Johnston v. Mappin, in the Chancery Division, was a curious case as to the construction of voluntary articles executed under seal by a father in favour of his daughters; the operation of the articles on the marriage of one of the daughters; and the effect of a verbal agreement to allow an annuity, on the faith of which the married daughter alleged that she had married. In re The National Debenture and Assets Corporation was a case of the invalid incorporation of a company, the memorandum of association on which the certificate of incorporation was granted not having really been signed by seven persons. There was thus no jurisdiction to make a winding-up order. This decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich has since been affirmed by the Court of Appeal. In Jenkins v. Bushby the Court of Appeal held that Order XXXVI., rule 6, 1883, does not give a right to an order for a trial with a jury in an action in the Chancery Division. In such an action the Court has a discretion under rule 7 (a) to order a trial by a jury, but the onus is on the party asking for it to show some good reason for such a trial. In re Drummond & Davies's Contract illustrated the effect of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, subs. 1, and s. 2, on the Fines and Recoveries Act, s. 40, with respect to the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman. In re Arbib & Class's Contract was a decision of the Court of Appeal that the appointment of a person as trustee 'if and when he shall return to England' took effect on that person's coming to England on a visit only. In re Holmes was a case in which corporation stock was held by Mr. Justice Kay to be an interest in land not bequeathable to a charity: Bedford v. Teal, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 689, was distinguished. Moore v. Knight was an application of the doctrine of Blair v. Bromley, 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 105, 495; 5 Hare, 542; 2 Phil. 354. An innocent partner, notwithstanding the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, was held not entitled to the benefit of the Statute of Limitations as a protection from liability for the frauds of his firm. The Court of Appeal decided, in the case of Mundy's Settled Estates, that money bequeathed to trustees to be laid out in land in trust for persons in succession, but not yet so laid out, may, under section 33 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, be applied as capital money arising under the Act. In the case of In re Harding's Settled Estates, in peculiar circumstances, notwithstanding that there were trustees and a trust for sale, leave to sell was, under section 7 of the Settled Land Act, 1884, given to the tenants-for-life. In re Mabbett was a case involving the right of the representatives of annuitants to receive the value of the annuities when the annuitants themselves had died before the purchase of the annuities had been actually completed. According to Knowles v. Scott the voluntary liquidator of a company is not a trustee of the assets of the company for the creditors or contributories. He is the agent of the company, and in the absence of misfeasance or wilful misconduct, an action will not lie against him for damages resulting from his delay in distributing the company's assets. In re Harrison decides that to an action for a breach of trust against a surviving trustee, when a general account is claimed, the plaintiff is no longer required to make the representatives of deceased trustees defendants, as they can, when necessary, be added as parties under Order XVI., rule 11. In Stone v. Lickorish it was held that an objection is valid against the allowance of profit costs to a solicitor-mortgagee in a redemption action, though the objection was taken for the first time before the taxing-master and not at the hearing. In the case of The Standard Manufacturing Company, the Appeal Court held, under the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, s. 17, that the mortgages or charges of any incorporated company for the registration of which provision has been made under the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, or the Companies Act, 1862, are not subject to registration under the Bills of Sale Act, 1882—Jenkinson v. The Brandley Mining Company, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 568, overruled. It was held in The Westmorland Green and Blue Slate Company v. Fielden that an action lies by the liquidator against the contributory of a company for moneys payable on the allotment of his shares and for calls before the winding-up, notwithstanding that the liquidator has obtained a balance order in the winding-up for payment of the same moneys under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 101, but no action lies on the balance order itself. Ashling v. Boon decides that a promissory note, which is sufficiently stamped as a note, cannot be made available as evidence of the receipt of the money by the maker of the note. In Fuentes Trade-marks registration was refused of a new trade-mark, unobjectionable in itself, which from previous association with fraudulent matters was calculated to secure to the proprietor the benefit of the fraud. Myers v. Myers decides that when a partnership of which the term is expired is continued only for the purpose of winding up the business, a clause providing for the purchase of a deceased partner's share is no longer binding.

In the Queen's Bench Division the Court of Appeal, in Medawar v. The Grand Hotel Company, defined the duration and extent of an innkeeper's liability. Hunt v. The Great Northern Railway Company illustrated the meaning of the words 'engaged in manual labour' in the Employers and Workmen's Act, 1875, s. 10, and their effect on the Truck Acts, 1831 and 1887. In Pittard v. Oliver the Court of Appeal held that the presence of reporters at a meeting of a board of guardians did not destroy the privilege of a guardian in adversely criticising the conduct of a former servant of the board. In Wenman v. Lyon (Honeyman, claimant) a memorandum of agreement for a marriage settlement was held not to require registration as a bill of sale. The Court of Appeal, in Madell v. Thomas, Sons & Co., decided that they were entitled to inquire into the real transaction outside the document in order to decide whether it was a bill of sale or hiring agreement. In Speight v. Gosnay the Court of Appeal held that an action for slander could not be maintained where the repetition of the slander was unauthorised and the damages remote. Surman v. Wharton explains the liability of a husband in respect of his deceased wife's separate estate for her debts. In the case of In re Griffin the Court of Appeal defined what constituted an omission to keep books in a business for the purposes of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 28, subs. 2, 3. In Abrahams v. Deakin the Court of Appeal held an action for false imprisonment not to be maintainable against a master when the arrest was effected at the instigation of a servant acting without his master's authority. Joyce v. Beall was a case of the construction of Order XXXI., rule 26, with respect to the security for costs of the discovery of documents. In In re Tobias & Co. the Court refused a second application for the discharge of a bankrupt on the ground of want of jurisdiction. Turner v. Goldsmith was a case of principal and agent and wrongful dismissal in which the Court of Appeal reversed Mr. Justice Grantham. Boydell v. Millar involved a question of taxation under the County Courts Act, 1888, s. 118. In De Pass v. The Capital and Industries Corporation (Vinall, garnishee) the Court of Appeal decided on the sufficiency of an affidavit in support of a garnishee order. The same Court, in Steel v. The Dartford Local Board, decided a question of liability for injuries sustained in consequence of the subsidence of a road. It was held, on appeal, in Jones v. Macaulay, that judgment in default of pleading cannot be entered upon a counterclaim unless upon motion for judgment under Order XXVII., rule 11. The Appeal Court reversed the Divisional Court in The South Staffordshire Tramways Company v. The Sickness and Accident Assurance Association with respect to the construction of a policy. The appeal in Bolton v. Buckenham was dismissed, and a defendant was discharged from liability as surety because time had been given to the principal debtor. In Drew v. Lewis the Court of Appeal refused to rescind a charging order absolute under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15. They also held, in the case of In re Low, that two or more judgment debts cannot be included in one bankruptcy notice under section 4, subsection 1, of the Act of 1883. In Monk v. Bartram the Court of Appeal lay down rules according to which a stay of execution pending an application for a new trial will be granted. They also declined, in Hewitt v. Barr, to enlarge the time for renewing a writ of summons when the claim would otherwise be barred; and in Bell & Co. v. The Antwerp, London and Brazil Line they lay down the general principle that service of a writ out of the jurisdiction can only be allowed where the contract expressly or by implication is to be performed within the jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal also, in The Western National Bank of the City of New York, lay down the rules applicable to the service of a writ on a foreign partnership, and by a majority overrule several recent cases.

In the Privy Council and Scotch and Irish appeals (pp. 1-16) Hogarth v. Miller was an appeal from the Second Division of the Court of Session involving the construction of a charterparty. In Jenoure v. Delmege, an appeal from Jamaica to the Privy Council, it was held that in an action for defamation no distinction can be drawn between one class of privileged communication and another. King v. Frost was a New South Wales appeal deciding the construction of a will.

THE PARTNERSHIP ACT, 1890.—II.

In construing section 2, which prescribes rules for determining the existence of partnership, a fine point has been raised in Lord Justice Lindley's recent work on the Act. A loan on the terms that the person making the advance is to have a share of the profits does not constitute a partnership if there be writing. What is the result if there be no writing? Is the lender to be in a better position than if he had made the advance under a written agreement? Lord Justice Lindley says, good sense will probably lead the Courts to construe the section so as to avoid this absurdity. Let us hope the Courts will do so. The point ought obviously to have been guarded by the draftsman.

The next group of sections dealing with the relations of partners and persons dealing with them contains very little change in the law. It is, however, pointed out by the authority to whom we have previously referred that section 8, which provides that if it has been agreed between the partners that any restriction shall be placed on the power of any one or more of them to bind the firm, no act done in contravention of the agreement is binding on the firm with respect to persons having notice of the agreement, is probably an alteration of the law, and, in some cases, it might be important.

By far the most important change introduced by the Act is that which is contained in section 23, dealing with the subject of the mode of procedure against partnership property for a separate judgment against a partner. This puts an end to the anomalous and unsatisfactory condition of things which existed previously to the Act.

In Helmore v. Smith, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 145; L. R. 35 Chanc. Div. 436, Lord Justice Lindley, after pointing out that a sheriff could not under a fi. fa. seize book debts or goods, and that it was 'a mistake, a very serious mistake' to suppose that a sheriff under a separate execution against one of several partners could sell the whole of the partner's interest in the partnership, proceeded as follows: 'There are always in practice assets which cannot be reached by a fi. fa. What the sheriff has got to sell is not the share and interest of the execution-debtor in the partnership, but the share and interest of the execution-debtor in such of the chattels of the partnership as are seizable under a fi. fa. The unfortunate purchaser from the sheriff has to find out what he has really had assigned to him, and that he can only do by a partnership account; there is no other method of proceeding. That does involve practically a dissolution of the whole concern.'

Under the new law the procedure is to be by charging order (obtainable on summons), and the appointment of a receiver with all necessary accounts, orders, and directions. The other partners are to be at liberty at any time to redeem the interest charged, or, in case of a sale, to purchase it. Section 24 lays down a series of rules as to the interests and duties of partners subject to special agreement. The whole section is simply declaratory of the settled law and practice, unless, indeed, an exception is to be made in favour of subsection 8, which definitely states what was hitherto considered to be the law as to the rights of the majority. It is now provided that any difference arising as to ordinary matters connected with the partnership business may be decided by a majority of the partners, but no change may be made in the nature of the partnership business without the consent of all existing partners. It must, however, be borne in mind that the power here mentioned must be exercised in good faith and without oppression.

A doubtful point is settled by section 26, subsection 2, which provides that a partnership which is not for a fixed term may be dissolved by notice in writing signed by the partner giving it. This deserves to be noticed as a statutory exception to the rule, 'Unumquodque ligamen dissolvi eodem modo quo et ligatur.'

A nice question may possibly arise as to whether the assignment by a partner of a share may give a right to a dissolution (section 31). It would seem very doubtful whether the subsection (f), section 35, has added anything to the power of the Court to order a dissolution by providing that it may be done 'whenever in any case circumstances have arisen which, in the opinion of the Court, render it just and equitable that the partnership be dissolved.'

It must not be forgotten that the present Partnership Act is by no means a complete code of the law. The principal points of partnership law which might have been dealt with, and which, as the Act stands, are conspicuous by their absence, are as follows: Nothing is done with regard to procedure in proceedings against partners, except so far as section 23, which we have previously mentioned as introducing the important change in respect of proceedings against partnership property in respect of a partner's separate interest, can be said to affect procedure. Nothing is enacted with regard to the goodwill of a partnership. The administration of partnership assets in the cases of death or bankruptcy is not dealt with. The Scotch law of bankruptcy is specially preserved by section 47. The rules of equity and law applicable to partnership, except so far as inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act, are saved by section 46. The rule that there is no survivorship is passed over in silence, and is consequently preserved.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords:—

Bills read a third time and passed:—
Public Bodies (Provisional Orders) Bill.
Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration) Bill.

Bills beyond second reading:—
The Betting by Infants and Borrowing (Infants) Bills have been consolidated under the title Loans (Infants) Act, 1891, and have passed through Committee.
Intermediate Schools, &c. Sites.
Registration of Electors Acts Amendment Bills.
Report agreed to.

Bills passed through Committee:—
Charities Recovery Bill.
Marriage Acts Amendment Bill.
Merchandise Marks Bill.
London (City) Trial of Civil Causes Bill.

Second readings:—
Newfoundland Fisheries Bill.
Savings Banks Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—
Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland).
Trusts Amendment (Scotland) Bill.
London City (Trial of Civil Causes) Bill.

Bills through Committee:—
Mail Ships Bill.
Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, Amendment Bill.

Second readings:—
Summary Jurisdiction (Youthful Offenders) Bill.

New bills:—
To Enable County Councils to Value and Purchase Land.
To Amend the Law of Vagrancy in Scotland.
Customs and Inland Revenue.

The Midwives' Registration Bill was withdrawn.
The Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill was thrown out on the second reading.

Reviews.

PATERSON'S INTOXICATING LIQUOR LICENSING ACTS.

The Intoxicating Liquor Licensing Acts, 1872, 1874, &c. Eighth Edition. By JAMES PATERSON, M.A. London: Shaw & Sons, Fetter Lane. 1891.

THE fact that the table of sections in Acts of Parliament relating to licensing matters occupies sixteen pages in this book, shows the difficulty a writer on the subject must experience in clearly setting forth the law, and also shows that the Legislature should interfere and codify the various statutes that have accumulated during the last sixty years. Licensing law comprises on the one hand statutes and the cases decided upon them, and on the other hand case law of a very diversified character. We think, with regard to the latter, that it should be separated from that part founded upon statutes. The author has placed a note on contracts of sale of licensed houses under section 14 of the Licensing Act, 1828, and on the innkeeper's duties with regard to the person of his guest under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41; we venture to think that such notes could not be discovered without reference to the index. In such cases the plan of following the statutes should be discarded, and a chapter devoted to the rights and liabilities of license-holders generally; such a chapter would include contracts of sale of licensed houses, goodwill, leases, covenants, mortgages, and, perhaps, the Innkeepers Acts, leaving the statutory arrangement to apply only to the licenses. So far as the subject is based on statutes, we think that the author has succeeded in presenting his subject in a very clear and satisfactory shape, and, after careful examination, we are sure that every recent decision has been referred to. The case of Pulbrook v. Ashby (very recently approved in Stevens v. Marston, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 192), upon page 217, seems to have been placed by error under the head of Contracts of Sale of Licensed Premises. We think that the notes upon covenants on pp. 233-236 should be more full to save reference to the reports, and that the rule generally adopted of giving references to every series of reports in which any cited case appears should be carried out in every instance. Apart from the question of arrangement, we commend this book to the profession, and think that it is indispensable to those who are engaged in licensing matters.

SAUNDERS'S INDEX TO THE LOCUS STANDI REPORTS.

The Consolidated Index of Cases Decided by the Court of Referees, and Contained in the 'Locus Standi' Reports 1867 to 1890. Compiled by Reginald C. Saunders, Barrister-at-Law, Joint Editor of the New Series of Locus Standi Reports. London: Butterworths. 1891.

The gratitude of all practitioners in the Court of Referees is unquestionably due to Mr. Saunders for his production of the book which is now before us. Until its appearance there existed no guide to the mass of decisions, teeming with technicalities, contained in the 'Locus Standi Reports' for the past twenty-four years. The reports are, of course, indexed in the usual way, but the indexes are calculated to give but little assistance to any one wishing immediately to lay his finger upon a decision of which his recollection is perfect in every respect except the all-important point of knowing where to find it. Mr. Saunders's experience as a reporter in the Court has shown him exactly what was required in practice, and by his industry he has succeeded in supplying the want. The book mainly consists of two parts—a table of bills and petitions, and an index to subjects. The first part consists of the titles of the bills arranged in alphabetical order, while under each bill are grouped the names of the petitions which have formed the subject of decisions by the Court, with proper references to the reports. The index of subjects is in fact a very complete digest of all the points decided by the Court during the period which it embraces. This part of the book appears to be exceedingly well done. The titles and sub-titles are well chosen, and the cross-references numerous and complete. The book also contains a Table of Statutes specially referred to, a table showing the titles of the Locus Standi Reports from 1867 to 1889, and a Table of Titles, Sub-titles, and Cross-references. Mr. Saunders has evidently bestowed great pains upon his work, and he is to be congratulated upon having produced a book which must be an absolute necessity to all who practise in the Court of Referees, for we venture to think that no practitioner will give his opponent the great advantage of the exclusive use of so formidable a weapon.

PRIDMORE'S GUIDE TO THE PREPARATION OF BILLS OF COSTS.

Guide to the Preparation of Bills of Costs. With Practical Directions for Taxing Costs and Precedents of Bills of Costs in all the Divisions of the High Court of Justice, with Notes and Decisions thereon. Ninth Edition. By Charles W. Scott, one of the Principal Clerks in the Chancery Taxing-Office. London: Waterlow & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

This is a most carefully revised edition of an exceedingly valuable book. The work of revision has been very heavy owing to the numerous alterations that have taken place in the practice of the various Divisions of the Courts since the publication of the last edition, much new matter has been added, and the decisions under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act have been incorporated. Amongst the new matter may be mentioned the Rules and Scales of Charges under the Transfer of Land Act, 1862, and the Land Transfer Act, 1875; the new Lunacy Rules, so far as they relate to costs; the Scale of Fees under the recent Act dealing with the registration of limited companies; the additional Bankruptcy Rules, 1890, and the new Scale of Fees thereunder; the new Orders and Scales of Costs of the Houses of Parliament; the last County Court Rules as to costs; and the new Mayor's Court Rules. A great quantity of entirely new precedents have also been added, and the whole of the precedents have been thoroughly revised, so that Mr. Scott may fairly claim to have produced a complete 'Guide to the Preparation of Bills of Costs.' We imagine that no solicitor will like to be without it.

Correspondence.

COURT ROLLS.

Sir,—In response to the appeal of 'T. K.,' appearing at p. 287 of your last week's issue, I would refer him to 'Greenwood on Courts' (the ninth edition of which was published in 1730), where he will find several specimens of court rolls, in the old abbreviated Latin; and to 'Jacob's Complete Court Keeper' (the eighth edition of which was published in 1819), where he will find many specimens of court rolls which, although in English, will help him to pick out the meaning of any entries in Latin.

A. K. C.

April 27.

Sir,—I should advise your correspondent 'T. K.' to apply to Mr. James Coleman, the well-known genealogical bookseller, Tottenham Terrace, White Hart Lane, Tottenham, N. If anyone can give him the required information, Mr. Coleman can do so.

London: April 24. F. F.

INJUNCTION AGAINST LIBEL.

Sir,—I have noticed your comments upon the libel injunction case. I wish to point out to you that your deductions are made on an erroneous basis.

I have been in the habit of making accusations in the strongest possible manner against Beak and Marks, but it was never stated, nor was it a fact, that I have made any observations upon the plaintiff other than the alleged libel in one number of my paper. I am well able to prove and have proved the truth of these allegations as against these two people, but, of course, they do not affect the plaintiff. The plaintiff endeavoured to get an injunction against me, not because I had done anything against him or ever threatened to do anything against him, as far as repetition of any alleged libel went, but because he said I might repeat perhaps the alleged libel, because I repeated a proved libel against other people. There is no doubt that this far-fetched assumption went some way to ridicule the plaintiff's case, because a Court has seldom been troubled with such a reductio ad absurdum case before.

I may say that I fought the case in order to get the law settled, not that I had any intention to be so silly as to repeat at my peril an article at present challenged as libellous and not proved to the contrary by me as yet.

A. W. PERRYMAN.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1887—NON-AVOIDANCE OF DEED BY OMISSION IN AFFIDAVIT.

His Honour Judge Stonor, at the Brompton County Court, delivered an important judgment on April 23 in the case of Evans v. Hopkins and Fletcher. The facts were these: The defendant Hopkins being indebted to the plaintiff on a bill of exchange for 15*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*, dated May 5, 1890, by a deed dated July 28, 1890, assigned all his property to the defendant Fletcher, as a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. The deed was registered under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, within seven days, and at a meeting of creditors on August 22 a resolution confirming and assenting to the deed was passed by the creditors present, including the plaintiff, who afterwards frequently applied to the defendant Fletcher for the payment of his debt and the realisation of the assets, but did not sign any form of assent. In January last Hopkins settled with all the creditors who had executed or signed formal assents to the deed, and Fletcher thereupon executed a reassignment to Hopkins of the property assigned by the deed of arrangement and delivered the same to him. It was admitted that such property was sufficient to pay the plaintiff's debt and all the other creditors of whom the defendant Fletcher had notice. Hopkins also admitted the debt, and was willing to have judgment entered against him, notwithstanding a release contained in the deed of arrangement. The question whether Fletcher was liable to the plaintiff remained for decision, and it was contended that he was not liable on the ground that the deed of arrangement became void immediately on its registration because the defendant Hopkins omitted this debt and the name and address of the plaintiff in the affidavit of his liabilities which accompanied the deed as required by section 6 of the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887. His Honour held that, but for the decisions on the Bills of Sale Acts, he would have had no doubt in the matter, as it seemed monstrous that because a debtor omits in the affidavit a debt of any amount which he might dispute or even forget the deed should become absolutely void, so that a deed of arrangement comprising property of the value of 10,000*l.* with an affidavit disclosing liabilities to the same amount would be void on account of the omission in the affidavit of a disputed or forgotten debt of 10*s.* No difference, however, was observable between the language of the Bills of Sale Acts and the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, in the clauses relating to the avoidance and the registration of the respective instruments and the affidavits accompanying them, and there was no doubt that almost any omission or error, however trifling, in the affidavit accompanying a bill of sale has been held to vitiate its registration and render the deed void, and that an affidavit of the debtor's liabilities must mean of all his liabilities, and the names and addresses of his creditors must mean all of his creditors (per Lord Esher, Re Batten, ex parte Milne, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 336; L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 694), and consequently that there was an error and omission in the affidavit in the present case. There were, however, his Honour said, some important distinctions between the affidavits required by the two Acts, particularly as to the matters contained in them respectively, and, whilst there were provisions as to the inspection and office copies of the one, there were no such provisions as to the other (see the judgment of Lord Justice Fry, Re Batten, ex parte Milne, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 338; L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 700), and, rather than come to the absurd conclusion pointed out, his Honour said he should, relying upon these distinctions, hold that the omission of the plaintiff's debt in the affidavit does not vitiate the registration of this deed of arrangement and render it void. It followed that the trustee having reassigned the trust property, and so made away with the assets without discharging the plaintiff's debt, of which he had notice, was liable for the same as well as the defendant Hopkins, he having been a party to that transaction. There would be a verdict for the plaintiff against both defendants for the amount of the bill of exchange—15*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*—with interest and costs, payable in fourteen days.

ASSIZE CASE.

FRAUDS ON INSURANCE COMPANIES.

At the Manchester Assizes, on April 27, before Mr. Justice Grantham, David Mackinson brought an action to recover damages for libel. The plaintiff was for some years an insurance agent at Horwich, and in 1890 was suspended by the Royal Liver Society, which he had been representing. Some correspondence took place, in which plaintiff made certain statements respecting a Mr. Moffatt, another official of the Royal Liver, which the latter emphatically denied. Walls, who was a Royal Liver agent at Horwich, then wrote a letter to a newspaper, in which he described Mackinson as an unscrupulous man, who had misrepresented five different companies in a few years, who had shamefully abused his privilege, and who had insured a lot of the worst lives possible. Justification was pleaded, and plaintiff was cross-examined at considerable length. He stated that the insurance agents were authorised to book the names of proposers and then to fill up the papers at night. The policies were filled up in a coffee tavern, and plaintiff certified that he had witnessed the signature, although the person who was supposed to make his mark on the form was not present. The learned judge said it was a fraud, the witness could be placed in the dock for forgery, and the whole thing would be annulled. The plaintiff was further examined as to certain cases in which policies were taken out, although he knew the persons insuring would not be able to receive the money because they had no interest in the life insured. Several instances were also mentioned in which people had been insured who, it was alleged, were in bad health, and who died soon after the taking out of the policies. Evidence in support of the defendant's allegations was adduced, and the judge in summing up declared that he had no sympathy with either the plaintiff or defendant. He hoped, however, that the evidence given that day would make people hesitate very long before taking out fresh insurances in companies where business was carried out in the way described. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with 10*l.* damages.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS—COMPENSATION FOR COMPULSORY TAKING OF PREMISES.

On April 29, at the Guildhall, the Recorder and a special jury, sitting as a Special Court of Quarter Sessions, had before them the case of Goodman v. The Commissioners of Sewers. The claimant, a dentist, of 1 Ludgate Hill, sought to recover from the Commissioners of Sewers compensation for the compulsory seizure of his premises in the course of the Ludgate Hill improvement. It appeared that the claimant had carried on business in London and the provinces for some years as a dentist, making a speciality of guinea sets of teeth. Ludgate Hill was said to be the best thoroughfare in London for dentists, and, therefore, it was necessary for the claimant to have premises there. He had formerly occupied premises at 41 Ludgate Hill, but those had been taken by the Commissioners, and he then removed to his present premises, No. 1 Ludgate Hill. Evidence was also given that it was necessary for a dentist to have a private entrance, because patients were very sensitive, and did not like being overlooked. The claimant was called, and gave evidence in support of his claim.—Cross-examined by the Solicitor-General: I believe you have a very large business?—Claimant: Yes.—The Solicitor-General: What are your profits?—Claimant: Three thousand a year.—The Solicitor-General: What, out of guinea sets of teeth?—Claimant: Yes. I have 20,000 patients on my books, and have supplied over 100,000 sets of teeth during the time I have been in practice.—The jury found for the claimant for 1,570*l.*—Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., and Mr. Bray were counsel for the claimant; the Solicitor-General (Sir E. Clarke, Q.C.) and Mr. P. Rose-Innes for the Commissioners.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. Uttley, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

FORFEITURE CLAUSES AND INSURANCE POLICIES.

Proposals for a life insurance are usually accompanied by certain questions that have to be answered, and the answers constitute what is called a declaration in writing. There is no invariable form for the declaration which constitutes the first step towards life insurance, but, as has been pertinently pointed out, there is a stain of family likeness between one form and another which stamps them all with pretty much the same character. When the proposal is to insure the life of the proposer himself, the essence of the proposal should be not only candour but care, as the interests of the survivors may be sacrificed many years afterwards by a mere inadvertence at the time of the proposal, for, if a material fact be left out, it matters not whether it be designedly or accidentally omitted. Every statement actually made by the proposer must be not only substantially, but literally, true in the narrowest and broadest sense, for it has been judicially decided, more than once, that any statement of the proposer, however trifling it may appear, may render the policy invalid if it proves to be untrue. Such, indeed, happened in a case recently at the Blackburn County Court, where it appeared that a fish hawker had claimed 23*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* from a life assurance company, but he had previously, through an agent, made a proposal to another insurance company to insure his life for 1,000*l.* He was examined by this company's own medical man, and a policy was refused. Subsequently he proposed to the defendants, and on the proposal-form said he had never been refused by any office. The proposal form also contained a declaration, which he signed, and in which he said that, if the answers were not true, any policy granted upon that proposal should be null and void, and all moneys that should have been paid on account of the insurance should be absolutely forfeited. The proposal was accepted, and the plaintiff paid 23*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* as one year's premium. The defendants, however, on afterwards hearing of the previous application and refusal by the other insurance company, refused to issue the policy. The questions were whether a false statement had been made out on the proposal form by the plaintiff knowingly and fraudulently, and, if so, were the defendants justified in refusing to issue the policy? The judge answered both these questions in the affirmative, and also held that the claim for damages failed, and the only question was whether the plaintiff could get back the premium as money paid on a voided contract. After looking up the authorities he had convinced himself that the risk did attach directly the defendants accepted the plaintiff's proposal on September 9, and this being so, he thought the forfeiture clause was a good defence to the action. Furthermore, he thought that, even if the plaintiff had not signed the forfeiture clause, he must still have failed in this action, as he should be bound to hold that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff could not recover back the premium paid by him to the defendants. Insurance companies will doubtless hail this decision with satisfaction. It is said that the judgment affected about 300 cases.

SHOULD LEGISLATION BE ABOLISHED?

So far as regards the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, an enthusiastic lecturer and his supporters, at a recent meeting at Leeds, thought such legislation ought to be exterminated. The lecturer in question was Mr. John Judge of that town, who, after stating that the above statute was brought about because of a commission that sat to inquire into the subject consequent upon the excitement caused by the conduct of gas workers in London who, whilst on strike, had placed one portion of London in darkness; and, reviewing the history of the Acts from the time of 1867 to 1871 and to 1875, said that, when the saving clause to section 7 was inserted, trade-unionists thought themselves safe, but since that time various interpretations had been put upon them, many of them logical, and he thought that the word in the old Act, 'coerce,' was more definite than the present of 'compel.' Subsection 4 made picketing illegal, whilst the saving clause was intended (and they had thought, until the recent rude awakenings, that it was so) to make it legal. It had been held to be legal to picket and illegal to announce to their employers their intention to picket. It had been held that anything that caused a man to be afraid to do that which he might otherwise do was intimidation, whilst Mr. Gurney, whose judgment a few years ago in a London trial—Regina v. Hibbert—had been sent by the authorities to all magistrates and stipendiaries, held that intimidation consisted of actual or threatened violence. All these definitions were strictly logical, taking the words with 'a view to compel.' He held that the laws did not want amending but abolishing. Some trades-unionists did not want them abolished, as they thought they were a recognition of trades-unionism. But he did not want such recognition. Others did not want them abolished, as their imagination led them to believe that the punishment was not so severe as it might be under the common law. That was a mistake, for the Act contained a section which said that, if the offences merited a more severe sentence than the Act specified, it could be administered under the common law. He held that trades-unionists ought not to have exceptional legislation levelled against them, and that, if they did wrong, the common law was sufficient to try them under. Some questions and other discussion ensued, in which Mr. Judge's views were mainly supported, though one speaker held that some kinds of intimidation should be punished. Picketing when people struck work was right, but if they had a thick stick with them as well he thought they would be going too far. Though the law may at present be somewhat unsettled, it is unreasonable to expect the statutes to be abolished to suit the interests of a class. It is fortunate for the good of the British constitution that such wholesale measures are not likely to be adopted, and so long as class exists against class the one will check the other to the mutual benefit of both.

THE LAW OF PUBLIC MEETING.

Interrupting public crossings or obstructing public footways are offences which various statutory provisions consider ought to be punished by fine or imprisonment. Therefore, when a person is taken into custody for causing an obstruction upon highways and footpaths, it is plain that the constables are only acting in the pursuance of their duty. It was under circumstances such as these that two constables have been charged at Bradford with assaulting a town councillor on the occasion of the dispersal of a meeting in that town. The counsel's statements on both sides are of interest as dealing with a question of public meetings of some importance. Counsel for the complainant said the summons had been taken out in order to test the right of public meeting in the square referred to; inasmuch as the square was a public space, and there was no obstruction to the traffic on the adjoining highways, the police had no right to disturb the meetings, and the councillor was entitled to a remedy for being taken into custody, which became, in the eyes of the law, an assault. The law did not render the meeting unlawful in itself, and the propriety of it could not be determined without an opportunity of judging of its effects, which opportunity was never given. He contended that the corporation had not the power to prevent a meeting in this place by proclamation or by law. The corporation could, of course, use the land in question for any purpose they thought fit by a proper resolution. He submitted, however, that the corporation having handed over the place to the public, the public had a right to use it. It was also urged that, if the councillor had committed an offence by refusing to move on when requested, the constables had no right to arrest, they had only a right to demand the name and address of the person. Counsel for the defendant submitted that at common law people were restricted in their use of the highway and also in their use of a place of resort, though these were different in some respects, by the principle that they should not interfere with anybody else's lawful user. He contended that the meeting in question could not be held without interference with such lawful user, for the people extended over the tram lines. The land was neither a place of resort nor a highway, but the private property of the corporation, which the public could only use upon sufferance. Ultimately the magistrates said the bench did not think a right of public meeting was involved in the case. They did not think it necessary to decide whether the ground in question was or was not a highway. It was undoubtedly a place of public resort. They found plaintiff was causing an obstruction not only upon the plot of land, but upon the highways and footpaths. Defendants were acting in the execution of their duty in requiring plaintiff to move or to remove the obstruction, and the constables were justified in arresting him, and they accordingly dismissed the summons.

A QUESTION OF FRAUD.

'Fraus est celare fraudem.' 'Fraus latet in generalibus.' These maxims are called to mind by a commercial case of some importance heard the other day in the Queen's Bench Division. It appeared that the owner of a crane offered to sell it to a purchaser for 200*l.*, and the purchaser in his turn then offered it for sale to a sub-purchaser for 250*l.* The sub-purchaser subsequently discovered from the original vendor's foreman that the price of the crane was really 450*l.* This the original purchaser did not then know, and, of course, when his sub-purchaser wished to close the bargain at 250*l.* he assented. The original purchaser, hearing afterwards from original vendor the mistake as to the price, then refused to deliver to the sub-purchaser, and the latter, of course, sued him for damages for breach of contract. The question, therefore, was whether a buyer is entitled to take advantage of a mistake under which he knows the seller is acting, though the mistake is not on his part, but on that of a third person, the original owner. When the case was first tried the sub-purchaser obtained judgment with damages, it being held that he was under no legal obligation to reveal the error as to the price. On appeal, however, this decision was reversed, it being pointed out that the sub-purchaser knew that the original purchaser was acting under a mistake, known to himself and not known to the former; and not only that, but he told the original purchaser that the foreman wanted to enter into the price, but that he declined to enter into it, whereas the truth was that he knew all about it. The concealment of the truth, coupled with the untruth, disentitled the sub-purchaser to sue on the contract so obtained, for he knew that his vendor was contracting to sell a 200*l.* crane, whereas in truth it was a 450*l.* crane. There was apparently in this case both concealment and fraud, and the two together would go far in entitling the purchaser to a verdict. This case further pertinently illustrates the maxim, 'Dolus et fraus una in parte sanari debent, nam dolus circuitu non purgatur.'

THE PREVENTION OF BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE CASES.

Human ingenuity does not stand still. The latest idea is a scheme for the prevention of breach of promise of marriage cases. It is suggested that in future no promise of marriage is to be binding unless written on stamped paper, to be signed by the party promising and attested by two independent witnesses, who must be in no way related to the person on whose behalf the agreement is drawn. A penalty must be fixed upon and shown in the document. The following is an example of a form:—

'Form.

'Deed of Promise of Marriage.

'I, Adam Gardner, residing at No. 1 Folly Gardens, Liverpool, on this, the 25th day of February, 1891, do hereby promise, in the presence of Herbert Hane and Abel Lambie, to marry Eve Appleworth on or before the 31st day of December, 1891, and, failing to do so, I do further, of my own free will and in good faith, agree to pay a penalty of (two hundred pounds) sterling (say 200*l.* to the herein-mentioned Eve Appleworth) on the proof of such failure on my part. 'ADAM GARDNER.

'Witness, HERBERT HANE, 10 Lord Street, Liverpool.

'„ ABEL LAMBIE, 13 Clayton Square, Liverpool.'

Such a form, it is further suggested, should be stamped at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* for a promise without a penalty or with any penalty up to and including 100*l.*, and afterwards 2*s.* 6*d.* for every 100*l.* or part of 100*l.* This remarkable scheme is propounded by Mr. W. A. Sloan in the April number of the Ladder, and he pertinently adds that parties would reflect twice prior to signing such a document, and be sure whether they meant marriage or not.

LEGAL FEES IN ENGLAND AND CANADA.

Now and again there appear inquiries in our columns as to the advantages of practising in Canada, and it is always interesting to get facts on these points. Not long ago an English firm were instructed to draw a certain instrument; their charges came to five guineas; an exactly similar document had to be drawn by a Canadian firm, whose charges came only to fifteen shillings, or seven times less than the sum paid to the English firm. If one is to assume that the law forms in Canada are similar to those usual in England, the disparity between these fees is remarkable. Either the Canadian lawyers must do a much larger business than their English brethren, or the fees of the latter must be unduly heavy. Probably the fact is that Canada is much less overridden by officialism than England is, for it may be said without error that many of the items charged in a modern lawyer's bill go into the pockets of the State officials, and but a small percentage is left to remunerate the lawyer.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, April 28, Mr. Pattinson in the chair. The subject for discussion: 'That this society disapproves of the Public Trustee Bill' was opened by Mr. Marshall. Mr. Bunting and Mr. Besant opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: in the affirmative—Messrs. Jones, Woodhouse, Watkins, Crawford, Parker, and Windsor; in the negative—Messrs. Watson, Bolton, Bower, and Parkes.—Mr. Marshall replied. —The chairman having put the motion to the meeting, it was carried by a majority of seven.—The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society, on Tuesday, May 5, is: 'That, in view of the recent judgment of the Court of Appeal in In re Jackson, legislation is urgently needed to amend the laws relating to husband and wife.'

LAW OF DIVORCE.—One effect of the Jackson case is to be seen in Mr. Hunter's Divorce Bill. This proposes to give a man the right to a divorce whenever his wife deserts him without reasonable excuse for four years. A corresponding right would also be conferred on the wife. An additional proposal of the bill is to give a woman the right to a divorce whenever her husband is guilty of adultery. In this case the existing necessity for further proving cruelty or desertion would be done away with.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—The usual weekly meeting of this society was held at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall on April 27, Mr. C. W. Williams in the chair. Mr. C. Herbert Smith moved: 'That the recent decisions of Mr. Bompas, Q.C., Recorder of Plymouth, and Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., Recorder of Newcastle, are contrary to the policy of the Trades Unions Acts, 1871 and 1875.' Mr. W. F. Symonds opposed. The debate was continued by Messrs. M. S. Nathan, J. L. V. S. Williams, L. W. Browne, J. R. Atkin, H. W. Marcus, F. B. Moyle, and B. B. Sapwell. Mr. Smith replied, and the motion was put to the House and rejected by the casting vote of the chairman.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

THE following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Final and Intermediate Examinations of the Incorporated Law Society held on April 7, 8, and 9, 1891:—

FINAL EXAMINATION, APRIL 7 AND 8.

Allen, George William
Alston, Hallam Newton, B.A.
Anderson, Charles Augustus
Armstrong, John Backhouse
Ashworth, Thomas Wilding
Bate, George
Belk, Thomas
Bevon, Samuel Peter
Brown, Charles Watson
Bullock, Frederick Acton
Burke, Patrick
Burrow, Frederic
Burrow, Raymond
Byrne, Edward Cotton, B.A.
Clutterbuck, Charles Romanes Coleridge
Collyer, William John
Cornish, Charles Landsborough, B.A.
Coveney, Arthur
Crouch, Frederick Stanley
Daniell, George Henry
Dickins, Herbert Arthur
Duncan, Henry Hunter
Eve, Herbert Frederick
Freeman, Charles Arthur
Freeman, Walter Oakes
Frost, Thomas Richard
Gush, Frank
Harris, Francis William
Heaton, Arthur Woodall
Hebden, Brian Newell
Holehouse, George
Huband, Thomas
Hudson, Harry
Hyde, Robert
Ingham, William Constantine
James, Daniel Pennant
James, George Francis
Johnston, Henry
Jones, Cyril Lloyd, M.A.
Lewis, Walter Reginald, B.A.
Lockwood, William
Mackay, Douglas
Maffey, George
Matthews, Charles Edward
Middleton, Joseph
Mimpriss, Sydney Trevor
Mortimer, Francis Richard
Norfolk, Edward
Park, John Robert
Parkes, John Amery
Pearson, John Alfred Shaw
Pomeroy, John Bartle
Potts, Thomas Worthington
Preston, Arthur Sansome
Robinson, Frederic William Rodgers, Reginald Arthur
Rowley, Henry Gowland
Seddon, Frank Jervis
Sedgwick, Harold James, B.A.
Seeley, Henry
Simpson, Harry Faulkner
Smith, James Alexander, M.A.
Stack, Maurice Redfern
Steed, Joshua Owen
Strode, Edmund, M.A.
Stuttaford, Frank
Surtees, Henry Patrick
Swann, Arthur Henry
Thirlby, Frank Stuart
Trevor-Roper, Claude Henry
Tweedale, John Howarth
Waistell, Charles Rowland
Wakeman, George Herbert
Walker, Stephen Arthur
Williams, Hugh Henry
Wilson, Herbert Duckworth
Wilson, Reginald Thorp, B.A.
Wood, Robert Percival
Young, George James, B.A.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION, APRIL 9.

Addams-Williams, Ernest Trevor
Allistone, Alfred
Alvis, Charles Frederick Brinkley
Ames, Alfred Percy
Anderson, Adolphus
Applewhaite, Henry Churchill
Armstrong, Frank
Aske, Robert William
Aston, Frederic Marriner, B.A.
Atkinson, Thomas
Bowler, Thomas Chesters
Brett, Alexander Dallas
Broadbent, Frederic William
Brown, Charles Stubbs
Buckley, George Dyson
Burton, Albert
Burton, Charles Henry, B.A.
Burton, Edwin Hubert
Bygott, Edward Chance, Cyril Charles
Charnock, John James
Chesney, Edward Shuldham
Chorlton, Alfred Ethelbert Gospatric
Clark, Edwin Ebenezer

Clarke, Charles Frederick Loriston
Clayton, Henry Thomas Seymour
Cobb, Cecil Henry, B.A.
Cosens, Alan
Crossfield, William Arthur
Cuff, William Charles
Cumsty, William John
Davenport, Ernest Newton
Davies, Alexander Reid
Davies, Evan Robert
Davies, William Thomas
Deheer, John
Drake, Bernard Charles
Duncan, Albert Charles
Edmonds, David John
Emanuel, Charles Herbert Lewis, B.A.
Emson, Charles Herbert, B.A.
Evershed, Edwin John
Ford, Mortimer Brutton
Gibson, Charles, B.A.
Giles-Holder, Percy
Gittins, John Thorne Christopher
Greenwood, Robert Morrell, B.A.
Hair, Archibald
Hall, James Robert
Ham, William Herbert
Hamer, Frederick
Harrison, Arthur Gordon
Harry, Leslie Warlow, B.A.
Haslam, Anderson
Henry, Thomas Gibson
Hewitt, Tom Edwin Hind, Charles Sidney
Hingley, John Allan
Hitchins, William Stanley
Hogarth, Harry Gilbert
Hooper, Sydney
Hope, Henry Green, B.A.
Huson, William Richard
Ingram, Rowland Welldon
Ireson, Charles Herbert
Jenkins, Charles Griffith
Jones, Harold Vivian
Jones, Hugh Lloyd
Kershaw, George Frederic
Knight, Fritz Chester
Knight, William Stanley Macbean
Langfield, John William Chandler Large, Robert
Lawson, Robert Gerald, B.A.
Lees, William
Leonard, Albert Edward
Lewis, Charles Edgar
Littlewood, Arthur Birkin
Lloyd, John Wheller
Lloyd, Robert Evan
Mellersh, Herbert Lewis
Merson, Thomas
Michelmore, Harold Gaye
Millington, George
Milnes, Herbert Eli
Milnes, William Newton
Morley, James, LL.B.
Motabhoy, Rustomjee Naorosjee
Nicholls, Joseph Godfrey
Nicholson, Henry Walter
Norgate, Percival Edward
Norris, John Lapage
Norris, Joseph Raphael Francis
Ogle, James Hodgson, B.A.
O'Neill, John Hollier
Oxley, Francis Meldrum
Passman, Alfred Ernest
Patey, Henry William
Payne, Richard
Peace, John
Pearce, Alfred James
Peed, Samuel Wilton, B.A.
Pinniger, Broome
Powell, John Powell Jones
Prescott, Ernest, B.A.
Price, Lawrence
Prosser, William Wozencraft Thomas
Pughe, Kenneth Mackenzie
Ratcliffe, Henry Beanland
Richardson, Albert Osborne
Richardson, Edward Silvester
Richardson, Herbert Joseph, B.A.
Roberts, Richard Gordon
Rowcliffe, Edward Lee
Sass, Francis Jerome
Schofield, Thomas Broadbent
Seligman, Oscar William, B.A.
Sheppard, Gerald Arthur, B.A., LL.B.
Sillem, Louis Richard, B.A.
Simons, Frederic Dyke Sydney
Simpson, George Harold
Sinnott, George Stanley
Slaughter, Edward Mihill, B.A.
Smith, Charles Lakin
Smith, Frederick Charles, B.A., LL.B.
Squire, Alfred Hugh Knight
Stevenson, Harold Thomas, B.A.
Steward, Henry
Stone, Park Nelson, B.A.
Stothart, James Bell, B.A.
Strickland, George John
Taunton, Sidney Charles, B.A.
Thompson, Septimus Constantine
Toller, Francis Holford
Tolley, Frank Gordon, B.A.
Tulloch, Angus Alexander Gregorie, B.A.
Tuppen, Claud Ernest
Turner, Cyril Edward
Waldy, Alfred, B.A.
Waldy, John Bradshaw de Garmundesway, B.A.
Ward, Francis Bertie
Warren, Bertram Reginald, B.A.
Waterhouse, Samuel Sharpe
Watney, Frank Dormay
Wellbeloved, John Kenrick
Weller-Poley, Walter John
Whalley, James
Whiston, William Reginald Harvey
White, Herbert Meadows Frith, B.A.
White, James Kemp, B.A.
White, Montague White
Wilkins, William Harry
Williams, Blair Hamilton Lee
Williams, John Thomas
Williams, Lionel Leigh
Willoughby, Richard Lionel Grey
Wing, Arthur Percy
Woodbridge, Algernon Rivers
Woods, George Calder
Worthington, Frank, B.A.
Wratislaw, Theodore William Graf
Yeo, Richard Forster, B.A.
Yglesias, Herbert Ramon, B.A.

House of Lords Register.

FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

Barnardo v. Ford (Habeas corpus—custody of child—order making absolute rule nisi for writ—jurisdiction to entertain appeal. The case is reported below, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 345; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 283).—Cur. adv. vult.

Barnardo v. M'Hugh (Habeas corpus—custody of illegitimate child—rights of mother—appointment of guardian).—Part heard.

MONDAY, APRIL 27.

Barnardo v. M'Hugh.—Cur. adv. vult.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 23.

Crichton, trading, &c. v. Saunders (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated February 24, at trial before Pollock, B., with a jury at Norwich).—Refused.

Butler v. Birnbaum & Son (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on application from judgment of nonsuit, dated February 11, at trial before Stephen, J., with special jury in Middlesex).—Withdrawn on terms.

FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

Walter v. Everard (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on application from verdict and judgment, dated March 3, at trial before Grantham, J., with a special jury at Lincoln).—Refused.

Greening v. Ingram (application of defendant for judgment on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated February 27, at trial before Stephen, J., with a jury at Guildford).—Refused.

Cotton v. Palmer (executrix, &c.) (application of defendant Palmer for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated March 6, at trial before Charles, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

SATURDAY, APRIL 25.

Comfort v. Betts (application of defendant for entry of verdict and judgment for appellant on appeal from verdict and judgment dated February 18, at trial before Pollock, B., with a jury at Cambridge).—Refused.

Knollys v. Mudford and another. Same v. Cross and another. Same v. Goulden (consolidated actions) (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated February 20, at trial before Stephen, J., with a special jury in Kent).—Refused.

MONDAY, APRIL 27.

Salaman v. Warner and others (appeal of plaintiff from order of Day, J.; and Lawrance, J., dated April 14, on point of law raised by defendant Warner on the pleadings).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, APRIL 28.

Salaman v. Warner.—Dismissed. Same v. Same (appeal of plaintiff from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 14, on point of law raised by defendants Coates & Co. on the pleadings).—Dismissed. Same v. Same (appeal of plaintiff from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 14, on point of law raised by defendant Foster on the pleadings).—Dismissed.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29.

In re Kent County Council and Council of Borough of Sandwich and Local Government Act, 1888 (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Kent County Council from decision of Stephen, J., and Williams, J., dated January 31, on questions submitted under Local Government Act, 1888, s. 29). In re Kent County Council and Council of the Borough of Dover and Local Government Act, 1888 (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Kent County Council from like decision as in previous case; heard March 11).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

Unwin v. Hanson (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Pollock, B., dated July 29, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Newman v. London and South-Western Railway Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of nonsuit, dated December 6, after trial before Stephen, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 23.

R. S. Hall, petitioner v. Ada M. Hall, respondent (J. Kay, co-respondent) (application of respondent for dismissal of petition or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Jeune, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts (petition) (appeal of Bread Union (Lim.) (petitioners) from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 19).—Stand over for further evidence.

FRIDAY, APRIL 24.

In re V. Nevin, an infant (appeal of infant by next friend from order of Chitty, J., dated January 29).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, APRIL 25.

Cossey v. Roper (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., dated February 19).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, APRIL 27.

In re J. Thorley, deceased; Thorley v. Massam. In re W. R. Thorley, deceased; Thorley v. Massam (appeal of T. Massam and others from judgment of North, J., dated January 24, declaring legacy duty payable under J. Thorley's will).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, APRIL 28.

In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (Lim.) and Companies Acts (petition).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29.

Stewart v. Bessler, Waechter & Co. and others (appeal of defendants Bessler, Waechter & Co. from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 27 and April 11, refusing to strike out claim).—Dismissed on terms as to costs.

Katherine O'Shea, Wife of W. H. O'Shea v. C. P. Wood and another and A. C. Steele and others intervening (appeal of A. C. Steele from orders of Jeune, J., dated April 7, for further affidavit of documents relating to intervener's banking accounts).—Dismissed.

Edison and Swan United Electric Light Company (Lim.) v. Woodhouse (appeal of defendant F. L. Rawson from order of North, J., dated March 25, refusing to allow further evidence to be read in chief clerk's certificate).—Allowed.

Hurlbatt (trustee; &c.) v. Bath. Hurlbatt (trustee, &c.) v. Sanz (appeal of plaintiff from refusal of Stirling, J., dated April 24, to continue injunction against dealing with shares belonging to Artola Hermanos and from refusal to appoint receiver).—Part heard.

Goodall, Backhouse & Co. v. Wilkinson and another (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Stirling, J., dated March 5).—Allowed by consent on terms.

ORDERS OF TRANSFER.

Monday, April 20, 1891

WHEREAS, from the present state of the business before Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, Mr. Justice Kekewich, and Mr. Justice Romer respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes assigned to Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich should for the purpose only of hearing or of trial be transferred to Mr. Justice Romer; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that the several causes and matters set forth in the schedules hereto be accordingly transferred from the said Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich to Mr. Justice Romer, for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, and be marked in the Cause-books accordingly. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

George v. Greener—1890 G. 1,982
Beecham v. Thompson—1890 B. 3,346
Gunnell v. Woods—1890 G. 707
Brear v. Hirst—1890 B. 4,083
Bliss v. Hart & Levy—1890 B. 3,260
Oleworth v. National Provident Institution—1889 C. 2,554
Aston v. Grazebrook—1889 A. 563
In re G. Freeland, dec. Freeland v. Freeland—1890 F. 1,082
Hamerton v. Bex—1890 H. 3,346
Copping v. Gilmore—1890 C. 2,129
Jackson, Clayton & Co. v. Baker—1890 J. 462
Thomas v. Gillard—1890 T. 984
Wood v. Dunn—1890 W. 774
Howard v. Goode—1890 H. 2,144
Savage v. Jessup—1890 S. 2,063
Thornton v. Union Discount Co. of London (Lim.)—1890 S. 1,861
Wintle v. Oldridge—1890 W. 2,532
Ogilvie v. Blything Union Rural Sanitary Authority—1890 O. 1,338
Barker v. Pybus—1890 B. 2,811
Eastwood & Co. v. Craig—1890 E. 1,193

SECOND SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

In re Bliss
Bliss v. Bliss—1889 B. 2,568
Automatic Weighing Machine Co. (Lim.) v. National Exhibitors Association (Lim.)—1890 A. 826
Jensen v. Hilder—1890 J. 527
Booty v. Goodwin—1890 B. 1,764
Lincoln Brick Co. (Lim.) v. Handley—1890 L. 1,349
Oldham v. Metherell—1890 O. 1,007
Wilson v. Queen's Club (Lim.)—1890 W. 3,016
Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate v. McIvors Patents (Lim.)—1890 A. 931
Morris, Wilson & Co. v. Coventry Machinists Co. (Lim.)—1890 M. 906
In re Morris, Wilson & Co. Motion
Viney v. Lewis—1890 V. 809
Tims v. Schell
Schell v. Cutler—1890 T. 306
Theiger v. York—1890 T. 1,451
Lloyd v. Clingo—1890 L. 1,879
Belsey v. Brooks—1890 B. 2,190
Westinghouse Brake Co. (Lim.) v. Williamson—1890 W. 1,373
Norton v. Burr—1890 N. 313
T. & W. Smith v. Bullivant—1890 S. 812
Brett v. Bowles—1890 B. 899
Beaumont v. Provident Assurance Co. (Lim.)—1890 B. 3,462
Ward v. Langdon—1889 W. 912
Faull v. Harding—1890 F. 57
In re Stevens
Stevens v. Stubbington—1890 S. 3,287
In re Cooper
Cooper v. Coope—1890 C. 2,401
Byers v. Grey—1890 B. 2,802
Laurance v. Edge—1890 L. 1,184
Bolton v. Natal Land and Colonisation Co. (Lim.)—1886 B. 2,055
Webb v. Harden—1890 W. 3,501
Kennedy v. Smith—1890 K. 742
Fairfax v. Lyons & Co. (Lim.)—1890 F. 1260
Robinson v. Trust and Investment Corporation of South Africa (Lim.)—1890 R. 1,537

THIRD SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

In re Park
Cole v. Park
Park v. Cole—1887 P. 1,073
Coombes v. Wilks—1890 C. 999
Lloyd's Banks (Lim.) v. Keen—1890 L. 367
In re Casey's Trade-marks and Patents, Designs, &c. Acts—Motion
Stewart v. Casey—1890 S. 2,809
Duke of Sutherland v. Heathcote—1890 S. 999
Heathcote v. Blair—1890 H. 1,335
Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society—1890 J. 158
Froude v. Wilberforce—1890 F. 1,061
Western Counties Railway Co. v. Anderson & Co.—1886 W. 2,151
Adney v. Adney—1890 A. 840
Vernall v. Reed—1890 V. 326
Cunliffe v. Bellite Explosives (Lim.)—1889 C. 1,166
Farbenfabriken Vorm. Fried. Bayer & Co. v. Bowker—1890 F. 834
Hampton v. Davis—1890 H. 1884
Wrensted v. Rede—1890 W. 1,578
Wagner v. Costerlitz—1890 W. 417
Jones v. Wemyss—1890 I. 26
Lewis v. Oldroyd—1889 L. 935
Lloyd v. Fox—1889 L. 1,861
In re Heywood
Heywood v. Heywood—1890 H. 1,157
Williams v. Gregory—1890 W. 1,537
In re Carruthers
Talbot v. Carruthers—1887 C. 4,565
Simeon v. Freshwater, Yarmouth, and Newport Railway Co.—1890—S. 1,960
Wroath v. Coathupe—1890 W. 2,320
Bank of British North America v. Anderson & Co.—1890 B. 2,061
Young v. Harris—1889 Y. 895
Twyerould v. Chamber Colliery Co. (Lim.)—1890 T. 614
Render v. Macpherson—1890 R. 96
Radway v. Titmas—1890 R. 1,248

FOURTH SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

Bellite Explosive (Lim.) v. Bellite Co. (Lim.)—1890 B. 1835
Brandon v. Viscount Bury—1887 B. 970
Godfrey v. Walker—1889 G. 1,463
Denny v. Frisby—1890 D. 896
Alcock v. Smith—1890 A. 572
Dawson v. Church
Church v. Dawson—1889 D. 1,990
In re Parker
Lowe v. Parker
Parker v. Lowe—1890 P. 1,233
Nicol v. Charsley—1890 N. 1270
Leach v. Gough
Gough v. Hayward—1890 L. 1,434
Horwood v. Wilkins—1890 H. 567
Munns v. Howard—1890 M. 1,474
Benson v. D'Arey—1890 B. 2,570
In re C. I Kinahan and Trade-mark 14,646 and Trade-marks, &c. Act, motion
Coulson v. Look—1890 C. 2,636
Savoy Publishing Co. (Lim.) in liquidation v. O'Reilly—1890 S. 1,781
Bendall v. Alexander, Daniel, Self & Co.—1890 B. 1,454
Duncan v. Baird—1890 D. 1,344
Wood v. Lamplough—1888 W. 2,171
l'Anson v. Turner—1890 J. 1,078
Lewis v. Ellis—1890 L. 1,757

HALSBURY, C.

N.B.—The parties concerned in the above causes and matters must be ready for trial on and after Monday, April 27, 1891.

N. WARD, Senr. Regr.

Tuesday, April 28, 1891.

Whereas, upon the request of the Lord Chancellor, the Honourable Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams has, with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice of England, consented to sit and act as an additional judge of the Chancery Division for the purpose of hearing any causes or matters which may be assigned to him by the Lord Chancellor, or any application therein; I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do, pursuant to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1884, s. 5, here order that the several causes set forth in the schedules hereto be assigned to Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams for the purpose of hearing the same or any application therein, and be marked in the cause books accordingly. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Birmingham Canal Navigation v. Tupper & Co. (Lim.)—1889 B. 2,709
Croydon Ironmongery Co. v. Davies—1890 C. 2,356
Look v. Ross—1890 L. 1,069
Wenham Co. (Lim.) v. Champion Gas Lamp Co.—1890 W. 3,003
Acme Wood Flooring Co. v. Vigers—1890 A. 681
Green v. Wyatt—1890 G. 799
Marquess of Bute v. Barry Docks and Railway Co.—1890 B. 1,535
Patent Enamel Co. (Lim.) v. Baugh—1890 P. 1,772
Layton v. Patent Lithographic Zinc Plate Co. (Lim.)—1890 L. 2,165
Co-operative Fish Supply Co. v. Grimsby and East Coast, &c. Association—1890 C. 3,685
Lane v. Bailey—1891 L. 256

SECOND SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

A. Pirie & Sons (Lim.) v. Goodall & Sons—1888 A. 1,287
Leveson-Gower v. Jarrett—1890 L. 1,063
Douglas v. Gerald & Co. (Lim.)—1890 D. 2,029
Attorney-General v. Vestry of St. James and St. John, Clerkenwell—1890 A. 1,159
London Printing and Publishing Alliance (Lim.) v. Cox—1890 L. 2,387
Harris v. Hackett—1890 H. 3,162
Hartley v. Jones—1889 H. 1,149
Choudens Fils v. Lago—1890 C. 4,098
Clark v. Orchard—1890 C. 4,246

THIRD SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

Edwards v. Beckett—1889 E. 962
Rugby Portland Cement Co. v. Rugby and Newbould Cement Co. (Lim.)—1890 R. 614
Beecham v. Fisher—1890 B. 4,167
Farr v. Bristol Sublimed Lead, &c. Co.—1890 F. 887
Foster v. Rowe—1890 F. 1,245
Sugden v. Oridland—1890 S. 2,970
Earl de la Warr v. King—1890 D. 1,776
Swift v. Copeland—1889 S. 3,496
Fearnley v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)—1890 F. 1,799
Lines v. London Printing and Publishing Alliance (Lim.)—1890 L. 2,441
Nelson v. Worssam—1890 N. 1,298
Everitt v. Automatic Photograph Co. (Lim.)—1890 E. 586
Starley v. Pollard Brothers—1891 S. 402
Parsons v. Hollender—1891 P. 324
Battye v. Nettleton—1890 B. 2,790
Dunston v. Arthur & Co.—1890 D. 1,896

FOURTH SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

Edison and Swan United Electric Light Co. (Lim.) v. Woodhouse and Rawson United (Lim.)—1890 E. 426
Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.—1890 H. 3,681
Jahncke v. R. Bell & Co. (Lim.)—1889 J. 1,011
Beecham v. Clue—1890 B. 4,924
Nettlefolds (Lim.) v. Reynolds—1890 N. 15
Same v. Same—1890 N. 809
Lane-Fox v. Kensington and Knightsbridge Electric Lighting Co.—1890 L. 2,713
Kearney v. Blake—1890 K. 487
Cellular Clothing Co. (Lim.) v. Marsh—1890 C. 2,048
Hampton Wick Local Board v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.—1891 H. 72
Defries v. Molineaux, Webb & Co. (Lim.)—1890 D. 1780

HALSBURY, C.

N.B.—The parties concerned in the above causes must be ready for trial on and after Thursday, April 30, 1891.

N. WARD, Senr. Regr.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MAY 4 TO MAY 9.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	May 4	May 5	May 6	May 7	May 8	May 9
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Runcorn	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	—	Middlesbrough	—	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Derby	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
26	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Lichfield	Stafford	Leek	Stone
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Newton Abbot

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, May 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Tuesday, May 5.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Wednesday, May 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Thursday, May 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Friday, May 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Saturday, May 9.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

GRAY'S INN.—April 29 being Grand Day at Gray's Inn, the treasurer (Mr. Arthur Beetham) and benchers entertained at dinner the following guests: The Hon. Mr. Justice A. L. Smith, the Hon. Mr. Justice Jeune, Sir Dyce Duckworth, Sir Peter Edlin, Q.C., the treasurer of the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn (Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C.), his Honour Judge Stonor, Major Rasch, M.P., Mr. E. Goodwyn, Mr. Harfield, Mr. F. Beetham, and Mr. D. Shaw, and the masters of the bench present, in addition to the treasurer, were Masters Fooks, Q.C., Griffith, Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., M.P., James Shell, Jeremy, Forbes, and Rose, and the rev. the preacher (the Rev. J. H. Lupton).

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS

MR. ERNEST HOWARD (of the firm of Howard & Atherton), of Suffolk House, Laurence Pountney Hill, Cannon Street, City, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Howard was admitted in 1882.

Mr. William Lansdown Goldsworthy, of 16 Furnival's Inn, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Goldsworthy was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Herbert Comins, of 3 and 4 Great Winchester Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Comins was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Daniel Henry Lambert, of 4 New Inn, London, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lambert was admitted in 1884.

THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.—The hall of the Law Society in Chancery Lane was the scene of a brilliant gathering on April 29, when the president (Mr. Robert Cunliffe) had a conversazione and a ball. The guests numbered nearly a thousand. After the reception there was a concert, Mme. Fanny Moody, Miss Marian Mackenzie, and Mr. Ben Davies being among those who took part in it. Dancing began at half-past ten o'clock, and was kept up until a late hour. Amongst the invited guests were the Lord Chancellor and Lady Halsbury, the Lord Chief Justice and Lady Coleridge, Lord and Lady Herschell, Lord and Lady Esher, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, Lord and Lady Macnaghten, Mr. Justice and Lady Chitty, Mr. Justice and Lady Wills, Mr. Justice and Lady Grantham, the Attorney-General and Miss Webster, the Solicitor-General and Lady Clarke, Sir Horace and Lady Davey, the President of the College of Surgeons and Mrs. Bryant, the Master of the Clothworkers' Company and Mrs. Angell, Mr. and Mrs. Napier Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. W. Leadam, and Sir John and Lady Monckton.

MARRIAGES.

On April 18, at St. Giles's, Camberwell, Mohamad Ahmad, Barrister-at-Law, only son of the Nawab Vicar-Ul-Mulk Bahadur, Revenue Secretary to the Nizam's Government, Hyderabad, Deccan, to Charlotte, youngest daughter of the late Alfred Fitch, Esq., of London, and of Mrs. Fitch, of East Dulwich.

On April 27, at St. George's, Bloomsbury, Henry A. B. Rattigan, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of W. H. Rattigan, Esq., of Lahore, India, to Edith, elder daughter of the late Charles A. Thorne, Esq.

DEATHS.

On April 23, at Albert Terrace, Rochdale, Robert Jackson, Solicitor, aged 74.

On April 24, at 7 Tamar Terrace, Stoke Damerel, Devon, Elizabeth, wife of Thomas H. Gill, Solicitor, Devonport, aged 70.

On April 25, at 7 Grafton Road, Birmingham, Arthur, youngest son of the late Charles Augustin Smith, Solicitor, Greenwich, S.E., aged 37.

On April 26, Alexander Martin, formerly of 10 King's Bench Walk, Temple, and late of 171 Queen Victoria Street, E.C., and 418 Clapham Road, S.W., Solicitor, in his 81st year.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Columns, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THAT mysterious and insidious malady called, for the want of a better name, 'the Influenza,' is unhappily very busy amongst the ranks of the legal profession. Mr. Aspland, Q.C., whose untimely death we record in another column, has succumbed to an attack of the epidemic at the early age of forty-eight. Among those who are still suffering may be mentioned the names of Mr. Bigham, Q.C. (who, we are glad to hear, is recovering), Mr. Cock, Q.C., and Mr. Ambrose, Q.C. Mr. Whitehorne, Q.C., is about again after a sharp attack, while many members of the junior bar have either passed through the ordeal or are still suffering from the scourge. We understand, too, that some of the registrars are laid up, and that the malady is very prevalent amongst the general staff at the Royal Courts. Just before going to press we learn with great regret that Mr. Justice Romer, the first of the judges to be attacked, has been suddenly taken ill with the prevailing symptoms.

WE last week drew attention to the fact that, owing to the Spring Assizes on the Northern and North-Eastern Circuits, the number of judges of the Queen's Bench Division available for business in London was reduced to twelve. That number has been further diminished by the fact that Mr. Justice Henn Collins is now doing duty in the Divorce Court in the continued absence of Mr. Justice Butt, while Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams is sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division. It may safely be said that the present state of business in the Queen's Bench Division is not such as to warrant even the temporary transfer of two of its judges to other divisions.

THE ways of some of the County Court judges are certainly inscrutable! A case which last week came before the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mathew on appeal disclosed a very curious state of facts. The action had been brought in the County Court for breach of warranty of a mare. The County Court judge found that a warranty had been given, and that it had been broken, and assessed the damages for the breach at 27*l.*, but was of opinion that, since the decision of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 864, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant gave the warrant fraudulently—i.e. knowing it to be false—and that as the plaintiff in the case before him had failed to show this, he was not entitled to recover. The plaintiff wisely appealed, and the counsel for the defendant having admitted his inability to find any case to support the ruling of the County Court judge, the appeal was at once allowed. It was stated in the course of the case that ever since the decision in Derry v. Peek the learned judge referred to has held that it applied to actions for breach of warranty, though when the wide difference which exists between such actions and an action of deceit for a misstatement in a prospectus is borne in mind, it seems difficult to understand by what process of reasoning the judge could have arrived at such a conclusion.

SIR HENRY JAMES has introduced a bill, which has, no doubt, been in some measure suggested by recent scandals, to enable a member of the House of Commons to resign his seat. It must often have struck the intelligent foreigner that the method by which a member of Parliament is alone able to relieve himself from the performance of his duty at St. Stephen's is somewhat strange and cumbrous. But even in these days Englishmen cling to old customs, which in their eyes receive additional recommendation from their being either anomalous or picturesque. Perhaps the existing practice is justified to some extent by the discouragement which it offers to anything like wholesale resignations, and however remote the probability of members desiring to retire in a body may seem, there was actually a danger of this kind during the recent Irish Parliamentary crisis. The bill is backed by Sir John Mowbray, Mr.

Dillwyn, and Mr. Asquith, and is stated to be receiving general support on all sides of the House. The bill is not yet published; but it is stated that, with the object of preventing the unpleasant necessity for motions of expulsion, it proposes to enable a member to apply for leave to resign his seat, which leave, after an interval, may be granted or refused by the House. Both Houses of Parliament seem laudably anxious to possess themselves of additional disciplinary powers, and it is certainly desirable to obviate the need for recourse to such powers. But it is worth considering whether the scope of the bill might not be usefully enlarged by providing for the vacation of a seat by the protracted absence of a member or his systematic neglect of his Parliamentary duties. During a great part of the present Parliament the constituency of Aston Manor was deprived of the services of its member, a deprivation which at a critical period might be of national importance.

Mr. Atkinson, M.P., is a gentleman of comprehensive interests and great legislative ambition. He recently introduced a bill, which we noticed at the time, to relieve Wesleyan wedding-parties from the attendance of the registrar, and this bill, with an extension to other Nonconformist bodies, is likely to pass into law. He is also, in emulation of Lord Denman in the Upper House, the author of a Duration of Speeches Bill, which was intended to abate the flow of Front Bench and other eloquence in the House, and now, in conjunction with Mr. Johnston of Ballykilbeg, and Mr. Howorth, the omniscient correspondent of the Times, he has brought forward a bill to abate the claims of dowagers, and provide that their allowances, when secured on landed estates, shall in future be diminished in proportion to the fall in the net income of such estates since the allowances were granted. The abatement is to be decided upon by the County Court judges with an appeal to the High Court. The bill may secure the support of members with mothers-in-law, and of Mr. Henry Fowler, who thinks that County Court judges have not enough to do; but it is difficult to see why dowagers, of all persons, in whose favour rent-charges are created, should be chosen as the objects of special attack, whilst younger children and others should escape from the loss arising from depreciation in land.

The case of Regina v. The Judge of the City of London Court and Hirschman (noted last week) involved the important question whether an action of contract can be remitted to the County Court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, where the plaintiff has discontinued his claim in the action, and only the counter-claim is in dispute. An order for the trial of a counter-claim in the City of London Court having been made under such circumstances, the judge of that Court held that he had no jurisdiction to try it; and a rule for a mandamus having been obtained, the Court were of the same opinion, and refused to make it absolute. When the language of section 65 is considered, it seems clear that the decision was correct, and that the power to order an action of contract to be tried in the County Court under that section only exists 'if the whole or part of the demand of the plaintiff be contested.' It would seem to follow that there can be no jurisdiction to remit an action to the County Court in a case where the plaintiff's claim, instead of being discontinued, is admitted by the defendant subject to a counter-claim.

Railway companies have apparently given up the doubtful and occasionally expensive practice of advertising in their stations the names of passengers convicted of offences against their bye-laws, but, from the case of Hunt v. The Great Northern Railway Company, recently before the Court of Appeal, it would appear that a monthly list of the breaches of discipline committed by their servants and the punishments inflicted in respect of them is still published for the edification of their brethren. This was an action for libel brought by a servant of the company who had been dismissed for gross negligence causing considerable damage to the rolling-stock. The plaintiff objected to the blame being placed upon his shoulders, and in an action in a County Court for wrongful dismissal succeeded in establishing that the accident was due to the negligence of others. In the meantime the company had included his name in the monthly list of punishments hung up in the rooms occupied by their staff throughout the system. The plaintiff sued for libel, but Mr. Justice Stephen held that the occasion of the publication was privileged, and the Court of Appeal have now confirmed this ruling. The case of Somervill v. Hawkins, 20 Law J. Rep. C. P. 131, is more nearly in point than any other. There the defendant had dismissed the plaintiff on suspicion of theft, and, upon the plaintiff coming for his wages, called in two other of his servants and said: 'I have dismissed that man for robbing me; do not speak to him any more in public or in private, or I shall think you as bad as him.' This communication was held to be privileged, but it was argued that the case did not apply, because the ratio decidendi was that it was the duty and interest of the defendant to prevent his servants from associating with such a person, a consideration which did not apply in the case of a railway company and their servants. But, although this phrase is used by Mr. Justice Maule in delivering the judgment of the Court, and has been culled therefrom by text-book writers (see 'Odgers on Libel,' 2nd edit. p. 231), it only refers to the form of the particular slander; and the general principle on which the case rests is that it was a communication made with a fair and reasonable purpose of protecting the party making it. The Court of Appeal, however, in the case in question, preferred to proceed on the ground of 'common interest,' and, considering that the railway company had an interest in informing their employés that negligence would be punished, and the employés a corresponding interest in learning that carelessness would be followed by dismissal, upon this ground affirmed the nonsuit. The arguments of the plaintiff that the purposes of the company could have been attained without publishing his name, and that the publication over such a wide area as the system of the Great Northern Railway Company was not justified, would have been more in point in considering whether the privilege conferred by the occasion had been abused, a question which it was not open to the Court of Appeal to enter upon.

After considerable delay, probably caused by considerations in connection with the recently passed American Copyright Bill, the motion for the second reading of Lord Monkswell's Consolidating and Amending Copyright Bill is fixed to come on in the House of Lords on Monday, the 11th inst. The law of this subject, as pointed out in the Report of the Copyright Commissioners of 1878, has long been in a state of hopeless confusion, and has also long required amendment in respect of the dramatisation of novels, the copyright of newspapers, the copyright in abridgments, the public exhibition of the photographs of private persons, and other matters. By Lord Monkswell's bill it is proposed to repeal and re-enact the statutes dealing with the subject from 8 Geo. II. c. 13 (amended by 7 Geo. III. c. 38, 'for securing to Jane Hogarth, widow, the property in certain prints'), to the Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1888, 'further' protecting the public from vexatious proceedings for the recovery of penalties for the unauthorised performance of musical compositions, with such amendments as the report of the commissioners, and after experience, has shown to be desirable. The recommendations of the commissioners are followed in the main, and departed from, where departed from, for reasons given in a very full memorandum prefixed to the bill. The principal amendment proposed is that the copyright shall endure for the life of the author and thirty years after, instead of, as now, for the life of the author and seven years after his death or forty-two years, whichever shall be the longer period. The commission of 1878 is fortunately represented in the House of Lords by the Duke of Rutland (who was its chairman as Lord John Manners, and in 1879 introduced a comprehensive bill upon the subject), by Lord Herschell, and by Lord Knutsford. One of the leading members of it was Sir James Stephen, whose vigorous denunciation of the vile language of the existing Acts, and whose lucid presentment of the existing law (so far as it can be made out) in the form of a code, can be studied in the report with great advantage to all interested in the subject.

THE Standing Committee on Law has greatly strengthened clause 23 of the Health of London Bill which imposes penalties for the sale of unsound food. On the motion of Mr. Bartley (so it is stated in the St. James's Gazette) words have been added giving the convicting justices discretion to compel a convicted offender to placard his own premises for a given period with a record of the facts. An exactly similar punishment, borrowed, we believe, from New Zealand, was directed, not only allowed, to be imposed by section 19 of the Licensing Act, 1872, in the case of convictions of licensed persons for adulteration of intoxicating liquor with cocculus indicus and other deleterious ingredients; but that and other sections of the Act relating to adulteration were shortly afterwards repealed and replaced by the Licensing Act, 1874, which does not re-enact that part of the Act of 1872 which directed the police authority to cause a placard of the conviction to be affixed to the licensed premises 'of such size and form, and printed with such letters, and containing such particulars' as the police authority might think fit. Similarly, the provisions of the Adulteration Act, 1872, which authorised justices to publish convictions for adulteration in newspapers, were repealed by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. The Sale of Bread Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 36), however, the Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1869, and the more recent Weights and Measures Act, 1889, authorise justices to publish convictions for offences against such Acts respectively, the words of section 14 of the Act of 1889 being that, 'where a person is convicted before any Court of any offence under the principal Act' [of 1878] 'or this Act, the Court may, if it thinks fit, cause the conviction to be published in such manner as it thinks desirable.'

Joyner v. Weeks (Notes of Cases, p. 75) is a case of very great interest on the construction of the ordinary repairing covenants of a lease. The plaintiff sued at the end of a lease on the covenant to leave in repair, and the dilapidations had been assessed by an official referee at 70*l.* It appeared that on the last day of the lease thus sued on the plaintiff had granted a new lease to another tenant (who happened to be tenant of an adjoining house) containing a covenant that such other tenant should put the demised premises into repair, which covenant had been, in fact, complied with, the result being that the official referee had found that the plaintiff had suffered no loss, had given judgment for him for one farthing damages, and ordered him to pay the costs of the action. On the plaintiff moving to enter judgment for 70*l.* or, in the alternative, for a new trial, the Court (Mr. Justice Wills and Mr. Justice Wright) has granted a new trial, 'the question to be decided being how much, if at all, the value of the plaintiff's interest in the premises was diminished by the non-repair, regard being had to the consideration, amongst others, that a tenant of an adjoining house might be willing to give as much for the plaintiff's house in its unrepaired condition as he would have given if the covenant had been performed. This judgment, though at first sight it may seem to be rather hard on the defendant, is indisputably correct. It was long ago held, in Rawlings v. Morgan, 34 Law J. Rep. C. P. 185, that on a repairing lease a landlord is entitled to substantial damages for breach of covenant to leave in repair, even though the demised premises are about to be pulled down, and this judgment was followed with approval by Mr. Justice Lopes in Inderwick v. Leach, 1 C. & C. 412.

THE extent of privilege in actions for slander at private meetings where reporters happen to be present will be found very fully discussed in Pittard v. Oliver which we report this month, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 219. There was a meeting of a board of guardians, and the defendant, a guardian, 'honestly, in the discharge of a public duty without malice, but carelessly,' made statements as to the plaintiff's conduct which were incorrect and untrue. The defendant knew that reporters were present, but he had not invited them to come. Mathew, J., directed a verdict for the defendant, and the Court of Appeal affirmed this ruling. The judgment proceeds on the ground that, reporters or no reporters, the defendant owed a duty to his fellow-guardians and the ratepayers to speak freely on the question brought before the meeting, which was whether the plaintiff, who was clerk to the board, should receive a certain sum in settlement of his claim against them. Lord (then Sir J.) Hannen expressed the opinion that he thought it very desirable, where discussions as to the character of individuals take place at meetings of boards of guardians, that the guardians should bear in mind what was said by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn in Purcell v. Sowler, 46 Law J. Rep. C. P. 308, and should conduct such discussions in camerâ. It should be pointed out in connection with this remark that, by the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, s. 4, 'a fair and accurate report published in any newspaper of the proceedings of a public meeting, or (except where neither the public nor any newspaper reporter is admitted) of any meeting of a vestry, town council, school board, board of guardians,' or other bodies therein mentioned, 'shall be privileged, unless it shall be proved that such report or publication was published maliciously. In Pittard v. Oliver the reporters appear to have discreetly refrained from publishing the defamatory matter for which the action of slander was brought.

In view of the possible immigration of many thousands of paupers, Mr. Howorth has announced his intention of asking the Home Secretary whether by increase of fees chargeable on naturalisation (see Naturalisation Act, 1870, s. 11, subs. 7), or otherwise, the Government proposes to take any steps to check or discourage the immigration of aliens into this country. The matter is a very serious one. As has been shown by Mr. Craies in the Law Quarterly for January, 1890, the Crown has no prerogative to interfere with the free ingress of alien friends, and the Act 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 11, which provides for the registration of aliens (see LAW JOURNAL for July 5, 1890, p. 398), is not only a dead letter, but does not authorise expulsion for disobedience to its provisions. Furthermore, it seems absolutely certain that alien paupers have just as much right to be maintained at the expense of the rates as home paupers have. Lord Holt is reported to have said, in St. Giles's v. St. Margaret's, 1 Sess. Ca. 97, that a pauper alien might be left to starve; but Lord Ellenborough, in Regina v. Eastbourne, 4 East, 103, after observing that the Court 'owed it to the memory of Lord Holt to believe that he never uttered such a sentiment,' and emphatically declaring that 'as to there being no obligation for maintaining poor foreigners before the statutes ascertaining the different methods of acquiring settlements, the law of humanity, which is anterior to all positive laws, obliges us to afford them relief, to save them from starving,' held that a foreigner may gain a settlement in this country. From this it would follow that he might also acquire, under the Union Chargeability Act, 1865, a status of irremovability from any union after one year's residence therein. The maintenance, however, of alien paupers in this country, when they have to be maintained, would seem to be rather a matter of Imperial than local concern, so that it might be desirable to provide for the repayment of the cost of such maintenance by the public exchequer to the various unions. But a distinction may fairly be drawn between paupers who have practically become such before they land in this country and paupers who become such afterwards. In regard to the latter class there is a certain kind of reciprocity, and in France, at any rate, although there is no legal claim to poor relief, we learn from a work of authority ('Encyc. Brit.' tit. Poor Law, ed. 1885) that 'the majority of the indigent who receive relief from the quasi-public' Maisons de Bienfaisance 'are foreigners,' amongst whom, no doubt, not a few British subjects may occasionally be found. In regard to the former class, who have practically become paupers before they land, reciprocity will, as is shown by the recent laws of the United States of America against Chinese immigration, gradually disappear, and the country may eventually become the recipient of all the paupers of the two hemispheres. Against this some remedy more sharp and effective than the raising of the naturalisation fees should speedily be devised by the Government.

ALL interested in the Government Public Trustee Bill (No. 2), which we recently (see ante, p. 269) reviewed, should compare it carefully with the Public Trustee Bill (No. 1), backed by Mr. Howard Vincent, Mr. Warmington, Sir Albert Rollit, and the late Mr. Bradlaugh, and very properly preceded, as the Government bill most unaccountably is not, by a memorandum of its contents. In many points this measure is better, and in many points it is worse, than the Government bill. In prohibiting the public trustee from investing in shares not fully paid up, and in providing for the discontinuance of the office of public trustee, if it should not be found to be for the public advantage, after five years, it is, we think, better; while in prohibiting the public trustee from being associated with anyone else in the management of a trust it is not nearly so good. Why should not both bills be referred to the same select committee?

CASES UNDER THE TRUSTEE ACT, 1888.

THE cases hitherto decided upon the Trustee Act, 1888, which has now been in operation for more than two years, appear to be confined to its retrospective sections. The first of these is section 4, which enacts that no trustee 'shall be chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of the loan to the value' of the property, provided that he acted upon a report as to the value made by a person whom he 'reasonably believed to be an able practical surveyor or valuer instructed or employed independently of any owner of the property,' and provided, also, that the loan does not exceed two equal third parts of the value. In In re Walker, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 386, trustees invested trust-money on mortgages of two uncompleted houses. The investment was made through their solicitors, whom they instructed 'to find a thoroughly good mortgage security.' The solicitors had at the time in their possession a report by competent surveyors made to another client with respect to a number of houses, including the two in question, and appear to have relied on this in making the investment, and there the matter ended. In an action to render the trustees responsible, Mr. Justice Kekewich held that they could not escape the responsibility of an improper investment under section 4. The surveyor,' he says, 'was certainly not employed by the trustees, and I cannot adopt the construction that the words "reasonably believed" apply to instructing and employing. . . . I do not think they do grammatically, or that that is the right construction.' In Blyth v. Fladgate, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 66, Mr. Justice Stirling, dealing with the same section, says: 'Lastly, the defendants (the trustees) claimed the benefit of the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 4. To this the answer is, that the trustees were not charged with a breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of the loan to the value of the mortgaged property at the time when the loan was made. They were so charged because the security was, in the language of Lord Watson in Learoyd v. Whiteley, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 390; L. R. 12 App. Cas. 727, one of a class which is attended with hazard.' Next comes section 5, which provides that where a trustee advances trust money on what would have been a proper investment for a less sum, he is only to be answerable for the excess beyond what he might have advanced. The trustees in In re Walker claimed the benefit of this section also, but the Court held that, the investment being improper in itself, the section did not apply. The trustee, said Mr. Justice Kekewich, 'must establish the propriety of the investment independently of value; and then he has the benefit of the section to save him from any loss greater than that which would have been incurred by advancing too large a sum on what otherwise would have been a proper security.' The judgments in these two cases are of interest as illustrating the limits of the new law, but it must be admitted that they do not add much to the clear and precise language of sections 4 and 5. The next case deals with a more difficult subject, and arose on section 6, which gives the Court a discretionary power to impound by way of indemnity to a trustee the interest of a beneficiary at whose 'instigation' or 'request,' or 'with whose consent in writing,' he has committed a breach of trust, and the enactment is expressly made applicable to the case of a married woman entitled for her separate use, whether with or without a restraint upon anticipation. Under the previous law a restraint upon anticipation was an effectual bar to such an indemnity, and, even where there was no restraint, the Court would not impound the separate estate of a married woman by way of indemnity to the trustee, on the ground of her having approved a breach of trust, unless she was fully informed of the state of the case, and, in the language of the Court of Appeal, had been 'an actual actor in the transaction herself.' (See Sawyer v. Sawyer, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 444; L. R. 28 Chanc. Div. 595.) In the case under the Act—Ricketts v. Ricketts, 64 L. T. (N.S.) 263—the trustees of a sub-settlement sued the trustees of the original settlement for breach of trust committed at the request of the beneficiaries under the sub-settlement, one of whom was a married woman, and the defendants counterclaimed for indemnity out of the interests of the beneficiaries under the sub-settlement. Mr. Justice Romer held that the interest of the married woman being derived under the sub-settlement was not an interest of a beneficiary in the trust estate of which the defendants were trustees, and that the case, therefore, did not fall within the section at all; and he added these words, which deserve the careful attention of trustees and their advisers: 'And even if it did, I should not feel myself justified, in the exercise of the judicial discretion vested in me by that section, in impounding any part of that interest by way of indemnity to the defendants in this case, seeing that the defendants committed their breach of trust, not owing to any misrepresentation or deceit on her part, but with their eyes open—when they must be taken to have known that her interest could not be validly dealt with—and seeing that to declare that her interest ought to be impounded would be in effect now to give the trustees the benefit of a charge on that interest to cover their breach of trust.' If the interests of married women are still to be protected against themselves, and if, in this sense, the restraint upon anticipation is to remain of any effect, the discretion of the Court will probably have to be guided by similar considerations in other cases. It may be conjectured, however, that the Courts will have to bestow considerable attention upon this section in the future. The next section on which we have a reported decision is section 8, empowering a trustee, with certain exceptions in the case of fraud or retention or conversion of the trust property, to plead in any action (a) any statute of limitation in the same way as he might have done in such action if he had not been a trustee, or (b) if the action is one to recover money or property, and there is no existing statute of limitation applicable, then, in effect, to plead the lapse of time in the same manner as in an action of debt for money had and received. The intention of the draftsman probably was, subject to the stated exceptions, to place an action for breach of trust on the same footing as an action for breach of contract. In the case of Andrew v. Cooper, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 815; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 444, an action came before Lord Justice Fry, sitting for Mr. Justice Kekewich, to make trustees liable for losses arising from investments negligently made on insufficient security more than six years before the action. Lord Justice Fry held that, as there was no existing statute of limitation to such an action against trustees, the case was not within clause a, but he also held that under clause b the action was barred. The case seems an exact illustration of the benefit intended to be conferred by the Act upon trustees. As regards clause a, Lord Justice Fry asked in the course of argument: 'How can section 8, subsection 1 (a) apply? An action for breach of trust cannot be brought against anyone who is not a trustee. Of what statute of limitations do you claim the benefit under that clause?' And, again, in his judgment he says: 'In the first place, it is obvious that, if a person had not been a trustee, he could not be sued for a breach of trust; and, further, that there is no right or privilege, that I am aware of, conferred by any statute of limitation in respect of the breach of trust. Therefore I should have great difficulty in applying that subsection to the present case.' If these observations are well founded, it would appear that clause a is likely to remain a dead letter; at any rate, it is not easy to conceive a case to which it can apply. In another case of Moore v. Knight, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 271; L. R. (1891) 1 Chanc. Div. 547, the representatives of a deceased solicitor invoked the aid of this section in an action to make his estate responsible for the embezzlement of a client's moneys by a clerk of the firm. The moneys had been deposited in or before the year 1874 with the firm for investment, and representations from time to time made to the client on behalf of the firm that the investments had been made and interest paid to her down to 1886, when it was discovered that the moneys had never in fact been invested but had been embezzled, the deceased solicitor being himself innocent of the fraud. The facts of this case clearly brought it within the authority of Blair v. Bromley, 2 Ph. 354; 16 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 105, 495, where under similar circumstances an innocent partner was held answerable notwithstanding the Statutes of Limitation, but it was contended that the change made in the law by section 8 had rendered that decision no longer applicable. Mr. Justice Stirling, however, held that that case and the case before him depended on principles of law relating to representation and partnership, and not on those which relate to trusts, and that those principles were unaffected by section 8 of the Trustee Act, whether reliance was placed on clause a or clause b of subsection 1. In other words, he decided that, if the representations made by the firm prevent the discovery of the fraud until the period of six years has expired, the innocent partner is still deprived of the benefit of the Trustee Act, being liable by virtue of the representations which are binding on him as a partner, and that this liability which arises out of the law of agency and concealed fraud is unaffected by the new Act.

DESERTED HUSBANDS.

Michell v. Michell (noted ante, p. 68) seems to show conclusively that it is perfectly useless for a husband to take proceedings for the restitution of conjugal rights if the wife is restrained from anticipating her property. When the recent cause célèbre was decided, and the Court of Appeal refused to allow Mr. Jackson to regain possession by force of his wife's person, there was still left for a husband, who had obtained the decree which the wife would not obey, a right to apply to the Court for an allowance out of her property. The Act of 1884 provides that 'where the application for restitution of conjugal rights is by the husband, if it shall be made to appear to the Court that the wife is entitled to any property, either in possession or reversion, or is in receipt of any profits of trade or earnings, the Court may, if it shall think fit, order a settlement to be made to the satisfaction of the Court of such property, or any part thereof, for the benefit of the petitioner and of the children of the marriage, or either or any of them,' &c. On the strength of this section last year, in Swift v. Swift, 59 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 61; L. R. 15 P. Div. 118, a wife, who had refused to obey a decree for restitution, was compelled to pay an annuity to her husband. Part of her income, from which this annuity was to be raised, was settled on her for her separate use, and part for her separate use without power of anticipation. The registrar submitted that the Court could not vary the marriage settlement as to the first part, and could not deal with the second part, which she was restrained from anticipating. The answer of the present president was: 'I agree that I cannot alter the marriage settlement; and, if I were asked to do it, I should refuse. But, if I find the lady in possession of an income, I need not ask where she gets it from; I can order her to pay out of it a certain sum annually to her husband, and I have no hesitation in making such an order in the present case.' Relying on this case, the unfortunate petitioner in Michell v. Michell essayed to obtain some maintenance out of his wife's income to console him for the loss of her company, and Mr. Justice Jeune acceded to his petition. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed this decision, holding that, as the wife was restrained from anticipation, the Court could not deal with her property. The only consolation to the husband is that the petition was dismissed without costs, except those of the application to dismiss after the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The present position of affairs is, then, that a husband may, if he chooses, for the look of the thing, obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but, if the wife is possessed of a large income which she cannot anticipate, she can treat the decree with contempt. Someone has described war as 'that appeal to force that lies behind every tribunal of justice;' but behind this tribunal of justice, if the wife is restrained as above mentioned, no appeal to force can be made, and the thunder of the judicial decree is a mere brutum fulmen.

It is an interesting speculation as to the reason why a husband should wish a wife to be compelled to live with him when she is unwilling, and will therefore probably make him much unhappier by her presence than she has done by her absence. Perhaps it is an offended pride which delights in showing its power over the object which has wounded it, or perhaps he supposes that his presence will have the power of winning back the love which he has temporarily forfeited. But the question of practical importance is, What power has the absent wife to bind her husband and make him liable for her necessaries, when she thus willingly, and against his will, absents herself from the home and food with which he would provide her? One of the best known cases on the wife's power to bind her husband by her contracts for necessaries is Debenham v. Mellon, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 155; L. R. 6 App. Cas. 34. In that case, Lord Selborne said, with reference to the question whether the mere fact of a marriage implies a mandate by law making the wife the agent in law for the husband, to bind him and to pledge his credit, 'all the authorities show that there is no such mandate in law, except in the particular case of necessity—a necessity which perhaps primâ facie may arise when the husband has deserted the wife, or compelled her to live apart from him, without properly providing for her.' Obviously that is exactly the converse of the case which we are now discussing. If the husband refused to restore conjugal rights to his wife, apart from any power which the Court has of compelling him to make a settlement under the Act of 1884, he would be liable to supply his neglected wife with necessaries, or to pay for the same if she furnished herself with them. In Macqueen's 'Law of Husband and Wife' (3rd edit. p. 101) it is stated that 'when the wife is living apart from her husband the presumption changes sides, and the onus probandi is thrown on the party alleging the authority (i.e. of the wife to bind the husband by her acts done 'as his agent in the ordinary course of and as part of domestic administration'); for the law casts upon married persons the duty of cohabitation, and a husband is not bound to support a wife who, without just cause, refuses to cohabit with him. Primâ facie, therefore, a woman living apart from her husband has no authority to bind him. In order to fasten liability upon the husband, therefore, the separation must be justified.' The same learned authority gives, on p. 103, three grounds of separation sufficient to constitute her his agent, though they are living apart: '(1) Where she has been deserted by her husband; (2) where her husband has turned her out of doors; (3) where her husband's misconduct has compelled her to leave him.' Husbands whose wives have treated them, and the decree of the Court ordering restitution of conjugal rights, with contempt, have thus no grounds to fear that their wives can be still regarded as their agents, and that long bills for necessaries, according to their station in life, may be mounting up against them. The burden of proof being already on the wife, when they are separated, the decree of the Court will prevent its being successfully sustained by the wife, and the presumption will become absolute instead of primâ facie in favour of the husband.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords the following is the week's record:—

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Army Schools Bill.
Charities Recovery Bill.
Merchandise Marks Bill.
London (City) Trial of Civil Causes Bill.
Registration of Electors Acts Amendment Bills.

Bills passed through Committee:—

Newfoundland Fisheries Bill.
Savings Banks Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Third reading:—

Slander of Women Bill.

Bill through Committee:—

Reformatory and Industrial School Children Bill.

Second reading:—

Labourers' Cottage Gardens Bill.

New bills:—

To Consolidate the Enactments Granting and Relating to the Stamp Duties upon Instruments and certain other Enactments Relating to Stamp Duties.

To Consolidate the Law Relating to the Management of Stamp Duties.

To Enable Members to Resign their Seats.

To Amend the Law Relating to Industrial Assurance Societies and Companies.

Forged Transfers (No. 2) Bill.

To Amend the Elementary Education Act, 1870, and the School Board Act, 1885, so far as relates to the Election of the School Board for London.

To Limit the Rating Powers of the School Board for London.

To Amend the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888.

Bills withdrawn:—

Superannuations (Officers of County Councils) Bill.
Forged Transfers Bill.
Payment of Members Bill.

Reviews.

HAMILTON ON COMPANY LAW.

A Manual of Company Law for the Use of Directors and Promoters. By WILLIAM FREDERICK HAMILTON, LL.D., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, assisted by KENNARD GOLBORNE METCALFE, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THE publication of this manual is opportune. Of the 12,500 directors who, the author informs us, now hold office, and whose ranks are being constantly added to, not a few must feel puzzled and uneasy as to the extent of their duties and liabilities. The Act of 1890 has certainly not tended to diminish this feeling, and a manual of company law on the lines of Mr. Hamilton's work will, we imagine, be welcomed by a large circle of readers, both lay and professional. The system adopted is that of dividing the subject into its natural heads, such as 'Capital,' 'Meetings,' 'Liabilities of Directors,' and so on, and then to state the law relating to these in concise and clearly expressed paragraphs, printed in bold type, and numbered. These axioms (as they may be termed) are illustrated by decided cases and ample notes in smaller type. The index is complete, and has evidently been very carefully revised, and the same remark applies to the table of cases. The author has naturally devoted special attention to the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, the sections being printed in extenso, and thoroughly examined and explained. A list of stamp duties affecting companies and a table of fees payable to the registrar of joint-stock companies are added as appendices. We must not omit to mention that the winding up of companies is not dealt with in this manual, directors, as the author reminds us, being only interested in companies while they are going concerns. Mr. Hamilton is to be congratulated on the successful performance of a task by no means easy, and we can safely recommend his work as a careful analysis of company law, and at the same time a thoroughly practical guide for directors, promoters, and shareholders. The price of the book is 12*s.* 6*d.*

HUDSON ON BUILDING CONTRACTS.

The Law of Building and Engineering Contracts and of the Duties and Liabilities of Engineers, Architects, Surveyors, and Valuers. With an Appendix of Precedents and an Appendix of Unreported Cases. By ALFRED A. HUDSON, Barrister-at-Law. London: Waterlow & Sons (Lim.) and Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THIS book is an attempt to treat exhaustively a highly complicated and technical subject, but, owing to the double training which the author has undergone, first as architect, and, secondly, in his present profession, he is perhaps the only writer who could have treated it so successfully. The method of treatment is to divide the subject into thirteen chapters, arranged as far as possible in accordance with the natural sequence of events, beginning with the respective duties and liabilities of the architect, engineer, and quantity surveyor, and ending with a consideration of the various modes in which liabilities arising under building contracts are usually ascertained and adjusted. In an introductory chapter the author points out ten sources giving rise to the peculiarity of building and engineering contracts, and then, after touching upon the position of builder and the construction of building contracts, he apologises, as we think unnecessarily, for having, in his citation of cases, drawn largely from American and English colonial authorities. There can be no doubt that on a subject of this kind the American decisions are especially valuable, and invariably receive, as they deserve, the utmost respect on the part of the English Courts. The Introduction concludes with a suggestion as to the formation of a new tribunal for the determination of the peculiarly technical questions which constantly arise upon building and engineering contracts—viz. a 'Building Court'—to be presided over by a judge with assessors. The suggestion is not without value. Chapter II. deals with Engineers and Architects, the extent of their authority, duties, and liabilities, and their system of charges; Chapter III. treats of Quantity Surveyors, and Bills of Quantities; Chapter IV. of Tenders and Contracts generally; Chapter V. of Contracts with Public Bodies. The headings of the remaining chapters are as follows: VI., Performance and Payment; VII., Approval and Certificates; VIII., Extras; IX., Price and Damages; X., Vesting of Materials, Lien and Forfeiture; XI., Assignment of Contracts; XII., Guarantees and Sureties; and XIII., Arbitration and Award. There are two appendices, the first consisting of Precedents and Scales of Professional Charges, together with an enumeration of the Acts relating to building; and the second of a selection of unreported cases. These latter are principally jury cases taken from the Times newspaper and other sources; but no doubt it will be found useful to have them collected in this volume. A very full index completes the book. Mr. Hudson has struck out a new line for himself and produced a work of considerable merit, and one which will probably be found indispensable by practitioners, inasmuch as it contains a great deal that is not to be found elsewhere. The Table of Cases refers to all the reports, and, in respect of type, paper, and general get-up, the publishers could not have done better. The price is 36*s*.

Correspondence.

COURT ROLLS.

Sir,—Your correspondent, 'T. K.,' will find what he requires in the Selden Society's volume of 'Select Pleas in Manorial and other Seigniorial Courts' (published in 1889) and in the forthcoming volume (which will be ready in the course of a few weeks) of 'Precedents for the Business of Manorial Courts.' Each of these contains both the original text and a translation.

P. Edward Dove,
Honorary Secretary and Treasurer,
Selden Society.

Selden Society, 23 Old Buildings,
Lincoln's Inn, London, W.C.:
May 4.

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

ACTION FOR DETINUE OF A PICTURE.

The case of Von Knoop v. Moss and Jameson was heard before Mr. Justice Mathew, without a jury, on May 4. This was an action by Baron von Knoop against Messrs. Moss & Jameson, auctioneers, of Chancery Lane, for detinue of an oil painting by Mr. Caton Woodville, the well-known artist, entitled 'The Last Ride of the Emperor Frederick William.' The short facts of the case were as follows: At the end of the year 1888 the plaintiff commissioned Mr. Caton Woodville to paint him a picture of the Emperor Frederick William riding in the Jubilee procession. The price was to be 150 guineas. In March, 1889, the picture was completed and sent to the Royal Academy, where, however, it was not accepted. It was then sent to the studio of a Mr. Kerr and afterwards returned to Mr. Woodville's Fulham studio, as the plaintiff wished the background of the picture to be changed from a scene in Berlin to one in London. These alterations Mr. Woodville agreed to do, and the plaintiff heard nothing more of his picture until the beginning of January, 1890, when his solicitor heard from Mrs. Woodville that the picture had been seized under a distress for rent at Mr. Woodville's house, Tite Street, Chelsea, where there was another studio. He communicated with the defendants, who had made the distress and were to conduct the sale, claiming the picture, but the answer was that they could do nothing in the matter beyond letting him know when the sale was to be held and sending him a catalogue. The sale took place on January 10, and was announced to begin at 12 noon, but not until 3.30 P.M. did the plaintiff's solicitor, Mr. Parton, receive the catalogue by post. He at once drove off to the auction-rooms, where he, however, found that the picture had been sold to a Mr. Irving for 8*l*. He at once complained to Mr. Jameson, who replied that the catalogue had been posted on the morning of the 9th, and that he could do nothing in the matter, as Mr. Irving was entitled to remove the picture when he wished. Some suggestion was made as to repurchasing from Mr. Irving, but that came to nothing, as he stood out for a large price. Action was then brought and Irving was made a defendant and gave an undertaking not to part with the picture, but early this year he went to America, where he has since died, it not now being known what has become of the picture. Evidence having been given in support of plaintiff's case, for the defence witnesses were called who proved that at the time when the picture was seized it was hanging up in the drawing-room at Mr. Woodville's, there having been no studio at Tite Street since March, 1889, as what had been the studio had been turned into a drawing-room and was used as such by Mrs. Woodville while Mr. Caton Woodville was abroad. It was proved further that the catalogue was posted on the 9th, although from the post-mark it did not appear to have been 'cleared' until midday on the 10th, and evidence was also given that the sale was conducted in a perfectly bonâ fide and businesslike manner, all possible care being taken to obtain good prices. It appeared that there had been numerous complaints as to letters having been delayed through sticking in the box at the Chancery Lane post-office, and that was suggested as the cause of the delay.—Mr. Dunham, for the defendants, argued that the picture, being on demised premises, was liable to distress, as no privilege had been made out. An artist did not exercise a public trade within the meaning of the rule in Clarke v. The Millwall Docks, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 378; L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 494. Even if he did the privilege would only extend to his business premises (Lyons v. Elliott, 45 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 159; L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 210), and would, therefore, only extend to the Fulham studio and not to the Tite Street premises. As to the sale not being bonâ fide, and that the best price was not obtained, there was no evidence whatever to support those suggestions.—Mr. Kemp, Q.C., submitted that it was immaterial that the privilege was not claimed at the time so long as the fact remains that it was an unfinished picture, inasmuch as it had to be touched up or altered. The plaintiff had not waived any of his rights by not explaining the nature of his claim to the defendants, or by intimating to them that he wished to buy in the picture at the sale rather than lose it. The picture was not sold for the best price, as no special means were taken to show the public that it was a valuable work.—Mr. Justice Mathew: Nor were the defendants told what it had cost. If the plaintiff wanted to buy it in cheap, I can quite understand that, however.—Mr. Kemp, Q.C.: An auctioneer is a valuer, and should have known that a picture by a well-known artist should not be lumped into a sale like a cheap oleograph. Lastly, as to the bona fides of the defendants, it was very remarkable that the catalogue should have remained twenty-four hours in the letter-box, and that a man like Irving, about whom nothing was known, should have become the purchaser of a 150-guinea picture for 8*l.*—Mr. Justice Mathew, in giving judgment, said: Most of the facts in this case are admitted up to a certain point, so I need not again refer to them. I am satisfied, however, that after March, 1889, Mr. Caton Woodville did no work at either the Fulham or Tite Street studios. How the picture came to be removed to Tite Street is not quite clear, but it was done, no doubt, with a view to its safe custody. This was, however, rather unfortunate, as three quarters' rent being due at Tite Street a distress was put in and everything on the premises seized, including the picture, which was found hanging up in the drawing-room occupied by Mrs. Woodville. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff himself being abroad, his solicitor, who no doubt did not know much about the history of the picture, had to do the best he could. He therefore applied to the defendants to give up the picture, but they declined, adding, however, that if the other goods would satisfy the landlord's claim the picture would not be sold, and that in any event they would sell it last. They promised, further, to send a catalogue and let him know when the sale would take place. The catalogue did not, in fact, arrive until 3.30 P.M. on the day of the sale, and no doubt that fact at first created a suspicion in the mind of the plaintiff's solicitor. I am, however, satisfied that the catalogue was posted on the previous day, and that it did not arrive in due course through some irregularity on the part of the Post Office. The defendants are, therefore, in no way to blame in that matter. Mr. Parton, however, was still more suspicious when he found that Irving had bought the picture for 8*l.*, and that he at once wanted a large sum to induce him to resell the picture. The plaintiff's suggestion being that Irving was not a bonâ-fide purchaser, I do not find a tittle of evidence which would support such a charge. Further, it is said that the defendants would know the value of the picture, and should not have let it go for so small a sum as 8*l.* But it is well known that at such sales prices run very low, and it is not unimportant that another bidder only thought it worth his while to bid 7*l.* 10*s.* I am therefore clearly of opinion that there is no ground for saying that the sale was not properly conducted, and that the best price was not obtained. Lastly, as to the point of law, it is said that this picture was privileged, having been sent to be worked up, and that it came within the rule in the well-known case of Simpson v. Hartopp, 1 Sm. L. C 8th edit. 450, which has been followed in other cases. I am, however, not by any means clear that Tite Street was a privileged place, though Fulham might have been, for there is no evidence whatever of any work having been done at Tite Street. I am, however, clear that an artist is no more a 'public trader' within the meaning of the rule than 'barristers, poets, or dramatists.' No materials are supplied to him, as he supplies his own canvas, colours, and genius. I have come to the conclusion that the defendants cannot be treated as having sold a privileged article, and that they had no notice that any privilege was claimed—in fact, the plaintiff wanted to buy it in at the sale. My judgment must be for the defendants, with costs.—Mr. Kemp, Q.C., and Mr. Avory were for the plaintiff; Mr. Dunham (with him Mr. Jelf, Q.C.) for the defendants.

THE GERMAN LAW OF INSURANCE.

MR. T. E. YOUNG, B.A., read a paper on April 27, before a meeting of the Institute of Actuaries, Staple Inn, Holborn, on "The German Law of Insurance against Invalidity and Old Age.' Mr. Benjamin Newbatt, the president, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance.

The lecturer said that the subject they were met to discuss must demand careful attention as one of the most daring and economic experiments in modern history. The law was adopted by the German Reichstag on May 23, 1889, and its many varied aspects solicited and repaid sedulous thought as a contribution to one of the deepest problems in the evolution of man. After furnishing a brief history of fiscal legislation and State socialism in Germany, the lecturer said that with fluctuations, up to 1877, the economic policy of Germany was, as a rule, founded upon free trade. The classes of persons to be insured on completing the age of sixteen included those engaged as workmen, assistants, apprentices, and servants who received a payment or wage, German sailors, and masters under certain limited conditions. The law provided an absolute right to an allowance in invalidity and old age, and every person was entitled to an allowance for invaljdity, without regard to age, who had become confirmedly unfit for work. If this incapacity were due to accident, the individual only possesses a right to an allowance for invalidity when no allowance could be paid under the provisions of the imperial statute for insurance against accidents. Each insured member was entitled to an allowance for invalidity, without necessarily proving incapability of work, who had completed his seventieth year. The scheme was expected to include 12,000,000 persons. The chief machinery consisted of insurance institutes which were to be established by order of the State Governments for the large communal unions of their territory, or for the whole territory of the Federal State. In the essential difference between the present law and its legislative precursors, the Government might be said to have adopted for the first time a genuinely socialistic principle, since, under the preceding insurance laws, the burden of contributions fell solely on employers, as in the insurance against accidents, or upon employers and the insured, as in sickness insurance, while in this latest scheme a third part of the charge was contributed by the State. The cost of administration was assessed at one mark per head of the insured, or 600,000*l.* a year, and it was estimated that the employment of post-offices for the sale of insurance stamps avoided the necessity of establishing 83,000 additional centres for that purpose. The State contribution to the financial objects of the law amounted to one-third of the total sums which, in each year, were actually paid in annuities; but many persons withdrew from an employment liable to insurance, and in those cases no further State contribution was payable. The average annual charge entailed on the State for the combined insurance of old age and invalidity, exclusive of the estimated additional expenses of management, and the annuities in respect of loss of contributions during military service in mobilisation and war, amounted to 2,421,200*l.* The rate of interest of 3½ per cent. was excessive. The scheme failed to sustain Mr. Lecky's test of national excellence, or net moral result, for, far beyond all its predecessors, it formed a more coercive and a deeper interference with individual liberty, and a more serious restraint upon a free and original expansion of national character and life. It restrained the development of the individual, and consequently of the national character. A Government, by such needlessly detailed and elaborate supervision, holding itself implicitly as possessing the sole remedy for all social ills, still more radically tended to demoralise and impede national life by confirming and widening the social habit of appealing to the State at every crisis, real or imagined. It had been pointed out that the intervention of the State subsidy was liable to attach a pauperising tendency to the bill, and that the additional indirect taxation requisite would be principally incident upon the poorer classes, so that the subsidy, designed as a blessing, might ultimately be regarded by the people as a curse. The payment of a portion of the contributions by the employer would undoubtedly involve a reduction in the nominal amount of wages, and consequently a further restriction of personal and social life. Reduced wages with higher prices would act in combined power against the workman's impoverished condition. Hence, with augmented taxation and a reduction of the means of life, prices of the labourers' essentials of life—to omit regard altogether of possible comforts—would gradually increase; so that we obtained the relation of advancing cost and diminishing means of purchase, involving by restriction of the necessaries of livelihood, defective and inefficient work, and the disastrous enfeeblement of individual enterprise. The scheme appeared to form an endeavour to attack a symptom merely of a national disquietude, instead of a wise and cautious investigation of the nature of the ailment and an attempted removal of the cause. It was clearly a valuable adjunct to the resources of autocracy, however beneficently disposed, for besides a military power searching into every grade of life, a social and civil power was now evoked into being, entering into every remaining channel and intensifying and extending the grip that already existed. The law would enfeeble the national habits and character, and the progress of the people in the scale of highest development.

THE COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

GENERAL RULES MADE PURSUANT TO SECTION 26 OF THE COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

Statements by Liquidators to the Registrar of Joint-stock Companies under Section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890.

1. [127] The statements with respect to the proceedings in and position of a liquidation of a company, the winding-up of which is not concluded within a year after its commencement, shall be sent twice in every year as follows:—

(1) Where the winding-up commenced on or before April 1, 1890, and was not concluded before April 1, 1891, the first statement, brought down to March 31, 1891, shall be sent within thirty days from the first day of May, 1891, or within such extended period as the Board of Trade, or (where the winding-up is by or subject to the supervision of the Court) as the judge may in any particular case sanction, and the next statement, brought down to September 30, 1891, shall be sent within thirty days from that date.

(2) Where the winding-up did not commence on or before the first day of April, 1890, the first statement, commencing at the date when a liquidator was first appointed and brought down to the end of twelve months from the commencement of the winding-up, shall be sent within thirty days from the expiration of such twelve months, or within such extended period as the Board of Trade may sanction.

(3) The subsequent statements shall be sent at intervals of half a year, each statement being brought down to the end of the half-year for which it is sent.

2. [127A] (1) Subject to the next succeeding rule, Form No. 75, with such variations as circumstances may require, shall be used, and the directions specified in the form shall (unless the Board of Trade otherwise direct) be observed in reference to every statement.

(2) Every statement shall be sent in duplicate, and shall be verified by an affidavit in the Form No. 75A, with such variations as circumstances may require.

3. [127B] Where the winding-up commenced on or before April 1, 1890, and was not concluded before April 1, 1891:—

(1) The first statement shall, unless the Board of Trade, on the application of the liquidator, otherwise direct, commence at the date when a liquidator was first appointed.

(2) In any winding-up in which the accounts of the liquidator have been passed in the chambers of a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court prior to January 1, 1891, and in any case in which it shall appear to the Board of Trade inexpedient to require a detailed statement of all the liquidator's receipts and payments on account of the company, the statement may be sent in the form of such a summary of the liquidator's accounts as the Board of Trade shall approve.

4. [127C] Where a liquidator has not during any period for which a statement has to be sent received or paid any money on account of the company, he shall at the period when he is required to transmit his statement send to the registrar of joint-stock companies an affidavit of no receipts or payments in the Form No. 75A.

Unclaimed Funds and Undistributed Assets in the Hands of the Liquidator.

5. [127D] (1) All money in the hands of or under the control of a liquidator of a company representing unclaimed dividends, which for six months from the date when the dividend became payable have remained in the hands or under the control of the liquidator, shall forthwith, on the expiration of the six months, be paid into the Companies Liquidation Account.

(2) All other money in the hands or under the control of a liquidator of a company, representing unclaimed or undistributed assets, which under subsection 3 of section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, the liquidator is to pay into the Companies Liquidation Account, shall be ascertained as on the date to which the statement of receipts and payments sent in to the registrar of joint-stock companies is brought down, and the amount to be paid to the Companies Liquidation Account shall be the minimum balance of such money which the liquidator has had in his hands or under his control during the six months immediately preceding the date to which the statement is brought down, less such part (if any) thereof as the Board of Trade may authorise him to retain for the immediate purposes of the liquidation. Such amount shall be paid into the Companies Liquidation Account within fourteen days from the date to which the statement of account is brought down.

6. [132A] Where the liquidator requires to make payments out of money paid into the Bank of England, in pursuance of section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, either by way of distribution or in respect of the costs and expenses of the proceedings, he shall apply in such form and manner as the Board of Trade may direct, and the Board of Trade may thereupon either make an order for the payment out to him of the sum required to make such payments, or may direct cheques to be issued to him for transmission to the persons to whom the payments are to be made.

7. [130A] Every application by the Board of Trade for the purpose of ascertaining and getting in money payable into the Bank of England, pursuant to section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890—

(a) Where the winding-up is by or subject to the supervision of the High Court, shall be made to and dealt with by the judge to whom the winding-up is assigned, upon motion in accordance with the practice of the Chancery Division of the High Court relating to motions;

(b) Where the winding-up is in the Stannaries Court, shall be made upon motion before the vice-warden;

(c) Where the winding-up is in a Palatine Court or a County Court, shall be made to that Court;

(d) In other cases, shall be made to the judge of the High Court who for the time being exercises the jurisdiction of the High Court in Bankruptcy, and in accordance with the practice which is observed in reference to applications by the Board of Trade under section 162 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1888.

8. Rules 127 and 130, and Form No. 75 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, are annulled as from the date on which these rules came into operation.

9. These rules shall come into operation on May 31, 1891. They shall be construed with and deemed to form part of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, and each of these rules may be cited with reference to those rules by the number in square brackets set against the rule at the commencement thereof. The forms annexed to these rules shall be deemed to form part of the forms annexed to the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, and each of the forms annexed to these rules may be cited with reference to the forms annexed to the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, by the number placed at the head of the form. (Signed) HALSBURY, C.

I concur.
M. E. HICKS-BEACH,
President of the Board of Trade.

Dated April 30, 1891.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, May 5, Mr. Douglas in the chair. The subject for discussion: 'That, in view of the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Jackson, legislation is urgently needed to amend the laws relating to husband and wife,' was opened by Mr. Kinipple.—Mr. Woodhouse opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: in the affirmative—Messrs. Joseph, Nimmo, Aston, Willson, and Thirlby; in the negative—Messrs. Mawdsley, Crawford, and Harcourt.—Mr. Kinipple replied.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was lost by the casting vote of the chairman.—The annual meeting of the society will be held at the Law Institution on Tuesday, May 12, when the attendance of members is particularly requested.—The next ordinary meeting of the society will be held on Tuesday, October 6.

BUSINESS OF THE COURTS.—SITTINGS AT GUILDHALL.—The Lord Chief Justice took occasion, on May 4, to announce that the contemplated sittings at Guildhall for the trial of London causes would not take place until the commencement of Michaelmas Sittings in November. His lordship added that he had been there himself to see the progress of the Courts, and they were not yet ready. To commence the sittings there earlier would put all parties to inconvenience, while, on the other hand, no object would be answered by it, as there was no hurry.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. R. D. CRIPPS has been appointed Clerk to the Presteign Local Board of Health.

Mr. Richard Preston, of Tunbridge, Kent, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Preston was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Archibald Earle Collins (of the firm of Collins & Collins), of 37 King William Street, City, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Collins was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Julian Tregenna Biddulph Arnold (of the firm of Keighley, Arnold & Higgs), of 8 Old Jewry, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Arnold was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Ernest Sydney Coulson, of 26 Leadenhall Street, City, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Coulson was admitted in 1880.

Mr. Ernest William Gover (of the firm of Henry Gover & Son), of 3 Adelaide Place, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Gover was admitted in 1880.

Mr. Charles Edward Bonner, B.A., solicitor (of the firm of Bonner, Calthrop & Bonner), of Spalding, has been appointed a commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bonner was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Walter Trevelyan Clark, solicitor (of the firm of Clark & Smith), of Malmesbury, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Clark was admitted in 1879.

Mr. George Bidlake, of Wellington, Salop, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bidlake was admitted in 1884.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, May 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Tuesday, May 12.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Wednesday, May 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Thursday, May 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Friday, May 15.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

The Whitsun Vacation will commence on Saturday, May 16, and terminate on Tuesday, May 19, 1891, both days inclusive.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MAY 11 TO MAY 16.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	May 11	May 12	May 13	May 14	May 15	May 16
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Altrincham	Northwich	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Tadcaster	Easingwold	Knaresborough	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Belper	Bakewell	Buxton	—
28	Judge Jordan	Longton	Hanley	Hanley	Burslem	Tamworth	Rugeley
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Ringwood	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, APRIL 30.

The Derwent (ship — collision — damage — negligence — liability).—Dismissed.

Allcroft v. Bishop of London. Lighton v. Bishop of London (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874—episcopal discretion—mandamus to bishop to act upon representation—alleged unlawful images in cathedral. The first case is reported sub nom. Regina v. Bishop of London, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 385; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 414; on appeal, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 213, respondent not called upon).—Cur. adv. vult.

FRIDAY, MAY 1.

Allcroft v. Bishop of London. Lighton v. Bishop of London.—Cur. adv. vult.

MONDAY, MAY 4.

Allcroft v. Bishop of London. Lighton v. Bishop of London.—Cur. adv. vult.

Lane v. Esdaile (special leave to appeal—expiration of time—refusal of Court of Appeal to grant leave—jurisdiction of House of Lords to entertain appeal from such refusal. Case reported 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 265; L. R. 40 Chanc. Div. 520).

TUESDAY, MAY 5.

Lane v. Esdaile.—Dismissed.

Smith and others v. Cooke and others. Storey v. Cooke and others (creditors' deed—construction—absolute assignment or resulting trust—two appeals raising same question. Reported L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 38. Court of Appeal reversed; judgment of Kekewich, J., restored, one set of costs only allowed).—Allowed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 30.

Newman v. London and South-Western Railway Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of nonsuit, dated December 6, after trial before Stephen, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Kinnell & Co. v. Clements & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, dated October 30, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MAY 1.

In re Cameron and others, ex parte Debtors and others (appeal of debtors and others from order of Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated February 21, refusing to rescind receiving order; part heard, March 6—present, Master of Rolls and Bowen, L.J., and Fry, L.J.).—Order by consent.

Richards and others v. Butcher. In re Walbaum's Registered Trade-marks, Nos. 28,593, 28,594, and Trade-Marks Acts (appeal of plaintiffs Walbaum & Co. from order of Kay, J., dated November 12, expunging trade-marks from register; entered into Q.B. List by order).—Dismissed.

Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Stephen, J., dated November 26, at trial with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, MAY 2.

Unwin v. Hanson (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Pollock, B., dated July 29, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Plaintiff to have costs of cause up to trial, one-tenth of costs of trial and costs of appeal, defendant to have nine-tenths of costs of trial.

Hick v. Tweedy (appeal of defendant from judgment of Charles, J., dated December 9, at trial without a jury at Newcastle, and cross-notice of appeal by plaintiff).—Dismissed; cross-appeal abandoned.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, MAY 4.

Heinemann & Co. v. S. B. Hale & Co. (appeal of C. H. Sanford (an alleged partner) from refusal of Cave, J., and Charles, J., dated May 1, to set aside writ and service for irregularity).—Allowed.

Millissich v. Spottiswoode & Co. (appeal of plaintiff from order of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., dated April 13, dismissing application as to taxed costs of action).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, MAY 5.

Joyner v. Weeks (appeal of defendant from order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated April 17, directing new trial before official referee, and cross-notice for variation of order).—Dismissed and judgment entered for plaintiff for 70*l.*

Bennett v. Daventry Board of Guardians (appeal of plaintiff in person from order of Mathew, J., and Vaughan Williams, J., dated April 13, staying action as frivolous and vexatious).—Dismissed.

Green v. Briggs (appeal of defendant from order of Cave, J., at trial, dated April 7, referring questions to official referee).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6.

Plevy v. Harvey & Co. (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated March 17, at trial before Wills, J., with a jury, at Birmingham).—Dismissed.

Hardy v. Kursheedt Manufacturing Company (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated March 2, at trial before Grantham, J., with a jury, at Nottingham).—Dismissed.

Fernandes v. Castleford Local Board of Health (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated May 1, after trial before Smith, J., with a special jury, at Leeds).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 30.

Hurlbatt (trustee, &c.) v. Bath. Hurlbatt (trustee, &c.) v. Sanz (appeal of plaintiff from refusal of Stirling, J., dated April 24, to continue injunction against dealing with shares belonging to A. Hermanos and from refusal to appoint receiver).—Dismissed.

In re Courts of Justice Concentration Site Act, 1864, and Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1855. Gedye v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Building (appeal of C. J. Jolland from order of North, J., dated February 21).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MAY 1.

In re Tredwell, dec. Jaffray v. Tredwell (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of North, J., dated February 17; heard April 30).—Allowed.

Boulton v. Carter, Paterson & Co. (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated December 2).—Allowed.

SATURDAY, MAY 2.

Low v. Bouverie (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., dated February 11).—Cur. adv. vult.

MONDAY, MAY 4.

In re Manchester District Registry; In re Shaw Hall Cotton Spinning Company (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of the official liquidator from the decision of Kekewich, J., dated February 14).—Dismissed.

Odhams v. Biggar (appeal of the plaintiff from the judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 7).—Dismissed.

Barrow v. Barrow (appeal of the defendant J. J. Barrow from the order of Stirling, J., dated January 14, varying the chief clerk's certificate).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MAY 5.

Stuart v. Bell (N. T.) (appeal of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., with a special jury at Leeds; heard February 2).—Judgment for defendant, Lopes, L.J., dissentiente.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated Jan. 15, at trial before Butt, J., and a special jury).—Cur. adv. vult.

Proffitt v. Wye Valley Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 6, 1891).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6.

Cassella & Co. v. J. Levinstein & Co. (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Kekewich, J., dated April 13, for further and better particulars relating to a patent, 9214*, A.D. 1885).—Order varied.

In re J. Grover's Trusts; Ackworth v. Grover (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Kekewich, J., dated April 17, refusing appointment of receiver of real and personal estate).—Dismissed.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to record the death at Carrington, on April 16, of Mr. MICHAEL BROWNE, the oldest coroner in England, and who had during a period of fifty-five years held the office of coroner for the borough of Nottingham. Mr. Browne had for several months past been confined to his house, and for the last ten weeks he had been seriously ill. The late coroner for the borough of Nottingham was a remarkable man in every way—remarkable for his ability in the profession he had adopted, for his thoroughness, perseverance, and the high standard of duty which he established and maintained throughout a life which began in the last century. His death severs a link between the present and the past, which was, perhaps, with one exception, absolutely without parallel, the exception being in the case of Mr. Brooksbank, the ex-mayor's serjeant, who was for half-a-century upon terms of friendship with the coroner, who survives him, and, like Mr. Browne, is a nonogenarian. The late Mr. Michael Browne was a Yorkshireman, having been born at Pontefract on November 27, 1800. He was educated at Pontefract, and when thirteen years old entered the office of Mr. Mitton, a solicitor. Subsequently he removed to the office of Mr. Raynor, of Leeds, where he served his articles. He was admitted a solicitor in the year 1828, and established himself in practice three years later at Worksop, Nottinghamshire, where he married, and subsequently betook himself to Nottingham. He entered into partnership with Mr. Christopher Swann, who was then county coroner, but the partnership was not of long duration, and in 1836 Mr. Browne was made borough coroner by the reformed corporation—an office which he held until the day of his death, the work, however, having for several years past been carried on by his son as deputy-coroner. The deceased, who was much respected in the locality, was buried on the 20th ult. at the General Cemetery, Nottingham.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. LINDSEY MIDDLETON ASPLAND, Q.C., LL.D., of the Northern Circuit, which took place at his residence, Linden Gardens, early on May 6, after a short illness from influenza and pneumonia. Mr. Aspland, who was the second son of the Rev. Robert Brook Aspland, of Hackney, was born on April 9, 1843, and had therefore only just completed his forty-eighth year. He was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1868, when he joined the Northern Circuit, and was made a Queen's Counsel in 1886. He was a member of Convocation, a member of the Council of University College, London, and had been a member of the Bar Committee since 1883. The learned gentleman was a regular attendant on the Northern Circuit, and his sudden death will cause a widespread feeling of regret among his numerous friends in the legal profession. The deceased gentleman was as late as Friday, May 1, arguing a case before the Court of Appeal.

MR. THOMAS HARE died of pneumonia and pleurisy at 6 Carlyle Mansions, Cheyne Walk, on May 6, having attained a ripe old age. He was a man whose name is familiar to all thoughtful students of the theory of politics; he was also a lawyer who, without attaining forensic eminence, left his mark upon English law. Mr. Hare was born in 1806, and was called to the bar in 1833, electing to follow his profession on the equity side. The distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Hare as a lawyer were untiring industry and clearness of intellectual vision, and he has left behind him a monument of both these qualities in the shape of 'Hare's Reports in Chancery,' a series extending from 1841 to 1853, which still forms an essential part of every barrister's library. He was also the author of a work upon the 'Discovery of Evidence by Bill and Answer in Equity.' In 1853 Mr. Hare was appointed an inspector of charities, and to this office was added, later, that of assistant charity commissioner. Soon after the General Election of 1857 he published a pamphlet entitled 'The Machinery of Representation,' which attracted so much notice that, after a second and enlarged edition of it had been issued, the author was emboldened to devote himself to the great work of his life, a treatise upon 'The Election of Representatives, Parliamentary and Municipal,' which became known later as 'Hare on Representation.' The subject of the treatise was in all men's minds at that time. The Act of 1832 had given an entirely new complexion to the questions connected with political representation, and many persons will be disposed to say that the true theory of representative government was better understood and more seriously discussed a generation ago than it is now. Foremost among the exponents of the representative principle, not inferior to Mill, Bagehot, Guizot, Lewes, Andriæ, Marshall, Earl Russell, or Earl Grey, was Mr. Hare, whose great work attracted much attention at home and abroad for many years after its publication in 1859. It is impossible within the limits of this brief space to do justice to the original and at the same time elaborate work in which is contained Mr. Hare's attempt to find 'a remedy for the defects in representative institutions which have made them the creatures of a number of dispersed majorities.' It must suffice to say that a great number of thoughtful men, not only in this country, but also on the Continent and in the colonies, have been, and are, of opinion that Mr. Hare's system of preferential and proportional representation would have been, and would be if it were practicable, of great value in preserving the rights of minorities, in securing the due representation of various interests, and in impressing upon the franchise-holder the greatness of his privileges and his responsibilities. Mr. Mill said in a private letter that Mr. Hare had 'lifted the cloud which hung over the future of civilisation.' Mr. Hare retired from the active performance of his duties at the Charity Commission three or four years ago, but up to the last days of his life he retained the keen interest in public affairs, and the charm of manner and modest demeanour which had been characteristic of him through life. Mr. Hare was twice married, his first wife being Mary Samson, and his second, who also died before him, Eleanor Bowes Benson, a sister of the Archbishop of Canterbury. His venerable and striking face will be missed at the bench of the Inner Temple, where he frequently attended to the last, and at the Athenæum Club.

THE WHITSUN VACATION JUDGE.—Mr. Justice Lawrance will be the Whitsun Vacation judge. There will be no sittings in Court during the vacation, but his lordship will be in attendance at Queen's Bench Judges' Chambers on certain days to be fixed in order to hear urgent applications and summonses.

INCOME-TAX.—An important case has just been decided by the Commissioners of Income-tax for the City of London, affecting the interests of underwriters. The Rate and Taxpayers' Protection Association, of Serjeants' Inn, appealed on behalf of an underwriter against the assessment upon him for income-tax for the year 1890, and produced accounts made up for the three years 1886, 1887, and 1888, and claimed to have the assessment reduced to the average shown by such accounts, contending that it was impossible from the nature of the business to render any of a later date. The surveyor objected to the admission of these accounts, alleging that the assessment could not be reduced, except upon accounts made up to the year preceding the year of assessment, but the commissioners adopted the view taken by the association, and reduced the assessment, whereupon the surveyor, on behalf of the Crown, gave notice of an appeal against the commissioners' decision to the higher Courts, but, upon consideration, the Board of Inland Revenue have decided not to proceed with the appeal, but to accept the decision of the commissioners in the matter.

THE LOCAL TAXATION COMMITTEE.—In a report which has just been issued the Local Taxation Committee express much satisfaction at the transfer to the local taxation account of the proceeds of the new duties on beer and spirits. Of the estimated produce of these new duties for England and Wales, 300,000*l.* was allocated to police superannuation, and the 'residue,' 743,000*l.*, was granted to county councils, many of which are devoting to the promotion of technical education the amount thus received by them. The committee also congratulates their supporters on the statement made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on April 23, that the continuance of the new duties may be counted upon in the same way as the continuance of the probate duty grant. The committee further view with much gratification that not only does the grant of the share of the probate duty—as laid down in the Local Government Act—give direct effect to the principle of contribution from personal property to local taxation, but that the principle of aid from indirect taxation also received emphatic affirmation from the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech. In conclusion, they call attention 'to the important expression of opinion by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget speech to the effect that any reconstruction of the death duties involving an increase in the taxes on real property could not rightly be undertaken without some change in the incidence of the income-tax, which at present—in regard to real property alone—is most unjustly levied on gross rental and not on ratable value.'

BIRTHS.

On May 2, at 31 Addison Mansions, Kensington, W., the wife of Arthur Quicke, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On May 3, at 13 Archibald Road, Tufnell Park, the wife of Henry Edward Edmunds, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On April 18, at Grace Church, Chicago, Edgar Felloes, son of A. Felloes, of Portland, Oregon, to Lilian d'Almeida, second daughter of W. Barrington d'Almeida, Barrister-at-Law, of The Grange, West Molesey, Surrey.

On April 25, at St. Stephen's, Lewisham, C. Sleap, jun., of 17 Thornford Road, Lewisham, to Marianne Louise, elder daughter of the late C. J. Allen, Solicitor, of Walton-on-Thames.

On April 29, at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, William John Hill, M.B. (Cantab.), D.P.H., &c., of 58 New Broad Street, E.C., and Croydon, younger son of the late Henry Hill, Esq., Solicitor, London, to Mary Anne, younger daughter of the late William Brass, Esq., of Streatham Surrey.

DEATHS.

On April 26, in Fitzwilliam Square, Dublin, Mary, Lady Brady, daughter of the late Right Hon. John Hatchell, of Fortfield House, co. Dublin, and widow of the late Right Hon. Sir Maziere Brady, Bart., many years Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

On April 27, at No. 30 Fulbrook Road, Tufnell Park, N., Thomas Hives, for thirty-five years and upwards the faithful and devoted managing and confidential clerk of the late William Henry Lammin Solicitor, of 18 Buckingham Street, Adelphi.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH, on Tuesday last, stated that he should take no more witness actions till the non-witness list was dealt with, but he warned solicitors to have their witness causes ready for trial, since he understood that during the next sittings assistance would be given to the Chancery Division by a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, to whom some of his causes might be transferred for trial. His lordship added that, so far as it lay with him, he would see that the cases highest in his list should be transferred the first.

MR. GOSCHEN'S Stamp Duties Bill, 'to consolidate the several enactments relating to the stamp duties payable upon instruments,' which will probably have been read a second time in the House of Commons before these lines meet the eye, contains 125 clauses and three schedules, schedule 3 containing twenty-six enactments which it is proposed to repeal, from 57 Geo. III. c. 41, s. 8, to sections 18–21 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890. 'It is desired,' so we learn from the memorandum to the bill, 'merely to consolidate and repeal the Acts and parts of Acts included in schedule 3, but an opportunity has been taken of giving legal sanction to existing official practice adopted in the interests of the taxpayer, and of removing anomalies in the like interests.' For instance, section 19 of the Act of 1870 has been modified so as to give a judicial discretion as to costs, a distinction between legal and equitable mortgages for unlimited amounts has been abolished, and, in reference to articles of clerkship, whereas at present the duty upon supplementary articles is 10*s.* in every case, the bill provides for the duty being 2*s.* 6*d.* in any case in which original articles are only liable to 2*s.* 6*d.* A companion Stamp Duty Management Bill contains thirty clauses and repeals thirteen Acts or parts of Acts, from 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 72 to section 15 of the Revenue, Friendly Societies, and National Debt Act, 1882.

MR. JOEL'S article in the current number of the National Review on 'the law relating to marriage' will well repay perusal. All the authorities and statutes bearing on the Jackson case are carefully passed in review, with the result that it is finally laid down, as the 6th and 7th of seven carefully formulated propositions, that a husband has no right to capture, take, keep, restrain, confine or imprison his wife, even though she may leave him the day after marriage for no fault of his and without reason assigned, but that the husband may restrain, or confine his wife under special circumstances—e.g. for threatened misconduct, resorting to bad company, or to prevent injury to herself or others. 'Nevertheless,' winds up Mr. Joel after his long and patient examination of the law, 'there is much obscurity, difficulty, and doubt as to the relation of husband and wife which the Legislature should speedily resolve into certainty, either by some codifying statute or by independent legislation, bringing the law into something like reasonable certainty.' Mr. Joel, we fear, will have to wait till the Greek Kalends for 'some codifying statute.' Some independent legislation, however, in the way of allowing a divorce to a man for continued refusal of marital rights, will, beyond all reasonable doubt, be the outcome of the Clitheroe case—before the end of the present century.

Joyner v. Weeks (see ante, p. 313, and Notes of Cases, p. 79) has been affirmed by the Court of Appeal with the variation that judgment is to be entered forthwith for the plaintiff for the exact amount (70*l.*) found to be the cost of the dilapidations by the referee, so that the new trial which the High Court had ordered will not now be had. Of the correctness of this variation by the Court of Appeal we have very grave doubts, but the circumstances upon which it has been made are so peculiar that they are not likely to happen again. On the main and very important point that substantial damages may be given for a breach of covenant to leave a house in repair at the end of a term, although, from peculiar outside circumstances, it may happen that the landlord has sustained no damage by the breach, we fully agree with the judgment of the Court of Appeal, for the reasons we gave last week.

The British Medico-Psychological Association has, for now more than twenty years, endeavoured to ameliorate the position of medical experts in our Courts of law. In 1869 a committee of the association proposed the appointment of medical 'assessors,' after the analogue in Admiralty practice, and urged the Government of the day to nominate a royal commission 'with a view to a revision of the existing system of criminal jurisprudence in its relation to insanity.' Neither of these recommendations was adopted. But the society, though cast down, did not despair. Another abortive effort to arouse the public and official opinion was made in 1880. Then came 1883—the annus mirabilis in the history of this question. Dr. Orange, C.B., then president of the association, brought forward and secured the adoption of a resolution to the effect that, as soon as possible after the commission of an offence by any person alleged to be, or suspected of being, insane, the medical officer of the prison, the medical officer of the county asylum in the neighbourhood, and a physician of standing in the town where the prison is situate, should examine into his mental state, and prepare a joint report thereon, which should be laid before prosecuting counsel. In spite of its 'un-English' character, and its positive resemblance to certain continental methods, this suggestion seems to have arrested official attention, and Sir Henry James (then Attorney-General) directed that in those capital cases in which insanity was alleged, 'full inquiry'—words which have been held in practice to extend to medical inquiries—should be made, and, in the absence of ability on the part of the accused or his friends to produce witnesses, the Treasury solicitor should secure their attendance. The appointment of Dr. Bastian as 'Crown referee in cases of supposed insanity' was also among the first fruits of Dr. Orange's proposal. The Medico-Psychological Association is now demanding that Sir Henry James's order should be extended so as to include all forms of crime. The demand is clearly reasonable and ought to be granted.

The Copyright Bill (see ante, p. 312) passed a second reading in the House of Lords on Monday last, after a short but instructive debate. Lord Monkswell and Lord Herschell made out an unanswerable case for the bill, and it is difficult to gather from the speeches of the Lord Chancellor and Lord Balfour on what grounds the Government, in consenting to a second reading, invited Lord Monkswell, 'for his own sake and for the sake of the subject,' not to insist on going forward with the bill through the standing committee. All that could be said in favour of this very great caution in approving the measure was that the whole question was most complicated and involved questions of policy; that the matter was highly contentious and difficult to arrange; that it could not yet be known what the effect of the American Act would be; and that the discussions in the standing committee would be certain to arise afterwards in the House. Lord Balfour, indeed, asserted that certain draftsmen took serious objection to fifty out of the ninety-six clauses, but, with the exception of the clauses dealing with registration, 'which, if carried,' said he, 'would cast a serious charge upon the funds of this country,' the objectionable parts of the bill were in no case specifically named, and Lord Herschell stated his belief 'that the real difficulties would be found to be not more than three or four.' All this being so, why should not the Government have either cordially supported the bill or brought in a bill of their own? Surely, as Lord Herschell put it, 'the Legislature exists for the purpose of remedying imperfect and mischievous legislation;' and it certainly is not gratifying to our national pride to find that, when a royal commission thirteen years ago pointed out that the law was mischievous and required amendment, and when, thirteen years afterwards, the Legislature was invited to deal with the matter, the representative of the Government should advise Parliament to sit with folded hands and not attempt to make the law better than it is.

On the 4th inst., in the case of Newland v. M'Donagh, the Irish Queen's Bench Division, following the recent example of the Scottish Court of Justiciary (noted ante, p. 191), gave judgment in favour of the legality of the practice of dishorning cattle. The judges present, the Lord Chief Justice, and Justices O'Brien, Johnson, Holmes, and Gibson, none of whom had previously pronounced a judicial opinion on the subject, were unanimously of opinion that the practice was not cruelty within the meaning of the statute; the very great, though temporary, pain caused by the operation being justified by the existence, or an honest and reasonable belief in the existence, of a reasonable and adequate object, and by the use of reasonable skill and proper care in performing the operation. Mr. Justice Gibson, however, took occasion to express his sympathy 'with the humane feeling that underlay the judgment' of Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Hawkins in Ford v. Wiley, 58 Law J. Rep. M. C. 145; and Mr. Justice O'Brien 'could not personally deliver his mind from an uneasy consciousness that it was a brutal business with which some persons would have no concern for the world.' This is the nearest approach to a dissenting judgment that occurs in any of the cases. On the other hand, the Lord Chief Justice alluded to the prosecution as an attempt 'to suppress a method of carrying on their business which had been sanctioned by the great body of the representatives of the principal industry of this pastoral country.' This is very like the dictum of Lord Young that the statute does not interfere with the judgment of farmers who are pursuing their own affairs to the best of their judgment.

Questions were asked on the subject in the House of Commons on the 11th inst., and the President of the Board of Agriculture said he was not prepared to introduce a measure to legalise the operation in England. He, however, made the tentative suggestion that perhaps the difficulty might be solved by making dishorning permissible up to the age of six months, when the horns could be removed without pain, and illegal afterwards. An excellent suggestion, it may be, but somewhat shirking the actual legal position. It is not now a question simply of legalising an operation which is at present illegal. The operation may be illegal in England, though the authority of Ford v. Wiley has now suffered severe and repeated shocks. But in Scotland the practice is legal, and prevails in five or six counties. In Ireland it is legal, and prevails in seventeen counties. Surely, if Mr. Chaplin is not prepared to press his suggestion, or to appoint a commission of practical and humane men to consider the whole question, he ought logically to introduce a measure giving legislative sanction to the decision of the English Court, and making the operation equally illegal in Scotland and in Ireland.

Cominada v. Hulton (Notes of Cases, p. 84), a case stated by justices, is a very interesting case of the law of betting and lotteries. Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Lawrance have held that the publication of a handicap book with a weekly coupon 'in which six races were selected and pecuniary prizes were promised' to any purchaser of a newspaper in connection with which the newspaper was issued 'who filled up the coupons with the names of six winners,' was not a publication of a lottery within the Lottery Act (4 Geo. IV. c. 60) or an advertisement to procure betting within the Betting Act, 1874 (37 Vict. c. 15). That there was no offence against the Lottery Act we are quite clear; there would be far too much skill in the eye of the law required on the part of the competitors for that. But at first sight the Betting Act, 1874, seems to apply. By this Act, 'where any letter, circular, telegram, placard, handbill or advertisement is sent, exhibited or published (1) that any person will give information as the subject-matter of a bet or will lay a bet for another person, (2) to induce any person to apply to a betting-office for information or advice,' or (3) 'inviting any person to make or take any share in or in connection with any such bet or wager,' as is mentioned in the principal Act (of 1853), every person so publishing the same is liable to the penalties of the principal Act. There is some ground for saying that the competitors who filled up the coupons (which they could only buy with the newspaper) were invited by the proprietor to bet on the six horses the names of which they should write down on the coupon, the money laid on those horses by them being the sum paid on buying the newspaper and handicap book together, and the money laid against those horses being the prize promised to be paid to the person or persons who should select six winners. On the whole, however, we think that the Act of 1874 will not bear this construction. The rule is that penal Acts must be strictly construed in favour of an accused person, and this construction will not satisfy that rule.

In the case of Walter v. Everard (Notes of Cases, p. 70) the Court of Appeal No. 1 had to determine an interesting question as to the liability of an infant upon a covenant in articles of apprenticeship. The defendant, a minor, had, with the consent of his mother, become bound to the plaintiff for a term of four years, to be instructed in his business of auctioneer, valuer, and farmer. The consideration was a sum of 500*l.* to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff—viz. 200*l.* immediately upon the execution of the deed and 300*l.* at a subsequent date. There was also a covenant by the defendant to pay the plaintiff the latter sum on the day named. At the trial the jury found that the deed was a necessary arrangement for the defendant if he wished to learn the plaintiff's business, that the premium was fair and reasonable, that the board, lodging, and instruction were necessaries for the defendant, and that the amount charged, irrespective of the deed, was reasonable. Upon these findings, the Court of Appeal held that the judge was right in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. They were of opinion that the authorities, commencing with Coke Litt. 172 (a), showed that, although an infant cannot be liable upon a bond in a penalty, yet that he may be sued upon a single bond, and that the instruction in the business being, under the circumstances, necessary for the defendant, and the premium being a reasonable one, the defendant was liable upon the covenant.

The same case was also noteworthy as disclosing a difference of opinion between Lord Justice Lindley and Lord Justice Bowen on the point which has been so much discussed, whether Derry v. Peek, as decided by the House of Lords, has altered the law. Lord Justice Lindley takes the view that it has. 'Before the decision,' he said in his judgment, 'of the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek I should have thought it clear that this action could have been maintained.' Lord Justice Bowen, on the other hand, thinks that the principle affirmed by the House of Lords always prevailed at common law in this class of actions, which before the Judicature Acts could only be brought on the common law side. He even went so far as to assert that there was not a common lawyer living who doubted that the grounds on which an action of deceit would lie were correctly laid down in Derry v. Peek. This assertion is, perhaps, not strictly true; but the emphatic approval it conveys of so able and learned a lawyer will be welcome to those who have always maintained the soundness of the decision commented on.

An interesting point was raised in the case of Angus v. Clifford, lately decided by the Court of Appeal, though, owing to the view which the Court took of the main question, it became unnecessary to determine it. The plaintiff took shares in a mining company on the faith that certain reports of experts as to the value of the company's property were, as alleged in the prospectus, made for the directors. The reports themselves were not proved to have been untrue or exaggerated, the company never having had sufficient capital to test the mines properly. Mr. Justice Romer held in favour of the plaintiff, on the ground that the reports were not made for the directors but for the vendors, and that it was enough for the plaintiff by way of damage to show, as the fact was, that he had lost money through the depreciation of shares which he would not have taken but for the untrue statement. In the Court of Appeal that decision was reversed, on the ground that the statement, though false, was not fraudulently made. Lord Justice Lindley and Lord Justice Kay in their judgments expressed doubts whether, had the statements been fraudulently made, the plaintiff could have recovered in the absence of proof that the reports themselves were untrue. It may be observed that the illustration put by Lord Justice Kay of the vendor and purchaser of a seam of coal is not quite on all-fours with the case before him.

'Could,' he asked, 'the purchaser say, "I admit the mine is there, and the estate is as valuable as it is represented to be, but I claim relief on the ground that no such information was given by A. B. to the vendor?"' Mr. Angus did not admit that the reports were correct, he merely contended that he was not bound to prove them incorrect. Besides, it is impossible to see what damage the purchaser in the illustration has suffered, whereas that suffered by Mr. Angus is clear enough. To put upon a shareholder in such a case the burden of testing a mine in order to disprove statements as to its value would, by reason of the expense involved, practically prevent him from suing at all. The doubts expressed by the Lords Justices would apparently extend to actions brought under the Directors' Liability Act.

'R. E.,' referring to our remarks on the Tithe Act (ante, p. 248) and the rules under the Act since issued (see ante, p. 296), asks whether it will be sufficient to give the 'occupier's liability notice'—(a) in case of payment without order, before payment, or (b) in case of order obtained (surely 'R. E.' means 'in case of order applied for'), before order. We have referred to the last paragraph of subsection 6 of section 2 of the Tithe Act, 1891, and to rules 2–7 and 36–38, and cannot but think that the result of them is to leave it to the County Court judges to determine within what time it is 'sufficient' to serve the occupier's liability notice. We will, however, hazard two prophecies on the mode in which County Court judges are likely to exercise the wide discretion given to them by the Act and rules. In the first place, we do not think they are likely to lay down the hard-and-fast rule that 'any time' before payment or order will be sufficient. In the second place, we think that, short of laying down such hard-and-fast rule, they will be very lenient with landowners, their solicitors, and their agents, who may have allowed ever so long a time to lapse before finding their way to serving an 'occupier's liability notice.'

COMMENTING recently on the Evidence Bill, we regretted the non-repeal of 5 Eliz. c. 9, by which the ears of pauper perjurers (convict) are directed (so we read in the statute as printed in the second edition of the Statutes Revised) to be 'nayled' to the pillory. The effect of this old statute as construed in Castro v. Reginam, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 497, on the residue of the law of perjury, will be found discussed at length in the LAW JOURNAL for April 26, 1890, where it is pointed out that it is still discretionary with a judge to fine a convicted perjurer. It is, however, unhappily the law that, as perjury is a misdemeanour only, a person who had suffered injury by conviction upon the oath of a perjurer cannot, upon the conviction of such perjurer, obtain any compensation from him, unless, indeed, the 10*l.* which he may recover from the perjurer, if the judge should fine him, can be called compensation. The law is different in the case of felony, as will be seen by reference to 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 4. Surely it would be a useful amendment of the law to increase the discretionary power of the judge to fine up to, say, 1,000*l.*, and award as much of the fine as he may think fit to the person injured by the perjury.

'EVERY person upon objecting to being sworn, and stating as the ground of his objection, either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief, shall be permitted to make his solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath, in all places and for all purposes where an oath is or shall be required by law.' So says the Legislature in the Oaths Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 46). Yet it has been stated on good authority that one of the coroners in the district of the administrative county of London has refused an atheist to 'mix among jurors.' We suppose that the comprehensive generality of the enabling words has made them less intelligible than they would otherwise have been. That they apply to jurors, whether summoned on a coroner's jury or any other jury, there is no shadow of a doubt. The admitting of atheists as jurymen and members of Parliament were the two main reforms effected by the Oaths Act. The Evidence Act, 1869, which admitted atheists as witnesses in a Court of law, did not apply to jurors, who before the Act of 1888 were, by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 8, allowed to substitute an affirmation for an oath only in cases where they could declare that the taking of an oath was by their religious belief unlawful—i.e. that they were possessed by an abundance of religious feeling—which is a very different thing from suffering from a complete want of it.

THE STAMP DUTIES BILL.

THE object of this bill is stated in the memorandum prefixed to it to be 'to consolidate the several enactments relating to the stamp duties payable upon instruments.' These enactments are at present contained in the Stamp Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97) and the multifarious amendments of particular parts of it by successive Acts. The Act of 1870, which was itself a consolidating measure of great general importance, is, with the exception of the comparatively insignificant 34 & 35 Vict. c. 4 (relating to foreign securities, stock, mortgages, and proxy papers), 37 & 38 Vict. c. 19 (relating to duty payable by Scotch advocates and Irish barristers), 37 & 38 Vict. c. 26 (relating to Canadian Stock), and 39 & 40 Vict. c. 6 (relating to sea policies), the only existing Act which deals with stamp duties alone. The numerous other statutory provisions as to stamps are contained in various Customs and Inland Revenue Acts, Inland Revenue Acts, and a certain 'Revenue, Friendly Societies, and National Debt Act,' 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 72). These Acts, of which one at least has been passed annually since 1870, sometimes do and sometimes do not contain amendments of stamp law. When they do, the stamp amendments are placed in a separate 'part' by themselves. But in order to be sure of the stamp law on any particular point, it is absolutely necessary to at least glance at every one of these annual Acts. Considering that a solicitor getting his client into a difficulty by not stamping a document or by stamping it insufficiently would, beyond doubt, be liable to an action for negligence, we have no hesitation in saying that the present bill will effect a most beneficial improvement in the law, and we have no doubt that it will receive the cordial support of all the law societies in the kingdom.

