

Whose Knowledge?

We are a multilingual and multi-modal global campaign to center the knowledge of marginalized communities (the majority of the world) on the internet.

Our initiatives

Decolonizing Wikimedia

An umbrella program that includes our #VisibleWikiWomen campaign and other WK? knowledge justice projects on Wikimedia platforms.

Liberatory Archives and Memory

A pilot effort to collectively reimagine the archive and sites of memory as powerful spaces and acts of resistance, healing, and transformation.

#VisibleWikiWomen

A campaign to illustrate Wikipedia with images of women and non-binary people to amplify them on Wikipedia and the broader internet.

Language Justice

A program that shifts the status quo around languages online.

Honouring Our Guardians

An initiative that centers the leadership of Indigenous women activists, policy makers and scholars through a translocal community of practice for climate justice.

Decolonizing the Internet

A gathering to discuss and strategize around decolonization, knowledge, and the internet.

Our principles

- We use an anti-colonial and anti-oppressions feminist framework that localizes and contextualizes our work.
- We use open source and open culture principles.
- We are committed to safety, security and feminist consent.
