that which first thrusteth it selfe into our mindes: but vsing diligent musing vpon it, we embrace the meaning which the spirite of God ministrerth: and standing therevpon we do fro aloft despise whatsoever earthly wisdome it set against it. Yea we holde our mindes captiue, that they may not be bolde so much as with one litle word to carpe against it: and do humble them, that they may not dare to rise vp against it. Hereupon sprung vp the exposition of the wordes of Christ, which to be by the continuall vsage of the scripture common to all Sacramentes, al they that haue ben thought but meanely exercised therein, do knowe. Neither doe we, after the example of the holy Virgin, thinke it lawfull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire howe it may be done.

26 But because nothing shall more auaille to confirme the faith of the godly, than when they haue learned that the doctrine which we haue taught is taken out of the worde of God, and standeth vpon the authoritie thereof: I will make this also eident with as great brieuenesse as I can. The body of Christ, since the time that it rose againe, nor Aristotle but the Holy Ghost teacheth to be limited, and that it is comprehended in heauen vntill the last day. Neither am I ignorant that they boldly mocke out those places that are alleaged for this purpose. So oft as Christ saith that he will depart, leauing the worlde, they answer that that departing is nothing else but a changing of mortall state. But after this manner, Christ should not set the Holie Ghost in this place to supplie (as they call it) the want of his absence: forasmuch as hee doeth not succede into this place, nor Christ himselfe doth descende againe out of the heauenly glory to take vpon him the state of mortall life. Truely the comming of the Holy Ghost, and the ascending of Christ are thinges set as contrary: therefore it can not be that Christ should according to the fleshe dwell with vs after the same manner that hee sendeth his spirite. Moreouer hee in plaine wordes expresseth, that hee will not be alway with his disciples in the worlde. This saying also they thinke

that they doe gaily wipe away, as though Christ saide that hee will not alway be poore and miserable or subiect to the necessities of this fraile life. But the circumstance of the place crieth plainely to the contrarie, because there is not intreated of pouertie and neede, or of the miserable state of earthly life, but of worship and honour. The anointing pleased not the disciples, because they thought it to be a superfluous & vnprofitable cost, and neere vnto riotous excessse, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be ill wasted, had bene bestowed vpon the poore. Christ answereth that he shall not alway be present, that he may be worshipped with such honour. And none otherwise did Augustine expounde it, whose wordes bee these which are nothing doubtful. When Christ said, Ye shall not alway haue me, he spake of the presence of his body. For according to his maiestie, according to his prouidence, according to his vspeakeable and inuisible grace, this was fulfilled which he saide, beholde, I am with you euen to the ending of the word. But according to the flesh which the worde tooke vnto him, according to this that he was borne of the Virgin, according to this y^e hee was taken of the Iewes, that he was fastened to the tree, that he was taken downe from the crosse, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, y^e he was laid in the graue, that he was manifestly shewed in the resurrection, this was fulfilled, Yee shall not alway haue mee with you. Why so? Because he was conuersant according to the presence of his bodie fortie dayes with his disciples, and while they accompanied him in seeing not in following, he ascended. Hee is not here: for he sitteth there at the right hand of the Father. And yet hee is here: because he is not gone away in presence of Maiestie. Otherwise according to the presence of maiestie we haue Christ alway: and according to the presence of the flesh it is rightly saide, But me ye shall not alway haue. For according to the presence of the fleshe, the Church had him a fewe daies: nowe shee holdeth him by faith, but seeth him not with eyes. Where (that I may note this also briefly) he maketh him present to vs three waies, by maiestie, prouidence, and vspeakeable grace, vnder which I comprehend this maruellous communion of his bodie and blood: if so that wee vnderstande it to be done by the power of the holy Ghost, not by that fained enclosing of his bodie vnder the element. For our Lorde hath testified, that he hath flesh and bones which may be felt and scene. And to Goe away and Ascende do not signifie to make a shewe of one ascending and going away, but to doe in dedde that which the wordes sounde. Shall wee then (will some man say) asigne to Christ some certaine coast of heauen? But I answer with Augustine that this is a most curious and superfluous question, if so that yet we beleeue that he is in heauen.

27 But what doeth the name of ascending so oft repeated? doeth it not signifie a remoouing from one place to an other? They denie it: because after their opinion, by height is onely signified maiestie of Empire. But what meaneth the verie manner of ascending? was hee not in sight of his disciples looking on, lifted vp on hie? Doe not the Euangelistes plainely declare that he was taken vp into the heauens? These wittie Sophisters do answer that with a cloud set betweene him and them, hee was conueied out of their sight, that the faithfull might learne that from thence soorth he should not be visible in the world. As though, to make credit of his inuisible presence, he ought not rather to vanish away in a moment, or as though the cloud ought not rather to compass him before y^e he stirred his foote. But when he is caried vp on hie into the aire, & with a cloud cast vnderneath him, teacheth y^e he is no more to be sought in earth: we safely gather, that now he hath his dwelling place in the heauens: as Paul also affirmeth, and from thence biddeth vs to loke for him. After this maner the Angels warned the disciples, y^e they in vain gazed vp into heauen: because Iesus which is taken vp into heauen, shall so come as they haue seene him goe vp. Here also the aduersaries of sounde doctrine start away with a pleasant shift as they thinke, saying that hee shall then come visible, which neuer went out of the earth but that he abideth inuisible with them that be his. As though the Angels did there signifie a double presence, & do not simply make the disciples witnesses of his going vp seeing it with their eyes, y^e no douting might remaine: euen as if they had said: he in your sightes beholding it, being taken vp into heauen, hath claimed to himselfe the heauenly Empire: it remaineth that ye patiently abide in expectation, till he come againe the iudge of the worlde: because he is now entered into heauen, not that he may alone possess it, but that hee may gather together with him you and all the godly.

28 But forasmuch as the defenders of this bastard doctrine are not ashamed to garnishe it with the consenting voyces of the olde writers and specially of Augustine: I will in few wordes declare how peruersly they go about it. For whereas their testimonies haue bene gathered together of learned and godly men, I will not doe a thing already done: lette him that wil, seeke them out of their workes. I will not heape together, neither out of Augustine himselfe, all that might make to the purpose: but will bee content to shewe by a fewe that he is without controuersie whole on our side. As for this that our aduersaries, to writhe him from vs, doe alleage that it is commonly read in his bookes, that the fleshe and bloude of Christ is distributed in the Supper, namely the Sacrifice once offered in the crosse: it is but trying: sith he also calleth it either Thanksgiuing, or the Sacrament of y^e body. But in what sense he vseth the wordes of fleshe and bloude, wee neede not to seeke with long compassing about: forasmuch as he declareth himself, saying that Sacramentes take their names of the likenesse of the thinges which they signifie: and that therefore after a certaine maner the Sacrament of the body is y^e body. When with accordeth an other place which is well enough knowne: The Lorde sticke not to say, This is my body, when he gaue the signe of it. Againe they obiekt, that Augustine writeth expressly, that the bodie of Christ falleth to the grounde, and entreteth into the mouth: euen in the same sense, that he affirmeth it to be consumed, because he ioyneth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrary, which he sayeth, that when the mysteric is ended the breade is consumed: because he had a litle before sayde: sith these thinges are knowen to men, forasmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honour as thinges: but as maruelous thinges, they may not. And to no other ende tendeth that which our aduersaries do too vnadvisedly drawe to themselues: that Christ did (after a certaine manner) beare himselfe in his owne handes, when he reacheth the mysticall breade to the disciples.

ciples . For by enterlacing this aduerbe of likenesse (after a certaine maner) he sufficiently declareth, that he was not truly nor really enclosed vnder the bread . And no maruell : sith in an other place he plainely affirmeth that bodies, if spaces of places bee taken from them, shalbe no where : and because they shall be no where, they shall not be at all . It is a hungry cauillation, to say that in that place is not entreated of the Supper , in which God vttereth speciall power : because the question was moued concerning the fleshe of Christ, and the holy man of set purpose answering sayeth : Christ gaue immortallitie to his flesh, but tooke not nature from it . After this forme it is not to be thought that he is eche where spread abroad : for we must beware that we doe not so affirme the Godhead of the man, that we take away the trueth of the body . And it followeth not, that that which is in God must be eche where as G O D is . There is a reason by and by added : for one person is God and man, and both are one Christ : eche where, by this that he is God : in heauen, by this that he is man . What a negligence hadde it beene, not to except the mysterie of the Supper becing a thing so earnest and weightie , if there had beene in it any thing against the doctrine which he entreated of . And yet if a man doe heedefully reade that which followeth within a litle after, he shall finde that vnder that generall doctrine, the Supper is also comprehended, that Christ the onely begotten Sonne of G O D , and the same the sonne of man, is eche where whole present as God : that he is in the temple of God (that is in the Church) G O D as it were there dwelling , and in some certaine place of heauen by reason of the measure of his true body . We see howe, to the vniting of Christ with the Church, he doeth not drawe his bodie out of heauen : which surely hee woulde haue done , if the body of Christ were not truly meate to vs vnlesse it were enclosed vnder bread . In an other place defining howe the faithfull doe nowe possesse Christ . Thou hast him (sayth he) by the signe of the crosse, by the Sacrament of Baptisme, by the meate and drinke of the altar . Howe rightly hee reckneth a superstitious vsage among the signes of the presence of Christ , I doe not nowe dispute : but hee that compareth the presence of the fleshe to the signe of the crosse, sufficiently sheweth that he faineth not a two bodied Christ , that the same he may lurke hidden vnder the bread , which sitteth visible in heauen . If this neede plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the same place , that according to the presence of maiestie, wee alway haue Christe : that according to the presence of the fleshe, it is rightly sayde, Mee ye shall not alway haue . They aunswere, that this is also added , that according to an vnspokeable and inuisible grace, it is fulfilled which is sayde of him, I am with you, euen vnto the ending of the worlde . But that is nothing for their aduantage : because this is at length restrained to his maiestie, which is euer in cōparison set against the body, & his flesh by expresse name is made different from his grace & power . As in an other place the same cōparison of contraries is red in him, that Christ by bodily presence left the disciples, that by spirituall presence he may be still with thé : where it is plaine y the substance of the flesh is distinguished from the power of the Spirit, which conioyneth vs with Christ, though we be otherwise farre seuered by distance of places . The same manner of speaking he oftentimes vseth , as when he saith : He is

In Psal. 33.

Tract. 50. in Ioh.

Matt. 26. 11.

Matt. 28. 20

to come again to the quick and the dead with bodily presence, according to the rule of Faith & sound doctrine. For with spiritual presence he was also to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the worlde vntill the ending of the worlde. Therefore this speech is directed to the beleeuers whome hee had alreadye begonne to saue with bodily presence, & whom hee was to leaue with bodily absence: that hee might with his Father saue them with spirituall presence. To take bodily for visible is but trifling: sith he setteth also the body in comparison against the diuine power: and adding (to saue with the Father) hee clearly expresth that he doth powre abroad his grace from heauen to vs by his spirite.

29 And sith they put so much confidence in this lurking hole of inuisible presence, goe too, let vs see howe well they hide themselues in it. First they shall not bring forth one syllable out of the scriptures, whereby they may prooue that Christ is inuisible: but they take that for confessed which no man that hath his sounde wit will graunt them, that the body of Christ can not otherwise bee giuen in the Supper but being couered with the visor of bread. And this is the verie point about which they striue with vs, so farre is it of from hauing the place of a principle. And when they so babble, they are compelled to make a double bodie of Christ: because after their opinion it is in it selfe visible in heauen, bur inuisible in the supper after a speciall manner of dispensation. But howe trimly this agreeth, it is easie to iudge both by other places of scripture, and by the witness of Peter. Peter saith that Christ must be holden or cōteined in heauen, til he come again. These men teach that hee is euery where, but without forme. They take exception and say that it is vniust dealing, to make the nature of a glorified bodie subiect to the lawes of common nature. But this aunswere draweth with it that docting error of Seruettus, (which is worthily to bee abhorred of all the godlic) that the bodie was swallowed vp of the Godheade. I doe not say that they thinke so. But if this bee reckened among the qualities of a glorified bodie, to fill all things after a visible manner, it is euident, that the bodilie substance is destroyed, and that there is leste no difference of the godheade and the nature of man. Againe if the bodie of Christe bee of so manie fashions and diuerse, that it is seene in one place, and is inuisible in an other: where is the verie nature of a bodie which consisteth of his measured proportions? and where is vnitie? Much more rightlic doeth Tertulian say, which affirmeth that the bodie of Christ was a true and naturall bodie, because in the mysterie of the Supper the figure of it is set before vs for a pledge and assurance of the spirituall life. And verilie Christ sayde of his glorified body, see and feele, for a Spirite hath not fleshe and bones. Loc by Christes owne mouth the truth of the fleshe is prooued, because it can bee felte and seene. Take away these things, then it shall cease to bee fleshe. They still flee to their denne of dispensation which they haue framed to themselues. But it is our parte so to embrace that which Christ absolutely pronounceth, that that which hee meaneth to as firme may bee of force with vs without exception. Hee prooueth himselfe to bee no Ghost, because hee is visible in his fleshe. Let that be taken away which hee claimeth as proper to the nature of his bodie: must they not then

then be faine to coine a newe definition of a body? Nowe whither soeuer they turne themselues about, their fained dispensation hath no place in that place of Paul where he saith, that wee look for a Saviour from heauen, which shall fashion our base bodie like to his glorious bodie. For we may not hope for a like fashioning in those qualities which they sayne to Christ, that eue-ry one should haue an inuisible and vnmeasurable body. Neither shall there be found any man so dul witted whom they may make to beleue so great an absurditie. Let them not therefore ascribe this gift to Christes glorified bodie, to be at once in many places, and to be conteyned in no space. Finally let them either openly denie the resurrection of the flesh, or let them grant that Christ being clothed with heauenly glorie, did not put off his flesh, who shall make vs in our flesh fellowes and parteners of the same glorie, when we shall haue the resurrection common with him. For, what doeth the scripture reach more plainly, than that as Christ did put on our true fleshe when he was borne of the Virgin, and suffered in our true fleshe when hee satisfied for vs: so hee receiued againe also the same true fleshe in rising againe, and caried it vp to heauen? For this is to vs the hope of our resurrection and ascending into heauen, that Christ is risen againe and ascended: and (as Tertullian saith) he caried the earnest of our resurrection into the heauens with him. Now how weake and fraile should that hope be, vnlesse this our selfe flesh had bene raised vp with Christ and entred into the kingdome of heauen? But this is the proper trueth of a bodie, to bee conteyned in space, to consist of his measured proportions, to haue his forme. Therefore away with this foolish deuise, which doeth fasten both the minds of men & Christ to the bread. For to what purpose serueth the secret presence vnder bread, but that they which couet to haue Christ ioyned with them, may rest in that signe? But the Lorde himselfe willed vs to withdrawe not onely our eyes but all our senses from the earth, forbidding himselfe to bee touched of the women vntill hee had gone vp to his Father. When hee seeth Marie with godlie zeale of reuerence to make hast to kisse his feet, there is no cause why he should disallowe and forbid this touching till hee haue bene taken vp into heauen, but because he will be sought no where else. Whereas they obiect that hee was afterwarde seene of Stephen, the solution is easie. For neyther was it therefore necessarie that Christ should change place, which could giue to the eyes of his seruauant such sharpenesse of sight as might pearce through the heauens. The same also is to bee saide of Paul. Whereas they obiect that Christ came out of the Sepulchre being shut: and entred in among the disciples, the doers being shut: that maketh neuer a whitte more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a fast pauement made a way to Christ walking vpon the lake: so it is no maruell, if at his comming the hardnes of the stone yelded it selfe. Howbeit it is more proueable, that by his commandement the stone was remoued, and by and by after passage giuen him returned into his place. And to enter, the doers being shut, is not asmuch in effect as to pearce through the whole substance, but by diuine power to open an entrie for himselfe, that hee sodenly stode among the disciples, verilie after a maruellous manner, when the doers were fast locked. That which they alleadge out of Luke, that Christ sodenly vanished away away from the eyes of the disciples with whom he went to Emaus, profiteer them nothing, and maketh for vs. For, that he might take away the sight of himselfe from them, he was not made inuisible, but onely went out of sight. As when he went in iourney together with them (as the same Luke witnesseth) he did not put on a newe face, that he might not be knowen, but helde their eyes. But these fellows do not onely transforme Christ, that he may be conuersant in earth, but in diuerse places they make him diuerse and vnlike himselfe. Finally, in so trifling they doe not by one word in deede, but by a circumstance, make of the flesh of Christ a spirit: and not contented therewith, they put vpon it altogether contrarie qualities. Whercupon of necessitie followeth that it is double.

30 Now although we graunt them that which they prate of the inuisible presence, the vmeasurableness shall not be yet proued, without which they shall in vaine attempt to enclose Christ vnder bread. Vnlesse the bodie of Christ may be euery where at once, without any compasse of place, it shall not be likely that he lieth hidden vnder bread in the Supper. By which necessitie they brought in the monstrous being euery wher. But it is shewed by strong and plaine witness of Scripture, that it was limited about by the measure of the body of a man: and then that by his ascending he hath made it plaine that he is not in all places, but that when he passeth into one place, he leaueth the other that he was in before. Neither is the promise which they allege, to be drawn to the bodie, I am with you cuen to the ending of the world. First the continuall conioyning can not stand, vnlesse Christ dwel in vs corporally without the vse of the Supper. Therefore there is no iust cause why they shoulde so sharply brawle about the wordes of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclose Christ vnder bread. Againe the text it selfe proueth, that Christ speaketh nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples inuincible helpe, whereby he may defend and susteine them against all the assaults of Satan and the world. For when he inioined them a hard charge: least they should dout to take it in hand, or should fearefully execute it, he strengtheneth them with affiance of his presence: as if he had saide, that his succour shall not faile them, which shalbe impossible to be overcome. Vnlesse they list to confounde all things, ought they not to haue made distinction of the manner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vtter their ignorance, then to yeeld neuer so litle of their errour. I speake not of the Papistes: whose doctrine is more tolerable, or at the least more shamefast. But contentiuousnes so carrieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vnited in Christ, wheresoeuer the Godhead of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which cannot be seuered from his Godhead. As though that same vniting haue compounded of those two natures I wote not what meane thing which was neither God nor man. So in deede did Eutiches, and after him Scructus. But it is plainly gathered out of the Scripture, that the only one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath stil her owne properie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfully condemned, they will bee ashamed to denie: it is marueile that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference betweene the natures, enforcing the vnitie of person, he made of God man, and of man God. What madnesse therefore is it, rather to mingle heauen and earth together, than not to draw the bodie of Christ out of the heauenly sanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themselues these testimonies, None is gone vp to heauen but he that is come downe the Sonne of man which is in heauen. Againe, The sonne which is in the bosome of the Father, he shall declare them: it is a point of like senselesse dulnesse, to despise the communicating of properties which was in olde time not without cause inuented of the holy Fathers. Truely, when the Lorde of glorie is said to be crucified, Paul doth not meane that he suffred any thing in his Godhead: but because the same Christ which being an abiect and despised in the flesh did suffer, was both God and Lord of glorie. After this maner also the Sonne of man was in heauen: because the selfe same Christ, which according to the flesh did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heauen. In which sort he is saide to haue descended from the said place according to his Godhead: not that the Godhead did forsake heauen, to hide it selfe in the prison of the body: but because, although it filled all things, yet in the verie manhoode of Christ it dwelled corporally, y^e is to say naturally and after a certaine vnspeakable maner. It is a common distinction in scholes, which I am not ashamed to rehearse: that although whole Christ be euery where, yet not y^e whole that is in him is euery where. And I would to God the Scholemen themselues had well weyed the pith of this saying: for so should the vnsauourie inuention of the fleshly presence of Christ haue bene met withall. Therefore our mediatour, sith he is whole euery where, is alway at hand with his, & in the Supper after a speciall maner giueth himself present: but yet so, that whole he is present, not the whole that he is: because, as it is said, in his flesh he is contained in heauen till hee appeare to iudgement.

31 But they are farre deceiued, which conceiue no presence of y^e fleshe of Christ in the Supper, vnlesse it be made present in bread. For so they leaue nothing to the secrete working of the Spirit, which vniteth Christ himselfe vnto vs. They thinke not Christ present, vnlesse he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vs vp to him, we should not aswel enjoy his presence. Therefore the question is onely of the maner: because they place Christ in the bread, but we thinke it not lawful for vs to pluck him out of heauen. Let the readers iudge whether is the righter. Only let this cauillation be driuen away, that Christ is taken away from his supper, vnlesse he be hidden vnder the couer of bread. For sith this mysterie is heauenly, it is no neede to draw Christ into the earth, that he may be ioyned to vs.

32 Nowe if any man doe aske me of the maner, I will not be ashamed to confesse, that it is a hier secret than that it can be either comprehended with my witte, or vttered with my wordes: and, to speake it more plainly, I rather feele it, than I can vnderstande it. Therefore I do herein without controuersie embrace the truth of God, in which I may safely rest. He pronounceth that his flesh is the meate of my soule, and his bloud is the drinke. With such foode I offer my soule to him to be fedde. In his holy Supper hee commaundeth me vnder the signes of breade and wine to take, eate, and drinke his body and bloud. I nothing dout that both he doeth truly deliuer them, and I doe receiue them. Onely I refuse the absurdities, which appeare to be either vnworthy of the heauenly maiestie of Christ, or disagreeing from the trueth of his nature of manhood: forasmuch as they must also fight with the worde of God, which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glorie of the heauenly kingdome that it listeth him vppe aboute all estate of the worlde, and no lesse diligently setteth foorth in his nature of man, those things that are properly belonging to his true manhoode. Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not consonant to reason: because as the whole kingdom of Christ is spiritual, so whatsoever he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this worlde. Or, that I may vse the words of Augustine, this mysterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God: in earth, but from heauen. Such (I say) is the presence of the body, as the nature of the Sacrament requireth: which we say here to excell with so greate force, and great effectualnesse, that it not onely bringeth to our mindes vndoubted trust of eternal life, but also assureth vs of the immortality of our flesh. For it is nowe quickned of his immortall fleshe, and after a certaine manner communicateth of his immortalitie. They which are caried aboute this with their excessiue speches, do nothing but with such entanglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would haue him here a while to consider with me, that we nowe speake of a Sacrament, all the parts whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do no lesse deintily and plentifully feede fayth with this pertaking of the body which wee haue declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heauen. In the meane time I plainly confesse, that I refuse y^e mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the pouring out of it such as they teach: because it suffiseth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his fleshe breath life into our soules, yea doeth powre into vs his owne life, although the very fleshe of Christe doeth not enter into vs. Moreouer it is no doubt that the proportion of faith, whereby Paule willeth vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, doeth in this behalfe very well agree with me. As for them that speake against so euident a trueth, lette them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselues. He that doeth not confesse that Iesus Christ is come in the fleshe, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or marke it not, doe spoile him of his flesh.

33 Of communicating is to be likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, vnlesse they deuour the fleshe of Christ vnder breade. But there is no smal wrong done to the Holy Ghost, vnlesse we beleue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that wee communicate with the flesh and bloud of Christ. Yea if the force of the mysterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was knowen to the olde Church from fower hundred yeres ago, were weyed according to the worthinesse of it, there was enough and more whereupon we might be satisfied: the gate had benee shut against manie fowle errors, out of which haue benee kindled many horrible dissensions whe rewth both in old time and in our age the Church hath benee miserably vexed, while curious men doe enforce an excessiue maner of presence, which the Scripture neuer sheweth. And they turmoile about a thing fondly and rashly conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnder bread were

(as the prouerbe is) the proue and poupe of godlinesse. It principally behoued to knowe, howe the bodie of Christ, as it was once deliuered for vs, is made ours: howe we are made partakers of his bloude that was shedde: because this is to possesse whole Christ crucified, that we may enioy al his good thinges. Now these things, in which was so great importance, being omitted yea neglected & in a maner buried, this only crabbed questiō pleafeth them, how the body of Christ lyeth hidde vnder bread or vnder the forme of bred. They falsely spread abroad that whatsoeuer we teach concerning spirituall eating, is contrarie to the true and reall eating, as they call it: because wee haue respecte to nothing but to the manner, which among them is carnall, while they enclose Christ in breade: but to vs it is spirituall, because the secret power of the Spirit is the bonde of our conioyning with Christ. No truer is that other obiection, that we touch onely the fruite or effect which the faithfull take of the eating of the flesh of Christ. For wee haue sayde before, that Christ himselfe is the substance of the Supper: and that thereupon followeth the effect, that by the sacrifice of his death wee are cleansed from sinnes, by his bloud we are washed, by his resurrection we are raised vp into hope of the heauenly life. But the foolish imagination, whereof Lombarde was the author, hath peruerted their mindes, while they thinke that the eating of the flesh of Christ is the Sacrament. For thus sayeth he: The Sacrament and not the thing are the formes of breade and wine: the Sacrament and the thing, are the flesh and bloud of Christe: the thing and not the Sacrament, is his mysticall fleshe. Againe within a litle after. The thing signified and contained, is the proper fleshe of Christ: the thing signified and not contained, is his mysticall body. Whereas he maketh difference betweene the flesh of Christ, and the effectuall power of nourishing, wherwith it is endued, I agree: but whereas hee faineth it to be a Sacrament, yea and contained vnder bread, it is an error not to be suffred. Hereupon hath growen the false exposition of sacramentall eating, because they haue thought that wicked men also and euill doers doe eate the flesh of Christ, how much so euer they be strangers from him. But the fleshe of Christ it selfe in the mysterie of the Supper is no lesse a spirituall thing than eternall saluation. Whereupon we gather, that whosoever be voyde of the Spirit of Christ, can no more eate the fleshe of Christe, than they can drinke wine wherewith is ioyned no tast. Truly Christ is too hainously torne in sunder, when that dead body and which hath no liuely strength, is giuen foorth in common to vnbeleeuers: and his expresse wordes are directly against it, Whosoever eateth my fleshe and drinketh my bloude, abideth in me, and I in him. They aunswere that in that place is not entreated of the sacramentall eating: which I graunt, so that they will not nowe and then stumble against the same stone, in saying that the fleshe it selfe is eaten without fruite. But I woulde knowe of them, howe long they holde it when they haue eaten it. Here, in my iudgement, they shall haue no way to get our. But they object, that nothing can bee withdrawn or faile of the promises of God by the vnthankfulnessse of men. I graunt in deede, and I say that the force of the mysterie remayneth whole, howe soeuer wicked men doe, as much as in them lyeth, endeuour to make it voyde. Yet it is one thing to be offered, and another thing to be receiued, Christ reacheth this spirituall meate and offreth this spirituall drinke to all men: some do greedily eate of it, some do lothingly refuse it: shal these men refusing make the meate and the drinke to loose their nature? They will say that their opinion is holpen by this similitude, namely, that the flesh of Christ, though it be vnfauourie, is neuertheless his flesh. But I denie that it can be eaten without the tast of faith: or (if wee list rather to speake as Augustine doeth) I say that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the vessell of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacrament, yea the trueth and effectualnesse thereof remaineth vnminished, although the wicked depart emptie from the outwarde partaking of it. If they againe obiekt that this worde, this is my bodie, is diminished, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing else: we haue a solution readie, that God will not bee acknowleden true in the receiuing it selfe, but in the stedfastnesse of his owne goodnesse, when he is readie to giue, yea liberally offreth to the vnworthie that which they refuse. And this is the fulnesse of the Sacrament, which the whole world cannot breake, y the flesh and bloud of Christ is no lesse giuen to the vnworthie than to the chosen faithful ones of God: but therewithall it is true, that as water lighting vpon a harde stone, falleth away, because there is no entrie open into the stone: so the wicked do with their hardnesse driue backe the grace of God that it cannot pearce into them. Moreouer, that Christ should bee receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reason, than seede to budde in the fire. Whereas they aske, how Christ is come to damnation to some, vnlesse they receiue him vnworthily, it is a verie colde question: for asmuch as wee now where reade, that men do procure death to themselues by vnworthily receiuing Christ, but rather by refusing him. Neither doth Christs parable helpe them, where he saith that seede groweth vp among thornes, and afterwarde being choked is marred: because he there entreateth, of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they doe not thinke to bee necessarrie to the eating of Christes flesh and drinking of his bloud, that in this behalfe do make Iudas egally fellowe with Peter. But rather by the same parable their error is confuted, where Christ saith that some seede falleth in the hie way, other some vpon stones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnbeleeuers their owne hardnesse is a let that Christ attaineth not to them. Whosoeuer desireth to haue our saluation holpen by this mysterie, shall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithfull being led to the verie fountaine, should drawe life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignitie of it is honorably enough set out, when wee keepe in minde that it is a helpe whereby wee be grafted into the body of Christ, or being grafted do more & more growe together, til hee doe fully make himselfe one with vs in the heauenly life. They obiekt that Paul ought not to haue made them guiltie of the bodie & bloud of Christ, vnlesse they were partakers of them. But I aunswere that they are not therefore condemned because they haue eaten them, but onely because they haue prophaned the mysterie, in treading vnder feete the pledge of the holy conioyning with God, which they ought reuerently to receiue.

Mat. 13. 7.

1. Cor. 11. 29

34 Now because Augustine among y old writers chiefly hath affirmed that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made void by the infidelitie or noughtinesse of men: it shalbe profitable to prooue clearly by his owne wordes, howe vnfitly and peruersly they do drawe that to this present cause, which cast the bodie of Christ to dogges to eate. The sacramentall eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receite the bodie and blood of Christ without the power of the Spirit, or any effect of grace. Augustine contrari wise wey-ing wisely those words, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, shal not die for euer, sayeth: Namely the power of the Sacrament, not onely the visible Sacrament: and verily within, not without: he that eateth it wth heart, not he that presseth it with tooth. Whereupon at length he concludeth that the sacrament of this thing, that is to say, of the vnitie of the body & blood of Christ, is set before men in the Supper of the Lorde, to some vnto life, to some vnto destruction: but the thing it selfe whereof it is a sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruction, whosoeuer bee partaker of it.

 That none should here cauil, that the thing is called not the bodie, but the grace of the Spirit which may bee seuered from the bodie, the contrarie comparison betweene these two words of addition Visible and Inuisible driueth away al these mysts: for vnder the first of them cannot be comprehended the bodie of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the vnbelceuers doe communicate onely of the visible signe. And that all douting may be better taken away, after that he had saide that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eate Manna, pleased God. Why so? because the spirituall meate they spirituallly vnderstood, spirituallly hungred, spirituallly tasted, that they might be spirituallly filled. For wee also at this day haue receiued spirituall meat: but the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament is an other. A litle after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whome Christ abideth not, without dout neither eateth spirituallly his flesh, nor drinketh his blood, though carnally & visibly he presseth with teeth the signe of the bodie and blood. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in comparison as contrarie to spirituall eating. Whereby that error is confuted, that the bodie of Christ inuisible is in deed eaten sacramentally, though not spirituallly. We heare also y^e nothing is granted to prophane & vnclane men beside the visible receiuing of the signe. Hereupon commeth his famous saying, that the other disciples did eate the breade the Lorde, but Iudas did eate the bread of the Lord: wherein he plainly excludeth the vnbelceuers frō the partaking of the body & blood. Neither tēdeth it to any other end which he saith in another place: What maruilest thou, if to Iudas was giuen y^e bred of Christ, by which he might be made bond to the diuel: when thou seest on the contrary side y^e to Paul was giuen the Angel of the diuel, by whome hee might be made perfect in Christ? He saith verily in another place, y^e the bread of the Supper was the bodie of Christ to them to whom Paul saide, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth & drinketh iudgement to himselfe: and that they haue nor therefore nothing, because they haue receiued noughtily. But in what sense, he declareth more fully in another place. For taking in hād pur-faith with mouth but with deedes doe denie it, doe eate the body of Christ, (and that against the opinion of some which thought that they did not eate in sacrament onely but in very deede.) But neither (sayth he) ought it to be sayd that they eate the body of Christ, because they are not to be reckened among the members of Christ. For (to speake nothing of the rest (they can not together be the members of Christ, and the members of a harlot. Finally where himselfe sayth, He that eareth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him, he sheweth what it is not sacramentally but in very deed to eate the body of Christ. For this is to abide in Christ, that Christ may abide in him. For he so sayd this, as though he had said, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not say or thinke that he doeth eate my body, or drinke my blood. Let the readers wey the thinges set as contraries in the comparison to eate, sacramentally, and in very deede: and there shall remaine no doubt. Hee confirmeth the same, no lesse plainly in these wordes: Prepare not your iawes, but your heart: Hereupon is this Supper commended. Loe we beleue in Christ, when we receiue by faith: in receiuing we know what to thinke. We receiue a litle & are fatted in heart, Therefore not that which is scene, but that which is beleued, doeth feede. Here also y^e which the wicked receiue, he restraineth to the visible signe: and teacheth that Christ is none otherwise receiued thā by faith. So also in another place, pronouncing expressly that the good and the euill doe communicate together in the signes, he excludeth the euill from the true eating of the flesh of Christ. For if they receiued the thing it selfe, he would not vtterly haue left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Also in another place, entreating of the eating and the fruite thereof, he cōcludeth thus: Then shall the body and blood of Christ be life to euery man, if that which in the Sacrament is visibly receiued, be in the trueth it selfe spiritually eaten, spiritually dronk. Therefore who so make vnbeleeuers partakers of the flesh & blood of Christ, that they may agree with Augustine, lette them shewe vs the visible body of Christ: forasmuch as, by his iudgement, the whole truth is spiritual. And it is certainly gathered out of his wordes, that the Sacramental eating, when vnbeleefe closeth vp the entrie to trueth, is as much in effect as visible or outwarde eating. If the body of Christ might be eaten truly and yet not spiritually, what shoulde that meane which he sayeth in an other place? Ye shall not eate this body which ye see, and drinke the blood which they shall shedde that shall crucifie me. I haue commended a certaine Sacrament vnto you, being spiritually vnderstanded it shal quicken you. Verily he would not denie but that the same bodie which Christ offred for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did sette out the manner of eating: namely that being receiued into heauenly glorie, by the secreete power of the Spirite, it breatheth life into vs. I graunt in deede that there is oftentimes founde in him this maner of speaking, that the body of Christ is eaten of the vnbeleeuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding, In Sacrament. And in an other place hee describeth spirituall eating, in which our bitinges consume not grace. And least mine aduersaries should say, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would knowe of them howe they can vnwinde themselues from one saying of his, where he sayeth that Sacramentes doe worke in the only elect that which they figure. Truly they dare not deny but y^e bread in the Supper figureth the body of Christ. Whereupon foloweth y^e reprobate are debarred from the partaking of it. That Cyrill also thought none otherwise, these wordes do declare. As if a man vpon molten waxe do powre other waxe, he wholly tempereth the one waxe with the other: so it is necessary if any man receiue the flesh & bloud of the Lord y^e he be ioined with him that Christ may be found in him & he in Christ. By these words I thinke it is euident, that they are bereued of the true and reall eating, that do but sacramentally cate the body of Christ, which can not be seuered from his power: and that therefore faileth not the faith of the promises of God, which ceaseth not to raine from heauen, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

35 This knowledge shall also easily drawe vs away from the carnall worshipping, which some haue with peruerse rashnesse erected in the sacrament: because they made account with themselues in this maner: If it be the body, then both the soule and the Godhead are together with the body, which now can not be seuered: therefore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompanying which they pretende be denied them, what will they do? For howe much soeuer they cry out vpon an absurditie, if the body be seuered from the soule and the godhead: yet what soundewitted and sober man can perswade himselfe that the body of Christ is Christ? They thinke themselues in deede gaily to proue it with their logicall arguments. But sith Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and bloud, but describeth not the manner of presence: howe will they of a doubtfull thing gather certainly that which they would? What then? if their consciences chaunce to be exercised with any more greiuous feeling, shal not they by & by with their logical arguments be dissolued and melt? namely when they shall see themselues destitute of the certaine word of God, vpon which alone our soules do stand fast, when they are called to account, & without which they faint at euery first moment: wheⁿ they shall call to mind that the doctrine and examples of the Apostles are against them, & that themselues alone are to themselues the authors of it. To such motions shalbe added other not small prickings. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worship God in this forme, where nothing was prescribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worship of God, ought they with so great lightnesse to haue attempted that of which there is no where reade any one worde? But if they had, with such humblenesse as they ought, holden all their thoughtes vnder the worde of God, they would truly haue harkened to that which he sayde, Take, eate, drinke, and would haue obeyed this commandement, wherein he biddeth the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worshipped. But they which, as it is commanded of God, do receiue it without worshipping, are assured that they do not swarue from Gods commandement: than which assurednes there is nothing better when wee take any worke in hand. They haue the example of the Apostles, who we read not to haue fallen down flat & worshipped it, but euen as they were sitting, to haue receiued it & eaten it. They haue the vse of the Apostolike Church, wherein Luk reporteth y^e faithful did communicate not in worshipping but in breaking of bread. They haue the Apostles doctrine, wherwith Paul instructed the Church

Church of the Corinthians, professing that he had received of the Lord that which he deliuered. 1. Cor. 11.

36 And these things verily tend to this end, that the godly reader should weye howe perillous it is in so hie matters to wander from the simple worde of God to the dreames of our owne braine. But those things that are about sayde, ought to deliuer vs from all dout in this behalfe. For that godly soules may therein rightly take holde of Christ, they must needs be lifted vpp to heauen. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to helpe the mind of man which otherwise is weake, that it may rise vppwarde to reach the height of spirituall mysteries: then they which are holden downe in the outwarde signe do stray from the right way of seeking Christ. What then? Shall wee denie that it is a superstitious worshipping, when men doe throwe themselues downe before bread, to worship Christ therein? Doubtlesse the Nicene Synode meant to meet with this mischiefe, when it forbade vs to be humbly intentiue to the signes set before vs. And for none other cause was it in olde time ordained, that before the consecration the people should with a loude voice be put in mind to haue their heartes lifted vppwarde. The Scripture it selfe also, beside that it diligently declareth vnto vs the ascension of Christ, wherby he conueyed away the presence of his body from our sight & conuersation: to shake away from vs all carnall thinking of him, so oft as it maketh mention of him, commandeth vs to be in mindes raised vppward, and to seeke him in heauen sitting at the right hand of y^e Father. According to this rule he was rather to be spiritually worshipped in heauenly glorie, than this so perillous a kinde of worshipping to be deuised, full of carnall and grosse opinion of God. Wherefore they y^e haue inuented the worshipping of the Sacrament, haue not only dreamed it of themselues beside the Scripture, in which no mention of it can bee shewed (which yet should not haue bene ouerpasse if it had bene acceptable to God.) But also all the Scripture crying out against it, they haue framed to themselues a God after the will of their owne lust, leauing the liuing God. For what is idolatry, if this be not, to worship the giftes in steede of the giuer himselve? Wherin they haue doublely offended: For both y^e honor taken from God was conueyed to a creature: and hee himselve also dishonoured in the defiling and prophaning of his benefite, when of his holy Sacrament is made a cursed idole. But let vs contrariwise, least we fall into the same pitte, throughly settle our eares, eyes, heartes, minds, and tongues in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the schoole of the holy Ghost, y^e best scholemaister, in which such profit is attained, that nothing neede more to bee gotten from any where else, but we willingly ought to be ignoraunt of whatsoeuer is not taught in it.

37 But now (as superstition, when it hath once passed the right bounds, maketh no end of sinning) they fell a great way further. For they haue deuised Ceremonies altogether straunge from the institution of the Supper, to this end only that they might giue diuine honors to the signe. We yeeld (say they) this worship to Christ. First, if this were done in the Supper, I would say that that worshipping onely is lawefull, which resteth not in the signe, but is directed to Christ sitting in heauen. But now by what pretense doe they boast that they worshipp Christ in that bread: when they haue no promise thereof? They consecrate an host, as they call it, which they may carry about in pompe, which they may shew forth in a common gazing to be looked vpon, worshipped, and called vpon. I aske by what power they thinke it to be rightly consecrate. Verily they will bring forth those wordes, This is my body. But I will object to the contrary, that it was therewithall sayde, Take and eat. Neither will I doe that of nothing. For when a promise is knit to a commandment, I say that the promise is so contained vnder the commandment, that being seuered it is made no promise at all. This shalbe made plainer by a like example. God gaue a commandment, when he sayde, Call vpon me: He added a promise, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter & Paul, do glory vpon this promise, will not all men cry out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray you, doe they which leauing the commandment concerning eating, doe catch holde of a maimed promise, this is my body, to abuse it to strange ceremonies from y^e institution of Christ? Let vs therefore remember that this promise is giuen to them which keepe the commandment ioyned with it: but that they be destitute of all the word, which remoue the Sacrament to any other way. We haue heretofore entreated howe the mysterie of the holy supper serueth our Faith before God. But forasmuch as the Lorde doeth here not onely bring into our remembrance so great largesse of his bountie, as we haue before shewed, but doth as it were from hande to hande bring it forth, & stirreth vs to acknowledge it: he doth therewithall warne vs that we be not vnthankfull to so plentiful liberalitie: but rather that we should publish it with such praises as it is meete, and aduance it with thanksgiuing. Therefore when hee deliuered the institution of the Sacrament it selfe to the Apostles, he taught them that they shoulde doe it in remembrance of him. Which Paul expoundeth, to declare the Lordes death. That is, publively and altogether with one mouth openly to confesse, that all our assurance of life and saluation is reposed in the death of the Lorde: that wee may gloryfie him with our confession, and may by our example exhorte other to giue glorie to him. Here againe it appeareth whereunto the marke of this Sacramente is directed, namely to exercise vs in the remembrance of the death of Christ. For, this that wee are commanded to declare the Lordes death till he come to iudge, is nothing else but that wee should publishe that with confession of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the Sacrament, that is, that the death of Christ is our life. This is the second vse of the Sacrament, which pertaineth to outwarde confession.

38 Thirdly the Lorde also willed it to be to vs in steede of an exhortation, than which none other can more vehemently encorage and enflame vs both to purenesse and holines of life, and also to charitie, peace and agreement. For the Lorde doeth therein so communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Nowe sith hee hath but one body, whereof he maketh vs all partakers, it is necessarie that al we also be by such partaking made one body. Which vnitie the breade which is deliuered in the Sacrament, representeth: which as it is made of many graines in such sort mingled together that one can not be discerned from an other: after the same manner we also ought to be conioyned and knit together with so great agree-agreement of minds, that no disagreement or diuision come betweene vs. This I had rather to be expressed with Paules wordes. The cup of blessing (saith he) which we blesse, is the communicating of the blood of Christ: & 1. Cor. 10. 16 the breade of blessing which wee breake, is the partaking of the body of Christ. Therefore we all are one bodie, that partake of one breade. Wee shall haue verie well profited in the Sacramente, if this thought so shall bee imprinted and ingrauen in our mindes, that none of the brethren can bee hurte, despise I, refused, abused, or anye wise bee offended of vs, but that therewithall wee doe in so doing hurte, despise, and abuse Christe with our iniurious dealinges: that wee can not disagree with our brethren but that wee must therewithall disagree with Christe: that Christ cannot bee loued of vs, but that he must be loued in our brethren: that what care we haue of our owne body, such also we ought to haue of our brethren which are members of our body: as no part of our body is touched with any feeling of greefe, which is not spread abroad into al the other partes, so wee must not suffer our brother to be greued with any euill whereof we shoulde not also be touched with cōpassion. Therefore Augustine not without cause so oft calleth this sacrament y^e bond of charitie. For what sharper spur could be put to vs, to stir vp mutuall charitie among vs, than when Christ giuing himself to vs, doth not onely allure vs with his owne example that we should mutuallly dedicate and deliuer our selues one to another: but in so much as he maketh himselfe common to al, he maketh al vs also one in himselfe?

39 But hereby is that verie well confirmed which I haue saide in an other place, that the true ministratiō of the Sacrament standeth not without the word. For whatsoever profite commeth to vs of the Supper, requireth the word: whether we be to be confirmed in faith, or to be exercised in confession, or be stirred vp to ductie, prayer is needfull. Therefore nothing can be more disorderly done in the supper, than if it bee turned to a dumbe action: as hath bene done vnder the tyrannie of the Pope. For they would haue the whole force of consecratiō to hang vpon y^e intent of the Priest, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whome it most of all behooued that the mysterie should be declared. But therevpon hath growen this errour, y^e they marked not that those promises wherewith the consecration is made, are directed not to the elementes themselues, but to them y^e receiue thē. But Christ speaketh not to the bread, y^e it may be made his bodie, but commandeth his disciples to eat, & promiseth to them the cōmunicating of his body & blood. And none other order doth Paul teach, than that together with the bread and the cup, the promises should be offered to the faithfull. Thus it is truly. We ought not to imagine any magicall inchantment, that it be sufficient to haue mūbled vp y^e words, as though the elementes did heare them: but let vs vnderstande that those words are a liuely preaching, which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly pearce into their mindes, which may bee imprinted and settled in their hearts, which may shew forth effectualnes in the fulfilling of y^e which it promiseth. By these reasons it clearly appeareth, y^e the laying vp of the sacrament, which many do earnestly require, y^e it may be extraordinarily distributed to y^e sick, is vnprofitable: For either they shall re-receiue it without rehearsing of the institution of Christ, or the minister shall together with the signe ioyne the true declaration of the mysterie. In silence is abuse and fault. If the promises be rehearsed, and the mysterie declared, that they which shall receiue it may receiue it with fruite, there is no cause why we should doubt that this is the true consecration. To what ende then will that other consecration come, the force whereof commeth not so farre as to the sicke men? But they that do so, haue the example of the old church. I graunt: but in so great a matter, and in which wee erre not without great daunger, nothing is safer than to follow the trueth it selfe.

40 Nowe as we see that this holy breade of the Supper of the Lorde is spirituall meate, no lesse sweete and delicate than healthfull to the godly worshippers of God, by the tast whereof they feele that Christ is their life, who it raiseth vp to thankesgiuing, to whome it is an exhortation to mutuall charitie among themselues: so on the other side it is turned into a most noysome poyson to all them whose Faith it doeth not nourishe and confirme, and whome it doeth not stirre vp to confession of praise and to charitie. For as bodily meate, when it findeth a stomacke possessed with euill humors, being it selfe also thereby made euill and corrupted doeth rather hurt than nourishe: so this spirituall meate, if it light vpon a soule defiled with malice and naughtinesse, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meate it selfe, but because to defiled and vnbeleeuing men nothing is cleane, though otherwise it bee neuer so much sanctified by the blessing of the Lorde. For (as Paul saith) they that eate & drinke vnworthily, are guiltie of the bodie and blood of the Lorde, and doe eate and drinke iudgement to themselues, not discerning the bodie of the Lorde. For such kinde of men as without any sparcke of faith, without any zeale of charitie, doe thrust themselues forth like swine to take the Supper of the Lorde, doe not discern the body of the Lorde. For in so much as they doe not beleene that that bodie is their life, they doe as much as in them lieth dishonour it, spoiling it of all the dignitie thereof, and finally in so receiuing it they prophane and defile it. But in so much as being estranged and disagreeing from their brethren, they dare mingle the holy signe of the bodie of Christ with their disagreements, it is no thanks to them that the bodie of Christ is not rent in sunder, and limmemale torne in peeces. And so not vnworthily they are guiltie of the bodie and blood of the Lord, which they doe with vngodlinesse full of sacriledge so fowlie defile. Therefore by this vnworthie eating, they take to themselues damnation. For whereas they haue no faith reposed in Christ, yet receiuing the sacrament they professe y there is saluation for them no where else than in him, and doe forswear all other affiance. Wherefore they themselues are accusers to themselues, they themselues pronounce witness against themselues, and they themselues seale their owne damnation. Againe when they being with hatred and euill will diuided and drawn in sunder from their brethren, that is, from the members of Christ, haue no part in Christ: yet they doe testifie that this is the onely saluation to communicate with Christ, and to bee made one with him. For this cause Paul commaundeth, that a man prooue himselfe, before y hee eate of this breade or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expound it) he meant meant that euerie man shoulde descende into himselfe, and weie with himselfe, whether hee doe with inwarde affiance of heart rest vpon the saluation which Christ hath purchaced: whether hee acknowledge it with confession of mouth: then whether hee doe with desirous endeouour of innocence and holinesse aspire to the following of Christ: whether after his example hee be readie to giue himselfe to his brethren, and to communicate himselfe to them with whome he hath Christ common to him: whether, as he himselfe is accompted of Christ, he do likewise on his behalfe take al his brethren for members of his owne bodie: whether hee couet to chcerish, defend and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that these duties both of faith and charitie can now be perfect in vs: but because we ought to endeouour this, and with all our desires to long toward it, that we may dayly more and more encrease our Faith begon.

Tit. 1. 15.
2. Cor. 11. 29.

1. Cor. 11. 21

41 Commonly when they goe about to prepare men to such worthines of eating, they haue in cruell wise tormented and vexed poore consciences: and yet they brought neuer a whitte of all those thinges that might serue to the purpose. They saide that those did eate worthily which were in state of grace. To be in state of grace they expounded to bee pure and cleansed from all sinne. By which doctrine al the men that euer haue at any time bin or now be in earth, were debarred from the vse of this sacrament. For if we goe about this, to fetch our worthines frō our selues, we are vtterly vndone: onely despeire and damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeour with our whole strengthes, we shall nothing more preuaile, but that then at laste we shall be most vnworthie, when wee haue most of all trauelled about seeking of worthines. To salue this sore, they haue deuised away to attaine worthines: that, as much as in vs lieth, making examination, and requiring of our selues accompt of all our doinges, we shoulde with contrition, confessiō, and satisfaction cleanse our vnworthines: which way cleansing, what manner of thing it is, we haue already shewed there where was more conuenient place to speake of it. So much as serueth for our present purpose, I say y these be too hungrie and vanishing comfortes, to dismaied and discouraged consciences, and such as as stricken with horrour of their sinne. For if y Lord by speciall forbidding, admitteth none to the partaking of the supper but the righteous and innocent: there needeth no small heede that may make a mā assured of his owne righteousnes which hee heareth to be required of God. But whereby is this assurednes confirmed vnto vs, that they are discharged afore God, which haue done so much as in them lay? But although it were so, yet when shall it be that a man may be bolde to assure himselfe that he hath done as much as in him lay? So when there is made no certaine assurance of our worthines, the entrie shall alway remaine shut by that horrible forbidding, whereby is pronounced that they eate and drinke iudgement to themselues, which eate and drinke vnworthily.

42 Nowe it is easie to iudge what maner of doctrine this is which reigneth in the Papacie, and from what author it hath proceeded, which with y outrageous rigor thereof, bereaueth and spoyleth, miserabie sinners & such as be tormented with feare and sorow, of the comfort of this Sacrament in which yet al the sweete delicates of the Gospel were set before them. Surely the

the deuil could: by no readier way destroy men, than by so making them senselesse, that they could not perceiue the taste and saouour of such foode, wherewith it was the will of the most good heauenly Father to feede them. Least therefore we runne into such headlong downfall, let vs remember that this holy banquet is medicin: to the sicke, comforte to sinners, liberall gifte to the poore: which bring no profite to the healthie, righteous, and rich, if any such could be founde. For whereas in it Christ is giuen vs for meate: we vnderstand that without him we pine, starue, and faint, like as famine destroyeth the liuely strength of the body. Againe whereas he is giue vs for life: we vnderstand y without him wee are in our selues vtterly deade. Wherefore this is the worthinesse both the onely and best that we can bring to God, if we offer to him our own vilenes & (as I may so call it) vnworthines, y of his mercie he may make vs worthy of him: if we despeire in our selues, that we may be comforted in him: if we humble our selues, that we may be raised vp of him: if we accuse our selues, y we may be justified of him: moreouer if we aspire to that vnitie which he commendeth to vs in his supper: & as he maketh vs all one in himselfe, so if we wish to vs al altogether one soule one hart one tongue. If we haue these things throughly well weied & considered, such thoughts although they shake vs, yet shal neuer ouerthrow vs. As, how shold we being needie & naked of al good things, we deified with filthines of sins, we halfe dead, eat the bodie of the Lord worthilie? We wil rather think that we being poore come to the liberal giuer, we sick to y Phisician, we sinners to the author of righteousnesse, finally we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthinesse which is commaunded of God, consisteth chiefly of Faith, which reposeseth all things in Christ and nothing in vs: and next of charitie, and the selfe same charitie which it is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that hee may increase it to better, forasmuch as it cannot be giuen perfect. Some other agreeing with vs in this, that the worthinesse it selfe consisteth in Faith and charitie: yet in the measure of worthinesse haue gone farre out of the way, requiring a perfection of Faith, whereunto nothing may bee added, and a charitie egall with that which Christ hath shewed towarde vs. But hereby they do none otherwise than those other before, driue all men away from comming to this holy Supper. For if their sentence should take place, no man shold receiue but vnworthily, forasmuch as all without exception shoulde be holden guiltie and conuict of their vnperfectnesse. And truly it were a point of too much amazed dulnesse, I will not say foolishnesse, to require such perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament void and superfluous: which was not ordained for the perfect, but for the weake and feeble to awake, to stirre vp, to pricke forward and exercise the affection of faith and charitie, and to correct the default of either of them.

43 But so much as concerneth the outward forme of doing, whether faithfull receiue it in their hand or no, whether they deuide it, or euerie one eate that which is giuen him: whether they put againe the cup in the hand of y deacon, or deliuer it to y next: whether the bread be leauened, or vnleaued: whether the wine be read or white: it maketh no matter. These things he indifferent and left in the libertie of the Church. Howebeit it is certain taine, that the vsage of the olde Church was, that euerie one shoulde take it into his hande. And Christ saide, Diuide it among you. The histories report that it was leauened and common bread before the time of Alexander Bishop of Rome, which first delited in vnleauened bread: But for what reaso I see not, vnlesse it were with a newe sight to drawe the eyes of the common people to wondring at it, rather than to instruct their mindes with good religion. I adiure all them that are touched with any though but light zeale of godlinesse, to tel whether they do not evidently see, both howe much more brightly the glorie of G O D shineth herein, and how much more abundant sweetenesse of spirituall comfort commeth to the faithfull, than in these cold and playerlike trifles, which bring none other vse but to deceiue the sense of the amazed people. This they call the holding of the people in religion, when being made foolish & senselesse with superstition it is drawn, whither they list. If any man will defende such inuentions by antiquitie, I my selfe also am not ignorant how auncient is the vse of chresme, and blowing in Baptisme: Howe nie to the age of the Apostles the Supper of the Lord was infected with rustinesse: but this verily is the waiwardnes of mans boldnesse, which can not withhold it selfe but that it must alway play and bee wanton in the mysteries of God. But let vs remember that God doeth so highly esteeme the obedience of his word, y he willeth vs in it to iudge both his Angels and the whole worlde. Now, bidding farewell to so great a heape of ceremonies: it might thus haue been most comelily ministred, if it were oft and at least euery weake set before the Church, but that first they shoulde beginne with publike prayers: then a sermon shoulde be made, then the minister, hauing breade and wine set vpon the boorde, shoulde rehearse the institution of the supper: and then shoulde declare the promises that are in it left vnto vs: and therewithall shoulde excommunicate all them that by the Lords forbidding are debarred from it, afterwarde they should pray y with what liberalitie the Lord hath giuen vs this holy foode, he would instruct & frame vs also with the same faith, and thankfulnessse of minde to receiue it, and that forasmuch as wee are not of our selues, he woulde of his mercie make vs worthie of such a banquet: that then either Psalmes should be song, or somewhat red, and the faithfull should in seemely order communicate of y holy banquet, the ministers breaking the bread and giuing it to the people: that when the supper is ended, exhortation should be made to pure faith and confession of faith, to charitie, and to maners meete for Christians: last of all that giuing of thanks should be rehearsed, and praises be song to God: which being ended the congregation should be let goe in peace.

44 These things that wee haue hitherto spoken of this Sacrament doe largely shewe, that it was not therefore ordeyned, that it shoulde be receiued yearely once, and that slightly for manners sake (as nowe commonly the custome is) but that it shoulde be in often vse to all Christians: that with often remembrance they shoulde reape the passion of Christ: by which remembrance they might susteyne and strengthen their Faith, and exhort them selues to sing confession of praise to God, and to publishe his goodnesse: finally by which they might nourishe mutuall charitie; and reuse it among them selues, whercof they sawe the knot in the vaitie of the body of Christ. For so oft as wee communicate of the signe of the body of the Lord, we doe as by a token giuen and receiued, interchangeably binde our selues one to another vnto all dueties of loue, that none of vs doe any thing whereby he may offende his brother, nor leaue any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when neede requireth and abilitie sufficeth. That such was the vse of the Apostolike Church, Luke rehearseth in the Acts, when he saith that the faithfull were continuing in the doctrine of the Apostles, in communicating, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. So was it altogether meete to be done, that there should bee no assemblie of the Church without the worde, prayers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was also institute among the Corinthians we may sufficiently gather of Paul and it is certaine that in many ages afterwarde it was in vse. For thereupon came those olde Canons, which they father vppon Anaclerus and Calixtus, that when the consecration is done, all shoulde communicate, that wil not be without the doers of y^e Church. And it is red in those old Canons, which they cal the canons of the Apostles: that they which continue not vnto the ende, and do not receiue the holy Communion, must bee corrected as men that mooue vnquietnesse of the Church. Also in the Councell at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into the Church, and heare the scriptures, and doe absteine from the communion, shoulde be removed from the Church, till they haue amended this faulte. Which although in the first Councell at Toletum it was either somewhat qualified or at least set fourth in milder wordes, yet it is there also decreed, that they, which when they haue hearde the sermon, are founde neuer to communicate, shoulde be warned: if after warning they absteyne, they should be debarred from it.

45 Verily by these ordinances the holy men meant to reteyne & maintaine the often vse of the Communion, which often vse they had receiued from the Apostles theselues, which they saw to be most wholsom for the faithfull, & by litle and litle by the negligence of the common people to grow out of vse. Augustine testifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (saith hee) of this thing, of the vnitie of the Lordes bodie, is somewhere daily, somewhere by certaine distances of the dayes, prepared vnto the Lordes table, and is there receiued at the table, to some vnto life, to othersome vnto destruction. And in the first Epistle to Ianuarius: some doe dayly communicate of y^e body and bloode of the Lorde: some receiue it at certaine dayes: in some places there is no day let passe wherein it is not offered: in some other places onely vppon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in some other places neuer but on the Sunday. But forasmuch as the common people was (as wee haue said) somewhat slacke, the holy men did call earnestly vpon them with sharpe rebukings, least they should seeme to winke at such slouthfulnesse. Such an example is in Chrysostome vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians. It is not said vnto him that dishonored the banquet: wherfore didst thou sit down? but, wherfore diddest thou come in? Whosoeuer is not partaker of the mysteries, hee is wicked and shamelesse for that hee standeth here present. I beseech you, if any be called to a banquet, washeth his handes, sitteth down, seemeth to prepare himselfe to eat, and then doeth tast of nothing: shal he not shame both the banquet, and the maker of the banquet? So thou standing among them that with prayer doe prepare themselves to receiue the holy meate, hast euen in this that thou hast not gone away confessed that thou art one of the number of them, at the last thou doest not partake: had it not bin better that thou hadst not bin present? Thou wilt say, I am vnworthie. Therefore neither wast thou worthie of the communion of prayer, which is a preparing to the receiuing of the holy mysterie.