Let us now call attention to such points of detail as seem to require further consideration. First and foremost, we observe that the Act of 1870 is not to be entirely repealed. In the third column, headed 'Extent of repeal of the third schedule'—which schedule contains 'enactments repealed'—we read, in relation to the Act of 1870: 'Except section 25 so far as it relates to provision (3) and sections 27 and 28.' Turning to the enactments thus saved, we find that section 25, subsection 3, provides a penalty for practising 'any fraudulent act, contrivance, or device not specially provided for with intent to defraud Her Majesty of any duty,' that section 27 prescribes the mode of making declarations for the purpose of the Act, and that section 28 provides that any person who receives any sum of money on account of duty, and does not 'appropriate such money to the due payment of such duty,' is to be accountable for such duty, and made to pay the same by means of proceedings to be instituted in the long-since abolished 'Court of Exchequer.' The astute persons who preside at the Board of Inland Revenue must, we imagine, have had some reason for these peculiar savings. For ourselves we have failed to discover any. If, however, the exact language of the enactments saved is so sacred that the Board cannot find it in their hearts to repeal and re-enact it in phraseology adapted to the bill and to the merger of the Court of Exchequer in the High Court of Justice, we would suggest that the enactments should be tacked on to the bill by means of a fourth schedule. Precedents for such a course may be found in the schedule to the County Electors Act, 1888, and the second and third schedules to the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890.

The second paragraph of clause 2, which contains the substantive enactment taken from section 23 of the Act of 1870, that, 'except where express provision is made to the contrary, all stamp duties are to be denoted by impressed stamps only,' ought surely to form, as in the Act of 1870, a section by itself in point of form. In point of substance, we doubt whether the exceptions ought not to be increased. For instance, in clause 78, adhesive stamps are to be allowed as duties on leases of houses for a definite term not exceeding a year at a rent not exceeding the rate of 10*l.* a year. Why should not this exception be very widely extended, to include at any rate all tenancies from year to year?

Clause 14, which deals with the all-important subject of the terms on which instruments not duly stamped may be received in evidence, contains a curious piece of obscurity. By section 16 of the Act of 1870, as amended by section 44 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, for which this clause is proposed to be substituted, it is the duty of the officer whose duty it is to read any instrument produced in Court to call the attention of the judge 'to any omission or insufficiency of the stamp thereon,' and it is provided (this was the amendment effected by the Act of 1881) that in case of an arbitration it is the duty of the arbitrator to act as if he were the officer of a Court. Clause 14 merely provides that, on the production of an instrument in any Court or before any arbitrator or referee, the officer whose duty it is to read the instrument shall call the attention of the judge, arbitrator, or referee to any omission or insufficiency of the stamp, &c. These words appear at first sight to relieve arbitrators in many cases of a tiresome duty. They presuppose an officer in attendance upon him, and throw upon that officer the duty of looking to stamp questions. But, as a matter of fact, there is no such officer. Who, then, is to discharge the duty thrown upon an arbitrator by the Act of 1881? Is the arbitrator to be 'two gentlemen rolled into one, and as such to call his own attention to these questions? If this be intended, it ought to be more clearly expressed.

Another point deserving of attention is whether an instrument should still be required, as by subsection 4 of clause 14, re-enacting part of section 17 of the Act of 1870, to be stamped in accordance with the law in force at the time when it was first executed. This was not the law before the Act of 1870 (see Buckworth v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 834; Deakin v. Pennell, 2 Ex. 320). In order to comply with it, much tedious hunting through repealed Acts is necessary. We think it an unnecessarily harsh provision, and hope that it may be modified so as to bring the law more in accordance with convenience, though we confess ourselves unable to suggest an amendment which may absolutely secure the Revenue from loss.

In connection with clause 33, which defines 'promissory note,' we observe that the definition is different from that contained in section 83 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and would suggest that the latter definition should be incorporated in the bill and form an exhaustive definition for stamp purposes. Clause 44, which imposes a penalty on unqualified persons 'preparing any instrument relating to real and personal property, or any proceeding in law or equity,' contains, as might have been expected, the same exceptions as those contained in section 60 of the Act of 1870, from which it is taken. Thus, it is to be still provided, that the word 'instrument' shall not include a will, or 'an agreement under hand only.' To the first of these exceptions no objection could be taken. But what of 'an agreement under hand only?' This is a very wide exception, including, for instance, all agreements for sale and all agreements for leases. It is suggested that, in fairness to the qualified persons who have to pay for admissions and certificates, this exception ought to be considerably restricted. Clause 102, which deals with receipt stamps, and provides for stamping after execution within fourteen days only, 'with an impressed stamp,' might perhaps be altered so as to run more in favour of the public; to allow, for instance, an adhesive stamp after execution, or to extend the time within which the impressed stamp may be affixed.

Whether these or any other alterations are likely to be made in the bill we cannot say. In the case of a consolidating bill it is not usual for a Government introducing it to accept many amendments. The best course for those interested in the bill to pursue is to agree on a few proposals of real importance, and to combine in urging them upon the Government, but to leave minor points alone; otherwise there may be danger, looking to the period of the session we have now arrived at, of losing altogether a very valuable and useful measure.

FOREIGN MORTGAGE SYSTEMS.

WITHIN the last week there has been issued by the Foreign Office a series of reports from Her Majesty's representatives abroad on 'Institutions for making advances on real property,' which are of the highest interest for the lawyer as well as for the politician. Last August a circular was addressed by Lord Salisbury to the Queen's representatives at Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Buda Pesth, Rome, Brussels, Lisbon, and Berne, inclosing questions with regard to these institutions. The answers to these questions have now been published in a pamphlet of seventy-four pages, which are full of instructive matter. It does not appear why Spain was omitted, and as the local authorities in Portugal, and not the Government, are the depositaries of the information required, there has not been time enough to furnish a report. Thus no part of the Peninsula is covered by the present reports. We gave some account last year of the land banks of Italy, and the account then given, to some extent, went over the same ground as the present report, which, however, contains some interesting details of banks established for granting loans on land in the republic of Siena in the sixteenth century.

What strikes one at once in the reports is the great similarity of system existing between countries otherwise so different from each other as Hungary, France, Belgium, and Switzerland, and their great dissimilarity to anything in this country. The only analogy which can be found in these kingdoms to the operations described in these reports is in the system of land purchase in Ireland. But abroad the institutions established are exclusively devoted to mortgages and not to purchase, and the State does not directly intervene, though in some cases it provides a guarantee, and in all exercises supervision. It is also noticeable that the mortgage system in all the countries concerned is of quite recent origin, so that it indicates a widespread tendency, and is part of the movement in the direction of centralisation and co-operation against the formerly prevalent individualism, the effect of which has been felt in this country as well as abroad. Another effect everywhere discernible is a substantial reduction in the rate of interest charged for mortgage loans. It may be, therefore, that in our own country also a solution of the great land question may be sought in the establishment of land banks or credit corporations embodying the same principles and working on similar lines to those of our Continental neighbours.

In Hungary we are informed the whole landed system has been revolutionised, to suit altered circumstances, during the last thirty or forty years. To meet the new order of things the Hungarian 'Boden Credit Institut' was founded with a nominal capital of about 140,000*l.* It is not a joint-stock company, but a patriotic undertaking, to enable landed proprietors to obtain loans on safe and easy terms. The 'Institut' consisted originally of 219 members or 'founders,' and the lowest founders' subscription was 5,000 florins—417*l.* The directors get no fees, and the founders only receive 5 per cent., much less than the ordinary rate of interest used to be. Borrowers must give proof of title (supplied by the Land Register) and lists of existing charges, and, of course, there is a valuation. No loan is granted for more than half the value of the property, or of less amount than 1,000 florins, or nearly 84*l.* These bonds are amortised or extinguished in periods not exceeding forty-one years. The interest payable was in 1863—the date of foundation of the 'Institut'—5½ per cent., and the total annual payments 6¾ per cent., including a reserve of ·06 per cent. and administration expenses ·25 per cent. In 1886 the interest had sunk to 4 per cent., the administration expenses had disappeared altogether, and the total payment was only 5 per cent. In 1889 the total amount of loans was no less than 8,000,000*l.*, and the arrears were only 25,000*l.* The bonds, bearing 4 per cent., are of 100, 1,000 and 10,000 florins, repayable at par by drawings by lot, and must be withdrawn within forty years and six months of their issue. The 5½ per cent. bonds were issued in 1863 at 89; the 4 per cent. bonds are now very nearly at par. The Commercial Bank of Buda Pesth has also a special department for these loan operations, which are conducted on much the same principles. In 1889 it had nearly two millions sterling of bonds in circulation, and the outstanding arrears were only 3,848*l.* Other banks also carry on this business, and the total value of this kind of mortgage loans for the empire of Austria-Hungary was between nine and ten millions sterling.

In Belgium a somewhat similar system has prevailed since 1885, and is carried on by limited joint-stock companies which act in the common interest of borrowers and lenders. The interest, as in Austria-Hungary, is 4 per cent., and large capitals, amounting to two or three millions, are embarked by the banks, which make considerable profits. Here also the term for repayment is about forty years.

The information from France is not quite so full and detailed as that which is supplied with respect to Austria and Hungary. The system is there centralised, and, in fact, the Crédit Foncier of France since 1852 has been 'the sole national bank of real property.' Its capital was then sixty million francs, half paid up, and in 1888 was 170 millions. The great central institution does not appear to lend the money directly, but advances it to departments, communes, and agricultural associations, which become the immediate creditors of the mortgagor. The Crédit Foncier is actually administered under the supervision of the Minister of Finance. The total amount of mortgage and communal loans is about twelve millions sterling.

Sir Edward Malet, from Berlin, refers to a number of books for detailed information, but also gives particulars, from which it appears that there is no State guarantee in Germany, and that a like system of land banks and amortisation is established. The report from Italy gives very full particulars of the different banks established, the principles of working, and the degree of supervision exercised by the Government. As in Austria-Hungary, the amount advanced is limited to half the value of the property, and the period of repayment varies from ten to fifty years. In Switzerland a like method seems to have achieved great success, and the loans effected by the Mortgage Bank of the Canton of Berne amounts to no less than 3,391,208*l.* Similar institutions exist in the other cantons. It will be interesting to see whether joint-stock or co-operative enterprise will in this country undertake transactions of like character and proportionate magnitude.

ON SUING JOINT CONTRACTORS.

THE case of Hammond v. Schofield, recently decided by a Divisional Court, is the latest illustration of the effect of a judgment against one of two joint contractors in barring a subsequent action against the other. The old rule as to suing joint contractors, which was laid down in King v. Hoare, 14 Law J. Rep. Exch. 29; 13 M. & W. 494, may be thus stated: If two persons are jointly liable on a contract, and either is sued alone and pleads in abatement, both must be joined; and hence, a judgment recovered against one alone is, even without satisfaction, a merger of the original cause of action, and may be pleaded in bar to a subsequent action against the other. The first branch of this rule once appeared to have been destroyed by the abolition of pleas in abatement under the Judicature Acts. But the cases of Pilley v. Robinson, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 54; L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 155, and Byrne v. Brown, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 410; L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 657, show that in substance it still exists. The defendant who is sued alone is still entitled as of right to have his co-contractor joined as co-defendant; for, though the words of Order XVI., rule 11, seem to leave the matter to the discretion of the Court, it is settled that the Court must decide the defendant's application to join his co-contractor on the same principles on which judgment would formerly have been given on a similar plea in abatement. The second branch of the rule also remains in force, and was fully considered by the House of Lords in Kendall v. Hamilton, 48 Law J. Rep. C. P. 705; L. R. 4 App. Cas. 504. It was applied to a peculiar state of circumstances in Cambefort v. Chapman, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 639; L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 229, a decision which seems to be regarded with great doubt by Lord Justice Lindley (see 'Lindley on Partnership,' Addenda, p. lix.), who remarks that the rule in Kendall v. Hamilton, 'if not carefully limited in its application, will lead to unexpected and unjust results.' The decision of Mr. Justice Wills and Mr. Justice Williams in Hammond v. Schofield does not seem to be open to adverse criticism. The case laid down that where one joint contractor has been sued to judgment, the parties to the action cannot get the judgment set aside by consent so as to enable the plaintiff to take proceedings against the other. So long as the rule in Kendall v. Hamilton exists at all this point could hardly have been decided otherwise.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords the royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—

Registration of Writs (Scotland) Bill.
Electoral Disabilities Removal Bill.
Army Schools Bill.
London (City) Trial of Civil Causes Bill.

Bills read a third time and passed:—
Newfoundland Fisheries Bill.
Marriage Acts Amendment Bill.
Evidence Bill.
Statute Law Revision Bill.

Bills through Committee:—
Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Bill.
Herring Branding (Northumberland) Bill.
Law Agents (Scotland) Bill.
Trusts Amendment (Scotland) Bill.

Bill read a second time:—
Copyright Bill.

The House adjourned on the 12th inst. until the 26th inst.

In the House of Commons.

Third reading:—
Mail Ships Bill.
Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, Amendment Bill.
Reformatory and Industrial Schools Children Bill.
Brine Pumping (Compensation for Disturbance) Bill.

New bill:—
To Exempt the Funds of Trade Unions paying Provident Benefit to their Members from the Payment of Income-tax on their Investments.

Reviews.

MARSDEN'S COLLISIONS AT SEA.

A Treatise on the Law of Collisions at Sea. By REGINALD G. MARSDEN, assisted by the Hon. JOHN MANSFIELD, of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. Third Edition. London: Stevens & Sons. 1891.

THIS useful book has not grown much in size, the present edition adding only eighty-four to the 560 pages of its predecessor. The chief feature of the treatise has been a mass of information given in a handy form concerning the international regulations. There have been no substantial changes, however, since the date of the last edition (1885) in these regulations or the provisions relating thereto. The complications in the rules as to the lights of fishing vessels still exists, and in the case of several of the leading nations such vessels are still subject to article 10 of the old regulations of 1880, which has been somewhat needlessly omitted in the present volume. The regulations approved at the International Marine Conference held at Washington in 1889–1890, in substitution for those at present in force, have been inserted in the appendix. But they are of no legal importance whatever, and could well have been spared, as they are not likely to become law at present, or indeed, at any time, without considerable modification. The most important new matter is the consideration of the cases during the last five years; the notices of these are very numerous, and have been carefully compiled, and are in themselves sufficient to justify the appearance of this edition. Among other changes a new chapter (12) has been devoted to Practice, but it will not be found of much importance, as the account given is short, elementary, and contains little that is new. The following chapter, also new, is devoted to Costs, a subject which has been removed from its previous connection with Damages in an earlier chapter. The history of the rule of division of loss, which is a matter of rather antiquarian interest, has been taken from the text and relegated again, as in the first edition, to its proper place in a note. The index has been extended, and is satisfactory. Altogether the volume is to be commended as decidedly improved. The price of this edition is 25*s*.

ANSON ON CONTRACTS.

Principles of the English Law of Contract and of Agency in its Relation to Contract. By Sir WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart., D.C.L., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Sixth Edition. Oxford: Clarendon Press. 1891.

THE author of this work, in the preface to the present edition, contrasts the modes of treatment which have been adopted by two well-known text-writers. One regards contract as 'a subject of litigation from the point of view of the pleader's chambers.' He seems to ask, 'What are the kinds of contracts of which this may be one?' Then, 'What have I got to prove?' 'By what defences may I be met?' The other writer chiefly considers the nature of contracts and how the contract may be brought about. He, as it were, watches the parties coming to terms. He tells us how the contract may be made, and by what plans its structure may be invalidated. The latter work, in fact, treats almost exclusively of the formation of the contract. The former regards the subject from the standpoint of the litigant. The present treatise differs from both the works we have alluded to, and seems to some extent to combine the advantages of both these modes of treatment. The author considers the contract from its beginning to its end, 'how it is made, what is needed to make it binding, whom it may affect, how it is interpreted, and how it may be discharged.' He himself tells us that he has referred to but few authorities, and this materially diminishes the value of the work as a practical treatise. As a general view of the law the work has a high and deserved reputation. The present edition is certainly defective in not being brought down to date on several material points. Thus under the heading, Non-disclosure of Material Fact, we find some observations on the point that suretyship is not uberrimæ fidei. Here a reference to Davies v. The London and Provincial Marine Insurance Company, 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 511; L. R. 8 Chanc. Div. 469, would have been very useful. On p. 104, the case of Kennedy v. Broun is cited as an authority that a barrister cannot sue for his fees, but no mention is made of the subsequent cases in which this much-discussed portion of the law has been considered and elaborated. Under the head of Stoppage in transitu (incorrectly indexed by the way) we looked in vain for a reference to the Factors Act of 1889. At p. 324 the effect of a discharge in bankruptcy is considered, but no allusion whatever is made to the important change in the law which was introduced by the Bankruptcy Act, 1890.

STRAITS SETTLEMENTS REPORTS.

Kyshe's Reports of Cases Heard and Determined in the Straits Settlements Supreme Court, 1808 to 1890. Volume IV., 1885–90. By JAMES WILLIAM NORTON KYSHE, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, Acting Registrar of the said Court, and Commissioner of the Court of Requests at Malacca.

THE colony of the Straits Settlements, which has developed so remarkably during the last twenty years, now possesses a legal literature of its own. It has had a monthly law journal for about two years, and Mr. Kyshe has published a set of reports containing all the cases of importance from the foundation of the settlement until the present time. These Reports are in their arrangement modelled on the system of our 'Law Reports,' and the last volume brings the decisions down to date. These Reports, apart from their use to practitioners in the colony, are interesting in a jurisprudential point of view as showing the history of the law of the colony and the nature of its legal system. Mr. H. A. D. Phillips, in his 'Comparative Criminal Jurisprudence,' alludes on several occasions to the cases in these Reports. The criminal law of the Straits is the English common law supplemented by the Indian Penal Code, which is stricter than the common law. As for the rest of the system, the civil law embraces the English common law and equity, also English statutes till 1826, when the colony became a dependency of India; then Indian Acts till 1867, at which period it became a Crown colony; and from 1867 down to date it has its own ordinances, which are to a certain extent modelled upon the home statutory charges. For instance, there is a Bankruptcy Ordinance, a Bills of Sale Ordinance, a Conveyancing Ordinance, and Company's Ordinance. The Supreme Court sits at Singapore, the capital, and also at Penang. There are four judges, two for each settlement. The amount of business at each is nearly equal. The judges have jurisdiction in all the branches of English law, except that they cannot grant a decree for dissolution of marriage, the former ecclesiastical law prevailing in the colony. Hitherto in the Straits, and no doubt in other colonies, there has been no available record of the judges' decisions. Sometimes there would be a short report in the daily papers, but looking through the back files for them is a Titanic task, and, as often as not, unrewarded, for there are no regular reporters for the law Courts, and the chance of any case being taken down depends upon a reporter happening to be there, and if there is, as he is not a lawyer, the accuracy of what he takes down may be questioned. Hence it frequently occurs that the local lawyers know there has been a precedent on some particular head, but they cannot lay their fingers upon it; and as the principle prevailing in the English Courts—namely, that decisions of one judge are binding upon his successors, applies in the colony, which follows the law of the mother country, this has been a great inconvenience, particularly in questions affecting matters peculiar to the colony, where no English precedent can be found; for instance, recently one of the judges here, Mr. Pelleceau, stated that some time ago, after consultation with the then Chief Justice, Sir Theodore Ford, he gave a decision that, as regards property, a Chinese woman stood on an entirely separate footing to her husband—introducing, in fact, the benefit of the Married Women's Property Acts (which do not apply here) as far as Chinese women are concerned. Now this decision was probably not reported in any newspaper at the time, and there is no record of it. As Mr. Kyshe means to continue his Reports there will be no fear of a repetition of this. At the beginning of the first volume of the work there is an interesting historical sketch of the judicial institutions of the colony from the time when Prince of Wales's Island (Penang) was taken over by Captain Light in 1786. The decisions themselves commence later, beginning with one given by the first recorder of the colony, Sir Edward Stanley, in 1808, and continuing in regular order to date. The last volume contains as many as 400 decisions.

A HANDY BOOK ON COMPANY LAW.

A Handy Book on the Formation, Management, and Winding-up of Joint-stock Companies. By WILLIAM JORDAN, Registration and Parliamentary Agent, and F. GORE-BROWNE, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Fourteenth Edition. London: Jordan & Sons. 1891.

THE principle of limited liability, under which any number of persons—not less than seven—may associate themselves together for the purpose of carrying on any trade or business, whether as a gigantic banking, insurance, or mercantile institution with operations reaching to the farthest extremities of the globe, or as the modest village coffee tavern or social club, to borrow the language employed in this book, in its connection with the law of joint-stock companies and matters thereto appertaining, is assuredly not suffering from lack of notice in the legal press at the present time. The cry as to text-books is, 'Still they come.' A considerable class of readers will, we think, find the present work useful and sufficient. It does not, the present editor tells us, pretend to take the place of the large text-books upon company law, but to be a reliable guide to shareholders, directors, secretaries, officers, and creditors of companies as to their rights and duties in the matters which ordinarily come before them and the methods of enforcing those rights and performing those duties. It is also designed to be useful to lawyers by its references to authorities. In both respects the work is worthy of commendation.

PITT-LEWIS ON WINDING-UP.

A Manual of the Practice as to Winding-up in the High Court and in the County Court; being the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and the Winding-up of Companies and Associations (Part of the Companies Act, 1862) as now Amended. With Notes and the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, forming a Supplement to 'A Complete Practice of the County Courts.' By G. PITT-LEWIS, Q.C., M.P. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THIS book is intended to serve as a supplement to Mr. Pitt-Lewis's well-known and standard work, 'The Complete Practice of the County Courts.' The author was, he tells us, encouraged to undertake the task by the recollection that the practice in the High Court and the County Courts is (except where a distinction is pointed out) now the same. A further inducement to the work was found in the fact that the chapter on 'Winding-up' in the 'Complete Practice of the County Courts' is now rendered practically obsolete. The present work is also intended to be 'complete in itself and to serve as a manual of the practice in winding-up cases.' It may be useful to some extent in this latter respect, but the practitioner will often, in our opinion, find it necessary to have recourse to the other treatises in which the subject is treated more in detail. The work, however, is useful and accurate so far as it goes.

HARRISON ON PROBATE AND DIVORCE.

An Epitome of the Laws of Probate and Divorce. By J. CARTER HARRISON, Solicitor. Fourth Edition. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THE aim of this book is to present as concisely as possible a general view of the laws of probate and divorce, and the author expressly tells us that no attempt is made 'to enter upon unusual or outside points.' The first part of the book deals with the law of probate. As a general view of the subject the work will be found in the main accurate and trustworthy. The value of the book, however, would have been much enhanced by a reference to more recent authorities. In the page on costs we were surprised to find in a book appearing in April, 1891, a reference to 'Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875, Order LV. This order is now superseded by the rules of 1883 and the Judicature Act of 1890, and a reference to the old order is certainly a somewhat serious blunder. The second part of the book is devoted to the law of divorce and matrimonial causes. Here, again, the student will find valuable assistance; but here, again, recent cases might have been advantageously added. All we are told about costs is summed up in a single short sentence, telling us that they are to be on the lower scale unless they are allowed on the higher scale on special grounds. There is no allusion to the rules of 1883, nor to the Judicature Act, 1890, nor to the peculiar practice as to costs in divorce matters. These points ought to have been amended in this edition.

SALAMAN ON TRADE-MARKS.

Trade-marks; their Registration and Protection in the United Kingdom and Abroad; also the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. By JOSEPH SEYMOUR SALAMAN, Solicitor of the Supreme Court and Patent Agent. London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. (Lim.). 1891.

THE aim of the author of this pleasantly written manual has been not to write a law book for lawyers, but to make a very difficult subject, and one which grows in importance every year, interesting to the commercial community. He also aims at helping his readers to obtain valid and proper registration of their trade-marks, and to understand the principles upon which the Courts will give them effective protection. Mr. Salaman has, we think, certainly succeeded well in his object, as his work is at once readable and accurate. The lawyers, too, may occasionally get help from his pages, and we think he might have looked to them a little more, and added, for their benefit, references to the authorities that he cites. Most of them, however, are very well known, so that the legal reader who may take up the book will have no difficulty in supplying this deficiency, if such it be, for himself. At p. 62 we find some well-founded observations on the subject of costs, and the author points out that very considerable injustice and injury appears to have been done by the omission of provisions on this subject in the Act or the rules to the party who has been put to expense by an invalid opposition or an improper application. The question, 'What is a trade-mark?' is discussed in Chapter I. in an interesting style, and it will be quite refreshing to the eyes of a classical scholar to see the allusion to the dolphin wound round the anchor—the symbol by which the early editions of the Aldine Classics are distinguished.

THE LAW OF AUCTIONEERS.

Auctioneers, their Duties and Liabilities. A Manual of Instruction and Counsel for the Young Auctioneer. By ROBERT SQUIBBS, Auctioneer. Second Edition. Revised and partly rewritten. London: Crosby Lockwood & Son. 1891.

THIS work may be recommended as giving a great deal of information on the law relating to auctioneers in a very readable form. In the introductory chapters we have a sketch of the history of the subject. The testimony of Herodotus is quoted as to the custom of the Babylonians with regard to their wife auctions, which is pronounced by the historian to be the wisest he ever heard of. The price gained by the auction of the beautiful was made a fund to supply portions for the plain maidens, 'the damsel who was equidistant between beauty and plainness being given away gratis.' 'By transferring to the scale of the ill-favoured the prices paid for the fair, beauty was made to endow ugliness, and the rich man's taste was the poor man's gain.' The author alludes to the agreement between Abraham and Ephron for the purchase of the cave of Machpelah, and ingeniously submits that here we may assume that something like the business of auctioneering had an existence. We must admit, however, that the transaction in question appears to us to be as unlike as possible to anything where such an intermediary as the auctioneer of modern days intervenes. Chapter II. is devoted to 'Licenses and Excise Duties,' and Chapter III. to 'The Auctioneer and the Law.' The book concludes with 'The Ethics of Auctioneering' and an appendix of statutes, &c. The work bears marks of ability and knowledge of the subject throughout. Having said this much in its praise, we must point out that on a good many points this book cannot be regarded as a trustworthy exposition of the law. On p. 189 we are told that a life policy is an instrument by which a contract of indemnity is effected between the insurer and insured. This definition, which, by the way, is wholly unnecessary for any practical purpose, is completely opposed to the great case of Dalby v. India-London Life Assurance Company, decided in 1854, which has been recognised as an authority and followed ever since. On the next page but one the provisions of section 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, as to assignment of choses in action is cited, with the addition, 'and see subsequent Judicature Acts.' What the meaning of the allusion is we fail to perceive. Numerous points of law which ought to have been mentioned are conspicuous by their absence.

Correspondence.

COURT ROLLS.

Sir,—Kindly allow me to express my thanks to your correspondents 'A. K. C.,' 'F. F.,' and Mr. Dove, who have obligingly answered my query inserted in your issue of April 25 last. I have already adopted some of the suggestions, and I can see they will benefit me materially.

T. K.

May 13.

TITHE ACT, 1891.

Sir,—Referring to your remarks at p. 248 and to the Rules under the Act now issued, may I ask you kindly to say whether you think that it will be sufficient if the landowner gives to the tithe-owner the notice of occupier's liability (a) in case of payment by landowner without order, before such payment; (b) in case of an order for recovery obtained by the tithe-owner, before such order is made.

R. E.

May 11.

[For answer, see 'Obiter Dicta.'—Ed.]

THE SEPARATION OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Sir,—It was declared by the Court of Appeal (Cotton, L.J., Bowen, L.J., and Fry, L.J.) in In re Moore, Trafford v. Mackonochie (1888), 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 936, that a gift promoting the separation of husband and wife was against the policy of the law of England, and was therefore bad. The same Court, constituted of the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and Fry, L.J., declared in Jackson's Case that a married woman was entitled to unrestricted liberty in choosing whether she would live separate from her husband. In the former case one reads of the Court having stated that the law of England does not allow provisions made in contemplation of a future separation between husband and wife; while in the latter case it was the unanimous opinion of the Court that the wife must be set at liberty with the avowed intention of separating herself from her husband against his wish, thus, of course, facilitating the completion of her intention.

Such a separation is said to be contrà bonos mores in the first case, though not so in the second case. But the separation in both cases cannot, it is submitted, be differentiated.

If, without unduly canvassing the celebrated judgment, the Court of Appeal in Jackson's Case can be properly said to have virtually effected the separation of husband and wife, on what principle, it may be inquired, can these two decisions be reconciled? In each the intention to separate was a prominent feature and the crux of the decision; the intent and object of the gift in the one case were held to be with a view to promote the separation, in the other the wife's declared intention to the judges was not to live with her husband. But in the first case the gift was held invalid, while the Court in the second case assisted the wife's intention to divorce herself.

To examine and consider the appellate decisions referred to side by side is perplexing, and the judgments are contradictory apparently. Perhaps it may be correct to say that the respective judgments are of authority only with regard to the particular facts of each case. Be it so; but most important principles were discussed by the judges in each case, and consequently the judgments remain of more than ephemeral value and interest.

However that may be, the two judgments show clearly that the Court of Appeal, on the consideration of In re Moore, from the Chancery Division, decided against the validity of a gift promoting the separation of husband and wife, because such an object is contrà bonos mores; and the Court of Appeal, sitting subsequently on In re Jackson, from the Queen's Bench Division, practically effected that prohibited object. Is it, therefore, to be taken that the separation of husband and wife by mere act of one of the spouses is not against public policy? To ponder the decisions referred to on the common ground of the legality or illegality of such separation—and that point is involved in both cases—a conflict results. If this is a correct conclusion, then the question remains to be considered whether the legality of a gift to a wife to take effect on her separation from her husband is now open to argument, the decision in In re Moore notwithstanding, involving a point of conveyancing law of some interest, if it is not covered by the authorities referred to in the first-mentioned case.

George E. Solomon.

May 11.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

TRADE CUSTOM—WARRANTY—EGG TRADE.

AT the Birmingham County Court, on Tuesday, April 21, the case of Pool v. Benning & Co. was heard before His Honour Judge Chalmers. This case raised two points of great importance to the large class of merchants who are concerned with the egg industry of the country. The first point was whether there was a universal custom or usage in the egg trade providing that all claims in respect of bad or injured eggs should be made within three days of delivery of the consignment to the purchaser. The second point was whether there was or was not a warranty in the egg trade. The action was brought by the plaintiffs to recover 19*l.* 18*s.*, being the balance of the price of a consignment of 'pickled eggs' imported from Hamburg and placed to the defendants' order at Grimsby on the day of arrival at that port. The plaintiffs were large importers of eggs, dealing with collectors on the Continent. Before the consignments reached England the plaintiffs usually succeeded in disposing of the eggs to purchasers in this country. In the autumn of last year the plaintiffs agreed to purchase from collectors a thousand cases of eggs, each case containing 1,440 eggs, to be delivered as required. On January 26 of the present year the plaintiffs were expecting a consignment to be delivered at Grimsby from Hamburg, and on the same day they wrote to that effect to the defendants, who were egg merchants and importers carrying on business at West Hartlepool. The eggs were described as 'H. P. pickled eggs, about 14lb. average, very fine quality, good colour, well got up; should not make less than 6*s.* 6*d.* in port.' On the 27th the defendants telegraphed a reply offering to take forty-four cases of eggs at 6*s.* 5*d.* in port, subject to good quality. The eggs arrived at Grimsby on the 27th, and they were delivered to the defendants' agents to their order on the same day, and invoiced at the sum of 169*l.* 8*s.* The invoice was forwarded to West Hartlepool on the 27th, and it bore the words clearly printed on it, 'No claim entertained unless made within three days,' which one of the plaintiffs explained as meaning that, as between two egg merchants in this country, the claim must be made within three days of delivery to the purchaser, and, as between the importers and collectors on the Continent, within three days of delivery at the port of arrival. The plaintiffs had no complaint about the eggs until Feb. 12, when they received a letter from the defendants saying that the eggs were badly frosted, and that they should have to make a claim. The plaintiffs replied on the following day saying that the notice of claim was too late, as they had already settled with the shippers. After a lengthy correspondence the defendants paid the account less the sum of 19*l.* 18*s.* A large number of gentlemen concerned in the egg trade were called on behalf of the plaintiffs, and they all deposed that it was a universal custom in the egg trade, both wholesale and retail, that no claims should be entertained in respect of bad or injured eggs, unless they were made within three days of delivery to the purchaser. The defendant and two of his agents and a gentleman in the wholesale confectionery business denied that there was any such custom, and said that the only limit of time within which such claims had to be made was a reasonable limit varying, according to circumstances, from seven to fourteen days after delivery.—Parfitt (instructed by Beal & Co., Birmingham) contended that there was no such thing as a warranty in the egg trade, and that the letter of the plaintiffs, dated January 26, did not in law amount to such. It was a mere expression of opinion by the plaintiffs, based upon their experience of 700 cases, part of the order given in the autumn of last year, which had arrived previous to that date, or at most an inducement. It was equally within the knowledge of the plaintiffs and defendants that there was no opportunity of inspecting such eggs as and when they were collected abroad, and it was common ground that it was a prevailing practice for importers to sell the eggs to merchants and retailers before their arrival in this country. It was, therefore, clear that the plaintiffs never intended the statements in the letter to amount to a warranty, and it would be unreasonable on the part of the defendants, in the light of the knowledge which they possessed, to accept such statements as a warranty.—Atkins (Snow & Atkins, Birmingham) contrà. —His Honour held that the custom as to the three days' limit was clearly established, and that his finding upon this point rendered it unnecessary for him to decide whether the letter of January 26 amounted to a warranty, although he was strongly of opinion that it was. He gave judgment for the plaintiffs for 19*l.* 18*s.*, with costs.

COMMISSIONERS FOR OATHS ACT (1889) AMENDMENT BILL.

THE following is the text of the above-named bill:—

Whereas doubts have been entertained whether the powers to administer oaths and take affidavits conferred on a commissioner for oaths by the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, extend to oaths and affidavits required by special provisions to be made before a justice of the peace, or any particular person or officer, and it is expedient to remove such doubts:

Be it, therefore, enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Where, by, or under the Merchant Shipping Acts, 1854 to 1889, or the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876, or the Patents, Designs, and Trade-marks Acts, 1883 to 1888, or the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, or Acts amending the same respectively, any oath or affidavit is required to be taken or made before any particular person or officer, whether having special authority or otherwise, and whether at any particular place, or within any specified limits or otherwise, such oath or affidavit may be taken or made before a commissioner for oaths, at any place, and shall be as effectual to all intents and purposes as if taken or made before such person or officer, and at any particular place or within specified limits.

2. In section 6 of the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, after the words 'consular agent' shall be inserted the words 'and acting consular agent.'

3. This Act shall be read with the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, and may be cited as the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1891, and the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889, and this Act may be cited together as the Commissioners for Oaths Acts, 1889 and 1891.

WHITSUN VACATION NOTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

There will be no sitting in Court during the Whitsun Vacation.

DURING the Whitsun vacation all applications which may require to be immediately or promptly heard are to be made to the Honourable Mr. Justice Lawrance.

Mr. Justice Lawrance will act as vacation judge from Saturday, May 16, to Monday, May 25, both days inclusive. His lordship will sit in Queen's Bench Judges' Chambers on Wednesday, May 20, and Friday, May 22. On other days, within the above period, applications in urgent Chancery matters may be made to his lordship at 7 Onslow Square, South Kensington.

In any case of great urgency the brief of counsel may be sent to the judge by book-post, or parcel prepaid, accompanied by office copies of the affidavits in support of the application, and also by a minute, on a separate sheet of paper, signed by counsel, of the order he may consider the applicant entitled to, and an envelope capable of receiving the papers, and addressed as follows: 'Chancery Official Letter: To the Registrar in Vacation, Chancery Registrars' Chambers, Royal Courts of Justice, London, W.C.'

On applications for injunctions, in addition to the above, a copy of the writ, and a certificate of writ issued, must also be sent.

The papers sent to the judge will be returned to the registrar.

Chancery Registrars' Chambers,
Royal Courts of Justice: May 6, 1891.

LIVERPOOL BOARD OF LEGAL STUDIES.

THE annual meeting of the above board was held on Wednesday, the 13th inst., at the Law Library, when the following annual report was submitted:—

The board have much pleasure in submitting the report of their proceedings during the past year.

Following the practice adopted by the board in previous years, a course of lectures has been provided on a branch of each of the three main divisions of law: (a) Conveyancing (the law of personal property); (b) Equity (relating to mortgages and other securities, fraud, mistake, and performance); and (c) Common law (the law of contract).

The conveyancing formed the first course, common law the second course, and equity the third course.

The lecturers were the same as in the previous session—viz.:—

First Course.—W. A. Copinger, Esq. (barrister-at-law), reader in the law of real property and conveyancing to the Owens College, Manchester, author of 'The Law of Copyright in Works of Literature and Art,' 'Index to Precedents in Conveyancing,' 'Custody and Production of Title Deeds,' and 'The Law of Rents.'

Second Course.—A. T. Carter, Esq., M.A., B.C.L. (barrister-at-law), late scholar Queen's College, Oxford, Vinerian law Scholar and Eldon scholar, Oxford, one of the authors of the 'Factors Act, 1889.'

Third Course.—J. S. Seaton, Esq., M.A., B.C.L. (barrister-at-law), Vinerian law scholar, 1886, studentship and three scholarships Inns of Court, 1885 and 1886, law lecturer at the Owens College, Manchester.

The three courses were, as before, delivered consecutively, extending from the last week in September to the last week in April. Each course consisted of ten lectures supplemented by classes.

Papers of questions bearing upon the lectures were set by the lecturers as on former occasions, and the answers to these questions were corrected and handed back to the students, and were afterwards either gone through in class or discussed individually with the students.

At the conclusion of each course an examination was held and two prizes of 3*l.* 3*s.* and 2*l.* 2*s.* respectively were offered for competition amongst articled clerks and bar students at each examination.

Sir Henry Fox-Bristowe, Q.C., Vice-Chancellor of Lancaster, again very kindly provided the prizes offered at the examination held at the conclusion of the course on 'Equity.'

It is to be regretted, however, that the requisite number of nine candidates did not present themselves at the examination on any of the three courses, and consequently, according to the usual practice of the board, only one prize of 3*l.* 3*s.* could be awarded. Having regard, however, to the examiner's report, the board have determined to present to Mr. Glasgow, who was second in the common law course, a special prize of 2*l.* 2*s.* for the excellent work done by him.

The fees charged for the lectures have been the same as in previous years—viz.: 7*s.* 6*d.* a course, or 1*l.* for the three courses, to students who were members of the Liverpool Law Students' Association, and a fee of 10*s.* 6*d.* a course, or 1*l.* 10*s.* for the three courses, to others not members of that body.

The amount received from this source has been 31*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, as compared with 42*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* last year.

The following is a table of the attendance at each course:—

—	No. of Students Entered	Average attendance		Number Present at Examination
		Lectures	Classes
First Course . .	21	17	13	7
Second Course .	27	19	13	8
Third Course. .	32	20	18	6

The board feel that these figures are not as satisfactory as they should be, and that the attendance should be largely increased. They desire again to appeal to solicitors to see that their articled clerks take due advantage of the lectures provided for them.

Prizes have been awarded as follows: First course, G. M. Magee, first prize; second course, G. M. Magee, first prize; third course, J. W. Badger, first prize; special prize, W. Glasgow.

Following the course adopted in previous years, it has been arranged that the prizes shall be presented to the successful students at the annual meeting of the board.

Each of the lecturers has submitted a report to the board in regard to the lectures and classes, copies of which reports will be found in the appendix.

Following the course also adopted last session, the board made arrangements for two courses of evening lectures. The first course was delivered before Christmas and the second after Christmas.

The courses were as follows:—

Subject.	Lecturer.
1. Company law . . .	P. O. Lawrence, Esq. (Barrister-at-law.)
2. Charterparties and bills of lading . . .	W. J. Stewart, Esq. (Barrister-at-law.)

Each course consisted of six lectures (instead of five as in previous years), and were delivered weekly at the University College, the fee charged for each course being 5*s.*

The lectures were intended to meet the requirements of mercantile clerks and non-professional students, as well as of students proposing to enter the legal profession.

The attendance at these lectures was as follows:—

—	Attendance at First Lecture (free)	Number of Students entered	Average attendance, excluding First Lecture
First Course . . . ('Company law')	37	22	19
Second Course . . . ('Bills of lading and charterparties')	26	21	19

The financial condition of the board continues satisfactory, there being a credit balance of 87*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.*, of which 6*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* belongs to the prize fund. A copy of the balance-sheet is annexed.

The board wish to express their thanks to the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, the University College, Liverpool, and the Liverpool Law Students' Association for the grants made by those bodies to the funds of the board, and also to those members of the profession who have so generously augmented the funds by subscriptions and donations.

The thanks of the board are due to the Liverpool Incorporated Law Society, and to the University College, for permitting them to have the free use of their rooms.

In conclusion, the board venture to hope that the manner in which they have discharged their duties during the past year may meet with approval, and invite the cordial co-operation of all members of the profession in their efforts to further advance legal education in Liverpool.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

CORPORATIONS AND THE STATUTES OF LIMITATION.

AT the recent Manchester Assizes a claim against the corporation of the town for damages excited some notice. The plaintiff, it appeared, sought the damages for the loss of the services of his wife owing to her having been injured through the alleged negligence of the corporation. It was stated that endeavours had been made to arrange an amicable settlement, and a sum was offered for that purpose, but refused by plaintiff. These negotiations were without prejudice to either side, and but for them proceedings would have been instituted earlier. For the defence, it was submitted that the action had not been brought within three months, as required by the Highways Act, and there had not been twenty-one days' notice of the action. The judge thereupon remarked that this was a very shabby defence for a wealthy city like Manchester, and decided both points in favour of plaintiff, but ultimately terms were agreed to between the parties. When this case was reported in the local dailies a ratepayer and citizen took umbrage at the aspersion apparently cast upon the municipal body by the judge. He contended that the corporation were empowered and entitled by statute to put in a technical defence, and there was no meanness in a wealthy corporation doing what a wealthy private litigant might do with impunity. Surely a corporation, whether wealthy or not, being in the position of a trustee, ought rather to be more careful than a private individual. At all events, it is often laid down by the judges that persons holding the office of trustee must exercise all the care they possibly can in the interests of their trust. These contentions educed a reply from another person, who pointed out that the municipal champion seemed to have forgotten that the world generally considers a plea of the Statute of Limitations, though lawful against an honest debt, as a shabby, if not a dishonest, plea. The corporation sought to obtain the same effect by pleading the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 50, s. 109, and the officials of the corporation further aggravated their position by inducing the plaintiff to stay proceedings, in the hope of a peaceful settlement, until three months, the statutory period, had expired, and then it was sought to escape liability by taking advantage of this time.

THE PLEA OF INSANITY AND HEREON AS TO 'PETIT MAL.'

One of the most frequent pleas urged in favour of prisoners being tried for murder or manslaughter is that of insanity. The varieties of insanity are numerous, and one was disclosed at the assizes lately which, perhaps, has not been much noticed outside medical circles—that is, the complaint of petit mal. This, it appears, is really a short attack of epileptic insanity, and a person might have only one or two attacks in his lifetime, and no traces of this might be left on his system; further, a person might be having his dinner and suffer under such an attack without being aware of it. As to the effect of this complaint of petit mal as regards criminal actions, a man might in a moment of seizure do anything without knowing what he was doing, and it was quite possible for him to seize another person by the throat and cut it without being aware of what he was doing. It was impossible in one medical examination to say whether a man suffered from petit mal. These views were expressed during the trial of a man for the murder of his sweetheart, to which reference was made in these Notes of April 18. The counsel for the defence further referred to the malady. The medical evidence with regard to petit mal was that a man could attack those who were nearest to him, those he loved best—in fact, that the attack might be made under any kind of excitement—and the person committing it might know nothing of what he had done. He put it to them that the prisoner suffered from this complaint, and that being so, what greater excitement could be given to a young man than a refusal on the part of her he loved? In fact, in his letter to his father and mother, he said: 'I should not have been where I now am if it had not been for my nasty temper,' and, further, when the girl said, 'Save me,' he answered, 'I will save you. Keep still where you are while I fetch help.' The explanation of the reason why he told a lie as to an assault on them was also reasonable. He wrote: 'I knew if I told the truth they would not let me look at her, and I wanted to see her face again.' All this was fully indicative of the condition of mind similar to that under which a patient would be who suffered from petit mal. One of the medical men had said that if this disease showed itself it would most likely become apparent when the patient reached the age of puberty, and that was exactly the time at which the hereditary taints of insanity showed itself in the prisoner. The learned judge, in his summing up, pointed out that a certain care was needed not to weaken the criminal law by acquitting persons of criminal acts merely because they were of weak mind. If that were done half the criminal population in the country would be committing crime with a probability of going unpunished. It was not sufficient to prove a man to be of weak mind. Of course, with regard to a man like the prisoner, in whom there was no doubt of the hereditary taint, the consideration of the Crown, if necessary, would be properly exercised. The usual death sentence was passed. This case is one which those who are interested in medical jurisprudence might well make a note of.

WOMEN AND BOYS IN CRIMINAL COURTS.

'When doctors disagree, who shall decide?' That is a well-known conundrum, and remains yet to be answered. At the Liverpool Assizes the learned judges respectively in the Crown Court and Nisi Prius Court appeared to have acted in contradistinction to each other with regard to the admission of women and boys into the Courts when cases of criminal assault are being tried. In a case in the Nisi Prius Court Mr. Justice Wright intimated that women should not be kept out of the Court; they have a right to attend trials in these cases as well as in others (a man was being tried for assaulting two young girls). Grown-up women were not to be excluded; it is necessary that they should hear these cases. Boys, however, it is assumed, would be excluded; there is no necessity to corrupt their morals by letting them listen to criminal trials of this kind. The judge threatened to make a representation in another quarter if his orders were disregarded. On the other hand, Mr. Justice Grantham, in the Crown Court, where a number of cases of assaults on females were down for trial, announced that no women or boys were to be allowed to enter the Court that day, and if any were present they were to leave at once. So far as regards boys and girls, this order seems reasonable enough, but in the case of women more liberal views ought to prevail. In this decade of the nineteenth century women are pervading every profession, and the science of medicine has no more secrets hid from them than from men. It would be as well if unanimity of opinion were shown by the judges on this point, for it is hardly dignified for members of the judicial bench to act in opposition to each other.

OFFICERS AS COMPANY DIRECTORS.

The Secretary of State for War was recently asked what rules, if any, existed regulating the rights of officers on the active list to act as directors of public companies, and whether he was aware that the name of the commandant of the School of Musketry at Hythe was being advertised as already a director of a mining and exploring company, and in that capacity vendor of a silver mine to a second company, the board of which he further proposed to join as a director after allotment. The Secretary of State replied that there was no regulation which prevented an officer upon full pay from becoming a director in a public company provided that it in no way interfered with his being able to devote all the time necessary for the efficient discharge of his duties. Nothing was known at the War Office as to the connection of the commandant at Hythe with any mining or exploring company. In connection with company affairs, it is often a matter of wonder that legislation has not made it a sine quâ non with directors of companies that they should have a thorough and competent knowledge of the business they are supposed to direct. When a private partnership is formed, the partners are, as a rule, thoroughly cognisant of all the ins and outs of their business, but in the case of companies, the knowledge of some directors of the company's business is, to say the least, very scanty. There is, it is true, often a managing director, but that cannot be considered as amply sufficient, for in such a case he will be too prone to lead the other directors as he likes, and they must, to a certain extent, accept his statements which, if he is not fair and square, may not always be exactly satisfactory from a shareholder's point of view. Every company practitioner knows that, according to the present law, the regulations generally require that a director shall hold a certain number of shares in the company as a qualification for office, the object being to protect the interests of the shareholders by requiring that those who are entrusted with the management of the concern shall have a personal stake in it. Of course, the larger the stake the more careful are the directors likely to be of the company's interests. 'Nevertheless,' says Mr. Palmer in his 'Shareholders and Directors' Legal Companion,' 'it is but rarely that the holding of a large number of shares is required as a qualification.' Such a provision in most cases inconveniently limits the number of eligible candidates, for a man most competent to fill the post may not be in a position to invest more than a small sum.

AN ACCOUNTANT ON RECENT LEGISLATION.

Under the title 'Official Duties of an Accountant,' a lecture recently delivered in Manchester by Mr. F. Pixley, F.C.A., contains some remarks of as equal interest to the law as to accountants. The report of the lecture in the local papers, so far as regards the official duties of an accountant, is disappointing, as the lecturer's views upon recent legislation are given the greater prominence. However, a full report may appear in the accountants' weekly organ, which will give fuller particulars. With reference to an appointment as receiver and manager, it was stated that this appointment is as a rule only necessary when a concern is hard pressed for means, and the receiver and manager must be careful only to incur liabilities in respect of absolute necessities. He must also be very careful not to be made personally liable, and in all cases to sign any orders with his official position clearly marked after his signature. It was the assisting of debtors in the preparation of their statements of affairs, under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, that brought professional accountants into prominence before the commercial world, and some of the most eminent members of the profession, both past and present, built up their reputation solely in connection with the statements they prepared under this Act. In those days the passing of the bankrupt's examination was contingent upon a favourable report being made by the official assignee as to the accuracy of the final accounts; and a bankrupt was liable to be opposed by any individual creditor on the ground that the accounts were incorrect or insufficient, and if the fact was established the bankrupt was not allowed to pass his examination. The Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is, to a certain extent, a return to the practice prevailing under the Act of 1849. The lecturer considered the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was a direct attack upon his profession, and many thought the same of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, for they contended there was no necessity whatever for the creation of the Administrative Department of the Board of Trade under that Act. The lecturer wound up with an expression of regret that accountants had lost a large amount of business, especially in bankruptcy matters, but congratulated the profession on the prospect of getting back some of it in connection with the liquidation of companies. It would be a great deal more satisfactory in connection with these companies, however, if accountants would make it more worth their business to see that all new companies were soundly established, and straightforward certificates given to show that they are bonâ fide and reliable concerns.

SOME RECENT DECISIONS IN VERSE.

Our contemporary, the Law Students' Journal, seems to have added the attractive feature of a poet's corner to its columns. Not long since there appeared the following lines under the initials 'L. E. L.':—

Bankruptcy Act, 1890.

If the sheriff should levy, and stay
In your house till the twenty-first day,
  You've done, 'tis a fact
  A bankruptcy act,
So I strongly advise you to pay.

Re The Clitheroe Abduction Case.

If you are a married man now,
And your wife says, 'I won't live with you!'
  You get an order of course,
  But you must not use force,
So, what the deuce are you to do?

Sharp v. Wakefield.

Since Sharp versus Wakefield you'll see
It might very easily be,
  That your public-house trade,
  For which dearly you've paid,
Is ruined by a local J.P.

By the way, the enterprising editors of this magazine are offering their usual prize essay competitions for the best papers on: (1) The law of husband and wife; (2) The devolution of property on an intestacy; (3) An original legal tale. The prizes are sums of three guineas, two guineas, and two guineas. Competition No. 1 is open to all the world, and if anyone sends in a tale which does not win the prize he may yet have a chance of earning a guinea, as the editors reserve to themselves the right to retain any likely tale competition and publish it afterwards, in their journal, on the terms stated. Anyone, therefore, who desires to make an effort in this direction, should write for a copy of the May number of the magazine, giving the fullest particulars.

THE LATE SIR MONTAGUE SMITH.

MEN'S memories as to judges, even much better known and more recently in active service than Sir Montague Smith, are short. For about ten years he has ceased to exercise judicial functions, and some twenty have passed since he quitted his seat in the Court of Common Pleas. But his death, which we noted on Monday, May 4, merits more than a passing word. An interesting figure, representative of much that is best in the English bench, has passed away. He came to the front on the Western Circuit, then the nursery of judges, possessed of a brilliant bar, and able to give employment to some half-dozen 'silks'—a circuit very unlike its present starved and attenuated self. In the group of singularly gifted men who went that circuit were several much better advocates than Montague Smith, but none inspired more respect—none were more guileless of rhetorical devices, and few more effective in that persuasiveness which comes from moral character.

It is significant that he, a consistent and active Conservative, was made a judge by a Liberal Lord Chancellor, Lord Westbury. He was appointed a member of the Court of Common Pleas at a time when that Court, not always strong, was unusually so. Sir William Erle was Chief Justice; and the present generation has forgotten that many of his contemporaries regarded him as the very first of forensic speakers and the best of judges. Willes, Keating, and Byles, then puisnes, were lawyers of learning and ability, and among them Montague Smith showed to no disadvantage. It was a time when there was a rivalry—in many ways useful—between the three Courts of common law. Business chiefly set, as it always had, at least since Mansfield's time, to the Queen's Bench. But the Court of Common Pleas was also in favour, especially among mercantile men, and Montague Smith did much to sustain its reputation. In 1881 it became necessary to strengthen the Judicial Committee, then overweighted with business and suffering from the loss of several of its best members, especially Lord Kingsdown. Loud raged the storm of indignation at the circumstances of the appointment of Sir Robert Collier, who was transferred, after being some forty-eight hours a member of the Court of Common Pleas, to the Judicial Committee, in direct violation of the spirit of the Act of Parliament. Not a question was raised as to the fitness of Sir Montague Smith's appointment. Result justified the choice. Of the four paid members then nominated none gave more satisfaction than he. That tribunal has often been charged with excessive timidity—as too prone to decide large questions upon small grounds, and not to give colonial Courts all the light and leading which they desire and fairly expect. The late judge was not the man to deprive that criticism of all its point. He excelled in clear analysis of facts and authorities. He fell, perhaps, too readily into the habit, fostered by the system of delivering judgment peculiar to that tribunal—a judgment which may exactly express the view of no one who is a party to it—of deciding nothing more than was absolutely necessary. But he did good work, as none would more freely admit than the Canadian and other colonial lawyers who appeared before him; and one or two of the judgments prepared by him—for example, that in The Bank of New South Wales v. Owston—are in their way classical. It has been said that a marked difference, one of kind and temper, exists between lawyers trained before and those trained after the Common Law Procedure Acts. Sir Montague Smith belonged to the former; he had their accuracy and firm hold of principles. But he had nothing of their pertinacious love of 'singleness of issue' and other technical beauties, and he was altogether modern in his desire to do justice, even at the expense of forms. We might have had abler and more learned men to sit in that greatest of all Courts of Appeal, the Judicial Committee. But he, with his disciplined sagacity, high sense of honour, and long experience, gave satisfaction where more brilliant men might have failed.—Times.

SEARCHES FOR HEIRS-AT-LAW, NEXT-OF-KIN, &c.

MR. SIDNEY H. PRESTON, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

In the 'agony' columns of the leading newspapers many lucky individuals are continually promised 'something to their advantage,' with but the trouble of proving their identity. In many cases these acceptable announcements fail to catch the eyes of the heirs, next-of-kin and others for whom they are intended. Consequently, large estates yearly go to the Crown, while the amount of unclaimed money arising from other sources is annually increasing. It may, therefore, interest your readers to know that among the names of persons recently advertised for are the following:—

Charles C. Aldis, Isabella Atkinson, David Axtill, Elizabeth Baker (or descendants), Georges Becquart, Eliza Benningfield, Richard P. Bentley (2,000*l*.), Charles H. Bere (died 1857—children of), William Bird, Dorothy Boswood (representatives of; funds unclaimed since 1796), Eliza Boyton, William K. Brophy (Australia), James T. Caird, William Calder (Manchester), James Claridge, John Clisby, William Cole, Henry Clark (Nottingham), Copely Family, Louisa M. Collingwood (emigrated twenty years ago), Edward Cowham (Brisbane), Sarah E. Craig (South Shields), Elizabeth Cronk, Thomas Davis (emigrated 1854), James Duncan (Liverpool, 1860; supposed to be dead), William Elston, James M. Essex (last heard of 1874), Emma L. Floyd; William, Jane, Elizabeth and Rebecca Garrett; Charlotte E. Garrod (children of), Robert C. H. Good (America), Thomas Harding (last heard of 1872), Alexander Hoar, Herbert Family, William Holmes (Liverpool), Frederick W. Holligan (Manchester), Henry and Maria Howard, Samuel James (emigrated 1849), Henry Knight or children (Naples, 1851), William Lakeman (formerly of Devonshire), David S. Lash, Kate Lawrence (Chelsea), David T. and Henry Manton, Elizabeth Mason (or children), William Mellis, Thomas Miller (merchant, 1692—representatives of), Thomas Morris (London, 1692—representatives of), Arthur Mumyard, R. J. W. and Mary A. Neal, David Osborn (believed to have been accidentally killed), Ann Owen (or descendants), Joseph and Geo. Parkinson, Louisa Poole, John Paterson (left Scotland for New York, 1863), Edward Price (or children), Emily Jane Pring, Robert R. Pursell, Ada Maud Richards, John and Thomas Robinson, James Rodway (Manchester), Mary Sandall (children of), William Leary (daughters of), Alfred Sheen (schoolmaster), Richard Sheppard (Liverpool), William Snooks (coachman), Alfred Spice, George Tressy (known as 'No. 1'), Caroline Ver Huell, Mary Harwick (born 1823), Gerald Webster (Manchester), Emily Wharram, Luke White, Edward West (London, 1692—representatives of), Mary Wilkes (Warwickshire), John Wragg (emigrated 1869), George Williams (California), and Eliza Wright (Middlesex—next of kin of).

In addition to the foregoing, the following extraordinary 'windfalls' have recently been chronicled:—

4,000,000*l.* to four persons named Schuberth, by the death of Joseph Schuberth, pianoforte manufacturer, of Philadelphia.

12,000 marks to a widow, in gratitude for her having refused to marry a Hamburg bachelor thirty years ago.

50,000*l.* to General Booth; and

Ten shillings to a lady 'to buy a pocket-handkerchief to dry her tears' after testator's decease.

SOUTH-EASTERN CIRCUIT.

On May 8 the members of the South-Eastern Circuit entertained Lord Hannen and Mr. Justice Jeune at dinner at the Hôtel Métropole in celebration of the appointment of the former as a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary and the elevation of the latter to the bench. Mr. Justice Romer was to have been a similarly-honoured guest, but in consequence of an attack of influenza his lordship was unavoidably absent, as also were Sir A. K. Stephenson, Mr. Cock, Q.C., and Mr. Sidney Woolf, Q.C., from the same cause. Mr. Murphy, Q.C., occupied the chair, and among the past and present members of the circuit present were Lord Bramwell, Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Baron Pollock, Mr. Justice Hawkins, Mr. Justice Mathew, Mr. Justice A. L. Smith, Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, the Attorney-General (Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P.), the Solicitor-General (Sir E. Clarke, Q.C., M.P.), Master Kaye, Mr. Registrar Giffard, Mr. Registrar Lord, Mr. Biron, Q.C., Mr. Cohen, Q.C., Mr. Inderwick, Q.C., Mr. Meadows White, Q.C., Mr. M. Griffith, Q.C., Mr. Kemp, Q.C., Mr L. Smith, Q.C., Sir C. Hall, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Mr. S. Will, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Channell, Q.C., Mr. Bayford, Q.C., Mr. Moorsom, Q.C., Mr. Crump, Q.C., Mr. H. Payne, Q.C., Mr. Underdown, Q.C., Mr. Candy, Q.C., Mr. Nasmith, Q.C., Mr. Winch, Q.C., Mr. Poland, Q.C., and Messrs. W. B. Rosher, Athawes, G. Foster, J. Woollett, G. Taylor, J. Levy, E. H. Pollard, H. Williams, C. E. Jemmett, E. Beasley, J. G. Witt, S. Hastings, M. Powell, K. Digby, G. Dering, C. D. Powles, H. W. Bradford, E. Harrison, R. M. Bray, A. Bremner, F. Lee, R. Brown, F. Gore, B. Deane, H. H. Croft, W. W. Wood, H. de Colyar, M. Smith, E. Pollock, F. Hollams, M. Mackenzie, W. Boxall, L. Wilson, J. Davis, H. F. Dickens, H. Poyser, C. F. Gill, W. J. Grubbe, A. C. Nicoll, C. C. Scott, J. G. Laing, H. Avory, A. Macmorran, H. Cunynghame, C. K. Francis, B. Little, J. Fox, B. Morice, M. Guiry, A. R. Cluer, Rose-Innes, G. B. Rosher, C. M. Chapman, W. Danckwerts, L. Lipscomb, L. Levy, E. W. Hansell, H. A. Forman, H. C. Richards, W. H. Williams, C. Gurdon, G. Elliott, R. Mercer, H. Loehnis, M. Hall, Guy Lushington (junior of the circuit), F. G. Brown, H. C. Munroe, W. H. Payne, E. M. Pollock, H. Holdenstein, J. H. Murphy, R. Kemp, E. Boyle, G. Hohler, H. C. Bingley, F. Barchard, H. Winch, H. D. Grazebrook, S. A. Mavrojani, F. Low, A. Tassell, T. Mathew, and F. Carpenter.

Solicitors' Benevolent Association.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 13th inst., Mr. Thomas H. Stephens (Cardiff) in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. H. Morten Cotton, Robert Ellett (Cirencester), Geo. Burrow Gregory, Edwin Hedger, John Hunter, R. Pennington, Henry Roscoe, Sidney Smith, R. W. Tweedie, W. Melmoth Walters, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 200*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, thirty new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Robert Hallett Holt, of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, has been appointed the Vice-Registrar of the Office of Land Registry, to be the Registrar of that office in the place of the late Mr. Brent Spencer Follett, Q.C. By virtue of this appointment Mr. Holt becomes, under the Middlesex Registry Act, 1891, the Registrar also of the Middlesex Registry in succession to the Queen's Remembrancer, who was temporarily appointed Registrar on the death of Lord Truro.

Mr. Reginald More Bray has been appointed Recorder of Guildford in the room of Mr. Morgan Howard, Q.C., deceased. Mr. Bray is a member of the South-Eastern Circuit, and was called to the bar in 1868. He is an alderman of the Surrey County Council.

Mr. John Ingleby Jefferson, of Northallerton, has been appointed Registrar of the County Court and Bankruptcy Court at Northallerton; also, Deputy-Steward and Clerk of the Halmote Courts of the Manor of Northallerton, in place of his late father, Mr. W. T. Jefferson. Mr. Jefferson was admitted in 1876.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

Rota of Registrars.

Wednesday, May 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Thursday, May 21. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Friday, May 22.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Saturday, May 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Commercial Failures.—According to Kemp's Mercantile Gazette the number of failures in England and Wales gazetted during the week ending May 9 was sixty-six. The number in the corresponding week of last year was 102, showing a decrease of thirty-six, being a net decrease in 1891, to date, of 180.

United Law Society.—The usual weekly meeting was held on May 11, at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall, Mr. Common in the chair. Mr. C. W. Williams moved: 'That the decision in the Clitheroe abduction case is (1) bad in point of law; (2) against public interest.'—Mr. W. S. Sherrington opposed, and the debate was continued by Messrs. G. D. Ellman, G. Mallam, A. K. Common, Arthur Gilbert, J. R. Yates, J. L. V. S. Williams, M. S. Nathan, and Lewis. The opener having replied, the motions were put separately, and lost by majorities of two and four respectively.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MAY 18 TO MAY 23.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	May 18	May 19	May 20	May 21	May 22	May 23
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	—	Leigh	—
14	Judge Greenhow	—	—	—	Leeds	—	—
15	Judge Turner	—	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Leyburn	Stokesley	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	—	—	Derby	Mortlock	—
55	Judge Machonochie	—	Lymington	Bournemouth	Wimborne	Wareham	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Kingsbridge	Crediton	Totnes	—	—

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, MAY 7.

No sitting (Ascension Day).

FRIDAY, MAY 8.

Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell (construction of will—'relatives hereinafter named'—vested interest. Reported 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 538; L. R. 44 Chanc. Div. 590).—Dismissed.

Great Western Railway Company v. Cole (construction of railway and works under powers of special Act involving implied extinction by statute of public right of way and user—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845).

MONDAY, MAY 11.

Mogul Steamship Company v. M'Gregor, Gow & Co. (conspiracy—combination to keep up rate of freight—engrossing particular trade—exclusion of rival traders from combination. Reported 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 465; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598).—Cur. adv. vult.

Great Western Railway Company v. Cole.—Further hearing.

TUESDAY, MAY 12.

Dewse v. Gorton (administration—executor carrying on business—claim of executors to indemnity out of after-acquired assets—priorities of creditors. Reported 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 403; L. R. 40 Chanc. Div. 536).—Dismissed.

Montgomery v. Thompson (trade-mark—infringement—use of the name of a town—'Stone ale.' Reported 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 374; L. R. 41 Chanc. Div. 35).—Dismissed.

Attorney-General v. Emerson (foreshore—Rights of Crown—several fishery—ownership of soil over which fishery extends).—Dismissed.

Great Western Railway Company v. Cole.—Stand over.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 7.

Satchwell v. Perks (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment of Pollock, B., dated April 7, at trial with a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

FRIDAY, MAY 8.

Sanders v. New Westminster Brewery Company (Lim.) (application of defendant company for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 13, at trial before Cave, J., and a special jury in London).—Order for new trial.

Bridout v. Duncan (appeal of plaintiff from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated April 20, reversing order for trial in London and restoring order for trial in Wales).—Dismissed.

Rockett v. Clippingdale and another (appeal of defendants from order of Mathew, J., and Williams, J., dated April 18, varying order of official referee as to costs of action).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, MAY 9.

Neilans v. Cuthbertson and another (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 13, at trial before Wills, J., and a special jury in London).—Refused.

Bute Shipbuilding Dry Dock Company (Lim.) v. Gladstone and another (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated March 21, at trial before Williams, J., and a special jury at Cardiff).—Refused.

MONDAY, MAY 11.

No sitting.

TUESDAY, MAY 12.

In re An Action pending in Scotland. Burchard v. Macfarlane (appeal of W. H. Tindall and another from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated May 5, for examination before commissioner as to documents in custody of Lloyd's Register).—Allowed.

Lewis v. The Pontypridd, Caerphilly, and Newport Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Denman, J., dated November 22, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13.

Coles v. Fishor (appeal of defendants from order of Kay, J., dated August 4, partly varying chief clerk's certificate).—Dismissed.

Vernon and others (Trustees of Loyal Mundy Lodge of Independent Order of Oddfellows, Manchester Unity) v. Watson (Q.B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Baron Pollock and Charles, J., dated January 13, on appeal from County Court).—Dismissed.

Skinners' Company v. Knight and others (appeal of plaintiffs from refusal of Charles, J., to give judgment at trial on finding of jury, dated December 19).—Cur. adv. vult.

Cox and another v. Welch and another (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated January 15, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 7.

In re J. Bald, dec. Bald v. Bald (appeal of E. W. Bald from judgment of Chitty, J., dated March 13, 1890—set down by order).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MAY 8.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated January 15, at trial before Butt, J., and a special jury; heard May 5).—Refused.

SATURDAY, MAY 9.

Lougher v. Hern (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated November 17, 1890; restored after security given).—Part heard.

MONDAY, MAY 11.

Lougher v. Hern.—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, MAY 12.

Scholes v. Brook (appeal of defendants Brook and another from judgment of Romer, J., dated January 21).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13.

Original applications only heard.

SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN.—The Gazette of May 8 contains the following: 'The Queen has been pleased by letters patent, dated April 20, 1891, to grant to Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, K.C.S.I., late one of the Justices of the High Court of Justice, an annuity of 3,500*l.*

THE ELECTION OF THE BAR COMMITTEE.—Saturday, May 9, was the last day for the nomination of gentlemen to serve on the Bar Committee, when the following were duly proposed: Mr. Bompas, Q.C., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Pitt-Lewis, Q.C., M.P., Mr. E. Cutler, Q.C., Mr. Renshaw, Q.C., Mr. Byrne, Q.C., Mr. S. Hall, Q.C., Mr. Farwell, Q.C., and Messrs. H. F. Boyd, K. Digby, F. Evans, M. Ingle Joyce, W. W. Knox, O. L. Clare, D. Sturges, E. P. Wolstenholme, F. B. Palmer, B. F. Lock, and E. F. Bigg. As more than sixteen candidates have been proposed a contest will take place, and the election will commence on the 17th inst., and end on Saturday, the 30th inst. Every member of the bar is eligible to vote, and voting papers can be obtained of the hon. sec., Mr. S. H. Lofthouse, at his chambers, Farrar's Buildings, Temple, after the 16th inst., which papers, when filled up and signed, must be sent to him within the week ending the 30th inst.

CONSULAR FEES.—The very high consular fees levied by some countries, and more especially by the Consulates of Transatlantic States, which have gradually become a very serious burden for persons engaged in trade with those countries, have recently, at the instance of a Bordeaux representative of a large British steamship company, induced the Chamber of Commerce at Bordeaux to urge upon the French Government the desirability of concluding an international convention amongst all civilised States, by which a maximum limit should be fixed, beyond which no Government should in future be allowed to charge fees for consular services rendered by its representatives residing in other countries. 'There can be no doubt,' says the British consul at Bordeaux, 'that a convention of this nature would be beneficial to trade in general, and that a reduction of the consular fees charged at present by many countries would be highly desirable. Many States at present levy such high fees for consular attestations on invoices and other documents connected with the importation of goods from foreign countries that these fees have become merely another form of import duties, though they do not appear in the Customs tariff of the States in question.'

MISUSE OF METHYLATED SPIRITS.—At Shrewsbury Police Court, on May 7, Harry Johnson, chemist, Shrewsbury, was charged by the Board of Inland Revenue with using methylated spirits in the manufacture of friar's balsam. The offence having been clearly proved, defendant was fined 50*l.*

THE SEA FISHERIES ACT.—An important case under the Sea Fisheries Act was heard before the Ramsgate magistrates on May 13. The information laid against the defendant, Henry G. Howard, was to the effect that, when acting as master of the Ramsgate smack Frederick, which was engaged trawling in the North Sea on October 28 last, he did, in contravention of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, wilfully cut the nets of the Dutch fishing vessel Jonge Dirk, of Nordwyk-on-Zee. The prosecution was conducted by Mr. Howard Smith, counsel for the Board of Trade, while Mr. B. Burrows defended on behalf of the Ramsgate Trawl Smacks Protection Association. The bench found the defendant guilty of contravention of Article 19 of schedule 1 of the Sea Fisheries Act, by not taking proper precautions, and that a sufficient look-out had not been kept. Owing to this the Ramsgate vessel was brought into such a dangerous position that the Dutchman's nets had to be cut to prevent a collision. The defendant was fined 1*l.* and ordinary costs of the Court, and also mulcted in 23*l.* 15*s.* damages. Execution was stayed for a week in view of an appeal.

BIRTHS.

On May 8, at Singapore, the wife of Walter J. Napier, Barrister-at-law, of a son.

On May 9, at Forncett, Sutton, Surrey, the wife of George Brooke, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-law, of a son.

On May 11, at Holms Hill House, Ridge, Herts, the wife of Frederick W. Stone, B.C.L., Barrister-at-law, of a daughter.

On May 12, at 15 Westbourne Road, Sheffield, the wife of Reginald Benson, Solicitor, of a son.

On May 12, at 34 Elm Park Gardens, S.W., the wife of Arthur F. Leach, Barrister-at-law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On April 6, at St. Mary's Church, Bathurst, Gambia, Joseph Renner Maxwell, M.A., B.C.L., of Merton College, Oxford, Barrister-at-law, of Lincoln's inn, London, Chief Magistrate and Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court of the Colony of the Gambia, to Ada Maud Beale, of Batoum Gardens, London, eldest daughter of Thomas Myles Beale, Esq., M.R.C.S.

On April 10, at St. Philip's Church, Southport, Samuel Meacock, J.P., to Eliza, widow of the late Robert Ellis, Solicitor, both of Doncaster.

On April 30, at the Theistic Church, Piccadilly, Mirza Kazim Hosain, Barrister-at-Law, to Maude, fourth daughter of the Rev. Dr. Hughes.

On April 30, at St. John Baptist's, Bath, Charles Thomas Griffiths, L.R.C.P. Lond., M.R.C.S. Eng., of Handsworth, Birmingham, youngest son of the late Thomas Griffiths, Solicitor, Bishop's Castle, to Eliza Kate, eldest daughter of the late Richard Axford, M.R.C.S., J.P., Bridgwater, Somerset.

On May 12, at Holy Trinity, Beckenham, Halliday Harcourt, Solicitor, second son of the late Clarence William Harcourt, of Anerley, to Grace Lilian, elder surviving daughter of Octavius Jepson, M.D., of Elmfield, Sydenham.

DEATHS.

On April 30, at 106 Comeragh Road, West Kensington, Thomas Dunkin Francis, of 22 Fish Street Hill, Solicitor, second son of the late Henry Dunkin Francis, of Monument Yard, aged 46.

On April 30, at Malvern, Elizabeth, widow of the late Wm. Chartres, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Solicitor.

On May 1, at 1 Russell Chambers, Bury Street, Bloomsbury, Charlotte Elizabeth, third daughter of the late Charles Vernon Young, Solicitor, aged 26.

On May 6, Godden Styles Hare, Solicitor, of London, and Waddon Old Road, Croydon, aged 46.

On May 6, at Holm Lea, The Park, Nottingham, George Sydney Milton Johnson, M.A. (Oxon.), Solicitor, eldest son of the Town Clerk of Nottingham, aged 33 years.

May 10, at Clifton, Lucy Caroline, wife of E. C. K. Ollivant, C.I.E., Bombay Civil Service, and second daughter of A. S. Eddis, Esq., Q.C. aged 43.

	Per Annum £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

MR. JUSTICE ROMER'S sudden collapse during the hearing of the somewhat sensational case, In re Park, was only one out of many inconveniences experienced in the Law Courts owing to the mysterious and dangerous influenza. Unfortunately, however, the illness of a judge has a much wider effect than that of any counsel, however distinguished. The long-suffering litigants in the witness causes recently transferred for trial to Mr. Justice Romer from Mr. Justice Chitty and Mr. Justice Stirling will, to quote a homely simile, 'have jumped out of the frying-pan into the fire' if the learned judge is unable to resume work on the 26th inst. There are causes now waiting for trial before his lordship which were set down fully nine months ago, and some of which were apparently on the eve of trial some weeks since, when the solicitors were warned to be in readiness by the end of April. This meant, of course, the delivery of briefs and payment of fees and other incidental expenses, only to enter on another period of delay and uncertainty. The evil is a very real and crying one, but it would appear from the Lord Chancellor's recent utterances in Parliament that he is not prepared to suggest a remedy or even to admit the urgent necessity for one.

No one who has watched the fluctuations of nisi prius for the last decade can fail to have been struck by the inequality of the materials out of which juries are constituted. One may see in the box to-day a common jury, consisting of twelve intelligent, educated men who follow closely every point in the evidence, and who put questions evincing a thorough knowledge of the issues. One may see next day a (so-called) special jury constituted of men who present the appearance of being neither benè vestiti nor moderatè docti, and from whom even the most vigorous advocate fails to elicit a spark of sympathy or interest. Of course, this is only what one has to expect in a lottery. As the names are called, the owners of the names go into the box; and sometimes it happens that a dozen sensible men find themselves side by side for a few hours or a few days (as the case may be); while, at other times, it looks as if all the wooden-headed jurors had conspired to sit together. When we consider the scale of their remuneration we are startled by the relative inferiority of the average special jury. Possibly it may be partly accounted for by the notorious fact that among business men, who begrudge the waste of time and money involved in personal attendance at the Courts, it is—or was—the practice for some person on the staff of the firm (generally a foreman of gentlemanly appearance) to be told off for the duty of representing—i.e. personating—his principals in the law Courts. The practice being for the officer of the Court to call out the names of the jurors in alphabetical order, and for each person to file into the jury box as he answers to a name, there is really no guarantee that the persons who are subsequently sworn as jurors are the persons whose names have been called. To what extent this fraud on the litigants, out of whose pockets the fees payable to special jurors are taken, is practised, it is impossible to say; but that it is a fraud is beyond question. We think that the attention of the Lord Chief Justice, as president of the Queen's Bench Division, might usefully be directed to this blot on the jury system.

IT is pretty clear that, in the opinion of those whose experience gives them special authority, the law of husband and wife, notwithstanding the legislation of recent years, is still in a state far from satisfactory. The Jackson Case, Lord Penzance's letter to the Times, the bill now before the Legislature to assimilate the law of divorce to that which prevails in Scotland, where adultery alone on the part of the husband entitles the wife to divorce, and, lastly, Mr. Inderwick's humorous letter in Wednesday's Times, suggest that wide changes are necessary in this branch of the law.

No doubt the case of 'the husband mated to an evasive wife,' as Mr. Inderwick suggestively puts it, is a hard one, but it is hard only on the husband. Mr. Inderwick, however, raises a question involving in many instances serious wrongs to others. He attacks that enfant gâté of the Court of Chancery, the restraint on anticipation; and proposes that the judges of the Divorce Division should be empowered to disregard the restraint in cases in which it may seem to them just and reasonable to do so. Thus, he says, will the intention of the Act called by Lord Hannen's name, and passed in 1884, be effectually carried out, and an end put to such unseemly squabbles as occurred in the Jackson Case. But why should not a more sweeping change be made? The restraint on anticipation was a check imposed on undue marital influence. But in recent days the restraint on anticipation has been much more frequently employed for the purpose of avoiding the legitimate claims of creditors than for protection against the undue exercise of the rights of husbands. The power with which Mr. Inderwick proposes to invest the Divorce Division might reasonably be extended to all the Courts, so as to put it out of the power of dishonest women to avoid satisfaction of debts and liabilities for which they are morally responsible.

Mr. Storey, M.P., has been advising his constituents at Sunderland to get rid of the jurisdiction of county magistrates over borough affairs as far as possible by establishing a borough Court of quarter sessions, and further advocates, as a general reform, the appointment of stipendiary magistrates throughout the country in the place of the present magistracy, 'who are generally,' says Mr. Storey, 'chosen from one class.' In connection with this subject attention may be drawn to the bill of Mr. Lloyd Morgan, Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Phillips, and Mr. Abel Thomas, 'to enable county councils to provide for the appointment of stipendiary magistrates. The preamble recites that 'there is reason to believe that certain counties in England and Wales desire to secure the services of stipendiary magistrates for the more effectual execution of the office of justice of the peace, the better protection of the persons and properties of the inhabitants, and the advantage of the public;' and by the bill it is proposed that, if any county council by a majority think it expedient that a stipendiary magistrate or magistrates shall be appointed to execute the office of a justice or justices of the peace within such county, such county council may make a bye-law fixing the amount of the magisterial salary, which is to be transmitted to the Home Secretary, 'who shall thereupon appoint a person or persons qualified in accordance with section 1 of the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1863,' to act as stipendiary magistrate or magistrates. The qualification under the Act of 1863 (the preamble of which may be studied with advantage) is to be a fit person and a barrister of not less than five years' standing.

In quashing the committal of Mr. Storey, M.P., the High Court made the rule absolute for a certiorari, with costs against the committing justices personally. This is, we believe, a very unusual course, it being generally considered that justices of the peace who serve gratuitously should not be made to pay for their mistakes. Even the paid judges of inferior Courts are, as a rule, ordered to pay costs only in very special cases, as in Blades v. Lawrence, 43 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 133, in which a rule was made absolute against the Judge of the City of London Court, with costs, he having been, as it is put by Mr. Justice Blackburn, 'contumaciously wrong.' There appears, however, to be no doubt of the power of the Court to give costs against justices of the peace, if not under the law before 1890, at any rate under the Judicature Act of that year (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), by section 5 of which costs are in the discretion of the Court, and the Court or judge has 'full power to determine by whom and to what extent such costs are to be paid.'

We printed last week (ante, p. 342) the names of the nineteen candidates for the sixteen vacancies on the Bar Committee, which are to be filled up by an election commenced on Saturday last, the 16th, and to terminate on Saturday, the 30th inst. We may remind our readers that the subscription is half-a-guinea a year, but that every member of the bar, whether a subscriber or not, is entitled to vote, though the frequent and elaborate reports of the many sub-committees (of which as many as eighteen sat in 1890) are sent to subscribers only. We hope that the interest which has hitherto been shown by the active voting at these elections will be continued on these occasions; but we cannot help thinking that it would be desirable to bring the committee more in touch with their constituents than is done by merely holding an annual election and an annual meeting. Could not a very small charge be made in future for each voting paper, in return for which each elector, besides being provided with a voting paper, should be entitled to receive the reports of the sub-committees? Voting papers can be obtained of the hon. secretary, Mr. S. H. Lofthouse, at his chambers, Farrar's Buildings, Temple. The candidates have issued no addresses, nor, of course, is there any reason they should do so. But the essence of the Bar Committee is that it is a representative body, which the Inns of Court cannot be; and any member of the bar who has any reform at heart will do good service to the bar if he will take the trouble to communicate his views to the candidate for whom he intends to vote before he votes for him.

Is influenza an 'infectious disease'? This is a question for doctors to decide; but we believe we are right in saying that it is not generally considered amongst doctors to be so. However this may be, it may be useful to point out that neither in the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, 1889, nor the Infectious Diseases Prevention Act, 1890, is influenza, as yet, an infectious disease in point of law. By section 6 of the Act of 1889 (which is applied to the Act of 1890 by section 2 of the latter Act) the term 'infectious disease' means smallpox, cholera, diphtheria, membranous croup, erysipelas, scarlatina, scarlet fever, typhus, typhoid, enteric, relapsing, continued or puerperal fever, and also includes, as respects any particular district, any infectious disease to which the Act is applied by resolution of the local authority. By section 7, the local authority of any district to which the Act extends may by resolution order that the Act shall apply to any infectious disease other than a disease specifically mentioned in the Act. Is influenza a disease of so infectious a character that it can be added to the statutory list by such a resolution? We very greatly doubt it. But the determination of so difficult a question is not left entirely to the local authorities, inasmuch as by subsection 3 of section 7, an order thereunder 'shall not be of any validity until it is approved by the Local Government Board,' which very wise central authority will no doubt be supplied with sufficient information to guide them in granting or refusing the approval of the order of the local authority.

WE called attention some little time ago to the long interval which in recent years has elapsed between the hearing of cases by the Court of Appeal and their final decision by the House of Lords. Their lordships delivered judgment in three cases a few days ago, and it is interesting to note the dates. In Dowse v. Gorton the judgment of the Court of Appeal was given on February 7, 1889; in Montgomery v. Thompson on February 21, 1889; so that more than two years passed in both these instances. In Attorney-General v. Emerson the period was only from November 28, 1889; and in the important case of The Mogul Steam Ship Company v. M'Gregor, Gow & Co., on which judgment is reserved, from July 13, 1889. The only case in which lately there seems to have been real expedition is that of Seale-Hayne v. Jodrell (see Notes of Cases, p. 85), which the Court of Appeal heard on April 24, 1890. On the other hand, in the case of Smith (pauper) v. Baker & Sons, heard last December, on which their lordships are still in leisurely consideration, the intermediate Court pronounced judgment as far back as March 31, 1889. An income-tax appeal, The Commissioners of Income-Tax v. Pemsell, has been waiting for judgment for about a year. The Lord Chancellor seems to be of Lord Eldon's mind —sat cito si sat bene. But this will hardly suit modern ideas of the duty of Courts of Justice.

IN connection with the Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill, which failed to pass a second reading in the House of Commons by the narrow majority of 13, attention should be directed to the Settled Land Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 36). By this enactment any building lease may contain an option, to be exercised at any time within an agreed number of years not exceeding ten, for the lessee to purchase the land leased at a price fixed at the time of the making of the lease. Long before the passing of this Act the 'Eastbourne Building Agreement' had been in force. By this agreement the Eastbourne tenants of the Duke of Devonshire have an option, to be exercised within ten years after the commencement of a ninety years' lease, to purchase their houses from the landlord. (See Woodfall, 14th ed. App. B. sect. 14, for a copy of this agreement in full.)

IN the absence of fraud, claims by creditors of a company against its directors are barred after the dissolution of the company by an order made under section 111 of the Companies Act, 1862. This is the effect of Mr. Justice Chitty's decision in the recent case of Coxon v. Gorst (Notes of Cases, p. 63). Section 111 empowers the Court, when the affairs of a company have been completely wound up, to make an order that the company be dissolved from the date of such order. Rule 66 of the General Order of November, 1862, directs that such order shall be applied for by the official liquidator, after the chief clerk has made a certificate that the affairs of the company have been completely wound up. His lordship considered that the decisions in In re The Pinto Silver Mining Company, L. R. 8 Chanc. Div. 273; and In re The London and Caledonian Marine Insurance Company, L. R. 11 Chanc. Div. 140, which related to a dissolution after a voluntary winding-up, applied to a dissolution by order of the Court in a winding-up by the Court. The Court of Appeal in those cases held that where, in a voluntary winding-up, a company had been dissolved pursuant to section 142 of the Companies Act, 1862, the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order on petition for winding up by the Court unless the dissolution could be impeached on the ground of fraud.

THE object of the action in Coxon v. Gorst was to recover assets of a company that had been dissolved, which assets the plaintiff, a creditor, alleged had not been got in pending the winding-up. The assets sought to be recovered were sums alleged to have been wrongfully paid by the directors out of capital by way of dividend. But no charge whatever of fraud was made. The plaintiff claimed to have those assets distributed among himself and the other creditors on whose behalf he was suing. The action was practically, therefore, for a further and complete winding up of the affairs of the company. Mr. Justice Chitty was of opinion that the action could not be maintained, a conclusion which seems, both on principle and authority, to be incontestible. As his lordship pointed out, the creditors of a company are bound by the proceedings in the winding-up and the orders made therein. It would be highly inconvenient if it was competent for creditors and others to rip up winding-up proceedings which had been completely closed. In fact, to allow such a claim to prevail as that of the plaintiff in Coxon v. Gorst would be to open the door to endless litigation by dissatisfied creditors and contributories.

QUITE a little controversy not long ago sprung up as to when and where the late Archbishop of York made his celebrated declaration in connection with the compulsory suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors by retail, that he would rather see England free than England sober, and more than one attempt has been made to reproduce the exact words used. The declaration was no doubt made in a speech in the House on the second reading of the bill which is now law as the Licensing Act, 1872. The exact words are reported in Hansard as follows: 'I believe the tendency of all modern legislation ought to be towards protection of the rights and privileges of minorities. Therefore I entertain the strongest dislike to the Permissive Bill. I cannot, perhaps, express it in a stronger form than by saying that if I must take my choice—and such it seems to me is really the alternative offered by the Permissive Bill—whether England should be free or sober, I declare—strange as such a declaration may sound coming from one of my profession—that I should say it would be better that England should be free than that England should be compulsorily sober. I would distinctly prefer freedom to sobriety, because with freedom we might in the end attain sobriety, but, in the other alternative, we should eventually lose both freedom and sobriety.' The speaker then went on to advocate a certain combination of official and elective elements in the licensing board 'so as to give the ratepayers the assuring conviction that their interests were fairly represented, while, by retaining the magistracy, you would have the Conservative element, duly to resist popular influences and give consistency to their decisions.' Such a combination would seem now to be impossible. The county councils are the only bodies who could take over licensing business from the licensing justices, and on the county councils the magistracy has no official representation. Looking to the plenitude of the powers of the licensing justices as now at last fully made known to them by Sharp v. Wakefield, we think it is not likely that those powers will be transferred to such wholly elective bodies as the county councils.

A POINT of company law of much importance, upon which at first sight there seems to have been some conflict of judicial opinion—namely, as to the effect of a certificate of incorporation of a company—may now be regarded as finally set at rest by the decision on the 28th ult. of the Court of Appeal in In re The National Debenture and Assets Corporation (Lim.). It was there decided, affirming the decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich (Notes of Cases, p. 34), that the certificate of incorporation could not be treated as conclusive of the fact that seven persons had signed the memorandum of association of a company.

THE point turns upon section 18 of the Companies Act, 1862, which enacts that the certificate of incorporation shall be conclusive evidence that all the requisitions of the Act in respect of registration have been complied with. That section refers back to section 6, which enacts that seven or more persons associated for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association, and otherwise complying with the requisitions of the Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company with or without limited liability. Whether subscribing the memorandum by seven or more persons is one of the requisitions compliance with which is to be conclusively shown by the certificate of registration is by no means evident on the language of the section. But the Court of Appeal, adopting the view taken by Mr. Justice Kekewich, have now held that it is not so; and that, therefore, the certificate is not conclusive that the memorandum was properly signed.

THE effect of Oakes v. Turquand and other cases is that a certificate of incorporation is not merely a primâ facie answer, but a conclusive answer to any objection in respect of the registration, and that it prevents all recurrence to prior matters essential to registration, and is conclusive that all previous requisites have been complied with. Peel's Case also went to show that an examination of the circumstances attending the original registration was not permissible, and that nothing could be inquired into as to the regularity of the prior proceedings. In neither of those cases, however, was it definitely laid down that the certificate was conclusive that the memorandum of association had been signed by seven persons. On the other hand, in In re The Northumberland, &c. Banking Company, 2 De G. & J. 357—which did not arise on the Companies Act, 1862, but on the previous Winding-up Act—Lord Justice Turner declined to be bound by a certificate if, in fact, the company could not be registered. That case was cited in Baroness Wenlock v. The River Dee Company, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 946; L. R. 38 Chanc. Div. 534, where it was held that a clause in one of the Lands Improvement Companies Acts, making the certificate of the Inclosure Commissioners conclusive evidence of the validity of a charge under the Act, did not render the charge valid in such a case.

THE rule as to the release of a surety by giving time to the principal debtor is too well settled now for it to be seriously questioned. Still, not unfrequently cases come before the Courts in which the question of fact arises as to whether time has been given to the debtor in such a way as to bring the rule into play. In Bolton v. Salmon, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 289, J. & S. and other parties in 1857 mortgaged their several undivided shares in the property as security for 450*l.* advanced to J., the mortgagors covenanting jointly and severally for payment thereof, but S. only joined as a surety for J. In December, 1884, this mortgage with others, amounting in all to 3,200*l.*, was consolidated by a deed to which S. was not a party, the plaintiff advancing the 3,200*l.* to J., and the latter covenanting to repay the same on January 19, 1885. The plaintiff brought an action against the surety to make her liable on her covenant, as a consolidating deed, if properly drawn, always preserves to the mortgagee his rights under the mortgages which are being consolidated. The effect of the new covenant for payment was held to be that the mortgagee could not sue the principal debtor until a later period than he could have done under the mortgage of 1857, and, therefore, the surety was released from her liability. The plaintiff was not daunted by this reverse, but contended that, though the covenant by the surety had been released, still the security given by her remained. Mr. Justice Chitty, however, refused to accede to this contention, and held that the alteration of the contract without a surety's consent, or without the reservation of rights against him, affected his position equally in regard to every part of his contract of suretyship, and therefore the surety was wholly relieved from the security which she had given in 1857. One cannot but feel that such a defence is rather more technical than otherwise, as she was not in reality at all prejudiced by the change in the nominal day for payment. Still, from her point of view, the decision was evidently satisfactory, as she had done J. a good turn by becoming his surety, and then, when the time for payment came, she was able to back out of it. For the future, draftsmen of consolidating deeds must be careful to see that no sureties are inadvertently released, but that either they are parties or the mortgagees' rights against them are reserved. Probably, however, many, if not most, conveyancers insert a clause in mortgages to which a surety is a party to the effect that, though as between the principal debtor and the surety the latter is only a surety, yet as between the creditor and the surety the latter shall be considered a principal debtor, and shall not be released by time being given to the real debtor or otherwise by any dealings between the creditor and debtor.

ILLEGIBLE or badly written depositions are, it seems, a source of much irritation to Her Majesty's judges on circuit. A circular on this subject has recently been addressed by the Home Department to all clerks to justices, and will, no doubt, have some effect. At the same time, many of the offending scribes are too old to learn a 'Civil Service' style of writing, and will continue to be more or less illegible till the end of the chapter. The important qualification of clear as well as rapid writing is likely, however, to have more weight than formerly in the selection of clerks to justices.

PUBLIC interest in the cause célèbre, Evelyn v. Hurlbert, has been fully sustained by the questions put to the Attorney-General in the House of Commons. That the Public Prosecutor has been referred to the Solicitor-General was a complete answer to the suggested difficulty in this case. But has it ever occurred to the law officers of the Crown or the Treasury what the position would have been if the Solicitor-General had led for the plaintiff instead of Mr. Candy, Q.C.?

PROBABLY the legal presumption that a gift by a father to one of his children of any large sum of money in his lifetime is intended as an ademption pro tanto of what he has left to that one by his will frequently frustrates the father's intention; and the decision of the Court of Appeal in Lacon v. Lacon (Notes of Cases, ante, p. 62), reversing that of the Court below, will be hailed with general satisfaction. It may be remembered that Sir E. Lacon was the owner of twenty-one twenty-fourth shares in a brewery business. By his will he bequeathed those shares to three of his sons, of whom E. was one, providing that, except E., they should not be allowed to take any part in the management of the business. After the date of the will, E., who had been employed in the business for some time at a salary, asked for an increase of it. His father would not grant him this, but gave him, on a reconstitution of the partnership, two shares therein. E. resisted the theory of ademption on the ground that he had purchased the shares, giving his services in exchange and as the consideration for them; and, further, that the presumption of ademption did not even primâ facie arise in the case of property of this kind. Mr. Justice Romer disagreed with him on both grounds; but he has been successful in the Court of Appeal. The leading case on this subject is Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 140, and in the notes on that case in White and Tudor's 'Leading Cases' (6th edit. vol. ii. p. 364) will be found many cases showing the strong presumption there is in the eyes of the law, that a gift of a large sum of money to a child is intended by a person in loco parentis as an ademption pro tanto of any money bequeathed to that child in a will previously made. But we do not generally regard as a gift anything which we have paid for, and what difference can it make that we have not used the medium of exchange, but have given our services instead of a money payment? E.'s two shares were really bought by him, and, therefore, were put out of the power of his father's will. The Court of Appeal seem further to have left open, for the decision of some future leading case, the question whether the presumption of ademption can be applied to shares of this kind.

IN the preface to the new edition of 'Chitty on Contracts' attention was called to eight 'points of contract law as seeming to require remedial legislation.' Of these only one, that appearing from Peek v. Derry, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 516, which Mr. Warmington's Act dealt with, has received the attention of the Legislature. For the nature of the others reference should be had to Pott v. Clegg, 16 M. & W. 321; to Tremeere v. Morrison, 1 B. N. C. 89; to Neilson v. James, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 369; to Foakes v. Beer, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 130; to Read v. Anderson, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 532; to Smith v. Woodfine, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 660; and to section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867. The most important from the practical point of view is the strange rule of Pott v. Clegg, in which it was held that money left with a banker, if not drawn upon for six years, becomes the absolute property of the banker.

MR. F. S. POWELL, the well-known reformer of the law of public health, has carried his Museum and Gymnasium Bill through the House of Commons, and it now awaits a second reading in the House of Lords. The bill is a permissive one only, and repeats almost word for word the procedure for 'adoption' which is to be found in section 3 of the adoptive Infectious Diseases Prevention Act, 1890. As is very properly explained in a memorandum prefixed to the bill, the Public Libraries Acts (see Public Libraries Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 70), s. 18), if and where adopted, authorised the establishment of museums and schools for science and art, as well as libraries, at the expense of the localities adopting those Acts, but these Acts give no power to use the rooms for lectures or to charge for admission. Mr. Forsyth's Swimming Baths Act of 1878 also allows the swimming-baths provided under that Act to be used as a gymnasium during the winter, but 'there is no power to use any building as a gymnasium unless it is a swimming-bath' provided under that Act. Mr. Powell proposes by clause 4 of his bill that 'an urban authority may provide and maintain museums for the reception of local antiquities or other objects of interest, and gymnasiums with all the apparatus ordinarily used therewith, and may erect any buildings and generally do all things necessary for the provision and maintenance of such museums and gymnasiums.' The regulation of charges for admission and other matters is to be left to the discretion of the local authorities. The bill is not a long one, containing only fourteen clauses. Its powers, by clause 13, are to be, as the common form of the draftsman now runs, 'in addition to and not in derogation of any other powers conferred by Act of Parliament.' Surely, instead of hobbling on with this clause, the Libraries Acts ought to be repealed and re-enacted, and the present bill consolidated with them.

SPECULATING FOR DIFFERENCES.

The case of Salaman v. Warner and others, decided in the Court of Appeal on April 28 last (Notes of Cases, p. 78), not only raises questions of great interest to all who are in any way concerned with Stock Exchange transactions, but has given rise to a decision of the greatest importance on a point of principle in the law of tort. The case was briefly commented on in our issue of May 2 (ante, p. 297).

The facts as disclosed in the pleadings and for the purposes of the decision taken by the Court as true were (so far as they are necessary to understanding the important points of the judgment) as follows: The plaintiff was a stockbroker and a member of the Stock Exchange. The defendants were respectively the owner of a patent medicine which was to be sold to a limited company formed for the purpose of buying it, the brokers of that company, and one of its promoters. The plaintiff, hearing of the formation of this company, and presumably believing, from all that came to his ears, that there would be plenty of buying and selling of 'Warners,' which would give a chance of profit in the ordinary way of business, entered into contracts to sell 'Warners' with persons other than the defendants. It must be taken from the decision that the plaintiff was not induced to enter into these contracts by anything which the defendants represented to him, but made them on quite independent grounds, so that there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, and no liability from the defendants to the plaintiff on this ground.

According to the statement of claim the course of events then was that the defendants conceived the idea of making a corner in 'Warners,' and conspired together to carry it out by procuring the allotment of the bulk of the shares to nominees of themselves, so that they themselves might have the control of the shares. The interposition of the nominees was necessary, as otherwise the directors would have known that two-thirds of the shares had not been allotted to the public, and would not have been able to make the statement to the Stock Exchange Committee which is necessary for obtaining a quotation and settlement. The next step was for the defendants to cause the directors to make that statement to the committee, such statement being in the defendants' mouths of course false and fraudulent. Then the squeeze began. When the plaintiff wanted to fulfil his contract to deliver the shares, he found that he could only obtain them from the defendants, from whom ultimately he was obliged to take them at a fancy price. This action was brought to recover from the defendants, as damages for a tort, the difference between this fancy price and the normal price of the shares. The fraud alleged was double-barrelled: first, in leading and allowing the directors to think that the shares were being allotted to the public instead of to the defendants; and, secondly, in causing the fraudulent statement to be made to the Stock Exchange by the directors that two-thirds of the shares issued had been alloted to the public.

The materiality of these two frauds is that they would alter in vital points the data on which a business man estimates his chance of profit and loss in such a bargain as one about the shares of a company which has not yet gone to allotment. For in estimating the price of such shares, and the risk of a 'corner' as an element in the price, any member of the Stock Exchange would know that he was safe against an allotment of the bulk of the shares to the promoters. For, if that were done, the Stock Exchange Committee would not grant a settlement; and, if no settlement were granted, contracts entered into for the sale of the shares would not be binding. But, if the bulk of the shares were once to be in the hands of the public, a stockjobber might well be willing, and, indeed, in the ordinary course of business is obliged, to take the risk of a 'corner.'

The case, then, that the plaintiff alleged against the defendants was in substance this, that the defendants, with the intention of damaging such members of the public (including the plaintiff) as should have entered into contracts to sell shares in the company, conspired together, first, by means of fraud, to get the bulk of the company's shares under their own control, and then, also by fraudulent means, to obtain a settlement from the Stock Exchange Committee. The damage consisted in this, that sellers were forced to obtain shares for delivery at a fancy price when, but for the fraud practised, the shares would have been obtainable at a normal price.

Such a case might have been very difficult to prove at the trial, but it came before the Court on a motion to strike out the statement of claim as disclosing no cause of action, for which purpose, as on a demurrer, all that was alleged must be taken as true. The Court of Appeal, affirming the judgment of the Divisional Court, decided against the statement of claim, and also refused leave to amend it. If this decision stands, it is hard to see that the public will ever get protection against 'corners,' even when brought about by means of fraud, for the case put forward in the statement of claim alleged plenty of fraud at every stage.

On broad principles, however, it is submitted that there ought to be a remedy in such a case as the plaintiff put forward. There is, singularly, little direct authority on the point, and, as the growth of 'corners' in recent years has become at least more notorious than formerly, there would seem to be room and opportunity for a 'leading case.' The case of Bedford v. Bagshaw, 4 H. & N. 538, was not unlike the present case, and might have assisted the plaintiff but that it was disapproved of in the House of Lords by Lord Chelmsford in Peek v. Gurney, 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 19; L. R. 6 H. L. p. 397.

Treating the question, therefore, as one of principle, it is at any rate beyond dispute that, if the allegations in the statement of claim were true, the defendants were open to indictment as members of a criminal conspiracy for the false and fraudulent statement which they caused to be made to the Stock Exchange Committee (Regina v. Aspinall, 46 Law J. Rep. M. C. 145; L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 48). It was argued for the plaintiff that, as he had been damaged by this fraud, since the effect of it had been to make his contract binding on him, it followed from the liability to indictment that the defendants were also liable to him in a civil action for damages, and the dictum of Lord Justice Fry was relied on: 'I cannot doubt that whenever persons enter into an agreement which constitutes at law an indictable conspiracy, and that agreement is carried into execution by the conspirators by means of an unlawful act or acts which produce private injury to some person, that person has a cause of action against the conspirators' (The Mogul Steamship Company v. M'Gregor Gow 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 465; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. at p. 624). But the Divisional Court and also the Court of Appeal held that the existence of the conspiracy did not give the plaintiff any further right of action than he would have had if the act which the conspirators agreed to do had been done by a single person.

The plaintiff was thus driven to base his right of action on some such ground as this: 'That the defendants having by fraudulent means, designed for that very purpose, inflicted damage on the plaintiff, were liable to the plaintiff for the damage so inflicted.' It seems to have been assumed in the judgments delivered that the plaintiff would have no remedy on such a ground against the defendants unless the fraud was practised by them directly on the plaintiff; and the judgment of the Master of the Rolls was to some extent devoted to showing that none of the fraudulent representations complained of were made to the plaintiff directly or indirectly. But the gist of the plaintiff's grievance was that the fraud was a secret one, practised to his detriment behind his back. As to this the Master of the Rolls said: 'The plaintiff claimed that he had a right of action, because, as he said, the defendants had not told some one else, who was in no way connected with the plaintiff, the truth. There is no such right as this by the law of England.' That, however, is surely too broadly stated in view of the law of libel. The Court of Appeal seem to have considered that the want of privity between the plaintiff and the defendants was fatal to the plaintiff's case. But in tort the course of the damage normally flowing from the tort takes the place of privity. And as regards the remoteness of the damage in such a case as the present, it would be an impudent thing for a defendant who had intended to bring about damage by a certain course of action to object that the damage was too remote when it occurred in the very way that he intended. To put a parallel case where there is an equal absence of privity between the plaintiff and defendant, suppose that the plaintiff has contracted to buy goods monthly from B., and that the price may be raised 10 per cent. whenever C. thinks that the current price-lists make it fair that it should be so raised; suppose then that the defendant, with the intention of damaging the plaintiff, puts before C. fraudulently concocted price-lists in order to induce him to raise the price on the plaintiff. If C., accepting the price-lists as genuine in all good faith, raises the price at a time when, if he had seen genuine price-lists, he would have left it unaltered, it would be hard if the plaintiff were denied a remedy against the defendant. The only point in which it can be said that these cases are not parallel is that in Salaman v. Warner the parties were engaged in trade competition with one another, and that what one gained the other must lose. But the whole course of the transaction on the defendants' part was alleged to have been done 'with intent to injure the plaintiff, i.e. with malice,' so that the excuse that what was done was done in the way of legitimate trade rivalry is cut away. The Master of the Rolls, in the course of his judgment, asked what legal right of the plaintiff had been invaded by the defendants. That right is complicated, perhaps, and not easy to state shortly, but it might be put thus: a right to have the normal action of the forces that settle the price of a vendible commodity freed from fraudulent interference.

IMPERSONAL TRUSTS.

In the earlier as well as the latest edition of 'Lewin on Trusts' it is stated in general terms that 'a trust must be for the benefit of some person or persons, and if this ingredient be wanting, as in a trust for keeping up family tombs, the trust is void.' The high authority of the learned author, however, appears to be the chief, if not the only, foundation for this proposition. No less than ten cases are, indeed, cited in support of it, but most of these will be found to be cases in which, as in Lloyd v. Lloyd, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 596; 2 Sim. (N.S.) 255, trusts were attempted to be created without any limit of time, for the repair of family tombs, not forming part of the fabric of the church; while in another case referred to, Thompson v. Shakespear, 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 140, 276; Johns. 612; 1 De G. F. & J. 399, the testator gave property for the formation of a merely private museum, also without any limit of time. Not being charitable trusts, these bequests were clearly void on the ground of perpetuity. In Thompson v. Shakespear there was the additional circumstance that the trust was also void for uncertainty, but the ground of perpetuity was mentioned by Lord Hatherley in his judgment, and commenting on the cases in Rickard v. Robson, 31 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 897; 31 Beav. 244, Lord Romilly says: 'Lloyd v. Lloyd, and the other case of Thompson v. Shakespear, show that a gift merely for the purpose of keeping up a tomb or building which is of no public benefit, and only an individual advantage, is not a charitable use but a perpetuity.' These cases, therefore, so far from establishing the proposition for which they are cited, seem to us to tell in reality the other way. Another class of case in which a trust has been held valid, though it can hardly be said to be for the benefit of any person or persons, is where provision has been made for the maintenance of favourite animals after their owner's death. Thus, in Mitford v. Reynolds, 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 238; 16 Sim. 105, a testator gave the remainder of his property, 'after deducting the annual amount that will be requisite to defray the keep of my horses (which I will and direct be preserved as pensioners),' to the Government of Bengal for a charitable purpose; and the order on further consideration contained a declaration that the provision for the maintenance of the testator's horses was good. The point was probably uncontested. The next case of the kind—In re Dean; Cooper Dean v. Stevens, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 693; L. R. 41 Chanc. Div. 552—came before Mr. Justice North in 1889. There a testator charged his land with an annuity of 750*l.* to be paid to his trustees during fifty years from his death if any of his horses or hounds should so long live, and declared that the trustees should apply the money in their maintenance, and Mr. Justice North held the trust a valid one. His judgment, which is a valuable statement of the law, begins as follows: 'It is said that there is no cestui que trust who can enforce the trust, and that the Court will not recognise a trust unless it is capable of being enforced by someone. I do not assent to that view. There is not the least doubt that a man may, if he pleases, give a legacy to trustees upon trust to apply it in erecting a monument to himself, either in a church or in a churchyard, or even in unconsecrated ground, and I am not aware that such a trust is in any way invalid, although it is difficult to say who would be the cestui que trust of the monument. In the same way I know of nothing to prevent a gift of a sum of money to trustees upon trust to apply it for the repair of such a monument. In my opinion such a trust would be good, although the testator must be careful to limit the time for which it is to last, because, as it is not a charitable trust, unless it is to come to an end within the limits fixed by the rule against perpetuities, it would be illegal. But a trust to lay out a certain sum in building a monument, and the gift of another sum in trust to apply the same to keeping that monument in repair, say for ten years, is, in my opinion, a perfectly good trust, although I do not see who could ask the Court to enforce it. If persons beneficially interested in the estate could do so, then the present plaintiff can do so; but, if such persons could not enforce the trust, still it cannot be said that the trust must fail because there is no one who can actively enforce it.' On the other hand, as lending some support to the general proposition quoted at the commencement of this article, we may refer the reader to the observations of Lord Eldon in the well-known case of Morice v. The Bishop of Durham, 10 Ves. 522, 539, and also to the actual decision in Brown v. Burdett, 52 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 52; L. R. 21 Chanc. Div. 667, where an eccentric testatrix devised a house to trustees with specific directions to block it up for the term of twenty years, putting only a housekeeper in occupation, and subject thereto to hold it in trust for a devisee in fee, and Vice-Chancellor Bacon, saying he must 'unseal this useless, undisposed-of property,' held that there was an intestacy for the term. The case, however, was argued on the footing that there was no disposition by will of the property within the Wills Act, s. 3, and the law of trusts does not seem to have been taken into consideration. We think, on the whole, that if the general proposition to which we have referred is to be retained, it must be taken to be subject to the two exceptions we have stated; also that it deserves consideration, whether the general proposition and these exceptions can consistently stand together.

Reviews.

GODEFROI ON TRUSTS.

The Law relating to Trusts and Trustees. By Henry Godefroi, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

This book has grown out of all recognition. It was originally intended as a work upon the General Law of Trusts for Students and Practitioners. Mr. Godefroi has thoroughly revised his first edition, and the result of his reconstruction, combined with the necessary addition of a quantity of new matter dealing with recent legislation and a mass of judicial decisions, has been to transform the book from a modest little manual into an imposing treatise of more than 900 royal octavo pages. We have carefully tested Mr. Godefroi's work, and have no hesitation in pronouncing it thoroughly reliable. The cases have been incorporated down to a very recent date. In its new guise the book will, perhaps, be more appreciated by practitioners than by students, for whom it is now somewhat too much elaborated. The index is very full and complete, and the table of cases gives references to all the reports. The price is 32*s.*

WILSON'S LEGAL HANDY BOOKS.

The Law of Private Trading Partnership. By James Walter Smith, Esq., LL.D. 1891.

Some thirty years ago, as the author of the present little treatise points out, there was no branch of the law which stood more upon judicially declared principle and less upon legislation than the law of private trading partnership. Now it is to a great extent codified by the Partnership Act, 1890. The author of this work is, however, no doubt right in saying that this Act is 'hard reading to most non-lawyers, who usually prefer to receive information by methods more explanatory, though less scientific.' To such persons this work will be acceptable and useful.

A BANKRUPTCY CHART.

The Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 and 1890. Chart showing the principal steps to be taken from the act of bankruptcy to discharge. Prepared by R. T. Hunter, Chief Clerk, County Court, Stockton-on-Tees. London: Waterlow & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

This chart will be invaluable to solicitors practising in bankruptcy. It gives a bird's-eye view of the whole procedure under the Bankruptcy Acts and rules, enabling anyone who consults it to see at a glance the proper step to be taken at any particular stage in a bankruptcy, and referring him to the sections and rules under which he must proceed. The idea is distinctly a good one, and well carried out.

GREENWOOD'S CONVEYANCING.

Greenwood's Manual of the Practice of Conveyancing, showing the Present Practice relating to the Daily Routine of Conveyancing in Solicitors' Offices. To which are added concise Common Forms and Precedents in Conveyancing. Eighth Edition. Edited by Harry Greenwood, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

This is a carefully revised edition of a most useful work. When a book has reached its eighth edition its position is assured, and its patrons are probably so numerous that all words of recommendation may be deemed superfluous. Nevertheless, we feel bound once more to place on record our opinion that no better book can be found as a practical guide to place in the hands of a conveyancing clerk in a solicitor's office. The whole book has been revised having regard to the important alterations effected by recent legislation and to the cases decided since the publication of the last edition, while the precedents have been resettled and added to. The hope of the editor that the alterations which have been made will render the work still more useful to those for whom it is intended appears to us to be fully justified. The price of the new edition is 16*s.*

Unreported Cases.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

POOR LAW—PAUPER LUNATIC—ORDER OF MAINTENANCE—SETTLEMENT BY PAYMENT OF RATES—PAYMENT OF RATES DURING PART OF YEAR OF OCCUPANCY.

THE case of The Guardians of the Taunton Union (appellants) v. The Guardians of the St. Saviour's, Southwark, Union (respondents) was heard on Thursday, April 16, at the County of London (South) Easter Sessions, before Sir P. H. Edlin, Q.C., and other justices. It was an appeal against an order of maintenance, by which the settlement of Ernest Victor Kallend, a pauper lunatic, was adjudicated to be in the appellant union. The grounds upon which the order of removal was made, and the last settlement of the pauper lunatic adjudged to be in the appellants' union, were that the pauper lunatic had resided for three years and upwards, up to about four and a half years ago, at No. 15 Bridge Street, Taunton, in the appellant union, and so had acquired a settlement by residence under the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1876; that the pauper lunatic was the lawful son of James Henry Kallend, which said James Henry Kallend, prior to his said son's emancipation, was also last legally settled in the appellant union by renting and payment of rates for a period of twenty years in respect of tenements situate in Bridge Street, Taunton; that the pauper lunatic was born in the parish of St. James, Taunton, on November 23, 1866, in the appellant union. The appellants admitted that when the pauper lunatic left Taunton in June, 1886, he was legally settled there, but they contended that since he left Taunton he had acquired in the years 1887 and 1888 a settlement by payment of rates in the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul, in the Barton Regis Union, Bristol, and still retained that settlement; that he had also acquired a status of irremovability by residence in the respondent union, and so was irremovable therefrom; but this point was not argued. It appeared at the hearing that the pauper lunatic, Edward Victor Kallend, in July, 1887, agreed to rent of Mr. J. Abrahams, of Belvoir Road, Bristol, the house and premises known as Ross Villa, North Road, Bristol, in the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul, in the Barton Regis Union, from the half-quarter day, August 9 or 10, 1887, for one year, at 27*l.* a year rent, and so on from year to year; a quarter's notice to be given and taken on either side; the pauper lunatic to pay the rates and taxes. He was married on August 3, 1887, and took possession of the premises on August 9. A portion of his furniture had previously been put into the house. A poor-rate was made on October 26, 1887, which was paid in November, and a general district or sanitary rate was paid on December 21, which was made on October 25, 1887. The landlord paid the property-tax direct to the collector, the pauper lunatic paying the inhabited house duty. There was no land-tax. The half-quarter's rent to Michaelmas, 1887, was paid, as were also the quarters' rents due at St. Thomas' Day, 1887, Lady Day, 1888, and Midsummer, 1888. In July, 1888, E. V. Kallend, having become insane, was taken to London to his parents' house. The landlord agreed with his wife to take the house off their hands at quarter-day, August 11, 1888. The wife left the house on August 3, 1888, but she did not give up the key of the house. The half-quarter's rent was paid and the key given up to the landlord on the August 11, 1888, by a friend of the wife under her instructions, on which day the incoming tenant took possession. There was a poor-rate made in April, 1888, and also a general district rate, but neither of these, although demanded, were paid by the pauper lunatic E. V. Kallend.—Poland, Q.C., and Hon. R. Coleridge for the appellants: We admit that the pauper lunatic was settled in Taunton in May, 1886, but we contend that he gained a settlement in the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul in the Barton Regis Union by payment of parochial rates under 3 Wm. & Mary, c. 11, s. 6; and 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, s. 66, during the time he occupied Ross Villa, North Road, Bristol, and the conditions imposed as to occupancy by 4 Geo. IV. c. 57, s. 2, have been satisfied. It is only necessary to prove the payment of rates during some portion of the year of occupancy and not for the whole year. We rely on Regina v. The Inhabitants of St. Mary Kalendar, 9 Ad. & E. 626; 8 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) M. C. 754; 1 Per. & Dav. 497, and Regina v. Stoke Damerel, 6 Ad. & E. 308; 6 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) M. C. 55. The renting and rating are such as to satisfy the statute (Rex v. Great Bentley, 10 Barn. & Cress. 520; Rex v. Ringstead, 7 Barn. & Cress. 607). The order of the justices ought to be quashed.—E. Layman (with him G. E. Lyon), for the respondents, contended that the statute 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, s. 66, had rendered it necessary to prove the payment of poor-rates for the whole year of occupancy in settlements by payment of taxes for tenements as well as in settlements by renting tenements, and even assuming that the later statute does not affect the statute of Geo. IV., section 6 of the statute of 3 Wm. & Mary, c. 11, under which settlements by payment of rates were created, still required that, to gain such settlement, any person charged with public taxes of a parish must pay his share towards them; that, in the present case, it had been proved that the pauper lunatic, E. V. Kallend, had not paid all the taxes or rates which had been assessed upon 'Ross Villa,' North Road, Bristol, during the year of his occupancy, and that, therefore, he had not paid his share towards the public taxes of the parish, and had not gained a settlement by payment of rates, and the pauper lunatic in such case took the settlement he had acquired in the appellant union when he left Taunton, and had not acquired another since. The order of the justices was right.—The bench were of opinion that sufficient facts had been proved to show that the pauper lunatic, E. V. Kallend, had gained a settlement by payment of parochial rates in the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul in the Barton Regis Union, Bristol, and that the case of Reg. v. St. Mary Kalendar (sup.) was conclusive, and that the order of removal and maintenance should be quashed.—Appeal allowed with costs.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF THE BAR COMMITTEE.

THE following gentlemen have been duly proposed as candidates at the ensuing election:—

QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

1. Mr. Henry Mason Bompas, Q.C., 3 Harcourt Buildings, Temple.
2. Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., 4 Temple Gardens, Temple.
3. Mr. George Pitt-Lewis, Q.C., M.P., 4 Paper Buildings, Temple.
4. Mr. Edward Cutler, Q.C., 12 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.
5. Mr. W. C. Renshaw, Q.C., 5 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.
6. Mr. E. W. Byrne, Q.C., 3 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.
7. Mr. Samuel Hall, Q.C., 6 New Court, Carey Street.
8. Mr. George Farwell, Q.C., 10 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.

Outer Bar.

1. Mr. Edward Francis Bigg, 2 Elm Court, Temple.
2. Mr. Hugh Fenwick Boyd, 11 King's Bench Walk, Temple.
3. Mr. Kenelm E. Digby, 1 Paper Buildings, Temple.
4. Mr. Frank Evans, 15 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.
5. Mr. M. Ingle Joyce, 4 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.
6. Mr. W. W. Knox, 7 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.
7. Mr. O. Leigh Leigh-Clare, 11 New Court, Carey Street.
8. Mr. B. Fossett Lock, 8 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.
9. Mr. Francis Beaufort Palmer, 5 New Square, Lincoln's Inn.
10. Mr. Decimus Sturges, 11 Old Square, Lincoln's Inn.
11. Mr. E. P. Wolstenholme, 2 Stone Buildings, Lincoln's Inn.

Only sixteen candidates can be elected.

The electors are the whole of the bar.

The election will be by voting papers, to be personally filled up and signed by the electors.

Each elector will have eight votes. The votes may be divided in any manner between two or more candidates, but so that not more than four votes be given for any one candidate.

Voting papers must be delivered or sent by post to the honorary secretary within the week ending May 30, 1891.

Voting papers may be obtained on application at the chambers of Honorary Secretary, Farrar's Building, Temple, or at the Common Rooms after the 16th inst.

Eight members of the Outer Bar must be elected.

S. H. Lofthouse, Hon. Secretary.

Farrar's Building, Temple:
May 11, 1891.

CORPORATION RECORDS.

Sir John Monckton, the town clerk, and Dr. R. R. Sharpe, the records clerk of the Corporation of London, have recently presented a report to the Library Committee of the progress made during the past year in arranging, calendaring, and indexing the records of the corporation. They state that the second and concluding part of a calendar of wills enrolled in the ancient Court of Hustings from 1358 to 1888 had been put through the press. An exhaustive index had been added, and an introduction written briefly illustrating the nature of the various bequests. Copies had been sent to public libraries at home and abroad, the universities, and other public bodies. Dr. Sharpe was now bestowing his time and attention upon the new historical work upon the influence exercised by London and its citizens on political, commercial, and social affairs of England. In this the City's records tell their own tale. They supply the main thread of the narrative, the leading events and most of the characters. The background was filled in from contemporary chronicles of Matthew Saris, Wallingham, Ralph Higden, and others, as well as from chronicles of Arnold, Fitz Thedmar, William Gregory, and Robert Fabyan, all aldermen, in their several ages, of the city of London itself. The work was laborious, and the result not always adequate. A rough draft had been written of twelve chapters, bringing the work down to the end of the reign of Henry VII. Copies and translations had been made of various letters which passed between the Crown and Corporation, and which, it is believed, have never before been printed, and of other interesting documents. The work of removing index-slips which had been pasted over chamber accounts of the time of Elizabeth, and arranging and rebinding them in their original form, had been successfully executed by skilled workmen at the Record Office. The chamber accounts thus revealed form a valuable addition to the City's archives. They were a century earlier than any accounts of the City chamberlain hitherto known to exist, and were a record of the finances and expenditure of the City in a variety of objects—from fees paid to the common hunt, for fuel, for hounds' meat, and for keeping up the City's hawks and kennel of spaniels, down to sums paid to the mayor and sheriffs in compensation for the wax, herring, and sturgeon at one time payable to them by 'the Easterlings of the steel-yard.' Strange as those entries might appear in the present day, it was still more strange to find that the civic authorities in Elizabeth's reign found it necessary to pay persons to kill otters and cormorants at so much a head, and that the Lord Mayor for the time being enjoyed a day's hunting in St. James's Park. The City authorities, as is well known, had a drastic method of ridding the City of beggars, vagrants, and 'masterless' men, and here there was a record of expenses incurred in conveying all the Irish begging people in or near London to Bristol, for the purpose, no doubt, of causing them eventually to be sent back to their native land. Another method employed was to press them into military service and send them to serve the queen in Flanders; and a record is preserved of the chamberlain's accounts for the transportation and necessary provision of 2,420 soldiers to the Low Countries in 1584–85. An index to the calendar of deeds enrolled in the Court of Hustings—a work in eight volumes—was still in course of progress.

ARBITRATION BY COMMERCIAL ARBITRATORS.

Mr. Roscoe writes to the Times as follows —

In your recent leader on the subject of the commercial business of the High Court you suggest that some adoption of the practice of arbitration by commercial arbitrators would have been desirable as part of the procedure of the High Court. It may, therefore, be opportune to point out that the practice has been in existence in the High Court of Admiralty and in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division for many years. In the fifteen years from 1875 to 1890 the number of 'references' has much more than doubled, showing that the system gives satisfaction to shipowners and underwriters. It is satisfactory because, in one word, it is a businesslike system, prompt, efficient, and comparatively free from legal technicalities. After the merits of a collision have been decided by the Court the damages are referred. The tribunal consists of the registrar or assistant-registrar and one or two merchants, or an Elder Brother of the Trinity House when a nautical point, such as the propriety of an abandonment, is involved. In the larger number of references the case has never been before the Court at all, having been referred by agreement. Such I find to be the case in regard to the two first references for next week, in one of which the damages claimed are 27,000*l.*, and in the other 37,000*l.* In the case of references there are no pleadings, and, as a rule, no interlocutory applications, and the whole matter can be settled within a few weeks after a vessel has been lost or repaired. It has also to be borne in mind that Admiralty suitors have the advantage of a registry in which Admiralty business alone is transacted, so that cases of commercial importance are not shouldered about by trivial actions as is the case in Queen's Bench Division, and in which every official bears constantly in mind the necessity of the rapid and easy despatch of litigation which involves very large pecuniary interests.

Although, therefore, the re-establishing of the Guildhall Courts may do a little to prevent the further loss of commercial business by the Queen's Bench Division, much more drastic changes will be needed if commercial business is to any extent to be brought back. A tribunal for the assessment of damages in commercial causes (which causes must be defined as a class) analogous to that in the Admiralty Registry must be established. The interlocutory business and taxations must be dealt with by masters specially appointed for the work, which must be looked at from a business rather than from a legal point of view. It is doubtful, indeed, if even then this business will be regained without the creation of an entirely new 'commercial division of the High Court,' managing its own business, and looked to by commercial men as a special tribunal in which they have confidence.

VARYING TRUST INVESTMENTS.

WHETHER Lord Hatherley's decision in In re Ward, 2 Jo. & H. 191, was right or wrong 'is a matter which concerns nobody.' That is so, no doubt, since Lord Justice Lindley thus dismissed it in In re Dick; Lopes v. Dick, though Mr. Justice North followed it, as being still applicable in In re The Manchester Royal Infirmary, L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 420; but it is even of more consequence to learn, on the same authority, that Mr. Justice North's decision itself may be now alike disregarded, though it appears to have misled Mr. Justice Stirling also. In re Warde decided that section 32 of Lord St. Leonards' Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), which enlarged the powers of trustees with regard to investments, did not enable the trustees of a settlement of a fund invested in a particular manner to sell out the investments, there being no power in the settlement to vary investments. It happens, however, that Lord Romilly came to a different conclusion in Waite v. Littlewood, 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 636, but the case does not appear to have been argued, nor was In re Wards cited; but again, in In re The Clergy Orphan Corporation, L. R. 18 Eq. 280, where it was held that the trustees of a charity might, under section 11 of Lord St. Leonards' Act, sell out trust funds then invested in consols for the purpose of reinvestment in other securities authorised by the General Order of February 1, 1861, with regard to cash under the control of the Court, Vice-Chancellor Malins considered that In re Warde had no general application. In practical effect, no doubt, the question would be greatly shorn of its consequence if it could be maintained, on the authority of In re Cooper's Trusts, W. N. 1873, p. 87, that, where an instrument allows a choice of investments, a power to vary is implied. But it is very doubtful if that is right, and Lord Justice Lindley gave it no countenance in In re Dick. Then, in 1888, the Government reduced the interest or dividend payable upon Government securities, in consequence of which reduction it was thought necessary or at least desirable to extend the powers which were formerly enjoyed by trustees as regards the investment of trust moneys. The Trust Investment Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 32), was passed accordingly; but certainly, if the Legislature intended to enable trustees to sell out existing investments made independently of the Act, it is at least singular, having regard to In re Warde, that the language used in the enabling part of section 3 should be similar to that used in the previous Acts. Does this power to vary investments, given by section 3, apply to all investments authorised by that section, whether made under the power given by the Act, or whether made prior to the Act by the settlor or testator or by the trustees since the trust commenced? According to the decision in In re Warde, the power of investment would relate only to money awaiting investment, and would not apply to funds already invested; and, according to Mr. Justice Stirling, in In re Dick, following In re Manchester Royal Infirmary, trustees, having no power under the instrument of trust to vary investments, are not authorised to sell out existing investments for the purpose of investing the proceeds in the manner sanctioned by the Trust Investment Act, 1889. Section 3 declares that 'it shall be lawful for a trustee, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument (if any) creating the trust, to invest any trust funds in his hands, in manner following,' then enumerating a series of investments, and concluding with the provision, 'and also from time to time to vary such investment.' A trustee has power to invest 'any trust funds in his hands' (the same words varying in Lord St. Leonards' Act): 'and also to vary any such investment'—'such' as what—does this extend to existing investments, or does it only apply to enable the varying of investments made already under the authority of the Act?

Turning to In re Dick; Lopes v. Dick, reported in the LAW JOURNAL for April, we find Lord Justice Lindley referring, in the first place, to another section of the Act, section 6, which provides that the Act 'shall apply as well to trusts created before as to trusts created after the passing of this Act, and the powers hereby conferred shall be in addition to the powers conferred by the instrument, if any, creating the trust.' That, said he, 'is a section which is in some respects remarkable, because it says in plain language that the Act shall apply to trustees who hold moneys under trusts created before the passing of the Act; and the whole object of that section is to redress the inconvenience, and perhaps injustice, which would be the inevitable result of the reduction of the interest payable upon Government securities if there were no such Act as this.' Expressly made retrospective, the statute is certainly an enabling one, the Legislature seeking, as it had done from 1859 down to 1889, to decrease the difficulties of making investments of a kind which would be sought for by trustees, and enlarging their powers accordingly as regards investments and instruments, whether made before or after the passing of the Act.' The provision in section 3, said Lord Justice Fry, 'should be read as if the words "any such investment" were followed by the words "as hereinbefore mentioned." I think, therefore, that the power of variation applies to investments of the specified character, whether the investments be made by the testator during his lifetime, or by the trustees under his will or under their statutory powers. I have come to that conclusion, induced in the first place very largely by the view that I take of the object of the Act—the object of the Act being to enlarge the powers of selection of investments given to trustees, who are exposed to the difficulty of obtaining remunerative investments of a particular kind. But there are other circumstances in the case which incline me to the same conclusion. In the first place, it would be a very strange result if, in a case where a testator left trust funds invested in securities of the description enumerated in the Act—e.g. Parliamentary stocks—without conferring on the trustees any power of variation, and also left cash which was to be invested by the trustees also in Parliamentary stock, the trustees should find themselves placed in the position of having power to vary one portion of the stock—namely, the Parliamentary stock purchased with the cash after the passing of the Act—but no power to vary the other portion of the same class of stock in which the trust funds were invested before the Act came into operation. I think that that is an impossible conclusion, and that it is not one which we ought to arrive at. Again, the fact that the Act applies to documents existing at the passing of the Act seems to me to be very strong to show that it must apply to enable a variation to be made of the stocks in which investments have been made under the powers of the existing document. Again, section 6 provides that "the powers hereby conferred shall be in addition to the powers conferred by the instrument creating the trust." It consequently follows that the true mode of construing this power is, as was said by Mr. Farwell, to read it into the will, and then the power to vary investments applies to all investments of the specified descriptions made under the will and under the Act of Parliament, unless they are excluded by the express language of the will. The intention of this Act evidently is that the powers given by the Act should be in addition to the powers of the trustees under the will.' 'It is,' said Lord Justice Kay, 'extremely easy to put difficult cases with regard to either view of construction. The power to vary such investments, even if you read the whole section into the will, only means a power to vary such investments as are mentioned in section 3. It is quite possible there might be, under the will or settlement, investments not mentioned in section 3 which, if the will or settlement contained no power to vary, would not be variable under the power given in this section, even if you read it into the will. That is a difficulty which was put to counsel during the argument, and a difficulty which would still remain even after the construction which the Court has put upon the Act.' But, though the Court rightly overruled the narrow construction previously put on the Act, 'I fear,' added the learned judge, 'that our decision will subject trustees to greater importunities on the part of tenants-for-life than heretofore, and therefore I wish to add that, in changing existing investments, trustees have to exercise a discretion, and it would not be a proper exercise of that discretion to change the investment merely for the sake of increasing the income of the life tenant, if in so doing the security of the capital fund is diminished.' Irish Law Times.

THE LAW OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MR. INDERWICK writes to the Times as follows:—

Lord Penzance, while stating the case of the husband mated to an evasive wife, deprecates any alteration of the law which would extend the grounds of divorce, but he refrains from suggesting any alternative remedy. I venture to propose a remedy which, if not heroic, will at least be found to be practical.

The so-called Weldon Relief Act of 1884 declared that it should no longer be lawful for any Court to condemn a husband or wife to perpetual imprisonment for refusing to live with an uncongenial spouse, and the Court of Appeal has lately decided that, whatever a husband's rights may be at common law, they do not in fact include a right to subject his wife to lifelong confinement. In substitution for the power of enforcing its decrees by imprisonment, the Act of 1884 empowered the Court to order the offending spouse to make satisfactory arrangements for the support of the innocent party and the children. If the husband is the fugitive no difficulty arises. He is ordered to make a settlement or an allowance which does not usually err on the side of insufficiency, and in default of compliance he can be imprisoned and his property taken from him. Neither is there a difficulty as to the wife unless her property is settled without power of anticipation, in which case the Courts have declared themselves powerless to enforce any order against her.

It was said some years ago of the Scotch judges that, having invented the doctrine of constructive murder, they became so enamoured of their legal offspring that, though bloody murderers occasionally received the mercy of the Crown, no constructive murderer ever espaced the gallows. The doctrine of restraint on anticipation has been similarly adopted by the Court of Chancery, and the books are full of cases where married women of large estates have defrauded their creditors, their relations, and their friends by the application of a rule invented for the purpose of preventing their weakly yielding to the blandishments of their husbands and squandering their property during the marriage. So far, indeed, had the operation of this rule been carried that it was found necessary to insert a clause in the Conveyancing Act of 1881 to enable the Court of Chancery, on the wife's application, to disregard this restraint, and to enable her to charge or alienate her property when such a course would clearly be for her own pecuniary benefit. Let, therefore, the Legislature pass an Act conferring on the judges of the Divorce Division a power to disregard this restraint on anticipation in such cases as it may seem to them just and reasonable to do so. This will carry into effect what was undoubtedly the intention, though apparently not the language, of the Act of 1884, and it will go far to put an end to these unseemly squabbles. Many people may say that vulgar pecuniary considerations should hardly be permitted to influence an adjudication upon the sacred rights and duties of married life. To this I would reply that during my experience, which, unhappily, has been long, I am not aware of any one of these cases of restitution of conjugal rights where money was not the principal, if not the only, moving cause of dispute.

THE LATE JUDGE MORGAN HOWARD.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE COLPITTS GRANGER took his seat at the Launceston County Court on Friday, the 1st inst., for the first time since his appointment as judge of the County Court Circuit No. 59, in succession to the late Judge Morgan Howard.

Mr. C. H. Peter, on behalf of the bar, said this was the second time it had fallen to his lot to express the regret of the legal profession practising in that Court at the death of the judge who presided there. This was the first opportunity that had been afforded in the circuit of bearing public testimony to the worth of the late judge. Mr. Morgan Howard's sudden death, after a short illness, came as a painful surprise. His amiability of character, his invariable courtesy to the bar, and his great anxiety to do justice to the parties who came before him, were highly appreciated in that Court, and they mourned his loss very deeply. While lamenting the death of the late judge, it was their pleasure to welcome his successor, and they trusted his honour would be long spared to preside over the Courts in the circuit. Judge Granger came from a distant part of the country, but he would find the Cornish people not quite the barbarians they were sometimes supposed to be, but a warm-hearted race. The duties of a County Court judge were extremely onerous and difficult, involving jurisdiction in matters of very great intricacy and requiring the widest knowledge and experience in dealing with them, and he could promise his honour that the utmost assistance of the bar would be at his disposal.

Mr. Graham White joined in the expression of regret at the death of the late judge and of welcome to the new judge, between whom and the members of the bar, he hoped, the good relations which had subsisted between the judge and the legal profession in that Court would always exist.

Mr. Registrar Grylls added his regret at the death of Judge Howard, in whom, he said, the county had lost a valuable servant and himself a personal friend. He also joined in the welcome to Judge Granger.

His Honour said he could not too strongly indorse all that had been said about his friend, Mr. Morgan Howard, whom it was his great pleasure to have known for many years. No man was more missed at the bar in London than Mr. Morgan Howard when he was appointed judge of that circuit. It was in some senses a difficulty and in others a help to succeed a judge so able and conscientious as Mr. Morgan Howard. He was sure no judge ever tried to do justice more thoroughly than the late Mr. Howard, because he was not only the perfection of courtesy in all the relations of life, but also scrupulously careful and painstaking. In acknowledging the welcome extended to himself, he could only say it would be his endeavour to cultivate a good feeling between himself and the bar. Nothing was more important to a judge in the administration of justice than to have the assistance of an able and trustworthy bar, because the duties of a County Court judge were exceedingly varied and extensive, embracing practically all the branches of the law. Nothing had given him greater pleasure on entering on the duties of his office than to read in a letter written by the late judge to a brother-judge, who was thinking of taking his duties there for a month, the very high terms in which he spoke of the gentlemen who practised before him, and of the registrars who assisted him in the administration of his duties.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR QUEEN'S BENCH CHAMBERS.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

A to F.

ALL applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Pollock are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 173, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays up to June 20, after which date they are to be made returnable before the masters in chambers in this division.

G to N.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Macdonell are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 183, at 11.30 A.M., on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

O to Z.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Manley Smith are to be made returnable before him in chambers up to June 13, after that date in his own Room, No. 114, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

The parties are to meet in the anteroom of Masters' Chambers, and the summonses will be inserted in the printed list for the day after the summonses to be heard before the master sitting in chambers, and will be called over by the attendant on the respective rooms for a first and second time at 11.30, and will be dealt with by the master in the same manner as if they were returnable at chambers.

BY ORDER OF THE MASTERS.

MASTERS IN CHAMBERS.

A to F.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Kaye.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Johnson.

G to N.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Walton.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Butler.

O to Z.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Manley Smith, for Master Archibald, to June 13. Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Wilberforce.

ORDER OF TRANSFER.

Tuesday, May 12, 1891.

WHEREAS, upon the request of the Lord Chancellor, the Honourable Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams has, with the concurrence of the Lord Chief Justice of England, consented to sit and act as an additional judge of the Chancery Division for the purpose of hearing any causes or matters which may be assigned to him by the Lord Chancellor, or any application therein; I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do, pursuant to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1884, s. 5, hereby order that in addition to the causes assigned under the Order of Court, dated April 28, 1891, the several causes and matters set forth in the schedules hereto be assigned to Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams for the purpose of hearing the same or any application therein, and be marked in the cause books accordingly; and if on the termination of such sitting any of such causes and matters shall remain undisposed of, then I do also order that such causes and matters be retransferred without further order for the purpose only of hearing or of trial to the Hon. Mr. Justice Romer. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Duke of Sutherland v. Heathcote —1890 S. 980
Heathcote v. Blair—1890 H. 1,335
Jones v. Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society —1890 J. 158
Froude v. Wilberforce—1890 F. 1,081
Adney v. Adney—1890 A. 840
Vernall v. Reed—1890 V. 326
Cunliffe v. Bellite Explosives (Lim.)—1889 C. 1,166
Hampton v. Davis—1890 H. 1,884
In re Bliss, dec.
Bliss v. Bliss—1889 B. 2,568
Wrensted v. Bede—1890 W. 1,578
Wagner v. Costerlitz—1890 W. 417
Automatic Weighing Machine Co. (Lim.) v. National Exhibitors Association (Lim.)—1890 A. 826
Jones v. Wemyss—1890 J. 26
Bellite Explosives (Lim.) v. Bellite Co. (Lim.)—1890 B. 1,035
Jensen v. Hilder—1890 J. 527
Lloyd v. Fox—1889 L. 1,861
Booty v. Goodwin—1890 B. 1,764
Lincoln Brick Co. (Lim.) v. Handley—1890 L. 1,349
Godfrey v. Walker—1889 G. 1,463
Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate v. M'Ivor's Patents (Lim.) —1890 A. 931
Viney v. Lewis—1889 V. 809
In re Parker, dec.
Lowe v. Parker
Parker v. Lowe—1890 P. 1,233
Dawson v. Church
Church v. Dawson—1889 D. 1,990
Simeon v. Freshwater, Yarmouth, and Newport Railway Co.—1890 S. 1,980
Denney v. Frisby—1890 D. 896
Nicol v. Charsley—1890 N. 1,270
Horwood v. Millins—1890 H. 557
Belsey v. Brooks—1890 B. 2,190
Twyeroald v. Chamber Colliery Co. (Lim.)—1890 T. 614
Norton v. Burr—1890 N. 313
Bender v. Macpherson—1890 R. 96
In re Kinahan's Trade-mark, No. 14,636, and Patents Designs Act, 1883—motion with witness by order
Coulson v. Lock—1890 C. 2,636
Beaumont v. Provident Assurance Co. (Lim.)—1889 B. 3,452
Bendall v. Alexander, Daniel, Selfe & Co.—1890 B. 1,454
Wood v. Lamplough—1888 W. 2,171
Ward v. Langdon—1889 W. 912
I'Anson v. Turner—1890 I. 1,078
Brear v. Hirst—1890 B. 4,063
Cleworth v. National Provident Institution and others—1889 C. 2,554
In re Stevens, dec.
Stevens v. Stebbington—1890 S. 3,287
Byers v. Grey—1890 B. 2,802
Lawrence v. Edge—1890 L. 1,184
Hamerton v. Bex—1890 H. 3,346
Copping v. Gilmore—1890 C. 2,192
Bolton v. Natal Land and Colonisation Co. (Lim.)—1886 B. 2,055
Kennedy v. Smith—1890 K. 742
Fairfax v. Lyons—1890 F. 1,260
Savage v. Jessup—1890 S. 2063
Thornton v. Union Discount Co. of London—1890 S. 1,861
Ogilvie v. Blything Union Sanitary Authority—1890 O. 1,338
Eastwood & Co. (Lim.) v. Craig—1890 E. 1,193

HALSBURY, C.

GRAY'S INN.—The undermentioned gentlemen have been elected benchers of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn: His Honour Judge Paterson; and Messrs. Edward Henry Power, J.P.; James Mulligan (of the equity bar); Miles Walker Mattinson, M.P. (Recorder of Blackburn); and J. C. Lewis Coward (Recorder of Folkestone).

SITTINGS PAPERS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

COURT OF APPEAL.

APPEAL COURT I.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION, THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY), AND THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION SITTING IN BANKRUPTCY.

May
Tuesday 26 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, and Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions.
Wednesday 27, Thursday 28 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 29 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 30 Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
June
Monday 1 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 2, Wednesday 3, Thursday 4 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 5 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 6 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 8 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 9, Wednesday 10, Thursday 11 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 12 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 13 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 15 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 16, Wednesday 17, Thursday 18 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 19 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 20 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 22 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 23, Wednesday 24, Thursday 25 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 26 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 27 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 29 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 30, July Wednesday 1, Thursday 2 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 3 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 4 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 6 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 7, Wednesday 8, Thursday 9 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 10 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 11 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 13 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 14, Wednesday 15, Thursday 16 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 17 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 18 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 20 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 21, Wednesday 22, Thursday 23 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 24 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 25 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
July
Monday 27 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 28, Wednesday 29, Thursday 30 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 31 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Aug.
Saturday 1 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 3 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 4, Wednesday 5, Thursday 6 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 7 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 8 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 10 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 11, Wednesday 12 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors), and also the Queen's Bench New Trial Paper, will be taken on days to be appointed by the Court.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Queen's Bench Final Appeals will be taken as stated in the above order of business, but subject to the New Trial Paper, which will be taken on days to be appointed by the Court, notice of which will be published on the Daily Cause List.

APPEAL COURT II.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE CHANCERY, AND PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISIONS (PROBATE AND DIVORCE), AND THE COUNTY PALATINE AND STANNARIES COURTS.

May
Tuesday 26 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Wednesday 27 Chancery Final Appeals.
Thursday 28 County Palatine Appeals and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday 29 Chancery Final Appeals.
Saturday 30 Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
June
Monday 1, Tuesday 2 } Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 3 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 4 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday 5, Saturday 6, Monday 8, Tuesday 9 } Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 10 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 11, Friday 12, Saturday 13, Monday 15, Tuesday 16 } Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 17 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 18, Friday 19, Saturday 20, Monday 22, Tuesday 23 } Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 24 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 25, Friday 26, Saturday 27, Monday 29, Tuesday 30 } Chancery Final Appeals.
July
Wednesday 1 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 2 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday 3, Saturday 4, Monday 6, Tuesday 7 } Chancery Final Appeals.

	July
Wednesday	8	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	9	Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	10
Saturday	11
Monday	13
Tuesday	14
Wednesday	15	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	16	Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	17
Saturday	18
Monday	20
Tuesday	21
Wednesday	22	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	23	Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	24
Saturday	25
Monday	27
Tuesday	28
Wednesday	29	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	30	Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	31
	Aug.
Saturday	1
Monday	3
Tuesday	4
Wednesday	5	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	6	County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	7	Chancery Final Appeals.
Saturday	8
Monday	10
Tuesday	11
Wednesday	12	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

N.B.—Lunacy Petitions (if any) are taken in Appeal Court II. on every Monday, at Eleven, until further notice.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

CHANCERY COURT I.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

	May
Tuesday	26	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	27	Non-Witness List.
Thursday	28	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Friday	29	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	30	Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
	June
Monday	1	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	2	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	3
Thursday	4
Friday	5	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	6	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	8	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	9	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	10
Thursday	11
Friday	12	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	13	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	15	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	16	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	17
Thursday	18
Friday	19	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	20	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	22	Sitting in Chambers.
	June
Tuesday	23	Causes with Witnesses.
Wednesday	24
Thursday	25
Friday	26	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	27	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	29	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	30	Causes with Witnesses.
	July
Wednesday	1
Thursday	2
Friday	3	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	4	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	6	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	7	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	8
Thursday	9
Friday	10	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	11	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	13	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	14	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	15
Thursday	16
Friday	17	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	18	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	20	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	21	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	22
Thursday	23
Friday	24	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	25	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	27	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	28	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	29
Thursday	30
Friday	31	Motions and Non-Witness List.
	Aug.
Saturday	1	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	3	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	4	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	5
Thursday	6
Friday	7	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	8	Remaining Motions, remaining Petitions, Adjourned Summonses (Procedure), and Non-Witness List.
Monday	10
Tuesday	11	Sitting in Chambers.
Wednesday	12

SPECIAL NOTICE.—When the Non-Witness List is exhausted, the Witness List will be resumed subsequently to July 2.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a Short Cause must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard. Two copies of minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Cause is to be put in the Paper.

N.B.—In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

N.B.—The following papers on Further Consideration are required for the use of the Judge—viz. Two copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, one copy Pleadings, and one copy Chief Clerk's Certificate, which must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Further Consideration is ready to come into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT II.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

	May
Tuesday	26	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Wednesday	27	General Paper.
Thursday	28
Friday	29	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	30	Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
	June
Monday	1	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	2	General Paper.
Wednesday	3
Thursday	4
Friday	5	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	6	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	8	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	9	General Paper.
Wednesday	10
Thursday	11
Friday	12	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	13	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.

	June
Monday	15	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	16	General Paper.
Wednesday	17
Thursday	18
Friday	19	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	20	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	22	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	23	General Paper.
Wednesday	24
Thursday	25
Friday	26	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	27	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	29	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	30	General Paper.
	July
Wednesday	1
Thursday	2
Friday	3	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	4	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	6	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	7	General Paper.
Wednesday	8
Thursday	9
Friday	10	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	11	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	13	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	14	General Paper.
Wednesday	15
Thursday	16
Friday	17	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	18	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	20	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	21	General Paper.
Wednesday	22
Thursday	23
Friday	24	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	25	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	27	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	28	General Paper.
Wednesday	29
Thursday	30
Friday	31	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
	Aug.
Saturday	1	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	3	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	4	Remaining Motions, remaining Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Wednesday	5
Thursday	6
Friday	7	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	8	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	10	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	11	General Paper.
Wednesday	12

N.B.—Mr. Justice North will begin the trial of Actions with Witnesses on Tuesday, June 2.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a Short Cause must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard. Two Copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk the day before the Cause is to be put in the Paper.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

	May
Tuesday	26	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday	27	General Paper.
Thursday	28
Friday	29	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	30	Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
	June
Monday	1	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	2	General Paper.
Wednesday	3
Thursday	4
Friday	5	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	6	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	8	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	9	General Paper.
Wednesday	10
Thursday	11
Friday	12	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	13	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	15	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	16	General Paper.
Wednesday	17
Thursday	18
Friday	19	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	20	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
	June
Monday	22	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	23	General Paper.
Wednesday	24
Thursday	25
Friday	26	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	27	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	29	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	30	General Paper.
	July
Wednesday	1
Thursday	2
Friday	3	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	4	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	6	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	7	General Paper.
Wednesday	8
Thursday	9
Friday	10	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	11	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	13	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	14	General Paper.
Wednesday	15
Thursday	16
Friday	17	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	18	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	20	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	21	General Paper.
Wednesday	22
Thursday	23
Friday	24	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	25	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	27	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	28	General Paper.
Wednesday	29
Thursday	30
Friday	31	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
	Aug.
Saturday	1	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	3	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	4	Remaining Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday	5
Thursday	6	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Friday	7	Remaining Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	8
Monday	10	Remaining Motions.
Tuesday	11	Sitting in Chambers.
Wednesday	12

Any Cause intended to be heard as a short Cause must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard, and the necessary Papers, including Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, must be left with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Cause is to be put into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT IV.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

	May
Tuesday	26	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Wednesday	27	General Paper.
Thursday	28
Friday	29	Motions, Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	30	Queen's Birthday—no Sitting.
	June
Monday	1	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	2	General Paper.
Wednesday	3
Thursday	4
Friday	5	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	6	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	8	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	9	General Paper.
Wednesday	10
Thursday	11
Friday	12	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	13	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	15	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	16	General Paper.
Wednesday	17
Thursday	18
Friday	19	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	20	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	22	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	23	General Paper.
Wednesday	24
Thursday	25

	June
Friday	26	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	27	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	29	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	30	General Paper.
	July
Wednesday	1
Thursday	2
Friday	3	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	4	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	6	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	7	General Paper.
Wednesday	8
Thursday	9
Friday	10	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	11	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	13	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	14	General Paper.
Wednesday	15
Thursday	16
Friday	17	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	18	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	20	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	21	General Paper.
Wednesday	22
Thursday	23
Friday	24	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	25	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	27	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	28	General Paper.
Wednesday	29
Thursday	30
Friday	31	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
	Aug.
Saturday	1	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	3	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	4	General Paper.
Wednesday	5
Thursday	6
Friday	7	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	8	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	10	Remaining Motions, remaining Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Tuesday	11	Sitting in Chambers.
Wednesday	12

Liverpool and Manchester Business will be taken as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons, Liverpool and Manchester Summonses being taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Manchester Summonses on Friday, May 29.

