After the rendition of the verdict, a statem. The order of the day brought up Mr. Clay's retrenchment and reform resolutions, and Mr. Huntington being entitled to the floor, addressed the senate for upwards of three hours. He confined hinself chiefly to the Tariff question, urging in streousus argument the necessity of a decided and efficient protective system. After he had concluded, Mr. Clay intimated, that if no one cless wanted to speak on the resolutions, he would close the debate to-morrow, but would postpone taking the vote till Tuesday, the 93th instant, as many senators were absent, and would not till then be in their places.

Some conversational disconsion ensued, which ended in passing over the matter informally till to-nforrow, and the senate then went into executive session, and soon after adjourned.