46 And truly this custome, which commaundeth to communicate yereley once, is a most certaine inuention of the diuel, by whose ministerie soeuer it was brought in. They say that Zepherinus was author of that decrec, which it is not likely to haue bene such as we now haue it. For he by his ordinance did peradventure not after the worst maner prouide for the church, as the times then were. For it is no dout but that then the holy supper was set before the faithfull so oft as they came together in assembly, neither is it any dout but that a good part of them did communicate. But when it scarcely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was necessarie y they which were mingled with prophane men and idolaters, should by some outward signe testifie their faith: the holy mā for order and policies sake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Christians should by partaking of the Lords supper vtter a confession of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus being otherwise good hath bene euil wrested of them that came after, when a certaine lawe was made of one communicating yeatly: whereby it is come to passe, that almost all men when they haue once communicate, as though they had gaily discharged themselves for all the rest of the yere, sleepe soundly on both eares. It ought to haue bene farre otherwise done. Euery weeke at the least, the Lords table should be set before the assembly of the Christians: the promises should be declared, which might feede vs spiritually at it: none should in deede be cōpelled by necessitie, but all should bee exhorted and pricked forward: the sluggishnesse also of the slothful should be rebuked. All should by heapes, as hungrie men, come together to such dainties. Not without rightfull cause therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the diuel this custome was thrust in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yere, maketh men slothfull for all the rest of the yere. We see in deede that this peruerse abuse was crept in euen in the time of Chrysofome: but wee may also therewithall see how much it displeased him. For he complaineth with grievous wordes in the same place which I euen nowe alleaged, y there is so great inequalitye of this matter, that often in some times of the yere they came not euen when they were cleane, but at Easter they came euen when they were vnclane. Then he crieth out: O custome. O presumption. Then in vaine is the daily offering vsed: in vaine we stand at the altar: there is none that partaketh together with vs. So farre is it off that he allowed it by his authoritie adioyned to it.

47 Out of the same shop proceded also another ordinance, which hath stolen away or violently taken away the halfe of the supper from the better number of the people of God, namely the signe of the bloud, which bec ing denied to lay & profane men (for with such titles forsooth they set out Gods inheritance) became a peculiar possession to shauen and annoyned men.

It is the commaundement of the eternall God, that all should drinke: which commaundement man dare discontinue and repell with a new and contrarie law, commanding that not all should drinke. And y^e these lawmakers shoulde not seeme to fight without reason against their God, they pretende perils that might happen if this holy cup were commonly giuen to all: as though those dangers had not beene foreseene & marked of the eternall wisdom of God. And then suttelley forsooth they reason, that the one is enough for both. For if (say they) it be the body, it is whole Christ, which cannot now be seuered from his bodie. Therefore by accompanying the bodie containeth the blood. Lo how our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer so litle begon with loose reines, to be wanton and wilde. The Lord shewing bred saith that it is his bodie: when he sheweth the cup, he calleth it his blood. The boldnes of mans reason, crieth out contrariwise, that the bread is the blood, and the wine is the bodie: as though the Lorde had for no cause seuered his body from his blood both in wordes and in signes: or as though it had eu^er been heard spoken that the bodie or blood of Christ is called God & man. Verily if he had meant to signifie whole himselfe, he might haue said it is I: as he is wont to speake in the scriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my blood. But he willing to helpe our weakenesse, did set the cup seuerally from the bread, to teach that he sufficeth no lesse for drink than for meat. Nowe let one parte be taken away, then wee shall finde but the one halfe of the nourishmentes in him. Therefore, although it be true which they pretende, that the blood is in the bread by way of accompanying, and againe, the bodie in the cup, yet they defraude godly soules of the confirmation of faith which Christ deliuereth vs as necessarie. Therefore bidding their suttleties farewell, we must hold fast the profir which is by the ordinance of Christ in the two earnestes.

48 I knowe in deede that the ministers of Sathan do here cauill, as it is an ordinarie thing with them to make mockerie of the Scriptures. First they alleage that of one bare doing ought not to be gathered a rule whereby the Church shoulde be bounde to perpetuall obseruing. But they lie when they say that it was but a bare doing: for Christ did not onely deliuer the cup, but also did institute that his Apostles should in tyme to come do the same. For they are the wordes of a commaunder, drinke ye all of this cup. And Paul so rehearseth that it was a deede, that he also commendeth it for a certaine rule. Another starting hole is, that the Apostles alone were receiued of Christ to the partaking of this supper whome he had alreadie chosen & taken into the order of the sacrificing Priestes. But I woulde haue them answer me to fise questions, from which they shall not be able to escape, but that they shalbe easily conuincid with their lies. First, by what oracle haue they this solution reuealed, beeing so strange from the worde of God? The Scripture reckoneth twelue that sate with Iesus: but it doeth not so obscure the dignitie of Christ that it calleth them sacrificing Priestes of which name wee will speake hereafter in place fit for it. Though he gaue it then to the twelue, yet he commaunded that they shoulde doe the same, namely that they should so distribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apostles almost a thousande yeares, were all without exception made made partakers of both the signes? was the old church ignorant what gestures Christ had receiued to his Supper? It were a point of most desperate shamelesnesse, here to sticke and dally in granting it to be true. There remaine the ecclesiasticall histories, there remaine the bookes of the olde writers, which minister euident testimonies of this matter. The fleshe (sayth Tertullian) is fed with the body and bloud of Christ, that the soule may be fatted with feeding vppon God. Howe (sayde Ambrose to Theodosius) wilt thou receiue with such handes the holy body of the Lorde? With what boldenesse wilt thou with thy mouth partake of the cup of the precious bloud? And Hierome sayth. The priestes which make the Thankesgiuing, and doe distribute the bloud of the Lorde to the people. Chrysostome. Not as in the old lawe the Priest did eate part, and the people parte: but one body is set before all, and one cuppe. Those things that pertaine to the Thankesgiuing are all common betwene the Priest and the people. The selfe same thing doeth Augustine testifie in many places,

49 But why dispute I about a thing most knowen? Let all the Greeke and Latine writers be read ouer: such testimonies shall ech where offer theselues. Neither was this custome growen out of vse, while there remained one drop of purenesse in the Church. Gregorie, whome you may rightly say to haue bene the last Bishop of Rome, teacheth that it was kept in his time. What is the bloud of the lambe, ye haue now learned, not by hearing but by drinking. His bloud is poured into the mouthes of the faithfull. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeares after his death, when all thinges were growen out of kinde. For neither was that taken onely for an vsage, but also for an inuolable law. For then was in force the reuerence of Gods institution, & they doubted not y^t it was sacrilege, to seuer those things which the Lord had conioyned. For thus saith Gelasius. We haue founde, y^t some receiuing only the portion of the holy body, do absteyne frō the cup. Let them without dout, because they seeme to be bound with I wot not what superstition, either receiue the Sacraments whole, or be debarred from the whole. For the diuiding of this mystery is not comitted without great sacrilege. Those reasons of Cyprian were heard, which truly ought to moue a Christian mind. How (sayth he) do we teach or prouoke them to shed their bloud in the confessing of Christ, if we deny his bloud to them that shall fight? Or how do we make them fit for the cup of Martyrdome, if we doe not first in the church by the right of communion admit them to drink the cup of the Lord. Whereas the Canonists do restraints that decree of Gelasius to the Priestes, that is so childish a cauill that it neede not to be confuted.

50 Thirdly, why did he simply say of the bred, that they should eat: but of the cuppe, that they should all drinke? euen as if he had meant of set purpose to meete with the craft of Sathan. Fourthly, if (as they would haue it) the Lorde vouchsafed to admit to his supper onely sacrificing Priestes, what man euer durst call to the partaking of it, strangers whom the Lorde had excluded? yea and to the partaking of that gift, the power whereof was not in their handes, without any commandement of him which only could giue it? Yea vpon confidence of what warrant do they vse at this day to distribute to the common people the Signe of the body of Christe, if they haue neither comandement nor example of the Lord? Fifthly, did Paul lye, when he said to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lorde that which he had deliuered to them? For afterwarde he declareth the thing that hee deliuered, that all without difference should communicate of both the signes. If Paul receiued of the Lord, that all should be admitted without difference: let them looke of whom they haue receiued which doe drue away almost all the people of God: because they can not nowe pretende God to be the author of it, with whom there is not yea and nay. And yet full for cloking of such abominations they dare pretend the name of the church, and with such pretence defend it. As though either these Antichristes were the church, which so easily tread vnderfooote, scatter abroad, and destroy the doctrine and institution of Christ: or the Apostolike Church were not the church, in which the whole force of religion flourisheth.

The xvij. Chapter.

Of the Popish Masse, by which sacrilege the Supper of Christ hath not onely bin prophaned, but also brought to naught.

With these and like inuentions Satan hath trauailed, as by ouerspreading of darkenesse to obscure and defile the holy supper of Christ, that at least the purenesse of it should not be kept still in the Church. But the heade of horrible abomination was when hee aduanced a signe, by which it might not onely be darkened and peruered, but being vtterly blotted and abolished shoulde vanishe and fall out of the remembrance of men: namely when he blinded almost the whole world with a most pestilent error, that they should beleue that the Masse is a sacrifice and oblation to obtaine the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Howe at the beginning the founder sorte of the schoolemen tooke this doctrine, I nothing regarde: farewell they with their crabbed sutleties: which howsoever they may be defended with cauilling, yet are therefore to be refused of all good men, because they doe nothing else but spreade much darkenesse ouer the brightnesse of the Supper. Therefore bidding them farewell, lette the readers vnderstande that I here match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romishe Antichriste and his Prophetes haue infected the whole worlde, namely that the Masse is a worke whereby the sacrificing Priest which offereth vp Christ, and the other that doe partake at the same oblation, doe deserue the fauour of GOD: or that it is a cleansing sacrifice, whereby they reconcile GOD to themselves. Neither hath this bene receiued onely in common opinion of the people, but the very doing it selfe is so framed, that it is a kinde of pacifying wherewith satisfaction is made to GOD for the purging of the quicke and dead. The wordes also which they vse, doe expresse the same: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vse of it. I knowe howe deepe rootes this pestilence hath taken, vnder howe great seeming of goodnes it lurketh, howe it beareth in shewe the name of Christe, howe in the one name of Masse many beleue that they comprehend the whole summe of faith. But when it shalbe by the worde of God most cleerely proued, that this Masse,

how much fouler it bee coloured & gloriqus, yet shamefully dishonoureth Christ, burieth & oppresseth his crosse, putteth his death in forgetfulness, taketh away the fruite that commeth thereof vnto vs, doth weaken & destroy the Sacrament wherein was left the memorie of his death: shall there then be any so deepe roots, which this most strong axe, I meane the word of god, shal not cut downe & ouerthrowe? Is there any face so beautifull, that this light cannot bewray the euil which lurked vnder it?

2 Let vs therefore shewe that which hath bene set in the first place, that in it is intollerable blasphemie & dishonour done to Christ. For he was consecrate of his Father a Priest & bishop, not for a time as wee reade that they were ordeined in the old testament, whose life being mortall their priesthod also could not be immortal: for which cause also there needed successours y^e should from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Christ, which is immortal, there nedeth no vicar to be set after him. Therefore he was ordeined of the Father a priest for euer, according to the order of Melchisedech, that he should execute an euerlasting priesthood. This mysterie had bene long before figured in Melchisedech, whome when y^e Scripture had once brought in for the priest of the liuing God, it neuer afterwarde made mention of him, as though he had had no ende of his life. After this point of likenesse, Christ was called a priest according to his order. Nowe they that do daily sacrifice, must needes appoint priests to make the oblations, whome they must appoint as it were successors and vicars in the steede of Christ. By which putting in steede of him; they doe not onely spoyle Christ of his honour, and plucke from him the prerogative of eternal priesthood, but also trauaile to thrust him downe from the right hande of his Father, on which he cannot sit immortal, but that hee must therewithall remaine the eternall priest. Neither let them lay for themselues, that their petie sacrificers are not put in place of Christ as if he were dead, but onely are helpers of his eternall priesthood, which ceaseth not therefore to continue. For they are more strongly holden fast with the wordes of the Apostle, than that they may so escape: namely, that there were many other priests made; because they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, and he needeth no companions. Yet, such is their frowardnesse, they arme themselues with the example of Melchisedech to defende their wickednesse. For, because it is saide that he offered bread and wine, they gather that he was a foreshewing of their Masse: as though the likenesse betweene him and Christ were in the offering of breade and wine. Which is so emptie and trifling that it needeth no confutation: Melchisedech gaue bread and wine to Abraham and his companions, to refresh the being wearie after their journey and battaile: What is this to a sacrifice? Moses praiseth the gentlenesse of the holy king: these fellows vnseasonably coyne a mysterie whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfully paint their error with an other color, because it followeth by and by after, And he was the priest of the hiest God. I answere, that they wrongfully draw to the bread and wine that which the Apostler referreth to the blessing. Therefore when he was the priest of God he blessed Abraham. Whereupon the same Apostle (than whom we neede to seeke no better expositor) gathereth his excellencie, because the lesser is blessed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchisedech were a figure of the sacrifice of Masse, would the Apostle, I pray you, which searcheth out all euen the least things, haue forgotten so earnest and weightie a thing? Nowe (howsoever they trifle) they shall in vaine goe aboute to ouerthrowe the reason which the Apostle himselfe bringeth, that the right and honour of sacrificieng priesthoode ceaseth among mortall men, because Christ which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall sacrificieng priest.

3. An other vertue of the Masse was, that it oppresseth and burieth the crosse and passion of Christ. This verily is most certaine, that the crosse of Christ is ouerthrowen so sone as the alter is set vp. For if he offered himselfe for a sacrifice vpon the crosse, that he might sanctifie vs for euer, and purchase to vs eternall redemption; undoubtedly the force and effectualnesse of that sacrifice continueth without any end. Otherwise we should think nothing more honourably of Christ, than of oxen and calves which were sacrificed vnder the lawe: the offerings whereof are proued vneffectuall & weake by this that they were oft renewed. Wherefore either we must confesse, that the sacrifice of Christ, which he fulfilled vpon the crosse, wanted the force of eternall cleansing; or that Christ hath made an ende of all with one sacrifice once for euer. This is it that the Apostle sayeth, that this chiefe bishop Christ once appeared by offering vp of himselfe before the ending of the worlde, to the driuing away of sinne. Again; That we are sanctified by the will of God, by the offering of the bodie of Iesus Christ once. Again; That Christ with one oblation for euer hath made perfect them that are sanctified: wherunto he adioyneth a notable sentence that forgiuenesse of sinnes being once purchaced, there remaineth no more any oblation. This also Christ signified by his last saying and vttered among his last gaspings, when he said, It is ended. We are wont to note the last sayings of men when they are dying, for oracles. Christ dying testifieth that by his one sacrifice is perfected & fulfilled whatsoever was for our saluation, Shall it be lawful for vs daily to patch innumerable sacrifices to such a sacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath so shiningly set forth) as though it were vnperfect? When the holy word of God not onely affirmeth, but also teacheth out, and protesteth, that this sacrifice was once fully done that the force thereof remaineth euerlasting; who so require an other sacrifice; do they not accuse this of imperfection and weaknesse? But as for the Masse, which hath bene deliuered in such sort that there may euery day be made a hundred thousand sacrifices; to what end tendeth it, but that the passion of Christ, whereby he offered him an only sacrificed oblation to the Father, should ly buried & drowned? Who, vnlesse he be blind, cannot see that it was the boldnes of Satan which wrestled against so open and cleare trueth? Neither am I ignorant with what deceits that Father of lying vseth to colour this his fraud, saying that there are not sundrie nor diuerse sacrifices, but that one selfe same sacrifice is repeated. But such smokes are easily blown away. For in the whole discourse the Apostle trauaileth to proue: not only y there are no other sacrifices, but y that one sacrifice was once offered vp, & shal no more be repeated. The sut-seller men do yet slip out at a narrower hole, saying, y it is not a repeating but an applying. But this Sophistical argument, also is no lesse easily confuted. For neither did Christ once offer vp himselfe with this condition: that his sacrifice should be daily confirmed with new oblations; but y by the preaching of the Gospel, & ministring of the holy Supper, the fruit thereof should be communicated vnto vs. So Paul saith that Christ our passcouer was offered vp, & biddeth vs to eate of him. This (I say) is the meane whereby the Sacrifice of the Crosse is rightly applyed to vs, when it is communicated to vs to take the vse of it, & we with true faith receiue it.

1. Cor. 5. 7.

4 But it is worth the labour to heare, with what other foundation beside these they vphold the sacrifice of the Masse. For they drawe to this purpose the prophetic of Malachie, whereby the Lord promiseth that the time shall come when throughout the whole worlde there shall be offered to his name incense and a cleane sacrifice. As though it were a newe or vnwonted thing among the Prophets, when they speake of the calling of the Gentiles to expresse by the outward ceremonie of the lawe the spirituall worshipping of God, to which they exhort them; that they might the more familiarly declare to the men of their age, that the Gentiles should be called into the true felowship of religion. Like as also they are wont altogether to describe by figures of their law, the truth that was deliuered by the Gospel. So they set for turning to the Lord, ascending into Ierusalem: for the worshipping of God, the offering of all kinds of gifts: for larger knowledge of him which was to be giuen to the faithful in the kingdom of Christ, dreames & visions: That therefore which they alleage, is like vnto an other prophetic of Esay, where the Prophet foretelleth of three altars to be set vp in Assyria, Ægypt, and Iury. For first I aske, whether they doe not grant that the fulfilling of this prophetic is in the kingdom of Christ. Secondly, where be these altars, or when they were euer set vp. Thirdely whether they thinke that to euery seuerall kingdom is appointed a seuerall Temple, such as was that at Ierusalem. These things if they wey, I thinke they will confesse, that the Prophet vnder figures agreeable with his time, propheticeth of the spirituall worship of God to be spread abroad into the whole world. Which we giue to the for a solution. But of this thing sith there doe euery where examples commonly offer themselues, I wil not busie my self in longer rehearfall of them. Howbeit herein also they are miserably deceiued, that they acknowledge no sacrifice but of the Masse, where as in deede the faithfull do nowe sacrifice to the Lord, & do offer a cleane offering, of which shall be spoken by and by.

Mal. 1. 8.

Esa. 19. 21.

5 Nowe I come downe to the thirde office of the Masse, where I must declare howe it blotteth out the true and onely death of Christ, and shaketh it out of the remembrance of men. For as among men the strength of a testament hangeth vppon the death of the testator: so also our Lorde hath with his death confirmed the testament whereby hee hath giuen vs forgiuenesse of sinnes and eternall righteousnesse. They that dare varie of make newe any thing in this testament, doe denie his death, and holde it as it were of no force. But what is the Masse, but a newe and altogether diuerse testament? For why? Doeth not euery seuerall Masse promise newe forgiuenesse of sinnes, newe purchasing of righteousnesse: so that nowe there bee so many testaments, as there be Masses? Let Christ therefore come againe, and with an other death confirme this testament, or rather with infinite deathes confirme innumerable testaments of Masse. Haue I not therefore said true at the beginning, that the only and true death of Christ is blotted out by Masse? Yea what shall we say of this that the Masse directly tendeth to this end, that if it be possible, Christ should be slaine againe? For where is a testament (saith the Apostle) there of necessitie must be the death of the testator. The Masse sheweth it selfe to be a newe testament of Christ therefore it requireth his death. Moreouer the hoste which is offered, must necessarily be slaine and sacrificed. If Christ in euery seuerall Masse be sacrificed, then hee must at euery moment bee in a thousande places cruelly slaine. This is not mine, but the Apostles argument, If he had needed to offer himselfe oft, he must oft haue died since the beginning of the worlde. I knowe that they haue an aunswere in readinesse, whereby also they charge vs with slander. For they say that that is objected against them which they neuer thought, nor yet can. And wee knowe, that the death and life of Christ is not in their hand. Wee looke not whether they goe about to kill him: onely our purpose is to shewe, what manner of absurditie followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which selfe thing I prooue by the Apostles owne mouth. Though they crie out to the contrarie a hundred times, that this sacrifice is vnbloudie: I will denie that it hangeth vpon the will of men, that sacrifices should change their nature, for by this meane the holy & inuiolable ordinance of God should faile. Whereupon followeth that this is a sure principle of the Apostle, that there is required shedding of bloud, that washing may not be wanting.

6 Now is the fourth office of the Masse to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the fruite that came to vs of the death of Christ, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke vpon it. For who can call to minde that he is redeemed by the death of Christ when he seeth a newe redemption in the Masse? Who can trust that sinnes are forgien him, when he seeth a newe forgienesse? Neither shall he escape that shall say, that wee do for no other cause obtaine forgienesse of sinnes in the Masse, but because it is alreadie purchased by the death of Christ. For he bringeth nothing else than as if he should boast, that Christ hath redeemed vs with this condition that we should redeeme our selues. For such doctrine hath bene spread by the ministers of Satan, and such at this day they maintaine with cryings out with sworde & fire, that we when in the Masse wee offer vp Christ to his Father, by this worke of offering do obtaine forgienesse of sinnes, & are made partakers of the passion of Christ. What nowe remaineth to the passion of Christ, but to be an example of redemption, whereby we may learne to be our owne redeemers? Christ himselfe, when in the Supper he sealeth y confidence of pardon, doth not bid his disciples to sticke in that doing, but sendeth them away to the sacrifice of his death: signifying that the Supper is a monument or memoriall (as the common speech is) whereby they may learne that the satisfactorie cleansing sacrifice, by which the Father was to bee appeased, must haue bene offered but once. For neither is it enough to knowe y Christ is the onely sacrifice, vnlesse the onely sacrificing be ioyned with it, y our faith may be fastened to his crosse.

7 Now I come to the conclusion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lorde had left the remembrance of his passion grauen and expressed, is by the setting vp of the Masse, taken away, defaced, and destroyed. For the Supper it selfe is the gift of God, which was to be received with thanksgiuing. The sacrifice of the Masse is fained to pay a price to God, which he may receive for satisfaction. Howe much difference there is betweene to giue and to receive, so much doth the sacrifice differ from the Sacrament of y^e Supper. And this truly is the most wretched vnthankfulnessse of man, that where the largesse of Gods bountie ought to haue bin acknowledged, and thanks to be geuen, therein he maketh God his dettor. The Sacrament promised, that by the death of Christ we are not onely once restored into life, but are continually quickned, because then all the partes of our saluation were fulfilled. The sacrifice of the masse singeth a farre other song, that Christ must be daily sacrificed, that he may somewhat profit vs. The Supper should haue bene distributed in the common assemblie of the Church, that it might enforme vs of the communion whereby we all cleaue together in Christ Iesus. The sacrifice of the Masse dissolueth and plucketh in sunder this communitie. For after that the error grewe in force, that there must be sacrificers that shoulde sacrifice for the people, the Supper of the Lorde as though it were posted ouer to them, ceased to be communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commaundement of the Lorde. An entrie was made open to priuate Masses, which might rather resemble a certaine excommunication, than that same communitie ordained of the Lord, when the petie sacrificer willing seuerally by himselfe to deuour his sacrifice, doth seuer himselfe from the whole people of the faithfull. I cal priuat Masse (least any man be deceiued) wherefoeuer there is no partaking of the Lordes Supper among the faithfull, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

8 And whence the very name of Masse first sprong, I could neuer certainly iudge: sauing that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offerings that were giuen. Whereupon the olde writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But to leaue strining about the name, I say that priuate Masses are directly against the ordinance of Christ, and therefore they are a wicked prophaning of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lorde commaunded vs? not to take, and diuide it among vs? What manner of obseruing of the commaundement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread, which is the communion of the body & bloud? Therefore when one taketh it without distributing, what likeness is there? But that same one man doth it in the name of the whole Church. By what commaundement? Is not this openly to mocke God, when one man priuatly taketh to himselfe that which ought not to haue bene done but among many? But because the wordes of Christ and Paul are plaine enough, we may briefly conclude, that wherefoeuer is not breaking of bread to the communion of the faithfull, there is not y^e Supper of the Lord, but a false and wrongfull counterfaying of the Supper. But a false counterfaying is a corrupting. Now the corrupting of so great a mystery is not without wickednesse. Therefore in priuate Masses is a wicked abuse. And (as one fault in religion from time to time breedeth another) after that that manner of offring without communion was once crept in, by litle and litle they began in euery corner of Churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuersly to draw the people hither and thither, which should haue come together into one assembly, that they might reknowledge the mysterie of their owne vnitie. Now let them go and deny it to be ydolatrie, that in their Masses they shew forth bread to be worshipped in steede of Chrst. For in vaine they boast of those promises of the presence of Chrst, which howsoeuer they be vnderstoode, verily were not giuen to this purpose, that wicked & prophane men, so oft as they will, and to whatsoeuer abuse they list, may make the body of Chrst: but that the faithfull, when with religious obseruation they doe in Celebrating of the Supper follow the commandement of Chrst; may enjoy the true partaking of him.

9 Beside that, this peruersnes was vnknownen to the purer Church. For howsoeuer the more shainlesse sort among our aduersaries do here go about to disguise the matter with false colours, yet it is most sure that all antiquitie is against them, as wee haue afore prooued in other thinges, and it may more certainly be iudged by the continuall reading of old writers. But ere I make an ende of speaking of it, I aske our Massing doctors, sith they knowe that obedience is more esteemed of God than oblations, and that hee more requireth that his voyce be harkened to, than that sacrifices bee offered: howe they beleue that this manner of sacrificing is acceptable to G O D, whereof they haue no certaine commaundement, and which they see not to be allowed by any one syllable of the Scripture. Moreouer when they heare the Apostle say, that no man taketh to himselfe the name and honor of sacrificing priesthoode, but he that is called as Aaron was: yea & that Chrst himselfe did not thrust in himselfe, but obeyed the calling of his Father: either they must bring forth God the author and ordeiner of their sacrificing priesthoode, or they must confesse that the honour is not of G O D, into which they haue with wicked rashnes brokē in vncalled. But they can not shew one title of a letter y mainteineth their sacrificing priesthoode. Why therefore shal not their sacrifices vanish away, which can not bee offred without a priest?

10 If any man doe thrust in short sentences of the olde writers gathered here and there, and doe by their authority trauaile to proue that the sacrifice which is done in the Supper is farre otherwise to be vnderstanded than wee doe expounde it: let him be briefly answered thus: if the question be of allowing the forged deuise of sacrifice, such as the Papistes haue fained in the Masse, the olde writers doe neuer speake in defence of such sacrilege. They doe in deede vse the worde Sacrifice: but therewithall they expounde, that they meane nothing else but the remembrance of that true and onely sacrifice, which Chrst our onely sacrificing priest (as they ech where reporte of him) made on the crosse. The Hebrues (sayeth Augustine) in the sacrifices of beastes which they offred to G O D, did celebrate a prophetic of the sacrifice to come, which Chrst offred: the Christians doe with the holy oblation and partaking of the body of Chrste celebrate a remembrance of the sacrifice already made. Here verily he teacheth altogether the same thing, which is written in moe words in the booke of faith to Peter the Deacon, whosoever be y author of it. The words be these, Belceue most stedfastly and doubt not at all, that the onely begotten himselfe, being made fleshe for vs, offered himselfe for vs a sacrifice and oblation to God into a sauour of sweetenesse: to whome with the Father and the Holy Ghost in the time of y^e olde testamēt beastes were sacrificed: and to who me now with the father and the holy Ghost (with whome hee hath one godhead) the holy Church throughout the whole worlde ceaseth not to offer the sacrifice of bread and wine. For in those fleshy sacrifices was a figuring of the flesh of Christ which he should offer for our sinnes, and of his blood which hee should shed to the forgiuenesse of sinnes. But in this sacrifice is thanksgiuing and rehearsal of the flesh of Christ which he offered for vs, & of his blood which y^e same he hath shed for vs. Wherupon Augustine himselfe in many places expoundeth it to be nothing else but a sacrifice of praise. Finally you shal commonly find in him, y^e supper of the Lord is for no other reason called a sacrifice, but because it is the remembrance, image, and witness of that singular, true, and onely sacrifice wherewith Christ hath cleansed vs. Also there is a notable place in his fourth booke of the Trinitie the xxiii. Chapter, where after that he hath discoursed of the onely sacrifice, he thus concludeth: because in a sacrifice fouer things are considered, to whom it is offered, and of whom, what is offered, and for whome. The same he himselfe the one and true mediator reconciling vs to God by the sacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whome he offered: maketh them one in him for whome he offered: is one himselfe which offered, and the thing which he offered. To the same effect also speaketh Chrysostome. But they so chalenge the honour of sacrificing priestthoode to Christ, that Augustine testifieth it to be the voice of Antichrist if any man make a Bishop intercessor betweene God and men.

II Yet doe wee not denie but that the offering vp of Christ is there so shewed in vs, that the spectacle of the crosse is in a maner set before our eyes: as the Apostle saith that Christ was crucified in the eyes of the Galathians, when the preaching of the crosse was set before them. But forasmuch as I see y^e those old Fathers also wrested this remembrance an other way than was agreeable with the institution of the Lorde (because their supper contained I wote not what repeated or at least renewed forme of sacrificing) the safest way for godly hartes shalbe to rest in the pure and simple ordinance of God: whose also the supper is therefore called, because in it his authoritie alone ought to be in force. Truly sith I finde that they haue kept a godly and true sense of this whole mysterie, and I do not perceiue that they meant to abate any thing were it neuer so litle from the onely sacrifice of the Lord, I cannot condemne them of vngodlinesse: yet I thinke y^e they cannot be excused, but y^e they haue offended somewhat in the maner of the celebration. For they counterfaited the Iewish maner of sacrificing more nerely than either Christ had ordeined, or the nature of the Gospel did beare. Therefore that same ouerswartt appliance to heauenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that being not contented with the simple & natural institution of Christ, they swarued to the shadowes of the law.

Gal. 3. 1.

III If a man doe diligently wey, that this difference is put by the worde of the Lord betweene the sacrifices of Moses, and our Thanksgiuing, that whereas those did represent to the Iewish people, the same effectualnesse of the death of Christ, which is at this day deliuered to vs in the Supper, yet the manner of representing was diuerse. For in those, the Leuiticall Priests were commaunded to figure that which Christ should performe it: there was brought a sacrifice which shold be in the steed of Christ himselfe: there was an altar whereupon it should be offered: Finally al things were so done, y^e there was set before their eies an image of y^e sacrifice which was to beoffred to God for a satisfactorie cleansing. But since the time that the sacrifice is ended, the Lorde hath appointed to vs an other order: namely that it should conuey to the faithfull people the fruite of the sacrifice offered to him by the sonne. Therefore hee hath giuen vs a table whereat wee shoulde eate, not an altar whereupon sacrifice shoulde be offered: hee hath not consecrated priestes to sacrifice, but ministers to distribute the holy banquet. Howe much more hie and holie the mysterie is, so much more religiously & with greater reuerence it is meete to be handled. Therefore there is no way safer, than putting away all boldnesse of mans vnderstanding, to sticke fast in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truely if wee consider that it is the Supper of the Lorde and not of men, there is no cause why we should suffer our selues to bee remooued one heire breadth from it by any authoritie of men or prescription of yeares. Therefore when the Apostle minded to cleanse it from all all faultes which had alreadie crept into the Church of the Corinthians, hee vseth the readiest way thereunto, that is, he calleth it bycke to the onely institution of it, from whence he sheweth that a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

1. Cor. 11, 20

13 Nowe least any wrangler, shoulde stirre vs vp strife by reason of the names of sacrifice and sacrificing priest, I will also declare, but yet breesely what in the whole discourse I haue meant by a sacrifice, and what by a sacrificing priest. Whofo stretche the worde sacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doinges of religion, I see not by what reason they doe it. We doe knowe that by the continuall vse of y^e scripture a sacrifice is called that which the Greekes call sometime Thusia, sometime Prosphora, sometime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehendeth whatsoever is in any wise offered to God. Wherefore we must make distinction: but yet so that this distinction may haue a supernall appliance of similitude from the sacrifices of the lawe of Moses: vnder the shadowes whereof the Lorde willed to represent to his people the whole trueth of sacrifices. Of those although there were diuerse formes, yet they may all bee referred to two sortes. For either there was oblation made for sinne after a certayne manner of satisfaction, whereby guiltinesse was redeemed before God: or it was a signe of the worshipping of God, and a testifying of religion: sometime in steede of supplication, to craue the fauour of God: sometime in steede of thankesgiuing, to testifie thankfulness of minde for benefites receiued: sometime onely for an exercise of godlinesse, to renewe the stablishing of the couenaunt: to which latter sort pertained burnt offeringes, drinke offeringes, oblations, first frutes, and peace offeringes Wherefore let vs also diuide ours into two kindes: and for teachinges sake let vs call the one the sacrifice of worship and of Godly deuotion, because it consisteth in the honouring and worshipping of GOD, which the faithfull both owe and yeelde vnto him: or, if you will, the sacrifice fice of Thanksgiuing : forasmuch as it is giuen to God of none but of them that being loden with immeasurable benefites, do render to him themselues with all their doinges. The other may be called propitiatorie or of expiation. The sacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appease the wrath of God, to satisfie his iudgement, and so to wash and wipe away sinnes : whereby the sinner cleansed from the filthy spots of them, and restored into puritie of righteousness, may returne into fauour with God himselfe. So in the lawe those were called sacrifices that were offered for the purging of sinnes: Exo. 29. 39 not for that they were sufficient to recouer the fauor of God, or to put away iniquitie: but for that they shadowed out such a true sacrifice which at length was fully done by Christ alone: and by him alone, because it could be done by none other : and once, because the effectualnesse and force of that one sacrifice which Christ hath fully done, is eternall, as he himselfe hath testified with his owne mouth, when he sayd that it was ended and fulfilled: that is to say, Ioh. 19. 30 that whatsoeuer was necessary to the reconciling of the Fathers fauor, to the obteyning of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, to righteousness and to saluation, all the same was performed and fulfilled with that his onely oblation, and there so nothing wanted therof, that there was afterward no place left to any other sacrifice.

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a most wicked reproch, & blasphemy not to be suffred, as well against Christ as against the sacrifice which hee hath fully done by his death vpon the crosse for vs, if any man by renewing an oblation thinke to purchase the pardon of sinnes, to appease God, and to obtaine righteousness. But what is else done by Massing, but that by deserting of new oblation we may be made partakers of the passion of Christ. And, y^e there might bee no measure of madding, they thought it but a small thing to saye that there is made indifferently a common sacrifice for the whole Church, vnlesse they further sayd that it is in their choise to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whō they would, or rather to euery one who-soeuer he were that would buy for himselfe such ware with ready money. Now because they could not reach to the price that Iudas had, yet that they might in some maner resemble their author, they kept the likeness of number, Iudas sold him for thirtie siluer pence : these fellowes sell him, after the French account, for thirtie brassen pence: but Iudas sold him once, these fellowes sell him as oft as they can finde a buier. In this sense also we denie that they bee sacrificing priestes, that is to say, they y^e with such an oblation are meanes to God for the people, they y^e appeasing God, may purchase the satisfactorie purging of sinnes. For Christ is the onely Bishop & sacrificing priest of the new Testament, into whom all Priesthoodes are remoued, & in whom they be shut vp and ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternal Priesthoode of Christ: yet for forasmuch as God, since that he hath taken away those old Priesthoods, hath ordeined none, y^e Apostles argument remaineth inuincible, y^e no man taketh honor to himselfe but he that is called of God. By what affiance therefore dare these robbers of God, that boast themselues for the butchers of Christ, call themselues the sacrificing Priestes of the liuing God?

The comon price of a masse in France is 3 karolus which make 20 deniers, about y^e value of a sterling groate. Iob. 5. 4

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his second booke of common weale. Where

Where when he entreateth of the olde maners of expiation, and laugheth to scorne the foolish confidence of euil men and wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by these as by couerings hidden that y gods could not see them, and did, as if they had gotten warrat of the gods by covenant, more carelesly followe their owne lustes: hee seemeth throughly to touch the maner of satisfactorie purging of the Masse, such as is at this day in the worlde. To beguile and vndermine an other man, all men knowe to be vnlawfull. To greue widowes with wrongfull dealinges, to robbe the fatherlesse, to trouble the poore, by euill crafty meanes to catche other mens goods to themselues, with forewearinges and deceits to enter forceably into any mans possessions, to oppresse any man with violence & tyrannous feare, all men confesse to be wicked. How therefore dare so many commonly do all these things, as though they should freely be bolde to doe them? Truly, if we rightly weye it, no other cause doeth so much encourage them, but because they haue confidence, that by the sacrifice of a Masse, as by payment of full price for recompence, they shall satisfie God, or at the least that this is an easie way to compounde with him. Then Plato proceedeth further to scorne their grosse blockishnesse, which thinke that by such satisfactorie cleansinges those peines are redeemed that otherwise they shoulde suffer in hell. And whereto serue at this day the yeerely obites, and the greater part of Masses, but that they which throughout all their life haue been most cruell tyrantes, or most rauenous robbers, or giuen foorth to al mischieuous doings, should as though they were redeemed by this price, escape the fire of purgatorie?

16 Vnder the other kinde of sacrifice, which we haue called the sacrifice of Thankesgiuing, are contained all the dutifull workes of charitie, which when we extend to our brethren, we honour the Lord himselfe in his members: then, all our prayers, praisinges, giunges of thanks, and what soeuer we do to the worshipping of God. All which things finally do hang vpon the greater sacrifice, whereby we are in soule and body halowed to be a holy temple to the Lorde. For neither is it enough, if our outwarde doings be applied to the obeying of him: but first our selues, and then all that is ours ought to be consecrat and dedicate to him: that whatsoeuer is in vs, may serue his glory, and may sauor of zealous endeouour to aduance it. This kinde of sacrifice tendeth nothing at all to appease the wrath of God, nothing at all to obtaine forgiuennesse of sinnes, nothing at all to deserue righteousnesse: but is occupied only in magnifying & extolling of God. For it can not be pleasant and acceptable to God, but at their handes, whom by forgiuennesse of sinnes already receiued he hath by other meanes reconciled to himselfe, and therefore acquitted them from giltinesse. But it is so necessarie for the Church, that it can not be away from it. Therefore it shalbe euerlasting, so long as the people of God shall continue, as we haue before already shewed out of the Prophet: for in that meaning I will take this prophecie, For from the rising of the sunne to the going downe thereof, great is my name among the Gentiles, and in euerie place incense shalbe offred to my name, and a cleane offering: because my name is terrible among the Gentiles, sayth the Lord: so far is it off, that we would put it away. So Paul biddeth vs to offer our bodies

a sacrifice liuing, holy, acceptable to God, a reasonable worshipp. Where he spake verie pithilie, when hee added that this is our reasonable worshipping: for he meant the spirituall manner of worshipping of God, which he did secretly set in comparison against the carnall sacrifices of the lawe of Moses. So liberall doing of good and communicating are called sacrifices by which God is pleased. So the liberalitie of the Philippians, whereby they had releued the pouertie of Paul, is called a sacrifice of sweete smelling. So all the good workes of the faithfull are called spirituall sacrifices.

Heb. 13. 16.

17 And why doe I seeke out many examples? For commonly this manner of speaking is often founde in the scriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holden vnder the outwarde schooling of the lawe, yet the Prophets did sufficiently expresse, that vnder those carnall sacrifices was the truth, which the Christian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which manner Dauid prayed, that his prayer might as incense ascende into the sight of God. And Osee called giuings of thanks, the calues of lippes, which in another place Dauid calleth the sacrifices of praise. Who the Apostle himselfe following, calleth them also the sacrifices of praise, & expoundeth them the fruites of lippes confessing to his name. This kind of sacrifice the Supper of the Lorde cannot want: wherein when we declare his death and render thankesgiuing, wee doe nothing but offer the sacrifice of praise. Of this office of sacrificing, all wee Christians are called a kingly Priesthood: because by Christ wee offer to God that sacrifice of praise of which the Apostle speaketh, the fruit of lippes that confesse to his name. For neither doe we with our giftes appeare in the sight of God without an intercessor. Christ is hee, which being the mediator comming between, we offer vs and ours to the Father. Hee is our Bishoppe, which being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, hath opened the entrie to vs. Hee is the altar, vpon which wee lay our giftes, that in him wee may bee bolde all that wee are bolde. It is hee (I say) that hath made vs a kingdome and Priests to the Father.

18 What remaineth, but that the blinde may see, the deafe may heare, children themselues may vnderstande. this abomination of the Masse, which being offered in a golden cup, hath made drönke the kings and peoples of the earth, from the hiest to the lowest, hath so stricken them with drowinesse and giddinesse, that being become more senselesse than bruite beasts, they haue set the whole ship of their safetic only in this deadly deuoring gulfe. Truly Satan neuer did bend himself with a stronger engine than this to assaile and vanquish the kingdome of Christ. This is the Helene, for whome the enemies of the trueth fight at this day with so great rage, so great furiousnesse, so great crueltie: and a Helene in deede, with whome they so defile themselues with spirituall whoredome, which is the most cursed of all. I doe not here so much as once touch with my little finger those grosse abuses wherewith they might colour the vnholy purenesse of their holy Masse: howe filthy markettinges they vse, how vnhonest gaines they make with their massinges, with howe great rauening they fill their couetousnes. Onely I doe point vnto, and that with fewe and plaine wordes, what manner of thing is euen the verie holiest holinesse of the Masse, for which it hath deferred in certain ages past to be so honorable & to be had in so great reuerence. For, to haue these so great mysteries set out according to their worthinesse, requireth a greater worke. and I am vnwilling to mingle herewith those filthy vncleanneses that commonly shewe themselues before the eyes and faces of all men: that all men may vnderstand, that the Masse taken in her most piked purenesse, and wherewith it may be set out to the best shew, without her appendances, from the roote to the toppe swarmeth full of all kinde of wickednes, blasphemie, idolatrie, and sacrilege.

19 The Readers nowe haue in a maner almost all those things gathered into an abridgement, which we haue thought behoouefull to be knowne concerning these two Sacramentes; the vs: of which hath bene deliuered to the Christian Church from the beginning of the newe testament, to continue to the verie end of the worlde: namely, that Baptisme shoulde be as it were a certaine entrie into it, and an admission into faith: and the supper shoulde be as it were a continual foode, wherewith Christ spiritually feedeth the familie of his faithfull. Wherefore as there is but one God, one faith, one Christ, one Church his bodie: so there is but one Baptisme, and is not oft ministred againe. But the supper is from time to time distributed, that they which haue bene once receiued into the Church, may vnderstande y they be continually fed with Christ. Beside these two as there is no other sacrament ordeist of God, so neither ought the Church of the faithfull to acknowledge any other. For, that it is not a thing that lieth in the choise of mā to raise and set vp newe sacraments, he shall easily vnderstande that remembreth that which hath bene here before plainly enough declared, that is, that sacramentes are appointed of God to this end, that they should instruct vs of some promise of his, and testifie to vs his good will toward vs: and he also that calleth to minde, that none hath bin Gods counseller, that might promise vs any certaintie of his will, or assure vs, and bring vs out of care, what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will giue, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is also determined, that no man can set forth a signe to be a testimonie of any will or promise of his: it is he himself alone, that can by a signe giuen testifie to vs of himselfe. I will speake it more briefly, and peraduenture more grossly, but more plainly, A Sacrament can neuer be without promise of saluation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themselves promise nothing of our saluation. Therefore neither can they of themselves set foorth or set vp a sacrament.

20 Therefore let the Christian Church be contented with these two, and let her not onely not admit or acknowledge any thirde for the present time, but also not desire or looke for any to the end of the world. For where- as certaine diuerse sacramentes, beside those their ordinatie ones, were giuen to the Iewes, according to the diuerse course of times, as Manna, Water springing out of the rocke, the Brasen serpent and such other: they were by this change put in minde that they shoulde not stay vpon such figures, whose state was not verie stedfast: but that they shoulde looke for some better thing from God, which should continue without any decaying, and without any end. But wee are in a farre other case, to whome Christ is openly shewed: in whom all the treasures of knowledge and wisdom are hidden

with so great abundance and plentie, that either to hope for or looke for any newe encrease to these treasures, is verily to moue God to wrath, and to pro- uoke him against vs. Wee must hunger for, seeke, looke vppon, learne, and throughly learne Christ alone, vntill that great day shall appeare, wherein the Lord shall openly shewe to the full the glorie of his kingdome, and him- selfe such as he is, to be beholden of vs. And for this reason this our age is in the Scriptures signified by the last houre, the last dayes, the last times, that no man should deceiue himselfe with vaine looking for any new doctrine or reuelation. For many times & in many sorts he spake before of his prophets: in these last dayes the heauenly Father hath spoken in his beloued Sonne, which onely can manifestly shewe the Father: and in deede he hath mani- festly shewed him to the full, so much as behoueth vs, while we now beholde him by a glasse. As therefore this is nowe taken away from men, that they cannot make newe Sacraments in the Church of God: so it were to be wis- shed, that as litle as were possible of mans inuention might be mingled with those Sacraments that are of God. For like as when water is powred in, the wine departeth and is delayed: and as with leauen scattered among it, the whole lumpe of doae waxeth sower: so the purenesse of the mysteries of god is nothing else but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we see how farre the Sacraments are swarued out of kinde from their natu- rall purenesse, as they be handled at this day. There is echwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and gesturings: but of the worde of God in y meane time there is neither any consideration nor mention, without which euen the Sacraments themselues are not Sacramentes. Yea and the verie cere- monies that are ordeined of God, in so great a rout cannot once lift vp their head, but lie as it were oppressed. Howe litle is that seene in baptisme, which onely ought there to haue shined and beene looked vpon, as wee haue in an- other place rightfully complained, euen baptisme it selfe: As for the Supper, it is vtterly buried, since that it hath been turned into the Masse, sauing that it is seene once every yeare but in a mangled and halfe torne fashion.

The xix. Chapter.

Of the five falsly named Sacraments: where is declared, that the other five which haue beene hitherto commonly taken for Sacraments, are not Sacraments: and then is shewed what manner of things they be.

OVr former discourse concerning Sacraments might haue obtained this with the sober and willing to learne, that they shoulde not ouer curi- ously proceede any further, nor shoulde without the worde of God embrace any other Sacramentes beside those two which they knewe to be ordeined of the Lorde. But forasmuch as that opinion of the seuen Sacraments, be- ing commonly vsed in all mens talke, hauing wandered through al schooles and preachings, hath by very auncientie gathered rootes, and is yet still settled in the mindes of men: I thought that I should do a thing worth the trauel, if I shoulde severally and more neerly search those other five that are commonly adnumbred among the true and naturall Sacraments of the Lord, and wiping away al deceitful colour, should set them forth to be seene of the simple such as they be, and how falsely they haue beene hitherto také for Sacraments. First, I here protest to all the godly, that I doe not take in hand this contention about the name for any desiring of struing, but that I am by weightie causes led to fight against the abuse of it. I am not ignorant that Christians are Lords, as of words, so of all things also, & therefore may at their will apply words to thinges, so that a godly sense bee kept, although there be some vnpropernesse in the speaking. All this I graunt: although it were better that the wordes should be made subiect to thinges, than thinges to the wordes. But in the name of Sacrament there is another consideration. For they which make seuen Sacraments, do therewithall giue to them all this definition, that they be visible formes of inuisible grace: they make them altogether vessels of the holy Ghost: instruments of giuing of righteousness, causes of the obtaining of grace. Yea and the Master of the sentences himselve denyeth that the Sacraments of the lawe of Moses are properly called by this name, because they did not deliuer in deede the thing that they figured. Is it, I beseech you, to be suffered, that those signes which the Lorde hath hallowed with his owne mouth, which he hath garnished with excellent promises, should not bee accounted for Sacramentes: and in the meane time this honour shoulde bee conueyed away to those vsages which men either haue deuised of themselues, or at least doe obserue without expresse commandement of God? Therefore either let them chage the definition, or let them absteyne from the wrongful vsing of this word, which doth afterward engender false opinions & full of absurditie. Extreme annoynting (say they) is a figure and cause of inuisible grace, because it is a Sacrament. If wee ought in no wise to graunt that which they gather vpon it, then truly we must resist them in the name it selfe, least therby we admit that it may giue occasion to such an errour. Againe when they would prooue it to be a Sacrament, they adde this cause, for that it consisteth of the outwarde signe and the word. If we finde neither commaundement nor promise of it, what can we do else but crie out against them?

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about the worde, but do moue a controuersie not superfluous concerning the thing it selfe. Therefore this we must strongly hold fast, which we haue with inuincible reaso before confirmed, that the power to institute a Sacrament is in the hande of none but of God only. For a Sacrament ought with a certaine promise to raise vp and comfort the consciences of the faithfull: which could neuer receiue this certaintie from man. A sacrament ought to bee to vs a witnessing of the good will of God toward vs, whereof none of all men or Angels can be witnes, for asmuch as none hath bene of Gods counsel. Therefore it is he alone which doth with right authoritie testifie of himselfe to vs by his word. A sacrament is a seale, wherewith the testament or promise of God is sealed. But it coulde not be sealed with bodily thinges and elements of this world, vnlesse they be by the power of God framed and appointed thereunto. Therefore man can not ordaine a Sacrament, because this is not in the power of man, to make that so great mysteries of God should lye hidden vnder so base thinges. The worde of God must go before, which may make a Sacrament to be a Sacrament, ment, as Augustine verie well teacheth. Moreover it is profitable that there be kept some difference betweene the Sacramentes and other ceremonies, vnlesse we will fall into many absurdities. The Apostles prayed kneeling: therefore men shall not kneele without a Sacrament. It is said that the disciples prayed toward the East: therefore the looking into the East shall be a Sacrament. Paul willeth men in euery place to lift vp pure handes, and it is rehearsed that holy men often times prayed with their hands lifted vp: then let the lifting vp of hands also be made a Sacrament. Finally let al y gestures of the holy ones turne into Sacraments. Howbeit I wold not also much passe vpon these things, if so that they were not ioyned with those other greater discommodities.

3 If they will presse vs with the authoritie of the old Church, I say that they pretende a false colour. For this number of seuen is no where founde among the Ecclesiasticall writers: neither is it certaine at what time it first crept in. I graunt in deede that sometime they be verie free in vsing the name of a sacrament: but what meane they thereby? euen all ceremonies & outwarde rites, and all exercises of godlinesse. But when they speake of those signes that ought to be witnesses of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with these two, Baptisme, & the Supper. Least any man shoulde thinke that I falsly boast of this, I wil here rehearse a fewe testimonies of Augustine. To Ianuarius he saith, First I would haue thee to hold fast y which is the chiefe point of this disputation, that our Lord Christ (as he himselke saith in the Gospel) hath made vs subiect to a light yoke and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the fellowship of the newe people with Sacraments verie few in number, verie easie in obseruing, verie excellent in signification. As are Baptisme hallowed in the name of the Trinitie, and the Communicating of the body & bloud of the Lorde, & whatsoeuer else it set forth in the Canonical Scriptures. Again, in his booke of Christian doctrine, Since the Lords resurrection, the Lord himself & the doctrine of the Apostles hath deliuered certaine fewe signes in steede of many, and those most easie to be done, most reuerend in vnderstanding, most pure in obseruing: as is Baptisme, and the Celebrating of the body and bloud of the Lorde. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of seuen? Is it likely that hee woulde haue passed it ouer, if it had bene at that time ordeined in the Church, specially sith he is otherwise in obseruing of numbers more curious than neede were? Yea, when he nameth Baptisme and the Supper, and speaketh nothing of the rest: doeth hee not sufficiently signifie, that these two mysteries do excell in singular dignitie, and that the other ceremonies doe rest beneath in a lower degree? Wherefore I saye that these Sacramentarie Doctors are destitute not onely of the worde of the Lorde, but also of the consent of the olde Church, howe much soeuer they glorie of this pretence. But nowe let vs come downe to the speciall things themselues.

Epist. 118.

Lib. 3. cap. 9

Of Confirmation.

4 This was the maner in olde time, that the children of Christians, whē they were growen to age of discretion, should be brought before the bishop: that they shoulde fulfill that duetic which was required of those that beeing grown in yeares did offer themselues to baptisme. For these sate among those that were to be catechised, til being fully instructed in the mysteries of the faith, they could make a confession of their faith before the bishop and the people. Therefore they that were baptised being infantes, because they had not then made confession of their faith before the church, were about the ende of their childhood or in the beginning of their yeeres of discretion presented againe by their parents, and were examined of the Bishop according to the forme of the Catechisme, which they had then certaine & common. And that this doing, which otherwise ought worthily to be graue and holy, might haue the more reuerence and dignitie, there was added also the Ceremonie of laying on of handes. So that same childe, his faith being allowed, was let go with solemne blessing. The olde writers doe oft make mention of this maner. Leo the Pope writeth: If any returne from Heretikes, let him not be baptised againe: but (which he wanted among the Heretikes) let the vertue of the Spirit be giuen him by the Bishops laying on of his handes. Here our aduersaries will crie out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in which the holy Ghost is giuen; but Leo himselve doeth in another place declare what he meaneth by those wordes: Who so (sayth hee) is baptised among heretikes, let him not be rebaptised, but with calling vpon the holy Ghost, let him be confirmed with laying on of handes: because he receiued onely the forme of baptisme without sanctifying. Hierome also maketh mention of it, writing against the Luciferians. But although I doe not deny that Hierom somewhat erreth therein, for that hee sayeth that it is an obseruation of the Apostles: yet he is most farre from these mens follies. And the verie same also he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this blessing is giuen to the bishops onely, rather in honor of their priesthod than by the necessitie of lawe. Therefore such laying on of hands, which is done simply in steede of blessing, I praise and would that it were at this day restored to the pure vse thereof.

§ But the later age hauing in a manner blotted out the thing it selfe, hath set I wote not what fained confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue fained that the vertue of confirmation is, to giue the holy Ghost to the encrease of Grace, which in baptisme was giuen to innocencie: to strengthen them to battaile, which in baptisme were newe begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annoynting, and with his forme of wordes, I signe thee with the signe of the holy crosse, and confirme thee with the chresme of saluation, in the name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost. All this is gaily and trimly done. But where is the word of God, that may promise here the presence of the holy Ghost? They cannot bring foorth one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs, that their chresme is the vessel of the holy Ghost? We see oyle, that is, a thicke and fat liquor & nothing else. Let the worde (saith Augustine) bee added to the element, & there shalbe made a Sacrament. Let them (I say) bring foorth this worde, if they will haue vs in the oyle to looke vppon any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themselues ministers of the Sacramentes, as they ought, we needed to striue no longer. This is the first law of a minister, that he do nothing without commaundement. Go to, let them bring foorth any commaundement of this point of ministerie, & I will not speake one worde more. If they haue no commaundement, they cannot excuse their boldnesse full of sacrilege. After this maner the Lord asked the Pharisees, whether the baptisme of Iohn were from heauen or from men: if they had answered, frō men, then he had made them confesse that it was trifling and vaine: if from heauen, then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of Iohn. Therefore lest they should too much slander Iohn, they durst not confesse that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is proued to be vaine and trifling: if they will persuaue vs that it is from heauen, let them proue it.

6 They do in deede defend themselves with the example of the Apostles, whome they thinke to haue done nothing rashly. That is wel in deede: neither would we blame them, if they shewed themselves followers of the Apostles. But what did the Apostles? Luke reporteth in the Actes, that the Apostles which were at Hierusalem, when they heard that Samaria had receiued the worde of God, sent thither Peter & Iohn: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receiue the holy Ghost, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptised onely in the name of Iesus: when they had prayed, they laid their hands vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans receiued the holy Ghost. And of this laying on of hands he diuerse times maketh mention. I heare what the Apostles did: that is, they faithfully executed their ministerie. The Lord willed that those visible and wonderfull graces of the holy Ghost, which he then poured out vpon his people, should be ministred and distributed of his Apostles by the laying on of handes. But vnder this laying on of handes: I thinke there was not contained any hier mysterie: but I expound it, that they adioyned such a ceremonie, that by the verie outward doing they might signifie, that they commended and as it were offred to God him vpon whome they laid their hāds. If this ministerie which the Apostles then executed, were yet stil remaining in the Church, the laying on of hands also ought to be kept. But since that same grace hath ceased to be giuen, whereto serueth the laying on of hāds? Truly the holy Ghost is yet present with the people of God, without whom being guider & director, the Church of God cannot stand. For we haue the eternall promise & which shal euer stand in force, by which Christ calleth to himselfe them that thirst, that they may drinke liuing waters. But those miracles of powers, & manifest workings, which were distributed by the laying on of hands, haue ceased, neither behoued it that they shoulde bee, but for a time. For it behoued that the preaching of the Gospel while it was newe, should be gloriously set forth & magnified, with vnheard of and vnwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceased, he did not by and by forsake his Church, but taught that the royaltie of his kingdome & the dignitie of his worde was excellently enough disclosed. In what point therefore will these stageplayers say that they folow the Apostles? They shoulde haue done it with laying on of hands, that the euident power of the holy Ghost might by and by shewe forth it selfe. This they bring not to passe: why therefore doe they boast that the laying on of hands maketh for them, which we read in deede that the Apostles vsed, but altogether to another end?

7 This hath like reason as if a man should teach that y^e breathing wherewith the Lord breathed vpon his disciples, is a Sacrament whereby the holy Ghost is giuen. But whereas the Lord did this once, hee did not also will y^e we should do the same. After the same maner also the Apostles laid on their hands, during the time that it pleased the Lord that the visible graces of the holy Ghost should be distributed at their prayers: not that they which come after, should only playe like & without the thing in deede counterfait an emptie & cold signe, as these apes do. But if they prooue that in laying on of hands they follow the Apostles, (wherein they haue no like thing with the Apostles, sauing I wote not what ouerthwart wrongfull counterfaiting) yet whence commeth their oyle which they call the oyle of saluation? Who taught them to seeke saluation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of strengthening? Did Paul, which draweth vs farre away from the elements of this world, which condemneth nothing more than the sticking to such pety obseruations? But this I boldly pronounce, not of my selfe, but from the Lorde. Who so call oyle the oyle of saluation, they forswear the saluation which is in Christ, they denie Christ, they haue no part in the kingdome of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle, the Lord shall destroy both. For all these weake elements, which decay with very vse, belong nothing to the kingdome of God, which is spirituall and shall neuer decay. What then? will some men say: do you measure with the same measure, the water wherewith we be baptised, and the bread & wine vnder which the Supper of the Lord is giuen? I answer that in Sacramentes giuen of God, two things are to be looked vnto: the substance of the bodily thing which is set before vs; and the forme that is by the worde of God printed in it, wherein lyeth the whole strength. In respect therefore that the bread, wine, and water that are in the Sacramentes offered to our sight, doe keepe their own substance, this saying of Paul alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God that destroy them both. For they passe and vanish away with the fashion of this worlde. But in respect that they be sanctified by the word of God, that they may be Sacraments, they do not hold vs in the flesh, but do truely and spirituallly teach ys.