CHANCERY COURT III.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Actions transferred for Trial or Hearing only will be taken in the order in the Cause List on every day of the Sittings from May 26 to August 12, both inclusive.

CAUSE LISTS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

SPECIAL PAPER.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Set down March 24, 1891, due March 29, 1891.

Cleaver & others v. Mutual Reserve Fund Association

OPPOSED MOTIONS.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Cullum v. Strousberg
In re Arbitration between De Morgan, Snell & Co. and the Rio de Janeiro Flour Mills (Lim.)
Crisford v. West Lancashire Railway Co.
Same v. Same
Ross v. Bourke
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Boyce v. Williamson
Pollock v. Sharpe
In re Four Solicitors, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re Alliance Aluminium Co. ex parte Oresunds Chemiske Fabriker of Copenhagen
Day v. Ocean Railway and General Accident Assurance Co. (Lim.)
M'Intyre & Co. v. M'Intyre
Court v. Sheen
Gibb and another v. Todman
Browne v. Clulow
Perkins and another v. Daintrey
Aaron's Reefs (Lim.) v. Osborne
Munday v. Norton
Wolff v. Clinton and another
Lawrence Automatic Gas Co. (Lim.) v. Wright
Ellis v. Sykes and another
Hirst v. Holdsworth
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Stewart v. Nobel
Green v. Educational Newspaper Co. (Lim.)
Chappell v. North
Bowes and others v. Pape

CROWN PAPER.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Northumberland—Gibson v. Lawson
Plymouth—Curran v. Treleaven
Durham (Darlington)—In re Onward Building Society and Building Societies' Acts, 1874, &c.

FOR ARGUMENT.

London—Jones and others v. Dobson and others
Surrey (Kingston)—Wimbledon Local Board v. Underwood (Simmons, claimant)
Glamorganshire—Regina v. J. C. Fowler, Esq. Stipendiary Magistrate for Swansea (ex parte Crabb)
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Mayor, &c. Borough of Sheffield v. Guardians of Poor Wortley Union and others
Staffordshire—Company, &c. of Birmingham Canal Navigation v. Hickman
Kent—Regina v. Sandgate Local Board (ex parte Justices, &c. of Kent)
Same—Whiffen and another v. Bligh and others, Licensing Justices, &c.
Durham—Harland v. Earl of Durham
Middlesex (Westminster)—Edmunds v. Steele
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Keeling v. Cleaver and another
Yorkshire (Leeds)—Leeds Patent Brick Co. v. Perlman
London—Lewis v. Davies
Metropolitan Police District—Osborne v. Skinners' Co.
Salop—In re Local Government Act, 1888, and In re County Council of Salop
Lancashire (Bacup)—Paterson v. Hoyle & Sons
Middlesex—Regina v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (ex parte Johnstone)
Lancashire (Blackburn)—Bagley v. Baynes
Lincolnshire (Parts of Kesteven)—Regina v. Reeve and another, Justices, &c. and others (ex parte Lannyman)
Kent (Greenwich)—Gilbertson and another v. Wood
Surrey—Fenwick v. Rural Sanitary Authority of Croydon Union
Metropolitan Police District—Wilson and another v. Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Anderson v. Swansea Shipping Co. and another
Salford—Brown v. Mortgage Insurance Corporation
Middlesex (Westminster)—Ruston v. Bonham and another (Hicks and another, claimant)
Essex—Regina v. Vicar of All Saints', Prettlewell (ex parte Burrell)
Lancashire (Blackburn)—Cunliffe and another v. Tipping

REVENUE PAPER.

CAUSES FOR HEARING.

Attorney-General v. Mayor, &c., of Hythe and another
Same v. De Burton and others
Same v. Chapman & White

CASES AS TO INCOME-TAX AND CORPORATION DUTIES.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Whitehead, appellant, and Wilson (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent
In re Duty on the Bootham Ward Strays, York
Murphy, appellant, and Colquhoun (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent

Motions for Attachment for Contempt, 10

Divisional List.

SUMMARY.

Special Paper	1
Opposed Motions	27
Crown Paper	26
Revenue	16
Total	70

APPEALS AND MOTIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Appeals for hearing before a DIVISIONAL COURT sitting in Bankruptcy.

In re Entwistle, ex parte Turner
In re Fiddian, Squire & Co. ex parte H. Fiddian and H. V. Squire
In re Powlton, ex parte Williams
In re Cook, ex parte Cook
In re Crump, ex parte Crump
In re A. C. Powell & Co. ex parte Alexander Pollock Watt and The Lantern (Lim.)
In re Judge, ex parte Judge
In re M'Innes, ex parte Burgess, R. M.

Motions in Bankruptcy for hearing before MR. JUSTICE CAVE.

In re Wood, ex parte Roberts v. Sonan
In re Spanton, ex parte Official Receiver v. Lenanton and others
In re Artolo Bros. ex parte Pardinus v. Huribatt
In re Veale, ex parte Singleton v. Miles
In re Dear, ex parte Oddy
In re Inman, ex parte Jackson v. Bayley
In re Jackson, ex parte Woodward v. Bayliss
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Hogan and Hughes
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Jackson
In re Martin, ex parte Pierson v. Martin
In re Giles, ex parte Ward v. Giles
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Bridges
In re Buchanan, ex parte Churchman v. Haslock
In re Lamb, ex parte Stogden v. Cobbett
In re Seager, ex parte Glyn and others v. Pratt
In re Eastone, ex parte Cope
In re Gregory, ex parte Collins v. Brown
In re Fischel, ex parte Woodthorpe v. Pinchin and others
In re Benson, ex parte Haslock v. Cochrane
In re Seager, ex parte Cole & Co. v. Pratt
In re Gillchrist, ex parte Whinney v. Ponsonby and another
In re Hartmann, ex parte Official Receiver v. Harrison
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Osborne & Co.
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Goodall & Co.
In re Same, ex parte Same v. Farris

MATTERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Total Appeals and Motions 33

RAILWAY AND CANAL COMMISSION COURT.

Pickering, Phipps, and others v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Same v. London and North-Western Railway Co. and Great Northern Railway Co.
Same v. London and North-Western Railway Co. and others.
Town Council of Maidstone v. South-Eastern Railway Co., and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co.
Portway v. Colne Valley and Halstead Railway Co.

NOTICE.—The Court will sit on Tuesday, May 26, at 10.30, when the first three Cases will be in the List.

The following Courts will sit until Saturday, May 30, for the trial of the following classes of actions:—

Two Courts for Middlesex Special Juries.
One Court for Middlesex Common Juries.
Two Courts for London Special Juries.
Two or Three Courts for Actions without Juries.

MIDDLESEX.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 2050 in this List will not be taken before Monday, June 1.

The following Numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, May 26: Nos. 40 to 98, both inclusive.

40 Langmead (May 27) v. Winter and others
18aDyster, Nalder & Co. v. Benjamin Bros.
1920 Nelson v. Chapman
1966 Claridge v. Galsworthy
1981 Scovel v. Publishing Co. (Lim.) and others
1987 Lee-Smith v. Commercial Trust, &c. (Lim.)
2001 Commercial Trust and Agency Co. (Lim.) v. Smith
19 Hannay's Patents Co. (Lim.) v. Harden Star and Sinclair Fire Appliance Co. (Lim.)
23 King v. Sedgwick
26aSellers and others v. Newton and others
50 Dawes v. Pilcher
98 Wilkinson v. Clark
781 Wiedemann v. Walpole
943 Clement v. Richards
1035 Newell (after No. 2403) v. Corporation of Liverpool
1062 Edwards & Co. v. Meux
1161 Zapp & Bennett v. Buddiman, Johnston & Co.
1162 Lamport & Holt v. England
1315 Worley v. Hindley
1325 Humphrey v. Leuville
1338 Tuppenney v. New
1345 James and others v. Land and Water and others
1358 Gilbert v. Perryman
1405 Clarke v. Tebb
1487 Memory v. Annesley and others
1507 Stumore v. Campbell and others
1508 Gillespie v. Salmon and others
1518 Guinness & Co. v. Heritage
1655 Crompton & Co. (Lim.) v. Phillips
1689 London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. East London Waterworks Co.
1752 Collins v. Houghton & Sons
1852 Colbourne v. Southwark, &c. Trams Co.
1855 Gwynne v. Shippay
1901 Coombs v. Barber and others
1912 Boyton v. Williams
1925 Nobel v. Stewart
1926 Same v. Same
1937 Cowley v. Soames
1967 Perry v. London Street Trams Co.
1968 Cowan v. Anderson
1971 Hawker v. Attenborough and others
1976 King v. Lewis
1999 Linton v. Mackenzie
2003 Dicker v. Lacons, Youell & Co.
2004 Minter v. Hilton and others
2020 Craig v. London Street Trams Co.
2022 Stallard v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
2038 Harvey v. Lambert and another
2044 Coulson v. North
2045 Rumsey v. Edwards
2050 Davis v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
2052 Thomas v. Brough and another
2054 Mears v. Mitchell
2060 Owen v. Nicholls
2073 Folkard v. Lockwood
2080 M'Murdo v. Kosterlitz
2085 Drake v. Milburn
2087 Gilletts and another v. Havant Gas Co. (Lim.)
2090 Buckland and others v. Davison
2106 Howard v. Kidd
2116 Briggs v. Elephant and Castle, &c., Repository (Lim.)
2123 Griffiths v. Curtis and another
2125 Hatton v. Whiting
2127 Logan v. Byers
2131 Renton v. De Leuville
2146 Ramus v. Midland Railway Co.
2159 Crowley v. Woodhouse
2165 Good v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
2177 Cutler v. North
2189 Shelbourne v. Band
2195 Sanguinetti v. Hilton and others
2197 Bottomley v. Smith and another
2210 Lane v. Wells
2211 Beard v. National Telephone Co. (Lim.)
2215 Duck v. Cooper
2217 Nagle v. Parish
2223 Josephs v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society (Lim.)
2234 Newton v. Hickmott
2248 Hayes and others v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co.
2251 Clement-Smith v. Macdonald
2253 Harris v. Daniell
2258 Hanson v. Martyn
2260 Burton v. Hotham
2264 Brain v. Stanley
2277 Smoke Abatement, &c. Association v. J. Hanson & Co.
2282 Toser v. Short
2285 De Jongh v. Levy
2290 Williams v. Simon
2291 Wilkinson v. Fry
2294 Ebury and others v. Dickinson & Co. (Lim.)
2305 Lethbridge v. Whitehead
2313 Arthur v. Pare and others
2316 Willis v. Lord

COMMON JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 1970 in this List will not be taken before Monday, June 1.

The following numbers will be in the List for trial on Tuesday, May 26: Nos. 1714 to 1825, both inclusive.

1714 Hurley v. London General Omnibus Co.
1788 Dowden v. White
1804 Escott v. Southern
1810 Weeks v. Smith
1802 Hounsell v. Land and Water (Lim.)
1825 Green v. Grant
1829 Cannon v. Neighbour
1839 Hill v. Schmalbach and others
1850 Studd v. Victoria Steamboat Association (Lim.)
1862 Harris v. North London Tramways Co.
1871 Wright v. Barwell
1883 Rayner v. Richards & Co.
1894 Reynolds v. Graham
1897 Lloyd v. Willis
344 Langford v. Goodman
825 Lloyd v. Eckersley
1151 Wilson v. Proprietors of the Labour Elector
1407 Daniel v. Walker
1462 Guinness & Co. v. Langham
1479 Jones v. Whitaker & Co.
1588 Whatford v. Rogers
1599 London and Provincial Printing Ink Co. v. Corbett
1763 Nash v. Brown
1764 Simpkins v. Same
1800 Naylor v. Stanley and others
1803 Patten v. Jones
1875 Biggs v. Healey
1902 Jones v. Smith and another
1905 West London Commercial Bank v. Cobbett
1927 Nathan v. Barnett
1930 Farmer v. Williams
1935 Kemp v. Madge
1942 Matthews v. Merdes
1953 Venerables & Co. v. Jelks
1954 Lawrence v. Donaldson
1957 Thurley v. Whittaker
1958 Callow and another v. Sell and others
1970 Palmer v. Taylor
1972 Ortelli v. Emerson
1983 Cruickshank v. Pelicann
1995 Harris v. Kite
1998 Alldred v. Everett and others
2013 Wells v. Hooker
2014 Longman v. Hargreaves
2022 Cowdrey v. Smith
2023 Somner v. Barnett
2024 Clarke v. Ramus
2026 Parry and Wife v. Regent's Canal, &c. Co.
2027 Hase v. Williams and others
2031 Roberts v. Beirnstein
2033 Norman & Stacey (Lim.) v. Beeman

2034 Beer v. Standard Supply Stores
2036 Bendall v. Pullen
2039 Philpot and Wife v. Green
2042 Leidig v. Hooker
2043 Clarke v. Cutforth Bros.
2047 Imperial Loan Co. (Lim.) v. Stone
2049 Winstanley v. Smith
2051 Longley v. Rawlings
2053 Jacobs v. Adams
2062 Barnes v. Dale
2065 Behrend v. Smith
2072 Morgan v. Preston
2081 Harvey v. Elgar
2086 Beauchamp v. Fagg
2095 Brough v. Packer
2098 Keiller v. Browne
2100 Read v. Theobald & Co. and another
2101 May and another v. Powis & Son
2102 Willis v. Bex
2112 Donovan v. Brotherton
744 Damiral v. Mallalue
2119 Mortlock v. Cracknell
2120 Alexander v. Jenkins
2128 Semple v. Orr
2142 Hunt v. Hoare
2147 Saunders v. Rous & Co.
2149 Sides v. Iles
2151 Wall v. Clarke
2152 Burchell v. St. Leonards Freehold Land Society
2156 Blanche v. Kersey
2160 Bona v. Erskine
2162 Everson v. Leith
2163 Kearley and another v. Wardle
2166 Warner v. White
2172 Lane v. Hobbs
2180 Colcock v. Goodings
2181 Akerman v. Head and others
2194 M'Arthur v. Isaacs and another
2196 Stroud and Wife v. Dines and another
2209 Spencer v. Kingcombe
2225 Oakley v. Oakley and another
2232 Bennett v. Cruickshank
2236 Jennings v. Nurse
2239 Freeman v. Baker
2241 Aitchison v. Witty
2254 Gray v. London and County Stock and Share Agency Co.

ACTIONS WITHOUT JURIES.

Actions beyond No. 1870 in this List will not be taken before Monday, June 1.

The following Numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, May 26: Nos. 1431 to 1737, both inclusive.

1431 Steamship Insurance Syndicate v. Mortgage Insurance Corporation (Lim.)
2368 West and others v. Marks and another
Middle Class Dwellings Co. v. St. Giles' District Board of Works
1458 Wills v. Freeman
20A Stubbins v. Churchill & Son
1793 Belcher v. Belcher
1794 Smith & Co. v. Cooke and another
1796 Wigg v. Grant
1798 Wolff v. Fontaine
1807 Jones v. Purkiss and another
1809 Poland v. Walpole & Co.
1812 City of Genoa Waterworks Co. v. Argentine Loan, &c. Co.
1820 Woodrow v. Wilcox
1822 Sturgeon v. Wallwork & Co.
1823 Tucker v. Savage
1827 Hanford v. New Westminster Brewery Co. (Lim.)
1830 Bailey v. Brown
1835 Riman v. Steedman
1836 Hargreave v. Sultan
1838 Bennett and another v. Pipe
1841 Grogan & Boyd v. Wilson
1843 Russell v. Richens
1844 Bird v. Jubber
1846 Productive Investment Benefit Building Society v. Ewing
1847 Williams v. Wynniatt
1854 Mossop and another v. Hope
1857 Preston & Co. v. Caldwell
1578 Norton v. Burr and another
1583 Lamplough v. Harries
1625 Hamer v. Thompson
1638 Knight v. Hobbs
1645 Chariton, M'Allum & Co. v. W. Crundall & Co.
1657 Northam Bridge and Road Co. v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
1683 Morton v. Birkbeck Freehold Land Society
1695 Scott v. Woollranch
1693 Tanner v. Green
1694 Collingwood v. Wilson
1695 Smith v. Adamson
1706 Walter and another v. Gilbert and another
1734 Cassells v. Fraser
1740 Watson v. National Debenture, &c. Corporation (Lim.) and another
1743 Moore v. Budd
1759 Forster v. Eyre
1767 Jacomb v. Turner
1773 Glaister v. Stainton
1775 Hirst and others v. Boyle and others
1776 Pocock v. Richardson
1781 Pedder v. Richardson
1783 Howell v. Rasetti
1786 Young v. Phillips
1631 Jupe v. Rawlins
1634 Healing v. C. H. Healing (Lim.)
1643 Rose v. Bank of Australasia
1692 Lane v. Simmons
1737 House Investors' Corporation (Lim.) v. Sussems
1748 Lankester & Co. v. Fardell & Co.
1753 Prentis & Co. v. Reed
1757 Ross v. Flatau & Co.
1762 Henry Roberts & Co. v. Phillips & Son
1766 Mixen v. Goodyear
1772 Farquharson v. Croaker
3 Boyd v. Farrar
21 Tilt Cove Copper Co. v. Comptoir d'Escompte and others
72 Head and another v. Bumpus
666 Watkins v. Chaney
692 James v. Willis
745 B. Morris & Sons (Lim.) v. Morris
835 Young v. American Telephone Co.
1176 Mitchell v. De Veysey and another
1200 Peat v. Webster
1346 Ingle v. Duke of Manchester
1360 Hedger v. Payne and others
1437 Lund v. Fairhead
1541 Thompson v. General Stock Exchange, &c. Co. (Lim.)
1859 Smith v. Salomon
1861 Smith v. Ratcliffe
1869 Reynold's Gold Mining Co. v. Bailey
1870 Same v. Macnaughten
1874 Brass v. Abrahams
1877 Todd v. Ridgway
1878 Blake v. Hanbury
1881 Fleck v. Flower
1884 Brothers and another v. North & Co.
1890 Corporation of Lancaster v. Brash
1891 Dixon v. Cook
1892 House Property, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Wiles and another
1893 Cook and others v. Eckroyd and others
1895 Samuel & Escombe v. Magniac
1896 Cotching v. Simmons
1898 Fletcher v. Morrison
1904 Wadeson v. Morgan
1906 Lewis v. Foster and another
1910 Hart v. Martin
1914 Dinn v. Grover
1915 Major v. Tarrant and another
1916 Davis v. Gill
1917 Shroff v. Barwick and another
1918 Thompson's Patent Gravity Switchback Railway Co. (Lim.) v. Earle
1921 M'Rae and another v. Palmer and another
1922 M'Namara & Co. (Lim.) v. Clark
1928 Daniel v. Preston
1929 Smoke Abatement and Coal Saving Association (Lim.) v. Croft, Wells & Co.
1931 Goodman v. Wyatt and another
1933 Maclure and others v. Hatch
1934 Hancock and another v. Hatch
1939 Myers v. Lawson
1940 Same v. British Cattle Foods Co. (Lim.)
1941 Thorpe v. Wigg
1943 Jenkinson and another v. Bullock
1944 British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co. v. Bellaggio Estate and others
1945 W. T. Henley's Telegraph Works Co. (Lim.) v. Halifax and Bermudas Cable Co.
1946 Same v. Same
1947 Same v. Same
1949 Cattell & Co. v. Pearce
1950 Coates, Son & Co. v. Macklin
1951 London and Suburban Co-operative Stores (Lim.) v. Jones
1955 Barrett v. Hinds
1956 Oppenheimer Brothers & Co. v. Nugent
1961 Pugh, Jones & Co. v. Hilton
1962 Smith v. Gronow and others
1963 Wyatt v. Maude and Langham
1964 Bedford v. Bennett
1965 Same v. Bennett & Co.
1969 Egleton v. Nichols & Son
2715 In re Nichols's Patent
1974 Brogden v. Lord C. J. Hamilton and others
1979 Hobbs v. Jarvis and another
1980 Forde v. Forde
1982 Chettleburgh v. Golledge
1985 Kingston v. Wylie & Ponsonby
1986 Mills v. Fisher
1988 Poland and another v. Stopford
1990 Gates v. Cannon & Gaze
1991 Same v. Cannon
1993 Barrow v. Powell
1994 Barber v. Hall
1996 Wilson v. Union Oil Mills (Lim.) and another
1997 Harris v. Downs and another
2000 Dobbin v. Green and another
2006 Macrory and another v. Hawkins
2008 Lepard & Smiths v. Allison & Radcliffe
2011 Argent and another v. Benham
2012 Hood v. Prim
2017 J. Hunter, Wiltshire & Co. (Lim.) v. Leigh and another
2018 Hughes & Co. v. Same
2019 Salomon v. Garnar
2021 Rosenfeld (trading, &c.) v. Meinertzhagen
2030 Manigot v. Taylor
2035 Sage v. Thorne
2041 Martin v. Goodrham
2046 Hart v. Tallack
2048 Bennetts v. Ludlow
2056 Tullock v. Richards & Co.
2057 Smith v. Bodley
2058 Burbidge v. Smith and Richardson
2059 Schaap and Hilburn v. Raffaele
2064 Brooke and Addison v. Macevoy
2068 Universal Stock Exchange Co. (Lim.) v. Boteler
2071 Gruggen v. Laitwood and another
2074 Foale v. Toser
2075 Naylor and others v. Oliver
2076 Greaves v. Hyde
2079 Cheese v. Grocott
2091 Gwynne v. Meek
2094 Jacobs v. Potter
2099 Jones v. Gruggen
2107 Wilson v. Honess
2108 Golds v. Roberts and others
2109 Ferreira and others v. Poole
2111 Pegge v. Donaldson
2113 Milligate and others v. Longhurst
2114 Panmure, Gordon & Co. v. Whitworth
2115 Davis v. Norris
2118 Fold v. Deerhurst
2121 Mercer and others v. Innes
2124 Brewer v. Waring
2129 Brandreth v. Hillyard
2130 House v. House
2134 Tice v. Cox and others
2135 Same v. Tipping

SUMMARY.

Actions entered for Trial to May 18, 1891.

Middlesex—Special Jury	200
Common Jury	230
London—Special Jury	71
Common Jury	31
Without Juries	544
Total	1,076

NOTE.—This Summary shows the total number of actions for trial up to and inclusive of the above date, and includes the actions contained in the foregoing printed Lists.

LONDON.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 2685 in this List will not be taken before Monday, June 1.

The following Numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, May 26: Nos. 1864 to 2522 both inclusive.

1864 Adamson v. 'Bayonne' SS. Co. (Lim.)
2138 Ames v. Great Western Railway Co.
2474 Bannister v. Same
2150 Flynn v. Worthington & Co.
2155 Were v. Darby & Co. (Lim.)
2175 Dinn v. O'Malley and the Star
2240 Vickers v. Gardiner
2506 Austin v. Alexander, Maw & Co.
2522 Potter v. Moore and another
2547 Whimster and another v. Southern States Land, &c. Co. (Lim.)
2571 Hampton & Sons v. London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.)
2580 'Amur' SS. Co. (Lim.) v. Strand Slipway Co.
2581 'Oxus' SS. Co. (Lim.) v. Same
2601 Dinn v. Copleston and others
2604 Fisher and another v. Hilton and others
803 Lamb v. London and India Docks Joint Committee
911 M'Farlane v. Lonergan
1283 Mora, Ona & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co.
1375 Adamson & Co. v. Horsley & Co.
1751 North v. Stopes
1818A Jeffrey v. Crawford and others
1842 Nelson, Donkin & Co. v. Lomer & Co.
1919 Marten and others v. Munich Assurance Co. (Lim.)
1989 Churchill & Co. v. National SS. Co.
2037 Urling v. Nordaas
2212 Pinto v. Aviss
2228 Redfern, Alexander & Co. v. McKeone & Co.
2262A Calvert v. Inglis
2270 Wagner v. Wagner
2289 Wilson, Sons & Co. (Lim.) v. 'Lanarkshire' Ship Co. (Lim.)
2299 Marx & Co. v. Moxon, Meyer & Co.
2339 Blackater v. Paul
2493 Friend v. Friend
2515 Service and others v. Moller & Co.
2540 Young v. Zealand Steamship Co.
2572 Southampton Naval Works v. Meek
2598 Wills & Co. v. Isaacs & Sons
2618 Smyth v. Perkins
2654 Day v. Argus Printing Co. and others
2656 Neott v. Newmarch
2659 Aarons v. Paddington Land, &c. Society (Lim.)
2661 Lawrence v. Redfern, Alexander & Co.
2672 Batt & Co. v. Byrne, Stothert & Co.
2679 Hayres v. Chisnell
2685 Cohen v. Rivaz
2698 Welch, Perrin & Co. v. Anderson & Co.
2698 Giddy v. Benham
2701 Marcussen v. Hilton and others
2753 Henderson v. Underwriting and Agency Association (Lim.)
2760 Willis v. Towerzey and others
2778 Boehm v. Vogt & Co.
2786 Bainbridge v. Boyes'
2795 Lewis & Peat v. May, Malcolm & Co.
2806 May, Malcolm & Co. v. Lewis & Peat
2807 Boret v. Musmann and another
2834 M'Gowan v. Stephens, Smith & Co.
2840 Jones v. Mockford
2847 Parker v. South-Eastern Railway Co.
2855 Webber v. Bonner
2857 Cocker v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
2866 Murray v. London Street Trams Co.
2899 Dallson v. Formby Cement Co. (Lim.)
2911 Jay v. London and Colonial Syndicate
2926 Hargreave v. Spink & Son

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce that Mr. SAMUEL BATE, formerly of Springfields, near Newcastle, and late of The Firs, Aylestone, near Leicester, died on May 5, after a week's illness. Mr. Bate was for many years agent for Lord Camoys; Mrs. Marsh-Caldwell, of Linley Wood, the well-known authoress; Mr. J. Ayshford Wise, of Clayton Hall, at one time M.P. for Stafford; and other Staffordshire landowners. He went to reside in Leicestershire in 1883, when extensive improvements upon the estates of his clients in that county required his more constant supervision. Ever-increasing business claims prevented him from taking any active part of late years in public matters, but in his younger days—as one of a long race of British yeomen—he felt a deep interest and took an active part in the Free Trade discussion. He was an ardent Protectionist and a frequent speaker at provincial meetings of that party. He was accustomed to contend that the prosperity of the country was very largely bound up with that of the agricultural interest, and was convinced that a too great dependence upon foreign supplies of corn must, in case of war with a strong naval power, seriously imperil the safety of the British Empire as it did in old times of the Roman. He strenuously advocated the adoption of a sliding scale instead of the total abolition of the duties on corn, and at the time of his death he confidently anticipated the speedy adoption by the whole nation of a Fair Trade policy and an Imperial federation with our colonies. He was a member of the Fair Trade League, of the Agricultural Benevolent Association, and for very many years of the Royal Agricultural Society and similar bodies of a local character. He was born at The Styche, near Market Drayton, a property and birthplace of the great Lord Clive, and was in his seventy-fourth year.

We have also to perform the sad duty of announcing the decease, within seven days of that of his father, of Mr. ROBERT BARRETT BATE, the late Mr. Bate's youngest son. The circumstances are peculiarly painful. Whilst Mr. Samuel Bate was passing through his fatal illness, his son was constantly at the invalid's bedside, and was with him during the last night of his life. On the day following his father's death it was remarked that he was looking unwell—his health had for some time been unsatisfactory—and on the following morning he was pronounced by his medical attendants to be too ill for removal. Despite all that could be done for him, he rapidly sank, and died in the morning of May 12, just a week after the decease of his father. Mr. Robert Bate, who was in his thirtieth year, was his father's constant companion and assistant in his business. The family will have the sincerest sympathy of all in the double bereavement which has thus fallen upon them. The funeral took place on Friday at Aylestone, there being no room for the remains to be placed in the family vault at Stoke-on-Trent. We understand that Mr. Bate's only surviving son, Mr. Samuel Stringer Bate, solicitor and land agent, who has been associated with his father and suspending private practice since the death of his elder brother, Mr. Alfred Bate, land and mineral agent, of Turnhurst Hall, Staffordshire, in 1881, succeeds to the business of them both. Mr. Stringer Bate, who was admitted in 1873, was a pupil of Matthew Folliott Blakiston, Esq., a nephew of Sir William Blakiston, Bart. (now of the firm of Hand, Blakiston & Everitt, of Stafford, and clerk of the peace for that county), and practised for several years at Newcastle-under-Lyme. In 1879 Mr. Bate, having the double qualification of a legal and estate agency experience, was a candidate for the comptrollership of the Chamber and Bridge House Estates of the City of London, and received very high testimonials, which were read before the corporation. But the chief clerk to the former comptroller was preferred for the appointment. Mr. Bate obtained the freedom of the City of London on that occasion.

SIR PATRICK (MAC CHOMBAICH DE) COLQUHOUN died on May 18 at his chambers in King's Bench Walk, Temple, from pneumonia, which was supposed to have ensued upon an attack of influenza. He was the eldest son of the late Chevalier James de Colquhoun, was born in 1815, and educated at Westminster, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. degree in 1837. He graduated M.A. in 1844, and was subsequently elected Honorary Fellow of the college. Besides these degrees he received that of Juris Utriusque Doctor at Heidelberg, and in 1852 that of LL.D. at Cambridge. In 1838 he was called to the bar at the Inner Temple, joining the Home Circuit, and soon afterwards was appointed Plenipotentiary by the Hanseatic Republic, of which his father had been agent and consul-general, to conclude commercial treaties with Turkey, Persia, and Greece. In 1857 he became Aulic Councillor to the King of Saxony, and he held the post of standing counsel to the legation of that sovereign until the abolition of the office in 1866. From the Government of Saxony, as well as from that of Oldenburg, for which he was Councillor of Legation, he received decorations. In 1858 Sir P.

Colquhoun was appointed by Sir E. Bulwer Lytton to be a member of the Supreme Court of Justice of the Ionian Isles; he became Chief Justice of the Court in 1861, and in the same year received the honour of knighthood. When the islands were ceded to Greece in 1864 he returned to England. Four years later he was made a Q.C. and a Master of the Bench of the Inner Temple, to which he was appointed treasurer in 1888. He was president of the Royal Society of Literature—in succession to Prince Leopold—up to the time of his death, and was president of the committee of that section of the International Orientalist Congress of which Dr. Leitner is the moving spirit. He wrote various treatises on political and classical subjects. His principal work, published between 1849 and 1860, was 'A Summary of the Roman Civil Law, illustrated by Commentaries and Parallels from the Mosaic, Canon, Mahomedan, English, and Foreign Laws.' Sir P. Colquhoun married, in 1843, Katherine, daughter of M. de St. Vitalis.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 14.

Lewis v. The Pontypridd, Caerphilly, and Newport Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Denman, J., dated November 22, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Cox and another v. Welch and another (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated January 15, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 14.

Dobson and another v. Festi, Rasini & Co. (Q.B. Division) (for leave to sign judgment against firm in default of appearance; heard May 13).—Dismissed.

Scholes v. Brook (appeal of defendants Brook and another from judgment of Romer, J., dated January 21).—Dismissed.

In re W. Worswick, dec. Robson v. Worswick (appeal of chaplains and poor of Wyggeston's Hospital, Leicester, from order of North, J., dated April 17, refusing liberty to cross-examine on affidavits in support of appellant's claim).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MAY 15.

No sitting.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, May 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Tuesday, May 26.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Wednesday, May 27.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Thursday, May 28.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Friday, May 29.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Saturday, May 30.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. THOMAS HACK (of the firm of Hack & Morris), of 8 Pancras Lane, Queen Street, Cheapside, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hack was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Charles Thurston Nicholls, of 10 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Nicholls was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Alfred William Lightbody (of the firm of Cleveland & Lightbody), of the Outer Temple, Strand, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lightbody was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Charles Eldred M'Leod, of 5 Dean's Court, Doctors' Commons, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. M'Leod was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Thomas William Hargraves, of 18 St. Thomas Street, Southwark, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hargraves was admitted in 1885.

THE CHANCERY DIVISION AND MR. JUSTICE WILLIAMS.—Mr. Justice Chitty, on returning into Court after the midday adjournment on May 14, stated that during the ensuing Trinity sittings Mr. Justice Williams would continue until the circuits commenced to sit as an additional judge of the Chancery Division to try witness actions, and, by an arrangement with Mr. Justice Romer, would take a portion of the witness actions in Mr. Justice Romer's list. This was what had been arranged, and his lordship thought that it ought to be known as soon as possible.

THE HEARING OF PROBATE AND DIVORCE CAUSES.—The following are the arrangements for hearing probate and matrimonial causes during the ensuing Trinity sittings—viz. causes for hearing before the Court itself will be taken from Monday, June 8, to Monday, June 29, both days inclusive: (1) defended matrimonial, (2) probate, (3) undefended matrimonial. Special jury cases will be taken from Wednesday, July 1, to Monday, July 20, both days inclusive, probate causes first and matrimonial afterwards. Common jury causes will be taken on and after Wednesday, July 22, probate being taken first and matrimonial after. Notices of any alteration and further information will be inserted in the daily lists from time to time. Summonses will be heard in chambers at 10.15, and motions will be heard in Court at 11.30 on Tuesday next, and on every succeeding Tuesday during the sittings.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MAY 25 TO MAY 30.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	May 25	May 26	May 27	May 28	May 29	May 30
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	—	—	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Ilkeston	Burton	Ashbourne	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—

QUEEN'S BENCH ACTIONS.—The number of Queen's Bench actions set down for trial during the ensuing Trinity sittings reach a total of 1,076, consisting of 200 special and 230 common jury cases in the Middlesex list, 71 special and 31 common jury cases in the London list, and 544 cases in the non-jury list. The case of Wiedemann v. Walpole (which is the strange breach of promise action brought by Miss Wiedemann against Mr. Walpole, the first trial in which was heard some time ago, and resulted in a nonsuit, after which the plaintiff ultimately obtained a new trial) is only twelve down in the list of special juries in the Middlesex list, and will therefore soon be reached when the Courts reopen; and the baccarat case of Sir William Gordon Cumming against Mr. Wilson and others has been fixed for hearing before the Lord Chief Justice and a special London jury on Monday, June 1. In the long list of Queen's Bench actions published on Saturday last, only eight cases of breach of promise of marriage are set down for trial. It is announced that at the commencement of the Trinity sittings two Courts for special and one Court for Middlesex common juries will be constituted; two Courts will sit to hear London special juries; and two or three Courts will try actions without juries.

THE WORKING OF THE FIRST OFFENDERS ACT.—By the Probation of First Offenders Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 25), magistrates received power to release on probation persons convicted of larceny, false pretences, or any other offence punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment, where no previous conviction is proved, if it appears to the bench, on account of youth, character, and antecedents, or the trivial nature of the offence, to be expedient to do so. The offender is to enter into recognisances, with or without sureties, to come up for judgment, if called on, within a specified time. A return has just been laid before Parliament showing the number of cases in which persons have been released under the provisions of this Act in the Metropolitan Police District, the West Riding of Yorkshire, Lancashire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, and Durham—the most densely populated parts of England—during 1888, 1889, and 1890, and also the number of cases in which such persons have been called upon to appear and receive judgment, or are known to have been subsequently convicted of a fresh offence. The figures seem to show that the statute has worked efficaciously. Out of 614 persons released on probation in 1888, thirty-six have either been called up for judgment through failure to observe the condition of their recognisances or have been subsequently convicted; out of 924 released in 1889, sixty-nine; and out of 992 in 1890, sixty-four were recalled or convicted a second time. These figures, however, do not represent altogether the application of the principle of the Act by magistrates. In some very important Courts, including three in London, the provisions of section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, are used instead, and the same end thus secured, while in other Courts long adjournments, without proceeding to conviction, are employed, or cautious and nominal punishments are administered.

BIRTHS.

At Rondebosch, Cape Town, the wife of H. Juta, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On May 15, at 2 Upper Phillimore Gardens, W., the wife of Percy F. Wheeler, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Whit-Sunday, May 17, at 4 Gledhow Gardens (the residence of her mother, Lady Henderson), the wife of Reginald J. N. Neville, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On May 12, at the English Church, Rue d'Agnesseau, Paris, Reginald Raoul Lemprière, Barrister-at-Law, only son of the Rev. William Lemprière, Seigneur of Rozel Manor, Jersey, to the Baroness Clementine Justine Fanny, only child of the late Baron Constantine von Gültlingen, of Stüttgart, Germany.

On May 13, at the Parish Church, Wimbledon, William T. Hick, Solicitor, son of the late Captain W. T. Hick, of Scarborough, to Elizabeth (Lise), daughter of the late G. H. Champion, of Riverhead, Kent, and stepdaughter of Henry Bull, of Calcutta.

On May 14, at the Catholic Apostolic Church, Mare Street, Hackney, George Willson, Solicitor, of Downs Park Road, Hackney, eldest son of George Willson, Esq., of Dudley House, Ramsgate, to Mary Elizabeth, only daughter of Thomas Pratt Hollick, Esq., of Shore Road, Hackney.

On May 15, at Draxford, Henry Reginald, eldest son of F. R. H. Sharp, of Woodlawn, Blackheath, late of the Madras Civil Service, to Edith Maude, sixth daughter of the late W. A. Way, Solicitor, of Botley and Portsmouth.

DEATHS.

On March 19, drowned in the Saigon River, Cochin China, Robert Peter Tait, Second Officer s.s. Abyssinia, son of Thomas Tait, Solicitor, Moffat.

On April 26, at Willesden, Amelia Susan Marie, only daughter of the late Chevalier Wolff, wife of William Nicholson, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On April 28, at 49 Upper Bedford Place, W.C., Alfred Tanner Harris, Solicitor, aged 41, eldest son of Charles Harris, Solicitor, late of Bristol.

On May 12, suddenly, at Wandsworth, Robert Crawford, only surviving son of the late John Holland, Barrister-at-Law.

On May 13, at the Lawn, Lincoln, Richard Caparn, of Holbeach, Solicitor, aged 76 years.

On May 13, at 104 New Walk, Leicester, Jane Eliza, widow of the late George Toller, of Leicester, Solicitor, aged 73 years.

On May 14, at the Red House, Wateringbury, Kent, Francis Russell, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Clerk of the Peace for the County of Kent, aged 75 years.

On May 15, at 15 Brunswick Street, Hillside, Edinburgh, Andrew John Dickson, Solicitor Supreme Courts, in his 69th year.

On May 15, at Beryl, Wells, John Henry Blackburne, Captain (Retired) R.A., son of the late Right Honourable Francis Blackburne, some time Lord Chancellor and Lord Chief Justice of Ireland.

On May 16, at Holbeach, William Bennett Stableforth, Solicitor, in his 41st year.

On May 18, at 4 Manor Gardens, Holloway, in her 93rd year, Mary, widow of J. B. Meredith, Esq., Solicitor, Cheltenham, and second daughter of the late William Ebsworth, of Bristol.

On May 18, at his residence, Bromley, Kent, Samuel Mullens, Solicitor, aged 72 years.

On May 18, at Coventry, of pneumonia, George Woodcock, Solicitor, aged 54 years.

On May 19, at 2 Vicarage Gardens, Kensington, Donald MacLennan, Barrister-at-Law, of the Inner Temple.

	Per Annum £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

Now that Whitsuntide is past and gone, it is not very difficult to foresee what Acts, in addition to some score already passed, of which the Tithe Act is the most important, may be expected to be placed on the statute-book of 1891. Of amending Government bills, the Irish Land Bills, the Free Education Bill (though not yet introduced), the Factories Bill, the Summary Jurisdiction (Youthful Offenders) Bill, the Penal Servitude Bill, the Public Health Metropolis (Amendment) Bill, and the recently introduced Evidence Law Amendment Bill will in all probability be passed; but the fate of the Public Trustee Bill must perhaps be considered doubtful. Amongst consolidating measures, the Evidence Law Consolidation Bill, two Stamp Duties Bills, the Trustee Bill (by which it is proposed to consolidate the Trustee Acts and the Trustee Relief Acts), and the Public Health Metropolis (Consolidation) Bill will probably be got through. Amongst private members' bills, the Conveyancing Act Amendment Bill (by which Mr. Bolton proposes greatly to relieve the hardships of lessees in connection with the covenant not to underlet without the consent of lessors), the Slander of Women Bill, and the Museum and Gymnasium Bill (see ante, p. 347) seem to have the best chance. We wish we could add Lord Herschell's valuable Sale of Goods Bill to the list. If this measure could be passed, mercantile law—of which such important parts as those relating to bills of exchange, merchandise marks, and partnership were systematised in 1882, 1887 and 1890 respectively—would in point of form become by far the most intelligible branch of the law. But, unless the House of Commons can be persuaded to accept the bill en bloc as it will shortly come down to them from the House of Lords, the Sale of Goods Bill will remain a bill and nothing more at the close of the session. One measure, which has not been so much as mentioned in Parliament as yet, will very soon be rendered necessary by the near approach of a general election, and that is a measure to amend and make perpetual the Ballot Act of 1872. This Act, by an amendment made in the House of Lords, had originally a ten years' life only, is now, and has been for nearly ten more years, kept up by the very awkward machinery of the Expiring Laws Continuance Acts annually passed, and is at present limited to expire on December 31, 1891. A slip—and such a slip is possible—by which its renewal might be overlooked, would lead to a confusion in electioneering which it is perfectly frightful to contemplate.

LETTERS from the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General respectively have recently been published in the Times (whether with or without the consent of those learned gentlemen does not appear) in connection with the subject of copyright. Sir Richard Webster proclaims his great interest in the endeavour to attain a proper reward for literary and artistic labour, and his desire to further it when any opportunity may arise, while Sir Edward Clarke more specifically declares himself on the side of the protectionists in the controversy between English and American printers, but otherwise expressly confines himself to general expressions of sympathy with the producers and owners of copyright. The cold reception of Lord Monkswell's bill by the Government in the House seems to show that in some high quarters, at all events, the views of the law officers are not shared, as the introduction of that bill afforded a most favourable opportunity for dealing comprehensively and satisfactorily with the subject of copyright law reform, which, fortunately for those interested in it, is absolutely unconnected with politics.

THE American Copyright Act will 'go into effect,' as the transatlantic phrase is, on July 1 next, but it is expressly provided by section 13 that it 'shall only apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign State or nation when such foreign State or nation permits to the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens, or when such a foreign State or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States of America may, at its pleasure, become a party to such agreement.' 'The existence of either of the conditions aforesaid,' it is added, 'shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this Act may require.' Turning to Article 18 of the Berne Convention, to which England, Belgium, France, Germany, Hayti, Italy, Spain, Switzerland were originally parties, and to which Luxembourg and Monaco have subsequently adhered, we find that article 18 prescribes that 'countries which have not become parties to the present Convention, and which grant by their domestic law protection of rights secured by this Convention, shall be admitted to accede thereto on request to that effect to be notified in writing to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, who will communicate it to all the other countries of the Union' of the contracting States for the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works. It seems, therefore, that, inasmuch as actual accession to the Berne Convention on the part of the United States of America is not required for the second condition named in section 13 of the American Copyright Act to operate, but only the right of accession, the President of the United States may see his way to determine the existence of the second condition in the case of this and other countries which are parties to the Berne Convention without having to determine the more difficult question whether the first condition exists or not.

To what extent, if any, is a barbed wire fence legal? This is a question which must sooner or later, we should imagine, be brought before the Courts, and the recent laceration by such a fence of two of the horses of the Dorking coach has brought it prominently before the public. Considerable light is thrown upon it by the well-known cases of Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 489, and Jordin v. Crump, 8 M. & W. 782, in both of which cases the action was brought for compensation for damage to a dog by dog-spears set by the defendant to prevent dogs chasing game. In Deane v. Clayton the Court was, in 1817, equally divided, with the result that after most elaborate arguments no judgment at all was entered; but in Jordin v. Crump it was held, on demurrer, that a plea that the dog-spears were set to preserve game and to disable and kill dogs pursuing them, 'of which the plaintiff had notice,' was held good, and it was further held that the plea would have been good if there had been no allegation of notice. 'It is true,' said Baron Alderson, in delivering the judgment of the Court, 'that the law in certain cases makes an exception to the right of setting instruments capable of causing deadly injuries to human life, where such injury will be a probable consequence of setting them' (see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31, re-enacting 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 18); 'but, with the exception of those cases, a man has the right to do what he pleases with his own land.' Section 31 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, enacts that 'whosoever shall set any spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with the intent that the same may destroy life or inflict grievous bodily harm upon a trespasser or other person coming in contact therewith, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.' Could not the rider of a horse in the hunting-field be a person within the meaning of this section? We incline to think that he could; but we are pretty sure that no Court would hold a barbed wire fence to be an engine. The general question will be found dealt with in the County Court case of Bennett v. Blackmore (see the Field for January 24, 1891), in which his Honour Judge Edge gave judgment against the owner of a barbed wire fence, following with approval the judgment of the Court of Session in the Scotch case of The Elgin Road Trustees v. Innes.

A CONTRIBUTORY cause to the injury to the horses of the Dorking coach was the sudden appearance of two bicycles. Here we are on safer legal ground than in the case of barbed wire. The Local Government Act, 1888, s. 85, declares 'bicycles, tricycles, velocipedes, and other similar machines,' to be carriages within the meaning of the Highway Acts (so as to render any person liable to a penalty for cycling furiously), and further enacts that: (1) Lamps shall be carried by cyclists 'during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise,' and (2) that 'upon overtaking any cart or carriage, or any horse or foot passenger proceeding along the carriage way,' every cyclist 'shall within a reasonable distance from and before passing such cart or carriage, horse, or other foot passenger, give audible warning' of the approach of the bicycle, &c. If any accident should result from these statutory requirements being disregarded, we have no reasonable doubt that an action would lie against the cyclist disregarding them at the suit of the party injured; and there is some ground for saying, on the authority of Powell v. Fall, 49 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 428, that an action would lie, even if all the statutory requirements should have been complied with.

CONVEYANCERS are familiar enough with the recognised forms for creating a mortgage by sub-demise of leaseholds. If it is considered undesirable that the leaseholder should assign the whole of his term to the mortgagee (and, if there are any onerous covenants, it probably is so), the sub-demise leaves a nominal reversion of a day or a few days outstanding in the mortgagor. The mortgagor declares himself to be a trustee of this reversion for the mortgagee; and to obviate any difficulty that there might be in getting the mortgagor to convey it, the latter gives an irrevocable power of attorney to the mortgagee to enable him to use the mortgagor's name in any deed of assignment or otherwise as may be necessary. So far the familiar practice leads us, but in Mr. Wolstenholme's new book of 'Forms and Precedents,' 5th edit. p. 50, we find the following additional form: 'And it is hereby declared that the said [mortgagee(s)] and the persons deriving title under them shall have power to appoint a new trustee for the purpose of the trust aforesaid.' To this a note is appended—namely, 'This form (suggested by my friend Mr. Sargant) enables a vesting declaration to be made under the Conveyancing Act, s. 34.' That section, it will be remembered, enables the appointor by deed of a new trustee to vest the trust property in the new or continuing trustee or trustees by a simple vesting declaration. Henceforth, if Mr. Wolstenholme's form is adopted, the mortgagee will not suffer much from the mortgagor's refusal, unfitness, or want of capability to act in the trust, but can appoint another person to take his place. Presumably the mortgagee could not, under this power, arbitrarily appoint a new trustee, but only if the mortgagor's case came within the provisions of section 31 of the Conveyancing Act. If the mortgagor did come within those provisions, and the mortgagee refused to appoint a new one in his stead, the mortgagor would be in the same predicament as a single trustee of a settlement is now, when the person to whom the power of appointment is committed will not appoint.

AN interesting point was raised in Blackman v. Fysh (Notes of Cases, p. 26) on the familiar question of equitable execution. A testator devised freehold land to his son for life, and after his death unto and between his children, and declared that his son should have no power 'to sell, dispose of, mortgage, charge or otherwise anticipate' his life estate, and that in case he should do any of these things, or his estate should be 'taken in execution by any process of law for the benefit of any creditor,' then the devise should become void. After the testator's death a creditor of the son obtained judgment against him in the Queen's Bench Division, and a receiver was appointed of his interest under the will by way of equitable execution. No elegit was sued out, and it did not appear that there was any obstacle to the lands being extended under an elegit. Mr. Justice Kekewich decided that the appointment of a receiver worked a forfeiture of the son's life estate. There is no doubt that Mr. Justice Kekewich was bound to recognise the order of the Queen's Bench Division until it had been discharged; but there is equally no doubt that there was no jurisdiction to make such an order so long as the decision of the Court of Appeal in Atkins v. Shephard, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 83; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 131, is unreversed. In that case Lord Justice Cotton says: 'Until recently nobody ever thought that an order for a receiver could be obtained in aid of a legal judgment unless there was a hindrance to obtaining execution at law. If any practice has grown up of granting such an order where there is no hindrance to obtaining execution at law, it is a practice which has never been brought before the Court of Appeal, and which, in my opinion, is wrong.'

MR. SUMMERS has been representing in the House of Commons that in 'certain national schools' a catechism is used in which a child is taught to say that it is very dangerous to leave the Church and also a grievous sin, and further, that 'we should only attend places of worship in connection with the Church of England,' and inquiring of Mr. Smith whether this is not a violation of the 'conscience clause' of the Education Acts. The question, though legal, is a comparatively simple one. There are two kinds of school recognised as 'public elementary'—the voluntary school, or school supported by voluntary contributions, the Parliamentary grant, and the fees of the scholars; and the School Board school, supported out of the school rates, the Parliamentary grant, and the fees of the scholars. Each kind of school has a conscience clause of its own. In respect of the voluntary school, it is provided by section 7 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, that 'it shall not be required, as a condition of any child being admitted into the school, that he shall attend or abstain from attending any Sunday school or any place of religious worship or any religious observance in the school or elsewhere,' and also that any scholar may be withdrawn from religious instruction in the school without forfeiting any of the other benefits of the school. As to a School Board school, however, it is provided expressly by section 14, subsection 2 of the Act, that 'no religious catechism or religious formulary which is distinctive of any particular denomination shall be taught in the school.' Viewed by the light of these two enactments, the catechism complained of by Mr. Summers appears to be clearly in contravention of section 14, subsection 2, if used in a Board school, as being distinctive of a particular denomination; whereas, if in a voluntary school, the use of it is clearly legal, so long as the attendance at the catechetical service is not made a condition of any child being admitted into the school.

IN In re Jablochkoff's Patent, not yet officially reported, two points of interest were raised, and one of them was decided. Lord Shand intimated a strong opinion that the doctrine laid down in In re Heurteloup, 1 Web. P. C. 553—viz. that, for the purpose of supporting a petition for confirmation, 'publication' is 'user' within the meaning 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, s. 2—does not apply to a case in which the publication attributes the invention to the petitioner himself. At the same time, the Judicial Committee held that section 113, subsection 1 of the Act of 1883 preserves, in the case of an old patent, not only the right to confirmation but the liability, prescribed by section 25 of the Act of 1852, to expire with a prior foreign patent for the same invention. It seems, therefore, that the 'interdependence clause' will not disappear from English patent law till December 31, 1897.

UNDER section 36 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, arbitrators 'may, at the request of either party, state a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Judicature on any question of law.' Until the passing of the Arbitration Act of 1889, it was perfectly clear that the arbitrators could not be compelled to state a case, the foregoing provision being discretionary and not imperative. The arbitrators had complete jurisdiction over the matter in dispute, free from the control of any Court. Unless, agreeably with the request of either party, they chose to state a case, because they personally felt in doubt and desired to have the opinion of the Court upon a question of law, the arbitrators were not bound to do so.

THE Arbitration Act of 1889, however, by section 19, empowers the Court to order an arbitrator to state a special case for the opinion of the Court. And in the recent case of In re An Arbitration between Knight and The Tabernacle Building Society (Notes of Cases, p. 28) the question arose whether, having regard to that section, the Court had jurisdiction to order arbitrators, appointed to determine a dispute between an incorporated building society and one of its members, to state a case raising a question of law for the decision of the High Court. The case came before Mr. Justice Wills and Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, and their lordships decided it in the negative, being guided by the enactment contained in section 24 of the Act of 1889. Section 24 renders the statute applicable to every arbitration under any Act passed before or after the commencement of the Act of 1889, 'except so far as this Act is inconsistent with the Act regulating the arbitration, or with any rules or procedure authorised or recognised by that Act.' Their lordships thought that it would be highly 'inconsistent' with section 36 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, that arbitrators should be ordered to state a case when the substance of that section was that the Court should have jurisdiction only where its assistance was invoked by the arbitrators themselves. With that decision we ventured at the time to express our entire concurrence. In fact, it seemed to us that the conclusion arrived at by the learned judge was an inevitable one.

It seems, however, that the Court of Appeal have taken a contrary view, and, in a considered judgment, delivered on the 15th ult., the decision of the Court below has been reversed. The learned judges of the Court of Appeal did not consider the Acts inconsistent, so that the whole argument founded upon that supposition fell to the ground. If there was no inconsistency obviously there could be no doubt but that the Act of 1889 applied. In one sense, said Lord Justice Fry, the obligation to state a case in the Arbitration Act, 1889, was inconsistent with the absence of that obligation in the Building Societies Act, 1874, but that was not the kind of inconsistency meant in section 24. The inconsistency, he added, must be such that the effect of imposing the provisions of the Arbitration Act would be to make the machinery of the earlier Act entirely unworkable. Members of building societies are to be congratulated that the Court of Appeal have seen their way to so construe the statute, since it is essentially in their favour, that arbitrators, whether they like it or not, can be ordered to state a case, and blunders thereby obviated.

The practical effect of section 80 in the Tithes Commutation Act, 1836, has probably escaped the attention of many landowners and their legal advisers. The point, however, is worth noting, and is well exemplified in our report, in another column, of a remitted action tried at Lymington County Court. The plaintiff's counsel seems to have relied on the rule existing in the analogous case of land-tax. The learned deputy-judge was, however, clearly bound to give full legal effect to the words 'allowed in account,' and gave judgment accordingly.

SLANDER.

Our reports for May contain two interesting cases on the subject of slander, both coming before the public with the imprimatur of the Court of Appeal upon them. In Pittard v. Oliver, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 219; L. R. (1891) 1 Q. B. Div. 474, a guardian of the poor was charged with slandering the late clerk to the guardians in the presence of newspaper reporters, by describing him 'as a man who for years had been robbing public money,' and referring to his conduct as 'the defalcations of an unfaithful servant.' These words were used at a meeting of guardians on the question as to whether a sum should be paid to the plaintiff in settlement of his claim against the board. This claim was eventually sent to a referee in an action brought by the plaintiff against the guardians, who found in favour of the plaintiff for the whole amount claimed by him. Thereupon this action was brought, and the jury found 'that the words were spoken honestly in the discharge of a public duty, without malice, but carelessly,' and gave the plaintiff a verdict for forty shillings damages. Upon further consideration, Mr. Justice Mathew held that the occasion on which the words were uttered was privileged, and gave judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed. It was conceded that the occasion would have been privileged if there had been no reporters present, as it was the duty of the guardians to discuss the conduct of their servants. In Mr. Odger's 'Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander,' 2nd edit. p. 197, cases of qualified privilege are grouped under three heads: '(1) Where circumstances cast upon the defendant the duty of making a communication to a certain other person, to whom he makes such communication in the bonâ fide performance of such duty; (2) where the defendant has an interest in the subject-matter of the communication, and the person to whom he communicates it has a corresponding interest; (3) fair and impartial reports of the proceedings of any Court or of Parliament.' The guardian's words were well within either class (1) or class (2), as it was his duty to communicate the fact that the person whose claim they proposed thus to compromise had been cheating them, if he sincerely believed it, to his brother-guardians, and he and they had a corresponding interest in the subject-matter of the communication. The privilege is said to be qualified by that learned author, as it may be taken away if the communication is uttered maliciously, and it has not, therefore, the absolute privilege of a judge of the High Court or a barrister. The simple question for the Court was as to the effect of reporters being present, seeing that the defendant had no moral obligation to make the communication to them, and had no common interest with them in the subject-matter of the communication. Lord Esher distinguished this case from the cases where the confidential privileges had been held lost by the mode in which the communication, otherwise privileged, had been made, namely, on a postcard or in a telegram, and decided that the guardian had not lost his privilege through the presence of the reporters. The rest of the Court came to the same decision, though Lord Justice Fry suggested that it would be well for guardians to hold discussions of this kind in private.

The second case is that of Speight v. Gosnay, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 231, where the defendant uttered defamatory words about the plaintiff which were not actionable unless special damage was proved. The plaintiff's mother repeated them to the plaintiff, and she told them to a man to whom she was engaged, and who, she alleged, broke off the engagement in consequence. She then sought to make the defendant liable in damages for the slander which he had uttered. The curious point to observe is, that the plaintiff herself was part of the chain by which the slander got to her lover, and 'every repetition of a slander is a wilful publication of it, rendering the speaker liable to an action' (Odgers, p. 162). In Parkins v. Scott, 31 Law J. Rep. Exch. 331; 1 Hurl. & C. 153, Baron Bramwell said: 'Where one man makes a statement to another, and that other thinks fit to repeat it to a third, I do not think it reasonable to hold the first speaker responsible for the ultimate consequences of his speech. If I make a statement to a man, I know the consequences of making it to him when I make it; but if I do not desire, and do not authorise the man to whom

I make it to repeat it, but he does it, am I to be liable for the consequences of his so doing?' The learned baron might have added an à fortiori: Am I to be liable when the slandered person herself brings about the catastrophe by repeating the defamation, when she might have kept silence on the subject? In that case a wife repeated to her husband some vile abuse which another woman had uttered to her, with the result that he would no longer live with her. The Exchequer Division, holding that there was no moral obligation on the wife's part to repeat it, held that the original slanderer was not liable. The Court of Appeal in the recent case came to a similar conclusion. 'Here the words,' said Lord Justice Lopes, 'were untrue, and the mother must have known that they were untrue, and there could not be any obligation either on the mother or the daughter to repeat them to Galloway' (the lover). His lordship also pointed out that there were four classes of cases where the original slanderer could be made liable for the repetition of the slander, viz.: (1) Where he authorised the repetition, (2) where he intended it, (3) where the repetition was the natural consequence of the uttering, and (4) where there was a moral obligation on the person to whom he uttered it to repeat it. This case fell within none of those classes.

SOME RECENT DECISIONS UPON THE LAW RELATING TO INFANTS.

THE decisions during the past year have touched upon most of the points usually giving rise to controversy in the Courts upon the law relating to infants—viz. Contracts, Maintenance, Custody, and Procedure, most of the decisions being those of the Chancery Division.

The first two cases mentioned in the following article illustrate the principle of the mutuality of contracts. In De Francesco v. Barnum (No. 1), 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 151; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 165, an attempt to apply the rule laid down in Lumley v. Wagner to the covenants in an apprenticeship deed failed, Mr. Justice Chitty holding, on the authority of Gylbert v. Fletcher (Cro. Car. 179), that, inasmuch as no action could be brought against an infant upon a covenant to serve, the negative clauses in this apprenticeship deed could not be enforced by injunction; and in the second action, before Mr. Justice Fry, the covenants in the deed being held unreasonable, no action was maintainable against a showman for enticing the apprentice away from the plaintiff's employment.

By the Infants' Relief Act (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), s. 1, all voidable contracts by infants (1) for money lent or to be lent, or (2) for goods supplied or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessaries), and (3) all accounts stated with infants, are declared to be absolutely void. In the case of Valentini v. Canali, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 74; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 166, the infant plaintiff had agreed to become tenant of a house and to pay a sum for the furniture therein. He occupied the house for some months, paid part of the agreed sum, and used the furniture. This contract, not being one of those mentioned in the above section, was held not to entitle the plaintiff to recover the sum paid to the defendant. In Lowe v. Griffiths, 1 Scott, 458, an infant was held liable for the lease of a dwelling-house suitable to his circumstances. Again, in Duncan v. Dixon, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 437; L. R. 44 Chanc. Div. 211, Mr. Justice Kekewich held that a marriage settlement made by an infant on his marriage in 1878 (since dissolved) was, as regards the infant, voidable, and not void by the section above referred to.

The case of Martin v. Martin, L. R. 1 Eq. 369, had decided that maintenance should be allowed out of a legacy to an infant, whether vested or contingent, in the manner most beneficial to the infant, and Mr. Justice North's decisions in In re Wells; Wells v. Wells, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 113; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 281, and in In re Jeffery; Burt v. Arnold, applied that principle.

In re Scott; Scott v. Hanbury, again before Mr. Justice North, decided that section 2 of the Infants' Settlement Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43), which enacted that the death of an infant under twenty-one avoids any appointment or disentailing assurance executed under the Act, does not, unless the infant is tenant in tail, make the settlement void by reason of the infant having died while still an infant. In In re Phillips, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 337; L. R. 34 Chanc. Div. 467, the Court had decided that a settlement can be made under the Act after the wife, having been married under the age of seventeen, has attained that age, provided the settlement is really made upon the occasion and for the purposes of marriage.

Regina v. Barnardo, Jones's Case, affirmed the primâ facie right of a mother to the custody of her illegitimate child, which Regina v. Nash, 52 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 442; L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 454, had established.

In Mayor v. Collins, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 199; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 361, the Court held that interrogatories cannot be administered to an infant plaintiff or defendant, and the case of In re Manders, an infant; Manders v. Manders, before Mr. Justice Stirling, may be usefully referred to with reference to the provisions of the Guardianship of Infants' Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 27), the learned judge laying down that the jurisdiction of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division is not ousted by the powers given by that Act to the Chancery Division.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

Second reading:—

Evidence in Criminal Cases Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Bill through Committee:—

Purchase of Land (Ireland) Bill.

Second readings:—

Stamp Duties Bill.

Stamp Duties Management Bill.

Industrial Assurance Bill.

The two former were referred to the Standing Committee on Law and the latter to the Standing Committee on Trade.

New bills:—

To Amend the Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Acts.

To Amend the Laws relating to the Rating of Allotments for Sanitary Purposes.

Reviews.

MONCREIFF ON FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

A Treatise on the Law relating to Fraud and Misrepresentation. By the Hon. Frederick Moncreiff, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

The object of the author of this work is to state, examine, and illustrate the principles upon which fraud and misrepresentation have been dealt with by the English Courts—a work which he rightly considers more useful than a mere digest of decisions arranged under convenient heads. He directs particular attention to the great case of Derry v. Peek, and expresses an opinion that, if the decision in it is to be carried to its logical conclusion, it must materially modify the authority of previous decisions which have hitherto been accepted as law. Here Mr. Moncreiff thinks that good work may be done by stating clearly the points yet unsettled upon which controversy still lingers. Here, too, we agree with the author in thinking that there is a field for useful work. The book is divided into two parts: the first dealing with the action of deceit in nine chapters; the latter with the law as to rescission—viz. the principles upon which Courts of equity were accustomed to grant relief upon the ground of misrepresentation and other remedies, cancellation, actions for compensation, &c. The definition of 'fraud' is the first question considered, and we are referred to a series of definitions of 'fraud' in the appendix, beginning with that of the digest and including the celebrated passage from Lord Hardwicke's judgment in Chesterfield v. Janssen. The elements in an action of deceit are next considered. There is not a legal remedy for every lie, for, if there were, a man, Lord Denman said, might sue his neighbour for any mode of communicating erroneous information, such, for example, as having a conspicuous clock too slow. There are, therefore, 'naked lies'—e.g. lies not clothed with the attributes on which an action is grounded. The well-known case of Cornfoot v. Fowke is made the subject of a good deal of consideration, but here we ought to have been referred to the observations of Lord St. Leonards on that case, which were quoted by the Court of Appeal in Ludgater v. Love. A large space is devoted to the law relating to companies, and due attention is bestowed on Derry v. Peek and the Directors' Liability Act. The work will be useful to those who desire to consider the difficult branches of law with which it professes to deal.

BRETT'S COMMENTARIES.

Commentaries on the Present Laws of England. By Thomas Brett, Barrister-at-Law, LL.B. Second Edition. In Two Volumes. London: Wm. Clowes & Sons (Lim.).

The success which we predicted for this book on its first appearance, only a year ago, seems to be now fully assured, for we already have before us a second edition. The author of a work of this character, if he wishes to keep it before the profession, can never for any lengthened period lay down his pen; he must, in order to keep his book up to date, continually amend, re-edit, and enlarge. Mr. Brett is singularly fortunate in being called upon so soon to bring out a new edition, because he has thus been afforded an opportunity of availing himself of the suggestions of his friends and the criticisms of his reviewers by correcting the errors which were inevitable in a first edition, and also of incorporating the numerous Acts which have, since the publication of his first edition, been placed upon the statute-book by an exceedingly active Legislature. In order to indicate the extent of the alterations which have taken place, it is only necessary, for example, to refer to the changes in the law effected by the Settled Land Act, the Partnership Act, the three Companies Acts, and the Bankruptcy Act, all of which, with many others of minor importance, have become law during the past year. The effect of all this legislation has been duly incorporated, and a new chapter added, dealing with miscellaneous business in the High Court and the principal remedies by the exercise of extraordinary judicial powers, habeas corpus, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, certiorari, and petition of right. These changes and additions have increased the body of the book by some sixty pages, and the index has also been considerably enlarged, while the table of cases has been rendered more complete by the insertion, in the principal cases, of references to all the reports. We must not omit to mention also that, in point of get up, the book has been improved, and that in this respect nothing is left to be desired. In order to test the merits of the new edition we turn at random to a chapter which has required material alteration—viz. that entitled 'Partnership.' We find that the author has not merely contented himself with a reference to the recent Act, but he has entirely rewritten the chapter, and he has dealt in a similar manner with the succeeding chapter on companies. Having looked carefully through the book, we are able to say that the work of revision has been thoroughly done, and that no pains have been spared by the author in order to bring it up to that standard of excellence at which he evidently aims. Having so recently noticed the book at length, it is only necessary now to add that the second edition is an improvement upon what was in the first instance a work of considerable merit. The price of the two volumes is 38*s*.

Correspondence.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS' CHARGES.

Sir,—Can you or any of your correspondents say whether it is correct practice for a magistrate's clerk to charge a prisoner committed to quarter sessions, or his solicitor, with 3*s*. 6*d*. for a letter accompanying the depositions in addition to the fixed charge for the copy depositions? Surely, as clerk to the magistrates, his capacity as solicitor is to a certain extent merged in the former.

Inquirer.

May 21.

THE JURY SYSTEM.

Sir,—A propos of your remarks last week on the jury system, may I tell you a little tale?

A Mr. Smith, being once summoned on a jury, went in great anxiety to a Mr. Jones, whom he knew to be very clever, for advice as to 'how to get off.' 'Leave it all to me,' said Jones. By a curious accident Smith became after all able and willing to serve, and duly attended the Court, without, however, having forewarned Jones. Smith's name being duly called, he was about to step forward with his answer, when he heard the well-known voice of Jones exclaiming: 'Dead, my lord!' K. T. L.

COUNTY COURTS.

SIR,—In a recent number you commented upon the vagaries of County Court judges. I should like to mention two cases which have lately come under my notice. In a metropolitan County Court the following case was decided in my presence a few days ago: A shopkeeper ordered some blinds to be made and fitted to her shop. They were sent at 8.30 P.M. and fitted up. The workman then asked for his money, but was told that 'the lady' had gone home long since, but that the money should be sent next morning on her return. The workman, acting on instructions from his employer, thereupon took down the blinds and carried them away, and a few days after the employer sued for the price as for goods sold and delivered, at the same time keeping the blinds. He also sued for the workman's labour. The judge at once gave a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of his claim. The judge in question sat on that day from 11 A.M. to 7 P.M., with only five minutes' interval, and I doubt not was very tired; otherwise, a moment's reflection would have told him that the chattels being unascertained, the property did not pass, and that an action would not lie for goods sold and delivered. The true remedy was an action for non-acceptance, but there was no breach, and judgment ought to have been for the defendant.

I have lately been asked to advise on the following case: The owner of a horse advertised it for sale by public auction, warranted it, and gave his name. An auctioneer sold it as the horse of the owner, and referred to the advertisement under which it was to be sold. The horse was sold, and it turned out that there was a breach of warranty. An action was thereupon brought by the purchaser against the owner. The action was tried in a country County Court, when the judge promptly nonsuited the plaintiff, on the ground that the action ought to have been brought against the auctioneer and not against the owner. The solicitor for the plaintiff in vain pointed out that the auctioneer only sold as agent for a disclosed principal, and that the action, therefore, could only be brought against the principal. The judge was inexorable, and the nonsuit, which is equivalent to a verdict for the defendant, stands. As the claim was for 14*l.*, and the judge will not give leave to appeal, there is simply a denial of justice, for an action will not lie against the auctioneer.

I hope that you will allow me to say, in conclusion, that these vagaries will always take place so long as Lord Chancellors look upon County Court judgeships as their own private perquisite, to be filled up by their friends and relations, instead of being filled up by really able men. A BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

TITHE RENT-CHARGE—PAYMENT BY TENANT—ALLOWANCE IN ACCOUNT WITH LANDLORD.

AT the Lymington County Court on Tuesday, May 19, the case of Torah v. Bryant was tried before Mr. Russell (deputy-judge). It was an action remitted from the High Court of Justice, Southampton District Registry. The parties were Charlotte Torah (executrix of the will of Benjamin Elgar, late of Lymington, deceased), plaintiff, and William Brewer Bryant, of Boldre, near Lymington, defendant. The claim was for 60*l.*, made up as follows: 20*l.* due for arrears of rent up to September 29, 1889; 20*l.*, a half-year's rent due March 25, 1890; and 20*l.*, a half-year's rent due September 29, 1890.—Mr. Emanuel said defendant rented a farm of the late Mr. Elgar at the rate of 40*l.* a year, and the action was brought to recover the sum of 20*l.*, being arrears of rent due September 29, 1889, and two half-years' accrued since. Defendant, in his defence, stated that, as to the first item of 20*l.*, he had paid it, and, with regard to the balance, he counterclaimed to the amount of 26*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* for tithes paid by him during the years 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890, and repayable by the landlord, and the balance of 13*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* he had paid into Court. The learned counsel said therefore it was for the defendant to prove the payment of the 20*l.* and his counterclaim of 26*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.*—Mr. Linthorne said he was taken by surprise, as he understood plaintiff's solicitor had admitted the payment of the 20*l.*—Mr. Emanuel denied this, and Mr. Linthorne called defendant, who said he took the farm of the late Mr. Elgar in December, 1884. The first two half-years' rent he paid in cash, but as Mr. Elgar did not give him a properly stamped receipt he subsequently paid his rent by cheque, commencing March 25, 1886. The cheques were produced, showing half-yearly payments of 20*l.* up to September 29, 1889. With regard to the counter-claim, in the year 1884 Mr. Elgar had refunded him 44*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.* in respect of tithes accrued during his tenancy under the former owner.—His Honour asked for proof of the items, and Mr. G. J. Prewett, from the office of Messrs. Moore, Rawlins & Vores (agents for the Rev. G. Elers, vicar of Boldre), said Mr. Bryant had always paid the tithes when demanded. He, however, could not swear to the items without his ledger.—Mr. Emanuel said witness should have been subpœnaed to produce the book, and his Honour said he should have to adjourn the case for this to be done.—Mr. Linthorne said he understood the question of these tithes having been paid by defendant was admitted, or he should have issued a subpœna.—Mr. Emanuel said to save an adjournment he would admit the fact of these tithes having been paid. He was afraid he could no longer dispute the fact of 20*l.* having been paid. With regard to the counter-claim, he submitted defendant was not now entitled to deduct the amount paid by him for tithes.—Mr. Linthorne pointed out that, by section 80 of the Tithes Commutation Act, 1836, it was enacted that a tenant who had paid a tithe rent-charge should be 'allowed the same in account with the landlord;' the defendant was, therefore, right in his counterclaim.—His Honour concurred in this view, and gave judgment for defendant, with costs.—Mr. Samuel Emanuel, barrister-at-law (instructed by Mr. D. W. B. Tayler, of Southampton), appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. R. R. Linthorne, of Southampton, for the defendant.

POLICE.

FALSE TRADE NAME ON PIANOFORTE.

At Marlborough Street, on Saturday, May 23, Messrs. Anthony & Alphonse Tooth, auctioneers, of Oxenham's Sale-rooms, Oxford Street, appeared before Mr. Newton to an adjourned summons taken out by Henry W. Berridge, a clerk to Mr. Carl Bechstein, a pianoforte manufacturer, of Wigmore Street and Berlin, for having in their possession for sale a pianoforte to which a false trade description had been applied. The evidence previously given showed that Messrs. Tooth published a catalogue of a sale to take place on May 1, in which was an entry of a piano by 'C. H. Bachstein.' Mr. Berridge saw the piano, and found on the fall the words 'C. H. Bachstein, Hof Pianoforte Fabrik' (Court Piano Factory). As Mr. Bechstein claimed to be piano manufacturer to the German court, he considered that the public might be led by those words to believe that the piano was made at his factory in Berlin.—Messrs. Tooth, in defence, declared that they merely had the piano sent to them to sell in the ordinary way, and that they had no desire to do injury to any firm. Moreover, it was mentioned that, directly Mr. Bechstein made complaint, Messrs. Tooth withdrew the piano from the sale.—Mr. Anthony Tooth now deposed that he received the piano complained of from Mr. Walter Watson, of Euston Road. The catalogues were made up by his clerks, who could only take the descriptions from the goods as they found them.—Evidence was then taken in support of another summons respecting a piano bearing the name of Schiedmayer which, it was alleged, had not been manufactured by the firm of that name.—George Culverwell, manager to Messrs. Cramer, said he had seen a piano which was entered in one of Messrs. Tooth & Tooth's catalogues. It was marked 'Schiedmayer, Berlin,' but he recognised it as an instrument made by Rosenaar, of Berlin, which Messrs. Cramer had let to a woman on the hire system. At that time the name 'Rosenaar' was on the fall.—Archibald Ramsden, the English representative of Schiedmayer, of Stuttgart, said he knew of no firm of piano manufacturers of the name of Schiedmayer in Berlin.—Mr. Anthony Tooth deposed that a lady brought him the piano in question to sell, saying that she had brought it from Berlin. After he had sold it Messrs. Cramer claimed the instrument as their property. He had seen the police about the woman, and had discovered that there were several warrants out for her arrest.—A third summons was heard against Walter Watson, an auctioneer, of the Euston Road, for a similar offence.—Mr. Leslie, solicitor, appeared for the defence.—George Taylor, who had been for about six months in the employ of Mr. Watson, said that he had seen pianos arrive at the premises of Mr. Watson from Hamburg without names. They were marked with different names before being sent out. On April 29 two pianos were delivered at the premises of Messrs. Tooth.—Mr. Watson said that he had been carrying on business as an auctioneer in the Euston Road for about nine months. He had dealt with a pianoforte dealer named Kreuse, of Hamburg, for three years. He received the particular piano bearing the name of 'Bachstein' in February last in the same state as it was at present. He had bought several 'Bachstein' pianos from different dealers in Germany, and had not heard of Mr. Bechstein until lately. Cross-examined.—A writ had been served upon him with respect to another make of pianos. He had had Winkelmann's pianos with the name-plate separate.—Emil Pohl, a porter to Mr. Watson, said that the piano in question was now in precisely the same state as when he unpacked it on its arrival from Germany. He had sometimes stuck labels on pianos that had no name on them. The labels were sent over from Hamburg with the instruments.—Mr. Newton said that he thought Messrs. Tooth & Tooth had acted negligently. They would have to pay 10*l.*, with five guineas costs, and Watson must also pay the same amounts.—It was stated on behalf of Messrs. Tooth that they intended to appeal.—Mr. Besley and Mr. Bodkin prosecuted, and Mr. Banks appeared for the defence.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

THE following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Preliminary Examination held on May 6 and 7, 1891:—

Archer, William Edward
Bagshaw, William
Baines, Ellis Eyton
Barraud, Milford Percy
Blaker, Harry Rowsell
Booth, Ernest
Brown, Henry Pinder
Brown, Robert
Bruce, Thomas Francis Hope
Burnaby, John Frederic Sherard
Butcher, Philip Webster
Cassidy, James
Caswell, Thomas Hill
Chaston, Walter Alan
Clark, Douglas Ariel
Close, Charles Harold
Cottier, Charles Edward
Cuningham, Francis Burdett
Dauncey, Richard
Dean, Henry John
Dixon, Clive Fletcher
Drummond, Philip Maurice
Ellison, Charles Welldon
Ess, George
Francis, Percy Ollivant
Garrard, George Frederick
Glover, William Grey
Guy, Alexander Granville Ferrers
Harrison, Herbert Basil
Haymes, John
Hicks, Thomas Arnold
Hill, Adrien Thomas Coke
Holdsworth, Charles Stork
James, George Fitzhugh Bush
Jolly, Arthur Adams
Jones, Richard Evan
Jones, Thomas Latimer
Judson, Henry Darnton
Judson, Joseph Edward
Key, Richard Blayney
King, George Hall
Knocker, Herbert Wheatley
Lawrence, James Edward Garnous
Leeds, Alfred William Henry
Lewis, George Alec
Lewis, Guy Granville
Lichtenstein, Edward Arthur La Trobe
Lightly, Charles Alfred Morton
Lockett, William Jeffery Lodge, James William
Lord, David
M'Ardle, Bernard Vincent
M'Leod, Wilfred
Major, Henry Ernest
Mathias, Claude
Mathews, Guy
May, William Edward Southcombe
Mills, William
Mole, William Rupert
Neale, Dennis
Newby, Charles James
O'Brien, Lucius Frederic
Preston, Cecil Evans
Raikes, Reginald Durie Napier
Raine, George Edward
Reade, Henry Lister
Reeves, John
Roberts, Alfred Ernest
Roberts, Arthur Edward
Robson, Fred William
Rose, William Hugh
Sherwin, Robert Walter
Simmons, Edward Coleman
Simpson, Francis Joseph
Skeet, Fred William
Smith, Percy Hazell
Solomon, Albert Benjamin
Stenning, Edward Herbert
Stevens, Frank Herron
Strang, Robert Charles Yuille
Tanner, George Frederic
Taylor, Domville Mascie
Taylor, Frederic George
Thimbleby, Frank
Thomas, Daniel Howell Rowland
Thomas, Edmund Crewes
Travers, Harold Paget
Troughton, Aubrey Gerald Albert
Walmsley, Arnold Brunsden
Walpole, Stanley
Ward, Joseph William
Webster, Reginald
Whittenbury, Reginald
Wildey-Wright, Frank Jarvis Arnot
Wilkinson, Horace King
Willan, William Edward
Willett, Edward Reginald
Williams, Harold James
Williamson, Frank
Wilson, Arthur Gerald
Winser, Joseph Croyden
Winter, Walter James
Wiseman, Arthur Ernest
Withers, Alfred
Wood, John Crewe
Yates, George William Ross
Waller, Percy George

CAUSE LIST.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

THE COURT OF APPEAL.

Appeal Court I.—Notices.

N.B.—Queen's Bench Interlocutory Appeals will be taken in Court I. on Tuesday, May 26, and afterwards on every Monday in Trinity Sittings.

N.B.—Subject to Interlocutory Appeals on Monday and Bankruptcy Appeals on Fridays, and also subject to the New Trial Paper, Queen's Bench Final Appeals will be taken every day during the Sittings until further notice. The New Trial Paper will remain until days to be appointed, notice of which will be given in the Daily Cause List.

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors) will be taken in Court I. on days specially appointed by the Court, notice of which will appear on the Daily Cause List.

Appeal Court II.—Notices.

N.B.—Interlocutory Appeals from the Chancery and Probate and Divorce Divisions will be taken in Court II. on Tuesday, May 26, and afterwards on every Wednesday in Trinity Sittings.

N.B.—Subject to Chancery Interlocutory Appeals on Wednesdays, Chancery Final Appeals will be taken every day in Court II. until further notice.

Appeals from the Lancaster Palatine Court (if any) will be taken in Court II. on Thursday, May 28, and on Thursday, June 4, Thursday, July 2, and Thursday, August 6; see Notice at end of List of Palatine Appeals.

Lunacy matters will be taken in Court II. on every Monday, at 11, until further notice.

APPEALS FOR HEARING.

(SET DOWN TO SATURDAY, MAY 16, INCLUSIVE.)

From the Chancery and Probate and Divorce Divisions.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Dashwood v. Magniac
Low v. Bouverie
R. S. Hall v. A. M. Hall and another

FOR HEARING.

Final List.

1891.

In re C. Palmer, dec.
Palmer v. Hardwick
Jones v. Dinas Steam Colliery Co. (Lim.)
Cronbach v. Uranium Mines (Lim.)
Hair v. Geddes
Gray and others, exors. of Margaret Gray, added by order v. Sangster and others
In re Bence, dec.
Smith v. Bence
In re T. Metcalfe, dec.
Metcalfe v. Metcalfe
In re W. Jones, dec.
Griffin v. Porter
In re J. Gouldsmith, dec.
Roberts v. Thorne
Mackenzie v. Mackintosh
In re E. C. Eagle, dec.
Eagle v. Cardinall
Florence v. Mallinson
In re G. J. Hunter, dec.
Hunter v. Hunter
Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Co. (Lim.) v. Fielden
Ward v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co. (Lim.)
Thomas v. Christmas
In re R. Burfield, dec.
Dean v. Burfield
In re C. Robson, dec.
Larkman v. Robson
London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co.
In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Sykes v. Burr
Smith v. Rogers
In re Jane Davis, dec.
In re T. H. Davis, dec.
Evans v. Moore
In re Stephens, dec.
Warburton v. Stephens
Faulder's Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Bowmans
Mineral Residues Syndicate v. Levant Mine Adventurers
In re Jacobs, dec.
White v. Jacobs
In re Samuel Hurst, dec.
Addison v. Topp
Harrison, Amalie & Co. v. Mayor, &c. of Barrow-in-Furness

INTERLOCUTORY LIST.

1891.

Bridge v. Herbert
Badeley v. Consolidated Bank
Mangan v. Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. (Lim.)
Mander v. Falcke
In re W. Briggs, dec.
Earp and another (creditors) v. Briggs and another

From the County Palatine Courts.

FINAL LIST.

1891.

Winby v. Manchester, Bury, Rochdale, and Oldham Steam Tramways Co.
Perry v. Glazebrook
In re Higginbotham and Orrell's Settlement Trusts

N.B.—The County Palatine Appeals, as the dates of setting down are reached in the General and Separate Lists, are set aside and taken on the first Thursday in every Sittings, and afterwards on the first Thursday in the following months during the Sittings.

N.B.—During Trinity Sittings Palatine Appeals (if any reached) will be taken on the following days, viz.:—
Thursday, May 28.
Thursday, June 4.
Thursday, July 2.
Thursday, August 6.

From the Queen's Bench and Admiralty Divisions.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Skinners' Co. v. Knight and others

FOR HEARING.

Final List.

1890.

Rogers, Sons & Co. v. Lambert & Co.
Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Co. and others

1891.

Armsour v. Bate
Same v. Same
Pelsall Coal and Iron Co. (Lim.) v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Same v. London and North-Western Railway Co. and Great Western Railway Co.
Attorney-General v. Sharpe and another (Q. B. Revenue Side)
Deep Navigation Collieries (Lim.) v. Rhymney Railway Co.
Goddard and another v. Hill
F. H. Wenman v. Lyon & Co. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Kingsford v. Oxenden
Woodfin v. Marston & Co. (Lim.)
Braunstein v. Lewis and another
Hilder v. Hume, Webster & Co.
School Board for London v. Wall Bros.
London Bank of Mexico and South America (Lim.) v. Apthorpe (Surveyor of Taxes) (Q. B. Revenue Side)
Justices of the Peace for the County of Kent v. Sandgate Local Board
De Coninck v. Singer
Levin & Co. v. Seligsen (trading, &c.)
Lethbridge and another v. Harris and another
Handyside & Co. (Lim.) v. Gentry
Tomkinson and another v. Balkis Consolidated Co. (Lim.)
Gregory v. Casselden
Brown v. Hawkes (Q. B. Crown Side)
Nash v. Cunard Steamship Co. (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side)
Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others
Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. (Lim.) v. International Co. of Mexico
Brinkworth v. Pentelow
Rhymney Railway Co. v. Bute Docks Co.
Lovering v. City of London and Southwark Subway Co.
Bishop v. Southern Counties Deposit Bank
Brace v. Abercarn Coal Co. (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side)
Huggins v. London and South Wales Coal Co. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Challoner v. Vaughan
Cross v. Roberts
Pinto and another v. Trott & Co.
Thomas v. Searles and another (first issue)
Same v. Same (second issue)
Kirkman v. British Shipowners' Mutual Protection Association (Lim.)
Tinkler v. Smith and another
Le Messurier v. Taylor
Parkyn and another v. F. Campbell & Co.
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Passey
Dearne and Dove Steel Co. (Lim.) v. Phœnix Railway Carriage and Wagon Co.
Edmunds v. Gilbert
Clark v. Dawber
Broadbent v. Smedley
Patrick v. Dear
Clarke v. Chadwick
Dodson & Co. v. Robinson & Co.
Halpin v. M'Laren
Caswell v. Sheen and others
Bryan v. Atlantic Patent Fuel Co. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Snow v. Colonna
Dobell & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co. and others
Coburn v. Great Northern Railway Co.
Moul and another and Groenings and another (Q. B. Crown Side)
In re Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883
M'Gough and others (petitioners)
F. P. Gough and others (respondents) (Q. B. Crown Side)
Welbury v. Payton
Hooper v. Large (late Goodwin)
Everett (Assignee of Tanner) v. Parton (Q. B. Crown Side)
Hirst v. Sadler
Rendell v. Barraclough
Acland and others v. Simpson

Taws v. Knowles (Q. B. Crown Side)
Allchurch and another v. Assessment Committee and Guardians of Hendon Union (Q. B. Crown Side)
Bristol and West of England Bank (Lim.) v. Midland Railway Co.
Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Co. (Lim.) v. Morel Bros. & Co. and Richards & Co.
Grand Hotel, Prague (Lim.) v. Concessions Trust (Lim.)
City and South London Railway Co. v. London County Council (Q. B. Crown Side)
Harman v. Powell and others (Q. B. Crown Side)
Harrison, Ainslie & Co. v. Muncaster
Reeves v. Butcher
Towerson v. Jackson (extrix.) (Q. B. Crown Side)
North Wales Gold Exploration Co. v. Seaver and others
Lambourn Valley Railway Co. v. Billups

From the Queen's Bench and Admiralty Divisions.

INTERLOCUTORY LIST.

1890.

Giffard v. Mayor, &c. of Wolverhampton

1891.

Reynolds v. Tooth & Ward
Lysaght v. Clark & Co.
Same v. Same
Challinors and another v. Wright and others
Guinea Coast Gold Mining Co. (Lim.) v. Irvine and others
Cave v. Leslie and others
Guardians of the Poor of Parish of Brighton v. Guardians of the Poor of the Strand Union (Q. B. Crown Side)
Phillips and others v. J. Fowler & Co. (Leeds) (Lim.)
Regina v. Judge of Halifax County Court and Bairstow (Q. B. Crown Side)
In re an Arbitration between J. B. Williams and Sir R. A. A. K. C. Stepney, Bart.
Love v. South of England Marine Insurance Association (Lim.)
Walford v. Prince Steamship Co. (Lim.)
Finska Angfartygs Aktiebolaget v. Brown, Toogood & Co.
Regina on prosecution of Col. E. Mitchell v. H.M.'s Secretary of State for War (Q.B. Crown Side)
F. E. T. Fowler (judgment creditor) v. Jas Bowles (judgment debtor) Sarah Bowles (claimant)
North-Wales Gold Exploration Co. (Lim.) v. Seaver and others
Hind v. Raikes and others
Gough v. Mayor, &c. of Liverpool

From the Queen's Bench Division.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

1891.

Parsons v. Tomlinson
Woollacott v. Pilkington
Richards v. Stogdon
Evelyn v. Hurlbert
Hood v. Brown
Marchioness of Huntly v. Bedford Hotel Co. (Lim.)
Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co. (Vestry of Hammersmith, third parties)
Smith and Wife v. Bailey
Bristol and West of England Bank (Lim.) v. Midland Railway Co.
Lowry v. Humbert
Gibbs v. London and orth-Western Railway Co.
Keeley v. Appleby
Heitzmann v. Gowenlooh
Banks v. Kelly and Grundy (trading, &c.)
Brunlees v. Dickson

From the Queen's Bench Division, sitting in Bankruptcy.

1891.

In re J. G. Smith, ex parte Official Receiver
In re L. J. Twyne, ex parte Debtor
In re A. Webber, ex parte S. Slater
In re Jno. Gamgee, ex parte Ward
In re W. R. Cloete, ex parte Debtor
In re Croaker and another, ex parte Debtor

From Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty).

FOR HEARING.

(With Nautical Assessors.)

1890.

Owners, Masters, and Crews of Steamships Inverness, Flying Scud, Heather Bell, and Spurn v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight and Owners of Ship Albert Edward and others v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight 1891.

Owners of Eloy Palacios and Cargo v. Owners of Homewood and Freight
Owners of Homewood v. Owners of Eloy Palacios
G. B. Vassals and others v. Owners of Boston City
Owners of The Star of England v. Owners of The Vesper
Owners of Eaton Hall v. C. B. Theobald (captain of H.M.S. Rupert)
Teeside Iron Engine Works Co. (Lim.) v. C. C. Duncan
Owners of Ship Sudbourne and others v. Owners of Ship Mangalore

SUMMARY OF APPEALS.

	Final	Interlocutory	Total
From the Chancery Division .	29 .	5 .	34
From County Palatine Courts .	3 .	— .	3
From the Queen's Bench Division	74 .	18 .	92
From the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, Admiralty with Assessors	7 .	— .	7
From the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy . .	6 .	— .	6
New Trial Paper	14 .	— .	14
Totals . . .	133	23	156

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

CAUSES FOR TRIAL OR HEARING.

(Set down to Thursday, May 16, inclusive.)

Except in the first and last weeks of the Sittings, Motions, Petitions and Short Causes will be taken on the usual days, as stated in the Trinity Sittings Paper.

Mr. Justice CHITTY will take Witness Actions on the following days—viz. June 23, 24, 25, 30; July 1, 2. When the Non-Witness List is exhausted, the Witness List will be resumed subsequently to July 2. In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

Mr. Justice NORTH will commence taking Witness Actions on Tuesday, June 2, and will continue that class of work on the usual days in every week until further order.

Mr. Justice STIRLING will also commence taking Witness Actions on Tuesday, June 2, and will continue that class of work on the usual days in every week until further order.

Mr. Justice KEKEWICH.—With the exception of special Witness work for the first day (May 26) and for Tuesday, June 2, no Causes with Witnesses will be taken by Mr. Justice KEKEWICH until the Non-Witness List is exhausted. Prior to June 2, Adjourned Summonses will be taken first, and then Further Considerations, Points of Law, and Non-Witness Actions. His Lordship will take Liverpool and Manchester Business as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Short Causes, Petitions and Adjourned Summonses on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons. Liverpool and Manchester Summonses will be taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Manchester Summonses on Friday, May 29.

Mr. Justice WILLIAMS will continue (until further notice) sitting as an Additional Judge of the Chancery Division. A second Transfer of fifty-two Actions from the List of Mr. Justice ROMER has been made to his Lordship. Of the first Transfer eighteen have been re-transferred to the Judges to whom they originally belonged, and three remain to be tried by Mr. Justice WILLIAMS. The second Transfer will follow, and will be proceeded with by his Lordship in Queen's Bench Court I. at the commencement of the Sittings.

Mr. Justice ROMER will take Witness Actions every day in the order as they stand in the Cause Book.

Summonses before the Judge in Chambers: Justices CHITTY, NORTH, STIRLING and KEKEWICH will sit in Court the whole day on every Monday during the Sittings to hear Chamber Summonses.

Summonses Adjourned into Court will be taken as follows: Mr. Justice CHITTY, with Non-Witness Actions, except Procedure Summonses, which (if any) are taken every Saturday; Mr. Justice STIRLING, with Non-Witness Actions. Justices NORTH and KEKEWICH on Fridays and Saturdays.

N.B.—The above note as to Chamber and Adjourned Summonses is subject to alteration as their Lordships may direct.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Freemantle v. Lafitte
Thompson v. M'Murdo
M. Melacrino & Co. v. B. M. Melacrino and others
Ramuz v. Earl Sondes
Sampson v. Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society (Lim.)
In re Robert Millard, dec.
Millard v. Millard
Guardians of St. Saviour's Union v. Stanhope Co. (Lim.)
In re W. E. Jones, dec.
Jones v. Greenwood
Inventions Trust Association (Lim.) v. Cole & Co.
In re Baroness Craignish, dec.
Craignish v. Hewitt
Nichols v. John Lewis & Co.
Boursot v. Boursot
Midland Railway Co. v. Metropolitan Railway Co.
Hubbard v. Elverston
Cameron v. Jones
Defence Vessel Construction Co. (Lim.) v. Scott
Garnett v. Carver
In re Gyles, dec.
Gyles v. Collinson
Barlow v. Gyles
In re Gyles, dec.
Gyles v. Collinson
Morris v. Bebro (1888, M. 3,273)
Same v. Same (1889, M. 66)
Montagu v. Burton
Reid v. Whiteley
In re Whitchurch, dec.
Cotton v. Prowse
Skelton v. Schwabe
Lindsay v. Curtis
Richards v. Unett, Moore, Bayley & Co.
Warren v. Central Permanent Building Society
Bonham (married woman) v. Ellis
In re Earl of Caithness, dec.
Buchanan v. Sinclair
Royal Exchange Assurance and others v. Norton
Burra v. Phillips
Mickalls v. Phillips
In re R. Fell, dec.
Fell v. Fell
Watson v. Hawthorn
Bolanachi v. Zirzinia
Stephens v. M'Kellar
Yeoman v. Robinson
De la Mare v. Mayor, &c. of West Ham, Essex
Landseer v. Zeffert
Van Buch v. Watson
Perceval and another v. Van Buch
Pechey v. Serle
New Wire Wove Roofing Co. (Lim.) v. Humpage
Hayman v. Cooper
Clark v. Smith
Carter v. Walter
Smith v. Rowbotham
Rowbotham v. Wilson
North v. Abbey Mills Distillery (Lim.)
Ward v. Keen
Sutton v. Gillings
Kite v. Bell
S. Kidd & Co. (Lim.) v. Perry
Allen v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Hill & Paddon v. Fuller
Bailey v. Fuller
Fuller v. Hill & Paddon
Same v. Bailey
In re Swain, dec.
Swain v. Bringeman
Bew v. Gale
Webster v. Puleston
Meek v. Traver
Marquis of Aylesbury v. Darling
Spalding v. FitzGeorge
Delvallé v. Palmer
In re E. J. Smart, an infant, ex parte Stoner
Same, ex parte Gregory
L. Hirsch & Co. v. Dean Swift
Faithfull v. Millar
Dibb v. Walker
Molineaux v. Gartside
In re Thomas Bateman, dec.
Bateman v. Bateman
Uniacke v. Scott
Scott v. Uniacke
Soppitt v. Whiting
In re Aders, dec.
Meakin v. Plimmer
Ellissen v. Surrey Machinist Co. (Lim.)
Watts v. Paynter
Sanders v. Eaton
Hollington v. Dear
Witt v. Calderon
Callender v. Grant
In re Bell Brothers (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Tunks & Co. (Lim.) v. Page, Son & Co.
Davis v. Acton Conservative Club (Lim.)
Same v. Same
Hill v. Winfield
In re Heinrich's Registered Designs and Patents, &c. Act, 1883 and 1888
Compton v. Bagley
Spence v. Schiedweiler
Engelhart v. Gaydon
West v. Gillett
Marshall v. Glover
Alexander v. Marshall
Same v. Same
Marshall v. Alexander
Wright v. Richmond
West India Shipping Co. (Lim.) v. Callender
Thomson v. Stewart
Hughes-Hallett v. Kent (2)
Nicholson v. Eyre
Mappin Brothers v. Mappin & Webb
Lane v. Capsey
Burdett v. Eldershaw
Anstiss v. Gatti
French v. Burchell
Tucker v. Cooper
Smelt v. Broughton
In re Lanwer, dec.
Lanwer v. Clayden
Northwich Local Board v. Northwich Salt Co. (Lim.)
Tester v. Hedgcock
James v. Isaac
T. P. Smith v. M. Smith
Hall v. Tompson
In re R. O. Perkins, dec.
Perkins v. Hillier
Hillier v. Perkins
Walker v. Walker

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

In re W. J. Barron & Sons
De Stafford v. Neville
In re J. Bone's Estate
Rice v. Bone (Order 55)
In re E. Budd, dec.
Scott v. Budd
Todd v. Reakes
Hartley v. Cooper
In re Moore & Burton's Contract and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (ex parte Purchasers)
In re Bingemann & Walmesley's Contract and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (ex parte Purchaser)
In re Bingemann, dec.
Bingemann v. Bingemann
Dean v. Dean
In re E. J. Sartoris's Estate
Sartoris v. Sartoris (Order 55)
In re Allen, a Solicitor (ex parte West)
In re J. E. Schweder's Estate
Oppenheim v. Schweder (Order 56)
J. H. Taylor v. Taylor
In re G. Baynham, dec.
Hart v. Mackenzie
In re T. H. Gloyne's Estate
Clarkson v. Rawsthorne (Order 55)
Levy v. Lyon
Same v. Same
In re W. Ostle's Estate
M'Mullon v. Redfern (Order 55)
In re J. B. Lousada's Estate
Ponting v. Lousada
In re R. H. Millett, dec.
Millett v. Marriott
Salmon v. Cheswright
In re W. S. Lewis, a Solicitor, ex parte Jane D. Moir
In re F. J. Edlmann
Edlmann v. Edlmann
Mockford v. M'Donald
In re J. C. B. Hudson, dec. and Conveyancing Act, 1881
Boulderson v. Inderwick
In re Joseph Hudson, dec.
Bell v. Hudson
In re Lindley, dec.
Lindley v. Lindley
In re Sovereign Life Assurance Co. (Salter's claim)
In re C. Blackburn, dec.
Smith v. Cook
In re J. F. G. Cook's Estate
Ayer and others v. Wrightson and others
In re W. Shawcross's Estate
Thackeray v. Coe
In re Paszoway (Galician) Petroleum Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Same Co.
In re Same Co.
In re H. T. G. Fitzgerald's Estate
Saunders v. Boyd
In re J. B. Bodman's Estate
Bodman v. Bodman
In re V. Shelton's Estate
Brown v. Shelton (Order 55)
In re E. Fryman, dec.
Fryman v. Fryman
Koechlin v. Mollin
In re S. H. J. Davies's Estate
Davies v. Davies
In re Patani Concessions (Lim). (ex parte Liquidator)
In re F. H. William, a Solicitor (ex parte David Love)
In re Brodie's Settlement Trusts
In re Brodie's Estate
Hall v. Walker (ex parte Settlement Trustee)
In re S. H. Wells, dec.
Wells v. Wells
In re J. C. Llewellin, a Solicitor (ex parte D. Sanders)
In re J. S. Tharp's Estate
Bond v. Tharp (Order 55)
In re W. Hudson's Estate
Hudson v. Macintosh (Order 55)
In re Gale's Patent
In re White, dec.
Pearson v. Hughes
In re W. J. G. Eschmann, dec.
Banks v. Hammer
In re George Dodd's Estate
Milnes v. Holmes (ex parte Trustee)
Lane v. Capsey
In re W. Hodgson's Estates
In re Manchester Corporation Waterworks, 1879, and London County Council Acts, 1845–69 (ex parte Wilson and another)
In re Sarah Grimshaw's Estates
Barnard v. Yewdall (ex parte surviving Executor and Trustee)
In re Bifron's Estate, Barking, Essex, No. 3,474, Land Registry and the Land Transfer Act, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53
In re Craven's Trusts
Craven v. Close
In re Cosen's Marriage Settlement Trusts
Cosens v. Cosens
Philips v. Low
Attorney-General v. Pinckard
Sawyer v. Bland
In re Anthony S. Allen, a Solicitor (ex parte J. H. B. Lutley)
In re W. P. Murche, dec.
Murche v. Murche

Further Considerations.

In re W. Evans, dec.
Evans v. Evans
In re S. Lang, dec.
Betteley v. Proctor
In re Caroline Haldane's Estate
Brew v. Humphrey
Haldane v. Brew
In re H. Ruggles, dec.
Weaver v. Bateman
In re Armstrong, dec.
Harrison v. Armstrong
Turner v. Greenough
Greenough v. Leeming

Procedure Summonses.

L. Hirsch & Co. v. Dean Swift
Same v. Same
Siemens v. Karo, Barnett & Co.

Point of Law.

Blaydes v. Selby.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

In re Sharpe
In re Bennett
Masonic, &c. Assurance Co. v. Sharpe
Chester v. Harris
Commercial Bank of Scotland (Lim.) v. Sanders
Burgess v. Van Hoydonck
Matthews v. Martin
Tippett v. Strutt
Stuckey's Banking Co. v. Cohen
Lindoe v. Alexander
National and Provincial Bank of England (Lim.) v. Daniel
In re M'Murdo
Penfield v. M'Murdo
Bright v. Eckersley
Walker v. Higgins
People's Co-operative, &c. Building Society v. Shaw
Showell v. Perrins
Merridew v. Morris
Hamilton v. Hamilton
Crawshay v. Cartland
In re Crawshay
Walker v. Crawshay
Capel v. Brown
Tilden v. Bond
Danks v. Jones
Taylor v. Taylor
Fielding v. Earl Northbrook
Langham v. Hedges & Abell
In re Clench
Draper v. Clench

Douglas v. Gerald & Co. (Lim.)
Halbert, Wagg & Co. v. Ransford & Co.
Church v. Gilford (Bonsall third party)
In re Lee
Lee v. Dickinson
Val de Travers, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (Lim.)
Dance v. Hope
Yates v. Agnew
In re MacMahon
Phillips v. MacMahon
Garnett v. Wigley
Allen v. Union Discount Co. of London (Lim.)
British Water Gas Syndicate (Lim.) v. Nottingham and Derby Water Gas Co. (Lim.)
In re Milnes
Milnes v. Milnes
Coxon v. Schofield
Laybourn v. Gridley
M'Bryne v. Kay
Mara v. Brown
Runnalls v. Rodd
Attorney-General ex-relat. Barnett Local Board v. Vestry of St. James and St. John, Clerkenwell
In re Boyce
Boyce v. England
Baird v. East Riding Club and Race Course Co. (Lim.)
In re Raisbeck
Keenlyside v. Leefe
Law Property Assurance, &c. Association v. Wilson
Pegler v. Drake-West
Morris v. Speyer
In re Coningham
Coningham v. Coningham
Speyer v. Morris
Choudens Fils v. Lage
Vennell v. Meakin
Universal Stock Exchange (Lim.) v. Stevens
Rothwell v. Abrahams
In re Beckett
Lyons v. Hart
Brewers Investment Corporation (Lim.) v. Rowlands
Willoughby v. Kirby
Murton v. City Bank (Lim.)
Williams v. Williams
Day v. Gregory
In re Seager
West v. Seager
London Association of Shipowners (Lim.) v. London and India Docks
Procter v. Cheshire County Council
Barker v. Webber
Neale v. Hickling
Winch v. Jones
Evans v. Thompson
Mackay v. Siddeley & Co. (Lim.)
Sheldon v. Mellen
Lord Wynford v. Way
Turnock v. Evans
Chubb v. Cincinnati Breweries (Lim.)
Tindall v. Castle
Iddesleigh Mansions (Lim.) v. Hotel Windsor (Lim.) and others
Finch v. Quebrada Railway, Lead, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Ballantine v. Holmes
In re Hardcastle
Blackwell v. Hardcastle
Pratt v. Pratt
Greatorex v. Greatorex & Co. (Lim.)
In re Champion
Dudley v. Champion
Baker v. Hewitt
In re Felton
Felton v. Anslow
In re Ford
Baker v. Mayo
Wallis v. Bell

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

In re Cann
Symington v. Cann
In re Sykes
Deane v. Duffield
Dalton v. Clifton
In re Freme
Freme v. Logan
In re Lysaght
Marwood v. Baumgarten

Adjourned Summonses.

In re Evans
Jenkins v. Thomas
In re Rawlins
Rawlins v. Todd
In re Oxley
Oxley v. Ponsonby
In re Loughnan
Howell v. Harting
In re Terrey
Pitter v. Terrey
In re Johnstone
M'Callum v. Williams
In re Harding
Harding v. Wileman
In re Amos
Carrier v. Price
In re White
Armstrong v. White

Further Considerations.

In re Kurtz
Kurtz v. Kurtz
In re Singer
Singer v. Hawley
In re Jones
Jones v. Evans
In re Kerssenbrock
Biddulph v. Biddulph
In re Yager
Yager v. Honung

Before Mr. Justice Stirling.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

General Auction Estate, &c. Co. v. Smith
In re J. Davis
Joseph v. Davis
American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig
Leslie v. American Exchange in Europe
Hedger v. Hedger
In re Jennings
Jennings v. Jennings
Dodd v. Scholding
Burton v. Dodd
Keighley, Maxsted & Co. v. Bakewell
In re Fox
Fox v. Fox
Hill v. Bishton
In re Hodgson
Thompson v. Wilson
Wilson v. Thompson
In re Nesbitt
Nesbitt v. Freeman
Baring v. Abingdon
Abbott v. Howard
Coombs v. J. Jones & Son
In re MacIvor's Patent & Co.'s Acts
In re Wells
Molony v. Brooke
Sykes v. Crust
In re Walsh
Underwood v. Haiden
Cunningham v. Todd
Crowder v. Cooper
Same v. Same
Jackson v. Snell
Lampard v. St. George's House (Lim.)
In re Edgar
Edgar v. Edgar
In re Bowman
Bowman v. Bowman
Alexander v. Miller
Field v. Nichols
Pearson v. Petrovitch
In re Bridger
Jones v. Armfield
Reade v. Hall
Wood v. Hamblet
Bailey v. Barnes
Earl de la Warr v. King
Schreiner v. Bormard
Holdsworth v. Hull, &c. Railway Co.
Same v. Same
Freeman v. Penn
Boaler v. Brodhurst
President, &c. of St. George's Hospital v. Rumney
Svertchkoff v. Huth
Lord de Ramsey v. Powell
Brown v. Vince
Brown v. Brown
West of England Paper Mills Co. (Lim.) v. Gilbert
Ranson, Bouverie & Co. v. Whitley
In re Cash
Cash v. Hancock
In re Laurence
Kiddle v. Laurence
Fearnley v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Harris v. Harris
Trimble v. Wake
Bevan v. Webb
Folkard v. Carter
In re J. S. Smith
Smith v. Smith
Cannon v. Vickers
Bird v. Goodwin
White v. Swaine
In re Gas Lighting Improvement Co. (Lim.)
In re Linton
Linton v. Reed
Lilley v. Eliam
Meux v. Thomas
Rough v. MacIvor's Patents (Lim.)
Nelson v. Worssam
Goodrham v. Goodrham
Beddoe v. Jones
Isaacs v. Isaacs
Woodman v. Knowles
Robinson v. Partridge
Allday v. Glossop
Glossop v. Allday
Dew v. Barley
Hill v. Hickin
In re Gotobed
Gotobed v. Deuch
Lewis v. Marquis of Ailsbury
Mortgage Insurance Corporation (Lim.) v. Murly
Steele v. Savory
In re Gurney
Mason v. Mercer
Campion v. Campion
In re Hansford
Hansford v. Coombs
Weatherall v. Burgess
Everitt v. Automatic Photograph Co. (Lim.)
Cloudsdale v. Townson
Godrich v. Tod Heatly
Moore v. Moore
Beckett & Co. v. Wake
Trimble v. Beckett & Co.
Leader v. Tod Heatly
J. Richardson (Lim.) v. Proctor
In re Hampton
Hampton v. Stevens
Ryan v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chamber Association
Pullman v. Barker
Wilkinson v. Swedish, &c. Railway Co.
Parton v. Ferme
Newen v. Mackey
Matthews v. Rogers
Johnson & Co. v. Edge
International Cable Co. (Lim.) v. Suren, Hartman & Co.
Richardson v. Westacott
Neville v. Lloyd
Hawksley v. Outram
Same v. Same
Outram v. Hawksley
Bodger v. Rafferty
Rehden v. Atkins
Everett v. Remington
In re Jones
Williams v. Jones
Comte v. Perkins
In re the Canadian Direct Meat Co. & Co.'s Acts
Gross v. Brown
Miles v. Berridge
Cameron v. Anstruther
Marsh v. White
White v. Marsh
In re Garcias Trade-Marks, Nos. 96,822 and 96,823 and Trade-Marks &c. Act
In re Huxham
Huxham v. Huxham
Allen v. Banks
Rickard v. Hopkins
Judge v. Cole
In re Tilney
Richardson v. Rhodes
Dear v. Dear
North v. Medley
C. Dickens & Evans v. Battle
White v. Baillie

Causes for Trial without Witnesses and Adjourned Summonses.

In re W. Rogers, &c.
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Noale
In re Applebee
Leveson v. Beales
Burton v. Dodd
Burton v. Dod
Throusen v. Jacobs
In re Blake
Jones v. Blake
Arnold v. Tomkinson
In re Ardleigh Bread Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts
Dobree v. Anglo-Austrian Printing & Publishing Union (Lim.)
In re Ehret
Pritchard v. Dasent
In re Simpson
Pickard v. Kitto
In re Atwell
Atwell v. Nash
In re Same
Same v. Same
In re Duckworth
Duckworth v. Duckworth
In re Cornwall and Chemical Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts
King v. Green
In re Carfrae
Laurie v. Carfrae
In re Bickerstaff
Clement v. Pidcock
In re Same
Same v. Same
Pantaxides v. Pantaxides
Colman v. Roberts
In re the Pelsall Hall Colliery Co. Inundation Relief Fund
Brownhill v. Attorney-General
Edmonds v. Smith
Gould v. Cooke
Bays v. Felton
In re Brandon
Brandon v. Brandon
In re Cuming
Cuming v. Cuming
In re Goldsmith
Goldsmith v. Thompson

Further Considerations.

In re Foster
Foster v. Butt
In re Fesenmeyer
White v. Merrill
In re Blantern
Lowe v. Cooke
Lafone v. Huth & Co.
In re Parkes
Simpson v. Parkes
Saunders v. Evans
In re Elliot
Parrett v. Chinery
In re J. Nicholson
Mott v. Mott

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Sanderson v. Allen
Jones v. Steamship Cairngoun (Lim.)
Meux, Bart v. Cobley
Richards v. Whitham
Marsden v. Thorne
In re Dunk
Dunk v. Dunk
Wright v. Cauler
Smith v. Tasker
In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) v. Shadbolt
Thomas v. Gillard
Secretary of State for India v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co.
In re Hewit
Lawson v. Duncan
Dyke v. Rutherford
In re Perry
Walker v. Walker
Edison and Swan United Electric Co. (Lim.) v. Woodhouse & Rawson United (Lim.)
Stengel v. International Commercial Co. (Lim.)
Shepherd v. Mason
Smyrke v. De Peyer
Provan v. Paterson
Castle v. Stone
Cocksedge v. Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association
Upton v. National Mercantile Bank
Matthews v. Wells
Perry v. White
Tavner v. Martin
Clinch v. Clinch
Same v. Same
Cipri, trading, &c. v. Metal Recovery Co. (Lim.)
Mackenzie v. Sanders
Van Heck v. Isaacs
Hickman v. Harris
M'Dowell v. Sanders
Dale v. Fortescue
Cowney v. Thomson
Watling v. Watling
Banks v. Scovell
Jope v. Pountain
Cameron v. Dandicolle & Gandin (Lim.)
Savory & Moore v. London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.)
Jahncke v. R. Bell & Co. (Lim.)
Mapleson v. Lago
Wilkins v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Same v. Same
Williams v. Jones
Petre v. Ferrers
Nettlefolds (Lim.) v. Reynolds
Same v. Same
Hazlehurst v. Rylands
Burdett & Harris v. Gorton
Robertson v. Robertson
Hall v. Hall
Falk v. Falk
Driggs Ordnance Co v. Driggs, Schroeder, &c. Co.
Cameron v. Stretton, Hilliard, Dale & Newman
Whitaker v. Whitaker
Allison v. City and South London Railway Co.
New Skegby Colliery Co. (Lim.) v. Dodsley
Cowood v. Vernon
Lowson v. Wheatley & Sons
Howell v. Broomhead
Lane-Fox v. Kensington and Knightsbridge Electric Lighting Co.
Davey v. Hugill
Kelsey v. Hodgkinson
Hill v. Hill's Waterfall Estate, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Williams v. Spargo
Elkington & Co. (Lim.) v. Hürter
Rogers v. Paragon Works (Lim.)
Kearney v. Blake
Ashworth v. Roberts
Farnan v. Kirby
Lord Hatherton v. South Staffordshire Water Works Co.
Wellby v. Still
Wilkins v. Union Bank of London (Lim.)
Same v. Same
Siemens v. Taylor
Lyric Theatre (Lim.) v. Cordingly
Bott v. Wilson
In re Wigan
Wigan v. Carpenter
J. Richardson (Lim.) v. Weddell
Cellular Clothing Co. (Lim.) v. Marsh
Hampton Wick Local Board v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.
Starr v. 282nd Starr Bowkett Building Society
Davis v. Mills
Page v. Tunks
Lees v. West London Cycle Co.
James v. Jones
Williams v. Jenkins
Tyler v. Bishop
In re Steiner
Jancourt v. Kerr
Hartmann v. Kerr (No. 2)
Same v. Same
Fenner v. Holloway
Whittington v. Cusack
In re Grover
Acworth v. Grover
Thomas v. Morgan
In re Wright
Wright v. Sanderson
Trafalgar Co. (Lim.) v. Francis
Sandeman v. Pim & Co.
Hildesheimer & Faulkner v. Dunn & Co.
Eckstein v. St. Pancras Iron Works Co.
Pares Leicester Banking Co. v. Clerical, &c. Assurance Society
Micklethwaite v. Vincent

Points of Law.

Pitman v. Loocock
Blaiberg v. Medhurst
Willan v. Winn

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

In re Wynn
Wynn v. Wynn
In re Hunter
Hunter v. Hunter
Kingston v. Kingston
Scadding v. Burial Board for St. Pancras
Davenport v. Davenport
Holloway v. Best
In re Shorrocks
Shorrocks v. Shorrocks
Cobbett v. Saffery
Carter v. Roberts
Bentley v. Lovell

Adjourned Summonses.

In re Henlock
Henlock v. Henlock
In re Britannia Permanent Benefit Building Society & Co.'s Acts
In re Henry Mossley, one, &c.
In re Kay
Mackenzie v. Curtis
In re Same
Same v. Same
Hope v. Russell
Russell v. Hope
In re Akerman
Akerman v. Akerman
Hair v. Geddes
Pearks v. Holliday
In re Cakebread
Cakebread v. Cakebread
In re Same
Same v. Same
In re Same
Same v. Same
In re Kerr
Reynolds v. Bowly
Cameron v. Dandicolle & Studd
Wellby v. Still
Same v. Same
In re Layton
Jones v. Jones
Leppington v. Freeman
In re Mackay
Holman v. Huxham
In re Poinous
Sutton v. Martin
In re Lee
Farr v. Jackson
In re Taylor
Dent v. Taylor
In re Lomas
Shirley v. Lomas
Nettlefolds v. Reynolds (1890 N. 15)
Same v. Same (1890 N. 809)
In re North Australian Territory Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts
Willan v. Winn
In re Martin
Abethell v. Chalk
In re Kenrick
Kenrick v. Kenrick
In re Gooch
Gooch v. Gooch
In re Reynolds
Williams v. Mitchell
In re Booker
Booker v. Herapath
M'Murdo v. Baird

Further Considerations.

Scott v. Scott
Lousada v. Popham
In re Goodwin
In re Sheppard
Castleman v. West
In re Jaques
In re Binns
Thompson v. Jaques
In re Lepine
Dowsett v. Culver

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE WILLIAMS.

(Sitting as an additional Judge of the Chancery Division.)

Causes for trial (with Witnesses).

Remaining Actions transferred by Order dated April 28, 1891.

Foster v. Rowe
Sugden v. Cridlan
Dunston v. Arthur & Co.

Second transfer from MR. JUSTICE ROMER, dated May 12, 1891.

Duke of Sutherland v. Heathcote
Heathcote v. Blair
Jones v. Merionethshire &c. Building Society
Froude v. Wilberforce
Adney v. Adney
Vernall v. Reed
Cunliffe v. Bellite Explosives (Lim.)
Hampton v. Davis
In re Bliss, dec.
Bliss v. Bliss
Wrensted v. Kede
Wagner v. Costerlitz
Automatic Weighing Machine Co. (Lim.) v. National Exhibitors' Association (Lim.)
Jones v. Wemyss
Bellite Explosive (Lim.) v. Bellite Co. (Lim.)
Jensen v. Hilder
Lloyd v. Fox
Booty v. Goodwin
Lincoln Brick Co. (Lim.) v. Handley
Godfrey v. Walker.
Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate (Lim.) v. M'Ivor's Patents (Lim.)
Viney v. Lewis
Denney v. Frisby
In re Parker
Lowe v. Parker
Parker v. Lowe
Dawson v. Church
Church v. Dawson
Simeon v. Freshwater, Yarmouth, and Newport Railway Co.
Nicol v. Charsley
Horwood v. Milkins
Belsey v. Brooks
Twyerould v. Chamber Colliery Co. (Lim.)
Norton v. Burr
Render v. Macpherson
In re Kinahan and Trade-mark 14,636 and Patents, &c. Act
Coulson v. Lock
Beaumont v. Provident Assurance Co. (Lim.)
Bendall v. Alexander Daniel Selfe & Co.
Wood v. Lamplough
Ward v. Langdon
I'Anson v. Turner
Brear v. Hirst
Clewerth v. National Provident Institution and others
In re Stevens
Stevens v. Stebbington
Byers v. Grey
Lawrence v. Edge

Hamerton v. Bex
Copping v. Gilmore
Bolton v. Natal Land and Colonisation Co. (Lim.)
Kennedy v. Smith
Fairfax v. J. Lyons & Co. (Lim.)
Savage v. Jessup
Thornton v. Union Discount Co. of London
Ogilvie v. Blything Union Sanitary Authority
Eastwood & Co. (Lim.) v. Craig

Before Mr. Justice Romer.

Causes for trial (with Witnesses).

Bentley v. Manchester, Sheffield, &c. Railway Co.
Cummins v. Sargent
Stavert v. Passburg Grains Syndicate
Faulkner v. Stevens
Smith v. Bowler
Armstrong, Mitchell & Co. (Lim.) v. Pitkin
Singleton v. Mitchell
In re Price
In re Edwards
In re Price
Price v. Pontypool Gas and Water Co. (Lim.)
Hartley v. Dearden
Wilkinson v. Jennings

Transferred for trial or hearing only, pursuant to Order dated April 20, 1891.

In re Park
Cole v. Park
Park v. Cole
Coombs v. Wilks
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Keen
In re Casey's Patents, Nos. 10,512 and 10,513 of 1887, ex parte Isabella Stewart
Stewart v. Casey
Western Counties Railway Co. v. Anderson & Co.
Farbenfabriken vorm. Fried. Bayer & Co. v. Bowker
Lewis v. Oldroyd
Brandon v. Viscount Bury
In re Heywood
Heywood v. Heywood
Oldham v. Metherell
Wilson v. Queen's Club (Lim.)
Morris, Wilson & Co. v. Coventry Machinists' Co. (Lim.)
In re Morris, Wilson & Co.
Tims v. Schell
Schell v. Cutler
Alcock v. Smith
Thesiger v. York
In re Carruthers
Talbot v. Carruthers
Lloyd v. Clingo
Wroth v. Costhupe
Bank of British North America v. Anderson & Co.
Young v. Harris
Leach v. Gough
Gough v. Hayward
Westinghouse Brake Co. (Lim.) v. Williamson
Munns v. Howard
T. & W. Smith v. Bullivant
Benson v. D'Arcy
Radway v. Titmas
Brett v. Bowles
Savoy Publishing Co. (Lim.), v. O'Reilly
Duncan v. Baird
George v. Greener
Beecham v. Thompson
Lewis v. Ellis
Bliss v. Hart & Levy
Faull v. Harding
In re Cooper
Cooper v. Cooper
Aston v. Lazebrook
In re Freeland
Freeland v. Freeland
Jackson, Clayton & Co. v. Baker
Thomas v. Gillard
Webb v. Harden
Wood v. Dunn
Howard v. Goode
Robinson v. Trust and Investment Corporation of South Africa
Wintle v. Oldridge
Parker v. Pybus

SUMMARY.

1.—Mr. Justice Chitty—Witness Actions	106
Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses	58
Further Considerations and Point of Law	7
Procedure Summonses	3
		174
2.—Mr. Justice North—Witness Actions	84
Non-Witness Actions	5
Adjourned Summonses	9
Further Considerations	5
		103
3.—Mr. Justice Stirling—Witness Actions	117
Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses	29
Further Considerations	8
		154
4.—Mr. Justice Kekewich—Witness Actions	103
Points of Law	3
Non-Witness Actions	13
Adjourned Summonses	33
Further Considerations	5
		157
5.—Mr. Justice Williams (sitting as an Additional Judge)—
Remainder of First Transfer	3
Second Transfer	52
		55
6.—Mr. Justice Romer—Witness Actions		56
Total Causes and Matters for Hearing in the Chancery Division		699

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

PROBATE CAUSES.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

A List of Actions in the order in which they are entered for Trial will be posted at the Registry, Somerset House, and Supplemental Lists will be printed from time to time.

Parties must be prepared to try their Actions ten days after the same have been entered for Trial.

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—WITHOUT JURY.

Ashwin and Addis v. Addis (Addis and others cited)
Burchell v. Webber (Cowie and others cited)
Petitt and Woods v. Case
Wilde and others v. Lloyd (Joyce and others cited)
Askew and Johnston v. Askew
Gee v. Gee and others
Redhouse v. Blakeslee
Lees v. Lees and others
Phillips v. Barton and others
Groffman and Groffman v. Groffman (by Groffman, her grdian.)
Martyr (by Blackabey, his attorney) v. Perry
Paton v. Ormerod (Paton and Paton, by Corbould, their guardian, intervening)
Jones and Jones v. Edwardes
Radcliffe and Field v. Mellor (Mellor and others cited)
Barber v. Larrett and others
Featherstone v. Catterns
Witten v. Humphries (otherwise Witton)
Clark v. Dixon and others
Harris v. Hawker and others
Solicitor of the Treasury v. Harker
Ennis v. Leahy and others
Monk v. Higson and others
Meads and Bland v. Smith
Banks and Ivens (Johnson and others cited) v. Burcher
Jones and Eastham v. Eastham
Peacod (otherwise Pescod) v. Peacod
Cavendish v. Cavendish (by Cavendish, his guardian)
Perry and others v. Norman and Blundy (Perry and others cited)
Hand v. Scott and others
Young v. Whitfield and others
Boyd v. Johnstone
Draper and others v. Lawrence and others (Lawrence and others cited)
Cousins and Burbidge v. Tubb
Gurowski v. Maciejowski
Cowburn and Wood v. Lee (Lee cited)
Patrick v. Greenwell and Greenwell
Woodrooffe v. Elton (Fellowes and others cited)
Lambe v. Heathman
Johnstone and Beaumont v. Beaumont (Beaumont and others cited)
Jaques v. Jaques
Storey and others v. Bradshaw and others)
Eaton and Rivington v. Beardmore
Woodbridge v. Kidney

COMMON JURY CAUSES.

Mussen v. Mussen and Wilson
West and Chapman v. Conway
Swales (by her next friend) v. Richards
Roome v. Roome and Jones
Bates and others v. Clark and Ward (White and others cited)
Wills (Clapp and Norris cited) v. Clapp and Clapp

SPECIAL JURY CAUSES.

Lewsey and Allsopp v. Wells
Garrett and Mackay v. Walker (Bullock cited)
Walker v. Garrett and others
Mahony v. McCarthy
Barker v. Pullen and Harrison
Gumuchian v. Ashdjian & Vitalis (Olivo and others cited)
White v. Woolhead and others (Quarrington & Winslow cited)
Townsend and Sandford v. Townsend and others

FOR JUDGMENT.

Reeves v. Pennington

SUMMARY.

Before the Court itself—without Jury	43
Common Jury Causes	6
Special Jury Causes	7
For Judgment	1
Total	57

DIVORCE CAUSES.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

PART-HEARD CAUSES.

Notice to be given at Court when Parties are ready to proceed with the further hearing of these Causes.

Kalbitzer v. Kalbitzer (undefended)
Briscoe v. Briscoe and Dockerty (undefended)
Thorn v. Thorn and Matthews (undefended)
Sanders v. Sanders (J.S.) (undefended)
Matters (by her guardian, Thos. James Harvey) v. Matters
Martin v. Martin and Clark (pauper cause) (undefended)
Medina, otherwise Prentice v. Medina (undefended)
Scott-Lawrence v. Scott-Lawrence (undefended)

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—DEFENDED.

Storr v. Storr
Bramhall v. Bramhall and Dinely
Dobie v. Dobie
Treleaven v. Treleaven and Watling (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
De Vear v. De Vear (R.C.R.)
Vivian v. Vivian
Guttmann v. Guttmann
Johnson v. Johnson (J.S.)
Aarons v. Aarons and Wadmore
Jackson v. Jackson and Smith
Donkin v. Donkin, Atkinson, Salmon, and Lusby
Jackson v. Jackson (R.C.R.)
Taylor v. Taylor
Murdoch v. Murdoch (J.S.)
Ellis v. Ellis (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Forde v. Forde (J.S.)
Yorke v. Yorke, Isod, and Matthews
Windsor v. Windsor and Olsen (otherwise Alston)
Sharpe v. Sharpe
Vale v. Vale (J.S.)
Jay v. Jay
Aires v. Aires (J.S.)
Brook v. Brook (otherwise Sheridan) (in camerâ) (N.)
Lawrence v. Lawrence (otherwise Ambery) (in camerâ) (N.)
Danby v. Danby
Hayward v. Hayward (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Atterton v. Atterton and Irving (pauper cause)
Orr-Ewing v. Orr-Ewing (J.S.)
Hall v. Hall and Bagley
Speakman v. Speakman and Willet (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Rais v. Rais and Back
Mysoule v. Mysoule
White and Dames v. The Attorney-General (Eddingtons and Fox cited) (L.D.A.)
Milner v. Milner (pauper cause)
Stay v. Stay
Johnson v. Johnson and Smith
Bruce v. Bruce and Younger
Redman v. Redman (J.S.)
Newell-Atkins v. Newell-Atkins
Bowers v. Bowers
Levi v. Levi (J.S.)
Sands v. Sands, Barton (cited as Barlow), Morissey, and Oliver
Chubb v. Chubb and Cugny
Clack v. Clack
Bill v. Bill
Ashton v. Ashton (J.S.)
Jones v. Jones and Cubberley (cited as Cuberley)
Levin v. Levin
Fairhurst v. Fairhurst and Johnston
Yarrow v. Yarrow
Tuplin v. Tuplin
Hopper v. Hopper
Gotliff v. Gotliff and Harrison
Uva v. Uva and Mooney
Welch v. Welch and Burch
Mason v. Mason (R.C.R.)
Wetherill v. Wetherill (J.S.)
Attwood v. Attwood and Roberts (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Becker v. Becker
Scott, otherwise Kaye v. Scott (in camerâ) (N)
Berrey v. Berrey and Stanley
Huddart v. Huddart
Hooper, otherwise Fell v. Hooper (in camerâ) (N.)
Raynsford v. Raynsford (J.S.)
Clarke v. Clarke (R.C.R.)
Petch v. Petch and Bucklaw
Smith v. Smith, Clare, and Salaraki (pauper cause)
Richardson v. Richardson (Sir M. D. Gordon cited)
Mabley v. Mabley and Mitchell
Mowil v. Mowil
White v. White
Schofield v. Schofield

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—UNDEFENDED.

Forssell v. Forssell
M'Kenzie v. M'Kenzie (J.S.)
Henshall v. Henshall
Southam v. Southam
Swift v. Swift
Ensor v. Ensor
Palmer v. Palmer (J.S.)
Plum v. Plum
Francis v. Francis
Richmond v. Richmond
Dawson v. Dawson and Aylestubbs
Douglas v. Douglas
Bingley v. Bingley and Taylor (pauper cause)
Claybrook v. Claybrook & Russell
Crowley v. Crowley (pauper cause)
Noller v. Noller and Hawes
Davis v. Davis and Davis
Agar v. Agar
Worsnop v. Worsnop and Roulstone
Warden v. Warden
Dennell v. Dennell and Howe
Chappell v. Chappell and Darley
Chainey v. Chainey
Campbell v. Campbell
Hollmuller v. Hollmuller
Lewis v. Lewis and Casseford
Newton v. Newton
Kirk v. Kirk and Stead
Sandley v. Sandley and Lewis (pauper cause)
Hughes v. Hughes
Welman v. Welman
Lawson v. Lawson
Patrick v. Patrick and Potter
Thomson, otherwise Harris v. Thomson (in camerâ) (N.)
Overy v. Overy and Bremner (pauper cause)
Wheeler v. Wheeler
Parry v. Parry, Evans, and Francis
Crane, otherwise Cooper v. Crane (N.)
Welsh v. Welsh and Woodley
Wardle v. Wardle
Watts v. Watts
Spilsbury v. Spilsbury
Breaks v. Breaks (J.S.)
Sebire v. Sebire (J.S.)
Steel v. Steel and Binns
Knight v. Knight and Furner
Moss v. Moss (pauper cause)
Foster v. Foster
Morgan v. Morgan
Rhodin v. Rhodin
Brown v. Brown
Fulford v. Fulford and Hind
Ball v. Ball and Forster
Mountain v. Mountain
Shepherd v. Shepherd and Jarvis
Sicklemore v. Sicklemore (commission)
Prichard v. Prichard and Harvey
Bold v. Bold
Johnson v. Johnson
Small v. Small (pauper cause)
Fenwick v. Fenwick and Badrau
Towell v. Towell
Gooch v. Gooch and Ladbury
Taylor v. Taylor (Houlton (since deceased), Yarnell, & Parnham)
Robson v. Robson
MacOlive v. MacOlive and Glendennen
Birse v. Birse
Clark v. Clark and Kilburn (pauper cause)
Oates v. Oates
Hopthrow v. Hopthrow and Percy
Bonsall v. Bonsall and Johnson
Willison v. Willison
Lyles v. Lyles and Richardson
Woodnut v. Woodnut (pauper cause)
Denman v. Denman and Coborn

SPECIAL JURY CAUSES.

Judkins v. Judkins
McDowall v. McDowall and Jacob
Hall v. Hall and Barnard
Frerichs v. Frerichs and Lynch
Hurley v. Hurley and Menzies
Carew v. Carew
Lyon v. Lyon and Warner
Bentley v. Bentley and Dorman
Delaforce v. Delaforce & Driscoll
Russell v. Russell (J.S.)
Redfern v. Redfern, Williams, Murrell, Rae, and Herbert
Duplany v. Duplany and Cohen (intervening)
Stuart v. Stuart and Kirwan
Cantley v. Cantley
Cantley v. Cantley and Playfair

COMMON JURY CAUSES.

Elliott v. Elliott and Dines
Smith v. Smith and White
Hubbart v. Hubbart and Bond
Hipwell v. Hipwell
Willcock v. Willcock (J.S.)
Willcock v. Willcock and Jenkins
Hinds v. Hinds and Williams
Leuty v. Leuty and Bu dell (pauper cause)
Marsh v. Marsh and Marsh
Martin v. Martin and Allkins
Webb v. Webb (R.C.R.)
Plackett v. Plackett and Fletcher
Atkinson v. Atkinson & Gwyther
Creber v. Creber and Bryan
Condley v. Condley and Ball
Mills v. Mills and Lemon
Harlow v. Harlow (J.S.)
Harlow v. Harlow, Brown, and Smith
Harrison v. Harrison (J.S.)
Wattler v. Wattler and Kimber
Smith v. Smith and Kayhil
Smith v. Smith
Taylor v. Taylor
Trafford v. Trafford and Williams
Erskine v. Erskine and Gentle
Cooke v. Cooke
Steinberg v. Steinberg
Brew v. Brew and Belvere
Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, Ridley, German, and Hartsilver (cited as Hardsilber)
Dearden v. Dearden and Nuttall
Shewring v. Shewring & Houkes

SUMMARY.

Causes before the Court itself—Defended	72
" " Undefended	75
Special Jury Causes	14
Common Jury Causes	28
Total	189

CAUSES standing over by consent or otherwise, or stayed by order; to be replaced in the List of Causes for Hearing on the Petitioner giving Ten Days' Notice in writing to the other parties for whom an appearance has been entered, and filing a Copy of such Notice in the Registry.

Coustas v. Coustas (J.S.)
Wood v. Wood and Brook (defended) (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Young (defended) (stayed)
Bates v. Bates and Baker (C.J.) (stay security)
Browse v. Browse (defended) (stay security)
Dodson v. Dodson (undefended) (stayed)
Wilson v. Wilson, Rand, and Wardell (stay security) (C.J.)
Bagge v. Bagge (defended order)
Pereira v. Pereira (undefd. order)
Fearn, A. E. v. Fearn, G. (order) (R.C.R.)
Nicol, M. A. v. Nicol, A. (defended order) (J.S.)
Bevington v. Bevington and Jameson (undefended) (commission)
Clark v. Clark (dfnd. order) (J.S.)
Tribe v. Tribe (C.J.) (order) (J.S.)
Titford v. Titford (defended) (stay security)
Payne v. Payne, Carter, and Fry (cited) (defended order)
Relph v. Relph (defended) (stay security)
Wood, H. v. Wood, John (defndd.) (stay security) (J.S.)
Holmes v. Holmes and Pearson (defended) (stay security)
McConachie v. McConachie and Beal (defended) (stay security)
Darvall v. Darvall, Scutter, and Curtis (defndd.) (stay security)
Arnott v. Arnott and Fox (defended) (stay security)
Bennett, D. v. Bennett, M. (defended) (stay security) (R.C.R.)
Richley v. Richley and Tate (defended) (stay security)
Piggott v. Piggott, Ball, and Kimber (defnd.) (stay security)
Amos v. Amos and Harding (defended) (stay security)
Nathan v. Nathan (defended) (stay security) (J.S.)
Prime v. Prime and Hewett (stay security) (C.J.)
Francis v. Francis and Alderman (defended) (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Hinton (stay security) (C.J.)
Corti v. Corti and Bruce (defended) (stay security)
Cardle v. Cardle and Jaggs (stay security) (C.J.)
Hodson v. Hodson and Seager (defended) (stay security)
Burnside v. Burnside and Hardy (defended) (stay security)
Park v. Park and Ashworth (stay security) (C.J.)
Shemtob v. Shemtob and Vitali (stay security) (C.J.)
Campbell v. Campbell (defended) (commission) (J.S.)
Kavanagh v. Kavanagh and Nesbitt (defended) (stay security)
Duncan v. Duncan (undefended) (stay security)
Bucknall v. Bucknall (defd. order)
Wild v. Wild (defnd. order) (J.S.)
Clarke v. Clarke and Robinson (defended) (stay security)
Edwards v. Edwards and Edwards (stay security) (C.J.)
Hicks v. Hicks and Smith (defended) (stay security)
Scarratt v. Scarratt and Bullock (stayed) (S.J.)
Palmer v. Palmer, Sprules, and Sprules (stay security) (C.J.)
Wilkinson v. Wilkinson and Humphries (stay security) (C.J.)
Hounsell v. Hounsell (undd. order)
Smith v. Smith and Moss
Moser v. Moser (undefended) (stay security) (J.S.)
Gray v. Gray and Gutteridge (stay security (C.J.)
Webster v. Webster (sty. sy.) (J.S.)
Joseph v. Joseph (undefended)

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JUNE 1 TO JUNE 6.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	June 1	June 2	June 3	June 4	June 5	June 6
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Runcorn	Northwich	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Derby	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
26	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Lichfield	Stafford	Leek	Cheadle
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

FRIDAY, MAY 15.

Howlett (on behalf, &c.) v. Mayor, &c., of Maidstone (appeal of defendants from judgment of Denman, J., dated November 15, at trial without a jury at Maidstone; heard March 20).—Allowed.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

Tynedale Steamship Co. (Lim.) v. Newcastle-on-Tyne Home Trade Insurance Association (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., dated November 20, at trial without a jury at Middlesex; heard April 17).—Allowed; new trial ordered.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

In re An Arbitration between J. Knight and Tabernacle Permanent Building Society and Arbitration and Building Societies Acts (appeal of J. Knight from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 10, rescinding order for statement of special case; heard April 7).—Allowed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MAY 26.

Reynolds v. Tooth and Ward (appeal of plaintiff from Denman, J., and Wills, J., on application for new trial, setting aside verdict and directing entry of judgment for defendant; action tried by the Lord Chief Justice at Lewes—restored after security given).—Dismissed.

Challinors and another v. Wright and others (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 17, refusing liberty to enter judgment for amount claimed).—Dismissed.

Guinea Coast Gold Mining Company (Lim.) v. Irvine and others (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Mathew, J., and Williams, J., dated April 18, increasing amount of security directed by order of February 16).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 27.

Guardians of the Poor of Parish of Brighton v. Guardians of the Poor of the Strand Union (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of the Brighton guardians from order of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., on appeal from quarter sessions on case stated under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11).—Dismissed.

Phillips and others v. J. Fowler & Co. (Leeds) (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 17, reversing judge's order granting liberty to defend).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MAY 26.

Badeley v. Consolidated Bank (appeal of W. P. V. Wallis from order of North, J., dated April 16, dismissing summons for review of taxation).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 27.

Mangan v. Metropolitan Electric Supply Company (Lim.) (appeal of defendant from order of North, J., dated May 8, for transfer of action to Queen's Bench Division).—Dismissed.

In re Bence, dec. Smith v. Bence (construction) (appeal of defendant J. F. Bence from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 6).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, June 1.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Tuesday, June 2.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Wednesday, June 3.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Thursday, June 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Friday, June 5.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Saturday, June 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

OBITUARY.

LORD ROMILLY, who met with his death in the fire at his house in Egerton Gardens on Saturday, the 23rd inst., was the eldest son of Lord Romilly, Master of the Rolls, and the grandson of Sir Samuel Romilly. The deceased gentleman was born in 1835. On November 5, 1851, he became a student at Gray's Inn, but towards the close of the Crimean War he, forsaking the law for the profession of arms, became an ensign in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and served with that famous regiment during the Indian mutiny, and took part in the terrific fights and severe marches which marked the victorious progress of the British arms. After the suppression of the mutiny Lord Romilly returned to the law, and became a pupil in the chambers of Mr. Thomas Chitty, and was called to the Bar on November 17, 1864, and was, after some years, appointed Clerk of Enrolments in Chancery.

COMMERCIAL FAILURES.—According to Kemp's Mercantile Gazette the number of failures in England and Wales gazetted during the week ending May 23 was sixty. The number in the corresponding week of last year was eighty-eight, showing a decrease of twenty-eight, being a net decrease in 1891, to date, of 200.

ADVERTISEMENT HOARDINGS.—The engineer to the City Commission of Sewers (Colonel Haywood) has recently made a report to them relative to the Advertising Stations (Rating) Act, 1889. He states that clause 5 of that Act gives power to the local authorities to prohibit the affixing of advertisements to any hoard or scaffold. In the event of that prohibition not being exercised, the question of fees to be paid would have to be decided. From returns furnished by the various vestries and district boards of the metropolis, it was seen that the rate of charges varied very considerably, the highest being in the parish of St. George's, Hanover Square, and the lowest in St. Luke's. The prices in the former case had been found so high that no applications for permission to put up advertisements were made, and subsequently the vestry withdrew the tariff and prohibited altogether bills being stuck upon the hoardings in the parish. Colonel Haywood therefore proposes that to begin with the charges in the City should be for first-class streets 4*d.* per foot super per month for the first six months, and afterwards 6*d.*; for other streets 2*d.* for the first six months, and afterwards 3*d.* The first-class streets should include every one through which lines of omnibuses pass, as well as, perhaps, a few others of large traffic. A certain height—say 40 feet—should be assumed in calculating the area and the fees to be paid. On this estimate a hoarding in a first-class street having an 18 feet frontage and two 5 feet returns, and assuming it to be covered with advertisements up to 40 feet, would amount to 18*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per month, and for six months 112*l.*, and a similar hoarding in other streets would be 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* per month, and 56*l.* for six months. The main object of all regulations for hoards and scaffolds was to get them removed as quickly as possible, on account of the general public inconvenience they caused. The Commission of Sewers have decided to sanction advertisements on hoardings in the City in cases where they thought fit, subject to the scale of fees suggested by Colonel Haywood.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. KENELM EDWARD DIGBY has been elected a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. Mr. Digby was called to the bar in Hilary Term, 1865.

Mr. Clement Stone-Wigg, B.A., Oxon. (of the firm of Pattison, Wigg & Co.), of 11 Queen Victoria Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Stone-Wigg was admitted in 1883.

Mr. William Henry Mason, of 3 North Buildings, Eldon Street, Finsbury, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Mason was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Anthony Buck Creeke, jun., of 21 Lime Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Creeke was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Silverwood Cope, of 150 Leadenhall Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cope was admitted in 1887.

Mr. Alexander Pope, of Grecian Chambers, Devereux Court, Temple, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Pope was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Walter Perks (of the firm of Ward, Perks & M'Kay), of 85 Gracechurch Street, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Perks was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Percival George Robinson, of 72 Cannon Street, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Robinson was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frederick Willoughby, M.A. Oxon., of Daventry, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Willoughby was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William John Down, M.A. Oxon. (of the firm of Down, Scott & Down), of Dorking, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Down was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Percy Baldwin (of the firm of Gregory, Graham & Baldwin), of Bristol, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Baldwin was admitted in 1884.

SIR CHARLES BUTT.—Sir Charles Butt, the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, who is still staying at Wiesbaden for the benefit of his health, will resume his seat in Court on Monday, June 15.

THE CAUSE LISTS FOR THE TRINITY SITTINGS.—The following is a complete summary of the various appeals and causes set down for hearing during the Trinity sittings which commenced on Tuesday last—viz. In the Court of Appeal there are twenty-nine final and five interlocutory appeals from the Chancery Division, three from the County Palatine Court, seventy-four final and eighteen interlocutory appeals from the Queen's Bench Division, seven from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, six Bankruptcy appeals, and fourteen cases in the New Trial Paper, making a total of 156 appeals. In the Chancery Division Mr. Justice Chitty has a list of 174 causes and matters, Mr. Justice North has 103, Mr. Justice Stirling has 154, Mr. Justice Kekewich 157, Mr. Justice Williams (sitting as an additional judge) fifty-five, and Mr. Justice Romer fifty-six, giving a total of 699 causes in that Division. In the Queen's Bench Division 1,076 actions have been set down; there are twenty-six cases in the Crown Paper, sixteen in the Revenue Paper, one in the Special Paper, twenty-six Opposed Motions, and thirty-three Bankruptcy appeals, which gives a total of 1,179 causes and matters in that Division. In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division there are fifty-six probate cases, 189 matrimonial causes, fourteen Admiralty actions, and five cases before the Railway Commission, making a total of 264 cases in that Division. The total number of appeals and causes therefore set down for hearing during the Trinity sittings is 2,298.

THE LAW COURTS AND HER MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.—The Law Courts will, according to a custom which has been observed for the last few years, be closed on Saturday, May 30, on which day Her Majesty's birthday will be officially celebrated.

AN IMPROVED DEED-BOX.—Mr. A. E. Edwards, of 51 Westdown Road, Stratford, has just introduced a patent safety deed-box, for which he claims the following advantages: (1) The box is so constructed as to prevent the lid (which opens in front) suddenly falling down when unlocked; (2) the lid, both in the course of opening and closing and when open, is supported and protected at both ends by sides or wing pieces, thus preventing the possibility of papers falling over the sides when opened, which frequently happens with the ordinary deed-box, the lid of which is supported by chains liable to break; (3) The prices, having regard to the improvements, will compare favourably with those of the old-fashioned boxes. The boxes may be inspected at Messrs. Waterlow & Sons (Lim.).

EX-PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S ADVICE TO YOUNG LAWYERS.—If I were to tender any advice to young men in the legal profession or contemplating such a career, I think I could not refrain from asking them to dismiss from their minds the idea that the practice of the law is made up in an important degree of oratory and eloquent addresses before Courts and juries. No one should enter this profession who is not prepared to do very hard, continuous, and often irksome work. I shall follow this advice by saying that there is no mistake about another fact—to wit: In the practice of law, as in everything else, honesty, and frank fair dealing, is not only enjoined by good morals, but is the best policy. It is a delusion to suppose that the noble profession of the law can be faithfully pursued or successfully practised by trickery and overreaching subterfuges.—N. Y. Law Journal.

THE MORTMAIN LAWS.—A bill introduced by Mr. Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., M.P., deals with those restrictions on the acquisition of land, or any interest in land, to which charities are at present subject. Under the existing law a gift to a charity of land or of any property falling within the wide expression 'interest in land' is, if made by will, void. The bill proposes to remove the distinction between personal property which is an interest in land and pure personalty; and in lieu of making a gift of land by will in favour of a charity absolutely void, to render it compulsory on the trustees to sell the land so given, the proceeds of the sale remaining the property of the charity. The cases in which land may be validly acquired under the existing law are left untouched. The author of the bill considers that these provisions will remove the restrictions at present placed on charities, while they at the same time in no way facilitate the accumulation of land in the hand of charities. The first proposal is to declare that in the Mortmain Act 'land' shall include tenements and hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, of any tenure, but not money secured upon land or other personal estate arising from or connected with land. Secondly, power is to be given that land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use; but such land must, notwithstanding anything in the will contained to the contrary, be sold within five years from the testator's death or such extended period as may be determined by the Chancery Division or any judge thereof sitting at chambers. Lastly, it is provided that any personal estate directed by will to be laid out in the purchase of land to or for the benefit of any charitable use shall be held to or for the benefitof the charitable use, as thoug hno such direction to lay out in the purchase of land had been mentioned. The bill is only intended to apply to the will of a testator who dies after its passing.

MR. JUSTICE STEPHEN, whose mental affliction has given rise to much unfavourable comment in the English newspapers, has resigned his position and retired from the bench. The complications which his continued presence there would have created have thus happily been avoided. The learned judge's retirement was made the occasion of an affecting demonstration by both the bench and the bar, and he himself is said to have been reduced to tears. In the palmy days of his career he made a name in the profession which will be enduring, and he will be known to posterity, notwithstanding the circumstances which have led to his retirement, as a lawyer of profound learning and great mental grasp, and as one of the ablest among the many able men who have been his contemporaries.—Canada Law Journal.

EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES.—The Lord Chancellor's bill relative to evidence provides that every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness on every hearing at every stage of the charge. This is to be the case whether that person is charged or arraigned solely or jointly with another. However, the person so charged is not to be compellable to be a witness on any hearing; nor is the wife or husband to be an admissible witness without the consent of the person charged, unless so compellable heretofore. The bill is not to qualify or affect the law as to the competency of witnesses or the rules of evidence, except as is expressly enacted in the measure. When the person charged is a witness, he is not to have the right to refuse to answer any question on the ground that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged. On the other hand, when a person is called as a witness under the bill, he is not to be asked any questions that tend to show that any defendant has committed or been convicted of an offence other than that with which he is then charged. An exception to this general rule is, however, allowed where the proof that the defendant has committed such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence with which he is then charged, or where that defendant has given evidence of good character.

BIRTHS.

On May 24, at Mount Pleasant, Glazebrook, the wife of Wyndham Smith, of Manchester, Solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On May 23, at the Church of St. Margaret, at Westminster, William Douglas Carde, M.A., to Grace Desborough, youngest daughter of John Rendall, M.A., Barrister-at-Law.

On May 26, before the Registrar, by special license, James Alexander, second son of the late James White, of Teddington, to Alice Murray, youngest daughter of the late James Hooper Dawson, of Kelso, N.B., Barrister-at-Law.

DEATHS.

On May 19, at Rempston Lodge, Gunnersbury, after a few days' illness from inflammation of the lungs following influenza, W. F. Mackenzie Staples, only son of W. F. B. Staples, Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple, and grandson of Colonel Mackenzie, of Gruinard, Ross-shire.

On May 21, Dugald William Barrett Tayler, Solicitor, Southampton, aged 34 years.

On May 23, at 28 Park Village East, Regent's Park, William Holmes, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On May 26, at 8 Nevern Road, S.W., Helen, widow of Sir John Nodes Dickinson, late Judge of the Supreme Court, Sydney.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE present sittings have, so far, been marked by considerable activity on the part of the judges of the Queen's Bench Division. It is true that there have never been more than two Divisional Courts sitting, while one has been the general rule, but the business to be disposed of by those Courts is not such as to necessitate the continuous sitting of three Courts as announced. For the trial of jury and non-jury cases, however, an unusually large number of Courts have been constituted, and on several days during the present week no less than nine judges have been sitting to dispose of such cases. This is certainly a step in the right direction. Some arrangement by which the actions set down for hearing in the Queen's Bench Division may be dealt with more rapidly has long been urgently needed.

TRIAL by a judge without a jury would seem to be becoming very popular amongst litigants in the Queen's Bench Division. At the commencement of the present sittings there was a list of no less than 544 non-jury actions—a number about equal to the special and common jury actions added together.

THE circuit system, which has long exercised a most pernicious influence over the administration of justice in the Queen's Bench Division, continues to flourish with unabated vigour. It is announced that thirteen of the fifteen common law judges are again told off for the ensuing summer assizes, which will begin before the end of the present month. By about the second week in July all the circuits will have commenced, and only Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Charles will be left to deal with the entire business on the common law side for quite a month previous to the rising of the Courts for the Long Vacation. If the business of the circuits was such as to in any way call for such a judicial exodus from London for so long a period, there might be something to be said in favour of the retention of the present system, but as it is notorious that, except at a few of the large towns, the business, both civil and criminal, at the assizes is quite inconsiderable, it seems to us that the existing circuit arrangements are quite indefensible.

PERHAPS one reason why the Government hesitates to recommend the appointment of another judge for the Chancery Division is the difficulty of locating him. The 'Court' assigned to Mr. Justice Williams while sitting as an additional judge is the poorest apology for a Royal Court of Justice which it is possible to conceive. A temporary platform, a couple of tables, and a few chairs have converted an arbitration-room into a very inconvenient and unsuitable Court. Happily it is not easily found, being in an unsuspected corner upstairs; and the ladies and gentlemen of fashion and high degree who have lately honoured the Lord Chief Justice with their company in his commodious Court had no opportunity for drawing comparisons. The learned judge shows no sign, however, of being affected by his surroundings, and considerable progress will, it is expected, have been made in the Cause List by the end of this week.

WE have already (see ante, p. 210) noticed at some little length the all-important Sharpe v. Wakefield, which we report this month (60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 73). The judgments, it will be seen, had been carefully considered (six weeks having elapsed between the conclusion of the arguments and their delivery), and on every point but one they are unanimous. There is a slight difference between the Lord Chancellor and Lord Herschell on the point whether some change must be proved in respect of the population of a licensing district or otherwise before the renewal of a license can be refused. The Lord Chancellor appears to have thought that some change must be proved, but Lord Herschell 'did not think that the fact that a license had been granted for the previous year would be a sufficient ground for justices presuming that the licensed house was then needed, and considering only whether circumstances had changed in the interval,' as 'it might well be that the attention of the licensing justices had not on a former occasion been called to the condition and wants of the neighbourhood.' Which of these two noble lords is right? We think Lord Herschell; but it matters little. For we have no doubt that, whatever may be said as to the propriety of the course indicated by the Lord Chancellor, the licensing justices would have jurisdiction to refuse to renew a license, even though no change of circumstances or population could be proved to have taken place in the year preceding the application for renewal.

Jackson's Case, which we report this month (60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 349), will, no doubt, be perused by all our readers. One of the most curious portions of the judgments is this: 'With regard to the alleged right to capture,' observes Lord Justice Fry, at the beginning of his judgment, 'there does not appear to be a rag of authority in favour of such a right. No authority, even of the oldest times, was cited in support of such a right.' Turning back to the argument, however, of Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Henn Collins (see p. 349), we find the following dictum of Lord Mansfield in Rex v. Mead, 2 Ken. 279, put forward: 'The husband has, in consequence of his marriage, a right to the custody of his wife, and whoever detains her from him violates that right; and he has a right to seize her wherever he finds her.' Assuming, for the sake of argument, that this dictum of Lord Mansfield's was wrong, we nevertheless utterly fail to see how any judge of the present day could be justified in treating it as not possessing a 'rag of authority.'

THE cases of Ex parte Culley, in re Adams, 47 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 97, and Ex parte Dearle, in re Hastings, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 74, must now be read subject to the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Gamgee, ex parte Ward, noted in our Notes of Cases for the current week. The rule as to the presentation of a bankruptcy petition by a trustee has hitherto been taken to be that a trustee can petition, but the cestui que trust, unless under disability, must join in the petition, and it will be found so stated in the text-books. In this form, however, the proposition is too general, and is not fully warranted by the two cases upon the point, both of which deal with bare trustees possessed of no beneficial interest in the judgment debt. In In re Gamgee, ex parte Ward, the petitioning creditor was the assignee of a judgment debt for 1,300*l.* which he had purchased for 900*l.* Of rather less than one-half of this he was the absolute owner; of the remainder he was trustee for three other persons who had assisted in finding the purchase-money. In these circumstances it was objected, on the authority of the cases above mentioned, that he was not entitled to present a petition in his own name, and that the other beneficiaries ought to have joined. This view the Court of Appeal declined to take. Unlike the petitioning creditors in the cases upon which reliance was placed, the creditor in In re Gamgee was the absolute owner of an amount of the judgment debt far larger than was required to support a petition, and, that being so, was clearly entitled to present one. An opposite decision would have entailed the extreme proposition that a creditor could not have presented a petition upon a debt of 10,000*l.* if the debtor could have shown that in respect of 10*l.* of this debt he was a trustee for some other person. The case illustrates the extreme care necessary in the compilation of text-books. The ease with which a proposition applicable to a bare trustee alone is transferred to trustees generally is probably only equalled by the disappointment of the unfortunate suitor who, failing to refer to the authorities themselves, is misled by the over-statement.

FORM No. 76 appended to the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 and 1890, prescribes the form of special proxy to be used by a creditor desirous of being represented by another person at a meeting of creditors. The form contains, after the words of the instrument of proxy, the words 'Signature of witness.' Is the instrument valid if signed by the proxy himself as witness? This was the question raised in the case of In re Parrott, ex parte Cullen, and recently decided by a Divisional Court consisting of Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Charles. The analogous case of Seal v. Claridge (50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 316) assisted the Court in the discovery of the principle to be applied. There the Court of Appeal held that the grantee of a bill of sale could not, although a solicitor, be the attesting witness thereof under section 10 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, the ground of the decision being that the grantee was a party to the transaction and had an interest, if inclined to be fraudulent, in deceiving the grantor. Is it then a principle of the English law that a party to a transaction cannot be an attesting witness, or was the decision in Seal v. Claridge founded on the special requirement of the Bills of Sale Act providing that the attesting solicitor should explain the bill of sale to the grantor? We do not propose to follow the Court through the learned disquisition, including an examination of the Roman law, by which a general principle was discovered to exist excluding parties to a transaction from being competent attesting witnesses. Suffice it to say that this principle does exist, was applied in Seal v. Claridge, and applies to the case in question of a proxy witnessing the instrument of proxy appointing him, he being a donee of the power, and therefore, although taking no beneficial interest, not a stranger to the transaction. Freshfield v. Reed, 9 M. & W. 404, which was referred to, has not much bearing upon the point, as the decision there was that a consent in writing is not duly attested simply by the consenting party being a party to the deed to which his consent is required, if his signature is not attested by a witness. The fact that no authority is to be found in the English law for the general proposition on which the case was decided is probably due to the fact that the far wider rule excluding witnesses on the ground of interest obscured the narrower, but far more reasonable, rule incapacitating a party to a transaction from being an attesting witness.

THE World points out that it was not the late Archbishop of York, nor the late Mr. Merry, but Lord Young, one of the lords of the Scotch Court of Session, who spoke of an enormous gift for religious purposes as being the largest fire insurance he had ever heard of. There is a certain amount of unfairness in the remark, which might have been made, if it could be justly made at all, more justly of a bequest, which costs the testator nothing, than of a gift, which costs the donor, at any rate, the amount of money given. Not a few bequests to charitable objects are made from motives the very reverse of charitable, and with results the very reverse of beneficial. Solicitors, who are frequently consulted about the substance as well as the form of a bequest, may frequently do good service in selecting a deserving object of it, and on the point whether a charitable bequest should be made at all, in drawing the attention of the testator to the vital distinction between money inherited by the testator and money earned by his own exertions.

THE Judicature Act Amendment Bill, which has just been introduced by the Lord Chancellor, contains three enacting clauses only. By clause 1, any person who has held the office of Lord Chancellor may, at the request of the Lord Chancellor, sit and act as judge of the High Court or Court of Appeal. By clause 2, the Queen, on a vacancy in the office of President of the Probate, &c. Division, may appoint to that office any barrister of not less than fifteen years' standing (the qualification appears now to be ten years' standing by section 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873) or a judge of not less than one year's standing; and by clause 3 assessors may assist the House of Lords in Admiralty appeals. Clause 1 would greatly strengthen the Court of Appeal, and looking to the present extraordinary strength of the House of Lords as a judicial body (see ante, p. 178), perhaps that House might well occasionally spare the services of Lord Selborne and Lord Herschell. But two questions inevitably arise: (1) whether Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, as well as ex-Lord Chancellors, might not occasionally sit in the Court of Appeal; and (2) whether the provisions of section 4 of the Judicature Act, 1875, by virtue of which judges may not sit on appeal from their own judgments, ought not to be applied to the proposed new order of things.

A COUNT-OUT of the House of Commons prevented Mr. Atherley Jones from bringing on his motion for the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the working of the Judicature Acts. As the Government last year (see LAW JOURNAL for July 26, 1890) met Lord Esher's motion to a similar effect by a direct negative, it was hardly to be expected that Mr. Atherley Jones, even if he had obtained a hearing, would have been more successful. There is no denying, however, that the present state of things is far from satisfactory. Perhaps, as the first step towards amendment, some member of one of the Houses of Parliament may see his way to asking the Government to produce, as a Parliamentary paper, the annual reports made by the council of judges of the Supreme Court, under section 75 of the Judicature Act of 1873, 'to one of Her Majesty's principal secretaries of State.' These reports, which would now be about fifteen in number, state 'what amendments, if any,' it would in the judgment of the council 'be expedient to make' in the Judicature Acts, 'or otherwise relating to the administration of justice.' A standing commission of inquiry, in fact, is constituted by the council of judges.

A PICTURE sent back by the purchaser to the artist to be touched up or altered is not exempt from distress for rent upon the artist's studio. So it was held by Mathew, J., sitting without a jury, in Van Knoop v. Moss, of which we gave a full account (ante, p. 318), and the authorities as a whole seem fully to bear out his lordship's opinion. It has, indeed, been said (see Parsons v. Gingell, 16 Law J. Rep. C. P. 227) that if articles are sent to a place to remain there they are distrainable, but that if sent for a particular object, and if the remaining at the place be an incident necessary for the completion of that object, they are not. But the better opinion is that the exemption from distress arises solely for the benefit of trade and commerce (see Lyons v. Elliott, 45 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 159), as is shown by the exemption being held applicable to pawned goods at a pawnbroker's (Swire v. Leach, 34 Law J. Rep. C. P. 150), and to a carriage sent to a coachmaker for sale (Findon v. M'Laren), but not to horses and carriages standing at livery (Francis v. Wyatt, 1 W. Bl. 483), or even to a ship in the course of being built in a dock, as was held by the Court of Appeal in Clarke v. The Millwall Dock Company, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 378. There is no doubt that the law of distress presses very hardly on the property of persons who are strangers to the landlord. Even their money, if contained in a sealed bag, may be seized for the rent of a friend with whom they may be staying, though money loose cannot be seized (see Bac. Abr. 'Distress,' B., citing 22 Ed. IV. 50*b*).

THE question of alleged illegal penalties under the Vaccination Acts was recently brought before the House of Lords, and it appeared that in three cases persons had been sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for offences against the Act, but that in two cases the sentences had not been carried out, and that, in one case of actual imprisonment, no less than 40*l.* had been paid as compensation to the party imprisoned. Referring to the Acts, we find that in only one case is even simple imprisonment directly authorised—i.e. under section 32 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, for the offence of inoculating a person with small-pox. The ordinary offence of neglecting to procure vaccination of a child is, by section 29 of the same Act, punishable merely by a penalty not exceeding 1*l.* But though imprisonment is not directly authorised by the Vaccination Acts, the effect of those Acts as read with the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 5, is indirectly to authorise it. By the latter enactment it is provided (replacing the Small Penalties Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 127) that the period of imprisonment imposed by a Court of summary jurisdiction 'in respect of the non-payment of any sum of money adjudged to be paid on a conviction' be such period as in the opinion of the Court will satisfy the justice of the case, but shall not exceed in any case the maximum fixed by a scale set out in the Act, the period limited, in the case of a penalty exceeding 10*s.* but not exceeding 1*l.*, being fourteen days. It is expressly added that 'such imprisonment shall be without hard labour, except where hard labour is authorised by the Act on which the conviction is founded.'

MEMBERS of the criminal classes not unfrequently betray a sense of humour which, under happier circumstances—on the bench, for instance—would be highly appreciated. Albert M'Grady, who was tried before Mr. Warry, Q.C., at the Clerkenwell Sessions on Tuesday for stealing a coat, is evidently an unconscious humorist. The learned judge having pointed out to the prisoner that his plea of being 'hunted by the police' was untenable, proceeded to recount some neglected opportunities for reformation, including Mr. Wheatley's annual 'thieves' supper,' when he was interrupted, to the great amusement of his audience, by the prisoner's remark, 'Yes, my lord, I saw you there!' A sentence of seven years' penal servitude closed the scene, and there, at any rate, Mr. M'Grady would admit, it was the judge, and not the prisoner, who scored.

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR JUNE.

THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS for June comprise sixteen cases in the Chancery Division (pp. 313–376); fourteen cases in the Queen's Bench Division (pp. 281–360); and three Magistrates' Cases (pp. 73–88). In the Chancery Division there are three appeal cases, and in the Queen's Bench six appeal cases. The number also contains three cases in the House of Lords, two from the Queen's Bench Division and the third the famous case of Sharpe v. Wakefield in the Magistrates' Cases.

In the Chancery Division, in Simmons v. The London Joint-Stock Bank and Little v. Same, the Appeal Court, affirming Mr. Justice Kekewich, decided questions of the rights and liabilities of a stockbroker depositing his customer's securities with a bank for the purpose of obtaining advances to himself, and of the bank realising such securities, with respect to the customer whose securities were so pledged. In re Stanger raised points of construction in a will in reference to a discretionary trust, and the non-exercise of this discretion. In re Smith; Williams v. Frere decided points of practice with respect to the production of partnership books and the rights of persons not parties to the action. Gedye v. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings decided what constituted possession of a reversionary interest in land, after the registration of a lease, where such land had been compulsorily taken under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. According to Lawrence v. Edwards the office of a parish clerk is a temporal and not a spiritual office, and sequestration, unless accompanied by suspension or inhibition, does not deprive a parson of his right to appoint the parish clerk. In the case of In re Webster it was held that when a client has obtained ex parte the common order to tax a solicitor's bill, but has allowed the order to die out, he cannot, under section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, obtain ex parte a second common order in precisely the same terms, suppressing the fact that he had obtained the former order. In re Bullock was a case of a trust to pay income until the annuitant's bankruptcy, a discretion in the trustees and the cesser of interest. Perry v. Eames, with which two other actions were consolidated, decided that the Crown was not bound by section 3 of the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71), and that no prescriptive right to the access of light over land to adjoining buildings could be acquired against the Crown during its beneficial ownership. In re The National Whole-meal Bread and Biscuit Company decides that where a petition is presented to ask that a voluntary winding-up may be continued under the supervision of the Court, and the petition is advertised and subsequently amended by adding an alternative prayer for a compulsory winding-up, such an order will not be made until the petition has been readvertised. In Greenwood v. Turner it was held that a person in possession under a contract of sale who has made no objection to the title, will not be ordered to pay the balance of purchase-money into Court without having the option to retire from possession, unless he has done something to interfere with the value of the property. Ellis v. Dadson involved the validity of a contract by a company working a patented invention with the patentee not to wind itself up voluntarily during the term of the letters patent. In re Heseltine decides that the attesting witness to a bill of sale may properly insert therein as his address the place where he is occupied during the day, though he does not sleep there. In Mills v. Dunham the plaintiff's ex-traveller was restrained from carrying on a competing business notwithstanding that the contract not to do so was expressed in very general language. Barker v. Furlong defines the rights of trustees to sue in trover for chattels of which they may never have taken actual possession, and the liability of auctioneers and agents in respect to the wrongful conversion of goods. In M'Mahon v. The North Kent Iron Works Company, a debenture-holder was held entitled to a receiver, though the principal sum secured was not immediately payable, as the security was in jeopardy through the insolvency of the company. By In re Croom it was decided that an interest under a will, coming into possession after a scheme of arrangement of a debtor's affairs had been approved by the Court, did not vest in the testator, but in the debtor.

In the Queen's Bench Division, in The Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest, Lords Watson and Macnaghten in the House of Lords (the Lord Chancellor dissenting) held, affirming the Court of Appeal, that the Institution of Civil Engineers, being a society for the advancement of science and not for the promotion of professional interests, was exempt from income-tax. Their lordships' House also, in Morris and Wife v. Edwards, decided questions involving the privilege of documents and answers to interrogatories. In Chatenay v. The Brazilian Submarine Telegraph Company the principles are defined of the construction of a foreign power of attorney. In Pullman v. Hill the communication of a defamatory letter to the clerk of a company who wrote and copied the letter, was held not to be privileged. Serraino v. Campbell decided questions of construction of a charterparty and bill of lading. In re The Council of the Borough of Dover and the Kent County Council, &c., defines the liabilities and exemptions under the Local Government Act of 1888 of quarter session boroughs not being county boroughs. In The Mayor, &c. of Bootle-cum-Linacre v. The County Council of Lancashire was decided a number of questions arising between county justices and a corporation in consequence of the substitution of county by borough police. Brown v. Hawkes was a case of alleged malicious prosecution arising out of the purchase of and non-payment for goods. In re Soltykoff decides that an infant is not liable upon a bill of exchange at the suit of an indorsee of the bill, although it was accepted for the price of necessaries. In Reid's Brewery Company (Lim.) (appellants) v. Male (respondent), a firm of brewers, who also carried on the business of bankers and money-lenders for the exclusive accommodation of their customers, were allowed to deduct, for the purpose of income-tax, losses sustained in respect of loans and advances. According to the famous case Regina v. Jackson a husband has no right, where his wife refuses to live with him, to take her person by force, and restrain her of her liberty until she is willing to render him conjugal rights. In Seagrave v. Parks it was held that the statement in an affidavit in support of an application for the service of a writ out of the jurisdiction, that the defendant was on board one of Her Majesty's ships in the Mediterranean was insufficient. Langston (appellant) v. Glasson (respondent) was an income-tax case in which the bursar of St. John's College, Oxford, unsuccessfully sought exemption from income-tax. In The East End Benefit Building Society v. Slack a County Court judge was held to have no jurisdiction to hear a judgment summons by the assignee of a judgment debt who had not obtained leave to issue execution under the County Court Rules, 1889, Order XXV., rule 9.

In the Magistrates' Cases, by Sharpe v. Wakefield, the unanimous decision of the House of Lords, it was settled that the discretion of justices under the Alehouse Act, 1828, s. 1, applies equally to the renewal as to the granting of licenses. In Oldham v. Sheasby travellers who were served successively with refreshments at two public-houses of the same town during closing hours, were held, under the Licensing Acts, 1872 and 1874, to be bonâ fide travellers in respect of the second as well as of the first public-house which they visited. In re Bellencontre was an extradition case involving the construction of a foreign warrant.

EVIDENCE IN CRIMINAL CASES BILL.

IT is a thousand pities that a summary of the learned, exhaustive and convincing speech with which the Lord Chancellor introduced this bill in the House of Lords was not printed by way of a memorandum explanatory of the bill itself. It is impossible to exaggerate the weight of the authority producible in favour of it, but not apparent from its clauses, not even from any clause repealing the many particular enactments already on the statute-book, by which its principle has been adopted by the Legislature. The report of the Royal Commission to which the criminal code bill of 1878 was referred, the four passed bills of Lord Bramwell, the general approval with which the present Attorney-General's bill passed the House of Commons in 1888; all these show, in addition to the long line of particular enactments, a series of strong reasons why a general bill to allow every person charged with an offence to give evidence should be passed into law.

The bill before us is a very short one. Notwithstanding the many sound reasons for passing it, there is, in accordance with the modern and, as we think, mistaken practice, no preamble. There are only two enacting clauses. By the first, which is subdivided into four, it is proposed (1) that every person charged with an offence and his or her wife or husband 'shall be a competent witness on every hearing at every stage of such charge'; (2) that no such person shall be compellable to be a witness 'unless so compellable heretofore'; (3) that the rules of evidence, 'except as herein expressly enacted,' shall remain unaltered; and (4), that no person charged, if a witness, 'shall have the right to refuse to answer any question on the ground that it would tend to criminate him or her as to the offence charged.'

A comparison of these words with the two best known of the many particular enactments under which the evidence of accused persons is already admissible—the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885—shows a great impending improvement, both in form and substance, of the law of evidence. By section 11 of the Act of 1875 it is provided that upon the hearing and determining of any indictment or information under sections 4, 5 and 6 [why this restriction?] of this Act, the respective parties to the contract of service, their husbands and wives, shall be deemed and considered [why deemed and considered?] competent witnesses. By section 20 of the Act of 1885 it is enacted that 'every person charged with an offence under this Act or under sections 52 to 55, both inclusive,' of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100 (which sections relate to rape, indecent assault, and abduction), 'or any of such sections, and the husband or wife of the person so charged, shall be competent but not compellable witnesses on every hearing at every stage of such charge, except an inquiry before a grand jury.' It will be a great advantage to get rid of the restrictions contained in the above enactments, and to have one broad general rule applicable to criminal cases. There is one point, however, where amendment will be needed. It is proposed that 'no person shall be compellable to be a witness, nor shall such wife or husband be an admissible witness without the consent of the person so charged, unless so compellable heretofore.' Under what Act is a defendant now so compellable? He is not compellable under the Licensing Act, 1872, s. 51, nor under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 21, nor under the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, s. 9. On reference, however, to 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14, we find that by that Act, which amends the law of evidence on the trial of an indictment for non-repair of a public highway, the defendant and his wife are not only competent witnesses, but compellable to give evidence. Surely it would be better to repeal and re-enact this insignificant little Act than leave the exception to the general rule of non-compellability to be found out anyhow.

We now come to clause 2. By this it is proposed that a person called as a witness in pursuance of the bill need not answer 'any questions tending to show that any defendant has committed or been convicted of any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, unless the proof that the defendant has committed such other offence is admissible evidence to show that such defendant is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged, or unless such defendant has given evidence of good character.' To this clause we see no objection. A reference to 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 111, by which, if evidence of good character of a prisoner on his trial for felony be given, it may be met by evidence of a conviction for a previous felony, and to Regina v. Rowton, 34 Law J. Rep. M. C. 57, will show the grounds for the exception as to evidence of character.

Such is the Criminal Law Evidence Amendment Bill. In the House of Lords it has already been 'reported,' after some little amendment, by the standing committee of that House, and it will very soon be read a third time. In the House of Commons, of course, it will have a more stormy passage than in the House of Lords, but we see no reason why it should not ultimately pass. But the sooner the dozen particular Acts which already allow accused persons to give evidence are placed in a schedule as enactments proposed to be expressly repealed, the better it will be for the prospects of the bill.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

Bill through Committee:—

Evidence in Criminal Cases Bill.

Second reading:—

Elementary Education Provisional Order Confirmation (London) Bill.

New bill:—

Judicature Act Amendment Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Bills through Committee:—

Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.
Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Tramways (Ireland) Act (1860) Amendment Bill.

Second readings:—

Customs and Inland Revenue Bill.
Forged Transfers (No. 2) Bill.
Public Accounts and Charges Bill.
Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill.
Cork (County and City) Court Houses Bill.
Bills of Sale Act (1890) Amendment Bill.

Bills withdrawn:—

Fire Inquests Bill.
Hares and Rabbits Bill.
Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill.
Land Department (Ireland) Bill.
Summary Jurisdiction Act (1879) Amendment Bill.

Correspondence.

TITHE ACT, 1891.

SIR,—In reference to 'E.'s' letter hereon in your issue of May 16, it seems clear that where the landowner pays voluntarily the giving of an occupier's liability notice is an empty formality, and it would doubtless be considered sufficient if given at any time before the landowner took steps to recover from the occupier. Where the landowner does not pay voluntarily, I take it he may serve the occupier's liability notice at any time before order made; but if, in consequence of this delay, the day for hearing has to be altered under rule 7, he will probably be mulcted in costs.

Land is often let on improving lease for ninety-nine years, or, in the West of England, for ninety-nine years if either of three named persons shall so long live, the rent being merely nominal. The lessee improves, and then sells part for the remainder of the term and underlets part. The landlord does not know the name of the new occupiers nor the terms on which the subtenant holds. In such a case, who is the landowner? If the freeholder and his tenant are joint owners for the purposes of the Act, must both give occupier's liability notice; and, if so, separate or joint notices? If the freeholder does not know the terms on which the occupier holds, how can he say whether section 2, subsection 6, applies? In such a case does section 1, subsection 1, destroy the freeholder's remedy against his lessee on his covenant? C.

SIR,—A lease expired at Lady Day last. The tenant, a man of position, paid me his rent subsequent to his quitting the farm, but refused to pay the tithe due April 1, though by his lease he expressly covenants to pay it.

How can I recover the amount from him? The Act says it is to be recovered from the occupier by distress and 'not otherwise'; but then he is not now the occupier nor can I distrain.

Can I proceed against him under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 4? SUBSCRIBER.

May 28.

THE COUNTY COURTS.

SIR,—In order that your readers may estimate the importance of County Court judgeships, I will mention the present jurisdiction of County Courts, which is as follows: In bankruptcy, unlimited; in cases under the Employers' Liability Acts, unlimited; in winding-up companies, up to 10,000*l.*; in equity cases, up to 500*l.*; in common law cases, 100*l.*; in Admiralty cases, 300*l.*; besides which the County Courts have jurisdiction in many other matters.

When it is considered that a County Court judge does not often have the assistance of the bar, and has to trust to his own knowledge of law, it will be seen that a County Court judge ought to be an admirable lawyer.

Some of the judges, such as Mr. Hall, Q.C., Mr. Barber, Q.C., Sir Richard Harington, and a few others, do their work admirably; but what can be said of the generality of Lord Halsbury's appointments except that they are simply appalling?

My respect for the bench prevents my mentioning names; but every practising lawyer knows of men who have been appointed who have never practised and are absolutely unknown in the profession.

There are numbers of well-known barristers who are admirably qualified, and are known to be so, but who will never be appointed, because they are neither related to Lord or Lady Halsbury nor to any leading Conservative politician.

Every practising lawyer knows that in some County Court districts a would-be suitor is always warned by his lawyer that it is useless to contest an important case unless he is prepared to appeal.

A BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

DERRY v. PEEK.

SIR,—One constantly sees and hears the case of Derry v. Peek called 'great' or 'important,' and it is generally implied, if not expressed, that it decided something new or, at least, unexpected. It certainly is a 'great' case in the sense that it deals with fundamental principles of the law of tort, and affirms them in accordance with precedent and logic; but it lays down no new law. Indeed, Lord Bramwell, in giving his opinion, declined even to argue the question on the authorities, because until then he had never heard a doubt about it—that question, of course, being whether in an action of deceit the plaintiff must prove that the inaccurate representation was made dishonestly, or whether it will be enough for him to show that it was made carelessly. Nor is it easier to see why the decision should have been unexpected, for, as Lord Justice Fry said in a subsequent case (not reported), carelessness, so far from being the same thing as deceitfulness, is in many respects its opposite. The fact is that the case, if startling at all, is startling only in its simplicity. It was important, no doubt, for lawyers to find themselves 'on bed rock' with a decision unassailable alike in logic and authority. But from the way in which people write of 'since Derry v. Peek,' as if it marked an epoch in the law, one would imagine that a new rule had been introduced into the common law, whereas, in fact, a very old rule was affirmed.

A COMMON LAWYER.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS' CHARGES.

SIR,—I do not think it to be the correct practice for magistrates' clerks to charge 3*s.* 6*d.* in addition to the fixed charge, and if it has been done—and I charge nobody with doing it—would he not be liable to refund the money on the principle enunciated in Dew v. Parsons, 2 B. & A. 562; and would he not be liable to an indictment on the principle of the old case of the coroner mentioned in Part 3 of Coke's 'Institutes,' cap. lxix.? And see also the case of the collectors of the fifteens mentioned in the same chapter.

June 1. B. S. W.

Reviews.

RINGWOOD'S BANKRUPTCY.

Ringwood's Principles of the Law of Bankruptcy, embodying the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, part of the Debtors Act, 1869, and the Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884. With an Appendix containing Schedules to the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the Consolidated Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, &c. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THE law and practice of bankruptcy have been very considerably altered in recent years, the last changes being introduced by the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, and the Bankruptcy Rules, 1890. We have, also, besides the Bankruptcy Discharge and Closure Act, 1887, the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, and the rules thereunder, the last set made in 1890 dealing with returns and accounts, and the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, all introducing changes with which it is necessary that the student of bankruptcy law should be familiar. A new order was also made in December, 1890, prescribing the fees and percentages which are to be charged for proceedings under the Bankruptcy Acts of 1883 and 1890 after January 1, 1891. All these are collected in Mr. Ringwood's book, some printed in full, others receiving due notice in the text. The author has also, in his chapter on Bills of Sale, 'made an attempt to follow the windings of the law on that difficult subject. The merits of this work, in respect of accuracy and arrangement, are well known, and the present edition seems well equal to its predecessors in giving the reader a clear statement of bankruptcy law and practice at its date. The only omission we have discerned is that no reference is made to the decision in Ex parte Raison, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 206, that persons adjudicated bankrupts under the Act of 1883 fall under the more lenient provisions of the former law as to discharge where they came before the Court in the year 1891.

INDERMAUR'S LEADING CASES.

An Epitome of Leading Common Law Cases. With Some Short Notes Thereon. Chiefly Intended as a Guide to 'Smith's Leading Cases.' Seventh Edition. By JOHN INDERMAUR, Solicitor (First Prizeman, Michaelmas Term, 1872), Author of 'Principles of the Common Law,' 'Manual of Practice,' 'Manual of the Principles of Equity,' 'An Epitome of Leading Conveyancing and Equity Cases,' 'Self-Preparation for the Final Examination,' 'Self-Preparation for the Intermediate Examination,' &c. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THE idea of this work, as stated in the preface to the first edition, which is here reprinted, is to be a help to the reading of 'Smith's Leading Cases,' an epitome which may be of service not only to those who have no time to fully peruse the large volumes of 'Leading Cases,' but also to those who, having attentively perused them, will find it profitable to speedily run through a small manual and impress the chief decisions on their memories. The present edition contains no new 'principal case,' but the recent decisons and the new statutes touching upon the matters dealt with have been added in the notes. Thus, under the leading cases on the subject of evidence, Price v. The Earl of Torrington and Higham v. Ridgway, we find a reference to the change in the law of evidence introduced by the Oaths Act, 1888; under Miller v. Race we are referred to the recent decision of the House of Lords in Vagliano v. The Bank of England; under Moss v. Gallimore to the provisions of the Tenants' Compensation Act, 1890. The work is well brought down to date and will be very useful to the student.

HIGGINS'S DIGEST OF PATENT LAW.

A Digest of the Law and Practice of Letters Patent for Inventions. Including the Statutes and all Cases decided from the passing of the Statute of Monopolies to October, 1890. Second Edition. By CLEMENT HIGGINS, Q.C., and G. EDWARDES JONES, Barrister-at-Law. London: Wm. Clowes & Sons. 1890.

THE object of this work in its original form was to supply a reliable and exhaustive summary of the reported patent law cases decided in English Courts of law and equity. 'No opinion,' the authors tell us, 'is expressed upon the cases digested, and no attempt is made to reconcile conflicting decisions. All that the book contains rests upon the authority of the judges.' This principle was carried to its logical conclusion, and accordingly even a few overruled cases were retained, and several upon the same point of different dates were introduced. The Patents, Designs and Trade-marks Act, 1883, however, rendered it necessary to state the provisions of the statute law so that it might be easily referred to in connection with the cases relating to similar portions of the subject. The alphabetical arrangement is accordingly applied to both Acts and cases so as to avoid the necessity of a double index, with the accompanying trouble to the reader of a double search. Thus, under the head of 'Amendments,' we have the sections and rules of the Patent Acts, 1883 and 1888, and then some twenty pages of decisions. Under the head of 'Infringement' we have sections 13 and 15 and part of section 17 set out, and then the cases, beginning with one decided in 1773. 'Subject-matter' occupies over fifty pages, and 'Threats' ten pages. The work will be of service to the practitioner in patent law, and he will probably occasionally find considerable help from the table of cases at the end of the volume classified according to subject-matter, which is compiled to facilitate the finding of a case of which the name is forgotten while the nature of the invention is known.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

PARISH CLERK AND SEXTON—DISMISSAL FROM OFFICE—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

AT the Solihull County Court, on May 29, before his Honour Sir Richard Harington, an action was brought by Thomas Kent, Shirley Road, Acock's Green, parish clerk and sexton of St. Mary's Church, Acock's Green, against the Rev. James Alexander Balleine, the vicar of St. Mary's Church, in which the plaintiff claimed an account of fees received by the defendant on his behalf since April 20 last, or in the alternative 10*s.* 6*d.* damages for disturbance in his offices of parish clerk and sexton on May 11. Plaintiff also asked for an injunction restraining the defendant from receiving the fees payable to the plaintiff, and from interfering with him in the fulfilment of his duties and the enjoyment of his offices.—Mr. Pritchett, in opening the case, said the action involved the question as to who was parish clerk and sexton of St. Mary's on May 11 last. St. Mary's was a district chapelry, constituted under section 16 of 59 Geo. III. c. 134, and the plaintiff claimed to be the parish clerk and sexton. He had occupied those offices for twenty-five years, ever since the consecration of the church; but on April 20 received from Mr. Newey, the defendant's solicitor, a letter dismissing him. He wrote to the defendant, on April 22, expressing surprise that he was dismissed, according to Mr. Newey, because of complaints from members of the congregation of negligence and the unsatisfactory manner in which he had performed his duties, and urged that an opportunity should be given him of making an explanation. He asked for particulars of the complaints. On April 24 Mr. Newey wrote to the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant had handed him his letter, and requested him to point out that plaintiff had not delivered up the keys of the church to the churchwardens. The defendant and the churchwardens did not propose to discuss with the plaintiff the nature of the complaints or give him particulars. The defendant did not intend to reappoint the plaintiff, and as his office expired on March 31 he was desired not to enter the church again in an official capacity. Plaintiff consulted his solicitor, who advised him that he was entitled to remain in office, and neither the vicar nor churchwardens had the power to dismiss him. This was communicated to the defendant by Mr. Hodgkinson (plaintiff's solicitor), who further said that the plaintiff would retain the keys of the church and attend to his duties as usual.—His Honour: The question between you is whether the office was tenable at will or freehold.—Mr. Pritchett said that was scarcely the question. Section 29 of the Act to which he had referred enacted that the clerk should be annually appointed by the minister of the church or chapel. So that, so far as the clerkship was concerned, he (Mr. Pritchett) was bound to admit that the appointment was an annual one; but with regard to the office of sexton he contended that it was in the nature of a freehold, and that the defendant had no power to remove him from the office except for misconduct such as would justify it. Plaintiff was appointed clerk and sexton by Dr. Swinburn, and year after year he remained in his office by the tacit consent of the vicar, there being no formal reappointment. On the death of Dr. Swinburn last year, the defendant became the vicar, and plaintiff's contention was that, as he received no notice that he was not reappointed to his office he retained it, and defendant had no right to dismiss him in the middle of the year. It was admitted by the defendant that after the plaintiff was dismissed a funeral took place in the churchyard and that defendant drew the fees, 3*s.* 6*d.* for the clerk and 7*s.* for the sexton.—His Honour asked if Mr. Pritchett had any authority to show that the office of sexton was in the nature of a freehold office.—Mr. Pritchett said there was no authority as to the position of a sexton in a district chapelry. A parish clerk was considered a lay officer, and it was an arguable point whether there was an office of sexton attached to a district chapelry, as there was by law to a parish. But whatever offices the plaintiff held in connection with the chapelry, the gentleman whom the vicar had appointed in the place of the plaintiff presumably wanted the same offices, and the vicar admitted having received certain fees for whoever filled those offices.—Plaintiff said the church of St. Mary was consecrated in 1866, and the first incumbent was Dr. Swinburn. In September, 1866, he went before a committee, Dr. Swinburn being present, and was told that a man was required to fill the offices of clerk and sexton. He was applicant for the offices, and at a second meeting was appointed. Dr. Swinburn gave him instructions as to his duties, and hung up in the church a table of fees. The fees to be charged as clerk and as sexton were distinctly pointed out by Dr. Swinburn. Some time ago a burial board was formed in Yardley, and he received compensation for the loss of his district. Burials, however, were still conducted in the churchyard.—By Mr. Vachell: He understood when he was engaged that he was appointed for life. He did not attend the vestry meeting held on March 31 last, but he prepared the room for the meeting. He did not know that complaints had been made about the manner in which he discharged his duties.—In reply to his Honour, plaintiff said he had acted as clerk in the church between March 31 and April 20, and he cleaned the church himself or by deputy between those dates, but he was not sure whether he had dug any graves. He received no notice that he was not reappointed until April 20.—For the defence Mr. Vachell said the plaintiff's duties terminated on March 31, his appointment being an annual one, and he was not reappointed. He argued that the office of sexton could not be considered in the nature of a freehold, and that the appointment of sexton in a district chapelry was not like an appointment in old parish churches. At the vestry meeting on March 31, when the question of the appointment of clerk was considered, the defendant stated that in consequence of numerous complaints he should not reappoint the plaintiff. That was not communicated to the plaintiff until some little time afterwards; but he (Mr. Vachell) submitted that that made no difference, because the plaintiff's duties would be terminated on March 31, unless he was reappointed.—His Honour said the plaintiff was permitted to perform his duties until April 20, and it was not until then that he received a communication that the defendant did not intend to reappoint him. He thought, where a man held an annual appointment and was allowed to go on performing his duties under the belief that he had been reappointed, that that in effect amounted to a reappointment for a year. He thought the plaintiff could be got rid of from both offices at the next meeting; but, perhaps, it would be better to pay him a moderate sum as compensation for the loss of his offices for the remainder of the year, and get rid of him forthwith.—Counsel then consulted, and ultimately agreed to adopt His Honour's suggestion and leave the matter in the hands of the archdeacon to determine what sum should be paid the plaintiff.—His Honour said that as the plaintiff was not told he was not reappointed, but was allowed to go on performing his duties from March 31 to April 20, he was entitled to hold his offices for another year. He was glad, however, the parties had agreed to submit the matter to the archdeacon. His judgment would be for the plaintiff, for a sum to be fixed by the archdeacon as compensation for the loss of his offices to March 31 next, the plaintiff undertaking not to attempt to perform any of the duties of the office in the meantime. Plaintiff was also allowed costs.—Mr. Pritchett (instructed by Mr. William Hodgkinson) appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Vachell (instructed by Mr. E. C. Newey) for the defendant.

BAR STUDENTS' EXAMINATIONS.

TRINITY, 1891.

AT the general examination of students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on May 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, and 14, 1891, the Council of Legal Education have awarded Studentships in Jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas, to continue for a period of two year, to DE VILLIERS, JACOB ABRAHAM JEREMIAS, of the Middle Temple.

D'SOUZA, FRANCIS XAVIER, of the Middle Temple.

Studentships in Jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas for one year to STEPHEN, JOHN BRUCE CALDWELL, of Gray's Inn.

BARLOW, CLEMENT ANDERSON MONTAGUE, of the Middle Temple.

And the Barstow Law Scholarship to

FARRELLY, MICHAEL JAMES, of the Middle Temple.

The Council have also awarded to the following students certificates that they have satisfactorily passed a public examination:—

À-BECKETT, WILLIAM GILBERT, of the Inner Temple.
ABDUL ALIM, MOHAMMAD, of the Middle Temple.
ALI KHAN, ZAHID, of the Inner Temple.
BATHURST, CHARLES, of the Inner Temple.
BEAUMONT, HENRY, of the Middle Temple.
BENNETT, ERNEST EMILIUS, of Lincoln's Inn.
BIGGE, WILLIAM EGELRIC, of Lincoln's Inn.
BINGLEY, FREDERICK SPARKES NORMAN, of the Inner Temple.
BROWN, WILLIAM JETHRO, of the Middle Temple.
BRYANT, FRANCIS JOHN, of Lincoln's Inn.
CALTHROP, HORACE GEORGE, of the Inner Temple.
CALVERT, REGINALD HOUBLON, of the Middle Temple.
CHAMIER, DANIEL, of the Inner Temple.
CHAPMAN, HENRY PRICE, of the Inner Temple.
CHILD, NICOLAS GILBERT LOUIS, of the Inner Temple.
CHORLEY, HERBERT EDWARD, of the Middle Temple.
DOBB, HARRY, of Lincoln's Inn.
EVANS, SAMUEL THOMAS, of the Middle Temple.
EVERARD, SAMUEL MUMFORD, of the Inner Temple.
FARRELLY, MICHAEL JAMES, of the Middle Temple.
FEARNSIDES, JOHN WILLIAM, of the Inner Temple.
FLANAGAN, JAMES WOULFE, of the Middle Temple.
GALSWORTHY, FREDERICK TREVOR, of Lincoln's Inn.
GARDINER, BERTRAM CARDEW, of Lincoln's Inn.
GODWIN, WILLIAM CHARLES, of the Middle Temple.
GRAHAM, ARTHUR HARINGTON, of the Middle Temple.
GREY, EGERTON SPENCER, of the Inner Temple.
HARRISON, REGINALD, of the Inner Temple.
HART, HENRY D'ARCY, of Lincoln's Inn.
HEATHCOTE, WILLIAM EDWARD, of the Middle Temple.
HENRIQUES, HENRY STRAUS QUIXANO, of the Inner Temple.
HUDSON, WILLIAM HEBARD, of Lincoln's Inn.
HUME-ROTHERY, JOSEPH HUME, of Lincoln's Inn.
ISMAIL KHAN, MOHAMED, of the Middle Temple.
JACOB, EDWARD JAMES, of the Inner Temple.
JAMES, FULLARTON, of Gray's Inn.
JOHNSTON, ROBERT MATTESON, of the Inner Temple.
JONES, WALTER BUCKLEY, of Lincoln's Inn.
KENDALL, PERCY JOHN, of Lincoln's Inn.
KINGDON, FREDERICK WILLIAM WASHINGTON, of the Middle Temple.
KINGSLEY, CHARLES GEORGE, of the Inner Temple.
KNOX, HARRY, of the Inner Temple.
LEGGETT, SIDNEY PERCY, of the Middle Temple.
LLOYD, CHARLES FREDERICK, of the Inner Temple.
MAJID, ABDUL, of the Middle Temple.
MAXWELL, ANTHONY, of the Middle Temple.
MELBOURNE, CHARLES ALEXANDER DICK, of the Inner Temple.
MILLER, THOMAS FREDERICK DAWSON, of the Inner Temple.
MORTIMER, GEORGE FREDERICK LLOYD, of the Inner Temple.
MUIR, WILLIAM, of Gray's Inn.
MUNDAHL, HENRY SMETHURST, of Lincoln's Inn.
NAI PLÜM, of the Middle Temple.
NIX, JOHN ASHBURNER, of the Inner Temple.
PARR, THOMAS HENNING, of the Inner Temple.
PATERSON, NICHOLAS JULIAN, of the Middle Temple.
PEEROZSHAW, JEHANGIR, of the Inner Temple.
PENRHYN, ARTHUR LEYCESTER, of the Inner Temple.
PILCHER, JOHN HARRY WARTON, of the Inner Temple.
PLATT, BERNARD ARCHIBALD, of the Inner Temple.
REECE, HENRY WALTER, of the Middle Temple.
RICHARDSON, FRANK COLLINS, of the Inner Temple.
ST. GERRANS, HERBERT PERCY, of the Inner Temple.
SCOTT, HAROLD SPENCER, of Lincoln's Inn.
SCRIVENER, HARRY STANLEY, of the Middle Temple.
SEANOR, JAMES RICHARD, of Gray's Inn.
SEN GUPTA, CHANDRA SEKHAR, of the Middle Temple.
SLADE, MARCUS WARRE, of the Inner Temple.
STEVENS, GERALD PHILIP, of Lincoln's Inn.
STURGE, CLEMENT YOUNG, of the Inner Temple.
SYKES, ERNEST RUTHVEN, of the Inner Temple.
WEEKLEY, GEORGE MITCHELL, of the Middle Temple.
WRIGLEY, AUSTIN GUY, of the Inner Temple.

The following students passed a satisfactory examination in Roman law:—

Francis Allen, of the Middle Temple; Ernest James Bader, of the Inner Temple; Henry Richings Bousfield, of the Inner Temple; James Bennett Brunyate, of the Inner Temple; William Bernard Campbell, of the Middle Temple; Edward James Morgan Chaplin, of Lincoln's Inn; Ernest Clark, of the Middle Temple; Sidney Wrangel Clarke, of the Middle Temple; Bomanjee Cowasjee, of Lincoln's Inn; William Morse Crowdy, of the Middle Temple; William Frederic Ludlow De Quetteville, of the Inner Temple; Edward St. Leger Viscount Doneraile, of the Inner Temple; Edward Ellershaw, of the Middle Temple; Gerard Yorke Twisleton Wykeham Fiennes, of the Inner Temple; Wilfred Rowlandson Ford, of the Middle Temple; Mahimohun Ghose, of Lincoln's Inn; Alexander Grant, of the Inner Temple; the hon.

John William Harris, of the Inner Temple; Robert Hill, of the Middle Temple; Henry William Holder, of the Inner Temple; Charles Henry St. John Hornby, of the Inner Temple; Vishnu Singh Kapur, of the Middle Temple; Frederick Herbert Kelly, of the Inner Temple; William Fraser Claughton Kelly, of the Inner Temple; Hira Lal Kumar, of Gray's Inn; William Hargreaves Leese, of the Inner Temple; Aaron Ernest Lyons, of the Middle Temple; John James M'Culloch, of the Middle Temple; Robert William M'Donald, of the Middle Temple; Kenneth Edward Milliken, of the Middle Temple; Martin Henry Fitzpatrick Morris, of Lincoln's Inn; Percy Morris, of the Inner Temple; Alexander Neilson, of the Middle Temple; John Penry Oliver, of the Middle Temple; Harold George Parsons, of the Inner Temple; James Joseph Power, of Lincoln's Inn; John Stuckburgh Risley, of the Inner Temple; Abdula Rahimtula Sayani, of the Inner Temple; Ahmed Rahimtula Sayani, of the Inner Temple; Edward Peter Schjott, of the Middle Temple; Courtenay Chaworth Shippard, of the Inner Temple; Herbert John Simmonds, of Lincoln's Inn; John Parker Slagg, of the Inner Temple; George Joseph Stokes, of Lincoln's Inn; Frederick George Storey, of the Middle Temple; and Mohammed Majid Ullah, of the Middle Temple.

By Order of the Council,
(Signed) J. NAPIER HIGGINS,
Vice-Chairman.

Council Chambers, Lincoln's Inn:
May 26, 1891.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

THE AMERICAN COPYRIGHT ACT.

REFERENCE has been made in these columns before to the American Copyright Act. Briefly stated, the American Copyright Act, while it will benefit the popular British author whose works command a sale in the United States, will only do so at the expense of the British printing and kindred trades, which will suffer a serious loss. This arises as the consequence of a provision in the American Copyright Act that copyright shall only be granted to British authors on the condition that before publication copies of the book set up in type and printed in the United States have been deposited in the library of the Congress. This rule applies also to chromos, lithographs, and photographs, which must be produced from plates, negatives, or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States before any copyright can be had in them. 'We have,' states a labour contemporary, 'only to recite these particulars to suggest the obvious counter-stroke, which is, that there shall be no copyright within the British dominions for any author, whether native or alien, unless his book has been printed from type set within a country belonging to the International Copyright Union. This would place the successful author between two bundles of hay, and he would have to choose either the British or the American market. The London Chamber of Commerce has, it appears, moved in the matter, and drawn out a retaliatory scheme in regard to the American Act. The preamble of the bill points out that among those who will be materially injured by the American measure are compositors, proof-readers, pressmen, printing-machine managers, and their helps, printers' warehousemen, electrotypers and stereotypers, paper makers, typefounders, ink makers, printing-machine makers, manufacturers of printing materials, bookbinders, photographers, and lithographers. The Chamber of Commerce propose to introduce a bill into Parliament providing that British copyright is not to be granted to any books not set up in type and printed in the British dominions or in some country within the Berne Convention. The following is the draft of the English measure: 'Scheme of a bill to amend the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45). To obtain copyright in any book within the British dominions, it shall not be necessary for the author, whether native or alien, to reside therein. Any person shall be entitled by the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) to copyright in any book in the English language, photograph, chromo, or lithograph, if it is first published in the British dominions, and printed from type set within a country belonging to the International Copyright Union, or from plates made therefrom, or from negatives or drawings on stone made therein, or from transfers made therefrom, but not otherwise. This Act and the Copyright Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) shall be construed together. This Act may be cited as the 'Copyright Amendment Act, 1891.'

A LIQUIDATOR IS NOT A TRUSTEE.

Our contemporary, the Accountant, recently commented on a liquidator's responsibilities in connection with the case of The Leeds Forge Company, where an important point was settled as to the liability of the liquidator of a limited company—namely, whether or not he is a trustee—that is, an officer who holds the assets of a company in strict trust. The original Leeds Forge Company was voluntarily wound up and a new company formed, taking over the property of the old company in consideration of a cash payment and transfer of fully-paid shares in the new. A certain original shareholder in that capacity was entitled to 400 fully-paid ordinary shares in the new company and also to a cash bonus of 6*l.* per share. On the other hand, the liquidator stated that 200 out of the 400 shares and the bonus were the subject of litigation between this shareholder and another person who was also interested in the company, and therefore he could not be expected to deal with them piecemeal, and although an indemnity was offered, he still refused to transfer any of the shares or pay over the bonus. The shareholder then brought an action against the liquidator claiming that the latter was a trustee for him of 200 shares and also bonus of 1,200*l.* However, before the action came on for trial, the defendant liquidator complied substantially with the claim. It was settled by Mr. Justice Romer that the liquidator was not strictly a trustee, and he pointed out that in fact, 'if a liquidator were held to be a trustee for each creditor, his liability would indeed be onerous, and would render the position one which few persons would care to occupy.' The judge considered that a liquidator took office as 'an agent of the company—an agent who has, no doubt, cast upon him, by statute and otherwise, special duties.' Of course, in such a case an agent could not be sued by a third party for negligence, unless on the ground of personal misconduct or misfeasance, and therefore the delay in carrying out any part of the winding-up by, or losses through errors of judgment of, a liquidator will not render the liquidator responsible. Of course a shareholder has, to some extent, a remedy under section 138 of the Act of 1862, under which he can apply to the Court to settle any question of winding-up, and if the Court considered it beneficial an order would be made acceding to the application. Besides, under the new Winding-up Act, the liquidation may be converted into a compulsory one.

OUR COUNTY COURTS.

Both monthlies and dailies seem just now to be in their critical moods and to have something to say about the Law Courts. One of the London papers gave its ideal of justice as that it should be speedy and cheap. It cannot be speedy when the London Courts are choked with work that ought to be undertaken by judges in the country or by the County Courts; it cannot be cheap when witnesses have to be brought to the metropolis at great expense, and kept at hotels for days or weeks, owing to uncertainty as to the time when the case comes on. The remedy lies in the main in an extension of the jurisdiction of our County Courts. Since they were founded they have done more to bring justice home to English doors than all the rest of the judicial apparatus of the realm. Their powers have been extended, but further development is necessary. At present the Supreme Court can remit to them all cases where the claim is below a certain amount, but this limit should be raised, so that the higher Courts should, when overburdened, be able to call in the assistance of the very many able men who now sit on the local bench. If the County Court jurisdiction is extended, the solicitors of our day—men who have passed very formidable examinations—are quite able to discuss before their honours any questions that may arise, and to protect the interests of their clients. This question of reform in the administration of justice is, states a labour journal, one in which the working classes are intensely interested. 'The idea of justice is that it should be speedy and cheap.' But that is just what it is not. It is hedged in by all kinds of restrictions, and in many cases justice is absolutely outside the reach of working men. It is likely to remain so, too, so long as working men continue to send such a large number of lawyers to the House of Commons as their representatives.

HEADNOTES ON INVOICES.

The liquidator of a spice company recently sought to recover from a grocer and drysalter the balance of account for goods supplied. The invoice which accompanied the goods bore the headnote: 'All cheques must be remitted to the head office and cheques crossed. Our agents are not authorised to give receipts on behalf of the company.' In the face of this plain intimation, however, the grocer paid the traveller of the company for the goods, and, of course, now urged that he was free from liability. The judge of the Liverpool City Court held, however, in giving judgment for the liquidator, that in view of the headnote on each invoice the only payment recognisable by the company was one direct to the office. The traveller had no authority to receive or give receipts for money on behalf of the company. This is a useful decision for commercial men, and should remind them to note more carefully what is printed on the invoices supplied to them with the goods bought. Too often, beyond noting that the price is correct, nothing else upon the bill is taken note of, though, as this decision shows, this carelessness may have to be heavily atoned for.

THE EXCLUSION OF ALIENS FROM THE COLONIES.

In January of last year there appeared in the Law Quarterly Review a useful article dealing practically with the question as to the rights of aliens to enter British territory. Those who have read this article will be interested in the great Chinese case of Ah Toy v. Musgrave, decided by the Privy Council on appeal from the Supreme Court of Victoria, and overruling the decision of the latter Court. It appeared that the Supreme Court in Melbourne had held that the plaintiff, a Chinese immigrant, could not be excluded by the Government from landing in the colony, for the Government had no power per se to exclude aliens, as it had not the Queen's perogative in that respect. Fortunately, however, for the welfare and prosperity of the colony the Privy Council has reversed this decision, and has held that the Victorian Government has the power to exclude aliens, and had, in the present instance, exercised it correctly. It has been pointed out that, besides the usefulness of this decision as regards the restriction of undesirable immigrants into British colonies, it serves a further purpose; for there has been some suggestion made that the right of appeal to the Privy Council should be abolished, and, if that had happened in the present case, and in other instances, the colonial governments would have been unduly hampered in their efforts to promote the public welfare by being placed in such a foolish position by the decisions of their own Courts. By the decision of the Privy Council the colonial governments are now placed in a dignified position, with power to maintain it, which the Supreme Court of Melbourne would have withheld from them.

WHO ARE A FIRST WIFE'S HEIRS?

American cases often contain novel points. Not long since a somewhat curious legal riddle was propounded at the Court of Allentown, in Pennsylvania. A gentleman married, and, his wife dying, left him all her property, merely stipulating that on his death it should revert to 'our heirs.' The gentleman subsequently married again, and then died himself, whereupon his widow claimed that she was entitled by way of dower to one-third of the property left by the first wife. The next-of-kin, however, disputed this claim, urging that they had a preferential right over a connection by marriage, and the judge supported this view, holding that the husband had only a life interest in his first wife's property, and, therefore, on his death the estate would have to pass to the relations of the first wife, to the exclusion in toto of the second wife.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, June 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Tuesday, June 9.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Wednesday, June 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Thursday, June 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Friday, June 12.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Saturday, June 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JUNE 8 TO JUNE 13.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	June 8	June 9	June 10	June 11	June 12	June 13
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	Altrincham	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Thirsk	Helmsley	Knaresbro'	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Ilkeston	Bakewell	New Mills	—
22	Judge Harington	—	Redditch	Bromsgrove	Shipston-on-Stour	Evesham	—
26	Judge Jordan	Longton	Burslem	Hanley	Tunstall	Market Drayton	Uttoxeter
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Torquay

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, MAY 28.

Berkeley Peerage Case (counsel for the claim of Mr. Randall Mowbray Thomas Berkeley, Asquith, Q.C., and Roskill; for the claim of Lord Fitzhardinge, Sir H. Davey, Q.C., Rigby, Q.C., Danckwerts, and C. A. Francis; for the Crown, Sir R. E. Webster (Attorney-General) and H. Berham Cox).

FRIDAY, MAY 29.

Berkeley Peerage Case.—Further hearing.

MONDAY, JUNE 1.

Berkeley Peerage Case.—Further hearing.

TUESDAY, JUNE 2.

Berkeley Peerage Case.—Further hearing; adjourned sine die.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 28.

Armour v. Bate (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Wills, J., dated December 15, at trial without a jury at Lancaster).—Armour v. Bate (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., dated December 15, at Lancaster, refusing to postpone trial).—Dismissed.

Attorney-General v. Sharpe and another (Q. B. Revenue Side) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Stephen, J., and Charles, J., dated December 16).—Dismissed.

F. H. Wenman v. Lyon & Co. (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendant from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 23, affirming judgment of County Court for claimant on interpleader).—Dismissed.

Kingsford v. Ovenden (appeal of defendant from judgment of Williams, J., dated October 30, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, MAY 29.

In re A. Webber, ex parte S. Slater (appeal of S. Slater (receiver) from order of Cave, J., dated March 18, that partnership proceeds are subject to repayment of balance of testator's share).—Cur. adv. vult.

In re J. Gamgee, ex parte Ward (appeal of J. Gamgee from receiving order made by Mr. Registrar Linklater, dated April 27).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JUNE 1.

In re W. E. Cloete, ex parte Debtor (appeal of debtor from receiving order made by Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated May 13).—Dismissed.

Phillips and others v. J. Fowler & Co. (Leeds) (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 17, reversing judge's order granting liberty to defend).—Allowed.

Regina v. Judge of Halifax County Court and Bairstow (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of H. Sutcliffe from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated April 22, discharging rule nisi to hear action in Sutcliffe & Bairstow).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JUNE 2.

Kingsford v. Ovenden.—Dismissed.

Woodfin v. Marston & Co. (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., dated January 27, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Braunstein v. Lewis and another (appeal of plaintiff in person from judgment of Day, J., dated January 30, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3.

Hilder v. Hume, Webster & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated January 23, at trial with common jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

School Board for London v. Wall Brothers (appeal of E. H. Collins (trustee in bankruptcy) from part of judgment of Day, J., dated November 18, at trial with special jury in Middlesex, as directs appellant to pay plaintiffs' costs of action personally).—Dismissed.

London Bank of Mexico and South America (Lim.) v. Apthorpe (Surveyor of Taxes) (Q.B. Revenue Side) (appeal of the London Bank of Mexico from judgment of Stephen, J., and Charles, J., dated January 19).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MAY 28.

In re Bence, dec. Smith v. Bence (construction) (appeal of defendant J. F. Bence from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 6).—Cur. adv. vult.

In re T. Metcalfe, dec. Metcalfe v. Metcalfe (construction) (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated December 4, 1889).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MAY 29.

No sitting.

SATURDAY, MAY 30.

No sitting.

MONDAY, JUNE 1.

In re C. Palmer, dec. Palmer v. Hardwick (appeal of defendants J. and H. Hardwick from order of Kekewich, J., dated December 15).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 2.

In re W. Jones, dec. Griffin v. Porter (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Chitty, J., dated March 23).—Allowed.

In re J. Gouldsmith, dec. Roberts v. Thorne (construction) (appeal of defendant Thorne from order of North, J., dated May 20).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3.

Mander v. Falcke (appeal of defendant G. E. Hinds (sued as George Edwards) from order of Kekewich, J., dated May 8, restraining from carrying on disorderly house in breach of covenant in lease).—Dismissed.

In re W. Briggs, dec. Earp and another (appeal of Messrs. J. & W. Heathcote (creditors) from order of Chitty, J., dated May 1, refusing transfer of action to Derby County Court (Bankruptcy)).—Dismissed.

In re C. E. Withall, dec. (formerly one, &c.) (appeal of K. M. Withall (executrix) from order of North, J., dated April 29, allowing objections to taxation).—Dismissed.

Mackenzie v. Macintosh (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 4).—Part heard.

OBITUARY.

A REUTER telegram from Montreal, dated June 1, says the HON. SIR A. A. DORION, Chief Justice of Quebec, died that morning. The deceased, who was among the most prominent of Sir John Macdonald's political opponents, was Minister of Justice in Mr. Mackenzie's Cabinet from November, 1873, to June in the following year, when he was appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Quebec.

MR. JAMES ARTHUR CRICHTON, advocate, sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles, died on Friday, May 28, at his residence in Edinburgh, at the age of sixty-seven. Mr. Crichton passed to the Scottish bar in 1847. He was for several years an advocate depute under the Administration of Lord Palmerston and Mr. Gladstone, and in 1870 he was appointed sheriff of Fife. For some years Mr. Crichton was vice-dean of the Faculty of Advocates, and on the retirement of Sheriff Davidson in 1886 he was promoted to be sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles. The deceased was greatly esteemed by the bench and the bar. A striking circumstance about his death is that his father, the oldest member of the society of solicitors before the Supreme Courts, died on Thursday, at the age of ninety-seven.

THE SUMMER CIRCUITS.—The following are the circuits chosen by the judges for the ensuing summer assizes—viz.: South-Eastern Circuit, Mr. Justice Hawkins; Home Circuit, Mr. Justice Mathew; Western Circuit, Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Mathew; Oxford Circuit, Baron Pollock; Midland Circuit, Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams. Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Wills will join the circuit at Birmingham and Stafford respectively, when Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Williams will return to town. North Wales Circuit, Mr. Justice Lawrance; South Wales Circuit, Mr. Justice Henn Collins; Northern Circuit, Mr. Justice A. L. Smith and Mr. Justice Wright; North-Eastern Circuit, Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Grantham. Both civil and criminal business will be taken at these assizes, which are expected to begin early in July.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. WILLIAM HODGKINSON, of Corporation Street, Birmingham, has been appointed a Commissioner to Administer Oaths. Mr. Hodgkinson was admitted in 1884.

Mr. John Ingleby Jefferson, of Northallerton, has been appointed Registrar of the County Court and the Bankruptcy Court at Northallerton; also Deputy Steward and Clerk of the Halmote Courts of the Manor of Northallerton, in place of his late father, Mr. W. T. Jefferson. Mr. Jefferson was admitted in 1876.

Mr. William Arthur Cheetham, of Rochdale, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cheetham was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Robert Dunn Proud (of the firm of J. & R. D. Proud), of Bishop Auckland, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Proud was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Francis John Woodhouse Wood, of Ipswich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Wood was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Alan Turner (of the firm of Aldous & Turner), of Ipswich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Turner was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Thomas Price (of the firm of Samson & Price), of Manchester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Price was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Leathes Prior (of the firm of H. Rackham & Co., and Turner & Prior), of Norwich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Prior was admitted in 1875.

Mr. Richard Preston, of Tonbridge, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Preston was admitted in 1882.

THE CASE OF MRS. CATHCART.—The inquiry into the condition of mind of Mrs. Cathcart, whose case created so much interest recently, has been fixed to take place before Mr. Bulwer, Q.C., M.P., one of Her Majesty's Commissioners in Lunacy, and a special jury, on Monday, June 15, at New Inn, Strand. Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Costelloe, will appear for Mrs. Cathcart; Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. English Harrison, will represent the husband (Mr. Cathcart), and other counsel will be present on behalf of other parties concerned.

RATING OF ALLOTMENTS.—A bill, introduced by Mr. H. Cust, M.P., recites in its preamble that doubts have arisen as to whether allotments are included among the lands to which the exemptions apply under the provisions of the Public Health Act, which say that 'the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, market gardens, or nursery grounds,' shall be assessed to the general district rate in an urban district or to a separate rate levied in respect of special expenses in a rural district in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net annual value or rateable value of such land. To relieve allotments from all liability to be assessed for sanitary purposes at a higher rate than other cultivated lands, the bill proposes to include them expressly among the lands so liable to be assessed to a fourth part only of the value. In that case an 'allotment' could be taken to mean 'any parcel of land of not more than two acres in extent, and let as an allotment and cultivated as a garden or farm, or partly as a garden and partly as a farm.'

THE BAR COMMITTEE.—As the result of the polling for the election of members to serve on the Bar Committee, the balloting for which ended on Saturday last, Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P. (chairman of the committee), has declared the following gentlemen duly elected: Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., Mr. E. W. Byrne, Q.C., Mr. G. Farwell, Q.C., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Pitt-Lewis, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Renshaw, Q.C., and Messrs. E. F. Bigg, K. E. Digby, F. Evans, Ingle Joyce, W. W. Knox, O. L. Clare, B. F. Lock, F. B. Palmer, D. Sturges, and E. P. Wolstenholme.

THE JUDICATURE.—The Lord Chancellor has introduced a bill relative to the Judicature. The first proposal is to make it lawful for any ex-Lord Chancellor, if, upon the request of the Lord Chancellor, he consents so to do, to sit and act as a judge of the High Court or of the Appeal Court. While so sitting and acting he is to have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority of a judge of either of those Courts, and is to rank therein according to his precedence as a peer. The next proposal deals with the office of the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division. Whenever there is a vacancy in this office it is to be lawful for Her Majesty, by letters patent, to appoint to the office any barrister of fifteen years' standing or any judge of the High Court or Court of Appeal of not less than one year's standing. The person so appointed is to take precedence in Court next after the Master of the Rolls, but this provision is to be without prejudice to the rights of any judge of the Supreme Court existing at the passing of the bill. For the purpose of aiding the House of Lords in the hearing and determination of appeals in Admiralty actions, the House is, according to a third proposal, to be empowered, in any such appeal in which it may think it expedient to do so, to call in the aid of one or more assessors specially qualified, and to hear the appeal wholly or partially with the assistance of such assessors.

LIFE ASSURANCE.—The fifty-fourth annual general meeting of the Legal and General Life Assurance Society was held on March 17 last. During the past year new assurances were effected with the society, under 513 policies, for the sum of 896,690*l.*, and 830*l.* a year contingent annuities. The new premiums thereon amounted to 33,380*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, of which 7,059*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* was paid away for the re-assurance with other offices of 261,624*l.*, leaving 26,320*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* as the new premiums on 635,066*l.*, and on 830*l.* contingent annuities, the net risks retained by the society. The total net premium income amounted to 175,136*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.*, being an increase of 8,659*l.* upon that of 1889. The total claims amounted to 150,553*l.*, caused by sixty-seven deaths and one matured policy, as against 142,541*l.* in 1889, caused by seventy-seven deaths. This sum included 28,825*l.*, paid as bonus additions to policies, assuring 83,197*l.*, showing the large average increase of 34 per cent., although in many cases bonuses have been surrendered for cash or reduction of premium. The amount of interest was 97,459*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, an increase of 4,374*l.* upon 1889. The total assets of the society, increased during the year by the sum of 131,277*l.* 17*s.* 3*d.*, amounted at December 31 to 2,503,554*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, the investments thereof at that date yielding an average rate of 4*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* per cent. over the whole amount, productive and unproductive. The above assets of the society include 1,802,860*l.*, invested on mortgages of real and personal property in the United Kingdom. Of these mortgages 79,670*l.* is upon property in Ireland, and this sum is well secured, and the interest is punctually paid. The other mortgages, which are upon property in England or Wales, have been recently investigated by the directors, and the result of such investigation is satisfactory. We call attention to the fact that, this being the bonus year, the next division of profits will take place as at December 31, 1891.

LINCOLN'S INN.—The treasurer (Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C.) and the benchers of Lincoln's Inn entertained at dinner on June 2, being the Grand Day in Trinity Term, the Earl of Morley, the Earl of Kimberley, the Earl of Ross, the Bishop of Oxford, Sir Walter Sandall (Governor of Barbados), Sir William Whiteway, the Dean of St. Paul's, Mr. Henry Hucks Gibbs, M.P., Admiral Colomb, Mr. Robert Cunliffe (President of the Incorporated Law Society), and Mr. John Evans (Treasurer of the Royal Society). The benchers present on the occasion were Lord Grimthorpe, Mr. Osborne Morgan, Q.C., M.P., Lord Justice Fry, Sir William T. Marriott, Q.C., M.P., Sir William R. Grove, Mr. Justice Chitty, Sir Robert Stuart, Q.C., Mr. Hemming, Q.C., Mr. Graham Hastings, Q.C., Mr. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Mr. Justice Kekewich, Mr. Horton Smith, Q.C., Lord Macnaghten, Mr. William Karslake, Q.C., Mr. Everitt, Q.C., Mr. Cecil Russell, Mr. Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Giffard, Q.C., Sir Arthur Watson, Q.C., Mr. Elton, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Bush, Q.C., Mr. Cutler, Q.C., Mr. Wolstenholme, Mr. Buckley, Q.C., Mr. Digby, and the Rev. Dr. Wace, preacher.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—The Duke of Clarence and Avondale, who is a bencher of the Middle Temple, dined with the treasurer (Lord Coleridge) and the other benchers of that Inn on June 2 in their hall, in celebration of the Grand Day of Trinity Term. The guests present were the Turkish Ambassador, the American Minister, the Earl of Strafford, Lord Bramwell, Lord Shand, Sir M. Grant Duff, General Sir Redvers Buller, Mr. Justice Lawrance, Sir Arthur Collins, the warden of Merton (Mr. George Brodrick), Sir Richard Harington, Sir Hussey Vivian, M.P., Captain Holford, Mr. Wells, R.A., the Rev. Canon Ainger, Mr. Ellis Yarnall, Mr. W. B. Richmond, and Mr. J. W. Waldron (the under-treasurer). The benchers present were Mr. Justice Hawkins, Sir T. Chambers, Q.C. (Recorder of London), Judge Powell, Mr. Joseph Brown, Q.C., Mr. Justice Day, Mr. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. Morgan Lloyd, Q.C., Mr. Philbrick, Q.C., Mr. Macrory, Q.C., Mr. Locock-Webb, Q.C., Mr. Underhill, Q.C., Mr. Graham, Q.C., Mr. Warmington, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Stallard, Mr. Finlason, Mr. Will, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Digby, Mr. French, Q.C., Sir F. V. Smith, Mr. Crump, Q.C., Mr. Balfour Browne, Q.C., and Mr. Francis Williams, Q.C. There was a large attendance of barristers and students.

BIRTHS.

On May 27, at 51 Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, the wife of C. Ernest Hensley, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On May 28, at 79 Union Road, Clapham, the wife of George H. Chamberlain, LL.B., Solicitor, of a daughter.

On May 30, at 59 Priory Road, West Hampstead, the wife of Amherst D. Tyssen, D.C.L., Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On March 30, at the Dilkoosh Hotel, Northdene, Natal, South Africa, Percy Evans Coakes, Solicitor, Durban, Natal, to Elisabeth Maud, eldest daughter of Charles Henry and Clarissa Chase Brereton, and granddaughter of the Rev. Canon Brereton, Rector of St. Mary's, Bedford, England.

On May 25, at Bishopstoke Parish Church, Booth Frederick Clarke, of 14 Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, Solicitor, to Phillis Amy Weston, daughter of Edwin Weston, of Forest Hill.

DEATHS.

On May 24, at 8 Rue Meissonier, Paris, Amanda, widow of the late Barthélémy Colin, Judge of the Supreme Court, Mauritius, aged 89 years.

On May 25, at Summer Hill, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, Helen Oldman, the widow of the late Thomas Hugh Oldman, Solicitor, aged 56 years.

On May 29, at 10 Westbourne Terrace, Kelvinside, Glasgow, David Barr, Solicitor, Glasgow, in his 69th year.

On May 29, at Springfield House, Peterborough, Frederick Viel Jacques, of Durdham Park, Bristol, Solicitor, aged 72 years.

On May 30, at 23 Tavistock Road, W., Mary Ann, widow of John William Bittleston, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:— If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE judges of Court of Appeal No. 1 had to face a rather severe task at the beginning of the present sittings. Of the 156 appeals entered for hearing up to May 16, no less than 119 will, in the ordinary course, have to be dealt with by that division of the Court. These consist of seventy-four final and eighteen interlocutory appeals from the Queen's Bench Division, seven Admiralty, and six Bankruptcy appeals, and the new trial paper, which contains fourteen cases. The Court has up to the present disposed of some twenty final appeals as well as a few cases in the interlocutory and bankruptcy lists, and a portion of the new trial paper, but it is evident that a great deal remains for the Court to dispose of during the two months that remain before the Long Vacation, even if appeals entered subsequent to May 16 are disregarded. We can hardly suppose, however, that it is intended to let the whole of such appeals stand over until the end of October, and it seems pretty clear, therefore, that it will be necessary to invoke the assistance of the other division of the Court, in which the lists are, fortunately, very light.

THE annual meeting of the Incorporated Law Society is to be held on July 10, when a president, vice-president, and ten members of the council are to be elected. The ten outgoing members—all well-known men—offer themselves for re-election, with the exception of Mr. Jevons, of Liverpool. In these days of constant change and experimental legislation it is essential that the interests of the profession should be jealously watched and guarded by a strong and influential council. Every solicitor has, therefore, a personal interest in the coming election. At this meeting the balance-sheet of the Incorporated Law Society for the year 1890 will be presented, and also the accounts of the various trust funds which it administers. The figures disclose, as may be expected, a solvent and prosperous pecuniary condition; but some of the items afford openings for criticism, or at least for remark. As an instance, the outlay for 'entertainments after each examination and council luncheons for the year' was 792*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.*, while the money expended on the library (purchase of books, binding, newspapers, and periodicals) for the same period was 706*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.* Hospitality and good living are indeed traditional among lawyers, and the chief law society does not seem to have forgotten its duties in this respect. The provincial meeting of the Incorporated Law Society for the present year is to take place at Plymouth on August 25 and 26, and quite a new feature in the arrangements is the date which has been fixed. The end of August falls within the vacation enjoyed by the most hardworking solicitors, while the period usually chosen for these meetings—the middle of October—is by no means convenient to the majority of solicitors, who have by that time settled down once more to hard work. The usual happy combination of work and play is being arranged, and full particulars will be announced in due course.

As the Lord Chief Justice pointed out at the beginning of his summing-up, the slander for which the plaintiff sued in Cumming v. Wilson would not have been actionable had it not been that it charged an indictable offence. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, 'Every person who by any fraud or unlawful device or ill practice in playing at cards' wins from any other person any sum of money is deemed guilty of obtaining such money from such other person by a false pretence with intent to cheat, and, 'being convicted thereof, shall be punished accordingly,' the maximum punishment being, as it seems on reference to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88, as amended by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864, five years' penal servitude.

BY common consent, Sir Edward Clarke's reply is regarded as one of the greatest and most successful forensic efforts of recent times. Ingenious, daring, and exhaustive, delivered in a voice and with a manner from which all the arts of rhetoric (except that of concealing them) were conspicuously absent, this speech delighted all who heard it, and, what is not a little surprising, will well repay perusal in print. So great was the effect created that, if a less interval had elapsed between the speech and the verdict, it is just possible to imagine that the jury might have disagreed; and it even made a great impression on those who read it in the evening newspapers.

THE claim of one of the witnesses for 'protection' on the ground of some of the Solicitor-General's remarks could not, of course, be listened to. The Court of Appeal, in Munster v. Lamb, 52 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 726, has recently put the privilege of advocates on the highest possible ground. 'A counsel's position,' observed the Master of the Rolls in that case, 'is one of the utmost difficulty. He is to speak of that which he knows; he is not called upon to consider whether the facts with which he is dealing are true or false. What he has to do is to argue as best he can without degrading himself, in order to maintain the proposition which will carry with it either the protection or the remedy which he desires for his client. If, amidst the difficulties of his position, he were to be called upon during the heat of his argument to consider whether what he says is true or false, or whether what he says is relevant or irrevelant, he would have his mind so embarrassed that he could not do the duty which he is called upon to perform. More than a judge, infinitely more than a witness, he wants protection on the ground of benefit to the public.'

THE case was very remarkable for the absence of technical objections on the ground of this or that testimony, or this or that document not being 'evidence.' A striking instance of this was afforded by a précis of events and statements drawn up by two of the witnesses. This précis, though a very convenient narrative to work upon, was, of course, not evidence against anybody except its authors. Yet other witnesses, who had been no parties to it, were, without objection, freely cross-examined for the purpose of showing that their statements were not perfectly reconcilable with it. The summing-up was remarkably forcible in the setting forth the extraordinary weakness of the plaintiff's case and the extraordinary strength of that of the defendants. Some may say that it was too one-sided. Such persons may well be reminded of a remark made by the late Lord Chief Justice in summing up the Tichborne case, to the effect that he knew his summing-up was open to the criticism of being one-sided, but he could not help that, as if the 'claimant's' case happened to be a weak one, it was the claimant's fault, and not his.

MR. M'VANE formally applied to the Lord Chief Justice of England for a ticket of admission to his Court, on the ground that, though a judge is 'absolute emperor over his Court, yet his power does not extend to the selection of what body of people shall represent the public in cases which are not heard in camerâ,' and that, if it be necessary to establish a system of admittance by ticket only, that tickets should be distributed impartially to all applicants. The applicant also maintained that 'if there is room in the well of the Court, any member of one of the Inns of Court has a prior right to a seat therein over an ordinary member of the public, whether provided with tickets from the judge or not.' The Lord Chief Justice pointed out that the majority of persons on the bench have been unknown to him, but have been persons to whom for one reason or another it seemed proper to grant the privilege of admission, and that exactly the same observations apply to his own small gallery and to a portion of the gallery opposite the bench. 'The rest of that gallery,' added his lordship, 'and the whole of the body of the Court has been absolutely free, but I have given strict orders to prevent overcrowding, with the further directions that the utmost available space shall be given to members of the bar in costume, and that the reporters for the press shall be able to perform their important duty, as far as possible, in ease and comfort. . . . I can make no alteration in your favour. As the person you refer to as a Templar and yourself may perhaps repeat your mistakes, I shall send your letter and my answer to the newspapers.' The point raised by this correspondence is, we believe, quite new. The general right of the public to be present at any trial, so long as there is room, is, of course, undoubted, but the extent to which a judge may go in restricting that right in favour of particular individuals has never, so far as we know, been defined. Nor do we believe that members of the Inns of Court, except after their call to the bar, have any priority over the general public. Perhaps all that can be laid down with certainty is that, if any member of the general public can obtain admission to any part of the Court not allotted to the bench or the bar, no ticket-holder whatever can by right of his ticket eject such member of the public from his place.

IN the recent case of Bowers v. Harding Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Charles had to deal with several important questions in regard to the assessment of income-tax. The respondent and his wife had been appointed master and mistress of a national school at a joint salary, and the Court held that such salary was derived from 'a public office or employment' within the meaning of section 51 of the Income-tax Act, 1853, but that the respondent was not entitled to a deduction in respect of the board and wages of a servant whom it was necessary for him to employ in order that the duties of his household might be carried on whilst his wife was engaged at the school, inasmuch as it was not money expended 'wholly, exclusively, and necessarily in the performance of the duties of his office.' The Court were also of opinion that the salary, though paid to the respondent for the services of himself and his wife, was properly charged in the name of the respondent alone.

IN the same case an important question was raised as to costs. It was contended that as it was an appeal by the Crown, and the respondent had merely appeared to support the decision of the Income Tax Commissioners, costs could not be given against him, although the appeal was allowed; and the case of Sowry v. The Harbour Mooring Commissioners of King's Lynn (2 Rep. of Tax Cases, 201) was strongly relied upon in support of that proposition, but the Court declined to adopt the argument, and, although they did not give costs against the respondent in the particular case, they held that there was no general rule against giving them in such cases where the Crown was successful on appeal. In future, therefore, where a person appears to support a decision of Income Tax Commissioners in his favour, he will do so at the risk of being mulcted in costs.

THE decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich in In re Davies, Davies v. Jenkins (Notes of Cases, p. 91) has fortunately come to the rescue of the efficiency of representation orders. It is provided by Order XVI., rule 32, that where the rights of a class depend upon the construction which the Court or a judge may put on an instrument, in order to save expense or for some other reason, 'the Court or judge may appoint some one or more persons to represent' the class. Three classes of issue were interested under a will, and representation orders had been made. So far so good, but the difficulty arose when the question had to be answered how the costs were to be paid. 'The costs' hold the key of many a case, and it is well to see that his lordship has decided that solicitor and client costs can be paid, when the Court so orders, by the persons included in the representation orders, who for all purposes and argument are treated as being before the Court.

THE Lord Chancellor's bill as to Evidence in Criminal Cases needs amendment in one important respect. Difficulties daily arise in bigamy cases as to proving the first marriage, owing to the well-settled rule (Archbold, pp. 321, 1015) that the first husband or wife is not a competent witness in a bigamy prosecution to prove the existence of the civil status of marriage, although in a suit for divorce on the ground of bigamy and adultery the petitioner would be an admissible, if not a necessary, witness. This rule as it now stands is absolutely illogical, for the objection to the wife's competence as a witness to prove that she is the wife is in substance based upon an admission that she is what she claims to be — the wife of the accused person, and the first fact at issue upon the trial is whether the alleged first marriage took place. In ordinary criminal cases no such point arises, for the offences there in question do not depend, as in the case of bigamy, upon the existence of the marriage tie, and, if the defendant objected to a witness on the ground that she was his wife, he would have to prove the fact to give colour to his objection. The result of the present rule is that it often happens that all the witnesses to a marriage, but the husband or wife, being dead or having disappeared, a bigamist sails off clear for want of evidence of the first marriage, and the real wife retires from the Court under the not unnatural impression that it has been held that she was never married at all and might apparently on the next day get a divorce in respect of the bigamy which she could not prove in the criminal Court. The bill as it stands enhances the absurdity of the present law. The first husband or wife is to be an admissible but not a compellable witness in bigamy as in other cases. He or she therefore, if willing, may be tendered as a witness. Thereupon the defendant says: 'I refuse my consent.' This refusal must be based on the existence of the relation in dispute. She must, in fact, be his wife to justify his objection, whereas under the present law her assertion that she is his wife may be enough to disqualify her. Yet it is doubtful whether the refusal of consent is in a criminal case equivalent to an admission of the first marriage, or could be taken as evidence against the accused person as to the matter which the wife is tendered to prove. The bill ought, therefore, to be amended by the insertion of a proviso somewhat to the following effect: 'Provided that where criminal proceedings are instituted against any person for bigamy the husband or wife of the person charged shall be an admissible witness to prove the first marriage even without the consent of the person charged, but shall not be compellable to give evidence.' With reference to the words italicised it may indeed be plausibly argued that in cases of bigamy the first husband or wife should be a compellable witness in the interests of justice so as to prevent a bigamist from escaping punishment for the wrong done to the second wife, by the suppression of evidence of the marriage through the forgivingness of the first.

THE case of Tomkinson v. The Balkis Consolidated Company, decided by the Court of Appeal last week, forms a fitting supplement to that of Bishop v. The Balkis Consolidated Company, reported in 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 565. The plaintiffs in both these cases were the victims of the fraud of an ingenious person, who, being at one time possessed of shares in the defendant company, succeeded in selling them four or five times over; but their fortunes were different, since Bishop, who paid the price of his shares upon the faith of a transfer endorsed by the company's secretary with the words 'certificate lodged,' although no certificate had in fact been lodged, failed to recover; while Tomkinson, who obtained from the company a certificate in the usual form, certifying that he was the registered shareholder of particular shares specified, obtained a judgment against the company for the amount of loss he sustained by being compelled to purchase other shares to meet his engagements. Both cases turned upon the doctrine of estoppel. In the case of a 'certification' on endorsement of the lodgment of a certificate upon a transfer, the officer of a company 'has no means of ascertaining and no time to inquire whether the documents produced to him are genuine or not, nor whether the various transfers are valid or invalid in point of law. He acts upon what he sees, and there is no pretence for saying that he does more, or is understood by business men to do more.' If, therefore, the title of the transferor afterwards appears defective by reason of the invalidity of one of the documents lodged, the company is not estopped from denying the validity of his title. This is the effect of Bishop v. The Balkis Consolidated Company. But a 'certification' and a 'certificate' are totally different things. The 'power of granting certificates is to give the shareholders the opportunity of more easily dealing with their shares in the market, and to afford facilities to them of selling their shares by at once showing a marketable title. It is a declaration by the company to all the world that the person in whose name the certificate is made out, and to whom it is given, is a shareholder in the company, and it is given by the company with the intention that it shall be so used by the person to whom it is given, and acted upon in the sale and transfer of shares' (In re The Bahia and San Francisco Railway Company, 37 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 176). The company are, therefore, estopped from denying the truth of that which they represent to be the fact. This was the doctrine reaffirmed in the case of Tomkinson v. The Balkis Consolidated Company. The case of Simm v. The Anglo-American Telegraph Company, 49 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 392, presents a further refinement. There a certificate was issued on the strength of a forged transfer, but it was held that the company were entitled to contest the title of the holders of the certificate, since they had merely accepted their invitation to register a forged document, and were not estopped from denying that the transferor transferred the stock. But in that case it seems to have been admitted that a buyer of the stock in the open market, who had paid the price upon the faith of the certificate of registration issued by the company, would have been entitled to succeed.

ONE more of the difficult conundrums with which the Local Government Act, 1888, bristles has just been solved by the Court of Appeal in Howlett v. The Mayor, &c. of Maidstone (Notes of Cases, p. 90). Before that Act a borough within the geographical limits of a county was under no obligation to have recourse to the county asylum for the maintenance of its pauper lunatics. Under the provisions of the Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853, and the Amendment Act of 1862, it might either build an asylum of its own or resort to any county asylum in England which was willing to receive its lunatics. These asylums were empowered to make an additional charge in respect of foreign lunatics in consideration of the fact that the place of their settlement had taken no share in the building and furnishing of the asylum, and in theory, if not to any extent in practice, the asylum which made the smallest charge did the best trade, and the system, at any rate, prevented an exorbitant charge being levied in any particular instance. When and only when a contract was made mutual liabilities to maintain and to pay for maintenance arose. But by the Local Government Act, 1888, all this was altered. The borough was deprived of its power to build an asylum and of its freedom to contract. Instead, it was bound to send its lunatics to the county asylum, and (section 86, subsection 4) 'subject to the enactments providing for an additional charge for the maintenance of lunatics in cases where no contribution has been made towards the cost of building and furnishing an asylum, shall be liable to contribute to the county rate in respect of such lunatic asylum.' The language of the clause is not accurate, because it implies that the enactments created a liability, whereas in fact they only gave a power to contract, which power the Act takes away. But the real meaning of the section is not difficult to gather. Its object is obviously to create a statutory liability on the part of the borough to pay the additional sum which represents its share of the cost of the building in lieu of the contractual liability which previously existed. The real difficulty arises when we come to consider how the amount is to be estimated. The borough is now compelled to purchase the commodity it requires at a particular shop. Is the shopkeeper still to fix the price? The Court of Appeal decided in the negative. In their opinion the power of the committee of visitors under the 54th section of the Lunatic Asylums Act, 1853, to fix the amount perished with the power to contract of which it was only a part, and to arrive at the conclusion that the power survived would be to construe the words not as continuing an existing power for an existing but for a novel purpose, and so as to expose a borough to the possibility of an injustice against which it had lost the power of protecting itself by being denuded of its freedom to contract with any county asylum it chose. The matter was, therefore, declared to be one requiring adjustment at the hands of an arbitrator in accordance with the provisions of the 62nd section of the Act.

SIR ALBERT ROLLIT'S bill to amend the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889 (which is also backed by Mr. Henry Fowler, Mr. Whitley, Mr. Haldane, Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Chance, and Mr. Rowntree), has passed the House of Commons, and may be expected before long to become law. It contains one enacting clause only, to the effect that where any oath or affidavit must or may now be taken or made before any particular person (e.g. a justice of the peace) or officer, 'such oath or affidavit may be taken or made before a commissioner for oaths at any place, and shall be as effectual to all intents and purposes as if taken or made before such person or officer.' Will this enactment apply to the attestation of recruits on enlistment under section 80 of the Army Act, 1881? By that section a justice of the peace, after cautioning the recruit that if he makes any false answer to the questions read to him he will be liable to be punished as provided by the Act, 'shall read to him the questions set forth in the attestation-paper for the time being authorised by a Secretary of State,' and shall take care that he understands the questions, and shall require the recruit to make a declaration of the truth of the answers, and administer to him the oath of allegiance. We can see no reason why the bill should not apply to this case, but whether that is the intention of its authors we cannot say. Then, how about the fee? It is provided by the Army Act that 'the fee for the attestation of a recruit, and for all acts and things incidental thereto, shall be one shilling and no more, and shall be paid to the clerk of the justice.' If it be intended that the new bill shall apply to the attestation of recruits, this enactment will have to be altered; while, if it be not so intended, it would be desirable specially to exclude the Army Act from the operation of the bill. It may also be suggested that some special provision as to the payment of fees should be made. The Act of 1889, which is a consolidating Act, is strangely silent about fees, though it repeals 22 Vict. c. 16 and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, which gave a commissioner for oaths the right to the eighteenpenny fee, now dependent, we believe, entirely on the Order as to Supreme Court Fees, 1884, which does not seem sufficiently comprehensive in its terms to include all fees in connection with non-contentious business.

THE difficulties of the Tithe Act, which received the royal assent on March 26 last, are now beginning to be felt in earnest, inasmuch as the three months limited by section 2, subsection 1, of the Act will now shortly expire. By this 'enactment,' where any sum due on account of tithe rent-charge is in arrear for not less than three months, the person entitled to such sum may apply 'to the County Court, which Court may make a receiving order or other order as therein mentioned, for the recovery of the tithe'; and by subsection 6 of the same section, where the occupier is liable under any contract made before the Act to pay the tithe, and consequently to pay the owner the amount of it, 'the owner of the lands shall serve notice of such liability on the owner of the tithe rent-charge, and thereupon, before an order under this section is made, there shall be such service on the occupier as may be prescribed' (see rule 3), 'and a hearing of such occupier if he appears and desires to be heard.' There follows a quasi-penal provision on which we have already commented (see ante, p. 248) to the effect that an owner who fails to serve the 'occupier's liability notice,' as it is termed, may not recover from the occupier any sum which he has paid on account of tithe rent-charge, unless he can obtain from the County Court a certificate that there was good cause for the failure to give such notice. No time for serving the occupier's liability notice is directly limited by the Act or Rules. Can the three months specified in section 2, subsection 1, be considered to be indirectly limited for the service of this notice? There must be three months' arrears, after the passing of the Act—so we read subsection 1—before an order under that subsection can be made, so that it is not a very unreasonable construction of the Act that three months at least may be allowed to elapse before the occupier's liability notice must of necessity be served. We do not think that this is the true construction of the Act, but, looking to the difficulty of the subject-matter, we think that it is a construction which will be put upon the Act by a great number of practitioners, and which will not be unfavourably looked upon by County Court judges.

LAST week (see ante, p. 388) we printed two letters on the subject of the Act. 'C.' asks who is to give the occupier's liability notice where a landowner has let the land for ninety-nine years on an improving lease. The answer depends on the true construction of section 9 of the Act of 1891 as read with section 12 of the Act of 1836. By section 9 of the Act of 1891 a reference to the 'owner' of lands means the same officers or persons as are mentioned in the Tithe Act, 1836. By section 12 of the Act of 1836 the term 'owner' means the person in actual possession of the rents or profits, except (inter alia) any tenant on a lease at not less than two-thirds of the annual value of the demised premises; and it is also provided that where land is let on a more than fourteen years' lease at a rent less than two-thirds of the annual value, the person in actual receipt of the rent under such lease 'shall jointly with the person who shall be liable to the payment of such rent be deemed for the purposes of this Act to be owners.' It seems to follow that in the case put by 'C' the lessor and lessee must give a joint 'occupier's' liability notice to the occupier in the ordinary case where the lessee has contracted with the lessor, and the occupier has contracted with the lessee, for payment of tithe.

'SUBSCRIBER' asks whether he can recover unpaid tithe from a tenant who has quitted without paying it, 'though by his lease he expressly covenanted to pay it,' and refers to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, s. 4 as a possible means of helping it. We think that the enactment referred to will not apply. It provides that where a tenant quits, leaving tithe unpaid which he was legally bound to pay and the tithe-owner shall give or have given notice of proceeding, by distress upon the land, for the recovery thereof, either the landlord or the succeeding occupier may pay the tithe and recover the amount from the outgone occupier as a simple contract debt. This enactment appears only to apply where a distress is threatened by the tithe-owner, and as the tithe spoken of by 'Subscriber' was not due till April 1—i.e. after the passing of the Act—the tithe-owner cannot distrain, and the Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25, does not apply. We incline to think that an action can be maintained on the covenant.

THE recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Braunstein v. Lewis was probably an inevitable result of the previous decisions in Palliser v. Gurney, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 546, and Stogdon v. Lee, L. R. (1891) 1 Q. B. Div. 661. Having once determined that a married woman cannot contract so as to bind her separate estate under the Married Women's Property Act unless at the time of contracting she has property not subject to a restraint on anticipation, the Court would have stultified itself had it held the possession of 3*l.* or 4*l.* sufficient to support a covenant to pay 400*l.* It would, say Lord Esher and Lord Justice Kay, be absurd to suppose that in such a case a married woman intended to contract with reference to that property. That it would be absurd to suppose she intended to contract with reference only to that property we fully agree; but there can, we should think, be no doubt that both she and the plaintiff intended to contract with respect to and to bind her then existing and any future separate property, or, in other words, all property which she had capacity to bind. The real absurdity is to be found in the cases which have for the present established that the existence of separate property at the time is a necessary condition to the validity of a contract which, if valid, binds future property. We cannot see that this construction of the statute is warranted by its language. If subsection 4 of section 1 had been omitted there might perhaps have been ground for contending that 'separate property' in subsection 2 meant property existing at the time of the contract, but subsection 4 to our mind clearly indicates that the words ought not to be so restricted. For how is it possible, in view of subsection 4, to read subsection 2 as giving capacity to contract only 'to the extent of' existing separate property? This is, in effect, to insert into the earlier clause a restriction which makes it inconsistent with the later, unless, indeed, some peculiar meaning is to be given to the words 'to the extent of.' It is surely about time that this important question was submitted to the House of Lords.

MAINTENANCE OUT OF RESIDUE.

IN last month's number of the 'Law Reports' a case is reported which must have startled conveyancers who have been in the habit of relying on the maintenance clause in the Conveyancing Act, 1881; we refer to the case of In re Jeffery; Burt v. Arnold (1891), L. R. 1 Chanc. Div. 671, in which Mr. Justice North felt himself bound by authority to hold that maintenance could not be allowed under section 43 of the Act in respect of residuary real and personal estate given to the testator's present and future-born grandchildren contingently on attaining twenty-one, but that those of the class who had for the time being attained that age were entitled to the whole income to the exclusion of those still under age. It is to be observed that, although in the argument against maintenance some stress was laid on the fact that the class was liable to increase, the learned judge appears not to have attached much importance to that fact, the reasoning of the judgment being apparently as follows: No maintenance can be allowed under the Conveyancing Act unless the infant would on attaining twenty-one be entitled to past income. According to the authorities, a gift to a class contingently on attaining twenty-one does not entitle members attaining that age to past income; therefore, no maintenance can be given under the Act to the infant members of such a class.

The logical conclusion to be drawn from the decision seems to be that maintenance cannot be allowed under the Act in the ordinary case of residuary personal estate bequeathed by a testator upon trust for his grandchildren who shall attain twenty-one; and as we believe it has been common practice to omit the maintenance clause in such a case, in reliance on the Act, it seems desirable to consider the authorities on which the decision is based.

The rule is, no doubt, settled that section 43 of the Conveyancing Act does not allow maintenance where, apart from the Act, the infant on attaining twenty-one would only be entitled to the property without the past income; but the cases of In re Judkin, 53 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 496; L. R. 25 Chanc. Div. 743, and In re Dickson, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 510; L. R. 29 Chanc. Div. 331, which settled this rule, were cases of contingent legacies, not contingent gifts of residue; and it must be borne in mind that, although a contingent legacy does not in general carry intermediate income, a contingent gift of personal or mixed residue does (see Genery v. Fitzgerald, Jac. 468; In re Dumble, Williams v. Murrell, 52 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 631; L. R. 23 Chanc. Div. 360). This distinction does not appear to have been adverted to in the case before Mr. Justice North, nor was the case of In re Cotton, 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 201; L. R. 1 Chanc. Div. 232, cited, where Sir George Jessel held that maintenance was allowable under section 26 of Lord Cranworth's Act (which corresponds with section 43 of the Conveyancing Act) in respect of a gift of residue contingent on attaining twenty-one, because the infant on attaining that age would get both the property and the past income. Moreover, if the cases cited in In re Jeffery are carefully examined we think it will be found that only one bears out the proposition for which they were cited, and that was a case of a contingent legacy, and therefore it is conceived, for the reasons above mentioned, not in point.

In Shepherd v. Ingram, Amb. 448, there was a gift of mixed residue to the children of an unmarried lady equally, with a gift over if she should die without leaving issue. After the testator's death she married, and it was held that her children as they were born took the accruing income equally. No doubt in this case vesting was coincident with birth; but it is difficult to see how it can be any authority for the proposition that the children for the time being having vested interests are entitled to the whole income to the exclusion of other children in existence who have not attained vested interests.

Again, in Mills v. Norris, 5 Ves. 335, residuary personalty was given equally between the children of several living persons in such a manner that each child's share seems to have vested at twenty-one, subject to being partially divested by the birth of other children. An order had been made that the income of their shares should be paid to such as were of age, and the master had found by his report that two children had attained twenty-one while four other children were living, and that one had received his share of income since attaining twenty-one, but that a seventh child having been born the other six must abate. Thereupon the Court allowed an exception to the report on the ground that the after-born child could not claim bygone income, but no question was raised as to the income accruing after his birth. This case therefore seems only to negative the right of members of the class to income accruing before they come into existence.

In Scott v. The Earl of Scarborough, 1 Beav. 154, a fund was directed to be set apart in trust for the existing and after-born children of several living persons, contingently on their attaining twenty-one; so that the gift carried the intermediate income (see In re Medlock; Ruffle v. Medlock, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 738); and it was held that the existing members of the class (who had all attained twenty-one) took vested interests in their shares subject to being partially divested in the event of there being other children who should attain twenty-one, and that in the meantime the income was payable to the existing members of the class in equal shares. It is, however, to be noticed that, as there were no other children in existence, the order made does not seem inconsistent with the right of after-born children to participate in income arising subsequently to their birth.

Mainwaring v. Beevor, 8 Ha. 44, came before the Court on an application by children who had attained twenty-one, for payment of their shares of personal residue given to them and all the other children of certain living persons who should attain twenty-one. The Court refused the application on the ground that after-born children might become entitled, but ordered the income to be paid to the applicants until another child should be born. As, however, the applicants were the only children then in existence, this case does not seem to be an authority against the right of infant members of the class to share in income accruing after their birth.

Furneaux v. Rucker, W. N. (1879) 135, appears to have been a case of a contingent legacy to a fixed class, and not a contingent gift of residue; and, therefore, no member of the class could become entitled to any income until he attained a vested interest. Accordingly, the income accruing before the first child attained twenty-one fell into residue, but when he attained that age his interest vested, and the rights of the residuary legatee ceased (see Stone v. Harrison, 2 Coll. 715), so that the child who had attained twenty-one was thenceforth the only person who could take the income until another child attained a vested interest. Having regard, however, to the distinction between a contingent legacy and a contingent gift of residue above referred to, this case seems inapplicable when the question relates to a gift of residue.

Ellis v. Maxwell, 12 Beav. 104, no doubt shows that a contingent gift of residue does not carry with it income accruing after the period limited for accumulations by the Thellusson Act; but with this exception, the authorities cited in In re Jeffery appear not in any way to conflict with the rule that a gift of personal or mixed residue contingent on attaining twenty-one carries the intermediate income.

If, then, an individual to whom residuary personalty is given contingently on attaining twenty-one is entitled to the past income, it seems to follow that in the case of a similar gift to a fixed class each member must have an equal right to the past income of the share to which he becomes entitled; and there seems to be no justification for giving the whole income to those members who have attained vested interests to the exclusion of other existing members who have not; nor does there seem to be any reason why section 43 of the Conveyancing Act should not apply; indeed, it is difficult to see what effect could be given to the words 'contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years,' if the section did not apply to such a case. There may be a difficulty in applying the Act where the class is liable to increase by reason of the share to which the infant is contingently entitled being unascertainable, although Mr. Justice North seems not to have considered this difficulty insuperable; but, however that may be, there seems to be no reason why a member of such a class who has attained a vested interest should seize the whole income to the exclusion of other existing members who have not.

We do not know whether there is to be an appeal in In re Jeffery, but it is to be hoped that the doubt thrown on the right of members of a fixed class to maintenance out of the income of residue to which they are contingently entitled on attaining twenty-one may soon be resolved.

JUDICIAL REFORM.

In another column will be found the Lord Chancellor's brilliant contribution to the solution of the question which has been agitated for so long in the columns of the Times, and which has been so frequently discussed in this journal. The cry of arrears in Chancery is always with us, and for years past the Government have been incessantly urged to appoint another judge in the Chancery Division. That there is always a very long list of witness actions awaiting trial in the Chancery Division is matter of common knowledge. It is equally true that the other divisions sometimes fail to despatch speedily the business set down for them to dispose of. Some writers even assert that suitors so despair of the prompt and efficient administration of justice that they are willing to make any sacrifice rather than go to law. Some of the existing evils are, doubtless, due to deficiencies of procedure, the multiplication of interlocutory applications, the interposition of preliminary questions between the writ and the adjudication of the real issues. But it is best to take one step at a time, and to consider whether, without any alteration in the existing system, the judicial forces at the disposal of the country are distributed to the greatest advantage.

What does the Lord Chancellor propose in the Judicature Acts Amendment Bill, which he introduced into the House of Lords the other day? The bill contains three operative sections. The first enables an Ex-Lord Chancellor, at the request of the Chancellor, if he is willing to do so, to act as a Judge of the Court of Appeal or a Judge of the High Court. The second and longest section, out of tender regard for the susceptibilities of some future President of the Probate Division, provides that the future President shall be next in precedence to the Master of the Rolls. The third empowers the House of Lords to call in the aid of specially qualified assessors in Admiralty Appeals. What do the public care about judicial precedence? We should imagine that no masculine-minded judge who should be appointed to sit in the seat of Lord Hannen would trouble his head about the question whether he was to rank before or after or with the Lords Justices. Suitors want their cases decided expeditiously and economically, and the judges are paid servants of the public. They do not want to rely on the voluntary help of an ex-Chancellor as an extra hand when pressure arises. Ex-Lord Chancellors have not always shown great zeal in sharing the dignified duties of the gilded chamber. Lord Herschell, who is still in the bloom of youth, is a laudable exception, and does much admirable work in the House of Lords and the Privy Council. But it is doubtful whether even he would care to exchange the serenity of Westminster and Whitehall for the turmoil of the Royal Courts.

There are in all about forty judges. For service in this tribunal of final appeal there are available some thirteen or fourteen noble lords, all of whom may sit in the Privy Council, in which also is rendered the gratuitous assistance of Lord Hobhouse, Sir Richard Couch, and Lord Shand. The judges in the Royal Courts sit about 200 days in the year. The House of Lords barely exceeds an average record of 100. The Lord Chancellor has important political duties, and he also occasionally sits in the Court of Appeal. But surely the country has a right to expect something more than 100 days' work in the year from the four Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, to whom are paid salaries of 6,000*l.* a year apiece. If a return were made of the number of times each of these noble and learned lords sat in a given year in the House and in the Privy Council the disclosure would be of great public interest. The two final Courts are from time to time very variously constituted, and it would be surprising to find that any one of them had sat many more than 100 days. Lord Bramwell, who might after thirty-five years of continuous judicial service, reasonably enjoy a well-earned retirement, is as assiduous in his attendance and as valuable as any of their lordships. If the Lord Chancellor had included the four Lords of Appeal in Ordinary in his second clause, and changed the permissive for the imperative form, his bill would have been of real value for the despatch of business. The judicial qualities of noble lords would be improved by occasional variations in the duties which they are called upon to discharge, and if the four lords were to sit, say fifty more days in the year in the less august tribunals there would be ample judicial strength to cope with arrears when and as they should arise, whether in the Court of Appeal or in the High Court. The bungling and piecemeal character of our legislation with respect to the Courts is strikingly shown in the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and the Amending Act, 1887. In the former no provision was made to enable a retired Lord of Appeal in Ordinary to sit and vote in the Legislative Chamber after his retirement. This was remedied by the Act of 1887; but it was again forgotten to insert a power for the retired judge to sit, if he chose, in the House in a judicial capacity. A judge who might not be willing to sit continuously might in many instances be willing on occasion to strengthen the final Court. There is no reason either why a retired Lord of Appeal as well as an ex-Lord Chancellor should not be competent to take part in the labours of the Court of Appeal or the High Court. In fact, as has before been urged in these columns, it ought to be made competent for the holders of the superior judicial office generally to do the work of the inferior tribunals. The highest Courts are, as to their personnel, of a much more floating character than the High Court or the Court of Appeal. It is desirable to make them numerically and judicially as strong as possible. We venture, therefore, to suggest another method of strengthening them. Now that the principle of life-peerages is fairly established, why should it not be the custom for judges, on their retirement from the Court of Appeal or High Court, to be raised to the Upper House for life? Judges of the High Court on retirement are usually made Privy Councillors, and before now have done good work in the Privy Council. If they were made life-peers the country would have a useful judicial reserve, and the position of a judge of the High Court would be made more attractive to the best men than it is at present.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill.
Intermediate Schools, &c. (Sites) Bill.
Betting and Loans (Infants') Bill.
Savings Banks Bill.
Evidence in Criminal Cases Bill.
Herring Branding (Northumberland) Bill.

Bills beyond second reading:—

The report of amendments to the Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Bill was received; and the Museums and Gymnasiums Bill and Reformatory and Industrial Schools Children Bill passed through committee.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—

Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill (Lords' amendments agreed to).
Forged Transfers (No. 2) Bill.
Tramways (Ireland) Act (1860) Amendment Bill.
Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.
Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Bills of Sale Act (1890) Amendment Bill.

Bills through Committee:—

Public Accounts and Charges Bill.

Second readings:—

Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Allotments Rating Exemption Bill.

New bills:—

To Amend the Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Act, 1887.

To make Provision for Paying off the British Portion of the Russian-Dutch Loan.

For the Better Prevention of Frauds in the Manufacture and Sale of Artificial Manures and Feeding Stuffs.

To Amend the Law relating to Allotments for Labourers in Ireland.

Free Education Bill.

To Accelerate the Proceedings of Burgesses in the Boroughs of Dublin and Belfast, and to Alter certain Dates and Periods connected therewith.

To Amend the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889.

Bills withdrawn:—

Intoxicating Liquors Local Veto (Ireland) Bill.
Artificial Manures, &c., Adulteration Bill.
Liquor Laws (Scotland) Bill.
Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881, Amendment Bill.

CALLS TO THE BAR.

THE undermentioned gentlemen were called to the bar on June 10:—

By the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn.

Francis John Bryant, Wadham College, Oxford.
Frederick Mitchell Elliot, B.A., Cambridge.
Bertram Cardew Gardiner.
Francis Thomas Dove, University College, London.
Francis Statham, LL.B., Cambridge.
Frederick Trevor Galsworthy, B.A., Cambridge.
William Freshfield Burnett, M.A., Oxford.
Henry D'Arcy Hart, B.A., Oxford.
Thomas Loffill Dutton Dickinson, B.A., Oxford.
William Hebard Hudson, M.A., Oxford.
William Egelric Bigge, B.A., Oxford.

By the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple.

Clement Young Sturge, M.A., Oxford.
James Dundas White, B.A., LL.B., Cambridge.
William Gilbert à Beckett, Cambridge.
Oscar Welwyn Rayner, B.A., Cambridge.
Zahid Ali Khan.
Frank Ashby Pritt, B.A., Cambridge.
Charles Frederick Lloyd, B.A., Cambridge.
William John Turner Clarke, B.A., Oxford.
Edward Tilley Slater, B.A., Oxford.
James Henry Monk, B.A., Cambridge.
Julian Charles Gaisford.
Arthur Emil Hayton, B.A., Cambridge.
Arnold Glover, B.A., LL.B., Cambridge.
George Dodson, B.A., LL.B., Cambridge.
Charles Stuart Allison, LL.B., London.
Austin Guy Wrigley, Cambridge.
Matthew Stewart Prichard, B.A., Oxford.
Samuel Mumford Everard, B.A., LL.B., Cambridge.
Marcus Warre Slade, B.A., Oxford.
Thomas Edmett Haydon, B.A., Cambridge.
Percy Scott Hill Scott-Crickitt, B.A., Oxford.
Lionel Charles Whitehead Phillips, B.A., Cambridge.
William Harold Tingey, B.A., Cambridge.
Wyndham Neave Slade, B.A., Oxford.
John Ashburner Nix, B.A., Cambridge.
Arthur George Du Cane, B.A., Oxford.
Daniel Chamier.
Arthur Moore.
Jehangir Peerozshaw, B.A., Bombay.
Walter M'Lachlan Money, B.A., Oxford.
The Hon. Edward Evan Charteris, Oxford.
Horace George Calthrop, B.A., Cambridge (holder of a Scholarship in Common Law, awarded February, 1890).
George Robert Harris, Calcutta.
Cecil Bertie Gedge, B.A., Cambridge (holder of a Scholarship in Real Property Law, awarded February, 1890).
Frederick William Gilks, B.A., London.
Daniel Henry Conner, B.A., Oxford.
James Smith, B.A., LL.D., Cambridge.
Diwan Ram Prashad, Cambridge.
Diwan Shadi Ram, Cambridge.
Thomas Cecil Pakenham, B.A., Oxford.
Mohandass Karamchand Gandhi.
Horacio Prudencio Parodi, London.
Watkin James Yuille Strang Watkins, B.A., Cambridge.
Wilfred Bruno Colbeck, Cambridge.
Nicolas Gilbert Louis Child, B.A., Oxford.
George Frederick Lloyd Mortimer, B.A., Oxford.
Herbert Tremenheere Hewett, B.A., Oxford.
Bernard Edward Spencer Brodhurst, B.A., Oxford (holder of a Scholarship in Equity, awarded February, 1891).
Malcolm Edward Horne Martin.
Reginald George Gallop.
Henry Price Chapman.
Edward James Jacob.
Reginald Houblon Calvert, B.A., Cambridge.

By the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple.

Frederick William Washington Kingdon, LL.D., London University (Lecture Prize in Roman Law, Studentship Roman Law, Lecture Prize Real and Personal Property).
Abdul Majid, B.A., Christ's College, Cambridge (Calcutta University, India Government Scholar, Tagore Scholar, Presidency College, Calcutta, Inns of Courts Studentship, 1891).

William Jethro Brown, B.A., LL.B., St. John's College, Cambridge (Inns of Court Studentship and Middle Temple Common Law Scholar).
William Edward Heathcote, M.A., Fellow TrinityCollege, Cambridge.
Mohamed Abdul Alim.
Arthur Raymond Yates, B.A., Jesus College, Cambridge.
Nai Plüm.
Arthur Harington Graham, B.A., Magdalen College, Oxford.
Egerton Milne Cumming Macdona, B.A., Oxford.
Cecil Grenville Wilbraham, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.
Mohamed Ismail Khan.
Henry Beaumont.
Gabriel Hugh Savage.
Robert Morris.
Alexander Maclean, B.A., Christ Church, Oxford.
Arthur Gaved Phillips.
Framrose Pestonjee Doctor, B.A., Bombay University.
Herbert Edward Chorley.
Raj Narayan.
Alexander Leeper (Lieutenant R.N.).
George Mitchell Weekley, King's College, London.
Albert Parsons.
George Grenville Phillimore, B.A., Oxford.
Buch Tranbuchray Tricamray Majamdar.
Mazhar Ul Hague.
James Murray, University of London.
Alfred Radford.
Sidney Percy Leggett.
James Sands Henderson.
Percy Gladstone Thompson.
Ram Gopal (Kayestha), Calcutta University.
Jagdish Sankar Misra, St. John's College, Cambridge.
Henry Walter Reece, University of London.
Samuel Edgar Wills.
William Charles Godwin.
Harry Stanley Scrivener, B.A., Magdalen College, Oxford.
Hemendra Nath Mitra, Doveton College, Calcutta.
Samuel Thomas Evans, M.P., London University.

By the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn.

Thomas Bailey Clegg, Holt Scholar, Gray's Inn, 1889, Lee Prizeman, 1890 and 1891.
Harold Hardy, B.A., Oxford.
Anthony Gordon Damian, University of London.
Thomas Cutter.
Fullarton James, B.A., Cambridge.
Claudius Ernest Wright, B.A., B.C.L., Durham University.

JUDICATURE ACTS AMENDMENT.

A BILL intituled an Act to amend the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts.

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. It shall be lawful for any person who has held the office of Lord Chancellor, if upon the request of the Lord Chancellor he consents so to do, to sit and act as a judge of the High Court or of the Court of Appeal, and while so sitting and acting he shall have all the jurisdiction, power, and authority of a judge of either of those Courts, and shall rank therein according to his precedence as a peer.

2. Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of a judge of the High Court who is president of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division thereof, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by letters patent, to appoint to that office as president of the said division any person who is a barrister of not less than fifteen years' standing, or who is a judge of the High Court or Court of Appeal of not less than one year's standing; and the person so appointed shall, without prejudice to the rights of any judge of the Supreme Court existing at the passing of this Act, take precedence in Court next after the Master of the Rolls.

3. For the purpose of aiding the House of Lords in the hearing and determination of appeals in Admiralty actions, the House may in any special appeal in which it may think it expedient to do so call in the aid of one or more assessors specially qualified, and hear such appeal wholly or partially with the assistance of such assessors.

4. This Act may be cited as the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1891, and shall be construed as one with the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, 1873 to 1890, which Acts, with this Act, may be cited together as the Judicature Acts, 1873 to 1891.

THE ADMISSION OF THE PUBLIC TO THE LAW COURTS.

THE following correspondence has appeared in the Times:—

Sir,—I shall be obliged if you can find room for these letters in your Monday paper.

Your obedient Servant,
COLERIDGE.

1 Sussex Square, Hyde Park, W: June 6.

37 Temple, E.C.: June 5, 1891.

My Lord,—Since it appears there is little or no chance of gaining admittance into your Court without a ticket, I now formally apply for one. I base my application on the ground that although a judge is indeed absolute emperor over his Court, yet his power does not extend to the selection of what body of people shall represent the 'public' in cases which are not heard in camera. Although a judge has the undoubted right to take such measures as to insure the convenience of those having business in the Court, even to the exclusive issuing of tickets of admission, yet such tickets should be distributed impartially to all applicants. I have no personal knowledge that such has not been actually the case. This I know, that I have been told that Lady Coleridge has distributed most of the tickets among her friends. I say this, not because I in any way wish to be insulting or disrespectful to a lady, but simply as a statement of fact as to what I heard a Templar say. I also say it in order to call attention to a fact I am sure your lordship will admit to be true, and that is, your lordship's personal friends have no more right to represent the public than the friends of John Smith. It would seem that this ticket-issuing, or rather its distribution, has practically resulted in the above-mentioned undesirable outcome. I also maintain that if there is room in the well of the Court, any member of one of the Inns of Court has a prior right to a seat therein over an ordinary member of the public—whether provided with tickets from the judge or not. This system of admittance by tickets only, if tolerated, will practically confer on the judge the power of selecting his audience—a right which up to now, I labour under the impression, has not been conferred on them either by statute or any other law. It is not within my province to find fault with your lordship for taking the best means in your opinion to insure the comfort of those who are bound to be in your Court, any more than to do so with reference to the degrading of the bench to the level of a grand stand; but I consider that no one, by virtue of holding a ticket of admission, has the right to take precedence of those who are standing much nearer to the door than he is—in other words, no member of the public having no locus standi in your

Court has the right to have the seat kept reserved for him, the first seventy-two members of the public who present themselves at the public gallery have the right to be admitted. I say seventy-two, because I believe that is the number which can be accommodated in the public gallery of your lordship's Court. I believe I am not wrong in saying that there is no denying my assertion. The Court, so far as I know, takes no notice of the difference between peer and pauper in the question of admittance therein. If John Smith, labourer, is in front of Lord Knows Who, and there is only one seat vacant in the public gallery, the peer has no prior right to occupy that seat. Your lordship probably knows all this better than I do, yet, in the face of recent events, it is well to mention all that I have. I respectfully propose to your lordship that orders be given to the officials at the door to admit members of the Inns of Court (on presentation of their cards of membership, or on their otherwise satisfying them of the person being such), giving them precedence over members of the public possessing a ticket which, strictly speaking, gives them no more right to be admitted than a piece of wastepaper. If the tickets only admit by 'courtesy' and not by 'right,' then I claim, my lord, that such courtesy should be extended first to members of the Inns of Court.

Be that as it may, but since admission to the Court has been by ticket, I think I may safely conclude that as many tickets as there are seats have been already distributed. If that is so, in order to show such distribution did not practically amount to a selection of the 'public' among your lordship's friends and acquaintances, one or other of my alternatives should be acted upon. Either the members of the Inns of Court should be admitted by virtue of their membership, or a ticket should be sent to one who has not the honour of being a friend or acquaintance of your lordship's—to wit, to me. As I have said before, I deny the right of anyone to 'reserved' seats in a Court of Justice. A member of my inn, in palliation, said that the tickets were not sold, but granted gratis to all applicants. I hope that is so. Armed with a ticket of admittance I hope to be able to gain an entry, taking my chance with others similarly armed. Supposing the possessor of a ticket issued before the trial commenced is absent, his seat should be kept vacant. If he is late, an earlier ticketholder should occupy the space allotted to him when present. On these grounds I respectfully ask your lordship to issue tickets over and above those already issued, so that there should be no appearance of the Court being reserved for a few personal friends.

Your obedient Servant,
L. TALLIEN A. M'VANE.

To the Right Hon. J. D. Lord Coleridge.

---

1 Sussex Square, W.: June 6, 1891.

Sir,—I have hesitated whether to take any notice of your letter; but it has become the custom to assume that anyone has a right to accuse any other person of anything, and that if that other is not at the trouble of replying to the accusation he must be taken to admit its truth. It is very inconvenient just now to spend valuable time in replying to you; but in such a matter as the public administration of justice it is perhaps better to submit to the inconvenience.

No one except the sovereign and the judges has any right upon the bench; but it has been the immemorial custom for the judges to extend the courtesy of a seat there to peers, Privy Councillors, and any other persons whom they may choose to invite. I speak from a personal recollection of more than fifty years. It is a discretion I shall exercise as my illustrious predecessors have exercised it, when and as I think fit, and with which, except by Parliament, I shall permit no interference.

The statement as to my wife, which you profess to have heard from 'a Templar,' is absolutely untrue. It seems that some Templars can be like other men—inaccurate—and that other Templars can forget what is usually considered due to a lady. It is equally untrue that the bench has been filled by my personal friends. My wife has had at her disposal three seats, and three seats only, including her own. The majority of persons on the bench have been unknown to me, even by sight, but they have been persons to whom, for one reason or another, it seemed proper to grant the privilege. Exactly the same observations apply to my own small gallery and to a portion of the gallery opposite the bench. The rest of that gallery and the whole of the body of the Court has been absolutely free, but I have given strict orders to prevent overcrowding, so that the quiet and orderly trial of the cause shall be secured; with the further directions that the utmost available space shall be given to members of the bar in costume; and that the reporters for the press, who keep the public informed of the proceedings in Court, shall be able to perform their important duty, as far as possible, in ease and comfort.

I believe that my orders have not been wholly ineffectual, and they will certainly be continued. When the Court is full my orders are to exclude everyone. There are thousands, I daresay, who would like to hear the trial of an interesting cause, but it is, in my opinion, far more important that those who do hear it should be comfortable (so far as comfort is possible in the Royal Courts of Justice), and therefore quiet and orderly, than that a few more persons—it may be 100—should hear it at the expense of the comfort, the quiet, and the order of the whole audience. I have acted before now on these views; and shall certainly act on them now and whenever it may be my fate to preside at the trial of a case which excites public interest. I can make no alteration in your favour.

As the person you refer to as 'a Templar' and yourself may perhaps repeat your mistakes, I shall send your letter and my answer to the newspapers.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient, humble Servant,
L. T. A. M'Vane, Esq. COLERIDGE.

COUNCIL OF LEGAL EDUCATION.

MICHAELMAS EXAMINATION, 1891.

Examination of Candidates for Pass Certificates.

THE attention of students is requested to the following rules:—

No student shall receive from the council the certificate of fitness for call to the bar required by the four Inns of Court unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination in the following subjects—viz. (1) Roman law; (2) the law of real and personal property; (3) common law; and (4) equity.

No student (except such as come under the next stated rule) shall be examined for call to the bar until he shall have kept nine terms; but students shall have the option of passing the examination in Roman law at any time after having kept four terms.

A student who, previously to his admission at an Inn of Court, was a solicitor in practice for not less than five years, may be examined for call to the bar without keeping any terms.

An examination will be held in October next, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a certificate of fitness for being called to the bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name, in full, personally or by letter, at the treasurer's or steward's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Monday, October 5 next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to obtain a certificate preliminary to a call to the bar, or whether he is merely desirous of passing the examination in Roman law under the above-stated rule.

The examination will take place in the Hall of Lincoln's Inn, and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order: Tuesday morning, October 13, at ten, on the law of real and personal property; Wednesday morning, October 14, at ten, on common law; Thursday morning, October 15, at ten, on equity; Friday morning, October 16, at ten, on Roman law.

The oral examination will be conducted on the same days, and on the same subjects, as above appointed for the examination by printed questions.

The examiner in the law of real and personal property will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of the law of real and personal property, including the provisions of the Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts, with reference chiefly to the following treatises on those subjects—viz. Williams's 'Principles of the Law of Real Property;' Williams's 'Principles of the Law of Personal Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Real Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Personal Property;' Edwards's 'Compendium of the Law of Property in Land.'

The examiner in common law will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of (1) The law of contracts; (2) the law of torts; and (3) the criminal law—with reference chiefly to Mr. Broom's 'Commentaries,' eighth edition, 1888; (4) the procedure in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice—with reference to Book I. of the same work; and (5) Foulke's 'Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law,' third edition (founded on Smith's 'Action at Law').

The examiner in equity will examine in the following subjects as discussed in White and Tudor's 'Leading Cases,' or as affected by later statutes and decisions: (1) Implied trusts conversion (Howe v. Lord Dartmouth); (2) ademption and satisfaction; (3) injunctions in cases of waste, riparian rights, and nuisance; (4) marshalling; (5) defences to action for specific performance on grounds of (a) mistake, surprise, or unreasonableness in contract; (b) want of mutuality in contract; (6) married women's property.

The examiners in Roman law will examine in the 'Institutes of Justinian,' Books I. and II.; Book III., title 13, to the end of the book; Book IV., titles 1 to 5 inclusive.

HILARY EXAMINATION, 1892.

Examination of Candidates for Studentships and Pass Certificates.

The attention of students is requested to the following rules:—

As an encouragement to students to study jurisprudence and Roman civil law, twelve studentships of one hundred guineas each shall be established and divided equally into two classes; one class of such studentships to continue for two years, and to be open for competition to any student as to whom not more than four terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; and another class to continue for one year only, and to be open for competition to any student, not then already entitled to a studentship, as to whom not less than four and not more than eight terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; two of each class of such studentships to be awarded by the council, on the recommendation of the committee, after every examination before Hilary and Trinity Terms respectively, to the two students of each set of competitors who shall have passed the best examination in both jurisprudence and Roman civil law. But the committee shall not be obliged to recommend any studentship to be awarded if the result of the examination be such as in their opinion not to justify such recommendation. Where any candidates appear to be equal or nearly equal in merit, the council may, if they think fit, divide the studentship between them equally, or in such proportions as they consider just. Where in any year a studentship in either class is not awarded by reason of the candidates not appearing to deserve it, the council may, if they think fit, appropriate it, or a portion of it, for that year to the other class, or may offer it for competition in some other subject.

No student shall receive from the council the certificate of fitness for call to the bar required by the four Inns of Court unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination in the following subjects—viz. (1) Roman law, (2) the law of real and personal property, (3) common law, and (4) equity.

No student (except such as come under the next-stated rule) shall be examined for call to the bar until he shall have kept nine terms; but students shall have the option of passing the examination in Roman law at any time after having kept four terms.

A student who, previously to his admission at an Inn of Court, was a solicitor in practice for not less than five years, may be examined for call to the bar without keeping any terms.

An examination will be held in December next to which a student of any of the Inns of Court who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the bar, or of passing the examination in Roman law only, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name in full, personally or by letter, at the treasurer's or steward's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Friday, December 4 next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or to obtain a certificate preliminary to a call to the bar, or whether he is merely desirous of passing the examination in Roman law under the above-stated rule.

The examination will take place in the Hall of Lincoln's Inn, and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order: Monday and Tuesday, December 14 and 15, at ten until one, and from two until five on each day, the examination of candidates for studentships in jurisprudence and Roman law.

The examination of candidates for pass certificates, and for pass in Roman law only, will take place as follows:—

Wednesday morning, December 16, at ten, on the law of real and personal property.

Thursday morning, December 17, at ten, on common law.

Friday morning, December 18, at ten, on equity.

Saturday morning, December 19, at ten, on Roman law.

The oral examination will be conducted on the same days, and on the same subjects, as above appointed for the examination by printed questions.

Jurisprudence, International Law, and Roman Law.

Candidates for the studentships will be examined in all the following subjects:—

I. 'Institutes of Gaius' and 'Institutes of Justinian.'

II. 'Digest,' book 18, title 1, 'De Contrahenda Emptione;' book 17, title 2, 'Pro Socio.'
III. History of Roman law.
IV. Principles of jurisprudence, with special reference to the writings of Bentham, Austin, and Maine.
V. Elements of international law.
VI. Principles of private international law.

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined in the 'Institutes of Justinian,' books I. and II.; book III., title 13, to the end of the book; book IV., titles 1 to 5 inclusive.

The examiner in the law of real and personal property will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of the law of real and personal property, including the provisions of the Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts, with reference chiefly to the following treatises on those subjects—viz. Williams's 'Principles of the Law of Real Property;' Williams's 'Principles of the Law of Personal Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Real Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Personal Property;' Edwards's 'Compendium of the Law of Property in Land.'

The examiner in common law will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of (1) the law of contracts; (2) the law of torts, and (3) the criminal law—with reference chiefly to Mr. Broom's 'Commentaries,' eight edition, 1888; (4) the procedure in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice—with reference to Book I. of the same work; and (5) Foulke's 'Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law,' third edition (founded on Smith's 'Action at Law').

The examiner in equity will examine in the following subjects as discussed in White and Tudor's 'Leading Cases,' or as affected by later statutes and decisions: (1) Implied trusts, conversion (Howe v. Lord Dartmouth); (2) ademption and satisfaction; (3) injunctions in cases of waste, riparian rights, and nuisance; (4) marshalling; (5) defences to action for specific performance on grounds of (a) mistake, surprise, or unreasonableness in contract; (b) want of mutuality in contract; (6) married woman's property.

By order of the Council,
(Signed) A. G. MARTEN,
Chairman (pro tem.).

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn Hall:
May 4, 1891.

OBITUARY.

JUDGE BARRON, County Court judge of Monaghan and chairman of quarter sessions, died on Wednesday, June 3. He was the youngest son of the late Mr. Pierce Barron, of Ballyneale House, county Waterford, where he was born in the year 1805. His eldest brother, the late Sir Henry Winston Barron, represented the city of Waterford in Parliament for many years; and his nephew, the present baronet, is in the diplomatic service. He was educated in Paris, and at Trinity College, Dublin, and was called to the bar in 1830.

MR. WILLIAM THOMAS SHAVE DANIEL, Q.C., died at Leamington on June 9 in his 86th year. His name stands third in point of seniority among Queen's Counsel in this year's 'Law List,' and, owing to the death of Mr. Frederick Calvert, which was recently recorded, there remained only one name, that of the Right Hon. S. H. Walpole, above Mr. Daniel's. Mr. Daniel was made a Queen's Counsel forty years ago, and for many years he was a judge of County Courts and vice-chairman of the Council of Law Reporting. He was well known as the author of 'The History and Origin of the Law Reports' (1884), which he dedicated to Lord Selborne. No regular method of law reporting was pursued until the year 1865, when Lord Selborne (then Sir Roundell Palmer, Attorney-General) did a great deal to establish the present system. Mr. Daniel's book is the recognised authority on the subject.

SIR ANDREW STUART, ex-Chief Justice of the Quebec Superior Court, died, says a Reuter telegram, at Quebec suddenly on Tuesday, June 9, aged 79. He recently embraced the Roman Catholic faith, having formerly been a member of the Church of England.

MR. CHARLES KAYE FRESHFIELD, whose death took place at his residence in Brighton, on Saturday, June 6, in his eighty-fourth year, was the son of the late Mr. James William Freshfield. He received his education at the Charterhouse. He was admitted as a solicitor in 1831, and was a partner in the firm of Messrs. Freshfield from that time till 1870. Like his father, he was for many years solicitor to the Bank of England. On his retirement from the firm in 1870 he was elected a director of the East Indian Railway Company, with which he had been professionally connected since its formation. Mr. Freshfield represented Dover in the House of Commons from 1865 to 1868, and again from 1874 to 1885.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, June 15.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Tuesday, June 16.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Wednesday, June 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Thursday, June 18.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Friday, June 19.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Saturday, June 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

THE MIDDLE TEMPLE.—The following scholarships awarded by the treasurer and masters of the bench to students of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple were announced in hall on June 10: Real and Personal Property—W. Bowstead, 100 guineas; N. N. Burjorjee, 30 guineas. Common and Criminal Law—H. M. Rose, 100 guineas; L. Smith, 30 guineas; H. W. H. Knott, the Campbell Foster prize. Equity—F. W. Bartlett, 100 guineas; G. S. Henderson, 30 guineas. International and Constitutional Law—C. A. M. Barlow, 100 guineas; G. A. Kock, 30 guineas.

CIRCUITS OF THE JUDGES.

Mr. Justice Denman and Mr Justice Charles will remain in town.

NOTICE.—In cases where no note is appended to the Names of the Circuit Towns both Civil and Criminal Business must be ready to be taken on the first working day; in other cases the note appended to the name of the Circuit Town indicates the day before which Civil Business will not be taken. In the case of Circuit Towns to which two Judges go there will be no alteration in the old practice.

Summer Assizes, 1891	Midland	Oxford	South-Eastern	Home	Western	North-Eastern	Northern	North Wales, Chester, and Glamorgan	South Wales and Chester
Commission days	Ld. Coleridge, L.C.J. of England. Wills, J. Williams, J.	Pollock, B. Wills, J.	Hawkins, J.	Mathew, J.	Mathew, J. Cave, J.	Day, J. Grantham, J.	Smith, J. Wright, J.	Lawrance, J.	Collins, J.
June
Tuesday . 23	—	Reading	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Wednesday . 24	Aylesbury	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Friday . 26	Bedford	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Saturday . 27	—	Oxford	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Monday . 29	Northampton	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
July
Wednesday . 1	—	Worcester	—	—	—	—	Appleby	—	—
Thursday . 2	—	Saturday 4	—	—	—	Newcastle	—	—	—
Friday . 3	Leicester	—	—	—	—	—	Carlisle	—	—
Saturday . 4	—	—	Huntingdon	—	—	—	—	—	—
Monday . 6	—	—	—	Maidstone	—	—	—	—	—
Tuesday . 7	—	Gloucester	Cambridge	Thursday 9	—	—	—	—	—
Wednesday . 8	Oakham	Friday 10	—	—	—	—	Lancaster	Newtown	—
Thursday . 9	Lincoln	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Friday . 10	—	—	Bury St. Edmunds	—	Salisbury	—	—	Dolgelly	Haverfdw.
Saturday . 11	—	—	—	—	—	Durham	—	—	—
Monday . 13	—	Monmouth	—	—	—	—	Manchester (2)	Carnarvon	Lampeter
Tuesday . 14	—	Wednesday 15	—	—	Dorchester	—	—	—	—
Wednesday . 15	Derby	—	—	Guildford	—	—	—	—	Carmrthen
Friday . 17	—	Hereford	—	Saturday 18	Wells	—	—	Beaumaris	—
Saturday . 18	—	—	Norwich	—	Monday 20	York	—	—	—
Monday . 20	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Brecon
Tuesday . 21	Nottingham	Shrewsbury	—	—	—	—	—	Ruthin	—
Wednesday . 22	(2)	(2)	—	—	Bodmin	—	—	—	—
Thursday . 23	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Mold	Presteign
Friday . 24	—	Stafford	—	—	—	Leeds	—	—	—
Saturday . 25	Warwick	(2)	Chelmsford	Exeter 2	—	—	Liverpool (2)	Chester (2)	—
Wednesday . 29	Birmingham		—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Thursday . 30		(2)	Hertford	Winchester 2	—	—	—	—	—
Aug.
Saturday . 1	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	Swansea (2)
Tuesday . 4	—	—	Lewes	—	—	—	—	—	—
Wednesday . 5	—	—	—	Bristol 2	—	—	—	—	—

THE HANDWRITING OF MAGISTRATES' CLERKS.—The Home Office has just issued the following circular to magistrates' clerks: 'I am directed by the Secretary of State to inform you that complaints have been made to him by her Majesty's judges that the depositions which are delivered to the clerks of assize in connection with indictable cases are too often taken down in writing which cannot be read without constant effort and annoyance and great loss of valuable time. Another matter which has excited comment on the part of the judges is the occasional failure to send with the depositions, when lodged with the clerk of assize, the original exhibits, or copies of them, without which the depositions, themselves are frequently unintelligible. Mr. Secretary Matthews desires me, therefore, to request that in future special pains may be taken (1) to record the statements of witnesses in all cases in plain and easily legible writing, and (2) to deliver such deposition in indictable cases, together with the representative exhibits (if any), to the clerk of assize, clerk of the peace, or proper officer of the Court before which the trial of the person to whose case the depositions refer is to be had, in as complete a form as possible, and in such time as to enable the judge, recorder, chairman of quarter sessions, or other presiding justice, to read and master their contents, if he wishes to do so, before he charges the grand jury.'

THE ROBBERIES IN THE TEMPLE.—In consequence of the number of robberies recently effected in the Temple, the authorities of the Inner Temple are having the outside doors of all the chambers occupied by their tenants protected with a massive iron plate in proximity to the lock in order to protect them in some measure against future depredators.

THE PARCEL POST.—The London Gazette of May 29 contains a Treasury Warrant, stating that on and after July 1 next the Postmaster-General will be empowered to pay compensation, not exceeding 50*l.* in each instance, in the event of any article of value forming part of a parcel being lost or damaged whilst in transit to any of the following places: India (including the whole continent of India, Burmah, Aden, and Zanzibar), Ascension, Bahamas, Barbados, British Honduras, British North Borneo, Cyprus, Falkland Islands, Gambia, Gibraltar, Grenada, Hongkong, Labuan, Leeward Islands, Newfoundland, St. Helena, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Straits Settlements, Tobago, and Trinidad.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JUNE 15 TO JUNE 20.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	June 15	June 16	June 17	June 18	June 19	June 20
7	Judge Moulkes	—	—	—	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Barnard Castle	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Richmond	Guisborough	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	Ashbourne	Wirksworth	Derby	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Stratford-on-Avon	Coventry	Warwick	Rugby	Bromyard	—
26	Judge Jordan	Atherstone	—	—	—	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	—	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

House of Lords Register.

Coram LORD HERSCHELL, LORD WATSON, and LORD MORRIS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4.

Goolden v. Conservators of River Thames (limits and definition of the River Thames—Conservancy Acts, 1857, 1864, 1867—Thames Navigation Act, 1866—powers of conservators—right of dredging. Appeal from the Court of Appeal in England, May 14, 1889).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5.

Johnson (pauper) v. W. H. Lindsay & Co. (negligence—master and servant—common employment—contractor and sub-contractor. Reported 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 581; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 508).—Cur. adv. vult.

Coram THE EARL OF SELBORNE, LORD WATSON, LORD BRAMWELL, and LORD HERSCHELL.

MONDAY, JUNE 8.

Charnwood Forest Railway Company v. London and North-Western Railway Company (railway company—working agreement—construction—terminals—through and local traffic. Appeal from order of Court of Appeal, dated May 2, 1890, affirming judgment of Bowen, L.J., dated August 9, 1889).—Dismissed.

Governor and Company of the Bank of Scotland v. Dominion Bank, Toronto, and others (bankers—bill of exchange—dishonour—protestation—claim for expenses by collecting bank—alleged failure of duty of collecting bank—cancellation of bill—subsequent bankruptcy of acceptors).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JUNE 9.

Governor and Company of the Bank of Scotland v. Dominion Bank, Toronto, and others (appeal from the First Division of the Court of Session. 'Court of Session Cases,' 4th series, vol. xvi. 1081).—Dismissed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4.

Justices of the Peace for the County of Kent v. Sandgate Local Board (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated January 27, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

De Coninck v. Singer (appeal of defendant Jacob Singer from judgment of Day, J., dated January 30, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Levin & Co. v. Seligsen [(trading, &c.) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Fry, L.J., dated February 20, 1890, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Handyside & Co. (Lim.) v. Gentry (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., dated January 26, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5.

In re Croaker and another (ex parte Debtor) (appeal of debtor from order of Mr. Registrar Giffard refusing to confirm scheme of composition).—Dismissed.

Tomkinson and another v. Balkis Consolidated Co. (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., dated February 7, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 6.

Gregory v. Casselden (appeal of defendant from judgment of Day, J., dated February 3, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JUNE 8.

Regina v. Judge of Halifax County Court and Bairstow (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of H. Sutcliffe from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated April 22, discharging rule nisi to hear action in Sutcliffe & Bairstow).—Dismissed.

Love v. South of England Marine Insurance Association (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated April 21, giving liberty to amend defence).—Dismissed.

In re an Arbitration between J. R. Williams and Sir E. A. A. K. C. Stepney, Bart. (appeal of J. R. Williams from order of Mathew, J., and Day, J., dated April 10, allowing motion to set aside award upon terms).—Allowed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 9.

Walford v. Prince Steamship Company (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of Mathew, J., and Williams, J., dated April 15, affirming order for stay of action pursuant to Arbitration Act, 1889, s. 4).—Dismissed.

Finska Angfartygs Aktiebolaget v. Brown, Toogood & Co. (appeal of defendants from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated April 22, for review of taxation).—Allowed.

Regina on prosecution of Colonel E. Mitchell v. H.M. Secretary of State for War (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Colonel E. Mitchell from order of Cave, J., and Charles, J., dated April 28, discharging rule nisi for mandamus to determine equivalent for loss under terms of Royal Warrant, 1884).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10.

No sitting.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4.

Mackenzie v. Macintosh (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 4).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5.

Berry v. Glasebrook (appeal of defendants from judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, dated February 10).—Dismissed.

In re E. C. Eagle, dec. Eagle v. Cardinall (appeal of defendants from judgment of North, J., dated April 25).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 6.

No sitting.

MONDAY, JUNE 8.

No sitting.

TUESDAY, JUNE 9.

In re Bence, dec. Smith v. Bence (construction) (appeal of defendant J. F. Bence from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 6).—Cur. adv. vult.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 10.

Florence v. Mallinson (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated November 1, 1890).—Dismissed.

In re G. J. Hunter, dec. Hunter v. Hunter (construction) (appeal of defendant J. B. Batchelor from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 24).—Cur. adv. vult.

MR. JUSTICE HENN COLLINS, who was formerly a Fellow of Downing, was entertained at dinner at his old college on Saturday last. There was a large gathering of the friends of the college to do honour to the new judge, who has recently been elected an Honorary Fellow of this legal foundation. Amongst the guests were Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Romer, the Postmaster-General, Sir George F. Bowen, LL.D., Judge Bagshawe, Q.C., Mr. Bigham, Q.C., and Professor Westlake, Q.C. There were several happy speeches. Professor Maitland, the distinguished Downing Professor of English Law, in proposing the health of the visitors, humorously defined equity as 'a system of rules administered chiefly by senior wranglers,' and, certainly, the recent appointments of Cambridge men seem to warrant the assertion.

EXPERIMENTS ON LIVING ANIMALS.—A Parliamentary paper just published shows the number of experiments performed on living animals during the year 1890, under licenses granted under the Act 39 & 40 Vict. c. 77, distinguishing painless from painful experiments. The total number of licensees was 110, of whom thirty-three performed no experiments. The experiments took place in forty-eight licensed places. The total number of experiments performed was 2,102. It is clear from the tables appended to the report that in a large majority of cases the experiment was painless, or else that complete anæsthesia was maintained from the commencement of the experiments till the animal was killed. Pain, we are assured, can hardly have been caused except in 316 cases, in which the animal, after being anæsthetised, was allowed to recover. But these operations were performed with the utmost care, and the wounds were always dressed antiseptically. Indeed, Mr. G. N. Poore, the inspector under the Act, who has drawn up this report, states emphatically that during the many visits he has paid to licensed places it has never fallen to his lot to see a single animal which appeared to be in bodily pain.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—Mr. J. P. Aspinall, of the North-Eastern Circuit, has been elected a bencher of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple in succession to the late Sir Montague Smith.

COMMERCIAL FAILURES.—According to Kemp's Mercantile Gazette the number of failures in England and Wales gazetted during the week ending June 6 was eighty-four. The number in the corresponding week of last year was seventy-four, showing an increase of ten, being a net decrease in 1891, to date, of 155.

ALIEN PASSENGERS.—Some doubt having arisen as to whether the masters of vessels, especially foreign, arriving in British ports with alien passengers have in all cases declared the full number, in accordance with the Act 6 Wm. IV. c. 2, the Customs authorities have ordered their officers on boarding each ship to observe for themselves, and report if such observation agrees approximately with the number reported by the master. As an additional check, until further instructions are given, the officers are to specially count the exact number of alien passengers on board every tenth ship, and should there be any discrepancy between the actual number and that stated a report is at once to be made, with a view to the prosecution of the masters. The penalty for falsely declaring the number of alien passengers on board is 100*l.*

THE DEATH PENALTY FOR TRAIN WRECKERS.—In connection with the recent attack by brigands upon a railway train in Turkey, when by something like a miracle no serious bodily harm was received, it is interesting to note that the State Legislature of California has passed a law enacting that convicted train-wreckers shall in future be punished with death. 'Only those who are conscientiously opposed to capital punishment in any case,' says the Railway World, 'can make any logical objection to such a statute. The average murderer slays but one; the train-wrecker may kill a hundred. Many who are called murderers perhaps never intended to deal a fatal blow. In countless instances the homicide has been committed under a sudden impulse or under terrible provocation. But the man who stealthily watches his chance and who contrives, with the precision of a clockmaker and the cruelty of a fiend, to so adjust obstructions as to imperil the lives of scores of human beings is a monster of depravity. Rarely, indeed, is there any clumsiness in the arrangement. Every detail is regulated with scientific accuracy. In the small hours, when the chance of detection is only as one in a thousand, does the train-wrecker do his work.'

SHORTHAND STATISTICS.—Mr. Isaac Pitman has compiled statistics on the extent to which his system of shorthand is taught in this country, and the returns this year show a striking increase over those of last year. During 1889 there were 44,730 students under class instruction in Pitman's shorthand; in 1890 this number increased to 55,558, who were divided among 1,520 colleges, schools, public institutions, classes, &c. These figures by no means represent all who are learning phonography throughout the country. They do not include private students, who form the greatest proportion of those who take up the study. The statistics show an increase in every respect, but no single item shows a more striking or a more rapid growth than that which consists of statistics with reference to the teaching of phonography in the Board schools. The returns received last year showed that in the Board schools in London and the provinces the study had been taken up by 3,397 boys and 146 girls. The returns this year show 8,143 boys and 1,793 girls under instruction. These figures indicate what an impetus the study of phonography has received since the addition of shorthand to the Education Code as a 'specific subject.'

'MASKE OF FLOWERS.'—By the kind permission of the benchers of the Inner Temple, the 'Maske of Flowers,' originally produced at the Court of King James I. (1613–14), and successfully revived before His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught at Gray's Inn during the royal jubilee festivities of 1887, will be performed in the Inner Temple Hall, in aid of the St. Michael's Convalescent Home, Westgate-on-Sea, on Wednesday, June 24, at 3.30 P.M. The ladies and gentlemen who have kindly offered to perform on this occasion (including several of the performers of 1887) are, in the main, either members or connected with members of the Inns of Court. The maske comprises songs, choruses, fencing bouts, antique dances (minuet, pavan, &c.), together with an overture and other orchestral pieces, in which two harpsichords are prominently employed. Tickets, one guinea each, may be had from the Lady Halsbury, 4 Ennismore Gardens, S.W.; Lady Jeune, 79 Harley Street, W.; Mrs. Charles Thynne, 7 Redcliffe Gardens, S.W.; and the subtreasurer, Inner Temple Hall, E.C.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY.—The fifty-ninth anniversary dinner in connection with this society was given on June 10 at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street. Mr. Justice Romer presided, supported by Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Wright, and among those present were: Sir Arthur Watson, Q.C., and Messrs. R. D. B. Acland, J. R. Adams, C. Baggallay, J. E. Bankes, T. H. Devonshire, R. P. Hardy, C. C. Healey, Q.C., G. Henderson, Q.C., M. I. Joyce, H. Lawrence, T. F. Leese, Q.C., E. L. Levett, Q.C., T. Rawle, T. A. Romer, H. S. Ryland, W. B. Smith, and J. Webster. The annual report stated that fifty new members had been admitted during the year, and the total number was now 955. Among seventy-seven members 667*l.* was distributed during the past year for sick pay, making the total sum so distributed 19,535*l.* The cost to the society last year for superannuation was 1,399*l.*, or a total since 1832 of 28,033*l.* Most of the superannuated members received 14*s.* a week for life. The life assurance benefit gave 50*l.* on the death of a member to his widow and children, and to a member on the death of his wife 25*l.* During the past year 785*l.* had been paid under this head, making a total in fifty-nine years of 31,994*l.* The capital fund now invested amounted to 82,285*l.* The benevolent fund had, as usual, been of great assistance, the sum of 500*l.* having been so distributed during the year. In proposing the toast of the evening—'Prosperity to the Society'—the chairman expressed his satisfaction that the popularity of the society was in no way diminished. He regretted that many well-known faces were not present on that occasion. He would not say that law clerks were perfect, but, as a body, they were distinguished for industry, uprightness, and devotion to their employers, and in these respects they would compare favourably with any body of men. In conclusion, he earnestly urged law clerks to join the society, pointing out that it was not a charity, and that anyone joining it could, if the necessity arose, claim its benefits without any loss of respect.—Mr. Justice Denman proposed 'The Bench, the Bar, and the Profession,' and other toasts followed.—In the course of the evening subscriptions were announced amounting to over 400*l.*

A DOG PROVING AN 'ALIBI.'—The following letter recently appeared in our sporting contemporary, Rod and Gun: 'Sir,—While staying in Devonshire last week at a farm, I had a practical illustration of an interesting case of sheep-worrying. Looking out of my bedroom window just as it was daylight, I saw a flock of ewes that had recently lambed tearing about the field as if alarmed; and I quickly discovered that two dogs were hunting them. I woke up the farmer, and we were soon on the spot; but the dogs were too quick for us, and we could only identify one of them, which we recognised as belonging to a farm about three miles off. They had killed and partially eaten two lambs, and seriously mauled three others. My friend at once got out his gig; and we drove off to the farm from whence we thought the culprit hailed, expecting to reach there before the dog. On arriving, we told the owner of the animal our errand, and he at once invited us to come and see his sheep-dog, which could not possibly have committed the crime, as he was shut up of a night in the stable. There, truly enough, did we find the collie, looking half-asleep and curled up in a corner among the straw. His owner triumphantly pointed him out; but he was a peculiarly-marked dog, and we had both spotted him, and, moreover, there was a broken window in the stable, and traces of dirty, and apparently recent, claw-marks on the wall. My farmer looked in the brute's mouth, and thought there was wool on the teeth; but the owner contended that that proved nothing, as the dog had been among his own sheep the previous evening. I then suggested that a dose of salt and water might prove if any mutton had been recently devoured; and, the two farmers consenting to this, we dosed poor collie accordingly, and in a few minutes he disgorged a quantity of raw lamb with the wool on it, unmistakably recently killed. The case was admitted proved, and the neighbours speedily came to terms as to the question of damage. To me it seemed a most interesting case of canine intelligence that two scamps of dogs, one we know having sheep within a few yards of him, should not attempt any sport on their own ground; but should deliberately meet some miles off, and then, when interrupted, tear off to their homes, and, like a human criminal, endeavour to prove an alibi by being found asleep in bed about the time when the murder was committed.—I am, &c., MERIVALE. Surrey, March 8, 1891.'