8 But let vs yet more neerely looke into it, how many monsters this fat liquor fostereth and feedeth. These annointers say, that the holy Ghost is giuen in baptisme, to innocencie: in Confirmation, to encrease of grace: that in Baptisme, we are newe begotten into life: in confirmation, we are prepared to battle. And they are so past shame, that they denie that baptisme can well be done without confirmation. O wickednesse! Are we not therefore in baptisme buried together with Christ, being made partakers of his death, that we may be also parteners of his resurrection? But this fellowship with the death & life of Christ Paul expoundeth to be the mortifying of our flesh, and quickning of our Spirit: for that our old man is crucified, that we may walke in newnes of life. What is to be armed to battell if this be not? If they counted it a matter of nothing, to tread vnder feete the worde of God: why did they not yet at least reuerence y^e Church, to whom they will in euery point seeme so obedient? But what can bee brought forth more strong against their doctrine, than y^e decree of the Milcuitane council? Who so saith

that baptisme is giuen only for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and not for a helpe of grace to come, accuſed be he. But whereas Luke, in the place which wee haue alleged, ſaith that they were baptiſed in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, which had not receiued the holy Ghoſt: he doeth not ſimply denie that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghoſt, which beleeued in Chriſt with hart, and confeſſed him with mouth: but meaneth of that receiuing of the holy Ghoſt, whereby the open powers and viſible graces were receiued. So is it ſaide that the Apoſtles receiued the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, whereas it had bin long before ſayde vnto them of Chriſt, it is not you that ſpeake, but the Spirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you. Behold al ye that are of God, the malicious and poiſonous deceite of Sathan. That thing which was truly giuen in baptiſme, hee lyingly ſayth to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by ſtealth leade you vnto from baptiſme. Who now can dout that this is the doctrine of Satan, which cutting away from baptiſme the promiſes properly belonging to baptiſme, doth conuey away and remoue them, to another thing? It is found (I ſay) vpon what maner of foundation this godly anointing ſtandeth. The word of God is, that all they which are baptiſed in Chriſt, haue put on Chriſt with his giſtes. The word of the anointers is, that they receiued in baptiſme no promiſe, by which they may be armed in battails. That is the voyce of truth, therfore this muſt be y^e voyce of lying. Therfore I can more truly define this confirmation than they haue hitherto defined it: namely, y^e it is a notable ſlander of baptiſme, which darkeneth, yea abolitheth the vſe therof: that it is a falſe promiſe of the deuill, which draweth vs away from the truth of God. Or, if you wil, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the deuill, which as it were by ouerſpreading of darkeneſſe deceiueth the eyes of the ſimple.

9 They adde furthermore, that all the faithfull ought after baptiſme to receiue the holy Ghoſt by laying on of hands, that they may be founde full Chriſtians: becauſe he ſhal neuer be a Chriſtian, y^e is not chreſmed with the biſhoppes Confirmation. Theſe be their owne ſayings worde for worde. But I had thought y^e whatſoever things pertained to Chriſtianitie, were all ſet forth in writing and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be ſought and learned from elſe where than out of the Scriptures. Therefore the whole wiſedome of God, the heauenly trueth, the whole doctrine of Chriſt, doth but begin Chriſtians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this ſentence are damned all the Apoſtles, and ſo many Martyrs, whome it is moſt certaine to haue neuer bene chreſmed: forasmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which beeing poured vpon them, they might fulfil al y^e parts of chriſtianity, or rather might be made Chriſtians which yet were none. But, though I holde my peace, they doe largely confute themſelues. For howe many of the number of their owne people doe they anoint after baptiſme? why therefore doe they ſuffer ſuch halfe chriſtians in their flocke, whoſe imperfection might eaſily bee holpen? Why doe they with ſo careleſſe negligence ſuffer the to omit that which was not lawfull to be omitted without greuous offence? Why do they not more ſeuerely call vpon the keeping of a thing ſo neceſſarie, and without which ſaluatioⁿ can not be obtained, vnleſſe peraduente ſome be prevented by death? Verily when they so freely suffer it to be despised, they secretly confesse that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

IO Last of all they determine that this holy anointing is to bee had in greater reuerence than baptisme: because this anointing is peculiarly ministered by the hands of the chiefe bishops, but baptisme is commonly distributed by euery Priest. What may a man here say, but y they are vtterly mad, which so flatter their owne inuentions, that in cōparison of the m they carelesly despise the holy ordinances of God? O mouth that robbest God, darrest thou set a fatte liquor only defiled with the stinke of thine owne breath, and enchanted with murmuring sound of wordes, against the Sacrament of Christ, and to compare it with water hallowed with the worde of God? But thy wickednes accounted this but a smal matter, vnlesse thou didst also prefer it about the same. These be the answeres of the holy sea, these be the Oracles of the Apostolike trestle. But some of them, euen in their owne opinion, begonne somewhat to qualifie this vnbridled madnesse. It is (say they) to be worshipped with greater reuerence: peradventure not for the greater vertue and profit y it giueth: but because it is giuen of the worthier men, & is made in the worthier part of the body, that is, in the forehead: or because it bringeth a greater encrease of vertues, although baptisme auaille more to forgiveness. But in the first reason do they not bewray themselues to be Donatists, which measure the force of the Sacrament by the worthines of the minister? But I will admitte, that Confirmation bee called the worthier by reason of the worthinesse of the Bishops hand. But if a man aske of them, from whence so great prerogatiue hath bene giuen to Bishoppes, what reason will they bring beside their owne lust? The Apostles alone vsed that power, which alone distributed the holy Ghost. Are the bishoppes alone Apostles? Yea are they Apostles at all? But let vs also grant them that: why do they not by the same argument affirme, that bishoppes alone ought to touch the Sacrament of the bloud in the Supper of the Worde: which they therefore deny to laymen, because the Lord gaue to the Apostles alone? If to the Apostles alone, why do they not conclude: therefore to the bishops alone? But in that place they make the Apostles, simple priestes: but now y giddines of their head carrieth them an other way, suddenly to create them bishops. Finally Ananias was no Apostle, to whō yet Paul was sent, that he should receiue his sight, be baptised, and be filled with the holy Ghost. I wil adde this also to the heape: If by the law of God this was the proper office of bishops, why haue they bin so bold to giue it away to common priestes? as we read in a certaine epistle of Gregorie.

II As for their other reason; how trifling, fonde, and foolish is it, to call their confirmation worthier than the baptisme of God, because in it the forehead is annointed with oyle, and in baptisme the hinder part of the head, although baptisme were done with the oyle and not with the water? I call the godly to witness, whether these losels doe not endeouour themselues to this onely ende, to corrupt the purenesse of the Sacraments with their leauen. I haue already spoken this in an other place, that in the Sacraments, y which is of G O D, scarcely glimmereth through at holes, among the rout of the inuentions of men. If any man did not beleeue me therein, lette him nowe at least beleeue his owne maisters. Loe passing ouer the water, and making no account of it, they highly esteeme the onely oyle in baptisme. Wee therefore on the contrary side doe say, that in baptisme the foreheade also is dipped in water. In comparison of this, wee esteeme not your oyle worth one peece of dong, whether it be in baptisme or in confirmation. If any alleage that it is solde for more: by this adding of price, the goodnes (if any were in it) is corrupted: so much lesse may they commend a most filthie deceite by theft. In the third reason they bewray their owne vngodlines, while they prate that in confirmation is giuen a greater increase of vertues than in baptisme. By the laying on of handes the Apottles distributed the visible graces of the Spirite. In what thing doe these mens fat liquor shewe it selfe fruitefull? But away with these qualifiers, that couer one sacriledge with manie sacrileges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in sunder, than to labour so much in vndoing it.

12 But nowe when they see themselues destitute of the worde of God & probable reason, they pretende as they are wont, that it is a most auncient obseruation and stablished by consent of many ages. Although y were true, yet they winne nothing thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but fro heauen: not from men, but from God alone. They must prooue God to be the author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a Sacrament. But why do they obiect antiquitie, whereas the old writers, when they mind to speake properly, do no where reckon moe sacraments than two? If a foretresse of our faith were to be sought from men, we haue an inuincible tower, that the old fathers neuer acknowledged those for sacraments which these men do lyingly faine to the sacraments. The old writers speake of the laying on of handes: but do they call it a sacrament? Augustine plainly affirmeth that it is no other thing than prayer. Neither let them here barke againste me with their stinking distinctions, that Augustine meant that not of the laying on of hands vsed to confirmation, but which was vsed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth and is abroad in the hands of men. If I wrest it to any other sense than Augustine himselve wrote it, I giue them leaue after their ordinarie maner to oppresse me not onely with railing but also with spitting at me. For he speaketh of them that returned from Schisme to the vnitie of the Church. He denieth that they needed to be newly baptised: for he saith, that the laying on of handes sufficeth, that by the bonde of peace the Lord may giue them the holy Ghost. But for asmuch as it might seeme an absurditie, that the laying on of handes should be done of new rather than baptisme: he sheweth a difference. For (saith he) what other thing is the laying on of hands, than prayer vpon a man? And y this is his meaning appeareth by an other place, where he saith: Hand is laid vpon heretikes and mended, for the coupling of Charitie, which is the greatest gift of the Holy ghost, without which whatfoeuer holy things are in man they auaille not to saluation.

13 But I would to God we did keepe still the manner which I haue saide to haue bin in the old time, before that this vntimely deliuered image of a sacrament was borne: not that it should be such a confirmation as they faine, which cannot once be named without iniury to baptisme: but a catechising, wherby children or they that were neere to the age of discretion did declare an accompt of their faith before the Church. But it shoulde be the best manner of Catechising, if a forme were written to that vse, containing and familiarly setting out a summe in a manner of all the articles of our religion, in which y^e whole Church of the faithful ought without controuersie to agree: that a childe being ten yeres old should offer himselfe to the Church to declare a confession of his faith, shoulde be examined of euery article, and answer to euery one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not vnderstande it, he might be taught. So shoulde he, before the Church witnessing and beholding it, professe the onely, true, and pure faith; wherewith the people of the faithful doth with one mind worship the one God. If this discipline were at this day in force, truly the slouthfulnesse of some parentes would be whetted, who doe carelesly neglect y^e instruction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to them, which then without open shame they could not omit: there should be among Christian people a greater consent of faith, & not so great ignorance and rudenesse of many: some should not be so rashly caried away with new and strange doctrines: finally al should haue as it were a certaine orderlie instruction of Christian learning.

Of Penance,

14 In the next place they set Penance, of which they intreate so confusedly & disorderedly, that consciences cannot beare away no sure or sounde thing of their doctrine. We haue already in an other place declared at large, what we haue learned out of the scriptures concerning repentance, & then what they also teach of it. Nowe we haue this onely to touch, what reason they had y^e raised vp the opinion, which hath heretofore raigned in Churches and schooles, that it is a sacrament. But first I will briefly say somewhat of the vsage of the old Church, the pretence whereof they haue abused to stablish their fained inuention. This order they kepte in publike penance, y^e they which had fully done the satisfactions enioyned them, were reconciled with solemne laying on of hands. That was the signe of absolution, wherby both the sinner himselfe was raised vp before God with trust of pardon, & the Church was admonished gently to receiue him into fauor, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Cyprian ostentimes calleth, to giue peace. That this doing might bee of great dignitie, and haue more commendation among the people, it was ordeyned that the Bishops authoritie shold alway be vsed for y^e meane herein. From hence came y^e decree of the second council at Carthage: Be it not lawful to a priest at the Masse publikely to reconcile a penitent. And another decree of the council at Arausiu, Let those, which in time of their penance depart out of this life, be admitted to the Communion without the laying on of hands vsed in the reconciling: if they recouer of their sickenesse let them stand in the degree of penitentes, and when the time is fully expired, let them receiue of the bishop the laying on of hands vsed in reconciling. Againe the decree of the third council at Carthage: Let not the priest without the authoritie of the bishop, reconcile a penitent. Al these tended to this end, y^e the seueritie which they would haue to be vsed in y^e behalfe, should not with too much lenitie grow to decay. Therefore

fore they willed the bishop to be iudge of it, which was likely y^e hee would bee more circumspect in the examinatioⁿ thereof. Howbeit Cyprian in a certtain place sheweth, that not onely the bishop, but also the whole clergie laid their hands on him. For thus he saith. At the full time they do penance, then they come to the Communion, & by the laying on of hands of the bishop & the clergie, they receiue power to partake of the communion. Afterward by pro- cesse of time it came to this point, that beside publike penance they vsed this ceremonie also in priuate absolutions. Hereupon came that distinction in Gratian betweene publike and priuate reconciliation. I iudge that same old vsage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to haue bin holy and healthfull for the Church, and I would that it were at this day restored. As for this latter, although I dare not disallowe it, or at least speake more sharply against it, yet I thinke it to be lesse necessaric. Howsoeuer it be, yet we see that the lay- ing on of hands in penāce is a ceremonie ordeined of mē, not of God, which is to be set among meane things & outward exercises: & those verily which are not to be despised, but which ought to be in a lower degree, than those y^e are commended vnto vs by the worde of the Lord.

Decret. 26.

15 But the Romanistes and the schoolemen, (which haue an ordinary custome to corrupt all things with wrong expounding them) doe here verie carefully traueil in finding out a sacrament. Neither ought it to seeme any maruell, for they seeke a knot in a rushe. But where they haue it best, they leaue a thing entangled in suspense, vncertaine, and confounded and trou- bled with diuersitie of opinions. They say therefore either that the outwarde penance is a sacrament, and if it be so, that it ought to bee taken for a signe of the inwarde penance, that is, of the contrition of hearte, which shall be the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacra- ment, not two Sacramentes, but one ful one. But, that the outward penance is onely the sacrament: the inwarde is both the thing and the Sacrament: & that the forgiueneesse of sinnes is the thing and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definition of a Sacrament which we haue aboue set, examine thereby that which these men call a Sacrament, & they shall finde that it is not an outwarde ceremonie ordeined of the Lorde for the confirming of our faith. If they cauill that my definition is not a lawe which they neede to obey: let them heare Augustine, whom they saie that they esteeme as most holy. Visible Sacramentes (saith hee) were ordeined for carnall mens sakes, that by degrees of sacramentes they may be conuei- ed from those things that are seene with eyes to those things that are vnder- standed. What like thing doe either they themselues see, or can they shewe to other in that which they call the sacrament of Penance? The same Augustine saith in an other place: It is therefore called a Sacrament, because in it one thing is seene, and an other thing is vnderstanded. That which is seene hath a bodily forme: that which is vnderstanded, hath a spirituall fruite. Neither do these things in any wise agree with the Sacrament of pe- nance, such as they saie it, where there is no bodily forme that may repre- sent a spirituall fruit.

16 And, to kill these beastes vpon their owne fighting place, if there be any sacrament here to be sought, may it not be much more colourably said y^e the

the absolution of the priest is a sacrament, than penance either inwarde or outward? For it might redily be said, that it is a ceremonie to assure our faith of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and hath a promise of the keyes as they call it, Whatsoeuer ye shall binde or loose vpon earth, shall be bound or loosed in heauen. But some man would haue obiected, that the most part of them y^e are absolved of the Priestess, obteine no such thing by such absolution: where as by their doctrine the Sacramentes of the newe law ought to worke indeed y^e which they figure. This were but to be laughed at. For, as in the supper, they make a double eating, a Sacramentall eating which is egally common to good and to euill, and a spirituall eating which is onely proper to the good: why might they not also faine y^e absolution is receiued two waies? Yet coulde I not hicherto vnderstande what they meant with this their doctrine, which we haue already taught how farre it disagreeeth from the truth of God, whē we purposely intreated of that argument. Here my mind is onely to shewe, that this doubt withstandeth not, but that they may call the absolution of y^e priest a Sacrament. For they might aunswere by the mouth of Augustine y^e sanctification is without the visible Sacramēt, & the visible sacrament with out inwarde sanctification. Againe, that the sacramentes doe worke in the onely elect that which they figure. Againe, that some doe put on Christ so far as to the partaking of the Sacrament, other some to sanctification: the one, the good and euill egally doe: this other, the good onely. Truely they haue more than childishly erred and be blinded in the cleare sunne, which trauelling with great hardnesse, yet espied not a thing so plaine and open to euery man.

17 Yet least they shoulde waxe too proude, in what part soeuer they set the sacrament, I denie that it ought rightfully to be taken for a Sacrament. First, because there is no speciall promise to it, which is the onely substance of a Sacrament. Agayne, because whatsoeuer ceremonie is here shewed forth, it is the meere inuention of men: whereas we haue alreadie proued y^e the ceremonies of Sacraments cannot be ordeined but of God. Therefore it was a lie and decite which they haue inuented of the Sacrament of penance. This fained sacrament they haue garnished with a meete commendation, calling it a second boord after shipwrecke: because if a man haue by sinning marred y^e garment of innocencie which he receiued in baptisme, hee may by penance repaire it. But it is y^e saying of Hierom. Whose soeuer it be, it cannot be excused but y^e it is vtterly wicked if it bee expounded after their meaning. As though baptisme be blotted out by sinne, and is not rather to be called to remembrance of euery sinner, so oft as he thinketh of the forgiuenesse of sinne, that he may therby gather vp himselfe, and recouer courage, and strengthen his faith, that he shall obteine the forgiuenesse of sins which is promised him in baptisme. But that which Hierome hath spoken hardly and vnproperly, that by penance baptisme is repaired (from which they fall away that deserue to be excommunicate from the Church) these good expositours draw to their wickednesse. Therefore you shall most fitly speake, if you call baptisme the sacrament of penance, sith it is giuen for a confirmation of grace, and seale of confidence, to them that purpose repentance. And least you should thinke this to bee our deuise, beside this y^e it agreeth with the wordes of the Scripture, it appeareth that it was in the old Church commonly spoken like a most certaine principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is sayd to be Augustines, it is called the Sacrament of Faith and of penance. And why see we to vncertain sayings? As though we could require any thing more plaine, than that which the Euangelist reciteth: that Iohn preached the baptisme of repentance vnto forgiveness of sinnes?

Of extreme unction as they call it.

18 The third sained Sacrament is extreme unction, which is not done but of the priest, and y^e in extremes, (so they terme it) & with oyle consecrate of the bishop, and with this form: By this holy anointing, & by his most kind mercy, God pardō thee whatsoeuer thou hast offended by seeing, by hearing, by smelling, feeling, tasting. They saie y^e there be two. vertues of it, the forgiveness of sins, and ease of bodily sicknes if it be so expedient: if not, the saluation of the soule. They say that the institution of it is set of Iames, whose wordes are these: Is any sicke among you? Let him bring in the Elders of the Church, and let them pray ouer him, anointing him with oyle in the name of the Lord: & the prayer of Faith shall saue the sicke man, and the Lorde shall raise him vp: and if he be in sins, they shalbe forgiven him. Of the same sort is this anointing, of which wee haue aboue shewed that the other laying on of handes is, namely a playe like hypocrisie, wherby without reason & without fruit they would resemble the Apostles. Marke rehearseth that the Apostles at their first sending, according to the commaundement which they haue receiued of the Lorde, raised vp dead men, cast out deuils, cleansed leprous men, healed the sicke, and y^e in healing of the sicke they vsed oyle. They annointed (saith he) many sicke men with oyle, and they were healed. Hereunto Iames had respect, when hee commaunded the Elders to be called together to anoint the sicke man. That vnder such Ceremonies is contained no hier mystery, they shall easily iudge which marke how great liberty the Lord and his Apostles vsed in these outward thinges. The Lord going about to restore sight to the blinde man, made cley of dust & spittle, some he healed with touching, other some with his word. After the same maner the Apostles healed some diseases with y^e word only, some with touching, other some with anointing. But it is likly that this anointing was not (as a) other things also were not) causelessly put in vre. I grant: yet not that it should be a mean of healing, but only a signe, that the dulnes of the vnskilfull might bee put in minde from whence so great power proceded, to this ende that they should not giue the praise thereof to the Apostles. And, that the holy Ghost and his giftes are signified by oyle it is a cōmon and vsual thing. But that same grace of healinges is vanished away, like as also the other miracles, which the Lord willed to be shewed for a time, whereby he might make the newe preaching of the Gospel maruelous for euer. Therefore though wee graunt neuer so much, that annointing was a Sacrament of those powers which were then ministred by the handes of the Apostles, it nowe nothing pertaineth to vs to whom the ministratō of such powers is not committed.

ring, than of all other signes that are rehearsed to vs in the Scripture? Why do they not appoint some Syloah to swim in, whereinto at certaine ordinarie recourses of times sicke men may plunge theselues? That (say they) should be done in vaine. Truely no more in vaine than anointing. Why doe they not lie along vpon dead men, because Paul raised vp a dead child with lying vpon him? Why is not clay made of spittle & dust, a Sacrament? But the other were but singular examples: but this is giuen of Iames for a commandement. Verily Iames spake for the same time, when the Church yet stil enioyed such blessing of God. They affirme in deed that there is yet still the same force in their anointing: but we finde it otherwise by experience. Let no mā now maruell how they haue with such boldnesse mocked soules, which they knowe to be senselesse and blinde when they are spoyled of the word of God, that is, of their life and light: sith they are nothing ashamed to goe about to mocke the liuing and feeling senses of the body. Therefore they make themselves worthy to be scorned, while they boast that they are endued with the grace of healings. The Lord verily is present with his in all ages, & so oft as neede is he helpeth their sicknesses no lesse than in old time: but he doth not so vtter those manifest powers, nor distributeth miracles by the hands of the Apostles: because this gift both was but for a time, and also is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulness of men.

20 Therefore as not without cause the Apostles haue by the signe of oyle openly testified, that the grace of healings committed to them was not their owne power, but the power of the holy Ghost: so on the other side they are wrongdoers to the holy Ghoste, which make a stinking oyle and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether like as if one would say that all oyle is the power of the holy Ghost, because it is called by that name in Scripture: that euery doue is the holy Ghost, because he appeared in that forme. But these things, let them looke to. So much as for this present is enough for vs, we doe most certainly perceiue that their anointing is no Sacrament: which is neither a Ceremonie ordeined of God, nor hath any promise. For when we require these two things in a Sacrament, that it be a ceremonie ordeined of God, & that it haue a promise of God: we do therwithall require that the same Ceremonie be giuen to vs, and that the promise belong vnto vs. For no man doth affirme that Circumcision is nowe a Sacrament of the Christian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promise knitte vnto it: because it was neither commaunded to vs, nor the promise which was adioyned to it was giuen to vs with the same condition. That the promise which they proudly boast of in their anointing, is not giuen to vs, we haue euidently shewed, and they themselves declare by experience. The Ceremonie ought not to haue bene vsed, but of them that were endued with the grace of healings, not of these butchers that can more skill of slaying and murdering than of healing.

21 Howebeit although they obtaine this, that that which Iames commaundeth concerning anointing, agreeth with this age (which they are most farre from) yet euen so they shall not haue much preuailed in prouing of their vnction wherewith they haue hitherto anointed vs. Iames willeth that all sicke men bee anointed: these men infect with their fatte liquor, not sicke men, but corpses halfe dead, when the life lieth already laboring at the toppe of their lippes, or (as they themselues tearme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a present medicine, whereby they may either ease the sharpenesse of diseases, or at least may bring some comforte to the soule, they are too cruell that doe neuer heale in time. James willett: that the sicke man be annointed of the Elders of the Church: these men allowe no annointer but the petie sacrificing Priest. Whereas they expound in James presbyteros the Elders to bee Priestes, and fondly say that the plurall number is there set for comelinesse sake: that is but trifling: as though the Churches at that time abounded with swarmes of sacrificing Priestes. y they might go in a long pompous shew to carrie a pageante of holy oyle. When James simply biddeth y sicke men be annointed, I vnderstande by it none other annointing but of common oyle: & none other is founde in Markes rehearfall: These men vouchsafe to haue none other oyle, but y which is halowed of the Bishop, that is to say, warmed with much breathing on it, enchanted with much mumbling, and with the knee bowed nine times saluted in this maner: thrise Haile holy oyle: thrise haile holy chrisme: thrise haile holy balme. Out of whome haue they sucked such coniurations: James saith: that when the sicke man is annointed with oyle, and prayer hath beene pronounced ouer him, if he be in sinnes they shall be forgiuen him: namely, that the guiltinesse being taken away, they may obtaine release of y paine: not meaning that sinnes are put away with fat liquor, but that the prayers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God; shall not be vaine. These men do wickedly ly, that by their holy, that is to say, abhominable anointing, sinnes are forgiuen. Lo howe gaily they shall preuaile, when they haue bin at large suffred to abuse the testimonie of James at their pleasure. And least we should neede to trauaile long in prooffe hereof, their owne chronicles do discharge vs of this hardnes. For they report that Pope Innocentius which in Augustines time gouerned the Church of Rome, ordeined that not onely Priestes, but also all Christians should vse oyle to annoint for their necessitie and others. Author hereof is Sigebert in his Chronicles.

Of Ecclesiastical Orders.

22 The fourth place in their register hath the Sacrament of Order: but the same so fruitfull, that it breadeth out of it selfe seauen litle sacramets. But this is verie worthie to be laughed at, that whereas they affirme y there bee seauen Sacramentes, when they goe about to rehearse them; they reken vpthirtene. Neither can they alleage for themselues, that they are but one Sacrament, because they tende all to one Priesthoode; and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it: For sith it is euident that in euery one of them are seuerall Ceremonies, and they themselues say that there be diuerse graces: no man can doubt but that they ought to be called seuen sacraments if their opinions be receiued. And why stroue we about it as though it were a thing doubtfull, forasmuch as they themselues do plainly and seuerally declare seuen? But first we will briefly knit vp by the way, how many & howe ynfauorie absurdities they thrust in vnto vs, when they go about to comend to vs their Orders in steede of Sacraments: and then we will see whether the Ceremonie which Churches vse in ordering of ministers, ought to be called a Sacrament at all. They make therefore seuen ecclesiasticall orders or degrees, which they garnish with the name of a Sacrament. Those bee, dorekeepers, Readers, Exorcistes, Acoluthes or followers, Subdeacons, Deacons, Priestes. And vii. they say that they bee, for the seuenfoolde grace of the Holy Ghost, wherewith they ought to be indued that are promoted vnto them. But it is increased and more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Nowe the number it selfe is hallowed with a wrongfull expounding of scripture, when they thinke that they haue red in Esay vii. vertues of the holy Ghost, whereas both in deede Esay there rehearseth but sixe, and also the Prophete meint not to comprehend them all in that place: for hee is else where as well called the spirite of life, of sanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirite of wisdom, of vnderstanding, of counsell, of strength, of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lorde. Howbeit some sutteler men make not seauen orders, but nine, after the likeness (as they say) of the Church triumphing. But among them also there is strife: because some woulde haue the shauing of the cleargie to be the first order of all, and Bishoprike the last: other some excluding shauing altogether, reckon Archebishoprike among the orders. Isidore otherwise diuideth them. For he maketh Psalmists and Readers to be diuerse: he appointeth the Psalmists for songs, & the Readers to the reading of the Scriptures, wherwith the people may be instructed. And this distinction is kept by the Canons. In so great diuersitie what will they haue vs to followe or flee? Shall wee say that there bee seauen orders? So teacheth the maister of the schoole: but the most illuminate doctors doe otherwise determine. Againe they also disagree among themselues. Moreouer the most sacred Canons call vs an other way. Thus forsooth doe men agree, when they dispute of godly matters without the word of God.

23 But this exceedeth all follie, that in euerie one of these they make Christ fellowe with them. First (say they) hee executed the office of dorekeeper, when hee did with a whip made of cordes, driue the buiers and sellers out of the temple. Hee signifieth himselfe to be a dorekeeper, when he saith, I am the dore. Hee tooke vpon him the office of Reader, when hee red Esay in the Synagoge. Hee did the office of an Exorcist, when touching the tongue and eares of the deafe and dummie man, hee restored to him his hearing. Hee testified himselfe to be an Acoluth or follower in these wordes. Hee that followeth mee, walketh not in darkenesse. He executed the office of Subdeacon, when being girded with a linen cloth hee washed the disciples feete. Hee did beare the person of a Deacon, when hee distributed his bodie and blood in the snpper. He fulfilled the office of Prieste, when hee offered himselfe vpon the crosse a sacrifice to his Father. These thinges cannot so bee heard without laughing, that I maruell that they were written without laughing, if yet they were men that wrote them. But most notable is their suttlerie wherewith they play the Philosophers about the name of Acoluth, calling him a Ceroferar, a taper bearer with a worde (as I thinke) of Varceric, truelie such a one as was neuer heard of in all nations nations and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greeke simply signifieth a follower. Howbeit if I should earnestly tarric in confuting these menne, I should my selfe also worthily be laughed at, they are so trifling & very mockeries.

24 But that they may not be able yet still with false colours to deceiue euen very sillie women, their vanitie is by the way to be vttered. They create with great pompe and solemnitie their Readers, Psalmists, Dorekeepers, Acoluthes, to execute those offices, whereunto they appoint very children, or those whom they call lay men. For who for the most part lighteth the candles, who poureth wine and water into the cruets, but a child or some base fellowe of the laitie, that maketh his gaine thereof? Do not the same men sing, Doe they not shut and open the Church doers? For who euer sawe in their temples an Acoluth, or a Dorekeeper executing his office? But rather hee that when he was a boy did the office of an Acoluth, whē he is once admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceaseth to be that which he beginneth to be called, that they may seeme to will of purpose to cast of the office when they take vpon them the tude. Beholde why they haue neede to be consecrat by Sacramentes, and to receiue the holy Ghost, namely, that they may do nothing. If they alleage for exercise, that this is the frowardnesse of times, that they forsake and neglect their ministerie: lette them therewithall confesse that there is at this day in the Church no vse nor fruit of their holy Orders, which they maruelously aduance, and that their whole Church is full of curse: because it suffereth tapers and cruets to be handled of children and prophane men, which none are worthy to touch but they that are consecrat Acoluthes: and because it committeth the songes to children, which ought not to be heard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorcists, to what end do they consecrate them? I heare y^e the Iewes had their Exorcistes: but I see that they were so called of the exorcismes or coniurations which they vsed. Of these counterfaite exorcistes who euer heard it spoken, that they shewed any example of their profession? It is fained that they haue power giuen them to lay their handes vppon mad men, them that are to bee catechised, and men possessed with deuils: but they can not perswade the deuilles that they haue such power, because y^e deuils do not onely not yelde to their commaundementes, but also vse commaunding authoritie ouer them. For a man can scarcely finde euery tenth of them, that is not ledde with an euill Spirite. Therefore whatsoeuer thinges they babble concerning their petie Orders, are patched together of foolish and vsauorie lies. Of the olde Acoluthes, and Dorekeepers, and Readers, we haue spoken in an other place, when we declared the order of the Church. Our purpose here is only to fight against that newe founde inuention of the seuenfold Sacrament in ecclesiasticall orders. Of which there is no where any thing red, but among these foolish praters the Sorbonistes and Canonistes.

A.C. 19. 13.

25 Now let vs consider of the ceremonies which they vse about it. First whosoever they receiue into their order of soldiers, they do with one common signe enter them into Clergie. For they shauie them in the crowne, that the crowne may betoken kingly dignity, because Clerkes ought to be kings, that they may rule themselves and other. For Peter speaketh thus of them, Ye

Cap Dupl.

1. Pet. 2.9. are a chosen kinde, a kingly priesthood, a holy nation, a people of purchase. But it was sacrilege to take to themselves alone that which is giuen to the whole Church, and proudly to glorie of the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter speaketh to the whole Church: these fellows wrest it to a few shauen mē: as though it were said to them alone, be ye holy: as though they alone were purchased by y^e blood of Christ: as though they alone were by Christ made a kingdom and priesthood to God. Then they assigne also other reasons: the top of their head is made bare, that their minde may be declared to be free vnto the Lorde, which with open face may beholde the glorie of God. Or that they may be taught that the faultes of their mouth & their eyes must be cut off. Or the shauing of their head is the putting away of temporall things, and the hayrie compassse about the crowne are the remnants of goods that are retained for their sustenance. All in signes: because forsooth the veile of the temple is not yet cut in sunder. Therefore beeing persuaded that they haue gaylie discharged their duties, because they haue figured such things by their crowne, of the verie thinges in deede they perfourme nothing at all. How long will they mocke vs with such false colours and deceits? The clergie by shearing of a fewe hayres doe signifie that they haue cast away the aboundance of temporall goods, that they beholde the glorie of God, that they haue mortified the lust of the eares and eyes: but there is no kinde of men more rauening, more senselesly dull, more lustfull. Why do they not rather truely performe holinesse, than with false & lying signes counterfait a shewe of it?

26 Moreouer when they say that the crowne of y^e Clergie hath the beginning and reason from the Nazarites: what other thing do they alleage than y^e their mysteries are sprong out of the Iewish ceremonies, or rather y^e they are in eere Iewishnesse? But whereas they further say, y^e Priscilla, Acila, & Paul himself, taking a vowe vpon them did sheare their heads, that they might be purified: they bewray their grosse ignorance. For it is no where red of Priscilla: & of Acila also it is doubtful: for y^e same shearing may as wel be referred to Paul as to Acila. But, that wee may not leaue to them that which they require, that they haue an example of Paul: the simpler must note, that Paul did neuer sheare his head for any sanctification, but onely to serue the weaknesse of his brethren. I am wont to call such voves the voves of charitie not of godlinesse: that is to say, not taken in hand for any seruice of god, but to beare with the rudenesse of the weake: as he himself saith, that he was made a Iewe to the Iewes, &c. Therefore he did this, & the same but once, & for a short time, y^e he might for a time fashion himself to the Iewes. These mē when they wil without any vse counterfait the purifyings of the Nazarites, what do they else but raise vp another Iewishnesse, when they wrongfully couet to follow the old Iewishnesse? With the same religiousnesse was that decretall Epistle made, which, according to the Apostle, forbiddeth clerkes that they shoulde not suffer their haire to growe, but sheare it rounde like a bowle. As though the Apostle, when he teacheth what is comely for all men, were carefull for the round shearing of the Clergie. Hereby let the readers consider, of what force & worthinesse are those other mysteries that follow, into which there is such an entrie.

27 Whence the shearing of Clerkes tooke beginning, appeareth sufficiently euen by Augustine alone . Whereas at that time none suffred their haire to growe, but nice men, & such as coucted a smothenesse & trimnesse not meete enough for men: it seemed to be a point of no good example, if y were permitted to the clergie. Therefore Clerkes were commaunded either to sheare their head or to shaue it , that they should not beare any shewe of womanlike trimming. But this was so common, that certaine Monkes, that they might the more set out their holinesse with notable & seuerall attire from other men, did let their haire growe long. But afterwarde when the fashion turned to wearing of haire, and certaine nations were added to Christiandome which alway vsed to weare long haire, as Fraunce, Germanic, & England: it is likely that clerkes did euery where sheare their heads, least they should seeme to couet the gaineffe of haire. At the last in a corrupter age, when all olde ordinances were either peruerted or gone out of kind into superstition, because they saw no cause in the shearing of the clergie (for they had retained nothing but a foolish counterfaying) they fled to a mysterie, which now they superstitiously thrust in vnto vs for the approouing of their Sacrament. The dorekeepers at their consecration receiue the keyes of the Church, whereby they may vnderstand that the keeping of it is committed to them. The readers receiue the holy Bible. The exorcistes receiue the formes of exorcismes, which they should vse ouer mad and them that are to be catechised. The Acolythes receiue their tapers & cruet. Lo these are y ceremonies, wherein (if God will) there is so much secret power, y they may be not only signes & tokens, but also causes of inuisible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will haue them taken among the Sacramentes. But to make an end in few words, I say it is an absurditie that in their scholes and canons they make these lesser orders Sacraments: whereas euen by their owne confession that teach this, they were vnknownen to the primitive Church, & deuised many yeres after. For Sacraments, sith they contain the promise of God, can not be ordeined of Angels, nor of me, but of God alone, whose office alone it is to giue promise.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Subdeaconry (as they call it) was remoued into that number, since that the rout of the smaller ones beganne to growe. But because they seeme to haue a testimonie for these out of the worde of God, they doe peculiarly for honors sake, call them holy orders. But nowe it is to be scene, how crokedly they abuse the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will beginne at the order of Priesthoode or the sacrificers office. For by these two names they signifie one thing, and so they call them to whome they say that it pertayneth to offer vpon the altar the sacrifice of the body and bloude of Christe, to pronounce prayers, and to blesse the giftes of God. Therefore at their consecration they receiue the patine with the hostes, for tokens of power giuen to them, to offer acceptable sacrifices to God. And their handes are annointed: by which signe they are taught, that they haue power giuen them to consecrate. But of the Ceremonies we shal speak hereafter. Of the thing it self I say: it so hath no title of the worde of God which they pretende, that they coulde not more wickedly corrupt the order set by God. First verily this ought to stande for a thing confessed (which we haue affirmed in entreating of the Popish masse) that they are al wrong doers to Christe, which call themselves sacrificing priestes, or offer a sacrifice of appeasement. Hee was appointed and consecrate of the Father a priest with an oth, according to the order of Melchisedech, without any end, without any successour. He once offered a sacrifice of eternall satisfactorie cleansing, and reconciliation: and nowe also being entred into the Sanctuarie of heauen, he maketh intercession for vs. In him we are al sacrificing priestes, but to praises and giuinges of thankes, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his singular office alone, with his offering to appease God, and to purge sinnes. When these men take that vpon them, what remaineth but that their sacrificing Priesthoode is vngodly and full of sacrilege? Truly they are too wicked, when they dare garnish it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Priesthoode, which is commended to vs by the mouth of Christ, I willingly account it in that degree. For therein is a ceremonie, first taken out of the Scriptures, then such a one as Paul testifieth not to be vaine nor superfluous, but a faithfull signe of spirituall grace. But whereas I haue not set it for a thirde in the number of Sacramentes, I did it because it is not ordinarie and comon among all the faithfull, but a speciall rite for one certaine office. But sith this honour is giuen to the Christian ministerie, there is no cause therefore why the Popish sacrificers should be proude. For Christ commaunded distributors of his Gospell and mysteries to be ordained, not sacrificers to be consecrated. Hee gaue them commaundement to preach the Gospell and to feede the flocke, not to offer sacrifices. He promised them the grace of the holy Ghost, nor to make satisfactorie purging of sinnes, but rightly to execute and to mainteine the gouernement of the Church.

29 The ceremonies agree very well with the thing it selfe. Our Lorde when he sent forth the Apostles to preach the Gospell, did blowe vpon them. By which signe he represented the power of the holy Ghost which hee gaue vnto them. This blowing these good men haue reteined, and as though they did put forth the holy Ghost out at their throte, they whisper ouer their silly priestes that they make, Receiue the holy Ghost. So leaue they nothing which they do not ouerthwartly counterfait: I will not say like plaiers (which vse their gesturings neither without art nor without signification) but like apes, which counterfait euery thing wantonly & without any choise. We keepe (say they) the example of the Lorde. But the Lorde did many things which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lord sayd to the disciples, Receiue the holy Ghost. He sayd also to Lazarus, Lazarus come forth. He sayd to the man sicke of the palsie, Rise and walke. Why do not they say the same to all dead men and sicke of the palsie? He shewed a profe of his diuine power, when in blowing vpon the Apostles hee filled the with the grace of the holy Ghost. If they goe about to doe the same thing, they enuiously counterfaite God, and doe in a maner chalenge him to striue with them: but they are farre from the effect, and do nothing with this foolishe gesturing but mocke Christ. Verily they be so shamelesse, that they dare affirme that they giue the holy Ghost. But how true that is, experience teacheth, which crieth out that so many as be consecrated priests are of horses made asses, of fooles made mad men. Neither yet do I strive with them for that: onely I condemne the ceremonie it selfe, which ought not to haue beene drawn to be an example, forasmuch as it was vsed of Christ for a singular signe of one myracle: so farre is it off, that the excuse of following his example ought to defende them.

30 But of whome receiued they the annoynting? They aunswere that they receiued it of the sonnes of Aaron, from whome their order also tooke beginning. Therefore they had rather alway to defende them selues with wrongfull examples, than to confesse that themselues haue deuised y^e which they vse without cause. But in the meane time they consider not, that while they professe themselues the successours of the sonnes of Aaron, they are wrong doers of the priesthood of Christ, which alone was shadowed and figured by all the olde sacrificing priesthoods. In him therefore they were all contained and fulfilled, in him they ceased, as we haue sometimes teardie repeted, & the Epistle to the Hebrues without helpe of any glosses testifieth. But if they be so much delited with the ceremonies of Moses, why do they not hastily take oxen, calues, & lambes to make sacrifices? They haue in deede a good part of the old tabernacle and of the whole Iewish manner of worshipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they doe not sacrifice calues and oxen. Who cannot see, that this obseruation of annoynting is much more hurtfull than Circumcision, specially when there is adioyned superstition and Pharisaiicall opinion of the worthinesse of the work? For the Iewes did set in Circumcision, trust of righteousnesse: these men do set in annoynting, spiritual graces. Therefore while they couet to bee counterfeiters of the Leuites, they are made Apostataes from Christ, and do put themselues from the office of Pastors.

31 This is (if God wil) the holy oyle that printeth the marke that can not be raced out. As though oyle could not be wiped away with dust & salt, or if it sticke faster, with sope. But this marke is spirituall. What hath oyle to do with the soule? Haue they forgotten that which they oft chaunt to vs out of Augustine, that if the worde be taken from the water, it shall be nothing but water, and that it hath this from the worde that it is a Sacrament? What word wil they shewe in their fat liquor? Will they shewe the commandement that was giuen to Moses, concerning the annoynting of the sonnes of Aaron? But there is also commaundement giuen, of the coate, the ephod, the hat, the crowne of holinesse, with which Aaron was to be garnished, and of the coates, girdles, and miters, wherewith the sonnes of Aaron were to bee clothed. There is commaundement giuen to kill a calfe, and burne the fat of him for incense, to cut rammes and burne them, to sanctifie their eares and garments with the bloud of another ram, and innumerable other obseruations, which being passed ouer, I maruile why the onely annoynting of oyle pleaseth them. But if they loue to be sprinkled, why are they rather sprinkled with oyle than with bloud? Forsooth they goe about a wittie thing, to make one religion of Christianitie, Iewishnesse, and Paganisme, as it were of patches sowed together. Therefore their annoynting stinketh which is without the salt, that is, the worde of God. There remaineth laying on of hands, which as I graunt in true and lawfull Orderings to bee a Sacrament, so I denie that it hath any part in this play, where they neither obey the commandement of Christ, nor haue respect to the end whereunto the promise ought to leade vs. If they will not haue the signe denied them, they must apply it to the thing it selfe, whereunto it is appointed.

32 About the order also of Deaconrie I woulde not striuie with them, if that same ministerie which was in the Apostles time & in the purer church, were restored to the vncorrupted state thereof. But what like thing haue they whome those men faine to be deacons? I speake not of the men (least they should complaine that the doctrine is wrongfully weyed by the faultes of the men) but I affirme that for those whome they deliuer vs by their doctrine, they vnworthily fetche testimonie from the example of them whom the Apostolike Church ordained Deacons. They say that it pertaineth to their deacons to stand by the priestes, to minister in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namely in Baptisme, in the chresme, in the patine, in the chalice: to bring in the offerings and lay them vpon the altar, to make readie the Lordes table, and to couer it: to carrie the crosse, to pronounce and sing the Gospel and Epistle to the people. Is here any one worde of the true ministerie of Deacons? Now let vs heare the instituting of them. Vpon y Deacon that is ordered, the Bishop alone layeth his hande. He layeth a prayer booke and a Stoale vpon his left shoulder, that he may vnderstand that hee hath receiued the light yoke of the Lorde, whereby hee may subdue to the feare of God those things that pertaine to the left side. He giueth him the text of the Gospel, that he may perceiue himselfe to be a publisser of it. And what belong these things to Deacons? They do euen like as if a man woulde say that he ordeined them Apostles whome hee appointed onely to burne frankincense, to trimme the images, to sweepe the Churches, to catche mice, to driue away dogges. Who could suffer such kinde of men to be called Apostles, and to be compared with the verie Apostles of Christ? Therefore let them not hereafter lyingly say that those be Deacons, whome they institute onely for their enterludelike playes. Yea & by the very name it selfe they sufficiently declare what maner of office they haue. For they call them Leuites, and will haue their order & beginning referred to y children of Leui. Which I giue them leaue to do, so that they do not afterward garnish the with the fethers of other.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpose is it to speake? For whereas in deed they were in old time appointed for care of the poore, they assigne to them I wote not what trifling businesse, as to bring the chalice and the patine, the litle cruet with water, and the towel to the altar, to powre water to washe hands, &c. Now whereas they speake of receiuing & bringing in of offerings, they meane those which they deuoure as abandoned to their holy vse. With this office verie well agreeth the forme of their consecrating. That he receiue of the bishop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruet with water, the manuale, and such other baggage. Within these trifles they require to haue vs confesse that the holy Ghost is enclosed. What godly man can abide to graunt this? But, to make once an ende, wee may determine the same of them y we do of the rest. Neither neede wee to repete further these things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the sober and willing to learne (whom I haue taken in hand to instruct) that there is no Sacrament of God but where is shewed a Ceremonie ioined with a promisor rather verily but where is a promise scene in a Ceremony. Here is not founde one syllable of any certaine promise: therefore it were in vaine to seeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promise. Againe of those Ceremonies that they vse, it is not red that any one is institute of God. Therefore here can be no Sacrament.

Of Matrimonie.

34 The last is Matrimonie, which as all men confesse to be ordeined of God, so no man vntill the time of Gregorie euer sawe that it was giuen for a Sacrament. And what sober man would euer haue thought it? It is a good and a holy ordinance of God: so tillage, carpentrie, shoemakers craft, barbers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacramentes. For there is not onely this required in a Sacrament, that it bee the worke of God, but that it be an outwarde Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promise. That there is no such thing in Matrimonie, very children also can iudge. But (say they) it is a signe of the holy thing; that is, of the spirituall conioying of Christ with the Church. If by this word Signe, they vnderstand a Tokē set before vs of God to this end to raise vp the assurednes of our faith, they are far beside the truth. If they simply take a signe for which is brought to expresse a similitude, I will shew how wittily they reason. Paul sayth, As one star differeth from an other starre in brightnes, so shalbe the resurrection of the dead. Loe here is one Sacrament. Christ sayth, The kingdome of heauen is like a graine of mustardseede. Loe here is an other. Againe, The kingdome of heauen is like vnto leauen. Loe here is the third. Esay faith, Behold, the Lord shall feede his flocke as a shepheard. Loe here is the fourth. In an other place, The Lorde shall go forth as a Giant. Loe here is the fifth. Finally what end or measure shall there be? There is nothing but by this meane it shalbe a Sacrament. How many parables and similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacramentes there shalbe. Yea & these shalbe a Sacrament, because it is written, the day of the Lorde is like a thiefe. Who can abide these sophisters prating so foolishly? I grant in dede that so oft as we see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrance that which Christ sayth, I am a vine, ye be branches, my Father is the vinedresser. So oft as a shepheard with his flocke commeth toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepheard, my sheepe heare my voice. But if any man adde such similitudes to the number of Sacramentes, he is meete to be sent to Antycira.

35 But they still lay forth the wordes of Paul, in which he giueth to Matrimonie the name of a Sacrament: hee that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man euer hated his owne fleshe, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, euen as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his bodie, of his fleshe and of his bones. For this a man shall leaue his Father and mother, and shall cleaue to his wife, and they shalbe two into one flesh. This is a great Sacrament: but I say in Christ and in the Church. But so to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heauen and earth together. Paule; so shewe to married men, what singular loue they ought to beare to their wiues, setteth fourth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured fourth the bowels of his kindnesse vpo the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought euery man to be affectioned towards his owne wife. It followeth after, He that loueth his wife loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Nowe to teach howe Christe loued the Church as his selfe, yea howe hee made himselfe one with his spouse the Church, hee applieth to him those thinges which Moyses reporteth that Adam spake of himselfe. For when Eue was brought into his sight, whom he knewe to haue beene shapen out of his side: This woman (sayth hee) is a bone of my bones, and fleshe of my fleshe. Paul testifieth that all this was spiritually fulfilled in Christe and vs, when he sayeth that wee are members of his body, of his fleshe, and of his bones, yea and one fleshe with him. At length he addeth a concluding sentence, This is a great myserie. And least any man should be deceiued with the double signifying of the words, he expresseth that he speaketh not of the fleshly conioyning of man and woman, but of the spiritual marriage of Christ and the Church. And truly it is in deede a great myserie, that Christ suffered a ribbe to be taken from himselfe, whereof wee might be shapen: that is to say, whē he was strong, he willed to be weake, that we might be strengthened with his strength: that nowe wee may not our selues liue, but hee may liue in vs.

36 The name of Sacrament deceiued them. But was it rightful that the whole Church should suffer the punishment of their ignoraunce? Paul sayde Myserie: which word when the translator might haue left being not vsued with Latin eares, or might haue translated it a Secret: he chose rather to put in the word Sacrament, yet in no other sense than Paul had in Greeke called it myserie. Nowe let them go and with crying out raile against the skill of tongnes, by ignorance whereof they haue so long most fowly beene blinde in an easie matter, & such as offred it selfe to be perceiued of euery man. But why do they in this one place so earnestly sticke vpon this litle worde Sacrament, and some other times do passe it ouer vnregarded? For also in the first Epistle to Timothee the Translator hath vsed it, and in the selfe same Epistle to the Ephesians; in euery place for Myserie. But let this slipping be pardoned them: at least the liers ought to haue had a good remembrance. For, when they haue once set out Matrimonie with title of a Sacramente, afterward to call it vncleannesse, defiling, and fleshly filthinesse, how giddy lightnesse is this? Howe great an absurditie is it to debarre priestes from a Sacrament? If they denye that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the lust of copulation: they escape not so away from me. For they teach that the copulation it selfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the vnitng that we haue with Christ in conformitie of nature: because man and woman are not made one but by carnall copulation. Howbeit some of them haue here founde two Sacramentes: the one of God and the soule, in the betrothed man & woman: the other of Christ and the Church, in the husband and the wife. Howsoever it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it was vnlawfull that any Christian should be debarred: Vnlesse peraduenture the Sacramentes of Christians doe so ill agree, that they can not stande stand together. There is also an other absurditie in their doctrines. They affirme that in the Sacrament is giuen the grace of the holy Ghost: they teach that copulation is a Sacrament: & they deny that at copulation y^e holy Ghost is at any time present.

37 And, because they would not simply mocke the Church, howe long a roawe of errorrs, lies, deceites, and wickednesses haue they knitte to one errorr? so that a man may saye, that they did nothing but seeke a denne of abominations, when they made of matrimonie a Sacrament. For when they once obtained this, they drew to themselues y^e hearing of causes of matrimonie: for it was a spirituall matter, which prophane iudges might not medle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they stablished their tyrannie, but those partly manifestly wicked against Gad, and partly most vniust toward men. As are these: That mariages made betweene yong persons without consent of their parentes, should remaine of force and stablished. That the mariages be not lawfull betweene the kinsfolkes to the seuenth decree: and if any such be made, that they be diuorced. And the very degrees they faine against the lawes of all nations, and against the ciuile gouernment of Moses. That it be not lawfull for a man that hath put away an adulteresse, to mary an other. That spirituall kinsfolkes may not be coupled in mariage. That there be no mariages celebrate, from Septuagesime to the vtas of Easter, in three weekes before Midsummer, nor from Aduent to Twelfetide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to rehearse. At length wee must creepe out of their mire, wherin our talke hath now tarried longer than I would. Yet I thinke I haue somewhat profited, that I haue partly plucked the Lyons skinned from these asses.

Deut. 18. 6.

The xx. Chapter,

Of ciuill Government.

NOwe whereas we haue aboue sette two kindes of gouernment in man, and whereas we haue spoken enough of the one kinde which consisteth in the soule or in the inwarde man, and hath respecte to eternall life: this place requireth that we speake somewhat also of the other, which pertaineth onely to the ciuile and outwarde righteousnesse of manners. For the course of this matter seemeth to be seuered from the spirituall doctrine of faith, which I tooke in hande to entreate of: yet the proceeding shall shewe that I doe rightfully ioyne them together, yea that I am of necessitie compelled to doe it: specially sith on the one side, madde and barbarous men doe furiously go about to ouerthrowe this order stablished by G O D: and on the other side the flatterers of princes, aduancing their power without measure, sticke not to set it against the empire of God himselfe. Vnlesse both these mischicues be met with al, the purenesse of faith shalbe lost. Beside that it is not smally for our behoofe, to knowe howe louingly God hath in this behalfe prouided for mankinde, that there may flourish in vs a greater desire of godlinesse to witnes our thankfulnessse. First, ere we enter into the thing it selfe, wee must holde fast that distinction which wee haue aboue set, least (as it commonly happeneth to many) we vnwisely mingle these two things together, which haue altogether diuerse consideration. For when they heare that libertie is promised by the Gospell, which acknowledgeth among men no king and no magistrate, but hath regarde to Christ alone: they thinke that they can take no fruite of their libertie, so long as they see any power to haue preeminence ouer them. Therefore they thinke that nothing shal be safe, vnlesse the whole world be reformed into a newe fashion: where may neither be iudgements, nor lawes, nor magistrates, nor any such thing which they thinke to withstande their libertie. But whosoever can put difference between the body and the soule, between this present and transitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: he shall not hardly vnderstand that the spirituall kingdome of Christ, and the ciuill gouernment are things farre a sunder, Sith therefore that is a Iewish vanitie, to seeke and inclose y^e kingdome of Christ vnder the elementes of this worlde: let vs rather thinking, as the scripture plainly teacheth, that it is a spirituall fruite, which is gathered of the benefite of Christ, remeber to keep within the bonds thereof this whole libertie which is promised and offered vs in him. For, what is y^e cause why the same Apostle which biddeth vs to stand, and nor to be made subiect to the yoke of bondage, in an other place forbiddeth bond seruantes to be carefull of their state: but because spiritual libertie may verie wel agree with ciuill bondage? In which sense also these his sayings are to be taken: In the kingdome of God there is no Iewe, nor Grecian, no male, nor female, no bondman, nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iewe nor Grecian, Circumcision, Vncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freeman: but Christ is all in all. Whereby hee signifieth, that it maketh no matter in what estate thou be among men, nor vnder the lawes of what nation thou liuest: forasmuch as in these things consisteth not the kingdome of Christ.

2 Yet doeth not this distinction tende hereunto, that we should thinke that the whole order of policie is an vncleane thing, nor perteing at all to Christian men. So indeed do the phrentike men, that are delighted with vnbridled licentiousnesse, crie out and boast. For sith we be dead by Christe to the elementes of the worlde, and being remoued into the kingdome of God doe sit among the heauenly ones: they thinke that it is vnworthie for vs, and farre beneath our excellence, to bee occupied with these prophane and vncleane cares that are busied about affaires not perteing to a Christian man. To what purpose (say they) are lawes without iudgements and iudgement seates? But what hath a Christian man to do with iudgements themselves? yea if it bee not lawfull to kill, whereto serue lawes and iudgements among vs? But as we haue euen nowe giuen warning, that this kinde of gouernment is seuerall from that spirituall and inward kingdome of Christ: so it is also to be knowne that they nothing disagree together. For the Ciuil gouernment doeth now beginne in vs vpon earth certaine beginninges of the heauenly kingdome, and in this mortall and vanishing life, doeth as it were enter vpon an immortal and incorruptible blessednesse: but the intent of his spirituall gouernment is, so long as wee shall liue among men, to cherish and maintaine the outward worshipping of God, to defende the sounde doctrine of Godlinesse and the state of the Church, to frame our life to the felfellowship of men, to fashion our manners to ciuill righteousnesse, to procure vs into friendship one with an other, to nourish common peace and quietnes: all which I graunt to be superfluous, if the kingdome of God, such as it is now among vs, doe destroy this present life. But if the will of God be so, that we while we long toward the heauenly countrey, should bee wayfaring from home vpon the earth: and sith the vse of such wayfaring needeth such helpes: they which take them from man, doe take from him his very nature of man. For whereas they alleadge that there is so great perfection in the Church of God, that her owne moderate gouernment sufficeth it for a lawe: they themselues doe foolishly imagine that perfection which can neuer be found in the common fellowshipp of men. For sith of naughtie men the pride is so great, and the wickednesse so obstinate, as can not be restrayned with great sharpenes of lawes: what thinke wee that they will doe, if they see vnpunished libertie lye open to their lewdnesse, which can not euen with force be sufficiently compelled not to do euill?

3 But of the order of policie, there shall bee another fitter place to entreate. Nowe our meaning is to haue this onely vnderstanded, that to think to driue it away, is outrageous barbarousnes, the vse whereof is no lesse among men, than of breade, water, the sunne, and aire, but the dignitie much more excellent. For it tendeth not onely hereunto (which is the only commoditie of all those things) that men may breath, eate, drinke and bee cheerished (although indeede it comprehendeth all these things, while it maketh that they liue together) yet I say, it tendeth not hereunto onely: but also that idolatrie, sacrileges against the name of God, blasphemies against his trueth, and other offenses of religion may not rise vp and be scattered among the people, that commonquiet be not troubled, that euery mā may keepe his owne safe and vnappaired, that men may vse their affaires together without hurt, that honestie and modestie be kept among them: finally that among Christians may be a common shewe of religion, and among men may be manlike ciuilitie. Neither let any man bee moued, for that I doe nowe referre the care of stablishing of religion to the policie of men, which I seeme before to haue set without the iudgement of men. For I do no more here, than I did before, giue men leaue after their owne will to make lawes concerning religion and the worshipping of God, when I allow the ordinance of policie, which endeoureth hereunto, that the true religion which is contained in the lawe of GOD, be not openly and with publique sacrileges freely broken and defiled. But the readers being holpen by the verie plainnesse of order, shall better vnderstande what is to bee thought of the whole kinde of ciuill gouernment, if we seuerallie entreate of the partes thereof. There be three partes of it: the magistrate, which is the gouernour and keeper of the lawes, the lawes according to which hee gouerneth: the people, which are gouerned by the lawes, and obey the magistrate. Therefore let vs first consider of the office of the Magistrate, whether it bee a lawfull vocation and allowed of God, what maner of office hee hath, and howe great is his power: then w^h what lawes a Christian ciuill state is to be ordered: then last of all, what profite of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuengence is due to the magistrate,

4 The Lorde hath not onely testified that the office of magistrates is allowed and acceptable to him, but also setting out the dignitie thereof with most honourable titles, he hath maruellously commended it vnto vs. That I may rehearse a fewe of them. Whereas whosoever be in place of magistrats are named Gods, let no man thinke that in that naming is smal importance. For therby is signified that they haue commandement from God, that they are furnished with the authoritie of God, and doe altogether beare the person of God, whose steede they do after a certaine maner supplie. This is not my cauillation, but the exposition of Christ. If the scripture (saith hee) called them Gods to whome the word of God was giuen: What is this else, but that God hath committed his businesse to them, that they shoulde serue in his office, and (as Moses and Iosaphat saide to their iudges whome they appointed in euerie seuerall citie of Iuda) that they shoulde sit in iudgement, not for man but for God? To the same purpose maketh this that the wisdom of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that Kings reigne, and counsellors decree righteous things, that princes beare principallitie, and all the iudges of the earth execute iudgement. For this is al one in effect as if it had bene said, that it commeth not to passe by the peruerfenes of men, that the government of al things in earth is in the hand of kings and other rulers, but by the prouidence & holy ordinance of God, to whom it so seemed good to order the matters of men: forasmuch as he is both present & present among them in making of laws and in executing vprightnes of iudgements. Which Paul also plainly teacheth, when he reckoneth governments among the giftes of God, which being diuersly distributed according to the diuersitie of grace, ought to be employed of the seruants of Christ to the edification of the Church. For although he there properly speaketh of a councill of graue men, which in the Primitiue Church were appointed & they shoulde haue the rule of ordering the pnblike discipline (which office in the Epistle to the Corinthians hee calleth Government) yet forasmuch as we see that the ende of ciuill power commeth to the same point, it is no doubt but that he commendeth vnto vs all kinde of iust government. But he speaketh more plainly, where he purposely maketh a full discourse of that matter. For hee both sheweth that Power is the ordinance of God, & that there are no powers, but they are ordained of God: & that the Princes themselves are the ministers of God, to the well doers vnto praise: to the euill, reuengers vnto wrath. Hereunto may be added also the examples of holy men: of which some haue possessed kingdomes, as Dauid, Iosias, Ezechias: other some, Lordships, as Ioseph and Daniell: other some, Ciuill governmentes in a free people, as Moses, Iosue, and the iudges: whose offices the Lord hath declared that he alloweth. Wherefore none ought nowe to doubt that the ciuill power is a vocation not onely holie and lawfull before GOD, but also the most holy, and the most honest of all other in the whole life of men.

5 They which couet to bring in a state without Rulers, take exception and say that although in oldetime there were kinges and iudges ouer & rude people, yet at this day that seruile kind of governing agreeth not with & perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. Wherein they bewray

not onely their ignorance, but also their deuclish pride, while they take vpon themselues perfection, of which not so much as the hundreth part is seene in them. But what maner of men soeuer they be, it is easie to confute it: because where Dauid exhorteth all kinges and Rulers to kisse the sonne of God, he doth not bid them, giuing ouer their authoritie, to stake theselues to a priuate life, but to submit the power that they beare to Christ, that hee alone may haue preeminence aboue all. Likewise Esay, when he promisseth that kings shall bee fosterfathers of the Church, and Queenes shall be nourses, he doth, not depose them from their honour: but rather doth by an honourable title make them defenders to the godlie worshippers of God. For, that propheticie pertaineth to the comming of Christ. I do wittingly passe ouer many testimonies which do eche where offer themselues, and specially in the Psalmes wherin all gouernours haue their right maintained. But most cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admonishing Timothee that in the common assemblie prayers must bee made for kinges, he by and by addeth a reason, That we may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlinesse and honestie: in which words he committeth the state of the Church to their defence and sauegarding.

6 Which consideration ought continually to busie the magistrats theselues, forasmuch as it may put a great spurre to them whereby they may be pricked forward to their duetie, and bring them a singular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardnesse of their office, which truely are both many and great. For with howe great an endeuour of vprightness, wisdom, mildnes, continence, & innocencie, ought they to charge theselues, which know themselues to be appointed ministers of the righteousnes of God? By what affiance shall they admit vniustice to their iudgement seat, which they heare to bee the throne of the liuing God? By what boldnes shall they pronounce a wrongfull sentence with that mouth, which they vnderstand to be appointed an instrument for the trueth of God? With what conscience shall they subscribe to wicked decrees with the hande which they knowe to bee ordeined to write the acts of God? In a summe, if they remember that they be the vicegerentes of God, they must watch with all care, earnestnes, & diligence, that they may represent in themselues vnto men a certaine image of the prouidence, preseruation, goodnes, good will, and righteousnes of God. And they must continually set this before their eyes, that if al they bee accursed, y^e do execute in deceite the worke of the vengeance of God, they are much more grieuouly accursed, that vse themselues deceitefully in a rightful vocation. Therefore when Moses and Iosaphat minded to exhort their iudges to their duetie, they had nothing more effectuall to moue their mindes withall, than that which we haue before rehearsed, Looke what ye do. For yee sit in iudgement not for man but for God: namely he which is nere to you in y^e cause of iudgement. Now therefore let the feare of the Lorde bee vpon you. Looke & be diligent: because there is no peruelnes with the Lord our God. And in an other place it is said, the God stood in the assembly of the Gods & sitteth iudge in the middest of the gods, y^e they may bee encouraged to their duetie when they heare that they bee the deputies of God, to whome they must one day yelde accompt of the gouernment of their charge. And worthily this admonition ought to be of great force with them. For if they make any default, they are not only wrong doers to men who they wickedly vex, but also sclaundersers to God himselfe, whose holy iudgements they desile. Againe they haue also whereupon they may singularly comfort themselues, when they consider with themselues that they are not busied in prophane affaires and such as are not fit for the seruant of God, but in a most holy office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

7. As for them that are not moued with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bolde to raile at this holy ministerie, as a thing disagreeing with Christian religion and godlinesse: what doe they else but raile at GOD himselfe, the dishonour of whome can not but be ioyned with the reproche of his minister? And verily they doe not refuse the magistrates, but do cast away God, that he should not reigne ouer them. For if the Lorde sayde this truely of the people of Israel, because they had refused the gouernement of Samuel: why shall it be lesse truely sayde at this day of them that giue themselves leaue to rage against all governmentes ordained of God? But sith the Lorde sayde to the disciples, that the kings of nations beare rule ouer them, but that amoag them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this saying it is forbidden to all Christians that they should not take kingdomes or gouernmentes vpon them. O handsome expositors! There rose a strife among the disciples, which of them excelled other: the Lorde, to suppress this vaine ambition, taught them that their ministerie is not like vnto kingdomes, in which one man hath preeminence aboue the rest. I beseech you, what doeth this comparison make to the dishonour of kingly dignitie? yea what doeth it prooue at all, but that the ministerie of an Apostle is not the office of a king? Moreouer although among the magistrates themselves there be diuers formes, yet there is no difference in this behalfe but that wee ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doeth comprehend them altogether, when hee sayeth that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimonie aboue the other, namely the power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all, (except that one man, to whose will it maketh all things subiect) in olde time could lesse be allowed of noble and the excellent sort of natures. But the Scripture, to meet with their vniust iudgementes, expressly by name affirmeth, that it is the prouidence of Gods wisdom that kinges do reigne, and peculiarly commandeth the king to be honored.

8 And truely it were very vaine that it should be disputed of priuate men which shoulde bee the best state of policy in the place where they liue: for whom it is not lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And also the same could not be simply determined without rashnesse, forasmuch as a great parte of the order of this question consisteth in circumstances. And if thou compare also the states themselves together without circumstances, it shall not be easie to discern which of them ouerweiech the other in profitableness, they match so equally together. There is an easie way to fall from kingdome into tyranny: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefest men to the faction of a fewe: but most easie of all, from

from the peoples government, to sedition. Truly, if those three formes of governments which the Philosophers set out, to be considered in themselves I will not denie that either the government of the cheefest men, or a state tempered of it and common government farre excelleth all other: not of it selfe, but because it most seldome chaunceth that kinges so temper themselves, that their wil neuer swarueth from that which is iust and right, again, that they bee furnished with so great sharpnesse of iudgement and wisdom that euery one of them seeth so much as is sufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is safer and more tollerable that many shold haue the government, that they may mutually one help an other, one teach and admonish an other, and if any aduance himselfe hier than is meet, there may be ouerseers and maisters to restrain his wilfulnes. This both hath alway bin approoued by experience, and the Lord also hath confirmed it with his authoritie, when he ordeined among the Israclites a government of the best men verie neere vnto common government, at such time as hee minded to haue them in best estate, till he brought forth an image of Christ in Dauid. And as I willingly graunt that no kinde of government is more blessed than this, where libertie is framed to such moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly stablished to continuance: so I compt them also most blessed, y may enioy this estate: & if they stoutly and constantly trauell in preseruing and retaining it, I graunt that they do nothing against their duetie. Yea & the magistrates ought with most great diligence to bende themselves herunto, that they suffer not the libertie of the people, of which they are appointed gouernours, to be in any part minished, much lesse to be dissolued: if they be negligent and litle carefull therein, they are false Faithbreakers in their office, and betrayers of their countrie. But if they woulde bring this kinde to themselves, to whome the Lorde hath appointed an other forme of government, so that thereby they be moued to desire a change, the very thinking thereof shall not onely bee foolish and superfluous, but also hurtfull. But if thou bende not thine eyes onely to one citie, but looke about or behold the whole world together, or as least spreade abroad thy sight into farther distances of countries, without doubt thou shalt find that this is not vnprofitably appointed by the prouidence of God, that diuerse countries shold be ruled by diuerse kindes of government. For as the elementes hang together but by an vnegall temperature, so countries also are with their certaine inequalitye very wel kept in order. Howbeit al these things also are spoken in vaine to them whome the will of the Lord shall satisfie. For if it be his pleasure, to set kinges ouer kingdomes, Senates, or officers ouer free cities, whosoeuer he maketh rulers in the places where we are conuersant, it is our duetie to shew our selues yeelding and obedient vnto them.

9 Now the office of Magistrates is in this place to bee declared by the way, of what sort it is described by the worde of God, and in what thinges it consisteth. If the scripture did not teach, y it extendeth to both the tables of y law, we might learne it out of the prophane writers. For none hath intreated of the dutie of Magistrats, of making of lawes and of publike weale, that hath not begon at religion and the worshipping of God. And so haue they all confessed, that no policie can be happily framed, vnlesse the first care be of godlinesse: and that those lawes be preposterous which neglecting y^e right of God, doe prouide onely for men. Sith therefore with all the Phylosophers religion hath the first place, & sith the same hath alway bin obserued by the vniuersall consent of all nations, let Christian princes and magistrates be ashamed of their slouthfulnes, if they endeouour not themselves to this care. And we haue already shewed, that this duetic is specially enioyned them of God: as it is meete, that they shoulde employe their trauell to defende and maintaine his honour, whose vicegerentes they bee, and by whose benefite they gouerne. For this cause also cheefly are the holy kings praised in scripture, for that they restored the worship of God being corrupted or ouerthrowen, or toke care of religion, that it might flourish pure and safe vnder them.

Iud. 22. 35.

But contrariwise y^e holy historie reckoneth states without gouernors, among faultes, saying that there was no king in Israel, and that therefore euerie mā did what pleased himselfe. Whereby their follie is confuted, which woulde haue them, neglecting the care of God, onely to applie themselves to bee iudges of law among mē. As though God appointed gouernours in his name to decise controuersies, and omitted that which was of much weightier importance, that hee himselfe shoulde be worshipped according to the prescribed rule of his lawe. But a desire to innouate all thinges without punishment moueth troublesome men to this point, that they wishe all reuengers of the breach of peace to be taken away. As for so much as pertaineth to y^e seconde table, Ieremie warneth kings, to do iudgement and righteousnes, to deliuer the forcibly oppressed frō the hand of the false accuser, not to grieue y^e strāger and widow, not to do wrong, and not to shed innocent blood. To y^e same purpose maketh the exhortation which is read in the 82. Psalme, that they should render right to the poore and needy, acquite the poore and needie, deliuer the poore and needy from the hand of the oppressor. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whom he had set in his steed: let them heare the cause of their brethren, and iudge betwene a man and his brother & a strāger, and not know faces in iudgement, let them heare as well the litle as the great, and be not afraid of any man: because it is the iudgement of God. But I speake not of these things: that kinges should not get to themselves multitudes of horses, not cast their minds to couetousnesse, not to be lifted vp aboue their brethren: that they may bee continually busied in studying vpon the lawe of the Lorde all the dayes of their life: that Iudges swarue not to y^e one side, nor receiue giftes: because in declaring here the office of magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the magistrates themselves, as to teach other what Magistrates bee, and to what ende they are set of God.

Deut. 1. 16.

Deut. 17 16.

Wee see therefore that they bee ordeined defenders and reuengers of innocence, modestie, honestie, and quietnesse, whose onely indeuour should bee to prouide for the cōmon safety and peace of al men. Of which vertues Dauid professeth y^e he will be an examplar, when hee shall be aduanced to y^e royall seate: that is, that hee will not consent to any euill doinges, but abhorre wicked men, slanderers, and proude men, and gette to him selfe from eche where honest and faithfull men. But sith they cannot performe this, vnlesse they defende good men from the wronges of the euill, let them helpe y^e good with succour and defence, let them also be armed with power whereby they may feuerally suppress open euil doers and wicked men by whose lewdnes the common quiet is troubled or vexed. For we throughly find this by experience which Solon said, that comon weales consist of reward & punishment; & that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth & is dissolued. For the care of equitie & iustice waxeth cold in the minds of many, vnlesse there be due honor readie for vertue: neither can the wilfulnesse of wicked men be restrained but by seueritie and chastisement of paines. And these two partes the prophet comprehendeth, when he biddeth kinges and other gouernours to do iudgement and righteousnes. Righteousnes is, to take into charge of tuition, to embrace, to defend, to reuenge, to deliuer innocent. Iudgement is, to withstand the boldnes of wicked men, to repress their violence, to punish their offences.

10 But here, as it seemeth, doth arise a hie and hard question: If by the law of God all Christians are forbidden to kill, and the Prophet prophecieth of the holy mount of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shall not afflict nor hurt: how many magistrates be together both godly & bloud shedders? But if we vnderstand, that the Magistrate in executing of punishments, doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the very selfe iudgements of God, wee shalbe nothing combed with this dout. The lawe of the Lorde forbiddeth to kill: least manslaughter should be vnpunished, the lawe maker him selfe giueth to the ministers the sworde in their hande, which they should drawe forth against all manslayers. To afflict and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, not to afflict, by the Lordes commaundement to reuenge the afflictions of the godly. I woulde to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is here done by the rashnesse of man, but all things by the authoritie of God that commaundeth, which going before vs, we neuer swarue out of the right way. Vnlesse perhaps there be a bridle put vpon the righteousnesse of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any law to it, why shall we cauil against the ministers of it? They beare not the sworde in vaine, sayeth Paul: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, reuengers to euil doers. Therefore if Princes & other rulers know that nothing shalbe more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them apply this ministerie, if they desire to shewe their godlinesse, righteousnesse, & vncorruptnesse allowable to God. With this affection was Moses led, when knowing himselfe appointed by the power of the Lorde to bee the deliuerer of his people, hee layde his handes vpon the Aegyptian. Againe, when by slaying of three thousand men in one day, he tooke vengeance of the sacrilege of the people. Dauid also, when nye to the end of his life he gaue commaundement to Salomon his sonne to slay Ioab & Semei. Whereupon he also rehearseth this among the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the lande, that all workers of wickednes, may be driuen out of the citie of God. To which purpose also pertaineth the praise that is giuen to Salomon. Thou hast loued righteousnes and hast hated wickednesse. How doth that milde & gentle nature of Moses burne out into so great crueltie, that being sprinkeled and embrued with the bloud of his brethren, he runneth throughout the campe to newe slaughters? How doth Dauid, a man of so great gentlenes in all his life, among his last bre-

things make that bloudie testament, that his sonne should not bring y^e hoare haire of Ioab and Semei in peace to the graue? But they both when they executed the vengeance committed to them of God, so sanctified with cruell dealing their handes which they had defiled with sparing. It is an abomination with kings, saith Salomon, to doe iniquitie, because his throne is stablished in righteousnesse. Againe, The king which sitteth in the throne of iudgement, spreadeth his eyes vpon euerie euill man. Againe, A wise king scattereth the wicked and turneth them vpon the wheele. Againe, Take away the drosse from the siluer, and there shall come forth a vessell to the melter: take away the wicked man from the sight of the king, and his throne shall be fast set in righteousnes. Againe, He that iustificeth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abomination to the Lorde. Againe, A rebellious man purchaceth euill to himselfe, and a cruell messenger is sent vnto him. Againe, who so sayeth to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations do curse. Now if their true righteousnes be, with drawen sworde to pursue gilty and wicked men: let them put vp their sworde, and holde their handes pure from bloud, while in the meane time desperate men do range with murthers and slaughters: then they shall make them selues gilty of most great wickednesse, so much lesse shall they get thereby the praise of goodnesse and righteousnesse. Onely let there be no precise and cruell rigorousnesse, and that iudgement seate which may worthily be called the rocke of accused men. For I am not hee that either fauour extreme crueltie, or do thinke that righteous iudgement can be pronounced, but while clemencie the best and surest counsellor of kings, as Salomon affirmeth, the preferuer of the kinges throne is assistant, which a certaine man in old time truly saide to be the principall gift of Princes. Yet a magistrate must take heede to both; that he do neither with rigorousnes of minde, wound rather than heale, or by superstitious affectation of clemencie fall into a most cruell gentlenesse, if with soft and loose tendernesse he be dissolute to the destruction of many men. For this was in old time not without cause commonly spoken vnder the empire of Nerua, that it is in deede euil to liue vnder a prince vnder whome nothing is lawfull, but much worse vnder whome all things are lawfull.

II But sith sometime kings and peoples must of necessitie take sworde in hande to execute such publique vengeance, by this reason wee may also iudge that the warres are lawfull which are so taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, whereby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may keepe downe the seditious stirres of vnquiet men, wherby they may helpe the forceably oppressed, whereby they may punish euil doings: can they at fitter seasons vtter it, than to suppress his rage which troubleth both priuately the rest of euery man, and the common quiet of all men, which seditiously maketh vprores, which committeth violent oppressions and haynous euil doings? If they ought to bee preferuers and defenders of the lawes, they must also ouerthrowe the enterprises of all them by whose wicked doing the discipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they worthily punish those theues whose iniuries haue extended onely to a fewe: shall they suffer a whole countrey to be without punishment vexed and wasted

with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether hee be a king or one of the basest of the cōmonalty, y^e inuadeth an others cōuntry into which he hath no right, & spoileth it like an enemy: all are alike to be taken & punished for robbers. This therefore both natural equity, & the rule of dutie teacheth that Princes are armed not only to restraine priuate duties with iudiciall punishments, but also to defend with warre the dominions cōmitted to their charge if at any time they be enimiellike assailed. And such warres the holy Ghost by many testimonies of Scripture declareth to be lawfull.

12 If it be obiected against me, that in the newe Testament is neither witnesse nor example which teacheth that war is a thing lawfull for Christians: first I answere, that the same rule of making warre which was in old time remaineth also at this day, and y^e on the contrary side there is no cause that may debar magistrates from defending of their subiectes. Secondly that an expresse declaration of these matters is not to be sought in the writings of the Apostles, where their purpose is not to frame a ciuill state, but to stablish the spirituall kingdome of Christ. Last of all I say that in them also is shewed by the way, that Christ hath by his cōming changed nothing in this behalfe. For if Christian doctrine (y^e I may speake in Augustines own words) condemned all warres, this should rather haue bin sayd to soldiars when they asked counsell of saluation, that they should cast away their weapons, and vtterly withdraw themselues from the warre. But it was sayd to them: strike no man, do no man wrong, let your magistrates suffice you. Whom he taught y^e their wages ought to suffice them, he did verily not forbid them to be warriors. But al magistrates ought here to take great heed, y^e they nothing at al folow their owne desires: but rather, if they must punish, let them not be borne away with a headlong angriuesse, let them not be violently caried with hatred, let them not broile with vnappeasable rigor, yea let them (as Augustine sayeth) pity cōmon nature in him in whom they punish his priuate fault. Or if they must put on armour against the enemy, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly seeke occasion thereof, nor take it being offered vnlesse they be driuen to it by extreme necessitie. For if we ought to performe much more than that heathen man required, which would haue warre to seeme a seeking of peace: truly we ought first to attempt all things ere we ought to trie the matter by warre. Finally in both kindes let them not suffer themselues to be caried with any priuate affection, but be led onely with common feeling. Otherwise they do very ill abuse their power, which is giuen thē, not for their owne cōmodity, but for others benefit and ministry. Moreouer of the same rightful rule of making warre hangeth the order both of garrisons, & leagues and other ciuill fortifications. Garrisons I cal those that are placed in rownes to defend the borders of the countrey: Leagues, vvhich are made with Princes adioyning for this couenant y^e if any trouble happen in their landes they may mutually helpe them, and ioine their forces in cōmon together to suppress the common enemies of mankind: Ciuill fortification, whose vse is in the art of warre.

13 This also I wil last of al adde, that tributes and taxes are the lawfull reuenues of princes, which they may chiefly employ to sustain y^e cōmon charges of their office: which yet they may likewise vse to their priuate royaltie which is after a certaine maner conioyned with honor of the princely state that they beare. As wee see that Dauid, Ezechias, Iosias, Iosaphat, and other holy kings, and Ioseph also and Daniell, according to the state of the person that they did beare, were without offence of godlines sumptuous of the common charge, and we read in Ezechiel that there was a very large portion of land assigned to the kings. Where although he paint out the spiritual kingdome of Christ, yet he fetcheth the exemplar of his similitude from the lawfull kingdome of men. But yet so, that Princes againe on their behalues shoulde remember, that their treasure chambers are not so much their own priuate cofers, as the treasures of the whole people (for so Paul testifieth) which they may not without manifest wrong prodigally wast or spoyle; or rather that it is the yerie blood of the people, which not to spare, is moste cruell vnnaturallnesse: and let them thinke, that their impositions, and subsidies, and other kindes of tributes, are nothing but the supportes of publike necessitie, wherewith to wearie the poore communitie without cause, is tyrannicall extortion. These things do not encourage Princes to wastfull expence and riot, (as verily there is no neede to adde a firebrande to their lustes that are of themselues too much already kindled) but sith it much behoueth that they should with pure conscience before God be bolde to do all that they are bold to do, least with wicked boldnes they come into despising of God, they must be taught how much is lawfull for the. Neither is this doctrine superfluous for priuate men, that they shoulde not rashly and stubbornly giue theselues leaue to grudge at any expenses of Princes, although they exceede common and ciuill measure.

14 Next to the magistrate in ciuile states are lawes, the most strong sinewes of common wealthes, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the soules, without which the Magistrate can not stande; as they againe without the Magistrate haue no liuely force. Therefore nothing coulde be more truly sayde, than that the lawe is a dumbe Magistrate, and that the Magistrate is a liuing lawe. But wheras I promised to speake, with what lawes a Christian ciuill state ought to be ordered, there is no cause why any man should looke for a long discourse of the best kind of lawes, which both shold be infinite, and pertained not to this present purpose and place: yet in a few wordes, and as it were by the way, I will touch what lawes it may vse godlily before God, and be rightly gouerned by them among men. Which selfe thing I had rather to haue vterly passed ouer with silence, if I did not vnderstande that many do herein perillously erre. For there be some that denie that a common weale is well ordered, which neglecting the ciuile lawes of Moses is gouerned by the common lawes of nations: Howe dangerous and troublesome this sentence is, let other men consider, it shall be enough for me to haue shewed that it is false and foolish: That common diuision is to be kept, which diuideth the whole lawe of God published in to mortall, ceremonicall, and iudiciall lawes: and all the partes are to be seuerally considered, that we may knowe what of them pertaineth to vs, & what not. Neither in the meane time lette any man bee combred with this doubt, that iudiciall and ceremonicall also pertaine to the morall lawes: For although the olde writers which haue taught this diuision; were not ignoraunt that these crave their ayde, namely sith they are forbidde to reuenge, to sue in the law, and to haue any controuersie. But whereas Paul contrariwise plainly testifieth, that he is the minister of God to vs for good: we therby vnderstand, that he is so ordeined of God, that we being defended by his hande & succours against the maliciousnes and iniuries of mischeuous men, may liue a quiet & assured life. If he be in vaine giuen vs of the Lorde for defence, vnlesse it be lawfull for vs to vse such benefite: it sufficiently appeareth that he may also without vngodlinesse be called vpon & sued vnto. But here I must haue to do with two kinds of men. For there be many men that boyle with so great rage of quarelling at the law, that they neuer haue quiet with theselues vnles they haue strife with other. And their controuersies they exercise with deadly sharpnes of hatred, and with mad greedines to reuenge & hurt, and do pursue them with vnappeasable stiffenes euen to the very destruction of their aduersarie. In the meane time, y they may not be thought to doe any thing but rightfully, they defende such peruersnes with colour of law. But though it be granted thee to go to law with thy brother, yet thou maist not by & by hate him, not be caried against him with furious desire to hurt him, not stubbornly to pursue him.

18 Let this therefore be sayd to such men, that the vse of lawes is lawfull, if a man do rightly vse it. And that the right vse both for the pleintife to sue, & for the defendant to defend, is if the defendant being summoned do appeare at an appointed day, & doth with such exception as he can, defend his cause without bitterness, but onely with this affection to defende that which is his owne by law: and if the pleintife being vnworthily oppressed either in his person or his goods, doe resorte to the defence of the Magistrate, make his complaint, and require that which is equitie and conscience, but farre from all greedy will to hurt or reuenge, farre from sharpnesse and hatred, farre from burning heare of contention, but rather ready to yeelde of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be carried with an enenlike mind against his aduersarie. Contrariwise when being filled with malice of minde, corrupted with enuie, kindled with wrath, breathing out reuenge, or finally so enflamed with the heate of the contention, they giue ouer any parte of charitie, the whole proceeding euen of a most iust cause can not but be wicked. For this ought to be a determined principle to all Christians, that a controuersie though it be neuer so righteous, can neuer be rightly pursued of any man, vnlesse hee beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, as if the matter which is in the controuersie were already concluded and ended by composition. Some man wil here peraduenture saye, that such moderation is so neuer vsed in going to lawe, that it should be like a miracle if any such were founde. I graunt in deede, as the manners of these times be, that there is seldome seene an example of a good contender in law, yet the thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no euill, ceaseth not to be good and pure. But when we here that the help of the Magistrate is a holy gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take heed, that it be not defiled by our fault.

19 As for them that precisely condemne all contendings at law, let the vnderstand that they do therewithall despise the holy ordinance of God, and a gift of that kinde of giftes which may be cleane to the cleane : vnlesse per-aduerture they will accuse Paul of wicked doing, which did both put away from himselve the slanders of his accusers with declaring also their deceite and maliciousnesse, and in iudgement claimed for himselve the prerogatiue of the citie of Rome, and when neede was he appelled from an vnrighteous gouernour to the Emperours iudgement seate. Neither withstandeth it, that all Christians are forbidden to desire reuenge, which we also do driue farre away from Christian iudgement seates. For, if the contention bee about a common case, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocent simplicitie, commit his cause to the iudge as to a common defender, thinking nothing lesse than to render mutuall recompence of euill, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life & death, or any great criminal action be commenced, we require that the accuser be such a one, as commeth in to the court being taken with no boyling heate of reuenge, & touched with no displeasure of priuate iniurie, but only hauing in minde to withstande the enterprises of a mischeuous man, that they may not hurt the common weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done against that commaundement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Christians.

 But they are not onely forbidden to desire reuenge, but they are also commaunded to waite for the hande of the Lorde, which promiseth that he will be a present reuenger for the oppressed and afflicted: but they doe preuent all reuenge of the heauenly defendor, which require helpe at the Magistrates hande either for themselues or other. Not so. For wee must thinke that the Magistrates reuenge is not the reuenge of man but of God, which (as Paul sayeth) hee extendeth and exerciseth by the ministerie of man for our good.

20 And no more do we disagree with the wordes of Christ, by which he forbiddeth to resist euill, and commaundeth to turne the right cheeke to him that hath giuen a blowe on the left, and to suffer him to take away thy cloke that taketh away thy coate. He willeth in deede there that the minds of his shoulde so much abhorre from desire of recompensing like for like, that they should sooner suffer double iniurie to be done to themselues, than desire to reacquite it: from which patience neither do we also leade them away. For Christians truely ought to bee a kinde of men made to beare re-proches and iniuries, open to the malice, deceits, and mockeages of noughty men: and not that onely but also they must be bearers of all these euilles, that is to say so framed with all the ir heartes, that hauing receiued one displeasure they make themselues ready for an other, promising to themselues nothing in their whole life but y bearing of a continuall Crosse. In the mean time also they must doe good to them that do them wrong, and wishe well to those that curse them, and (which is their onely victorie) striue to ouer-come euill with good. Being so minded they will not seeke eye for eye, tooth for tooth, as the Pharisees taught their disciples to desire reuenge, but (as we are taught of Christ) they will so suffer their body to be mangled, and their goods to be maliciously taken from them, that they will forgiue and of their own accorde pardon those euils so sone as they are done to them. Yet this euennesse and moderation of mindes shall not withstande, but that the friendship toward their enemies remaining safe, they may use the helpe of the magistrate to the preserving of their goods, or for zeale of publicke commoditie may sue a guiltie and pestilent man to be punished, whome they knowe that he can not be amended but by death. For Augustine truly expoundeth that all these commaundementes tend to this end, that a righteous and godly man should be ready to beare patiently the malice of them whom he seeketh to haue made good men, that rather y^e number of the good may encrease, not that he shoulde with like malice adde himselfe also to the number of the euill: then, that they more pertaine to the preparation of the heart, which is inwardely, than to the worke which is done openly: that in secret may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we see may be profitable to them to whome wee ought to beare good will.

Epist. 5. ad
Marcel.

21 But this which is wont to be obiected, that contendings in lawe are altogether condemned of Paul, is also false: It may easily bee perceined by his wordes, that there was an immeasurable rage of striuing at lawe in the Church of the Corinthians: so farre forth that they did make the Gospell of Christ and the whole religion which they professed, open to the caullations and euil speaking of the wicked. This is the first thing that Paul blameth in them, that by their intemperance of contentions they brought the Gospell in sclander among the vnbelieuers. And then thus point also, that in such sort they striued among themselves brethren with brethren. For they were so farre from bearing of wrongs, that they greedily gaped one for an others goods, prouoked one another, & being vnprouoked did hurt. Therefore he inueryeth against that rage of contending, and not simply against all controuersies. But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weakenesse, that they did not rather suffer losse of their goods than to trauaile euen to contentions for the preserving of them: namely when they were so easily moued with euery damage, and for most small causes did runne to the court of lawe and to controuersies, he sayth that this is a prooffe that they were of a minde too ready to anger & not well framed to patience: Christians verily ought to doe this, that they had alway rather to yelde of their owne right than to goe to lawe, from whence they can scarcely get out again but with a minde too much moued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man seeth that without losse of charitie he may defend his owne, the losse whereof should be a sore hindrance vnto him: if he do so he offendeth nothing against this saying of Paul. Finally (as we haue taught in the beginning) charitie shal giue euery man best counsell, without which whatsoever controuersies are taken in hande, and beyond which whatsoever do proceede, we hold it out of controuersie that they be vniust and wicked.

1. Cor. 6. 8.

22 The first dutie of subiectes toward their magistrates is, to thinke most honorably of their office, namely which they acknowledge to be a iurisdiction committed of God, and therefore to esteeme them and reuerence them as the ministers and deputies of GOD. For a man may finde some, which yelde themselves very obedient to their magistrates, and woulde not that there were not some whom they should obey, because they so knowe it to be expedient for the common benefite: but the magistrates themselves they thinke no otherwise than of certaine necessarie euils . But Peter requireth somewhat more of vs, when he commaundeth that the king be honoured: & Salomon, when he commaundeth God and the king to be feared. For Peter vnder the word of Honoring containeth a syncre & wel deeming estimation: & Salomon ioyning the king with God, sheweth that he is full of a certaine holy reuerence & dignitie . This is also a notable commendation in Paul, that we obey not only for wrath but for conscience. Whereby he meaneth that subiects ought to be ledde not only with feare of princes & rulers to be holden in their subiection (as they are wont to yeeld to their armed enimie, which see that vengeance shal redily be taken vpon them if they resist) but because the obediences that are shewed to them are shewed to God himselfe, forasmuch as their power is of God . I speake not of the men, as if the visor of dignitie did couer foolishnesse, or sluggishnesse, or cruelties, or wicked maners & full of mischieuous doing; but I say that the degree it selfe is worthie of honor & reuerence: that whosoeuer be rulers may be esteemed with vs, & haue reuerence, in respect of their being rulers.

23. Of this then also followeth another thing: that with mindes bent to the honoring of them, they declare their obedience in prooffe to them: whether it be to obey their proclamations, or to pay tribute, or to take in hande publike offices and charges that serue for common defence, or to do any other of their commaundements. Let euery soule (saith Paul) be subiect to the hier powers. For he that resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. The same Paul writeth to Titus: Warne them that they be subiect to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magistrates, y they be ready to euery good worke . And Peter sayth, Bee ye subiect to euery humaine creature (or rather as I translate it, Ordinance) for the Lords sake, either to the king as most excellent, or to the rulers that are sent by him, to the punishment in deede of euill doers, but to the praise of well doers. Moreouer y they should restifie that they do not faine subiection, but are syncrely and heartly subiect, Paul addeth that they should commend to God the safetie and prosperitie of them vnder whom they liue. I exhort (sayth he) that there be made prayes: beseechings, intercessions, thankesgiuinges for all men, for kinges and for all that be set in superioritie, that wee may liue a peasable and quiete life with all godlinesse and honestie. Neither let any man here deceiue himselfe . For sith the Magistrate can not be resisted, but that GOD himselfe must also be resisted: although it may bee thought that an vnarmed magistrate may freely be despised; yet God is armed which wil strongly take vengeance on the despising of himselfe . Moreouer vnder this obedience I containe moderation, which priuate men ought to binde themselues to keepe in cases touching the publike state, that they do not of their owne heade entermedle in publike busineses, or rashly breake into the office of the Magistrate, and enterprise nothing publikely . If any thing shall in a publike ordinance be behouefull to bee amended, lette not themselues raise vprores, nor put their handes to, the doing of it, which they all ought to haue fast bounde in this behalfe: but lette them commit it to the iudgement of the magistrate, whose hande alone is herein at libertie . I meane, that they presume to doe nothing vncommanded . For when the commandement of the ruler is adioyned, then are they also furnished with publike authoritie. For as they are wont to call the counsellors of a king, his eares and eyes: so not vnfitly a man may call them the handes of the prince, whom by his commandement he setteth in authoritie for the doing of things.

24 Now forasmuch as we haue hitherto described a magistrate such as is indeede the same that he is called, namely the father of the country, and (as the Poet calleth him) the pastor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteousnesse, the reuenger of innocencie; he is worthily to be iudged a mad man, that alloweth not such a gouernment. But whereas this is in a manner the experience of all ages, that of princes some being careles of all thinges to the foreseeing whereof they ought to haue bene heedfully bent, do without all care slouthfully wallowe in delites; other some addicted to their gaine, doe set out to sale all lawes, priuileges, iudgements, and grauntes; other some spoile the poore communitie of monie which they may after waste vpon mad prodigale expendinges; other some exercise meere robberies, in pilling of houses, defiling of virgins and matrones, murdering of innocentes: many cannot bee perswaded that such should be acknowledged for princes, whose authoritie they ought to obey so far as they may. For in so great lianous vnworthinesse among doinges so much contrarie to the duetie not onely for a magistrate, but also of a man, they beholde no forme of the image of God which ought to shine in a magistrate: when they see no toké of that minister of God, which was giuen for praise to the good and for vengeance to the euill: so neither doe they also acknowledge such a gouernour, whose dignitie and authoritie the scripture commendeth vnto vs. And truly this feeling of affection hath alway bene naturally planted in the minds of men, no lesse to hate and abhorre tyrants, than to loue and honour lawfull kinges.

25 But if wee looke to the worde of God; it will leade vs further, that we be subiect not only to the gouernment of those princes which execute their office towarde vs well and with such faithfulnessse as they ought, but also of all them, which by what meane soeuer it be, haue the dominion in possession although they performe nothing lesse than that which pertaineth to the duetie of princes. For though the Lord testifieth that the magistrate is a speciall great gift of his liberalitie for preseruing of the safetic of men, and appointeth to magistrates themselues their bounds: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what sort soeuer they bee, they haue not their authoritie but from him: that those indeede, which rule for benefite of the common weale, are true examplars and paternes of his bountiffulnessse: that they that rule vniustly and wilfully, are raised vp by him to punish the wickednes of the people: that all egally haue that maiestie wherewith hee hath furnished a lawfull power. I wil proceed no further, till I haue added some certaine testimonies of that point. Yet wee neede not much to labor to proue that a wicked king is the wrath of God vpon the earth, for asmuch as I think that no man will say the contrarie, and otherwise there should bee no more said of a king than of a common robber that violently taketh away thy goods, and of an adulterer that defileth thy bed, of a murtherer that seeketh to kill thee, whereas the scripture reckoneth all such calamities among the curſes of God. But let vs rather tarie vpon prouing that, which doeth not ſo eaſily ſettle in the mindes of men: that in a moſt naughty man, & moſt vnworthie of all honour, if ſo that he haue the publique power in poſſeſſion, remaineth that noble and diuine power which the Lord hath by his word giuē to the miniſters of his righteouſnes and iudgement: and therefore that hee ought of his ſubiects to be had in as great reuerence and eſtimation, ſo much as pertaineth to publique obedience, as they would haue the beſt King if he were giuen them.

26 Firſt I would haue the Readers to perceiue & diligently marke that prouidence and ſingular doings of God, which is in the Scripture not without cauſe ſo oft rehearſed vnto vs, in diſtributing of kingdomes and making

Dan. 2. 21. Kinges whome it pleaſe th him. In Daniell, it is ſaide: The Lorde changeth times and courſes of times, he caſteth away and maketh kings. Againe: That y^e liuing may know y^e the Hieſt is mightie in the kingdom of men, & he ſhal giue it to whō he wil. With which maner of ſentences wheras y^e whole ſcripture aboundeth, yet y^e ſame prophecie of Daniel ſpecially ſwarmeth ful. Now what manner of king was Nabuchadonezar, he that conquered Hieruſalem, it is ſufficiently knowen, namely a ſtrong inuader and deſtroyer of other.

Ezec. 29. 19. Yet in Ezechiel the Lorde affirmeth that hee gaue him the lande of Egypte for the ſeruiſe that hee had done to him in waſting it. And Daniel ſaide to

Dan. 3. 37. him: Thou king art y^e king of kinges, to whom the king of heauens hath giuē a mightie, and ſtrong, and glorious kingdom: to thee, I ſay, he hath giuen it, and all the landes where dwell the children of men, the beaſtes of y^e wood and foules of the aire: hee hath deliuered them into thy hande, and hath made thee to beare rule ouer them. Againe hee ſaide to his ſonne Belfaſar:

Dan. 5. 18. The hieſt God hath giuen to Nabuchadonezar thy Father kingdom and royaltie, honour and glorie: and by reaſon of the royaltie that he gaue him, all peoples, tribes, and languages were trembling and fearefull at his ſighte. When we heare that a king is ordeined of God, let vs thereof call to remembrance thoſe heavenly warnings concerning the honor and fearing of a king: then we ſhall not doubt to accompte, a moſt wicked tyraunt in the ſame place wherein the Lorde hath vouchſaued to ſet him. Samuel, when he gaue warning to the people of Iſraell, what manner of thinges they ſhoulde ſuffer at the handes of their kinges, ſaide: This ſhall be the right of the king that ſhal reigne ouer you; hee ſhal take your ſonnes and put them to his chariot, to make them his horſemen, and to plowe his land, and reape his crop, and to make instrumentes of warre. He ſhall take your daughters, that they may be his dreſſers of ointmentes, his cookes and bakers. Your lands, your vineyardes, and your beſt Oliue plantes hee ſhall take away and giue to his bonde ſeruauntes. Hee ſhall take tithes of your ſeedes and vineyardes, and ſhall giue them to his eunuches and bonde ſeruauntes. Hee ſhall take away your bonde men, your bonde women and your aſſes, and ſet them to his worke. Yea and hee ſhall take tithes of your flockes: and ye ſhall be his bond ſeruauntes. Verily kinges ſhoulde not haue done this of right, whome the lawe did verie well inſtruct to all continence: but it was called a right ouer y^e people which it behooued them of neceſſitie to obey, and they might not reſuſt it: as if Samuell had ſaide. The wilfulneſſe of kinges ſhall runne to ſuch such licentiousness, which it shall not be your parte to resist, to whome this onely thing shalbe left, to obey their commandementes and harken to their worde.

27 But chiefly there is in Ieremie a notable place and worthy to be remembered, which although it be somewhat long, yet I will be content to rehearse, because it most plainly determineth this whole questio. I haue made the earth and men, sayth the Lord, and the living creatures that are on the ouerface of the earth in my great strength and stretched out arme, and I wil deliuer it to him whom it pleaseth in mine eyes. And nowe therefore I haue giuen all these landes into the hande of Nabuchadnezar my seruant, and all nations and great kinges shall serue him, till the time shal come of that land. And it shalbe as a nation and a kingdome that hath not serued the king of Babel, I will visit that nation in sworde, famine, and pestilence. Wherefore, serue ye the king of Babel and liue. Wee see with howe great obedience the Lorde willed that cruell and proude tyrant to be honored, for no other reason but because he possessed the kingdome. And the same was by the heauenly decree, that he was sette in the throne of the kingdome, and taken vp into kingly maiestie, which it was vnlawfull to violate. If wee haue this continually before our mindes and eyes, that euen the worst kinges are ordeined by the same decree by which the authoritie of kinges is stablished these seditious thoughtes shall neuer come into our minde, that a king is to be handled according to his deseruings, & that it is not meete that we should shewe our selues subiectes to him that doth not on his behalfe shew himselfe a king to vs.

Ier. 27. 50

28 In vaine shall any man obiect that this was a peculiar commaundement to the Israelites. For it is to be noted with what reason the Lord confirmeth it. I haue giuen (sayth he) the kingdome to Nabuchadnezer. Wherefore serue ye him and liue. To whomsoever therefore it shalbe certaine that the kingdome is giuen, let vs not dout that he is to be obeyed. And so soone as the Lord aduanceth any man to the royall estate, hee therein declareth his will to vs that he will haue him reigne. For thereof are general testimonies of the Scripture. Salomon in the xxviij. Chapter, Many Princes are because of the wickednesse of the people. Againe Iob in the xij. chap. He taketh away subiection from kinges, and girdeth them again with the girdle. But this being confessed, there remaineth nothing but that we must serue and liue. There is also in Ieremie the Prophete an other commaundement of the Lorde, wherein he commaunded his people to seeke the peace of Babylon, whither they had beene ledde away captiue, and to pray to him for it, because in the peace of it should be their peace. Behold the Israelites being spoiled of al their goods, plucked out of their houses, led away into exile, and cast into miserable bondage, are commanded to pray for the safetie of the Conqueror: not as in other places we are commaunded to pray for our persecutors: but that the kingdome may be preserued to himselfe and quiet, that they themselues may also liue prosperously vnder him. So Dauid being already appointed king by the ordinance of God, and annoynted with his holy oyle, when he was without any his deseruing vnworthily persecuted of Saul, yet the head of him that layed waite for his life, he esteemed holy, which which the Lorde hath hallowed with the honour of kingdome. Farre bee it

 1.Sam. 26.9 is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, My soule hath spared thee, and I haue saide, I will not lay my hand vpon my Lorde, because hee is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, Who shall lay his hande vpon the annointed of y^e Lord and shal bee innocent? So sure as the Lorde liueth, vnlesse the Lorde strike him, or his day be come that he die, or he goe downe into battell: farre be it from me that I should lay my hand vpon the annointed of the Lord.

29 Finally wee owe this affection of reuerence yea and deuotion to al our rulers, of what sort soeuer they be, which I do therefore the oftener repeate, that we may learne not to search what the men themselues bee, but take this for sufficient, that by the will of the Lorde they beare that personage, in which the Lorde himselfe hath imprinted and ingraued an inuiola-ble maiestie. But (thou wilt say) Rulers owe mutuall duties to their subiectes. That I haue alreadie confessed. But if thou thereupon conclude, that obediences are to be rendred to none but to iust gouernors, thou art a foolish reasoner. For, husbandes also are bounde to their wiues and parentes to their children with mutuall dueties. Let parentes and husbands depart from their ductie: let parentes shewe themselues so hard and vnplea-

 Eph. 5. 26. with their peeuishnes they do vnmeasurablie wearie them: let the husbands most despitefully vse their wiues, whome they are commaunded to loue, and 1.Pet. 3 7. to spare them as weake vessels: shall yet therefore either children be lesse obedient to their parents or wiues to their husbands? but they are subiect both to euill parentes and husbandes and such as doe not their ductie. Yea, where as all ought rather to endeour themselues not to looke behinde them to the bagge hanging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of an others due-ties, but euery man set before him that which is his owne ductie: this ought chiefly to haue place among those that are vnder the power of other. Wherefore if we be vnmercifully tormented of a cruell prince, if we be rauencously finally if wee be vexed for godlinesse sake of a wicked and vngodly Prince:

 let vs first call to minde the remembrance of our sinnes, which vndoubtedly are chastised with such scourges of the Lorde. Thereby humilitie shall bridle our impacience. Let vs then also call to minde this thought, that it per-teineth not to vs to remedie such euils: but this onely is lefte for vs, that we craue the helpe of the Lorde, in whose hande are the heartes of kings, and the bowings of kingdomes. He is the God that shall stande in the assemblie of gods, and shall in the middest iudge the gods, from whose face all kings shall fall, and be broken, and all the iudges of the earth that shall haue not

30 And here both his maruellous goodnes, and power, and prouidence sheweth it selfe: for sometime of his seruants he raiseth vp open reuengers, & furnisheth them with his commandemēt, to take vengeance of their vniust gouernment, and to deliuer his people many wayes oppressed out of miserable distresse: sometime he directeth to the same ende the rage of men that entend and goe about an other thing. So he deliuered the people of Israel out of the tyrannie of Pharao, by Moses: and out of the violence of Chusam king of Syria, by Othoniell: and out of other thraldomes, by other kings or Iudges. So he tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Egyptians: the insolence of the Egyptians, by the Assyrians: the fiercenes of the Assyrians, by the Chaldees: the boldnes of Babylon, by the Medians, and by the Persians when Cyrus had subdued the Medians. And the vnthankfulnes of the kinges of Iuda and Israel, and their wicked obstinacie towarde his so many benefits, he did beat down and bring to distresse sometime by the Assyrians, sometime by the Babilonians, albeit not al after one maner. For, the first sort of mé when they were by the lawful calling of God sent to doe such actes: in taking armour against kinges, they did not violate that maiestie which is planted in kinges by the ordinance of God: but being armed from heauen they subdued the lesser power with the greater: like as it is lawful for kinges to punish their Lords vnder them. But these latter sort, although they were directed by the hande of God whither it pleased him, and they vnwittingly did his worke, yet purposed in their minde nothing but mischeefe.

Exod. 3. 7.
Iud. 3. 9. &c

31 But howsoeuer the verie doings of men be iudged, yet the Lorde did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloody scepters of proude kinges, and ouerhewe their intolerable gouernmentes. Let Princes heare and be afraide. But we in the meane time must take great heede, that we do not despise or offende that authoritie of Magistrates full of reuerende maiestie, which God hath stablished with most weightie decrees, although it remaine with most vnworthie men, and which doe with their wickednesse, so much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of vnbridled gouernment be the reuengement of the Lord, let vs not by and by think that it is committed to vs, to whome there is giuen no other commaundement but to obey and suffer. I speake alway of priuate men. For if there be at this time any magistrates for the behalfe of the people, (such as in olde time were the Ephori, that were set against the kinges of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, against y^e Romane Consuls: or the Demarchy, against the Senate of Athens: and the same power also which peradventure, as things are nowe, the three estates haue in euerie realme, when they hold their principall assemblies.) I doe so not forbid them according to their office to withstande the outraging licentiousnesse of kinges: that I affirme that if they winke at kinges wilfully raging ouer and treading downe the poore communitie, their dissembling is not without wicked breache of faith, because they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they knowe themselues to bee appointed protectors by the ordinance of God.

Parleam^{ts}.

32 But in that obedience which we haue determined to bee due to the authorities of Gouvernors, this is alway to bee excepted, yea cheefely to bee obserued, that it doe not leade vs away from obeying of him, to whose will the desires of all kinges ought to be subiect, to whose decrees all their com-

maundements ought to yelde, to whose maiestie their maces ought to bee submitted. And truly howe vnorderly were it, for the satisfying of men to runne into his displeasure for whom men them selues are obeyed? The Lord therefore is the king of kinges, who, when he hath opened his holy mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and aboue all: next to him wee bee subiect to those men that are set ouer vs: but no otherwise than in him. If they commaunde any thing against him, let it haue no place and let no accompt be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing stay vpon al that dignitie wherewith y Magistrats excel, to which there is no wrong done, when it is brought into order of subiection in comparison of that singular and truly soueraigne power of God. After this reaso Daniel denieth that he had any thing offended against the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: because the king had passed his boundes, and had not onely beene a wrong doer to men, but in listig vp his horns against God he had taken away power from himselfe. On the other side the Israelites are condemned because they were too much obedient to the wicked commaundement of the king. For when Ierobeam had made golden calues, they forsaking the Temple of God, did for his pleasure turne to newe superstitions. With like lightnesse their posteritie inclined themselues to the ordinances of their kinges. With this y Prophet sharply reprocheth them, that they embraced the commaundements of the king: so farre is it of, that the pretence of humilitie may deserue praise wherewith the flatterers of the court doe couer themselues and deceiue the simple, while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commaunded them of their Princes: as though God had resigned his right to mortall men, giuing them the rule of mankinde: or as though the earthly power were minished, when it is made subiect to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers doe humble tremble for feare. I know how great and howe present perill hangeth ouer this constancie, because kings do most displeasantly suffer themselues to be despised, whose displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But sith this decree is proclaimed by the heauenly harald Peter: That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that we then performe that obedience which the Lord requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatsoever it be, than swarue from godlines. And that our courages shoulde not faint. Paul putteth also an other spur to vs: That we were therefore redeemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, y we should not yelde our selues in thraldome to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bound to vngodlinesse.

1. 9. and Chap. 19. Sect. 22, 23.
Adams fall.

The fall of Adam proceeded not of intemperance of gluttony, but of infi-delitie: for he despising the word and trueth of God, turned out of the way to the lyes of Sathan: which infidelity opened the gate to ambition & pride, whereunto was adioyned vnthankful-nesse: and ambition was the mother of disobedience. 2. 1. 4.

By the fal of Adam sith other creatures haue beene after a sort deformed, it is no maruell, that all mankinde was corrupted, that is to say: swarued out of kinde from his first original, & made subiect to curse. This the old Doctors called Originall sinne, but yet did not so plainly set foorth this point of Doctrine as was conuenient. In the mean time it is proued by reasons and testimonies of Scripture, y^e Pelagius sowly erred when he sayd that by imitation only, not by propagation, sinne passed from the first man into all his poster-tie. 2. 1. 5, 6.

And though the pestilence of sinne doe principally abide in the soule, yet it doeth not therefore pertaine to the discussing of this Doctrine, to dispute whether the soule of the childe commeth of the engendring substance of the father: forasmuch as the cause of the infection is not in the substance of the flesh or of the soule, but because it was ordeined of God, that those giftes which he at the first had giuen to man, man shoulde haue and loose them for him and his. Finally it maketh not against this doctrine, that the children of the faithfull are sanctified. 2. 1. 7.

That by the fal of Adam the naturall giftes in man were corrupted and the supernaturall were taken away, is a saying that many haue vsed, but few haue vnderstood. 2. 2. 4, 16. which saying is expounded. 2. 2. 12. that is to say that the supernaturall giftes, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, desirous endeouour of holinesse and righteousnesse were taken away, but are restored by Christ: & y^e the naturall giftes, namely the vnderstanding mind, and the heart are corrupted, because the soundnes of vnderstanding and the vprightnes of heart were both taken away: Also that reason in man was not vterly blotted out, but partly weakened and partly corrupted: & so Will, because it can no be seuered fro the nature of man, was not vterly destroyed, but made thrall to corrupt desires. 2. 2. 12.

It is proued by the testimonies of Augustin

Augustine & of the Scripture, y^e God not only foresaw or suffred, but also by his will disposed the fal of the first mā, and in him the vaine of his posteritie. 3.23.7,8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God although Moises do not expresse them in the history of the creation. 1.14.3.

Of the time or order wherein they were created, it is not expedient to enquire, forasmuch as y^e Scripture (which we ought to follow for our rule) declarerh nothing thereof. 1.14.4.

Why the heauenly Spirits are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, Principalities, powers, Dominiōs, Thrones, Goddesses. 1.14.5.

Concerning Angels the Scripture reacherh so much as is auailable for our comfort and for the confirming of our faith, namely that they are distributors and ministers of Gods bountifullnes towarde vs, and the same by diuers wayes. 1.14.6,9.

Not onely one Angel hath seuerall care of euery one of vs, but they all with one consēt do watch for our safety: and therefore it is superfluous to enquire whether euery man haue his seuerall angel assigned to be his keeper. 1.14.7.

Of the number and degrees of Angels, it is curiousnes to require, & rashnes to determine: And why, whereas they be Spirits, the Scripture painteth them with wings vnder Cherubin and Seraphin. 1.14.8.

Against the Sadduces & such other fantastical men, it is proued by sundry testimonies of the Scripture, that Angels are not qualities or inspirations without substance, but very spirites in deede. 1.14.9.

That superstition is herein to be auoided, and that wee giue not to Angels those things that belong only to God and Christ. 1.14.10.

For auoyding of this peril, we must consider that whereas God y^eseth their seruice, hee doeth it not of neede, as though he could not be without them, but for the comfort of our weakenesse 1.14.11. And therefore whatsoeuer is sayd of the ministry of Angels, ought to be referred to this ende, that ouercomming all distrust, our trust in God should be thereby the more strongly stablished, & not that they should lead vs away from God. 1.14.12.

That the Angels also were created after the likenes of God. 1.15.3.

Archbishops and Patriarches.

See Bo.4. Chap.4. Sect.4. and 7.15. Of the Ascending of Christ into Heauen.

Although Christ in his rising againe beganne more fully to shewe forth his glory and power: yet in his Ascending into heauen he first truely beganne his kingdom, because he then powred out greater abundance of his Spirit, more royally aduanced his reigne, & shewed greater power both in helping thē that are his, and in ouerthrowing his enemies. And yet that he is so absent according to the presence of his flesh, that hee is alway euery where according to the presence of his maiestie, and with the faithful according to his vnspeakeable and inuisible grace. 2.16.14.

Of Christs sitting at the right hand of his father, and of the manifold fruit which our faith gathereth thereof. 2.16.15,16.

B.

Baptisme.

THe definition of Baptisme. The first end therof is to serue our faith before God, the other ende, to serue our confessiō before mē. It bringeth to our our faith three things, first that it is a signe of our cleansing, assuring vs that all our finnes are done away. 4. 15. 1. which is proued by testimonies of the Scripture, and that it is not the water that cleanseth vs, but the bloude of Christ Sect. 2.

The force of baptisme is not restrained to the time past: but we are by it washed and cleansed once for all our life: and yet that we may not heereof take a liberty to sinne frō thence forward. 4. 15. 3.

The power of the keies (as they call it) that is to say, the ministerie of the Church, by which the forgiuenes of finnes is dayly preached vnto vs, is not to be seuered from baptisme. 4. 15. 4.

The second fruite of faith by baptisme, is that it sheweth to vs our mortifying in Christ, and a new life in him 4. 15. 5.

The thirde fruite is, that it testifieth that wee are so vnited to Christ, that wee are partakers of all his good things. For which cause Christ is called the proper object of baptisme, and the Apostles baptised into the name of Christ, in whome wee do so obtaine the matter both of our cleansing & of our regeneration, as wee obtaine the cause thereof in the father, & the effect in the holy Ghost. 4. 15. 6.

It is proued that the baptisme was allone which was ministred of Iohn and of the Apostles, although some of the olde Doctors thought otherwise. 4. 15. 7. and that it maketh not to the contrarie, that more abundant graces of the Spirite are poured out, since the resurrection of Christ. But yet there is in baptisme a difference to be made of the person of Christ from Iohn, and from the Apostles & other ministers. 4. 15. 8.

Both our mortifying & our cleansing were as by shadowe signified among the people of Israel, by the passage through the sea, & the comfortable calling of the cloude. 4. 15. 9.

It is false which some haue taught, that by Baptisme wee are restored to the same righteousnesse & purenesse of nature which Adam had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God doe remaine yet some leauings of sinne, although the same reigne not in them: which doth whet their endeouours, and doeth not giue them occasion to flatter themselves. 4. 15. 10, 11. the same is proued by Paul. Sect. 12.

How Baptisme serueth our confession before men. 4. 15. 13.

What is the order to vse Baptisme, both for confirmation of our faith, & for a confession before men. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not enclosed in the Sacrament, so as they be giue to vs by the vertue thereof. 4. 15. 14, 15.

Baptisme is nothing encreased by the worthinesse of him that doth minister it, nor diminished by his vnworthinesse: against the Donatistes, and our Carabapustes which require a rebaptising, because wee haue beene baptised in the kingdom of the Pope. 4. 15. 16. their arguments are confuted Sect. 17, 18.

Baptisme is a continuall Sacramēt of repentance for all our life, so that wee neede no other Sacrament of penance. 4. 19. 17.

Of the coniuring of the water, the waxe candell, the Chresme, the blowing, the spittle, and such other trifles added to the simple ceremonie of Christ: and the order of purely ministering it in the Church is shewed. 4. 15. 19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the ministers of y

The Table.

Church & not to priuate men, much lesse to women: and the contrarie obiections are confuted. 4. 15, 20, 21, 22.

Baptisme of infants.

The baptizing of infants doth very well agree with Christes institution, and with the nature of the signe. 4. 16. &c.

Baptisme succeeded in the place of Circumcision, Wherin they be like, & wherein they be vnlike. 4. 16. 3, 4.

Infants are not to bee debarred frō baptisme, sith the Lorde doeth make them partakers of the thing signified in Baptisme. 4. 16. 5. and that the Lord doeth regenerate infants. Sect. 17, 18, 19.

Sith it is certaine that the same couenant, which it pleased God to make with Abraham, is sealed in infantes with the outward Sacrament, therefore ought baptisme also to haue place among them. 4. 16. 6.

Baptizing of infants is well proued by this that Christ embraced children and laid his handes vpon them. 4. 16. 7.

A confutation of certain argumētts of the enimies of infantes baptisme. 4. 16. 8, 22, 23, 25, 27, 28, 29.

There commeth great fruit by the baptizing of infantes, both to the faithfull parentes and to the children. 4. 16. 9. Which fruite Satan trauaileth by the Anabaptistes to take from vs, 4. 16. 3. 2.

A confutation of the aduersaries arguments, saying, that ther be other things signified in baptisme than ther are in Circumcision: that our couenant differeth from the old couenāt: that other are called children at this day than were at that time. 4. 16. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

A confutation of their other fainded differences betweene Circumcision and baptisac. Sect. 16. Also of this obiection, that baptisme is a Sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infancie. 4. 16. 20, 21.

In them of ripe age, faith and vnderstanding ought to go before baptisme: but in infantes, the baptisac of the faithfull goeth before vnderstanding. 4. 16. 24.

A confutation of their error, which condemne to eternall death all that are not baptised. 4. 16. 26.

This, that Christ was not baptised till his age of 30. yeares, was for a good cause, and maketh nothing for the enemies of infantes baptisme. 4. 16. 29.

Why the supper is not to be ministred to the infantes of the faithfull, and baptisme not to be denied them. 4. 16. 30.

A long rehearfall of the arguments wherewith wicked Seruetus did fight against the baptisme of infantes, and a confutation of the same argumentes. 4. 16. 31.

Of baptizing of infantes. 4. 8. 16.

Bearing of the crosse.

It behoueth that wee deny our selues, that we may beare the crosse, because it is Gods will to exercise all his vnder the crosse, beginning at Christ his first begotten sonne. Which fellowship with Christ doth already giue vs great ground of patience and comfort. 3. 8. 1.

It is for many causes necessary for vs to leade our life vnder a continuall crosse: first to beate downe our arrogancie and trust of our owne strength. And this remedie euen the most holy do neede, as is proued by the example of Dauid. 3. 8. 2. Hereby our trust in God is confirmed, and our hope increased. Sect. 3.

Secondly, that our patience may be tried, and wee may be framed to obedience.

dience. 3. 8. 4. Which is most needeful for vs, fith the wantonnes of our flesh is fo great to make vs shake off y yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently. Sect. 5.

Sometime also to punish our offences committed: wherein we acknowledge that he doth the office of a good father toward vs, but contrariwise the vnfaithfull are oftentimes made more obstinate. 3. 8. 6.

A singular comfort when we suffer either shame or losse, or any other calamitie for righteoufnes: which crosse most properly belongeth to the faithfull. 3. 8. 7.

Howe necessarie it is for the faithfull, in the bitterneffe of afflictions, to be furnished with this thought, that God loueth them, but is angry with their faults. 3. 4. 3. 4.

Bishops.