BIRTHS.

On June 5, at 46 Stanley Gardens, Hampstead, the wife of E. A. Wurtsburg, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On June 7, at 11 Hereford Square, S.W., the wife of Charles H. L. Neish, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On May 8, at St. Mary's Church, Woodstock, Cape Town, H. G. Stapylton-Smith, Esq., Solicitor, East London, South Africa, to Alice Emily, younger daughter of John G. Williams, Esq., Solicitor, Lincoln.

On June 3, at St. Jude, Southsea, Joseph Scovell Hobbs, 1st Gloster (28th) Regiment, eldest son of Joseph Hobbs, of 9 Kensington Gardens Square, and of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, to Edith Mary, second daughter of the late Major John Breton, 53rd Regiment, the last Town Major of Portsmouth, and of Mrs. Breton, of Crescent House, Southsea.

On June 4, at St. Stephen's, Cheltenham, Charles Moore Kennedy, Barrister-at-Law, of 14 Hyde Park Gate, S.W., son of John Pitt Kennedy, Barrister-at-Law, formerly Standing Counsel to the Government of India, to Ellinor Edith, daughter of the late George Marwood, J.P., D.L., of Busby Hall, Northallerton, Yorkshire.

On June 4, at St. Mary's Church, West Kensington, Lloyd Chadwick, of Warwick, Solicitor, to Grace Lawrence Righton, of Stanwick Road, West Kensington, eldest daughter of the late Herbert Lawrence Righton, of The Hollies, Lonsdale Road, Barnes.

On June 9, at Christ Church, Lee, Russell Spratt, Barrister-at-Law, of the Middle Temple and of Blackheath, to Ada Rebecca, youngest daughter of the late John M. Burton, F.R.C.S., of Lee Park Lodge, Blackheath.

DEATHS.

On June 3, at 7 Kensington Gate, Charles Francis Trower, Barrister-at-Law, in his 75th year.

On June 7, at Malta, from an accident at polo, Frank B. R. Hemphill, Major 1st Royal Berkshire Regiment, second son of Mr. Serjeant Hemphill, Q.C., 65 Merrion Square, Dublin.

On June 8, at the Rectory, Stapleford Abbotts, Romford, of pneumonia, following influenza, the Rev. Thomas Cochrane, M.A., twenty-four years rector of the parish, and only son of the late Honourable Sir James Cochrane, Chief Justice of Gibraltar, in his 55th year.

On June 9, at Leamington, William Thomas Shaw Daniel, Esq., Q.C., late Judge of County Courts, in his 86th year.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

As we last week ventured to predict would be the case, the judges of the second division of the Court of Appeal have come to the assistance of their brethren of the first division. Final appeals from the Queen's Bench Division are now being taken in Appeal Court II., whilst Court I. are dealing with the new trial paper and interlocutory appeals. It was obvious that, but for this arrangement, there must have been a discreditably long list of arrears at the commencement of the Long Vacation.

NOTWITHSTANDING the present overcrowded state of the profession, the number of gentlemen called to the bar would seem to be on the increase. On the 10th inst. there were no fewer than 108 calls at the four Inns of Court, distributed as follows: At Lincoln's Inn, eleven; at the Inner Temple, fifty-three; at the Middle Temple, thirty-eight; and at Gray's Inn, six.

THE Law Times, in commenting on Mr. M'Vane's letter to the Lord Chief Justice (see ante, p. 398) 'does not recognise any peculiar claim in unoccupied (sic) members of the legal profession upon the seats or floor of the Court.' 'Lawyers engaged in cases occupying the Courts,' it is said, 'must be accommodated, but if the public were to invade the rest of the Court we know of no power to eject them.' 'This, however,' it is added, 'raises too wide a question for present discussion.' In strict law, no doubt, the Law Times is right. But we think it to be of the utmost importance, now that the question has been raised, that it should not be suffered to drop. When the Royal Courts were built, with spacious galleries unknown to Sir John Soane's makeshifts adjoining Westminster Hall, it was understood that, in addition to the floors of the Courts, these galleries, and these galleries alone, were intended for the accommodation of the general public, and that the raised seats in the Courts were intended to be reserved for counsel, amongst whom Queen's Counsel were entitled to the front row of such seats. Even the 'occupied members' of the legal profession may come to find considerable difficulty in ejecting any member of the public unless some definite rule be laid down. The question is one which we recommend to the careful consideration of the bar committee. The Lord Chief Justice, it will be remembered, in his answer to Mr. M'Vane, stated that he had given directions 'that the utmost available space should be given to members of the bar in costume,' and we think that the best course for the authorities to adopt would be, in some unmistakable manner, to appropriate the raised seats in Court to members of the bar, whether 'occupied' or not, in accordance with the spirit of these directions.

IN Wiedemann v. Walpole Baron Pollock has ruled that the fact that the plaintiff in an action for breach of promise of marriage charged the defendant with the promise and that the defendant made no answer affords material evidence in support of the promise within the meaning of the Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68), and so no doubt it was held by the Court of Appeal in Bessela v. Stern, 46 Law J. Rep. C. P. 467, reversing the decision of the Court below. Execution, however, has been stayed to allow the defendant to move, on the ground that Bessela v. Stern was wrongly followed, and that case is distinguishable, inasmuch as the charge of the promise was there made in the presence of a third party. Before the Act of 1869 neither party to this kind of action was an admissible witness, but section 2 of that Act made the evidence of either admissible, and by way of hedge provided that 'no plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage shall recover a verdict unless his or her testimony shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.' We cannot help thinking that a proviso of this kind ought to have been more strictly construed, even than in Bessela v. Stern, against plaintiffs in our Courts. The similar provision, however, of the Bastardy Act of 1872, s. 4, which requires corroboration in some material particular, has been liberally construed (see Cole v. Manning, 46 Law J. Rep. M. C. 175), and, what is more important, section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, by which no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage unless the agreement upon which the action is brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing signed by the parties to be charged, was held, not long after the passing of the statute, not to extend to mutual promises to marry, in Harrison v. Cage, 1 Ld. Raym. 386, overruling Philpott v. Wallett, 3 Lev. 65. It seems that, as a general rule, both judges and juries have a disposition to be too generous to plaintiffs in actions for breach of promise.

IT is a little curious that the authority of Harrison v. Cage, 1 Ld. Raym. 386, to the effect that a promise to marry is not an agreement in consideration of marriage within the Statute of Frauds, and therefore need not be in writing, has been so readily accepted. 'It was ruled in this case,' so Lord Raymond says, 'at Norfolk Summer Assizes last past by Lord Chief Baron Ward that this promise had no need to be in writing. And Mr. Northey said at the bar that the statute intended only agreements to pay marriage portions, and that it had been often ruled so by Chief Justice Holt. Quod Holt non negavit.' In Philpot v. Wallet, 3 Freem. 540 (not cited in Harrison v. Cage), however, the exact contrary had been decided some ten years before by three judges to one on the ground that the promise was 'within the words, the meaning, and the mischief of the statute, and as much a catching promise as any that the Act intended to prevent.' But, in Cook v. Baker, 1 Str. 33, 'after argument, it was held that this promise is not within the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries, which relates only to contracts in consideration of marriage, and that the case in 3 Lev. 411, has been contradicted by later resolutions,' 'the case in 3 Lev. 411,' being Philpot v. Wallet, though not so vigorously reported by Levinz as by Freeman. If the matter were res integra we should be inclined to think that the right rule was the original one of Philpot v. Wallet; but, of course, it is impossible to expect that Harrison v. Cage and Cook v. Baker would be overruled after the lapse of more than 250 years. Cook v. Baker, it may be added (see 1 Salk. 63), was brought before a Court of Error, but 'the Court took time to consider and look into the cases' upon a technical point, 'and in the meantime the parties made an end of the cause and applied for leave to enter a nolle prosequi, which was granted.'

THE Slaughter of the Innocents has begun early this year, no doubt in the hope of the early rising of Parliament, a hope which it is to be feared, in view of the large amount of business, especially in Supply, still to be transacted, will be long deferred. During the last week no fewer than twenty bills have been withdrawn, some of which were of considerable interest and importance. Sisters-in-law are still to be forbidden as wives, notwithstanding the majorities each year on the second reading in the House of Commons and the even balance of opinion in the House of Lords. The question of private bill procedure in Scotland, which has been the subject of bills for two years, must wait for another session, and probably another Parliament, for solution; and the public trustee is still a functionary of the indefinite future. Meanwhile a couple of bills have received the royal assent, the Irish Land Bill has been introduced into the House of Lords, and several measures have received a third reading in the Commons. Even at this late hour three new bills have been introduced, but two of them are of a purely official character, brought in by Mr. Ritchie and Mr. Raikes; and the third, by Mr. Parnell, may perhaps be considered to have only an electioneering character.

MR. STUART is pressing for the repeal of the clause of the Eastbourne Improvement Act of 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxv. s. 169), under which some forty Salvationists have been proceeded against for marching in procession through the streets on Sunday, and for the remission of the penalties by the Home Secretary. Mr. Matthews has declined to give Mr. Stuart any assistance, holding that as long as the clause in question remains on the statute-book he should not be justified in setting himself against the will of Parliament, which has sanctioned exceptional legislation for Eastbourne, and in preventing the magistrates from giving effect to that legislation. The impugned clause is similar to section 38 of the Torquay Harbour and District Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. cxix.)—which was repealed in 1888 by section 3 of the Pier and Harbours Confirmation (No. 2) Act, 1888—and enacts that 'no procession shall take place on a Sunday in any street or public place' in the borough of Eastbourne 'accompanied by any instrumental music, fireworks, discharge of cannon or firearms, or other disturbing noise, provided that the foregoing prohibition shall not apply to any of Her Majesty's naval or volunteer forces.' It was held in Johnson v. The Mayor of Croydon, 55 Law J. Rep. M. C. 117, that a bye-law under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, to the effect that no person, not being a member of Her Majesty's army or auxiliary forces acting under the orders of his commanding officer, should sound upon any musical instrument on Sunday was unreasonable and void; so that a special Act is needed to give the inhabitants of any borough protection from Sunday street music; and, of course, when such a special Act has been once passed, it can, unless the ordinary practice be very much departed from, be repealed by a special Act alone.

THE Prince of Wales has been made the subject of much criticism for playing baccarat at Tranby Croft, and there have not been wanting suggestions to His Royal Highness that he should never take part in a game of chance again, much less in the game of baccarat, which in Jenks v. Turpin, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 131, was said by Mr. Justice Hawkins to be an unlawful game. For ourselves we have always doubted the correctness of that dictum, and inclined to the opinion that only roulet or rolypoly, games at dice (except backgammon), ace of hearts, pharaoh, basset, and passage, as laid down by the late Mr. Brandt in the second edition of his book on 'Games and Gaming,' at p. 112, are 'unlawful,' in the strict sense of the term. And curiously enough, it is expressly provided by 12 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 10, 'that nothing in this Act or in any former Acts against gaming contained shall extend to prevent or hinder any person or persons from gaming or playing at any of the games in this or any of the said former Acts mentioned within any of His Majesty's royal palaces, where His Majesty, his heirs or successors, shall then reside,' a provision repeated and extended to 'any game whatever,' by 18 Geo. II. c. 34, s. 6, by which roulet, otherwise rolypoly, was added to the list of illegal games contained in 12 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 10.

IN answer to Mr. Bryce, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach has stated that the Government are advised that the English law of copyright is so favourable to alien authors that there is good reason to expect that the President of the United States will declare that the American Copyright Act applies to this country on the ground that this country 'permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens.' We long ago (see LAW JOURNAL for November 29, 1890) pointed out that there could be no reasonable doubt on the point left technically undecided in Routledge v. Low, 37 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 354, whether an alien author, in order to obtain British copyright, should at the time of publication be resident in the British dominions, though we thought also, looking to Jeffryes v. Boosey, 24 Law J. Rep. Exch. 81, that legislation might be desirable. It is material to observe that by section 13 of the American Act there are two conditions on which citizens of foreign countries are admitted to the benefit of the Act: (1) The condition of reciprocal law and (2) the condition of their country being party to the Convention of Berne. 'The existence of either of the conditions aforesaid,' so runs the American Act, 'shall be determined by the opinion of the President of the United States announced by proclamation made from time to time, as the purposes of this Act may require.'

IN connection with the claim against the late Archbishop of York or his estate for 7,000*l.* or thereabouts, of which the whole or a great part is said to consist of fees, &c. on admission to the archbishopric, attention may well be directed to the Ecclesiastical Fees Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 76). By this Act 'every person appointed to the office of secretary, apparitor, seal-keeper, or other officer employed in the transaction of official business by any archbishop or bishop in England' holds the same 'subject to all regulations and alterations affecting the same, or affecting the fees receivable in respect thereof, which may hereafter be made by authority of Parliament, nor shall any person by his appointment to any such office acquire any claim or title to compensation in case the same be hereafter altered or abolished by Act of Parliament.' By the same Act every officer above mentioned is bound, under a penalty of 20*l.*, to transmit annually before March 18 to a Secretary of State 'a true account, in writing, of the gross and net amounts of all such fees, allowances, gratuities, perquisites, and emoluments as shall have been received by him or become due to him in the year ending January 5 in such year by virtue of his office or employment.' There is no provision in the Act for submitting these accounts to Parliament, but it may be presumed that the returns sent in from the Archbishopric of York in respect of the first year of the late archbishop's enjoyment of the office may be easily obtained by motion in Parliament. The stamp duty on the grant of a restitution of the temporalities to an archbishop is 30*l.* by the Stamp Act, 1870, schedule of duties, tit. 'Grant.' The very heavy duties originally payable under that Act on any appointment to any 'ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, or promotion' were repealed in 1877 by 40 Vic. c. 13, s. 13.

THE recent decision of Judge Stonor in the case of Honey v. Maude (see p. 419) is somewhat difficult to reconcile with that of the Court of Appeal in Woodward v. Heseltine, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 357. In the bill of sale, the validity of which was in dispute, the grantees were described as 'The Union Deposit Bank of,' &c., 'of which bank Henry Isaacs and John Edwards, both of the same place, money lenders, are the sole proprietors.' So far the form of the instrument was exactly like that in Woodward v. Heseltine. But the distinction taken was that, whenever subsequently mentioned, the grantees were called not 'the said bank,' but 'the mortgagees,' a term which apparently the judge considered applicable to the proprietors and not to an incorporated company. Whether there was anything special in the context to confirm this view the report does not show. If not, it may be urged on the other side that there would be nothing unusual in referring to a corporation aggregate as 'the mortgagees,' and, that being so, the ambiguity detected by the Court of Appeal in the form remains unaffected. Those who agree with the learned County Court judge in the opinion that bills of sale, as well as other documents, should be construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat will be gratified to learn from him that an appeal to the House of Lords is pending in Woodward v. Heseltine. It may be hoped the result will be to supply a more solid foundation for his decision than that which, for want of a better, he has been driven to rely on.

To the many pitfalls in the way of clients who seek to obtain ex parte orders for taxation of their solicitors' bills, another, hitherto unrecorded in the reports, is revealed by the case of In re Webster, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 338, which decides that where a client has already obtained one common order for taxation, which he has allowed to lapse, he has no right to obtain ex parte a second common order in respect of the same costs. The reason given by Mr. Justice North, which appears to us to be perfectly well founded, is that 'if he could do this, he might by going on for twelve successive months, and getting twelve successive orders, prevent the solicitor during all that time from taking any proceedings to recover his bill.' The force of this remark will be seen when it is remembered that the common order to tax a bill delivered more than one month provides that no proceedings to recover his costs are to be taken by the solicitor pending the reference, and that the taxing-master is to make his certificate in a month, unless he certify that further time is necessary, or that the order is to be of no effect (Seton, 4th edit. p. 605). Another sufficient ground for discharging the order was that the client had suppressed the fact that there was a pending action brought by him against the solicitor in which the solicitor claimed to set off his costs. A third point in the same case deserves attention. The solicitor simply moved to discharge the order for irregularity,

Mr. Justice North, however, refused to discharge it altogether, but left it standing so far as it directed taxation and so far as it directed the certifying of the amount due—to which order the client would have been entitled on a proper application—and discharged it so far as it directed payment and so far as it restrained proceedings pending the reference, and also made the client pay the costs. The old rule, stated more than once in the cases (see In re Byrch, 8 Beav. 126; In re Hinton, 15 Beav. 192), undoubtedly was, that only by consent can an order warranted by the merits be made on a motion to discharge it for irregularity in having been obtained ex parte. Mr. Justice North appears to have departed from this rule, as—if we understand the report rightly—he amended and utilised the order without the consent of the solicitor, who would have preferred to have it discharged altogether.

THE Justices Clerks' Society will hold its fifty-first annual meeting at the Law Institution next Thursday, and the members will dine together the same evening to meet some distinguished guests. The subjects for discussion and consideration include the working of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and the Summary Jurisdiction (Youthful Offenders) Bill. It is very desirable that there should be as much unanimity as possible in the practice and procedure at petty sessions, and esprit de corps is as valuable among clerks to justices as in any other class of men. Whatever force there may be in the hostile criticisms so frequently launched at 'the Great Unpaid,' it must be admitted that, with few exceptions, the clerks perform their numerous, and often delicate, duties to the entire satisfaction of the public. This state of things is promoted and encouraged by the useful society referred to.

THE readers of 'As In a Looking Glass' and other novels by the same author will be interested to notice the name of Mr. F. C. Philips as one of the plaintiff's counsel in the latest (though somewhat réchauffé) cause célèbre, Wiedemann v. Walpole. As all novelists know, truth is stranger than fiction, and many thrilling romances and startling tragedies are revealed in the Law Courts.

REGINA v. JACKSON.

FULL reports of the proceedings before the Court of Appeal in Regina v. Jackson have now been published. Whether as the result of revision or otherwise, some of the cruder dicta which garnished the contemporary reports of the judgments, and were commented on in these columns, have disappeared. We are at liberty to suppose that the Lord Chancellor will receive without ridicule the statements of historians as to the legal existence of slavery in England at a period not so very remote. He confines himself, apparently, to ridiculing the certainly impossible contention that slavery is still lawful. Again, the announcement that an attempt by Mr. Jackson to retake his wife would be treated as a contempt of Court has been suppressed. We still, however, find Lord Halsbury saying that he is prepared to base his judgment on the ground, if we rightly understand him, that a feme covert is a person sui juris.

The keynote of the decision is, we think, struck in the opening remarks of the Lord Chancellor, in which he expresses his reluctance to suppose that certain propositions referred to in the argument ever were the law of England. Reluctance on the part of a judge to accept conclusions which may be out of harmony with the sentiment of the day is a frame of mind likely to produce bad law. It is peculiarly dangerous when the branch of law to be dealt with is one of great antiquity and but little affected by statute. The legal relations of husband and wife—or perhaps it would be more appropriate to say baron and feme—took shape at a time when what to modern ears sound 'quaint and absurd dicta' seemed perfectly natural and proper. To expect that those relations should be in all respects in accordance with the ideas prevalent at the end of the nineteenth century is surely unreasonable. Yet this is almost avowedly the point of view from which Lord Halsbury and Lord Esher approached the question submitted to them. Apart from direct authority, the general position of the wife at common law is such as to make it improbable that she should have the freedom to which she has been declared to be entitled. Compare the right claimed for the husband over her person with that which he undoubtedly possessed at common law over her property, and with the control which he exercised over her legal acts. Is it more outrageous that a husband should have the right to restrain his wife from deserting him without just cause than that he should be able to take the whole of her property and squander it on his pleasures, even on his mistresses? There would have been little ground for surprise if the authorities had accorded to him a much more extensive control over her person than they do.

We do not propose to comment at any length on the judgments of Lord Halsbury and Lord Esher. They were freely discussed at the time of their delivery, and a perusal of the revised reports will not be likely to modify the opinions then formed upon them. Both are highly rhetorical, filled with such phrases as 'absolute dominion,' 'abject slave,' 'imprisonment,' 'gaoler,' 'civilised country.' Both display an inability to state fairly the contention raised on Mr. Jackson's behalf. Lord Esher, for instance, says that it was contended that a husband 'may imprison his wife by way of punishment, and, if he thinks she is going to absent herself from him for any purpose, however innocent of moral offence, he may imprison her.' Both treat the authorities in the same offhand fashion. In re Cochrane, 8 Dowl. 630, is the only precedent specifically referred to, and the careful and weighty judgment of Mr. Justice Coleridge in that case is dismissed with scarcely more than a bare assertion that it is wrong. There is much inaccuracy in the general statements as to the effect of the earlier authorities. Thus the Lord Chancellor says that 'the authorities cited for the husband are all tainted with this sort of notion of the absolute dominion of the husband over the wife;' and Lord Esher says they 'make an English wife the slave, the abject slave of her husband.' We assert with confidence that not one single case was mentioned to which these descriptions can fairly be applied. Every authority prior to Regina v. Jackson either lays down or takes for granted that the husband has a dominion over his wife, but none, so far as we know, says anything of absolute dominion. On the contrary, their effect is to give him a limited power, a power which the Courts will control within reasonable bounds, and which may be lost altogether if abused. Take, for instance, the first matter referred to by the Lord Chancellor—Lord Hale's interpretation of 'castigatio' in the writ of supplicavit. Whatever the meaning of the word, it occurs in a document issued to protect the wife from excess on the part of her husband. Lord Hale, by the way, did not suggest that '"castigatio" may be taken to mean admonition merely.' It is clear from the context that it imports some exercise of force; and what Lord Hale said was that it meant only 'admonition and confinement to the house in case of her extravagance' (Lord Leigh's Case, 3 Keble 433). Again, the Lord Chancellor says that the only case which raised the question of law as to the right of custody in an abstract form is Cochrane's Case. What of Atwood v. Atwood, Prec. in Chan. 492; Gilbert 149, the reports of which disclose no qualifying circumstances? In truth, there is as much authority on the abstract question as can be expected in support of a proposition which has been frequently asserted and never denied or questioned.

It is a relief to turn to the judgment of Lord Justice Fry, of which but a brief summary had previously appeared. He does not, he tells us, agree with the Master of the Rolls in thinking 'that all our predecessors on the bench were deficient in good sense.' He sets himself to justify by reasoning from the authorities the conclusion at which the Court arrived. This reasoning we will proceed to examine.

The lord justice begins by dividing the question into two parts—the first as to the right to capture, the other as to the right to confine. For the first, he says there does not appear to him to be 'a rag of authority.' In saying this he has apparently overlooked Lord Mansfield's dictum in Rex v. Mead, 2 Ken. 279, that a husband 'has a right to seize' his wife 'wherever he finds her,' and Lord Eldon's observations on that case in St. John v. St. John, 11 Ves. 532, expressive of his doubt whether the Court of King's Bench had not gone too far in holding that the marital right to seize by force was surrendered by the execution of a separation deed.

Lord Justice Fry admits that the right to confine or imprison the wife until she renders conjugal rights (by which we suppose is here meant until she abandons the intention of deserting her home) is asserted in Cochrane's Case. But according to him no earlier authority was cited for it except a passage in Bacon's 'Abridgment' that 'the husband has power and dominion over the wife, and may keep her by force within the bounds of duty.' He considers this passage too vague to be satisfactory, and says that it is directly at variance with the decision in Rex v. Lister, 1 Str. 478. This is not quite correct. All that was decided in Rex v. Lister was that a husband was not entitled to seize and confine his wife—who was living separate from him under a deed of separation—in order, as he himself declared, to prevail with her to part with some of her separate maintenance. Such conduct could not be described as keeping the wife within the bounds of duty. No doubt, in giving the grounds for their judgment, the Court declared 'that where the wife will make an undue use of her liberty either by squandering away the husband's estate or going into lewd company, it is lawful for the husband, in order to preserve his honour and estate, to lay such a wife under a restraint. But where nothing of that appears he cannot justify the depriving her of her liberty; that there was no colour for what he did in this case, there being a separation by consent.' We think it is pressing these words beyond what was intended, to treat them as a deliberate and exhaustive enumeration of the cases justifying restraint, rather than as an illustration by examples of the kind and degree of misuse of liberty upon which the husband might act. However that may be, the words at the end of the passage quoted seem to indicate that the judges themselves recognised a third case—that of a wife withdrawing herself altogether from her husband's custody—but held that it was excluded on the facts before them by the separation deed. The right of custody which is so constantly asserted means nothing if it does not authorise restraint in such a case as that. Mr. Justice Coleridge's reasoning on this point is to our mind unanswerable.

(To be continued.)

THE TRANSFER OF LICENSES UPON CHANGE OF OCCUPANCY.

THE case of Regina v. Powell and others, Licensing Justices of the Hundred of Swansea, recently decided by the Court of Appeal and reported in our Notes of Cases for the current week, shows that the true construction of section 14 of the Intoxicating Liquor Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. IV. c. 61), is still open to controversy. In addition to providing for the substitution of new licensees for old in cases of death, sickness, and bankruptcy, and for the substitution of new premises for old in cases of fire or occupation for public works, and for other like contingencies, the section endeavours to protect the landlord in cases where an occupier quits possession of the premises without arranging for a transfer or neglects to apply for a renewal of his license at the general licensing sessions. In an ordinary case of this description the matter is simple. A new tenant is found who applies to petty sessions (under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 44) for a temporary license until the next special transfer sessions, and he then obtains under the section the transfer of the license until (elsewhere than in Middlesex and Surrey) October 10 next ensuing. If one proposed new tenant fails to obtain the transfer, there is nothing to prevent a second making the application, and so on until a tenant satisfactory to the justices is found (In re Todd, 47 Law J. Rep. M. C. 89), except in cases where a license has been forfeited or the licensee has become personally disqualified, when the application can only be made to the next special sessions (Regina v. The Justices of the West Riding, 57 Law J. Rep. M. C. 103; Stevens v. Green, 58 Law J. Rep. M. C. 167; the Licensing Act, 1874, s. 15). When, however, a tenant gives up possession at some date immediately preceding or following the general licensing meeting without applying for a renewal, or where a tenant whose renewal has been refused at such meeting immediately surrenders the premises, difficulties at once arise as to the construction of the section. In Simpkin v. The Justices of Birmingham, 41 Law J. Rep. M. C. 102, one of these was removed, and it still continues to be the law, in accordance with the decision given in that case, that no application can be made for the transfer of a license on the ground of the removal of a tenant unless the removal takes place while the license proposed to be transferred is still in existence. It was further laid down in In re Todd, 47 Law J. Rep. M. C. 89, and in White v. The Justices of Coquetdale, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 128, that the application must be made during the period for which the old license is in force. This view of the law, however, did not meet with the approval of the Court of Appeal, and in Regina v. The Justices of Liverpool, 52 Law J. Rep. M. C. 114, these cases were overruled, and it was held that the application could be made, although the period for which the license was in force had expired. Nor was this the only point decided in that case. The facts upon which it arose were that a licensed house was sublet to a person who, failing to obtain a transfer, remained in occupation of the house without a license until after the general annual meeting, but, in consequence of illness, did not apply for a renewal, and shortly afterwards left. The license having expired on October 10, a new tenant applied at the special sessions in January for the transfer of the license. The application was granted, and, upon a case stated, it was held, in addition to the finding above mentioned, that the under-tenant, though not holding a license, was a person entitled to apply at the annual meeting for a renewal, and, therefore, inasmuch as an occupier of the house about to quit possession had neglected to apply for a renewal, an application for a transfer could be made by a new tenant under 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 14.

The latter portion of the decision, by which it was laid down that an occupier, though not holding a license, was a person entitled to apply at the general annual meeting for a renewal of the license, had a very material effect upon the decision of the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Regina v. Powell and others, Licensing Justices of Swansea. In that case the tenant of a country public-house quitted possession of the house on September 2, without having applied for a renewal of the license at the general licensing meeting on August 30. A new tenant came in and on the 6th obtained a temporary license, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 44, s. 1, until September 27. On that day the adjourned general annual meeting, and also special transfer sessions were held, and at the latter he was granted, under 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, s. 14, a transfer of the license until October 10. At the transfer sessions in the January following he again applied under the same section for a transfer for the ensuing year, but the justices refused the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction, since he was no longer a 'new tenant' within the meaning of the Act. This decision was upheld by the Queen's Bench division, and more recently by the Court of Appeal. According to the decision of the higher Court, a 'new tenant' means a tenant who has not already held a license, other than a temporary license, in respect of the premises. As, therefore, the applicant in the case in question had held a license from September 27 to October 10 he was no longer in a position to apply under the section. Moreover, on September 27, the day on which the adjourned annual meeting was held, he was an occupier who, in accordance with the decision in Regina v. The Justices of Liverpool, could have applied for a renewal of the license. He himself, therefore, was the occupier who had neglected to apply for a renewal, and consequently was not a person entitled to relief under the section. As we observe in some of the text-books upon the subject that a postponement of the application is advised until after October 10, on the ground that otherwise a second application for a transfer for the ensuing year will be necessary, it is desirable that this recent decision should be carefully noted. The least evil resulting from its neglect will be the closing of the house for a year, while the owner will furthermore have to face, as best he may, all the perils and dangers which confront the applicant for a new license.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

The royal assent was given by commission to:—

Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill.
The Registration of Electors Acts Amendment Bill.

Bill read a third time and passed:—

Reformatory and Industrial Schools Children Bill.
Museums and Gymnasiums Bill.

Bills through committee:—

Judicature Acts Amendment Bill.

Second reading:—

Drainage and Improvement of Lands (Ireland) Bill.
Mail Ships Bill.

First reading:—

Purchase of Land and Congested Districts (Ireland) Bill, which had been passed in the House of Commons, was read a first time.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—

Purchase of Land (Ireland) Bill.
Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.
Russian Dutch Loan Bill.
Customs and Inland Revenue Bill.
Allotments Rating Exemption Bill.

Second reading:—

County Council (Elections) Bill.

New bills:—

To Alter the Date of Holding Elections of County Councillors and to Remove Doubts respecting the Holding of such Elections.

To Facilitate the Reinstatement of Evicted Tenants in Ireland.

To Amend the Post Office Acts and to make Provision for the Service of the Post Office.

Bills withdrawn:—

The Parks Regulation (Ireland) Bill.
The Fishery Board (Scotland) Bill.
The Private Bill Procedure (Scotland) Bill.
The Public Trustee (No. 2) Bill.
The Indian Councils Act (1861) Amendment (No. 2) Bill.
The Registration of Assurances (Ireland) Bill.
The Regimental Debts Consolidation Bill.
The Interpretation (Ireland) Bill.
The Summary Jurisdiction (Youthful Offenders) Bill.
The Archdeaconry of Cornwall Bill.
The Lichfield Cathedral Bill.
The Corn Sales Bill.
The Maintenance of Destitute Parents Bill.
The Church Building Acts (Compulsory Powers Repeal) Bill.
Fisheries Regulation (Scotland) Bill.
Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill.
Steam Boilers Bill.
Returning Officers' Expenses (Scotland) Bill.
County Councillors Disabilities Removal Bill.
Boilers Registration Bill.

Correspondence.

TITHE ACT, 1891.

SIR,—Some confusion appears to have existed in the minds of the learned framers of the rules under this Act as to the person on whom the 'occupier's liability notice,' prescribed by section 2, subsection 6 of the Act, ought to be served.

Forms 28 to 30 appended to the rules lead one to suppose that the notice should be served on the occupier of the lands and not on the tithe-owner, as the Act directs. It seems clear that these forms must be altered by substituting the name of the tithe-owner for that of the occupier as the person on whom there has been a failure to serve the notice in question.

I shall be obliged for information on this point from any of your readers who may in the near future have occasion to apply for a certificate in respect of the failure to serve such notice. W.

Norwich: June 11.

ILLEGIBLE WRITING.

SIR,—The circular issued by the Home Secretary requesting magistrates' clerks to record depositions in plainly legible writing, which you published in your number of the 13th inst. (p. 409), will be noticed with satisfaction by the whole legal profession. I do not know whether it would be considered impertinent if the Home Secretary or Lord Chancellor, or some other authority, should address a similar circular to the judges and masters and the leading counsel, of whom I believe I have met with two generations in the last forty years, and can testify that most of them have tortured solicitors and their clerks with illegible writing. If men in a high position cannot write legibly, they should employ a clerk or secretary to do their writing. A few days ago an articled clerk informed me that it is ungentlemanly to write a plain hand. I hope this will not be adopted as a maxim by the rising generation of solicitors. I understand the Queen's writing is not only plain but elegant. I think, whatever a man's rank may be, it would become him, unless disabled by infirmity, to write plainly, if only from Christian principles and motives of humanity to the inferior beings who have to puzzle their limited understandings with solving ambiguous and illegible handwriting.

Lothbury, E.C.: June 13. C.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

BILLS OF SALE ACT, 1882, SS. 8, 9, AND SCHEDULE—NAMES AND DESCRIPTION OF PARTIES.

AT the Brompton County Court, on June 11, before his Honour Judge Stonor, the case of Honey and another v. Maude, Edwards & Isaacs, Proprietors of the Union Deposit Bank (claimants), was tried. His Honour delivered judgment in this interpleader: The material parts of the bill of sale in issue in this case are as follows: 'This indenture, made August 22, 1889, between Katharine Maude (wife of Alwyne Maude), of, &c. (hereinafter styled "the said mortgagor"), of the one part, and the Union Deposit Bank, of 17 King William Street, Charing Cross, in the county of Middlesex, of which bank Henry Isaacs and John Edwards, both of the same place, money lenders, are the sole proprietors (and who are hereinafter styled "the said mortgagees"), of the other part, witnesseth that, in consideration of the sum of 300*l.* now owing by the mortgagor to the mortgagees, and the further sum of 30*l.* now paid to the said mortgagor by the said mortgagees, the receipt of which the said mortgagor hereby acknowledges, the said mortgagor doth hereby assign unto the said mortgagees the chattels specifically described in the schedule hereto annexed by way of security, &c.,' and the said mortgagor thereby covenants with the said mortgagees for the payment of the money secured and interest, and the payment of the rent of any premises on which the said chattels or any of them were or should be. An objection was taken on behalf of the execution creditors that the covenant for the payment of rent extending possibly to twenty or more different places was too wide, and rendered the bill of sale void; but no authority for this proposition was cited, and the case of Goldstrom v. Tallerman, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 22; L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 1, as far as it goes, is adverse to it, and I overruled the objection. A much greater difficulty, however, arose on this bill of sale from the introduction of the Union Deposit Bank as prima facie the party to it of the second part; but after much consideration I think that the words 'The Union Deposit Bank,' &c., ought to be regarded as only part of the description and occupation of the two persons who are afterwards described as money lenders and as sole proprietors of such bank, and that the words 'The Union Deposit Bank,' &c., are merely misplaced, and should have followed, and not preceded, the names of the two persons in question, and therefore, notwithstanding the procrustean rule of construction which has so often been applied to bills of sale, I think that the wide and more general rule of construction, 'ut res magis valeat quam pereat,' ought to prevail in the present case, and save this bill of sale from the hecatomb of such instruments, which has been sacrificed, during nine years to one of the worst drawn Acts of Parliament of modern times. The reference to the Union Bank of Deposit in the present deed is, in my humble opinion, only an additional description, or, at all events, an innocuous superfluity. The recent case of In re Heseltine before the Court of Appeal (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 357), which, I understand, is now the subject of further appeal to the House of Lords, and which was cited on behalf of the execution creditors, no doubt greatly resembles the present case, and, indeed, is practically the same so far as the introduction of a reference to a bank previously to the name of the proprietor of such bank in the description of the second party to the bill of sale is concerned, the terms employed being 'the Discount Bank of London, of 6 Duncannon Street, Charing Cross, in the county of Middlesex, of which said bank Lewis Simmons, of the same place, is the sole proprietor, of the other part.' But, in the last-mentioned bill of sale, the consideration is expressed to be paid by the bank, and the assignment and covenant are respectively made to and with the bank, and not by, to, and with Lewis Simmons, whilst in the present bill of sale the money is paid by, and the assignment and covenant are made to and with 'the said mortgagees,' who are the proprietors of the bank; and, supposing that the House of Lords should affirm the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Heseltine, I still rely on these distinctions between that case and the present in support of my present decision in favour of the claimants. It has not escaped me that, should it be held in the present case that the bank is the party of the second part to the present deed, and not the two persons who are proprietors of such bank, the deed would be altogether void even at common law, as, on the one hand, there is no evidence of the incorporation of the bank, nor, indeed, any assignment to it; whilst, on the other, the proprietors not being parties to the deed could scarcely take an assignment of chattels by an indenture to which they were not parties, although by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 5, they could no doubt take a conveyance of real estate under similar circumstances; but, as I have held that the bank is not a party to this deed, and that the two persons who are the proprietors of the bank are parties, it is not necessary for me further to consider these points. I therefore find for the claimant, with costs.—Cluer for the claimants; Longstaffe for the execution creditors.

BANKRUPTCY—PROOF—DEBT INCLUDING INTEREST.

At the Cheltenham County Court on June 12, before his Honour Judge Brynmor Jones, Mr. Taynton applied, on behalf of Mr. H. G. Margrett, for the admission of a proof for 31*l.* in In re J. W. Ford, which had been rejected by the receiver under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890.—It appeared that Mr. Margrett had lent the debtor the sum of 30*l.* for a month, on consideration of his paying 1*l.* as interest. He therefore took from him a promissory note for a month for 31*l.* At the expiration of one month the debtor could not pay the principal, but paid the 1*l.* interest, and agreed to continue to pay interest at the rate of 1*l.* per month, as long as the time of the bill was extended. At the time of the receiving order the debtor had paid Mr. Margrett 20*l.* as interest, and nothing whatever on the principal, and Mr. Margrett had entered a proof for the amount of the promissory note, 31*l.* The receiver had at first admitted the proof under the Act of 1883, but when the new Act came into operation he had reduced it. The principle of the alteration, he contended, was right under section 23 of the Act.—Mr. Taynton contended that the section did not act retrospectively, and, even if it did, it formed no ground for the rejection of the proof.—His Honour asked the receiver for an explanation.—The Receiver replied that when a person proved for a certain amount it was his duty to ascertain how the sum had been arrived at. He found in the present case that a certain sum had been lent at a certain rate per cent., and that the borrower had made certain payments. Under section 23 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1891, when a debt had been proved upon a debtor's estate, and such debt included interest, or any pecuniary consideration in lieu of interest, such interest and consideration (unless the other creditors had been paid in full) had to be calculated at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum. Mr. Margrett had been paid at a much higher rate, and therefore he had deducted this excessive interest already paid from the amount of the debt, allowing on it only 5 per cent.—Mr. Taynton contended that the account was settled month by month, and that the receiver had therefore no power to reopen a settled account.—The Receiver urged that in bankruptcy cases it was right to investigate accounts ab initio.—His Honour inclined to the view of Mr. Taynton.—The Receiver: I have rejected proof after proof on the same principle, and no objection has been taken.—His Honour observed that, as the point was an important one, he would take time to consider before giving his decision.

SOLICITOR'S CASE.

In the Queen's Bench Division, before Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Wills, on June 9, the case of In re a Solicitor and In the Matter of the Solicitors Act was heard. Mr. F. Hollams appeared for the Incorporated Law Society, and read the report of the statutory committee, from which it appeared that the solicitor, when acting for the complainants in a compromise, received 2,500*l.*, and retained 175*l.* and 15*l.* of it under the following circumstances: The money was paid in three notes, two for 1,000*l.* and one for 500*l.* Two of these notes, the 500*l.* note and one of 1,000*l.*, were paid over properly. As to the third, according to complainant's account (the account the report adopted as the correct one), the solicitor said: 'I want you to oblige me. I will take the other 1,000*l.* note and take my costs out of it—235*l.* (an agreed sum), 15*l.* for stamps—and I will give you two cheques—500*l.*, 250*l.*—the second of which you will please hold over for a couple of days.' The complainant demurred, but ultimately consented. This happened on October 8. The next day the 500*l.* cheque was paid, but the 250*l.* cheque was not paid, though it was presented at the bank on three different occasions—October 24 and November 5 and 6.—On November 18 the solicitor paid 75*l.* of the 250*l.*, but made no further payment. As to the 15*l.* for stamps, the report found that the solicitor admitted not having paid more than 3*l.* or 4*l.*, and that there was no evidence that he had spent over 15*s.* It also appeared that, pending the consideration by the committee, he tendered the amount due by him.—Sir Charles Russell (with him Mr. M'Intyre), for the solicitor, urged that, though there might have been irregularities on the part of the solicitor, the Court would not find him guilty of professional misconduct.—The Court held that, under the circumstances, the justice of the case would be met by making the solicitor pay all costs of the proceedings.

THE OUTLOOK FOR LAW STUDENTS.

THE following address was delivered by Mr. F. K. Munton to the members of the Law Students' Debating Society, at the Law Institution, London, on Tuesday, February 24, 1891:—

Mr. President and Gentlemen,—When I joined this society, some twenty-seven years ago, shortly before being admitted a solicitor, I regarded with natural concern the outlook for law students. From that time to the present in various capacities I have taken part by pen or speech in the discussion of the subject, and my interest, though from a different point of view, is as keen now as it was at the outset. It may be that my immediate interest is a little more keen in consequence of my having a son old enough to be a member, who is looking forward at no distant date to becoming a solicitor. Possibly I represent the only instance in this Society of two generations taking something like an active part in its business, and I am only sorry that more of the other old members do not find it convenient from time to time to maintain closer association, for I believe it would be very beneficial to the Society if such were the case. (Hear, hear.) Some of us occasionally seek new sensations. I have found one to-night. When your committee were good enough to ask me to come down to this meeting and deliver what they were pleased to call 'an address,' I, without much consideration, assented. Although I am not altogether unaccustomed either to address a public meeting or to take part in matters of this kind, I assure you that when I saw in print what I had promised to do it had a very different appearance to the task previously present to my mind, and, if any member of this society doubts the difference between making a promise to open up a discussion on a wide subject and its announcement in type, let him try it, and I think that it will rather astonish him. But the new sensation to which I refer is this: I never was able to learn anything by heart so as to repeat it; moreover, it seemed to me that in our society an address would come better in a chatty fashion than in a formal way, and under these circumstances I contented myself with making a few notes on half a sheet of foolscap paper for the purpose of refreshing my memory from time to time in the observations I might make; but, inasmuch as in the hurry of business I contrived at the last moment to lose or misplace the paper in question, I think I discovered a new sensation. (Laughter.) My remarks, therefore, will be truly chatty in character, though I hope they will not be less interesting to the members. I do not, however, think that I should have ventured to address you at all upon so important a subject as that which is down upon the paper but for the circumstance that I accidentally came across a book, the author of which I neither knew by repute nor otherwise, who, in writing upon 'Solicitors as Advocates, and Practical Suggestions,' gave the following paragraph in the preface: 'A knowledge of the theory of law is, of course, indispensable, but much else is wanted if a man is to succeed in his profession. Every articled clerk would do well to remember the words of a speaker at one of the annual provincial meetings of the chief Law Society. Referring to the president's address, he said: "In addition to proper legal education, he attached great importance to that kind of culture which gave a man an insight into the ways of mankind, which was as valuable to a young practitioner as an acquaintance with the technicalities of the law."' Now, it so happens that these observations were made by myself at one of the congresses of the Law Society. (Hear, hear.) They were made offhand, and I certainly never expected to see them in print, and much less did I expect to see the evident importance given to them by an author who was devoting his attention entirely to advising the young members of the profession. Let me, however, remark that if I had not made that statement ten or a dozen years ago I certainly should have made it at an early stage of my observations to-night, because almost everything that I may venture to say, likely to interest you, will be more or less based upon the proposition which I then ventured to lay down, and which got into print as I have stated. To approach the subject of the outlook for law students, we must see what is the present state of the practice of the law, whether it is falling or increasing, and how stand the chances, having regard to the existing number of members and those daily coming into the profession, of earning a living by means of it. I daresay it is known to almost everybody here that the solicitor, as we see him, is of comparatively modern growth. Very few, indeed, of the oldest firms in London date back more than a century, and certainly the importance of any solicitor at that time, whether he ultimately founded a firm or not, was very little, compared to the position which he occupies at the present day. If we read the dramatists of the eighteenth century we shall see the view that was then taken of the solicitor, but, as I have to apply myself to the outlook, there is little time to go into the past. I will content myself with merely quoting—what I daresay has been heard by many in this room—the remark of Dr. Johnson, who said: 'I should be sorry to speak ill of any person in his absence, but I believe the gentleman in question is an attorney.' It represented pretty fairly the public view in those times, nor was it altogether unnatural, for at that period the solicitor in the general way was entirely uneducated. He passed no examinations whatever. He got into the profession by merely serving his time, and nine out of ten solicitors of a century since were persons who were almost utterly ignorant of the general law of the land, relying in that respect upon the assistance of the bar, who at that time held a very different relative position. The bar and the solicitors together now form a joint honourable profession, and let us hope, since the Law Society has inaugurated a system (which I had the honour to initiate in a paper I read on the subject), by which scarcely anything affecting the bar is attempted without consultation, that such course of action will be strengthened and improved as we go on. Not till 1844, or thereabouts, was there any examination for solicitors. It is said that just one question or so was asked, as a matter of form, before a man was admitted, and probably many of you have heard the story, though some of our young friends have not, of an old judge and a young man who was about to become a solicitor. The old judge asked the young man how he would advise a person to act under certain complicated circumstances he named. The candidate in question, not having the remotest idea about it, after a little consideration, put on a grave face, and said: 'My lord, I think, in a case like that, the first thing I should do would be to draw 10*l.* on account of costs.' Said the old judge to the master: 'He will do, pass him,' and he passed accordingly. (Laughter.) Let us now look to the statistics, and consider the probabilities of solicitors as a whole being able to earn anything like a comfortable subsistence by means of the law. I find that the proportion of the solicitors admitted thirty years ago was about the same as it is now—that is to say, in England there is one solicitor to about 2,500 of the population. The population has increased since that time something like 50 per cent., and the number of solicitors has increased at about the same rate. This would be all very well if the business kept pace with the increased number of inhabitants, but those who have had an opportunity of studying the matter know that in the High Court during the last few years there has relatively been a very appreciable decrease of work, and, though of course in the manifold affairs of this country, and having regard to its increasing importance among nations, there must always be a very large amount of business for men of our class to perform, it is a fact that during the last few years there has been the relative decrease just adverted to. I do not know whether it has occurred to many of the younger members of this society to examine into the matter, but it is a fact that if all the cases actually tried in the Courts from one year's end to the other were distributed equally among the solicitors, there would not be half a case apiece; moreover, if all the members of the bar practised there would not be one trial apiece for them! It is true, as regards the bar, that a large number of gentlemen go there without any idea of practising, and it is very difficult to ascertain the precise proportion of men ready to take cases if offered. With regard to the business of a solicitor, everyone familiar with the work of the profession knows that at least three-fourths of it has nothing whatever to do with litigation. I mean that if the business of the solicitors of England and Wales were taken from end to end such would be about the average of non-litigious work. The bulk of the business is that of advisers and diplomatists. Now I ask how many men are there who come into our branch of the legal profession and study during the statutory period, and perhaps come out well at the end, who thoroughly appreciate that the chief duty they will have to perform lies in attending to such matters as do not necessarily require an acute knowledge of the technicalities of the law. I do not think that point is sufficiently considered by those who enter the profession. The subject was to some extent recognised by a gentleman who died a short time ago and left a legacy to provide a prize for the candidate best versed in the direction to which I have referred, but he did not, I think, go far enough. I do not underestimate the need of the legal and other examinations; on the contrary, I hope that the high standard will be continued. As to honours, I think that it is a very excellent thing to try for them, and I speak gently upon this because I was fortunate enough to get a place myself in my day, though I certainly never derived a single client thereby. So far as it goes, it is a pleasure to dwell upon, and I counsel every man going up for his examination to endeavour to get a prize, for the extra knowledge thereby acquired, even if he be unsuccessful, is very valuable. I have, however, known men who have come straight from the test brimming over with honours, literally packed with law, but as to whom it has been found almost impossible to unpack a single bit to meet some commonplace emergency. It is a great fallacy to suppose that because you can pass your examination well, or even get honours, that you are likely to get work or be able to perform it when you do get it. Now there are several positions in which men find themselves on coming into our profession. There are those who have what I may call a legal family pedigree, others have influential commercial and business relations, and some have plenty of money. The man with the family business already made is not a person one need particularly legislate for, though he has to keep his eyes open, but mere possession of good business connections do not make it all certain that a solicitor will succeed if he is simply learned in law. I look upon tact as the most important qualification, and this can only be acquired by diligent observation and the study of your fellow-man. I remember an occurrence some twenty years ago which will illustrate in a small way what I want to impress upon you when I say how little mere legal skill or abstract knowledge of the law will assist, compared to some knowledge of mankind—a position that might occur to any of you at any time. As all the parties are dead, I am not disclosing secrets, but about the period I name I was engaged in a case of some importance, involving a considerable sum of money, which was set down for trial and in the list to be heard on a certain day. The afternoon before, at the very last moment, my client was in great distress of mind because he discovered that the names of third persons would have to be published to their detriment, and he resolved that under any circumstances he must drop from the fight before incurring heavy further expense, and, in the emergency, the animosity being intense, there was apparently only one course—viz. to withdraw the record, which he instructed me to do, and pay the adversary's costs. Much disheartened, of course, I drove off to achieve the purpose. The official closing hour was at hand, and just as I arrived at the door I ran against my opponent, who struck me as looking remarkably gloomy, and it passed through my mind, though I was close run for time, that I had better just see if he would say anything to me before I showed my hand. I am not going to speak too much about myself, but I studied that man's face—he, too, has long since passed away—and assumed as gay an air as possible, and this attitude achieved startling results. As a fact, my nonchalance induced him to open a conversation, saying: 'I am glad to meet you, and'—well, to finish that story, if I had made a mess of it I might have withdrawn the record, whereas that afternoon ended by our mutually signing an order to stay on payment by his client to mine of half the debt and the whole of the costs. All this was largely due to being careful not to show alarm at a critical moment. There are many others, no doubt, who might have done the same, and I only give it as an example. (Cheers.) I want to urge that, however much you may know of law, unless you school yourself to meet positions such as I have referred to, your education as a solicitor is deficient. Now what is it that busy firms want every day in business, and which it is so difficult to get? If one advertises for an admitted clerk, the profession is so overstocked that one has innumerable answers, the remuneration asked being humiliatingly small, indicating clearly that the demand does not equal the supply; but with the answers it is no easy thing to find a candidate who thoroughly appreciates that something more is wanted of him than abstract law. I honestly believe that there are at least a hundred firms in London who have openings ready for clerks at good salaries if they could find more men who apply their minds to acquiring the qualities to which I have alluded. They cannot be attained at once, but from beginning to end such qualifications should be part of a young man's study. When a brother-solicitor asks me whether I know of any good all-round man, he means a man who will rise to the situation and meet an emergency. Perhaps I may venture to say that I am entitled to speak a little on this subject, having had a long and somewhat varied experience. In my opinion there are many things essential to a young man getting on in our profession. In the first place it is necessary to be very polite. This may seem a needless suggestion, but I declare that I have met men in the legal profession who, if they are giving a mere extension of time to which one is perfectly entitled, assume an air about it as though they were conferring a great favour. Firmness and politeness are not at all inconsistent. Some people, however, are painfully polite. There is a story of a very old solicitor, now dead, a regular money-lender, habitually remarkable for his politeness. He was so smooth that even when he refused a loan the person went away under some sense of gratitude. We all know that there are men who can refuse a favour more pleasantly than others grant one. This unduly polite solicitor on an occasion, when a young man went there, very hard up, for a loan, said: 'Well, my friend, how much do you want?' '100*l.*,' said he. 'Certainly,' said the solicitor, 'but I shall want a little security.' The young man, who thought he was getting on very nicely, said: 'Well, to say the truth, the only security I can really offer is myself.' The old solicitor said: 'Oh! that will do. Come along,' and, taking him up a passage to an open iron door, said: 'Please go in there, that is where I keep my securities.' (Laughter.) But to be serious, politeness in the transaction of business is very important, especially to young men. The next essential is the cultivation of a business memory—not automatic repetition, but a system whereby you can recall the salient features of a matter throughout its progress. Then many young men do not sufficiently acquire the art of listening. It is a thorough art to listen properly, and I believe that in the conduct of business careful listening to what your adversary says, in order that you may thoroughly grapple the point, is a thing often disregarded. I am not pointing at anybody in particular, but there are some people who are so full of what they are going to state themselves that they do not apply their minds at all sufficiently to what their adversary says. I desire to impress upon law students that to learn to listen is almost as important as learning to speak. It is supposed by many that after they have studied the law they are fit to be advisers and diplomatists without further ado. Before you can become a useful legal adviser, you must throw yourself into at least one or more other pursuits. You want to mix with the world, and get a practical knowledge of men and manners, for a successful solicitor and a man of the world are one and the same thing. (Hear, hear.) I must not occupy the time by telling more stories, though the remark I have just made reminds me of something worth relating. Some years ago I put an advertisement in the principal journals, and, wishing to draw attention to my personal views, I stated that only those who had some qualification to be called 'men of the world' need respond. Would you believe that I had a letter of four or five pages from one candidate, seemingly an educated man, in which he said he had been to America, India, the colonies, and a number of other places, adding, 'so I hope that I have established my claim to being something of a man of the world.' (Laughter.) To return for a moment to statistics and the chances in the future, we must remember that in this country any man can become a solicitor who goes through the needful process, and opens an office, and puts on a door-plate, the latter often proportionately large to the smallness of the business. This sort of thing cannot be done on the other side of the Channel. There the number of solicitors is limited. Every district has its allotted number, and, although you may go through your articles, you must wait till somebody dies, or in some way or another depend upon the shoes of another person. In France there is a large class of persons called 'hommes d'affaires' who perform a substantial share of the business which we as solicitors perform. We are in fact the 'hommes d'affaires' here. The men in France who devote themselves to that particular office are often first-rate diplomatists, but know very little law. I do not say that their duties are precisely like some of those which we perform. Such advisers, however designated, must always be in demand, for in this world of ours it is impossible for those who are engaged in anything like a large way to personally manage many matters connected with their affairs, and they must have a 'man of business' to attend to them. That 'man of business' in this country is a solicitor, and the 'business' which so largely falls upon the shoulders of the solicitor requires many of the qualities I have named to perform it satisfactorily, quite irrespective of the needful knowledge of law. I do not myself see how it is possible for all those who are daily admitted to our profession to earn anything like a substantial subsistence therefrom, and I have come to the conclusion, and I always say it whenever I get the opportunity, that the time has gone past in this country for sending men into the ranks of solicitors merely because it is an honourable calling. With regard to the bar, men intending to practise as advocates mostly show an aptitude for the business they are going to undertake, whereas a man is often articled to a solicitor without having any aptitude whatever for acting as an adviser. Of course the position is less serious for a young man who has a business already made for him, and who has only to hang up his hat in the office to start work, but even then he must nowadays, as I have said before, possess some practical ability to keep his inheritance going. Those of us who remain in the profession will, I think, see litigation decrease more and more. Few people like litigation. I suppose we shall never have a complete code in this country, but the decisions of the judges during the present generation have gone far to supply a code which in a measure tends to decrease contentious work. I believe, for example, that there have been fewer actions with regard to bills of exchange since the law on that subject has been codified. To my mind, however, the cardinal cause of decrease of litigation is the delay and uncertainty in the trial of actions. The ill-judged parsimony of the Treasury on the one hand, resulting in an insufficient staff to try cases, and the extraordinary and remarkable want of organisation on the other, produce deplorable delay and uncertainty. Though, thanks to the Law Society and the Bar Committee, some useful rules are now in operation to soften down things, men are ready to settle their disputes on almost any terms rather than have to hang about from week to week and month to month in the Courts of law waiting for a hearing. It may be said by some that we are going to improve all these things. I have a very strong impression that the present system will last as long as I shall remain in the legal profession, and probably a great deal longer. There are too many conflicting interests in the way. Those who have any commercial business will support me when I say this, that every effort is made to avoid going into Court at all, not that people want arbitration per se—indeed, many dislike it—but it is choice of evils. And now to another matter. Litigation, as far as solicitors are concerned, is a very unprofitable business. There is a great deal of worry in it, and we all know that many old sources of profit are taken away. It is a question which I have not come here to discuss, but I say that litigation per se is not that class of business from which we should get on very satisfactorily. There is a tendency on the part of the public and the Legislature to cut down all profit in connection with the law, and I believe that, although we have got a conveyancing scale which fairly pays a solicitor for the responsibility which he undertakes, even that will be assailed before many years are over. We have to think of all these things in looking at the prospects of the legal profession. The business upon which solicitors will have to rely in the future is the business demanding brains, and brains will always be paid for more or less according to their value. The business of diplomatists, which is the largest business of solicitors, will get paid for according to what it is worth. You must look at the class of work which will be reduced, and the character of business which will remain. I say that, having regard to the class upon which solicitors will hereafter largely have to depend, it is more than ever important to cultivate the qualities to which I have referred. I served my articles some thirty years ago in a large and well-known office in London, to the much respected senior partner, long since deceased. He never pretended that he had gone minutely into the technicalities of the law, but he was a splendid organiser, and could control everything and almost everybody, and carry on a successful business far better than those who were brimful of abstract legal qualifications. He was one of the best tacticians I ever came across, and, if it were possible to get round his adversary at all, he was the man to do it. I took some hints from him, and in the earlier part of my career I used to reflect on the mode in which the gentleman referred to managed his fellow-men. There is one thing about our profession which is a matter of great satisfaction, and that is the high tone which it has attained of recent years. At one time, as I said in an earlier stage of my observations, a solicitor was nobody at all; now he stands side by side with the bar—in fact, he is so much mixed up with the bar by family and other ties that it is quite ridiculous for anyone to suppose that there is any distinction between the two branches, except that the one is an advocate and the other is the man of business, and, although I do not want to trench upon another subject to-night, I wish to say that I hope it will long continue so. (Hear, hear.) I am opposed to the amalgamation of the two branches of the profession, and think that we should remain as we are. All I want to observe upon that point is, that the bar are trammelled by some old and antiquated rules which work unfavourably, especially in the case of juniors. I am bound to say that I do not see a very encouraging prospect for students who are going to the bar unless they are exceptionally eloquent, or have professional connections who can be of value to them. I think that the chances are certainly less than they have been for a long time past, but I believe that if there was a better arrangement between the solicitor branch and the bar, by which they could more conveniently communicate with each other in matters of business, there would be work brought to the bar which does not now get there at all. I should be glad to see some system by which the barrister and the solicitor could better carry on their business side by side, so to speak, removing the present artificial line of demarcation, which only gets broken down by some of us who happen to have outside opportunities of becoming more natural to each other. This, however, is a matter for our barrister friends to deal with. We have members of the society who are already attaining recognised positions at the bar, and who at some time or other will perhaps address us from their point of view. There is only one other matter upon which I need detain you. It is most important for the law student that he should be a member of a debating society. (Hear, hear.) It is a strange thing that in this country there is such a very small number out of millions of men who in an emergency can get up and defend themselves, much less defend anyone else. It is not part of our school education to teach men to speak; I wish it were. On the other side of the Channel one sees even an artisan conduct a little case before the judge with marked ability, and he evidently also cultivates the art of listening. I wish our boys were taught much earlier the practice of debate; anyway, every law student should certainly attend a discussion society. I myself derived very great advantage from being a member of this society. Many of my early friends here are occupying high places at the present time, heads of important London firms of solicitors or on the bench. No doubt there are some in this room like those to whom I refer, who do not know it now, but who may occupy equally high positions hereafter. I say this, not with a view of complimenting anybody in particular, but to show that it is an advantage to be a member of the Law Students' Debating Society. One not only acquires the art of speaking, but makes acquaintances in the legal profession. I believe, so far as solicitors are concerned, that law and tact and everything else is of minor importance on certain occasions compared to being well acquainted with the other side, and knowing whether he is an honourable opponent or otherwise. To conclude, let me say that I feel that very much greater care will have to be shown in the future as to the tuition and culture of an articled clerk, and the course which the law student should take, if he hopes to attain anything like a good position. The legal profession has been brought to a high tone, the state in which it is now can hardly be excelled, and it is desirable that every man should do his best to keep it up. In carrying on your business have your own way if you can get it, proceed fairly, always maintaining a lofty standard, and, even if your adversary is in the wrong, do not be in too much of a hurry to impress upon him that you think so. I am pleased to have had an opportunity of coming here to-night, it seems to bring me back to the very early days when I was a really active member. I hope that as long as I am in the legal profession I shall find occasion to come before you now and again, and I can only remark that if you are good enough to listen to anything I say with the attention you have given to-night I shall be amply rewarded. (Amidst loud and continued applause Mr. Munton resumed his seat.)

OBITUARY.

SIR A. A. DORION, whose death took place in the midst of the last illness of Sir John Macdonald, was a man of the highest eminence in Canada, and in some respects his reputation was unique. Born seventy-three years ago at Ste. Anne de la Pérade, in 1842 he entered upon a most brilliant career in the legal profession, in the course of which he was elected several times Bâtonnier of the bar in the Montreal district for the whole province. With politics in the blood (his father, grandfather, brother, and nephew have all been legislators of more or less note), Antoine Aimé Dorion had a seat in the old Canadian Parliament from 1854 till confederation in 1867, with the exception of one year. He had been in public life only four years when, in conjunction with the famous George Brown as leader of the Upper Canada wing of the party, he found himself at the head of a Ministry which succeeded that of Sir John Macdonald and Sir George Cartier. In 1863 and 1864 he was again joint leader of his party in power, this time with the Hon. Sandfield Macdonald as Premier. During Sir John's first administration at Ottawa Dorion led the French-Canadian Liberals in opposition, and he became Minister of Justice for the Dominion on Mr. Mackenzie's advent to office in 1873. In the following year, however, he accepted nomination as Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, and has held that office ever since with great credit to himself and to the colonial bench. His political career had been marked by a rare degree of honesty and uprightness, and as a judge he united these qualities with such a keen insight, such unlimited care and consideration, and such a passion for impartiality, that his decisions have been almost looked upon as oracles. Sir Aimé acted as Administrator of the Province of Quebec for a time in 1876 during the illness of Lieutenant-Governor Caron, and his knighthood was conferred in the following year.

MR. CHARLES ANDREWS, Q.C., believed to be the oldest member of the Irish bar, died on Monday, June 15, at his residence in Hatch Street, Dublin. He was generally respected, and for many years was in good practice. He was called in 1832. By his death the Chief Crown Prosecutorship of co. Sligo becomes vacant.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, June 22.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Tuesday, June 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Wednesday, June 24.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Thursday, June 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Friday, June 26.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Saturday, June 27.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

BUSINESS OF THE COURTS.—There were no motions in the Court presided over by Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Wills on Tuesday, June 16; there were only two cases put in the paper, and both of them were disposed of before noon. Their lordships then sent for a case from the other Divisional Court, in which only three were entered, and one case (a County Court appeal) was sent, in which, however, it was found that no appeal lay. The other Divisional Court also rose early. It will be seen that, in consequence chiefly of the operation of Mr. Finlay's Act, which has sent all motions for new trials to the Court of Appeal (and so prevented a large proportion of them), the business of the Divisional Courts is now comparatively small, and the services of two more judges would be available for the trial of causes if only there were Courts for them to sit in, which there are not.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JUNE 22 TO JUNE 27.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	June 22	June 23	June 24	June 25	June 26	June 27
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	Northwich	—	—	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	—	—	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Burton	Burton	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Christchurch	Bournemouth	Wimborne	—	—
58	Judge Edge	Christchurch	Okehampton	—	—	—	—

House of Lords Register.

Coram THE EARL OF SELBORNE, LORD WATSON, LORD BRAMWELL, and LORD MORRIS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 11.

M'Inroy and others v. Duke of Athole (servitude—right of way—prescription—possession—interruption of possession within prescriptive period. Appeal from Second Division of the Court of Sessions, Scotland).

FRIDAY, JUNE 12.

M'Inroy and others v. Duke of Athole.—Stand over.

MONDAY, JUNE 15.

M'Cowan v. Baine & Johnston (The Niobe) (marine insurance policy—collision—liability. Appeal from the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland, reported 'Court of Session Cases,' 4th series, vol. xvii., p. 1,016).—Cur. adv. vult.

TUESDAY, JUNE 16.

Whyte (pauper) v. Northern Heritable Securities Investments Company (bankruptcy—Bankruptcy and Real Securities (Scotland) Act, 1857—sequestration—close of sequestration—subsequently ingathered estate—competency of appeal. Appeal from the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland, reported 16 Rett. 1,033).—Dismissed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 11.

F. E. T. Fowler (judgment creditor) v. J. Bowles (judgment debtor) (Sarah Bowles, claimant) (appeal of claimant from order of Mathew, J., and Day, J., dated April 8, affirming judge's order dated December 16, 1890, as to costs of interpleader issue).—Dismissed.

Gough v. Mayor, &c. of Liverpool (appeal of the Mayor, &c. of Liverpool from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 24, on special case stated by arbitrator).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 12.

Regina v. Powell and others, Licensing Justices of the Hundred of Swansea (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of D. Roberts from order of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., dated April 21, discharging rule nisi for mandamus to justices to hear application for transfer of license).—Dismissed.

Wolfe v. Roberts and another (appeal of defendants from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Charles, J., dated May 14, affirming order giving judgment for plaintiff under Order XIV.).—Allowed.

Patent Stopper Bow and Stamp Company (Lim.) v. Taylor (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendant from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated May 8, affirming refusal of judge to grant prohibition in County Court action).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 13.

No sitting.

MONDAY, JUNE 15.

Regina v. Leresche and another (Justices of Lancashire) (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of J. Price from refusal of ex parte application, on May 14, by Day, J., and Lawrance, J.; on application to Court of Appeal order nisi granted to justices to state case as to maintenance order).—Cur. adv. vult.

Hind v. Raikes and others (appeal of plaintiff in person from order of Mathew, J., and Williams, J., dated April 15, staying action as vexatious).—Dismissed.

Murray v. Warren (appeal of defendant Warren in person from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated May 14, as to what property included in said order).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 16.

Pelton Bros. v. Harrison (appeal of plaintiff from order of Denman, J., and Wright, J., dated May 27, affirming discharge of order for receiver of defendant's share of W. B. Little's estate).—Cur. adv. vult.

In re Sydney Morse, a Solicitor, ex parte Latimer, Clark & Co. (appeal of S. James and Electric Lighting Company from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Day, J., dated May 13, disallowing copies of shorthand notes of proceedings before arbitrator).—Dismissed.

Nobel Bros. Petroleum Production Company v. R. Stewart & Co. (appeal of plaintiffs from Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated June 5, refusing order for production of documents at examination of witnesses and trial of action).—Dismissed.

Smith v. Dawber (appeal of defendants from order of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated June 5, affirming refusal of judge in chambers to transfer action to Chancery Division).—Varied by consent.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 17.

Parsons v. Tomlinson (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., with special jury at Liverpool).—Dismissed.

Woollacott v. Pilkington (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated March 18, at trial without a jury at Liverpool).—Dismissed.

Richards v. Stogdon (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated March 20, at trial before Williams, J., with special jury at Cardiff).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

THURSDAY, JUNE 11.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

Low v. Bouverie (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., dated February 11; heard May 2).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

In re G. J. Hunter, dec. Hunter v. Hunter (construction) (appeal of defendant J. B. Batchelor from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 24; heard June 10).—Order varied.

Thomas v. Christmas (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 11).—Order varied.

FRIDAY, JUNE 12.

Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Company (Lim.) v. Feilden (appeal of defendant from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 11, and motion of M. J. Feilden for leave to appeal from order dated May 7, 1889).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 13.

Ward v. Royal Exchange Shipping Company (Lim.) (appeal of Messrs. Lancaster, Spier & Co. from order of Chitty, J., dated April 18).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, JUNE 15.

R. S. Hall v. A. M. Hall and another (application for new trial dismissed April 23—argued on May 13, as to petitioner's costs of appeal being paid out of fund in Court as security for wife's costs; Cur. adv. vult. May 13).—Application refused.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

In re Burfield, dec. Dean v. Burfield (appeal of defendants from order of North, J., dated April 8).—Appeal dismissed.

In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts (appeal of Lord Inchiquin from order of North, J., dated April 24).—Appeal dismissed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 16.

Lethbridge and another v. Harris and another (appeal of defendants from judgment of Mathew, J., dated February 2, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 17.

In re Bence, dec. Smith v. Bence (construction) (appeal of defendant J. F. Bence from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 6; heard June 9).—Dismissed.

GRAY'S INN.—The benchers of Gray's Inn have awarded to Mr. Horace West Household the Bacon Scholarship of 45*l.* per annum, tenable for two years; to Mr. Thomas Jones Smyth the Holt Scholarship of 40*l.* per annum, tenable for two years; to Mr. Thomas Bailey Clegg the Lee Prize of 25*l.*, and a second prize of ten guineas to Mr. William Muir. A studentship in jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas for one year has been awarded by the Council of Legal Education to Mr. John Bruce Caldwell Stephen, a student of Gray's Inn.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. JOSEPH PEARCE, of 39 Essex Street, Strand, W.C., has been appointed by the Chief Justice of Western Australia a Commissioner for taking Affidavits to be used in the Supreme Court of Western Australia, and for taking Acknowledgments of Deeds executed by Married Women in the United Kingdom. Mr. Pearce was admitted in 1881.

Mr. William Frederick Taylor (of the firm of Barclay & Taylor), of Macclesfield, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Taylor was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Frederick Gordon Tweed, of Gainsborough, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Tweed was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Henry Albert Edward Plant (of the firm of Plant, Abbott & Plant), of Preston, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Plant was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Charles Henry Owen, of Rochdale, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Owen was admitted in 1867.

Mr. George Samuel Pearce, of Bath, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Pearce was admitted in 1883.

JUDICATURE ACTS AMENDMENT.—The House of Lords Standing Committee on Tuesday considered the Judicature Acts Amendment Bill, Lord Herschell presiding. On the motion of the Lord Chancellor, clause 1 was amended so as to provide that every ex-Lord Chancellor shall be an ex-officio judge of the Court of Appeal, but shall not be required to act as such unless requested to do so by the Lord Chancellor. Clause 3 was amended with the object of enabling the House of Lords in Admiralty appeals to call in the aid of qualified assessors. A new clause was inserted to remove the doubts which have arisen with respect to the position of the High Court in England and appeals therefrom in cases of prize. The bill was ordered to be reported as amended.

BIRTHS.

On May 22, at Landour, in the Himalayas, North-West Provinces, India, the wife of T. Lewis Ingram, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On June 9, at Ashton Lodge, Portswood, near Southampton, the wife of R. B. Linthorne (née Gibbon), Solicitor, Southampton, of a daughter.

On June 11, at Fairford, Gloucestershire, the wife of Thomas De Lisle Hardy, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On June 12, at 16 Denning Road, Hampstead, the wife of Robert Furse M'Millan, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On June 13, at 4 Queen's Place, Chapel Allerton, Leeds, the wife of Thomas Piercy, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On June 14, at Biggleswade, Beds., the wife of Henry Chandler Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On June 10, at St. Silas', Liverpool, Marshall Bendall, son of G. M. Keilor, Esq., The Elms, Wood Green, London, to Alice Ada, younger daughter of the late George Clegg, Solicitor, Oldham.

On June 11, at the Parish Church of St. Rumbold-Whyke, Chichester, Arthur Davis Jones, of Highbury, N., to Florence, second daughter of Oliver Lloyd, of Rumbolds-Whyke, Sussex, Solicitor.

DEATHS.

On June 9, at Buxton, of pulmonary congestion, Sarah, wife of Thomas Ewing Winslow, Esq., Q.C., of Crake Hall, Wimbledon Common, and daughter of the late Rev. Henry Walker, of Great Bromley Hall, Essex, aged 66 years.

On June 10, at Hatfield, near Doncaster, Ellen, wife of the late William Johnson Fox, Solicitor, in her 79th year.

On June 12, somewhat suddenly, at the residence of her brother, John Willim Hall, Solicitor, Bilston, Jane Hall, aged 60 years, youngest child of the late John Hall, Solicitor, Newbury.

On June 13, at Lindfield House, Lindfield, Hayward's Heath, Henry Williams, Barrister-at-Law, aged 88 years.

On June 13, at his residence, 14 Devonshire Place, Claughton, Birkenhead, Richard Duke, Solicitor, in the 80th year of his age.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE judges of the Court of Appeal are making a determined and fairly successful attempt to dispose of the long list of final appeals from the Queen's Bench Division. Both branches of the Court have been engaged upon them throughout the week, the even numbers in the printed list being taken in Court I., while the odd numbers have been heard in Court II. In the meantime Queen's Bench interlocutory appeals have been postponed till further notice, and it is announced that Admiralty appeals with assessors will not be taken till Tuesday, July 14, when they will be heard in Court I.

IT was quite time that the attention of the Government should have been called to the insufficient number of Courts at the Royal Courts of Justice. Seeing that Mr. Justice Williams has for some time past been hearing Chancery actions in a room which is the merest apology for a Court, and that Mr. Justice Wright has been banished from the building altogether and has lately had to sit at the Old Hall, Lincoln's Inn, it is not surprising that Mr. Darling, Q.C., M.P., should last week have put a question on the subject to the First Lord of the Treasury. Mr. W. H. Smith admitted that the existing number of Courts was at times insufficient, and stated that the subject would be brought to the attention of the First Commissioner of Works, pointing out at the same time that, whenever any of the judges sat at the Guildhall under the Act of this session, a certain amount of relief would be experienced at the Royal Courts. Mr. Darling, who was apparently dissatisfied with Mr. Smith's reply, proceeded, with characteristic humour, to inquire whether, if it was not intended to add to the accommodation at the Law Courts, the Government would consider the expediency of allowing the judges to revert to the ancient practice of sitting in the open air for the transaction of business. No answer was given to this query, but it is to be hoped that something will soon be done to remove what is felt to be a serious inconvenience, and one by no means calculated to add dignity to the administration of justice.

ON Wednesday last the Inner Temple Hall was the scene of revels performed by a company of persons belonging to or connected with the bar. The quaint musical combats between the votaries of wine and tobacco, attired in appropriate costumes, the realistic sword and dagger fights and the old-time minuets and morris dances which followed, were all entertaining and productive of considerable applause. But perhaps the most amusing thing in connection with the performance was the fact that all the money which had been realised by the sale of tickets, and which was to have been devoted to a charity, had to be returned at the doors, in consequence of the provisions of an Act of Parliament having been overlooked. The license of the Lord Chamberlain had been duly obtained, in compliance with the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, but it seems not to have been present to the mind of the committee (who may be presumed to have had the best legal advice) that they were subject to the jurisdiction of the London County Council by reason of the Act of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 32, which prohibits (under penalty) any person having or keeping open any house, room, or other place of public resort within the metropolis for the public performance of stage plays, or for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, without the certificate of the Metropolitan Board, whose powers are now vested in the London County Council. It seems clear that this Act applies, as it is expressly extended, to the metropolis as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and by section 250 of the last-mentioned Act the metropolis is to be deemed to include the places mentioned in Schedule C, of which the Inner Temple is one. Fortunately, the mistake was discovered in time, and we have been spared the shock of proceedings against the Lord Chancellor and benchers of the Inner Temple for an infringement of the law.

THE following is the professional card of a solicitor who has recently set up in practice in a district of Lancashire:—

To Tradesmen, Shopkeepers, and others.
Have you any bad debts? Does anyone owe you any money?
If so, apply at once to
Mr. ——— ———, Solicitor.
(Agent to the Scottish Union and National Insurance Company.)
Address ———.
Mr. ——— will get the debts in for you without delay.
TERMS:—Sixpence in the £ commission, and out of pocket expenses charged.
Moneys received paid over weekly. No delay in rendering accounts.
Everything done on business principles.

Is this in accordance with professional etiquette? Perhaps some of our readers will enlighten us.

THERE is, it appears, to be yet another Bills of Sale Act. When will there be an end to the legislation on the mortgage of chattels? In the House of Lords, on Tuesday, a little bill of one section was read a second time, on the motion of Lord Herschell, to exempt a certain class of goods from the operation of the Acts of 1878 and 1882. The enacting part of the bill is in the following terms: '1. Section 1 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1890, shall be amended so as to read as follows: An instrument charging or creating any security on or declaring a trust of imported goods given or executed at any time prior to their deposit in a warehouse, factory, or store, or to their being re-shipped for export, or delivered to a purchaser not being the person giving or executing such instrument, shall not be deemed a bill of sale within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882.' The Lord Chancellor observed that everyone must feel that sooner or later an effort would have to be made to consolidate the law upon the subject of bills of sale. Lord Herschell, in expressing his concurrence with the Chancellor, expressed his willingness to make the attempt. He is a bold man, and if he succeeds in framing a really satisfactory measure, and thereby putting an end to a miserable class of cases which encumber so many pages of the Reports, and are thoroughly distasteful to every intelligent lawyer, he will confer a great boon on the community.

MR. MUNTON'S address to the Law Students' Debating Society (see ante, p. 420) will well repay a careful perusal. That a mere knowledge (however complete) of law is not enough; that the arts of listening and remembering should be cultivated; that contentious business is tending to decrease; and that attendance at debating societies is not only highly useful, but almost essential—such were the views which Mr. Munton impressed upon the students, and we think quite rightly. One point is well worth the attention of the Bar Committee. 'I believe,' said Mr. Munton, 'that if there was a better arrangement between the solicitor branch and the bar, by which they could more conveniently communicate with each other in matters of business, there would be work brought to the bar which does not now get there at all. I should be glad to see some system by which the barrister and the solicitor could better carry on their business side by side, so to speak, removing the present artificial line of demarcation which only gets broken down by some of us who happen to have outside opportunities of becoming more natural to each other. This, however, is a matter for our barrister friends to deal with.' Mr. Munton, we may observe, is 'opposed to the amalgamation of the two branches of the profession.'

THE Stamp Duties Bill, which we recently examined at length (see ante, p. 329), has now been for some time under the consideration of the Standing Committee on Law, and its ultimate passing in the present session, together with its companion the Stamp Duties Management Bill, may be considered assured. Few measures will be more cordially welcomed by business men of all kinds. 'The present law relating to stamps,' so we read in the Financial News, 'is a wearisome network which no one feels safe in touching. The lines which distinguish one class of instruments from another are very erratic, and the dangers of understamping are perpetually cropping up in the course of commercial litigation, rendering parties liable to heavy penalties or depriving them of the assistance of otherwise valid documents.' We observe that the bill is at present intended to come into operation on January 1, 1892—a very proper date. It is to be hoped that the Standing Committee will not follow the precedent set in 1882 in connection with the Bills of Exchange Act, which came into operation on the date of its passing—on August 18—by virtue of an alteration in committee, the bill having been originally intended not to come into operation until January 1, 1883.

LORD BARRINGTON has moved for a return of all the payments made by the various archbishops and bishops since 1885 on account of fees, duties, and other outgoings, including first fruits and tenths. A very comprehensive list of fees will be found in Truth of this week. First fruits, being the profits of the first year of every spiritual office, and tenths, being a tenth part of the profits of each subsequent year, are payable by the holder of every spiritual office of profit (except livings of not more than 50*l.* a year annual value) to Queen Anne's Bounty for the purpose of augmenting the value of small livings. Queen Anne (see 2 & 3 Anne, c. 2) surrendered to the Church in perpetuity these parts of the Crown revenue which Henry VIII. (see 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3 and 27 Hen. VIII. c. 11) had transferred from the Pope to the Crown. Every archbishop and bishop has by 6 Anne, c. 17, s. 5, four years to compound for the payment of first fruits, so that, if he should die before the four years were expired, he is discharged of so much as did not become due at his death. The holders of all dignities, prebends, and offices 'whereof the lands, tithes, tenements, and other hereditaments and endowments' have become vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners are 'absolutely relieved and discharged from the payments of all first fruits and tenths in respect of such their dignities, prebends, and offices respectively' by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 4, under which the Commissioners pay one-twentieth part of certain parts of new revenues to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty by way of compensation; but the Act does not appear to apply to archbishops or bishops, the estates of whose sees were not vested in the Commissioners until after the passing of that Act, by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124, which Act contains no reference to first fruits or tenths. But the whole subject is very obscure, as also is that of the enjoyment of the temporalities of a see during the period which elapses between the death of one bishop and the 'restitution of the temporalities' to his successor. 'The revenue derived from the custody of the temporalities,' it is said in the eleventh and latest edition of Stephen's 'Commentaries,' vol. ii. p. 540, 'which was formerly very considerable, is now by a customary indulgence almost reduced to nothing, for at present, as soon as the new bishop is consecrated and confirmed, he usually receives the temporalities entire and untouched from the Crown, and at the same time does homage to his sovereign.' Be the amount 'almost nothing' or not, however, it seems to form part of the hereditary revenue of the Crown, and as such to have been surrendered to the Exchequer for the public use by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 2, passed 'for the support of Her Majesty's household, and of the honour and dignity of the Crown.'

MR. JUSTICE WRIGHT had before him two very important points in Smith v. Gronow last week. The action was for the ejectment of the assignee of a lessee on the ground of forfeiture by the bankruptcy, annulled before re-entry, of the lessee. The proviso for re-entry was framed (according to the usual form) to come into effect 'if the said lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall become bankrupt or take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors.' The first question was whether the proviso refers only to the bankruptcy of the person holding the estate, so that if the lessee becomes bankrupt after assignment it can apply only to the bankruptcy of the assignee, or whether it applies to the bankruptcy of either party. Mr. Justice Wright has held that the proviso applies only to the bankruptcy of the person holding the estate, on the ground that a power of re-entry after assignment appeared to him to be more than the subject-matter requires, and more than ought to be understood in the absence of any words expressing an intention to apply the remedy for the protection of merely personal rights against a stranger to the term. Any other view would lead to such absurd practical consequences, and would make assignments so very perilous to assignees, that we cannot help thinking that Mr. Justice Wright's view is the right one. Upon the second point—whether the effect of the proviso was avoided by the annulment of the bankruptcy—Mr. Justice Wright has expressed an opinion, rather than given a judgment, to the effect that 'the bringing of the action by the lessor notified to the assignee the lessor's intention to re-enter, and that the annulment of the bankruptcy cannot defeat that.' We have no reasonable doubt that this opinion is correct. It is true that in Ancona v. Waddell, 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 111, and other cases therein referred to, it has been held that the forfeiture by bankruptcy of an estate, devised with a provision of forfeiture for bankruptcy, has been cured by the annulment of the bankruptcy; but we think that these cases are clearly distinguishable. So important is the point, however, that we hope that it may before long be brought before a Court of Appeal. Meanwhile it will be for practitioners to consider whether the ordinary form of proviso for re-entry in case of bankruptcy requires modification or not. We incline to think that it does.

'C.' IN a letter we printed last week (ante, p. 419) has met with two generations of judges and masters and leading counsel in the last forty years, and 'can testify that most of them have tortured solicitors and their clerks with illegible writing.' Most certainly, where the highly placed persons against whom this grave charge is brought cannot, from defective education, write legibly, they should dictate, as far as possible, to clerks who are more fortunate. But we cannot but think that 'C.' is exaggerating. It is impossible, however, to exaggerate the delay and annoyance which illegible handwriting is likely to cause.

IN the case of Comfort v. Betts, which was recently before the Court of Appeal, a novel question was raised as to the validity of a deed of assignment, by which a number of creditors of the defendant assigned their several debts to the plaintiff in order that he might sue for the same, and out of the amount recovered pay the assignors their respective debts. Although the debts were assigned to the assignee 'absolutely,' it was contended that the deed did not constitute an 'absolute assignment' within the meaning of section 25, subsection 6, of the Judicature Act, 1873, inasmuch as it contained a trust in favour of the assignors. The Court, however, overruled this contention, holding that the assignment was absolute, and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action upon it against the defendant. Lord Justice Fry, in giving judgment, said: 'I know of no objection to a person passing a legal right to another, and converting himself into an equitable owner. Before the Judicature Act, 1873, such a thing might have been done . . . and I cannot see that that Act has created any objection to such a course.'

AMONG the puzzles from time to time set by the Legislature to test the ingenuity of lawyers, section 6 of the Copyhold Act, 1887, deserves a high place. It begins by providing that, 'After the passing of this Act it shall not be lawful for the lord of any manor to make grants of land not previously of copyhold tenure to any person to hold by copy of Court roll or by any tenure of a customary nature without the previous consent of the Land Commissioners,' and then proceeds to enact that 'wherever any such grant has been lawfully made the land therein comprised shall cease to be of copyhold tenure, and shall be vested in the grantee thereof to hold for the interest granted as in free and common socage.' It can hardly be intended that these latter words should apply to grants made before the passing of the Act, the presumption against such a wanton piece of confiscation being too strong. But, if they are to be read as confined in their operation to grants made after the Act, then, as such grants can be lawfully made only with the consent of the Land Commissioners, the result is a very curious one. The Land Commissioners are to be solemnly asked to consent to a grant of land to be held by copy of Court roll, and upon their consent being given and the grant made the land is to vest in the grantee, not as copyhold, but as freehold. Can this be the true meaning? Or is it possible to read 'lawfully' in the sense of 'lawfully save for the restriction imposed by this section'? Even so the clause is open to the objection that it will enable limited owners of manors to alienate the demesne lands without the safeguards imposed by the Settled Land Act for the benefit of those in remainder. And how on either construction can land 'cease to be of copyhold tenure' which ex hypothesi was not of that tenure before the grant?

A RETURN of the time occupied by judges of the High Court in holding Courts at the assizes held in the year 1890 has just been laid upon the table of the House of Commons. This document discloses that in the year referred to the total number of days on which various judges sat in Courts, civil or criminal, in assize towns amounted to 833½, the Winter Assize being responsible for 295 days, the Spring Assize (on the Northern and North-Eastern only) for thirty-seven, the Summer Assize for 309, and the Autumn Assize, at which criminal business only is taken on several of the circuits, for 192½. Of the circuits, the Northern heads the list with 174 days, the North-Eastern being a good second with 168½, these circuits enjoying the services of two judges for the greater part of the time. Next comes the Midland with 125 days, having two judges at Birmingham only, then the South-Eastern with 113, the Western with eighty-three, the Oxford with seventy-four, the South Wales with fifty-one, and the North Wales with forty-five. The Oxford, however, in reality shared with the Midland forty-six days spent by judges at Birmingham, making the real total of that circuit 120 days. In addition to this, the sittings at the Central Criminal Court monopolised fifty-four days of judicial time, raising the gross total to 887½ days. We have no doubt that when this return was moved for it was imagined that it would afford some index of the amount of judicial time taken up by the circuit system. Those who hope to find such information will be disappointed. For all practical purposes the return is, it is not too much to say, entirely useless. In the first place, the number of days given in the return is exclusive of the commission-days at each town, an item which would make a very substantial addition to the total. In the second place, there is no record of the intervals which elapsed between the sittings at the various towns, during which the judges did not find it practicable to return to town. This would form a still more important addition, swelled as it would be by such accidents as the one alluded to in the following note appended to one of the towns: 'No business, civil or criminal; one action entered was settled three days before the commission-day.' A return upon the subject, to be useful as well as interesting, would have to include information upon these points.

THE Coinage Bill, introduced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to give effect to his proposal to devote 400,000*l.* of the surplus, not required for the purposes of education during the current year, to the improvement of the gold coinage, has the merit of brevity. The object of the bill is attained in one section, which, according to the cumbrous method so popular in recent times with parliamentary draftsmen, and so extremely confusing for the purposes of reference, is divided into four subsections. By these provision is made for the issue of an Order in Council directing that gold coins below the least current weight, as provided by the Coinage Act, 1870, shall, if they have not been illegally dealt with, be paid for by the Mint at their nominal price, subject to such conditions as to time, manner, and order of presentation as the Order may prescribe. Coins illegally dealt with are those which have been impaired, diminished, or lightened otherwise than by fair wear and tear, or defaced by having any name, word, device, or number stamped thereon, whether the coin has been lightened thereby or not, and in the case of sovereigns and half-sovereigns loss of weight exceeding three grains is to be primâ facie evidence that they have been illegally dealt with. The money not immediately required is to be invested, and the interest applied to the same purpose. When principal and interest are exhausted, the operation will ipso facto terminate, leaving, it is to be hoped, a smaller amount of light gold in circulation. Advantage is taken of the bill to amend the first schedule of the Coinage Act, 1870, so as to increase in the case of the half-sovereign and all the silver coins the 'remedy' or variation from the standard weight allowed the Mint in their manufacture. In the case of the half-sovereign this variation is increased from one-tenth to three-twentieths of an Imperial grain, and, in the case of the sixpence, it is nearly, and in that of a threepenny-piece more than doubled. We do not know what excuse Mr. Goschen has for tampering with the standard weight of the coinage in this manner, but perhaps it is only fair to allow the small half-sovereign a little greater allowance than the exact tenth of that allowed to the large fivepound-piece. The same remark applies to the small silver coins, which are treated by the Act of 1870 upon the same mathematical principles, the sixpence receiving half the allowance of the shilling, and the threepenny-piece half that of the sixpence.

MR. CUST (see ante, p. 395) has brought forward a bill (which, having been read a second time without opposition, may now be expected to pass) to relieve allotments from liability to be assessed to general district rates under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 211, at a higher rate than market gardens and other cultivated grounds, which are at present assessed at a fourth rate only of the value, for reasons given by Mr. Justice Erle in the South Wales Railway Company v. The Swansea Local Board, 24 Law J. Rep. M. C. 30, as pointed out in the LAW JOURNAL for May 31, 1890. It will be remembered that by the Public Health (Rating of Orchards) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 17), orchards were added to the list of exemptions from the higher scale of rating. In that Act it is recited that 'doubts had arisen whether orchards are or are not included among the lands' to which the existing exemptions apply, and we observe that Mr. Cust's bill contains a similar recital of doubts in respect to allotments. For ourselves, for reasons we have already given, we never felt any doubt that under the existing law allotments are subject to full rating under ordinary circumstances. It would seem, therefore, to be a more proper form of recital that some allotments are exempted and some not, and that it is expedient, as we believe it to be, to extend the benefit of the exemption to all.

A COUNTY COURT has no jurisdiction to try an action for infringement of letters patent. So it was recently held by the Court of Appeal in Regina v. Halifax County Court, and we see no reason for doubting the correctness of the decision. The question turns upon the construction of section 117 of the Patents Act, 1883, and section 56 of the County Courts Act, 1888. By section 117 of the Act of 1883, which makes provision for the trial of actions for the infringement of a patent by 'a Court,' it is enacted that the word 'Court' shall mean the High Court of Justice. This of itself is almost enough, but it might perhaps be said that a right of action ought to-be limited by an interpretation clause. It therefore becomes desirable to consider the meaning of section 56 of the Act of 1888, which deals expressly with the restrictions on County Court jurisdiction. By this section 'the Court shall not have cognisance of any action in which the title to any' (inter alia) 'franchise shall be in question.' The Court has held that the word 'franchise' in this section includes letters patent, but also that section 117 of the Act of 1888, by defining 'Court' as 'High Court,' excludes the jurisdiction of the County Court, so that the decision that a 'franchise' includes letters patent is technically an obiter dictum only.

'NEMO debet bis vexari' is a well-known maxim of law, and one which seems applicable to the case of Vernon v. Watson (Notes of Cases, p. 90). The secretary of a friendly society was convicted under section 16 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, of having misapplied money received by him as the subscriptions of members, and was ordered to pay over the money, or else be imprisoned for two months with hard labour. The defendant did not pay over the money, but suffered his term of imprisonment. The trustees of the society then took civil proceedings in the Derby County Court, and succeeded in obtaining a judgment for the amount misapplied. A Divisional Court (Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Charles) reversed the judgment (60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 205), holding that the case was governed by the decision in Knight v. Whitmore, 53 L. T. (N.S.) 233. There, the treasurer of a branch of the United Society of Boiler Makers and Iron Shipbuilders, registered under the Trades' Union Act, 1871, having unlawfully and fraudulently misapplied moneys received by him on behalf of the society, was ordered to pay a penalty and repay the misappropriated sum, and, in default of payment, to be imprisoned for two months with hard labour. He did not pay, and was accordingly sent to prison. When he had served his sentence an action was brought against him by the general secretary of the society for the misappropriated money, which, it was alleged, he still retained. The County Court judge entered a nonsuit on the ground that the society's claim against the defendant had been satisfied by their previous proceedings, and a Divisional Court held that the judge was right in doing so. The same principle applied to Vernon v. Watson, and the Divisional Court, and now the Court of Appeal, have held that the right of action had disappeared when the defendant had been sent to prison for the same offence.

THE power entrusted to the Board of Trade by section 23 of the Companies Act, 1867, of granting licenses for the omission of the word 'limited' from the style of companies formed not for the purpose of profit is sometimes, as was shown on a recent occasion, a source of embarrassment to the official responsible for its exercise. But it may be doubted whether the way out of the difficulty proposed by the late secretary of the department will meet with general acceptance. His plan, that of making the use of the word 'limited' optional instead of compulsory in all cases, is certainly simple, but the reasons urged in support are hardly satisfactory. Lord Thring, 'the greatest authority on the subject,' is quoted as having said that, 'The necessity of using "limited" as the last word in the name of a limited company is much to be regretted. It affords no protection to the creditor, as no enactment is required to inform a shopkeeper that an incorporated company is of necessity a limited company' ('Law and Practice of Joint Stock Companies,' edit. 1867, p. 231). Now it is not true either in law or in fact that an incorporated company is of necessity a limited company. Under the Act of 1862 itself, a company may be registered with unlimited liability; and, though instances may not be common, one very well-known banking-house in the city has availed itself of this power. However, a primâ facie presumption of limited liability arises from incorporation, and it may be conceded that no great harm would be done by leaving the tradesmen to act on that presumption, provided that their attention be called to the fact of incorporation. Common notoriety may be sufficient for this purpose in the case of companies incorporated by charter or special Act of Parliament, they being generally bodies of some importance. But any firm of private traders, however insignificant, may register under the Companies Acts, and their having done so might well be unknown to a person doing business with them if they made no change in their firm name. By the addition thereto of the word 'limited' notice of their incorporation is effectually conveyed, together with the certainty, instead of the mere presumption, that their liability is limited. The reason given for throwing away this valuable security can scarcely be considered adequate.

AN important point, never previously determined, relating to costs in divorce proceedings came before the Court of Appeal in Hall v. Hall (Notes of Cases, p. 101). A suit for dissolution of marriage was instituted by a husband against his wife on the ground of her adultery, and the husband paid into Court the sum of 45*l.* as security for his wife's costs. This was done in conformity with the practice of the Divorce Division, which requires a husband seeking a divorce either to deposit a sum of money, or to give security for a sum of money, to cover the wife's costs. A decree nisi was obtained by the husband, and the wife moved the Court of Appeal for a new trial. The application for a new trial was, however, dismissed. Thereupon the husband asked that his costs of the application for a new trial might be paid out of the fund of 45*l.* which he had paid into Court, and which still remained there. This the Court of Appeal, after taking time to consider their judgment, refused. Their lordships thought that, in a proper case, the Court of Appeal had power to order the costs of a successful husband to be paid out of the moneys which he had paid into Court to provide his wife with funds for her defence, if those funds were still in Court. But they added that the Court would not do that unless the wife's solicitor had so conducted himself as to render such an order just as against him. It is a well-established rule that the Court will not deprive the wife's solicitor of his costs out of the fund intended for his payment, and for which he looks for his remuneration in conducting her defence, unless he has himself done something to justify such a measure. In the case of Hall v. Hall, although the motion for a new trial was not only unsuccessful, but was really hopeless, the Court was not prepared to draw the inference that the wife's solicitor acted oppressively or vexatiously toward the husband in acting for her on the motion she made for a new trial. On that ground, therefore, their lordships did not think it right to accede to the husband's application.

'As with the letters of Junius, so with the letters of Wilfrid Murray—we are all free to hold our own opinion as to their authorship, but absolute certainty is denied us. Sir Philip Francis died without confessing that he was Junius; and Mr. Hurlbert has gone away denying that he is Wilfrid Murray.' This is the view of the Standard in its leading article on the recent judgment of the Court of Appeal in Evelyn v. Hurlbert. The public are no doubt mainly concerned in the solution of a mystery which has a fascination for a certain class of minds. But a graver responsibility and far more serious duty is, in our opinion, thrown on the Public Prosecutor and his legal adviser than that of solving a mystery. If the Master of the Rolls is justified in saying that 'it was an infamous case, and one party or the other was guilty of the most wicked perjury,' it is clear that no time ought to be lost in instituting a prosecution and visiting the perjurer, whether plaintiff or defendant, with condign punishment. The plaintiff is in England, and, judging from her excited remarks in Court last Saturday, she is anxious for further investigation. The decision of the Government officer will be looked for with interest.

THERE is a homely proverb about those 'who in quarrels interpose' which has no doubt come home to the Lord Mayor of London since the publication of his correspondence with the General Omnibus Company. Arbitration or mediation between employers and employed is one thing, but the championing of discharged servants without waiting to learn from their masters the cause of such discharge is another. In these days a small number of capable and honest employés are not discharged by a company out of revenge for joining in a strike which was almost universal among the men, and it is surely outside the province of a Lord Mayor to interfere at all. With reference to his lordship's suggestion that proceedings should be abandoned against men who were committed for trial for unlawful acts (not for joining a strike), the company could not do less than decline to interfere with the course of justice; and their hit at the chief magistrate of London was as well deserved as it was severe. A similar question was raised after the Southampton riots, where certain magistrates were anxious to quash all proceedings against the rioters. The men were sent to trial, however, and pleaded guilty; and when the time 'for showing mercy' had arrived, all the circumstances were duly considered by the judge.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

I.

PATENT v. DESIGN.

FEW legal doctrines have been established by a single litigation. The doctrine that a design may be registrable although it embraces 'proper subject-matter for valid letters patent' is an instance of this rare phenomenon in comparative jurisprudence. For many years the minds of tradesmen and manufacturers had been perplexed by the problem whether it was lawful to register as a design what might conceivably be protected by a patent; and, in spite of certain obiter dicta, it seemed as if the involuntary legislation which suitors initiate was never to come effectually to their aid. At length the deus ex machinâ descended in the form of an action brought by Messrs. Walker, Hunter & Co. against the Falkirk Iron Company, in the Scotch Court of Session. The material facts in this case, which is reported in 4 P. O. R. at p. 390, were as follow: The pursuers were the registered owners of a design 'for a range fire-door with moulding on the top, the moulding forming part of the range.' The adoption of this shape was found to be attended with important advantages, which were thus conveniently summarised in the judgment (at p. 393): 'When the door had no moulding, first an open space or slit was left for the length of the fire-grate, through which cold air was admitted to the upper side of the fire; and, secondly, the fire cover having the moulding on it was heavy, and inconvenience was found in lifting it off, while, if the moulding was put on the fall-bar and became part of it, as was frequently the case in the latter part of the manufacture, it intercepted the heat and prevented the full benefit of the radiation being got from the fire. The use of the new shape results in the removal of these disadvantages, and yet preserves a symmetrical if not an ornamental form.' The defenders, among other ingenious objections to the pursuers' claim, contended that their design was not a proper subject for registration and certificate, and that the provisions of part iii. of the Act of 1883—relating to the registration of designs—did not apply when the subject-matter of the application might be protected by letters patent taken out in terms of the first part of the statute.

Lord Maclaren, the judge of first instance, appears to have been of opinion that this objection, if well founded in fact—which he held it not to be—would have been fatal to the pursuers' claim. 'The thing registered,' said his lordship, 'is apparently not a subject for which a patent could be obtained; and, on the other hand, it is not a mere unmeaning combination of known devices. Between these limits I think the designer may get a protection for any variety of intelligent form or pattern capable of being applied to the kind of goods for which he seeks a certificate.'

The defenders appealed to the Inner House; and the point of law, with which alone we are here concerned, was disposed of by Lord Shand in a lucid and powerful judgment, from which we extract the following passages: 'It is quite true the subject of registration must not be an article of manufacture itself, but a design to be applied to an article of manufacture . . . and also that the branch of the statute which relates to the registration of designs does not afford, or profess to afford, protection to any mechanical principle or contrivance directly the Act on this branch gives protection only to the shape or configuration in such a case as the present. The result of such protection may be, however, to secure important advantages such as attend a mechanical contrivance, if these advantages should be the result directly or indirectly of the shape or configuration adopted. Thus, in the present case, the new shape of fire-range door with the moulding as part of it has the particular advantages over the old shape of door which I have already noticed. These are not directly the subject of protection, but, inasmuch as they are dependent on and inseparable from the shape or configuration, they are indirectly secured by the registration of the design.'*

* Affirmed on this point by the House of Lords in The Hecla Foundry Company v. Walker, Hunter & Co., 1889, 6 P. O. R., per Lord Herschell, at p. 588.

Hitherto the only proposition that it has been possible to formulate as to the mutual relation of patent and design has been an answer to the question so often submitted to counsel: 'Can a patent be anticipated by the registration of a design?'* The judgment of Lord Shand in Walker v. The Falkirk Iron Company shows that there may be such a thing as the infringement of a design by a patent.

REGINA v. JACKSON.

(Continued from p. 417.)

RESUMING our consideration of Lord Justice Fry's judgment, we find that his next argument is that 'similar cases must have occurred over and over again; but the habitual course of practice has been to have recourse to the Ecclesiastical Court and to obtain a decree of restitution of conjugal rights; and no case is to be found by which it is established that such a right as that contended for by the husband in this case is given by the law of England.' The habitual course, we agree, for husbands who desire the aid of the law for the enforcement of their conjugal rights has been to go to the Ecclesiastical Court, for no other Court could give them aid; and a resort to the law would generally be preferred by those who could afford it from a natural reluctance to use force. We suspect, however, that the classes in whom that reluctance is not so strong—the classes who, according to Blackstone, 'were always fond of the old common law,' and who, we may add, showed a marked sympathy for Mr. Jackson—not unfrequently exercise the marital right of custody; but their disputes are mostly settled in the police courts. Hence the number of cases in which the question has come before the superior Courts of common law is not large. Yet two have arisen in which the right to confine has been in dispute without special circumstances (Atwood v. Atwood and In re Cochrane), and in both it has been upheld. It appears that it is possible to read Mr. Justice Coleridge's judgment in the last case without being convinced by its reasoning; but those who speak disparagingly of it should at least remember that the applicant could have gone in turn to three other tribunals, and that even an erroneous decision of any one of them in her favour would have stood. Why, then, should she have acquiesced in the judgment against her, unless she was advised that she had no chance of success elsewhere?

Then it is said that Rex v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781; sub nom. Ex parte Sandilands, 21 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 342, 'to say the least, weakens the authority of Cochrane's Case.' Now here with great deference we think that the lord justice has gone astray through not paying sufficient attention to Lord Campbell's language. He quotes Lord Campbell not quite accurately as saying that 'the husband has no such custody of the wife as a parent has of a child.' The question was whether the Court would, on an application by a husband for a habeas corpus, order his wife to be delivered up to him against her will. To this Lord Campbell said that, in the case of an infant, 'the parent has the right to the custody of the child, and, if the infant is of tender years, the Court will order it to be delivered to its father. But the husband has no such right at common law to the custody of his wife.' What does 'such right' here mean? Obviously such right as the Court will enforce by an order of delivery on habeas corpus; in other words, such right as a father possesses over his child 'of tender years.' To leave out the reference to the tender years of the child is to miss the point of the judgment. The common-law right of a father to the custody of his children lasts throughout their infancy, but he cannot enforce that right by habeas corpus after they have attained an age at which they are presumed to have discretion to understand the position in which they are placed. The Court will then make no order unless they are detained against their will, and, when they are so detained, will not order them to be delivered to their father, but only to be set at liberty. There are thus two forms of the father's right of custody—one which the Court will actively enforce, another which it will not enforce, but will not interfere with when in fact exercised except in cases of abuse. Now, all that the Court held in Rex v. Leggatt was that the husband had not a right of the former kind to the custody of his wife. The question was covered by authority, the exact point having been determined by the King's Bench in Lord Ellenborough's time (Rex v. Wiseman, 2 Smith, 617); but, apart from direct authority, it would have been strange indeed had the Court decided it otherwise. To do so would have been in effect to hold, in opposition to the opinion of a distinguished predecessor of Lord Esher's,† that marriage operated permanently to depress the understanding and discretion of the wife below the standard of an unmarried girl of sixteen. There was nothing in Cochrane's Case to justify such a decision, and the idea that there was evidently did not occur to Mr. Justice Coleridge himself or to any of his colleagues. We may observe, by the way, with reference to an interlocutory remark of Lord Halsbury, that the case with which the Court was 'much pressed' in Rex v. Leggatt was, as clearly appears from the LAW JOURNAL REPORT, not In re Cochrane, but Rex v. Mead.

We now come to the last argument, founded on the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, which deprived the Court of the power to attach a husband or wife for disobedience to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and substituted a power to award pecuniary satisfaction. It is difficult at first sight to see the connection between the power of a Court to imprison a party in contempt and the right of a husband to seize his wife and prevent her by force from deserting him, or why the abolition of one should be deemed to have affected the other. Lord Justice Fry, of course, does not say that the Act took away the marital right, but he says that, if the non-existence of the right was doubtful before, it is doubtful no longer. We do not assent to this. We should say the Act has made no difference, and any doubt that existed before would equally exist after it. There had been an authoritative declaration in favour of the right; the Legislature must be presumed, if they considered the matter at all, to have taken the law to be as it had been declared by a competent Court, and if they wished to alter it they would have said so.

We cannot but think that there is some confusion of thought in all the judgments on this point, and that it arises from the unfortunate use of the word 'imprisonment' to describe the right claimed for the husband.

* Mutatis mutandis, the judgment of Mr. Justice Kekewich in Thomson v. Macdonald, 1891, 8 P. O. R., at p. 8, is instructive upon this point.

† Sir John Trevor, M.R., in Hyde's Case (Gilbert, 83), laid it down that 'a woman by her marriage did not lose her understanding and discretion, but rather improved it by the teaching of her husband.'

It is the wife's duty to live with her husband. What is claimed for the husband is the right to use force reasonably sufficient to bring her to the home where her duty requires her to be, and to prevent her from again deserting it. For this purpose it may be necessary to confine her in the house; but an exercise of the like power by a father, or by a schoolmaster to whom he has committed the custody of his son, would not generally be called 'imprisonment.' To describe it in the case of a husband as imprisoning his wife until she renders conjugal rights is, it appears to us, inaccurate. Rather it is the exaction in specie of the conjugal right of consortium, or, in the words of Bacon's 'Abridgment,' keeping the wife by force within the bounds of duty. It would be otherwise if the claim were to confine the wife at a distance until she consented to return to her husband's house. Owing to a want of definiteness in the reasoning of the various judgments on this branch of the subject—the Lord Chancellor's opinion upon it has to be collected by inference from what purports to be a statement of the case put forth for the husband—it is difficult to feel sure of its true effect, but we think it may be summed up as follows: First, the fact that the Court formerly itself imprisoned for contempt instead of handing the wife over to the husband is an argument against the husband's right to imprison; secondly, the Legislature, by taking away the Court's right to imprison, has in some way made it clear that the husband never had any such right. To the first of these propositions it may be answered that it is by no means exceptional for the remedy obtainable from a Court to differ from that which the plaintiff can, if strong enough to rely on his own arm, exact for himself. But the existence of the former remedy is no argument against the right to exact the latter. For an example, take the case of a chattel which has wrongfully come into the possession of one to whom it does not belong. The owner has a right to resume it if he can lay hands on it, none the less that if he prefers to bring an action he cannot get back the chattel, but can only recover damages. The second proposition seems to be somewhat inconsistent with the first, and it is significant that Mr. Finlay, who put forward the first in argument, does not appear from the reports to have relied on the second. If the Court had had the power to hand over a wife to her husband, we could have better understood the abolition of that power being used as an argument against the husband having the right to take her himself. But since it is admitted, and indeed insisted, that the remedy given by the Court was not that which the husband claims to exact for himself, what can it matter for this purpose whether the practice be to attach for contempt in disobeying a decree or to award compensation to the injured party?

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

The Judicature Acts Amendment Bill.
Customs and Inland Revenue Bill.
Public Accounts and Charges Bill.
Russian Dutch Loan Bill.

Bills through committee:—

Mail Ships Bill.
Fisheries Bill.

Second readings:—

Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Bill.
Mortmain and Charitable Uses Amendment Bill.
Bills of Sale Act, 1890, Amendment Bill.
Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.

First reading:—

Factories and Workshops Bill, brought up from the Commons.

In the House of Commons.

The Lords' Amendments to the Savings Banks Bill considered and agreed to.

Third readings:—

Cork (County and City) Courthouses Bill.
Factories and Workshops Bill.
Consolidated Fund (No. 2) Bill.
Pilotage Provisional Orders (No. 1) Bill.
Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.

Second readings:—

Post Office Acts Amendment Bill.
Free Education Bill.
Municipal Registration (Dublin and Belfast) Bill.

New bills:—

To Amend the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts, 1878 to 1890, with respect to the Conveyance of Animals by Sea.
To Amend the Coinage Act, 1870.
To Amend the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.
To Amend the Acts relating to Reformatory Schools in Scotland.
To Confer further Powers on County Councils and other Authorities with respect to Main Roads and other Highways and Bridges.

Bills withdrawn:—

Industrial Assurance Bill.
Sea Ware Crofting Counties (Scotland) Bill.
Theatres, &c., London Bill.

Of private bills, the Dover and Calais Submarine Tubular Railway Bill was withdrawn, and the Manchester Ship Canal Bill was read a third time.

Reviews.

THE TITHE ACTS.

The Tithe Acts and the Rules under the Tithe Act, 1891, together with the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886, the London (City) Tithes Act, 1879, and other Acts relating to the subject of Tithe and Tithe Rentcharge. Also, Explanatory Notes and References and an Introduction containing a short Treatise on the Recovery of Tithe Rentcharge. Fifth Edition, rewritten and rearranged. By G. PEMBERTON LEACH, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Assistant Commissioner to the Board of Agriculture. London: Shaw & Sons. 1891.

THE history of tithes—the law as to which has lately been very materially changed by the Tithe Act, 1891—is extremely ancient, but a large portion of the legal learning with regard to it is now of very little practical importance. 'The right,' said Vice-Chancellor Bacon, in Bailey v. Badham, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1067, 'is as old as Leviticus. It is a right to receive what? A portion of the annual produce of cultivated land—that, and nothing else. . . . Before the Tithes Commutation Act it went to the persons entitled to the tithe, but the Legislature has thought fit to alter that, not to alter the nature.' The Act here alluded to, 'the Act for the commutation of tithes,' passed in 1836, is here given, and is followed by twelve Tithe Amendment Acts, the last on the subject being the Extraordinary Tithe Amendment Act. Prefixed to the work is an Introduction, giving a short sketch of the law; and in the Appendix we have the Acts and portions of Acts which have reference to the Tithe Acts. Here is also the circular issued to local boards on the last day of April in the present year. The volume is handy and the notes will be found serviceable. Attention is drawn to the fact that, though the Tithe Act, 1891, came into operation on March 26, 1891, when it received the royal assent, yet as regards the recovery of rentcharge it does not come into practical operation until July 1, 1891, except in those parishes where the rentcharge has, under 1 Vict. c. 69 and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62 (both now repealed), been made payable on January 1 and July 1, instead of on April 1 and October 1.

HUTCHISON ON BANKING.

The Practice of Banking, embracing the Cases at Law and in Equity bearing upon all Branches of the Subject. By JOHN HUTCHISON. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. Warrington: Percival Pearse. 1891.

THE publication of this volume has, we are told in the preface, been somewhat delayed owing to the very sudden death of the author last year, the whole work, except a small portion of the index, having, however, been practically completed before the author's death. This circumstance may account for the fact that on several material points the latest legislation has not been duly incorporated in the work. Thus, in the discussion of the law as to Memorandum and Articles of Association, there ought to have been some reference, at all events, to the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890. At page 58 et seq., where the question of the liability of directors who have proved unfaithful servants is briefly discussed, we ought to find a notice of the important alteration made by the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. Section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, mentioned on page 57, is now superseded by section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, which extends to promoters. The precedents will be found useful. The principal form given is that which holds the first place in the volume—viz. Memorandum and Articles of Association of a banking company, which is supplemented by some twenty pages of notes on the law affecting these documents.

Correspondence.

TRIAL BY JURY.

SIR,—It is curious to note, progressing in education and intelligence as we do, that we are gradually and unconsciously letting slip one of our great institutions—namely, trial by jury.

A quarter of a century ago juries had a proud distinction, and the public the great satisfaction that all important cases, whether civil or criminal, were disposed of by their fellows.

Formerly the members of the bar only did the advocacy, the judge expounded the law, and the jury, 'the twelve good men and true,' had the decision as to facts left to them; but now a change has gradually taken place. About one-third of all civil cases at assizes are tried without juries, and many others are referred by the judge, on one pretence or another, to a member of the bar, and even with those that are tried in Court the functions exercised by the judge are so expanded that the jury have not only the law laid down to them before considering their verdict, but are told the judge's views of what the verdict should be in language somewhat ambiguous, but the meaning of which is so unmistakable, whether given in harsh dictatorial or gentle and persuasive and eloquent terms, and often times with such effect that it is difficult to determine in many cases from which source, the judicial bench or the jury-box, the verdict actually emanates.

As to criminal cases. In times past the verdict of a jury was looked upon as conclusive, but now, in many instances, the trial and verdict are a farce, as if the public who read the accounts of the trial, or the judge who presides, do not agree with the verdict an appeal is made to the Home Secretary, the verdict of the jury is set aside or altered, and so frequently has this happened in recent years that I fear the institution of trial by jury has lost its importance and the juries have lost their sense of responsibility.

I have in my mind many cases, both civil and criminal, but I refrain from mentioning any, as the object of my letter is simply to call attention to the subject generally, and to point out more particularly to jurymen their legitimate position, and to suggest to them in future to look upon the judges as exponents of the law of the country, and themselves as constituting the actual tribunal as to facts and as the arbiters selected by their country to perform a grave and important duty in the performance of which they should not be influenced by anyone.

ONE OF THE PUBLIC.

ADMINISTRATION BONDS.

SIR,—The Case of Josephine Reeves, appearing in last week's Notes of Cases, reminds one of the desirability of abolishing that lump of antiquated rubbish, the administration bond.

Had this document been one over which the compiler of the forms, made pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, had supervision, there can be no doubt it would long since have been at least considerably shortened, and not left as it is at present, fair game for the sneers of commercial men.

Why should there not be used a form printed at the foot or on the back of the oath that the sureties (of course fully describing them as at present) undertake that the administrator shall faithfully administer the estate according to law under penalty of a defined sum?

Also, if necessary, statute law should provide that the bond may be given to and enforceable by the president for the time being of the Probate Division, without naming him.

No bond stamp should be required in the case of an estate under 500*l.* in value. STYLUS.

June 22.

THE RIGHT OF ADMITTANCE TO THE COURTS.

SIR,—Although your comments on my letter to Lord Coleridge have, on the whole, been very fair, will you kindly allow me to say a word or two of explanation in your columns?

It will be seen that the principle I thought fit to remind Lord Coleridge of was that his personal friends or people provided with tickets by him had absolutely no more right to form the public in his Court than the friends of the humblest subjects of the Queen. This, I believe, is a well-established principle, and no judge has, to my knowledge, ever maintained that he has the right to select what portion of the public shall be admitted, to the exclusion of another. Should a judge take on himself to do any such thing, without the consent of both parties, there is a chance, in my humble opinion, of such a trial being declared only a 'private arbitration,' and the proceedings declared null and void on the ground that the parties did not consent to such arbitration. Lord Coleridge does not maintain that he has the right of selecting his audience. Far from it, he has strenuously denied having done any such thing as most of the papers said he had. I may say that my contention with reference to the admittance of the public is undoubtedly right. The only question was, Did the newspapers speak the truth when they reported that no one was admitted without a ticket? If they did, my remarks were applicable to the alleged action of the Lord Chief Justice; for if it were true that places were practically reserved for people with tickets, the constitutional right of the public to free admittance to a public trial was undeniably infringed and a system of 'selection' introduced. If they did not, my contention, although right in the abstract, did not apply to the system in vogue at the recent baccarat libel case. Lord Coleridge has explained his orders to the officials; perhaps it was their action in carrying out what they considered his orders which gave rise to the newspaper reports I have referred to. It is satisfactory to know that the Lord Chief Justice has publicly denied the statement (not invented by me) that admission to his Court was by ticket only.

With reference to the question of the prior right of members of the Inns of Court to a seat in the well of the Court over the public, provided there is room, I am glad you are not disposed to let the matter rest unsettled. I may say that my contention in the letter you have referred to practically comes to this: No member of the public has the right to take precedence over another; if, however, such a system was in vogue at a trial and one section of the public was, as a matter of fact, being admitted by virtue of their possessing a ticket signed by the judge and another excluded; if such a system of priority could be defended, and such rule could be held just, fair, and within the power of a judge, then members of the Inns of Court should enjoy the benefit of that rule. This privilege I claimed, based as it was on an implied premiss which I denied and which is only hypothetical, so I shall not trouble further with the matter as it stood then.

I now, however, claim that, as a matter of courtesy, if on no higher ground, students for the bar (even if they stand, to all intents and purposes, in no different relation to ordinary members of the public in the eyes of the Court) should be granted the privilege of a place in the well of the Court, such privilege conferring on them a prior right of admittance over a member of the public. All customs had a beginning. I presume time was when certain people, who do not come under the designation of either peers, privy councillors, or judges, had not the 'privilege' of sitting on the bench. Now, however, not only is their privilege established by 'custom,' but even that of a class, vaguely designated as 'any other persons'—which I take to include everybody and anybody—a judge may choose to invite.

Such 'custom' is now, it appears, 'immemorial'; I hope it will soon be obsolete. It occurs to me that, unless my memory fails me, history does not make any mention of mere spectators being accommodated with a seat on the bench by Chief Justice Gascoigne when he was trying a case, to which a friend of the then Prince of Wales was a party, and which was attended by that prince in person. That case seems to be very similar to the recent one, but we may safely presume the now 'immemorial custom' was not in vogue then. Gascoigne had no mean opinion of the dignity of the bench, as his committal of the prince to prison for contempt showed. Though I admit it is no business of mine, and my utter inability to remedy this scandal, yet I cannot help reiterating my humble opinion that the dignity of the bench is not by any means enhanced by being graced by the presence of ladies, attracted to the Court by mere curiosity.

I base my contention that the privilege of a prior right of admittance over the public should be granted to law students on the ground that it is part of a student's training to watch and mark how able counsel conduct a case. It may be that a law student and a member of the public are at the door seeking admittance; it is not improbable that sheer and perhaps often idle curiosity is the motive of both in trying to hear the case—however, with this difference, that, whilst the law student may combine business with pleasure and learn something by being present in Court, the mere spectator cannot urge any such plea.

So, sir, if I was wrong in maintaining that members of the Inns of Court had a prior claim to admittance, or that the courtesy granted to certain people provided with tickets should be granted to law students, I now urge that the 'custom' of admitting students to the well of the Court should now be established. Those who consider us simply ordinary members of the public cannot object to my contention, for then the presence of a law student will simply count as one of the public being present by virtue of a direct personal interest other than sheer curiosity.

I hope, sir, you will try and get the extent to which a judge may go in restricting the general right of the public to be present at any trial, so long as there is room, definitely settled. L. T. AUGIER M'VANE.

37 Temple, E.C.: June 24.

SIR,—If, as I understand, the suggestion in your paragraph in 'Obiter Dicta' column of this week's LAW JOURNAL is that 'unoccupied' counsel have a right to fill the seats on the floor of a Court to the exclusion of 'unoccupied' solicitors, I beg to point out that this is not so, and could not be allowed.

A solicitor, whether 'unoccupied' or engaged, remains an 'officer' of the Court, and as such has strictly a greater right to a place than an 'unoccupied' barrister, who is considered amicus curiæ. It is of equal personal importance to a member of either branch that he should, if he chooses, be present—as a member of the public—at the trial of cases in which he is not engaged, if there is room for him. The two front rows in all the Courts are very properly and necessarily reserved for counsel, and more space is rarely required by those actually engaged. The space between the front row and the bench specially allotted to solicitors concerned in the cases being heard is generally fully occupied by them or their clerks end clients, and the special reservation of the remaining seats for 'unoccupied' barristers would be not only unnecessary, but, it is submitted, illegal. FARLEIGH RHODES.

June 22.

Unreported Cases.

MAYOR'S COURT.

STOCK EXCHANGE—GAMBLING CONTRACT.

ON June 22, in the Lord Mayor's Court, the case of Bérire v. Thalheim came on for trial before the Recorder (Sir T. Chambers, Q.C.) and a jury. The plaintiff, a clerk in the City, in the employment of his father, sued the defendant, who is also a clerk in the City, to recover 39*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, the balance of an account for transactions on the Stock Exchange. It appeared that the two parties were young City clerks who had been friends, and who had speculated on the Stock Exchange. According to the plaintiff, they agreed to buy 100 shares in King Solomon's Mines (Lim.) and 2,500 East London railway shares. On the first settling-day there was a loss of 62*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.* The shares were carried over, and they continued to fall until the total loss was 203*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* In this loss the plaintiff said that the defendant had consented to pay half. He had paid some of it by instalments, and he had taken the money when there had been any balance in his favour. Mr. Lionel Cohen, stockbroker, proved that the transactions had been entered into and the money paid. As a matter of fact he dealt with the plaintiff's father, in whose name all the business was done, because the regulations of the Stock Exchange prohibited any dealings with clerks. The defendant said that he admitted making the agreement with the plaintiff to speculate, but when he found the stocks were going down he asked the plaintiff to close the account and open a 'bear' account. The plaintiff declined to do that, because he said he was certain that the stocks would recover. Defendant then said that he would have nothing more to do with the business, and the plaintiff must go on alone. He had paid the amount which was due from him. The learned recorder pointed out that the Gambling Act would apply. Both were principals, and it was different to a claim by a broker against a principal. It was a pure gambling contract, like a horse race, or wagering on two drops of rain running down a window pane. The plaintiff must be nonsuited.—Judgment accordingly.—Mr. Atherley-Jones, M.P., was counsel for the plaintiff; Mr. Le Riche for the defendant.

MR. JUSTICE WRIGHT AND MR. JUSTICE HENN COLLINS.—On Saturday, June 20, the members of the Northern Circuit entertained Mr. Justice Wright and Mr. Justice Henn Collins at a complimentary dinner at the Hôtel Métropole, in celebration of their recent elevation to the bench. Mr. S. Pope, Q.C., occupied the chair, and about 120 of both the past and present members of the Circuit assembled.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

ATTENDANCE of Members of the Council from April 16, 1890, to April 13, 1891:—

—	Council	Committee	—	Council	Committee
Mr. Addison	29	34	Mr. Mills	32	59
Mr. Bristow	24	10	Mr. Morrell	10	31
Mr. Broomhead Colton-Fox	4	2	Sir Richard Nicholson	1	1
Mr. Budd	19	19	Sir Thos. Paine	32	22
Mr. Cooper	9	4	Sir H. W. Parker	20	9
Mr. Cunliffe	36	146	Mr. Pemberton	28	6
Mr. Dees	2	—	Mr. Pennington	37	152
Mr. Ellett	16	10	Sir A. K. Rollit, M.P.	14	3
Mr. Follett	16	2	Mr. Roscoe	34	71
The Right Hon. H. H. Fowler	8	—	Mr. Saunders	7	10
Mr. Frere	30	6	Mr. Walters	32	99
Mr. Freshfield	1	2	Mr. Waterhouse	25	55
Mr. Godden	37	67	Mr. Williams	30	49
Mr. Gregory	23	23	Mr. Wing	13	12
Mr. Hollams	17	6	Mr. Bradley	—	—
Mr. Howlett	17	1	Mr. Cooper Healey	3	1
Mr. Hunter	29	86	Mr. Diver	—	—
Mr. Janson	13	1	Mr. Girand	6	—
Mr. Jevons	1	—	Mr. Hawkins	—	—
Mr. Keen	33	55	Sir T. Martineau	10	—
Mr. Lake	31	116	Mr. Mead-King	8	—
Mr. Laurence	13	3	Mr. Milne	1	—
Mr. Manisty	17	13	Mr. Shelly	—	—
Mr. Margetts	13	4	Mr. Tozer	—	—
Mr. Markby	25	61	*Mr. Dryland	9	1
Mr. Marshall	4	1	*Mr. Francis	4	2
			*Mr. Heelis	4	—
			*Mr. Woodhouse	4	—

* Retired in October.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

BILLS OF LADING.

A BILL of lading, if it is to be of any use either to an importer or a banker who may have made advances against the goods, ought to be at least a guarantee that the goods are on board the ship specified, and this was one of the points which was discussed at the recent International Cotton Conference at Liverpool. After a great deal of argument it was ultimately agreed that the bills of lading should be evidence against the shipowners, but that they should not be signed until the bales were either on board or practically in the custody of the people on the quay, and, therefore, such bills of lading will be what they ought to be—receipts for goods actually received or their equivalents. A resolution was also approved of providing that in case any bales shall be shut out of the vessel the shipowner is to have liberty to forward the same by another steamer, notice of which is to be sent to the consignee when practicable; and a resolution to charge freight on the actual gross invoice weight was also passed, and is likely to be of a useful character. To maritime lawyers the conference is of great interest, and a perusal of its proceedings will convey many useful hints. The old form of a bill of lading is very quaint and runs thus: 'I. W., No. 1, a. 20. Shipped by the grace of God in good order by A. B., merchant, in and upon the good ship called the John and Jane, whereof C. D. is master, now riding at anchor in the river of Thames, and bound for Barcelona, in Spain, twenty bales containing 100 pieces of broadcloth, marked and numbered as per margin, and are to be delivered in the like good order and condition at Barcelona aforesaid (the dangers of the seas excepted) unto E. F., merchant there, or to his assigns, he or they paying for the said goods, per piece freight with primage and average accustomed. In witness whereof the master or purser of the said ship hath affirmed to three bills of lading of this tenor and date, one of which bills being accomplished, the other two to stand void. And so God send the good ship to her designed port in safety. Dated at London, the day of .'

NOTICE REQUISITE IN WEEKLY TENANCIES.

Notice always has reference to the letting. Thus in a letting from week to week a clear week's notice, expiring on the day the rent becomes due, will be sufficient. That is the rule laid down in a popular text-book for every one. It does not seem, however, to have been followed in a recent case at Stockport, where a blacksmith was in the employment of a railway contractor who was constructing a railway, and occupied one of the huts provided for the convenience of the workmen. Plaintiff's tenancy began on a Thursday. The site of the hut being required for the erection of a station, notice was given on a Saturday to the plaintiff requiring him to give up possession on or before the following Saturday. Believing he should have notice from Thursday to Thursday, plaintiff remained in the house over the Saturday, and on the Monday defendant proceeded to take off the roof, and, of course, plaintiff questioned his right of interference. His advocate sought to show that the notice must expire at the end of a week, dating from the commencement of the tenancy, although it might not be necessary to give a full week's notice. His Honour, however, said he had very carefully considered the case of Jones v. Mills, which was the authority, and found that the judges did not entirely agree. One said a week's notice was necessary, but this was contested by two other judges, and the only thing definitely settled was that in a weekly tenancy there must be some reasonable notice. He held, therefore, that the notice in this case was a reasonable notice, and gave judgment for defendant.

DE ROS v. CUMMING.

Are you a collector of curious coincidences? If you be such a gatherer here is a sufficiently noticeable one. On February 10, 1836, there was tried in the Court of King's Bench, before the Lord Chief Justice of England, an action for defamation, the plaintiff being a noble lord and the defendant a gentleman of position and a member of Crockford's, Graham's, and the Bentinck clubs. The slander was to the effect that the noble plaintiff had cheated at cards. The leading counsel for the plaintiff was the Attorney-General of the day, Sir William Follet, who, in his opening speech, denounced the accusation of cheating as a deliberate conspiracy to ruin his client. After a great deal of unsavoury evidence the jury returned a verdict for the defendant, but what do you think was the name of the defendant? It was Cumming. No connection at all, I should say, of the unfortunate gentleman who as plaintiff has come to grief in the baccarat case; still the occurrence of the same name in two kindred actions, with so wide a gulf of time between them, is strange enough. Thus writes Mr. George Augustus Sala, in his 'Echoes of the Week,' in the Manchester Evening News of the 13th inst.: 'I read in the report of the trial of De Ros v. Cumming that "the case had excited much interest in fashionable circles," and the Court was excessively crowded. So you see that there is not much ground for the dolorous jeremiads to which we have had to listen lately about the presence of ladies of fashion at crapulous trials being an unmistakable symptom of the degeneracy of the age. The ladies flocked to the House of Lords when the Duchess of Kingston was tried for bigamy, and to the Old Bailey when the Rev. Dr. Dodd was tried for forgery. The last-named criminal was quite a fashionable lion. "My Lord Chesterfield's tutor; chaplain to the Magdalen Hospital, my dear; preached such sweet sermons. Ah! I thought so: Guilty. Have you a little more ratafia left in your flask, dear Lady Betty?" Bless the ladies! Why should they not amuse themselves whenever they have a mind thereto? I had a peep at the dear creatures last Monday in the Queen's Bench Division Court, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge presiding. The baccarat case was in full swing, and a portly matron, "beautifully gowned," as the society papers have it, was under examination or cross-examination; I'm sure I don't know which. I thought the proceeding the reverse of interesting, and found the stuffy atmosphere of the Court—redolent as it was with the mingled odours of forensic wig-powder, black bombazine, hair oil, and feminine scent-bottles to be rather provocative of headache. Still it was a sight to see the ladies, for whose accommodation rows of stalls had been arranged on the very bench to the right of the judge. How they seemed to be enjoying the trial, to be sure! There was only one thing lacking: it wanted music. A snatch from the gambling chorus in "Robert le Diable" would have been admirably appropriate. It was quite accidentally that I got into the Court. I had been summoned as a witness in an action before Mr. Justice Pollock, in which the compiler of a remarkable Slang Dictionary sued a well-known firm of printers for damages for breach of contract in having refused to continue the printing because a small percentage out of some thousands of words were unseemly ones. I had to wait a couple of hours before I was put into the witness-box to testify as an "expert," in bad language I suppose, to the merits of the work, but the learned Q.C. for the defence protested against my being heard. The learned judge upheld the objection, and I was sent about my business. I lost 5*l.* 1*s.* by the transaction, the shilling representing the cost of a lovely gardenia, which I had donned as a "button-hole" with a view to propitiate the jury. They had much better have listened to my evidence. I would have told them some most moving tales of a philological kind. As it was they were unable to agree upon a verdict, and were discharged. Wandering modestly about the darksome corridors of the ill-built and evil-smelling Palace of Justice, I chanced upon a friendly person in authority who had control over the doorkeepers of the Court in which the baccarat case was going on who knew me. There is an old proverb, you well remember, that "More people know Tom Fool than Tom Fool knows." The person in authority passed me into the Court, and I was able to soothe my wounded feelings—smarting under the cost of the 5*l.* 1*s.*—with the sweet spectacle of the ladies on the bench.'

CUMMING v. WILSON AND OTHERS.

Referring to this now notorious case in a local daily, Mr. C. T. Tallent-Bateman pertinently remarks that it is important that the legal aspect of this part of the case should be generally and promptly understood, otherwise misconceptions might be formed and errors disseminated which would be most injurious to the public interest. He then points out that (1) the offence of cheating at cards is (under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17) equivalent to obtaining money 'by a false pretence,' with intent to cheat or defraud; (2) the offence of obtaining money, &c., 'by any false pretence, with intent to defraud,' was, at the passing of the last-mentioned Act, and still is under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 8, a misdemeanour and not a felony. (3) It is not an offence to compound a misdemeanour, unless the latter is virtually an offence against the public. (4) It is, to say the least, an extenuating circumstance in the case in question that the 'compact' had not the corrupt or selfish elements usually associated with 'compounding,' for there is no suggestion that the other parties received, or stipulated to receive, from the offender any money, or goods, or other 'amends' as a consideration for the agreement. (5) Because no prosecution is instituted against all the parties to the agreement it must not, therefore, be assumed that the law is not impartial; we should the rather infer that the authorities are satisfied that the plaintiff's misdemeanour (practically established by the verdict) was against the private individuals and not against the public generally, and that, consequently, there has been no offence of 'compounding.' With this useful statement of the law on the subject it is, perhaps, about time to allow this case to rest.

A STUDENT'S RIGHT TO HIS DEGREE.

The Supreme Court of the State of New York has had a curious case before it for decision—namely, whether a student has a right to a degree. It appears that a Mr. Thomas Cecil, a student of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, claimed that, having complied with all the requisite preliminary conditions for a degree, he was entitled to be examined for it. The secretary to the faculty told him that he could not be permitted to sit for final examination nor consequently take his degree. The question was, therefore, had the college authorities a right arbitrarily to withhold a degree from a student, and, if so, must they produce their reasons; for they claimed that the granting of the degree was totally within their discretion, and their action could not be gainsaid? The judge of the Supreme Court held, however, that when a student has complied with the rules and regulations of the college, and with all the conditions upon which it agrees to confer degrees, he has a contract right to his degree which cannot be denied without good reason. An institution cannot take the money of a student, allow him to remain and use his time, and then arbitrarily refuse to confer on him the degree which they have promised. While a Court cannot review the discretion of a college in refusing for a definite reason to allow a student to be examined and receive a degree, yet in case of an arbitrary refusal there is no exercise of discretion at all, but simply a wilful violation of duty. Whether the English Courts would follow this ruling remains to be seen; at all events the Yankee student has got a neat little decision to his own heart, and very proud of it he ought to be.

A GUIDE TO THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE.

A guide to the principal classes of documents preserved in the Public Record Office has been prepared by Mr. S. R. Feargill-Bird, and issued as a Government publication. The records of the superior Courts of law and of special and abolished jurisdictions, State papers and departmental records are digested and arranged in alphabetical order, the various classes of documents bearing on the same subject being brought together irrespective of the Courts or offices to which they belong. The more easily defined classes, such as accounts, Chancery enrolments, charters and grants, inquisitions, leases, surveys, and rentals, treaties, &c. are referred to under their respective titles, whilst others, including many hitherto known only as 'miscellanea,' are classified under the subjects to which they relate, such as army and navy ecclesiastical measures, feudal tenures, taxation, &c. 'The Guide,' states the Estates Gazette, 'is likely to be of considerable use not only to members of the legal profession, who at present make the most use of the searching-rooms of the Record Office, but to students of history and economics generally.'

MR. ALLEN ERNEST M'ADAM, of 6 East India Avenue, Leadenhall Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. M'Adam was admitted in 1883.

TWO HUNDRED YEARS UNCLAIMED.

MR. SIDNEY H. PRESTON, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

Permit me to call your readers' attention to a recent remarkable notice, calling for the representatives of the proprietors of shares in the West New Jersey Society, in consequence of no dividends having been paid thereon for nearly 200 years—namely, since 1692. The following are the names of the proprietors:—

Joseph Collyer, Matthew Gibson (playing-card maker), Josiah Davies, Peter Delannoy, Peter Fowks, Nathaniel Gifford, Benjamin Levy, Joseph Micklethwait, Thomas Miller, Thomas Morris, Edward West, Joseph Syms, and Shove family.

The 'windfalls' for the descendants of these stockholders must therefore be very large, as in the case of Burn v. The Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, decided a few years since, the plaintiff, a descendant of an original stockholder for 100*l.* in the corporation, succeeded in making good his title to the 100*l.* and dividends accrued thereon since 1760, making in all a sum of no less than 3,600*l.*

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, June 29.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Tuesday, June 30.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Wednesday, July 1.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Thursday, July 2.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Friday, July 3.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Saturday, July 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

MR. EDWARD JAMES NEVILLE (of the firm of Danger & Neville), of Liverpool, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Neville was admitted in 1885.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JUNE 29 TO JULY 4.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	June 29	June 30	July 1	July 2	July 3	July 4
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Runcorn	Altrincham	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	—	—	Bakewell	Chapel-en-le-Frith	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—

House of Lords Register.

Coram LORD HERSCHELL, LORD WATSON, and LORD MORRIS.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18.

Stewart v. Robinson (glebe land—boundaries. Appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland, reported 27 Scot. Law Rep. 819).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19.

Stewart v. Robinson.—Dismissed.

Welch v. Tennent (husband and wife—domicile of spouses—English marriage—wife's real estate in England—conflict of laws—sale of such real estate—conversion—jus mariti. Appeal from Court of Session in Scotland, reported 16 Rettie, 'Court of Session Cases,' 876).—Part heard.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.

Welch v. Tennent.—Cur. adv. vult.

Dewar v. Wotherspoon (lunacy—curator bonis—validity of appointment—no cognition before a jury. Appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland, reported 28 Scot. Law Rep. p. 85).—Part heard; stand over.

Coram THE LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD WATSON, LORD BRAMWELL, LORD HERSCHELL, LORD MACNAGHTEN, and LORD MORRIS.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23.

Little v. Port Talbot Company (The Apollo) (ship—dock—harbour master—damage to ship—liability—case re-argued).—Cur. adv. vult.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18.

Evelyn v. Hurlbert (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Cave, J., with jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19.

Evelyn v. Hurlbert.—Cur. adv. vult.

SATURDAY, JUNE 20.

Evelyn v. Hurlbert.—Refused.

Hood v. Brown (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated April 23, at trial before Wills, J., and common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.

Lovering v. City of London and Southwark Subway Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated February 17, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Pinto and another v. Trott & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of Day, J., dated January 22, at trial with special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23.

Tinkler v. Smith and another (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Grantham, J., dated February 14, at trial (jury discharged) in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Dearne and Dove Steel Company (Lim.) v. Phœnix Railway Carriage and Wagon Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Mathew, J., dated March 17, at trial without a jury at York).—Allowed.

Clark v. Dawber (appeal of defendant from judgment of Mathew, J., dated March 23, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24.

Patrick v. Dear (appeal of defendant Dear from judgment of Mathew, J., dated March 23, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Dismissed.

Dodson & Co. v. Robinson & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated March 24, at trial without a jury at Liverpool).—Judgment varied.

Caswell v. Sheen and others (appeal of defendants from judgment of Cave, J., dated April 1, at trial without a jury at Stafford).—Dismissed.

Coburn v. Great Northern Railway Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Hawkins, J., dated April 10, directing nonsuit at trial with a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 18.

Lethbridge and another v. Harris and another (appeal of defendants from judgment of Mathew, J., dated February 2, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Nash v. Cunard Steam Ship Co. (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated February 2, affirming judgment of County Court).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 19.

Taylor v. Taylor (appeal of respondent (Marie Taylor) from order of Jeune, J., dated June 9, dismissing petition and refusing application of respondent for costs and alimony).—Allowed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 20.

Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. (Lim.) v. The International Company of Mexico (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., dated Feb. 4, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Cur. adv. vult.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, JUNE 22.

Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others (appeal of defendants Raymond and Reid from judgment of Mathew, J., dated February 11, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JUNE 23.

Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others.—Cur. adv. vult.

Brinckworth v. Pentelow (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Grantham, J., dated February 7, at trial without a jury at Northampton).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24.

Attorney-General v. Vestry of St. James and St. John, Clerkenwell (appeal of defendants from refusal of North, J., dated June 8, of order for further and better particulars of claim).—Dismissed.

Aplin v. Willey and another (appeal of plaintiffs from refusal of North, J., dated June 15, of order of trial of action with a jury on the Western Circuit).—Dismissed.

In re Worswick, dec. Robson v. Worswick (appeal of Chaplains and Poor of Wyggeston Hospital, Leicester, from refusal of North, J., dated June 19, of order for trial by official referee).—Allowed.

Bishop v. Southern Counties Deposit Bank (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Wright, J., dated February 11, at trial in Middlesex (jury discharged) damages agreed if judgment set aside).—Dismissed.

Cross v. Roberts (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated February 18, at trial without a jury in Middlesex and cross notice of contention by plaintiff).—Part heard.

BAR COMMITTEE.—At a meeting of the Bar Committee, held at the Luncheon Room, Lincoln's Inn, on Tuesday last, Sir Henry James was re-elected chairman; Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., vice-chairman; Mr. E. P. Wolstenholme, treasurer; and Mr. S. H. Lofthouse, hon. secretary. The following resolution was also passed: "That, it having been represented to the Bar Committee that cases exist in which the sons of County Court judges are in the habit of practising before their fathers, the Bar Committee desire to record their opinion that such a system should be as far as possible discouraged, and that copies of this resolution be sent to the Lord Chancellor and the Attorney-General."

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. RICHARD ROACH PITTIS, J.P., of Newport, Isle of Wight, has been appointed Official Receiver in Bankruptcy for the district of the Isle of Wight, rendered vacant by the transfer of Mr. Wheeler. Mr. Pittis, who was an honour man, was admitted in 1873.

Mr. Robert Pearson, jun., of Helmsley, Yorks, has been appointed Clerk to the Guardians, the Sanitary Authority, School Attendance Committee, and Assessment Committee of the Helmsley Poor Law Union, and Superintendent Registrar of Births, &c., for the Unions of Helmsley and Kirbymoorside, all in succession to his late father, Mr. Robert Pearson, sen., who died on May 22 last. Mr. Pearson, who is also Registrar of the Helmsley County Court, was admitted in 1883, and is a partner in the firm of Messrs. Hugh W. & R. Pearson, of Malton, Helmsley, and Kirbymoorside.

Mr. Edward Vernor Miles, of 30 Theobald's Road, Bedford Row, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Miles was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Edward Niel Baynes, of 61 Lincoln's Inn Fields, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Baynes was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Wm. M'Kay (of the firm of Ward, Perks & M'Kay), of 85 Gracechurch Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. M'Kay was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Walter Hills, of Margate, has been appointed by his Honour Judge Selfe to be registrar of the County Court of Margate, in the place of Mr. Egerton Isaacson, deceased, and his appointment has been approved by the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Francis Ogden, of Manchester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Ogden was admitted in 1887.

Mr. Benjamin Houldsworth Lomax, of St. Helens, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lomax was admitted in 1885.

Mr. John Pethybridge, of Bodmin, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Pethybridge was admitted in 1883.

Mr. James Marshall Allan Poncia, of Brighton, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Poncia was admitted in 1883.

ACTION AGAINST A COUNTY COURT REGISTRAR.—At the County Court, Plymouth, on June 16, before Judge Edge, Mr. Petherick Higman, farmer, recovered from Mr. Albert C. L. Glubb, registrar of Liskeard County Court, the full penalty of 50*l.*, under section 41 of the County Court Act, 1888, which provides that no registrar or other officer of the County Court shall be concerned in any proceedings as solicitor or agent for any party. The evidence showed that in his private business Mr. Glubb was assisted by his son, who was admitted two years ago. Mr. Glubb, senior, paid his son no remuneration, but the latter saw his father's clients and advised them. When a case resulted in a County Court action the son took the proceedings in hand. It was proved that in one action the registrar was, in the opinion of his client, his solicitor from the beginning to the end of the case, and thus actually adjudicated in a case in which he was directly concerned. The defence was that the registrar took nothing but a father's interest in the affairs of his son, who carried on a quite distinct business, and that the son practised in the Liskeard County Court at the invitation of the late Judge Morgan Howard.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

BYLES on Bills. Fifteenth Edition. London: Sweet & Maxwell. 1891.

Emden's Practice and Forms in Winding up Companies. Fourth Edition. London: W. Clowes & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

Index of Cases Judicially Noticed, 1865–90. By G. J. Talbot and Hugh Fort, Barristers-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.); Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

Law of Tithes and Tithe Rent-charge (The). By E. F. Studd, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

Patents for Inventions and how to Procure them. By G. G. M. Hardingham. London: Crosby Lockwood & Son. 1891.

LORD TRURO'S WILL.—Probate duty has been paid on 33,350*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.*, as the net value of the personal estate of Colonel the Right Hon. Charles Robert Claude, Baron Truro, of 29 Dover Street, Piccadilly, and Falconwood, Shooter's Hill, who died at the Hotel Eden, Rome, on March 27, aged seventy-five years. Lord Truro's will bears date July 8, 1890, and the executors are Mr. Arthur Edwin Quekett, of 29 Delamere Crescent, Paddington, and Mr. Charles Alfred Wood, of 40 Cheapside, solicitor. The testator devises and bequeaths all his real and personal estate in trust, so much of the income thereof to be applied as the trustees may think necessary for the benefit of his ward, Emily Mowbray, until she is twenty-one years of age, when the income and accumulations of income are to be paid to her for her life, but with liberty on her marriage to raise such sum as may be necessary for her own use and benefit. Subject as above stated and to her life interest, the estate is to be held in trust to her appointment in favour of her children, or, in the event of her death without leaving issue, for Lord Truro's nephew, Thomas Montague Morrison Wilde.

GRAY'S INN.—Saturday, June 13, being the Grand Day of Trinity Term, the treasurer (Mr. Arthur Beetham) and benchers of Gray's Inn entertained at dinner the following guests: The United States Minister, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Saye and Sele, the Lord Chief Justice of England, Mr. Justice Charles, General Sir Charles Arbuthnot, the President of the Royal Society (Sir William Thomson), Sir H. Trueman Wood, Admiral Lindesay Brine, Mr. Forwood, M.P., the President of the Incorporated Law Society (Mr. Cunliffe), the Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal (the Rev. Edgar Sheppard), the President of the Institution of Civil Engineers (Mr. Berkeley), the Rev. Dr. Stokoe, and Dr. Godfrey; and the Masters of the Bench present, in addition to the treasurer, were the Duke of Connaught, Mr. Henry Griffith, the Hon. Sir Arthur Collins, Q.C. (Chief Justice of Madras), Mr. Hugh Shield, Q.C., Mr. W. Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., M.P., Mr. James Sheil, Mr. W. D. Jeremy, Mr. Charles Forbes, Mr. John Rose, his Honour Judge Paterson, Mr. E. H. Power, Mr. James Mulligan, Mr. Miles W. Mattinson, M.P., Mr. J. C. Lewis Coward, and the Rev. J. H. Lupton.

THE COINAGE.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer's Coinage Bill proposes that it shall be lawful for the Queen by Order in Council to direct that gold coins of the realm which have not been called in by proclamation and are below the least current weight as provided by the Coinage Act of 1870, shall be exchanged or paid for by or on behalf of the Mint at their nominal value. This, however, will only be done if the coins have not been 'illegally dealt with;' and for the purposes of the bill a gold coin will be deemed to have been illegally dealt with where it has been impaired, diminished, or lightened otherwise than by fair wear and tear, or has been defaced by having any name, word, device, or number stamped thereon, whether the coin has or has not been thereby diminished or lightened. In a sovereign or half-sovereign, loss of weight exceeding three grains from the standard weight is to be primâ facie evidence that the coin has been impaired, diminished, or lightened otherwise than by fair wear and tear. The exchange is to be carried out subject to such conditions as to time, manner, and order of presentation as may be mentioned in the order. Towards meeting the expenses of the exchange of coinage the sum of 400,000*l.* is to be charged on and issued from the Consolidated Fund in the year ending March 31 next. So far as not immediately required, the sum may be invested in such manner as the Treasury may direct, and any interest thereon is to be applied for the purposes of the bill. In the making of coins a 'remedy' (or variation from the standard weight and fineness) is allowed of an amount not exceeding that specified in a schedule of the Coinage Act of 1870. It is proposed by the bill to increase these 'remedy allowances' in the case of some coins.