The name of Bishop in the olde church was giuen to some one in eue-ry feuerall company of ministers, for politike order, and not that they should beare a lordly rule ouer other. 4. 4. 2.

It was the office as well of the bishop as of other priestes, to preach & minister the Sacraments. 4. 4. 3.

The olde Church did commonly obserue the order appointed by the Apostles in calling of ministers. 4. 4. 10. 11, 12, 13.

With what forme the ministers of the old Church were consecrate after their election. 4. 4. 14, 15.

Of the ceremonie of ordering of true Priestes. 4. 19. 28.

Oftentimes the order of Priestes, Prophets, and pastors, hath bin most corrupt in the Church. 4. 9. 3, 4, 5.

Of the gifts of benefices in the papacy. 4. 5. 6, 7.

How faithfully al Priestes in the papacie do execute their office, whether they bee Monkes, or secular, as Canons, Deanes, Parsons of paroches, Bishops. &c. 4. 5. 8, 9, 10, 11.

The negligence of them that gouerned Churches in the time of Gregorie and Bernard. 4. 5. 12.

The whole maner of ecclesiasticall gouernance as it is at this day in the papacy, is nothing else but a place of spoyle, wherein theeues do rob without lawe and measure. 4. 5. 13.

Of the dissolute licentiousnes in all partes of their life, which Priestes and bishops. &c. vse in the papacy. 4. 5. 14.

C.

Calling.

OF the effectual or inward calling, which is a sure testimonie of election, and hangeth vpon the only free mercie of God. 3. 24. 1, 2.

Against them, which in predestination doe make man a worker with God. Also against them that hang election vpon that which followeth election. 3. 24. 3.

The certieintie of our election is to be knowen by the word and calling of God, and we ought not to preace into the eternal counsell of God. 3. 24. 4.

The father hath chosen vs only in Christ, in him therefore let vs behold the stedfast ground of our election. 5. 24. 5. and so, that therof also wee may conceiue a sure confidence of perseverance to the end. 3. 24. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Two kindes of calling vniuersall, & speciall. 3.24.8.

It is proued by diuerse examples and testimonies of Scripture, that the elect before their Calling doe differ nothing from other men, and that it is false which some men no dreame, that there is a certaine seede of election planted in their hearts euen fro their natiuitie. 3.24.10,11.

It is shewed at large that as God doth by the effectualnesse of his Calling towards the elect, make perfect the saluation to which he had by his eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his iudgements against y^e reprobates, whereby he putteth his purpose concerning them in execution, & maketh a way for his predestination. 3.24.12,13,14.&c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals first began, & howe they haue so suddenly flart vp to so great honor. 4.7.30.

Ceremonies.

The olde Ceremonies are taken away, as touching their vse onely, but not as touching their effect, for wee haue the same effect at this day most evidently and effectually in Christ. And this doth nothing diminish their holinesse, as it is proued. 2.7.16. & being weyed by themselues & without Christ, they ar worthily called of Paul handwritings against vs. 2.7.17.

The ordinances concerning Ceremonies in the Popes lawe, do commaunde obseruation for the most part vnprofitable, and sometime also foolish although they haue a great seeming of wisdom: morcouer they oppresse consciences with their infinite multitude. 4.10.11,12,13.

The popish Ceremonies. can not be executed by this colour, that they be ordained for the instruction of the ignorant, as the Ceremonies of y^e lawe were: because there appeareth in this point a manifest differēce between vs & the people before Christ. 4.10.14.

The popish ceremonies are beleued to be Sacrifices cleansing sinnes, & deseruing eternal life: they are without doctrine, and are snares to catch mony. 4.10.15.

Charitie toward our neighbour.

It is proued, against the Sorbonists, that Charitie is the loue of our neighbour & not of our selues. 2.8.54.

Vnder the name of neighbour is contained euery man, be he neuer so much a straunger to vs, and ouremie. 2.8.55. and therefore the Schoolmen are condemned of ignorance, which of the commaundementes of God, not to desire reuenge, & to loue our enemies, haue made counsels, to the necessary keeping wherof monkes alone do binde themselues: and it is proued y^e the old doctors of y^e Church, yea & Gregorie himselve, thought otherwise. 2.8.56,57.

We haue need of patience, that wee be not wearie of doing good to other. And we ought not to haue respect to the vnworthinesse or other qualities of men which might withdrawe vs, but to God which so commaundeth vs. 3.7.6.

To the fulfilling of all the partes of Charitie, it is not enough if wee performe all the dutifull deedes of Charitie, but wee must do it with a sincere affection of heart. Wherein the chiefe point is, that wee take vpon our selues the person of him whome wee see to neede our helpe. So shall we auoid disdainfull pride & other corruptings of Charitie. 3.7.7.

Christ & y^e Apostles in rehearsing the summe of the lawe doe sometime leaue out the first table: not for that it more auaieth to the summe of righteousness to liue innocently with men, than

than to honour God with Godlinesse: but because vnfaigned Charitie is the prooffe of true Godlines. 2.8.52,53.

A confutation of the Pharisees of our time, which hold that we are iustified by charity, because Paul saith that Charity is greater than faith and hope 3.18.8.

An exposition of the tenth cōmandement, wherein (as in the former cōmandementes) is forbidden not only all purpose to hurt our neighbour, but also all lust or desire against Charitie. 2.8.49,58.

God doth for good cause and worthily require of vs so great feruentnes and vprightnes of loue. 2.8.50.

An exposition of the sixth commandement, wherein not only the slaughter or hatred of our neighbour is forbidden vs, but also the preseruing of his life is commanded vs, because man is both our flesh and the Image of God. 2.7.39,40.

Church.

The Church the mother of y^e faithfull. 4.1.1,4,5.

An exposition of this Article of the Creede, I beleue the holy Church. 4.1.2,3.

The holinesse of the Church is not yet perished. 4.8.12.

Of the inuisible Church: and of the visible Church, the signes whereof are the pure preaching of the worde and ministratiō of Sacramentes. 4.8.7,8,9 10,11.

Wherefoeuer those signes are, we ought not to depart from that fellowship. 4.8.12.

There may some faulte creepe in, either in doctrine or in ministratiō of Sacraments, for y^e which yet we ought not to cast of the communion of that Church, & much lesse for the imperfection of life and corruptnesse of manners: And herein the Anabaptistes are reprobud. 4.1.12,13,14,15,16.

The Church is none otherwise holy, but that it alway hath many faults, & yet it ceaseth not to be the Church, as is proued by testimonies of Scripture and the experience of all ages. 4.1.17,18,19.

See Ministry of the Church.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is proued by the example of the Apostles and Prophets, and of Christ himselve, that whatsoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not giuē to men, but to the word, the ministratiō whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was neuer lawfull for the Church, to teach any other thing, than y^e which she receiued of the Lord 4.8.1,2,3,4,8,9.

Christ hath euer taught his Church: and yet he hath vsed diuers maners of teaching according to the diuersity of times, ere the lawe was written, in the time of the lawe and the Prophetes, & last of all since that he himselve was openly shewed in the flesh. 4.8.5,6,7.

False Church.

Where lying and falshood hath gotten the vpperhand & reigneth, there is not the Church: And this is proued to bee in the papacy, although they there boast of a perpetuall succession of Bishops. 4.2.1,2,3,4.

They are not heretikes or schismatiques that depart from the papacie. 4.2.5,6.

How much soeuer a man make the best of the faultes of y^e popish Church, yet the state thereof is no better than was in the kingdome of Israell vnder Ierobeam. 4.2.7,8,9,10.

Yet by the goodnesse of God there remaine in the papacie certaine footstepes

steppes of the Church: and so is that fulfilled which hath bene written, that Antichrist should sit in the temple of God. 4.2. 11, 12.

A comparison of the power which the true Church hath in teaching, with the tyranny of the Pope & his ministers in forging new articles of faith. 4.8. 10. Of the papists principle, y^e the Church can not erre. 4.8. 13,

It is false to say that it behoued that the Church should ad to the writings of the Apostles. 4.8. 14, 15, 16.

A confutation of the argumentes which the papists make, to proue that there is power giuen to the Church to coine newe articles of faith. 4. 8. 11, 12.

Christ.

The Godhead of the Sonne is proued. 1. 13. 7.

Diuerse testimonies of Scripture, which affirme Christ to bee God, and first out of the olde testament. 1. 13. 9, 10. then out of the newe testament. Sect. 11.

A difference betweene Christs working of miracles, and the Prophets or Apostles doing of the like. 1. 13. 13.

It is proued by many & most strong testimonies of Scripture, that Christe rooke vpon him a true substance of mans flesh, & not a Ghost or counterfaite shape of man, as the Marcionites fained, nor yet a heauely body as the Manichees lyingly affirmed. 2. 13. 1.

An expostio of the places of Scripture, which Marcion writted to the confirmation of his error, and also of those which Manicheus wrested, and many of their disciples do wrest at this day. 2. 13. 2, 3. where also are confuted the new Marcionites, which to proue that Christ tooke his body of nothing doe holde that women haue no seede: There are also certaine other thinges confuted, which are obiected as absurdities. 2. 13. 4.

Christian libertie.

Christian liberty consisteth in three partes: The first is entreated of. 3. 19. 2, 3. The second. Sect 4, 5, 6. The third. Sect. 7, 8.

Christian liberty is a spiritual thing, and all they doe wrongfully expound it, which either make it a cloke for their lustes, or do abuse it with offence of their weake brethren. 3. 19. 9, 10.

Concupiscence or Lust.

The difference betweene concupiscence and counsell. 2. 8. 49.

That al the concupiscences of men are euill and guilty of sinne, not inso-much as they are naturall, but because they are all inordinate by reason of the corruption of nature. And so did Augustine thinke, if he be diligently weyed. 3. 3. 12. and this is proued by manie places of his writings. 3. 3. 13.

Confession Auricular.

The Table.

Concerning Confession, the scholē diuines do fight against the Canonists, affirming that it is not by the commandement of God. A confutation of the argumentes wherevpon the first sorte doe stande, first because the Lorde in the Gospel did send the Leprous whō hee had cleansed to the Priestes: and there is shewed the true meaning of y^e doing. 3.4.4.

A confutation of their second argument, for that the Lorde commaunded his disciples to lose & vnwind Lazarus whē he was raised frō deth. 3.4.5

A true exposition of two places by which they trauell to uphold their confession: that is to say, that they which came to the Baptisme of Iohn did confesse their sins, & Iames willesh vs to confesse our sins one to another. 3.4.6

The vse of cōfessing to a priest is very auncient, but yet free as a politike order, not as a law set by Christ or his Apostles: and afterward the same was abrogate by Nectarius Bishop of the Church of Constantinople, because of a Deacon which had vnder that pretence abused a womā. This tyrannous law was not laide vpon Churches before the time of Innocent the third, about three hundred yeares past, and the foolishnesse and barbarousnes of that ordinance is declared. 3.4.7.

Witnesses of the saide abrogation, out of Christostome Bishop of Constantinople. 3.4.8.

An exposition of Innocentes law concerning the confession of al sinnes where are rehearsed the diuerse opinions of the Romish diuines concerning the number and vse of keyes, and the power of binding & loosing. 3.4.15.

The lewdnes of al the particular articles of the law of confessing, & specially of y^e concerning y^e rehearsing of all sins. 3.4.16. & a plaine description of y^e crueltie wherewith poore consciences were by diuerse circumstances tormented therein. 3.4.17.

By a similitude is described howe a great part of the world hath hitherto obeyed such illusions. That it is an impossible law, & maketh men hypocrites. And thē is shewed a most certain rule of confession according to the example of the publicane. 3.4.18.

A confutation of this article, y^e sins are not forgien, & that the gate of paradise is shut, &c. vnles there bee first firmly cōceiued a vow of confessing, where also their obiection is confuted y^e iudgement can not bee pronounced til the cause be heard, that is to say, y^e absolution can not be giuen till all the sins be rehearsed. 3.4.19.

It is no maruell y^e we condemne & abolish auricular confession, & our aduersaries do falsly assigne so gret profit vnto it, forso much as on y^e other side it armeth mē to boldnes of sinnig. 3.4.19

They do falsly pretend y^e they haue the power of y^e keyes, sith they are not the successors of y^e Apostles, nor haue y^e holy ghost, forasmuch as they do dayly without consideration loose these things which the lord hath commanded to be bound, & bind what he hath commanded to be loosed. 3.4.20.

It is proued false y^e they say that the power of the keyes may sometime be vsed without knowledge, forasmuch as by y^e meane the absolutiō should be vncertaine. Where also is spoken of y^e absolution or condēnation which the ministers of the gospel or the Church do pronounce according to the worde, & of the certaintie thereof. 3.4.21.

The absolution of the Priestes in y^e papacie is vncertaine, as wel on the behalfe of him y^e assoileth as of him y^e cōfesseth; but contrariwise it is in the absolution of the Gospell, which hangeth vpon this onely condition, if the sinner seeke his purging in the onely only sacrifice of Christ, and do yelde to the grace offered vnto him. 3. 4. 22.

The Popish Doctors, when they alledge for themselves the power of loosing giuen to y^e Apostles, do wrongfully wrest to auricular cōfession those sayings which Christ spake partly of preaching of the Gospel, and partly of excommunication. The errors of Lōbard and such other in this matter: & concerning the manner of remission with enioyning of penance and satisfaction. 3. 4. 23.

A summe of all before spoken: and what the faithfull ought to thinke of auricular confession. 3. 4. 24.

True Confession.

What kinde of confession is taught vs by the worde of God, namely to cōfesse to God the knower of our hartes and of all our thoughtes. 3. 4. 9.

Out of this secret confession made to God, followeth a voluntarie confession before men, so oft as it is behouefull for the glorie of God or the humbling of our selues. And of this second kinde there was an ordinary vse in the old Church, & is also in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a speciall manner to be vsed, whensoever it shall happen that the people bee guiltie in any generall offence, or to be plagued with any calamitie. Of the profite of such confession. 3. 4. 10, 11.

Of two other sortes of priuate confession: of which the first is vsed for our owne cause, when we require comfort of our brethren, because the feeling of sins doth vex and trouble vs: in which case we must chiefly resort to our pastors: and this remedy is warely & moderately to be vsed, that no bondage be brought in. The other sorte is to appease and reconcile our neighbour, if he bee in any thing offended by our fault, vnder which kinde is contained their Confession which haue sinned so farre as to the offence of the whole Church. 3. 4. 12, 13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kindes of Confession. Of the fruite which they that confesse do receiue thereby, because they knowe that forgiuence of sinnes is declared to them by the messenger of Christe. 3. 4. 14.

Of confession of sinnes one sorte is generall an other speciall. 3. 20. 9.

Confirmation Popish.

Of the popishe sacrament of Confirmation foisted in place of that holy institution. 4. 19. 5.

That the example of the Apostles is wrongfully alleadged for defence thereof. 4. 19. 6.

It is blasphemie when they call it the oyle of saluation. 4. 19. 7, 8. & when they say that none are made full Christians till they be annointed with the Bishoppes Confirmation. Sect. 9. and when they say that this annointing is to be had in greater reuerence thā baptism. Sect. 10. 11.

It is to be wished, that the manner of the olde Church were brought in vse againe, to call children to giue accompt of their faith. 4. 19. 13.

Conscience.

Consciences, when they seeke assistance of their iustification before God ought to forget all the righteousnesses of the law. 3. 19. 2, 3.

The Consciences of the faithful do not follow the lawe as constraigned by necessitie of the lawe, but being free from the yoke of the law, doe voluntarily obey the wil of God. 3. 19. 4, 5, 6.

ward and indifferent things. 3. 19. 7, 8

The Consciences of the faithful being sette at libertie by the benefite of Christ, are made free from the power of all men: and howe this is to be vnderstoode: where also is spoken of the spirituall and ciuill gouernement, and what difference is to be put betweene them. 3. 19. 14, 15.

Of Councils.

We must keepe a meane in honouring of Councils, that we take nothing away from Christ, and our doctrine for the most part is confirmed by auncient Councils. 4. 9. 1.

By the Scripture the Couñcels haue no authoritie, vnlesse they bee assembled in the name of Christ: and what that is. 4. 9. 2.

It is false which the Papists affirme: that truth remaineth not in y^e Church vnlesse it bee among the pastors, and that the Church it selfe is not vnlesse it remaine to be seene in general Couñcels. 4. 9. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.

What thinges are to bee weyed in searching the authoritie of any Council: and that Augustine prescribeth a very good way therein. 4. 9. 8.

Councils one against an other. 4. 9. 9. and euen in those former and auncient Councils are found faultes and errors. 4. 9. 10, 11.

Creation of the world.

Although God ought to bee knowne by the Creation of things, yet least the faithful should fall away to the fained inuentions of the heathen, his will was y^e historie of the Creation should remaine written, & the time thereof expressed in the Scripture. 1. 14. 1. where their vngodly scoffing is constituted, which aske why it came not sooner in Gods mind to creat heauen & earth 1. 14. 1.

For the same purpose it is rehearsed that G O D ended his worke, not in a moment, but in six dayes: and likewise the order is set forth, namely that Adā was not created til God had first furnished the world with al plenty of good thinges. 1. 14. 2, 22.

A confutation of the error of Manicheus concerning two originall beginnings. 1. 14. 3.

It is proued by the Scriptures that y^e knowledge of God which appeareth in the workmanship of the worlde can not by it selfe alone bring vs into the right way. 1. 5. 13. and yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sect. 14.

Although the beholding of heauen and earth and the consideration of the ordering of thinges pertaining to men, doe moue vs to worshippe God, yet all these thinges passed away without profit, euen from the wisest Philosophers, 1. 5. 10.

Herupon came the infinite number of gods, and the contrarieties of opinion among the sects of Philosophers concerning God. 1. 5. 11.

The substance of God is incomprehensible: but in his workes, by engraving certain points of his glory therein he hath after a certaine maner presented himselfe to be seene. 1. 5. 1.

The wisdom of God is testified, not only by those thinges which philosophers & learned men do find by speculation in heauen and earth, but also which common men do perceiue by the onely helpe of their eyes. 1. 5. 2.

The consideration of the workes of God, that is to say, of the Creation of all things, ought to be applyed to two principall endes: first that we doe not with vnthankful neglecting or forgetfulnes passe ouer his vertues which he presenteth apparently to bee seene in his creatures. 1. 14. 21. secondly, y wee may learn to apply them to our selues, wherby we may stirre vp our selues to the trust, inuocation, praise, and loue of him. 2. 14. 22.

A confutation of the shamelesnesse or certaine papists, which say that the riotous excesse of priestes and of all the popish Church, is the gloriousnes of the kingdome of Christ which the holy prophetes spake of before. 4. 5. 17.

Death of Christ.

Although christ hath by the whole course of his obedience, that is to saye by his whole life and al the parts thereof, redeemed vs, yer y Scripture to set forth more plainly the manner of our saluation, doth ascribe the same as peculiar & proper to the death of Christ. In the which the voluntary yelding of Christ hath the first place, which yet was so voluntarie as hee gaue ouer his owne affection not without strife. Also his condemnation is to be considered: Wherein two things are to be noted, namely that Christ was reputed among the wicked, and yet that his innocency was oftentimes testified euen by the iudges owne mouth. 2. 1. 5.

The manner of his Death is to be marked, y is to say, the accursed crosse. And it is declared by many testimonies of Esay & the Apostles, that this behoued so to be, that the curse wich was dew to vs being cast vpō him and so ouercome and take away, we should be diluiered. And this was figuratiuely represented in the sacrifices of Moses lawe, which at the last was performed in Christ the originall truth of all figures. 2. 1. 6.

Both in the Death and buriall of Christ a double benefit is set before vs, that is to say, deliuerance from Death wherunto we were in bondage and the mortifying of our flesh. 2. 1. 6.

Descending of Christ to hell.

The Descending of Christ to Hell containeth the mysterie of a greate thing, and is of no small importance to the effect of our redemption. Diuerse expositions of this article are rehearsed and confuted. 2. 16. 8. 9.

A true, godly, holy and comfortable exposition thereof out of the word of God, which is also confirmed by the testimonie of the old doctors, y^e Christ did not onely suffer a bodily death, but also did feele the rigor of Gods vengeance, whereby hee might both appease his wrath and satisfie his iust judgement: and therefore it behoued that he should, as it were hand to hand wrestle with the power of hel and with y^e horror of euerlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemy, or angrie with him. But hee did suffer the greenousnesse of Gods seueritie, in respect that hee beeing stricken and beaten with the hand of God, did feele al the tokens of Gods wrath and punishment. 2.16.10,11.

A confutation of certaine wicked and vnlearned men, which at this day doe find fault with this exposition crying out that the sonne of God hath wrong done to him, and that hee is charged with desperation, which is contrary to faith. Therefore it is prooued against the with manifest testimonies, that these two things do very wel stand together, that Christ feared, was troubled in spirit, was affraide, was tempered in euery point as we are, and yet y^e he is without sinne. 2.16.12.

Deuelles.

Those things y^e the scripture teacheth concerning deuils, tend commonly to this end, y^e we should be carefull to beware of their deceits, & furnish our selues with those weapons which may be able to beat backe the most mightie enemies. 1.14.13.

That we should be the more stirred vp to doe so, it sheweth vs that there is not one or two deuils, but gret armies of euil spirits y^e make war against vs: & in what sense it sometime speaketh of the diuill in the singular nuber. 1.14.14

This ought to enflame vs to a continuall war with the diuel, for that hee is euery where called enemy to God and vs. 1.14.15.

The Deuill is naturally wicked, a murderer, a lyer, and forger of all maliciousnes. 1.14.15. But this euilnesse of nature is not by creation, but by corruption. 1.14.16.

It is curiositie to enquire of y^e cause, maner, time & fashion of the fall of the euill Angels, forasmuch as the scripture leaueth it vnspoken. 1.14.16.

This the Deuill hath of himselfe and of his owne naughtinesse, desirously and purposely to striue againste God, but he can do and performe nothing vnlesse God be willing & grant it. 1.14.17.

God so tempereth this gouernment, that he giueth Satan no reigne ouer the soules of the faithfull, forasmuch as in the ende they euer obteyne the victorie, although in some particular doinges they bee wounded and beaten down: but he onely giueth the wicked to him to gouerne, and to vse his power vpon their soules and bodies. 1.14.18.

A confutation of them which say that Deuelles are nothing else but euil affections or perturbations: and it is prooued by testimonies of scripture, that they are mindes or Spirites endued with sense and vnderstanding. 1.14.19.

Discipline.

Discipline is a thing most necessary in the Church. 4.12.1.

Of priuate admonishings, which is the first foundation of the discipline of the Church. 4.12.2.

Of the Ecclesiasticall Senate, that is to say, the seniors or elders, which together with the bishops haue the ouersight of manners. 4.3.8.

Princes as well as the common people ought to bee subiect to the Discipline of y^e church, & so was it wont to be in the

requireth a full & settled assurednes: & hereunto are to be referred al those titles of commendation wherewith y^e holy Ghost setteth forth the authoritie of the word of God. 3.2.15.

Many do so conceiue the mercy of God, that they receiue verie litle comfort thereof, because they dout whether he wil be mercifull to themselues or no; but there is a farre other feeling of the abundant store of Faith, the chiefe ground whereof is that wee do not thinke the promises to bee true without our selues onely, but rather y^e by inwardly embracing them we may make them our owne: Hereupon is gathered, who may truly be called faithfull. 3.2.15, 16.

Though the faithfull in reknowledging the goodnesse of God toward them are not onely oftentimes tempted with vnquietnesse, but also are sometime shaken with most grievous terrours: yet this withstandeth not but that faith bringeth assurednesse with it, because howsoeuer they bee troubled, yet they neuer fall & depart from y^e sure affiance which they haue conceiued of the mercie of God, but striuing with their owne weakenesse they alway get the vpper hand at last: which is prooued by many examples, in Dauid. 3.2.17.

A description of the battell of the flesh & the spirite within a faithfull soule. 3.2.18.

The assurednesse of Gods good will. 3.2.18.

A confutation of the moste pestilent subtle reasoning of certaine halfe papistes, which although they cōfesse that so oft as we looke vpon Christ, we finde plentifull matter to hope well; yet will needes haue vs to wauer and dout in consideration of our owne vnworthinesse. And it is prooued that wee ought neuer thelesse to looke for assured saluation, forasmuch as Christ by a certaine maruelous cōmunion doth daily growe together more & more into one bodie with vs. 3.2.24.

So soone as wee haue any one drop of faith we begin to behold God mercifull vnto vs, although a farre offindeede, yet with so assured sight, as wee knowe we are not decieued: Both these points are prooued by testimonies of Paul. 3.2.19, 20.

It is shewed by examples, howe Faith armeth and fortifieth it selfe with the worde of God to beare the violent assaults of tentations, & how the godly minde neuer suffereth the affiance of Gods mercie to bee plucked away from it, although it be assailed with many remnants of vnbeliefe and distrust. 3.2.21.

In the good wil of God, which faith is said to haue respect vnto, although faith doe chiefly looke vnto the assured expectation of eternall life, yet there are also contained promises of this present life and a perfect surerie of all good things, but the same such as may be gathered of the word: both these pointes are confirmed by testimonies of Scripture. 3.2.28.

Faith, although it embrace y^e worde of God in euery point, that is to say, in the commaundements also and in the prohibitions, and threatenings, yet hath her foundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in the free promise of mercie: and for this reason the Gospell is called the worde of faith; and is set as contrary to the lawe. 3.2.29.

Yet doe wee not by this distinction tearre faith in sunder as Pyghius shamefully cauilleth. 3.2.30.

Faith doth no lesse neede y^e worde of God, than the fruit doth neede the liuely roote of the tree, and with the word must be ioyned a consideration of

of the power of God, without y^e which mens cares will either not willingly heare the word, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered, in that that it is effectually, that is to say, by the workes of God, & by his benefits either particular or auncient, and such as hee hath bestowed vpon the whole Church. 3.2.31.

The faithful oftentimes so behaue themselves, that some errors are mingled with their faith, & they seeme to passe the bounds of the word, but yet so, y^e faith hath alway the vpper hand: This is proued by the exāples of Sara & Rebecca, whome in the crooked turnings of their minde, God did by a secret bridle hold fast in the obediēce of his word. 3.2.31.

By reason of our blindnes & stiffneckednes, the worde suffiseth not to make vs haue faith, vnlesse the spirite of God do enlighten our minde, and strengthen our heart with his power: & the same spirit is not onely the beginner of our faith, but also doeth encrease it by degrees. 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the moste parte of men a most strange doctrine, that no man can beleue in Christ, but he to whome it is giuen, yet, it is proued to bee most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and exam- ples. 3.2.34.

Therefore faith is called the Spirit of Faith, the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gift, which hee giueth by singular priuilege to whome he will, as it is proued by notable sentences taken out of Augustin 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the minde be enlightened with vnderstanding of the worde, vnlesse also the assurednes of the word be poured into the verie heart, both which things the Spirit worketh, which is therefore called the seale, the pledge, & the spirite of promise. 3.2.36.

Although faith bee tossed with diuerse doutings, yet it alway at the last escapeth out of the gulfe of tentations and receiueth most sweete quietnes. 3.2.37.

A confutation of the damnable doctrine of the Schoolemen, which saye y^e we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God toward vs, than by morall coniecture. 3.2.38.

They are proued to bee miserably blinde, in saying that it is rashnes for vs to conceiue an vndouted knowlege of the will of God: A good comparison of them and Paul in this point of doctrine. 3.2.39.

A confutation of their trifling shift, that although we may take vpon vs to iudge of the grace of God according to the present state of righteousnes, yet the knowledge of persevering to y^e end abideth in suspence. 3.2.40.

It is proued that the definition of faith taught in this chapter, Sect. 7. agreeth with the Apostles definition. Heb. cap. 11. And the error of y^e schoolemen, that charitie is before faith and hope, is confuted by the testimonie of Bernard. 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendred of faith, & is the vndeuided cōpanion of faith, so that whosoever lacketh hope, is proued also to haue no faith. Also faith is nourished & strengthened by hope, & how necessarie are the helps of hope to stablish faith, which is assailed with so many sortes of tentations. 3.2.42.

By reason of this conioyning and alliance of faith & hope, the scripture doth many times vse those two words without difference, and sometime ioyneth them together. A confutation of the error of Peter Lombarde, which maketh two foundations of faith, that is to say, the grace of God, & the merit of workes 3.2.43.

Feare.

The faithfull are oftentimes troubled with Feare & distrust by reason of the feeling of their owne weaknes. 3.2.17.

Another kinde of Feare conceiued in a godly heart, either by examples of Gods vengeance against the wicked, or by consideration of his owne misery: Such feare is so much not contrary to faith, y^e the faithfull are much exhorted to haue it. Neither is it any maruel, if there be in a faithfull soule both feare & faith, sith on y^e other side in y^e wicked there are both dull negligence & carefulesnes. 3.2.22, 23.

The feare of God proceedeth out of a double feeling, namely when wee honor God as our father, & feare him as our Lord: Neither is it any maruell if one minde haue both those affections. 3.2.26.

This feare differeth from the feare of the vnfaithfull, which they comonly call a seruite feare. 3.2.27.

Of forsaking of our selues.

The first beginning of framing our life after the rule set forth in the law, is to consider that wee are not at our own libertie, but hallowed & dedicate to God. And therefore wee ought to forsake our selues, & our owne reason (which as the Philosophers thinke, ought alone to be obeyed) to the end that we may be gouerned by y^e worde & Spirite of the Lord. 3.7.1.

Also that wee ought not to seeke those thinges that are our owne, but those thinges that are according to the will of the Lorde, and do serue to aduance his glorie. And that this is the forsaking of our selues, without the which there is a world of vices enclosed in the soule of man, and if there be any seeming of vertue at all, the same is corrupted with wicked desire of glorie. 3.7.2.

The forsaking or mortifying of our selues, is partly in respect of men, & partly, yea, & chiefly in respect of God. Toward other men, the scripture comandeth vs to do two things: namely to preferre them in honour before our selues, & with vnfained truth to employ our selues wholly to procure their comodities. How y^e first of these points is to be performed, is taught in the 3.7.4. & also how the Scripture lea- deth vs by the hande to the seconde point is shewed in the 3.7.5.

Free will.

Man was endued with Free will in the first estate of his creation. 1.15.8. which he lost by his fall. Of this the

The Table.

Philosophers were ignorant, & so all such as follow them, giuing freewill to man, are vtterly deceiued. 1. 15. 8.

The pliability or weake power of freewill, which was in the first man, doth not excuse his fall. 1. 15. 8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glorie of God, to acknowledge all our strength to bee but a staffe made of a reede, yea, but a smoke. In the meane time we must beware, that while wee take all vprightnesse from man, we do not thereof take occasion of slothfulnesse. But rather wee ought thereby to be stirred vp to seeke in God all the goodnes whereof wee our selues are void. The defenders of freewill do rather throwe it down headlong than stablish it. 2. 2. 1.

The Philosophers determine three powers of the soule, Vnderstanding, Sense, & Wil or Appetite: and they thinke that the reason of mans vnderstanding suffiseth for his good gouernance: that will is by sense moued to euill, so that it doth hardly yelde it self to reason, and sometime is diuersly drawen from the one to the other, but yet that it hath a free election and can not be stopped, that it may follow reason her guide in al things: finally that vertues & vices are in our powers. 2. 2. 2, 3.

The Ecclesiasticall writers, although they acknowledged the soundnesse of vnderstanding, & the freedom of will to haue bene sore wounded by sinne, yet haue spoken too much philosophically of this matter. The old writers did it for this purpose, first because they were loth to teache a thing that should be an absurditie in the commo iudgement of men, & also specially least they should giue a newe occasion of slothfulnes to the flesh being already to much dul to goodnes, as appeareth by many sayings of Chrystostoe &

Hierome. The Greeke doctors about all other, & specially Chrystostome, do exceede measure in aduancing freewill. But all the old writers generally, except Augustine, doe so varie & wauer in this point of doctrine, y^e there can almost no certaintie be gathered of their writings. They which came after the, fel one after another to worse & worse. The definitiōs of freewill out of Origen, Augustin, Bernard, Anselm, Peter Lombard, & Thomas. 2. 2. 4.

In what things they do commonly giue freewill to man, & of the three sorts of mans will. 2. 2. 5.

Also of the common distinction of the three sorts of libertie. 2. 2. 5.

Whether man be wholly deprived of power to do good, or whether hee haue yet some power though it bee weake: where it is spoken of the common distinction of grace working & grace working together, & what is admisse in the same distinction. 2. 2. 6.

Forasmuch as it cannot otherwise be said that man hath freewill, but because he doth euill of his own will, and not by compulsion, it had bene very good for the church y^e this word freewill had neuer bene vsed, which had raised vp men to a damnable trust of theselues. The old writers also do oft declare what they meane by y^e worde, specially Augustine, out of whō there are many places alleaged, where hee weakeneth & mocketh the strength therof, both when he calleth it Bondwill, & when he expoundeth the thing it selfe as it is at large. 2. 2. 7, 8.

Although y^e old Ecclesiasticall writers do sometime too much aduance freewill, and haue spoken doubtfully & diuersly in y^e matter: yet it appeareth by very many of their sayings, y^e they litle or nothing esteeming mans power, gaue the whole praise of al goodnes to the holy Ghost. Many such sentences tences are rehearsed out of Cyprian, Augustine, Eucherius, Chrysostome. 2.2.9.

The power of mans wil is not to be weyed by the successe of thinges, but by the choise of iudgement & the affection of will. 2.4.8.

It is proued against the defenders of freewill that sinne is of necessitie, & yet neuertheless ought to be impured: also that it is voluntarie, and yet cannot be auoided. 2.5.1.

A solution of an other obiection of theirs, wher they say that vnlesse both vertues & vices proceed of Free election of will, it were no reason that mā should either bee punished or rewarded. 2.5.2.

Also another obiection, wher they say that if this were not the power of our will, to choose good or euil, then of necessitie either all men shoulde be good, or all men euill. 2.5.3.

Against the same men also it is proued that exhortations, admonitions & rebukings are not in vain, although it be not in the power of the sinner to obey: and there is shewed what effect the same doe worke both in the wicked & in the faithfull. 2.5.4, 5.

It is not to be gathered by the commaundements and lawe of God, that man hath freewill & strength to perfourme them, for God doth not onely commaunde what ought to be done, but also promiseth grace to obey. 2.5.6, 7, 9.

This is proued as well in the commaundements which require the first conuersion to God, as also in those which speake simply of the obseruing of the lawe, and those which commaund men to continue in the receiued grace of God. For the same God which requireth those things, doth testifie y^e the conuersion of a sinner, holinesse of life, stedfastnes of continuance, are his free gifts, and the praise thereof is not to be parted betweene God & man. 2.5.8, 9, 11.

The conditionall promises, as, if ye wil, if ye heare, and such like, do not proue that there is in man a free power of willing or hearing; yet it is proued that God doth not mocke men in so bargaining with them. Also what is the vse of such protestations, both towarde the godly and toward the vngodly. 2.5.10.

The reprochings, wherein God saith to his people that they were the cause that they receiued not all kinde of good thinges at his hande, doe not proue that it was mans power to escape the euils wherwith they were afflicted. And there is spoken of the vse of such reprochings as well towarde them y^e obstinaty go forward in their faults, as toward the conformable that are conuerted to repentance. Also where as the Scripture doth sometime giue to vs the office of doing, it doeth so for no other reason but to awaken y^e slothfulnes of the flesh. 2.5.11.

The saying of Moses, The commaundement is necre to thee, in thy mouth & in thy heart &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of free will, forasmuch as he there speketh not of the bare commaundements, but of the euangelical promises of y^e law. 1.5.12.

No more do those places make for them, where it is saide that the Lorde looketh and watcheth to see what me will do. 2.5.13.

Also those places where good works are called ours, and wee are saide to do that which is holy and pleasing to the Lord. And here is shewed that the only spirit of God worketh all good motions in vs, but yet not as in stocks. 2.5.14, 15.

albeit with a dim sight, the glory wher-of now shineth in the Gospel, without any veile betweene vs and it. 2. 9. 1, 2.

In the same place also is shewed, that the Gospell is properly & specially called the publishing of the grace giuen in Christ, and not the promises that are written by the Prophets concerning the remission of sinnes. Against the doctrine of Seruetus, which taketh away the promises vnder this pretence that by the faith of y^e Gospell we haue the fulfilling of all the promises, it is proued that though Christ offer to vs in the Gospel a present fulnesse of spirituall good things, yet the enioying thereof lyeth hidden vnder the custody of hope so long as wee liue in this world, and therefore we must yet rest furnished with the holy Ghost, to se-uer vs from the world, and therefore he is called the Spirite of sanctification.

Why he is sometime called the Spirit

There is no danger least man should take too much from himself, so that he learne that which wanteth in himselfe is to be recouered in God. It is a deuillish word, although it be sweet to vs, y^e listeth vp man in himselfe: for repulsing whereof, there are recited out of the Scripture many weighty sentēces, which do rigorously throw down man: and also there are recited certain promises, which do promise grace to none but to them that doe pine away with feeling of their owne pouerty. 2.2.10.

Iustification of Faith.

Of the Iustification of faith, & first of the disination of the name, & of the thing it selfe. 3. 11.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iustification of faith is of great importance. 3. 11. 1.

It is shewed by the Scripture what it is to be iustified by workes, and what it is to be iustified by faith. 3. 11. 2, 3, 4.

A confutation of the error of Oslander, concerning essenciall righteousness, which taketh from men, the earnest feling of y true grace of christ. 3. 11. 5, 6, 7, &c. to the 13.

A confutation of Oslanders inuention, that whereas Christ is both God and Man, hee was made righteousness to vs in respect of his nature of Godhead and not of his Manhood.

3. 11. 8, 9.

Against them which imagine a righteousness compounded of faith & workes, it is proued that when the one is stablished, the other must needs be ouerthrown. 3. 11. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

It is proued by y Scripture against the Sophisters, that this is a sure principle, that we are iustified by faith only. 3. 11. 19, 20.

It is proued by testimonies of scripture y the righteousness of faith is reconciliation with God, which consisteth onely vpon y remission of sins. 3. 11. 21, 22.

By the onely intercession or meane of the righteousness of Christ, we obtayne to be iustified before God. 3. 11. 23.

That we may be throughly perswaded of the free Iustification, wee must lift vp our mindes to the iudgement seate of God: before which, nothing is acceptable but that which is whole & perfect in euery behalfe, the dreadfull maiestie whereof is described by many places of scripture. 3. 12. 1, 2.

All godly writers do shew that whē men haue to doe with God, the onely place of refuge for conscience is in the free mercie of God, excluding a trust of workes: And this is proued by testimonies of Augustine and Bernarde. 3. 12. 3.

Two things are to bee obserued in free Iustification: the first, that the Lord keepe fast his glorie vnminshed: which is done whē he alone is acknowledged to bee righteous, for they glorie against God which glorie in themselves. 3. 13. 1, 2. the seconde, that our consciences may haue quietnesse in the sight of his iudgement. 3. 13. 3, 4, 5.

It is most false that mens minds are drawn away from affection of wel doing, when we take from them the opinion of deserting. 3.16.2,3.

It is a most vaine slander, that men are prouoked to sinne, when wee affirme a free forgiuenesse of sinnes, in which we say that righteousnes consisteth. 3.16.4.

Knowledge of God.

To knowe God, is not onely to conceiue that there is some God, but to vnderstande so much as behooueth vs to know of him, and so much as auai-leth for his glory, and is expedient. 1.2.1.

The knowledge of God ought to tend to this ende, first to frame vs to feare and reuerence: and then that by it guiding & teaching vs we may learn to aske al good things of him, & to account the same receiued at his hande. 1.2.2. & 1.5.3.

The Philosophers had no other knowledge of God than y^e which made them vnexcusable, but did not bring them to the truth. 2.2.18.

This perswasion is naturally planted in all men, that there is some God 1.2.3. and that to this ende, that they which doe not worship him, may be condemned by their owne iudgement. 1.3.1.

Though all men knowe by nature that there is a God, yet some become vaine in their superstitions, and other some of set purpose do maliciously depart from God. 1.4.1.

Laye.

The law, that is to say the forme of religion set forth by Moses, was not giuen to holde the olde people still in it, but to nourishe in their heartes the hope of saluation in Christ vntill his comming: which is preoued by this that Moses repeateth the mention of the couenant: and by the order of the ceremonies appointed as well in sacrifices as in washinges, also by the office of priesthood of y^e tribe of Leui & y^e honor of kingdō in Dauid & his posteritie. The law also of y^e ten cōmandements was giuen to prepare men to seeke Christ

The Table.

Christ 2.7.1,2. and that is done, when it maketh vs vnexcusable beeing on eue-ry side conuicted of our sins, to moue vs to seeke for pardon of our guiltines 2.7.3,4.

It is proued by the Scripture and declared that the obseruing of the law is impossible .2.7.5.

There are three vses and offices of the morall law: The first is, that shewing vnto vs the righteousnesse which onely is acceptable vnto God, it may be as a glasse for vs, wherein wee may beholde our weaknesse, and by it our wickednesse, and finally by them both our accursednes: Neither turneth this to any dishonour of the lawe, but maketh for the glorie of the bountifulnes of God, which both with help of grace aideth vs to doe that which wee are commaunded, and by mercie putteth away our offences. Neither yet doth this office altogether cease in the reprobate 2.7.6,7,8,9.

The seconde office, is to restrain the reprobate with feare of punishmēt least they vnbrideledly committe the wickednesse which inwardly they alway nourishe and loue: and also to drawe backe the children of God before their regeneration from outward licentiousnesse .2.7.10,11.

The third office, concerneth the faithfull: for the lawe although it bee already written with the finger of God in their heartes, yet profiteth the two wayes: For by studying vpon it they are more confirmed in the vnderstanding of the will of the Lord, and are stirred vp & strengthened to obedience, that they goe not out of kinde by the sluggishnesse of the fleshe. 2.7.12,13. For as touching the curse of the Lawe, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extende it selfe against them in damning & destroying them. 2.7.14.

By the ten commandements of the Law we learne the same things which wee but slenderly tast by instruction of the lawe of nature: First that we owe to god reuerence, loue, and feare, that righteousnesse pleaseth him, and wickednesse displeaseth him: finally, that examining our life by the rule of the Lawe, wee are vnworthie to bee accounted among the creatures of God, and that our power is vn sufficient, yea no power at all to performe the lawe. Both these pointes engender in vs humilitie & abacing of our selues, which teacheth vs to flee to y^e mercy of God, and to craue the helpe of his grace. 2.8.1,2,3.

Forasmuch as God the Lawmaker is spirituall, that is to say, speaketh as well to the soule as to the bodie, therefore the lawe likewise requireth not only an outward honestie, but also an inwarde and spirituall righteousnesse and a verie angelike purenesse. 2.8.6. which is proued by Christes owne exposition, when hee confuted the Pharisees wrong interpretation, which required only a certaine outward obseruation of the Lawe. 2.8.7.

There is alway more in the commaundementes and prohibitions of the Lawe, than is expressed. Therefore for the right & true expounding of them, it behooueth to wey what is the entent or end of euerie of them: Then from that which is commaunded or forbidden, wee must drawe an argument to the contrarie, that wee may vnderstande, that not onely an euill is forbidden, but also the good is commaunded which is contrary to that euill. 2.8.8,9.

An exposition of the commaundements of God: Where is declared that the Lorde is the beginning of the law, to stablishe his owne maiestie, vseth three arguments: First by chalenging to himselfe the soueraigne power and right of dominion ouer vs, he doth as it were by necessitie drawe vs to obey him: secondly hee allureth vs with the swetnes of the promise of grace: thirdly he moueth vs to obedience with rehearal of the benefit that we haue receiued. 2.8.13, 14, 15.

The Law teacheth not only certain introductions and principles of righteousnes, but the very accomplishment thereof, the expressing of the image of God, and the perfection of holinesse: which law is all contained in two points that is to say, the loue of God & of our neighbour. 2.8.51.

Lawes Politike.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magistrate, nor the Magistrat without Lawes. A confutation of them which say that a common weale is not well ordered, vnlesse it be gouerned by the politike lawes of Moses. For this purpose is rehearfed a diuision of y^e Lawes of Moses into morall Lawes, ceremonies, and iudiciall Lawes, and the end of euery one of them being discussed, it is proued that it is lawfull for euery seuerall nation to make politike Lawes, 4.20.14, 15. so that they agree with that naturall equitie, the reason wherof is set forth in the morall Lawe of Moses. Therefore it is shewed by examples y^e they may alter the ordinances of penalties according to the diuersitie of the countrey, time, and other circumstances. 4.20.16.

Lying.

An exposition of the ninth commandement: wherein the Lord forbiddeth falshood, wherewith we by Lying or backebiting, doe hurte any mans good name, or hinder his commodity 2.8.47.

We many times sinne against this commandement, although we do not Lye. But in this point there must be a difference wisely made betweene the flaudring which is here condemned, and iudiciall accusation or rebuking, which is vsed vpon y^e desire to bring to amendment. 2.8.48.

Life of a Christian man.

The lawe containeth a rule how to frame a mans Life, and diuers places also of the Scripture do here and there declare it, and not without an orderly maner of teaching, although not so exquisite and curious as the Philosophers do. 3.6.1.

Herein the Scripture doeth two things: it stirreth vs vp to the loue of righteousnesse & teacheth a rule how to followe the same. The first point it worketh by diuers argumentes & reasons. 3.6.2. and herein the Scripture layeth much better foundations, than can be founde in all the bookes of the Philosophers. 3.6.3.

Against them that pretend a knowledge of Christ, when their life & manners resemble not the doctrine of Christ. 3.6.4.

Though perfection were to be wished in all mé, yet we must also acknowledge for christians y^e most part of men which haue not yet proceeded so farre.

We.

We must alway endeuor forward, and not despire for the smalnesse of our profiting. 3.6.5.

Out of a place of Paul these are gathered to be the parts of a wel framed Life: cōsideration of the grace of God, forsaking of wickednes and of worldly lustes, sobernes, righteousnesse, godlinesse (which signifieth true holinesse) and the blessed hope of immortalitie. 3.7.3.

Life present, and the helps thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the best way how to vse the goods of this Life. 3.10.4,5.

Two faultes must be auoyded: that we do neither binde our consciences wih too much rigorousnes nor giue lose reignes to the intemperance of men. 3.10.1,3.

God both in clothing and in foode provided not onely for our necessitie, but also for our delite. 3.10.2.

It is most necessarie, that euery one of vs in all the doings of his life do loke vpon his vocatiō, that we attempt nothing rashly or with doubtfull conscience. 3.10.6.

God disdaineth not to provide also for the necessities of our earthly body, and in what sense wee aske of him our daily bread. 3.20.44.

Life so come.

God doth by diuers mysteries teach vs the contempt of this present Life, that wee may earnestly desire Life to come. 3.9.1,2,4.

Such a cōtempt of this life is required of vs, y we neither hate it nor be vnthankfull to God, of whose clemency it is a testimony to the faithful. 3.9.3

Magistrates

THe office of Magistrates is not only holy and lawfull before God; but also the most holy and honorable degree in all the life of men, and this is proued by diuerse titles wherewith the Scripture doth set it forth, and by the examples of holy mē, which haue borne ciuill power. 4.20.4.

This consideration is a pricke to godly Magistrates to moue thé to the doing of their dutie, and also it is a cōfort to ease the hard trauailes of their office. 4.20.6.

A confutation of them, which saye that though in the old time vnder the lawe Kings & Iudges ruled ouer Gods people, yet this seruile kind of gouernmēt doth not agree with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his gospel. 4.20.5,7.

They erre which exclude the Magistrates from the charge of religion, forasmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the law: It is proued by Scripture, that they are ordeined protectors and defenders as wel of the worshipping of GOD as of common peace and honestie, which they can not thorowly performe without the power power of the sword. 4. 20. 9.

A declaration of this question by scripture, howe the magistrates may bee godly, and also drawe their sword, and shed the blood of men, and it is prooved, that they are so farre from sinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, and a profe of their godlinesse. Here in the Magistrats must beware of two faultes, namely extreme rigoroufnes, & superstitious desire of pitie. 4. 20. 10.

It is the duty of subiectes towarde Magistrates, to thinke honourably of them as of the ministers and deputies of God, forasmuch as cōcerneth their degree, but not y they should esteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4. 20. 12.

It is also their duetie with mindes heartily bent to the honoring of the to declare their obedience towarde the, whether it bee in following their decrees or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their safetic & prosperitie, to raise no tumultes and not to thrust themselues into the office of the Magistrate. 4. 20. 23.

Euen wicked princes of euill life, and which rule tyrannously (for so much as pertaineth to publike obedience) ought to be had in as great reuerence and honour as wee woulde giue to the best king that might bee, 4. 20. 24, 25. because euen they also haue the publike power not without the prouidence and singular power of God. Which is prooned by diuerse testimonies and examples of scripture: and there is shewed with what considerations those subiectes ought to bridle their owne impatiēce which liue vnder suche vngodlie and wicked tyrantes. 4. 20. 26, 27, 28, 29, 31.

It is not lawfull for private men to rise vp against tyrantes, but onely for them which by the lawes of the kingdome or of the countrie, are the defenders of the libertie of the people. 4. 20. 31.

The Lord by his maruellous goodnesse and prouidence, doeth sometime raise vp some of his seruantes to punish tyrantes, and sometime also hee directeth therevnto the rage of wicked men while they intende an other thing. 4. 20. 30.

In the obedience which is due to the cōmaundementes of kings and rulers this is alway to bee excepted, that it drawe vs not away from the obedience of God: Neither is any wrong done to them when we refuse to obey them in such thinges as they cōmand against God: And this is our duty, how great and present peril soeuer do hang vpon such constancie. 4. 20. 32.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himselfe not onely moued to seeke God, but also lead as it were by the hande to finde him. 1. 1. 1.

The creation of man is a notable shewe of the power, wisdom, & goodnesse of God: wherefore Man is by some of the Philosophers called a little world. 1. 1. 3.

The vnthankfulness of men, which feeling tokens of the prouidence of God both in their soule and bodie, yet doe not giue G O D prayse. 1. 1. 4.

Two sortes of knowledge of our selues, y one in our first original estate, the other after Adams fall, and the latter is not to be receiued without considering the first, least wee shoulde seeme to impute corruption to God the author of nature. 1. 1. 5. 1.

The knowledge of himselfe is most necessary for Man, which consisteth in this (as the truth of God prescribeth) that first considering to what ende he is created, and endued with excellent gifts, giftes, he should hang altogether vpon God, of whom he hath all things by gite: then, that weying his own miserable estate after the fall of Adam, hee should truly loth him selfe and conceiue a newe desire to seeke God, that in him hee may recouer these good things, of which he himselfe is found vtterly void and empirie. Wherefore we must beware that in this pointe we hearken not to the iudgment of the fleshe and to the bookes of Phylosophers, which while they withhold vs in considering onely our good things, would carrie vs away into a most wicked ignorance of our selues. 2. 1. 1, 2, 3.

Man can neuer come to the trewe knowledge of himselfe, vnlesse hee haue first beholden the face of God; that is to say, till hee haue begon to knowe and weigh by the word of God what and howe exact is the perfectiō of his righteousness, wisdom, and power, to the which wee ought to be made of like forme. 1. 1. 2.

Euē the most holy men were stricken with feare and astonishment, whē God did extraordinarily shew his presence and glory vnto them. 1. 1. 3.

That whole man is corrupted in both partes of him; (that is to say both in vnderstanding minde, and in heart or will) is prooued by diuerse titles wherewith the scripture describeth him, specially when it saith that hee is fleshe: And there is declared that this worde flesh is not referred only to the sensuall part but also to the superiour part of the soule. 2. 3. 1.

That men doe in vaine seeke for any good thing in their owne nature, is prooued by Paul, which intreating of the vniuersall kindred of the children of Adam, and not rebuking the corrupted maners of some one age alone, but accusing the perpetuall corruption of nature, taketh from men righteousness, that is to say vprightnesse, & purenesse, and then vnderstanding, & last of all the feare of God. 2. 3. 2.

A confutation of the obiection concerning certain heathen men, which forasmuch as they were all their life long by the guiding of nature bent to the endeuour of vertue and honestie, doe seeme to warne vs, that we should not esteeme the nature of Man, altogether corrupt. Therefore it is declared that in the vnbeleuers God doth not inwardly cleanse the corruption of nature wherewith Man is in eche part defiled, (as he doeth in the elect) but by his prouidence sometime hee bridleth it in them, that it breake not forth into deedes, and restrayneth it by diuerse wayes, so much as he knoweth to be expedient for preserving of the vniuersall state of things. 2. 3. 3.

Those vertues which wee reade to haue beene in heathen Men, are not sufficient proues of the purenesse of nature, forasmuch as their mind was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or some other poison, & not directed with desire to set forth the glory of God: and also forasmuch as those vertues are not the common giftes of nature, but the speciall graces of God, which he diuersly and by a certain measure giueth to prophane Men, as oftentimes to kinges, & sometime to priuate Men. 2. 3. 4.

See Image of God in Man.

Marriage.

An exposition of the seuenth commandement; wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication & requirerth chastitie and cleannesse, which we ought to keepe & preserve both in our mind, and in our eyes, and in the apparell of our bodie, and in our tongue, and in y moderate vse of meate and drinke. 2. 8. 41, 44.

The Table.

Conti[n]e[n]ce is a singular gi[ft]e of God, which he giueth not to all men, but to some, yea and that sometime for a season: As for them to whome it is not graunted, let them alway flee to Mariage, which is ordeined of y^e Lord for the remedie of mans necessitie. 2. 8. 41, 42, 43.

Maried persons must beware that they commit nothing vnbecoming the honestie & temperance of Mariage: Otherwise they seeme to be adulterers of their owne wiues, and not husbands. 2. 8. 44.

The papistes doe wrongfully call mariage a sacrament: And their reasons are confuted. 4. 19. 34. It is proued that the place of Paul, wherwith they seeke to cloke themselues, maketh nothing for them. 4. 19. 35.

In the meane they disagree with themselues when they exclude priests from this sacrament, & do say that it is vnclannesse and defiling of y^e flesh. 4. 19. 36.

By this false colour of Sacrament, the Pope with his cleargie haue draven to theselues the hearing of causes of Matrimony, and haue made laws of mariage, which partly are manifestly wicked against God, & partly most vniust toward men, which lawes are rehearsed 4. 19. 37.

Mediator Christi.

It behoued that Christ, to the ende that he might performe the office of Mediator, should be made man, forasmuch as God had so ordeined, because it was best for vs, sith none other could be the meane for restoring of peace betweene God and vs, none other could make vs the children of God, none other could assure vnto vs the inheritance of the heauenly kingdome, none other could be remedie for mans obedience against mans disobedience. 2. 12. 1, 2, 3.

A confutation of their fantastical conceit, which affirme that Christe should haue become man, although there had needed no remedie for the redeeming of mankinde. And it is proued by many reasons and textes, that forasmuch as the whole scripture crieth out that hee was cloathed with flesh, to the ende that he might be the redemer, therfore it is too great rashnesse to imagine any other cause or purpose. 2. 12. 4.

Neither is it lawfull to searche further concerning Christ. and those that do search further, do with wicked boldnesse runne forward to the faining of a new Christ: And herein Osiander is reproued, which hath at this time renewed this question, and affirmeth that this error is confuted by no testimonie of Scripture. 2. 12. 5.

And the principle is ouerthrowen which he buildeth on, that man was create after y^e image of God, because hee was formed after the likenesse of Christ to come, that he might resemble him whome the Father had already decreed to cloth with flesh: And there is shewed that the image of god in Adam, was the markes of excellencie wherewith God had garnished him, which doth also shine in the Angels. 2. 12. 6, 7.

A solution of other obiections or absurdities which the same Osiander seareth: namely, that then Christ was borne & creat after the image of Adam but as it were by chauce: & that the Angels shoulde haue lacked their head, & men shold haue lacked Christ their king. 2. 12. 6, 7.

How the two natures do make one person of the mediator in Christ: Which is shewed by a similitude take of the ioyning of the soule and bodie in one man: And then it is proued by diuerse places that the scripture doth

many times giue vnto Christ those things which properly belongeth to ϕ godhead, and sometime those things which must bee referred onely to the manhoode, and sometime giueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figuratiue manner of speache is called Communicating of properties, 2.14.1, 2. and sometime also giueth to Christ those things which do comprehend both natures together, but doe seuerally well agree with neither of them. Which last point the most part of the old writers haue not sufficiently marked: Yet it is good to be noted, for the dissoluing of many doubt, and for auoyding of the errors of Nestorius and Eutiches. 2.14.3, 4.

A confutation of the error of Seruettus, which had put in the steede of the sonne of God, an imagined thing made of the substance of Gods spirite, flesh, & three elements vncreate: His subtletie is disclosed, and there is proued (which thing hee denieth) that Christ was the sonne of God, euen before that he was borne in the flesh, because he is that worde begotten of the father before all worldes. 2.14.5.

Also it is proued that he is truly & properly the sonne of God in fleshe, that is to say in the nature of Man, but yet in respect of his godhead, and not of his flesh, as Seruettus babbleth. 2.14.6.

An exposition of certaine places which Seruettus and his disciples do enforce for defence of their error: There is also another cauillation of his disclosed, that Christ before that he appeared in the flesh, is in no place called the sonne of God but vnder a figure. 2.14.7.

Also there is opened the error of all them which doe not acknowledge Christ the sonne of God but in the flesh: And there are briefly rehearsed the grosse subtleties of Seruettus, wherewith he hath bewitched himself and other, ouerthrowing that which pure faith beleueth concerning the person of the sonne of God: And thereupon is gathered that with the craftie darke subtleties of that filthy dog, the hope of saluation is vtterly extinguished. 2.14.8.

Merit of Christ.

It is truly and properly sayd that Christ merited for vs the grace of god and saluation: Where it is proued that Christ was not onely the instrument or minister of saluation, but also the author and principall doer thereof: And in so saying, the grace of God is not defaced, because the merite of Christ is not set against mercie, but hangeth vpon it. And those things which are Subalterna, fight not as contraries. 2.17.1.

The distinction of the Merite of Christ & of the grace of God is proued by many places of Scripture. 2.17.2.

There are alleged many testimonies of Scripture, out of which it is certainly and soundly gathered, that Christ by his obedience hath truly purchased & deserued fauour for vs with his father. 2.17.3, 4, 5.

It is a foolish curiositie to enquire, whether Christ hath deserued any thing for himselfe: and it is rashnes to affirme it. 2.17.6.

Merites of Workes.

The boastings that are made of the Merites of workes, doe ouerthrowe as well the praise of God in giuing righteousnes, as also the certaintie of saluation. 3.15.

Whosoeuer first applyed the name of Merit to good workes in the sight of Gods iudgement, he did against the purenes of faith. And though the olde fathers fathers vsed that name, yet they vsed it that they haue in many places shewed that they attribute nothing to workes. 3.15.2.

An exposition of certaine places, wherewith the Sophisters go about to prooue that the name of Merite towards God is founde in the Scripture 3.15.4.

It is proued by authoritie of the Apostles & Augustine, that the rewards of righteousness doe hang vpon the meere liberalitie of God. 2.5.2.

It is proued that this is a false saying, that Christ Merited for vs onely the first grace, and that afterwarde we do Merite by our owne workes. 3.15.6, 7.

There be certaine things touching merites in the title of Iustification by faith.

Ministerie of the Church.

Of the Ministry of the Church, and of them which despise this manner of learning. 4.1.5.

Of the efficacie of the Ministry. 4.1.6.

God, which might teach y^e Church either himself alone or by Angels, yet doeth it by the Ministry of men for three causes. 4.3.1.

The Ministerie of the Church is garnished with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture. 4.3.2, 3.

Of Apostles, Prophetes, Euangelists, Pastors, and Teachers: and what is the seuerall office of euery of them. 4.3.4, 5.

The chiefe parts of the office of Apostles and pastors are to preach the Gospel, and Minister the Sacraments. 4.3.6.

Pastors are so bound to their Churches, that they may not remoue to any other place without publike authority. 4.3.7.

They are called in the Scripture, Bishops, Priests, Pastors and Ministers which gouerne Churches 4.3.8.

No man ought to thrust in himselfe in the Church to teach or gouerne: But there is a calling required. 4.3.10.

The preaching of the word of God is compared to seeede which is scattered in the ground: Whereby wee vnderstand that the whole encrease proceedeth of the blessing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghost. 4.14.11.

What maner of mē ought to be chosen Bishops, & in what sort and of whō they are to be chosen, and with what forme or ceremony they are to be ordered. 4.3.11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.

The olde Church before the papacy, diuided al their Ministers into thre degrees, Pastors, Elders, and Deacons. 4.4.1.

Of the commission to remit and retaine sinnes, or to bind & loose, which is a part of the power of the keyes, & pertaineth to y^e Ministerie of the word 4.11.1.

Monkerie.

Monasteries in olde time were the seeede plottes of ecclesiasticall orders: And there is described out of Augustin the forme of the old Monkerie, & how they were wonte at y^e time to get their liuing with the labour of their hands. Whereby appeareth that at this day the maner of popish Monkerie is far otherwise. 4.13.8, 9, 10.

Of the proude title of perfection wherewith the Monks do set out their kinde of life. 4.13.11. because they bind themselues to keepe the counsels of the Gospell (as they call them) whereunto other Christian men are not bounde. Sect. 12. and because they haue forsakē all their possessions. Sect. 13.

The Table.

As many as go into Monasteries, do depart from the Church, sith they openly affirme that their Monkerie is a forme of second Baptisme. 4.13.14.

The Popish Monkes do in maners much differ from the olde Monkes. 4.13.15.

Some things are to be misliked euen in the profession of the old Monkerie, and they that were the authors therof brought a perillous example in to the Church. 4.13.16.

Monkes with their vowes do consecrate theluelus not to God but to the Deuill. 4.13.17.

As all vowes vnlawful & not rightly made, are of no value before God, so they ought to be voyde to vs. 4.13.20.

Therefore they which depart from Monkerie to some honest trade of life, are wrongfully accused of faith breaking and periury. 4.13.21.

Obedience of children to parentes.

AN expositiō of the fifth commandment: The end and sum therof. 2.8.35.

How farre this worde honoring extendeth: & there be three partes therof, Reuerence, Obedience, & Thankfulness. 2.8.36.

Of the promise adioined to the fifth commaundement, concerning long continuance of life, and howe farre the same pertayneth to vs at this day. 2.8.37.

How and by howe diuerse meanes, God sheweth his vengeance vpon the disobedient: Yet obedience is not due to parentes and other, but sauing the lawe of God. 2.8.38.

Offences.

What Offences are to be auoyded, and what to be neglected: what is an Offence giuen, and what an offence taken. 3.19.11.

It is declared by the doctrine and example of Paul who be weak, to whom we must beware that we giue no offence. 3.19.12.

Whereas we are commanded to beware that we Offende not the weake, the same is meant only in things indifferent: Therefore they doe wrongfully abuse this doctrine which say that they heare masse for the weakes sake. 3.19.13.

Officials.

Of popish Bishops Officials, as they call them. 4.11.7,8.

Orders Papisicall.

The Sacrament of Order breedeth to the papists seuen other petie Sacramentes, of whose names and differences they themselues be not yet agreed. 4.19.22.

Their sonde and vngodly foolishnesse, forasmuch as they make Christ fellow Officer with them in euery one of them. 4.19.23.

Of Acoluthes, Dorekeepers & Readers, whom the papistes do make Orders of the Church and Sacramentes, 4.19.24, & with what ceremonies they consecrate them, Sect. 27.

Of Exorcistes or Coniurers an order of the popish church. 4.19.24.

The orders of Psalmistes, Dorekeepers and Acoluthes, are vaine names among the papists, forasmuch as they themselues doe not execute the Offices, but some boy, or any layman. 4.19.24.

Of the shauing of the Clergie, and the signification therof by the doctrine of the Papistes. 4.19.25;

They doe wrongfully apply it to Pauls example, which shaued his head: when he tooke a vowe, or to the olde Nazarites. 4.19.26.

It is shewed out of Augustin whence it first began. 4.19.27.

Of the three hier orders: and first of Priesthood or sacrificerhip; where is shewed that the papistes haue most wickedly peruerted the order appointed by God, and doe wrong to Christ the onely & eternall sacrificing priest. 4.19.28.

Of their blowing at the making of popish Priests, and howe in that ceremonie they do wrongfully counterfait Christ: Where is declared y the Lorde did many things which he would not haue to be examples for vs to follow. 4.19.29.

Of the vndelible character or vndefaceable marke of the oyle wherewith popish Priestes are annoynted at their creation. And howe the same is wrongfully applied to the children of Aaron. But these Priestes in coueting to be like the Leuites, are apostataes from Christ. 4.19.30, 31.

Original sinne.

A definition and expounding of Original sinne. 4.15.10, 11, 12.

A true definition of Originall and a declaration of the same definition: Wherein is shewed, that not only punishment came from Adam vpon vs, but also that the infection distilled from him remaineth in vs, and how it is the sinne of an other & also our own sinne: Finally, that such infectio pearced not onely into the inferior desire, but also into the verie vnderstanding minde & bottome of the heart, so that there is no part of the soule free from corruption. 2.1.8, 9.

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faults, because we say that men are naturally faultie: And there is proued, that man is corrupt by naturall vicioufnesse: (to the ende that no man shoulde thinke it to be gotten by euill custome) but yet such as proceeded not from nature, but is an accidentall qualitic, & not a substantiall propercie fro the beginning. 2.1.10, 11.

Patience.

A Part of y forsaking of our selues, in respect of God, is contentation of minde and sufferance: Which we shall perourme, if in seeking the commoditie or quietnesse of this present life wee yeeld our selues wholly to the Lorde, and do not desire, hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of prospering than by his blessing. 3.7.8.

So shal it come to passe that we shal neuer seeke our owne commodities by vnlawful meanes or with wronging of our neighbours: also that we shall not burne with vnmeasurable desire of richesse or of honors: finally if things prosper well with vs, wee shall yet be holden from pride, & if they happen ill, we shall yet be restrained from impatience, 3.7.9. Which extendeth to all chaunces wherunto our present life is subiect, whereof the faithfull doe alwayes acknowledge the hand of God their father, and not fortune, to be the gouernor. 3.7.10.

The Patience of the faithfull is not such as is without all feeling of sorow, but such as beeing vpholden by godly comfort, fighteth against the naturall feeling of sorow. Therefore the Patience of the Stoikes is to bee reiected: neither is it in it self any fault to weep or feare. 3.8.8, 9.

A description of that struing which is engedred in the hearts of the faithfull by the feeling of nature, which feeling cannot be cleane done away, and by the affection of godlinesse wherewith that same feeling must bee subdued & tamed. 3.8.10.

There is great difference between Philosophicall & Christian patience: Forasmuch as y^e philosophers do teach vs to obey because wee so must of necessitie: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also because it is profitable for vs. 3. 8. 11.

Pardons.

The so long continuing of pardons declareth in how deepe darkenesse of errors men haue been drowned these certaine ages past. 3. 5. 1.

What Pardons are by the papistes doctrine: Whereby is proued y^e they are a dishonoring of y^e bloud of Christ: A comparison of Christ & popish pardons. 3. 5. 1.

A confutation of the wicked doctrine of pardons, by the notable sayings of Leo bishop of Rome, & of Augustine. And there is shewed that the bloud of martyrs is not vnlawfull, although it haue no place in forguienes of sinnes. 3. 5. 3. 4.

Either the Gospel of God must ly, or pardons must be lying deceits. And there is shewed what seemeth to haue bene the beginning of them. 3. 5. 5.

Penance, the Popish Sacrament.

Of the vsage of the olde Church in publike penance: and of the laying on of handes at reconciliation. Also how in processe of time the laying on of hands was vsed in priuate absolutions. 4. 19. 14.

The diuerse opinions of y^e scholemen howe penance is a Sacrament: And there is shewed that the definition of a Sacrament doth not agree wth it. 4. 19. 15, 16.

It is a lye, and a deceitfull error which they haue inuented concerning the Sacrament of Penance: and it is a wicked and blasphemous title wherewith they haue garnished it, a second boorde after shipwracke from Bapistine. 4. 19. 17.

Perseuerance.

See booke 2. Chap. 5. Sect. 3.

A confutation of the most wicked error, that Perseuerance is giuen of God according to the Merit of men, so as euery man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankful for the first grace: and in this opinion is shewed a double error. Of the comon distinction of grace working, & working together: & howe Augustine vsed it, qualifying it with an apt definition. 2. 3. 11.

Politicke gouernement.

There is a difference to bee made betweene policie, and the inwarde gouernement of the soule. Their doctrine is to be reiected which go about to ouerthrowe policie as a thing not necessarie for Christians, or as a thing y^e ouerthroweth the spirituall libertie of the soule. Also those flatterers are to be reiected, which do giue too much vnto it, & do set it in cōparison against the authoritie of God. 4. 20. 1, 2.

Policie is the gift of God, which bringeth great commodities to mankind, & no small helpe to the defence of the state of religiō. Politicke gouernment hath three partes, the magistrat, the Lawes & the people. 4. 20. 3.

Of three formes of Ciuile gouernment, Aristocracie the gouernmēt of the best chosen men, Democracie the gouernment of the people, Monarchie the gouernement of one: it can not simply bee determined which of these is the best: yet it commeth to passe by the fault of men, that it is safer & more tollerable to haue many to gouerne than one to reigne. But all these forms are of God, & diuersly disposed by him, therefore it is the duty of priuate men to obey, & not to make inuouation of states after their owne will. 4. 20. 8.

Of the immunitie that the Romish clergy take to themselves, which was altogether vnknowne to the Bishops of the old Church. 4.11.15.

In matters of Faith, the iudgement in the old time pertained to y^e Church and not to Princes; although sometime Princes enteredmeddled their authority in ecclesiasticall matters, but the same was donne to preserve and not to trouble the order of the church Pope.

It is proued that the supremacie of the sea of Rome is not by the institution of Christ. 4.6.1,2,3,14.

Neithe had Peter any principality in the Church or among the Apostles. 4.6.5,6;7.

Neither is it profitable nor may be, that one man shoulde beare rule ouer the whole Church. 4.6.8,9,10.

Although Peter had had a supremacy in y^e Church, yet it foloweth not that the seat of that supremacie ought to be at Rome. 4.6.11,12,13.

It is proued by many argumentes that Peter was not bishop of Rome. 4.6.14,15.

The supremacy of the sea of Rome is not according to the vse of the olde Church. 4.6.16,17.

Of the beginning & encreasings of the Romish papacy, vntill it aduanced it selfe to that height, whereby both the liberty of the Church is oppressed and all moderate gouernement hath bene ouerthrowen. 4.7.

In the most part of the councilles, the Bishoppe of Rome nor his legates had not the chiefe place, but some other of the bishops had it at the Councille of Chalcedon: but yet without order. 4.7.1,2.

Gregory pronounceth that the title of vniuersall bishop was denised by the deuil, and published by the crier of Antichrist. 4.7.4.

It is proued by the vse of the olde Church, y^e it is false which the bishop of Rome boasteth, that he hath iurisdiction ouer all Churches. 4.7.5. Whether ye consider y^e ordering of bishops; Sect. 6. or ecclesiasticall admonitions and censures, Sect. 7. or summoning of Councils; Sect. 8. or authoritie of higher appeales Sect. 9.10.

The old Bishoppes of Rome in the most part of their Epistles did ambitiously set foorth the glory of their sea, but those Epistles at that time had no credite: Also they did thrust in certain forged things as though they had ben written in the old time by holy men. 4.7.11,20.

Although in the time of Gregorie the authoritie of the bishop of Rome was greatly encreased; yet it is proued by his writings that it was then farre from vnbridled dominion & tyranny. 4.7.12,13,22.

There was strife for the supremacy betweene the bishop of Constantino- ple and the bishop of Rome. 4.7.14,15, 16: vntill Phocas graunted to Boniface the thirde, that Rome shoulde be the heade of all Churches: which afterwarde Pipine confirmed, when hee gaue to the sea of Rome iurisdiction ouer the Churches of Fraunce. 4.7.17.

From thence forth the tyranny of the sea of Rome encreased more and more, partly by ignorance & partly by negligence of Bishops: which destruction of the whole order of the Church Bernarde lamenteth and layeth to the Popes charge. 4. 7. 18, 22.

The insolence & shamelesnes of the bishops of Rome in setting forth their owne supreme authoritie. 4. 7. 19, 20. which is reprov'd by sayings of Cyprian and Gregory. Sect. 21.

Rome can not be the mother of all churches, forasmuch as it is no church. Neither can the bishoppe of Rome be head of bishops, sith he is no bishop. 4. 7. 23, 24.

Prayer.

Truc faith can not be idle from calling vpon God. 3. 20. 1.

How necessary & how many wayes profitable is the exercise of Praying, 3. 20. 2. although the Lorde will not cease while we craue not, nor needeth any to put him in mind, Sect. 3.

The first rule of well framing our Prayer, is that we be no otherwise disposed in heart and mind then becometh them that enter into talke with God. 3. 20. 4, 5.

The second rule is, that in praying we alway feele our owne needines, and that earnestly considering y we want all these things that we aske, wee ioine with our Prayer an earnest and feruēt desire to obtaine. 3. 20. 6.

We ought to pray at all times, and in the greatest quietnes of our estates, the onely remembrance of our sinne ought to bee no small prouocation to moue vs to that exercise. 3. 20. 7.

The third rule of praying well, is y we forsake all confidence of our owne glory, least if we presumptuously take any thing, be it neuer so litle, vnto our selues, wee with our vaine pride, fall downe from his face. 3. 20. 8.

The beginning of Praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble and plaine confession of offence. 3. 20. 9.

In what sense the Praiers of certain holy men are to be taken, in which to entreate GOD, they seeme to allege their owne righteousnes. 3. 20. 10.

The fourth rule of Praying well, is that being so ouerthrowen and beate downe with true humilitie, wee be neuerthelesse encouraged to Pray with an assured hope to obtaine: So in our Prayers, faith & repentance do meeete together. 3. 20. 11.

Of the certainty of faith, whereby the faithfull do determine that God is fauorable vnto them: And how necessary the same is in Prayer: Neither is that certainty weakened, when it is ioined with acknowledging of our owne misery. 3. 20. 12.

These foure rules of Praying well, are not examined with so extreeme rigor, but y God herein doth beare with many infirmities, yea many intemperances in them that bee his, which is proued by many examples. 3. 20. 16.

A confutation of the argumentes wherewith the papistes labour to confirme the inrercession of dead Saincts. 3. 20. 23, 24, 25, 26.

It is vnlawfull to direct our Prayers to dead Saincts forasmuch as this kind of worshipping doeth most properly belong to God alone. 3. 20. 27.

Of the sorts of Prayer, and chiefly of thanksgiuing: Also of the continuall exercise of the faithfull in Prayer and thanksgiuing. 3. 20. 28, 29.

Predestination.

It is proued that the doctrine of Predestination is a doctrine of most sweet fruit. There are rehearsed three principall profits thereof: and they are admonished which being moued with a certaine curiositie doe beyonde the boundes of Scripture breake into the secretes of the wisdom of God. 3. 1. 1. 2. and also they which woulde haue all mention of Predestination to be buried. Sect. 3. 4.

What is Predestination, and what is the foreknowledg of God, and how the one of them is wrongfully set after the other. The example of Predestination in all the offspring of Abraham in respect of other nations, is confirmed by many testimonies of Scripture 3. 21. 5.

Also there is shewed a speciall Predestination, whereby euen among the Children themselves hee hath made difference betweene some and other some. Sect. 6, 7.

A confirmation of the doctrine of Predestination taken out of testimonies of Scripture. 3. 22.

God as well in election as in reprobation hath no respect of workes neither passed nor to come, but his good pleasure is the cause of both. 3. 22. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11.

This is proued by Augustine, Sect. 8. and the trifling suttle deuse of Thomas to y^e contrary is confuted. Sect. 9.

The promises of saluation are not directed to all, but peculiarly to the elect. 3. 22. 10.

These two sayings do not disagree, that God by y^e outward preaching of the word caletch many, & yet he giueth the gift of faith to fewe. 3. 22. 10.

Against them which so confesse election, that yet they deny any to bee reprobate of God. 3. 23. 1.

The reprobate do in vaine contend with God, forasmuch as God oweth them nothing, and willeth nothing otherwise than righteously, and they themselves may finde iust causes of their damnation in themselves. 3. 23. 2, 3, 4, 5.

A confutatiō of them which gather of the doctrine of Predestination, that God hath respect of persons. 3. 23. 10, 11.

Against those hogges which vnder color of Predestination do go carelesly forwarde in their sinnes: and against all them which say that if this doctrine take place, all endeour of well working decayeth. 3. 23. 12.

Against them which say that this doctrine ouerthroweth all exhortations to godly life, it is proued by Augustine y^e preaching hath his course, and yet the knowledge of Predestination is not hindered thereby, 3. 23. 13.

In this point of doctrine we must so temper our maner of teaching y^e truth, that so farre as we may, wee wisely beware of offence. 3. 23. 14.

Whereas some obey the preaching of the worde of God, and other some despise it, or bee more blinded and hardened therby, although this come to passe by their owne malice and vnthankfulnesse, yet wee must therewith also know, that this diversity han-

An exposition of certaine places wherein God seemeth to denie that it cometh to passe by his ordinance that the wicked perish, but inasmuch as against his will they wilfully bring destruction vpon themselves. And there is shewed that those places make nothing against the doctrine of Predestination. 3. 24. 15, 16.

The vniuersalnesse of the promises of saluation, maketh nothing against the doctrine of Predestination of the reprobate: and yet not without cause are they framed vniuersally. 3. 24. 16.

Here also are confuted certain objections of the which denie this point of doctrine.

Priesthoode, Kingdome, and Prophetical office of Christ.

That we may knowe to what ende Christ was sent of his father, and what he brought vnto vs, three thinges are cheefely to be considered in him, his Prophetical office, his kingdome, and his Priesthoode: and therefore is giue to him the title of Christ (or Messias which signifieth annointed) although hee be specially so called in respect of his kingdome. Albeit that God alway gaue prophetes and teachers to his Church, yet it is propoued that all the Godly looked for full light of vnderstanding, onely at the comming of Messias: and that hee when hee appeared was annointed a Prophet, not onely for himselfe, but also for all his body. 2. 15. 1, 2.

As touching his kingdome, first we must note the spiritual nature thereof, wherevpon also is gathered the eternall continuance of it, which is of two sorts: the one pertaineth to the whole body of the Church, the other is proper to euery member: both sortes are declared and plainly set foorth by testimonies of scripture. 2. 15. 3.

It is declared that the profit of the kingdome of Christ cannot otherwise be perceiued of vs, but when we knowledge it to be spirituall: and the same profite consisteth in two thinges, namely that it enricheth vs with all good things necessarie to eternall saluation, secondly y^e it fortifieth vs with strength and vertue against the deuill and all his assaults: And so Christ reigneth for vs rather than for himselfe, wherevpon wee are rightfully called Christians: Where it is saide that at the last day hee shall yield vp his kingdome to God and his father, and such like sayings the same maketh nothing against the eternitie of his kingdome. 2. 15. 4, 5.

As touching his Priesthoode, that the efficacie and profite thereof may come to vs, it is shewed that wee must beginne at the death of Christ. Herevpon it followeth that hee is an euerlasting intercessor, by whose mediation wee obteyne fauour, whereby ariseth to Godly consciences both boldnesse to pray, & quietnesse: finally that hee is so a priest, that hee ioyneth vs in the fellowship of so great an honour, to the ende that the Sacrifices of prayers and praise which came from vs, may be acceptable to God. 2. 15. 6.

Promises.

Not without cause all the Promises are concluded in Christ: forasmuch as euery promise is a testifying of the lawe of God towards vs, and none of vs is beloued of God without Christ. Neither was Naaman the Syriā, Cornelius the captaine, nor the Eunuche to whome Philip was caried, without knowledge of Christe, although they had but a very small tast of him, and

The Lorde, to the ende to fill our heartes with loue of righteousnesse & hatred of wickednesse, was not content to set forth bare commaundementes onely, but addeth promises of blessings both of this present life & of eternall blessednesse, & also threatenings both of present miseries, and of eternall death: The threatenings declare the great purenesse of GOD: the Promises doe shewe his great loue to righteousnesse, and his wonderfull goodnesse towards men. 2. 8. 4.

Providence of God.

Prophane men, by fleshly vnderstanding doe confesse God the creator, otherwise than wee doe by faith: forasmuch as faith doeth teache that hee is also the gouernour of all things not by a certaine vniuersall motion, but by a singular providence which extendeth euen to y^e least sparow. 1. 16. 1.

They which giue any thing to fortune, doe burie the Providence of God, by whose secreete counsel all successes are gouerned. 1. 16. 2.

Things without life, although ech of them haue their propertie naturally planted in them, yet doe not put forth their force, but so farre as they bee directed by the present hande of God: which is prooued by the sonne, before which hee woulde both light to bee, and the earth to abounde with all kinde of good things: which also we reade to haue stande still by the space of two dayes, and gone backe two degrees at the commaundement of God. 1. 16. 2. also by the starres and signes of the heauen, which the vnbeleueurs do feare. Sect. 3.

The almightinesse of God is busied in continuall doing, so that it extendeth to euery particular acte, and nothing happeneth but by his counsel: Which who so do not acknowledge they defraude God of his glorie and doe extenuate his goodnesse: But we on the other side doe receiue double fruite thereof. 1. 16. 3.

It is prooued that the Providence of God doth not onely behold things that are done, but gouerneth all successes: Whereby is ouerthrowen the fained inuention of bare foreknowledge and of vniuersall Providence onely: also the errour of the Epicures is confuted, and of them which giue to God a gouernaunce onely aboute the middle region of the aire. Yet there may a certaine vniuersall Providence bee graunted, but so, that the speciall Providence bee not darkened, which doth gouerne not onely certayne but all particular doings. 1. 16. 4, 5.

That not onely the beginning of motion is in the disposing of God, is prooued by the plentifulnesse of one yeare and the barrennes of another, for whereas God calleth the one his blessing, and the other his curse and vengeance. 1. 16. 5.

The Providence of God in gouerning the worlde, is chiefly to be considered in mankind, and in the diuerse estate of all men, and diuerse disposing of successes. 1. 16. 6, 7. Against them which cauill, that this doctrine of the Providence of God, is the Stoikes doctrine of fate or destinie 1. 16. 8.

Whether any thing happen by fortune or chaunce: Where is rehearsed the saying of Basilus Magnus, that Chaunce

The Table.

Chaunce and Fortune are wordes of heathen men: also the saying of Augustine, that hee repented that he had vsed the name of fortune. Yet those things may bee saide to happen by fortune in respect of vs, which being considered in their nature, or weyed according to our knowledge, do seeme so, although in the secrete counsell of God they be necessarie: Also al things that are to come, may bee saide to bee happening, inasmuch as they be vncertaine to vs. 1. 16. 8, 9.

What things are to be considered, that the doctrine of the Prouidence of God may be referred to a right hand, that wee haue the profit thereof: and where the causes of those things that happen, appeare not vnto vs, we must beware that wee doe not thinke, that things are rolled by the sway of fortune: but wee must so reuerence his secrete iudgements, that we esteeme his will the most iust cause of al things 1. 17. 1.

Against certaine dogges, which at this day doe barke against the Prouidence of God, it is prooued by the Scripture that whereas God hath so reuealed his will in the lawe and the gospel that he illuminateth the minds of them that bee his with the spirite of vnderstanding, to perceiue the mysteries therein contained, which otherwise are incomprehensible, yet the order of governing the worlde is called a bottomlesse depth, because whē we knowe not the causes thereof, yet we ought reuerently to honour it. 1. 17. 2.

Such prophane men doe foolishly comber them selues, when they alleadge that if the doctrine of the Prouidence of God be true, then the prayers of the faithfull in which they aske any thing for time to come are vayne, no counsell is to bee taken for things to come, and then men which doe any thing against the lawe of God, do not sinne: These daungerous errors they shall auoide, which in considering the Prouidence of God, shall frame them selues to true modestie. 1. 17. 3.

As concerning things to come, it is prooued that the scripture doth well ioyne the aduise mentes of men with the Prouidence of God: because wee are not hindered by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne things: For the knowledge of consulting and taking heede, are inspired into men by the Lorde, whereby wee may serue his Prouidence, in the preferuing of our owne life. 1. 17. 4.

In all successes of time past the will of God doeth gouerne: and yet the doers of wicked deeds are not excused, because they are accused by their own conscience, and doe not obey the wil of God, but their owne lust: They are indeede the instruments of God, prouidence, but so, that they finde the whole euill in them selues, and in God is founde nothing but a lawfull vse of their euilnesse. 1. 17. 5. and 1. 18. 4. Where also the same thing is shewed in the election of king Ierobeam, the tenne tribes forsaking the house of Dauid, the slaughter of the sonnes of Achab, and in the betraying of the son of God.

A Godly and holy meditation of y^e Prouidence of God, which is taught by the rule of godlinesse: first that being certainly perswaded that no thing happeneth by fortune, wee alway cast our eyes to God the cheefe cause of all things: then that wee doubt not that his singular Prouidence watcheth for vs, whether wee haue to doe with men as well euill as good, or with his other creatures: To which vse wee must applie the promises of God: in the

the scripture which testify the same, the examples whereof are rehearsed. 1.17.6.

Wee must also adioyne those testimonies of scripture which teach that all men are vnder the power of God, whether wee neede to get their good wils or restrain the malice of our enemies: which last point God worketh diuerse wayes, sometime by taking away their wit, sometime when he granteth them wit, he frayeth them that they dare not goe about that which they haue conceived: and sometime also when hee suffereth them to goe about it, he breaketh their enterprises: Vpon which knowledge necessarily followeth a thankfulness of minde in so prosperous successe of things. 1.17.7.

In aduersitie when we are hurte by men, is required pacience and quiet moderation of mind: Which is shewed in the examples of Ioseph being afflicted of his brethren, Iob persecuted of the Chaldees, and Dauid rayled vppon of Semei. If wee happen to be distressed with any misery without the worke of men, this selfe same doctrine is the best remedie against impatience because the scripture testifieth, y^e euen aduersities also do come from God. 1.17.8.

A Godly man principally regarding the prouidence of God, yet will not leaue inferiour causes vnmarked. Therefore if hee haue receiued a benefite of any man, he will hartily know and confesse himselfe to be bounde vnto him. If hee haue taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or want of heed, he will impure it vnto himselfe, much lesse will he excuse his owne offences. In things to come cheefely he wil haue consideration of inferiour causes, but yet so that in determining he will not be carried away with his owne wit, but commit himselfe to the wisdom of God: neither shall his trust so stay vpon outward helps, that hee will carelesslie rest vpon them if hee haue them, nor be dismayed for feare if he want them. 1.17.9.

A large description of the inestimable felicitie of a godly mind which resteth vpon y^e Prouidence of God: & on the otherside the miserable carefulnes wherwith we must needs be distressed when the weakenesse of this earthly corage maketh vs subiect to so manie diseases, sith our life and safetic is besieged with infinite dangers at home, abroad, vpon the land, in the water, by men, & by deuils. 1.17.10,11.

Those places of scripture where it is said that God repented him: make nothing against the doctrine of Prouidence, for asmuch as therein (like as also when hee is sayd to be angry) the scripture applying it selfe to our capacitie describeth him, not such as he is, but such as wee feele him to be. Likewise, where hee spared the Niniuites, to whome he had threatned destruction within fortie dayes: whereas hee prolonged the life of Ezechias for many yeares, to whome he had declared presēt death: because such threatnings containe an vnexpressed condition. Which is well proued by a like example in king Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abrahams wife. 1.17.12,13,14.

A confutation of them, which coueting to get a praise of modestie, goe about to maintaine y^e righteousness of God with a lying defence, when they say: y^e those things which Satan & al the reprobate do naughtily, are done by y^e sufferance of God, & not by his prouidence and wil. And it is proued by the affliction of Iob, the deceiuing of Achab, the killing of Christ, the incestuous adulterie of Absolon, and many other examples, that men do work nothing thing but that which he hath alreadie decreed with himselfe, and doeth appoint so to be by his secreete direction. 1.18.1.

And this hath place, not onely in outward doings, but also in secret motions. For it is prooued by the hardening of Pharao and other testimonies that God worketh euen in the mindes also and hearts of the wicked. Neither maketh it any thing to the contrarie, that oftentimes the worke of Satan is vsed therein: For God worketh neuertheless, but after his owne manner, vsing a iust reuenge, 1.18.2. and therefore God is not y author of sinnes. Sect. 4.

They are proued guiltie of intolerable pride, which refuse this doctrine vnder pretence of Modestie. A confutation of their obiection whē they say, that if nothing happen but with y will of God, then hath he in himselfe two contrary wils, forasmuch as hee doeth appoint those things to be done by his secret counsel, which hee hath openly forbidden by his lawe. And there is shewed, that God doeth not disagree with himselfe, y the will of God is not chaunged, that he doth not faine himselfe to nil y which he willet: but whereas there is in God, but one simple will, y same to vs appeareth diuers, because for the weakenes of our vnderstanding, we conceiue not how he diuersely both willet not, and willet one selfe thing to be done. Finally it is proued by Augustine, that man sometime with good wil willet something which God willet not: & sometime willet y thing with euil will, which God willet with good will. 1.18.3.

The consideration of Gods power in gouerning this frame of heauen and earth, and all the parts that are in the. 1.5.5.

The fellowship of men is so gouerned by the prouidence of God, that he sheweth himselfe liberall, mercifull, righteous, and seuer. 1.5.6.

Those things which in the life of men are compted chaunces, as well of prosperitie as aduersitie are so many tokens of the heauenly prouidence, 1.5.7. & ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect. 9.

Howe God worketh in the heartes of them that bee his, and Satan in the that be his, but yet so, that they are not excused. 2.4.1.

God worketh also in the wicked; & euen in the same worke wherein Satan worketh, and yet is not God so said to bee the author of sinne, neither is Satan or the wicked excused, but there is difference betweene the one and the other, both in the end and manner of doing. 2.4.2, 5.

The olde writers oftentimes referred these things, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or sufferance, least the wicked shoulde thereby take occasion to speake irreuerently of the workes of God. But the Scripture, when it saith that God blindeth, hardeneth, and such like, declareth somewhat more than a sufferance: although God doe worke two wayes in the reprobate, namely by forsaking them, and taking his spirite from them, and also by deliuering them to Satan the minister of his wrath. 2.4.3, 4.

The ministerie of Satan is vsed to stirre forward the reprobate, when fouer the Lord by his prouidence directeth them hither or thither. 2.4.5.

Purgatorie.

Wee ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatorie, forasmuch as it is a damnable inuention of Satan which maketh void the crosse of Christ, &c. 3.5.6.

wrongfully wrest to the confirmation of their Purgatorie. 3. 5. 7, 8, 9.

An aunswere to the obiection of the papistes, that it hath bene an auncient vsage of the Church that prayers should be made for the deade. Where is shewed that this was done by them in the olde time, without the worde of God, by a certaine wrongfull imitation, least Christians if they were slow in hauing care of funerals & the dead, should seeme worse than heathen me. Yet herein was a great difference betweene this slipping of these old men; and the obstinate error of the papists 3. 5. 10.

R.

Redeemer Christ.

The knowledge of God the Creator is vnprofitable vnto vs, vnlesse faith do also folow, setting him forth in Christ a father and Redeemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the worlde in all ages hath bene holden among the Children of God. 2. 6. 1.

It is prooued by diuerse arguments and testimonies of scripture, that the happie state of the Church hath alway bene grounded vpon the person of Christ. For both the first adoption of the choosen people, and the preferuing of the Church, the deliuerance of them in perils, and the restoring after their dissipation, did alway hang vpon the grace of the mediator. And the hope of all the Godly was neuer reposed any other where than in Christ. 2. 6. 2, 3, 4.

It is to be diligently considered how Christ hath fulfilled the office of Redeemer, that wee may finde in him all thinges necessarie for vs; sith (as Bernarde saith) hee is to vs light, meate, oyle, fault, &c. 2. 16. 1.

An exposition howe wee should say that God was our enemy vntill he was reconciled to vs by Christ, whereas to giue Christ to vs, and to preuent vs with mercie, were signes of the loue wherewith hee before embraced vs. And there is shewed that the scripture vseth this speech and such other, to aplye it selfe to our capacitie: and yet it doeth not the same falsely. And al this is proued by the authority of scripture and the testimonie of Augustine. 2. 16. 2, 3.

Regeneration.

- Against certain Anabaptists which inuent a phrentike intemperance instead of spiritual Regeneration, namely that the Children of G O D being nowe restored into the state of innocencie, ought no more to bee careful to bridle the lust of the fleshe, but onely to followe the spirit for their guide. 3. 3. 14.

The rest pertaining to this matter, see in the title of Repentance.

Religion.

Necessitie enforceth the reprobate to confesse that there is some G O D. 1. 4. 4.

The verie wicked and godles men are compelled, whether they will or no, to feele that there is a God. 1. 3. 2. and in what sense Dauid saith y they thinke that there is no God. 1. 4. 2.

Remission of sinnes.

Against them which dreame a perfection in this life, which taketh away neede of asking pardon. 3. 20. 45.

Of remission of sinnes: and in what sense sinnes are called dettes, and how wee are sayde to forgiue other y haue offended against vs. 3. 20. 45.

Of the distinction of fault & peine, where-where with most strong testimonies of Scripture, the doing error of the papistes is confuted, namely y when the fault is forgiuen yet God rety-neth the paine, which remaineth to be redeemed with satisfactions: 3. 4. 29, 30. and there also is shewed y they can not scape away with their distinction betweene cuerlasting peine & temporall peines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they go about to cōfirme their error: where is declared y there are two kindes of the iudgement of God: the one of vengeance, the other of chastisement, which are wisely to be distinguished asunder. 3. 4. 31.

The first of these, that is to saye, vengeance, the faithfull haue alway earnestly prayed to escape: the other that is to say chastisement, they haue receiued with quiet minde, because it hath a testimonie of loue. And where it is saide that God is angrie with his Saints, the same is not meant of his purpose or affection to punish them, but is spoken of the vehement feeling of sorowe wherewith they are stricken so soone as they beare any parte of his seueritie: and this is profitable for them. On the other side the reprobate, when they are stricken with the scourges of God, do already after a certaine manner beginne to feele the peines of his iudgement. All which thinges are prooued by testimonies of the Scripture, and also by the expositions of Chrysofome & Augustine. 3. 4. 32, 33.

God when hee had forgiuen the adulterie of Dauid, chastised him both for common example, and also to humble him: and for this reason hee daily maketh the faithfull (to whome he is mercifull) subiect to the common miseries of this life. 3. 4. 35.

An exposition of the article of the Creede, concerning remission of sins. 4. 1. 20, 21.

The keyes were giuen to y church, to forgiue sinnes, not onely to men at their first conuersion to Christ, but to the faithfull all their life long. 4. 1. 22.

This doctrine is proued by testimonies of Scripture against the Nouatians and certaine of the Anabaptistes, which saine that the people of God are by baptisme regenerate into an angelike life, and afterwarde there remaineth no pardon for them that fall. 4. 1. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27.

A confutation of them which make a voluntary transgression of the lawe a sinne vnardonable. 4. 1. 28.

Repentance.

Repentance commeth of faith, & goeth not before it. 3. 3. 1.

A confutatiō of their reasōs which thinke otherwise, but hereby is not signified any space of time wherein faith breedeth repentance: but only is shewed that no man can earnestly endeavour himselfe to Repentance vnlesse hee knowe himselfe to be Gods. Of y error of certaine Anabaptists, Iesuits, & such other which appoint to their nouices, certaine days for repentance 3. 3. 2.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two partes of Repentance, namely Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, & Viuification which they wrong fully expounde to be comfort by the feeling of the mercie of God, whereas it rather signifieth a desire to liue wel. 3. 3. 3.

They do also make two other sorts of Repentance, the one of the lawe, y other of the Gospell: where also are shewed examples of either sorte out of the Scripture. 3. 3. 4.

A true definition of Repentance taken out of the Scripture, And howe Repentance though it cannot be secured, yet ought to be distinguished from faith. 3.3.5.

A plainer declaration of the definition of Repentance: where first is shewed that there is requiring a turning to God, that is to say, an alteration, not onely in outward works, but also in the soule it selfe, 3.3.6. then that it proceedeth of an earnest feare of God: Where also is entreated of the sorrowfulnes that is according to god 3.3.7.

Thirdly, that saying is declared y^e Repentance consisteth of two parts, the mortification of the flesh, & the quickening of the Spirite. 3.3.8.

Both these things do wee obtaine by partaking of Christ, the first by communicating of his death, the seconde of his resurrection. Therefore Repentance is a newe forming of the image of God in vs, and a restoring into the righteousnesse of God by the benefit of Christ: And this restoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3.3.9.

But there remaineth in all y^e saints, while they liue in mortall body, matter of strife with their flesh, and so thought all the ecclesiasticall writers that haue beene of sounde iudgemēt: & specially Augustine, which calleth this nourishment of euill and disease of lusting in the elect, weakenesse, and sometime sinne: And in deede it is sinne. 3.3.10.

This is confirmed by the testimonie of Paul, and by the summe of the commandements. Whereas it is said that God cleanseth his church from all sinne, the same is spoken rather of the giltyenesse of sinne than of y^e matter of sinne it selfe, which ceaseth not to dwell in y^e regenerate (but ceaseth to reigne in them) though it bee not imputed. 3.3.11.

A declaration of the seuen causes or effectes, or partes or affections of Repentance, which Paul rehearseth: Those be studie or carefulnesse, excusing, displeasure, feare, desyre, zeale, reuenge. Whereunto also is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernard, that in such reuenge wee must keepe a measure. 3.3.15.

The fruits of Repentance are, deuotion towarde God, charitie toward men, holines and purenes in all our life: but all these ought to begin at the inward affection of the heart, from whence outward testimonies may afterward spring forth: Where also is spoken of certaine outward exercises of Repentance, which the olde writers seeme to enforce somewhat too much. 3.3.16.

Turning of the heart to God, is the chiefe point of Repentance: sackcloth and ashes, weeping and fasting, were vsed of them in the olde time before Christ, as tokens of publike repentance: of which the two last may yet bee vsed to appease the wrath of God in the miserable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of Repentance or penance is vnproperly drawn from his naturall sense to this outwarde profession. Publike cōfession is not alway necessarie in sinnes: but priuate confession to God may neuer be omitted, wherein wee ought to confesse, not onely those things that we haue lately committed, but the displeasure of our grieuous fall ought also to call vs backe to remembrance of our passed offences. Of speciall penance which is required of haynous offenders and certanother: and of the ordinary penance which y^e childre of God, euen

the most perfect, ought to vse all their life long. 3.3.18.

God doeth therefore freely iustifie thē that be his, that he may also with the Sanctification of his spirite restore them into true righteousness: therefore John, Christ & the Apostles preached Repentance and remission of sinnes. The effect of which saying is declared. 3.3.19.

Christians ought to exercise themselves in a continual Repentance, and he hath most profited, that hath learned most to mislike himselfe. 3.3.20.

Repentance is a singular gift of God, vnto which he calleth all men, which he giueth to all them whome hee purposeth to saue, and which the Apostle pronounceth that it shall neuer be giuen to wilful apostataes whose wickednesse is vnardonable, y^e is to say, such as haue sinned against the holy ghost 3.3.1.

Although fained repentance doeth not please God, yet he sometime for a season spareth hypocrits which make a shew of some conversion, which he doth not for their sakes, but for comon example, that we may learn more cherefully to giue our mindes to vnfaigned Repentance: And this is proued by the examples of Achab, Esau, and the Israelites. 3.3.25.

The Schoole sophisters do fowly er in those definitions which they make of Repentance, and no better do they diuide it, when they part it into contrition of heart, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of worke: Where is entreated of certaine questions which they moue: wherupon is easily gathered, that they babble of things which they knowe not, when they speake of Repentance. 3.4.1.

When they require those three things in Repentance, they must needs binde thereunto forgiveness of sinnes: And if it be so, thē are we most miserable, forasmuch as we can neuer haue quietnes of conscience: which is proued first in that contrition of heart such as they require. 3.4.2.

There is great difference betwene the doctrine of such contrition, & that contrition which the Scripture requireth of sinners, y^e they truly hunger and thirst for the mercy of God. 3.4.3.

In what sense y^e old wryters thought that solemn penance, which was then required for haynous offences, might no more be estoones done than Baptisme. 4.1.29.

Reason of Man.

Mans vnderstanding is not so to be condemned of perpetual blindness, that wee leaue it no whit of vnderstanding in any kinde of thing: but it hath some knowledge inasmuch as he is naturally carried with desire to searche out truth. And yet this desire by and by falleth into vanitie, because the minde of man can not for dulnesse, keep the right way to search out truth, and for the moste part he discerneth not of what things it is behouefull for him to seeke the true knowledge. 2. 2.12.

As touching earthly things, it is proued by examples y^e the minde of man hath a sharp vnderstanding, as first of all in ciuil policy and in gouernance of householdes, sith euery man vnderstandeth that the fellowshipes of men must be holden together by lawes, and comprehendeth in minde the principles of those lawes. 2.2.13.

Also in liberal artes & handy crafts for learning whereof, yea for amplifying and garnishing of the same, there is in man a certaine aptnesse, although some bee more apt than other. But the light of Reason and vnderstanding in mē is so a general good qualitie in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Gods liberalitie towarde euerie man: which thing God sheweth when he createth some Idioties and dull witted: also when hee maketh one man to excell in sharp inuention, an other in iudgement, an other in quicknesse of mind, againe when he powreth into men singular motions according to euerie mans calling, and according to the time & matter that is to bee done 2.2.14,17.

The inuention of artes, the orderly teaching or deepe & excellent knowledge ther eof, which appeare to haue bin in the old Lawyers, Philosophers, Phisitians, being prophane men, doe declare vnto vs that the mind of men howe much foucer it bee fallen from his first vprightnesse, is yet still garnished with excellent giftes of God. 2.2.15.

They are the giftes of y^e holy Ghost which the Lorde giueth to whom hee will, euen to the vngodly for the publike benefit of mankind. Therefore we ought to vse them although they bee communicate vnto vs by the ministry of the wicked, to whō they are but transitory and fleeting, because they are without the sounde foundation of truth. 2.2.16.

It is shewed in the first two pointes, that mans Reason seeth nothing that concerneth the kingdome of God and heauēly matters, which are contained in three things, that is to say, to knowe God, his fatherly fauour toward vs, & the way to frame our life according to the rule of his law. 2.2.18. and to that purpose are alleaged diuerse testimonies of Scripture. Sect. 19, 20, 21. In the third it seemeth that he hath some more vnderstanding than in the other, forasmuch as man is instructed by the lawe of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowledge is vnperfect in the vnbeleeuers, and auayleth to no other ende, but to make the man vnexcusable: neither doe they by that naturall light, see the truth in euerie thing. And here is expounded the saying of Themistius, that vnderstanding in the vniuersall definition is seldom deceiued, but the error is when it descendeth to particular causes, and there is shewed, that mans vniuersall iudgement in the difference of good and euill, is not alway sound and vpright. For it attaineth not those which are the chiefe thinges in the first table of the lawe, namely of confidence in God. &c. In the second table, although it haue some more vnderstanding, yet it appeareth that it sometime erreth, as when it iudgeth that it is an absurditie to suffer too imperious gouernement, and not to reuenge wronges: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the lawe. 2.2.22, 23, 24.

It is proued by the Scripture, that the sharpnesse of our reason in all the partes of our life, is nothing before the Lord: and our mindes do read the grace of enlightning, not onely at the beginning, or for one day, but at euery moment. 2.2.25.

See vnder the title of Freewill, certaine thinges pertaining to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the Resurrection of Christ allis vnperfecte that we beleue concerning his crosse, Death, and Buriall. Thereof wee receiue three profit: forasmuch as it hath both purchased vs righteousnesse before God, and is to vs a pledge of the Resurrection to come, and by his life, wee are now regenerate into newenes of life. 2.16.13.

A declaration of the history of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.25.3.

Last Resurrection.

Forasmuch as the faithful, do chiefly neede hope & patience, least they should faint in the course of their calling: he hath soundly profited in the Gospel which is accustomed to a continuall meditation of the blessed Resurrection. 3. 25. 1, 2.

The article concerning the last Resurrection, containeth a doctrine of great weight, graue & hard to beleeue: for the ouercomming of which hardnesse by faith, the Scripture giueth two helpes, the example of Christ, and the almightinesse of GOD. 3. 25. 3, 4.

A confutation of the Sadduces, which deny the Resurrection: and of the Millenaries which appoint the kingdom of Christ to endure but a thousand yeares. 3. 25. 5.

A confutation of their error, which imagine that soules at the last day shall not receiue againe the bodies wherewith they are now clothed, but shall haue newe and other bodies. 3. 25. 7, 8.

Of the maner of the last Resurrection. 3. 25. 8.

By what reaso the last Resurrection, which is a singular benefite of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God. 3. 25. 9.

Sabbath.

AN exposition of the fourth commandement, the end thereof, & the three causes wherupon wee must note that it consisteth. 2. 8. 28.

The first cause is a shadowing of spirituall rest, that is to say, of our sanctification: This is proued by diuerse places to haue bene the chiefe thing in the Sabbath. 2. 8. 29.

Why the Lorde appointed the seventh day. 2. 8. 30, 31.

This part, forasmuch as it was ce-remoniall, is taken away by the death of Christ. 2. 8. 31.

The two later causes, that is to say, that there should be certaine dayes appointed for assemblies in y^e Church, and that there should be giuen to seruants a rest from their labor, do serue for all ages. 2. 8. 32.

Of dayes of meeting in the church to heare the worde of God & commō prayers: Where is spoken of obseruing of the Sunday, 2. 8. 32, 33. and of superstition to be auoyded in this behalf. 2. 8. 34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament. 4. 14. 1.

For what reason the old writers vsed this word in that sense. 4. 14. 2, 13.

A Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before, which the Lord sealeth by that meane, wherein hee prouiderth helpe for our ignorance & dulnesse, & also for our weakenes. 4. 14. 3, 5, 6, 12.

A Sacrament consisteth of y^e worde & the outward signe: But the Sacramentall worde is to be taken otherwise than the papists thinke. 4. 14. 4.

Sacramentes cease not to be testimonies of the grace of God, although they bee giuen also to the wicked, whiche doe gather to themselues more grieuous damnation thereby. 4. 14. 7.

Our faith is so confirmed by sacraments, that yet it hangeth vpon y^e inward effectual working of the Spirite, 4. 14. 9, 10, 11. and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confutation of the diuelish doctrine of the Sophisticall scholes, that the Sacramentes of the newe lawe doe iustifie and doe giue grace, so that wee do not stop it with deadly sinne. 4. 14. 14.

Augustins good distinctiō betwene a Sacrament and the thing of the Saerament, whereby is proued y^e though God in Sacramentes doe truely offer Christ, yet y^e wicked receiue nothing but the Sacrament, that is to say, the outward signe. 4. 14. 15; 16.

Wee must not thinke that there is ioyned or fastened to the Sacraments any secrete vertue, whereby they by themselves do giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost. 4. 14. 17.

In the olde time God gaue vnto his people some Sacraments in miracles, and some in natural things. And there is spoken of the tree of life and of the raynebowe. 4. 14. 18.

Sacraments are on the Lordes behalfe testimonies of grace & saluatiō, and on our behalfe tokens of our profession. 4. 14. 19.

The sacraments of the old church vnder the lawe, tended to the same ende that our Sacramentes doe, that is to say, Christ: whome yet our Sacraments do more plainly represent. Wherefore the Scholemens doctrine is to be reiected, which say, that y^e old sacraments did shewe a shadow of the grace of God, and ours do giue it presently. 4. 14. 20, 21, 22, 23, &c.

The five falsly called Sacraments.

When wee denye those five to be Sacramentes which are inuented by men, wee striue not about the name but the thing: because the papists will haue them to be visible formes of inuisible grace. 4. 19. 1.

Many reasons are brought, why it is not lawfull for men to make Sacraments. Also there is a difference to be put betweene sacraments, & other ceremonies. 4. 19. 2.

The number of seuen sacramentes cannot be proued by the authoritie of the Old Church. 4. 19. 3.

Although the olde Church vnder the law, had mo sacramets, yet at this day, the Christian church ought to be content with those two, which Christ hath ordained: And it is not lawfull for men to make other, nor to adde vnto these any thing of their owne. 4. 18. 20.

Sacrifices.

A difference betweene the sacrifices of Moses his lawe, and the supper of the Lord in y^e Christiā church 4. 18. 12.

What the name of a sacrifice properly signifieth: and of the diuerse kinds of sacrifices vnder the lawe: which may be deuided into two sorts, wherof some may be called of thanksgiuing, and other some propitiatorie or of cleansing. 4. 18. 13.

Our onely propitiatorie sacrifice, is the death of Christ. Sacrifices of thanksgiuing wee haue many, as all the duties of charitie, prayers, prayes, giuing of thanks, and all that we do to the worshipping of God. 4. 18. 13, 16, 17.

This maner of Sacrificing is daily vsed in the church, & in the supper of the Lord: And thereupon all Christians are sacrificing Priests.

Satisfactions Papiſcally.

Of satisfaction, which they make the thirde thing in penance, of retaining the paine, the fault being forgiven, and such likelyes, which all are ouerthrowen, by setting against the free forgiveness of finnes, by the name of Christ. 3. 4. 25.

A confutation of the blasphemous error of the Schoolemē, that forgiveness of finnes, and reconciliation is once done in baptism, but after baptism, we must rise againe by satisfactions. 3. 4. 26.

By such error, Christ is spoyled of his honor, & the peace of consciences is troubled, forasmuch as they can neuer certainly determine, that their finnes are forgiven them. 3. 4. 27.

In Daniell, when Nabuchadoncher is commanded to redeeme his sinnes with righteousnesse, that same redeeming is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set foorth, but rather the maner of true conuersion. The same is to be sayd of certaine other places of Scripture. 3.4.36.

An exposition of that place in the Gospell, Many sinnes are forgiven her, because she hath loued much: Meaning that loue is not the cause, but the prooffe of forgiveness. 3.4.37.

The olde writers of the church did not speak of satisfactions in such sense as the papists do: for they vnderstood that the penitent do make Satisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3.4.38, 39.

Scripture, the Worde of God, and the authoritie thereof.

Men do not sufficiently know God the creatour, and discern him from fained goddesses, by consideration of his creatures, vnlesse they be also holpen by the light of his Worde. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his, not onely since that hee choose the Iewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, euen towarde Adam, Noe, and the other fathers. 1.5.1.

Either by oracles, or by visions, or by the ministry of other, the fathers had the word which they were certainly perswaded to be the worde of God, whereby they knewe the true GOD the creator and gouernor of al things: which Worde afterwarde, that hee might prouide for men in all ages, he caused to be writté in the law and the Prophetes, as it were in publicke registers, 1.6.2, 3, in which place also is prooued by testimonies of Scripture, that the doctrine of the Worde, must be ioyned to the consideration of creatures, least we conceiue a fickle knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authoritie of Scripture hangeth vpon the iudgement of the church, & in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1.7.1.

This error is wel confuted by the place of Paul in the second chapter to the Ephesians, where hee sayeth that the faithfull are builded vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophetes. 1.7.2.

In what sense Augustine sayth, that he would not haue beleued the Gospell, vnlesse the authoritie of y church did moue him: which place they doe cauillously wrest to the confirmation of their error. 1.7.3.

Although there be many other argumentes, which do proue, yea, do enforce the wicked to confesse, that the Scripture came fró God: yet by none other meane, than by the secreete testimony of the holy Ghost, our hearts are truly perswaded that it is GOD, which speaketh in the lawe, in the prophetes, and in the gospell. And this is proued by many places of Esay. 1.7.4, 5.

The orderly disposition of the wisdom of God, the doctrine sauoring nothing of earthlinesse, the goodly agreement of all the partes among themselves, and specially that basenesse of contemptible wordes, vttering the hie mysteries of the heauenly kingdome, are seconde helpes to stablish the credit of Scripture. 1.8.1, 2, 11.

Also the antiquity of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doeth not himselfe inuent a newe God, but setteth foorth to the Israelites, the God of their fathers. 1.8.3, 4.

Whereas Moses doth not hide the shame

The Table.

shame of Leui his father, nor the murmuring of Aarō his brother, & of Mary his sister, nor doth aduance his own children: the same are argumentes, y^e in his bookes is nothing fained by mā 1.8.4.

Also y^e miracles which happened, as well at the publishing of the lawe, as in all the rest of time. 1.8.5.

Which miracles, when y^e prophane writers could not deny, they cauilled, that Moses did the by Magicall artes. Which sclander, is confuted by most strong reasons. 1.8.6.

Also wheras Moses speaking in the person of Iacob, assigneth the government to the tribe of Iuda, and where he telleth before of the calling of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeares after, and the other almost two thousand yeres: these are arguments, y^e it is God himselfe which speaketh in the bookes of Moses. 1.8.7.

Wheras Esay telleth before of the captiuitie of the Iewes, and their restoring by Cyrus (which was borne a hundred yeares after the death of Esay) and where Ieremie before that the people was led away appointeth their exile to continue threescore and tenne yeares, whereas Ieremy and Ezechiell, being farre distant in places the one from the other, doe agree in all their sayings: where Daniel telleth before of things to come, for six hundred yeares after: these are most certaine proues, to stablish the authoritie of the bookes of the Prophets. 2.8.8.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which aske how we knowe that those are the writings of Moses & the Prophets, which are red in their names: and how we knowe that there was euer any such Moses. 1.8.9.

Also of them that aske, from whence the copies of the bookes of the scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commaunded them all to be burned. And there is spoken of the wonderful prouidence of God in preserving them so many ages, among so many enimies, and so cruell persecutions. 1.8.10.

The simplicitie of speeche of the first three Euangelistes, containing heauenly mysteries, the phrase of Iohn thondering frō on hie wth weightie sentences, the heauenly maiestie shining in the writings of Peter and Paul, the sudden calling of Mattheue from the boorde, the calling of Peter and Iohn from their fisherbotes to the preaching of the Gospel, the conuersion & caling of Paul being an enemy to Apostleship, are signes of the holy Ghost speaking in them. 1.8.11.

The consent of so many ages, of so sundrie nations, & of so diuerse minds in embracing the Scripture, and the rare godlinesse of some, ought to stablish the authoritie thereof among vs. 1.8.12.

Also the bloud of so many martyrs, which for the confession therof, haue suffered death with a constant & sober zeale of God. 1.8.13.

Against certaine phrentike men, which forsaking the reading of scripture & learning, do boast of the spirite & do flie to reuelations. 1.9.1.2.

A confutation of their obiection, that it is not meete that the spirite of God, to whom all things ought to be subiect, should be subiect to the scripture. 1.9.2.

Also where they say y^e we rest vpon the letter which slayeth. 1.9.3.

The Lord hath ioyned with a mutuall knot the certaintie of his doctrine and of his spirite. 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heauen & earth & other creatures doth depeaint

The Table.

depaint out God vnto vs, such doth y^e Scripture set him foorth, y^e is to say, eternall, ful of goodnes, clemency, mercy, righteousnes, iudgement and truth: and also to the same end. 1. 10. 1, 2.

What is to be thought of the power of the Church in exposition of Scripture. 4. 9. 13.

The Romish doctors do wrongfully abuse this colour to the confirmation of their errors and blasphemies. 4. 9. 14.

Of Singing in the Church.

Voyce and Singing auaille nothing in prayer, without affection of the hart 3. 20. 31, 33.

Of the vsage of Singing in Churches. 3. 20. 32.

Single life.

Their shamelesnesse which doe set forth the comlinessse of Single life for a thing necessaric, to y^e great reproch of the olde Church. By what degrees this tyranny crepte into the church: and how it can not bee defended by y^e presence of certaine old canons. 4. 12. 26, 27, 28.

Priestes were forbidden to marrie by wicked tyranny, and against the word of God, and against all equity. 4. 12. 23.

An answer to the aduersaries objection, that the priest must by some marke differ from the lay people. 4. 12. 24.

The blasphemy of the Pope, saying that mariage is defiling and vncleanes of the flesh. 4. 12. 24.

It is sonde to defend the forbidding of mariage with the examples of the Leuiticall Priestes, which when they should go into the sanctuary lay asunder from their wiues. 4. 12. 25.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes saying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: also of their opinion which say that in all Sinnes there is an aduised malice and frowardnes. 2. 2. 22, 23, 25.

Against the false imagination of the Sophisters concerning veniall sinnes, which they cal desires without a determined assent, which do not long rest in the heart: it is proued that euery sinne, euē y^e lightest desire deserueth death, and is deadly, except in the saintes which obtaine pardon by the mercie of God. 2. 8. 58, 59.

A confutation of their fond distinction betwene deadly & veniall sins, and of their sclauder when they saie that wee make all sinnes equall. 3. 4. 28.

Howe it is to bee expounded, that God visiteth the iniquity of y^e fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation: and whether such reuengement bee vnseemelic for the righteousnesse of GOD. 2. 8. 19, 20.

Sinne against the holy Ghost.

The true definition of Sin against the holy Ghost, and examples thereof out of the Scripture. 3. 3. 22.

It is not one or an other particular falling, but a generall forsaking, the description wherof is declared by the Apostle. Neither is it any maruell if God will be alwayes vnappeasable to them that haue so fallen. 3. 3. 23. forasmuch as he promisseth pardon only to them that repent, which they shal neuer do. And though the Scripture doe say that some such haue grieved and cried, yet that was not repentance or conuersion, but rather a blind torment. by desperation. 3. 3. 24.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirit of man is not onely a breath, but an immortal substance, although it were created, is proued by conscience, by the knowledge of God, and by so many excellent gifts wherwith the minde of man is endued, yea, and by those things which it conceiueth in sleepe, and also by many arguments taken out of scripture. 1. 15. 2. Finally by this that it is said, that man was created after the image of God. Sect. 3.

Against them that vnder the colour of Nature doe denie the prouidence and gouernance of God vttering it selfe in the maruellous and in a maner innumerable powers of y^e soule 1. 5. 4, 5.

A confutation of the error of the Manichees and of Seruettus, that the soule is a deriuation of the substance of God; also of the error of Osiander, which acknowledge no image of god in man without an essentiall righteousness. 1. 15. 5.

Concerning the immortalitie of the soule, in a maner none of the Philosophers hath certainly spoken: but they doe binde the powers thereof to this present life, whereas the scripture doth so giue to it the chiefe rule in gouernance of life, that it also stirreth vp man to the worshipping of God. Also of the diuersitie of soules, and of the diuision of the powers of the soule according to the Philosophers. 1. 15. 6.

Another diuision more agreable with Christian doctrine, that is to say, that the powers of the soule are vnderstanding and will: and the office & force of either of them in mans first estate. 1. 15. 7, 8.

That there yet remaineth somewhat of the seede of religion yet imprinted euen in the corruption of the soule. 1. 15. 6.