BUSINESS IN CHAMBERS.—On Wednesday, June 17, an application was made to Mr. Justice Chitty to restore to his paper for hearing in chambers a summons which came on for hearing on Monday last, and was then struck out. It appeared that the solicitor of one of the parties alone attended in chambers, and had asked that the summons might be adjourned for a week. His lordship said that it frequently happened that when summonses were before him in chambers some of those parties who ought to appear before him did not attend. In one case not even a solicitor's clerk attended, and he was kept waiting doing nothing for half-an-hour. This was exceedingly inconvenient. He was not now speaking so much of inconvenience to himself, although the result was that he had to read the papers a second time. The non-attendance he was complaining of occasioned general inconvenience, and also expense and delay. He had stated on Monday last that he would not grant an application made to him in chambers of the present nature, and he directed the application to be made to him in open Court. He would grant the present application, but he would not allow the costs of it.

MARRIAGES.

On June 1, at Monckton Hall, Musselburgh, N.B., Thomas Henry Armstrong, M.A., Solicitor, Edinburgh, to Nellie, daughter of the late John Gulland.

On June 17, at Olney, Bucks, Archibald Allen, Solicitor, Olney, to Emily Maud, youngest daughter of the Rev. J. P. Langley, Vicar of Olney.

On June 23, at St. Giles's, Edinburgh, David Forsyth, Solicitor, Elgin, to Annie Glover, only daughter of the late David William Murray, Aberdeen Park, London.

DEATHS.

On May 29, at his residence, Melrose, Sandycombe Road, Kew Gardens, of pneumonia, following influenza, Thomas M'Millin, Solicitor, in his 53rd year.

On May 31, at Wingfield, Stoke, near Devonport, Henry Charles Fox, son of the late Charles Fox, Esq., of Plymouth and Blackheath, and grandson of the late Robert Bayly, Esq., Q.C., of the Inner Temple aged 50 years.

On June 18, at Glen Lyn, Lordship Lane, S.E., late of Blackheath, Eliza Pain, the dearly beloved wife of Julius Samuel Miller, Solicitor, in her 48th year.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE profession will hear with much regret that Mr. Justice Butt has been ordered by his medical advisers to return at once to Wiesbaden for the benefit of his health, and that his lordship will not sit in Court again this side of the Long Vacation. Mr. Justice Jeune will dispose of the Admiralty business during the absence of the President, and Mr. Justice Collins has been temporarily attached to the Probate and Divorce Division, and, after disposing of the Probate special jury causes, will deal with the cases in the Divorce list.

ACCORDING to an evening contemporary, the President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division will resign directly an Act is passed amending the Judicature Act in such a way as to enable a judge to be appointed President other than the junior judge of the Division. It is also stated that Mr. Justice Smith will then be appointed President. We are aware of no authority for these statements, but Mr. Justice Jeune was so recently appointed to the bench that it may probably be thought that some senior judge should be promoted, while there can be no doubt that the appointment of Mr. Justice Smith would be a popular one with the profession.

WE are certainly disposed to agree with the opinion expressed by the bar committee at their annual meeting that the sons of County Court judges should be discouraged from practising before their fathers. It is obviously not in accordance with the best traditions of the bar that they should do so. Such a practice must of necessity give rise to a suspicion of partiality on the part of the judge, and although the suspicion may be perfectly groundless, it would seem most undesirable to make it possible to entertain it.

AT the recent Bedford Assizes, a prisoner on his trial for rape, after giving evidence himself in denial of the charge, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, proposed to call one of the jurors as a witness to his character. Mr. Justice Williams declined to allow the juror to be sworn, but said that he might give his fellow-jurors the benefit of his knowledge in deliberating on the verdict, and this having been done, the jury acquitted the prisoner. We have much doubt whether the practice pursued was in accordance with precedent. It appears to be a settled rule (see 'Best on Evidence,' 7th edit. p. 193) that a juryman may be a witness for either of the parties to a cause which he is trying, and 'it is essential that this should be so, as otherwise persons in possession of valuable evidence would be excluded if placed on the jury panel, and might even be fraudulently placed there for the purpose of excluding their testimony.' It is said, too (see 'Starkie on Evidence,' 3rd edit. p. 542), that if a juror know any facts material to the issue he ought to be sworn as a witness, and if he privately state such facts, it will be ground of motion for a new trial. The rule was applied to a criminal trial in Regina v. Rosser, 7 C. & P. 648; and though we can find no instance of its being applied to a witness merely to character, we cannot but think that it ought to be applied to such a witness, on the ground that the test of cross-examination cannot be properly employed to testimony privately given in the jury-box. It is true, no doubt, that witnesses to character are seldom cross-examined, but their liability to cross-examination is undoubted. Moreover, if evidence as to character be given privately in the jury-box, there will not be the same facility for the prosecution, under 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 111, giving evidence, if they should happen to possess it, that the prisoner has been previously convicted of felony.

'IN the Berkeley Peerage Case,' so it is said in 'Taylor on Evidence,' 8th edit. vol. ii. p. 1175, in reference, no doubt, to the case heard at the beginning of the present century, 'counsel entertained some idea of calling the Prince Regent as a witness, but it ultimately became unnecessary to do so.' In the Berkeley Peerage Case which is now being heard before the Privileges Committee of the House of Lords, a letter signed by George IV. was held inadmissible, but without any direct overruling of Abignye v. Clifton, Hol. 213, in which the simple certificate of James I. as to what passed in his hearing was admitted in evidence in the lifetime of His Majesty. Abignye v. Clifton, however, is a case which has been very much questioned (see 'Best on Evidence,' 7th edit. p. 185), and the better opinion seems to be that the evidence of the sovereign, if given at all, must be given on oath (see Taylor, citing 2 Lord Campbell's 'Lives of the Chancellors,' 510). It is, of course, perfectly clear, as was pointed out by Baron Parke in The Attorney-General v. Radloff, 10 Ex. p. 94, that the sovereign cannot be compelled to give evidence, and we think it to be equally clear that the deduction of Baron Parke from this, to the effect that the sovereign cannot be a witness at all, was quite unsound. The fact, however, remains undoubted that in no case has the sovereign yet appeared as a witness, and that Charles I. took upon himself to direct the judges of his day to leave the question of admissibility of his evidence an undetermined one in point of law.

BY Mr. Ritchie's County Council Elections Bill it is proposed that March 8 shall be the ordinary day of election of county councillors, instead of November 1, as at present, under section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and section 52 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882; that all periods which in the enactments of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, are computed by reference to November 1 shall, so far as those enactments apply to county councils, be computed by reference to March 8 then next following; that the county register shall be completed before December 20 and come into operation on January 1; and that the burgess lists, forming the burgess roll, which come into operation on November 1 (see section 45 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882) 'shall on and after that day, until the next January 1, form part of the county register in substitution for the former burgess lists.' It is also proposed that, 'for the purpose of the elections of county councillors for any electoral division which is co-extensive with, or wholly comprised in, a municipal borough,' the mayor of the borough shall be the returning officer. The bill, which is occasioned by the impossibility of getting the registers ready in time for elections in November next, and which it had been intended to obviate the necessity of by a certain long ago dropped County Electors Registration Acceleration Bill, is expressed to be a permanent, not a temporary, one, as might have been expected. By what are called 'transitory provisions' it is proposed, as of course would be necessary, that the county councillors, whose term of office at present expires in November next, shall continue in office until the next following day of election fixed by the bill. It is much to be regretted that the bill should have become necessary.

THE concluding paragraph of clause 14 of the Stamp Duties Bill (see ante, p. 328), which substantially reproduces in other respects section 17 of the Stamp Act, 1870, contains an alteration of considerable importance. It is pretty well known that, though under that enactment no unstamped document shall, except as in the Act mentioned, 'except in criminal proceedings, be pleaded or given in evidence, or admitted to be good, useful, or available in law or equity' (words which reproduce those of 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 21, s. 11), the Courts have held that for 'collateral purposes,' as to prove an illegal consideration for a debt (Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361), unstamped documents may be admissible. But by the bill it is proposed to provide that no unstamped document shall, except on payment of unpaid duty and penalty, and except in criminal proceedings, 'be given in evidence or be available for any purpose whatever.' These words will effect a very material change, and sweep away the judge-made law (whether right or wrong) in which unstamped documents have been held to be admissible 'for collateral purposes.' Can the alteration be reasonably objected to? We think not, and for this reason: It is already provided by section 54 of the Act of 1870 that any person taking an unstamped promissory note 'shall not be entitled to recover thereon, or to make the same available for any purpose whatever,' and this enactment received a strict construction in the recent case of Ashling v. Boon, in which Mr. Justice Kekewich, following Green v. Davies, 4 B. & C. 235, and distinguishing Evans v. Prothero, 1 D. M. & G. 572, held that a promissory note, insufficiently stamped, cannot be admitted in evidence to prove the receipt of the money for which the note was given.

THE case of Osborne v. The Skinners' Company (26 Notes of Cases, 107) has called attention to another instance of the remarkably careless manner in which Parliamentary drafting is now performed. Part 2 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70) is the offending statute. Hitherto there have been two separate classes of Acts dealing in different ways with different branches of this subject. On the one hand were the Artisans Dwellings Acts, in which, amidst more important provisions for the erection of such dwellings on a large scale, power was given to local authorities to take action in the case of houses unfit for human habitation, and to remedy the evil by ordering structural alterations or improvements, or, if necessary, by demolition. On the other hand were the Nuisance Removal and Public Health Acts, by which the more trivial nuisances of blocked drains, bad ventilation, and the like were intended to be dealt with. For these two different classes of Acts two different definitions of the expression 'owner' of the premises were, as became their subject-matter, adopted. In the former, lessees were included in the term only if they had an interest in the premises of twenty-one years or more (Artisans Dwellings Act, 1868, s. 3). In the latter, the word included any person receiving a rack-rent from the occupier either on his own account or as trustee or agent (Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 2; Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4; Cook v. Montagu, 41 Law J. Rep. M. C. 119). In other words, the structural alteration was enforceable against the freeholder, the remedy of the temporary nuisance against the rack-renter. In these circumstances the draftsman of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, proceeded to his task, and, having first, in section 29, inserted the definition of 'owner' from the Artisans Dwellings Act, 1868, he in section 32 adopted a few clauses from the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, which for the sake of variety, we presume, he relegated to a schedule. In Osborne v. The Skinners' Company (ubi sup.) the Divisional Court decided, as they were clearly bound to do, that the definition of section 29, and not that of the Nuisances Removal Act, was to be looked to in the interpretation of these sections. The result is that a local authority may now, upon a representation being made that a house is unfit for human habitation owing to some trivial nuisance, proceed against the owner of the ground-rent for the closing of the house. But, further, previous Acts require, in one form or other, that notice shall be given to the person affected of the actual nuisance or defect complained of and the particular work required to be done. In the case of important alterations the Artisans Dwellings Act, 1868, contains elaborate provisions for the supply of a plan, specification, and estimate of cost to the owner without charge. The draftsman of the Act of 1890 appears to have considered such details as surplusage. The single form of notice in schedule 4, which, by the way, from its very wording is only applicable elsewhere than in London, simply requires the owner 'to make the said premises fit for human habitation.' The freeholder must, therefore, discover the evil and the remedy for himself. Meanwhile, the occupiers of the premises will have been removed under section 32, and a reasonable allowance on account of their expenses in removing have become a civil debt due from them to the local authority, recoverable summarily. Finally, in section 36, the draftsman decided to reproduce bodily section 25 of the Artisans' Dwellings Act, by which a charging order is to be granted to an owner when he has completed 'any works required to be executed by an order of a local authority under this part of this Act.' As 'this part of this Act' does not give a local authority power to require the execution of any works, as the Act from which the section is taken does, the freeholder may find this section somewhat delusive. The fact that a Court may, and probably will, give a meaning to this section is no excuse for the insertion of a provision which, literally, certainly has no meaning.

IN the case of In re an Arbitration between Williams and Stepney (noted last week) the Court of Appeal differed from a Divisional Court, consisting of Mr. Justice Mathew and Mr. Justice Day, upon the important question whether the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), is applicable to an arbitration under an agreement entered into before the Act came into operation. A mining lease granted in 1839 contained an arbitration clause, which, however, gave no power to the arbitrators to award costs. A dispute having arisen in 1890, subsequent to the coming into operation of the Act, it was referred to three arbitrators, who made an award giving costs to the successful party. The question turned entirely upon sections 2 and 25 of the Act. The Divisional Court were of opinion that these provisions gave no power to the arbitrators to award costs; but the Court of Appeal, consisting of Lord Esher, M.R., and Lords Justices Lopes and Kay, took a different view, holding that section 25 applied the provisions of the whole of the Act to arbitrations begun after the commencement of the Act under any agreement made before it came into operation, and that the arbitrators had, therefore, power to give costs by reason of section 2.

A BALANCE-ORDER for payment of calls on shares in a company is a process for enforcing a previous order relating to calls, and is made upon such of the contributories as have made default, or such of them against whom it is thought proper to make such order. In the recent case of The Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Company (Lim.) v. Fielden (Notes of Cases, p. 103) it was decided by Mr. Justice Kekewich that an action lies by the liquidator in the name of a company which is in course of being wound up against a contributory for moneys owing on the allotment of his shares, and for calls made on his shares before the winding-up, notwithstanding that the liquidator has obtained a balance-order in the winding-up for payment of the same moneys under section 101 of the Companies Act, 1862, but that no action lies on the balance-order itself. That decision has been affirmed by the Court of Appeal, their lordships holding that a balance-order is not equivalent to a judgment, and does not operate as a merger of the original debt; and, further, that the Legislature, in providing this summary remedy, did not intend to take away the ordinary remedies of the liquidator. In Chalk Webb & Co. (Lim.) v. Tennent, 57 L. T. (N.S.) 598, it was decided by Mr. Justice North that no action could be brought upon a balance-order. In that case the calls in respect of which the balance-order had been made were made in the winding-up, whereas in The Westmoreland, &c. Co. v. Fielden they were made before the commencement of the winding-up. Mr. Justice North's decision was accordingly sought to be distinguished on that ground, but without success. It seems clear that in actions of this nature the liquidator is not suing upon the balance-order, but on the previous obligation in respect of the allotment-money and calls. It would be manifestly wrong, therefore, to treat the liquidator as barred by the balance-order from taking further proceedings against a defaulting contributory.

THE new scheme of the Inns of Court will not, we hope, be finally adopted without a reconsideration of the question raised by the late Master of the Rolls, when Solicitor-General in 1872, whether it would not be desirable to admit to the lectures 'not only students of the Inns of Court, but gentlemen not intending to follow the law as a profession, and even members of Parliament.' Anyone can become a student of an Inn of Court, and the late Master of the Rolls suggested that the present tax imposed on entry should be remitted, 'so far as regarded those students who made a declaration that they did not intend to follow the law as a profession.' Commenting on this, we wrote many years ago (see LAW JOURNAL for March 8, 1872) with approval of the suggestion that the tax should be remitted in such cases, as 'we should be glad to see the knowledge of law in its outlines and leading principles widely disseminated among the educated classes.' And we still think that there is much to be said for the establishment, by the Inns of Court, of a system of lectures 'public' in the widest sense of the term.

SIR WILFRID LAWSON, himself a justice of the peace, appealed through the Times to the public for subscriptions towards the costs of the justices of the peace who originally decided the case of Sharp v. Wakefield in the same way as the House of Lords eventually decided, and the requisite amount was at once subscribed. Sir Wilfrid puts the costs at about 600*l*. How the justices could possibly have become liable for these or any costs utterly passes our comprehension. The licensing justices, the quarter sessions, the High Court, the Court of Appeal, and the House of Lords successively, five Courts in number, without any dissentient voice, pronounced the same decision; and it seems so utterly opposed to all justice as well as to all precedent that the licensing justices should have to pay any costs (for it is only in very rare cases that justices have to pay costs, even if they should happen to have decided wrongly, as we recently [ante, p. 344] pointed out), that we cannot help thinking that there must be some mistake. Should it turn out to be really the fact that the justices who originally decided Sharp v. Wakefield became personally liable for the costs of that celebrated appeal, and should this fact become generally known, we cannot but think that the office of justice will cease to be considered a desirable one.

THE right of admittance to the Courts, on which we published letters last week (ante, p. 436), no doubt requires more definite settlement. The main obstacle to its settlement is, that it is only occasionally, say once or twice a year, that 'unoccupied' professional men, be they barristers, solicitors, or law students, can find themselves disputing for admission with the public, or any limited portion of it, admitted by ticket. When the occasion for any dispute has ceased, the dispute dies a natural death till a new occasion arises. We incline to think that the public ought to have the gallery, the whole gallery, and nothing but the gallery, except standing room on the floor, and that after the most careful provision made for the 'occupied' counsel and solicitors, the rest of the Court ought to be divided amongst the unoccupied counsel and solicitors, the reporters and the law students, reporters especially being entitled to special consideration. There would be great practical difficulty, however, in working such a scheme of appropriation.

THE sub-treasurer of the Inner Temple has written a letter to the press explaining that the difficulty as to payment for admission to the 'Maske of Flowers' last week arose from the fact that the promoters of the performance only learnt at the last moment that a theatrical license was requisite, and that as it was then too late to take any steps to obtain one, they resolved to avoid even a technical breach of the law, and to make the admission free. No objection whatever was raised by the County Council. A license for the performance has now, however, been obtained from the Lord Chamberlain, and the second representation of the revival will take place in the Inner Temple Hall on Monday next, at 8.30 P.M. It was intended that the performance should have been given on Tuesday last, and it is announced that the tickets issued for that occasion will be available on Monday.

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR JULY.

THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS for July contain nearly 100 pages of Chancery cases (pp. 377–472), of which there are ten cases in the Appeal Court and four cases decided by the several judges of that Division. Twenty-seven cases in the Queen's Bench Division (fourteen of them on appeal and one in the House of Lords) cover from p. 361 to p. 456; and there is also a small instalment of five Probate cases (pp. 40–56). The number also contains Orders and Rules under the Winding-up and Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Acts and the Statutes of the Realm (ch. 8 to ch. 19 inclusive).

In the Chancery Division, in the case of Roberts v. Cooper, the Court of Appeal adjusted a conflict of claims between a wife insisting on her equity to a settlement and the assignees of her reversionary interest. In Elve v. Boyton a company created by royal charter was held to be within an investment clause which authorised the application of the funds to the shares of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament. In re Leavesley decided questions as to the efficacy of charging orders obtained by judgment creditors of a lunatic. In re The Johannesburg Hotel Company was a case of cross-claims between two companies, one of which was in liquidation and had been promoted by the other. In re Porrett was a case in which the registrar of the Liverpool District Registry was held by the Court of Appeal, reversing Mr. Justice Kekewich, to have exceeded his authority in making an order on a petition of course for delivery and taxation of a bill of costs of a solicitor living at Sheffield, who had been employed by a company having its registered office at Liverpool to take legal proceedings in London. In re Lacon was a decision of the Court of Appeal in which the presumption against double portions was rebutted. In the winding-up of The Bridgewater Navigation Company the Court of Appeal varied the order of Mr. Justice North in respect of the distribution among different classes of shareholders of the surplus assets of the undertaking which had been sold. In The Whitwood Chemical Company v. Hardman the Court of Appeal dissolved an injunction which had been granted by Mr. Justice Kekewich restraining a company's manager from setting up and becoming a director of a rival company, as in the agreement made between the manager and the plaintiff company there was no stipulation against his doing any particular thing. In In re Radcliffe the Court declined to order the transfer to a father of the moiety of a fund subject to a power of appointment on which, after the death of one of his two sons, the father had released the power. In re Slevin involved the application of the cy-près doctrine, where the charity to which a legacy had been bequeathed had ceased to exist before the legacy was paid over, though it existed at the testator's death. Angus v. Clifford was an action of deceit, in which the Court of Appeal applied the doctrine of Derry v. Peek, and refused, reversing Mr. Justice Romer, to hold directors liable for statements in a prospectus untrue in fact, but not made with fraudulent intent, the prospectus having been issued before the passing of the Directors' Liability Act. In re Scott was a case of the application of the Infants' Settlement Act, 1855, to an illegitimate infant who died leaving a husband surviving. In re The Opera Company was an adjudication of the conflicting claims of the sheriff and the official liquidator of a company, in which the latter, as the officer of the Court, was restrained from taking advantage of a mistake in law made by the former. In re Jeffery was a case of will-construction with respect to contingent gifts and the operation of section 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

In the Queen's Bench Division the House of Lords held, in Holliday v. The Mayor, &c. of Wakefield, that under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, compensation for the prospective prevention of the working of a mine by reason of leakage from a reservoir cannot be awarded at any time before the working has approached the limits mentioned in section 22. In Learoyd v. Brook a master was held to have been justified in dismissing an apprentice for misconduct without returning any part of the premium. Ex parte Ohlson and Ex parte Garland were cases of exemption from obtaining licenses under the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872. Regina v. The County Council of Norfolk defined the limits of the powers of highway authorities, of highway districts or areas, and of district commissioners under a local Act and the construction of the Highway and Locomotives Act, 1878. In Phelps v. Hill the Court of Appeal held that when a ship is forced to put back for repairs the master must not make a greater deviation from the proper course of the voyage than is reasonably necessary. In Clink v. Rudford the Court of Appeal interpreted the lesser clause of a charterparty and the consequences of detention at a port of loading in respect of demurrage and lien. Crumbie v. The Wallsend Local Board defined the meaning of the words 'the accruing of the cause of the action' in the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 264. Shepherd v. Berges explained the meaning and application of a re-entry clause in a lease. In In re Mirams it was held that a charge on his income created in favour of a creditor by a workhouse chaplain was not invalid on the ground of public policy, as the office was not a public office, inasmuch as the pay came out of local and not out of national funds. Unwin (petitioner) v. Macmullen (respondent) was a case of qualification to be enrolled as a burgess under section 9 (e) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction in such a case to hear an appeal. According to Selig v. Lyon, where a trustee in bankruptcy refused to continue an action in which the bankrupt was plaintiff, and submitted to a stay of proceedings, the bankrupt, having obtained his discharge and obtained an assignment from the trustees of this chose in action, was held not to be entitled to have the stay removed. In Miller v. Dell the question was the date at which the Statute of Limitations, in somewhat peculiar circumstances, began to run. In Henderson v. The Underwriting and Agency Association it was held that the peculiar practice of granting discovery of ships' papers was applicable to actions brought upon marine policy alone and could not be extended. In Beasley v. Roney damages for injuries sustained by a wife were held, under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, to be her separate property. In re Dewhurst decided that a collateral consideration could not make betting debts provable in bankruptcy. Paine v. Chisholm was a case in which costs on the higher scale were refused. According to Allcock v. Hall the Court of Appeal has power, under Finlay's Act, to enter judgment instead of ordering a new trial when it is satisfied that the verdict is perverse and no further evidence could be given. Questions of undue preference under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, were settled in The North Lonsdale Iron and Steel Company v. The Furness Railway Company. In Steinman v. The Angier (1887) Line a shipowner was held not to be protected against thefts by his own servants by the words 'thieves of whatever kind, whether on board or not, by land or sea,' in a bill of lading. In Montgomerie v. The United Kingdom Mutual Steamship Association the construction and operation of a marine insurance policy were defined. Armour v. Bate decides that under Order XXXVI., rule 32, where a plaintiff does not appear at the trial the proper judgment is one dismissing the action, and not a judgment for the defendants. In re The Council of the Borough of Dover and the Kent County Council decides that the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the High Court on questions submitted under section 29 of the Local Government Act, 1888. In The Overseers of the Parish of Putney v. The London and South-Western Railway Company the promoters of a line of railway were held liable, under section 133 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to make good deficiencies in poor-rates in respect of land purchased without statutory powers. In Roberts v. Jones and Willey v. The Great Northern Railway Company the attempt by a plaintiff who recovered a substantial portion of his claim oppressively to fix an unjust liability on the defendant was held good ground for depriving him of his costs, and unjustifiable use by the plaintiff of his privilege in choosing his venue was also ground for special dealing with the costs. In Brandon v. M'Henry the rejection of a proof by a trustee in bankruptcy was declared valid, even when the bankruptcy was subsequently annulled. Reeve v. Gibson was a case in which special statutory costs were given in an action respecting dramatic copyright. In re Wallis decides that the Bankruptcy Court has power to allow a bankrupt to withdraw an application made under the Act of 1883, s. 28, for an order of discharge.

In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, in O'Shea v. Wood, the Court held that an order could not be made to produce for inspection documents which are the private property of plaintiff's solicitor. According to Michell v. Michell the Court has no power under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, s. 3, to order a settlement out of property settled to the separate use of a wife without power of anticipation. Askew v. Askew was a case of limited grant of administration pendente lite, and of security given in double the amount of specific sums received by the administrator. The Curfew involved special questions under a charterparty. In the Goods of Streatley ratified an unusual form of attestation of a will.

THE CRIMINAL EVIDENCE BILL.

FURTHER consideration of the Chancellor's Evidence Bill makes it still more clear that to be worth passing it needs much alteration. If it were not that the Evidence (Consolidation) Bill applies to Ireland, we should suggest that the two bills should be referred to one committee in the House of Commons and dealt with in the same way as the London Public Health Bills have been treated by amalgamation into one comprehensive measure. In the memorandum to the Consolidation Bill the draftsman has specified most, if not all, the enactments making parties to criminal proceedings and their husbands or wives competent witnesses. And whether the bills are dealt with together or separately, all these enactments ought to be scheduled for repeal, so that we may not have to forage the statute-book for the exceptions to the general rule.

It will be necessary, if this is done, to guard against altering the law for the worse by imposing the fetter of consent where it does not now exist.

The only cases in which the husband or wife are now compellable witnesses seem to be (1) under 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14, s. 1, with reference to criminal proceedings to declare or enforce civil rights (one of these quo warranto has now been made a civil proceeding); and (2) offences against the property of husband or wife (see 47 & 48 Vict. c. 14, s. 1, which amended 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 12, in consequence of the decision in Regina v. Brittleton, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 83; L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 266); and (3) offences against the person or liberty of husband or wife by the other party to the marriage, in which case the injured party is at common law a competent and apparently a compellable witness (Taylor, 8th edit. 1165). If a general rule is to be laid down as to the evidence of husbands and wives, the proviso as to the need of the defendant's consent, which is in any way absurd, ought to be excised, or some provision is needed to make it clear that the power to withhold consent does not apply when an offence has been committed by one party against the marriage tie or the person or property of the other party.

The whole existing law as to England as proposed to be altered might be then summed up in the following manner:—

'1. Except as hereinafter in this section provided, every party to any legal proceeding and every person by or on whose behalf the proceeding is brought or defended, and the husband or wife of the party or other person, is an admissible and compellable witness in the proceeding.

'2. The defendant to a criminal proceeding and his or her wife or husband is an admissible witness at every stage of the proceeding, but, except as hereinafter provided, is not a compellable witness.

'3. In a criminal proceeding for bigamy or for any offence by any person against the person or property of his or her wife or husband, the husband or wife of the defendant is a compellable witness (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 12; 47 & 48 Vict. c. 14, s. 1).

'4. In a criminal proceeding for the non-repair of a public highway or bridge, or for a nuisance to any public highway, river, or bridge, and upon a criminal proceeding for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right, every defendant and his or her wife or husband is a compellable witness.'

These proceedings are in substance civil; consequently it would not be advisable to give the defendant the advantage of not being compellable to testify.

'5. Where the wife or husband of a defendant is not a compellable witness, he or she is not an admissible witness against the defendant without the consent of the defendant.'

The evidence, it is presumed, will be admissible without defendant's consent against persons jointly charged.

'6. A defendant, or any other person called as a witness in a criminal proceeding, is entitled to refuse to answer any question tending to show that the defendant has committed or has been convicted of any offence for which he cannot be convicted in the particular proceeding, unless the proof that the defendant has committed or has been convicted of the other offence is admissible evidence to show that the defendant is guilty of an offence of which he can be convicted in the particular proceeding, or unless the defendant has given evidence of good character.'

This provision is drawn with reference to the rules of law as to the trial of persons accused of offences after previous convictions. (See 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 11; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 111; and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 116; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 37; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 112, s. 9.)

'7. The defendant to a criminal proceeding, if called as a witness, is not entitled to refuse to answer any question on the ground that the answer would tend to criminate him as to any offence of which he might be convicted in the particular proceeding.

'8. A proceeding on the revenue side of the High Court is not a criminal proceeding within the meaning of this section.

'9. Nothing in this section shall make any person in a civil proceeding, nor any person other than a defendant in a criminal proceeding, compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself.'

The rule of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 3, that husband or wife are not compellable to disclose communications during marriage, which is included in the Evidence Consolidation Bill, will be considerably cut into as to criminal proceedings by the Chancellor's bill. At present the husband or wife is not compellable if he or she objects, but apparently the ground of objection in the future will be not the objection of the witness but that of the defendant.

The rule as to questions tending to show adultery (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3) will not be affected by any of the alterations above suggested, if that enactment is either left outstanding or re-enacted in the Evidence Bill.

THE 'MASKE OF FLOWERS.'

THE 'Maske of Flowers' (see ante, p. 427) will be again represented at the Inner Temple Hall on Monday evening next, at half-past eight, tickets being obtainable at the treasurer's office on payment of half-a-guinea, and the performance being for the benefit of a much-needed and useful charitable institution. Nor will the money be returned at the doors this time. Neither the County Council nor the ghost of the Board of Works, neither the Lord Chamberlain nor the Middlesex Magistrates, neither the Theatres Act of the present reign, nor the Public Entertainment Act of George II. have any remaining terrors for the spirited promoters of the 'Maske.' Let us now glance for a moment at the statutes and cases which bear on the curious question whether, and how far, the Lord Chancellor and the benchers of the Inner Temple were on Wednesday week last within an inch of being fined almost as much as they could afford to pay, and, what would have been much worse, becoming 'otherwise punishable as the law directs.'

First, what is the 'Maske'? Is it a stage-play within the Theatres Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), or an entertainment of the like kind with music and dancing within the Public Entertainment Act (25 Geo. II. c. 36)? If the former, the license of the Lord Chamberlain is needed, as was decided in Shelley's Case, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 16, for but one performance in a theatre. If the latter, the Middlesex magistrates are the licensing authority; but no license is required unless there be 'something like an habitual keeping,' as was held by Baron Parke and other judges in Marks v. Benjamin, 5 M. & W. 565. If the former, the poor actors, no doubt, incur a fine where money is taken, and escape it where no money is taken (see sections 11 and 17 of the Theatres Act); but the manager of the theatre does not. If the latter, it does not matter whether money is or is not taken for admission (Archer v. Willingrice, 4 Esp. 186). In neither case does the fact that the whole thing is got up for charitable purposes make any difference in the eye of the law, though it would probably affect the minds of the convicting Court in fixing the amount of the punishment. Sir Percy Shelley was fined 1*s.* only, the maximum penalty being 20*l.*—a daily penalty.

Now whether the 'Maske' is an entertainment of the stage or an entertainment of the like kind with dancing or music is a question of fact (Wigan v. Strange, 35 Law J. Rep. M. C. 31), but we think we may without much risk commit ourselves to the opinion that it is an entertainment of the stage within the Theatres Act. This Act extends the Lord Chamberlain's jurisdiction 'to all theatres within the Parliamentary boundaries of the City of London,' and such boundaries are by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 64, defined as 'the whole space contained within the boundaries of the liberties of the City of London, including the Inner Temple and the Middle Temple,' so that the Lord Chamberlain at all events, looking to this Act as interpreted in Shelley's Case, is a proper licensing authority. But is Shelley's Case in conflict with Regina v. Strugnell, 35 Law J. Rep. M. C. 78, in which, as pointed out by our correspondent Mr. Roberts, it was held that no penalty was incurred by hiring a room for six nights for the performance of plays? We think not, because in Regina v. Strugnell the question was not whether or not a penalty had been incurred by anybody, but whether or not it had been incurred by the defendant, and the Court held that it had not. As for the County Council, that body has by the Local Government Act all the powers of the defunct Metropolitan Board of Works, and section 12 of the Metropolis Management and Buildings Acts Amendment Act (41 & 42 Vict. c. 32) expressly enacts that the 'board' (now the county council) may make regulations for the protection from fire, &c., of 'houses or other places of public resort to be kept open for the public performance of stage-plays and of houses to be kept open for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind,' and adds that 'from and after the making of such regulations' no person may have (one single having is enough if the analogy of Shelley's Case holds good) any such house, &c., without a certificate to the effect that the house, &c., 'was on its completion in accordance with the regulations for the time being in force, and in so far as the same are applicable, and to the conditions affixed therto.' So far so good, or rather, so bad, for the merry maskers. But let us read on a little till we come to section 26, which so many careful persons, ourselves included, contrived to overlook last week. 'Nothing in this Act,' says that far-seeing enactment, 'or in any bye-law thereunder, shall apply to the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, Gray's Inn, Staple Inn, Furnival's Inn, or the close of the collegiate church of St. Peter, Westminster.' Thus fortified, let us go and see the 'Maske' on Monday next.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Cork (County and City) Courthouses Bill.
Consolidated Fund (No. 2) Bill.
Law Agents and Notaries Public (Scotland) Bill.

Bills through committee:—

Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.
Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Bills of Sale Act (1890) Amendment Bill.
Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Bill.
Tramways (Ireland) Act (1860) Amendment Bill.
Forged Transfer Bill.
Commissioners for Oaths Act Amendment Bill.

Slander of Women Bill: referred to Standing Committee.

Second readings:—

Land Purchase (Ireland) Bill.
Factories and Workshops Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.
Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.

The Lords' amendments to the Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Bill were considered and agreed to.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—

Municipal Registration (Dublin and Belfast) Bill.
Public Health (London) Bill.
Penal Servitude Bill.
London County Council (General Powers) Bill (private bill).
Crofters' Common Grazings (Scotland) Bill.

Bill through Committee:

Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.

Second readings:—

Turbary (Ireland) Bill.
Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Local Government (Scotland) Act (1889) Amendment Bill.

Cork Court House Bill: Lords' amendments considered and agreed to.

New bills:—

To Provide for the Reimbursement to Training Colleges in Ireland of certain Past Expenditure on their Sites, Buildings, &c.

To make Provision in regard to the Construction of Public Works in the Western Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

To Amend the Law relating to the Salaries and Fees of Consular Officers.

To Facilitate the Acquisition of Ranges by the Volunteers and others.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACTS, 1883 AND 1890.—The following appears in the London Gazette of June 26: 'Board of Trade, Whitehall Gardens, June 23, 1891.—Notice is hereby given, that the Board of Trade have appointed Mr. Richard Roach Pittis, solicitor, of Newport, Isle of Wight, to be official receiver in bankruptcy for the district of the County Court holden at Newport and Ryde, Isle of Wight, as from June 20, 1891, in succession to Mr. Samuel Wheeler, appointed to be assistant official receiver, under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, attached to the High Court of Justice.'

Correspondence.

THE 'MASKE OF FLOWERS.'

SIR,—There appears to be considerable misunderstanding as to the necessity for a license in connection with the recent performance in the Inner Temple Hall.

The provisions as to licensing of theatres under 25 Geo. II. c. 26, now carried out by the County Council, have no application: first, section 4 of that Act exempts performances duly licensed by the Lord Chamberlain; and, secondly, that Act does not apply to occasional performances in a room not regularly used for theatrical purposes (Gregory v. Juffs, 6 C. & P. 271).

All theatres for the performance of stage-plays must be licensed under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68. In Shelley v. Bethell, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 16; L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 11, it was decided that the penalty was incurred by a single performance for a charity; but the performance in that case was held in a building permanently fitted as a theatre. In Regina v. Strugnell, 35 Law J. Rep. M. C. 78; L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 93, it was held that the public performance of a stage-play for six nights in a hired room was not having or keeping a place for the performance of stage-plays within the meaning of that Act. But section 11 covers the present case, as it prohibits actors from performing for hire (of which payment for admission is evidence) in any places other than theatres licensed by the Lord Chamberlain or other authority.

What license was then required? By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, the Lord Chamberlain was necessary and sufficient, as the Inner Temple is 'within the Parliamentary boundary of the city of London.'

From the letter of the sub-treasurer it appears that the County Council never interfered at all! The writer of the paragraph in your last issue seems to think that the County Council has power to interfere under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 32. This is obviously not the case: first, the provisions of that Act as to licensing apply only to permanent structures; and, secondly, section 26 exempts the Inner Temple and other places from its operation.

JAMES ROBERTS.

New Court, Temple: June 29.

[See our remarks elsewhere.—ED. L.J.]

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

SIR,—When I was called to the bar, over twenty years ago, it was the custom for the bar to talk and the bench to listen. We have changed all that, and it is now the custom for the bench to talk and for the bar to listen.

In these days counsel are not even usually allowed, when they are arguing in banco, to state their case, but it is extracted from them by cross-examination, with the result that what would be a clear, consistent statement is rendered too often confused, while important matters are kept in the background, and those which are quite unimportant are dragged prominently forward.

Can anything be more deplorable than the scene which constantly takes place in Appeal Court I., where it frequently happens that counsel, having carefully got up their arguments, are not allowed to deliver them?

To use sporting language, it is an even chance that at any moment one judge will be talking, it is a six to one chance that two will be talking, while it would be practically safe to bet fifty to one that all three judges are talking together.

I only mention this Court as affording the most flagrant instance; but this degradation of manners has unhappily spread to nearly all the Courts that sit in banco.

Such scenes as take place now would have been impossible twenty or thirty years ago, when four judges usually sat together, in grave, dignified, courteous silence, carefully considering the arguments addressed to them, and no more capable of rudely or unnecessarily interrupting counsel than they would be capable of such conduct towards any other gentleman who was speaking to them.

I am not one of those who think that the judges of to-day are inferior to the judges of old times; and I look upon the incessant talking which takes place on the bench as a bad habit which has spread from one judge to another.

I am, however, convinced that the fact that an enormous number of cases are overruled is due to the habit which judges have got into of forming a hasty conclusion, sometimes without having given counsel a chance of properly stating the case; that instead of listening to counsel they spend their time in talking and arguing themselves, and that they frequently snub and browbeat counsel, who are as able as themselves, and frequently decide cases without giving counsel an opportunity of addressing a real argument to them. I write this letter not with the mere intention of finding fault, but in the hope that the bench will learn from your columns what is the feeling of the bar on the subject, and that they will take to heart the lesson that it would be a great saving of time, and conducive to decency, propriety, and justice, if the bench would learn to listen and would cease talking.

A PRACTISING BARRISTER.

CLAIMS FOR PAST INCOME-TAX.

SIR,—We would call your attention, and that of your readers, to certain illegal claims for income-tax which the Inland Revenue are now very busy in making on executors, and through them the widow and orphan. There exists at Somerset House a clerk whose special province it is to look up cases where income-tax has not been paid in the past, and to cause application to be made for its payment. In the instances we speak of the modus operandi is as follows: The clerk examines the probates of wills lately proved, and possibly discovers an item which he suspects has not paid income-tax; this may be, for instance, interest on deposit at a bank. The executor is written to, and requested to give a statement of the interest thus received by the deceased for any number of years which the surveyor of taxes (who is the go-between) may fix upon. The term is generally ten years previous to the death of the testator. Should the executor, in his ignorance of the law, accede to this request, he is called upon to pay for the whole of that period; and should he pay it he is wronged. If he refuse to give a statement, or offer one for a less period than that asked for, he is threatened with law proceedings and amazing penalties, the solicitor to the Inland Revenue not infrequently sending forth his brutum fulmen. Possibly the executor, reflecting that he will not have to pay the tax out of his own pocket, gives in, in which case again illegally obtained money goes to the Treasury. The attempted extortion does not always succeed however. In numerous instances we have been asked to assist the intended victim, and in all of them we have successfully resisted the claim; the time for claiming back duty being strictly limited to one year, and every charge for a longer period being illegal, subjecting the surveyor making them to a penalty of 100*l.* fine and dismissal.

'THE INCOME-TAX REPAYMENT AGENCY.'

25 Colville Terrace, W.

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

CONTRACT—SUPPLY OF GRAINS.

THE case of Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co. was heard before Mr. Justice Mathew and a special jury on June 26. This was an action for alleged breach of contract made in writing between the plaintiffs and the defendants in July, 1885. By the contract the defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiffs all the grains made by the former at the current rates charged by Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co., Barclay, Perkins & Co., Coombe & Co., Watney & Sons, and Reid & Co., from July 10, 1885, until September 31, 1895, inclusive. In the event of there being any difference in the rates charged by those firms, the average prices charged were to be taken as the current rate. The quantity of grains was to be calculated monthly, and charged for according to the number of quarters of malt put in the mash-tun, and all grains were to be considered as ale grains when brewed without black malt. The contract was duly performed on either side from July, 1885, down to the end of July, 1890, but in August of that year the defendants sold their business as brewers to Messrs. Watney & Sons, and, according to the plaintiffs' case, refused to continue to perform the agreement by supplying the grains. The plaintiffs said that by reason of this breach of contract they had been deprived of profits which they would have realised by the defendants continuing to perform the agreement, and they estimated these profits at 300*l.* a year, being for the five years a total of 1,500*l.*—The defendants denied breach of contract on their part and damage suffered by the plaintiffs. They admitted that at the time mentioned they sold to Messrs. Watney & Sons the goodwill of their business as brewers, but not the brewery premises where the business had been carried on, nor the goodwill of the King's Arms, adjoining the brewery; and they denied that by reason of the sale they were unable to supply the plaintiffs with more grains. The defendants said that by the contract they did not undertake to carry on their business for any definite time, nor, while they did carry it on, to make any particular quantity of grains.—The following authorities were referred to: M'Intyre v. Belcher, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 654; Stirling v. Maitland, 34 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 1; 5 B. & S. 840; Rhodes v. Forwood, L. R. 1 App. Cas. 256; and Turner v. Goldsmith, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 247; L. R. 1 Q. B. 1891, p. 544.—On behalf of the defendants it was contended, as a matter of law, that there being no agreement, express or implied, to carry on the business for any definite time or to make any definite quantity of grains, the action was not maintainable, and that, even if it were maintainable, they would only be liable for nominal damages. Counsel said it could hardly be supposed that these people, with a business worth the capital sum of 240,000*l.*, ever intended to agree that for ten years they would not only not sell that business, but would continue to carry it on as it had been carried on before, or was being carried on at the date of the contract. There was no such agreement expressed in the contract, and no such covenant could be implied.—Mr. Justice Mathew said that if the parties had made an oral agreement, the question of their meaning would have been a question of fact for the jury; but as they had reduced the agreement to writing, the question was one of law to be determined by the Court. It was for him to say what the agreement meant. His conclusion was that the agreement was an agreement on the part of the defendants to supply the grains to the plaintiffs for ten years. His lordship, however, left the question of the intention of the parties to the jury, who found a verdict for the plaintiffs, with 350*l.* damages. His lordship accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the damages, less an admitted counterclaim; but, on the application of the defendants' counsel, stayed execution in view of an appeal.—Mr. Reid, Q.C., Mr. J. G. Witt, and Mr. C. Hamlyn were counsel for the plaintiffs; Mr. Jelf, Q.C., and Mr. Sills for the defendants.

RULES OF THE SUPREME COURT, JUNE, 1891.

ORDER XLII. RULE 33A.

1. IMPOUNDED documents while in the custody of the Court are not to be parted with; and are not to be inspected, except on a written order signed by the judge on whose order they were impounded and by the president of the division in which they are impounded; or in case of documents impounded on the order of the Court of Appeal by an order of that Court. Such documents shall not be delivered out of the custody of the Court except upon an order made on motion in open Court.

ORDER XLVI. RULE 1A.

2. Every summons by a separate judgment creditor of a partner for an order charging his interest in the partnership property and profits under section 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), and for such other orders as are thereby authorised to be made, shall be served in the case of a partnership other than a cost-book company on the judgment debtor and on his partners, or such of them as are within the jurisdiction, or, in the case of a cost-book company, on the judgment debtor and the purser of the company; and such service shall be good service on all the partners or on the cost-book company as the case may be, and all orders made on such summons shall be similarly served.

ORDER XLVI. RULE 1B.

3. Every application which shall be made by any partner of the judgment debtor under the same section shall be made by summons, and such summons shall be served in the case of a partnership other than a cost-book company on the judgment creditor and on the judgment debtor, and on such of the partners as shall not concur in the application and as shall be within the jurisdiction, or, in the case of a cost-book company, on the judgment creditor and on the judgment debtor and on the purser of the company, and such service shall be good service on all the partners or on the cost-book company as the case may be, and all orders made on such summons shall be similarly served.

ORDER XLVIIIA.

4. Order VII., rule 2, Order IX., rules 6 and 7, Order XII., rules 15 and 16, Order XVI., rules 14 and 15, Order XLII., rule 10, and Order XLV., rule 10, are hereby repealed, and the following rules (1) to (11) shall stand as a separate order in lieu thereof.

Actions by and against Firms and Persons carrying on Business in Names other than their Own.

(1) Any two or more persons claiming or being liable as co-partners, and carrying on business within the jurisdiction, may sue or be sued in the name of the respective firms, if any, of which such persons were co-partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action; and any party to an action may in such case apply by summons to a judge for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, co-partners in any such firm, to be furnished in such manner, and verified on oath or otherwise, as the judge may direct.

(2) When a writ is sued out by partners in the name of their firm, the plaintiffs or their solicitors shall, on demand in writing by or on behalf of any defendant, forthwith declare in writing the names and places of residence of all the persons constituting the firm on whose behalf the action is brought. And if the plaintiffs or their solicitors shall fail to comply with such demand, all proceedings in the action may, upon an application for that purpose, be stayed upon such terms as the Court or a judge may direct. And when the names of the partners are so declared, the action shall proceed in the same manner, and the same consequences in all respects shall follow as if they had been named as the plaintiffs in the writ. But all the proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm.

(3) Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm under rule (1), the writ shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners or at the principal place, within the jurisdiction, of the business of the partnership upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there; and, subject to these rules, such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether any of the members thereof are out of the jurisdiction or not, and no leave to issue a writ against them shall be necessary: provided that in the case of a co-partnership which has been dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the commencement of the action, the writ of summons shall be served upon every person within the jurisdiction sought to be made liable.

(4) Where a writ is issued against a firm, and is served as directed by rule (3), every person upon whom it is served shall be informed by notice in writing given at the time of such service whether he is served as a partner or as a person having the control or management of the partnership business, or in both characters. In default of such notice, the person served shall be deemed to be served as a partner.

(5) Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, they shall appear individually in their own names; but all subsequent proceedings shall, nevertheless, continue in the name of the firm.

(6) Where a writ is served under rule (3) upon a person having the control or management of the partnership business, no appearance by him shall be necessary unless he is a member of the firm sued.

(7) Any person served as a partner under rule (3) may enter an appearance under protest, denying that he is a partner, but such appearance shall not preclude the plaintiff from otherwise serving the firm and obtaining judgment against the firm in default of appearance if no partner has entered an appearance in the ordinary form.

(8) Where a judgment or order is against a firm, execution may issue—

(a) Against any property of the partnership within the jurisdiction;

(b) Against any person who has appeared in his own name under rule (5) or (6), or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be a partner;

(c) Against any person who has been individually served, as a partner, with the writ of summons, and has failed to appear.

If the party who has obtained judgment or an order claims to be entitled to issue execution against any other person as being a member of the firm, he may apply to the Court or a judge for leave so to do; and the Court or judge may give such leave if the liability be not disputed, or if such liability be disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue or question in any action may be tried and determined. But except as against any property of the partnership, a judgment against a firm shall not render liable, release, or otherwise affect any member thereof, who was out of the jurisdiction when the writ was issued, and who has not appeared to the writ unless he has been made a party to the action under Order XI., or has been served within the jurisdiction after the writ in the action was issued.

(9) Debts owing from a firm carrying on business within the jurisdiction may be attached under Order XLV., although one or more members of such firm may be resident abroad: provided that any person having the control or management of the partnership business or any member of the firm within the jurisdiction is served with the garnishee order. An appearance by any member pursuant to an order shall be a sufficient appearance by the firm.

(10) The above rules shall apply to actions between a firm and one or more of its members, and to actions between firms having one or more members in common, provided such firm or firms carry on business within the jurisdiction, but no execution shall be issued in such actions without leave of the Court or a judge, and on an application for leave to issue such execution all such accounts and inquiries may be directed to be taken and made, and directions given, as may be just.

(11) Any person carrying on business within the jurisdiction in a name or style other than his own name may be sued in such name or style as if it were a firm name; and, so far as the nature of the case will permit, all rules relating to proceedings against firms shall apply.

ORDER LIV. RULE 4A.

5. Order LIV., rule 4, shall be read as if the following words were added thereto: 'Provided that in the case of summonses for time only, the summons may be served on the day previous to the return thereof.'

6. These rules may be cited as the Rules of the Supreme Court, June, 1891; and each rule may be cited separately according to the heading thereof with reference to the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883. They shall come into operation on July 1, 1891.

Dated June 19, 1891.

(Signed) HALSBURY, C.
COLERIDGE, C.J.
ESHER, M.R.
NATH. LINDLEY, L.J.
E. E. KAY, L.J.
C. E. POLLOCK, B.
A. L. SMITH, J.

THE 'MASKE OF FLOWERS.'—The second performance of the 'Maske of Flowers,' in aid of the funds of St. Michael's Convalescent Home, Westgate-on-Sea, which was originally fixed for last Tuesday night, will be given at 8.30 P.M. on Monday next, in the Hall of the Inner Temple, the necessary license having been obtained from the Lord Chamberlain. Tickets may be obtained from Lady Halsbury, 4 Ennismore Gardens; Lady Jeune, 79 Harley Street; and the sub-treasurer of the Inner Temple.

ORDER OF TRANSFER.

Monday, June 22, 1891.

WHEREAS, from the present state of the business before Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, Mr. Justice Kekewich, and Mr. Justice Romer respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes assigned to Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich should for the purpose only of hearing or of trial be transferred to Mr. Justice Romer; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that the several causes and matters set forth in the schedules hereto be accordingly transferred from the said Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich to Mr. Justice Romer, for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, and be marked in the Cause-books accordingly. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Landseer v. Zeffert—1890 L. 1,166
Von Buch v. Watson
Percival & Churchyard v. Von Buch—1890 V. 394
Pechey v. Serle—1890 P. 1,925
New Wire Wove Roofing Co. (Lim.) v. Humpage—1890 N. 1,349
Haymen v. Cooper—1890 H. 1,645
Clark v. Smith—1890 C. 1,011
Carter v. Walter—1890 C. 4,367
Ward v. Keen—1890 W. 3,806
Sutton v. Gillings—1890 S. 4,665
Kite v. Bell—1891 K. 42
S. Kidd & Co. (Lim.) v. Perry—1891 S. 3,038
Allen v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)—1889 A. 1,375
In re Swain
Swain v. Bringeman—1890 S. 2,707
Bew v. Gale—1890 B. 4,274
Webster v. Puleston—1889 W. 602
Meek v. Traver—1890 M. 1,690
Spalding v. FitzGeorge—1890 S. 3,888
Devallé v. Palmer—1891 D. 387
Green v. Wyatt—1890 G. 799
Molineux v. Gartside—1890 M. 3,193
Soppitt v. Whiting—1891 S. 286
Layton v. Patent Lithographic Zinc Plate Co. (Lim.)—1890 L. 2,165
Uniacke v. Scott
Scott v. Uniacke—1890 U. 831
In re Aders
Meakin v. Plimmer—1891 A. 211
Ellissen v. Surrey Machinists Co. (Lim.)
Surrey Machinists Co. (Lim.) v. Ellissen—1891 E. 18
Watts v. Paynter—1891 W. 51
Sanders v. Eaton—1891 S. 396
Witt v. Calderon—1890 W. 2,349
Hill v. Winfield—1890 H. 3,926
In re Heinrich's Registered Design and Patents Act
Compton v. Bagley—1891 C. 253
Spence v. Schiedweiler—1890 S. 2,564
Engelhart v. Gaydon—1890 E. 858
Marshall v. Glover—1889 M. 2,344; 1890 A. 493
Wright v. Richmond—1890 W. 2,268
West India Shipping Co. (Lim.) v. Callender—1890 W. 1,822
Thomson v. Stewart—1890 T. 2,078
Hughes Hallet v. Kent—1890 H. 2,791
Nicholson v. Eyre—1891 N. 759
Mappin Bros. v. Mappin & Webb—1891 M. 346

SECOND SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

Attorney-General (at the relation of the Local Board for the District of Friern Barnet) v. Vestry of St. James and St. John, Clerkenwell—1890 A. 1,159
In re J. H. Boyce
Boyce v. England—1890 B. 5,351
G. A. Baird v. East Riding Club and Race Course Co. (Lim.)—1889 B. 3,676
In re Raisbeck
Keenlyside v. Leefe—1891 R. 114
Law Property Assurance and Trust Society v. Wilson—1890 L. 2,040
Pegler v. Drake-West—1890 P. 2,620
In re Coningham
Coningham v. Coningham—1890 C. 2,978
Choudens Fils v. Lago—1890 C. 4,098
Rothwell v. Abrahams—1891 R. 132
Vennell v. Meakin—1891 V. 19
Universal Stock Exchange (Lim.) v. Stevens
Stevens v. Universal Stock Exchange (Lim.)—1890 U. 289
In re W. Beckett
Lyons v. Hart—1890 B. 1,488
Brewers Investment Corporation (Lim.) v. Rowlands
Rowlands v. Brewers Investment Corporation (Lim.)
Bell v. Same—1890 B. 1,787
Willoughby v. Kirby—1890 W. 3,805
Murton v. City Bank (Lim.)—1890 M. 2,954
Williams v. Williams—1890 W. 3,408
Day v. Gregory—1890 D. 1,436
In re Seager
West v. Seager—1890 S. 3,323
London Association of Shipowners and Brokers (Lim.) v. London and India Docks Joint Committee—1891 L. 215
Barker v. Webber—1890 B. 6,623

THIRD SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

Fritchley v. Marshall—1890 F. 922
In re Edgar
Edgar v. Edgar—1890 E. 664
Alexander v. Miller—1890 A. 1,047
Pearson v. Petrovitch—1890 P. 1,659
In re Bridger
Jones v. Armfield—1890 B. 1,296
Reade v. Hall—1890 R. 1,038
Wood v. Hamblet—1889 W. 3,857
Earl de la Warr v. King—1890 D. 1,776
Schreiner v. Bounard—1890 S. 513
Holdsworth, &c. Co. v. Hull, Barnsley, &c. Railway—1886 H. 2,423; 1890 H. 2,499
Freeman v. Penn—1890 F. 450
President of St. George's Hospital v. Rumney—1890 S. 4,395
Svertchkoff v. Huth—1890 S. 2,147
Lord de Ramsay v. Powell—1890 D. 2,103
Brown v. Vince—1890 B. 1,152
Brown v. Brown—1890 B. 3,639
West of England Paper Mills Co. (Lim.) v. Gilbert—1889 W. 3,113
Ranson, Bouverie & Co. v. Whitby—1890 R. 1,593
In re Cash
Cash v. Hancock—1890 C. 679
In re Laurence
Kiddle v. Laurence—1890 L. 2,530
Harris v. Harris—1890 H. 3,393
Bevan v. Webb—1890 B. 1,410
Folkard v. Carter
Carter v. Folkard—1890 F. 759
White v. Swaine—1890 W. 3,017
In re Gas Lighting Improvement Co. (Lim.) &c.—adjd. sumns.
Meux v. Thomas—1890 M. 3,150
Nelson v. Worssam—1890 N. 1,296
Goodrham v. Goodrham—1890 G. 1,953
Beddoe v. James—1889 B. 2,855
Isaacs v. Isaacs (action)—1890 I. 1,457

FOURTH SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

In re Hewit
Lawson v. Duncan—1890 H. 2,567
Dyke v. Rutherford—1890 D. 1,664
Edison & Swan, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Woodhouse & Rawson United (Lim.)—1890 E. 426
Smyrke v. De Peyer—1890 S. 361
Provan v. Paterson—1886 P. 2,931
Castle v. Stone—1890 C. 1,524
Upton v. National Mercantile Bank—1890 U. 718
Matthews v. Wells—1889 M. 2,095
Perry v. White—1890 P. 2,513
Tavner v. Martin—1889 T. 2,222
Clinch v. Clinch
Same v. Same—1840 C. 1,135
Cipri v. Metal Recovery Co. (Lim.)—1890 C. 887
Mackenzie v. Sanders—1890 M. 2,738
Van Hench v. Isaacs—1890 V. 740
Hickman v. Harris—1888 H. 4,230
M'Dowell v. Sanders—1890 M. 2,781
Dale v. Fortescue—1890 D. 2,049
Cowney v. Thomson—1889 C. 1,576
Watling v. Watling—1890 W. 3,395
Banks v. Scovell—1890 B. 4,972
Jope v. Pountain—1890 J. 40
Jahncke v. R. Bell & Co. (Lim.)—1889 J. 1,011
Mapleson v. Lago—1890 M. 3,381
Williams v. Jones—1890 W. 1,932
Petre v. Ferrers—1890 P. 2,751
Nettlefolds (Lim.) v. Reynolds—1890 N. 15
Same v. Same—1890 N. 809
Hazlehurst v. Rylands—1890 H. 1,193
Burdett & Harris v. Gorton—1891 B. 381
Robertson v. Robertson—1891 R. 309
Hall v. Hall—1890 H. 4,335
Driggs Ordnance Co. v. Driggs Schroeder Ordnance Co. (Lim.)—1890 D. 1,883
Falk v. Falk—1891 F. 131
New Skegby Colliery Co. (Lim.) v. Dodsley—1890 N. 1,042
Cowood v. Vernon—1890 C. 1,143
Howell v. Broomhead—1890 H. 4,245
Lane Fox v. Kensington, &c. Lighting Co.—1890 L. 2,713
Davey v. Hugill—1891 D. 315
Kelsey v. Hodgkinson—1891 K. 129
In re Big Golden Quarry Mining Co. (Lim.) ex parte Newman

HALSBURY, C.

N.B.—The parties concerned in the above causes and matters must be ready for trial on and after Monday next, June 29, 1891. N. WARD, Senr. Regr.

SHARP v. WAKEFIELD

SIR WILFRID LAWSON writes to the Times as follows:—

Very nearly 500 years ago justices of the peace were intrusted with the direct veto on the liquor traffic. They were enjoined, in the year 1496, 'to put away ale-selling at their discretion and to take surety of others of their good behaviour.' Fifty years later, 'for the redress of the intolerable hurts which increase through the disorder in common ale-houses,' &c., they were 'given full power and authority to remove, discharge, and put away common selling of ale and beer and tippling-houses in such town or towns and places where they shall think meet and convenient.'

These statutes were the origin and basis of what we now call our licensing system. As years went on the justices of the peace appear to have come to the conclusion that it was more desirable for them to establish these drinking-houses, with all their 'intolerable hurts,' than to prohibit them. The idea also grew up that the justices, having once granted a license, were obliged every year to renew such license, unless the holder thereof should in some way have proved himself to be unworthy and unfit to hold it any longer. This idea was sedulously nurtured by 'the trade,' by many justices' clerks, and by certain legal authorities.

It has now been blown to the winds by the decision of the House of Lords in the famous case of Sharp v. Wakefield. That decision settles once for all, 'beyond the possibility of a doubt,' as Lord Macnaghten expressed it, that 'the licensing justices' possess 'the same discretion in the case of an application for what is now termed a renewal as in the case of a person applying for a license for the first time.' Whether the magistrates will exercise the power which it is now made manifest to them that they possess, for the protection of their fellow-citizens from the liquor traffic, remains to be seen. But all lovers of law, order, peace, and prosperity must rejoice that legal machinery has been proved to exist which may be used for the preservation of the public from the 'intolerable hurts' alluded to in the ancient statutes.

My object in writing this letter is to point out the persons to whom it is primarily owing that this gratifying and authoritative declaration of the law has been obtained. It is due, in the first instance, to a bench of magistrates in Westmoreland, who decided to withhold the license from a public-house (the Low Bridge Inn, Kentmere) on account of its 'remoteness from police supervision and the character and necessities of the neighbourhood in which it was situated.' This decision was appealed against, and during three years the case was carried from Court to Court, until at last, on March 20, 1891, the House of Lords gave the judgment which I have already mentioned—a judgment which will be for ever memorable in the history of the movement for the overthrow of the liquor traffic.

Now these legal proceedings, conducted by the Westmoreland Licensing Bench against all the resources of one of the richest and most powerful vested interests in the world, have involved them in costs which come to about 550*l*. Their brother-magistrates and friends in the neighbourhood have raised about 290*l*. Friends of my own, who realise the importance of the Lords' judgment, have, in various sums, promised me about 150*l*. This leaves still a small balance to which the licensing bench in question are liable.

I think it probable that many persons would like to join in liquidating this balance, and if any such persons feel inclined within a short time to send any subscription for this object, they will be very gladly received and acknowledged either by myself or by Mr. Joshua Rowntree, M.P.

A similar case can never occur again, as the Lords' decision is final, and it does seem right that these justices, who, by their sensible and independent course, have been instrumental in procuring a great national advantage, should have this conduct recognised by those who take an interest in our national welfare and progress.

SOUTHEND AND THE MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ACT.—The London Gazette of June 26 contains a notice to the effect that a petition has been presented to Her Majesty in Council by certain inhabitants of Southend praying that a charter of incorporation may be granted to the town.

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25.

Dewar v. Wotherspoon (incapacity—partial insanity—curator bonis—appointment on petition—necessity of cognition—reported 28 Scot. Law Rep. p. 85).—Dismissed.

Mutual Shipping and Trading Company v. Hawthorn, Leslie & Co. (claim for work and labour done—materials provided—moneys paid under a contract).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JUNE 26.

Eastern Steamship Company v. Smith; The Vandalia (collision—lights whether or not observed—apportionment of blame).—Dismissed with costs.—Their LORDSHIPS (LORD HERSCHELL, LORD BRAMWELL, LORD MACNAGHTEN, and LORD HANNEN) were equally divided.

The Berkeley Peerage Case (Claimants: R. M. F. Berkeley and Lord Fitzhardinge).—Adjourned sine die.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.

Mutual Shipping and Trading Company v. Hawthorn, Leslie & Co.—Dismissed.

Butchard v. Northfleet Coal and Ballast Company (construction of lease).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.

Meyer v. Decroix (bill of exchange—negotiability—general or qualified acceptance—reported 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 538).—Cur. adv. vult.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25.

Pinto and another v. Trott & Co. (application of defendants from judgment of Day, J., dated January 22, at trial with special jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Brown v. Hawkes (Q.B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendant from judgment of Cave, J., and Smith, J., dated January 28, affirming judgment of Clerkenwell County Court).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 26.

In re The Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883—Gough and others (petitioners)—Gough and others (respondents) (Q.B. Crown Side) (appeal of petitioners from Cave, J., and Williams, J., dated April 14, affirming dismissal of petition by County Court judge under Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883).—Allowed.

Hooper v. Large (late Goodwin) (application of defendant for new trial on appeal from judgment of Grantham, J., dated May 19, 1890, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

SATURDAY, JUNE 27.

Hirst v. Sadler (appeal of defendant from judgment of Day, J., dated February 2, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Acland and others v. Simpson (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated April 25, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.

Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Company (Vestry of Hammersmith, third parties) (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 18, at trial before Hawkins, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Smith and Wife v. Bailey (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 22, at trial before Wills, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Lowry v. Humbert (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated May 6, at trial before Denman, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.

Keeley v. Appleby (application of defendants (except J. Dugdale) for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated May 1, at trial before Grantham, J., and a special jury at Manchester).—Allowed.

Heitzmann v. Gowenlock (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment on claim and counterclaim, dated May 11, at trial before Smith, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Banks v. Kelly & Grundy (trading, &c.) (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated May 12, at trial before Wills, J., and a common jury in Middlesex and notice of contention by plaintiff).—Varied.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 1.

Atherton Local Board v. Manly and others (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 30, at trial before Grantham, J., with special jury at Manchester).—Refused.

Marchioness of Huntly v. Bedford Hotel Company (Lim.) (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated April 25, at trial before Wills, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, JUNE 25.

Cross v. Roberts (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated February 18, at trial without a jury in Middlesex and cross notice of contention by plaintiff).—Dismissed.

Thomas v. Searles and another (first issue) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Smith, J., dated February 16, at trial without a jury in Middlesex). Thomas v. Searles and another (second issue) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Smith, J., dated February 16, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JUNE 26.

Kirkman v. British Shipowners' Mutual Protection Association (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Grantham, J., dated January 16, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Le Messurier v. Taylor (appeal of defendant from judgment of Grantham, J., dated March 12, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

SATURDAY, JUNE 27.

Edmunds v. Gilbert (appeal of defendant from judgment of Charles, J., dated March 21, at trial without a jury at Birmingham).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JUNE 29.

Deep Navigation Collieries (Lim.) v. Rhymney Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated January 21, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.

Broadbent v. Smedley (appeal of defendant from judgment of Smith, J., dated March 21, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Dismissed.

Halpin v. M'Laren (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Wright, J., dated January 17, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Bryan v. Atlantic Patent Fuel Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 16, on appeal from judge of County Court).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 1.

In re Percy Armstrong, an infant, by Fanny Armstrong, his next friend (appeal of infant from order of Kekewich, J., dated June 1, refusing application of mother for maintenance of infant).—Allowed.

Turrell v. Brown (appeal of defendants from refusal by North, J., dated June 8, of order for delivery of particulars).—Dismissed.

Avery v. Wood & Sons (appeal of defendants from order of North, J., dated June 22, refusing allowance of objections to taxation).—Dismissed.

Dobell & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co. and others (appeal of defendants from directions entered, dated April 11, at trial by Wills, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, July 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Tuesday, July 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Wednesday, July 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Thursday, July 9.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Friday, July 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Saturday, July 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JULY 6 TO JULY 11.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	July 6	July 7	July 8	July 9	July 10	July 11
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	—	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Tadcaster	Easingwold	Knaresborough	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	Derby	Derby	Belper	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
28	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Hanley	Hanley	Tunstall	Cheadle
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
57	Judge Paterson	—	Taunton	Langport	Bridgwater	Wellington	Barnstaple
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Torquay

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

COLONEL EDWIN HUGHES, M.P., of 6 Lancaster Place, Strand, 38 Green's End, Woolwich, and Plumstead, has been elected President of the Kent Law Society. Colonel Hughes was admitted in 1860.

Mr. Joseph Solomon (of the firm of J. & M. Solomon), of 58 Finsbury Pavement, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Solomon was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Montgomery White, of the Outer Temple, Strand, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. White was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Charles Frank Andrews (of the firm of Lane, Fagge & Andrews), of Fitzalan House, Arundel Street, Strand, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Andrews was admitted in 1881.

Mr. George Lennox, of 3 Verulam Buildings, Gray's Inn, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lennox was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Charles James Cooper (of the firm of Cooper & Sons), of King Street, Manchester, has been appointed a Notary for Manchester and a district of ten miles thereof. Mr. Cooper was admitted in 1876.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The thirty-first anniversary festival of this association was held on Friday night, June 26, at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate Street. Mr. Robert Cunliffe (president of the Incorporated Law Society) occupied the chair, and was supported by Mr. Justice Wills, Mr. G. W. Hemming, Q.C., Mr. Staveley Hill, Q.C., M.P., Mr. T. H. Stephens (Cardiff, chairman of the board of directors), Mr. Grinham Keen, Mr. Richard Pennington, Mr. H. M. Cotton, Mr. J. F. Milne (president of the Manchester Law Society), Mr. John Hunter (deputy-chairman of the board), Mr. C. R. Hancock (president of the Bristol Law Society), and others. In proposing the toast of the evening, 'The Solicitors' Benevolent Association, and may prosperity continue to attend it,' the chairman stated that the object of the society was to relieve poor and necessitous solicitors and proctors in England and Wales, and their wives, widows, and families. Only about 1,700*l.* a year was received from subscriptions, and many deserving persons were left unrelieved because the society had not sufficient funds. He could assure them that the funds subscribed went to the benefit of those for whom they were intended, for the expenses of the association were very small, and there was no waste. Their desire was to obtain additional members, in order that they might have more annual subscriptions, and not be so dependent on their festivals. During the evening subscriptions and donations amounting to 700*l.* were announced.

CENTRAL OFFICE.—The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. A. J. Penny to a Clerkship in the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature, in succession to the late Mr. W. M. Porter.

THE PUBLICANS' COMPENSATION APPEAL.—There has been such a prompt response to Sir Wilfrid Lawson's suggestion for raising a fund to relieve the Westmoreland licensing justices of their costs in the Sharp v. Wakefield appeal case that no further subscriptions will be needed.

LADY MACDONALD.—The Queen has been pleased to confer the dignity of a peerage of the United Kingdom upon Lady Macdonald in recognition of the long and distinguished public service of the late Sir John Macdonald. Susan Agnes, Lady Macdonald, was the second wife of the late Sir John Macdonald, whom she married in 1867. She is a daughter of the late Hon. T. J. Bernard, a member of the Privy Council of Jamaica.

THE LAW COURTS.—When Mr. Justice Collins sits in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, in the place of Sir Charles Butt, one of the Queen's Bench judges will have to take his place at judges' chambers, while another will be called upon to replace him on the South Wales Circuit, whereon he had been appointed to go. When all the circuits are on, two Queen's Bench judges only—Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Charles—remain in town, and if the above arrangement was carried out their services would be absorbed, and the Queen's Bench Division would be practically left without a judge. It is very probable, however, that a royal commissioner of assize will be appointed to go on circuit in place of Mr. Justice Collins, which would leave one judge at least in town.

BIRTHS.

On June 27, at 14 Burlington Road, Redland, Bristol, the wife of R. W. Clifton, Barrister-at-Law, formerly of West Dulwich, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On June 24, at St. Peter's Church, Bayswater, Alexander Pulling, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, elder son of Mr. Serjeant Pulling, to Margaret Ellen, third daughter of Samuel Bealey, of 20 Pembridge Gardens, W., and of Canterbury, New Zealand.

DEATHS.

On June 10, at Lyons, Charles Lambert Ferdinands, District Judge of Colombo, Ceylon, aged 62.

On June 12, at her residence, Chicago, U.S.A., Kate, widow of the late E. R. Griffiths, formerly Magistrate, Falkland Islands.

On June 22, on board s.s. Brazilian, homeward bound from Montreal, Ralph John, elder son of John E. Palmer, of the Inner Temple and Kensington, Barrister-at-Law, aged 20.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 3s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE Lord Chief Justice presided in Court of Appeal No. I. on Friday, the 3rd inst., in place of the Master of the Rolls, who was sitting with the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council hearing the Bishop of Lincoln's case. The Court did not sit on Saturday or Monday last, as Lord Coleridge had other engagements. On Tuesday and Wednesday, however, his lordship again presided, and the Court resumed the hearing of new trials, with which good progress has been made.

WITH our REPORTS of this month we print, with their accompanying forms, four important sets of rules. First comes a general order of the Board of Trade under rules 126 and 127 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, with reference to 'statements by liquidators in pending liquidations to the registrar of joint-stock companies;' next, two sets of rules by the Board of Trade, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, under section 26 of the same Act; and, finally, the better known 'Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Rules, 1891.' These latter are no less than fifty-eight in number, and are followed by thirty-one forms. We direct the particular attention of practitioners to rule 36, which directs that 'where an occupier of land has failed to serve an occupier's liability notice' (see rule 3), 'and wishes to obtain a certificate from the Court under subsection 6 of section 2 of the Act, he shall send an application to the registrar according to the form in the appendix' (see form 28), 'and shall at the same time send a copy or duplicate of the application to the occupier in respect of whose liability to pay the tithe rent-charge the notice has not been served.' This and the two following rules should be carefully read with section 2, subsection 6 of the Act.

THE 'Maske of Flowers' has been again and finally represented with marked success, the license (see ante, p. 448) being granted by the Lord Chamberlain to Mr. Arthur à Beckett, of Gray's Inn, as the 'actual and responsible manager.' This was done in pursuance of section 7 of the Theatres Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 68), by which 'no license for a theatre shall be granted by the Lord Chamberlain to any person except the actual and responsible manager of the theatre in respect of which the license shall be granted, and the name and place of abode of such manager shall be printed on every play-bill announcing any representation at such theatre.' The jurisdiction of the Lord Chamberlain in the metropolis to grant licenses for theatres is absolutely discretionary, as is the jurisdiction of the county councils elsewhere, under section 7 of the Local Government Act, 1888, by section 28, subsection 2 of which, however, the county councils may, 'without prejudice to any other power whether to appoint committees or otherwise,' delegate the licensing power transferred to them by section 7 'to the justices of the county sitting in petty sessions.'

MR. MANSON'S article on Marital Authority in the Law Quarterly is more amusing than instructive. 'Whether there are any circumstances,' writes he, 'under which a husband may coerce his wife short of her wanting to throw herself out of window, and if so, what they are, the Court' (in Jackson's Case) 'has wisely left undefined. Even if, like Mr. Pelham, in Lord Lytton's novel, a husband met his wife on the stairs in the act of eloping, it is not clear that he could detain her, though he might accompany her. She is not committing a felony, or any other act with which, as a good citizen, he would be bound to interfere. And this seems the sole logical criterion. Cochrane's Case was against the whole current of authority, and a retrograde step,' &c.

Shepherd v. Berger, which we report this month, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 395, should be carefully studied by all interested in the law of landlord and tenant. The proviso for re-entry in a lease was framed to operate 'if and whenever' any one quarter's rent should be in arrear and no sufficient distress could be had. Three quarters' rent being in arrear, the plaintiff distrained, but only realised enough to satisfy two quarters' arrears. The plaintiff then sued in ejectment before a fourth quarter's rent had become due, and a Divisional Court, reversing the judgment of the Recorder of London, gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff by putting in the distress had waived the forfeiture in respect of the third quarter's arrears. But the Court of Appeal has reversed this judgment, and decided for the plaintiff 'on the true construction of the proviso for re-entry.' The words 'if and whenever' were said by the Court to 'carry the case beyond the time of putting in the distress to any time after, so that when the plaintiff appropriated the proceeds of the distress to the first two quarters' arrears there still remained another quarter in arrear. The case is a puzzling one, looking to Ward v. Day, 33 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 11, but we think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is correct, though it is unfortunate that the Court found it unnecessary to discuss any authorities.

THE important question of the extent to which a servant can render his master liable by giving a person into custody was fully considered by the Court of Appeal in the recent case of Abrahams v. Deakin, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 238. The plaintiff and a friend went to the defendant's public-house, and, having ordered some refreshment, the plaintiff's friend by mistake tendered a German gold ten-mark piece in payment. The manager refused to take it, and the plaintiff's friend then handed him a half-sovereign and received the change, but upon the plaintiff and his companion leaving the house the manager followed them, and gave them into custody upon a charge of attempting to pass bad coin. The Court held, on these facts, that an action for false imprisonment was not maintainable against the defendant, the manager having no implied authority from him to arrest persons under such circumstances. The Court approved and adopted the principle acted on by Mr. Justice Blackburn in Allen v. The London and South-Western Railway Company, 40 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 55—viz. that there is an implied authority in such cases to do all acts that are necessary for the protection of the property entrusted to a person or for fulfilling the duty which he has to perform. The Court, however, thought that the plaintiff's arrest after the supposed attempt had ceased and he had left the house was wholly unnecessary, and that the case did not therefore come within the above principle.

LYDIA HARVEY, 'a widow,' having been summoned under the Sunday Observance Acts (29 Car. II. c. 7, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 87) for selling newspapers on Sunday and fined half-a-crown (the maximum penalty being 5s.), Mr. Cobb asked the Secretary of State whether he would direct the fine to be remitted. Mr. Matthews, however, replied that, though he regretted the prosecution and its results, 'he should go beyond his duty if he were practically to declare that the provisions of the Act are to have no effect,' especially where a local representative body (the Horfield Local Board, who have no statutory locus standi in the matter) and two justices of the peace (whose consent to a prosecution, or that of a chief officer of police, is necessary under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 87) had supported their application. Mr. Cobb then asked whether the Government would include the Act of Charles II. in the schedule of Acts to be repealed by the Statute Law Revision Bill; but Mr. W. H. Smith declined to answer, on the ground that 'it is the duty of the Statute Law Revision Committee to examine the statutes and ascertain which of them are perfectly obsolete.' An Act amended so recently as 1871 is certainly not perfectly obsolete, and it would be for Parliament, and not for the Statute Law Revision Committee, to consider whether and how far the Act of Charles II. requires further amendment or whether its repeal is desirable. Nothing in that Act, we may observe (see s. 3), extends 'to the crying or selling of milk before nine of the clock in the morning or after four o'clock in the afternoon;' and perhaps it might be desirable to amend it by giving newspapers a similar protection. But the Sunday Acts, as we have more than once observed in connection with prosecutions of newspaper-boys of Brighton (see LAW JOURNAL for 1890, pp. 291, 341), are in a very curious state, requiring more amendments than one, Sunday cattle-driving, extra parochial cricket-playing, and even absence from church, each still constituting an offence in law.

OVER and over again (see, e.g., ante, at p. 209) we have protested in these columns against the judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Read v. Anderson, in which Lord Justice Bowen, with the silent concurrence of Lord Justice Fry, and notwithstanding the emphatic dissent of Lord Esher, M.R., laid down that the authority of a turf commission agent to make a bet cannot be revoked by the principal after the bet has once been made. It is, therefore, with no small satisfaction that we read in the article of Sir James Stephen in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, on 'Gambling and the Law,' a demonstration of the unsoundness of that judgment, which, by legalising the profession of the turf commission agent, has so greatly facilitated betting since 1884. 'The existence of such a person as a betting agent,' writes Sir James, 'appears to me to be an insult to the law. It is a mere abuse that such a person should exist at all; and a fragment of legislation' (see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, as interpreted in Read v. Anderson) 'which enables him to carry on his business, and for which no excuse is proposed except that it does so enable him, is in itself absurd. It is impossible to prove more clearly that it exists in defiance of the general body of the law. Lord Justice Bowen assumes in Read v. Anderson that a betting agent is as much entitled to be regarded as is a legitimate agent in any other branch of trade; this is, in fact, no more than a petitio principii. If the statute had been supposed to leave a loophole open for bets made through agents, the loophole would certainly have been closed.' The remedy which Sir James Stephen proposes is that contracts by way of gaming or wagering should be made illegal, instead of being only void, and he also proposes to enact that a principal should be enabled to revoke an authority to pay a bet at any time whatever.

IN Dobell & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co. the Court of Appeal was called upon to construe the rule of the Supreme Court of August, 1890, made upon the passing of Mr. Finlay's Act. The appellants moved under Order XL., rule 4, to set aside a judgment given after trial with a jury, on the ground that upon the finding as entered the judgment was wrong. On the part of the respondents the preliminary objection was taken that notice of the appeal motion had not been given within eight days of the trial. This would be the limit of time if the rule of August, 1890, applied; but it was contended for the appellants that that rule did not extend to motions under Order XL., rules 3, 4, when not accompanied by applications for new trial. Such motions are not affected by Mr. Finlay's Act, since before it passed they went direct to the Court of Appeal. The object of the Act clearly was to deal with cases falling under Order XXXIX., rule 1, and the rule of August, 1890, following the exact words of Order XXXIX., rule 1, applies to 'every motion for a new trial or to set aside a verdict, finding, or judgment where there has been a trial thereof, or of any issue thereon with a jury.' Though it is true that these words literally construed do include all cases falling within Order XL., rules 3, 4, yet the literal construction of the same words in Order XXXIX., rule 1, was certainly incorrect. They did not include cases where, there being no application for a new trial, the only question was whether the judgment was in accordance with the findings. Was there any insuperable difficulty in holding that the new rule likewise did not include such cases? As was pointed out, it would in regard to them be unworkable, since the eight days for giving notice run from the trial, and the judgment objected to might not be given till after the time had expired. The Court of Appeal, while admitting the absurdity of the result, held itself bound to decide in accordance with the literal sense of the rule. Perhaps it is as well that the decision should be this way if it leads, as Lord Justice Lindley promised that it should, to a revision of the rule.

A CLERGYMAN who had walked with a soldier in uniform from Shorncliffe to Folkestone having been refused admission to the coffee-room of a Folkestone hotel, where he had ordered luncheon for two, on the ground that his companion was a soldier in uniform, Lord Wolmer has asked Mr. Stanhope whether he proposed to take any steps in the matter. Mr. Stanhope 'assured his noble friend that he fully sympathised,' but said that hotels were subject to the 'general law of the land,' and he had no power to interfere in their management. He added, however, that he would consider the question of bringing the matter before the licensing justices on the annual renewal of the license to the hotel in question. Of course, under the special provisions of the Licensing Acts, as interpreted in Sharp v. Wakefield, the renewal of an innkeeper's license may be refused for any reason good, bad, or indifferent, and it may be well to point out that 'under the general law of the land' also an innkeeper is liable to be indicted at common law for refusing to entertain a traveller. (See Regina v. Ivens, 7 C. & P. 213, and Regina v. Rhymer, 46 Law J. Rep. M. C. 108.) In the latter case the Court of Criminal Appeal no doubt quashed the conviction of an innkeeper for refusing to supply refreshment, but this was because the 'carlton' or refreshment bar of the inn was not a part of the inn itself, because the prosecutor was not a traveller or wayfarer, and because he claimed to have a large dog with him to stay as long as he did himself; any of which reasons would have been sufficient to invalidate the conviction. The general rule, however, that an innkeeper is bound to entertain all travellers, and cannot, as the vice-chairman of the Sussex Sessions put it to the jury, 'select his customers, or reject any from caprice or dislike,' was assumed to be perfectly sound law by the whole of the Court, and unless a soldier in uniform is as bad a companion as a dangerous dog, to reject a wayfarer for being accompanied by such soldier is beyond all doubt indictable and punishable by fine or imprisonment or both, at the discretion of the Court before whom the offender is tried.

IN connection with the rumoured movement in Wales for the establishment therein of a capital with a Lord Mayor, attention may be directed to the question whether Acts of Parliament extend to Wales without express mention of it. At first sight this may seem somewhat doubtful. The Interpretation Act of 1889 is silent on the point. In the Inland Revenue Regulation Act of 1890 it is expressly provided by section 38 that 'in that Act and in every other Act relating to Inland Revenue, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, expressions referring to England shall be construed as applying also to Wales.' Finally, in the Government Evidence Bill of the present session, England, Wales, and Ireland are more than once strung together (see, e.g., clauses 26–28) as if they were three separate kingdoms. All doubt, however, on the subject is removed by a certain 'Act to enforce the execution of an Act for granting to His Majesty several rates and duties upon houses, windows, or lights' (20 Geo. II. c. 42), by section 3 of which, 'in all cases where the kingdom of England, or that part of Great Britain called England, hath been or shall be mentioned in any Act of Parliament, the same has been and shall from henceforth be deemed and taken to comprehend and include the dominion of Wales.' This being so, it may be suggested that Wales should disappear as a separate expression in the Acts of Parliament of the future, unless it be necessary to pass some enactment peculiar thereto.

A RECENT number of the Indian Jurist calls attention to a shocking miscarriage of justice in the trial of prisoners charged with a murder of the most atrocious character in the city of Hyderabad (Deccan). Mumtaz Bi, wife of Sadalla, a Munshi and professing Christian, was decoyed into a house and 'there done to death, partly with the handkerchief of the Thug, partly with the rice pounder of the ryot.' The body was stripped of its jewels and packed in a wooden case, and then taken to the railway station to be forwarded to Lahore. Fortunately suspicions were aroused at the station, inquiry was made, and four persons were arrested. Three of these made statements of a self-criminatory character, the Commissioner of the City Police seemed to be active, and yet no one has been convicted of the crime. Every hindrance seems to have been put in the way by the native Court, which insisted on hearing the case in five days' time, before the evidence could possibly have been prepared, and then virtually discharged one of the prisoners who was most strongly suspected of the crime. One of the oddest parts of the proceedings was that the judge actually sent a sort of apology to the Hyderabad Record for discharging this man. It is true that one of the other three accused persons was convicted of attempting to make away with the body and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment, a sentence which was subsequently revised by imprisonment for life. The reason assigned by the Indian Jurist for these extraordinary proceedings is that Abdul Wahid, the discharged prisoner, was brother of one official of the Government and brother-in-law of a much higher official. The case of the prosecution does not appear to have been honestly conducted, and the judge actually declined to admit the scientific examination of the blood on Abdul Wahid's clothes. The whole scandal, however, would have been hushed up but for the intervention of Mr. J. H. Nelson, an English barrister, and former member of the India Civil Service, who demanded British justice on the ground that Abdul Wahid and his servants were subjects of the Queen. The Hyderabad Government took alarm at this, and issued an extraordinary resolution, which is published in the Indian Jurist, dealing elaborately with various theories of the crime, and ordering the re-arrest of Abdul Wahid, who is to be kept in custody, if arrested, unless he can find bail to the extent of 10,000 rupees. It would, of course, according to our ideas, be monstrous if a man charged with murder were to be let out on bail at all. In the meantime the accused has escaped. We are not free from responsibility for the decent government of native states under our protection, and if the story in the Indian Jurist is substantially accurate Mr. Nelson should lose no time in communicating with the Secretary of State on the subject.

IT is, of course, a well-settled rule that an executor may retain a debt due to the testator out of a pecuniary legacy or share of residuary personal estate bequeathed to the debtor. In Ackerman v. Ackerman, reported in our Notes of Cases for this week, Mr. Justice Kekewich applied this rule to a case where real and personal estate were given to trustees (who were the same persons as the executors) upon trust for sale and conversion, holding that in the case of a mixed residuary fund like this the debtor must pay his debt before sharing in the proceeds of sale of the residuary real as well as personal estate. His lordship said that the principle was that 'a person who owes an estate money, that is, who is bound to increase the general mass by a contribution of his own, cannot claim his aliquot share of the mass without first making the contribution which completes it,' and that this principle applied to the case of a residuary mixed fund made up of the proceeds of sale of real as well as personal estate. There can, we think, be no doubt as to the correctness of the decision. The same circumstances, we may add, appear to have existed in Hodgson v. Fox, 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 52; L. R. 9 Chanc. Div. 673, where the fund was similarly composed of the proceeds of sale of real and personal estate, but in that case, the legatee having become bankrupt before the death of the testatrix, Vice-Chancellor Hall on that ground decided against the right of retainer altogether.

SECTION 26 of the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), enacts that in any action brought against any person for doing or causing to be done anything in pursuance of that Act a verdict shall be given for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuited or discontinue his action; then the defendant shall have and recover his full costs, for which he shall have the same remedy as a defendant in any case by law has. A similar provision appeared in section 8 of 8 Anne, c. 19, the earliest statute relating to copyright, which remained in force, as modified by 41 Geo. III. c. 107, and 54 Geo. III. c. 156, until 1842, when it was repealed by the Copyright Act of that year. Curiously enough, until the decision of the Court of Appeal last week in Avery v. Wood (Notes of Cases, p. 118), the meaning of the expression 'full costs' in those statutes —whether 'solicitor and client' or 'party and party' costs—had never been judicially determined.

THE meaning of full costs was, in Trevelyan v. Jamieson, 10 Exch. 748, decided in 1855, declared to be 'ordinary costs as between party and party;' and in Irvine v. Reddish, 5 B. & Ald. 796, it was decided in 1822 that there was no distinction in law between costs and full costs. It is true that in Doe d. Hyde v. The Mayor of Manchester, 12 C. B. 474, a wider interpretation was, in 1852, placed upon the words 'full costs,' which were held to mean a complete indemnity. That case was, however, decided under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, and must, moreover, be regarded as overruled by Trevelyan v. Jamieson (ubi sup.). It was upon the authority of Trevelyan v. Jamieson and Irvine v. Reddish, which show what the well-established practice in the common law Courts has been, that the Court of Appeal, in Avery v. Wood, held (affirming Mr. Justice North) that full costs in copyright actions meant party and party costs, notwithstanding the contention that the defendants in that case were entitled to be fully indemnified against the costs incurred by them in resisting a claim to copyright that had failed. The defendants argued that, the plaintiffs' claim to copyright having been dismissed, the defendants were entitled to have and recover solicitor and client costs. This contention, however, did not prevail with the Court of Appeal.

IT is noticeable that section 10 of the Copyright Act, 1842, which is much the same as section 5 of the Act of Anne, gives costs in certain other matters as between 'attorney and client.' It may be fairly supposed, therefore, that the Legislature would have used those words in section 26 instead of 'full costs' if it had been intended to give more than party and party costs. At any rate, the decision of the Court of Appeal in the present case may be taken to have finally settled this small point.

IF a single Court of Appeal were to be established there would be fully twenty judges, all, as the Law Quarterly proposes, Lords of Parliament. To these might be added retired Indian and colonial judges of eminence, whose presence would not only increase the confidence of India and the colonies in the decisions given on final appeal, but would serve to unite the colonies more closely to the mother country. There is, however, a danger in this scheme of discouraging appeals when comparatively small sums are involved. An appeal to the Court of Appeal is, as regards costs, a very different matter from an appeal to the House of Lords; and there would, under the proposed reform, have to be as much elaboration and as much printing as there now is for an appeal to the House of Lords. Moreover, apart from the eminence of the men who constitute it, the House of Lords has one supreme merit; there are rarely more than two cases down for hearing on one day. The case is thoroughly thrashed out in a leisurely way, so that it is almost impossible that any point can have been overlooked. Then it is questionable whether the final and irreversible character of any decision would be recognised as the judgments of the House of Lords are now recognised. There would in our jurisprudence be no 'Roma locuta est, causa finita est.' To many minds this may seem an advantage rather than the reverse; and it does sometimes happen that the Court of Appeal is really a stronger one than the House of Lords, as it is occasionally constituted. If there were but one Court of Appeal, all members of the House of Lords, its different divisions might all sit at Westminster, and thereby contribute to the solution of the ever-recurring difficulty of space, as two more Courts would be permanently available in Carey Street.

WARDS OF COURT.

THE Crown is parens patriæ, and a ward of Court is under the protection of its constitutional parent, that protection being extended to the infant through the persons to whom the Crown has delegated its authority. In Snell's 'Principles of Equity' it is stated (7th edit. p. 414) that 'the origin of the jurisdiction in Chancery to appoint a guardian over infants is to be found in the prerogative of the Crown, which is under a general duty as parens patriæ, and has a corresponding power to protect those who have no other lawful protector, and the jurisdiction is exercised in Chancery as a branch of the general jurisdiction originally confided in and delegated to that Court.' In the Matter of Gills, Minors, L. R. Ir. 27 Chanc. Div. 129, the Lord Chancellor of Ireland has had to exercise his authority under somewhat interesting circumstances. Three wards of Court (two boys and a girl) were entitled under their grandfather's will to a sum of 8,000*l.* in equal shares, provided that the shares of each of them should not be payable until he or she attained thirty, or married with the consent of the trustees. In the will there was a power given to the trustees in their discretion, in case the girl became a professed nun, to pay to the lady superior of the religious house to which she belonged part of the 8,000*l.*, not exceeding 1,000*l.*, and after such payment the girl was to have no further claim on the 8,000*l.* The grandfather there showed a not uncommon aversion to his money being swallowed up by communities in which he had no interest, though he permitted a portion of it to be devoted to the religious house which his granddaughter might join. In June, 1879, an order was made for the maintenance of the minors. The two boys attained twenty-one, but in 1890 the girl, being then in her twentieth year, entered a convent and soon became a novice, but took no vows. The period of the novitiate would have lasted two years, so that before she became a professed nun she would have attained her majority and ceased to be a ward of Court. The guardian of the person and fortune of the minors took out a summons asking (inter alia) that the maintenance order might be continued, and that he might be repaid the sum of 32*l.*, being the amount expended by him as the entrance fee of the girl into the novitiate and for her outfit. The Lord Chancellor acceded to the application for the continuance of the maintenance, as it was necessary that the wards of Court should be duly maintained, but disallowed the 32*l.* on the ground that it had been spent without the sanction of or notice to the Court, and contrary to its practice. As regards the practice of the Court, the Lord Chancellor's judgment represents not only what is done in Ireland, but also in England, for on p. 134 his lordship says: 'I also communicated with England to ascertain the practice there, and I am informed by Mr. Justice Chitty, after communicating with the other judges of the Chancery Division and his senior chief clerk, who had been twenty-seven years in office, that there is no record of any sanction being given or even applied for to a female ward of Court under age entering on a novitiate or (to use Mr. Justice Chitty's words) "taking any positive step leading to an irrevocable vow." The importance, the seriousness of the step is obvious.' From the practice revealed by the English evidence it would seem that a ward of Court would not be permitted to become a novice in a convent, but must postpone that step until she has become her own mistress by attaining her majority. From that time she is, of course, free to do as she likes, though the Court might view with suspicion any acts of the kind performed by her soon after twenty-one. In a recent case, where a petition was presented for the payment of money out of Court soon after an infant's coming of age, and it appeared that he had heavily incumbered his property directly he had entered into manhood, Mr. Justice Chitty allowed him to have the privilege of a ward and have the petition heard in camerâ, so that any necessary explanations as to the incumbrances might be given. The Lord Chancellor of Ireland in In re Gills did not remove the girl from the convent, as it appeared from the evidence that she was in a delicate state of health, and any thwarting of her wishes might develop 'swift and deadly disease.' Contracts in restraint of marriage have always been deemed contrary to the policy of the law, and, of course, the life of a nun does presuppose that marriage will never be the lot of the person who has entered a convent. Possibly this policy of the law is a survival of the days when parents were considered fortunate in having a large number of children, when the psalmist could say with sincere feeling, 'Happy is the man that has his quiver full of them.' In a thickly populated country it might seem to be the wiser policy of the law to favour contracts in restraint of marriage, but there cannot be a doubt that it is right to discountenance any irretrievable steps taken by those who are not old enough to know their own minds. When the novitiate was over the ward in question might turn her back on her conventual life and be free, but the influences and customs of those two years, and the habits of obedience thus formed to the convent authorities, might make this difficult for a girl just entering on womanhood. Guardians, who dread their wards entering monastic houses or convents, can thus, by making their charges wards of Court, prevent such a step being taken. In Simpson's 'Law of Infants' (2nd edit. p. 145) an unreported case, where such a course was pursued, is thus referred to: 'In Todd v. Lynes a young man of seventeen was persuaded by the defendant to leave his father and go to a monastery under the charge of the defendant. The father made himself a trustee of 100*l.* Consols for the infant, and filed a bill to make him a ward of Court. He then applied for an order to restrain the defendant from letting the son take monastic vows, to deliver him to the custody of the father, and, if necessary, to attend the judge personally. The order was made, but the defendant taking no notice of it, the serjeant-at-arms was sent to fetch the infant. On the defendant's appearance he was reprimanded by the judge, and would have been made to pay the costs if asked for; and the judge said he might have been committed for contempt. The boy was delivered to the father.' It is satisfactory to find in the Irish case that the lady superior did not know that the girl was a ward of Court.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS ON THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

II.

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION RELATING TO DESIGNS.

THE earliest Act of Parliament dealing with copyright in designs was 27 Geo. III. c. 38. It provided that from and after June 1, 1787, the proprietor of any new and original pattern for printing linens, calicoes, cottons, and muslins should have the sole right of printing it for two months from the day of the first publication thereof, and that infringers should be liable to an action for damages, which was required to be commenced within six months from the commission of the offence in respect of which redress was claimed. This Act extended to Scotland, and was to continue in force for one year. The only points of legal interest connected with it are the implied definitions, which it contained, of 'proprietor' and 'infringer.' (1) The statutory copyright is vested in 'every person who shall invent, design, and print, or cause to be invented, designed, or printed, and become the proprietor of,' any new and original pattern, &c. (2) An infringer under this Act is every person whatsoever who during the existence of the statutory copyright in any design 'shall print, work, or copy,' 'or cause to be printed, worked, or copied,' the original pattern of the design, 'or shall print or reprint or cause to be printed or reprinted,' any such pattern, 'and shall publish, sell, or expose to sale or in any other manner dispose of, or cause to be published, sold, or in any other manner disposed of, any linen, cotton, callicoe (sic) or muslin so printed without the consent of the proprietor or proprietors thereof, first had and obtained in writing, signed by him or them respectively, in the presence of two or more creditable witnesses, knowing the same to be so printed or reprinted without the consent of the proprietor or proprietors.'

It is useless to speculate about the scope, or to analyse the terms, of these clauses. They belong to the infancy of Parliamentary drafting.

The next three Designs Acts may be disposed of very shortly: 39 Geo. III. c. 19, continued 37 Geo. III. c. 38 to July 1, 1794; 34 Geo. III. c. 23, made it perpetual, and extended the period of copyright to three months; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 13, extended these Acts to Ireland and applied their provisions to (a) fabrics composed of wool, silk, or hair, and (b) mixed fabrics composed of any two or more of the following materials: linen, cotton, wool, silk, or hair.

Meanwhile two concurrent streams of legislation had covered (1) designs for articles of manufacture other than lace and the fabrics included in the Acts above mentioned (2 Vict. c. 17), by which the period of copyright was fixed at twelve months in the case of designs for articles of manufacture generally, and three years in the case of designs applied to articles of manufacture 'being of any metal or mixed metals,' and (2) all forms of sculpture (38 Geo. III. c. 71, and 54 Geo. III. c. 55) under which the copyright lasted for fourteen years.

The material contents of the next batch of design statutes may be summarised under a few heads:

1. Copyright in designs for sculpture was definitely excluded from the purview of the Designs Acts (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 3, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, s. 2), except as regards provisional registration (13 & 14 Vict. c. 104, s. 15).

2. A distinction was drawn between ornamental and useful designs. The former were divided into thirteen classes, and were made the subject of copyright for periods ranging from nine months to three years (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 3, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 70). The latter were protected for three years (6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, s. 2).

3. A system of compulsory registration was established, and the statutory protection was made to run from the date of registration, and not, as under the Georgian Act, from the date of publication (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 4; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, s. 2). The registrar of designs was at one time appointed by the Board of Trade (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 14; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65, s. 7), but the Copyright of Designs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 93) transferred the powers of the Board of Trade under the old Designs Acts to the Commissioners of Patents.

4. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 104, enabled the registrar of designs to register provisionally for the period of one year any design within the meaning of the Designs Acts or the Sculpture of Copyright Act, 1814 (54 Geo. III. c. 56). Provisional registration gave to the proprietor of a design the same remedies as complete registration, but it was liable to be defeated if he exposed for sale the design or any article to which it was applied during the existence of the provisional protection. This protection did not, however, extend to (a) publication at exhibitions previously certified by the Board of Trade, or (b) the sale or transfer of the right and property in the design itself.

5. Any person that acquired a design for good and valuable consideration was deemed to be its 'proprietor' (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 5).

The Designs Acts, 1883–1888, have modified the old law in several particulars. But the law of copyright in sculpture is still excluded from the general law of designs (section 60), and the definition of 'proprietor' remains unchanged. But the cumbrous distinction between ornamental and useful designs has been got rid of (section 60). Provisional registration has disappeared, and a uniform period of copyright—five years—has been adopted. In the following papers we shall consider some of the leading cases under the Designs Acts.

(To be continued.)

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords.

The royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—

Consolidated Fund (No. 2) Bill.
Customs and Inland Revenue Bill.
Pollen Fisheries (Ireland) Bill.
Savings Banks Bill.
Museums and Gymnasiums Bill.
Reformatory and Industrial Schools (Children) Bill.

Russian Dutch Loan Bill.
Public Accounts and Charges Bill.
Herring Branding (Northumberland) Bill.
Thames Deep Water Dock Bill.
London Overhead Wires Bill.
London Sky Signs Bill.

Bills read a third time and passed:—
Fisheries Bill.
Mail Ships Bill.
Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.

Bills through committee:—
Land Purchase (Ireland) Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.
Mortmain and Charitable Uses Amendment Bill.
Allotments Rating Exemption Bill.
Municipal Registration (Dublin and Belfast) Bill.

Second readings:—
Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.
Penal Servitude Bill.
Public Health (London) Bill.

New bills:—
Lunacy Act Amendment Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—
Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.
Stamp Duties Bill.
Stamp Management Duties Bill.
Ranges Bill.
Metalliferous Mines (Isle of Man) Bill.
Free Education Bill.
County Councils Elections Bill.
Consular Salaries and Fees Bill.
Crofters' Common Grazings (Scotland) Bill.

Bill through Committee:—
Turbary (Ireland) Bill.
Post Office Acts Amendment Bill.
Western Highlands and Islands (Scotland) Works Bill.
Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Highways and Bridges Bill.

Second readings:—
Highways and Bridges Bill.
Evidence Bill.
Wild Birds' Protection Act, 1880, Amendment Bill.
Statute Law Revision Bill—referred to Select Committee.
Training Colleges (Ireland) Bill.

New Bill:—
To give Facilities to Industrial and Provident Societies to acquire the Fee-simple of their Holdings.

Bills withdrawn:—
Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889, Amendment Bill.
Child-life Insurance Registration (Scotland) Bill.
Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Bill.

THE SOUTH WALES CIRCUIT.—Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., of the Western Circuit, has been appointed a Royal Commissioner of Assize, to go on the South Wales Circuit in place of Mr. Justice Collins, who is sitting in the Probate and Admiralty Division for Sir Charles Butt. The learned commissioner will proceed on the South Wales Circuit alone until Chester is reached, when he will be joined by Mr. Justice Lawrance.

Reviews.

EMDEN ON WINDING-UP.

The Practice and Forms in Winding-up Companies. A Concise and Practical Treatise upon the Law and Practice relating to the Winding up of Companies from the Commencement of the Winding-up Proceedings to Dissolution. With a Chapter on Reconstruction, &c. By ALFRED EMDEN, Barrister-at-Law. Fourth Edition. London: Wm. Clowes & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THE author of this work has achieved a well-deserved reputation as a writer of text-books, and the volume now before us is calculated to add to his laurels. The fact that it is a fourth edition affords proof of its utility and of the high estimation in which it is held. The book is now brought well down to date by the incorporation of the recent legislation and rules affecting that branch of company law with which it deals. Mr. Emden is thoroughly practical, and company lawyers may therefore turn with confidence to his pages for help when in doubt; and the book is so well arranged that the practitioner will generally have but little difficulty in obtaining the assistance which he seeks. A new and very useful chapter has been added, on 'Reconstruction,' and the whole book has been thoroughly and carefully revised. References are given to all the reports, and every case appears to have been duly noted up. The size of the volume is again slightly increased, but, having regard to the nature of the subject with which it deals, we are surprised that the increase is not still greater, and that the book remains as handy as it is.

CHALMERS ON BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

A Digest of the Law of Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Cheques, and Negotiable Securities. By his Honour Judge CHALMERS. Fourth Edition. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THE last edition of this work was published in 1887, and in the present edition all the cases bearing upon the subject which have been decided in the interval will be found inserted in their place, while the notes appended to the various sections of the Act have in many instances been rewritten and enlarged. The author scarcely does justice to his industry when, in his paternal solicitude for the welfare of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, of which he was the draughtsman, he claims that the decision of the House of Lords in Vagliano Brothers v. The Bank of England, delivered on March 5 last, and reported in the April number of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS (60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 145), is the only really important case upon the Act which has occurred during the last four years. In spite of this, more than one hundred additional cases will be found to be cited in the new edition, the bulk of which is swollen to the extent of twenty pages, exclusive of two entirely new chapters dealing the one with the payment of debts by bills, notes, or cheques, and the other with negotiable or quasi-negotiable securities for money other than those previously treated of, such as foreign notes to bearer, circular notes, debentures, dividend warrants, exchequer bills, post-office orders, scrip and share certificates and transfers. This latter chapter is scarcely complete in its present form, and, indeed, can hardly be intended to be from the number of subjects alluded to in so short a space. In dealing, for instance, with share certificates, the important case of In re The Bahia and San Francisco Railway Company, 37 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 176, should scarcely have been omitted. As for the main part of the work, the intimate connection of the author with the subject for so many years is a guarantee of its value and completeness. We regret, however, that the error of giving a single reference only to the cases cited has been repeated in this edition.

Correspondence.

THE LATE MR. TAXING-MASTER SKIRROW.

SIR,—The regret which was felt by the legal profession on the retirement of the late Mr. Taxing-Master Skirrow from official life in 1889 was mitigated by the hope that he might for many years enjoy the rest and ease to which he was so justly entitled; but, now that he is no more, that regret gives place to a sense of loss which it would be unbecoming not to attempt to express in suitable language. I trust I may be permitted to say a few parting words in memory of one for whom I am sure the legal profession felt so much esteem. It seems only the other day that he retired from public life, and received those testimonials from his private friends, professional brothers, and solicitors, who only knew him as taxing-master, which we all know he prized so much. I think it should be thoroughly well known that during the twenty-seven years of this gentleman's official life as Chancery taxing-master neither he nor his staff nor the offices in which day by day he worked with such assiduity over the bills of costs referred to him for taxation ever cost the country a single farthing, so considerable was the amount of fees earned by him and his clerks in the course of their work, owing to the rapidity with which he despatched his business. This was to suitors and solicitors alike a considerable boon. So far from costing the country anything, the fee fund gained a very large profit on the work done by him; for instance, when in January, 1878, I was urging the necessity of the appointment of an additional Chancery taxing-master, I made a calculation from the judicial statistics, and from them proved that this profit for one year (that ending October 31, 1876) amounted to 2,047*l.* 10*s.*, made up thus:—

	£	s.	d.
Total fees earned by Mr. Skirrow and staff in that year. . .	4,947	10	0
Amount of salaries of the master and his two clerks and estimated proportion of rent of office .	2,900	0	0
Profit . . .	2,047	10	0

(See my letter which appeared in the Times of Saturday, January 19, 1878.) But there was a decrease of business in 1876, and the fees were comparatively few. In 1881 the fees earned by Mr. Skirrow and his staff amounted to 6,794*l.* 18*s.*, and in 1882 to 5,504*l.* 10*s.*, so that his average profit was much larger than that for the year 1876. However, simply taking the profit earned by this gentleman and his staff at 2,000*l.* a year, he, in his twenty-seven years of official life, not only cost the country nothing, but earned for it profit amounting to 54,000*l.*

None of the Chancery taxing-masters cost the country anything, and all return a profit to the fee fund; but I am not dealing with that, I am only paying a parting tribute to Mr. Skirrow, whose official work is worthy of special recognition; and I am sure that it will be a matter of no small satisfaction to the legal profession to know that his portrait, painted by his friend the eminent artist Professor Herkomer, will pass on to posterity the remembrance of this eminently worthy gentleman, whose loss we all so much deplore.

Passing from his professional to his private life, it is only necessary to call attention to the fact that the subscribers to the 'Skirrow testimonial' embraced such names as Lord Wolseley, K.T., Robert Browning (the poet), privy councillors, lords justices, barristers, solicitors, eminent actors, journalists, and numerous friends, to show how widespread was the affection felt for him.

He was born on July 1, 1820; died June 25, 1891, and was buried at Kensal Green on June 30, 1891, on which day he would have completed his seventy-first year.

JAMES RAWLINSON.

Upper Holloway, N.: July 7.

Unreported Cases.

POLICE.

ILLEGAL DETENTION OF MILITARY PENSION PAPERS.

AT Lambeth, on July 4, a man belonging to the Army Reserve force was brought before the Court by Warrant-officer Moore. He informed the magistrate that the complainant had deposited his pension paper with a money-lender, who refused to part with it, as he had advanced money upon the document as security. Sergeant Moore stated further that there had been several complaints of a like description, where lodging-house keepers and money-lenders had kept certificates of pensioners. Mr. Hopkins asked what the applicant complained of, and he stated that a certain money-lender had, as a security for debt, detained his life-certificate, which was necessary for him to produce before he could obtain the amount of his pension.—Mr. Hopkins said it was a matter that should certainly be looked into. He referred to section 9 of the Army (Annual) Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 5), which section enacted: 'That every person who receives, detains, or has in his possession the identity-certificate or life-certificate of a person entitled to a military pension, or to receive pay as a pledge or security for debt, or with a view to obtain payment from the pensioner, shall be liable on summary jurisdiction to the like penalty as under subsection 1 of this section; and the certificate shall be deemed to be property within the meaning of the section.' Mr. Hopkins said it was a very important question, as the penalty against offenders was heavy. After consulting the various sections of the Act, he decided to issue a summons against the party who was alleged to have illegally detained the papers and certificates of the army pensioner.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

THE following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Final and Intermediate Examinations of the Incorporated Law Society held on June 16, 17, and 18, 1891:—

FINAL EXAMINATION, JUNE 16 AND 17.

Adderley, Rupert Thomas
Amphlett, James
Andrew, Sidney
Armitage, William
Ash, William Shipley
Baker, Herbert Kendra
Bale, Arthur Edwin
Barlow, Thomas
Barnes, Nicolas Edmund
Barrow, Richard Sowton
Bennett, Anthony Henry Armitage
Bennett, Frank Clayton
Berkeley, Charles Walter
Berridge, Harry Morpott
Biddle, George William
Birkett, John Stanwell, B.A.
Blazeby, Horace Henry
Blunt, Arthur Giraud
Boulton, Frederic James
Brabner, George Harold
Bradby, Edward Hugh Falkwine, B.A.
Brandreth, Colvin, B.A.
Bransbury, John, B.A.
Brewis, Bertram
Brigstocke, Augustus, B.A.
Brutton, George Kingston Hall
Bryan, Frank Smith
Bunnett, George Radclyffe
Burr, Frederick John, B.A.
Caldecott, Leicester
Canham, Alfred Henry
Capes, Robert
Carlisle, Ernest James, B.A.
Carr, Edward
Carter, Henry Wilfred
Chalk, John Henry
Champion, Edward Frank, LL.B.
Clarke, Arthur
Clarke, Arthur Edwin
Cohen, Baruch
Conway, Philip Charles
Cooper, Arthur Savage
Cooper, John Richmond
Coote, John
Coulson, Henry Lewis
Crellin, Henry, B.A.
Cuff, Arthur William
Culross, William
Davidson, Norman
Davies, Colin Rees
Davies, Jonah
Davies-Colley, Thomas Henry, B.A.
Davies, William Richards
Dodd, Cyril
Donisthorpe, Edmund Russell, B.A.
Draper, Harold Irving
Dunning, Humphrey Percy
Dunster, Edward Luis
Eagleton, Leonard Osborne
Eaton, Frank Ernest
Eddison, John Arthur, B.A.
Edgley, Walter
Eisdell, Joseph Carter
Emanuel, Charles Ansell
Emanuel, Jonas Jacobs
Evans, Arthur Acton
Evans, Richard Gwynne
Evans, Thomas
Firth, William
Fisher, Theodore
Frater, Frederic Moses
Furneaux, John Mudge
Gardiner, Walter Douglas
Geake, Arthur
Gibson, Edward Morris
Gibson, Richard Ernest Hooper
Gocher, Leonard
Gofton, William Smith
Gonin, Alphonse Willett
Gostling, Charles
Gould, Arthur
Grave, Foster
Gray, Charles Herbert
Greenish, Samuel Knethell
Gregson, William Eugene
Gustard, Walter Stafford
Haines, George Warden
Hales, Frederick William
Hall, Matthew Anderson
Halsey, Bernard Edward
Hamer, Arthur
Harratt, Arthur Frederick, B.A.
Harris, William Nelson
Harrison, Ernest
Harrison, Robert George
Hay-Chapman, Francis Frederick Angerstein
Henderson, Henry Beatty
Hickson, George William
Hill, Henry Egan, B.A., LL.B.
Hilleary, Leicester Mount, B.A.
Hind, Jesse William, B.A.
Hodges, Francis Nowell
Homer, Alfred
Hopkins, Henry Russell
Howard, Allen
Hoyle, Theodore
Hudson, Robert
Hughes, Edward Percival Whitley
Hurd, Samuel Martin
Ingle, William Brouncker
Jackson, Edward M'Donald Caunter
Jackson, John Herbert
Jackson, William, B.A.
Joblin, Francis Edward
Johnson, Arthur Palmer, B.A.
Johnson, Joseph Edwin
Jones, James Edmund Woodstock, B.A.
Jones, Owen Tudor
Jones, William Percival, B.A.
Kay, Arthur
Kay, James Sellers
Knight, Edward Boards
Knowles, John
Langley, Henry Gilchrist
Smith, Hamilton Lavers, B.A.
Leake, John Hasleham
Leesmith, Bryan Lee, B.A.
Legender, William Pearson
Ley, Frank Ernest Rooke
Liddle, Charles Gordon
Linnell, Herbert
Lloyd, John Richard
Long, Alexander John Wakeman
Macnaghten, Frederic Fergus, B.A.
Magee, George Michael
Magniac, Charles Vernon
Mansford, Henry
Martin, Harold, M.A.
Martineau, Gerald, LL.B.
Martyn, John Ley Kemthorne
Martin, Reginald Yelf
Mason, George Percival
Mathews, Henry Noble
Mawby, Frederick Tusting
Mawdesley, Thomas Smith, LL.B.
Maxwell, James Graham, B.A.
Maynard, Samuel Tomkins
Mayo, Thomas Worsfold
Meakin, James Robinson
Menneer, William Henry
Michelmore, Philip, B.A.
Mills, Albert Thomas
Moore, Arthur Collin, B.A.
Moore, Robert Newbold
Mosley, Godfrey, B.A.
Muddiman, Joseph G., B.A.
Mullens, Harold Arthur
Musgrove, Arthur
Mylchreest, Claude Wathew
Neate, Rayner Maurice, LL.M., B.A.
Newbegin, Ernest Warne
Nicholls, Percy James
Nicholson, Charles Lothian
Nimmo, David
Norton, Theodore
Oldham, Ernest Fitzjohn
Osborne, Algernon Willoughby, B.A.
Ouvry, Ernest Canington
Parkinson, Joseph
Pearson, John Dawson
Peet, Henry
Peet, Thomas Ernest, LL.B.
Pickin, William John
Pierce-Lewis, John
Pollock, Robert Gordon
Porter, Leonard Lachlan
Porter, Roderick
Postlethwaite, George Burrow, B.A.
Powell, George Gordon, B.A.
Price, John
Pye, George
Rackham, Thomas Charles Martelli
Radcliffe, Vincent
Reddish, Henry Lupton
Redgate, William Herbert
Rehder, Ernst Adolf
Rhodes, Arthur Elliot
Rhodes, James Furness
Ritson, Cecil Spark
Ritson, George Spark
Roberts, Edwyn Turner
Roberts, Elias
Roberts, George Cecil
Robinson, Charles
Robson, Alexander
Robson, Leonard Gray
Roscoe, Henry Lincoln, B.A.
Ruff, John Pinn
Sale, Frederic William Reed
Sandford, Leslie Gordon
Saunders, Ernest Henry
Scammell, Stephen Malcolm
Simmonds, George May
Skelton, John Ambrose
Slade, Evan Martin
Slocock, Arthur Edmund Oliver, M.A.
Smith, Arthur
Smith, William Hubert, B.A.
Southwell, Harry Glanville
Steele, Henry Squire
Stooke, Charles
Stowell, Richard Tatham
Stuart, Hubert Langham
Sugden, Herbert Stanley
Taylor, Frederick Percy
Thomas, Sidney Herbert
Thompson, James Richard
Traill, Walter Sinclair
Treasure, Frank
Tucker, William Robey
Tweed, Robert Peers Fenn
Veitch, Harry Morgan
Wagner, Albert James
Walker, Albert William Joseph
Walton, Herbert Henry Bishop, B.A.
Watkins, Charles
Watson, Samuel
Watts, Henry Walter
Wedlake, Charles Noel
Wheatley, James Byers
Wheeler, George Gabriel Glasspool
White, Edward Aubrey
Whiteley, Frederic James
Williams, John Lee Bromley
Wilson, Brereton Knyvet
Wilson, John
Windus, John Edward
Woolnough, Charles Walter
Worth, Stanley Baldwin
Wright, Arthur Ernest

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION, JUNE 18.

Addison, George Bramsdon
Alcock, Frank Morley
Alston, Robert Graham Fitzgerald
Andrews, George Wilton
Archer, Francis William
Arnison, Nathan Henry
Baker, Henry Mills, B.A.
Baxter, Joseph Henry
Bertram, Julius, B.A.
Blackhurst, Alfred
Blakemore, Arthur Villiers, B.A.
Bloxam, William Richard
Bristow, Arnold Wilson
Brown, Henry Percy
Brown, Oswald Charles Bernard
Butt, Samuel Alford
Campbell, Donald
Carrick, Ernest
Chapman, Arthur
Chapman, Thomas
Chatwin, Herbert Freeman
Cheeseman, Charlie
Clark, George Riley
Clarke, Joseph Robert
Clay, Sidney Herbert
Clayton, George Alfred
Clinton, Norman
Cockshott, Arthur
Coleman, William Arthur
Cosway, Percy Lee
Cowley, Frederic John
Craven, Mark Herbert
Cumberland, William Bentick
Cundall, Alfred William
Davies, Myles Fenton, B.A.
Davies, Ottley Wilding
Davies, William James
Dawson, Conrad Edward
Draycott, Arthur
Driver, Newton Graeme
Durrant, Arthur Ernest
Ellis, Cecil Flower
Farrer, Noel Maitland, B.A.
Fell, Basil Haig, LL.B.
Fletcher, Carteret Ernest, B.A.
Francis, Arthur Edward
Fraser, Henry Edwin
Frost, William
Gibbs, Joseph Archibald Youngman
Gill, Henry Howes Courtenay
Gold, Philip, B.A.
Goode, William Winter
Granger, Thomas Henry
Greening, Claude
Hallam, Robert
Hawes, Robert Porson, B.A.
Heilmann, Peter Joseph
Herington, George Alfred
Hiatt, Charles Thomas John
Hildesheim, Paul, B.A.
Hills, Gerald Hewett French
Hinchcliffe, Arthur Edward Townend
Holden, Alfred Philip
Horten, William Hurlstone
Hossell, Herbert
Howell, Edmund Gwynne
Howell, Marmaduke Gwynne
Hubbard, Nathaniel William
Hudson, Frank Russell
Hunter, Charles Herbert B.A.
Huntsman, George Alexander Irvine, B.A.
Jackson, Cyril Hugh, B.A.
Jarvis, John Sidney
Jones, Edward Owen
Jones, Frederick Graham
Jones, Harry
Joy, Richard Eustace, B.A.
Kidson, Arthur Frederic
Kirk, Thomas Laurence
Knee, Alfred William Colston
Lamb, Thomas Edgar
Lancaster, Eric Allport, B.A., LL.B.
Laurie, Walter David, B.A.
Levick, William Parry
Lewis, Robert Ajax
Litchfield, Arthur Erasmus, B.A.
Lodge, Joseph
Lydall, Herbert Wykeham
Mackay, William Gayer Starbuck
Makin, Thomas
Marsh, Ernest John, B.A.
Martin, Herbert Magub
Maxwell, William George
Maycock, Bernard Joseph, B.A.
Mayo, Charles Joseph
Meikle, James Edward
Miles, Gilbert
Miller, George Cospatrick Muirhead
Mills, Walter Wilgress, B.A.
Milward, Etienne Harding
Molony, James Rowland Hamilton, B.A.
Moon, Walter
Moresby, Charles
Morgan, Charlton Elliot
Morrish, Harold Gabriel, B.A.
Nicholl, Francis William
Nixon, Arthur Cooper, B.A.
Norrish, John Sydney
Ovington, Cecil Ohren, B.A.
Paddison, Alfred
Payn, Sydenham Armstrong
Pearse, Theed
Pearson, Frank
Perry, Arthur William
Piercy, George Hugh
Pigott, William
Plummer, Lambert
Porter, Hugh de Bock
Press, Edward Payne
Pugsley, John Follett
Reed, Frederick
Riley, Alfred
Rix, Wilton John
Roberts, Frank Owen, B.A., LL.B.
Roberts, Nathaniel
Sale, Reginald William, B.A.
Sapte, Fitzroy
Saville, Harry, B.A.
Sedgwick, Ernest Howard
Serpell, Charles Robert
Shapland, Frederick George Westacott
Simey, George Iliff, B.A.
Simon, George Alfred
Smith, Alfred Gerald
Smith, Charles
Smith, George Newham
Speeding, James Habersham
Sprott, Herbert
Squire, Charles
Stainer, Herbert
Steavenson, Henry Gordon
Steel, Arthur Dyne, B.A.
Stevens, Headland
Sturtan, Walter Harold
Tangye, Allan
Tarn, Frank Gerard
Taylor, Joseph Turner
Thomas, Herbert Francis
Thompson, David
Thompson, Thomas Reuben
Turnbull, Thomas
Vickers, Charles Ernest
Waddington, Henry Heywood
Wadsworth, Henry Hodgson
Wallace, Frank
Wareham, Frederick William
Warmington, Harold Henry
Wheeler, Henry Nicholas
Wigg, Leslie Weston
Wigram, Robert Ainger, B.A.
Williams, Henry William
Williamson, James Brindley, B.A.
Williamson, William M'Connell
Wilson, John

THE BAR COMMITTEE.

THE following report of a sub-committee, consisting of Mr. Forbes, Q.C., Mr. Bucknill, Q.C., Mr. W. R. Kennedy, Q.C., and Messrs. K. E. Digby, W. English Harrison, and Joseph Walton, respecting interrogatories and inspection in common law actions, has just been adopted by the Bar Committee:—

'Your sub-committee have carefully considered the question raised by the observations of the Master of the Rolls in the House of Lords on July 17, 1890, with regard to the practice of administering interrogatories and obtaining discovery of documents in the Queen's Bench Division. They agree with the view that the powers of obtaining discovery under the existing rules are often abused, and the costs of an action thereby needlessly increased, but they do not think that it is desirable or even possible to dispense altogether in the Queen's Bench Division either with interrogatories or with discovery of documents. They conceive that the object to be arrived at is to remove the abuses of the present practice, while rendering more effective the important instrument of discovery which is supplied by both methods.

'They consider that there is in general a great difference in point of importance between interrogatories and discovery of documents. If either side is in possession of any document relevant to the case, it seems clear that, in the interests of justice and economy, there should be no delay in the disclosure of it to the other side. Nothing tends so much to stop unnecessary litigation as the earliest possible disclosure of the strength or weakness of a case. They think that the existing rule which requires a deposit of 5*l.* to be paid before discovery can be obtained is objectionable in principle and ineffectual in practice. It often operates in the case of a poor litigant to prevent discovery in a case where discovery is required, while it has no operation where the party seeking discovery is possessed of means. The costs recoverable on taxation upon the paying in and taking out of the 5*l.* are wholly disproportionate, and amount to more than 25 per cent. on the security. They recommend the abolition of the rule contained in Order XXXI., rule 26, and, with regard to discovery of documents generally, they recommend:—

'1. That the defendant by endorsement on his statement of defence and the plaintiff by endorsement on his reply, or either party by notice delivered subsequently, should be entitled to claim the usual affidavit of discovery, and that thereupon the opposite party should within ten days after delivery of the endorsed pleading or of the notice file such affidavit, subject to the power of the Court or a judge to order such affidavit to be filed at any other stage of the action.

'2. In the case of any proceedings being taken by any party to an action in regard to the sufficiency of the opportunity given by his opponent for inspecting and taking copies of documents for which no privilege is claimed, or in regard to claims of privilege in respect of any document, the costs of such proceedings, in the absence of special circumstances, should always follow the event of the application.

'With regard to interrogatories, the case is, they think, different. They agree with the view that in very many of the cases in which they are administered little or no result is obtained, except a considerable increase of cost and delay. But they think there are, on the other hand, cases where it is essential that interrogatories should be administered. For instance, when a party to an action has himself no knowledge of the circumstances, as is the case of a personal representative or a surety, as a general rule, the litigant should have the power of administering interrogatories. There are again other cases incapable of classification, in which the exercise of such a power is useful, even though not absolutely necessary. Often incidental advantages arise, although the interrogatories and answers may not be put in evidence at the trial. Sometimes interrogatories, or the answers to them, stop an action; and, more often still, they elicit information which materially narrows the issues to be tried. Your sub-committee think that these considerations point to the advisability, not of the abolition, but of the more effective control of the power of administering interrogatories.

'They think that the objections to the 5*l.* rule apply to the case of interrogatories as well as to the case of discovery of documents. They recommend in this case also the abolition of the rule, and they are inclined to think that, in order to provide an effective check upon unnecessary or unreasonable interrogatories, it would be desirable to revert to the former practice—viz. that the judge or master in chambers should consider and decide, not merely whether the case is one in which interrogatories may properly be administered, but also whether the particular interrogatories proposed should be allowed. They think that, in order to give the party to be interrogated a fair opportunity of challenging any particular interrogatory, a copy of the proposed interrogatories should be served with the summons.

'They think that the party interrogated, if the judge or the master allows the proposed interrogatories, should not be permitted to raise any objection in his affidavit in answer, except on the ground that answering may tend to incriminate him.

'They think further that in many cases the necessity for interrogatories might be obviated if a more stringent rule were adopted with regard to the necessity of delivering proper particulars. It was apparently the original intention of the framers of the Judicature Rules that the pleadings should in each case contain particulars sufficient to render an application for particulars or for further particulars unnecessary. This intention has not been fulfilled in practice, and a great deal of unnecessary expense and delay is at present caused by applications for particulars, and for further and better particulars, which should have been given with the pleading in the action. They, therefore, think that a plaintiff and a defendant respectively should be found to deliver with his pleadings all requisite particulars; and that in the event of an order being made for particulars, or for further or better particulars, the cost of obtaining such order should, in the absence of special circumstances, be paid by the party whose failure to give any, or any sufficient, particulars with his pleading has rendered such order necessary. If an order is refused the party who took out the summons should pay the costs attending the same.'

MIDDLESEX REGISTRY.

Notice as to Fees in respect of Memorials.

1. THE registrar directs the attention of solicitors and others using the registry to the legal scale of fees for the registration of memorials, which is as follows:—

	s.	d.
For entering a memorial not exceeding 200 words in length	1	0
For every further 100 words or part of 100 words	0	6
For indorsing a certificate of registration as an instrument	1	0
For administering the oath and signing a certificate of the same indorsed on a memorial (where the oath is taken in the office)	2	6

2. The number of words in each memorial should be counted and distinctly marked in figures at the left-hand bottom corner of the memorial before it is brought for registration.

3. The above fees will alone be receivable in the registry in respect of memorials.

Dated the 8th day of July, 1891.

(Signed) ROBERT HALLETT HOLT,
Registrar.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

MAGISTRATES AND SMALL FINES AND COSTS.

A QUESTION of interest to magistrates who have to enforce the provisions of the Vaccination Acts was recently asked in Parliament. The Home Secretary was questioned as to whether he had made further inquiries into the case of Lydia Cook, sentenced by the Southend bench of magistrates to a fine of 1*s.* and 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* costs, or, in default, to seven days' imprisonment; whether the offence alleged against Lydia Cook was her objection to the taking of lymph from her child for purposes of vaccination on the ground that her husband did not wish it because their family was consumptive; whether it is the fact that the police informed the defendant that she would be taken to prison for the non-payment of the sum of 1*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* (the husband's wages being said to be 19*s.* a week), the wife having several children ill at the time, and an infant which has since died; whether there was any justification for inflicting costs to the extent of 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* upon a fine of 1*s.* contrary to the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 8, by which it is enacted that when a fine does not exceed 5*s.* no costs shall be inflicted 'except so far as the Court may think fit to expressly order otherwise,' and what grounds there were in such case for 'expressly ordering' the imposition of such costs; and whether the attention of benches of magistrates and their clerks would be called to this provision in the law and its frequent violation. The Home Secretary, in reply, said he had received a further report with regard to this case. The defendant pleaded guilty to not allowing lymph to be taken from the child on the ground that there was consumption in collateral branches of her husband's family. The bench considered that there was no evidence on behalf of the suggestion, and that it was opposed to the sworn evidence of the medical officer. The report of the justices did not show that there was sufficient ground for the imposition of the costs, although they took the amount of costs into consideration in fixing the amount of the fine, which was 1*s.* Section 8 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act is sometimes overlooked by magistrates. In March of this year a circular was issued pointing out to magistrates that the course which would ordinarily be followed when the fine was not more than 5*s.* was to impose no costs, and that an express order to the contrary could only be made when the justices had some special reason for so doing. In the present case the costs have been paid without a levy and without any imprisonment of the defendant. The attention of the bench would be drawn to the above-named circular, and it would be recommended that they should remit and repay the costs.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

The charges of the chairmen to grand juries at quarter sessions are always replete with interest, as also are their views on other matters—e.g. the licensing problem. At the Lancaster quarter sessions the chairman in his charge congratulated the grand jury that the business was extremely light, there being no serious cases. It was gratifying to find that in that part of Lancashire crime had decreased, and he hoped it would continue to do so. Referring to two cases in which, he said, the statements made by the prisoners were not inconsistent with innocence, the chairman said the committing magistrates might have discharged them with a caution, and proceeded to say that the grand jury would be aware that the Court below had very little power to exercise any discretion where prisoners had committed crime previously. If an indictable offence was established against a prisoner the magistrates were bound to commit for trial, it was a duty obligatory upon them. It was extremely desirable, therefore, that the law should to some extent be altered, in order to give magistrates a discretionary power in such cases. At the Cheshire Quarter Sessions the chairman said the number of prisoners for trial was a little higher than was ordinarily expected in that end of the county. At the other end of the county there were only twelve prisoners for trial, while here there were fifteen. This was the first time within his recollection that this end of the county had beaten the other in the number of its criminals. This, to a certain extent, was only temporary, and was due to the large works that had been in progress in the division, such as the ship canal, which had been productive of a good deal of crime. He was not far wrong in saying that eight out of the fourteen prisoners for trial that day came from that source. That source of crime, however, would shortly be diminished, and he hoped that the state of crime in that division of the county would go back to its normal condition. The magistrates then retired to consider a report to examine into the state and effect of the law relating to the licensing of houses for the sale of intoxicating liquor, when the reappointment of the committee was moved, with instructions to frame general recommendations, and to report to an adjourned Court of Quarter Sessions. It was stated that the report of the committee would consist of recommendations framed by men whom they had chosen to investigate the matter founded on a careful study of the whole question, and could not in any sense be regarded as a command. It was pointed out, however, that there was some danger in the words 'to frame general recommendations.' What were those recommendations for? To influence and guide the justices at the licensing sessions. But the law said they were not to be guided by anything beyond their absolute judicial discretion on the evidence at their investigations. That was clearly shown by the case Regina v. Walsall, 3 C. L. R. 100. It was suggested, therefore, that instead of using the words 'frame general recommendations' they should amend the motion 'to state their conclusions,' and thus avoid the suspicion of attempting to dictate to the justices. The amendment was accepted, the committee, it was further added, had omitted from the return all reference as to whether the tenant was a bonâ fide tenant or merely a manager, because the bona fides of a tenant is a judicial question, and not one for settlement by a policeman calling to make inquiries. In Cheshire the proportion of licensed houses is one to 223 of the population. In connection with quarter sessions business, reference may be made to a protest of the bar at the Preston Quarter Sessions, where attention was called to the fact that these sessions contained the names of only sixteen prisoners, and to deal with them there had been called together five juries, comprising sixty persons, a grand jury of twenty-three persons, and a large body of counsel and justices. The Court should consider whether it was reasonable under the circumstances to hold intermediate sessions, which the bar, who were united on the point, considered a great waste of public time. The chairman observed that one reason why the prisoners at Preston Quarter Sessions had decreased so much was due to the borough of Blackburn now disposing of its own business. After consultation with the other magistrates on the bench, he said the case was not one for the Court to deal with, but one for the magistrates. They might make a trial upon the Summer Sessions, and he thought he could promise that there would be no intermediate sessions at Preston when the next were due.

OUR JUDGES.

'Amidst the enormous effervescence of thoughtlessness, vulgarity, and claptrap which is a necessary consequence of democratic development, the judicial bench has been and is, perhaps, more free from the prevalent weaknesses of the time than any other public institution. Nothing can be more desirable than that the bench should preserve this characteristic, for it is in many ways the most important of all our institutions. All civil government derives its force ultimately from Courts of law, and it would be a misfortune of the first magnitude if they failed to command respect and confidence. If, therefore, there is any set of men who ought to avoid talking claptrap, scheming to secure popular applause, and all advertisements of themselves as friends of any particular class or mass of their fellow-subjects, it is Her Majesty's judges. It is to assist their independence that they are made practically irremovable and rewarded magnificently, in dignity, consideration, and emolument for the services they render to the State.' Thus writes Mr. Frederick Greenwood in a recent article on the Lord Chief Justice in the Anti-Jacobin, which then proceeds to deal very severely with his lordship in connection with the action where Colonel North's architect sought to recover damages. The article continues: 'We take it for granted that a judge is no respecter of persons. He administers justice indifferently to all suitors alike, on an understanding that it is no particular merit to do so. He is put in a position of secure splendour on purpose that he may neglect everything but his duty, and be no more tempted to make eyes at a mob than at a marquis or a millionaire. A very special consideration for him should be that he is not merely to administer law indifferently, but to administer law and nothing else. He is not, or should not be, either a preacher or a lecturer. The reputation of the English bench for good sense and for minding its own business has grown pari passu with its inaccessibility to corrupt motive. There have been times when it was not so incorruptible, and they were also times when judges would express with extreme freedom their personal (and irrelevant) opinions about those who came before them. One of the ablest, and probably the most unscrupulous, of Lord Coleridge's predecessors, Lord Chief Justice Jeffreys, frequently expressed himself in the most violent terms as to the behaviour of witnesses and prisoners with whom he had to do. His method was to call them bloody villains and perjured knaves, and was as remarkable for directness as for force.' Certainly one cannot but say that Mr. Greenwood's remarks on the bench are commendable for their directness and force. It is not often the judges are so vigorously dealt with. One is more inclined to treat them with reverent respect, as being on a pedestal above one; and, as a rule, an English judge combines equally the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re.

A GAMBLING CONTRACT.

Two young City clerks who had been friends speculated on the Stock Exchange. They agreed to buy shares in certain mines, but on the first settling-day there was a loss. Their shares were carried over, and continued to fall. Of this loss one friend contended that the other had consented to pay half, and some of it had been paid by instalments; and of course money had been taken when there had been any favourable balance. Some dispute had arisen about these speculations, and the plaintiff, who was in the employment of his father, now sought in the Lord Mayor's Court to recover from the defendant the balance of an account for such transactions. A stockbroker proved that the transactions had been entered into and the money paid, though he had dealt with the plaintiff's father, in whose name all the business was done, because the regulations of the Stock Exchange prohibited any dealings with clerks. The agreement to speculate was admitted by the defendant; but when he found the stocks were going down he asked the plaintiff to close the account and open a 'bear' account. The plaintiff declined to do that, because he said he was certain that the stocks would recover. Defendant then withdrew altogether and paid the amount which was due from him. The recorder held that the Gambling Acts applied here. Both parties were principals, and it was different to a claim by a broker against a principal. This was a pure gambling contract, like a horserace or wagering on two drops of rain running down a window-pane, and he accordingly nonsuited the plaintiff. This case should be a warning to clerks to eschew Stock Exchange transactions.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

A curious anomaly of the law has been pointed out —viz. that though a lodger can leave a householder on a mere week's notice, a householder cannot get rid of the lodger under five weeks. Before a lodger can be turned out he has to be served with a week's notice; then a summons must be issued for him to appear before a magistrate at the end of seven days, and then, if an order for ejectment is obtained, three weeks must elapse before its execution. During the whole of this time the landlord cannot take any rent, for to do so would be to create a fresh tenancy, with another five weeks of dilatory proceedings. Most tenants consider the law of landlord and tenant is too much in favour of landlords, notably in the case of repairs; it is perhaps new to them that landlords have cause of complaint too.

CANADIAN AND FRENCH LAWYERS.

The law is a remunerative profession in Canada, for, owing to its cheapness, it is accessible to everybody. A lawyer there, or in the United States, it is averred, can write twenty to thirty letters to different clients per day, which, costing 2*s.* to 4*s.* each, will yield as much or more profit as by the English method of spending the whole day in examining the correspondence, documents, &c., and putting all the expenses upon one client. A docteur en droit in Paris states that the fees for drawing and executing a power of attorney (procuration) in France are eight to twelve francs, which is even cheaper than the Canadian charges. This docteur en droit, it appears, has spent several years in tracing all human law to one principle, and is about to publish a work on the subject. Mr. W. A. Macdonald, in his work on 'Humanitism,' which was recently dealt with in these Notes, also traced all law (human law included) to one principle. As this work is likely to be translated into French, we shall doubtless learn by-and-by the French views on the matter.

ADDITIONAL CAUSE LIST.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.—QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Trinity Sittings, 1891.

ADDENDA TO THE CROWN PAPER.

Middlesex (Westminster)—Ruston v. Bonham and another (Hicks and another, claimants)
Essex—Regina v. Vicar of All Saints, Prittlewell
Lancashire (Blackburn)—Cunliffe and another v. Tipping
Surrey (Croydon)—Hawkins v. Ford
Lancashire—Taylor v. Wilkinson
Surrey (Camberwell)—Fernie v. Spaeven
Warwickshire—Flint v. Miller
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Coupe Co. v. Maddick
Middlesex (Brompton)—Hunt v. Halford
Yorkshire (Skipton)—Birdsall v. Townsend
Bedfordshire (Leighton Buzzard)—How v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Middlesex (Bow)—Faulkner v. Patent Electric Fire Light Co.
Middlesex (Westminster)—Macfarlane v. Westley, Richards & Co.
Worcestershire (Bromsgrove)—Lord Shrewsbury v. Garfield
Monmouthshire (Abergavenny)—Prosser v. Price and another
Staffordshire (Walsall)—Horton v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Yorkshire (Halifax)—Brook v. Refuge Assurance Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Smith v. Bushell
Ipswich—Spurling v. Bantoft
Ipswich—Same v. Same
London—Regina v. Gladman and others
Kent (Bromley)—Wedderburn v. Davis
Shropshire (Shrewsbury)—Wardle v. Wanstall and another
Cardiganshire (Lampeter)—Tucker v. James
Surrey—Regina v. Churchwardens, &c. of Merton
In re Merthyr Unity Philanthropic Institution
Middlesex—Kearley and another v. Tyler
Worcestershire—Copeland v. Walker
Salop—Owen v. Langford
Salop—Morhale v. Same
Middlesex (Westminster)—Powell and another v. Clarke
Middlesex (Shoreditch)—Meek v. Witherington
Middlesex (Marylebone)—Colyer v. Dando
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Lewis and another v. Wickens
Middlesex (Westminster)—Felberman v. Rayner
Yorkshire (Doncaster)—Grice v. Watson
Harwich—Fulcher v. Lucas
Somersetshire (Yeovil)—Wilmot v. Darby and another
Yorkshire (Otley)—Bellerby v. Northrop
Lancashire (Manchester)—Trigg v. Manchester, &c. Railway
Worcestershire (Evesham)—Davis v. Davis
Lancashire (Manchester)—Wright v. Lancashire, &c. Railway Co.
Yorkshire (Leeds)—Read v. Edwards
Surrey (Lambeth)—Waterworth and others v. Rogers
Derbyshire (Chesterfield)—Botham v. Botham
Leicestershire (Leicester)—Drinkwater v. Band
Kent—Regina v. Overseers of Bromley
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Goodliff v. Ellis
Yorkshire (Sheffield)—Clarke v. Barnsley Brewery Co.
England—Regina v. Rourke
Devonshire (East Stonehouse)—Regina v. Judge of County Court at East Stonehouse and How Yorkshire, W.—Constantine v. Illingworth
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Bilton and another v. Goldman (Blackaby, claimant)
Sussex—Allman v. Grist
Lancashire—Taylor v. Wilkinson
Yorkshire (Leeds)—Myers and others v. Wilson
Cornwall—Harvey & Co. v. Hesketh
Surrey—Regina v. Blenkinsop, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. and London and South-Western Railway Co.
Derbyshire (Derby)—Grundy v. Slack
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Cohen v. Higgins (Collins, claimant)
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Jones v. Same (Same)
Brecknockshire (Crickhowell)—Taylor v. Taylor and another
Bedford—Thompson v. Rose
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Ashton v. Hartley

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JULY 13 TO JULY 18.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	July 13	July 14	July 15	July 16	July 17	July 18
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	—	Northwich	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Leyburn	Stokesley	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Matlock	Ashbourne	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Stratford-on-Avon	Coventry	Warwick	Rugby	Daventry	Southam
26	Judge Jordan	Burslem	Lichfield	Tamworth	Rugeley	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Fordingbridge	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
57	Judge Paterson	Tiverton	Barnstaple	Axminster	Honiton	Chard	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock]

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.

M'Inroy v. Duke of Athole (servitude—right of way—prescription—possession—interruption of possession within prescribed period. Appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland).—Dismissed.

North British Railway Company v. Wood (pauper) (railway accident—personal injuries—agreement signed in satisfaction. Appeal from Court of Session in Scotland).—Allowed.

Clarke (pauper) v. Carfin Coal Company (whether the mother of an illegitimate son can sue for damages for his death).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.

Clarke (pauper) v. Carfin Coal Company.—Cur. adv. vult.

Walker-Munro v. M'Casland (business—construction of will—capital or income).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JULY 6.

Crook v. Morley (bankruptcy—construction of letter to creditors—suspension of payment. Reported L. R. 24 Chanc. Div. 320).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.

Crook v. Morley.—Dismissed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.

Nelson v. Chapman (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated May 26, at trial before Smith, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Dickers v. Lacons, Youell & Co. (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Naylor v. Stanley and others (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Marcussen v. Hilton and others (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at new trial before Mathew, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.

Jeffrey v. Crawford (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Denman, J. (for Kekewich, J.), with a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Clark v. Cutforth (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 11, at trial before Grantham, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Damages reduced.

SATURDAY, JULY 4.

No sitting.

MONDAY, JULY 6.

No sitting.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.

Clarke v. Ramuz (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Folkard v. Crosby Lockwood & Son (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed by consent.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 8.

Wiedemann v. Walpole (new trial motion) (application of Messrs. Atkinson & Dresser for leave to be heard in opposition to motion for new trial).—Refused.

Langmead v. Winter (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 9, at trial before Day, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

Brown v. Weaver (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Day, J., with a common jury in Middlesex). Refused.

Cowdery v. Smith (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Warner v. Whits (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 2.

Winby v. Manchester, Bury, Rochdale, and Oldham Steam Tramways Company (application of defendants for dismissal of plaintiff's appeal from the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in default of security ordered March 9).—Application granted.

In re Higginbotham and Orrell's Settlement Trusts (construction) (appeal of trustees of will of M. T. Higginbotham and another from order of the Vice-Chancellor, dated January 13, refusing to direct transfer of settlement funds).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.

Mercantile Investment and General Trust Company (Lim.) v. International Company of Mexico (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., dated February 4, at trial without a jury in Middlesex; heard June 20).—Allowed.

Dobell & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co. and others (appeal of defendants from directions entered, dated April 11, at trial by Wills, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).——Dismissed.

Moul and another and Groenings and another (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., dated April 24, affirming judgment of judge of County Court).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JULY 4.

Welbury v. Payton (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Mathew, J., dated March 21, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Allowed.

Rendell v. Barraclough (appeal of defendant from judgment of Smith, J., dated April 16, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JULY 6.

Tams v. Knowles (appeal from judgment of Smith, J., and Grantham, J.).—Dismissed, subject to right of plaintiff (if any) to redeem.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.

Bristol and West of England Bank (Lim.) v. Midland Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, dated April 18, at trial (jury discharged) at Bristol.)—Bristol and West of England Bank (Lim.) v. Midland Railway Company (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from judgment given on further consideration, dated April 18, after trial before the Lord Chief Justice at Bristol (special jury discharged)—the two appeals for hearing together by order).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 8.

Dashwood v. Magniac (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Chitty, J., dated January 14; heard March 23).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

Rhymney Railway Company v. Bute Docks Company (appeal of the Rhymney Railway Company from judgment of Wills, J., Sir F. Peel, and Commissioner Price, dated February 12, dismissing application).—Dismissed.

Brace v. The Aberoarn Coal Company (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 30, on appeal from County Court at Newport, Mon.).—Huggins v. The London and South Wales Coal Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 30, on appeal from County Court at Newport, Mon.).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, July 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Tuesday, July 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Wednesday, July 15.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Thursday, July 16.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Friday, July 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Saturday, July 18.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. MALCOLM PERCY DOUGLAS, barrister, of the Middle Temple and North Wales Circuit, which took place on Monday, July 6, under very painful circumstances. It appears that the deceased gentleman was waiting on the platform at Herne Hill Station, and just before a train came in he was observed to stagger and fall upon the line in front of the engine. On being picked up he was found to be in a terribly mutilated state, and was afterwards taken to St. George's Hospital, where he eventually succumbed to his injuries at 5 o'clock in the evening. The unfortunate gentleman had recently been complaining of great pains in the head. Mr. Douglas had been called to the bar in 1881, and was looked upon as a rising man in his profession. He had been retained to defend Mr. Duncan, who stands committed to the ensuing Carnarvon Assizes upon a charge of committing a murderous assault upon his wife at Bettws-y-Coed a short time ago.

WELSH SUNDAY CLOSING AND SPECIAL DETECTIVES.—At a meeting of the Glamorganshire Joint Standing Committee at Cardiff on June 6, Judge Gwilym Williams presiding, the sub-committee appointed to consider the observance of the Sunday Closing Act of 1881 submitted motions recommending, first, that in cases where publicans had been convicted of Sunday trading, but not deprived of their licenses altogether, the course should be adopted of refusing the seven days' license and offering a six days' license instead; and, secondly, that a special detective force of twenty-five men should be constituted for the purpose of dealing with offences under the Sunday Closing Act. The chairman felt that something stringent must be done to meet the prevalent infringement of the Act. Both suggestions were ultimately adopted. The chief constable reported that last year convictions for Sunday drunkenness in the county numbered 3,636, against 3,190 in 1890.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 8th inst., Mr. Robert Cunliffe in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. W. B. Brook, H. Morten Cotton, G. B. Gregory, Samuel Harris (Leicester), Edwin Hedger, Henry Roscoe, R. W. Tweedie, W. Melmoth Walters, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 460*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, fifty new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

A UNIQUE ELECTION.—At the Court House, Romford, on July 3, the tenants and inhabitants of the liberty of Havering-atte-Bower assembled to elect a people's magistrate—a unique privilege which they enjoy under the old charter of the liberty. There has not previously been a contested election for fifty-five years, and the vacancy was caused by the death of Mr. C. P. Matthews, of the firm of Ind, Coope & Co. The liberty bench consists of three magistrates—the high steward, who is appointed by the lord or lady of the manor; the deputy-steward, chosen by the high steward; and a third justice, elected by the people. The candidates yesterday were Major Holmes, of Grey Towers, Hornchurch, a councillor and justice of the peace for the county, and Mr. Alfred William Harvey, auctioneer, of Romford. There were seventy-eight votes for Major Holmes and forty-two for Mr. Harvey. The former was declared duly elected by Mr. Fry, the high steward. Notice has been given at the Essex Quarter Sessions to petition the Privy Council for an order to merge the liberty in the county. At present, as far as judicial business is concerned, it constitutes a county in itself.

MAGISTRATES AND LICENSED VICTUALLERS.—Lord Bramwell has just given, respecting the legality of confidential reports by the police concerning licensed victuallers, an opinion which will probably have an important effect upon the decisions to be given at the next licensing sessions. In several boroughs and counties the magistrates have instructed the police to prepare reports as to the general character and conduct of each licensed victualler in the division, with the expressed intention of selecting for suppression those houses which are unfavourably reported upon. It is not proposed that these reports shall be sworn ones, or that their contents shall necessarily be made known to the publicans concerned. The temperance party are urging other magistrates all over the country to take similar steps, and a very serious question has arisen as to whether the magistrates can legally receive and act upon such reports as are suggested. A statement embodying the facts of the case has just been submitted to Lord Bramwell, who, in reply, gives the following written expression of opinion, the publication of which he fully authorises: 'Whatever fact, information, or evidence an English tribunal acts upon, or has for its consideration, should be on oath, and made known to the party affected by it.'