Of their error which thought that whole man perisheth by death, & that the soules at the last shall rise againe with the bodies. 3. 25. 6.

Of the state of soules from death to the last day. 3. 25. 6.

A description take out of Bernard, of the miseries of a faithfull soule, being considered as it is in it selfe & of it selfe: and on the other side, of the assured glorying of a faithfull soule in Christ, which blotteth out all her vnworthinesses. 3. 2. 25.

Superstition.

The simplicitie of the superstitious doeth not excuse them, because their blindness is founde to be mingled with vanitie, pride, and obstinacie. 1. 4. 1, 3.

When superstition goeth about to please God, it mocketh him with lying colours. 1. 4. 3.

The superstitious do not approche vnto God but against their will and with seruile feare. 1. 4. 4.

Whosoeuer do corrupt the true religion, although they followe the consent of antiquitie or the custome of any citie, yet they depart from the one & true God. 1. 5. 12.

It is proued by the etimologie of the wordes Superstition, Religion, Essebeia or godlines, what difference is betweene Religion and superstition. 1. 12. 1.

The craft of superstition, when granting the chiefe place to the one God, it besetteth him with a route of smaller Gods. 1. 12. 1, 3.

Supper of the Lorde.

Of the bread and wine the signes in the holy supper: and it is declared by his owne words at his Supper, why the Lorde willed that wee should vse them. 4. 17. 1.

Wee gather a great fruite of confidence & sweetenesse out of this sacrament, which testifieth that wee are so growen together into one body with Christ, that whosoeuer is his, we may lawfully call it ours. 4. 17. 2.

This is declared by the wordes of the Supper. 4. 17. 3.

The Table.

The cheife office of the sacraments is not to giue vnto vs the body of christ without any hier consideration, but rather to seale that promise where in he testifieth that his flesh is verily meat. 4.17.4.

The supper maketh not Christ then first to beginne to be the bread of life, but that we should feele the force of y bread. He once gaue his flesh for the life of the world, and daily giueth it to them that bee his. Wee must beware that we do not too much abace or aduance the signes. The eating of the flesh of Christ is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4.17.5.

So thought Chrysostome and Augustine: and in what sense Augustine saide, that in beleuing we eat the flesh of Christ. 4.17.6.

They doe not say enough, which passing ouer the mention of flesh and bloode, doe thinke that we are made partakers onely of the spirit of Christ. The mysterie of the supper is so great, that neither the tongue can expresse with speaking, nor the heart comprehend with thinking the greatnes thereof. 4.17.7.

Howe farre the perfect communicating of Christ extendeth. Where is declared that Christ, which from y beginning was the life giuing worde of the father, made the fle she which hee rooke vpon him to be also life giuing to vs. 4. 17.8,9.

The faithful doe truly eate of the same flesh howe great distance of places soeuer there be betweene them & it. 4.17.10.

The mysterie of the Supper consisteth of two things, the bodily signes, and the spirituall truth: Which spirituall truth containeth three things, signification, matter, and effect. 4. 17.

II.

Of the transubstantiation of bread and wine into the body and bloode of Christ, which the craftesmen of the court of Rome haue forged. 4.17.12, 13, &c. and 20.

They are without testimonie of antiquitie. And in what sense the old writers saide that in the consecration is made a secrete turning. Also the signification of the Supper agreeth not, vnlesse the substance of the outward signes remaine. 4.17.14.

The breade is a sacrament to none but to men to whome the worde is directed. And here are confuted certain argumentes of the teachers of transubstantiation. 4.17.15.

Of some men, which though they doe at one worde graunt that the substance of the signes remaineth, yet placing the bodie of Christ in bread and vnder breade, they fall backe into the locall presence, and faine a being euery where. 4.17.16,17,18,20.

A confutation of their obiections. 4.17.21,22,23,&c.

It is proued that this doctrine is not maintained, neither by y testimonies of Augustine, nor by authority of scripture. 4 17.28,29,30,31.

A confutation of certaine other of their obiections, and cheefely of this that they say, that whatsoeuer wee reach of spirituall eating, is agaynst the true and reall eating: where also is declared that the bodie of Christe is in the Supper offered to the infidels, but they receyue it not. 4. 17. 33.

Neither can the saying of Augustine bee drawn to this purpose, that the sacramentes are nothing appayred by the infidelitie of men. Which is proued by diuerse other testimonies of the same man. 4.17.34.

How the body and blood of Christ is giuen to vs in the Supper, and what maner of presence of Christ we ought to holde therein. 4. 17. 18, 19, 32.

Of the exposition of the wordes of Christ in the supper. 4. 17. 20, 21.

The body of Christ is contained in quantitie, and comprehended in heauen, vntill the last day, as it is proued by the scriptures. 4. 17. 26, 27.

Of the papistes carnal adoration, & conuincement, and consecration of y^e host (as they call it) and carrying it about in pompe. 4. 17. 35, 36, 37.

The mysterie of y^e Supper ought to stirre vs vp to geeuing of thankes, to exercise vs in remembring y^e death of Christ, to kindle vs to holynesse of life, and chiefly to charitie. 4. 17. 37, 38.

In the papacie the Supper (the true ministracion whereof is not without the worde) is turned into a dumme action. And here is spoken of the laying vp of y^e Sacrament to be extraordinarily distributed to sicke men. 4. 17. 39.

The doctrine of the papistes, wh^e they goe about to prepare men to the worthinesse of eating the bodie of Christ, doeth in cruell wise torment consciences: And the deuill could not by any readier way destroy men. Of the best remedie to auoyde this destruction. They erre which in the supper doe require of the faithfull perfection of faith. 4. 17. 41, 42.

As touching the outward v^sage of the ministracion of the Supper, there are many thinges indifferent: And howe it ought to bee ministred most comely. 4. 17. 43.

Of the small assemblie at this day at the partaking of the Supper, which is a token of contempe, wherewith y^e holy fathers in olde time were much displeased: And howe the custome which commaundeth men to communicate once euery yere, was a most certaine inuention of the deuill. 4. 17. 44, 45, 46.

It is proued by authoritie of the Scripture and by the vsage of the olde Church, foure hundred yeares before the death of Gregorie, and by many other arguments, that the constitution which toke away from lay men the cup of the Lorde, came out of the deuils workshop. 4. 17. 47, 48, 49, 50.

Of the concomitance of the blood in the fleshe of Christ, which is a popish inuention. 4. 17. 47.

The Supper of the Lorde is profanely abused, if it be given to all men without choice. Of the dutie of ministers in reiecting y^e vnworthie. 4. 12. 5.

A breefe sum of those things which we ought to know concerning the two Sacramentes. And why the Supper is oftentimes ministred, and Baptisme but once. 4. 18. 19.

Swearing.

An exposition of the thirde commaundement, in which these three things are contained, that we neither think nor speak any thing of God, nor of his word and honorable mysteries, nor yet of any of his workes, otherwise than reuerently. 2. 8. 22.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared that it is a kinde of worshipping of God: And therefore we must beware that our othes containe not any dishonour to the name of God, which is done in Forswearing: or any contempt of it, which is done in superfluous oths, or in which y^e name of any other than God is vsed. 2. 8. 23, 24, 25.

It is proued by Scripture against the Anabaptistes: that all othes are not forbidden vs, y^e Christ in the Gospell changed nothing as touching the rule of Swearing, set forth in the lawe. 2. 8. 26. Which is proued by his owne example: and not only publike, but also priuat othes are permitted, keeping the moderation which the lawe commaundeth. 2. 8. 27.

The Table.

T. Temples.

OF Temples of Christian men for assemblies of the congregation. 3.20.30.

It is proued by the authoritie of the olde Church, and the reasons of Augustine, that it is not expedient, that there shoulde be any images in Christian temples. 1.11.13.

The preaching of the worde and the Sacramentes, are liuely images which onely are fit to be in Christian Temples. 1.11.7,13.

The wickednes of the Nicene Synode which was holden by the commandement of Irene the Emperesse, & the filthy follies thereof in allowing images in Temples, and the worshiping of them. 1.11.14,15,16.

Of the garnishing of Temples and holy things in the old Church, 4.4.8. and 4.5.18.

Temptations.

Of diuerse kindes of Temptations: and in what sense it is sayde that God tempteth vs. 3.20.46.

Testament, old, and newe.

Of the likenesse of the olde, & new Testament: Where is declared, that they are all one in substance and matter, but onely do differ in ministracion. The likenesse standeth chiefly in three pointes. 2.10.1,2.

The first point is, that the old Testament did not holde the fathers in earthly felicitie, but had chiefe regard to the life to come. Which is proued by Paul, which sayth that the promises of the Gospell are contained vnder it. 2.10.3.

The same also is proued by the law and the Prophetes: First, by considering the wordes of the couenant: I am your God. 2.10.7,8.

Againe, I will be the God of your seede

after you: Sect. 9. Also by the life of the holy fathers, as Adam, Abel, Noe, Sect. 10. Abraham, Sect. 11. Isaak, Iacob, Sect. 12, 13, 14. And by many testimonies of Daud. Sect. 15, 16, 17, 18. Of Iob. Sect. 19. Generally of all the latter Prophets, Sect. 20. But namly of Ezechiel. Sect. 21. Of Esay and Daniell. Sect. 22. A conclusiō of this point with rehearsing certaine testimonies out of the new Testament, Sect. 23.

The seconde point is that the olde Testament did not stand vpon ŷ merites of men, but vpon ŷ free mercie of God. The thirde point is that the couenant of the fathers with God, did then stand vpon like knoweledge of Christ the mediator. 2.10.4.

Also in signification of Sacramentes the Israelites vnder the lawe were equall with the Christian people. 2.10.5,6.

There are foure differences of the olde Testament from the newe, wherunto we may adde a fift. The first is, that although in the olde time also the Lords will was to direct the soules of his people to the heauenly inheritaunce: Yet to the ende that they might be the better nourished in the hope therof, he gaue it them to be beholden, and after a certaine manner tasted vnder earthly benefites: But nowe the grace of the life to come, being more clearly reuiled by the Gospell, he directeth our mindes the streight way to the meditation therof, leauing the inferior manner of exercising which hee vsed among the Israelites. 2.11.1.

Therefore the olde Church is compared to an heire vnder age, which is gouerned by Guardians. 2.11.2.

For this reason, the fathers so much esteemed this life, and the blessings thereof. 2.11.3.

The second difference is in figures where-

The Table.

wherewith the old testament did shew forth the image and shadowe of spirituall good things: The new testament giueth the present trueth and perfect body. There is also a reason shewed why the Lorde kept this order: And a definition of the olde testament. 2. 11. 4.

In this sense it is sayde, that the Jewes were by the introduction or schooling of the lawe led vnto Christ: before tha the was deliuered in y flesh: 2. 11. 5. which appeared in the most excellent Prophetes that were endued with singular grace of the spirit. Sect 6.

The thirde difference, is taken out off y one and thirtie chapter of Jeremy, and the third chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, that the old testament is literall, and the newe testament is spirituall: the olde bringeth death, the new is the instrument of life 2. 11. 7, 8.

The fourth difference is, that the scripture calleth the olde testament, the testament of bondage, because it engendreth feare in mens mindes: but the new is called the Testament of liberty, because it raiseth them vp to confidence and suertie. The three latter differēces are comparisons of the law and the Gospel. The first, containeth also the promises made before the law. The fathers liued so vnder the law and the olde testament, y they stayed not there, but alwayes aspired to the new, yea and embraced a certaine communicating thereof. 2. 11. 9, 10.

The fifth difference is, that before the comming of Christ, the Lord had seuered one nation, in which he would keepe the couenant of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles is a certaine signe, wherewith the excellencie of the newe testament is set forth about the olde: a thing so incredible, that it seemed yet new to the Apostles themselues, being exercised in reading of the Prophets, and endued with the holy Ghost. 2. 11. 11, 12.

A conclusion of this matter, and an answer to diuers obiections of some men, which say that this variety in the Church, this diuerse maner of teaching, so great change of vsages and ceremonies, is a great absurdity. Where is declared that the constancy of God appeareth in this chaunging, and hee hath done nothing but wisely, righteously, & in mercy, when he gouerneth his Church, after one sort in childhod and after an other sort in riper age, & also when hee did keepe cloose in one people the shewing forth of his grace before the comming of Christ, which afterward he poured forth vpon all nations. 2. 11. 13, 14.

Thefts.

An exposition of the eight Commaundement: where is entreated of diuerse kindes of Theftes, and some which although men iudge otherwise, yet are accounted Thefts before God. And so hee that doeth nor performe that which by the office of his calling he oweth to other, is a theefe. 2. 8. 45.

What wee ought to doe, that wee may obey this commaundement, is shewed by diuers examples according to the diuersitie of persons & offices. 2. 8. 46.

Traditions.

Forasmuch as the Lorde, willing to reache a rule of true righteousnesse, hath drawn all the partes thereof to his owne will, thereby it appeareth, that all the good workes which men deuise of their own wittes, are nothing worth before him: But the true worshipping standeth vpon obedience only, which is the beginning, mother, and and preseruer of al vertues. 2.8.5.

Of traditions of men, that is to say, ordinances proceeding from men, concerning the worshipping of God: And of the vngodlinesse and necessitie of them. 4.10.1,2,5,6,7,8.

A diuision of popishe constitutions, whiche they call Traditions of the Church, into such as containe ceremonies, and other which are saide to pertaine to discipline. The wickednesse of both sorts, because they place the worshipp of God in them, and consciences are bounde with precise necessitie of them. 4.10.9.

For them the commaundement of God is made voide. 4.10.10.

A true marke of mens traditions, which ought to bee reiected of the Church, and of all Godly men. 4.10.16.

A confutation of y^e pretence which some men vse that defende popishe Traditions to be of God, because the Church cannot erre, and is gouerned by the holy Ghost. 4.10.17.

It is a meere mockerie to say, that the Apostles were authors of the Traditions, wherewith the Church hath heretofore bene oppressed. 4.10.18, 19, 20.

The example of the Apostles, whē they commaunded the Gentiles to absteyne from thinges offered vnto Idols, from strangled, and from blood, is falsely alleadged to excuse the tyrannie of the Popes lawes. 4.10.21, 22.

The Lordes kingdome is taken frō him, when hee is worshipped with the lawes of mens Traditions: which is prooued by examples and testimonies of scripture to haue alwayes bene a most hainous offence in the sight of God. 4.10.23, 24.

The inuentions of men cannot be defended by the example of Meno-

ha, which being a priuate man offered sacrifice, nor of Samuel which sacrificed in Ramath. 4.10.25. nor of Christ which willed men to beare the burdens that the Scribes and Pharisees did binde together. 4.10.26.

Of holy and profitable ordinances of the Church, and the ende that they tend vnto. 4.10.1.

Of such ordinances of the church as ought to be accompted holy, namely those which serue for comelinesse, or doe preserue order and peace in the Church. 4.10.27, 28, 29. Wee must wisely consider, which bee of that sort 4.10.30.

It is the duetie of Christian people, to obserue such ordinances: And what errors herein are to bee taken heede of: And howe in the meane time, the liberie of consciences may still bee preserued safe. 4.10.31, 32.

Tributes.

A confutation of them which in this matter do condemn the name of person, and reiect it for newnesse. 1.13.3, 4, 5.

The holy doctors haue bene compelled to inuent certaine new wordes, to defende the truth of God against certaine subtil men, which mocked it out with shifting: as against Arrius they inuented this word Homoansio Consubstantiall, and against Sabellius y^e name of three properties or persons. 1.13.4, 16.

Of Vowes which are made against the expresse worde of God: whether they may well be Vowed of Christian men, and howe they are to bee esteemed. 4. 13. 1, 6.

Three things are to be considered obedience. 4. 13. 2. Who we be that do

Of Warres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magistrates are driuen of necessitie to take weapon in hande, to execute publike revenge vpon those that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they be ciuile or forreine enemies. 4.
20. 11.

It maketh not to the contrary her-of, which many alleage, that there is not in the newe Testament any testimonie or example which proueth that Warre is a thing lawfull for Christians. But Magistrates ought to take great heede, that in taking of weapō in hande, they nothing at all followe their owne lustes. As Warre, so garrisons also, leagues and ciuill fortifications are things lawfull for Christians to vs. 4. 20. 12.

Will of God.

Of the secret Will of God. Also of an other Wil, whercunto aunswareth Willing obedience. 3. 20. 43. and 3.
24. 1, 7.

Will of Man.

Whether the Will of man be in e-uery part through defiled and corrupted so that it bringeth foorth nothing but euill: Or whether it yet reteine some libertie of choise. Where is declared the common saying taken out of the Philosophers, that all thinges by naturall disposition couet y^e which is good. And there is shewed that the libertie of will cannot bee proued thereby. 2. 2. 26.

The soule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it selfe to aspire to goodnesse. And sith y^e whole man is subiect to the dominion of sinne, it is proued by testimonies of Scripture & of Augustine, that the wil of man is bounde with moste streit bondes. 2. 2. 27.

Man by his fall lost not his will, but the soundnesse of his Will, so that hee cannot moue, much lesse apply himselfe to goodnesse, but is necessarily drawen or led into euill, howbeit not by compulsio but voluntarie. Which is proued by Augustine and Bernard.
A large declaration of the difference betweene compulsion and necessitie.
2. 3. 5.

Sith the Lorde both beginneth & perfiteth good in our heartes, sith he worketh in vs to will, that is to say the good will, sith hee createth a newe heart, taketh away the stony heart & giueth a fleshy heart, it followeth, that the Will of man is vtterly corrupted and hath no goodnesse at all.
2. 3. 6.

It is clerely proued by reasons and diuerse testimonies of Scripture, that

God worketh good will in them that be his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginning so as it may afterward do some good of it self. But because it is his onely worke that will conceiue a loue of goodnesse, that it is enclined to the study thereof, that it is stirred and moued to an endeuour to followe it, & againe that the choise, studie, and endeuour doe not faint, but proceede to effect, finally that man goeth constantly forward in them and continueth to the ende.

2.3.7.8.9.

Therefore it is proued by the authoritie of scripture and of Augustine that this which hath bin taught these many ages, that God so moueth our will, that it is afterwarde in our owne choise, to obey or disobey his motion & other like sayings are viterly false.

2.3.10.11.12.13.14.

Also in doings, which of these lues are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belong rather to the bodily than the spirituall life, the will of man is not free, but by the speciall motion of God is enclined to clemencie, mercie, wrath, feare, and other diuerse affections, when it pleaseth him to make way for his prouidence. Which is proued by scripture, by daily experience, and by the authoritie of Augustine.

2.4.6.7.

Workes.

A comparison of the purenesse of God with all the righteousnes of mē.

3.12.4.5.

All the offspring of Adam being deuided into foure kindes of men, it is proued that they haue no holinesse or righteousnesse: First in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whome although there doe sometime appeare excellent qualities (which are the gistes of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3.14.1, 2.3.4.5.6.

The same is shewed in them which being professed by Sacraments, are Christians onely in name, denying God in their deeds: Also in hypocrites, which with vain false colours do hide the wickednesse of their heart. 3.14.7, 8.

Finally, it is proued that euen the children of God truly regenerated by his Spirit, can not stand by any righteousnes of their owne workes before the iudgement of God, because they can bring forth no good worke that is not sprinkled with some vncleannes of the flesh, and therefore damnable. Moreouer although they could bring forth any such worke, yet one sinne is enough to blot out the remembrance of all former righteousnes. 3.14.9; 10, 11.

A confutation of the papistes shifts concerninge the righteousnesse of workes: and specially of the same horrible monster of workes of supererogation. 3.14.12, 13, 14, 15.

When wee entreate of workes, wee must thrust two pestilences out of our mindes: that wee put no trust in the righteousnes of our owne workes, and that we ascribe no glorie vnto them. 3.14.16.

The Scripture setteth out and declareth foure kindes of causes in establishing our saluation: And it is proued that in them all there is no regard of workes. 3.14.17.

Where sometimes the sainctes do bolden themselues with remembrance of their owne innocencie & vprightnesse: how the same is to be taken: and how it doth in no wise abate anything from the free righteousnes in Christ. 3.14.18, 19, 20.

Where the scripture saith that the good workes of the faithfull do moue God, to doe them good, the order is there.

therein rather expressed than y^e cause.

3.14.21.

Why the Lord in the scripture calleth good workes oures, & promisseth reward to them. 3.15.3.

A confutation of the Sophisters inuention, concerning mortal workes, whereby men be made acceptable to God, before that they bee grafted in Christ. 3.15.6. & 17.4.

Those rewardes are giuen to the works of the faithfull, which the Lord in his law hath promised to the followers of righteousness: but thereof there are three causes to be considered. 3.17.3.

Wee may note in the scripture two acceptances of man wth God, of which the latter although it haue respect to the good workes of the faithfull, yet is also the free mercy of God. 3. 17. 4.5.

When it is saide that God doeth good to them that loue him, here is not rehearsed a cause why he should doe them good, but rather the maner of what sorte they bee by his grace. 3.

17.6.

An exposition of certaine places wherein the scripture giueth to good workes the name of righteousness. And there is shewed y^e those places are not against the doctrine of iustification of faith. 3.17.7.

One good worke or many doe not suffice for righteousness before God, although one sin suffice to condemne. And here the principel hath no place the contraries haue all one rule. 3. 18.10.

Why the Lorde saide that hee rendereth to workes that which hee had freely giuen before Workes. 3. 18.3. And therein hee helpeth our weakness least wee should be discouraged. 3.18.4,6,7.

Hereupon hangeth the righteousness of the good workes which y^e faithfull do, that by pardon they are allowed of God. 3.18.5.

THE END OF THE TABLE.

TO THE CHRISTIAN

AND STUDIOVS READERS OF

this Booke, Augustine Marlorate wiseth health.

Ho so euer shall reade and peruse these two Tables following, and especially the latter, may maruell what I meane (after so many impressions and corrections of this worke to collect and gather al the places of holy Scripture therein alledged: and a great part of the authorities therein expounded, whereas if any fruite or profite thereof were to bee had, the same long before might haue bene done: and specially about three yeares past, when the author himselfe was so diligent therein: who besides the many and profitable additions (which he contineith) he himselfe setting the same in order, with his owne handes, and reducing it to a most exact perfection, did then see: and publish it forth, in such sort, that in foure bookes being diuided into chapters and diuerse sections, hee hath right worthily and in familiar manner, comprised the summe of the whole Christian religion. And certainly I cannot denie but it woulde have bene very good and commodious, if that any one man would have taken the payne, faithfully and truly to have collected those places: which thing I thought once to have done by the advise of the inprinter, saying that my charge and office did else where call mee: as also when I had perused and set it in an other order than it was before, and had euen finished it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the least, to surcese for the time. And after that this booke being put forth both in Latine and French, was set to sale in every place, because I sawe no man, who then did take the paine to reduce the places of Scripture to a Table, and understanding how profitable the same would be to all men: I could not choose but after my power, and as leasure served in those troublesome times, to employ my whole care and travell therein. And because all things should be done and come forth more certain and in better order: I would not give credite, nor trust to the numbers which the inprinter had before set and made: for when I had diligently conferred them all, I found many false, many omitted, and some disorderly set: And surely that happeneth verie soone to such as are not best skilfull in examining and perusing the places of holy scripture to be soone deceived. Wherefore all things diligently rectified, and that supplied which seemed to want, I did so order the places of Scripture collected out of the old and newe testament that if there were any, through forgetfulness, or by any other meanes omitted or ouerskipped: (as it cannot be but that in a great harvest some one earre of corne shall escape the reapers hand) I durst warrant so fewe shall be found, that this Table being brought to trial you shall not finde one much more plentifull or larger. Nevertheless I do pray and request the readers, that if they do finde any, they will aduertise the inprinter, wherby the same may better be examined and corrected. And this is to bee noted, that such whole verses as I have comprised in this table, they were not wholly but in part alleged, much lesse expounded in the Institution: which thing I did upon good consideration. For often times it happeneth that in diuerse places of the Institution, some authorities are alleged, which are proved but by some part of the verse. And because in noting the places and numbers, we must use repetitions (which for the most part bring a loshsomnesse to the reader) I thought it better to put in the whole verse, than by often diuision, to use vaine and superfluous repetition. And as concerning the commoditie which the reader may gather by this my travell: (besides that which by use and experience I am taught by those Tables, which for mine owne private studie and exercise I wrote upon the Institutions heretofore set forth) I durst to affirme this much, that they which are not exercised in entreating the holy Scripture, and yet desirous to serue the Church of God, do diligently endeavour themselves thereunto, they shall finde a large and a plaine way, both with dexteritie to expounde the writings of the Prophetes and Apostles, as also, aptly to apply the authorities here alleged, & such like to the edifying of the Church, which is the verie end of the whole. And although we want not good Commentaries to discover unto vs the naturall sense of the Scripture, which we do none studie and apply: yet because they who wrote the same, and who with good success have travelled therein, were contented with the plaine and syncere exposition of the text: none could tell by the use of the saide Commentaries onely (vnlesse they were well practised in the principles of religion) howe and to what common place they ought to apply the argument then in hande. But who can so be contented to use this Table, whensoever hee shall finde the places which hee entreateth, hee shall see howe and to what ende the same is to bee applyed, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the aduersaries, or to the reconciling of such places as seeme to be repugnant.

The Preface.

And this shall be very commodious and profitable, not onely for the amplifying of any argument, but also to satisfie them, which are desirous to be confirmed in the principal points of Christian Religion. For it is manifest howe simple and slender is their oration and speech, which bring and allege nothing else, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the authors themselves (being most worthe and well learned) do chiefly desire brevitie, because the readers should use and studie the common places themselves, to the end they should the more largely be applied to those things which in the Commentaries are but briefly expounded. Againe, forasmuch as we have not alwayes in readinesse, what good authors have written upon the scriptures: and verie fewe cōmentaries upon some books, and namely upon this Institution, are to be found or had. This Table expounding the obscure and harde authorities, shall greatly further and helpe the readers. For they shall either finde some readie interpretation, or some entrance whereby to search and finde out the true sentence. And as touching the translation, I trust it shall not seeme strange to the reader, in that I have rather followed the selfe same words, as they be in the Bible, than as they be alleged by Caluin in this his institution: For he being a man most excellently well learned, and of great reading (as by his workes it doth appeare, how readie & familiar the Scriptures were to him) had not alwayes the bookes in readines, or lying open before him, when he wrote: neither was it necessarie that whatsoever he did auouch out of the old or new Testament, he should expresse or write it in the selfesame words: for it is sufficient, that the sense be faithfully retained, and the true proprietie of the worde obserued, and so to eschewe the cavillings of all men, saving such as will finde fault in that, which in the least part cannot be followed nor obserued. Being therefore persuaded, that neither he himselfe will be offended, nor the reader mislike, if the sentences in the Bible be translated according to the Hebrewes, as concerning the olde Testament, and according to the Greeke, as touching the newe Testament: I have aduented to aduouch the authorities of the Scriptures in an other order (as concerning the words) than they are alleged in this booke of Institutions. And therefore sometimes that which is recited in the thirde person, this Table doth expresse it in the seconde, and so contrariwise: but yes so, that the sense and meaning is alwayes reserved, which thing euery man shall easily perceiue, if diligently and without hastie iudgement, he do conserue euery thing together: for else curious heads do lose that fruite, which by aduised reading they might haue and receiue. And as concerning the names and numbers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde testament, we have not followed the common translation, but that which is most agreeable to the Hebrewes. And therefore we do aduertise the readers, that they do not take the first booke of the Kings, for the first of Samuell: nor the seconde of Kings, for the second of the same Prophet: which is so done by them, who heretofore haue corred the Chapters in this imprinted booke, because they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Concordances, which is collected according to the common translation: and by that meanes, as it may evidently appeare to all men, some bookes of the olde Testament are not rightly intitled: and the Psalmes otherwise and in an other order denided, than did the Hebrewes. And forasmuch as all the principall points of religion, are in this booke copiously and faithfully expounded, we may easily refute the false opinions of the aduersaries. Whosoever shall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learne, or a desire to profite: there is no doubt, but he shall verie much profite himselfe, and helpe others: whose consciences he may so strengthen and assure, as they neede not to quaille in any point, because they be assured, that their faith is grounded upon the firme foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, who wrote and spake, being inspired by the holy ghost, who hath willed and commaunded his most precious and deare worde, to be red, heard, & handled, in all feare and reuerence, without adding therunto, or taking from the same: least we be worthily reprov'd of our folly. Let vs therefore, in all simplicitie and feare of God, reade so wholesome and necessarie things, and daily proceede therein, in the grace & knowledge of God, who onely is the saviour, head and Doctor of the Church: To whome nowe and for ever be all glorie. *Calend. 1.14 Shewe me thy countenance, I speak vnto me, for thy voice will be vnto me sweet, & thy countenance louely. 1.11.14

5.3 I haue put off my core, and howe shall I put it on againe? and I haue washed my feete, howe shall I defile them againe? 1.16.4

E S A I.

1.5 TO what purpose should you be smitten any more? for ye fall away more and more, euery head is sicke, & euery heart is heauy. 3.4.33

10 Heare the word of the Lord ye tyrants of Sodom and thou people of Gomorrah heare the law of the lord.

4.1.18

12 Who requireth y^e at your hands? 3

14.15

13 Bring no more oblations in vaine, incense is an abhominatiō vnto me:
I can not suffer your new Moones or Sabaothes, &c. 2.8.34. & 3.14.8

14 My soule hateth your new Moones and appointed feastes, they make me weary. 4.2.10

15 And when you stretch forth your hands, I will hide my eyes from you, & although you multiply your praiser I will nor heare, for your hands be full of blood. 3.20.7

16 Take away all naughtines. 3.3.8

17 Learne to doe well, seeke iudge-ment, releue the oppressed, iudge the fatherles, & defend the widow.

2.8.52. & 3.3.8

18 If your sins were as crimson, they shall be made whiter than snowe:
and though they were as redde as scarlet, they shold be made as woll.

2.4.29

19 If you consent and obey, you shall enjoy the good things of the earth.

2.5.10

20 But if you refuse and be rebellious:
you shall bee deuoured with the sword, because the mouth of y^e Lord hath spoken it. 2.5.10

2.8 Their land was ful of idols, they worshipped the workes of their owne handes, and that which their fingers made. 1.11.4

3.1. Behold the gouernor y^e lord of hostes will take from Ierusalem and Iuda the valiant and mightie: euen all the strength of bread and water.

1.16.7

3 And I will make children their princes, & effeminate persons shall rule them. 4.20.25

4.1 Only let vs be called by thy name and take away our reproche. 3.20.

5.8 Woe be to them y^e ioyned house to house, and field to field, continuing till there be none left, &c. 1.18.1. & 2

4.4

26 And he shall raise vp a signe to the people that be afar of, and wil hiffe vnto them from the endes of the earth, &c. 3.19.9

6.1 I sawe the Lorde sit vpon a high throne and lifted vp, and his lower partes did fill the, &c. 1.13.11. & 1.

13.23

2 The Seraphines stode vpon it, e-uery one had six winges. 1.11.3. & 1.

5 Wo vnto me, for I am brought to silence, because I am a man hauing polluted lips. 4.8.3

6 Then flue one of the Seraphins to me, hauing in his hande a burning coale, taken from the altar with the tonges. 1.11.3

9 He sayd, go and say vnto this people, in hearing ye shall heare & not vnderstand, &c. 1.13.15. & 3.23.13. &

3.24.13

IEREMY.

- 1.6. O Lord God, behold, I cannot speake, for I am a childe. 4.8.3 9. Behold, I haue put my worde into thy mouth. 4.8.3
10. Behold this day haue I set thee ouer the nations and ouer kingdōs, to plucke vp & to roote out, and to destroy & scatter, that thou maist build & plant. 4.8.3
- 2.13. For my people haue committed two euils, they haue forsaken mee the fountain of liuing waters, to digge them pittes, euen broken pittes that can holde no waters. 3.
20.14
- 3.1. They say, if a man put away his wife, and shee go from him, & become an other mans, &c. 2.8.18. & 4.1.25
2. Lift vp thy eyes vnto y^e high places, & behold where thou hast not played the harlot, &c. 2.8.18
12. Go & crie these wordes towards the North, & say: thou disobediēt Israel, returne saith the Lorde, & I wil uor let my wrath fall vpon you for I am mercifull, &c. 4.1.25
- 4.1. O Israel, if thou returne, return vnto me, saith the lord: and if thou put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remoue. 2.5.10. & 3.3.6
4. Breake vp your fallow ground, & sowe not among the thornes: bee circumcised to the Lorde, and take away y^e foreskinnes of your hearts, ye men of Iudah, and inhabitantes of Ierusalem, &c. 2.5.8. & 3.3.6,7.

8. & 4.16.21
9. And in that day, saith y^e Lord, the heart of the king shall perish, and the hart of the princes, & the priest shalbe astonished, & the prophets shal wonder. 4.9.6
11. At that time shall it be said to this people, & to Ierusalem, a drie wind in the hie places of the wilderness, commeth toward y^e daughter of my people, &c. 1.16.7
14. O Ierusalem, wash thine hart frō wickednesse, &c. 2.5.8
- 5.3. O Lord, are not thy eyes vpon the truth? thou hast stricken them but they haue not sorrowed: thou hast consumed them, but they haue refused to receiue correction: they haue made their faces harder thā a stone, & haue refused to turne. 3. 4.35. & 3.14.8
7. How should I spare thee for this? thy children haue forsaken mee, & sworne by them that are no gods, &c. 2.8.23
14. Because ye spake such words, behold, I will put my worde into thy mouth, like a fire, and this people shalbe as wood, and it shal deuoure them. 3.24.13
- 6.13. For from the least of them, euen to the greatest of them, euery one is giuen to couetousnes: & from the Prophet euen to y^e Priest, they shal deale falsely. 4.9.3
- 7.4. Trust not in lying words, saying, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord: this is the Temple of the Lord. 4.2.3
5. For if you amend & redresse your wayes, & your workes, if you execute iudgement betweene a man and his neighbour, &c. 3.17.1
13. Therefore now, because ye haue done all these works, saith the lord, & I rose vpe early & spake vnto you: but when I spake you woulde not heare mee, neither when I called would ye answere. 2.5.11
14. I will do vnto this house, where-uppon my name is called, &c. as I haue done vnto Shilo. 2.5.11
22. For I spake not vnto your fathers, nor commaunded them, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offrings & sacrifices. 4.10.15
23. But this thing commaunded I them, saying, obey my voice, so I will be your God, &c. 4.10.15, 17
27. Therefore shalt thou speake all these wordes vnto them, but they will not heare thee: thou shalt also crie vnto them, but they will not answere thee. 2.5.11
28. This is a nation that heareth not the voice of the Lord their god, nor receiueth discipline. 2.5.11
- 9.23. Let not y^e wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the strong man glory in his strength, neither the rich mā glorie in his riches. 3.13.1
24. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he vnderstandeth & knoweth mee, for I am the Lord which sheweth mercie, and iudgement, & righteousnesse in the earth, &c. 1. 10.2
- 10.2. Be not afraide for the signes of heauen, though the heathen be afraide of such. 2.16.3
8. But altogether they dote and are foolish, for the stocke is a doctrine of vanitie. 1.11.5
11. The gods that haue not made the heauens and the earth, shal perish from the earth, & from vnder these heauens. 1.13.23
23. O Lorde, I know that the way of man is not in him selfe, neither is it in man to walk and to direct his steps. 2.16.6
24. O Lorde correct mee, but with iudgement, not in thine anger, lest thou

- thou bring me to nothing. 3.4.32
- 11.7. For I haue protested vnto your fathers, when I brought them vp out of the lande of Aegypt, vnto this daye, rising early, and protesting, saying: obey my voice. 3.20.7 & 4.10.17
8. Neuertheless they would not obey, nor encline their care, &c. therefore I will bring vpon them all the wordes of this couenant, which I commaunde them to doe, &c. 3.20.7
11. Beholde, I will bring a plague among them, which they shall not be able to escape, and though they crie vnto me, I wil not heare them. 3.20.7
19. Let vs destroy the tree with the frute thereof, & cut him out of the land of the liuing, &c. 4.17.15
- 12.16. And if they will learne the wayes of my people, to sweare by my name, the Lord liueth, as they taught my people to sweare by Baal, &c. 2.8.23
- 14.7. O Lord, though our iniquities testifye against vs, deale with vs according to thy name: for our rebellions are many: we sinned against thee. 3.20.8 14. The Prophets prophetic lyes in my name, I haue not sent them, neither did I commaunde them, &c. 4.9.3
- 15.1. Though Moses & Samuel stood before me, yet mine affectiō could not be toward this people: cast them out of my sight, & let them depart. 3.20.23
- 17.1. The sinne of Iudah is written with a pen of iron, & wth the point of a Diamond, & grauen vpon y^e table of your heart, & vpon the hornes of your altars. 3.4.29
5. Thus saith the Lord, cursed be the man y^e trusteth in man, & maketh flesh his arme, & withdraweth his hart from the Lord. 2.2.10
9. The heart is deceitful and wicked about all things, who can know it? 2.3.2
21. Take heede to your soules, and beare no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Ierusalem. 2.8.29
22. Neither cary forth burdens out of your houses on y^e Sabbath day, neither do you any work, but sanctifie the Sabbath, &c. 2.8.29
27. But if you wil not heare mee to sanctifie the Sabbath day, & not to beare a burden, nor to go through the gates, &c. 2.8.29
- 18.8. But if this nation, against whom I haue pronounced, turne frō their wickednesse, I will repent of the plague that I thought to bring vpon them. 1.17.12
18. Come & let vs imagine some deuise against Ieremias: for the lawe shall not perish from the Priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor y^e worde from the prophet. 4.9.5
- 20.2. Then Phasur smote Ieremias the Prophet, & put him in y^e stocks y^e were in the hie gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of y^e Lord. 4.9.6
- 21.12. Execute iudgement in y^e morning, and deliuer the oppressed out of the hand of the oppressour, &c. 4.20.9
- 22.3. Execute ye iudgement & righteousnesse, and deliuer y^e oppressed from the hande of the oppressour, &c. 4.20.9
- 23.1. Woe bee vnto the pastors that destroy & scatter the sheepe of my pasture, saith the Lord. 4.9.3
5. Beholde, the dayes come, saith the Lord, that I will raise vnto Dauid a righteous branche, and a king shall raigne and prosper, and shall execute

- cute iudgement and iustice in the earth. 2.6.3
- 6 And this is the name whereby they shall call him, the Lord our righteousness. 1.13.9.& 3.11.8
- 16 Heare not the wordes of the prophetes that prophecy vnto you and teach you vanitie,&c. 4.9.2
- 24 Do not I fill heauen & earth, saith the Lord? 4.1.5
- 28 The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tel a dreame,& he that hath my worde, let him speake my word faithfully. 4.8.3
- 24.7. And I wil giue them an heart to knowe me, that I am the Lord, and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, for they shall returne vnto me with their whole heart. 2.2.20
- 25.11 And this whole land shalbe desolate, and astonished, and these nations shall serue the king of Babell seuentie yeares. 1.8.7
- 12 And when the seuentie yeares are accomplished, I will visite the king of Babell, and that nation, sayth the Lord, for their iniquitie, &c. 1.8.7
- 29 For loc, I beginne to plague the city, where my name is caled vpon, and should you go free? &c. 3.4.34
- 27.5 I haue made the earth, the man and the beast that are vpon y^e ground &c. 4.20.27
- 6 But now I haue giuen all these lands vnto the hand of Nabuchadonozor the king of Babylon my seruant, &c. 4.20.27, 28
- 7 And all nations shal serue him, and his sonne and his sons sonne vntill the very time of his land come also, &c. 4.20.27
- 8 And the nation & kingdom which wil not serue the same Nabuchadonozor king of Babell, and that will not put their necke vnder y^e yoke of the king of Babell, &c. 4.20.27
9. Therefore heare not your prophetes, nor your southsayers, nor your dreamers, nor your inchaunters, nor your forcerers which say vnto you thus, ye shall not serue the king of Babell, &c. 4.9.3
14. Therefore heare not the wordes of the prophetes that spake vnto you, saying, yee shall not serue the king of Babell, &c. 4.9.3
- 17 Heare them not, but serue the king of Babel, that ye may liue, &c. 4.20.28
- 29.7 And seeke the prosperitie of the Citie, whether I haue caused you to be caried away captiues, & pray vnto the Lorde for it, for, &c. 4.20.28
- 31.18 I haue heard Ephraim lamēting thus, thou hast corrected me, and I was chastised as an vnrained calfe: conuert thou me and I shal be conuerted: for thou art the Lorde my God. 2.3.5. and 2.5.8. and 3.24.15
19. Surely after that I conuerted, I repented, and after that I was instructed, I smote vpon my thigh, &c. 2.5.8
- 31 Beholde, the daies come, saith the Lorde, that I will make a newe couenant with the house of Israel, & with the house of Iudah. 2.11.7. & 3.4.29
- 32 Not according to the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I tooke them by the hand, to bring them out of the lande of Egypt, the which my couenant they brake, &c. 2.5.9. & 2.11.7
- 33 After those daies saith the Lorde, I will put my lawe in their inwarde partes, and write it in their hearts, & will be their God, & they shalbe my people. 2.8.14. & 3.20.45
- 34 For I will forgieue their iniquitie, & wil remember their sinnes no more 3.4.29

- 34.29.&3.20.45
 35 Thus saith the Lord, which giueth the Sunne for a light to the day, and the courses of the Moone and of the Starres, for a light to the night, &c. 4.17.17
 32.16 Now when I had deliuered the booke of the professiō vnto Baruch, the sonne of Neriah, I prayed vnto the Lorde, saying. 3.20.15
 18 Thou shewest mercy vnto thousandes, and recompenset the iniquitie of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them, &c. 2.8
 19
 23 But they obeyed not thy voyce, neither walked in thy lawe: all that thou commandest them to do, they haue not done, therefore thou hast caused this whole plague to come vpon them, &c. 2.5.11
 39 And I will giue them one heart and one way, that they may feare me for euer, for the wealth of thee, and of their children after thē, &c. 2.3.8
 33.8 And I will cense them from all their iniquitie, whereby they haue sinned against me: yea, I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they haue sinned against me, &c. 3.20.45 & 4.1.20
 16 And in those dayes shall Iuda be saued, & Ierusalem shal dwel safely, and he that shal call her is the lord our righteousnesse, &c. 1.13.9

- 30 And then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen, and then shall all the kindredes of the earth mourne, and they shall see the sonne of man come in the cloudes of heauen with power and greate glory. 2. 16 17
- 36 But of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angelles of heauen, but my father onely. 1 14. 9
- 45 Who then is a faithfull seruaunt, and wise, whome his maister hath made ruler ouer his housholde, to giue them meate in season? 4. 16 31
25. 3 The foolish tooke their lampes, but tooke no oyle with them. 3. 5. 7
- 21 Then his maister said vnto him, it is well done good seruaunt and faithfull: thou hast bene faithfull in litle, I will make thee ruler ouer much: enter into thy maisters ioy. 2 3. 11
- 23 It is well done good seruaunt and faithfull, thou hast bene faithfull in litle, &c. 2. 3. 11
- 29 For vnto euery man that hath, it shall be giuen, and hee shall haue abundance: and from him that hath not, euen that he hath, shall be taken away. 2. 3. 11. & 3. 15. 4
- 31 And when the sonne of man cometh in his glorie, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sitte vpon the throne of his glorie. 2. 16

- 17
 32 And before him shall be gathered all nations, & he shall separate one from another, as a shepheard separateth the sheep from the goats. 2.16.17. & 3.25.9
- 34 Come ye blessed of my father, inherit ye kingdom prepared for you from the foundations of the world. 3.18.1. & 3.18.2. & 3.18.3. & 3.24. 16
- 35 For I was an hungred, and ye gaue me meate: I thirsted, & ye gaue me drinke, &c. 3.18.1
- 40 Verilie I say vnto you, in as much as ye haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it to me. 3.18.6
- 41 Depart from me ye cursed, into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his Angels. 1.14.14 & 1.14.19. & 3.25.5
- 46 And these shall go into euerlasting paine, and the righteous into life eternall. 3.25.5
- 26.10 Why trouble yee the woman? for she hath wrought a good worke vpon me. 3.25.8
- 11 For yee haue the poore alwayes with you, but me shall ye not haue with you alwayes. 4.3.1. & 4.17.26. & 4.17.28
- 12 For in that she powred this oyntment vpon my body, shee did it to bury me. 3.25.8
- 15 And he sayd to them, what will ye giue mee, and I will deliuer him vnto you? and they appointed vnto him thyrty peeces of siluer. 4.18. 14
- 26 And as they did eate, Iesus tooke the bread: and when he had giuen thanks hee brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and sayde, take, eate: this is my body. 4.14.20. and 4.16.30 and 4.17.1. and 4.17.20. and 4.19 23
- 27 Also he toke the cup, and when he had giuen thanks, he gaue it to the, saying, drinke ye all of it. 4.9.14
- 38 Then said Iesus vnto the my soule is very heauy euen vnto the death: tary ye here, and watch with me. 2. 16.12. & 3.8.9
- 39 So he went a litle further, and fell on his face, & praied, saying: O my Father, if it be possible let this cup passe from me, neuertheles not as I will, but as thou wilt. 2.16.12
- 53 Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he will giue me more then twelue legions of Angels? 1.14.8
- 74 Then began hee to curse himselfe and to sweare, saying, I knowe not the man. 4.1.26
- 75 Then Peter remembered the words of Iesus, which saide vnto him, Before the cocke crowe thou shalt deny me thrise. So hee went out, and wept bitterly. 3.3.4
- 27.4 I haue sinned betraying the innocent blood, but they sayde, what is that to vs? see thou to it. 3.3.4
- 12 And when he was accused of the chiefe Priests and Elders, he answered nothing. 2.16.5
- 14 But he answered him not to one word, in so much that the gouernor marueiled greatly. 2.16.5
- 23 Then said the gouernour, but what euill hath he done? then they cried the more, saying, let him be crucified. 2.16.5
- 24 When Pilate sawe that he auailed nothing, but that more tumult was made, he tooke water and washed his handes before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this iust man: looke you to it. 2. 16.5
- 46 And about the ninth houre Iesus cryed with a loude voyce, saying, Eli, Eli, Lamasabaethani? that is, my

my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 2.16.11

50. Then Iesus cried againe with a loude voice, and yelded vp y^e ghost. 4.19.23

52. And the graues did open themselves, and many bodies of y^e saintes which slept, arose, 2.10.23. and 3. 25.7

53. And came out of the graues after his resurrection, and went into the holy citie, and appeared to manie. 2.10.23

66. And they went and made the sepulchre sure with the watch & sealed the stone. 3.25.3

28.5. But the Angell answered, and saide to the women, feare yee not, &c. 1.14.6

M A R K E.

1 THE beginning of the Gospel of Iesus Christ the sonne of God. 7. 9.2

4. Iohn did baptise in the wildernes, and preached the baptisme of amendment of life for remission of sinnes. 3.3.19. & 4.19.17

15. And saying the time is fulfilled, & the kingdom of God is at hand, repent & beleue the gospell. 3.3.19

3.15. And that they might haue power to heale sickneses, and to cast out deuils. 1.13.13

28. Verily, I say vnto you, all sins shall bee forgiven vnto the children of men, and blasphemics, wherewith they blasphemie. 3.5.7

29. But he that blasphemeth against the holy Ghost, shall neuer bee forgiven, but is culpable of eternal damnation. 1.13.15. & 3.3.22

6.7. And gaue them power ouer vncleane spirites. 1.13.13

13. And they cast out many deuils, & they annointed many that were sick with oyle, and healed them. 4.19.18 & 4.19.21

7.33. Then he tooke him aside from y^e multitude, & put his fingers in his eares, and did spit, and touched his tongue. 4.19.23

8.38. For whosoeuer shall be ashamed of mee, and of my wordes among this adulterous and sinfull generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, &c. 4.1.26

9.24. Lord, I beleue: helpe my vnbeleefe. 4.14.7

43. To go into hel, into the fire that neuer shall be quenched. 3.25.12

44. Where their worme dieth not, & the fire neuer goeth out. 3.25.12.

10.9. Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate. 4.1.1

30. But he shal receiue a hundred fold nowe at this present :troues, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and landes with persecutions:and in the world to come eternall life. 3.18.3

11.24. Whatsoeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleue that ye shalt haue it and it shalbe done vnto you. 3.20.11

12.18. Then came the Sadduces vnto him (which say, that there is no resurrection) and they asked him, saying. 3.25.5

13.32. But of that day & houre knoweth no man, no, not the Angels which are in heauen, neither the sonne himselte, saue onely the Father. 2.14.2

14.22. And as they did eat, Iesus toke the breade, and when he had giuen thanks, hee brake it and gaue it to them, and saide, take, eate: this my body. 4.17.1. & 4.17.20

33. And he tooke with him Peter, and Iames, and Iohn, & he began to bee afraide, and in great heaumeffe. 3. 8.9

34. And saide vnto them, my soule is verie heaueie, euen vnto death: tary here and watch. 2.16.12

15.28. Thus the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was counted among the wicked. 2.16.5

16.9. He appeared first to Marie Magdalene, out of whome hee had cast seuen deuils. 1.14.14

15. Goe yee into all the worlde, and preach the Gospell to euery creature. 4.3.4. & 4.3.12. & 4. 16. 27. & 4. 19.28

16. He that shal beleue and be baptised, shall bee saued. 4.15. 1. & 4. 16.27

19. So after the Lord had spoken vnto them, he was receiued into heauen and sat at the righthand of God. 2. 14.3. & 4.17.27

1.6. BOth were iustified before God and walked in all the commandementes and ordinances of the lorde, without reproofe, 3.17.7

15. And hee shall bee filled with the holy ghost, euen from his mothers wombe. 4.16.17

17. For hee shall goe before him in the spirite and power of Elias: to turne the heartes of the fathers to their children, and the disobedient to the wisdome of the iust men, to make readie a people prepared for the Lord. 4.1.6

31. For loe, thou shalt conceiue in thy wombe, and beare a sonne, and shalt call his name Iesus. 2.16.1

32. Hee shall be great, and shall bee called the sonne of the most high, & the Lord shall giue vnto him the throne of his father Dauid. 2.14.4,7

33. And he shall raigne ouer the house of Iacob for euer, and of his kingdom shall bee none ende. 2.14.3. & 2.15.3

34. Then saide Marie vnto the Angel, how shall this be, seeing I know no man? 4.17.25

35. And the Angel answered, & saide vnto her, the holy Ghost shal come vpon thee, and the power of y most high shall ouershadou thee: therefore also, that holy thing which shal be borne of thee, shall be called the sonne of God. 2.14.5

43. And whence commeth this to me that the mother of my Lord should come to me? 2.14.4

34. Hee hath vpholden Israell his seruant, being mindful of his mercie. 2.10.4

72. That he would shew mercie towards our fathers, and remember his holy couenant. 2.10.4

73. And

- 73 And the oth which hee sware to our father Abraham. 2.10.4
- 74 That we beeing deliuered out of the handes of our enemies, should serue him without feare. 3.16.2
- 77 And to giue knowledge of saluation vnto his people, by the remission of their sinnes. 3.11.22
- 79 To giue light to them that sitte in darkenesse, and in the shadowe of death, and to guide our feete into the way of peace. 2.12.4
- 2.11 That is, that vnto you is borne this day in the Citie of Dauid a Sauiour, which is Christ the Lorde. 2.15.5
- 13 And streight way there was with the Angell a multitude of heauenly soldiers, praying God, &c. 1.14.5
- 37 And shee was a widowe about fourescore and fowre yeares, and went not out of the temple, & serued God with fastings, and prayers, night and day. 4.12.16
52. And Iesus increased in wisdom, and stature, and in fauor with God and men. 2.14.2
- 3.3. And he came into al the coastes about Iordan, preaching the baptisme of repentance for the remission of sinnes. 3.3.19. & 4.15.7. & 4.19.17.
8. Bring forth therefore fruites worthy amendement of life, and begin not to say with your selues, we haue Abraham to our father: for I say vnto you, that God is able of these stones to raise vp children vnto Abraham. 3.3.5.
- 14 The souldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, and what shall wee doe: and he saide vnto them, do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages. 14.20.12
- 16 Iohn answered, and sayd to them al, in deed I baptize you with water, but one stronger then I, commeth, whose shooes latchet I am not worthy to vnloose: he will baptize you with the holy Ghost, and with fire. 3.1.3,4.& 4.15.6,7
- 22 And the holy Ghost came downe in a bodily shap like a Dove, vpon him, and there was a voyce from heauē, saying, thou art my beloued sonne: in thee I am well pleased. 4.17.21
- 23 And Iesus himselve began to be about thirtiē yeares of age, being as men supposed the sonne of Ioseph, which was the sonne of Elic. 4.25.27
- 38 Which was the sonne of Enos, whiche was the sonne of Seth, which was the sonne of Adam, which was the sonne of God. 2.12.7 & 2.13.3
- 4.17 And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the prophet: Esaias: and when he had opened the booke hee founde the place where it was written. 4.19.23
- 18 The spirite of the Lord is vpon me because he hath annointed me, that I should preach the Gospell to the poore: he hath sent me, that I should heale the broken in heart. 2.15.2 & 3.20. & 3.4.3
- 5.13 And touched him, saying, I will, be thou clean. And immediatly the leprosie departed from him.
- 14 And he commanded him that he shoulde tell it to no man: but goe, saith he, and shewe thy selfe to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, as Moses hath commanded, for a witness vnto them. 3.4.4
- 34 Can ye make the children of the wedding chamber faste, as long as the bridegrome is with them? 4.12.17
- 6.13 And when it was day, he called his disciples, and of them he chose twelve

- 22 conclude, which also hee called Apostles. 4.3.5
 23 Reioyce ye in that day, and be glad:
 for behold, your reward is great in heauen, &c. 3.18.1
 24 But woe be to you that are riche, for you haue receiued your consolation. 3.19.9
 32 Be ye mercifull therefore, as your father also is mercifull. 3.7.6 7.29 Then all the people that heard, and the publicanes iustified God, being baptised with the baptisme of
 Iohn. 3.11.3
 35 But wisdome is iustified of all her children. 3.11.3 36 And one of the Pharisees desired him that he woulde eate with him:
 and hee went into the Pharisees house, and sat downe at the table. 3.
 4.37
 47 Wherefore I say vnto thee, many sinnes are forgiven her: for she loued much. To whom a litle is forgiuen, he doth loue a litle. 3.4.31 8.2 And certaine women, which were healed of euill spirites, and infirmities, as Marie whiche was called Magdalene, out of whome went seuen deuils. 1.14.14 7 And some fell among thornes, and the thornes sprung vp with it, and choked it. 3.2.10 13 But they that are on the stones, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy: but they haue no rootes, which for a while beleue, but in the time of tentation go away. 3.2.10 15 But that which sel on good ground, are they which with an honest, and good hart heare the worde, & keepe it, & bring forth fruit with pacience
 4.14.11
 9.23 If any man will come after me, let him deny himselfe, and take vp his crosse daily and followe me. 3.15.8 26 For: whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed when he shall come in his glory, & in the glorie of the father, and of the holy Angels. 1.14.9
 55 But Iesus turned about, and rebuked them, and sayd, ye know not of what spirite ye are. 3.20.15 10.1 After these things the Lord appointed other 70. also, & sent them two and two before him, &c. 4.3.4 6 And if the sonne of peace be there, your peace shall rest vpon him: if not, it shall returne to you againe. 3 23.14
 16 He that heareth you, heareth me:
 and he that despiseth you, despiseth
 me. 4.3.3. & 4.8.4
 18 I sawe Sathan, like lightening, fall downe from heauen. 1.14.18 20 Neuerthelesse, in this reioyce not, that the spirites are subdued vnto you: but rather reioice, because your names are written in heauen.
 3.24.9
 21. The same houre reioyced Iesus in the spirite and sayd, I confesse vnto thee father, Lorde of heauen and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and learned, and hast reuealed them to babes, euen so, father, because it so pleased thee. 3.2.34
 22 All things are giuen me of my father: & no man knoweth who the sonne is, but the father: neither who the father is, saue the sonne: and he to whom the son will reueale him. 3 2.1. & 4.18.20
 23 Blessed are the eyes, which see that ye see. 2.9.1 24 For I tell you, that many Prophets and Kings haue desired to see these things, which ye see, and haue not seene them, &c. 2.9.1. & 2.11.6 25 Maister, what shall I do, to enherite

- rite eternall life? 4.13.13

29. For I knowe this, that after my departing, shall greuous wolues enter in among you, not sparing the flocke. 4.9.4
30. Moreouer of your owne selues shall men arise, speaking peruerse things, to draw disciples after the 4.9.4
31. Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three yeares I ceased not to warne euery one night and day with teares. 4.3.6
- 36 And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all. 4.19.2
- 21.4. And when wee had sounde disciples, we taried there seuen dayes. 3.2.6
- 22.1. Yee men, brethren, & fathers, heare my defence nowe towards you. 3.20.19
16. Arise and be baptised, and washe away thy sinnes, in calling on the name of the Lord. 4.15.19
18. And I sawe him saying vnto mee: make hast and gette thee quickly out of Ierusalem, for they will not receiue thy witnesse concerning me. 4.17.17.29
25. And as they bound him with chonges, Paul saide vnto the Centurion that stood by, is it lawful for you to scourge one y^e is a Romane, and not condemned? 4.20.19
- 23.1. And Paul behelde earnestly the council, and said: Men & brethren, I haue in al good conscience serued God vntill this day. 3.17.14
8. For the Sadduces said, that there is no resurrection, neither Angell, nor spirite, &c. 1.14.9. & 1.15.2. & 2. 10.23. & 3.25.5
12. And when the day was come, certaine of the Iewes made an assēblie, and bound themselues with an oth, saying, that they would neither eat nor drinke, till they had killed Paul.

- Paul. 4.13.3
 24.12. And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man neither making vtore among the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the citie. 4.20.19
 15. And haue hope towards God, y the resurrection of the dead which they themselues looke for also, shall be both of iust and vniust. 3.25.9
 16 And herein I endeuour my selfe to haue alway a cleare conscience towards God, and towards men. 3.19.16.&4.10.4
 25.10. Then said Paul: I stand at Cefars iudgement seat, where I ought to be iudged: To the Iewes I haue done no wrong, as thou verie well knowest. 4.20.19
 11. For if I haue done wrong, or committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to dy: but if there be none of these things wherof they accuse me, no man can deliuer mee vnto them: I appeale vnto Cesar. 4.20.19.
 26.17. Deliuering thee from the people, & from the Gentiles, vnto who now I sende thee. 3.2.1
 18. To open their eyes, y they may turne from darkenesse to light, and from the power of Satan vnto God, that they may receiue forgiuenesse of sinnes, and inheritaunce among them, which are sanctified by faith in me. 3.2.1
 20. But shewed first vnto them of Damascus, and at Ierusalem, & through our all the coast of Iudea, and then to the Gentiles, that they shoulde repent, and turne to God, and doe works worthis amendement of life 3.3.5
 28.15. And from thence, when the brethren hearde of vs they came to meete vs. 4.6.17
 16. So when we came to Rome, the Centurion deliuered the prisoners

- to the general captaine, &c. 4.6.15
 25. Well spake the holy Ghost by Esaias the Prophete, vnto our fathers. 1.13.15

ROMANES.

- 1.1. Paul a seruaunt of Iesus Christ, called to bee an Apostle, put apart to preach the Gospel of God. 2.14.6.&4.3.10
 2. Which hee had promised before by his Prophetes in the holy scriptures. 2.10.3
 3. Concerning his sonne Iesus Christ our Lord which was made of y seed of Dauid, according to the fleshe. 2.13.1,3.&2.14.6
 4. And declared mightily to bee the sonne of God, touching the spirit of sanctification by the resurrection from the dead. 2.16.13.&4.19.22
 5. By whom we haue receiued grace and Apostleship, y obedience might be giuen vnto the faith in his name among all the Gentils. 3.2.6.&3.2.8 &3.2.29.
 7. Grace be with you, and peace frō God our father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13
 9. For God is my witnesse, whome I serue in my spirite in the Gospell of his sonne, that without ceasing I make mention of you. 2.8.27
 16. For I am not ashamed of y gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God vnto saluation to euery one that beleueth, to the Iewe first, and also to the Grecian. 2.9.4. & 2.10.3.&3.2.29.&4.1.5
 17. For by it the righteousnesse of God is reuealed, from faith to faith: as it written, the iust shall liue by faith. 3.2.29.3.2.&3.11.19
 19. Forasmuch as that, which may be knowen to God, is manifest in the: for

- for God hath shewed it vnto the. 1.5.1.13
21. Because that when they knewe God, they glorified him not as god neither were thankful, but became vaine in their imaginations, &c. 1.5.12
22. When they professed themselues to bee wise, they became fooles. 1. 4.1
28. For as they regarded not to know God, euen so God deliuered them vp vnto a reprobate minde, to doe those things which are not conuenient. 1.18.2
- 2.6. Who will rewarde euery man according to his workes. 3.16.3.& 3.18.1
- 11 For there is no respect of persons with God. 3.23.10
12. For as many as haue sinned without the lawe, shall perish also without the lawe, & as many as haue sinned in the law, shalbe iudged by the lawe. 2.2.22
13. For the hearers of the law are not righteous before God, but the doers of the law shalbe iustified. 3.11. 15.& 3.17.13
14. For when y^e Gentiles which haue not the law, do by nature y^e things contained in the law, they hauing not the lawe, &c. 2.2.22
15. Which shew the effect of the law written in their harts, their conscience also bearing them witness, and thoughtes accusing one another, &c. 3.19.15. & 4.10.3
25. If thou be a transgressour of the law, thy circumcision is made vncircumcision. 4.14.24
- 3.4. Yea, let God be true, & euery mā a lier, &c. 4.15.17
9. What then? are we more excellent? no, in no wise, for we haue alreadye proued, that al, both Iewes & Gentiles are vnder sinne. 3 4.6
10. As it is written: there is none righteous, no not one. 2.1.9. & 2.3. 2.& 2.5.3
12. There is none that doth good, no not one. 2.3.3
15. Their secte are swift to shed bloud, &c. 2.3.3
19. Now we know, that whatsoeuer the law saith, it saith it to them y^e be vnder the law: that euery mouth may be stopped, & all the world be culpable before God. 2.7.8. & 2.10. 3.& 3.4.6
20. Therefore by the workes of the law, shall no flesh be iustified in his sight: For by the law commeth the knowledge of sinne. 2.5.6. & 2.7.7. & 3.11.19
21. But now is the righteousnesse of God made manifest without the law, hauing witness of the lawe, & of the Prophets. 2.9.4. & 2.10.3. & 3 11.18,19
24. And are iustified frely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. 2.5.3. & 2.16.5. & 2.17 5. & 3.4.30. & 3.11.4,19, & 3.15.6. & 3.20.45
25. Whom God hath set forth to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloud, to declare his righteousnes, by the forgiveness of the sinnes that are passed through the pacience of God. 4.15.3
26. To shew at this time his righteousnes, that he might be iust, and a iustifier of him which is of y^e faith of Iesus. 3.11.12. & 3.13.1. & 3.13.2. & 3.14.17
27. Where is then thy reioycing? It is excluded. By what law? of workes? nay: but by the law of faith. 3.11.13 & 3.13.2
- 4.2. For if Abraham were iustified by workes, hee hath wherein to reioyce, but not with God. 3.11.13. & 3.11.18

3. Abraham beleued God, & it was counted to him for righteousnesse. 2.15. & 3.14.5 3.17.8,10
4. Now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by det. 3.11.20
5. But to him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iustifieth y vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. 3.11 3,6
6. Euen as Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man, vnto whome God imputeth righteousnes without workes, saying: 2.17.5. & 3.11.4, 20,22
7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sinnes are couered. 3.11.11
10. How was it then imputed? when he was circumcised, or vncircumcised? &c. 4.16.3
11. After he receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousnes of y faith which he had, when he was vncircumcised, &c. 4.14.5,21,23. & 4.16.20
12. And the father of circumcision, not vnto them only which are of y circumcision, &c. 4.16.12
13. For the promise y he should bee the heire of y world, was not giuen to Abraham, or to his seed, through the lawe, but through the righteousnes of faith. 3.14.11
14. For if they which are of y lawe, be heires, faith is made voide, and the promise is made of none effect. 3.11.11. & 3.13.3
15. For the lawe causeth wrath: for where no lawe is, there is no transgression. 2.7.7. & 3.11.19
17. As it is written: I haue made thee a father of many nations, euen before God whome he beleued, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were. 2.10.11. & 3,
21. And being full certified that what he had promised he was able also to performe. 3.2.31
25. Who was deliuered to death for our sinnes, and is risen againe for our iustification. 2.16.5. & 2.16.13 & 2.17.5
- 5.1. Then being iustified by faith, we haue peace towarde God through our Lorde Iesus Christ. 3.2.16. & 3.13.5
3. Knowing that tribulation bringeth forth pacience, &c. 3.8.3
5. And hope maketh not ashamed, because the loue of God is shed abroad in our heartes by the holy Ghost, which is giuen vnto vs. 3.1.2 & 3.2.12
8. But God setteth out his loue toward vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. 2.12. 4. & 2.16.4. & 3.4.25
9. Much more then, being nowe iustified by his blood, wee shalbe saued from wrath through him. 2.16.5
10. For if when wee were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his sonne, much more being reconciled, we shalbe saued by his life. 2.16.2,4,5. & 2.17.3,6. & 3.11 21. & 3.14.6
12. As by one man sinne entred into the world, and death by sinne, and so death went ouer all men, forasmuch as all men haue sinned. 2.1.6, 8. & 2.13.4
15. But yet the gift is not so, as is the offence: for if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which by one man Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.4
16. Neither is the gift so, as y which entred in by one that sinned: for the fault came of one offence vnto

- condemnatō, but the gift is of many offences to iustification. 2. 17.3
- 19 For as by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many also be made righteous. 2. 1.4.& 2.16.5.& 2. 17.3. and 3. 11.4,9,12,23. and 4. 14. 21
- 20 Moreouer, the law entred there- vpō, that y offence should abound: neuerthelesse where sinne abounded, there grace abounded muche more. 2.5.6.& 2.7.7
- 6.3 Knowe ye nor, that all we which haue ben baptised into Iesus Christ, haue bene baptised into his death? 4.15.5
- 4 Wee are buried then with him in baptisme into his death, that like as Christ was raised vp from the dead by the glory of the father, so we also should walke in newnesse of life. 2.8 31.& 2.16.7,13.& 3.3.5.& 4.16.16,21 & 4.19.8
- 6 Knowing this, that our olde man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that hence forth we should not serue sin. 3.3.9,11
- 12 Let not sinne therefore reigne in your mortall bodie, that ye should obey it in the lustes thereof. 3.3. 13
- 14 For sinne shall not haue dominion ouer you: for ye are not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace. 3.19.6.& 4.15. 12
- 18 Being then made free frō sinne, ye are made the seruants of righteousnesse. 3.6.3.& 3.16.2
- 19 I speake after the manner of men, because of y infirmitie of your flesh for as ye haue giuen your members seruantes to vncleanesse, and to iniquitie, to commit iniquitie, &c. 3.24 10.& 3.25.8
- 23 For the wages of sinne is death: but the gift of God is eternall life through Iesus Christ our Lord. 2.8 58,59.& 3.4.28.& 3.14.21
- 7.1 Knowe yee nor brethren, for I speake to them that knowe the lawe, that the lawe hath dominion ouer a man as long as he liueth? 4. 15.12
- 7 What shall we say then? is the law sinne? God forbid. Nay I know not sinne but by the lawe: &c. 2.5.6.& 2. 7.6
- 12 Wherefore the lawe is holy, and the cōmandement is holy, and iust, and good. 2.9.4
- 14 For we knowe that the law is spirituall, &c. 2.8.6
- 15 For I allowe not that which I do: for what I would that do I not, but what I hate that do I. 2.2.27
- 18 For I knowe, that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, &c. 2 1.9
- 19 For I do not the good thing, which I woulde, but the euill, which I would not, that doe I. 2.2.27.& 3.3. 11
- 20 Nowe if I doe that I would not, it is no more I that doe it, but the sin that dwelleth in me. 2.2.27
- 23 But I see an other lawe in my members, rebelling against the lawe of my minde, and leading me captiue into the law of sinne, which is in my members. 3.3.14
- 24 O wretched man that I am, who shal deliuer me frō the body of this death? 3.9.4. & 3.11. 11. & 4. 15.12
- 8.1 Nowe then there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Iesus, which walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit. 3.4.28.& 4 15.12
- 3 For that that was impossible to the law, in as much as it was weake because of the fleshe, God sending his

- his owne sonne, in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sinne, condemned sinne in the flesh. 2.7.5. & 2.12.4 & 2.13.1,4. & 2.16.6. & 3.2.32. & 3.4
 27. & 3.11.23
- 6 For the wisdome of the fleshe is death: but the wisdome of the spi-rite is life and peace. 2.3.1
- 7 Because the wisdome of the flesh is enmitic against God: for it is not subiect to the lawe of God, neither in deed can be. 2.1.9. & 3.3.8. & 3.20 24
- 9 Nowe yee are not in the fleshe but in the spirite, because the spirite of God dwelleth in you: but if any mā hath not y^e spirit of Christ, the same is not his. 3.1.2 and 3.2.39. & 4.17 12
- 10 And if Christ be in you, the bodie is dead because of sinne: but the spirit is life for righteousnes sake. 2.1.6 & 3.1.3. & 3.2.24. & 3.25.3. & 4.17.12
- 11 But if the spirite of him that raised vppe Iesus from the dead, dwell in you, he that raised vp Christ frō the dead, shal also quicken your mortal bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you. 1.13.18. & 3.1.2. & 3.2.39 & 3.25.3,8. & 4.17.12
- 14 For as many as are led by the spi-rite of God, they are the sonnes of God. 3.2.39
- 15 For yee haue not receiued the spi-rite of bondage, to feare againe: but ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption, &c. 2.11.9. & 2.14.5. & 3.1.3. & 3.
 2.11. & 3.13.5. & 3.20.1. & 3.24.1. & 4
 19.22.
16. The same spirite beareth witness with our spirite, that wee are the children of God. 3.2.39.
17. If wee bee children, wee are also heires, euen the heires of God, and heires annexed with Christ, &c. 2.
 12.2.
19. For the seruent desire of the creature, waiteth when the sonnes of God shalbee reuiled. 3.9.5. & 3.25.
 2.
- 20 Because the creature is subiect to vanitie, not of it owne will, &c. 2.1.
 5
- 22 For we know that euerie creature groneth with vs also, & traueileth in paine together vnto this present 2.1.5. & 3.25.2
- 23 And not onely the creature, but we also which haue the first frutes of the spirite, euen wee doe sigh in our selues, waiting for the adoptiō, euen the redemption of our body.
 3.18.3. & 3.25.11
- 24 For we are saued by hope: but hope that is seene, is no hope, &c. 2.9.
 3
- 25 But if we hope for that we see not,
 we do with patience abide for it. 3 2.41,42. & 3.25.11
- 26 Likewise the spirite also helpeth our infirmities: for wee knowe not what to pray as we ought, &c. 3.20.
 5
- 27 But he that searcheth the heartes knoweth what is the meaning of the spirit, for he maketh request for the saintes, &c. 3.20.5,34
- 29 For those which hee knewe before, he also predestinat to be made like to the image of his sonne, that he might be the first borne among many brethren. 2.13.2. & 3.1.1,3. &
 3.8.1. and 3.15.8. & 3.18.7. & 3.24.
 1
- 30 Moreouer, whom he did predestinate, them also he called: And whō he called, them also he iustified: And whom he iustified, &c. 2.5.2. & 3.14.
 21. & 3.18.4. & 3.24.6
- 31 Who spared not his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all to death, how shall he not with him giue vs all things also? 2.14.7. & 2.17.6. & 3 24.5

33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustificieth. 3.11.3,6,11
34. Who shall condemne? it is Christ that is dead, yea or rather which is risen againe, who is also at y^e right hand of God, &c. 2.16.13. & 2.16.16 & 2.16.18. & 3.20.20
35. Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sworde? 3.13.5. & 3.2.28
36. For thy sake are we killed all the day long: we are counted as sheepe for the slaughter. 3.9.6. & 3.25.3. & 3.14.19
38. For I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come 3.2.16. & 3.2.40. & 3.15.8. & 3.24.6
39. Nor heighth, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate vs from the loue of god, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. 3.2.16, 28,40
- 9.3. For I would wish my selfe to be seperated from Christ, for my brethren that are my kinsmen according to the flesh. 3.20.35
5. Of whome are the fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh, Christ came, who is God ouer all blessed for euer, Amen. 1.13.11. & 2.13.1,3. & 2.14.6
6. For al they are not Israelites, which are of Israel. 3.22.4. & 4.2.3
7. Neither are they all children, because they are the seede of Abraham: But in Isaac shall thy seede be called. 3.21.7. & 4.16.14
8. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are accounted for the seede. 3.21.7
11. For ere the children were borne, & whē they had done neither good nor euill, that the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, but by him that calleth: 3.22.4
12. It was said vnto her, the elder shall serue the younger. 3.2.25
13. As it is written, I haue loued Iacob, and haue hated Elau: 3.21.7. & 3.22.11
14. What shall we say then? is there vnrighteousnesse with God? God forbid. 3.22.8
15. I will haue mercie on him to whō I wil shew mercie: & I wil haue compassion on him to whom I wil haue compassion. 3.22.6
16. So then it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercie. 2.5.4, 17. & 3.24.1
17. For this same purpose haue I stirred thee vp, that I might shewe my power in thee, &c. 3.24.14
18. Therefore he hath mercie on whō he wil, & whom he will he hardeneth. 1.18.2 & 3.22.11
20. But, O man, who art thou that pleadest against God? &c. 3.23.1, 4. & 3.24.16
21. Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the same lump, &c. 3.17.5
22. What and if God woulde, to shewe his wrath, and to make his power knowen, suffer with long patience the vessels of wrath? &c. 1.14.18. & 3.23.1
24. Euen vs, whom he hath called, not of the Iewes onely, but also of the Gentiles. 3.24.16
32. For they haue stumbled at y^e stumbling stone. 1.13.23
33. Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling stone, and a rock of offence. 1.13.11

- And whosoever beleueth on him, shall not be confounded. 1.13.13
- 10.5. For they being ignorant of the righteousnesse of God, and going about to establish their owne righteousnesse, &c. 3.11.13
4. For Christ is the end of the lawe, for righteousnesse vnto euery one that beleueth. 1.6.2.& 2.6.4.& 2.7.2.& 3.2.6.& 4.8.13
5. That the man that doth these things shall liue thereby. 3.11.14,17.& 3.17.3
6. But the righteousnesse of faith speaketh on this wise: Say not in thy heart, who shall ascend into heauen? &c. 1.17.2
7. Or, who shall descende into the deep? that is, to bring Christ again from the dead. 1.17.2
8. This is the worde of faith which we preach. 2.5.12.& 3.2.29,30.& 4.14.14
9. For if thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lorde Iesus, and shalt beleue in, &c. 3.11.14
10. For with the hart man beleueth vnto righteousnesse, and with the mouth man confesseth to saluatiō. 3.2.2:8
11. Whosoever beleueth in him, shall not be ashamed. 1.13.13
14. But how shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleued? &c. 3.20.1,11
17. Then faith is by hearing, & hearing, &c. 3.20 27.& 4.1.5.& 4.6.3.1.& 4.8.9.& 4.16.19
- 11.2. God hath not cast away his people which hee knewe before, &c. 3.22.6
4. But what saith the aunswere of God to him? I haue reserued vnto my self seuen thousand men, which haue not bowed the knee to Baal. 4.1.2
5. Euen so then at this present time, is there a remnant, through y^e election of grace. 3.21.1
6. And if it be of grace, it is no more of workes: or else were grace no more grace, &c. 3.14.5
16. For if the first fruits be holy, so is the whole lump: and if the roote be holy, so are the branches. 4.16.15
17. And though some of the branches be broken off, & thou being a wilde Oliue tree, wast graft in for them, and made partaker of the roote, & fatnesse of the Oliue tree. 3.17.8
20. Well, through vnbeleefe they are broken off; & thou standest by faith, be not hie minded, but feare. 2.3.22 & 3.24.6
26. And so all Israel shall be saued, as it is written: The deliuerer shall come out of Sion; and shall turne away the vngodlinesse from Iacob 3.3.21
29. For the giftes and calling of God are without repentance. 4.16.14
32. For God hath shut vp all in vnbeleefe, that hee might haue mercie on all. 2.7.8. & 3.23.11.& 3.24.16
33. O the deepenesse of y^r riches both of the wisdome and knowledge of God: howe vnsearchable are his iudgements, and his wayes past finding out? 1.17.2.& 3.23.5
34. For who hath knowen the minde of the Lorde? or who was his counseller? &c. 3.2:34. & 4.18.19. & 4.19.2
35. Or who hath giuen vnto him first and hee shall be recompenced? 3.14.5.& 3.22.3.& 3.23.11
36. For of him, & through him, and for him, are all things, &c. 2.8.19
- 12.1. I beseech you therefore brethren, by thy mercies of God, y^e ye giue vp your bodies a liuing sacrifice, holy.

- holy & acceptable vnto God which is your reasonable seruing of God. 4 3.7.1.& 3.16.3.& 4.18.16
- 2 And fashion not your selues like vnto this world, but be ye changed by the renewing of your minde, that yee may prooue what is the will of God, good, & acceptable, and perfect. 2.1.9.& 4.16.4
- 3 As God hath delt to euery man the measure of faith, 4.13.3.& 4.16.4.& 4.17.3²
- 4 For as we haue many members in onebody, and al members haue not one office. 3.16.2
Whether we haue prophetic, let vs prophetic according to the proportion of our fayth. 4.16.4. and 4.17 32
- 7 Or an office, let vs waite on the office, or he y teacheth, on teaching.
4.3.8
- 8 Or he that exhorteth on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him doc it with simplicitie: he y rulerh, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie, with cherefulnesse. 4.3.8,9.& 4.11.1 & 4.20.4
- 10 Be affectioned to loue one an other with brotherly loue: In giuing honour, goe one before an other. 3.7 4
- 14 Blesse them that persecute you:
blesse, I say, and curse not 4.20.
20
- 19 Derely beloued, auenge not your selues, but giue place vnto wrath:
for it is written: Vengeance is mine
I will repay, sayth the Lorde. 4.20 19
- 21 Be not overcome of euil, but overcome euill with goodnesse. 4.20.
20
- 13.1 Let euery soule be subiecte vnto
the higher powers: for there is no power but of God: and the powers that be, are ordeined of God. 3.19.
- 15.& 4.10.3,5.& 4.20.4,7,23
- 4 For he is the minister of God for thy wealth: but if thou doe euill, feare: for he beareth not the sword for nought, for he is the minister of God, to take vengeance on him that doth euil. 4.20.10.& 4.20.17.& 4.20.
19
- 5 Wherefore ye must be subiect, not because of wrath onely, but also for conscience sake. 3.19.15.& 4.10.3.& 4.20.22
- 6 For, for this cause ye paye also tribute: for they are Gods ministers, applying themselues for the same thing. 4.20.13
- 8 Owe nothing to any man, but to loue one an other: for hee y loueth an other, hath fulfilled the lawe. 2.8 53
- 9 For this, thou shalt not committe adulterie, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not beare false witness, thou shalt not couet:
and if there be any other commandement, it is breccly comprehended in this saying, namely: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8 57
- 14 But put ye on the lord Iesus Christ, and take no thought for the flesh, to fulfill the lustes of it. 3.1.1.& 3.10 3
- 14.1 Him that is weake in the faith, receiue vnto you, but not for controuersies of disputations. 3.19 11
- 5 This man esteemeth one day aboue an other day, & an other man coun-teth euery day alike: let euery man be fully persuaded in his mind. 2.8.
33
- 10 For we shall all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ. 1.13.11 & 3.5.8
11. For it is written I liue, sayeth the Lorde: And euery knee shall bow to me,

- me, & all tongues shall confesse vnto God. 1.13.11,23.& 3.25.7.
13. Let vs not therefore iudge one another any more: but vse your iudgement rather in this, that no man put an occasion to fal, or a stumbling blocke before his brother. 3.19. 11.
14. I know, and am perswaded through the Lorde Iesus, that there is nothing vncleane of it selfe: but vnto him that iudgeth any thing to bee vncleane, to him it is vncleane. 3.19. 8.
17. For the kingdome of God is not meate and drinke: but righteousnes and peace, and ioye in the holy Ghost. 2.15.4
22. Hast thou faith? haue it with thy selfe before God: blessed is hee that condemneth not himselfe in that thing which he alloweth. 3.19.8
23. For he that doubteth is condemned if he eate, because hee eateth not off fayth: and whatsoeuer is not off fayth is sinne. 3.5.10.& 3.15.6.& 4. 13.17.& 4.15.22.
- 15.1. We which are strong, ought to beare the infirmities of the weake and not to please our selues. 3.19. 11.
5. Now the God of patience and consolation, graunt that you bee like minded one towards another, according to Christ Iesus. 4.2.5.
6. That ye with one mind and with one mouth may praise God, euen the father of our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.20.29;31.
8. Now I say, that Iesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, for the truche of God, to confirme the promises made vnto the fathers. 3.2. 32.& 4.16.15.
12. There shall be a roote of Iesse, & he that shall rise to reigne ouer the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles,
- trust. 1.13.13
19. So that from Ierusalem, and round about vnto Illyricum, I haue caused to abound the Gospel of Christ. 4.3.4
20. Yea, so I enforced my selfe to preach y^e Gospel, not where Christ was named, &c. 4.3.4
25. But now go I to Ierusalem, to minister vnto the Saintes. 4.6.14.
30. Also brethren, I beseeche you for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake, and for the loue of the spirite that yee woulde striue with mee by prayers to God for me. 3.20.20
- 16.3. Greete Priscilla and Aquila my fellowe helpers in Christ Iesus. 4. 6.14.
7. Salute Andronicus & Junia my cousins and fellow prisoners which are notable among the Apostles, and were in Christ before me. 4.3.5
20. The God of peace shal tread Satan vnder your feete shortly. 1.14. 18.& 3.15.5
25. By the reuelation of the mysterie, which was kept secreete since the worlde began. 2.9.4.
26. But nowe is opened, & published among al nations by the scriptures of the Prophets, &c. 2.9.4

I. CORINTHIANS.

- 1.1. Paul called to be an Apostle of Iesus Christ, through the wil God, and our brother Sostenes. 4.3.10.
3. Grace be with you and peace from God our father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13.
9. God is faithfull by whome yee are called vnto the fellowshipe of his sonne Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.5
11. For it hath bin declared vnto me, my brethren, of you by them y^e are of the house of Cloe, that there are contentions among you. 4.1. 14.
12. Nowe

- 12 Nowe this I say, that euery one of you sayeth, I am Paules, &c. 4.13.
14
- 13 Is Christ deuided? was Paul crucified for you? either were ye baptised into the name of Paul? 3. 5. 2. & 4. 15 13
- 20 Where is the wife? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this worlde? &c. 2. 2. 20
- 21 For seeing the world by wisdom knewe not God in the wisdom of God, it pleased God by the foolishnes of preaching to saue them that beleue. 2. 6. 1
- 23 But wee preach Christ crucified: vnto the Iewes, euen a stonbling blocke, and vnto the Grecians, foolishnesse. 3. 24. 14
- 26 For brethren, you see your calling how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. 3. 23. 10
- 30 But yee are of him in Christ Iesus who of God is made vnto vs, wisdom and righteousnes, and sanctification, &c. 2. 15. 2. & 2. 16. 19. & 3. 3. 19 & 3. 4. 30. & 3. 11. 6. 12. & 3. 14. 27. & 3. 15. 5. & 3. 16. 1
2. 2 For I esteemed not to knowe any thing among you, saue Iesus Christ, and him crucified. 1. 13. 13. & 2. 12. 4. 5. & 2. 15. 2. & 3. 2. 1
- 4 Neither stode my worde and my preaching in the enticing speech of mans wisdom, but in plaine euidence of the spirite. 1. 8. 1. & 4. 1. 6. & 4. 14. 11
- 5 That your sayth should not be in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. 3. 2. 35
- 8 Which none of the princes of this worlde hath knowen, for had they knowen: &c. 1. 5. 12. & 2. 14. 2. & 4. 17 30
- 10 But God hath reueiled them vnto vs by the spirite: for the spirit searcheth all things, yea y deepe things of God. 1. 13. 14. & 3. 2. 34
- 11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, saue the spirite of a man which is in him? euen so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirite of God. 3. 2. 34
- 12 Nowe wee haue receiued not the spirite of the worlde, but the spirite which is of God, that wee might know the thinges that are giuen to vs of God, 3. 2. 39. & 4. 8. 11
- 13 Comparing thinges spirituall with spirituall thinges. 4. 16. 31
- 14 But the natural man perceiueth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolishnesse vnto him: neither can he know them, because they are spirituall discerned. 2. 2. 20 & 3. 2. 34
- 16 For who hath knowen the minde of the Lorde, that he might instruct him? but we haue y mind of Christ. 1. 13. 14. & 3. 13. 4 3. 2 I giue you milke to drinke, and not meate: for ye were not able to beare it: neither yet now are ye able 3. 19. 13
- 3 For where as there is among you enuying, and strife, & diuisions, are ye not carnal, and walke as men? 2. 5. 4. & 4. 1. 14
- 4 For when one sayeth, I am Paules, another, I am Appollos, are ye not carnal? 4. 4. 2. & 4. 13. 14
- 6 I haue planted, Appollo watered, but God gaue the encrease. 4. 14. 11
- 7 So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth but God y giueth the encrease. 2. 5. 4 3. 23. 14. & 4. 1. 6
- 8 And euery man shall receiue his wages according to his labour. 3. 16 3. & 3. 18. 3
- 9 For we together are gods labourers ye are gods husbandry, and Gods building
Hh'h h building

- building. 2.5.17.& 4.1.6
- 11 For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laide, which is Iesus Christ. 3.15.5. & 4.6.6
- 12 And if any man build on this foundation, golde, siluer, or precious stones, timber, hay, or stubble. 3.5.9
- 13 Euery mans worke shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it because it shalbe reueiled by the fire &c. 3.5.9
- 14 If any mans worke that he hath built vpon, abide, hee shall receiue wages. 3.5.9
- 15 If any mans worke burne, he shall lose, but he shalbe safe himselfe: neuertheless yet as it were by the fire 3.5.9
- 16 Knowe ye not that ye are y^e Temple of God, & that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? 1.3.15.& 3.6.3.& 3.16.2.& 3.25.7.& 4.3.1
- 19 For the wisdom of this worlde is foolishnesse with God: for it is writtē He catcheth the wise in their owne craftinesse. 1.5.7.& 2.2.20
- 21 Therefore let no man reioyce in men: for all things are yours 4.19
- I
- 4.1 Let a man so thinke of vs, as of the ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secretes of God. 4.3.6.& 4.8.
- I
- 4 For I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustified: but he y^e iudgeth me, is the Lord. 3.12.2. & 3.17.14.
- 5 Therefore iudge nothing before the time, vntill the Lord come, who will lighten thinges that are hid in darknesse, and make the counsels of the heart manifest: &c. 3.2.4
- 7 For who separateth thee? and what hast thou, that thou hast not receaued? if thou hast receiued it, why reioycest thou, as though thou hadest not receiued it? 2.5.2 & 3.7.4.& 3.24.
- 12
- 1.5 For in Christ Iesus I haue begottē you through the Gospell. 4.1.6
- 5.1 It is heard certainly that there is fornication among you, & such fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, &c. 4.1.14
- 2 And ye are puffed vp and haue not rather sorrowed, that hee whiche hath done this deede, might be put from among you. 4.1.15
4. When yee are gathered together, and my spirite, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that, such a one I say, by the power of our Lord Iesus Christ. 4.11.5. & 4.12.4
- 5 Be deliuered vnto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. 4.12.5,6
- 6 know ye not that a litle leauen, leaueneth the whole lump? 4.12.5
- 7 For Christ our passeouer is sacrificed for vs. 4.12.13. & 4.18.3
- 11 If any that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or couetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one eate not. 4.1.15. & 4.12.5
- 12 For what haue I to doe, to iudge them also, which are without? doe ye not iudge them that are within? 4.11.5
- 6.6 But a brother goeth to lawe with a brother, & that vnder the infidels. 4.20.21
- 7 Nowe therefore there is vtterly a fault among you, because ye go to lawe, one with an other. 4.1.14
- 9 Knowe ye not that the vnrighteous shall not inherite the kingdome of God? &c. 3.4.21. & 3.24.10
- 10 Be no deceiued, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers nor wantons, nor buggerers, nor theecues, nor couctous, nor drunkardes, nor railers nor extortioners shall

- shall inherite the kingdom of God. 3.
4.21,
11. But ye are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the spirite of our God. 1.13, 14. & 3.1.1. & 3.6.3. & 3.14.6. & 3.24.10.
13. Meats are ordeined for the belly,
& the belly for the meates: but God shall destroy both it, and them, & c.
3.25.8. & 4.13.9. & 4.19.7.
- 15 Know ye not, that your bodies are members of Christ? & c. 3.6.3. & 3.25
8. & 4.17.9.
- 19 Knowe yee not, that your body is the temple of the holy Ghost which is in you, whom you haue of God?
& c. 1.13, 15. & 3.3.9. & 3.25.7. & 3.
25.8. & 4.3.1.
20. For yee are bought for a price:
therefore glorifie God in your body, and in your spirite: for they are Gods. 2.17.5. & 3.25.7.
- 7.2. Neuerthelesse, to auoyde fornication, let euery man haue his wife, and let euery woman haue hir own husband. 2.8.43.
3. Let the husband giue vnto the wife due beneuolence, and likewise also the wife vnto the husband. 4.12.
16.
5. Defraud not one an other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may giue your selues to fasting, and praier: and againe come together that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. 4.12.16.
7. I would that all men were euen as I my selfe am: but euery man hath his proper gift of god, one after this maner, and an other after that. 2.
8.42.
9. But if they can not abstaine, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burne. 2.8.43. & 4.13.17.
14. For the vnbeleuing husband is sanctified by the wife, and the vnbe-leuing wife is sanctified by the husbande, else were your children vncleane: but nowe are they holy. 2.1.
7. & 4.16.6. & 4.16.15. & 4.16.31
19. Circumcision is nothing: and vn-circumcision is nothing: but the keeping of the commaundementes of God. 4.14.24
21. Art thou called being a seruauant?
care not for it: but if yet thou maist be free, vse it rather. 4.20.1 23. Ye are bought with a price: be not seruants of men. 4.20.32 31. And they that vse this world, as though they vsed it not: for the fashion of this worlde goeth away. 3.
10.1.4. & 4.19.7
34. The vnmarried womā careth for the things of the Lorde, that shee may be holy both in body & in spi-rite, & c. 3.10.1, 4. & 4.19.7 35. And this I speake for your owne commodities, not to tangle you in a snare. 4.10.2
- 8.1. And as touching thinges sacrificed vnto idols, we knowe, that we haue knowledge, & c. 4.10.22
4. For though there bee that are called Gods, whether in heauen, or in earth, & c. 1.13.11
6. Yet vnto vs there is but one God, which is the father, of whome are all thinges, and we in him: and one Lorde Iesus Christ, & c. 1.13.11. & 2.
3.6. & 2.14.3. & 2.15.5
9. But take heed least by any meanes this power of yours be an occasion of falling to them that are weake. 3.
19.11. & 4.10.22
- 9.1. Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? haue I not seene Iesus Christ our Lorde? are ye not my worke in the Lord? 3.14.15. & 4.1.14. & 4.17
17. & 4.17.29.
2. For ye are the scale of my Apostleship in the Lorde. 4.1.6
5. Or haue we not power to leade about a wife being a sister, as well

- as therest of the Apostles, and as the brethren of the Lorde, and Cephas? 4.12.25
12. Neuerthelesse, wee haue not vsed this power but suffer all things, that we should not hinder the gospel of Christ. 3.14.15.
16. And woe is vnto mee, if I preach not the gospel. 4.3.6
19. For though I be free from all men yet haue I made my selfe seruaunt vnto all men, that I might winne the more. 3.19.12
20. And vnto the Iewes I become as a Iewe, that I might winne y^e Iewes. &c. 4.19.26
22. To the weake I become as weake, that I may winne the weake: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all meanes saue some. 3.19.12
- 10.1. Moreouer, brethren I would not that ye should be ignorant, that all our fathers were vnder the cloude, and all passed through the sea. 2.10.5.
2. And were all baptised vnto Moses in the cloude, and in the sea. 4.15.5.
3. And did all eate the same spirituall meat. 4.14.23. & 4.18.20
4. And did all drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they dranke of the spiritual rocke that followed them: and the rocke was Christ. 1. 13.10. & 2.9.1. & 4.14.26. & 4.17.15, 21, 22
5. But with many of them God was not pleased: for they were ouerthrown in the wildernesse. 4. 14.24
11. And all these things came vnto them for ensamples, and were written to admonish vs, vpon whom the endes of the worlde are come. 2.10.5. & 3.2.22.
12. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed least he fall. 3.2.40. & 3.24.6
13. There hath no tentation taken you but such as appeareth to man. &c. 3.20.46
16. The cuppe of blessing which we blesse, is it not the communion of the bloode of Christ? the breade which we breake, is it not the communion of the bodie of Christ? 4.17.10. & 4.17.15. & 4.17.22. & 4.17.38. & 4.18.8
17. For wee that are many, are one breade and one bodie, because wee al are partakers of one bread 4. 17.14.
23. All things are lawfull for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawfull for mee, but all things edifie not. 3.19.12
25. Whatsoeuer is souled in the shambls, eate ye, and aske no question for conscience sake. 3.19.11
28. But if any man say vnto you, this is sacrificed vnto idoles, eate it not because of him that shewed it, and for thy conscience, &c. 3.19.6. & 4.10.4
29. And the cōscience I say, not thine but of that other, &c. 3.19.11. & 4.10.4
31. Whether therefore yee eate or or drinke, or whatsoeuer ye do, do al to the glory of God. 3.20.44

- 11.4. Euery man praying or prophesying hauing any thing on his head dishonoureth his head. 4.19.26
5. But euerie woman that prayeth or prophecieth bareheaded, dishonoureth her head. 4.10.29
7. For a man ought not to couer his head: forasmuch as he is the image and glorie of God: but the woman is the glorie of the man. 1.15.4
16. But if any man lust to bee contentious,

- tious, wee haue no such custome, neither the Churches of God. 4.10 31.
20. When yee come together therefore into one place, this is not to eate the lordes supper. 4.18.12 22. Haue yee not houfes to eate and drinke in? despise ye the Church of God? &c. 4.10.29
23. For I haue receiued of the Lord that which I also deliuered vnto
you. &c. 4.17.35,50
24. And when he had giuen thankes he brake it, and saide, Take, eat: this is my body, which is brokē for you:
this doe you in remembrance of
me. 4.17.1.& 4.17.20 25. After the same maner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying this is the newe Testament in my blood, &c. 4.17.20 26. For as often as yee shall eate this bread and drinke this cup, ye shew the Lordes death vntill he come. 4.
16.30. & 4.17.37
28. Let a man therefore examine him self, and so let him eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup. 4.1.15 & 4.16
30. & 4.17.40
29. For he that eateth and drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because hee dis-cerneth not the Lords body. 4.1.15.
& 4.16.30. & 4.17.33,34.40
31. For if we would iudge our selues we should not be iudged. 3.3.18 32. But when wee are iudged, we are chastened of the Lorde, because we should not be condemned with the worlde. 3.4.33; & 3.8.6
- 12.3. Wherefore, I declare vnto you, that no man speaking by the spirite of God calleth Iesus execrable, &c.
2.2.20
6. And there are diuersities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all. 2.3.6,9 8. For to one is giuen by the spirite, y worde of wisdome, and to an other the word of knowledge, by the same spirite. 4.3.11
10. And to an other diuersities of tongues, and to an other the interpretation of tongues. 1.13.14. & 3.2.9 11. And all these thinges worketh euen the selfe same spirit, distributing to euery mā seuerally as he wil.
1.13.14. & 4.13.3
12. For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the mēbers of the body which is one, though they be many, yet are but one body:
euen so is Christ. 1.13.16. & 3.7.5.
& 3.16.2. & 4.17.22
13. For by one spirit are wee all baptized into one body, whether wee are Iewes or Grecians, &c. 4.2.4.7. & 4.
15.15. & 4.16.22
25. Least there should be any diuisi-on in the bodie: but that the members should haue the same care one for an other. 3.20.20 28. And God hath ordeined some in the Church, as first Apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers, then them that doe miracles: after y the gistes of healing, helpers, &c. 4.3.8.
& 4.11.1. & 4.20.4
31. But desire you the best gistes, &
I will yet shewe you a more excellent way. 3.2.9
- 13.1. Though I speake with y rongs of men and Angels, and haue not loue, I am as sounding brasse, or a tincling Cymball. 2.5.4
2. If I had all faith, so that I coulde remoue mountaines, and had not loue, I were nothing. 3.18.8
3. And though I feed the poore with all my goods, and though I giue my body that I be burned, and haue not loue, it profiteth me nothing. 4.13.
13.
4. Loue suffereth long: it is bounti-full.

- full: loue enuieth not: loue doth not boast it selfe: it is not puffed vp. 3.7.
5,6
9. For we knowe in part, and we propheticke in part. 3.2.20 10. But when that which is perfect, is come, then that which is in parte, shall be abolished. 3.2.13 12. For now we see through a glasse darkely: but then shall we see face to face, &c. 3.22.11 & 4.18.20 13. And now abideth faith: hope and loue, euen thesethree: but the chief-fest of these is loue. 3.18.8
- 14.15. What is it then? I will praye with the spirite, but I will pray with the vnderstanding also, &c. 3.20.5.
& 3.20.32

than they al, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in mee. 2.3.12. & 4.
1.6
12. Now if it be preached, that Christ is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the deade? 3.25.7. & 4.
1.14,
13. For if there be no resurrection of y^e dead, the is Christ not risen. 3.25.3.
14. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vaine, & your faith is also in vaine. 3.25.3 16. For if the dead be not raised, then is Christ not raised. 2.13.2.
17. And if Christ bee not raised, your faith is vaine, &c. 2.13.2. & 2.16.13.
19. If in this life onely we haue hope in Christ, we are of all men the most miserable. 3.9.6. & 3.18.4.
20. But nowe is Christ risen from the dead, and was made the first frutes of them that slept. 2.16.13.
27. For seeth by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 2.1.6.
22. For, as in Adā all men dy euen so in Christ shall all bee made alue. 4.
16.17.
25. For he must reigne till he hath put all his enemies vnder his feete. 2.16.

7. But we haue this treasure in earthe vessels, that the excellencie of that power might be of God, and not of vs. 4.1.5. & 4.3.1
8. Wee are afflicted on euerie side, yet are wee not in distresse: in p^ouertie, but not ouercome of p^ouertie. 3.8.9. & 3.15.8
9. Wee are persecuted, but not forsaken: cast downe, but wee perishe not. 3.15.8
10. Euerie where we beare about in our body, the dying of the Lord Iesus, that the life of Iesus also might bee made manifest in our mortall flesh. 3.15.5. & 3.15.8. & 3.18.7. & 3.25.3. & 3.25.7
13. And because wee haue the same sprite of faith, according as it is written, I beleued, and therefore haue I spoken, &c. 3.2.35
- 5.1. For we know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be destroyed, we haue a building giuen of god &c. 3.25.6
2. For therefore wee sigh, desiring to bee clothed with our house, which is from heauen. 3.9.5
4. Because wee would not be vnclodeth, but woulde be clothed vpon, that immortalitie might bee swallowed vp of life. 1.15.2. & 3.9.5
5. Who also hath giuen vnto vs the earnest of the sprite. 2.9.3. & 3.2.36
6. Therefore wee are alwayes bold, though we knowe that whiles wee are at home in this bodie, wee are absent from the Lord. 1.15.2. & 3.2.14. & 3.9.4. & 3.25.1. & 3.25.5
7. For wee walke by faith, and not by sight. 3.2.14
8. Neuertheles, wee are bolde, and loue rather to remooue out of the bodie, and to dwell with the Lord. 1.15.2
10. For we must all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ, &c. 1.13.11. & 1.15.2. & 3.18.1. & 3.25.7
18. And all thinges are of God, which hath reconciled vs vnto himselfe by Iesus Christ, &c. 3.2.29. & 3.5.5. & 3.11.4. & 4.6.3
19. For

19. For God was in Christ, and reconciled the world to himselfe, not imputing their sinnes vnto them, &c. 2.12.4.& 2.17.2.& 3.2.32. & 3.4.25. & 3.11.22. & 3.14.11.& 4.1.22.
20. Nowe then are wee ambassadors for Christ; as though God did beseeche you through vs, &c. 3.4.27. & 4.1.22.& 4.3.1.
21. For he hath made him to be sinne for vs, which knewe no sinne, that we should bee made the righteousness of God in him. 2.16.5. & 2.16.6. & 2.17.2. & 3.5.2. & 3.11.11. & 3.11.22. & 3.11.23.
6. 8. By honour, and dishonour, by euill report and good reporte, &c. 3.8.8.
16. For yee are the Temple of the liuing God, &c. 1.13.15. & 3.6.3. & 3.16.2.
7. 1. Seeing then that we haue these promises, dearly beloued let vs cleanse our selues from all filthines of the flesh and the spirite, &c. 1.15.2. & 2.5.11. & 29.3. & 3.16.2. & 3.25.7.
10. For godly sorrowe causeth repentance vnto saluation, nor to be repented of: but the worldly sorrowe causeth death. 3.3.7. & 3.4.2.
11. For behold, this thing that yee haue benee godly forie, what great care it hath wrought in you, &c. 3.3.15.
8. 11. Now therefore performe to do it also, that as there was a readines to wil, euen so ye may performe it of that which ye haue. 2.5.8.
16. And thanks be vnto God, which hath put in the heart of Titus the same care for you. 2.5.8.
17. Because we accepted the exhortation, &c. 2.5.8.
9. 6. That he which soweth sparingly shall reape also sparingly, and hee that soweth liberally, shall reape also liberally. 3.18.6.
7. As euery man wiseth in his heart, so let him giue, not grudgingly, or of necessitie: for god loueth a cherefull giuer. 3.16.3.
12. For the ministracion of this seruice, not onely supplieth the necessitie of the saints, &c. 3.7.5.
10. 4. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to cast, &c. 4.8.9. & 4.11.5. & 4.11.10.
6. And hauing ready the vengeance against all disobedience, whe your obedience is fulfilled. 4.6.3.
8. For though I should boast somewhat more of our authoritie, which the Lord hath giuen vs for edification. &c. 4.8.1.
11. 14. And no marueil: for Satan himselfe is transformed into an Angell of light. 1.9.2. & 4.12.12.
12. 2. I knowe a man in Christ aboute fourteene yeares agoe. (whether hee were in the body, I can not tel, God knoweth) which was taken vp into the thirde heauen. 1.9.1. & 1.14.4. & 4.3.3.
4. Howe that hee was taken vp into Paradise, & heard wordes which cannot be spoken, which are not possible for man to vtter. 1.14.4.
7. And lest I should be exalted out of measure, through the abundance of reuelations, there was giuen vnto mee a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, &c. 1.14.18. & 3.3.14. & 4.17.34.
8. For this thing, I besought the lord thrise; that it might departe from me. 1.13.20.
9. And he said vnto me, my grace is sufficient for thee: &c. that the power of Christ may dwel in me. 1.3.13. & 1.13.20. & 3.3.14.
21. I feare least when I come againe,

- my God debase me among you, & I shall bewaile many, &c. 3. 18. & 4. 1. 27
13. 4. For though hee was crucified concerning his infirmitie, yet liueth he through the power of god. And we no dout, are weake in him, &c. 2. 13. 2. & 2. 14. 6. & 2. 16. 13
5. Proue your selues whether ye are in the faith: examin your selues: know ye not your own selues, howe that Iesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? 3. 2. 39
10. According to the power which the lord hath giuen me, to edification, & not to destruction. 4. 8. 1
13. The grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and the loue of God, & the communion of the holy Ghoste, &c. 3. 1. 2
- GALATIANS.
1. 1. PAulan Apostle of men, neither by man, but of Iesus Christ, &c. 4. 3. 13. & 4. 3. 14
2. And all the brethren that are with me, vnto the Churches of Galatia. 4. 1. 14
3. Grace be with you, & peace from God the father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1. 13. 13
6. I marueile that ye are so soone removed away vnto another gospel, from him that hath called you in the grace of Christ. 4. 1. 27
8. But though that we, or an Angell from heauen, preach vnto you otherwise then that which we haue preached vnto you, let him be accursed. 4. 9. 12
16. To reueale his sonne in me, that I should preach him among y^e Gentiles, &c. 3. 22. 7
28. Then after three yeares I came againe to Ierusalem to visite Peter, and abode with him fiftene dayes. 4. 6. 7. & 4. 6. 14
2. 1. Then fourteene yeares after, I went vp againe to Ierusalem with Barnabas, and tooke with me Titus also. 4. 6. 14
3. But neither yet Titus which was with me, though he were a Grecia, was compelled to be circumcised. 3. 19. 12
6. God accepteth no mans person, &c. 3. 23. 10
7. When they saw the gospel of the vncircumcision was committed vnto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was vnto Peter. 4. 6. 7
8. For he that was mighty by Peter in the Apostleship ouer the circumcision, was also mightie by mee towards the Gentiles. 4. 1. 6. & 4. 6. 7
9. And when Iames, and Cephas, & Iohn knewe of y^e grace that was giuen vnto me. &c. 4. 6. 13
14. But when I saw, that they went not the right way to the truth of the gospel, I said vnto Peter before al men, if thou, &c. 4. 12. 3
16. Knowe that a man is not iustified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Iesus Christ, &c. 3. 17. 2
19. For I through the law am dead to the lawe, & that I might liue vnto God, &c. 2. 16. 7
20. Thus I liue yet, not I nowe, but Christ liueth in me, &c. 4. 19. 35
3. 1. O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, &c. 1. 11. 7. & 4. 1. 27 & 4. 18. 11
2. Received ye the spirit by y^e workes of the law, or by the hearing of the faith preached? 3. 2. 33. & 4. 1. 6
6. Yea rather as Abraham beleued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness. 3. 17. 8
8. For the Scriptures forescing, that God would iustifie the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospell: vnto Abraham, &c. 3. 11. 3
10. For

- 10 For as many as are of the workes of the lawe, are vnder the curse: for it is written, cursed is euerie man that continueth not in all things, &c. 2.7.5. & 2.7.17. & 2.16.2. & 3.11. 19
- 12 And the lawe is not of faith: but the man that shall doe those things shall liue in them. 3.11.18. & 3.11. 19
- 13 Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse for vs, &c. 2.7.15. & 2.8.57. & 2.16.2. & 2.16.6. & 2.16.19. & 2.17.4. & 3.4.27. & 3.11.12. & 3.19.3. & 4.13. 21
- 16 Now to Abraham, and to his seede were y promises made, &c. 2.6.2. & 2 13.3. & 4.14.21
- 17 And this I say, that the law which was foure hundreth and thyrtye yeares after, can not disanull the couenant that was confirmed afore of God in respect of Christ, that it should make the promises of no effect. 3.11.20
- 18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more by the promise, but God gaue it vnto Abraham by promise. 3.11.17
19. Wherefore then serueth the lawe? it was added because of the transgression, &c. 1.14.9. & 2.5.6. & 2. 7.2
- 21 Is the lawe then against the promises of God? God forbid, &c. 3.11. 19. & 3.4.6
- 22 But the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ shoulde be giuen to them that beleue. 3.4.6
- 24 Wherefore the lawe was schoole-master to bring vs to Christ, that we might be made righteous by faith. 2.7.2. & 2.7.11 & 2.11.5
- 27 For all ye that are baptised into Christ, haue put on Christ. 2.1.3. & 3 1.3. & 4.14.7. & 4.15.6. & 4.16.21. & 4 19.8
- 28 There is neither Iew nor Grecian: there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male nor female: for ye are al one in Christ Iesus. 2.11.11. & 4.20.1
- 4.1. Then this I say, that the heire as long as he is a childe, differeth nothing from a seruant, though he be Lorde of all. 2.11.2. & 2.11.5. & 2.11. 13
- 2 But is vnder tutors & gouernours, vntill the time appointed of the father. 4.10.14
- 3 Euen so wee, when wee were children, were in bondage vnder the iudicementes of the world. 4.10.14
- 4 But when the fulnesse of time was come, God sent forth his son, borne of a woman, &c. 2.16.5. & 2.7.15. & 2 11.11. & 2.12.7. & 2.13.1. & 2.13.3. & 2 17.5. & 4.20.15
- 5 That he might redeeme thē which were vnder the law, y we might receiue the adoption, &c. 2.7.15. & 3. 19.2
- 6 And because ye are the sonnes, God hath sent forth the spirite of his son into your heartes, which crieth, Abba, that is, father. 2.14.5. & 3.1.3. & 3 2.11. & 3.13.5. & 3.20.37.
- 8 But euen then, when ye knewe not God, ye did seruiue vnto thē which by nature are not Gods. 1.4.3. & 1. 12.3
- 8 But nowe, seeing ye knowe God, ye are rather knowen of God, &c. 4. 1.27. & 4.10.10. & 4.19.7
- 10 Ye obserue daies, & monethes, and times, and yeares. 2.8.33
- 11 I am in feare of you, least I haue bestowed on you labour in vaine. 2. 8.33
- 22 For it is written that Abraham had two sonnes, one by a seruant, another by a free woman. 2.11.9. & 4 2.3

- 24 By the which thinges, an other thing is ment: for these mothers, are the two Testamentes, &c. 2.11.9
- 25 For Agar or Sina is a mountain in Arabia, and it answereth to Ierusalem that nowe is, &c. 3.2.6
- 26 But Ierusalem, which is aboute, is free: and is the mother of vs all: 4. 1.1

12 And the Lorde increase you, and make you abounde in loue one to-warde an other, &c. 2.5.6 13 To make your heartes stable, and vnblamable in holines before God,
&c. 3.17.15.
4.3 For this is the will of God, euen your sanctification, &c. 3.16.2 7 For God hath not called vs vnto vncleanes, but vnto holines. 3.16.2 & 3.19.2. & 3.23.13
15 For this say we vnto you by the word of the Lorde, that we which liue, and are remaining in the com-ming of the Lorde, shal not prevent those which sleepe. 3.25.8 16 For the Lorde him selfe shall descend from heauen with a shout, and

- with the voyce of the Archangel, & with the trompet of God: and the dead in Christ shall first rise. 1.14.8 & 2.16.17
17 Then shall wee which liue and re-maine, be caught vp with them also in the cloudes, to meete the Lord in the ayre: & so shall we be euer with the Lorde. 2.16.17.
5.2 For you your selues know perfectly, that the day of the Lorde shall come, euen as a theef in the night. 4 19.34.
9 For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the means of our Lord Iesus Christ
3.16.2
17 Pray continually. 3.20.7. & 3.20.
28
18 In all things, giue thankes, for this is the wil of God in Christ Iesus to-warde you, &c. 3.20.28
19 Quench not the spirite. 1.9.3. & 2.
5.11
20 Despise not prophesying. 1.9.3
23 Nowe the very God of peace sanctifye you throughour: & I pray God that your whole spirit and soule and bodie, may be kept blameles vnto the comming of our Lorde Iesus
Christ. 3.6.3. & 3.17.15. & 3.25.7
II. THESSALONIANS.
1.4 So that we our selues reioyce of you in the Churches of God because of your patience & faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye suffer. 3.2.11 5 Which is a token of the righteous iudgement of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for the which ye also suffer.
3.2.11. & 3.18.7
6 For it is a righteous thing with God, to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. 3.9.6. & 3.18
7. & 3.25.4
7 And

- 7 And to you which are troubled, rest with vs when the Lorde Iesus shall shewe him selfe from heaven with his mightie Angels. 3.18.7
9. Which shall bee punished with euerlasting perdition, from the presence of the Lord, and from y^e glory of his power. 3.25.12
10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saintes, and to bee made merueilous in al them that beleeue (because our testimonie towarde you was beleeued) in that day. 3.25. 10
11. Wherefore, we also pray alwayes for you, y^e our God may make you worthie of his calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of his goodnes, & the worke of faith with power. 2.5. 8.&3.2.35
- 2.3. Let no man deceiue you by any meanes: for that day shal not come except there come a departing first, and that that man of sinne bee disclosed, euen the sonne of perdition. 4.9.7
4. And exalteth himselfe against all that is called God, or that is worshipped so that he doeth sit as God in the temple of God, &c. 4.2.12.& 4.7.25.&4.7.29.&4.9.4
9. Euen him whose comming is by the working of Satan with al power and signes, and lying wonders. 1.14.17.&1.18.2. & 2.4.5
11. And therefore God shall send the strong delusion, that they shoulde beleeue lies. 1.14.17.&1.18.2. & 2.4.5
12. That all they might be damned, which beleeue not the truth, but had pleasure in vnrightheousnesse. 1.18.2.&2.4.5
13. But wee ought alwayes to giue thanks to God for you, brethren, beloued of the Lorde, because hee hath chosen you from y^e beginning to saluation, through sanctification of the spirit, & beleeve of the truth. 3.1.2.
14. Whereunto he called you by our Gospell, to the obtayning of y^e glory of our Lord Iesu Christ. 2.10.3
- 3.6. Wee doe commaunde you brethren, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ that ye withdraw your selues fro euery brother that walketh inordinately, &c. 4.1.26
10. For euen when we were with you this we warned you of, that if there were any that woulde not worke, that he should not eate. 4.16.29
12. Those that be such maner of persons, we commaunde, and beseech for our Lord Iesus Christ, that they worke with quietnes, and eate their owne breade. 3.1.26
14. And if there bee any that followe not our counsel, note by a letter, & haue no companie with him, that he may be ashamed. 4.12.5
15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother. 4.12.10

14. Be they not all ministring spirites sent forth to minister for their sakes that shalbe heires of saluatiō? 1. 14. 9. & 3. 20. 23
2. 5. He hath not put in subiection to the Angels, the worlde to come, of which we speake. 1. 14. 9
9. But wee see Iesus crowned with glorie and honor, which was made a litle while inferiour to Angels, by reason of suffering death, that by Gods grace he might tast of death for all men. 1. 13. 26. & 2. 16. 7
11. For he that sanctifieth, and those that are sanctified, are all of one: wherefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren. 2. 13. 2
14. That he might destroy through death, him that had the empire & power of death, that is the deuill, &c. 1. 14. 18. and 2. 13. 1, 2. and 3. 11. 12
15. And that he might deliuer all the, which for feare of death were all their life time subiect to bondage. 2. 16. 7
16. For in no wise hee tooke the Angels, but hee tooke the seede of Abraham. 1. 14. 9. & 2. 13. 1, 2
17. In all things it became him to bee made like to his brethren, that he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high priest in thinges concerning God. 2. 13. 1. & 2. 16. 2, 19
3. 14. We be made partakers of Christ, if wee keepe sure vnto the end that beginning wherewith wee are vp-holden. 3. 2. 16
4. 9. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. 2. 8. 29
14. Having therefore a great high priest, that hath entred into heauē, cuen Iesus the sonne of God, let vs holde this profession 2. 7. 2. & 4. 14. 21
15. We haue not a hie priest that can not be touched with the infirmitie of our fleshe, but was in all thinges tempted in like sorte, yet without sin. 2. 12. 1, 7. & 2. 13. 1. & 2. 16. 12. & 4. 17. 24
16. Let vs approach therefore with boldnes vnto the throne of grace, y^e we may receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe at time of neede. 3. 20. 12, 17
5. 1. Eueery hie priest is taken from amongest men, & is ordained for me in things pertaining to God, y^e hee may offer both giſts & sacrifice for sinnes

- 4: Neither doth any man take this honour to himselfe, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. 4.3.10 & 4.15.22. & 4.18.9,14.
- 5: And so Christ tooke not to himselfe this honour, to be made hie priest, &c. 4.14.21. & 4.18.2
- 6: Thou art a priest for euer, after the order of Melchisedec. 4.19.28
- 7: Which in the dayes of his flesh did offer vp prayers and supplications with strong crying and teares vnto him, that was able to saue him from death, and was also hearde in that which he feared. 2.16.11
- 8: Although he were the sonne, notwithstanding he learned obediēce by those things that he suffred. 3.8.1
- 10: And called of God an hie priest, after y order of Melchisedec. 4.18.2
- 6.4. For it cannot be that those which were once lightened, and haue tasted of the heauenly giftes, and were made partakers of the holy Ghost. 3.2.11. & 3.3.21,23
- 6: If they fall, that they should be renewed againe by repentance, &c. 3.21
- 10: For God is not vnjust, that he should forget your workes and labour of loue, which ye shewed towards his name, &c. 3.18.7
- 13: For when God made the promise to Abraham, when as he could swere by none greater, he swore by himselfe. 2.8.25
- 16: For men verily swere by him that is greater then themselues, & an oath for confirmation is an ende of strife amongst them. 2.8:27
- 7.3. Without father, without mother, without kindred, and hauing neither beginning of his dayes, nor end of his life, but is likened to the sonne of God, and continueth a priest for euer. 4.19.28
- 7: But without all controuersie, that which is the least is blessed of him that is greater. 4.18.2
- 11: If there had ben a full perfection by the Leueticall priestthoode, &c. 2.11.4.
- 12: The Priestthoode therefore being changed, it must needes be, that there be a change of the law. 3.4.4 & 4.6.2
- 17: Thou art a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedec. 4.18.2
- 19: The lawe sanctified nothing, but the bringing in of a better hope did it by the which we come neere to God. 2.7.17. & 2.11.4
- 21: But this, he is made with an othe by him that said vnto him, The Lord hath sworne and will not repent, thou art a priest for euer, &c. 4.18.2.
- 22: Iesus is made so much greater surety of a better Testament 4.18.2
- 24: And he, because he abideth for euer, hath an euerlasting priestthod. 2.15.6.
- 25: Whereby he is able to saue those which come vnto god by him, 2.16.16
- 8.1. But this is the sum of that which we haue spoken: that we haue such an high priest, that sitteth on the right hand of the throne of maiesty in heauen. 2.16.15
- 5: Sec, quoth he, y thou make al things according to the paterne that was shewed thee in the mountaine. 2.7.1
- 6: But now our hie priest hath obtained a more excellent office, in as much as he is y mediator of a better Testament, &c. 2.16.12
- 9.1. The first Testament had also ordinances of religion, and a worldly sanctuarie 4.14.21
- 7: But into the seconde went the hie priest alone once euery yeare not wout blood which he offered for himselfe and for the people. 2.7.17. &

8. Wherby the holy Ghost this signified, that the way into the holiest of all, was not yet opened, whilest as yet the first tabernacle was standing. 2.7.17.& 2.15.6