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.—The fortieth annual meeting of this society was held recently at the offices, 29 and 30 Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane. The report adopted states that the receipts during the year which ended March 31 last reached 9,519,070*l.*, making a total from the commencement of the society of more than one hundred and forty millions (141,766,177*l.*). The deposits received were 7,993,047*l.*, and the subscriptions 244,927*l.* The gross profits amounted to 284,315*l.* The surplus funds have been augmented by 244,167*l.*, and now stand at 5,098,597*l.*, of which 1,628,240*l.* is invested in Consols and other securities guaranteed by the British Government, and the cash in the hands of the bankers is 317,929*l.* A further sum of 25,000*l.* has been added to the permanent guarantee fund, thus bringing up the amount to 150,000*l.*, and the balance 134,315*l.*, making together 284,315*l.* in excess of the liabilities, the whole amount being invested in Consols. The subscriptions and deposits withdrawable on demand amount to 5,247,712*l.* The thirteenth triennial bonus on investing shares has been allotted, and the amount placed to the credit of all shares in existence at the close of the fortieth year is 33,033*l.* The surplus funds (which are invested in readily convertible securities) are sufficient to pay the depositors 114 per cent. on the amount of their deposits. The new accounts opened during the year were 10,051, and there are, altogether, 60,045 shareholders and depositors on the books. Since its establishment the society has returned to the shareholders and depositors more than one hundred millions (117,071,323*l.*), the whole amount having been repaid upon demand.

THE 'MASKE OF FLOWERS' AT THE INNER TEMPLE.—On Monday, June 6, the second and final performance of the 'Maske of Flowers' was given at the hall of the Inner Temple, before an audience whose curiosity may possibly have been whetted by the difficulties that seem to have occurred in the pursuit of the necessary license. Any uncertainty on this point, however, was removed by a glance at the programme, which afforded the information that the spot had been duly legalised as a place of entertainment by the Lord Chamberlain granting his fiat to Mr. Arthur William à Beckett, barrister-at-law, as 'actual and responsible manager.' So we may congratulate that gentleman upon having added a new temple of the drama (in more senses than one) to the long list of London theatres. If every piece went as well as this Jacobean revival last night, the life of a licensee would indeed be happy. From first to last the 'Maske of Flowers' was received with loud applause, and the encores were numerous. Once more the dancing of the old-time measures was the feature of the evening, but the carnival sports in which Invierno (Mr. Arthur à Beckett), Kawasha (Mr. Lewis Coward), and Silenus (Mr. Dundas Gardiner) joined were nearly as popular. Miss Agnes Hull, who again played Primavera, sang her pretty song in the first part with much grace and feeling. At the conclusion of the performance there was a general call for the manager. Lady Halsbury is to be congratulated on the success of her exertions on behalf of St. Michael's Convalescent Home, Westgate-on-Sea, and it is to be hoped that the funds of the institution will not ultimately suffer from the difficulties about the license.

BIRTHS.

On July 1, at Bryntirion, Sandford Road, Moseley, the wife of Terence Tiernay, Solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On June 15, at the Roman Catholic Church at Southport, William Farren, second son of the late George Farren, Barrister-at-Law, to Isabel, daughter of the late Surgeon-Major O'Farrell, A.M.S.

On July 1, at St. Mary's Church, Hampstead, Alfred Hugh Wake, Solicitor, elder son of E. G. Wake, M.D., Lewisham House, Dartmouth Park Hill, N.W., to Edith Caroline, youngest daughter of the late Joseph Timbrell Fisher, of The Grange, Stroud, Gloucester.

On July 1, at Emmanuel Church, Clifton, Bristol, Thomas Norman Arkell, M.A., of Oxford, Solicitor, to Edith Martha, fourth daughter of the late John Crowther Gwynn, of Clifton, Bristol, Solicitor.

DEATHS.

On June 30, at Ditchling, Sussex, Charles Stewart, Barrister-at-Law, formerly M.P. for Penrhyn, and late of Brunswick Place, Brighton, in his 90th year.

On June 30, at Market Drayton, Eliza, widow of Charles Winser, Barrister-at-Law, aged 82 years.

On July 5, at 50 High Street, Rochester, Mary Ann, the beloved wife of William John M'Lellan, solicitor, aged 49 years.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE partial cessation of business at the Royal Courts on Saturday last, for the purpose of allowing persons employed in legal business to attend the volunteer review at Wimbledon, did not take place under any authority, express or implied, given by any statute or Rules of Court. Rule 2 of Order LXIII. provides that 'it shall not be necessary for the Court of Appeal or the High Court of Justice to sit on the day appointed to be kept as the Queen's birthday,' and rule 6 of the same order closes the offices of the Supreme Court on 'all days appointed by proclamation to be observed as days of general fast, humiliation or thanksgiving'; but no rule has as yet made provision for closing either Courts or offices on special occasions which are not susceptible of a particular designation.

THE Report of the Bar Committee as to discovery, which we printed last week (ante, p. 466), recommends the abrogation of Rule 26 of Order XXXI., which requires the deposit of 5*l.* before discovery can be obtained. The committee think this rule objectionable in principle and ineffectual in practice, as 'it often operates in the case of a poor litigant to prevent discovery in a case where discovery is required, while it has no operation where the party seeking the discovery is possessed of means.' It appears further that the costs upon the paying and taking out the 5*l.* actually amount to more than twenty-five per cent. of the security. If nothing else is done in consequence of the report, surely these disproportionate costs ought to be reduced. The committee appear to think that discovery of documents ought to be granted as a matter of course in the majority of cases, but recommend greater strictness in the allowance of interrogatories, though in this matter also they would abolish the '5*l.* rule.' We hope the Rule Committee will give the report the careful consideration which it deserves.

WE commented (see p. 446, ante) on the singular impropriety of the licensing justices in Sharp v. Wakefield having to pay their own costs in supporting their decision before so many Courts. In connection with this subject, reference should be made to the Review of Justices' Decisions Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 26), which goes in the direction of remedying the present state of the law, but does not go nearly far enough. By this Act, after reciting that 'ex parte proceedings are frequently taken to bring under review the decisions of the justices of the peace acting both in and out of sessions, and there is no fund at the disposal of such justices to defray the expense of appearing by counsel to support their decisions,' it is enacted that whenever the decision of justices is called in question 'by a rule to show cause or other process issued upon an ex parte application' the justices may file an affidavit in the High Court showing the grounds of their decision without paying any fee or stamp duty, and thereupon the Court, before making the rule absolute or otherwise overruling the act of the justices, 'shall take into consideration the matter set forth in such affidavit, notwithstanding that no counsel appear on behalf of the said justices.' The inconvenience of this course in cases of any difficulty was remarked on by Mr. Justice Mellor in Regina v. The Justices of Exeter, 41 Law J. Rep. M. C. 38, and it will be observed that the statute does not even apply to such cases as Sharp v. Wakefield. Surely it ought to be provided that in all cases where justices appear by counsel to support their own decisions, and the High Court affirms those decisions, the costs of the justices, if not recoverable from the appellant, should be paid out of some public fund.

AT the close of the hearing of Read v. The Bishop of Lincoln by the Judicial Committee, the Lord Chancellor suggested it as possible that the publication of banns of marriage ought in the morning service to take place after the Nicene Creed and immediately before the offertory, in accordance with the rubric, and that that part of the Act of George IV. which prescribes publication after the second lesson refers to the evening service only. The words of section 2 of 4 Geo. IV. c. 76 enact that 'banns shall be published according to the form of words prescribed by the rubrick prefixed to the office of matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer, upon three Sundays preceding the solemnisation of marriage, during the time of morning service or of evening service (if there shall be no morning service upon the Sunday upon which such banns shall be so published immediately after the second lesson).' This enactment repeats the corresponding one of Lord Hardwicke's Act (36 Geo. II. c. 33), repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, and it is no doubt hard to reconcile with the rubric which till 1809 directed the banns to be published 'immediately before the sentences for the offertory.' But in 1809 the curators of the press at Oxford altered the rubric to its present form, so as to make it correspond with what was, in their opinion, the meaning of Lord Hardwicke's Act, and direct publication to be made 'immediately after the second lesson' in morning service, or evening service if there be no morning service. So it is stated in Phillimore's 'Ecclesiastical Law,' vol. i., at p. 761, and also in Blunt's 'Church Law,' 2nd edit., at p. 129 (revised by the present Sir W. Phillimore), where it is said with confidence to be 'decidedly the better opinion that the rubric and the statute must be so construed as to make the two agree if possible, and that, therefore, banns should be published after the second lesson only in the evening service and where there is no morning service.' To what extent, if this 'decidedly better opinion' be correct, an ecclesiastical offence has been committed by a minister following the rubric now printed, and what remedy, if convicted and punished, he would have against the present curators of the Oxford Press, or against the representatives of the curators of 1809, may be interesting questions for the marrying clergy. But for the married laity they have no practical interest, as it is beyond all reasonable doubt that marriages celebrated after a publication of banns so very slightly irregular would be held valid. There is, however, no express decision to this effect, though Templeton v. Tyree, 41 Law J. Rep. M. C. 86, and similar cases, have gone very far in upholding marriages where only one party is cognisant of an undue publication of banns.

BARON DE WORMS, in answer to a question by Mr. Boulnois in the House of Commons, has stated, as no doubt is the fact, that the Board of Trade has no power to compel railway companies to publish the forthcoming alteration in their time-tables at any particular time; but that 'the department had already been in communication with them on the subject, and no doubt the question of the honourable member would call attention to it.' It is, perhaps, a little surprising that the serious inconvenience likely to be caused to the public by any delay in bringing out railway time-tables has not long ago been brought to the serious attention of Parliament. The law seems to be absolutely certain that the companies are under no specific obligations to publish any time-tables at all. The mere granting, moreover, of a ticket to an intending passenger imposes no duty on the company granting the ticket to have a train ready to start at a definite time (Hurst v. The Great Western Railway Company, 34 Law J. Rep. C. P. 129), though time-tables, when published, amount to a contract by the publishing company that not only their own trains but the trains of other companies will run in conformity therewith (Denton v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 25 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 129). If, however, the railway companies were to discontinue issuing time-tables, we incline to think that the Railway and Canal Commission would have jurisdiction to enjoin them to resume the issue as being a 'reasonable facility' for the receiving of traffic; and if this view of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and its amending Acts be a correct one, the view that the commission might interfere to enjoin publication of time-tables within a reasonable time beforehand might possibly turn out to be correct also. The royal commissioners of 1867, we may observe, recommended that a week's notice should be given to the public of any impending alteration of time-tables.

THE unfortunate Salvation Army disturbances at Eastbourne are not likely to become less rancorous because religion (so-called) is dragged into the conflict. Ambitious politicians are also making capital out of the alleged tyrannical action of the local authorities, and all kinds of theories have been started with reference to the clause in the local Act (see p. 414, ante) which forbids noisy processions on Sunday. The true history of the clause is, however, a very simple one, and the admirable letter of Mr. Chambers to the Standard of the 14th inst. ought to close the controversy on that point.

ON the consideration of the Slander of Women Bill by the Standing Committee of the House of Lords, the Lord Chancellor, 'with the view of discouraging actions for slander,' moved that, unless a judge should think there was reasonable cause to the contrary, the costs of an action by a woman for an imputation on her chastity should not exceed the damages, and the motion having been carried the bill passed through committee, and will shortly become law. This amendment of Order LXV., rule 1, which places all costs in the discretion of the Court subject to some very few limitations, to be found in the notes to that rule in the 'Annual Practice,' is in conformity with section 5 of the Judicature Act of 1890, which stereotypes that rule 'subject to the Judicature Acts and the rules thereunder, and the express provisions of any statute whether passed before or after the commencement' of that Act. The amendment is in the spirit of the still unrepealed (see 'Revised Statutes,' 2nd edit. vol. iv., at p. 168; 'Chitty's Statutes,' 4th edit. vol. ii. p. 4, tit. 'Costs') 58 Geo. III. c. 30, which applies to inferior Courts only, and of the better known 21 Jac. I. c. 16, s. 6, repealed wholly as to the Supreme Court and almost wholly as to inferior Courts of civil jurisdiction by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, which applied to all Courts. County Courts have no original jurisdiction in slander (see section 56 of the County Courts Act, 1888), but an action of slander may be remitted from the High Court to a County Court under section 66 of that Act, upon an affidavit by the defendant that the plaintiff has no visible means of paying the costs of the defendant should a verdict be found for the defendant (Stokes v. Stokes, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 494).

The recent announcements in the daily press that several M.P.s 'intend, on the votes for the salaries of the law officers of the Crown, to draw attention to the position of the Solicitor-General in regard to the baccarat case and of the Attorney-General in the matter of the Hurlbert case,' will doubtless elicit a certain amount of interest in this important question. The Lord Chancellor is not, however, easily disturbed by public opinion, and is very unlikely to advise the Government to make any change in the present arrangements. The argument which has hitherto been considered as unanswerable in support of the law officers continuing private practice is that without this privilege the best available men could not be secured for these appointments. There is a great deal of truth in this, and it certainly holds good in the case of successful orators, such as Sir Edward Clarke and Sir Charles Russell. But it is another question whether able lawyers fully competent to advise the Crown and the Government could not be found who would accept the handsome salaries and relinquish private practice while holding office. The matter should at any rate have very careful consideration, and public convenience have full weight in any decision come to.

Solicitors have, no doubt, watched with much interest the result of the motion for a new trial in the case of Langmead v. Winter. The Solicitor-General fought hard, and with his accustomed skill, in support of the motion; but Mr. Candy, Q.C., held his verdict, the damages being, however, reduced considerably. Without expressing any opinion on the merits of this particular case, it certainly affords a striking instance of the danger and risk involved in advising and acting for lady clients. The sex of the plaintiff will always have considerable weight with a jury; and the ordinary amount of discretion and freedom of action and judgment expected from a male client is apparently neither to be assumed nor expected when 'a lady is in the case.' The more literally this rule is acted upon the better for solicitors in all their dealings with the other sex.

A novel and important point in company law was decided by Mr. Justice Kekewich in In re The North Australian Territory Company (Lim.), reported in our Notes of Cases for this week, the question being whether a director upon taking his qualification shares can take an indemnity from the promoter in the form of an agreement by the promoter to buy back the shares at par in the event of the director retiring. On behalf of the liquidators, who sought to render the director answerable for the money he afterwards received under the agreement with the promoter, it was contended that the agreement resulted in an improper gain to the director, and that the liquidators were entitled to sue in respect of that gain. Mr. Justice Kekewich, however, held that the agreement having resulted in no loss to the company, section 165 had no application; nor was the case, said his lordship, within the authority of the cases in which an agent was shown to have made a gain for himself in such a way that the money so gained was held by him as trustee for the company. Here it could not be said that the agent had gained anything more than this, that he had sold his shares for the sum he had paid for them. He was no better off than he was before, and the company had lost nothing. On these grounds his lordship held that the director could not be made responsible. If this judgment can be maintained, the example set by the director in this case is one that will probably find many imitators.

The attention of pleaders should be drawn to In re Poinons; Sutton v. Martin, reported in our Notes of Cases, p. 120, where a spinster, plaintiff in an originating summons, was not described except by name, and Mr. Justice Kekewich intimated his opinion that a female plaintiff should state her description, whether she is a married woman or a spinster or otherwise, and directed the originating summons to be amended accordingly.

The attempt to induce the Court to say that where advanced shareholders of an unincorporated building society, which is in course of being wound up under the Companies Act, 1862, are entitled to participate in the surplus profits in respect of their shares, they are consequently liable to contribute to the losses, has been made in cases prior to that of In re The Britannia, &c., Building Society (Notes of Cases, p. 115), but has been attended with no better success. And it is satisfactory to notice that Mr. Justice Kekewich was not led away by the argument founded on section 200 of the Companies Act, 1862. That section provides that in the event of an unregistered company — within which category comes an unincorporated building society — being wound up, every person shall be deemed to be a contributory who (among other cases) is liable to pay or contribute to the payment of any sum for the adjustment of the rights of the members among themselves.

In the case referred to, advanced shareholders were not, under the rules of the society, liable to contribute to losses, although they were entitled to a fair proportion of surplus profits. The contention urged on behalf of the liquidator was that advanced shareholders, being entitled to share in the surplus profits, were contributories within section 200 of the Companies Act, 1862. However, Mr. Justice Kekewich held, upon the authority of Brownlie v. Russell, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 235; and In re The Middlesbrough, &c. Building Society, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 771, that advanced shareholders were not liable to be placed upon the list of contributories. Those cases showed, he said, that there was a distinction between an ordinary shareholder and an advanced shareholder in such a society as this, and that the money which an advanced shareholder repaid to the society under his mortgage was really paid, not because he was a contributory, but according to the contract relating to his advance. His lordship added that, as regarded such repayment, although calculated in reference to the member's advanced shares, he was a debtor and not a shareholder liable as a contributory.

This reasoning appears to us to be perfectly sound. In an ordinary case a borrowing member of a building society receives an advance, and covenants to repay the same by periodical instalments. If the rules provide that he shall be entitled to participate in the profits of the society, but shall not be liable to contribute to the losses, by no possible contortion can he be justly made so. The argument that section 200 of the Companies Act, 1862, brings about a different result seems to us as utterly fallacious as apparently it was regarded by the learned judge to whom it was addressed.

IN an article on 'The Waste of Judicial Power' in the current number of the Law Quarterly Review Mr. Snow deals in a comprehensive spirit with a subject to which attention has been repeatedly drawn in these columns, and on which Mr. Snow himself some weeks ago addressed a letter to this journal. We have ourselves advocated a greater flexibility in the existing judicial machinery, and pointed out the evil which Mr. Snow indicates in a suggestive sentence: 'Between the judicial staff of the Supreme Court and that of the Final Courts of Appeal there exists a great gulf which the Legislature has left unbridged, with the result that no excess of power which may exist on one side of that gulf can ever be brought to the relief of pressure on the other.' In apostolic phrase, the judges on one side cannot call to those on the other, 'Come over and help us.' Mr. Snow advocates a reversion to the principles of the Judicature Act, 1873, by which, as originally framed, there was only to be one appeal from the High Court, and he points out that on the return of the Conservative party to power in 1874 no voice was raised in favour of double appeals, but 'the fight was for the preservation of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords,' a fight which, he says, would probably never have been engaged in if the principle of life peerages, established in the following year (1876) had then been recognised. We recently pointed out that, even without interfering with the double appeal, immense economy of judicial power might be effected. By an oversight Mr. Snow includes the late Mr. Barnes Peacock as still available for the Privy Council, and omits the name of Mr. (Lord) Shand. To the long list of judges competent to sit in the two final Courts, or in one of them, might be added retired Scotch and Irish judges and the acting appeal judges of those countries who on great occasions might be called in aid. It has already been observed in the LAW JOURNAL that the interval between the hearing in the Court of Appeal and that in the House of Lords has tended in the last few years to increase rather than diminish.

THE Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 25), which has recently received the royal assent, is an unusually short one of its kind. The only section of any practical importance is section 4, which amends the law as to inhabited house duty on dwellings of small annual value. The Act of 1890 (53 Vict. c. 8), by section 26, subsection 2, exempts from house duty houses 'let in separate dwellings at not more than 7*s.* 6*d.* per week for each dwelling, and occupied only by persons paying such rents.' The new Act substitutes an annual value of less than 20*l.* as the test of a title to exemption; and further, in the case of a house let in separate dwellings, of an annual value of not more than 40*l.* each, confines the assessment for house duty to the annual value of the house exclusive of every dwelling therein of an annual value below 20*l.*, and reduces the duty to 3*d.*

ACTIONS AGAINST FOREIGN PARTNERSHIPS.

CONSIDERABLE attention has recently been attracted by the decisions on the subject of service upon foreign partnerships carrying on business in this country, and the change which has just been introduced by the new rules will doubtless be hailed with satisfaction.

In order to understand the question it will be necessary to consider the provisions of the Judicature Rules on the subject, as they existed before the recent change. Order IX., rule 6, provides as follows: 'Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm the writ shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners or at the principal place within the jurisdiction of the business of the partnership, upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there, and, subject to these rules, such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm.' Rule 7 of the same order is as follows: 'Where one person carrying on business in the name of a firm apparently consisting of more than one person shall be sued in the firm name, the writ may be served at the principal place within the jurisdiction of the business so carried on upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the business there, and such service, if sufficient in other respects, shall be deemed good service on the person so sued.'

In O'Neil v. Clason, 46 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 191, which was decided in 1876, the question was whether service of a writ of summons on the manager in London of the defendant, who resided in Germany, and carried on business under the name of Clason & Co., ought to be set aside. The Divisional Court decided that it ought not, and Lord Coleridge, in delivering judgment, after pointing out that the rule dealt with the case of a man carrying on business with the words '& Co.' after his name when there was nothing to represent these words, in fact, proceeded as follows: 'The rule purposely deals with such a person differently, according as he assumes that name or not; where there is such a person who uses the mystic words, and he is sued in that form, then the writ may be served at the principal place within the jurisdiction of the business so carried on upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the business there.' The case of Pollexfen & Co. v. Sibson & Co. 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 294; L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 792, was to much the same effect, but those cases were overruled by various decisions, the last of which, prior to that which we shall next notice, was The Western National Bank of City of New York v. Triana, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 272; L. R. 1891, 1 Q. B. 304.

The most recent case upon the subject (Heineman & Co. v. Hale & Co.) was decided last month by the Court of Appeal. The defendants were a firm at Buenos Ayres, and the action was brought upon certain acceptances drawn on the plaintiffs in London and payable in London. The writ was served upon one of the partners who had for some time been residing in London, and occupying an office for the firm. The Divisional Court decided that, as the contract was one made in this country, and to be carried out here, the service was good. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed this decision, and decided that the service of the writ was of no avail against any of the partners—of no avail against the partners out of the jurisdiction on the ground that no leave had been obtained; of no avail against the partner in London because the writ was in such a form that judgment upon it could only be against the firm.

It will thus be seen that the subject was in very great confusion, and few who have studied it will disagree with the view expressed by Lord Justice Bowen in The Western National Bank of City of New York v. Triana, that he had arrived, as the result of some experience and observation, at 'an opinion of the necessity of redrafting the rules under the Judicature Acts so far as they affect partnership.'

The new order, which is to be cited as Order XLVIII*a*., repeals (inter alia) Order IX., rules 6 and 7, and substitutes a series of eleven rules. The following are the portions of these new rules which deal with the subject now before us:—

Rule 1 provides that 'Any two or more persons claiming, or being liable as co-partners, and carrying on business within the jurisdiction, may sue or be sued in the name of the respective firms, if any, of which such persons were co-partners at the time of the accruing of the cause or action.'

Rule 3 provides as follows: 'Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm under rule (1), the writ shall be served either upon any one or more of the partners, or at the principal place within the jurisdiction of the business of the partnership, upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there, and, subject to these rules, such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether any of the members thereof are out of the jurisdiction or not, and no leave to issue a writ against them shall be necessary.

A provision in rule 4 on this subject is also worthy of notice. It provides that when a writ is served under rule 3 notice in writing must be given at the time, whether the person so served is served as partner or manager, or in both characters. In default of such notice the person served is to be deemed to be served as a partner. It will thus be seen that the new rules introduce very considerable changes on this subject.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

III.

(Continued from p. 462.)

HOLDSWORTH v. M'CREA. M'CREA v. HOLDSWORTH.*

UNDER the Designs Acts of 1842 and 1843 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 65) a person that registered a design was obliged to give a certain description of it either in writing or by a drawing or plan. The Designs Act of 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 70) introduced an alternative procedure. Section 5 of that statute provided that 'the registration of any pattern or portion of an article of manufacture to which a design is applied, instead or in lieu of a copy drawing, print, specification, or description in writing, shall be as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if such copy drawing, print, specification, or description in writing had been furnished to the registrar under the Copyright of Designs Acts.

In accordance with this section M'Crea had registered, without any accompanying description, a pattern of a design which consisted of a piece of Pekin cloth, showing on both sides a figured chainwork ground, called the 'Albert chain pattern,' and a six-pointed star. Holdsworth was using a design substantially identical in size and general appearance, but having the position of the star reversed. M'Crea sued Holdsworth both at law and in equity; the suit in equity, after the old practice, was ordered to stand over till the plaintiff had established his right at law, and the action at law came on for trial before Chief Justice Cockburn and a jury at the Guildhall sittings. The jury found, under the direction of the Chief Justice, that the grounding of the plaintiff's design was old, that the stars were new, that the combination was new, that the defendant had infringed, and that the plaintiff was entitled to 40*s*. damages. The verdict was upheld by the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Exchequer Chamber, and the House of Lords, in succession.

The primary question raised by this case was whether the pattern sufficiently described the nature of the design. It was contended, on behalf of the defendants, that the registration was bad in point of law, because it could not be collected with reasonable certainty from the article of manufacture which the plaintiff furnished to the registrar what the design was which the plaintiff intended to register as applicable to it; and because the registration enabled the plaintiff at his option to claim one or other of several designs, and not one design only. In support of the contention the defendant referred to Norton v. Nicholls, 1859, 1 E. & E. 761. This was an action for the infringement of a design applicable to shawls. The plaintiff, by way of indicating to the registrar what his design was, had simply left with him a sample of his shawls with the design upon it. At the trial he contended that there were five points in respect of which his shawl was new, so that, if the defendants had imitated any one of them, he was entitled to recover. These were (1) a reversible cloth with the two sides of different texture; (2) a scollop pattern on parts of the shawl; (3) a particular border round the shawl; (4) a particular configuration of the corners of the shawl; (5) a newly invented fringe to surround the shawl. The jury found that each of these five points was old, but that the combination was new and that the defendants had infringed. Upon this verdict the Court of Queen's Bench entered judgment for the defendants on the grounds (1) that the combination registered was not a design but a multiplicity of designs, and (2) that in such a case the mere deposit of an article manufactured according to the combination relied on did not sufficiently disclose the claim of the proprietor.

In Holdsworth v. M'Crea, however, Norton v. Nicholls was 'distinguished.' The objection of ambiguity, said Chief Justice Cockburn, in effect, with greater ingenuity than soundness, is easily disposed of. Not only have the jury found that there is no ambiguity, but the very fact that a multiplicity of designs is not registrable as a combination is a clear intimation to all men that what the plaintiff claims as his design is the pattern, the whole pattern, and nothing but the pattern! In the House of Lords a better ratio decidendi was adopted. An applicant for the registration of a design, said Lord Colonsay, 'has a choice of two courses to pursue: one to content himself with giving in a pattern and remaining silent; the other, giving a description of that which he claims as his invention. There is risk in either way. There is a risk in the latter case of there being a mis-description of his claim. . . . Then, again, where the party exercises the option of silence, and merely produces the pattern of his invention, he is exposed to this, that in order to claim his protection he requires to maintain that he claimed the entirety of what is exhibited on the face of that pattern, and if only a part is used in a different combination he is without the protection which he otherwise would have had.' Their lordships held, therefore, that what M'Crea had registered was the design upon the pattern as an entirety; but were careful to point out that a mere formal compliance with the statute by the deposit of a pattern would not prevent the question of the sufficiency of the pattern as a disclosure of the applicant's claim from being raised. This decision is, therefore, consistent with Norton v. Nicholls.

* 1864–67, 5 B. & S. 495; 33 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 329; L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 284; L. R. 2 H. L. 380; 1870, L. R. 6 Chanc. 418.

Having fairly established his rights at law, M'Crea resumed proceedings in equity. He was at once met by a most ingenious objection on the part of the defendant. 'You have chosen to register by pattern; according to the judgment of the House of Lords, only your entire pattern is protected; now there is a difference between our pattern and yours; we reverse the position of the stars; therefore we have not infringed, and you are not entitled to any damages at all.'

Lord Hatherley, however, repelled this objection, and put a valuable gloss upon the language used by Lord Colonsay in Holdsworth v. M'Crea. 'The designer is not bound, as in a patent case, to distinguish the new from the old, and is allowed to register his pattern without distinguishing what is new from what is old; but if he chooses to put it in that way it will not be protected as against the public in case they choose to use any portion in any manner substantially differing from the registered design. If the designs are used in exactly the same manner as I hold they are in this case, and have the same effect, or nearly the same effect, then of course the shifting or turning round of a star, as in this particular case, cannot be allowed to protect the defendants from the consequences of the piracy.'

Mutatis mutandis, the points established by Holdsworth v. M'Crea and M'Crea v. Holdsworth apply to the 'statement of the nature' of a design proposed for registration, which is required by section 47, subsection 3 of the Designs Acts, 1883–88.

(To be continued.)

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords.

The following bills were read a third time and passed:—

Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Allotments Rating Exemption Bill.
Trustee Bill.
Bills of Sale Act (1890) Amendment Bill.
Forged Transfers (No. 2) Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.
Land Purchase (Ireland) Bill.
Mortmain and Charitable Uses Amendment Bill.

Bills beyond second reading:—

Public Health (London) Bill.
Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.
Brine Pumping (Compensation for) Subsidence Bill: report of amendments agreed to.
Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Bill.

Bill through committee:—

Factories and Workshops Bill.

Second readings:—

Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.
County Councils Elections Bill.
Lunacy Bill.
Ranges Bill.
Crofters' Common Grazings (Scotland) Bill.
Stamp Duties Bill.
Stamp Duties Management Bill.
Consular Salaries and Fees Bill.

First reading:—

Elementary Education Bill (from the Commons).

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—

Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Fisheries Bill.
Highways and Bridges Bill.

Bill through committee:—

Statutory Rules Procedure Bill.

New Bills:—

London County Council (Money) Bill.

To Appoint a Secretary for Wales, to Constitute a Welsh Education Department, and to create a National Council in Wales.

To Amend the Law with regard to Assistant County Surveyors (Ireland).

Bills withdrawn:—

Cathedral Churches Bill.
Movable Dwellings Bill.

Reviews.

RAWSON'S PROFIT-SHARING PRECEDENTS.

Profit-Sharing Precedents. With Notes. By HENRY G. RAWSON, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons. 1891.

THE author of this work has been encouraged to undertake his task by the interest recently evinced in Parliament in the subject of profit-sharing, which has resulted in the report lately issued by the Board of Trade. He has accordingly given us here a collection of precedents which he trusts 'will enable anyone desirous of introducing profit-sharing into his business to select, without much difficulty, the particular method which will best suit his circumstances.' The suspicion of workmen is, in Mr. Rawson's opinion, one of the chief obstacles which an employer has to overcome in launching a profit-sharing scheme, unless in those fortunate cases where the men employed are above the average in intelligence. The author, therefore, recommends that a well-considered scheme, and preferably one which has already been successfully worked, should be employed. Alterations and modifications in a scheme have a tendency to shake the confidence, and usually result in discouragement to the employer. Most of the precedents given appear to have been in practical operation already. Among them may be noticed clauses in the memorandum and articles of association of a limited company authorising it to adopt a scheme of profit-sharing at p. 59, and alternative forms which are given at p. 61 et seq. The conception of the work is good, and the precedents will be found useful to those who desire to try the profit-sharing system.

COMMERCIAL LAW.

The Principles of Commercial Law. With an Appendix of Statutes annotated by Means of References to the Text. By JOSEPH HURST and LORD ROBERT CECIL, of the Inner Temple, Barristers-at-Law. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THE object of the authors of this work, they tell us in their preface, is to state within a moderate compass the principles of commercial law. Very considerable pains have obviously been expended on the task, and the book is in many respects a very serviceable one. The subjects discussed are to a great extent the same as those considered in Smith's 'Mercantile Law;' but we have noticed that some subjects which would certainly seem deserving of a place in a treatise on commercial law are scarcely dealt with at all, or dealt with in an inadequate manner. Thus we should certainly have expected some exposition of the law as to bills of sale. There is an allusion to the Bills of Sale Act, 1890, but in p. 344 we find the following note: 'The provisions of the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, and the numerous decisions on them, are not dealt with herein.' Similarly the law of bankruptcy would seem a fit subject for discussion in a book of this description, but here it is not even mentioned in the index. On the other hand, several subjects would seem to be treated at undue length. The Bills of Exchange Act is set forth at length, and so in the Appendix are the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts of 1873 and 1888 and the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Surely the space thus employed might in a treatise of such moderate dimensions as this have been much better employed. The Factors Act, also reprinted in full, was extended to Scotland by 58 & 54 Vict. c. 40, but this fact is not noticed. The Partnership Act, 1890, is set forth at length in the concluding chapter. Here the author, after alluding to the previous works on the subject, says: 'Although it may be improper "where a statute is expressly said to codify the law, to go outside the code so created, because before the existence of that code another law prevailed," it is submitted that reference may usefully be made to such works as those above mentioned as illustrating the provisions of the Act and to cases which may be explanatory of its principles.' The quotation here is from the Lord Chancellor's judgment in the Vagliano Case, and we agree that authorities prior to a codifying Act may be of service, but the reader will require to be very cautious in applying them to the present law.

Correspondence.

THE LATE MR. TAXING-MASTER SKIRROW.

SIR,—I have read with much interest and appreciation the able and well-deserved panegyric of Mr. James Rawlinson upon the late Mr. Taxing-Master Skirrow.

Without detracting in the least from the merits of this eminent gentleman's career, the record of his life seemingly gives rise to the reflection that in order for a taxing-master, or taxing-masters generally, to achieve such splendid results someone must have suffered. Assuming the correctness of this reflection, the question is, Who has suffered? Is not the answer: The suitors, the public generally, the bar, and last, though not least, the solicitors? The suitors, by being called upon to pay more fees on taxation than are needed for the expenses of the taxing offices; the public, by suffering the partial denial of justice involved in justice being made too dear; and the bar and the solicitors, by the loss of business caused by the natural aversion of the people to too dear law.

Looking at the figures in Mr. Skirrow's case, it seems to me that the taxing fees have been nearly double the amount necessary for carrying on the office. I do not say the taxing officers are the only or the chief offenders in this respect. I do not think they are, but I do think that these excessive official fees are a great blot upon our judicial system. In my humble opinion the dispensing of justice ought to be paid for, to a great extent, by the nation at large, and not by the individuals who from time to time are compelled to seek the aid of the Courts.

I might refer to the County Courts as flagrant instances of much too heavy Court fees being charged did time and space permit, but will for the present content myself with the above remarks.

Liverpool: July 13. H. C. REYNOLDS.

COLONIAL AND FOREIGN COMMISSIONS FOR OATHS IN ENGLAND.

SIR,—A notion exists that affidavits for use in the Supreme Courts of the various British colonies may be properly taken before a commissioner for oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature in England, but it would seem that it is inaccurate. Such affidavits are returned to be sworn before a commissioner of the Supreme Court of the colony particularised. As the various books on oaths do not treat of the subject of such colonial commissions, and it is probably but little known, it may perhaps be useful to those who are professionally interested therein if some material information connected therewith is stated, and I would ask you, therefore, to give me an opportunity for the purpose. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to premise that the Lord Chancellor has no jurisdiction or authority to grant such commissions for the colonies. The power thereunto is derived from numerous Acts and ordinances of each colonial Legislature, and, stated generally, is vested by these statutes in either the chief justice or the Supreme Court of each colony, except in the various provinces of the Dominion of Canada, where it is exercised by the lieutenant-governor in council, and where the appointment partakes rather of the nature of a public Government one. In America it is vested in the governor of each State of the Union.

It may be noticed that in the larger number of instances these colonial commissions are not merely to administer oaths; they embrace, sometimes, the equivalent duties of a perpetual commissioner, of an examiner of witnesses, and of verifying documents and instruments for record and registration. American commissions, too, include some notarial acts. Thus the powers of the commissioner are of a very diverse character. Commissions for England are commonly granted to practising solicitors and notaries public only; but it must not be assumed that they are granted as of course, or that they are procured with as much ease as here; there are strict requirements to be complied with by applicants. It does not appear however to be an invariable requisite-precedent that the applicant should be of a minimum number of years' standing in his profession.

To summarise in a general form, within the limits of this communication, the procedure necessary to lead to the grant of such a commission, it may be stated that the application should be made by way of petition to the chief justice of the colony for which the appointment is desired, or to the Supreme Court thereof, as the case may require; or if for a Canadian commission, to the lieutenant-governor of the province in council. It should state the applicant's name, address, and description or quality, in the heading thereof, and it should be divided into paragraphs setting forth (a) the applicant's professional standing and experience, (b) the facts showing the necessity for the appointment, and (c) any material statements which may be reasonably considered to support the prayer of the petition.

It is preferable, as a general rule, that the petition should be lodged through a local agent, but it may be presented by the applicant direct, who in that case should enclose it to the registrar of the Supreme Court of the particular colony, or, if for a Canadian commission, to the secretary of the province, but preferably through the agent-general of the province, whose recommendation is sometimes required. Accompanying it there should be a statutory declaration or affidavit intituled 'In the matter of the petition,' which should be exhibited or annexed thereto, verifying the statements contained therein. The oath or declaration should be taken or made before one of the commissioners of the colonial Court; the deponent or declarant should take care to be identified before the commissioner, who will add his certificate of the fact. This latter is a precaution which may obviate delay and correspondence.

It appears to be considered absolutely essential that the petition should be also accompanied by the signed recommendation of one of Her Majesty's judges of the Supreme Court here (probably the High Court of Justice is meant), or of the president for the time being of the Incorporated Law Society, or of a well-known Queen's counsel, and sometimes of a leading barrister also, or of the agent-general, to the effect that the applicant is of good repute, fully qualified to execute the duties of a commissioner, and a fit and proper person to receive the appointment; together with a document signed by a person of position certifying the public necessity for the appointment desired. For Canadian commissions, and American commissions also, the recommendations of a Government official here of high standing is sometimes accepted, other things being equal. Delay in the granting of commissions for some of the colonial Supreme Courts sometimes occurs, as the petition and documents in support are filed to be dealt with in turn on a vacancy occurring, the number of commissioners being limited.

The fees payable on the issue of the commission vary very much; in some colonies there is no fee. The smallest fee charged is 10*s.*, in the Supreme Court of South Australia; the largest is believed to be thirteen dollars = 2*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* sterling, in the province of Ontario, Canada. In the large majority of instances where a fee is payable it may be assumed that it is usually 2*l.* or under. The issue or refusal of the grant is in due course officially notified to the applicant; in many cases the appointment is also announced in the Government Gazette.

A tabular list of the chief Supreme Courts, with particular information for each one, would, it is feared, occupy too much space, but enough has been, perhaps, stated to indicate the initial steps to be taken.

GEO. E. SOLOMON.

16 Narcissus Road, West Hampstead, N.W.
July 11.

FEMALE PLAINTIFFS.

SIR,—In Notes of Cases in your last week's edition, Mr. Justice Kekewich is reported to have intimated his opinion that a female plaintiff in an originating summons 'should state her description, whether she is a married woman or a spinster or otherwise.' With all respect to the learned judge, there seems to be no conceivable reason why such a description should be given, nor any purpose which it can serve except, perhaps, that of inquisitiveness, which, however, might possibly be more gratified by an explanation of what the lady plaintiff being 'otherwise' may indicate.

CURIOSUS.

Unreported Cases.

ASSIZE CASE.

FALSE DECLARATION UNDER THE REGISTRATION ACT.

AT Lincoln, on July 13, before Mr. Justice Williams, Daniel M'Kenzie Steedman was indicted for making a false declaration under the Registration Act (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 6). The facts of this case were remarkable. The defendant had studied at Dublin in medicine, but left without taking a degree, and possessed no medical qualification. In 1882 he was employed as assistant to a Dr. Bailey at Grantham, and there he made the acquaintance of Robert Macredy, who was assistant to another medical man in the same town and himself a qualified practitioner. The two became intimate and acquainted with each other's affairs. After a time Macredy fell into a state of bad health, retired to his home in Northumberland, and ceased for a time to follow his profession. The notion then occurred to Steedman of stepping into Macredy's skin. Accordingly, under Macredy's name, he obtained an engagement as assistant to a medical man named Couldry, at Sainthorpe, distant about forty miles from Grantham. He ultimately became Couldry's partner, and in 1887 married his sister. On the occasion of this marriage he described himself as Macredy, gave his father's name as Macredy, and alleged that he possessed the medical qualifications which the true Macredy possessed. It was with this offence that he was now charged. The remarkable thing was that the deception under the above circumstances was carried out for eight years without any suspicion on the part of anybody. Ultimately, Macredy's name having been eliminated from the 'Irish Medical Register,' in consequence of his not answering letters addressed to him, the defendant wrote for the purpose of getting the name reinstated. Unfortunately for him, the real Macredy wrote about the same time with the same object. Inquiries were consequently instituted, and the true state of affairs discovered. It was submitted for the defence that the prosecution must fail owing to the fact that it had been instituted more than three years after the alleged offence. The prosecution was under the Registration Act (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 86), which Act contained no section of limitation. However, in cap. 85 of the same year there was a section 'that every prosecution commenced under this Act shall be commenced within the space of three years after the offence committed,' and another section 'that this Act shall be taken to be part of cap. 86 as fully and effectually as if incorporated therewith.' It was, therefore, contended that the limitation section of cap. 85 applied to prosecutions instituted under cap. 86. The learned judge was of this opinion, and accordingly he directed a verdict of Not guilty. There was another charge against the defendant of having attempted to get himself put on the 'Medical Register' by false statements. In this, however, application was made by the defendant's counsel to quash the indictment on the ground that it did not sufficiently disclose an offence under the Medical Registration Act, and that certain material allegations had not been set forth. The application was successful, and thus the defendant escaped altogether.—Mr. Appleton and Mr. Bonner were for the prosecution; Mr. Dugdale, Q.C., and Mr. Garrett for the defence.

POLICE.

THE BETTING ACT AND PUBLIC-HOUSES.

At Guildhall, on July 13, Daniel Dawson, a bookmaker at the White Swan, New Street Square, was summoned for using a certain room in that house for betting purposes.—Mr. H. H. Crawford, the City solicitor, prosecuted.—Mr. Colam, for the defence, said the defendant elected to be tried at that Court. This would be essentially a point of law, and if the Court found against the defendant he should ask for a case.—Mr. Crawford said he proceeded against the defendant for having contravened section 13 of the Betting Act, 1853. It would be shown that he had used the White Swan public-house entirely for betting purposes. Mr. Crawford wished to point out that there was a great difference between occasionally using a house for the purpose of making a bet and using it for nothing else or nearly so. This was an important case. Counsel had said that if it went against him he should ask for a case, and he need hardly say that, should the alderman decide against him, he should adopt a similar course. Evidence was given to prove that betting was carried on by the defendant, and that the house was little used for the purpose of obtaining refreshment. Mr. Colam contended that this was a case on all-fours with the case of Whitehurst and Flincher, which showed that to come within the meaning of the section a person must have a permanent interest in the house. In this case such interest was not shown. Ordinary customers could come into this particular bar as they went to the other bars. It was not a private place used by the defendant only. This was demonstrable by evidence that persons did come in for refreshment. Mr. Colam called witnesses who said that they used this house, that they had had meals in this bar, and that they did not bet.—Alderman G. Faudel Phillips held that defendant did not occupy any particular part of the house, and that he had no interest in the house, therefore he dismissed the summons.—Mr. Crawford asked for a case, which was granted.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting was held on July 10, the President, Mr. Cunliffe, in the chair.

Mr. W. M. Walters and Mr. R. Pennington were elected president and vice-president for the ensuing year.

The members of the Council retiring by rotation were re-elected, and for the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of Mr. Jevons there were two candidates—Mr. Gray Hill and Mr. F. K. Munton. The President being about to read the names, Mr. Munton announced that when his nomination, signed by four eminent members of the profession, was sent in, there was an impression that Mr. Gray Hill, owing to severe domestic affliction and other causes, might be unable to serve, but now that that gentleman had assured him that he was ready and willing to accept office he (Mr. Munton) desired unreservedly to withdraw his name. He said he need not apologise for his interposition, as the names of those who had nominated him and the feeling shown were an ample assurance that his activity for many years might not make him an unacceptable candidate at an appropriate moment. Mr. Gray Hill was thereupon declared to be elected.

The Chairman moved the adoption of the Society's accounts and the annual report, and a long discussion took place thereon, in which Mr. Ford, Mr. Pennington, Mr. Melvil Green, Mr. Woolbert, Mr. F. B. Parker, Mr. Addison, and Mr. Walters took part, and the accounts and report were accepted.

In the course of the debate Mr. Ford characterised the conversazione in April as a failure, to which statement Mr. Walters and Mr. Munton took exception, both declaring that had Mr. Ford been present and seen the way in which the entertainment passed off, upwards of a thousand persons being there, he would have seen that it was eminently successful.

The President, however, in reply to questions, said that the conversazione was not a precedent, and that the usual business meeting would take place in April next unless the society otherwise determined, and

Mr. Gribble, while endorsing the success, remarked that, if the proposal were renewed next year, it would be well to consider it de novo.

A discussion took place as to the Middlesex Registry Bill, and Mr. Munton said that numerous members thought that there were many points requiring careful consideration. The new registrar (Mr. Holt) had invited him (Mr. Munton) on more than one occasion to a conference on the practice of the registry and the points raised in the various legal proceedings. Mr. Holt showed a courteous desire to investigate the true position, and at his (Mr. Munton's) request a promise had been obtained that the long-asked-for official notice of the true fees receivable should be circulated. Mr. Munton remarked that it could not be too often mentioned that the minimum fee for registering a memorial where the oath was administered outside was 2*s*.—a sum he recommended everybody to strictly adhere to, as it was possible that an average fee might hereafter be fixed based upon the current receipts. It was understood that the Lord Chancellor had intimated to the council that the bill would not be pressed forward till the views of the society had been weighed, and nothing further need now be said. Mr. Munton afterwards brought forward a motion having for its object the classification of trials in the Queen's Bench, so that the causes should be divided into three distinct lists: (1) commercial; (2) libel and personal injuries, including breach of promise cases and the like; (3) miscellaneous. He argued that commercial litigation was of far greater importance than other classes of trial, and that something ought to be effectually done to secure some sort of priority of trial for mercantile cases; that commercial cases being easily ascertained, as was shown by the present partial classification, there was really no practical difficulty, and needless trouble was given by the present massive, unmanageable, and uncountable list; that although libel and other personal questions were of great importance to the parties concerned, and must be efficiently dealt with, their hearing should be postponed when one Court only was available, and that the judges could still sit by rota if there should be any delicacy on the question of selection.

At the suggestion of Mr. Walters (Vice-president), who stated that the council were already in communication with the Lord Chancellor upon the subject,

Mr. Munton withdrew the motion, observing that, in accordance with the wish that had been expressed by the vice-president, he would read a paper on the subject at the forthcoming meeting of the society at Plymouth.

The President remarked, with regard to the question of the appointment of an additional Chancery judge, that the Council had not been successful in securing this, notwithstanding all their representations to the Lord Chancellor, the suggestions made by the Bar Committee, and by individual members of the bar. It was true they had had the services of a common law judge, but that was not what they wanted. They wanted another Chancery judge. The Chancery judges did their work well, but there were not enough of them, and they could not reduce the arrears without additional help.

A cordial vote of thanks to the president concluded the meeting.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE AND WILTSHIRE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this society was held at Cirencester on Thursday, June 25. Mr. Ellett (Cirencester), the president of the society, presided, and there was a large attendance, including Mr. James B. Winterbotham (Cheltenham), vice-president; Mr. E. W. Coren (Gloucester), hon. secretary; and Messrs. Kinneir (Swindon), Whitcombe (Gloucester), Scott (Gloucester), Mullings (Cirencester), Warman (Stroud), D. J. Winke (Newnham), &c.

The President, in moving the adoption of the report of the committee, referred to the opposition to the Public Trustee Bill, and said that although withdrawn for this session it was understood that it would be reintroduced next session. He pointed out the objection on principle to the establishment of a State department for the transaction of private business, and referred to the disadvantages to the cestui que trust of having to deal with a State department necessarily acting in accordance with hard-and-fast rules. He recognised, however, that there is one point on which the public feel very strongly, and which must necessarily produce a certain amount of support in Parliament for any proposal for appointing a public trustee—namely, the advantage of the State guarantee for the safety of the trust funds. It must also be recognised that there is a growing difficulty in finding private trustees, especially in the larger and more special trusts. He doubted if it would be expedient or possible successfully to oppose altogether the appointment of a public trustee, but urged that his duties should be limited to the safe custody of the trust funds, and should not extend to the general administration of the trust. The public requirement would, he thought, be to a considerable extent met by authorising trust companies to undertake such business, and that the policy of the profession would be to formulate a good working scheme for the appointment of a public trustee responsible for the safety of trust funds when voluntarily brought under his control, but with no other powers in relation to the trust.—After discussion, in which the views expressed by the president were generally concurred in, the report of the committee was adopted.—Grants to the amount of 90*l.* to the families of deceased solicitors were sanctioned.

The following is extracted from the report:—

'The Public Trustee Bill.

'The most important matter which your committee have had to deal with during the past year has been the Public Trustee (No. 2) Bill, being a Government bill introduced into the House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer early in the present session.

'The bill provides for the establishment of the office of public trustee, which would, in fact, be a Government department for the administration of private trusts. This proposal appeared to your committee to be most objectionable, for the following amongst other reasons:—

'1. As being an effort in the direction of State interference with private business. If it be contended that the bill confers advantages on the parties interested in trust funds, the reply is that it can only do so at the expense of the community, which is wrong. If it does not confer advantages, it is useless.

'2. The management of trusts especially requires the personal attention and local knowledge of those acquainted with the circumstances of the case. Such business frequently requires considerable tact and delicacy of management, which cannot be expected from the officers of a public department who necessarily proceed by rule.

'3. The effect of the bill, if it should result in putting into the hands of a public trustee the enormous amount of money held under trusts, would be to place such money in Consols or similar investments, and this probably is the real object of the bill. In so far as it has this effect, it will defeat the Trust Investment Act, 1889; reduce the income of beneficiaries; and tend to withdraw from the land of the country the trust money invested on mortgage.

'4. Although the bill is permissive, it may be expected that it will be the tendency of the Courts to appoint the official trustee on the occasion of appointment of new trustees, thereby in time placing under his control the bulk of the larger trusts. The same result may be expected from the tendency of every public department to increase the scope of its powers, with a view to becoming pecuniarily self-supporting.

'5. There is no evidence that any legislation is required, and there is no serious difficulty in obtaining private trustees.

'6. It is socially and morally inexpedient to legislate so as to encourage refusal on the part of relatives and friends to undertake trusteeships.

'On March 5 last a meeting of the Associated Provincial Law Societies was held, at which your society was represented by the president, and it was resolved to appoint a deputation to the Lord Chancellor and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The deputation attended accordingly, accompanied by the president and vice-president of the Incorporated Law Society, but it appeared that the Government intended to proceed with the bill. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, however, intimated his willingness to consider any proposed amendments when the bill is in committee.

'Your committee represented to the local members of Parliament their objections to the bill, and the same course was taken by other societies.

'Subsequently another meeting of the Associated Provincial Law Societies was held, at which the provisions of the bill were fully discussed and amendments considered; Mr. Coren represented the society at this meeting. Owing to the state of public business in the House of Commons, no further progress has at present been made with the bill. Should the second reading be carried, a motion will be made to refer the bill to a select committee instead of the standing committee on law, and amendments will then be proposed.

'Status of Solicitors.

'This question was brought under the consideration of the committee by the Incorporated Law Society of Liverpool, in an able report, in which it was pointed out that the present distribution of appointments as between barristers and solicitors is illogical and unfair. Your committee felt, however, considerable doubt as to the expediency of taking any action in view of the circumstance that most of the patronage is in the hands of persons whose sympathies are with the bar, and feared that the result might be to confer on barristers appointments now held by solicitors without any corresponding benefit to our branch of the profession. Your committee would rather look to the change resulting ultimately from an improvement of the existing system of legal education by the establishment of a school of law applicable alike to both branches of the profession.

'A communication to this effect was addressed to the Liverpool society.

'County Courts.

'Your committee have concurred with the Associated Provincial Law Societies in supporting the following resolution: "That the interests of the public require the repeal of so much of section 72 of the County Courts Act, 1888, as prohibits the solicitor of a suitor from retaining another solicitor to appear in the County Court as an advocate for the suitor."

'Solicitors' Remuneration Order.

'Conducting Sale at Auction Sales.

'The question whether the right to the conducting sale fee under the Solicitors' Remuneration Order is precluded by a payment to an auctioneer for offering the property and registering the bids at an auction, remains unsettled. The council of the Incorporated Law Society have intimated their willingness to support a suitable test case for obtaining a decision on this important question, and in the event of such a case coming under the notice of any of the members of this society, it is hoped they will communicate particulars of it to your committee.

'The Tithe Act, 1891.

'The bill which has resulted in this Act for transferring the liability for tithe rent-charge from the occupier to the landowner was carefully considered by your committee, and suggestions were made upon it to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. The attention of practitioners should at once be given to the requirements of subsection 6 of section 2, as to notice by the landowner to the tithe-owner, where the occupier is liable to pay the tithe rent-charge under existing contract. Your committee regret that a clause to which exception was taken by the profession generally stands part of the Act—namely, the power given by subsection 1 of section 5 to a tithe-owner to make application to the County Court by an agent not a solicitor. Although the point is in itself a small one, the principle involved is objectionable, and it appears to your committee that the exception to the general rule, that solicitors only are authorised to conduct proceedings in any Court, should not be carried further than it is already carried by the County Court Act, under which an agent in the regular employ of the party may appear. The committee, however, conceive that it is doubtful whether the provision referred to enables the non-professional agent of a tithe-owner to appear and conduct the case on the hearing, if any, or whether his power is not limited to the signing and lodging the prescribed notice of application to the Court.

'Licensing Law.

'The importance of the recent decision of the House of Lords in Sharp v. Wakefield (60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 73), in its bearing upon a branch of practice of interest to many members of the society, induces your committee to think that it may be expedient to make reference to it in this report. The point decided is that the discretion of justices given by the Alehouse Act, 1828, s. 1, in the granting of licenses, applies equally to the renewal as to the original grant. In applying this decision it will be important to practitioners to bear in mind—

'1. That it does not affect the renewal or transfer of licenses under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, s. 19—i.e. in respect of beerhouses licensed before May 1, 1869.

'2. That it does not affect the grant, renewal, or transfer of off-beer licenses subject to 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, s. 8.

'3. That it does not alter the procedure prescribed by section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1874.

'4. That although, subject to the foregoing restrictions, the discretion of the magistrates is absolute, they must exercise this discretion judicially "according to law and not to humour;" it must not be "arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular."'

GRAND JURIES.

'A MAGISTRATE' writes to the Times as follows:—

A learned recorder, Q.C., in charging the grand jury of a county town (there were no prisoners for trial!), made the following remarks:—

'He thought it possible that one of these days it might be considered that the attendance of a grand jury at quarter sessions was unnecessary, and there was a sufficient protection that persons would not be improperly put upon their trial, as the cases were heard in the first instance by the magistrates.'

How devoutly it is to be wished that this blessed day may come soon, and that the common sense of this recorder may prevail!

In former days, when the squire heard the case of the poacher upon his own preserves and committed him with no other assistance than his own legal lore, the institution of a grand jury was indeed a safeguard; but in these enlightened times of magistrates' clerks and well-regulated petty sessions it is nothing less than absurd, as regards quarter sessions at least, that the deliberate opinions of justices advised by a lawyer should be submitted quasi for approval and should be liable to be overruled by less cultured minds. It is very doubtful, too, even as regards assizes, if the institution of a grand jury can be of any real utility, except to share with a judge the responsibility of saying that such and such a prisoner shall not be put upon his trial in a particular class of case of an unmentionable character for want of evidence. But the judge in such cases is surely able to bring about the same result by a timely hint to counsel.

Is there, however, any such further necessity, or even propriety, in the institution of a grand jury that it is worth while to continue the trouble and expense and loss of time involved? This is no age for pedantic and cumbersome methods of obtaining justice. No one travels nowadays by a stage-coach, except as a curiosity. The blast of the trumpet down St. James's Street is interesting, no doubt; but for the dozen persons sitting upon the coach there are a dozen thousand travelling on the railway.

The relationship of a grand jury to a modern Court of justice is somewhat in the same ratio. Magistrates and commercial men who are bound to attend there know that they are doing no good whatever, except, perhaps, to swell the triumph of a judicial car on a Roman holiday.

Pedantry will not fail, I am aware, to dish up some sort of argument for the continual usefulness of a grand jury; but common sense says loudly 'No!' even though judges here and there may join in the chorus of admiration for this old-fashioned palladium of the liberty of the subject, which represents now only the waste of time, the waste of labour, and the waste of money.

THE LUNACY BILL.

THE object of a bill introduced by the Lord Chancellor is stated by him as being to amend the Lunacy Act of 1890, principally in matters relating to local government and pauper lunatics. The opportunity is also taken to propose some changes in the Act in some matters relating to private lunatics. One clause is intended to clear up a doubt which has been raised as to the proper classification of lunatics sent to an asylum on the ground that they are not under proper care and control, or that they are cruelly treated or neglected, or that they are wandering at large. Each is to be classified as a panper until it is ascertained that he is entitled to be classified as a private patient. Another clause makes an order of a justice unnecessary for the detention of a lunatic in a workhouse where a report has already been made as to the lunatic under section 22 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867. These cases are numerous, and to obtain an order of a justice in each case would, it is alleged, be both costly and unnecessary. The clause also relieves the medical superintendent of the metropolitan asylums from the necessity of certifying that the accommodation is sufficient. These asylums are provided for lunatics only, and a lunatic would not be admitted unless the accommodation were sufficient. Another clause enlarges the powers of permitting lunatics to travel under proper care and to be absent on trial; and another gives power to alter the regulations of lunatic hospitals, subject to the approval of a Secretary of State. Amid other clauses there are some which relate to financial and other questions between boroughs and counties in lunatic matters. Then, again, some difficulties have been experienced in procuring orders for the reception of private patients. For instance, a judicial authority is not always easily found, and is sometimes not willing to act. In some cases orders have been made by justices of the peace who are not specially appointed. In one or two cases the justices have appointed the whole of their body to be special justices. To meet these difficulties the jurisdiction of the judicial authority is enlarged; he being empowered to act notwithstanding that he may not have jurisdiction in the place where the lunatic or alleged lunatic is. He is also empowered to transfer a petition to some other judicial authority. Moreover, an order made by a justice who is not specially appointed is to be valid if approved by a judicial authority; and specially appointed justices are to continue in office until their successors are appointed. In other parts of the bill some changes are made in the procedure as to Chancery lunatics.

MR. JUSTICE NORTH.—The cold from which Mr. Justice North was suffering on Friday last has now developed into an acute attack of erysipelas, and the learned judge will not, consequently, be able to resume his seat in Court for some time.

THE DAILY CAUSE LISTS.—The Bar Committee have made arrangements with the benchers of the Inner and Middle Temples and the Lord Chancellor's secretary (Mr. Muir Mackenzie, Q.C.), for the exhibition of the daily lists of causes in a glass frame under the cloisters in the Temple. These lists will be in writing, and they will be posted up at the Temple each evening shortly after the Courts rise, and simultaneously with those at the Law Courts. This arrangement will come into operation in a day or two.

HNOOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. HENRY JOHN HOWARD BULL, of the firm of Bull & Bull, 11 New Inn, Strand, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths in the Supreme Court of Judicature. Mr. Bull was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Frederick Culver James, of 9 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. James was admitted in 1877.

Mr. Edgar Banting, of 3 Serle Street, London, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Banting was admitted in 1885.

Mr. William Elliott Snow (of the firm of Snow, Snow & Fox), of 7 Great St. Thomas Apostle, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Snow was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Henry Western Page Phillips (of the firm of Beal, Phillips & Beal), of 49 Finsbury Pavement, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Phillips was admitted in 1884.

Mr. George Reginald Grant, of 40 Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Grant was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Walter Morgan Willcocks, of 109 Lavender Hill, S.W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Willcocks was admitted in 1885.

Mr. George Harry Holcroft, M.A., of Dudley, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Holcroft was admitted in 1884.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, July 20. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Tuesday, July 21.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Wednesday, July 22.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Thursday, July 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Friday, July 24. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Saturday, July 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

SIR T. CHAMBERS, Q.C.—For some time past reports have been current that Sir T. Chambers, Q.C., the Recorder of London, was about to resign, and contradictions have been equally plentiful. It has now, however, been practically settled that the Recorder will retire with a pension nearly equal to his present salary, which is 3,500*l*. a year. This step will probably be taken within a month.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JULY 20 TO JULY 25.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	July 20	July 21	July 22	July 23	July 24	July 25
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Altrincham	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	—	—	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Ilkeston	Burton	Derby	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Chipping Norton	Stow-on-the-Wold	Alcester	Pershore	Solihull	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Lymington	Bournemouth	Wimborne	Wareham	—
58	Judge Edge	Totnes	Kingsbridge	Crediton	—	—	—

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.

Weston v. New Guston Company (company—liquidation—transfer or sale—new company—dissentient shareholders—Companies Act, 1862, s. 161—appeal from the Court of Appeal).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JULY 13.

Boyd v. Horrocks (patent—infringement—construction of specification—appeal from Court of Appeal).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.

Boyd v. Horrocks.—Cur. adv. vult.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.

Allchurch and another v. Assessment Committee and Guardians of Hendon Union (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of assessment committee from order of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., dated April 14, affirming order of sessions subject to case stated).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and KAY, L.J.

Regina v. Mayor, &c. of Liverpool (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of prosecutor, the Rev. J. Kelly, from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated May 11, discharging nisi for mandamus to appoint organist to St. George's Church, Liverpool).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.

Marchioness of Huntly v. Bedford Hotel Company (Lim.) (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated April 25, at trial before Wills, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Hamley v. British Workman's Assurance Company (Lim.) (appeal of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated May 12, at trial before the Lord Chief Justice and common jury at Bodmin).—Judgment for defendants.

Dinn v. Copleston and others (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated May 29, at trial before the Lord Chief Justice and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Beilin v. Austin (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

SATURDAY, JULY 11.

No sitting.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, JULY 13.

In re A. Webber, ex parte S. Slater (appeal of S. Slater (receiver) from order of Cave, J., dated March 18, that partnership proceeds are subject to repayment of balance of testator's share; heard May 29).—Allowed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

Schouten v. Hill (application of defendant G. Hill for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Leighton & Co. v. Tyser & Co. (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on application from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Nagle v. Parish (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 16, at trial before Hawkins, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.

With Assessors—VICE-ADMIRAL GRANT, C.B., and CAPTAIN CASTLE.

Owners, Masters, and Crews of ss. Inverness, Flying Scud, Heather Bell, and Spurn v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo, and Freight. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo, and Freight, and Owners of Ship Albert Edward and others v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo, and Freight (appeal of plaintiffs in first action from judgment of President (Sir J. Hannen), dated December 11, 1890).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15.

Owners of Eloy Palacios and Cargo v. Owners of Homewood and Freight. Owners of Homewood v. Owners of Eloy Palacios (appeal of plaintiff in first action from judgment of the President (Sir J. Hannen), dated December 19, 1890).—Allowed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 9.

Brace v. Abercarn Coal Company (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 30, on appeal from County Court at Newport, Mon.).—Dismissed.

Huggins v. London and South Wales Coal Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 30, on appeal from County Court at Newport, Mon.).—Dismissed.

In re Kinnears & Co. (Lim.), ex parte Brown, Janson & Co. (appeal of Kinnears & Co. from order of Kekewich, J., dated July 4, for compulsory winding up).—Dismissed.

Grand Hotel, Prague (Lim.) v. Concessions Trust (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated April 25, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.

Reeves v. Butcher (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 28, on special case after argument of points of law raised in pleadings, judgment ordered to be entered for defendant, with costs).—Dismissed.

City and South London Railway Company v. London County Council (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of London County Council from judgment of Smith, J., and Grantham, J., dated April 22, on appeal from magistrate's order).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JULY 11.

No sitting.

MONDAY, JULY 13.

No sitting.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.

In re C. Robson, dec. Larkman v. Robson (appeal of defendant from order of Kekewich, J., dated March 11, on further consideration).—Dismissed on terms arranged.

Sykes v. Burr (appeal of defendant A. Burr from judgment of Kekewich, dated April 27).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 15.

Bryan Atlantic Patent Fuel Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 16, on appeal from judge of County Court; heard July 1).—Allowed.

Army and Navy Stores (Lim.) v. Army, Navy, and Civil Service Co-operative Society of India (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated June 5, restraining use of trade name resembling plaintiff's society until trial of action; restored after cross-examination).—Dismissed.

In re Jane Davis, dec. In re T. H. Davis, dec. Evans v. Moore (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., on originating summons, dated April 20).—Allowed.

In re Stephens, dec. Warburton v. Stephens (appeal of defendant from order of Kekewich, J., dated April 16, varying chief clerk's certificate).—Dismissed.

Faulder's Brewery Company (Lim.) v. Bowmaker (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Romer, J., dated March 16).—Part heard.

DIVORCE LEGISLATION IN CANADA.—A bill has been introduced and read a first time in the Canadian Senate to establish a Divorce Court for the Dominion. Jurisdiction in this matter is to appertain to the highest Court now existing in each province. The bill proposes to grant divorce to either party for adultery, and to the wife for her husband's desertion without sufficient cause for five years. An appeal will lie in every case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

UNIVERSITY JURISDICTION AT OXFORD.—An important letter was read at Oxford City Council, on July 1, from the vice-chancellor, in reply to one from the town clerk, on the question of university jurisdiction. As to the University Civil Court, the vice-chancellor said the only objection made to it was that it was not at all times accessible. The university were disposed to doubt the existence of any real demand for extra-terminal sittings, but were willing to meet the wishes of the city in this respect. As to the petty sessional jurisdiction, the university did not feel that they could give up the power which they possessed to claim cognisance of all serious cases affecting its members. As to the Act of 6 Geo. IV. c. 97, dealing with common women, the university could not help thinking that the objections expressed to the working of this Act arose from some misapprehension of the facts of the case. Proceedings under clause 3 took place in open Court, and reporters always could, and often did, attend. The evidence was taken on oath, and the prisoner could always be professionally represented. The university did not think there was any real danger of innocent women being brought before the Court. They, therefore, were not prepared to acquiesce in the change proposed, but thought that a working arrangement of mutual assistance in the exercise of powers conferred by the Act might be easily made. As to the veto of the vice-chancellor and the mayor upon entertainments, the university urged that the veto had been proved to be a necessary protection. The reply was considered unsatisfactory by the council, and an answer was directed to be returned to the vice-chancellor stating that it appeared to the city council that the university was not disposed to enter into such a conference as the city had desired. In that case the city council would hold itself free to take such other steps as it might consider expedient to remove the grievance of which it complained. The subject-matter of the correspondence was referred back to the Parliamentary committee, with a view to further action.

BIRTHS.

On July 8, at Middlemoss, Bramley Hill, Croydon, the wife of A. K. Common, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On July 9, at Barrow-in-Furness, the wife of H. Garencières Pearson, Solicitor, of a son.

On July 10, the wife of Frank Woodbridge, of Donnington, Bradford, and 6 Serjeants' Inn, London, Solicitor, of a son.

On July 10, at 11 Eldon Road, Kensington, the wife of Walworth Howland Roberts, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On July 11, at Harsfold Manor, Billingshurst, Sussex, the wife of John Arthur Penfold Wyatt, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On July 12, at 42 Ravenscourt Gardens, Hammersmith, the wife of Mr. F. Sydney Waddington, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On July 7, at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Hampstead, Percy John Frederick Lush, M.A., M.B. Oxon., of 8 Fitzjohn's avenue, Hampstead, youngest son of the late Right Hon. Lord Justice Lush, to Lydia, second daughter of the late W. D. Anderson, Esq., of The Ferns, Frognal, Hampstead.

On July 8, at St. Peter's, Belsize, Archibald Henry Bodkin, Barrister-at-Law, 4 Temple Gardens, Temple, youngest son of William Peter Bodkin, Esq., J.P., of West Hill Place, Highgate, to Maud Beatrice, third daughter of the Rev. R. Wheler Bush, of 67 Belsize Park, Rector of St. Alphage, London Wall.

On July 14, at All Souls' Church, Harlesden, George Edward Penn Gaskell, Barrister-at-Law, youngest son of the late William Penn Gaskell, of Ealing, to Eleanor Charlotte, daughter of the late David Baird Lindsay.

DEATHS.

On July 4, at 148 Kennington Park Road, S.E., George Richard Browne, of 3 Church Court, Ironmonger Lane, Cheapside, E.C., Solicitor.

On July 6, by accident at Herne Hill Railway Station, Malcolm Percy Douglas, Barrister-at-Law, of Woodfield, Palace Road, Tulse Hill, S.W.

On July 10, at Gloucester House, Elms Road, Clapham Common, Fanny Mary, widow of the late Henry Prater, M.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, aged 64.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

AMONGST the 'fifty-six public and private bills' to which the royal assent was given on Wednesday last, the Stamp Duties Bill is, of course, the most important. It is almost entirely a consolidation bill, and will be of the greatest service to the profession in its conversion of the law of stamps from chaos to simplicity. There remained on that day three more consolidation bills: the Public Health (London) Bill, an amending measure as well as a consolidating one, which is practically safe; the Evidence Bill, which has been read a second time in the House of Commons; and the Trustee Bill, which has not. Both these bills came down from the House of Lords after careful consideration by the standing committee of that House. We believe them to contain, practically speaking, no amendments of the law whatever, and, in fact, the second reading of the Evidence Bill was obtained by the Attorney-General on the assurance that it is a consolidation bill only. Sir Horace Davey, however, has opposed both bills, for what reason we are unable to conceive, and the Trustee Bill has now been abandoned by the Attorney-General. The Evidence Bill is still down for committee in the House of Commons.

THE St. Paul's reredos case (Regina v. Bishop of London, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 169) has been decided in favour of the Bishop of London by the House of Lords, as also has the 'second case,' in which it was alleged that superstitious feelings had been actually aroused by the images on the reredos; whereas in the first case it was only alleged that the images 'tended' to give rise to such superstitious feelings. Section 9 of the Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, prescribes that 'unless the bishop' of the diocese, to whom a representation is made under the Act, 'shall be of opinion, after considering the whole circumstances of the case, that proceedings should not be taken,' he shall take steps to bring the matter to a hearing before him. The mere use of the word 'opinion' in this section is, we think, fatal to the contention of the appellants, that the bishop was bound as a matter of law to take the steps pointed out by the Act. As a grand jury can throw out a bill against a prisoner without appeal, so can a bishop, in his absolute and uncontrolled discretion, prevent proceedings being taken under the Public Worship Regulation Act.

THE House of Lords has at length delivered judgment in The Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income-tax v. Pemsel, the arguments in which were concluded about seventeen months ago. How far the slow and stately pace of their lordships' minds was accelerated by a recent question addressed to the Attorney-General in the House of Commons is a point which it may be more useful to suggest than to attempt to answer. It is to be hoped, however, that their lordships have not been betrayed into undue haste or precipitation by the popularis aura of the House of Commons, for the result can hardly be said to be quite satisfactory. Four lords —i.e. Lord Watson, Lord Herschell, Lord Macnaghten, and Lord Morris—were for affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, whilst the Lord Chancellor and Lord Bramwell thought it ought to be reversed. After so long a consideration one might have hoped for a unanimous decision. But it is a great thing to have avoided an equal division of opinion, such as happened the other day in an Admiralty appeal. What Lord Macnaghten said will, in process of time, be revealed to the profession and the public, and one could only infer the result of his lucubrations from the anticipatory reference made to his judgment by Lord Herschell. We doubt whether a single person present, save the noble and learned lord himself, heard one quarter of what he said. Even the House of Lords is a public Court, and it is a pity that a judge, all of whose utterances are well worthy of attention, should not speak audibly. And with all respect to the final Court of Appeal, we cannot help feeling that it is not creditable to the administration of justice that suitors should be so long left in suspense. There are other cases in which judgment was reserved months ago, and it is to be hoped that decisions in all of them will be pronounced in the course of the next fortnight, as the House is not likely to sit after the prorogation, which will probably take place in the first week of August. But such a hope, we fear, is likely to be disappointed.

THE question at issue, it will be remembered, was whether certain lands were vested in trustees for charitable purposes so as to be entitled to exemption from income-tax. By an indenture made in 1813 hereditaments in the county of Middlesex were conveyed to trustees as to two fourth parts for the benefit of a society known by the name of the Unitas Fratrum or United Brethren, as to another fourth part for the education of the children of missionaries and ministers at a school at Fulner, near Leeds, and as to the remaining fourth part for the support of certain establishments appertaining to the society for single persons, called 'choir-houses.' By another indenture of 1815 estates were conveyed for the benefit of other institutions in Ireland connected with the society. The Income-tax Acts have all granted an immunity in favour of property dedicated to charitable purposes. Now in deciding whether these were charitable purposes the alternative lay between the usual literary meaning of the words, and that larger scope which is given them in the 43 Eliz. and by the Court of Chancery in the administration of funds devoted to benevolent or public purposes. The Lord Chancellor and Lord Bramwell concurred in thinking that poverty in the intended recipients was a necessary ingredient in 'charitable purposes.' The other lords adopted a broader construction, and accepted the interpretation contained in the Act of Elizabeth and in an old Act of the Scotch Parliament in the reign of Charles II., and sanctioned by the Court of Chancery in the administration of what are called comprehensively, but perhaps rather indiscriminately, 'charities.' If the matter were res nova much might be said for the more restricted meaning, though the Christian virtue of charity is, as we know, in the locus classicus on the subject in the Epistle to the Corinthians—rather the combination in perfect proportion of all other virtues than merely a single virtue. But whatever ethical view we may adopt, it will be generally felt that for the harmony of English law it is well that the decision should be as it is.

LORD BRAMWELL'S judgment, as usual excellently delivered, was delicious. If his lordship's judgments are ever collected, there will be many a dainty morsel for the literary as well as for the legal epicure. He held that the conversion of heathens to Christianity or any other religion was not a charitable purpose. No doubt it was a benevolent purpose. The providers of funds for such an object doubtless thought that the converts would be happier and better during this life with a better hope hereafter. So thought those who provided the faggots and racks which were the instruments of conversion in times gone by. What, he asked, of a trust for the conversion of the Jews? Was that a charitable purpose? If so, what of a trust for the reconversion? This reminds one of the Oxford man who declined to subscribe to the Society for the Conversion of the Jews on the ground that the Jews were rich enough to convert themselves. There was a fund for providing oysters at one of the Inns of Court for the benchers. That, however benevolent, could hardly be called charitable. If it had been for the students, or even the barristers, the noble lord might have added, 'Secus.' So, he said, a trust to provide a band of music for a village green would hardly be charitable. The truth is that of these verbal controversies there is no end. If we remember rightly, there was an outcry many years ago against a proposal by Mr. Gladstone to do away with the exemption altogether. Why should there be such an exemption? It is really a form of concurrent endowment, and of all such forms the least defensible. The community at large is pro tanto called upon to support institutions some of which may be positively mischievous, and which are established and supported by individuals for purposes which they deem good, but of which others may hold a different opinion. It is absurd to suppose that either existing charities would materially suffer or charitable impulses be discouraged if charities were called upon to contribute their fair quota to the necessities of the nation at large.

THE statutes now in force relating to bills of sale are neither very long nor very numerous. We should have thought that the law on this subject as yet hardly stood in need of consolidation, though treatment of another kind might be beneficial. However, it may be hoped that Lord Herschell will achieve such measure of success as is attainable in the task he has promised to undertake. We would commend to his notice one small amendment in the clause defining 'bill of sale'—namely, the omission of 'India warrants' from the list of excepted documents. If we rightly understand the term as meaning the warrants formerly issued by the East India Company for delivery of goods stored in its warehouses, the change suggested would be but laying the ghost of an extinct commercial instrument which has been haunting the statute-book for over half a century since it ceased to live. From the Act of 1878 the term may be traced back to the Act previously in force, the Bills of Sale Act, 1854; and its presence there seems to be due to the draftsman having in this part copied verbatim (save for the omission of 'dock warrants') the definition of 'documents of title' contained in the Factors Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 4). This Act again carries us back to the previous Factors Act (6 Geo. IV. c. 94). At the time when the last-mentioned Act was passed, that is, in 1825, the East India Company was still a trading corporation, and its warrants were well known to merchants. But on the renewal of its charter in 1833 it was deprived of the right to trade, and directed to sell its warehouses (see 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 85). It may be noted that in the Factors Act of 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 45), which consolidates the law relating to factors, 'India warrants' no longer find mention as 'documents of title.'

THE announcement (in a prominent paragraph) in last Saturday's Standard that Sir William Marriott, 'it is understood, will be a candidate for the Recordership of London,' was the first intimation to the general public that the present Recorder was contemplating retirement, and Sir Thomas Chambers has since caused the statement to be flatly contradicted. The post is an important one, and notwithstanding the early and quasi-official connection of the Judge Advocate-General's name with the vacancy, it may be taken for granted that when the post is vacant Sir William Marriott will not be the only candidate. The appointment is made by the Corporation of the City of London, and is in no sense a Government post. Any attempt, therefore, to dictate to the Corporation or to fetter their choice in any way is certain to be resented in 'the City,' where the sentiment on this subject is extremely strong.

THERE is a very bad mistake in three of the forms contained in the appendix to the Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Rules, the fifty-eighth of which directs that 'the forms in the appendix, where applicable, and where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, with such variations as circumstances may require, shall be used.' Forms 28, 29, and 30 of 'application by owner of lands for certificate in respect of failure to give occupiers liability notice,' under section 6, subsection 2 of the Act, of 'notice to occupier,' of such application and of the County Court certificate, are drawn as if the occupier's liability notice had to be given to the occupier himself instead of to the owner of the tithe rent-charge. The mistake is one which, when once practitioners are aware of it, is very easily corrected by omitting the words which designate the occupier, and even if, as is likely enough, the forms may be sent out in practice without the necessary alterations, we cannot think that clients will in any way be prejudiced by their solicitors having used prescribed, though erroneous, forms. It is a little unfortunate, however, that in rule 58 the forms should have been so positively prescribed by the use of the expression 'shall be used.' 'May be used' would have been better, as in Rule 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Rules, 1886, which prescribed that the forms in the schedule 'to those rules, or forms to the like effect, may be used, with such variations as circumstances may require.'

THE Local Government Board not long ago saw fit to favour the highway surveyors and overseers of the poor throughout the country with a circular drawing their attention 'to certain provisions of the Tithe Act, 1891, with reference to the rating of rent-charges payable in lieu of tithes.' These provisions will be found in section 6 of the Act, by which so much of any Act (see 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 8) as authorised any rate on tithe rent-charge to be assessed on or recovered from the occupier of the lands out of which the tithe rent-charge issues is very properly repealed, and it is provided (as simple justice would seem to require) that 'any rate to which tithe rent-charge is subject may be recovered from the owner of the tithe rent-charge in the like manner and by the like process as from any occupying ratepayer.' It is further provided by section 6, that if the collector of the rates satisfies the County Court that he is unable 'to recover in manner aforesaid the rate from the owner of the tithe rent-charge, the Court may, after such services as may be prescribed [by rules under section 3 of the Act], order the owner of the lands to pay such tithe rent-charge to the collector until the amount of the rate and any costs allowed by the Court are fully paid.' All this, and very much more (including the provisions of subsection 1 of section 8 of the Act, whereby tithe exceeding two-thirds of the annual value of the lands out of which it issues may be remitted, so as necessarily to render the rates on such tithe irrecoverable), is very fully dwelt on (we cannot say explained) in the circular, which winds up with an expression of opinion on the part of the board that 'they have no doubt that the power conferred by the Act to recover rates from the owner of the rent-charge will be found to facilitate their collection.' We fear that this circular will greatly puzzle the worthy but in many cases comparatively unlettered functionaries to whom it is addressed. It deals with cases which are extremely unlikely to happen —that of the parson or other tithe-owner refusing, declining, or becoming incapable to pay his rates, and that of the tithe exceeding two-thirds of the annual value of the land—in such a manner that even the most intelligent reader might suppose either that these cases were of ordinary occurrence, or that the whole Tithe Act was being explained to him, and upon the single point which it might have given really useful information—on the effect of the rules under section 3 of the Act—it is absolutely silent.

MR. TALBOT has hit the right nail on the head in proposing to call the attention of the Government to the state of the law (see p. 273, ante) as to the costs of justices of the peace in licensing appeals. The member for the University of Oxford draws attention to the fact that the judges of the High Court never have to pay the costs of an appeal against their judgments, and thinks that justices of the peace ought to be put in the same position. There is, however, considerable difference between the two cases, as judges of the High Court would under no circumstances themselves appear to support their own judgments. In almost all cases, moreover, where inferior Courts are appealed from, both parties have ordinarily a sufficient interest to cause them to appear and support the judgment below. Licensing appeals are quite exceptional, the general interests of the licensing district forming one side and the licensed person forming the other. By whom, if not by the justices, are the general interests of the public to be represented?

Whiffen v. Bligh is a case of great importance on the construction of the well-known sections 8 and 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869. The effect of those sections undoubtedly is that licensing justices cannot refuse to renew the license attached to a pre-1869 beerhouse except on one of four specified grounds affecting the character of the applicant or his house. But, if licensing justices have refused a renewal on some other ground than these four, can a Court of Quarter Sessions, on appeal, quash the refusal as to the wrong ground, but affirm it on one of the four grounds, though the ground on which they affirm it was not submitted to the justices below? In other words, is an appeal of this kind a complete rehearing? This was the question raised in Whiffen v. Bligh. The licensing justices, it seems, had heard a certain amount of evidence as to the character of the applicant's house, but had also been to a certain extent influenced by the consideration that there were too many houses already in the licensing district. The renewal having been refused, the applicant appealed, and the Court of Quarter Sessions, instead of confining themselves to the question whether the evidence in favour of the applicant ought to have satisfied the justices below, reheard the case from beginning to end, and refused to renew the license on one of the four grounds specified in the Act of 1869—i.e. that the house of the applicant had been frequented by persons of bad character. The High Court, on a case stated by sessions, affirmed this judgment, and we think quite rightly. That a licensing appeal is a rehearing was decided some twenty years ago in Regina v. Pilgrim, 40 Law J. Rep. M. C. 3.

IN the remarkable Maybrick insurance case the High Court has held, on a special case stated for the opinion of the Court, that an action on a life policy effected on his life by the late Mr. Maybrick for the benefit of his widow (who was convicted of having murdered him), and of their children after her death, could not be sued on by the trustees of his will. The ground of the decision was that it is not in accordance with public policy that the convict Maybrick should recover money payable on an event which had been brought about by her own felonious act, and this is in accordance with the rule in the case of the forger Fauntleroy (The Amicable Society v. Bolland, 4 Bl. (N.S.) 194) and in that of the murderer Palmer (The Prince of Wales Insurance Company v. Palmer, 25 Beav. 605). It appears to have been assumed that the conviction in Regina v. Maybrick, although followed by a commutation of the capital sentence to penal servitude for life, was conclusive evidence of the felonious act of the convict. Is this quite in accordance with authority? We are inclined to doubt it, the parties in Regina v. Maybrick and in the Maybrick insurance case not being the same. If, for instance, a prisoner convicted of bigamy sue for administration of the second spouse's effects, the validity of the second marriage can be set up, notwithstanding the conviction (Wilkinson v. Gordon, 2 Ad. 152, and see The Duchess of Kingston's Case, 2 Sm. L. C.). It was held, however, in Palmer's Case that the coroner's inquisition charging Palmer with murder was primâ facie evidence of the murder; and since Mrs. Maybrick was not called to disprove the murder of her husband, as on a habeas corpus ad testificandum (see 43 Geo. III. c. 140, and 44 Geo. III. c. 102) she could have been, there seems little doubt that the recent judgment is substantially correct. Perhaps, however, on the death of Mrs. Maybrick the action could be brought again for the benefit of those entitled to a reversionary interest in the policy.

THE speech of Mr. Rowland in moving the second reading of the Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill, which has been disseminated by the Leasehold Enfranchisement Association, shows clearly that the terminable leasehold system—that of short leaseholds of ninety-nine or a less number of years, as distinguished from that of 999 years—does not exist in a very considerable portion of the United Kingdom, being almost unknown in Scotland, Lancashire, and in many parts of the North of England. The extraordinary system of leases for lives, at one time quite common in the Temple, and in connection with almost all ecclesiastical and college property, still appears to flourish vigorously in Cornwall and Worcestershire. These curious leases appear to have sprung up at a time when it was easier to see whether or not a cestui que vie was alive than to count the number of years from the commencement of a lease, and to have been continued partly because a lease for the life of another, being a freehold, was not subject to the debts of the lessee, and partly because such a lease conferred the Parliamentary franchise, whereas the mere chattel interest conferred no such privilege. Be their origin what it may, however, leases for lives confer an absurd and troublesome tenure which ought to be swept out of existence with as little delay as possible.

THE plaintiff in Evelyn v. Hurlbert, who advertises her appearance at the Aquarium Theatre 'to tell the story of her life and facts in connection with the above case not disclosed at the trial' is (quite apart from the doubtful taste of such a step) acting with singular lack of judgment in taking this line pending the decision of the Public Prosecutor on the question of perjury. If poverty is the cause there are surely charitable people who might be appealed to in some other way, but to follow the example of 'the claimant' or Mrs. Weldon and take the British public into her confidence on what is, at best, a painful and unsavoury business, is to risk losing the respect and sympathy of thousands of persons who read the newspaper reports of the trial.

THE NEW SYSTEM OF LEGAL EDUCATION.

THE Council of Legal Education have, in their new scheme, made alterations in the system of instruction and examination of those who wish to be called to the bar which we do not hesitate to say are of the greatest importance. The scheme, in fact, forms a new departure in the study of English law, the consequences of which it is difficult to foresee. We do not here desire to consider whether the new system will have the effect of making the instruction of the students more thorough, or whether more will in the future avail themselves of the lectures and classes of the readers and assistant-readers than in the past resorted to the lectures of the professors, though this is a matter of considerable moment. What we wish to point out is that the council have, for the purposes of study and examination for call to the bar, adopted a classification of English law which, so far as we know, has never been adopted before, and which certainly is not the one used for practical purposes by practitioners in the Courts of this country. The subjects of legal instruction are, under the new scheme (see the new 'Consolidated Regulations,' par. 28), divided into three heads—viz. (1) Roman law and jurisprudence and international law, public and private; (2) constitutional law and legal history; (3) English law and equity. The latter subject is divided into five subsections, which are (a) law of persons, including marriage and divorce, infancy, lunacy, and corporations; (b) law of real and personal property and conveyancing, including trusts, mortgages, administration of assets on death, on dissolution of partnerships, on winding up of companies, and in bankruptcy, and practical instructions in the preparation of deeds, wills, and contracts; (c) law of obligations, including contracts, torts, allied subjects (implied or quasi-contracts), estoppel, &c., and commercial law, with especial reference to mercantile documents in daily use, which should be shown and explained; (d) civil procedure, including evidence; (e) criminal law and procedure. It is intended by the council that readers and assistant-readers should be appointed in these subjects and examinations conducted on these lines. (See the 'Consolidated Regulations and the Notice to Candidates for Readerships,' dated July 11.)

It will be seen that under this classification the body of English law and equity is to be treated of in four main heads: (1) the law of persons, (2) the law of property, (3) the law of obligations, and (4) procedure. This corresponds with the division of Roman law in the Institutes of Gaius and Justinian into (1) jus personarum, (2) jus rerum (subdivided into (a) jura in rem, and (b) jura in personam), and (3) jus actionum. Now, undoubtedly, for a useful study of any body of law some systematic division of the subject-matter is essential, and the division adopted by the Roman institutional writers was a good one, and useful for an intelligent appreciation of the principles of the corpus juris. It has, however, been demonstrated that it was not a strictly logical division nor strictly adhered to by the Roman jurists themselves. (See Austin on 'Jurisprudence,' lectures xl. xli. xliii.) But whatever the merits or demerits of the Roman classification of law may be, it has never, so far as we know, been applied to the practical study of English law, which is not founded on the civil law, and does not naturally fall into the same divisions. English law has been usually studied in what may be called its natural divisions—that is, according to its sources and to the main divisions which obtain in actual practice. These are well known to be—we must apologise for stating them—common law, the law of real and personal property and conveyancing, equity, and ecclesiastical law (including probate and divorce). The leading text-books, not only for students, but also for practical purposes, have been written with reference to this system of classification, which has also been used in examinations for the bar and in examinations for admission as solicitors by the Incorporated Law Society. The Council of Legal Education propose to drop the old classification and introduce a new one. They create a new head of English law—the law of persons—and leave out of consideration equity as a separate field of study, it being intended, we presume, that the student should acquire its principles incidentally in his study of the law of persons, the law of property, and the law of obligations.

Looked at from the point of view of jurisprudence, there is no doubt that the old classification of English law is not strictly logical or scientific. Yet, as we submit, it is far more convenient for the practising lawyer, which is what the student aims at becoming, than any new system that can be devised, because it corresponds with the divisions into which the law of this country has naturally fallen. With the adoption of a new and artificial system founded on Roman law the value of many of the present text-books for students will be more or less destroyed; and we doubt if it will be possible to find competent teachers of such a subject as 'the law of persons,' which comprehends what must seem to the English lawyer the heterogeneous topics of marriage and divorce, infancy, lunacy, and corporations. The new departure of the Council of Legal Education is a bold step; and, even though it may be a theoretical improvement, we venture to doubt if it will commend itself to practical lawyers.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

IV.

(Continued from page 478.)

HARRISON v. TAYLOR.*

ONLY 'new' and 'original' designs are, or have been since the earliest legislation on the subject, entitled to registration. But here, as in kindred branches of the law, 'novelty' and 'originality' have been found somewhat hard to define. Down to the middle of the present century the judicial interpretation of the words 'new' and 'original' was inspired by the assumption that there was a complete analogy between copyright in the design and a patent for an invention.† In Regina v. Firmin, 1851, 15 J. P. 740, the Court of Queen's Bench, supporting the conviction of the defendant for the fraudulent imitation of a design for the ornamentation of a button consisting of two parts, which were new only in combination—viz. a garter with the words on it, 'The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company' and the Royal Arms—seem to have avoided this error almost by accident. But Regina v. Bessell, 1851, 20 Law J. Rep. M. C. 177; 16 Q. B. 810, reads for all the world like a patent case, and we find the judgment of Mr Justice Erle commencing with the following sentences: 'It appears to me that this invention is not within the meaning of the statute. It is a skilful combination of means for producing an end.' In Harrison v. Taylor—which forms the subject of the present paper—the old judicial identification of patents and designs was finally disposed of. The plaintiffs had registered, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, a design for ornamenting woven fabrics. The design was applied to a fabric woven in cells, called the 'honeycomb' pattern, and consisted of the combination of the large and small honeycomb so as to form a large honeycomb stripe on a small honeycomb ground. The large honeycomb was not new, and the small honeycomb was not new, but they had never been used in combination before the plaintiffs registered their design. Other fabrics had been woven with a similar combination of large and small pattern. The defendants having infringed the plaintiffs' copyright, an action was brought against them by the plaintiffs. The action was tried at the Guildhall before Lord (then Baron) Bramwell and a jury, and a verdict for the plaintiffs was returned. This verdict was set aside by the Court of Exchequer on the ground that the plaintiffs' design was not 'new and original,'‡ but was restored by the Court of Exchequer Chamber.§ The judgment of Mr. Justice Wightman is terse, clear, and to the point, and contains nothing of which the whole Court did not approve, and therefore we shall set it out almost in extenso: 'I cannot but think that the Court of Exchequer, in coming to the conclusion to which they did, gave too much effect to a supposed analogy between cases of inventions in which patents have been obtained and designs which come under the protection of the Act regulating the copyright of designs. Now, the Act protects any new and original design; and I appre-

* 1858, 3 H. & N. 301; 1859, 29 Law J. Rep. Exch. 3.

† So the right of property in a trade-mark was once denied owing to the judicial dread of setting up a new species of monopoly. Cf. Blanchard v. Hill, 1742, 2 Atk. 484.

‡ Under the present Acts the words are 'new or original' (section 47, subsection 1).

§ Chief Justice Cockburn, Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Justice Williams, Mr. Justice Crompton, Mr. Justice Crowder, and Mr. Justice Byles.

hend by "design" is meant any diagram, drawing, or representation of something which the draughtsman has for the first time produced, and not (as suggested in part of the judgment of one of the judges below) * a project or idea in the nature of an invention. Now, if that be the true meaning of the word "design" (which, I confess, it seems to me it is) there is no doubt that there was in this case a design, a drawing; and there is also no doubt it was new and original, whatever the worth of it may be. It is true all the component parts of it were old; but as to the drawing itself no one had produced such a pattern as that before. It was said by one of the learned judges of the Court below that the constituent parts of it were old, and the novelty was only in the arrangement or combination. Why? A picture which contains within it a novel combination of old parts is a new drawing, and it seems to me, if no one else has ever combined them in the same manner, it would be a new design within the meaning of this Act of Parliament. In my opinion it was a question for the jury whether substantially this was a new and original design. It seems to me that the Court of Exchequer were wrong in determining as a matter of law that this was not a new and original design within the meaning of the Act.'

Let us see how this case is affected by other decisions: (1) The assumed analogy between a patent and copyright in a design has never been revived, unless in forensic argument. 'The word design,' said Mr. Justice Pearson in Le May v. Welch,† 'has a very wide meaning under section 60' (of the Act of 1883), 'and inasmuch as the Act allows the registration of designs not only with regard to shape but also with regard to pattern, I cannot help coming to the conclusion that the Legislature intended that matters apparently minute and trivial might nevertheless be registered under this Act. If I wanted authority for that I should say that Holdsworth v. M'Crea in the House of Lords (L. R. 2 H. L. 380) shows that the Court must not dismiss applications as to designs simply because the subject-matter of dispute seems to the judge to be of the extremest triviality.'

(2) It is now settled, if it ever was doubtful, that a new combination, not being a mere collocation (Norton v. Nicholls, 28 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 225) of old parts is registrable as a design (Lazarus v. Charles, 1873, 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 507; L. R. 16 Eq. 117).

(3) An obvious arrangement of old parts, where, for instance, two card baskets, admitted to be separately old in design, are placed together and formed into a double card basket (Lazarus v. Charles, ubi sup.), or three palm-leaves are tied together in the form of an ace of clubs (semble, in Smout v. Slaymaker & Co., 1890, 7 P. O. R., per Mr. Justice Wills, at p. 90), is not registrable, although no one has produced it before.

(4) In order to justify the registration of a design, especially with reference to articles of dress which are in constant and daily use, such as collars (Le May v. Welch, ubi sup.) or ties (Smith v. Hope, 1889, 6 P. O. R. 200), there must be some clearly marked and defined difference between that which is to be registered and that which has gone before.

(5) The meaning of the words 'new or original' is this, that the design must either be substantially novel or substantially original, having regard to the nature and character of the subject-matter to which it is to be applied (Le May v. Welch, ubi sup.). It will be observed that this definition of a new and original design is somewhat more restricted than that given by Mr. Justice Wightman in Harrison v. Taylor.

(To be continued.)

* Baron Martin.

† 1884, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 279; L. R. 28 Chanc. Div. at p. 26. This judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeal on the facts, but the law, as stated above, was not questioned.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords the royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—

Law Agents and Notaries Public (Scotland) Bill.
Mail Ships Bill.
Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans Bill.
Allotments Rating Exemption Bill.
Roads and Streets in Police Burghs (Scotland) Bill.
Bills of Sale Act (1890) Amendment Bill.
Fisheries Bill.
Stamp Duties Bill.
Stamp Duties Management Bill.
Consular Salaries and Fees Bill.
Municipal Registration (Dublin and Belfast) Bill.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Bill.
Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.
Slander of Women Bill.
Commissioners of Oaths Act (1889) Amendment Bill.
Crofters' Common Grazings (Scotland) Bill.
Ranges Bill.

Bills beyond second reading:—

Land Registry (Middlesex) Deeds Bill.
Lunacy Bill (report agreed to).
Penal Servitude Bill (reported without amendment).
County Councils Elections Bill.

Bills through committee:—

Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.
Free Education Bill.
Chartered Accountants Bill.
Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.
Highways and Bridges Bill.

Second reading:—

Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Third reading:—

Post-Office Acts Amendment Bill.

Bill through committee:—

Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Bill.

Second reading:—

Foreign Marriages Bill.

New Bills:—

Leave was given to introduce the following bills, which were read a first time:—

Bill to Continue Various Expiring Laws.
Bill to Grant Money for the Purpose of Certain Local Loans and for other Purposes relating to Local Loans.

Bills withdrawn:—

Public Health (Interments) Act (1879) Amendment Bill.
Agricultural Holdings Bill.
Trustee Bill.

Reviews.

THE HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES ACT, 1890.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 70). With Notes and Introduction. The Forms Prescribed under the Act, and all Existing Enactments upon the Subject; Tables of Cases and Index. By W. C. BERNARD, Esq., M.A., LL.B., of the Inner Temple and South-Eastern Circuit, and H. MORGAN BROWN, Esq., LL.B., of the Middle Temple, Barristers-at-Law. London: Butterworths. 1891.

THE Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, not only consolidates the law relating to artisans' and labourers' dwellings and the housing of the working classes, which had become very complicated, but it also introduces amendments on several material points. The effect of these amendments is very well summed up in the memorandum which was drawn up by the Local Government Board shortly after the passing of the Act. The principal changes which are introduced may be briefly noted. There are provisions in the present Act which simplify the procedure as to the closing and demolition of dwelling-houses unfit for human habitation. Facilities are given for making and carrying out schemes for the reconstruction and re-arrangement of insanitary buildings on a smaller scale and by a less elaborate machinery than under the former law. Safeguards are provided in certain cases against excessive compensation and for the determination of the expenses of arbitration. Courts of summary jurisdiction are empowered, when making orders for closing houses unfit for human habitation, to authorise payments to tenants of a reasonable allowance for the expenses of removal, which are recoverable from the owners of the houses. Local authorities are also empowered to make similar payments to tenants when their houses are pulled down for improvement schemes. The authors of the present work justly consider that the Act is one of great and growing importance. A good summary of the Act which is given in the introduction will help the reader to master it, and there are also some serviceable notes, though the authors admit the scarcity of judicial decisions on their subject.

THRING ON THE TITHE ACT.

The Tithe Act, 1891. With Explanatory Notes and the Rules and Forms thereunder. By A. T. THRING, Barrister-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell. 1891.

THE Tithe Act, 1891, we are told in the opening sentence of the useful summary of the Act which forms the first chapter of this work, is 'an Act to make better provision for the recovery of tithe rent-charge in England and Wales.' 'The full title of the Act,' the author proceeds to say, 'explains its object; the Act deals only with the recovery of tithe rent-charge.' The question of redemption 'is not touched.' This is not quite accurate. The question of redemption (now under the consideration of a royal commission) is not touched, but the Act deals with more than the recovery of tithe rent-charges. It is, however, only fair to the author to say that this is the only inaccuracy we have noticed in his book, and that it is one into which he was probably led by the title of the Act. Another subject of considerable importance, as is indeed pointed out at p. 5, is dealt with by the Act—viz. the method of recovery of rates on tithe rent-charge. Section 6, which deals with this subject, was introduced while the bill was passing through the House of Commons, which may account for the fact that this point is wholly ignored in the title of the Act. Three main questions, as Mr. Thring points out, are dealt with by the Act—the payment of tithe rent-charge by the owner of the lands, the substitution of recovery by means of a receiver for recovery by distress, and the remission of tithe rent-charge in the case of the reduction in value of the lands on which it is charged. The details of the new procedure are dealt with by the rules which are given with the forms in Appendix A after the Act itself, which is annotated. A note is added in Appendix D on the rating of tithe rent-charge. The work is carefully prepared, and will be found useful.

Correspondence.

THE COUNTRY CIRCUITS.

SIR,—It appears to me that the public do not sufficiently appreciate the extraordinary effect of sending only one judge to most of the circuit towns instead of two, as formerly.

I believe that all who practise on circuit will agree with me that the result has been to prevent the entry of causes for trial owing to the impossibility of getting them tried. To take the instance of the Midland Circuit, to which I have the honour to belong.

At Leicester, when we had two judges, there were usually ten or a dozen important cases for trial; now there are seldom more than two. This circuit there were five, of which three were withdrawn, one was tried, and the venue of the other was changed to Nottingham, owing to want of time in which to try it.

At Lincoln there was more than enough crime to occupy one judge the four days allowed for business on this circuit. By sitting, however, every day as late as 7 P.M., and on one day until after midnight, the learned judge managed to procure half a day for the trial of causes. There were only three for trial, and the learned judge managed to dispose of them, but the three causes could not have been fully tried out under two days, and is hardly satisfactory to the parties to have their cases hurriedly disposed of instead of being tried out.

In old times there were usually fifteen to twenty causes at Lincoln, and there would be the same number now if there was a judge to try them.

Last circuit there were two judges at Derby, and the public seemed to have thought that that state of things would continue.

Accordingly, on this circuit there were eleven causes for trial there. This time, however, only one judge has been sent, and it seems probable that he will have difficulty in trying the prisoners within the time allowed, and no arrangement has been made for the trial of the eleven causes.

Several of them have therefore been withdrawn, some have been compromised, and it seems probable that they will have been nearly all got rid of without trial when—if ever—the time of trial arrives.

We have had a similar experience to the above ever since the 'one judge system' was tried, and I am informed that the experience of the other circuits is the same. The present state of things is a scandal and ought to be put an end to.

If we are too poor to afford a sufficient number of judges, a tolerable remedy would be to group some of the circuit towns for the trial of causes, and to send two judges to the places where causes are to be tried. Thus it would be very easy to group Bedford and Northampton, Leicester and Derby, and Lincoln and Nottingham.

What is wanted is a judge to try causes at a certain date, instead of the present system of keeping the parties to causes waiting an indefinite time while prisoners are being tried, with the probability that there will never be time to try them. A JUNIOR.

July 19.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURT.

UNQUALIFIED MEDICAL PRACTITIONERS.

AT Barnsley County Court, on July 16, an adjourned case of some interest was heard. William Ritchie, surgeon, Hoyland, sued William Pepper, of Hoyland, to recover 20*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* for medical attendance and medicine supplied to himself and family; and 8*l.* for medicines and attendance on William Wood, of Hoyland, for whom the defendant is executor. The case had been adjourned from last Court that particulars of several attendances might be supplied, and that the attendances by assistants of Dr. Ritchie, said to be unqualified, and for whose attendances defendant objected to pay, might be set out. —Mr. Rideal said the 20*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* was for professional services from 1883 to 1889. The detailed particulars showed that there were 194 mixtures, two confinements, and 105 visits included in the amount.—The judge inquired the meaning of the items in red ink in the account.—Mr. Rideal said they were attendances made by assistants. One of these assistants, Mr. Moore, was unqualified; the other assistant, Mr. Trundy, was qualified. The reason the plaintiff had not come to Court before was that defendant was in very poor circumstances at that time, receiving, in fact, an allowance of 1*l.* a week from the testator, under whose will he now benefited. Plaintiff, on account of defendant's poverty at that time, had not made anything like his proper professional charges. His charges varied according to the position of parties. Roughly it was 2*s.* 6*d.* per visit, or 1*s.* 6*d.* per visit and 1*s.* 6*d.* per mixture. The plaintiff, in cross-examination, said Moore was not qualified. Mr. Trundy was qualified.—Can you find his name in the medical registers? He was not qualified whilst he was with me, but I have a letter from him that he has passed since.—Mr. Barras, for the defendant, said there were 155 unqualified visits and mixtures which he put down at 7*l.* 15*s.*—Plaintiff thought it would be above the mark to deduct 1*s.* for each unqualified visit and mixture.—It seemed that the unqualified visits were: Mr. Trundy 14, Mr. Moore 54—68; and there were 91 mixtures supplied.—Plaintiff said he had delivered the greater part of the mixtures himself, and was usually in his surgery at the time the medicines were dispensed. — His Honour said he found there were 167 unqualified visits and mixtures, for which he allowed 8*l.* 7*s.*—Mr. Barras would like to have an expression from his Honour—as he had fought this case as a test case—that medical men had no right to have unqualified assistants and to charge for them.—His Honour: I have been trying to impress the public with that for some time past.—Mr. Barras: And they are not entitled to recover.—His Honour: They are not entitled to recover.—Mr. Rideal said that so far as the unqualified attendances were concerned he abandoned the claim for them, but as to the mixtures they were made from Dr. Ritchie's drugs, Dr. Ritchie himself superintending their mixture.—Mr. Barras submitted that the mixtures were supplied after the unqualified visits, and quoted the Medical Act to show that neither payment for attendance nor medicines so supplied could be recovered. —His Honour said medical men seemed to have lost sight of the Act of Parliament. They had no right whatever to send out unqualified practitioners amongst their patients. They could not recover for visits of such men. The verdict in this case would be for 13*l.*, 7*l.* being struck off for the unqualified visits, &c.—The other case was settled privately.—Mr. Rideal was for the plaintiff, and Mr. G. T. Barras, Rotherham, for the defendant.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

THE following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Preliminary Examination held on July 1 and 2, 1891:—

Almy, Percival Henry William
Andrew, William Stobo
Archbold, Thomas Forster
Aspden, Daniel Morris
Bardswell, Arthur Hamilton
Baxter, Francis William
Bell, Herbert Grimshaw
Bentley, Seymour Fiennes
Brierley, George Herbert
Burton, Charles
Canning, Arthur Lionel
Carless, Wilfred Townshend
Cobb, Charlewood Francis
Colmer, Ralph Henry James
Copland, William Shrubsole
Cran, George Rose
Crawford, William Leslie
Cresswell, William Warneford
Davies, Oswyn St. Leger
Day, William Rogers
Devonshire, George Thomas
Durham, Andrew Charles Lancelot
Elwen, Frederic William
Evans, Reginald
Fitz-Payne, Richard
Fletcher, William Frederick Ashby
Forster, Charles Ernest
Garrold, Richard
Glover, Alfred Ernest
Goodwin, Francis John
Gosden, Alfred William
Gough, William Meyrick
Grant, James Hamilton
Greaves, Cyril Darnton
Greenwood, Harold
Grimshaw, George
Hanbury, Arthur Walter Lempriere
Harding, Charles Copeley
Haskell, Edwin
Haynes, Samuel Bruce
Hoare, Jesse
Hoggett, Henry
Hughes, Herbert Athelstan
Hyde, Francis Garmston
Johnson, Frederick
Johnson, Samuel Percy
Jones, Frederick
Jones, Henry
Kinney, Alexander Peyton
Kitson, Henry Lane
Lesser, Albert
Lewis, David Edwin
Lewis, Evan David
Mammatt, Edward Arthur
Mennell, George Henry
Mulholland, Harry Ogilvie
Musk, Charles Stonehouse
Mytton, Hugh
Nicholas, Walter Powell
Nix, Henry John
Parker, Edwin Charles Lewis
Parker, George Dearden
Pemberton, Arthur Leigh
Richmond, John Adrian Chamier
Robinson, Clement Crawley
Rumbold, Charles Edmund Arden Law
Rutter, Richard
Seppings, John William Hamilton
Sharpe, Wallace William Jessopp
Smallman, George Augustus John
Stockburn, John Lawrence
Stott, George Francis
Sturton, Arthur Jacob
Taynton, Hubert Myon
Waite, Arthur
Warren, Herbert George
Watson, Richard Arnold
Whitehorn, Herbert Alfred Augustus
Wilkin, Henry Eugene
Wilkinson, Claud
Woods, Ernest Edward

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

TRADE UNIONS AND INTIMIDATION.

THE decision of the Queen's Bench Division in Curran v. Treleaven, deciding that it is not intimidation, and, therefore, not unlawful, to make employers dismiss non-union men under a threat that, if they do not do so, their unionist hands will be called out, has been hailed with acclamation by the various labour papers. One of these papers thus refers to the matter: 'As was only to be expected the Court of Queen's Bench has decided against the Recorder of Plymouth, who upheld the conviction of three trade unionists for the offence of "intimidation." The men were simply officials of a trade union, the members of which were at variance with a shipowner who was employing some non-union workmen, and these officials were deputed to go and inform him that unless he discharged the non-unionists the union men would be called out on strike. The shipowner refused to discharge the non-unionists, thereupon the members of the union were called out, and they ceased work. The men were summoned for "intimidating" the shipowner in his business, and the magistrates who heard the case convicted the three officials, and the recorder supported their action. This decision has now been set aside, and declared to be wrong in principle and against the spirit of the Act of Parliament. So long as no threats or bad language is used, an employer, or those acting on his behalf, can be informed, without fear of consequences, that unless he discharges his non-union workmen the members of the union will be brought out on strike. This having been made clear, the members of the different trade unions connected with the cotton industry should know what course to take when persons refuse to become members of the union, but who, notwithstanding, are always ready to enjoy the advantages which the trade unions secure for the operatives. There is no doubt the ruling of the Queen's Bench in the cases recently submitted to the judges will have a beneficial effect on the future action of trade unions, as the members will now know how far they can go with those who refuse to join the unions, and this will assist them very materially in their conduct in dealing with the non-union element which is to be found more or less in every mill in the country. If the Queen's Bench had upheld the recorder's decision the officials of some associations would have been placed in an awkward predicament, as it is a common practice for them to write to employers and managers, intimating what will be the consequence if they do not remove the grievances under which their spinners labour from time to time. It is proved they are justified in telling what will be the result if so and so is not done with a view to satisfying the workmen. We could never understand where the word "intimidating" came in when a workman merely told an employer or his foreman that he and his workmates would leave work unless the terms they demanded were conceded. They have one side of the bargain and the employers have the other, and each has a right to inform one another of what is intended to be done if they fail to come to an agreement on any trade question which may arise. Threats of violence to persons and property are not requisite in trade disputes, as the latter cannot be amicably settled by such means. Reason and arguments are the weapons to be resorted to, and when these fail to restore peaceful relations between employers and their workpeople, it is better that the battle be fought out by the length of the purse than by the use of threats or bad language. This method of dealing with trade questions is fully recognised by mill operatives as being the most efficacious of any which they have tried in the past; and, having found it to answer their requirements, they intend to adhere to it in future.'

BIGAMY AND EVIDENCE.

At the Manchester Assizes a remarkable point as to evidence cropped up. According to the present state of the law, a man who is being tried for bigamy must prove, if possible, that he has not heard of his first wife for a period of seven years, or else that he has reason to believe she was dead, before he married a second time. Curiously enough, however, the law will not permit him to give evidence himself, nor yet allow him to call his wife as a witness for himself. This is, of course, an undoubted hardship on a prisoner if innocent, and well merited the strictures of the learned judge who tried a case where these discrepancies came to light. It appeared that a clogger was charged with bigamy, and to the woman with whom the bigamous marriage was celebrated the prisoner represented that he was a widower, and that his wife had been dead nine years. The supposed wife subsequently learned that the real wife was living, and she gave information to the police. Counsel for the prosecution pointed out that if a prisoner had never heard of his wife for a period of seven years, or had reason to believe that she was dead when he went through the marriage ceremony in 1888, then the existing law demanded that on the prosecution should rest the onus of proof that he knew she was alive at the time. The judge asked how the prisoner was to prove what the law said he had to prove when he was not entitled to give evidence nor allowed to call his wife. Counsel for the prisoner naturally pointed out that it was an extreme hardship that, while the burden of proof rested on the prisoner, he could neither be put in the witness-box nor call his wife. The judge agreed that the prisoner was under a hardship, and said it was due to a shocking and barbarous state of the law. He hoped the law would soon be altered, but meanwhile they must act in accordance with it. The prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. Meanwhile, it is to be hoped the suggested alteration will be carried out.

MISSING DEFENDANTS AND WARRANTS.

Amongst the cases at these assizes was one where the late proprietor of a Manchester hotel failed to appear to answer to an indictment, adjourned from the last assizes, charging him with the misdemeanour of having neglected and refused to provide certain travellers, members of a football club, with lodgings. The defendant's bail was, consequently, estreated. Counsel asked that costs might be ordered against the defendant, who had received notice of each stage of the proceedings, but the judge said he could not see his way to make such an order, nor could he order a warrant to issue for the apprehension, for they were not intended for cases of this kind. Counsel subsequently said—and it had been clearly shown since the last assizes—that the object of the adjournment (which was applied for by defendant) was not for the purpose of the defence, but was for the purpose of disposing of the defendant's property, for the defendant had sold his house and had gone away, and the prosecution had every reason to suppose that his whereabouts could not be easily ascertained, and that the estreatment of the recognisances would be of no effect so far as recovering the 50*l.* was concerned. The Court had been treated with contempt, and the Court ought to issue a warrant. The judge considered, however, that he could not deal with a question of contempt of Court on that warrant, and could not help counsel.

PRINCIPLES OF BANKRUPTCY.

Every practitioner and student is doubtless well acquainted with 'The Principles of Bankruptcy,' by Mr. Richard Ringwood, M.A., the fifth edition of which has just been issued. A noticeable feature of this popular book is the large number of statutes compressed into its pages. These include the Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 and 1890, Bankruptcy Appeals (County Courts) Act, 1884, the Bankruptcy (Discharge and Closure) Act, 1887, the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878, 1882, and 1890. These comprise eight statutes altogether, and in addition there is part of the Debtors Act, 1869, and the Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 and 1890. All these go to form an excellent text-book of the complicated bankruptcy laws. The orders as to fees and percentage are also usefully added, and the chapter on bills of sale gives an insight into a complicated matter. The feature of this book, however, is the capital table showing where the sections of the Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 and 1890, may be found, and to students especially, and those busy practitioners who are in the habit of noting up the recent decisions in their text-books the amount of time saved by this table is most acceptable. It is commendable that such a thoroughly practical book as this has been produced in such a handy size, for even the comprehensive appendix has been kept within due bounds, though nothing of moment has been omitted. Most students in the legal profession use other text-books than this, but we believe 'Ringwood's Principles of Bankruptcy' is a prime favourite with accountancy students, perhaps because it is especially recommended by the governing bodies of those institutions. For the purpose a better text-book could not be selected.

COMPANY LAW.

The nature of companies; the legal position of promoters and directors; the mode in which directors are appointed and their office determined; the powers of directors—e.g. as to allotment of calls upon shares, transfers, forfeitures, and surrender of shares, borrowing, and mortgage and contracts; the duties of directors as to the accounts of the companies; the payment of dividends; the holding of meetings; the amalgamations and reconstruction of companies and arrangement with creditors; and the liabilities of directors and promoters—such is a summary of what may be found in Dr. Hamilton's 'Manual of Company Law,' and a very comprehensive account is given of every one of the topics enumerated. With the present plethora of companies, and with the threatening aspect of the Directors' Liability Act continually looming before them, one would imagine that every director would obtain a copy of this guide, philosopher and friend on company matters, and that secretaries, too, would find it a handy companion for their labours. Apart from its popular use, the work is well fitted for the lawyer, as all cases and statutes are noted up and many a valuable point is succinctly and tersely given. In the Appendix will be found the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, a list of stamp duties as affecting companies, and the table of fees under the Companies Act, 1862. Where magazines and newspapers are worked by a limited company and financial matters are not in a flourishing condition, the directors would, doubtless, be glad to pay for literary contributions in shares. It is a doubtful question if they can do so. Dr. Hamilton discusses the matter in his chapter on 'Payment for Shares,' and gives the following two rules: (1) An agreement between a company and a holder of its shares to credit as paid thereon the amount of a liability then owing, and payable in cash by the company to him in satisfaction of such liability, and in payment of an equal amount due on such shares, is equivalent to a payment in cash; (2) an agreement between a company and a shareholder to credit as paid up on his shares the amount of a liability owing to him, but not yet payable in cash or payable otherwise than in cash, in discharge of such liability, is not equivalent to a payment in cash. Examples of agreements between companies and shareholders under these rules are also given. It would appear that to set off against future calls on the shares of a member a present liability of the company to pay cash to him has been held equivalent to payment in cash; but it is otherwise to accept payment in fully-paid shares for property sold or services rendered to the company. Could either of these instances be stretched to permit such to be taken in payment for literary contributions? On some other occasion, perhaps, Dr. Hamilton will issue a companion volume on the Winding-up Acts.

COMPANIES AND TRUST DEEDS.

Sometimes a deed is executed by which property of a company is assigned to trustees for debenture-holders to secure the payment of moneys owing on debentures. Such a trust-deed serves a useful purpose, and it was therefore a sensible suggestion of a correspondent in a financial contemporary that, when a company is getting into temporary trouble, it should execute a trust deed in favour of certain persons, or, to put it in the words of a poem by that correspondent:

Then pipe your eyes and blow your nose;
Let lawyers come on deck,
For by my faith without their aid
You'll soon become a wreck.
I give you, sirs, the deed,
For you all its virtues need.
A bumper, sirs—three cheers—hurrah!
The deed, the deed, the deed!

It is a pleasure to note that it is the lawyers who will save the wreck of the company. It is perhaps some other profession which prefers them being wrecked.

COUNCIL OF LEGAL EDUCATION.

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL.

The Right Hon. Lord Justice Lindley, Chairman.
Napier Higgins, Esq., Q.C., Vice-Chairman.

Lincoln's Inn.

The Right Hon. Lord Macnaghten.
The Right Hon. Lord Justice Bowen.
The Hon. Mr. Justice Mathew.
J. Napier Higgins, Esq., Q.C.
Montague H. Crackanthorpe, Esq., Q.C.

Inner Temple.

The Right Hon. Lord Justice Lopes.
The Right Hon. J. W. Mellor, Q.C.
The Hon. Mr. Justice Charles.
Sir James Stephen, Bart.
A. G. Marten, Esq., Q.C.

Middle Temple.

The Right Hon. Lord Justice Lindley.
C. H. Hopwood, Esq., Q.C.
William Ambrose, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
C. M. Warmington, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
Frederick Stallard, Esq.

Gray's Inn.

J. A. Russell, Esq., Q.C.
W. C. Fooks, Esq., Q.C.
Hugh Shield, Esq., Q.C.
W. Bowen Rowlands, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
John Rose, Esq.

NOTICE TO CANDIDATES FOR READERSHIPS AND ASSISTANT-READERSHIPS.

Lincoln's Inn Hall.

In November next the Council of Legal Education will appoint six readers at a salary of 500*l.* a year in each—viz.:—

One in constitutional law, English, Colonial, and legal history.

One in Roman law and jurisprudence and international law, public and private.

Three in English law and equity—viz.: Law of persons (including marriage and divorce), law of property (and conveyancing), law of obligations (contracts, torts, and commercial law), criminal law (excluding procedure).

One in procedure, civil and criminal, and evidence.

And also four assistant-readers, at a salary of 350*l.* a year each—viz.:

Three in English law and equity as above defined.

One in Roman law and jurisprudence and international law, public and private.

Each reader in English law and equity will have to deliver two lectures a week—one to advanced and one to commencing students, and will also have to hold an advanced class at least twice in each week.

Each assistant-reader in English law and equity will have to hold an elementary class three times a week.

The reader in Roman law, &c., will have to give two lectures a week—viz.: one to advanced and one to commencing students, and will have to hold two advanced classes in each week.

The assistant-reader in Roman law, &c. will have to hold at least three elementary classes a week.

The reader in constitutional law and legal history, and also the reader in procedure and evidence, will have to give one lecture and to hold three classes a week.

The lectures and classes will have to be for one hour each, and to be given and held in each week throughout the entire year, except during the legal vacations.

It is intended that every student should be definitively attached to some member of the teaching staff as a consulting tutor or adviser.

The lectures will have to be given and the classes held at places to be provided—

(A) By the Inner Temple and Middle Temple during the Michaelmas and Hilary Sittings;

(B) By Lincoln's Inn and Gray's Inn during the Easter and Trinity Sittings.

The lectures and classes will be commenced in Hilary Sittings next.

The readers will be appointed for three years and will be re-eligible, but they will also be removable, if necessary, by the votes of not less than ten members of the council.

The assistant-readers will be appointed for one year, and will be re-eligible and similarly removable.

The council will expect that practical instruction be given in the preparation of deeds, wills, and contracts, and that mercantile documents in daily use be shown and explained.

A board of studies will be appointed annually by the council, consisting of eight members of the council, and three of the teaching staff, and four members of the council will be a quorum. In order to secure systematic instruction, the scheme of the lectures to be given by each reader and assistant-reader will have to be submitted to, and approved by, the board.

Gentlemen desirous of becoming readers or assistant-readers are requested to send their applications, stating the subjects on which they propose to lecture, or which they propose to teach, and such testimonials as they think proper, to Mr. Corn, clerk of the Council of Legal Education, Lincoln's Inn Hall, London, W.C., not later than October 20 next. No applications are to be made to, or will be entertained by, the members of the council.

(Signed) NATHL. LINDLEY,
Chairman.

Council Chamber:
July 10, 1891.

May, 1891.

CONSOLIDATED REGULATIONS

Of the several societies of Lincoln's Inn, the Middle Temple, the Inner Temple, and Gray's Inn (hereinafter described as the four Inns of Court) as to the admission of students, the mode of keeping terms, the education and examination of students, the calling of students to the bar, and the taking out of certificates to practise under the bar.

Admission of Students.

1. Every person, not otherwise disqualified, who shall have passed a public examination at any university within the British dominions, or for a commission in the army or navy, or for the Indian civil service, or for the consular service, or for cadetships in the three Eastern colonies of Ceylon, Hong Kong, and the Straits Settlements, shall be entitled to be admitted as a student, without passing a preliminary examination, but subject to rule 7.

2. Every other person, except such as come under rule 15, applying to be admitted as a student shall, before such admission, have satisfactorily passed an examination in the following subjects, viz.:—

(a) The English language,
(b) The Latin language, and
(c) English history.

Provided that the board of examiners mentioned in rule 3 shall have power to report any special circumstances to the masters of the bench of the Inn of Court of which any person may desire to be admitted as a student, and that the masters of the bench of such Inn shall have power, with or without such report, to relax or dispense with this regulation, in whole or in part, in any case in which they may think special circumstances so reported, or otherwise ascertained by the bench, justify a departure from this regulation.

3. Such examination shall be conducted by a joint board, to be appointed by the four Inns of Court.

4. For constituting such board, each of the four Inns of Court shall appoint four examiners, and the Council of Legal Education shall have power to allot such remuneration as the council shall think fit to such examiners.

5. The examiners shall attend according to a rota to be fixed by themselves, and two shall be a quorum.

6. Meetings of the examiners shall be held at least once in every week during each term, as hereinafter defined, and once in the week next preceding each term, and at such other time as shall be appointed in accordance with any order of the board. Provided that no examiner need attend unless two clear days' notice prior to the day appointed for his attendance shall have been given to the secretary of the board, by at least one candidate, of an intention to present himself on that day for examination.

7. No attorney-at-law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch Courts, proctor, notary public, clerk in Chancery, Parliamentary agent, or agent in any Court original or appellate, clerk to any justice of the peace or person acting in any of these capacities, and no clerk to any barrister, conveyancer, pleader, equity draftsman, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch Courts, proctor, notary public, Parliamentary agent, or agent in any Court original or appellate, clerk in Chancery, clerk of the peace, clerk to any justice of the peace, or to any officer in any Court of law or equity, and no person acting in the capacity of any such clerk, shall be admitted as a student at any Inn of Court until such person shall have entirely and bonâ fide ceased to act or practise in any of the capacities above named or described, and if on the rolls of any Court, shall have taken his name off the rolls thereof.

8. The following forms shall be adopted by each of the four Inns of Court on application for admission as students:—

I, of aged , the son of
of , in the county of [add father's profession, if any, and the condition in life and occupation, if any, of the applicant] de hereby declare that I am desirous of being admitted a student of the Honourable Society of
for the purpose of being called to the bar, or of practising under the bar, and that I will not, either directly or indirectly, apply for or take out any certificate to practise, directly or indirectly, as a pleader, or conveyancer, or draftsman in equity, without the special permission of the masters of the bench of the said society.

And I do hereby further declare that I am not an attorney-at-law, solicitor, a writer to the signet, a writer of the Scotch Courts, a proctor, a notary public, a clerk in Chancery, a Parliamentary agent, an agent in any Court original or appellate, a clerk to any justice of peace, nor do I act, directly or indirectly, in any such capacity, or in the capacity of clerk of or to any of the persons above described, or as clerk of or to any barrister, conveyancer, pleader, or equity draftsman, or of or to any officer in any Court of law or equity.

Dated this day of

(Signature)

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify that we believe the above-named to be a gentleman of respectability, and a proper person to be admitted a member of the said society.

} Barristers of Approved {

Treasurer, or, in his absence, by two benchers.

9. Every person applying to be admitted as a student shall pay the sum of one guinea upon application for the form of admission; and the sums so paid shall form part of the common fund hereinafter mentioned.

Keeping Terms.

10. The word 'terms' in these regulations, except where otherwise expressed, shall mean the terms as fixed by the Inns of Court for the purpose of calls to the bar.

11. Students who shall at the same time be members of any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, Durham, the Queen's University in Ireland, St. Andrew's, Aberdeen, Glasgow, Edinburgh, or the Victoria University, Manchester, shall be enabled to keep terms by dining in the halls of their respective Inns of Courts any three days in each term.

12. Students who shall not at the same time be members of any of the said universities shall be enabled to keep terms by dining in the halls of their respective Inns of Court any six days in each term.

13. No days of attendance in hall shall be available for the purpose of keeping term, unless the student attending shall have been present at the grace before dinner, during the whole of dinner, and until the concluding grace shall have been said, unless the acting-treasurer on any day during dinner shall think fit to permit the student to leave earlier.

14. A student who previously to his admission at an Inn of Court was a solicitor in practice for not less than five years (and, in accordance with rule 7, has ceased to be a solicitor before his admission as a student) may be examined for call to the bar without keeping any terms, and may be called to the bar upon passing the public examination required by these rules, without keeping any terms.

Provided that such solicitor has given at least twelve months' notice in writing to each of the four Inns of Court and to the Incorporated Law Society of his intention to seek call to the bar, and produces a certificate signed by two members of the council of the Incorporated Law Society that he is a fit and proper person to be called to the bar.

15. A student coming under the last preceding rule may be exempted by the masters of the bench of the Inn to which he seeks admission from passing the examination preliminary to admission.

Calling to the Bar.

16. Every student shall have attained the age of twenty-one years before being called to the bar.

17. Every student, except such as come under rule 14, shall have kept twelve terms before being called to the bar, unless any term or terms shall have been dispensed with under special circumstances by the benchers of his Inn.

18. No student shall be called to the bar unless such student shall, to the satisfaction of the Council of Legal Education, have passed a public examination for the purpose of ascertaining his fitness to be called to the bar, and have obtained from the council a certificate of having passed such examination.

19. No student shall be called to the bar until his name and description shall have been screened in the hall, benchers' room, and treasurer's or steward's office, of the Inn of which he is a student, fourteen days in term before such call.

20. The name and description of every such student shall be sent to the other Inns, and shall also be screened for the same space of time in their respective halls, benchers' rooms, and treasurers' or stewards' offices.

21. No call to the bar shall take place except during a term; and such call be made on the same day by each of the Inns—namely, on the sixteenth day of each term, unless such day shall happen to be Saturday or Sunday, and in such case on the Monday after.

Certificates to Practise under the Bar.

22. No student shall be allowed to take out a certificate to practise under the bar without the special permission of the masters of the bench of the Inn of Court of which he is a student, to be given by order of such masters, and no such permission shall be granted to any student unless he shall be qualified to be called to the bar, and the regulations, as to screening names in the halls, benchers' rooms, and treasurers' or stewards' offices, applicable to students desirous of being called to the bar, shall be applicable to students desirous of practising under the bar. Such permission shall be granted for one year only from the date thereof, but may be renewed annually.

Council of Legal Education.

23. The Council of Legal Education shall consist of twenty benchers, five to be nominated by each Inn of Court, of whom four shall be a quorum. The members of the council shall remain in office for two years, and each Inn shall have power to fill up any vacancy that may occur in the number of its nominees during that period. To this council shall be entrusted the power and duty of superintending the education and examination of students, and of arranging and settling the details of the several measures which may be deemed necessary to be adopted for those purposes, or in relation thereto, and such other matters as are herein in that behalf mentioned.

The Committee of Education or Board of Studies.

24. The council shall appoint a committee of the members of the council, or, if deemed expedient, a board of studies consisting of members of the council and of the teaching staff. The constitution of such committee or board and the period for which its members shall hold office shall be from time to time determined by the council.

25. The committee or board shall, subject to the control of the council, superintend and direct the education and examination of students and all matters of detail in respect to such education and examination.

Lectures and Classes.

26. The lectures and classes shall be open to all members of the Inns of Court.

27. Students shall be provided with the means of education in the general principles of law and in the law as practically administered in this country, and for the purpose of such education systematic instruction shall be given in the following subjects, viz.:—

28. The subjects for instruction shall be—

(1) Roman law and jurisprudence and international law, public and private (conflict of laws).

(2) Constitutional law (English and colonial) and legal history.

(3) English law and equity,—viz.:—

(a) Law of persons, including:—
- Marriage and divorce.
- Infancy.
- Lunacy.
- Corporations.

(b) Law of real and personal property and conveyancing, including:—
- Trusts; mortgages.
- Administration of assets on death; on dissolution of partnerships; on winding-up of companies, and in bankruptcy.
- Practical instruction in the preparation of deeds, wills, and contracts.

(c) Law of obligations:—
- Contracts.
- Torts.
- Allied subjects (implied or quasi-contracts), estoppel, &c.
- Commercial law, with special reference to mercantile documents in daily use, which should be shown and explained.

(d) Civil procedure, including evidence.

(e) Criminal law and procedure.

Staff of Teachers and Mode of Teaching.

29. There shall be a permanent staff of such a number of readers (not more than eight) as the council may think expedient; and such readers shall give instruction, both catechetically and by lectures, in such subjects as shall be directed by the council.

30. In addition to the readers there shall be a permanent staff of assistant-readers for elementary classes, but the number of such assistant-readers and elementary classes shall be left to the council.

31. In addition to the staff of readers and assistant-readers the council shall also have power to engage the services of lecturers on particular subjects, whether enumerated above or not, as they may think fit.

32. Both lectures and classes shall be held throughout the entire year, except during the legal vacations, at such place or places as the council may appoint, but so as not to unduly prefer one Inn to another.

Tenure of Offices.

33. Each reader shall be appointed for three years, and shall be re-eligible, but he shall be removable during his term of office by the vote of not less than ten members of the council.

34. The period for which assistant-readers shall be appointed, and the conditions of their tenure of office, shall be left to the discretion of the council.

35. To secure systematic instruction, the scheme of the lectures to be given by each reader and assistant-reader shall be submitted to, and approved by, the committee or board of studies, at such times and in such manner as the committee or board shall direct.

36. Students, in addition to availing themselves of the means of instruction provided by these regulations, are recommended to attend in the chambers of a barrister or pleader for the purpose of studying the practice of the law; but such attendance shall not be compulsory.

Salaries and Payments.

37. A system of payment by capitation fees is recommended for adoption by the council if practicable.

38. The sum of 500*l.* per annum, and such capitation fees as the council may decide, shall be paid to each of the readers.

39. The remuneration of the assistant-readers and lecturers on particular subjects shall be left to the discretion of the council.

40. Each student shall pay on admission a sum of five guineas, which shall entitle him to attend all the lectures and classes of all the readers and assistant-readers, so long as he shall be a student. The council shall have the power to require payment of additional fees for attendance at the lectures of lecturers on particular subjects appointed under regulation 31.

The Examinations for Call to the Bar.

41. There shall be four examinations for calls to the bar in each year—one before each term, and in sufficient time to enable the requisite certificates to be granted by the council before the first day of each term.

42. An examination in Roman law and in such of the heads of the English law and equity, mentioned in rule 28 (3), as the council shall from time to time determine, shall be obligatory for call to the bar.

43. No student, except such as come under rule 14, shall be examined for call to the bar until he shall have kept nine terms; but the students shall have the option of passing the examination in Roman law, required by rule 42, at any time after having kept four terms.

44. The council may accept as an equivalent for the examination in Roman law:—

(i.) A degree granted by any university within the British dominions, for which the qualifying examination included Roman law;

(ii.) A certificate that any student has passed any such examination, though he may not have taken the degree for which such examination qualifies him; and

(iii.) The testamur of the public examiners for the degree of Civil Law at Oxford that the student has passed the necessary examination for the degree of Bachelor of Civil law;

Provided the council is satisfied that the student, before he obtained his degree, or obtained such certificate or testamur, passed a sufficient examination in Roman law.

45. There shall be a board of three examiners in each subject—viz. a reader, with such assistants selected by the council, not being members of the staff of readers and assistant-readers, as the council may determine.

46. Examination for call to the bar shall be by written papers, and by such vivâ voce questions (if any) as the examiners may think desirable.

47. Each examiner shall be appointed for three years, subject to removal by the council; but no examiner, other than a reader, shall be re-eligible until he has been at least one year out of office.

48. The council shall have power to appoint such assistant-examiners as may be necessary, who shall hold office during the pleasure of the council.

49. The fee to be paid to each examiner and assistant-examiner shall be left to the discretion of the council.

Honours and Studentships.

50. The council shall grant certificates of honour to such persons as may be reported worthy of the same by the examiners.

51. Two studentships of one hundred guineas per annum each, tenable for three years, shall in each year be given to the students who shall pass the best examination on the whole in all the subjects mentioned in regulation 28. But the council shall not be obliged to recommend any studentship to be awarded if the result of the examination be such as, in their opinion, not to justify such recommendation. Where any candidates appear to be equal or nearly equal in merit, the council may, if they think fit, divide the studentship between them equally or in such proportions as they consider just.

52. Only members of an Inn not called to the bar shall compete for a studentship.

53. No person who has gained one studentship shall hold another.

54. The expense of these studentships shall be defrayed out of the common fund.

55. There shall be two honour examinations in each year, conducted by a board of examiners appointed by the council, at each of which one studentship and certificates of honour, and pass certificates enabling the holders to be called to the bar without further examination, may be awarded.

56. At every call to the bar those students who have obtained studentships shall take rank in seniority over all other students called on the same day, and those students who have obtained certificates of honour shall take rank immediately after the holder of a studentship called on the same day.

57. The Inn of Court to which the holder of any studentship or of a certificate of honour belongs may, if desired, dispense with any terms not exceeding two that may remain to be kept by such student previously to his being called to the bar.

58. The examiners shall submit their examination papers to the committee or board of studies for approval at such time as the committee or board shall direct; and the number of marks to be attributed to each paper shall also be submitted to the committee or board for their approval.

59. Previous to each examination the committee or board shall give such notice as they shall think fit of the books and branches of subjects in which students will be required to pass at such examination in order to be entitled to a certificate.

60. One examiner at least shall be present during the whole time of the examination in writing.

61. The board of examiners shall, after each examination, report the result thereof to the committee or board of studies, who shall submit to the council the names of those students (if any) who are in their opinion entitled to receive pass or honour certificates or to obtain studentships.

62. All students shall be bound by such variations as may from time to time be made in these regulations.

Common Fund.

63. The four Inns of Court shall continue their annual contributions of 360*l.* each towards constituting the common fund, to which shall be added the several fees for forms of admission and for attending lectures; and also the several sums of five guineas for each student, to be paid by the Inns of Court respectively, as additional contributions, pursuant to the report of the committee of the four Inns of Court, dated December 6, 1871; and any further money which may from time to time be required to enable the common fund to meet the charges on it in any year shall be contributed by the four Inns of Court at the end of such year, rateably and in proportion to the number of students belonging to the four Inns respectively, who shall in that year have been called to the bar, or have for the first time obtained permission to practise under the bar.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, July 27. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Tuesday, July 28.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Wednesday, July 29.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Thursday, July 30.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Friday, July 31. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Saturday, August 1.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

THE SELDEN SOCIETY. — At the last meeting of the executive committee, Lord Coleridge, the president, in the chair, supported by Lord Justice Fry, the vice-president, and other members, Mr. P. E. Dove, the hon. secretary, brought up a list of proposed translations of early interesting records, and several suggestions were made as to the next volume to be issued by the society. Ultimately, after a discussion in which the president, vice-president, Mr. Scargill Bird, Mr. H. P. Elphinstone, and Mr. F. K. Munton took part, it was resolved to accept the proposal for the following work: '"The Leet Jurisdiction in the City of Norwich during the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries," edited from rolls in the possession of the corporation, by the Rev. W. H. Hudson. The value of this volume will consist in the early character of its evidence on the working of the Frankpledge system, of which little has hitherto been known, and on the subject of municipal development in a chartered borough, the origin of municipal divisions, and on the social, commercial, and judicial arrangements at the close of the thirteenth century in one of the largest cities in the kingdom.'—On the motion of Mr. Munton, Mr. R. P. Cunliffe, ex-president of the Incorporated Law Society, was elected a member of the executive committee.—On the motion of Professor F. W. Maitland, a vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. O. C. Pell for having allowed the society to print extracts from the rolls of the Manor of Littleport.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JULY 27 TO AUG. 1.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	July 27	July 28	July 29	July 30	July 31	Aug. 1
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Runcorn	Birkenhead	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Burton	—	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, JULY 16.

Holmes Oil Company (Lim.) v. Pumpherston Oil Company (Lim.) (decree—arbitral—alleged misrepresentations to arbiter—proceedings to set aside report. Appeal from Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JULY 17.

Holmes Oil Company (Lim.) v. Pumpherston Oil Company (Lim.).—Dismissed.

Walsh, Hall & Co. v. Oriental Bank Corporation (in liquidation) (breach of contract of agency—breach of trust—agent selling to principal—fraud—concealment by agent from principal—Statute of Limitations. Appeal from the Court of Appeal).—Part heard.

MONDAY, JULY 20.

Commissioners for Special Purposes of the Income-tax v. Pemsel (income-tax—allowances—charitable purposes—5 & 6 Vict. c. 31, s. 61, No. 6, schedule A. Appeal from the Court of Appeal. Reported 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 196; L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 296, 305. Lord Watson, Lord Herschell, Lord Macnaghten, and Lord Morris voted for dismissing the appeal; contrà Lord Halsbury, L.C., and Lord Bramwell).—Dismissed.

Alloroft and others (prosecuting on behalf of the Queen) v. Bishop of London. Leighton and others (prosecuting on behalf of the Queen) v. Bishop of London (Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874)—superstitious ornaments—complaint—dissension of bishop. Appeal from Court of Appeal. Reported 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 169.—Dismissed.

Walsh, Hall & Co. v. Oriental Bank Corporation.—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.

Smith v. Baker (master and servant—injury to servant—volenti non fit injuria—negligence. Appeal from County Court. Statement of ground of appeal).—Allowed.

Walsh, Hall & Co. v. Oriental Bank Corporation.—Part heard.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

With Assessors—VICE-ADMIRAL GRANT, C.B., and CAPTAIN CASTLE.

THURSDAY, JULY 16.

G. B. Vessels and others v. Owners of Boston City (appeal of defendants from judgment of the President (Sir Jas. Hannen), dated November 24).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JULY 17.

Owners of Eaton Hall v. C. B. Theobald, Captain of H.M.S. Rupert (appeal of defendants from judgment of the President (Sir C. Butt), dated August 1).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JULY 18.

Owners of the Star of England v. Owners of the Vesper (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of the President (Sir C. Butt), dated February 9).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JULY 20.

Teeside Iron Engine Works Company (Lim.) v. C. C. Duncan (appeal of defendants from judgment of the President (Sir C. Butt), dated January 29).—Dismissed.

Towerson v. Jackson, extrix. (Q. B. Crown Side), appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated April 21, dismissing appeal from judge of County Court).—Dismissed.

Before LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.

Regina v. Leresche and another (Justices of Lancashire) (Q. B. Crown Side) appeal of J. Price from refusal of ex parte application on May 14 by Day, J., and Lawrance, J.; on application to Court of Appeal order nisi granted to justices to state case as to maintenance order; heard June 15).—Allowed.

Pelton Bros. v. Harrison (appeal of plaintiff from order of Denman, J., and Wright, J., dated May 27, affirming discharge of order for receiver of defendant's share of W. B. Little's estate; heard June 16).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

In re The Onward Building Society and Building Society Acts, 1874, 1875, and 1877, and Companies Acts (appeal of H. E. Broad from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated June 22, refusing leave to register transfer of shares).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22.

Harrison, Ainslie & Co. v. Muncaster (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., dated February 20, at trial without a jury at Lancaster).—Dismissed.

Lambourn Valley Railway Company v. Lillups (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated May 1, at trial without a jury in Middlesex) —Dismissed by consent.

Hogarth v. Nanson (appeal of defendant from judgment of Charles, J., dated May 12, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company (Lim.) v. Morel Brothers & Co. and Richards & Co. (appeal of defendants (Richards & Co.) from judgment of Charles, J., dated May 2, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 16.

Faulder's Brewery Company (Lim.) v. Bownass (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Romer, J., dated March 16).—Dismissed.

The Mineral Residues Syndicate v. The Levant Mine Adventurers (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Romer, J., dated April 22).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JULY 17.

In re Jacobs, dec. White v. Jacobs (appeal of defendant Fanny Hart from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated March 18).—Allowed.

In re Contract, dated October 23, 1890, between Joseph Reynolds and others and J. T. Smith and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (appeal of vendors from order of Kekewich, J., dated April 25).—Dismissed.

In re Philip Withington, dec. Clay v. Corkling (appeal of defendant R. Corkling from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated April 15).—Allowed. In re Philip Withington, dec. Claye v. Corkling (appeal of Louisa Corner from same judgment).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JULY 18.

In re Sir J. Tyler, dec. Tyler v. Tyler (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Stirling, J., dated February 21).—Dismissed.

In re The Opera (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of H. J. Leslie and others from order of Kekewich, J., dated April 28).—Allowed. In re The Opera (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of official liquidator from same order).—Allowed.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, LINDLEY, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, JULY 20.

In re S. Rees, dec. Rees v. Jones (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Romer, J., dated March 5).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.

In re S. Rees, dec. Rees v. Jones.—Dismissed.

Guardians of the Poor of Tendring Union, in the County of Essex v. Dowton (appeal of defendant W. Slimon from judgment of Stirling, J., dated May 22, 1890).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 22.

Steel v. Evans (appeal of defendants S. C. Overton and another from judgment of Romer, J., dated April 13). Steel v. Evans (appeal of defendant W. Evans from same judgment).—Dismissed.

London Printing and Publishing Alliance (Lim.) v. Cox (appeal of defendant from judgment of Williams, J. (sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division), dated May 13).—Cur. adv. vult.

THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—All the judges of the Queen's Bench Division have now left town for the assizes, except Justices Denman, Charles, and Wills, and the latter will very shortly have to join Mr. Baron Pollock on the Oxford Circuit. With the exception of Mr. Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Williams, none of the other judges will be back before the Long Vacation, and when the latter judge returns he will sit in the Chancery Division. Under these circumstances very little further progress will be made in the Queen's Bench Division during the remaining three weeks of the sittings.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. THOMAS WILLIAM COXON, B.A. (of the firm of J. & H. F. Gadsby & Coxon), of Derby, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Coxon was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Walter William Brodie, of Llanelly, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Brodie was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Edmund Gillart (of the firm of Howell, Evans & Gillart), of Machynlleth, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Gillart was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Thomas Alfred Capron, of Grays, Essex, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Capron was admitted in 1888.

Mr. Albert Howe, of Sheffield, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Howe was admitted in 1885.

Mr. John Henry Genn (of the firm of Marrack, Nalder, Hockin & Genn), of Falmouth, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Genn was admitted in 1880.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS.—A bill introduced by Lord Herschell, and read a second time in the House of Lords on Friday, provides that after this year it shall be unlawful for anyone who is not a member of an institute or society of accountants incorporated by royal charter to use the name of 'chartered accountant,' or any name, title, addition, or description by means of initials or letters placed after his name, or otherwise stating or implying that he is a fellow, member, or associate of such an institute or society. For contravening this regulation the penalty may be 20*l*. If a member of the English and Welsh Chartered Institute uses his title beyond the limits of England and Wales he is to add to it a reference to England and Wales, and a similar regulation is to apply to members of the Scotch and Irish Institutes respectively. For contravening this regulation the penalty may be 5*l*. Moreover, a fine of 50*l*. may be imposed on any institute or society of accountants which, while not incorporated by royal charter, uses the title of 'chartered' or any other description stating or implying that the society is so incorporated. However, prosecutions under this bill can only be instituted by a society so incorporated, or by a private person with the written consent of one.

MARRIAGES.

On July 16, at Walesby, Notts, Archibald Edward, second son of William Blackman Young, Solicitor, Hastings, and of Grove, St. Leonards-on-Sea, to Cicely, only daughter of Henry Ashton, of Parkside Terrace, Heaton Park, Manchester.

On July 16, at St. Mary's, Bryanston Square, William Henry Smith, Solicitor, Northampton, son of the late Rev. J. T. H. Smith, formerly Rector of Kislingbury, to Mary, daughter of the late Frederick Bostock, of Northampton.

On July 21, at St. Barnabas, Kensington, F. Austin Browne, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, to Edith Sara Maude, younger daughter of W. Fraser Rae, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and of 36 Holland Villas Road, W.

DEATHS.

On July 17, in London, Captain Horace Alfred Coward, Royal Marine Light Infantry, son of William Coward, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Inner Temple.

On July 21, at 12 Inverness Terrace, Clara, widow of the late Sir John Smale, Chief Justice of Hongkong, and daughter of Halsey Janson, Esq., of Stamford Hill, in her 75th year.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3 4 0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

The Evidence Bill has followed the Trustee Bill to the grave, the Attorney-General thinking it hopeless to persevere with it, although it had reached the committee stage in the House of Commons after a careful examination by a committee of the House of Lords. The two Houses seem to have but little reliance on each other's committees, even in the matter of purely consolidation bills. The result is that any consolidation bill requires two sessions of Parliament at the least before it can be passed.

The system of sending only one judge to most of the circuit towns, which was first set on foot in 1884, has given great dissatisfaction in many quarters. A letter which we published last week (ante, p. 493) from 'A Junior' on the Midland Circuit shows very pointedly the manner in which this one-judge system works, and a still stronger argument against the present system is afforded by a supplementary letter from the same correspondent which appears in our present issue. 'In old times,' wrote he last week, 'there were usually fifteen to twenty causes at Lincoln. Last circuit there were two judges at Derby. This time, however, only one judge has been sent, and it seems probable that he will have difficulty in trying the prisoners within the time allowed, and no arrangement has been made for the trial of the eleven causes.' And he now states that at the assizes for Lincoln just terminated 'there was only half a day available for the trial of causes.' We agree that the present state of things is a scandal, and also that a tolerable remedy would be to group some of the circuit towns—as Bedford and Northampton, Leicester and Derby, and Lincoln and Nottingham—for the trial of causes only. For the trial of prisoners no grouping would ever be allowed, nor would it be desirable. As for the frequent sittings 'far into the night,' which 'A Junior' so eloquently discourses of, they are an abomination.

In the thrice-tried case of Weideman v. Walpole the Court of Appeal has now entered judgment for the defendant upon the issue as to the breach of promise of marriage, leaving the verdict for 300*l.* to stand upon certain other issues. The question of law was, whether the fact of the defendant not having answered two letters charging him with the promise afforded that material corroboration of it within the meaning of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 2, without which a plaintiff in this kind of action cannot succeed. There had been two letters written, one by the plaintiff herself and another by the minister of the German church at Sydenham, 'appealing to the defendant's honour to marry' the plaintiff 'or to give her a start in life.' The Court unanimously held that no material corroboration had been afforded by either of these letters, and this decision is unquestionably correct. The case, as we have already pointed out (see ante, p. 413), is obviously distinguishable from Bessela v. Stern, 46 Law J. Rep. C. P. 46, in which the defendant charged the plaintiff, in the presence of a third person, with the promise to marry.

The Pall Mall Gazette has recently inserted a multitude of letters complaining of the noise of church bells in terms which show that the writers are bonâ fide sufferers. Have they any and what remedy at law? The point is one singularly bare of authority. The well-known case of De Soltau v. Held, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 153, in which both damages were recovered and an injunction granted, is, we believe, the only one to be found in the books on the subject. But in that case the offending bells belonged to a Roman Catholic chapel, and Vice-Chancellor Kindersley appears to have drawn a great distinction between the bells of such a chapel and the bells of a 'church in law,' to which 'bells are an appendage recognised by law, the special property in which is vested in the churchwardens for the benefit of the parishioners at large.' We cannot think, however, that the bells even of a parish church might legally be rung to excess. The churchwardens, we should imagine, could only authorise a reasonable user of them. It may be observed that in the chapter of the Introduction to the Prayer-book 'concerning the service of the Church,' it is provided that 'the curate that ministereth in every parish church or chapel shall say morning and evening prayer in the parish church or chapel where he ministereth, and shall cause a bell to be tolled thereunto a convenient time before he begin, that the people may come,' &c.

The reported cases as to actions by unqualified medical practitioners are very few. All the more necessary is it for legal practitioners to take careful notice of the County Court case of Ritchie v. Pepper, of which we gave (see ante, p. 494) a short report last week. In this case the claim was for more than 20*l.*, but as much as 7*l.* was struck off on the ground that a great amount of the medical assistance sued for had been supplied by 'unqualified assistants' of the plaintiff. The enactment which bars actions by unqualified persons is section 32 of the Medical Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), by which 'no person shall be entitled to recover any charges in any Court of law for any medical or surgical advice, attendance, or for the performance of any operation, or for any medicine which he shall have both prescribed and supplied, unless he shall prove upon the trial that he is registered' under that Act. See, as to the construction of this section, Leman v. Houseley, 44 Law J. Rep. C. P. 22, and Turner v. Reynall, 32 Law J. Rep. C. P. 164, which cases are in conflict on the point whether a plaintiff must have been registered at the time that the services in respect of which he sues were rendered, or whether it is sufficient if he was registered at the trial. Curiously enough, the more recent Medical Act, 1886, while repealing and re-enacting the enabling section 31 of the Act of 1858, has left this disabling section untouched, so that both the Acts have to be consulted to get at the whole law of the subject, which may account for medical men having, as the County Court judge in Ritchie v. Pepper complained, 'lost sight of' the Act of 1858.

Lord Bramwell writes to the Times to complain of habitual unpunctuality on the part of the Brighton Railway Company, which company he represents to be, on a certain branch line, 'constantly after their time from causes which they know will make them so.' The noble lord, in despair of a remedy, has even 'thought of an indictment of the directors for obtaining money under false pretences,' but sees 'some technical difficulties in the way,' as, looking to Regina v. Johnston, 2 Moo. C. C. 254, and other cases bearing on the construction of section 88 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which makes obtaining money by false pretences a misdemeanour, no doubt there would be. Those cases are simply to the effect that for the pretence to come within the statute it must be a false pretence of some existing fact, and that a pretence that the defendant will do some act which he never meant to do is not within the statute. But is there no remedy for habitual unpunctuality as distinct from one act of unpunctuality, in respect of which one act, as pointed out by the Court of Appeal in Le Blanche v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, 45 Law J. Rep. C. P. 521, the suffering passenger can only recover nominal damages in ordinary cases? We cannot but think that there may be some remedy open by appealing to the Railway and Canal Commission. If it could be proved before that commission that any company knowingly so arranged one part of its traffic that another part could not possibly be carried on without certain and great unpunctuality, we cannot help thinking that that tribunal would have jurisdiction to interfere to secure more reasonable facilities for receiving, forwarding, and delivering that part of the traffic which suffered by such arrangements.

An important 'Memorandum relating to Statute Law Revision' has just been issued as a Parliamentary paper. It divides the 'dead law' intended to be repealed by Statute Law Revision Acts into seven different kinds, according as it is expressed in enactments: (1) repealed specifically, (2) expired, (3) spent, (4) repealed generally, (5) repealed virtually, (6) superseded, and (7) obsolete—'i.e. where the state of things contemplated by it has ceased to exist, or is no longer capable of being put in force, regard being had to the alteration of political or social circumstances, as, e.g., the Act declaring that gold and silver shall be used for no other purpose except the coinage.' It states, also, that 'great pains have been taken to leave untouched all enactments as to the present operation of which there was any reasonable doubt,' and calls attention to the very wide character of the saving clause which is inserted in each Statute Law Revision Act. 'The terms of this clause,' it is said, 'were prepared with great care by the able draftsmen of the first bill, Mr. (afterwards Sir) F. S. Reilly and Mr. A. J. Wood, and ultimately settled by Lord Westbury (then Sir R. Bethell, Attorney-General); and these terms are so very wide that, even if a mistake were made of including in a Statute Law Revision Act any living enactment, the operation of the saving clause in the Act would continue the effect of that enactment as a principle to be recognised in the Courts of law.' It is added that 'no mischief has been found during the past thirty years in the Courts of law to have arisen from statute law revision.'

It is a little alarming to learn from Judge Chalmers's interesting article in the Law Quarterly that, in the opinion of so high an authority and of one who may claim a paternal connection with the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, the decision of the House of Lords in the Vagliano Case really settles nothing. 'There is,' he says, 'probably nothing in the judgments which would affect the summing up of the judge to a jury in any future case, or which would necessarily interfere with a verdict one way or the other on like facts.' The learned writer approves the decision, but it cannot be said that it has met with general satisfaction. Judge Chalmers notes the diversity of reasons which actuated the majority of the law lords. The reasoning of the article is not altogether satisfactory, especially in connection with the words 'fictitious or non-existing' payees. The Act, he says, seems to draw a distinction between the two terms; but if only one class, and not two, are intended, surely the meaning is 'fictitious—i.e. non-existing,' and the latter epithet could certainly not be applied to C. Petridi & Co., whose name was forged. He admits that the common law rule was that the banker could only pay a person who could give a discharge; and points out that in the case of cheques exceptions have been made by statute to this rule, and argues that another exception ought to be made, as in fact it was made, in a case like Vagliano's. Perhaps it ought; but, if so, the exception should be made unequivocally by statute. In like cases, he says, one of two innocent persons must suffer, and in the case of a forged indorsement on a genuine bill he thinks it ought to fall on the person who has been guilty of negligence, if there has been negligence, and who has lost the bill. But that does not exhaust all cases. The bill might be stolen in the post or by a pickpocket without any negligence in the true owner, and might be indorsed to others to whom negligence could not be imputed. Surely in such a case the loss ought to fall on the banker, who provides against risk in his business. But, whichever view be taken, it ought to be unmistakably established by statute.

Regina v. Tyler, decided on Tuesday last, adds one more and an important case to the long list of those decided on the construction of the words 'criminal cause or matter' in section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, which enacts that no appeal shall lie to the Court of Appeal from the judgment of the High Court in any criminal cause or matter. Section 26 of the Companies Act, 1862, enacts that every company coming under that Act 'shall make once a year a list of the members of the company,' &c., and section 27 provides that if any company makes default in complying with these provisions 'such company shall incur a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every day during which such default continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully permit such default shall incur the like penalty.' In Regina v. Tyler the defendant company had been summoned under these sections, but the defendant Tyler had refused to grant a summons. The High Court having discharged a rule for a mandamus, the applicants appealed, but the Court of Appeal unanimously held that the case could not be distinguished from Mellor v. Denham, 49 Law J. Rep. M. C. 89, and other cases in which it had been held that proceedings before justices were proceedings in a criminal cause or matter within section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873. The argument that criminal proceedings could not be taken against a corporation was justly described by Lord Justice Bowen as not only contrary to reason, but also to the authority of such well-known cases as Regina v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 223, and Regina v. The Great North of England Railway Company, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 315.

That a Stock Exchange speculative contract, when made in the ordinary way through a broker and jobber, is perfectly good in law, was decided by the Court of Appeal in Thacker v. Hardy, 48 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 289, in which it was held that a broker employed by his principal to speculate was entitled to an indemnity against losses incurred in the course of the speculation authorised, and also to commission. But it was pointed out by Lord Justice Bramwell that Grizewood v. Blane, 11 C. B. 526, in which a Stock Exchange speculative contract was held bad, was unaffected by this decision, the reason for the distinction being that in Grizewood v. Blane the transaction took place between two principals. In Beriro v. Thalheim, which we recently noted (ante, p. 437), the Recorder of London has followed Grizewood v. Blane, and applied it to a new state of facts. Two young men, it seems, had agreed to combine their forces in speculation, the profit, if any, to be shared, and the loss, if any, to be shared also. A loss having been sustained, 'the defendant said that he admitted making the agreement to speculate, but when he found that the stocks were going down he asked the plaintiff to close the account and open a "bear" account, which the plaintiff declined to do, "because he was certain the stocks would recover."' The transactions eventually terminating in loss, the plaintiff sued for half of it according to contract, but the recorder ruled that he must be nonsuited, as the contract was purely a gambling one, 'like a horse race or wagering on two drops of rain running down a window pane.' On the whole, we think that the recorder is right, but it would be satisfactory to have the judgment of a Court of Appeal on Grizewood v. Blane, especially as Lord Justice Cotton appears to have disapproved of that case in Thacker v. Hardy.

Mr. W. H. Smith has been much pressed by various members of the House of Commons to bring the influence of the Government to bear on the trustees of the National Gallery to arrange for the interchange by provincial art galleries of the collections lent to them by the National Gallery, under the National Gallery Loans Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 4), in order that, without removing any of the pictures now in Trafalgar Square, an opportunity might be given to the provincial public of seeing a greater number of the pictures belonging to the nation. Mr. Smith undertook to communicate with the trustees, but stated that they were independent of the Government, and that he understood generally that there would be objections to the proposal on account of the extra risk incurred through moving pictures about the country, and also on the score of expense, as the National Gallery had no funds at its disposal from which the carriage, packing, and insurance of the pictures could be paid. The Act of 1883 authorises any two or more of the trustees, together with the director of the Gallery, to 'order that any pictures under their control, which in their opinion can be spared from the national collection, shall be lent' to any 'public gallery,' situate in the United Kingdom, under the control of the Government, or of any 'municipal authority,' which expression includes not only the town council of any municipal borough or royal burgh in England, Ireland, or Scotland, but also 'any other local authority which may be approved by any two or more trustees, with the approval of the director.' By s. 3 of the Act, the loans are to be made for such time, and subject to such conditions, as the National Gallery authorities may determine, 'provided that any profits which, after payment of all expenses, may be derived from any exhibition' of the pictures lent, 'shall be devoted altogether to the promotion of science and art.' The expenses of interchange of pictures amongst the borrowing authorities might perhaps be defrayed out of the profits of such exhibitions.

The great difficulty of knowing the exact date of the death of a person drowned, or supposed to be drowned, in some shipping disaster has before now given rise to no little speculation in the realms both of probabilities and of law. Sometimes it is important from the point of view of interest which accrues de die in diem, sometimes from that of survivorship. A husband and wife, for instance, start for America in a ship which founders, each having left to the other all his (or her) fortune. Which was the survivor? The husband is the stronger, and is more likely to be able to swim well; but, on the other hand, the chivalry which animates men so often at the point of a tragic death may have secured for the wife a place in a boat or on a plank which would save her awhile from a watery grave. The House of Lords in Wing v. Angrave, Tulley and others, 30 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 65; 8 H. L. Cas. 183, decided that there was no presumption in the English law from age, sex, or other circumstances as to the survivorship of one out of several persons who are destroyed by the same calamity. In that case the husband left his property to W. in case his wife should die in his lifetime, and the wife left hers to W. in case her husband should die in her lifetime. Since there was no legal presumption as to which died in the other's lifetime, poor W. took under neither. Conveyancers should guard against the possibility of both dying by the same disaster when a person wants a gift over to take effect in the event of another person not being alive to enjoy it. Would not these words be sufficient: 'If the said H. shall not survive or be presumed to have survived me?' In the goods of James Henry Kirkbride (Notes of Cases, p. 96), where there was an application to the Court to presume the death of a man supposed to have been lost at sea, Mr. Justice Jeune intimated that it was the established practice to give notice of such application to any assurance office in which the deceased was insured. In 'Browne on Probate' (rev. edit. p. 429) it is laid down that 'it is desirable to show on affidavit whether or not the life of the deceased was insured,' and a dictum of Lord (then Sir James) Hannen is cited to the effect that this should be done in every case. So that the practice on such applications will be to show on the affidavit the fact of the existence of the policy, and also to give notice to the office in which that policy was taken out.

THE Glamorganshire magistrates have resolved (see p. 471, ante) that 'something must be done' to meet the prevailing infringement of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), whereby in Wales all premises, whether licensed by the justices or not, requiring such license, in which intoxicating liquors are sold or exposed for sale by retail, must be closed the whole of Sunday. A special detective force to deal with offences under the Act is to be constituted, and it has been resolved that 'the course be adopted of refusing the seven-days' license and offer the six-day license instead.' It is hard to see what advantage in respect of closing would be gained by granting six-day licenses in Wales. As by general law all premises must be closed the whole of Sunday, the holder of a six-day license will, though he may double his legal obligation to close, not be under the obligation to close for any greater number of hours than he is at present bound to close for under the Act. The license-holders, however, will do well to take advantage of the offers of the Glamorganshire magistrates, inasmuch as by section 49 of the Licensing Act of 1874, under which these licenses are granted, the holders may obtain from the Inland Revenue Commissioners any license which he is entitled to obtain in pursuance thereof 'upon payment of six-seventh parts of the duty which would otherwise be payable for a similar license not limited to six days.' It may, perhaps, be doubted whether justices have power to force a six-day license on any person by refusing to renew the ordinary seven-day license, unless the holder will consent to turn it into a six-day one. (See Regina v. Silvester, 31 Law J. Rep. M. C. 93.)

Roberts v. Jones, which we reported last month (60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 441), is a case of very great importance on the practice regarding venue, and all the more deserving attention because there is so little authority on the subject. It was there decided by Mr. Justice Hawkins that unjustifiable use by the plaintiff of his privilege of choosing the venue (see Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXXVI., rule 1) constitutes good cause for dealing with the costs of an action, although the defendant has made no effort to change the venue. In Roberts v. Jones the plaintiff, by omitting to state any place of trial in the statement of claim, selected Middlesex, inasmuch as, by Order XXXVI., rule 1, when no place is named, the place of trial 'shall be Middlesex.' None of the plaintiff's witnesses—seven in number—resided in or near Middlesex. Six came from Flintshire or Cheshire and one from Oswestry. The trial extended over two whole days and parts of two others, so that the expense of bringing the witnesses to London and maintaining them there greatly increased the costs. The plaintiff succeeded only to an extent not amounting to quite one-third of his claim. The order of the learned judge was that he should be allowed as against the defendant one-third of his costs and no more; that such costs should be taxed as if the action had been tried at Chester; and that the defendant, having succeeded to an extent exceeding two-thirds of the claim made against him, should be allowed as against the plaintiff two-thirds of his costs, to be taxed on the footing of a Middlesex trial. A somewhat similar order was made in Willey v. The Great Northern Railway Company, in which an application for change of venue had been made to a Divisional Court and refused, so that the order was a very 'strong' one. We cannot help thinking that in both cases orders have been made which will not of necessity be followed, but the questions involved are of great difficulty and complexity.

THE custom of inserting an after-acquired property clause in a lady's marriage settlement is one which may well be deemed 'more honoured in the breach than the observance.' Often difficulties may be incurred by this grasping clause. For instance, moral justice may require that a certain sum of money coming to the lady should be released by her. But, however honourable the lady may be, she cannot give up her 'pound of flesh,' for, before it has become hers, she has covenanted to assign it to trustees, who hold in trust, perhaps, for children and issue yet unborn. Still, in spite of this serious objection to the clause, it is well that some effect should be given to its provisions when it is found in a settlement, even though it be a settlement made by an infant. In re Johnson; Moore v. Johnson (Notes of Cases, ante, p. 86), on the marriage of a female infant in 1883, a settlement was made under the Infants' Settlement Act which contained a covenant by her and her husband to bring into settlement any after-acquired property of the value of 100*l.*, with certain immaterial exceptions. Five years after the marriage the wife's mother died, leaving 4,000*l.* to the wife by a will made years before the marriage. The wife resisted the trustees' claim to bring this money into settlement on the ground that it was not her property when she executed the settlement, within the meaning of the Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, which provides that 'it shall be lawful for every infant upon or in contemplation of his or her marriage, with the sanction of the Court of Chancery, to make a valid and binding settlement, or contract for a settlement, of all or any part of his or her property, or property over which he or she has any power of appointment, whether real or personal, and whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy,' and gives to the settlement the effect which it would have had if the infant had been of age. Mr. Justice North held that this was property 'in expectancy' within the meaning of the Act, and that it was, therefore, caught by the covenant. Infants have rightly many privileges, and can sometimes, on the plea of youth, escape contracts into which they have entered, but where a marriage has been definitely entered into in the faith that the wife's property should be settled, any attempt to repudiate that settlement must be closely watched, and the words of the Act which Mr. Justice North had to consider are wide enough to include the property in question.

Mr. Cobb asked the Attorney-General last week whether, in order to remove some misapprehension which seemed to exist as to a recent case at Wolverhampton, he could state what was the existing law as to licensed victuallers supplying alcoholic liquors after closing hours in cases of illness, and whether it was legal to supply them in such cases upon a magistrate's order or medical certificate. The Attorney-General declined to state the existing law on this curious subject 'otherwise than by referring the honourable member to the provisions of the statutes of 1872 and 1874,' but said he would be happy to give any assistance in his power upon being informed of the circumstances of any particular case. We do not think that an investigation of the 'circumstances of any particular case' will do any good as far as the sale of liquor out of legal hours by licensed victuallers is concerned. Section 72 of the Licensing Act, 1872, however, with which the Act of 1874, fixing the hours of closing, is to be read as one, amongst a long string of exemptions, contains the curious saving that 'nothing in the Act shall affect or apply to the sale of medicated or methylated spirits, or spirits made up in medicine and sold by medical practitioners or chemists and druggists, which favoured individuals may, no doubt, supply medicines in which spirits form an ingredient at any time of the day or night; and what is more curious, there is still to be found on the Statute-book (see 'Revised Statutes,' 2nd edit. vol. ii. p. 159) section 12 of a certain 'Act for repealing the duties on spirituous liquors,' &c., 16 Geo. II. c. 8, whereby that Act or 'anything therein contained shall not extend to any physicians, apothecaries, or chymists as to any spirits or spirituous liquors which they may use in the preparation or making of medicines for sick, lame, or distempered persons only.' The whole of 16 Geo. II. c. 8, except section 12 in question, was repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1867. Section 12 therefore has no practical force, for it merely prevents the operation in particular cases of an enactment which has itself ceased to operate in any case. Was it allowed by the statute law revisers to remain on the statute-book as being supposed to afford a sort of gloss upon the saving clause in pari materiâ of the Licensing Act, 1872?

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR AUGUST.

In the present month there are nineteen cases reported in the Chancery Division (pp. 473–536), of which three are appeals; fifteen cases in the Queen's Bench Division (pp. 457-504), of which six are appeals; seven magistrates' cases (pp. 89–104); six Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty cases (pp. 57–72), of which one was in the Court of Appeal; and four Privy Council cases (pp. 17–32). The number also includes the Statutes of the Realm, cc. 19 to 25.

In the Chancery Division, in the case of In re Watson & Son, Mr. Justice Chitty made a special form of supervision order in the winding up of a company. The same judge, in the case of The Government Stock Investment Company, decided that the alterations of a company's memorandum of association allowable under the Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, 1890, are expressly confined to the definite matters mentioned in section 1, subsection 5. Fisher v. Jackson was a case of wrongful dismissal of a schoolmaster to whom relief was granted without his having obtained the consent of the Charity Commissioners under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, s. 17. In re Northage raised complicated questions with respect to the distribution of accumulated profits of a company by way of bonus dividends, and decided as to whether certain funds were capital or income. According to In re Warren (Lim.) a Scotch proceeding in sequestration by a landlord against a tenant company for future rent is a sequestration within the Companies Act, 1862, s. 163, and is prohibited from enforcement after the commencement of the winding-up, but under section 87 the Court has power to give the landlord leave to proceed with the sequestration. The John Morley Building Company v. Barras involved the construction of a number of articles in Table A of the Companies Act, 1882. By In re Johnson it is settled that an interest under a will, ambulatory at the date of the marriage settlement of an infant, but coming into operation during the marriage, was 'property in expectancy' within section 1 of the Infants' Settlement Act. In Coxon v. Gent it was held that an order under the Companies Act, 1862, dissolving a company, was a bar to an action by a creditor against the directors charging misfeasance, but not fraud and not impeaching the dissolution. In re Brace decides that a general devise of real estate does not operate under the Wills Act, s. 27, as an exercise of a power to revoke existing uses. Ex parte King's College, Cambridge, was concerned with the construction of the Universities and College Estates Amendment Act, 1880, and the University and Colleges Estates Act, 1858, as they affect the erection of new buildings. By In re The Abstainers and General Insurance Company it is decided that the Court will not, as a matter of course, allow a company to reduce its capital by writing off as 'capital unrepresented by available assets' the amount of preliminary expenses incurred in the formation of the company. In Witherby v. Rackham Malins's Act was held large enough to comprise legal choses in action—e.g. a policy of life insurance effected by a woman before her marriage. In In re Briggs and Spicer the Court declined to force on a purchaser a title derived from the trustees of a voluntary settlement. Interesting and complicated questions of doubtful domicil, service out of the jurisdiction and conflicting jurisdictions were raised in the case of In re De Penny. Morris, Wilson & Co. v. The Coventry Machinists Company assimilates the practice in amendment of particulars of objection in a patent action to that with regard to a registered design. In In re Taylor, Stileman and Underwood security taken for solicitors' costs was held to be primâ facie evidence of waiver of lien. In re Thorpe was an administration action in which it was held that an agreement by which an executor made a profit of his office could not be set aside by a summons in the action. Richards v. Butcher was a case of an improper registration of a trade-mark. According to In re The National Debentures and Assets Corporation the Court can go behind the certificate of incorporation of a company to ascertain whether it consists of seven members.

In the Queen's Bench Division Regina (on the prosecution of Mitchell) v. The Secretary of State for War decides that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application for increased pay by a retired army officer. Jones v. Foley was a case of landlord and tenant, and of the operation of a justices' order requiring possession to be given up within twenty-one days under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74. Sowerby & Co. v. The Great Northern Railway Company decided a point of construction of the Great Northern Railway and East Lincolnshire Railway Acts Amendment Act, 1850, s. 13. In Bowen v. Watson it was held that a person who has been imprisoned for withholding a friendly society's money cannot be sued for the amount in a civil action. Bowen (appellant) v. Harding (respondent) was a case of income-tax deduction in respect of a joint salary of husband and wife. Dillon (appellant) v. The Corporation of Haverfordwest (respondents) raised a question of deduction of income-tax by a corporation which supplied gas to private customers. By Dobson v. Festi & Co. it was decided that Order IX., rule 6, does not apply to foreign partnerships not subject to English law. In Cawse v. The Committee of the Nottingham Lunatic Asylum the defendants were not deprived of exemption from income-tax on the ground that they kept paying as well as charity patients. Francis v. Dutton was an application to County Court practice of the maxim: 'Qui facit per alium, facit per se.' Lamb v. The Great Northern Railway Company involved the joint operation of the Truck Acts, 1830 and 1887. Questions under a bill of sale and an agreement for lien and repurchase were adjudicated upon in Beckett v. The Town Assets Company. By Regina v. The Governor and Company of the Bank of England it was decided that only persons having a bonâ fide interest are allowed to inspect the unclaimed dividend book of the bank. In Hunt v. The Great Northern Railway Company a publication by a railway company of acts of negligence by its servants was held to be privileged. In re Louis, ex parte The Incorporated Law Society decided what amounts to the practice as a solicitor of an unqualified person. In In re Brandreth a long period of good conduct restored to the rolls a solicitor who had been convicted of a criminal offence.

In the Magistrates' Cases, in Westmore v. Paine strict compliance was required with the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, for the purpose of stating a case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division. In Slaughter v. The Mayor, &c. of Sunderland hoardings were held not to be a new structure within the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 175. In Regina v. Griffiths (Crown case reserved) a conviction was quashed for want of strict compliance as to dates with the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, s. 26, and the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 11. In Budd (appellant) v. Lucas (respondent) it was held that the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, s. 5, subs. 1 (d), is not limited to cases in which a trade description is used in actual physical connection with goods. The City and South London Railway Company (appellants) v. The London County Council (respondents) was a case of the application of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, s. 75, to the plans of a railway company. Fletcher v. Field decides that coke is not coal within the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, s. 15, and that a conviction for unloading coke between 10 A.M. and 6 P.M. cannot be sustained. In Barlow v. Terrill it was held that under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1863, s. 2, when there is no sale or exposure for sale of unwholesome meat there can be no conviction.

In the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, in The August a question of breach of contract and conversion was held to be determinable by the law of the flag of the ship on which the goods are shipped. Witt v. Witt involved the effect of the conduct of parents with respect to the custody of children. In Lander v. Lander the Court refused to insert the 'dum sola et casta' clause in an order for maintenance. In Wood v. Wood, also, the Court of Appeal decided that the Court has a discretion as to the insertion of this clause. The Elton was a salvage action, and decided a question of 'proper parties' within Order XI., rule 1 (g). In The Rialto the Court set aside an agreement for salvage service on the ground that the parties were not contracting upon equal terms.

In the Privy Council, in Plomley v. Shepherd the effect was considered of the New South Wales Act (26 Vict. No. 20) on the lands of an intestate married woman whose husband survived her. Gibbs v. Messer decided the effect of the registration of a forged deed with respect to the liability of the registrar. Murugaser v. De Soysa was a Ceylon case, and defined the effect of a fiscal sale of real estate subject to a mortgage of unascertained amount. Musgrove v. Chun Teong Toy was the Chinese immigrant case under the Chinese Immigrants Act, 1888 (Victoria), and establishes the principle that an alien has no legal right enforceable by action to enter British territory.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

V.

(Continued from page 492.)

HEYWOOD v. POTTER.*

SECTION 51 of the Designs Acts, 1883-88, repeating in substance a provision which is as old at least as 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, s. 4, provides that: 'Before delivery on sale of any articles to which a registered design has been applied, the proprietor of the design shall cause each such article to be marked with the prescribed mark or with the prescribed word or words or figures, de-

* 1853, 1 E. & B. 439.

noting that the design is registered, and if he fails to do so the copyright in the design shall cease unless the proprietor shows that he took all proper steps to ensure the marking of the article.'

In the present paper we propose to trace the gradual development of the law as to the marking of registered designs, commencing our survey with the leading case of Heywood v. Potter. Here A., the proprietor of a design applied to paper hangings, registered under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100, published and sold certain pattern-pieces* containing the whole design not bearing the letters 'Rd.' and the proper prescribed number. B. copied the design from such pattern-pieces and published articles with the design applied to them. A. sued B. for infringement. B. alleged by way of defence, inter alia, that the patterns ought to have been, and had not been, marked;† and thus the issue was neatly raised whether the Act applied to the sale of a copy of a registered design as a pattern. The Court of Queen's Bench (Mr. Justice Coleridge dissenting) held that it did, and, therefore, that A. was not protected against B. or any other person that copied his design from the unmarked pattern-pieces. The ratio decidendi of this case is tolerably clear, and is well stated in the judgment of Chief Justice Campbell: 'The Legislature, in giving protection to the proprietors of design, requires that every article of manufacture containing the design secured shall, if put forth by the manufacturer in the ordinary course of trade, contain certain marks as a caution to the public that the design of such article has been secured to the proprietors by registration. . . . I do not see that the use to which the article is to be applied affects the question. It is equally an article of manufacture and equally an article of trade, whether it be manufactured and sold as a pattern or for actual use; and, if it contains no marks of registration is just as likely to mislead a purchaser.' The effect of Heywood v. Potter may be stated shortly in somewhat different terms. The Legislature has given to the author or the owner for value, of a new and original design, the right to prevent other people from copying it for certain limited periods. There are two conditions precedent to the exercise of this right—(1) the design must in fact be registered; (2) the fact of registration must, before sale, be expressed in the prescribed form on the article to which the design is applied, so as to inform the public what it is that they may not copy. Obviously, the purpose of the sale is quite immaterial.

The ratio decidendi of Heywood v. Potter was followed in Sarazin v. Hamel (1863), 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 380, and recently in Blank v. Footman (1888), 5 P. O. R. 653.

1. In Sarazin v. Hamel, the plaintiffs, who were merchants and dealers in lace at Calais, and their agents in England, sued for an injunction to restrain the defendant, who was engaged in the same trade at Nottingham, from infringing their registered design for ornamenting lace. On behalf of the defendant it was alleged and proved that the plaintiffs had sold large quantities of lace abroad manufactured according to the registered design, but not containing the prescribed indicia of registration, and Lord Romilly, M.R., held that this omission was fatal to the plaintiffs' claim. 'The object of the Act,' said his lordship,* 'obviously is that the public should be warned against pirating any designs which are registered, that they should not by that means get into a lawsuit by reason of their imitating any designs which are previously registered. . . . Whatever the original manufacturer who has got a registered design sells, a separate piece it may be, he must give notice upon that piece that it is registered. . . . It would be a most singular anomaly if the Act does not apply to whatever they sell wherever it is sold. The plaintiffs are manufacturers in Calais; if they sell a large quantity of these goods in Calais to A. B., an Englishman, for import to this country, it is contended that they need not have any mark upon them to show that they are registered, but if they sell the same goods to the same man in Dover then they must show that they are registered. . . . The spirit and meaning of the Act and the plain words used apply everywhere, wherever the proprietor of the registered design sells the goods.'

2. Blank v. Footman was an action for the infringement of a design for corset trimming. The defendant objected that section 51 of the Designs Acts, 1883–88, had not been complied with. It appeared that the trimming had been made up into packets, each of which contained a large number of yards and was surrounded with a paper band, having printed thereon 'Rd.' and the registered number of the pattern, as prescribed. Mr. Justice Kekewich repelled the objection: 'As regards the marking,' said his lordship, 'the real point is, under section 51, whether Mr. Blank loses the benefit of his registration . . . because the different articles which have been sold in the market (i.e. the corsets) have not been marked with the prescribed mark. . . . It has not been argued that the trimming itself ought to be marked . . . and it is admitted that it would be impossible to say where and how often it should be marked. It is obvious you could not mark every quarter of an inch, and that, even if you could do it, you could not in lace work like this preserve the thing as a useful thing if you were to stamp it with marks. . . . The Act says that a mark is to be placed before delivery on sale of any article to which a registered design is to be applied. . . If the proprietor of the design does not sell those articles of dress to which the trimmings are affixed, the section lays no liability on him to mark those articles of dress. What is to be marked by him is the article to which a registered design has been applied—i.e. the trimming. If he sells it in pieces of 144 yards, he must mark the pieces of 144 yards; if, on the other hand, he sells small pieces, whether for pattern or for use, he must mark each small pattern . . . in a way in which those things can conveniently be marked by tying on a label or by printing something on the packet in which it is. But he is not bound to mark anything but that which he sells, and that is the exact consequence of' Heywood v. Potter.†

(To be continued.)

* Copies of a registered design published in a book for sale need not have any registered mark attached to them: Riego de la Branchardière v. Elcery, 4 Exch. 440. And see Maple & Co. v. The Junior Army and Navy Stores, 21 Chanc. Div. 369.

† If this point is to be taken, it must be raised on the pleadings (Sarazin v. Hamel, 1863, 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 378).

* We have changed the order of some of the following sentences in order to bring out more clearly the dependence of the decision on Heywood v. Potter.

† As to the claim of the cotton manufacturers for exemption from section 51, see the 'Patent Office Inquiry' of 1887, Evid. Ans. 1694. It was very properly rejected by the committee. Report, p. xvi.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords the royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—

Crofters' Common Grazings (Scotland) Bill.
Brine Pumping (Compensation for Subsidence) Bill.
Manchester Ship Canal Bill.

The Commons amendments to the Purchase of Land (Ireland) Bill were agreed to.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Trusts Amendment (Scotland) Bill.
Tramways (Ireland) Act, 1880, Amendment Bill.
Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.
County Councils (Elections) Bill.
Elementary Education Bill.
Factories and Workshops Bill.
Lunacy Bill.
Land Registry (Middlesex) Deeds Bill.
Chartered Accountants Bill.
Public Health (London) Bill.
Penal Servitude Bill.
Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.
Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.

Bills beyond second reading:—

Sale of Foods Bill (report agreed to).
Highways and Bridges Bill (report agreed to).
Turbary (Ireland) Bill (through committee).
Metalliferous Mines (Isle of Man) Bill (through committee).
Post-Office Acts Amendment Bill (through committee).

First reading:—

Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Bill (from the Commons).

In the House of Commons.

The Lords amendments to the Public Health (Scotland) Bill were agreed to.

Third readings:—

Turbary (Ireland) Bill.
Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Bill.
Western Highlands and Islands (Scotland) Works Bill.
London County Council (Money) Bill.

Bills through committee:—

Conveyancing and Law of Property (1881) Act Amendment Bill.
Labourers (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Public Works Loans Bill.
Expiring Laws Continuation Bill.
Judicature Acts Amendment Bill.

Second reading:—

Coinage Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.

New bill:—

To Amend the Law with respect to the Sale of Agricultural Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs.

Bills withdrawn:—

Evidence Bill.
Rating of Machinery (No. 2) Bill.
Wild Birds Protection Act (1880) Amendment Bill.
Elementary Education (Continuation Schools) Bill.
Fire Brigades (Exemption from Jury Service) Bill.
Chartered Accountants Bill.

Reviews.

REED ON BILLS OF SALE.

The Bills of Sale Acts, 1878, 1882, and 1890. With an Epitome of the Law as affected by the Acts. By Herbert Reed, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Eighth Edition. London: Waterlow Bros. & Layton (Lim.). 1891.

The object of the Bills of Sale Acts, we are told in a note to the preambles to the Acts of 1878 and 1882, was to protect creditors, to give them a true idea of their debtors' position, and to prevent transactions by which the grantor is allowed to retain possession of property which the grantee may at any moment withdraw from the claims of creditors and dispose of as he thinks fit. The amendment Act, the author proceeds to say, while continuing this protection, is also designed to define the rights of bill of sale holders and borrowers of money, and to protect the latter against inequitable claims. Here it would have been well to have given a reference to the case of The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. The North Central Waggon Company, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 2191; 13 App. Cas. 554, where Lord Herschell pointed out that the object of the earlier Acts was entirely different from that of the Act of 1882. The aim of this work is to present a short statement of the law of bills of sale as affected by the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878, 1882, and 1890. The Acts are printed together, the reason assigned being that they are to be construed together. The policy of this mode of procedure is, in our opinion, somewhat doubtful, but we are glad to find that each Act is printed separately in the appendix (Part I.), so that each can be read continuously. A useful feature of the work is that the author has, in the interest of those at a distance from reports, given a full extract of the material facts of recent cases. There can be no doubt that at the present time the law as to bills of sale is very much confused and complicated. A codifying Act may be hoped for, but meanwhile Mr. Reed's book, where the reader can find such questions as What is a bill of sale? (p. 40 et seq.) and What its form must be (p. 140 et seq.), carefully discussed, will be found a very useful and trustworthy guide.

TWO PAMPHLETS ON INTERNATIONAL LAW.

International Fishery Disputes. By T. H. Haynes, Esq. London: Cassell & Company (Lim.). 1891.
International Law. Its History, Principles, Rules, and Treaties. By W. Griffith, Barrister-at-Law. The Hansard Publishing Union. 1891.

Readers of Parliamentary intelligence have had recently presented to them a complicated question of international and constitutional law. The interest naturally attaching itself to the debates thereon has been increased by the appearance at the bar of the House of Commons of the venerable representatives of the colony of Newfoundland. It is a principle of English legislation beneficial to the public, and not without its advantages to the English barrister, that though questions of public policy can only be discussed by members of their respective Houses of Parliament, yet where protection is sought for the rights and interests of public bodies, or even of private individuals, such persons may, after presenting their petitions at the bar of the House, represent and argue their claims by counsel. The bar of the House is a somewhat awful place. In the Commons, even a minister of the Crown, when he has any papers of special importance to present, goes to the bar, and on being called by the Speaker brings them up, and they are then ordered to lie upon the table. This usage is probably a relic of the times when the Cabinet had no existence, and each minister was a privy councillor, independent of colleagues. It is below the bar of the Commons that unsworn members—for example, the late Mr. Bradlaugh—have had to sit. At the bar of either House witnesses are examined on oath and prisoners brought up. And readers of the State Trials may remember that it is at the bar of the House of Lords that peers are tried. Mr. Haynes's and Mr. Griffith's two pamphlets have opportunely appeared at the particular crisis. The former gives one of the clearest résumés of the treaties involved that we have seen, the latter sets out the principles of interpretation applicable to them. The former argues that privileges which are conceded generally to merchant ships in foreign ports should be extended to foreign fishing ships. This certainly would lessen the number of treaties in force and relieve jurists from the difficulties of interpreting those relating to the fisheries. But it will be a long time before any Government can be expected to surrender in this way its territorial rights over the waters adjacent to its own coasts ('Hale, De Jure Maris.') Humanity may properly require that merchantmen in distress shall have a right to seek and enter a foreign port; policy may dictate the wisdom of inviting commerce by admitting general trading ships on payment of reasonable port charges; but the same policy would prevent those ports being made the basis of fishing operations by foreigners in the adjacent seas, unless the foreign Government consented to some equivalent. Mr. Griffith's work, judging from its table of contents, is designed as an historical introduction to international law for the use of lawyers and diplomatists. His study of the codes of France and of the United States seems to have led him to form the opinion that international law itself may be reduced to the form of a manual or code adapted for practice. The code, however, though it might enlighten the nations, would merely crystallise the casus belli. And it is, we think, to arbitration courts and an ameliorated public opinion that we must look for pacific and inexpensive solutions of controversies which must arise. The colony of Newfoundland, like those of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, was acquired by discovery or simple occupation, consequently it is not subject, and has not been subject, to the legislation of the Crown, but its members have received as their birthright the common law of England as it existed at the period when the colony was acquired. Important Acts relating to Newfoundland were passed by the English Legislature in the fifth year of George IV., and 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 78 gave to the colony a legislative assembly and authority to repeal or alter the Acts of George IV. Of course these Acts in no way lessen the obligation of the English Government to observe and perform the treaty obligations which had been contracted with the sovereignties of France and the United States, neither do they impair the power of the Imperial legislation to confirm, enlarge, restrain, or abrogate the powers granted to Newfoundland, though it was, on the other hand, both just and expedient to listen to the claims of our brethren on the further side of the Atlantic (Coke, 4 Inst. 36). Fortunately the difficulties have recently been settled by a prudent and salutary compromise, whereby the Legislature of Newfoundland has continued the existing modus vivendi between French and English subjects until the end of 1893. Otherwise even the treaties might have been liable to criticism and the opinion hazarded that the Crown cannot without legislative sanction grant an exclusive right to trade, and that the Crown acted ultra vires in some of the fishery concessions referred to (East India Company v. Sandys, 10 State Trials, 371; 3 Campbell's 'Lives of the Chancellors,' 581). Sir R. Bethell (Attorney-General) and Sir H. S. Keating (Solicitor-General), in their joint opinion upon the Hudson's Bay Company's charter, said: 'With respect to any rights of government, taxation, exclusive administration of justice or exclusive trade otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, such rights could not be legally insisted upon by the Hudson's Bay Company as having been legally granted to them by the Crown' (Blue-book Report, A.D. 1857).

STUDD ON THE LAW OF TITHES.

The Law of Tithes and Tithe Rent-charge. Being a Treatise on the Law of Tithe Rent-charge, with a Sketch of the History and Law of Tithes prior to the Commutation Acts, and including the Tithe Act of 1891, with the Rules thereunder. By Edward Fairfax Studd, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition (Revised and Enlarged). London: Stevens & Sons. 1891.

The early history of tithes is, to a great extent, obscure. It is known, however, as we are told in the first chapter of the work before us, that they existed in England in Anglo-Saxon times, and Lord Selborne's researches have led him to the result that Edgar was the first king to make any law attaching a legal penalty to the non-payment of tithes. To the same monarch, according to the same authority, is also due the law which gave permission to anyone who had on his land a church with a burial-place to give a third of the tithes to that church, an enactment which, in Lord Selborne's opinion, is the origin of our modern parishes. The reader who desires to pursue this subject may be referred to Mr. Studd's first chapter, where he will find an interesting sketch of the history and law of tithes prior to the Commutations Act. In the year 1836 the Act for the commutation of tithes into a money payment or rent-charge was passed, and though the process of commutation has been for some time practically completed, it is yet necessary to consider it to some extent. Commutation and apportionment accordingly form the subject of the next chapter of this careful work. Discharge from tithe rent-charge and redemption are then considered. Thus far we have been occupied chiefly with ancient law, but when we come to 'recovery of tithe rent-charge' we are encountered by the new procedure introduced by the Tithe Act of 1891. The present book will be found a handy and useful guide. The law prior to recent legislation is considered so far as it is necessary, and the effect of the recent changes is placed in a clear and intelligible way before the reader.

ROSCOE'S 'NISI PRIUS.'

Roscoe's Digest of the Law of Evidence on the Trial of Actions at Nisi Prius. Sixteenth Edition. By MAURICE POWELL. In Two Volumes. Stevens & Sons (Lim.); Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

THE fifteenth edition of this trusty work, which first appeared in 1827, was brought out by Mr. Powell in 1884, since which date, amongst other important statutes, the Arbitration Act, 1889, and Bankruptcy Act, 1890, have been passed, cases upon cases have been heaped up in explanation of the Bills of Sale Acts and Married Women's Property Act, and Part II. of the work, which deals with that very miscellaneous head of law, 'Evidences in Particular Actions,' has required emendations and additions in points too numerous to mention; while the shorter Part I., which deals with 'Evidence in General,' has been broken in upon by the Oaths Act, 1888, and by decisions of such consequence as that in Bosvile v. The Attorney-General, 56 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 97, Haines v. Guthrie, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 521, and Hodson, in re; Beckett v. Ramsdale, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 241. Accuracy and succinctness have always been the leading features of Roscoe, and we are glad to find that the reputation for these all-important qualities is fully kept up in the present edition. We cannot refer to better evidence of what we mean than to the modes in which the Married Women's Property Act and the cases upon it have been dealt with in less than five pages, and the Bills of Sale Acts and the cases upon them in little more than twenty. We very much regret, however, to notice that in no case is there a reference to more than one set of reports, and we think that we have special ground for complaint on this head from finding that two references are still frequently given to cases bearing date before 1866. And, curiously enough, Mr. Powell has omitted to state what has always seemed to us to be the leading point in In re Hodgson; Beckett v. Ramsdale, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 241—i.e. that there is no rule of law which precludes a claimant from recovering against the estate of a deceased person on his own testimony without corroboration, nor even does the index contain the title 'Corroboration.' The index, we should observe, is a remarkably full and well-arranged one, and, very conveniently for the reader, in the table of statutes 'the pages at which the sections of the statutes are set out, or their effect stated, are indicated by figures in black type.' The price of the two volumes, which contain more than 1,800 pages between them (being an increase of about 700 pages upon the eleventh edition, which appeared in 1865), is 2*l.* 10*s.*

Correspondence.

THE COUNTRY CIRCUITS.

SIR,—I hope that you will allow me to add to the letter which you did me the honour to publish last week by saying that by postponing the commission-day at Nottingham the learned judge of assize was able to try two of the ten causes which were entered for trial at Derby. The grand result of the assizes is as follows:—

At Leicester and Derby there were altogether fifteen causes for trial, of which three were tried and the remaining twelve either withdrawn, compromised, or the place of trial changed owing to want of time to try them.

At Lincoln, the second largest county in England, there was only half a day available for the trial of causes.

This state of things has been going on in all the country circuits since the one-judge system was tried; and yet there are found persons who profess to be astonished that there are so few causes for trial on circuit.

What becomes of the litigation which must naturally arise no one knows; but it seems certain that some of the cases which ought to be tried in the High Court are tried by private arbitration; but it is manifest that injustice must frequently be submitted to by persons who despair of bringing their opponents to justice. Some unhappy country litigants have tried the plan of entering their causes for trial in Middlesex, with the result that they have been ordered to pay all the extra costs occasioned by that proceeding.

Their position is, therefore, now this: if they enter their causes at home, they cannot get them tried; if they enter them abroad, they are heavily fined. I feel that I ought to add that things would have been even worse on the Midland Circuit this time if it had not been for the extraordinary industry, patience, and courtesy of the learned judge of assize, who has seldom risen from Court before 7 P.M., but has frequently sat far into the night. I believe, however, that his lordship has found out by experience that even he cannot do the work of two judges.

A JUNIOR.

THE INCOME-TAX COMMISSIONERS v. PEMSEL.

SIR,—Surely the judgment of the majority of the peers is wrong, not only for the reasons so pointedly given by Lord Bramwell, but because (1) the words 'hospital school or almshouse' which precede the words 'charitable purposes' favour the more restricted construction of those words; and (2), while all liabilities to a tax ought to be construed liberally in favour of the subject, all exemptions from a liability once established ought to be construed strictly in favour of the revenue. This rule will be found laid down by the Court of Exchequer in The Great Western Railway Company v. The Attorney-General, 5 H. & N. at p. 868.

J. M. L.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

INFANT—NECESSARIES—TOBACCO.

THE case of Hargreaves v. Manders came before his Honour Judge Bayley on July 29, at the Westminster County Court. The plaintiff sued the defendant for a quantity of cigarettes and cigars supplied to him. The defence of infancy was set up, and the defendant's father appeared and produced the certificate of his son's birth, showing that he was well inside of twenty when the goods were supplied.—Mr. Edlin, plaintiff's counsel, asked if it was not a fact that the defendant had a private income of his own.—The father of the defendant refused to answer the question, and his Honour held that he need not do so.—Mr. Edlin: I submit that it is a material question.—His Honour: If he was an infant you cannot do anything.—Mr. Edlin: I submit they were necessaries.—His Honour: What, tobacco necessary for an infant?—Mr. Edlin: Yes, there is nothing extravagant in the order; it is for cigarettes and 100 cigars. The only case in the books against me is thirty years old, and I submit that in these go-ahead days what were not necessaries thirty years ago may be now for a young man in society.—His Honour: If you have any evidence to show that tobacco has ever been held to be necessary for an infant, I shall be glad to hear it.—Mr. Edlin: I submit it is, if it is required medicinally, your honour.—His Honour: It is not suggested that these cigarettes and cigars were supplied medicinally.—Mr. Manders, sen.: They were supplied when he was a lad of seventeen.—Mr. Edlin: Nineteen, sir; you may as well speak the truth.—His Honour said it was clear that the defendant was an infant when the goods were supplied. He could not hold that tobacco was necessary for an infant, and there must, therefore, be a verdict for the defendant, with costs.

RAILWAY COMPANY—NEGLIGENCE.

At Marylebone County Court, on Tuesday, July 28, before his Honour Judge Stonor and a jury, was heard the case of Burgess v. The Metropolitan Railway Company. The plaintiff, a workwoman, sued the defendant company for damages in respect of personal injuries through the negligence of one of the defendants' servants in pushing against a person of the name of Albert Martin, on the platform of the company's station at Baker Street, and causing him to collide with the plaintiff on March 30 last. The company's servant in question was the guard of the train by which the plaintiff had travelled to Baker Street. After the latter had got out and the train started, the guard, in endeavouring to regain his compartment, ran some way along the platform, and, stretching out his left arm, struck Martin, who was more than three feet from the carriages, violently on the breast and twisted him right round, when he fell against the plaintiff, and their heads came in contact. The plaintiff fell to the ground stunned and much hurt, and was confined to her bed for nearly a fortnight. She was unable to follow her employment for a considerable time, and still suffers from the effects of the injuries she received. There was some conflict of evidence as to whether the train in question consisted of the carriages of the defendant company or of some other company using their railway, platform, and servants, but there was no doubt the plaintiff rightly used the train in question. The jury found that the train consisted of the carriages of the defendant company, that the guard was the servant of the company, and they returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 29*l*.—Mr. Vennell was counsel for the plaintiff and Mr. Edwards for the defendants.

HONOURS EXAMINATION FOR SOLICITORS.

JUNE, 1891.

At the examination for honours of candidates for admission on the roll of solicitors of the Supreme Court, the examination committee recommended the following candidates as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

FIRST CLASS (in Order of Merit).

HERBERT STANLEY SUGDEN, who served his clerkship with Mr. James Curtis, of London.

ARTHUR EDWIN CLARKE, who served his clerkship with Mr. John William Smith, of Andover; and with Messrs. Garrard, James & Wolfe, of London.

EDWARD AUBREY WHITE, who served his clerkship with Mr. Henry Brown White, of Warrington.

SECOND CLASS (in Alphabetical Order).

COLVIN BRANDRETH, B.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. George Edward Frere, of London.

EDWARD FRANK CHAMPION, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Smiles & Co., of London.

BARUCH COHEN, who served his clerkship with the late Mr. Frederick Arthur Foster and Mr. Ernest Stratton Gerrish, of London.

HAROLD MARTIN, M.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. W. A. Webb (of the firm of Messrs. T. & T. Martin & Hime), of Liverpool.

GERALD MARTINEAU, LL.B., who served his clerkship with Mr. Richard Woolcombe (of the firm of Messrs. Walker Martineau & Co.), of London.

ARTHUR MUSGROVE, who served his clerkship with Mr. Herbert Moser, of Kendal; and with Messrs. Slark & Metcalfe, of London.

EDWYN TURNER ROBERTS, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Helder & Roberts, of London.

ARTHUR SMITH, who served his clerkship with Mr. Frederic Johnson, of Faversham.

HARRY GLANVILLE SOUTHWELL, who served his clerkship with Mr. T. C. Bourne (of the firm of Messrs. T. & R. Swan & Bourne, of Lincoln); and with Mr. C. R. F. Haddelsey, of Caistor.

HENRY SQUIRE STEELE, who served his clerkship with Mr. John Allsopp and Mr. Robert Hugo Montagu Baker (of the firm of Messrs. Francis Baker & Watts), both of Newton Abbot; and with Messrs. Church, Rendell, Tod & Co., of London.

HARRY MORGAN VEITCH, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Stone, Simpson & Sons, of Tunbridge Wells; and with Messrs. Collyer, Bristowe, Russell & Hill, of London.

STANLEY BALWIN WORTH, who served his clerkship with Mr. Raphael Ambrose Biale, of London.

THIRD CLASS (in Alphabetical Order).

EDWIN HUGH FALKWINE BRADBY, B.A., who served his clerkship with Messrs. Bircham & Co., of London.

ERNEST JAMES CARLISLE, B.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. George Hadfield, of Manchester; and with Messrs. Johnson, Weatherall & Sturt, of London.

ARTHUR WILLIAM CUFF, who served his clerkship with Mr. Wilfred Ivanhoe Thomas, of London.

NORMAN DAVIDSON, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Thomas Hamlin (of the firm of Messrs. Hamlin, Grammer & Hamlin), of London.

JONAH DAVIES, who served his clerkship with Mr. Wm. Morgan Griffiths, of Carmarthen.

JOHN ARTHUR EDDISON, B.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. William Simpson Hannam (of the firm of Messrs. North & Son), of Leeds; and with Messrs. Vincent & Vincent, of London.

THEODORE FISHER, who served his clerkship with Mr. John Simpson (of the firm of Messrs. Hayton & Simpson), of Cockermouth.

BERNARD EDWARD HALSEY, who served his clerkship with Mr. Samuel Bircham, of London.

WILLIAM NELSON HARRIS, who served his clerkship with the late Mr. Alfred Hallworth Crowthers, of London.

HENRY EGAN HILL, B.A., LL.B., who served his clerkship with Mr. Joseph Prosser Hill (of the firm of Messrs. Williamson, Hill & Co.), of London.

EDWARD PERCIVAL WHITLEY HUGHES, who served his clerkship with Mr. Richard Hughes Pritchard, of Bangor.

EDWARD BOARDS KNIGHT, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Benning Pritchard, of London.

ALEXANDRA JOHN WAKEMAN LONG, who served his clerkship with Mr. Samuel Horace Candler (of the firm of Messrs. Kingsford, Dorman & Co.), of London.

George Michael Magee, who served his clerkship with Mr. Charles Aloysius Maria Lightbound; and with Mr. George Dickinson (of the firm of Messrs. Hill, Dickinson & Co.), of Liverpool.

James Robinson Meakin, who served his clerkship with Mr. Frederick Wadsworth (of the firm of Messrs. Watson, Wadsworth & Ward), of Nottingham; and with Messrs. Warren, Gardiner & Murton, of London.

Albert Thomas Mills, who served his clerkship with Mr. John Evans Rains, of Manchester.

Godfrey Mosley, B.A., who served his clerkship with Messrs. Bannister, Williams & Ram, of London.

Frederic William Reed Sale, who served his clerkship with Mr. Edwin Leedam Hough and Mr. Edwin Hough, of Carlisle; and with Messrs. Harrison & Powell, of London.

Stephen Malcolm Scammell, who served his clerkship with Mr. Albert Besant, of Portsea.

William Hubert Smith, B.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. Alfred James Shepheard, of London.

Albert William Joseph Walker, who served his clerkship with Mr. Joseph Hayton (of the firm of Messrs. Hayton & Simpson), of Cockermouth; and with Messrs. Speechly, Mumford & Co., of London.

Frederic James Whiteley, who served his clerkship with Mr. Frederick Douglas Hutton (of the firm of Messrs. Killick, Hutton & Vint), of Bradford; and with Messrs. W. J. Flower & Nussey, of London.

Charles Walter Woolnough, who served his clerkship with Mr. Walter William Woolnough, of London.

The council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly given class certificates and awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Sugden, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's Inn—value 10 guineas; and the Daniel Reardon prize—value about 25 guineas; and the John Mackrell prize—value about 12*l.* 10*s.*

To Mr. Clarke, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn—value 10 guineas.*

To Mr. White, the prize of the Honourable Society of New Inn—value 5 guineas.

The council have given class certificates to the candidates in the second and third classes.

One hundred and fourteen candidates gave notice for the examination.

By Order of the Council,

E. W. Williamson,
Secretary.

Law Society's Hall,
Chancery Lane, London: July 24.

SEARCHES FOR HEIRS-AT-LAW AND OTHERS.

Mr. Sydney H. Preston, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes:—

Very many people are largely interested, without their knowledge, in the 'agony' column notices addressed to heirs-at-law, next-of-kin, and others. Such notices often contain a rich variety of romantic incident, although usually occupying but a few lines of space. As a very large number of these items of good news have recently been advertised, I venture to send you an index of the more noticeable cases:—

The following persons, who have dropped out of sight, are sought: Fred. W. Allen (Hastings), Sarah Alsford, Sarah and Fanny Bell, Eliza Boyton, Richard Brayshaw or children (1,875*l.*), Lucy Buxton (husband drowned at sea), John, Elizabeth, Lilly, William, George, and Jess Cameron, John Chambers (Essex), Louisa M. Collingwood (or Forman), Charlotte M. Collis (Plymouth), William Corpes (groom), Joseph Darnborough (seaman), Thomas Davis (went to America, 1854), Donald and John Douglass, G. P. Dugdell (Melbourne), Joseph England (formerly of Norwich), Mary Flanegan (Liverpool), William Fradgley (entitled to an income for life), Robert Freeman (police-constable), Mary Jane Green, Mary Gunn (Dingwall), Charles W. S. Hillier (Liverpool), Alexander Hoar, Rev. John Jessop, Robert Jones (formerly of Liverpool), William Jones (Ealing, York, and Chelsea), A. S. Jonkles, Leenw family, Barbara and Elizabeth M'Donald, Samuel Mann (postman and carpet designer), Watkin, Matthew, and John Davies (North Wales), Ann Mayo (widow), Charles Henry Nicholas (631*l.*), Reed Ockenden (deserted at Peru, 1863), W. R. Orger, John and Betsy Pilgrim, Phœbe Pitman (born 1826), Plume family, John W. Roberts (emigrated, 1856), Margaret R. Groat, Connop A. Rogers, Charles Thirkettle (left home 1843), Caroline Sales, Frank Short (son of William), Richard Skeels, Emma Tortell, Walter W. Tyler (America), John Woodward (or representatives), Emily and John A. Wharran, William A. Whistler, F. T. H. Wilcocks (Buenos Ayres), Charles and John Wilson (Lincoln), and John Wragg (emigrated 1869).

In addition to the foregoing, the next-of-kin, heirs, or representatives of the following were sought: E. Barnes (died abroad), Hannah Binns (died 1854), F. S. Blogg (printer), Emily M. Bowman (Edinburgh), Henry Buckton (436*l.*), Elizabeth Cameron (died 1831), Kitty Carey (Kent), Joseph Crosby (Daventry), Joseph Cunningham (pawnbroker), William Dickin (Stafford), Elizabeth S. Dobson, Joseph Gilder (Huddersfield), S. F. Harte (of Vienna, Brazil, Australia, and London), Henry W. Hayes (Middlesex), Ann Heaton (Southport), John Hunt (Denbigh), Jane Jones (Co. Carnarvon), Sarah Mayo, Mustapha Mustapha, F. W. O'Connor, Jane Powell (Southampton), John Renny (3,397*l.*), Frances Robinson, Mary A. Russell (London), John Tanner (1,000*l.*), Christopher Thompson, Catherine Vaughan, Agnes Warn (Kent), Daniel Wilcox (Liverpool), Caroline Wright (Penrith), and David Young (Tahiti).

Many persons expect to find 'a fortune in an advertisement,' and I hope that the cases above noted may prove not only that fortunes do thus accrue, but that such windfalls are the outcome of most romantic incidents.

* The amount available for this prize at this examination is as above stated.

Damp Beds.—The mischief wrought by damp beds unfortunately does not usually react upon its heedless originators. The sole sufferer is the luckless occupant, who, forgetful of the buyer's caveat and all that it implies, buries himself within the chill of the half-dried bedclothes. In a recent instance, in which the law was appealed to, the tables were turned. The plaintiff, who, with his family, had for several days occupied a room in a seaside restaurant, was then told that the apartment was let and he must accept another. Here the trouble began. Illness, with its expenses, followed, and the final cost, incurred in consequence of his too unceremonious host, amounted to 150*l.* An action so unusual and a verdict so consonant with sanitary principles deserve to be kept in remembrance. It is to be hoped that their obvious teaching will not be forgotten by any who live by housing their fellow-men. As regards the latter, however, the maxim which inculcates prevention is still the best. Not even a money fine will always atone for the injury done by avoidable illness. Caveat emptor, therefore, notwithstanding. Let the traveller, however weary and inclined to sleep, first be careful that his bed is dry. In any case of doubt the use of an efficient warming-pan, or, if needful, even a change of bedding, should be insisted on, and the further precaution of sleeping between blankets rather than sheets is in such cases only rational. —Lancet.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM AUGUST 3 TO AUGUST 8.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Aug. 3	Aug. 4	Aug. 5	Aug. 6	Aug. 7	Aug. 8
7	Judge Pitoulkes	—	—	—	—	Northwich	—
14	Judge Greenhow	—	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesborough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Derby	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
26	Judge Jordan	—	Newcastle	Lichfield	Stafford	Market Drayton	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Greenwich	—	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	—	Wells	Axbridge	Weston-supr-Mare	—	—
57	Judge Paterson	—	Taunton	Langport	Bridgwater	Wellington	Wellington

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, JULY 23.

Little v. Port Talbot Company (The Apollo) (ship—injury in dock—liability. Appeal from the Court of Appeal).—Allowed.

Salt v. The Marquis of Northampton (life insurance—policy—mortgage or absolute assignment—'once a mortgage always a mortgage.' Appeal from the Court of Appeal. Reported 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 460).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JULY 24.

Salt v. The Marquis of Northampton.—Cur. adv. vult.

MONDAY, JULY 27.

Walsh, Hall & Co. v. New Oriental Bank Corporation (breach of contract of agency—breach of trust—agent selling to principal—fraud—concealment by agent from principal—Statute of Limitations).—Dismissed.

The Niobe (construction of marine insurance policy. Appeal from Court of Session in Scotland).—Dismissed.

Clarke (pauper) v. Corfin Coal Company (compensation to mother in respect of death of illegitimate son. Appeal from Court of Session in Scotland).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.

Welch v. Tennant (husband and wife—wife's estate in England—sale moneys of estate—deed of revocation—Scottish law of donation—husband's right to estate. Appeal from Court of Session in Scotland).—Allowed.

Johnson (pauper) v. Lindsay & Co. (master and servant—injury to servant—common employment—sub-contractor. Appeal from Court of Appeal).—Allowed.

Ooregum Gold Mining Company of India v. Roper (company—issue of shares at a discount—ultra vires. Appeal from Court of Appeal).—Part heard.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 23.

Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company (Lim.) v. Morel Brothers & Co. and Richards & Co. (appeal of defendants Richards & Co. from judgment of Charles, J., dated May 2, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, JULY 24.

Société Générale de Paris v. Cheque Bank (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated May 15, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

SATURDAY, JULY 25.

Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Company and others (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Smith, J., dated November 22, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

Skinners' Company v. Knight and others (appeal of plaintiffs from refusal of Charles, J., to give judgment at trial on finding of jury, dated December 19; heard May 13).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JULY 27.

No sitting.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, JULY 28.

Regina v. Tyler (Alderman, &c.) and International Commercial Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of T. Noton from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated May 12, discharging nisi for mandamus to magistrate to hear summons under Companies Act, 1862, s. 27).—Dismissed.

Cave v. Leslie (appeal of plaintiff from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated April 9, dismissing action as frivolous and vexatious).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 29.

Wiedemann v. Walpole (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Pollock, B., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co. (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 26, at trial before Mathew, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., FRY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 23.

Nettlefolds (Lim) v. Reynolds (1889—N.—15) (appeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated July 8, for further particulars of objections to patent). Nettlefolds (Lim.) v. Reynolds (1890—N.—809) (appeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated July 8, for further particulars of objections to patent).—Allowed.

Bolton v. Bolton (appeal of defendant E. M. Bolton and also F. Russell from orders of North, J., dated July 6 and 8, refusing liberty to intermarry).—Allowed.

Baron Windsor v. Walker (appeal of plaintiffs from order of North, J., dated June 26, refusing restraint of sale of machinery and directing inquiry as to damages).—Dismissed on terms.

Cocksedge v. Metropolitan Consumers' Association (appeal from order of Kekewich, J.).—Dismissed.

Before Lindley, L.J., Lopes, L.J., and Kay, L.J.

Friday, July 24.

Thornton v. Mackrow (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Chitty, J., dated April 29).—Dismissed.

Before Lindley, L.J., Fry, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.

Tuesday, July 28.

Regina on the Prosecution of C. E. Johnston v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Registrar from order of Cave, J., and Charles, J., dated June 17, for writ of mandamus to register company).—Allowed.

Ogle v. Wicks (Chitty, J.) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of the Official Referee, dated May 7, upon report under order of reference, dated November 26, 1890).—Judgment varied.

Wednesday, July 29.

Protheroe v. Tottenham and Forest Gate Railway Company (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Kekewick, J., dated July 10, refusing to restrain proceedings under notices to treat for compulsory purchase).—Allowed.

Hanbury (petitioner) v. Hanbury (respondent) (appeal of petitioner (C. M. Hanbury) from order of Jeune, J., dated July 7, for father's custody of children until October 24, with access by mother).—Part heard.

Levy v. Wartman & Co. (appeal of defendant company from order of Romer, J., for North, J., dated July 24, restraining defendants from selling cigars and issuing circulars).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

Rota of Registrars.

Monday, August 3.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Tuesday, August 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Wednesday, August 5.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Thursday, August 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Friday, August 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Saturday, August 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Charles Broad, of 37 Walbrook, London, Solicitor and Attorney of the Supreme Court of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, has received the Commission of the Court for taking Evidence of Witnesses in all places outside the colony.

Mr. Isadore Goldman, of Sunderland, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Goldman was admitted in 1885.

Lady Diana Huddleston.—A tasteful and handsome cup has been presented by Lady Diana Huddleston to the mess of the Oxford Circuit in memory of her late husband, Mr. Baron Huddleston, many years leader of this circuit.

The Middle Temple Library.—The Middle Temple Library will be closed during the ensuing Long Vacation in order that several alterations to the roof and other parts of the building may be carried out. The benchers of the Inner Temple have very courteously granted the use of their library to members of the Middle Temple during the alterations, which are expected to be finished about the end of October.

Early Closing at Lincoln's Inn.—Early closing is to be the rule at Lincoln's Inn during the Long Vacation. A circular has been sent round by the benchers to all tenants of chambers in the inn, announcing that after August 1 the gates will be closed to the public at half-past six, and that the old gate in Chancery Lane will not be opened at all after midnight. Laundresses—the name by which the useful female attendants are known in the Inns of Court—will not be allowed to enter the sacred legal precincts after nine, or to stop within them later than ten.

BIRTHS.

On July 22, at 56 Warrington Crescent, Maida Vale, W., the wife of Albert Hamilton Godfrey, Solicitor, of a son.

On July 22, at The Chilterns, Wanstead, Essex, the wife of George Reader, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On July 24, at 22 Linden Gardens, W., the wife of Joseph Manrice Solomon, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On July 16, at the Pro-Cathedral, Kensington, Nicholas Synnott, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, to Barbara, fifth daughter of J. Macevoy Netterville, Esq., of Villa Rita, Biarritz.

On July 25, at Bombay, John A. Oldham (Under Secretary Public Works Department, India), son of the Rev. Oldham Oldham, D.D., to Amy Rose, youngest daughter of the late Sir William Atherton, M.P., Q.C., Her Majesty's Attorney-General.

On July 25, at St. Anne's, Soho, Lieut. Phillip E. Gray, Royal Horse Artillery, eldest son of Benjamin G. Gray, Esq., Q.C., to Laura Violette, widow of the late Ernest Weldon, of 2 Gloucester Mansions, Harrington Gardens, S.W.

DEATHS.

On July 21, at 12 Inverness Terrace, Clara, widow of the late Sir John Smale, Chief Justice of Hongkong, and daughter of Halsey Janson, Esq., of Stamford Hill, in her 75th year.

On July 21, Cecil Warren, eldest son of Edward Pollock, Barrister-at-Law, of 20 York Terrace, Regent's Park, aged 19 years.

On July 24, at his residence, Gibraltar Place, Chatham, Matthew Spray Stephens, Solicitor, in his 93rd year.

On July 24, at 5 Leinster Gardens, W., Martha, widow of Griffith Richards, Esq., Q.C.

On July 25, at Park House, Oxford, the Rev. J. E. Walsh, M.A., second son of W. H. Walsh, Solicitor, Oxford, Assistant-Curate of St. John's, Deptford, aged 28 years.

On July 28, William Ransom, son of Robert Ransom, Solicitor, Sudbury, Suffolk, aged 29 years.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	2	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

A report has been going the rounds of several of the evening papers to the effect that Mr. Justice Hawkins intends to retire at the end of the Long Vacation. We venture, however, to doubt the accuracy of the rumour. The learned judge has, according to all accounts, been showing unabated capacity for work, and especially for late sittings on the South-Eastern Circuit, and, his health being good, there would seem to be no reason why he should relinquish judicial work. The report probably originated in the fact that on November 2 Sir Henry Hawkins will complete fifteen years' service on the bench, but this circumstance, as has been shown in the cases of Mr. Justice Denman and Baron Pollock, is a very insufficient reason for assuming that a judge will resign.

The appointment of Mr. Justice Williams as Bankruptcy judge is admitted on all hands to be an excellent one. The learned judge, when at the bar, had a large practice in bankruptcy, and is the author of one of the best treatises on the subject. There is every reason to think that great weight will attach to his decisions, and that the number of appeals will diminish rather than increase.

It seems that some little friction has arisen between the library authorities of the Inner and Middle Temples. The library of the Middle Temple is to be closed from the 13th inst. till some time in October pending certain repairs to the roof, and a request was sent to the benchers of the Inner Temple to allow the members of the Middle Temple to use the library of the sister society during that period. Certain objections appear to have been raised, and, although the desired consent was ultimately given, the Middle Temple authorities have now obtained for their members the use of the Lincoln's Inn Library, and, we believe, do not intend to avail themselves of the permission of the Inner Temple benchers. The fact seems to have been somewhat overlooked that during the Long Vacation, owing to cleaning and other matters, only a small portion of the Inner Temple Library is available for the members of that society.

The clergyman who recently completed the marriage of a drunken man has been found fault with for so doing, but he pleads justification on the ground that 'when the outrage occurred the ceremony, so far as regards the actual marriage itself, had already been legally completed by the declaration which pronounces M. & N. to be "man and wife together."' We cannot think that the reverend gentleman is technically correct as to the point of the marriage service at which the knot is legally tied. From the judgments in Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. C. 274, it would seem that the part of the service at which the marriage becomes knit is 'after affiance and troth plighted' between the parties, so that if the ministerial pronouncement should not happen to be given, the marriage would be complete and binding on the parties all the same. In Blunt's 'Church Law,' however (2nd edit., revised by Sir W. Phillimore, at p. 154), the view is taken that the marriage itself is legally completed by declaration of the priest.

In consequence of the decision of the House of Lords in Pemsel's Case, it has been stated that numerous applications will be made to the Inland Revenue authorities to repay income-tax paid on account of various charities which that decision has now shown to be exempt from taxation. One estimate has been made to the effect that many hundreds of thousands of pounds will be demanded from the Chancellor of the Exchequer under this head. Would repayment be a matter of obligation or of favour? We can find no authority in the Property Tax Acts to the Inland Revenue Commissioners to make such repayment, so that neither would the claiming charities have any right to it, nor would the Inland Revenue Commissioners have any right to make it as a matter of favour. Only a special Act of Parliament could authorise such repayments, and we greatly doubt whether Parliament would consent to such an Act.

Readers of the Law Journal Reports for the month of August will observe a case in which a solicitor on his third application was restored to the roll of solicitors from which he was struck off in 1879 at the instance of the Incorporated Law Society, after being convicted of obtaining 6*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* by false pretences, and being sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. It is only fair to observe that the conviction was obtained under peculiar circumstances, and that the facts of the case do not appear to have been brought to the attention of the Court on the two former applications for restoration, which were opposed by the Law Society. The present application was strongly supported by evidence of subsequent good conduct, and was not opposed by the Law Society. The case is of importance as a distinct authority that the Court has power to restore a solicitor to the roll even after a conviction.

In an article lately published in the Spectator (August 1) it has been argued that a peer is by law capable of being elected to and sitting in the House of Commons, or that, at least, if elected while a commoner he may continue to sit after succeeding to a peerage. What vacates the seat, it is said, is the issue of a writ of summons calling the new peer to the Upper House, and by neglecting to apply for this he might delay indefinitely his exclusion from the Lower House. Without entering into the merits of this argument, we would point out that the writer has been misled by a carelessly expressed note of Sir Erskine May's into an error in the statement of facts on which he relies. The note referred to is as follows: 'Lord Eddisbury sat until May 15, 1848, although his creation had appeared in the Gazette on May 9 (103 Com. J. 513)' ('Law and Practice of Parliament,' 9th edit. p. 698). Now it is not usual to gazette the 'creation' of a peer. The Gazette of May 9 contained an announcement in the customary form, dated the day previous, that 'the Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal' granting the peerage in question. Some days generally elapse between the signing of the warrant for sealing and the actual sealing of the patent by which a peer is created. In this case the patent was not sealed till May 12, and the writ of summons calling Lord Eddisbury to the House of Lords was issued on the same day (see 70 Lords Journals, p. 265). There appears to be no ground for suggesting that his lordship ever sat in the House of Commons after his creation. The 12th being a Friday there was no sitting of the House between that day and Monday, the 15th, when one of the first things done was to order the Speaker to issue a warrant for the election of a member to fill the vacant seat.

The House of Lords has affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Dr. Barnardo's Case, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 345, and ordered Dr. Barnardo to hand over an illegitimate child, in pursuance of an authority from the mother of the child (who had signed an agreement to leave the child under the care of Dr. Barnardo at his home for twelve years), to a person named by her. The judgments, and especially that of Lord Herschell, are mainly of legal interest as laying down the law in respect of the right of a mother to the disposal of her illegitimate child. Such a child is, no doubt, filius nullius at common law, and Mr. Justice Maule in In re Ann Lloyd, 3 M. & G., at p. 548, went so far as to ask, 'How does the mother of an illegitimate child differ from a stranger?' Lord Herschell, though of opinion that Mr. Justice Maule was merely enunciating the true doctrine of the common law, points out that it has been altered by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, which, by casting upon the mother of an illegitimate child the duty to maintain it until the age of sixteen, has beyond doubt, though indirectly, given the mother a primary right of custody, which may be broken in upon for the proved benefit of the child alone.

Ann Lloyd's case was a peculiarly painful one. She, being the mother of an illegitimate female child, had obtained a habeas corpus directed to the putative father. The girl, who was between eleven and twelve years old, being produced by him, was allowed by the Court to use her own discretion as to where she would go, she having expressed a strong disinclination to go with her mother. 'She then left the Court with the female who had accompanied her. Upon quitting the Court the mother attempted to take forcible possession of the child. This being made known to the Chief Justice (Chief Justice Tindal), one of the officers of the Court was sent with her for her protection.'

The session of 1891, if memorable for nothing else, will long be remembered for the passing of the nine special Acts under which the London and North-Western, Midland, Great Northern, Great Western, Great Eastern, South-Eastern, London, Chatham and Dover, and London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Companies become bound by a completely new set of clauses fixing the maximum rates chargeable for animals and goods. Alphabetical classifications, as complete as they can be made, will replace the present disorderly and defective classifications, and the maximum rates will in all cases be graduated according to distance from point to point of carriage, decreasing, of course, as the distance increases. Passenger maximum fares will, we suppose, be revised by a future set of bills at some future date, but the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, under which the bills of which we speak were set on foot, is concerned with rates for animals and goods only.

Mr. Cust's Allotments Rating Exemption Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 33), recites that 'doubts have arisen whether allotments are or are not included among the lands' exempted from full rating under the head of 'arable meadow or pasture ground, or woodlands, market-gardens, or nursery grounds,' which lands are, by section 211, subsection 1 (b), and section 235 of the Public Health Act, 1875, directed to be rated, for the purposes of that Act, 'in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net annual value or rateable value of such land,' and, for the purpose of removing the doubts, directs that the above sections are to be read as if the word 'allotments' was inserted in each of them after the word 'woodlands.' The 'doubts' referred to in the Act were not, we believe, judicial doubts, but arose from disputes between rating authorities and owners of allotments on questions of fact, it being often difficult to ascertain, from the manner in which an allotment was cultivated, whether it came within the exemptions of the Public Health Act or not. The new Act describes an allotment as meaning 'any parcel of land of not more than two acres in extent and let as an allotment, and cultivated as a garden or a farm, or partly as a garden and partly as a farm.'

The time is now fast approaching for Brewster sessions and the preparations for them. These sessions are by section 1 of the Licensing Act, 1828 (9 Geo. IV. c. 61), held annually throughout England (except in Middlesex and Surrey, where they are held in March) 'on some day between the twentieth day of August and the fourteenth day of September inclusive;' and by section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, notices of intention to oppose the renewal of a license must be served on the holders 'not less than seven days before the commencement' of Brewster sessions. There is little doubt that, looking to the decisiveness of the well-known Sharp v. Wakefield, many licensed victuallers will have to fight pretty hard to obtain renewals at the ensuing sessions. On some licensing benches there is a strong feeling against tied houses, on others there are many justices who have been waiting for the judgment of the House of Lords before venturing to give practical effect to their opinions as to the undesirability of this or that particular house continuing to be licensed, whilst on a few it may be possible that a majority may be found possessed of the strange view that no intoxicating liquors ought to be sold, or even consumed, by any person whatever. As far as the law goes, all such persons may act in an uncontrolled discretion in granting or refusing renewals, nor, except in cases coming within the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, will they be bound to give their reasons. The threatened victuallers, however, may draw no little consolation from the reflection (1) that the procedure which section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1874, provides as to applications for renewal is highly favourable to them; and (2) that in every case of a refusal to renew there is an appeal from the licensing justices to quarter sessions. We have frequently discussed the law of the subject (see ante, p. 210, and Law Journal for 1890, pp. 345, 385).

Lord Herschell has inquired of the Government in the House of Lords whether the Home Secretary could not cause persons fined for non-compliance with the Vaccination Acts to be treated as first-class misdemeanants; but Lord De Ramsey answered that the power of ordering convicted criminal prisoners to be treated as first-class misdemeanants did not belong to the Secretary of State, but to a judge, and 'perhaps, also, though this was not free from doubt, to a Court of summary jurisdiction.' By the Prisons Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 106), 'prisoners convicted of misdemeanour, and not sentenced to hard labour, shall be divided into at least two divisions, one of which shall be called the first division, and whenever any person convicted of misdemeanour is sentenced to imprisonment, without hard labour, it shall be lawful for the Court or judge before whom such person has been tried to order, if such Court or judge think fit, that such person shall be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division, and a misdemeanant of the first division shall not be deemed to be a criminal prisoner within this Act.' There being no misdemeanour created by the Vaccination Acts (except by section 30 of the Act of 1867 relating to false certificates), it seems that this section, which from the use of the words 'Court or judge' is properly applicable to indictable offences only, can have no application to the ordinary offences against those Acts, which are punishable on summary conviction only. It may be observed that the maximum penalty on a parent for neglecting to have a child vaccinated is twenty shillings under section 29 of the Vaccination Act of 1867, so that the imprisonment for non-payment of the fine cannot by section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, exceed seven days, and must in any case be an imprisonment without hard labour. A Government bill, to the effect that no parent should be liable to be convicted for neglecting to have his child vaccinated or for disobedience to an order for vaccination, if he had already paid the full penalty of twenty shillings, or had been twice adjudged to pay any penalty for any such offences, was introduced in the session of 1880, when it was read a second time in the House of Commons but not further proceeded with.

It is a pity, from the lawyer's point of view, that the question raised on the recent application for a mandamus against the registrar of joint-stock companies was complicated by the somewhat peculiar features of the case. No clear decision has therefore been given by the Court of Appeal as to what is a company 'otherwise duly constituted by law,' within the meaning of section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862. All that can be said is that doubt has been cast upon the construction placed on those words by the Divisional Court. Lord Justice Fry (with whom on this point Lord Justice Lopes concurs) inclines to the opinion that the description is applicable only to 'companies ejusdem generis with those previously mentioned, companies the constitution of which does not arise from the mere consensus of parties but from something which the law imposes beyond their consent—something like letters patent or an Act of Parliament.' But, in the first place, what does the law impose beyond the consent of the parties for the formation of a mining company in the Stannaries? And, secondly, what companies, except those constituted by the mere consent of the parties, are not included in the classes previously mentioned? Lord Justice Fry says an instance may be found in a company constituted by certificate of the Board of Trade under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 121, but such a company would surely fall within the class of companies formed in pursuance of an Act of Parliament. It is difficult, we think, when section 4 of the Companies Act, 1862, is compared with section 180, to resist the conclusion that a company 'otherwise duly constituted by law' in the latter clause means a 'company, association or partnership' created by consent of the parties, and not exceeding in number the limits prescribed by the former clause.

Our Central American colony of British Honduras has in the course of the last few years developed quite a taste for litigation. Two cases which it has added to the official law reports severally involve issues of substantial importance—the applicability of the English Mortmain Act to a British colony, and the right of a Chief Justice to turn himself into an unsworn witness against a prisoner over whose trial he is presiding. The prolonged arbitration—now at last concluded—between Mr. C. T. Hunter, of Belize, and the Government of British Honduras, although it possesses no peculiarly legal value, is replete with instructive and dramatic incidents which can hardly fail to awaken interest. The material facts are as follow. Several years ago the Government of British Honduras employed Mr. C. T. Hunter, a contractor, to construct certain public works in the town and harbour of Belize, under the directions of the colonial engineer. The contract consisted of two parts—the construction of canals and the dredging of the foreshore, which for the sake of clearness must be considered separately. When the specifications for the canals were laid before him, Mr. Hunter came to the conclusion that they were altogether inadequate, and he expressed this conviction to the Government. The colonial engineer, however, not unnaturally supported his own plans, and after some negotiations Mr. Hunter was ordered to proceed. He did so, and a portion of the structure collapsed. The other part of Mr. Hunter's contract was to dredge the foreshore under the directions of the colonial engineer. The plant was prepared, but no directions were given, and while matters were still in this position the canal wall, as we have mentioned already, fell in. The Colonial Government at once, with 'extra-legal' haste, seized Mr. Hunter's plant and refused him an extension of time for the dredging of the foreshore, although the completion of this part of the contract had been delayed by the neglect of their own engineer in furnishing the plan. In consequence of these proceedings, Mr. Hunter was involved in serious pecuniary embarrassments, and for the time being his credit was destroyed. Gradually, however, the consciousness that they had acted with undue precipitation dawned upon the colonial authorities. An offer to restore the plant was made, and the chief question at issue between the parties whether or not the collapse of the canal wall had been caused by the negligence of the contractor was referred to arbitration within the colony by consent. The arbitrator decided in favour of the contractor, and eventually the colonial engineer was requested to send in his resignation to the Secretary of State. Only the question of damages remained for settlement, and that was made the subject of consideration at a second arbitration, which was held a short time ago at the Colonial Office in Downing Street. The arbitrators, Sir Benjamin Pine, K.C.M.G., who was sometime Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, and a Mr. Gentle, of Belize, found that Mr. Hunter was entitled to 3,500*l.* damages, together with the costs of both arbitrations. Thereupon the Secretary of State directed the Governor of British Honduras to introduce a vote into the Legislative Council for the amount awarded to Mr. Hunter by the arbitrators in London. The unofficial members resigned in a body, and the vote was carried in their absence. Then the Colonial Office took up the ground that the award was payable only 'when the revenues of the colony permitted,' and there was every prospect that the soundness of this contention would have to be tested by a petition of right. But wiser counsels at length prevailed in Downing Street, and the award has now been satisfied.

The exceedingly cautious reply of the Solicitor-General, when recently questioned in the House of Commons as to the steps taken for a prosecution with reference to Evelyn v. Hurlbert, will not satisfy the public conscience. If anything is to be done it should be done quickly; and it will be nothing less than a scandal if the session closes and the Courts rise for the vacation before the long-delayed prosecution for perjury is commenced.

Mr. Montagu Williams possesses at least two essential qualifications for a successful police magistrate—viz. courage and common-sense. Although differing apparently from the views of a brother-stipendiary, Mr. Williams will carry public opinion with him in his vigorous protest against the practice (which, it is stated, is not uncommon) of giving cabmen articles to pawn and thereby provide money for cab fares due to them. In the magistrate's opinion the individual who provides the article and the cabman who pawns it are equally blameworthy. The latter has, as Mr. Williams pointed out, a summary remedy open to him if his fare is not paid.

The arguments urged with much emphasis for changing the venue of the 'Salvation Army' trial failed to convince Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Collins. The facts of the case are so simple that it is probable the real defence will turn on a legal point; and, as Mr. Justice Denman pointed out, the judge who tried the case could easily raise a question for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal. Any other result would have been unfortunate, for it is quite time that 'General' Booth and all religious enthusiasts realised the fact that they must not expect exceptional treatment. If they have not broken the law they have nothing to fear; but they certainly failed to show sufficient reason for removing or delaying the trial and a judicial decision on a question of considerable importance.

The irrepressible Mr. Cobb seems to have discovered a 'mare's nest,' and to have been misled by the 'very eminent and old Queen's Counsel on the Western Circuit' (whoever that may be) with reference to the alleged breach of the traditions and etiquette of the bar. It is satisfactory to find from the Attorney-General's reply that the barristers whose names were mentioned in the House of Commons were not in the habit of practising in the County Courts over which their fathers presided. It would indeed be unfortunate if public confidence in these local tribunals were shaken by any suggestion of partiality. Owing to the heavy Court fees and other causes, County Courts are not nearly so popular as they should be, and they cannot afford to lose what share of public favour they still retain.

THE COURT OF APPEAL ON EVERS v. CHALLIS.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal in In re Bence; Smith v. Bence (reported at length in the Times of June 18) will cause some surprise to conveyancers and real property lawyers.

The action was brought to try the validity of a gift over following upon a devise which was void for remoteness. A share of realty was given by the testator upon trusts for his daughter Maria for life, and after her death for such of her children as should attain twenty-one or, being daughters, be married, and for such children of any child of hers dying under that age as should attain twenty-one or, being daughters, be married. It is obvious that the class to take after Maria's death might not be ascertained within the limits of perpetuity, and that the devise to them was therefore void. The gift over which was in question provided that if Maria should die without leaving any issue who should live to attain a vested interest in their respective shares the trustees should convey Maria's share to such of the testator's children as should be living at the time of such failure of issue and the issue then living of such of them as might then be dead. Maria survived the testator and died without ever having had any issue. It was urged for the appellant that, in the event which had happened, the gift over was valid and effectual, although, had Maria left issue, it would have been void for remoteness. Evers v. Challis, 29 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 121; 7 H. L. Cas. 531, was relied upon as establishing that the gift over was divisible into two separate gifts—the one an equitable contingent remainder which would vest, if at all, on the death of Maria leaving no issue then living; the other an executory devise, which, inasmuch as it might not vest within the limits of perpetuity, was void ab initio. On behalf of the heir-at-law it was contended that the gift was single in expression and could not be divided; that Evers v. Challis did not apply except in cases where the gift could be analysed into a legal contingent remainder in one event and an executory devise in another; that an equitable contingent remainder was subject to the same rule of perpetuity as an executory devise, and, further, that a gift over in the form of a direction to convey must be construed as an executory devise, and could not operate as a contingent remainder. Abbiss v. Burney, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 348; L. R. 17 Chanc. Div. 211, was cited in support of the last two propositions.

The Court (Lords Justices Lindley, Bowen, and Fry) took time to consider, and judgment, dismissing the appeal, was delivered by Lord Justice Fry. Lord Justice Bowen added that he accepted the conclusion because he thought it impossible to do otherwise without disregarding authorities by which the Court was bound. After stating the terms of the will, and pointing out that the meaning of the words, 'without leaving issue,' in the gift over was not affected by section 29 of the Wills Act, and therefore extended to an indefinite failure of issue, the judgment proceeds thus: 'In the present case we have three circumstances (1) that the particular estate which precedes the remainder in question is limited to a class which may never be ascertained within the limits of perpetuity; (2) that the event on which the gift over is to take effect—default of the vesting of the particular estate—may in like manner never be ascertained within those limits; and (3) that the class of persons to take under the gift over may never be ascertained within the same limits. These circumstances are, in our opinion, enough to make the gifts over (whether regarded as equitable remainders or executory devises) primâ facie bad.' Now surely the only particular estate is that limited to Maria. Her children and issue would take, if anything, estates in fee simple, and no remainder could be limited upon these. In no event, then, could the gift over be construed as a contingent remainder except that in which it would vest on Maria's death—that is, in the single event of her dying without leaving issue living at her death. The judgment goes on to say that 'the argument of the appellant is that the terms of the gift over can be split up into as many separate gifts over as there are possible events, and that whenever the actual event falls within the limits of perpetuity the gift over is good; whenever it falls beyond the limit it is bad.' We do not think this was the argument of the appellant. It is obviously untenable. But it is another question whether the gift could not be split up into two gifts, a contingent remainder in one event, an executory devise in the other. Before answering this question in the negative Evers v. Challis has to be reckoned with. Unfortunately, in stating the facts of that case, Lord Justice Fry has fallen into an error which seriously affects the reasoning on which his judgment is based.

The testator in Evers v. Challis left an estate to his daughter Elizabeth for life, with remainder in fee simple to her children defeasible on their dying, if sons, under twenty-three, if daughters, under twenty-one, with cross limitations in case of the deaths of any under those ages. In case all the children of Elizabeth should die under those ages, or if she had none, the testator gave the estate to his son John and his daughters Sarah and Ann for life in equal shares, with remainders as to the share of each to his or her children defeasible on such children dying, if sons, under twenty-three, if daughters, under twenty-one. It seems clear from Lord Justice Fry's judgment that he thought Evers v. Challis turned upon this gift over. He dwelt on the circumstance that it expressly provided for two events: (1) that which happened, Elizabeth's death without ever having had a child; (2) the death of all her children under the ages named. And he says the case applies the principle that a limitation shall, if, when, and so far as possible, be construed as a remainder rather than as an executory devise to dispositions so expressed as to sever the remainders from the executory devises. As a matter of fact, no real question arose on this gift. In the Exchequer Chamber, no less than in the Queen's Bench and the House of Lords, it was admitted that the distinct and separate clause providing for Elizabeth's having no child took effect as a good remainder at her death. But the lessors of the plaintiff could not have made out their title if they had relied on that clause alone. They were Mr. and Mrs. Evers, the latter one of the two children of the testator's son John. Now John was stated in the special verdict to be still living, and the clause gave nothing to Mrs. Evers except in remainder after a life estate to him. The devise, however, contained yet a further gift over, and it was on this that the question depended. It provided that in case of the death of the testator's son or either of his two daughters (John, Sarah, or Ann) 'without leaving a child, if a son that shall live to attain the age of twenty-three years, or if a daughter that shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years,' the share which such children or child would have been entitled to should go to the children of the testator's said son and two daughters having issue living, to attain, if sons, twenty-three, if daughters, twenty-one years, in fee simple in equal shares per stirpes. Here there were not two contingencies expressed but only one. Hence the difficulty which the House of Lords was called upon to solve. On the death of Elizabeth without having had issue one-third of the estate passed under the first gift over to Ann for life. On the subsequent death of Ann, who also never had any issue, this one-third became divisible under the second gift over (if valid) per stirpes between the children of John and Sarah, the lessors of the plaintiff taking one-fourth of that third, or one-twelfth of the whole estate.

The lessors of the plaintiff also claimed one-twelfth of another estate which was devised to Ann for life, with like remainders to her children, and like gifts over to John, Sarah, and Elizabeth and their children. One-third of this estate would but for Elizabeth's prior decease have passed to her for life on Ann's death, and the lessors of the plaintiff claimed one-fourth of that third. The question as to this twelfth was not separately discussed, since it was agreed that the title to it would stand or fall with the title to the twelfth of the estate originally devised to Elizabeth.

It was held in the Exchequer Chamber that as the testator had not himself separated the legal from the illegal limitations, but had included all in one clause, the Court must treat the gift as single for the purpose of determining as to its validity. 'How,' asked Baron Alderson, 'is the Court to sever these events which the testator has expressly joined together without making a new will?' Therefore, since some of the contingencies were too remote the gift over was declared void. Had the case stopped there it would have been a direct authority in favour of the decision in In re Bence. But an appeal was taken to the House of Lords, and a different view prevailed there. It was the unanimous opinion both of the judges who advised the House and of the learned lords who heard the appeal that it made no difference whether the alternative gifts were separately expressed or not. 'No case or authority,' said Mr. Justice Wightman, the spokesman of the judges, 'has been cited to show that where a devise over includes two contingencies, which are in their nature divisible, and one of which can operate as a remainder, they may not be divided, though included in one expression.' Lord Cranworth said: 'I can see no distinction, when we are only construing the language of the will, between the case where the contingency of dying without having had a child is, as I have suggested, expressed, and where it is implied, as in the present case.' And Lord Wensleydale thought the legal effect of the clause was 'precisely the same as if the testator had provided in express words for the event of Ann having no children, as he had done in the former clause for Elizabeth having none.' Similar passages may be cited from the speeches of Lord Chelmsford and Lord Brougham. The gist of the matter is that a contingent remainder and an executory devise are 'distinct and separate in their nature,' 'in their nature divisible,' and therefore, notwithstanding that they are not separately expressed, will be treated as two alternative gifts, each subject to its own rules and unaffected by the rules applicable to the other.

The case, says Lord Justice Fry, is 'no authority for the proposition that every gift over may be analysed into as many events as are included within its language and be held good or bad as the events happen.' This is perfectly true; the case is only an authority that a gift may be analysed into a contingent remainder and an executory devise. The lord justice adds that his view is supported by the language of the learned lords and of the judges who advised the House, and especially by their adoption and affirmation of Proctor v. The Bishop of Bath and Wells (2 H. Bl. 358). 'The gift over in that case was single in point of expression, but in point of fact embraced one event which happened, and on which a perfectly good remainder could have been limited; but, inasmuch as it was not expressly so limited, inasmuch as the event of death without having any issue was not separated from a subsequent event which might transgress the rule against perpetuities, it was held that in that case the limitation over could not operate as a remainder.' Now in point of fact there was no event in which the gift over in Proctor v. The Bishop of Bath and Wells could have operated as a remainder, for the simple reason that there was no particular estate to support a remainder. Mr. Justice Wightman, Lord Chelmsford, and Lord Brougham point out that the gift was in any event an executory devise, and upon that ground, not upon the ground stated by Lord Justice Fry, they distinguished the case from Evers v. Challis.

It thus appears that the reasoning of the Court of Appeal, though it professes to follow, is in reality inconsistent with that upon which Evers v. Challis was decided in the House of Lords. The arguments of the respondent's counsel suggested a different ratio decidendi, which, it may be, would have been sufficient to support the decision, but they are not dealt with in the judgment.

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

VI.

(Continued from page 509.)

The Inspection of Registered Designs.

The Designs Act of 1883, s. 52, subs. 1, re-enacting in substance a provision that is as old as 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100 (see s. 17), declared that, 'during the existence of copyright in a design, the design shall not be open to inspection except by the proprietor, or by a person authorised by the comptroller, or by the Court, and furnishing such information as may enable the comptroller to identify the design, nor except in the presence of the comptroller or of an officer acting under him, nor except on payment of the prescribed fee, and the person making the inspection shall not be entitled to take any copy of the design or of any part thereof.'

The policy of this provision was strongly challenged by many of the witnesses before the Patent Office Inquiry committee of 1887 (1888, C. 5,350), but the committee unanimously upheld it, merely * recommending the enactment of the clause, which now forms section 6 of the Act of 1888 and runs as follows: 'Provided that where registration of a design is refused on the ground of identity with a design already registered, the applicant for registration shall be entitled to inspect the design so registered.'

* Section 88 of the Act of 1883, which enacted that every register kept under the Act should at all convenient times be open to the inspection of the public, was obviously inconsistent with section 52, subsection 1. The committee recommended the insertion in the former section of the words 'subject to the provisions of the Act.'

It may be interesting to analyse the reasons alleged by the committee in favour of the privacy of registered design. The passage in their report which deals with the matter is paragraph 52 (p. xvi.): 'We are equally unable to give our assent to the proposal that the register of designs should always be open to public inspection. The most strenuous opposition to the proposal was expressed by the majority of the witnesses. They urged that it would afford great facilities to persons desirous of taking unfair advantage of the work of others. Great expense is often incurred in the preparation of new designs and much skill in their production, and we were assured by those who were able to judge that if free access were allowed to designs, newly registered, unscrupulous persons would be sure to take advantage of it for the purpose either of pirating a design or, without doing so, of approaching as near to it as possible, and so getting all the advantage bestowed upon it without being amenable to the law.'

The Patent Office Inquiry Committee of 1887 was composed of Lord Herschell, the Earl of Crawford, Lord Macnaghten, Mr. Mundella, Baron de Worms, and Mr. Hutton. The unanimous opinion of such a body of able and experienced men must always carry immense weight and is entitled to respect. But it is obnoxious to several criticisms.

1. The minutes of evidence taken before the committee are published, are public property, and are readily accessible. We venture to think that they do not bear out the assertion made in the report that 'a majority of the witnesses' were opposed to the inspection of registered designs. The question is one of fact, and our readers can answer it for themselves.

2. Whatever force the view of the committee possesses is equally available as an argument for the privacy of the register of patents and the register of trade-marks. 'Great expense' is incurred and 'great skill' displayed in the perfecting of inventions. The patentee has to give not merely 'a statement of the nature' of his invention, but a full disclosure of the method by which it is to be exercised. The register of patents is a far greater instrument of fraud in the hands of 'unscrupulous persons' than the register of designs could ever be.

3. Moreover, it is surely not the case that 'persons desirous of taking unfair advantage of the work of others' can approach as near as possible to pirating a design 'without being amenable to the law.' Section 58 (b) prohibits the fraudulent or obvious imitation of a design, and the old common law 'as and for' action would prove of considerable value as a supplement to the statutory remedy.

Perhaps the strongest point in favour of the resolution of the committee is one to which they do not even allude. In one of the old Parliamentary reports on copyright in designs it is pointed out that the profit of the designer, if it is to be made at all, must be made quickly. In a few months the novelty of the design begins to wane, and, long before the expiry of the period of statutory protection, it is, at least as a source of income, already dead. An 'unscrupulous person' having 'free access' to the register of designs might in a few weeks do the proprietor of a design an injury which no 'account of profits' could repair.

(To be concluded.)

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords. Consideration of Commons' Amendments:—

Judicature Acts Amendment Bill.
Lunacy Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.
Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.
Elementary Education Bill.
Purchase of Land (Ireland) Bill.
Factories and Workshops Bill.
Public Health (London) Bill.
Statute Law Revision Bill.
Mortmain and Charitable Uses Amendment Bill.

Bills read a third time and passed:—

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill.
London County Council (General Powers) Bill.
Sale of Goods Bill.
Highways and Bridges Bill.
Metalliferous Mines (Isle of Man) Bill.
Post-Office Acts Amendment Bill.
Turbary (Ireland) Bill.
Expiring Laws Continuation Bill.
Western Highlands and Islands (Scotland) Works Bill.
Public Works Loans Bill.
Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Bill.
London County Council (Money) Bill.
Land Registry (Middlesex) Deeds Bill.
Foreign Marriages Bill.
Labourers (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Coinage Bill.

Second reading:—

Conveyancing and Law of Property Act (1881) Amendment Bill.

The following bills received the Royal Assent:—

Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill.
Purchase of Land and Congested Districts (Ireland) Bill.
Factories and Workshops Bill.
Elementary Education Bill.
London County Council (Money) Bill.
Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Bill.
Lunacy Bill.
County Councils (Elections) Bill.
Penal Servitude Bill.
Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Bill.
Schools for Science and Art Bill.
Public Health (London) Bill.
Coinage Bill.
Foreign Marriages Bill.
Statute Law Revision Bill.
Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.
Post Office Acts Amendment Bill.
Slander of Women Bill.
Turbary (Ireland) Bill.
Trusts Amendment (Scotland) Bill.
Forged Transfers (No. 2) Bill.
Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.
Commissioners for Oaths Act (1889) Amendment Bill.
Metalliferous Mines (Isle of Man) Bill.
Public Health (Scotland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Ranges Bill.
Judicature Acts Amendment Bill.
Western Highlands and Islands (Scotland) Works Bill.

Expiring Laws Continuance Bill.
Public Works Loans Bill.
Redemption of Rent (Ireland) Bill.
Highways and Bridges Bill.
Labourers (Ireland) Acts Amendment Bill.
Rates and Charges Bill.
Provisional Order Bills of the Great Eastern Railway Company, Great Northern Railway Company, London and South-Western Railway Company, London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company, London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company, Midland Railway Company, South-Eastern Railway Company, London and North-Western Railway Company, and Great Western Railway Company.
Hanover Chapel Bill.
And thirty-two other private bills.

In the House of Commons.

Lords' amendments considered and agreed to:—
Elementary Education Bill.
Forged Transfers Bill.

Third readings:—
Consolidated Fund (Appropriation) Bill.
Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act Amendment Bill.

Bills withdrawn:—
Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill.
Assistant County Surveyors (Ireland) Bill.
Presentation to Benefices Bill.
Betting and Loans (Infants) Bill.
Accumulation Bill.
Labourers' Allotments (Ireland) Bill.
National School Teachers (Ireland) Bill.
Towns Improvement (Ireland) Bill.

Reviews.

CASES JUDICIALLY NOTICED.

Index of Cases Judicially Noticed (1865-90). Being a List of all Cases cited in Judgments reported in the 'Law Reports,' 'Law Journal,' 'Law Times,' and 'Weekly Reporter,' from Michaelmas Term, 1865, to the End of 1890, with the Places where they are so cited. By George John Talbot and Hugh Fort, Barristers-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.); Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

This is an exceedingly valuable book, especially to practitioners who are not the fortunate possessors of a set of carefully 'noted up' reports. The authors claim in their preface that 'anyone who may use the book will be able to trace the history of the treatment of any decision in later judgments, and will be guided by any decision to the later decisions on the same subject, in just the same way as if he had a complete library of reports, in which at the head of each case references were given to all citations of it in judgments reported since 1865.' If the work may be relied upon as correct, its value cannot be over-estimated. It is, of course, impracticable without much labour to thoroughly test it, but so far as a cursory examination extends we have found it perfectly accurate. It will be noticed from the title of the book that the references have been limited to cases cited in judgments, to the exclusion of citations in argument. To have included the latter would have enormously increased the bulk of the book, and, we think, without a proportionate advantage, because, unless an authority is dealt with by the judgment in a case, its weight as an authority is not increased or diminished by anything said in argument. It has been found impracticable to give a reference to more than one report of cases in which citations occur, but, by adopting the plan of adding in each instance the date, the authors have enabled persons using the book to trace the references to that series of reports which they may happen to possess. The compilation of such a book is a work of enormous and most irksome labour, and we trust that it will meet with the appreciation it deserves from those for whose benefit it is intended. The publishing price is 25*s*.

MORAL INSANITY.

Prichard and Symonds in Especial Relation to Mental Science. With Chapters on Moral Insanity. By D. Hack Tuke, M.D., LL.D. Pp. 113. London: J. & A. Churchill. 1891.

This brochure consists of three papers read respectively before the Medico-Psychological Association at Bristol in May, 1891; the British Medical Association at Belfast in July, 1884; and the Medico-Psychological Association at Cork in August, 1885. Its importance is out of all proportion to its size. Of Dr. Tuke's appreciative sketches of Prichard and Symonds we shall only say that we commend them to the notice of the editors of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' and the contributors more immediately concerned. But this essay has a far higher than a merely bibliographical value. We bring it before our readers as a phenomenal book for two reasons: (1) We have here a new and inexpugnable statement of the doctrine of 'moral insanity' by one of the foremost of living experts. Moral insanity, says Dr. Tuke, is 'a form of mental disorder in which there is a loss of control over the lower propensities, or in which the moral sentiments rather than the intellectual powers are confused, weakened, or perverted. . . . From time to time cases occur in regard to which . . . the prominent characteristic and by far the most striking and important factor of the mental condition is, not loss of memory, not delusion or hallucination, not any deficiency of talent or genius, not any lack of mental acuteness, and certainly no incoherence of ideas or language—none of these—but a deficiency or impairment of moral feeling or self-control, such being either the development of a character natural to the individual or a departure from it, which contrasts most strikingly with its former traits.' If the advocates of moral insanity had always defined their position with such skilful moderation as this they would not have lain so long under what Dr. Tuke calls 'the curse of the law.' (2) Dr. Tuke has placed on record in his little book a case of alleged 'congenital moral defect' without any appreciable mental lesion. We shall attempt no précis of the facts. We shall simply express the belief that the existence of primäre verrücktheit has been proved at last, and that Dr. Tuke's case will henceforth be the locus classicus of moral insanity.

Correspondence.

MORTGAGE REDEMPTION AND ANTI-FORECLOSURE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

SIR,—These insurance companies enable the mortgagor or borrower after the lapse of a few years to pay off the mortgage, which very probably the mortgagor never otherwise would do, the mortgagor paying half yearly a portion of the mortgage debt, which the insurance company eventually wholly redeems.

In these ways, enforced by law, estates could be liberated from both debt and interest.

AUGUSTUS J. HARVEY.

12 Landridge Road, Fulham:
Aug. 4.

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

COMMISSION AGENT.

ON August 4, before Mr. Justice Charles without a jury, the case of Moore v. Peachey was tried. This was an action, as stated in the writ, to recover 193*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, whereof 115*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* was upon a cheque drawn by the defendant and 78*l.* being money received by the defendant on commissions executed by him as agent for the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that previously to and in November, 1890, the plaintiff employed the defendant, for reward to the defendant in that behalf, to make bets on horse races for the plaintiff, and to receive for the plaintiff any moneys won upon such bets, and to pay for the plaintiffs any moneys lost upon such bets. Between November 3 and 8, 1890, inclusive, the defendant received to the use of the plaintiff 417*l.* 10*s.* in respect of bets made and won for the plaintiff by the defendant on the terms above stated; the defendant's reward or commission on the above sum payable by the plaintiff amounting to 10*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* During the same period the defendant made and lost bets for the plaintiff to the amount of 192*l.* The plaintiff claimed 193*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, being the balance of the sum of 417*l.* 10*s.*, after deducting therefrom 10*l.* 8*s.* 9*d.* and 192*l.*, and also a further sum of 22*l.* due to the defendant from the plaintiff as money had and received by the defendant. The plaintiff lost on the horses Ben, Tortoise, Whistle Jacket, Touchwood, Theophilus, and Bookdale, and won on Vasistas and Queen of the Dale, The plaintiff further claimed the above sum on accounts stated on November 10, 1890. The defence was that these were wagering contracts void under the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, made between the parties as principals; and that it was part of the contract that if either party should make default in payment of any money lost, then all liability on the part of the other party should cease; and the defendant said that the plaintiff had failed to meet a cheque for 22*l.* in respect of such early in November, 1890. This writ was issued on December 5, 1890. In support of the plaintiff's case he himself was called and deposed to the employment of the defendant by letter after the meeting at Ascot in June, 1890. He said that in all the transactions represented by the accounts the mode of business was that the defendant should make bets with third persons in his behalf as his agent, charging him, the plaintiff, his commission. In various letters the defendant spoke of not being able 'to get on' certain horses, and of persons with whom he had made bets refusing to pay him. For the defence Mr. Peachey was called, and said he was a bookmaker, but preferred being described as a commission agent, as being the more respectable term. (Laughter.) He said he had never 'placed' any bets for the plaintiff, and that he had never received these moneys for the plaintiff. He attributed the expressions in the letter to his practice when he found himself too heavily committed on any particular horses of getting other bookmakers to take part of the bets off his hands. This process was known as 'hedging,' and he had to pay in some cases 5 per cent. or even 10 per cent. for the accommodation. The commission charged in the accounts was charged to country customers to cover expenses. (The accounts showed charges for 'expenses' in addition to the 'commission.') He was corroborated by his clerk, who said there were books, but they were not produced. The defendant also called two other gentlemen, Messrs. Harris and Day, of the same calling, who said that 'bookmakers' and 'commission agents' were practically and in many cases identical.—Mr. Candy, in summing up, relied on Cohen v. Kittell, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 241; L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 680, where it was held that no action lay for failure by a commission agent in accordance with his employment. Mr. Justice Manisty there said: 'A decision in favour of a plaintiff in this case would still further defeat the object of the statute, which, as the preamble shows, was to add to the strictness of the law with respect to gambling. Since the Act passed, however, and in consequence, as I cannot but think, of some of the decisions upon it, the practice which it was intended to discountenance has greatly increased, and that with results of a most disastrous character as regards both horse-racing and transactions in stocks.'—Mr. Talbot replied for the plaintiff, pointing out the documentary evidence was all one way as against the evidence of the defendant, unsupported by any books. The defendant in August wished to avail himself of the very position as to third parties which he now sought to deny.—Mr. Justice Charles, in giving judgment, said the question was whether the relation between the parties was that of principal and agent, or whether both parties were betting together as principals with each other. The defendant said that it was part of the contract that if either party should make default in payment of any money lost, then all liability on the part of the other party should forthwith cease; but he (the learned judge) did not think that that defence was made out, and thought that the contract contained no such term. If the true relation between the parties was that both were betting together as principals, then no action at law would lie to recover the money lost or won, and the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, would apply. If the relation was as principal and agent, then, according to Read v. Anderson, 52 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 214; L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 100; 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 532; L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 779, which many people thought was unfortunately decided, money owing under such contracts could be sued for and recovered. The plaintiff's case was clear, that he resided at Seaton, in Devonshire, and met the defendant at Ascot in June, 1890, and that the defendant sent him his terms and a card, in which the defendant was described as a 'commission agent,' and which stated that his terms were 5 per cent. commission. In spite of the evidence of Messrs. Harris & Day, called by the defendant, he could not think that 'bookmaker' and 'commission agent' were convertible terms, and meant the same thing. The account rendered weekly to the plaintiff showed the balance of what he (Moore) owed, and that the commission charged was 2½ per cent., and the plaintiff treats it as a commission for bets made on his behalf. But in August there was a stronger circumstance, when there was 100*l.* due. The defendant writes to the plaintiff that he cut off 40*l.* from that sum on the representation that persons who had made bets with him had not paid up, and the plaintiff said he took the 60*l.* and let the defendant off the remainder. And then, on September 23, the defendant said he had a lot of money on Gone Coon. On November 11 the plaintiff paid the defendant 22*l.* by cheque, which was dishonoured by accident, as there were not sufficient funds to meet it. After that a sum of money had been paid to the defendant. The defendant admitted that he had got it and wanted to keep it, as his country clients would not pay, and the defendant refused to pay it. The defendant says he never made bets with other people. But I cannot accept that statement, his assertion that he made the bets with himself. No books are brought here for me to inspect, or to bear out what they admit were carefully booked transactions. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the defendant has not displaced the case presented by the plaintiff, and that he is estopped by his conduct from saying that he betted as a principal. The plaintiff, therefore, I think, is entitled to a verdict and judgment for 193*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* as claimed, with costs.—Mr. G. J. Talbot (with whom was Mr. A. T. Lawrence) was counsel for the plaintiff; Mr. Candy, Q.C., and Mr. Pike appeared for the defendant.

THE VICTORIA LAW COURTS, BIRMINGHAM.

On July 30, in the new Victoria Law Courts, which the Prince of Wales opened last week, the Birmingham summer assizes commenced, and the occasion was marked by an address of welcome to the judges by the mayor and a reply by the Lord Chief Justice. At 11 o'clock Lord Coleridge and Mr. Justice Wills arrived at the Courts. There was a large gathering of the city justices to receive their lordships in the great hall, with the mayor (Alderman Clayton), wearing his chain of office, the recorder (Mr. Dugdale, Q.C., M.P.), the high sheriff (Mr. Beard), the town clerk (Mr. E. O. Smith), and the clerk of the peace (Mr. C. E. Mathews). There were also present a large number of members of the bar. The Lord Chief Justice wore the gold chain of his office, and Mr. Justice Wills wore the usual dark robes of a judge sitting in a civil Court. After the reception, a procession was formed, headed by the magistrates, and consisting of the town clerk, the mayor, the recorder, the under-sheriff (Mr. Heath), the high sheriff's chaplain (Canon Evans), the high sheriff, and the judges.

On the judges entering the Crown Court, the commission was opened, and the Mayor, addressing the judges, asked leave to say a few words on the first occasion of the opening of the commission of assize in those Courts. The corporation of Birmingham had for many years endeavoured to obtain for Birmingham the position of an assize town. After attempts extending over thirty years, in 1884 they were successful on the condition that Courts suitable for the administration of justice should be erected. As soon as they obtained that privilege they appointed a committee, which had for the last seven years worked very hard to produce the results their lordships saw that morning. If the Courts were not perfect, it was not for want of time or trouble or expense at the sole charge of the borough of Birmingham, without any contribution from the Imperial or county funds. No doubt it would be found that there were minor things required, but he asked their lordships' indulgence in any little difficulties they might find in connection with the administration of justice in the Courts. The city had been highly honoured in connection with the opening of the Courts. The foundation-stone was laid by Her Majesty in her Jubilee year. Their lordships would be aware that only last week the city had the honour of having the Courts formally opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales, and they had a great honour added in having the Lord Chief Justice of England present on that occasion, accompanied by Mr. Justice Wills, a Birmingham man they were proud to see once more amongst them. (Cheers.)

The Lord Chief Justice, in reply, said: Right Worshipful Sir, Gentlemen of the Corporation, and Magistrates of Birmingham,—I did not come here prepared to receive this address, and, therefore, anything that I say is the issue of the moment. But, on the part of my learned brother and myself, I cannot help both gratefully receiving and cordially returning the welcome you have been pleased to give us. I will only say that I trust that the justice which is administered in these Courts will be worthy of the shrine which you have chosen to erect for its administration; and this, at least, I may say, that it would be want of power, and not want of will, that would prevent us from fulfilling the expectation you have a right to form from the long and noble and unbroken traditions of that English bench to which it is the honour of both of us now to belong. (Cheers.)

In subsequently addressing the grand jury, his lordship remarked that he was very glad to meet so many county gentlemen present, for, although the Courts, as the mayor had said, had been the creation of the city of Birmingham, yet business from the county had to be transacted there. The calendar which would be presented was neither large with regard to the number of its items nor grave in the character of the crime of which it was composed. Considering that they were dealing with an enormous town and a neighbourhood in many parts most densely populated, a calendar containing the names of twenty-seven persons and few serious cases was not an unusual one. After briefly referring to one of the worst cases on the calendar—a charge of wilful murder—he said few people had opportunities of realising as he did the terrible effects produced by intemperance. Of course, there were cases which stood quite aside from the influence of the publichouse—crimes such as perjury, forgery, false pretences, and others which required the assistance of education; but drunkenness was mainly the cause of the commoner sorts of crime; and if England could be made sober three-fourths of her gaols could be closed. He trusted all in positions of authority would do what they could to set their faces against this great evil. Another crime that appeared to be on the increase was perjury. The crime of perjury was one of such enormity and wickedness that the code of punishment was not sufficiently severe, especially considering the cruel results which might follow. Perjury corrupted justice at the fountain-head, and turned the Court into a field of triumph for successful fraud. It was impossible to say anything too strong in denunciation of perjury; but it must be remembered that unsuccessful prosecutions for perjury caused mischief, because the failure of the prosecution suggested to people likely to give way to perjury that, after all, there was not very much danger. Therefore, it was to be hoped in such cases the grand jury would not return true bills unless they were tolerably certain of a conviction.

In the evening the judges were entertained by the Mayor at a banquet, at which the local magistrates and members of the bar were also present.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT AMONG THE JEWS.

In a work on the 'Criminal Code of the Jews,' Mr. Benny gives an interesting account of the various modes of punishment of those convicted under the Hebrew law of capital offences. In accordance with the Mosaic code four kinds of death were inflicted, each appropriate to a distinct series of crimes. These were stoning, strangling, burning, and decapitation. Nothing can be more absurd, says the author, than the notions generally current respecting the manner in which these punishments were carried out among the Jews. The stoning of the Bible and of the Talmud was not, as commonly supposed, a pell-mell casting of stones at a criminal; the burning had nothing whatever in common with the process of consuming by fire a living person as practised by the Churchmen of the Middle Ages; nor did the strangling bear any resemblance to the English method of putting criminals to death.

The stoning to death of the Talmud was performed as follows: The criminal was conducted to an elevated place, divested of his attire, if a man, and then hurled to the ground below. The height of the eminence from which he was thrown was always more than fifteen feet; the higher, within certain limits, the better. The violence of the concussion caused death by dislocating the spinal cord. The elevation was not, however, to be so high as to greatly disfigure the body. This was a tender point with the Jews; man was created in God's image, and it was not permitted to desecrate the temple shaped by heaven's own hand. The first of the witnesses who had testified against the condemned man acted as executioner, in accordance with Deut. xvii. 7. If the convict fell face downward, he was turned on his back. If he was not quite dead, a stone, so heavy as to require two persons to carry it, was taken to the top of the eminence whence he had been thrown; the second of the witnesses then hurled the stone so as to fall upon the culprit below. This process, however, was seldom necessary; the semi-stupefied condition of the condemned, and the height from which he was cast insuring, in the generality of cases, instant death.

It may be well to mention, in this connection, that previous to the carrying into effect a sentence of death, a death draught, as it was called, was administered to the unfortunate victim. This beverage was composed of myrrh and frankincense (lebana) in a cup of vinegar or light wine. It produced a kind of stupefaction, a semi-conscious condition of mind and body, rendering the convict indifferent to his fate and scarcely sensible to pain. As soon as the culprit had partaken of the stupefying draught the execution took place.

A criminal sentenced to death by burning was executed in the following manner: A shallow pit some two feet deep was dug in the ground. In this the culprit was placed, standing upright. Around his legs earth was shovelled and battered firmly down until he was fixed up to his knees in the soil. Movement on the part of the condemned person was, of course, impossible; but care was taken that the limbs should not be painfully constrained. A strong cord was now brought, and a very soft cloth wrapped around it. This was passed once round the offender's neck. Two men came forward; each grasped an end of the rope and pulled hard. Suffocation was immediate. As the condemned man felt the strain of the cord, and insensibility supervened, the lower jaw dropped. Into the mouth thus opened a lighted wick was quickly thrown. This constituted the burning.

Decapitation was performed by the Jews after the fashion of the surrounding nations. It was considered the most humiliating, the most ignominious and degrading death that any man could suffer. It was the penalty in cases of assassination and deliberate murder. It was incurred by those who wilfully and wantonly slew a fellow-man with a stone or with an implement of stone or iron. It was likewise the punishment meted out to all persons who resided in a town the inhabitants of which had allowed themselves to be seduced to idolatry and paganism.

Strangulation was a form of death by suffocation. It was effected as in burning. The culprit stood up to his knees in loose earth. A soft cloth containing a cord was wound once round his neck. The ends being pulled in opposite directions, life was soon extinct. This mode of death was the punishment of one who struck his father or his mother; of any one stealing a fellow Israelite; of a false prophet; of an elder or provincial judge who taught or acted contrary to the decision of the Great Sanhedri of Jerusalem; and of some other crimes against public morals.

These four deaths, as above described, were the only modes of execution in accordance with Hebrew law.

Green Bag.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. Uttley, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE AT LIVERPOOL.

In charging the grand jury at the Liverpool Assizes the judge said that the calendar showed that crime in the county was small, and the same remark would apply to the quality, excepting in one case. He congratulated the magistrates upon the fact that they had logically carried out the terms of the Assizes Relief Act. In some counties it was not so well carried out. In Liverpool, however, it was so thoroughly adhered to that he believed there was not one case in the calendar that should have been tried at the sessions. He had been on this circuit six or seven times and had seen at times over one hundred prisoners for trial at these assizes. The grave case with which the jury would have to deal was the one in which John Conway, a delegate and secretary to the Seamen's Union, was charged with the murder of a boy at Liverpool. A foul murder had, no doubt, been committed, but the murderer, whoever he was, when he threw the bag into the water seemed to forget that it would float. His lordship proceeded to review the evidence which connected the prisoner with the death of the boy, and considered that the grand jury, after hearing the evidence would be of opinion that there was a prima facie case against the prisoner. It could, however, be said on his behalf that there appeared to be no motive for the crime, nor did he (the judge) find one in looking over the depositions. He could not, however, leave this case without adding that if the evidence was true they need not go further to try to find out what the motive was.

NOTICE TO A BANK.

An interesting point in banking arose at the Manchester Assizes recently, the question at issue being with regard to a bill of exchange for 1,500*l.* drawn by Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. and accepted by Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson. Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. are merchants in Manchester, and Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson also carried on business there till they suspended payment in the beginning of the present year. The two firms exported Manchester goods to China on joint account. Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson bought goods after consultation with Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co., and consigned them to the China agents of the latter firm. The proceeds were remitted to England, and the two firms shared the profits or the losses. The transactions were financed by drafts of Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson upon Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. The bills were drawn at six months, and, as a rule, the proceeds of the sale in China arrived in time to retire the bills drawn in respect of them. At the beginning of this year a number of acceptances had matured before the corresponding funds arrived from China, and Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. were out of pocket to the extent of between 1,500*l.* and 1,600*l.* The joint account would, in the ordinary course of things, have been debited with interest at 5 per cent.

on the amount of the advance, and, as the rate of discount was low at the time, it was arranged, in order to put Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. in funds, that Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson should draw a bill upon them for 1,500*l.* at three months. This bill was now the matter in dispute. Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson paid the bill into the bank, and the plaintiff's case was that it was explained to the manager that a cheque would be drawn against it in favour of Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co., and that it was not to affect Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson's account. Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson were in difficulties at this time, and being unable to obtain further advances from the bank suspended payment. The bank applied the bill towards the reduction of Messrs. Herford & Tomkinson's debit balance, and in a cross action, which was tried with the present issue, sought to recover the amount of the bill from Messrs. Farbridge, Holliday & Co. The judge said the issue was a very small one, the real point being whether the bank had notice that if they discounted the bill the money was hypothecated to meet a cheque drawn by Herford & Tomkinson in favour of Farbridge, Holliday & Co., or, in other words, that the 1,500*l.* which formed the proceeds of the bill was to be held and kept for the specific purpose of meeting a cheque which was to be drawn in favour of Farbridge, Holliday & Co. If the bank had such notice it was, as a matter of law, wrong in both actions; if it had not such notice, then in law the bank was right in both actions. The jury said they found that the plaintiff had not proved that due notice was given to the bank with respect to the special hypothecation of the bill, whereupon his lordship said that that was a verdict for the defendants in the first case, and, in the other, for the amount of the bill, and gave judgment to that effect.

PENALTY FOR NOT COMMITTING BIGAMY.

This is the heading the newspapers have put to a case heard at the Nottingham Assizes, where an action for breach of promise was brought in which the daughter of a cabinet-maker sued an organ-builder for damages in respect of a breach of promise of marriage. Counsel for plaintiff said it was alleged in defence that at the time the promise was stated to have been made the defendant was a married man and the plaintiff knew it. He had pretended to be single, but was, in fact, a married man, and had endeavoured to get the plaintiff away. He began to pay attention to her, representing himself as a widower possessing some property, and plaintiff broke off an engagement she had entered into with another person in the town in order to become engaged to defendant. He promised to marry her and took her to Sheffield, where he bought her a wedding-ring. On the way back, however, he told her he was married, whereupon she was very indignant and refused to have anything to do with him. Defendant denied making the promise of marriage. He also stated that he never said he was a widower. The judge held that, while plaintiff might have acted with more circumspection, defendant's conduct had been mean and contemptible, and the jury awarded a verdict of damages and costs against him.

COLLIE-DOGS AND FIRST OFFENCES.

Quarrels are continually taking place amongst neighbours about dogs, or, it may be, hens, or cats. No one who has been accustomed to keep such animals has doubtless ever been able to avoid a dispute. These differences sometimes culminate in proceedings, as was the case at Guildford. A bank manager had complained that a collie had frightened his horse and caused it to bolt, and that as a result the horse was so injured that it had to be killed, and he brought an action at the Guildford Assizes claiming damages against the collie's master. There was no evidence that the dog had misbehaved before. The learned judge, however, said that testimony to this effect was not necessary in the case of collies, because an Act recently passed for the protection of sheep singled out that species of the breed as punishable on a first offence unlike all other dogs, and the jury accordingly awarded 30*l.* as damages against the collie's master. If the clause of this Act were extended to all dogs and to the protection of every animal and human being many persons would doubtless consider it a boon, and it might in some degrees necessitate less strictness than is usual in the case of the unpopular muzzling orders.

INSURANCE OF MANUSCRIPTS.

A warning has been issued by the Incorporated Society of Authors that a quire stock of books, if it should be destroyed by fire either at a printer's or a publisher's, is, in the great majority of cases, practically lost to an author if he should not have sold it out and out. In hardly any agreement, as pointed out, is provision made for insurance of this stock, and without insurance or negligence on the part of either publisher and printer the author must bear the whole loss of fire. Manuscript, it was alleged, could not be insured at all, no fire office being willing to undertake the risk. This allegation does not seem, however, quite correct, as an author states that he insured a manuscript in a certain company, paying 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. on the value, and this insurance covered the risk at the author's own house, at the publisher's, and at the printer's. An Authors' Manuscript and Literary Insurance Company might prove a useful boon to authors.

LEGAL OWNERS OF TREASURE TROVE.

At Rio Janeiro is a castle yclept San Antonio, which is now being demolished by order of the Brazilian Government. In the cellars of that edifice there have been dug up twelve iron-clamped chests and sixteen sacs containing 70,000,000 old Spanish dollars in gold, plus a leaden box filled with papers. One of these documents is a receipt given by a Father Anton Desarte, superior of the Jesuits' College at Rio, for 20,000,000 of gold dollars, to be paid by him as a tribute to King John of Portugal when he visited Brazil. In the eighteenth century the Marquis de Pomlal expelled the Jesuit order from Portugal, and it is conjectured that the Jesuits at Rio, hearing of this, hid the treasures just discovered. A list of the wealth was left in the leaden box, there being 70,000,000 dollars, 2,800 lb. of gold dust, and 20,000 lb. weight of gold ingots. To whom, it is asked, does this treasure now belong—to the Republic, the King of Portugal, the Jesuits, or the contractors who are demolishing the castle?

ORDER OF COURT.

Thursday, July 30, 1891.

Whereas, the Right Honourable Lord Justice Fry has at my request consented to sit and act as an additional judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, on July 31, 1891, and thenceforward up to the close of the present Trinity Sittings; and whereas it is expedient that the causes and matters assigned by the order dated May 12, 1891, to the Honourable Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams for the purpose of hearing the same or any application therein, should be heard or tried before such additional judge; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that such of the several causes and matters so assigned which have not been disposed of by the said Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, other than the cause of Beaumont v. The Provident Assurance Company (Lim.), be accordingly transferred from the said Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams to the Right Honourable

Lord Justice Fry for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, and be marked in the cause books accordingly; and I do also order that such of the said causes and matters as remain undisposed of at the close of such sittings be retransferred (without further order) for the purpose aforesaid to the Honourable Mr. Justice Romer. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. HALSBURY, C.

ORDER OF TRANSFER.

Saturday, August 1, 1891.

WHEREAS, the Right Honourable Lord Justice Fry has at my request consented to sit and act as an additional judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice up to the close of the present Trinity Sittings; and whereas it is expedient that in addition to the causes and matters transferred by the order dated July 30, 1891, a portion of the causes and matters transferred to the Honourable Mr. Justice Romer for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, should be heard or tried before such additional judge; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that the several causes and matters set forth in the schedule hereto, be accordingly transferred from the Honourable Mr. Justice Romer to the Right Honourable Lord Justice Fry for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, and be marked in the cause books accordingly; and I do also order that such of the said causes and matters as remain undisposed of at the close of such sittings be retransferred (without further order) for the purpose aforesaid to the Honourable Mr. Justice Romer. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

SCHEDULE.

Hazlehurst v. Rylands—1890 H. 1,193
Burdett v. Gorton—1891 B. 381
In re Coningham, dec. Coningham v. Coningham—1890 C. 2,978
Hall v. Hall—1890 H. 4,335
Driggs Ordnance Co. v. Driggs & Schroeder Ordnance Co. (Lim.)—1890 D. 1,883
Falk v. Falk—1891 F. 131
Molineaux v. Gartside—1890 M. 3,193
Vennell v. Meakin—1891 V. 19
Rothwell v. Abrahams—1891 R. 132
Cowood v. Vernon—1890 C. 1,143
New Skegby Colliery Co. (Lim.) v. R. W. Dodsley—1890 N. 1,042
Soppett v. Whiting—1891 S. 286
Isaacs v. Isaacs—1890 I. 1,457
Howell v. Broomhead—1890 H. 4,245
Layton v. Patent Lithographic Zinc Co. (Lim.)—1890 L. 2,165
In re Beckett, dec. Lyons v. Hart—1890 B. 1,488
Davey v. Hugill—1891 D. 316
Kelsey v. Hodgkinson—1891 K. 129
Ellissen v. Surrey Machinists Co. (Lim.)—1891 E. 18
Watts v. Paynter—1891 W. 51

HALSBURY, C.

LONG VACATION NOTICE.

DURING the vacation, until further notice, all applications which may require to be immediately or promptly heard are to be made to the judges who for the time being shall act as vacation judges.

Mr. Justice Collins, one of the vacation judges, will, until further notice, sit in Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Court I., Royal Courts of Justice, at 11 A.M. on Wednesday in every week, commencing on Wednesday, August 19, for the purpose of hearing such applications of the above nature as, according to the practice in the Chancery Division, are usually heard in Court.

No case will be placed in the judge's paper unless leave has been previously obtained, or a certificate of counsel that the case requires to be immediately or promptly heard, and stating concisely the reasons, is left with the papers.

The necessary papers, relating to every application made to the vacation judges (see notice below as to judges' papers), are to be left with the cause clerk in attendance, Chancery Registrars' Chambers (Room 136), Royal Courts of Justice, before one o'clock on the Monday previous to the day on which the application is intended to be made. When the cause clerk is not in attendance they may be left at Room 136, under cover, addressed to him, marked outside 'Chancery Vacation Papers,' or they may be sent by post, but in either case so as to be received by the time aforesaid.

In any case of great urgency the brief of counsel is to be sent to the judge by post, or rail, prepaid, accompanied by office copies of the affidavits in support of the application, and also by a minute, on a separate sheet of paper, signed by counsel, of the order he may consider the applicant entitled to, and also an envelope, sufficiently stamped, capable of receiving the papers, addressed as follows: 'Chancery Official Letter: To the Registrar in Vacation, Chancery Registrars' Chambers, Royal Courts of Justice, London, W.C.'

On applications for injunctions, in addition to the above, a copy of the writ, and a certificate of writ issued, must also be sent.

The papers sent to the judge will be returned to the registrar.

The chambers of Mr. Justice Kekewich will be open on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in every week, from 10 to 2 o'clock. Mr. Justice Collins will, until further notice, hear urgent summonses, which may be adjourned to him (Room 648), in the Royal Courts of Justice (Carey Street entrance), on Friday, August 14, at 10.30 A.M., and subsequently on Wednesday in every week, at 10 A.M., commencing August 19. A further time will be appointed for any cases that cannot then be conveniently disposed of.

The address of the judge for the time being acting as vacation judge in the Chancery Division can be obtained on application at the Chancery Registrars' Chambers, Room 136.

Judges' Papers.

The following papers for the vacation judge are required to be left with the cause clerk in attendance at the Chancery Registrars' Chambers, Room 136, on or before the Monday previous to the day on which the application to the judge is intended to be made:—

1. Counsel's certificate of urgency, or note of special leave granted by the judge.
2. Two copies of writ and two copies of pleadings (if any) and any other documents showing the nature of the application.
3. Two copies of notice of motion.
4. Office copy affidavits in support with exhibits, and also the affidavits in answer.

N.B.—Solicitors are requested, when the application has been disposed of, to apply at once to the judge's clerk in Court for the return of their papers.

NOTICE TO SOLICITORS.

Chancery Registrars' Office.

The Chancery Registrars' Office will be open daily. On Tuesday, August 18, and on the same day in every succeeding week during the vacation, the registrar in attendance will see solicitors requiring alterations necessary in orders to be acted on by the paymaster; but the order, and any necessary papers, and a notification of the amendment as required by rule 27 of the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1886, ought to be left at his seat not later than 12 o'clock on the previous day.

Chancery Registrars' Chambers,
Royal Courts of Justice: July 29, 1891.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM AUGUST 10 TO AUGUST 15.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Aug. 10	Aug. 11	Aug. 12	Aug. 13	Aug. 14	Aug. 15
7	Judge Pitoulkes	—	Altrincham	—	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Thirsk	Helmsley	Knaresborough	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	Derby	Alfreton	Ilkeston	Bakewell	Buxton	—
28	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Hanley	Hanley	Uttoxeter	Tunstall	Cheadle
54	Judge Metcalfe	—	—	—	—	Bristol	Bristol
55	Judge Mackenochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
57	Judge Paterson	Tiverton	Barnstaple	Bideford	Southmolton	Torrington	Axminster

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 30.

Pollock v. Sharpe (application of plaintiff from refusal of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated June 12, to order review of taxation of receiver's costs; heard July 28).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

Hamlyn & Co. v. Wood & Co. (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 26, at trial before Mathew, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JULY 31.

In re Browne & Wingrove (ex parte Gustav Ador) (appeal of Gustav Ador from order of Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated June 23, refusing direction to trustee to pay dividend on admitted proof).—Cur. adv. vult.

Crompton & Co. (Lim.) v. Phillips (1890—C.—289). Phillips v. Crompton & Co. (Lim.) (1890—P.—317) (application of defendant C. H. Phillips for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 23, at trial before Day, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1.

In re C. W. Rogers, ex parte Holland & Hannen (appeal of Messrs. Holland & Hannen from order of Cave, J., dated July 2, on motion of trustee to refund payment after bankruptcy).—Part heard.

Before BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, AUGUST 3.

Cave v. Leslie (appeal of plaintiff from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Mathew, J., dated April 9, dismissing action as frivolous and vexatious).—Order varied.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

In re C. W. Rogers, ex parte Holland and Hannen.—Cur. adv. vult.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 4.

Crompton & Co. (Lim.) v. Phillips (1890—C.—289).—Phillips v. Crompton & Co. (Lim.) (1890—P.—317).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5.

Crompton & Co. (Lim.) v. Phillips (1890—C.—289).—Phillips v. Crompton & Co. (Lim.) (1890—P.—317).—Refused.

Monk and Wife v. Consolidated Co. (Lim.) and others (application of plaintiffs in person, for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated June 24, at trial before Day, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

Ritter v. Metropolitan Railway Company (application of plaintiff for judgment, or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 27, at trial before Hawkins, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JULY 30.

Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others (appeal of defendants Raymond and Reid from judgment of Mathew, J., dated February 11, at trial without a jury in Middlesex; cur. adv. vult. June 23—present Lindley, L.J., Fry, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.).—Allowed.

Levy v. Wartman & Co. (appeal of defendant company from order of Romer, J., for North, J., dated July 24, restraining defendants from selling cigars and issuing circulars).—Dismissed.

Welby v. Still (appeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated July 7, upon summons refusing further particulars of claim).—Varied.

London and North-Western Railway Company v. Lee (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated June 23, for particulars of claim in respect of carriage of goods).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

Medwin v. Gibson (appeal of defendants from order of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated July 15, affirming refusal to strike out counterclaim).—Dismissed.

Morris v. Keyes (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated July 6, setting aside orders for judgment for limited amount under Order XIV., and giving judgment for whole amount claimed).—Dismissed on terms.

Singleton & Co. v. Faithfull (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated July 15, for judgment in default of reduced payment into Court or security).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, JULY 31.

No sitting.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1.

No sitting.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, AUGUST 3.

London Printing and Publishing Alliance (Lim.) v. Cox (appeal of defendant from judgment of Williams, J., sitting as an additional judge of the Chancery Division, dated May 13, heard July 22—present, Lindley, L.J., Fry, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.).—Appeal allowed.

Hanbury (petitioner) v. Hanbury (respondent) (appeal of petitioner (C. M. Hanbury) from order of Jeune, J., dated July 7, for father's custody of children until October 24, with access by mother). — Appeal dismissed.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 4.

Smith v. Rodgers (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated May 1, discharging chief clerk's certificate with reference back to chambers—heard July 29). —Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5.

No sitting.

REFRESHMENTS AT THE ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE.—In answer to Mr. Morton, on July 31, the Attorney-General said: Licenses are required at the Royal Courts of Justice because, being in several districts and refreshments being sold to the public, licenses are necessary. I am informed that licenses have never been considered necessary in the House of Commons on the ground that the buildings form part of a royal palace. (Hear, hear.) —In answer to Mr. Cobb, Mr. Jackson said: I am informed that the parties to the contract are the Permanent Secretary to the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Elliott, the contractor. I have no knowledge of the details of the arrangements in the Courts, and I should be inclined to doubt whether there are numerous members of the legal profession who have acquired habits of intemperance through any difficulty in obtaining tea or coffee in the Courts; but I will communicate with the Lord Chancellor's department, if the hon. member wishes it, or perhaps the hon. member will do so himself. (Hear.)—Mr. Cobb said he did wish it, as a representation would come with greater weight from the right hon. gentleman. He might inform the right hon. gentleman that he was wrong about members of the bar and habits of intemperance.—Mr. Jackson: Perhaps the hon. member will furnish me with the names of the members of the bar to whom he refers. (Laughter.)

THE MAYORALTY.—Owing to the unexpected retirement of Mr. Alderman Gray, who stood next in succession to the mayoralty of the City, some doubt recently arose as to which of the junior aldermen would present himself for election. Mr. Alderman Evans, whose year of office, but for Mr. Gray's resignation, would have fallen in 1893, has now intimated that he will be prepared to serve next year should the choice of the Livery and the Court of Aldermen be so indicated. His return, in these circumstances, will be unopposed. Mr. Alderman Evans has been a member of the Corporation since 1874, and was elected Alderman of Castle Baynard Ward in July, 1884. He served the office of sheriff of London and Middlesex in 1885–86 in the mayoralty of the late Sir John Staples.

TURF RECIPROCITY.—The stewards of the Jockey Club, in accordance with the resolution passed at a meeting held on April 29, issued a circular to the jockey clubs of Europe, America, and the British colonies, inviting a formal agreement of reciprocity for the purpose of preventing the following offenders under the rules of one country from engaging in racing in another—viz. (1) Persons found guilty of corrupt practices on the turf; (2) defaulters for stakes and forfeits; (3) jockeys whose licenses have been refused or withdrawn; and (4) stable lads discharged without a character. They have received letters of acceptance from the following: The Austrian Jockey Club, the Union Club (Berlin), the Hungarian Jockey Club, the Italian Jockey Club, the Calcutta Turf Club, the Turf Club of Western India, the Dutch Racing Association, and the Belgian Jockey Club.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, August 10. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Bolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Tuesday, August 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Wednesday, August 12.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Bolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

The Long Vacation will commence on Thursday, August 13, and terminate on Friday, October 23, both days inclusive.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH.—The last service at the Temple Church, prior to the Long Vacation, will take place on Sunday, August 9, when the Very Rev. Dr. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff, will preach in the morning. After that date the church will remain closed until Sunday, October 4.

GRAY'S INN.—The benchers of Gray's Inn have again resolved that from August 1 until September 30, inclusive, children (boys over ten years of age excepted) be admitted to the gardens without orders between 6 P.M. and 8 P.M. (wet days excepted). The gardens have for years past been practically open to the public, inasmuch as benchers' orders have been liberally given. This order is intended to benefit children of the very poorest class.

QUARTER SESSIONS.—Lord Coleridge, at Birmingham, finding that nine persons were lying in gaol awaiting their trial at the quarter sessions, which do not take place until October next, said that he regarded it as most objectionable that men, some of whom might be innocent, should be detained for months without being brought to trial. He accordingly had them all produced in Court, and discharged them on their own recognisances to appear at the next sessions. His lordship strongly expressed an opinion that, in exercising their discretion under the Assizes Relief Act as to whether they should commit to sessions or assizes, magistrates should pay the utmost regard to securing as early a trial as possible.

MR. NAPIER HIGGINS, Q.C.—Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., will retire from practice at the end of the present sittings. Mr. Higgins was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1851, and, after acquiring an extensive practice as a junior, was made a Queen's Counsel in 1872. For many years he divided with the late Mr. Glasse, Q.C., the leading business in Vice-Chancellor Malins's Court, and latterly the learned gentleman has practised in the Court of Mr. Justice North, of which he has been the leader for some time. Mr. Higgins is vice-president of the Council of Legal Education, and he has always been a strenuous advocate and supporter of the reforms recently effected in the mode of admission and education of law students in that institution. He has likewise always taken an active interest in all matters relating to the welfare of the bar, and the establishment of the Inns of Court Bar Library at the Royal Courts of Justice was almost wholly due to his initiative. The learned gentleman is also treasurer of Lincoln's Inn for the present year. Though retiring from practice, it is hoped that Mr. Higgins will continue to retain his place on the various committees connected with the bar.

Accident at the Middle Temple Library.—This week, while some workmen were engaged erecting the scaffolding for the repairs to be carried out at the Middle Temple Library, one of them fell therefrom and was picked up in an insensible condition. The unfortunate man was afterwards conveyed to the hospital.

Admiralty Jurisdiction.—In the City of London Court, on July 28, before Mr. Commissioner Kerr, under the Admiralty jurisdiction of the Court, the case of Green and others v. Payne was heard, in which the plaintiffs, bargeowners, carrying on business in the City, sought to recover 150*l.* damages occasioned to their barges by the defendant, Mr. G. F. Payne, Trinity House pilot.—Mr. Butler Aspinall, counsel for the defendant, objected to the jurisdiction of the Court, on the ground that a pilot who was in charge of a vessel by compulsion of law could not be sued under the Admiralty jurisdiction, as in this instance.—Mr. Laing, counsel for the plaintiffs, urged that that was not so.—Mr. Commissioner Kerr thought that the Court had no jurisdiction under the circumstances, and that he must dismiss the suit accordingly, but he hoped there would be an appeal, as the question was one of great importance to the City of London.

Trustees and Executors' Association.—A second meeting in furtherance of the establishment of this association was held at the Cannon Street Hotel on August 4. Mr. Stanley A. Latham presided. It was explained that the objects of the association were the co-operation and mutual benefit of trustees and executors of the United Kingdom, with a view to remedy, and, if possible, remove, such liabilities and responsibilities of trusteeship as appear to press harshly and unjustly upon trustees, and to obtain such amendments of the existing law as may seem desirable. The association will assist, by advice, legal assistance, or money grants, cases of difficulty and hardship arising from trusteeship or executorship amongst its members, and a series of monthly meetings will be held by the association at which members will be invited to read papers and discuss matters connected with the objects of the association. Meetings will also be held for the purpose of calling public attention to, and assisting the passing of, Mr. Goschen's Trustee Bill, which will be reintroduced into the House of Commons next session. Resolutions embodying those intentions were adopted, and it was also resolved that the association should consist of a president, two or more vice-presidents, general council, executive committee, and the usual officers. It was further decided that an annual meeting and conference of members of the association should be held in London during the month of July. A provisional executive committee of eight gentlemen was formed, and Mr. T. Bowden Green, 1 Finsbury Circus, E.C., was requested to act temporarily as secretary of the association.

Solicitors as Advocates in County Courts.—In July, 1890, at a general meeting of the members of the Incorporated Law Society, a motion was brought forward by Mr. Charles Ford, of London, and seconded by Mr. C. T. Sanders, of Birmingham, and carried, calling for the repeal of so much of section 72 of the County Courts Act, 1888, as prohibits the solicitor of a suitor in a County Court from retaining another solicitor to appear in such Courts as the advocate for such suitor. In the following August Mr. Charles Ford issued a circular letter to all the provincial law societies of England and Wales inviting their opinion upon the above-named resolution, and we understand that he received replies from, among others, the following law societies expressing an unqualified approval of the resolution, and in the majority of cases the governing bodies of such law societies have, since August, 1890, adopted similar resolutions. The law societies in question are as follows: Hull, Dewsbury, Leeds, Chester and North Wales, Swansea, Blackburn, Liverpool, Birmingham, Berkshire, Oxfordshire, Great Yarmouth, and the Associated Provincial Law Society. If country law societies are really in earnest upon this subject something more must be done. A deputation should wait upon the Lord Chancellor, and a bill providing for the repeal of the obnoxious clause should be introduced into Parliament. We believe, as a matter of fact, that it is not an uncommon practice for solicitors who practise as advocates in County Courts to take a direct retainer from the client of another solicitor who wishes his professional brother to represent the client as a County Court advocate.

The Long Vacation.—Mr. Justice Jeune and Mr. Justice Collins will be the two Long Vacation judges, and the latter will sit during the first part and Mr. Justice Jeune will take the second half of the vacation. One of the two vacation judges will sit in open Court every Wednesday during the vacation, commencing on Wednesday, August 19, for the purpose of hearing ex parte motions and applications in the Chancery Division requiring to be immediately and promptly heard, but no case will be put in the Court paper unless leave has previously been obtained on a certificate of counsel that it is urgent. Queen's Bench summonses and applications in that division will be heard at Judges' Chambers, Strand, before one of the Vacation judges every Tuesday and Thursday during the Vacation, which commences on Wednesday, August 12, and ends on Friday, October 23.

BIRTHS.

On July 30, at 25 Devonshire Terrace, Hyde Park, the wife of T. Willes Chitty, Esq., of the Inner Temple, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On July 1, at Riverside, Fort Hare, South Africa, Henry Timson Lukin, Lieutenant Cape Mounted Riflemen, eldest son of Robert Henry Lukin, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, to Lily, third daughter of M. H. Quinn, Esq., of Fort Hare, South Africa.

On July 28, at Elgin, N.B., Robertson Barclay Gordon, Solicitor, Elgin, youngest son of the Rev. George Gordon, LL.D. (late of Birnie), Braebirnie, Elgin, to Marjory Frances, second daughter of the late George Duff, Esq., M.D., Elgin.

On July 30, at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, Roandeu Albert Henry Bickford-Smith, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of William Bickford-Smith, M.P. for Truro, to Caroline Louisa Marianne (Carina), only daughter of J. E. Hilary Skinner, of the Northern Circuit.

On July 30, at St. Gabriel's, Warwick Square, S.W., William Albert, son of the late Dr. William Boswell, of Quebec, to Florence Helen, daughter of W. D. Rotch, Barrister-at-Law, of Waterloo, Liverpool.

On July 30, at St. Edward's, Romford, Joseph Child Priestley, Barrister-at-Law, of the Inner Temple, younger son of Dr. Priestley, of 17 Hertford Street, to Annette Maud Warner, younger daughter of Ralph George Price, Esq., of Marshalls Park, Romford.

On July 30, at St. Margaret's Church, Lowestoft, Charles Blackwell Foster, second son of Francis G. Foster, Solicitor, Norwich, to Emily Caroline Phyllis, younger daughter of James Ray, M.R.C.S., of Oulton Broad, Lowestoft.

On Aug. 1, at the Parish Church, Albury, Surrey, James Thomas Gruning Donaldson, Barrister-at-Law, second son of the late James Smollett Donaldson, Esq., to Minnie, second daughter of the late John Beevis, Esq., of Broadwindsor, Dorset.

On Aug. 1, at St. Thomas's, Portman Square, Arthur Vaughan Williams, son of the late Judge Vaughan Williams, to Evelyn, only daughter of Thomas Gooch, of Shantock, Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

On Aug. 4, at St. John's Church, Putney, Harry Graham Bennet, youngest son of the late J. C. Graham Bennet, Solicitor, of Hackney, to Florence Eleanor Marian, eldest daughter of George Hampton, of Woodfield, Putney Hill, S.W.

DEATHS.

On July 11, at Simla, of influenza, Elizabeth, the beloved wife of Charles Arthur Roe, Bengal Civil Service, Judge of the Chief Court, Lahore, Punjab, aged 41.

On July 24, at his residence, Gibraltar Place, Chatham, Matthew Spray Stephens, Solicitor, in his 93rd year.

On Aug. 1, Thomas Keene, of 36 Brunswick Square, and 15 Seething Lane, E.C., Solicitor, in his 57th year.

On Aug. 3, at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, William Edward Smith, Solicitor, aged 73.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

Court of Appeal No. I. adjourned on Monday last for the Long Vacation. Owing to the absence of the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Lopes the other branch of the Court had not been sitting for some ten days previously. The state of business in both divisions is, however, very satisfactory, there being but few arrears. The somewhat early adjournment was therefore fully justified after a continuous sitting of nearly two months and a half.

Only eight judges of the High Court were sitting on Wednesday, the last day of the sittings. The bench of the Chancery Division was represented by Mr. Justice Stirling and Mr. Justice Romer, while in the Queen's Bench Division two Divisional Courts were sitting to hear motions, composed of Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Williams and Mr. Justice Wills and Mr. Justice Charles respectively. In the Probate and Divorce Division Mr. Justice Jeune and Mr. Justice Collins both sat and took undefended Divorce causes.

After a long and distinguished career at the Chancery Bar Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., has retired into private life. The respect and goodwill with which the learned gentleman is regarded by both bench and bar found appropriate expression in the kindly remarks made by Mr. Justice Romer on Tuesday last.

Another recent social event interesting to the legal profession is the marriage of Mr. Justice Wright, which took place on the 11th inst. in the presence of Lord and Lady Coleridge, Lord and Lady Esher, and many other distinguished persons. The wedding of the judge—still a comparatively young man—is significant of the much earlier age at which some of the most distinguished members of the bar have of late years been raised to the bench. The advantage of this to the public is beyond doubt; but whether it tends to relieve the increasing competition in the front rank of the bar can scarcely be foretold at present.

The Long Vacation has now at last commenced, and by the time these lines are printed the majority of lawyers will be disporting themselves in various manners amid the attractions of some one or other of the many hundreds of places of refreshment with which the face of Europe is so plentifully studded. The question cannot but arise, however, with the shortening days, why should not the Long Vacation have an earlier beginning? It may well be doubted whether those who penned the Long Vacation order of 1884, whereby the Trinity Sittings of the Supreme Court were extended from August 8 to August 12, made a step in the right direction, and whether it would not have been better to have arranged for a holiday beginning at least as early as August 1, and ending earlier in October.

The arrangements for the Plymouth meeting of the Incorporated Law Society are now complete. A very attractive programme has been prepared, including visits to the chief places of interest in the town, while the 'excursions' range from St. Michael's Mount to Princetown on Dartmoor, with a trip up the Tamar to Calstock. The 'business' of the meeting will consist, as usual, of the president's address, and the reading and discussion of papers by members of the society. Whether the earlier date fixed for the provincial meeting this year will have the effect of increasing the attendance remains to be seen. Country solicitors who are interested in brewster sessions will probably find some difficulty in getting away during the last week in August.

Mr. Justice Stirling's judgment in the Marquis of Ailesbury's application for leave to sell the Savernake settled estate was characterised by sound common sense. While the question of an appeal is still open it would be unfair to express too strong an opinion on the merits of the case; but this at least may be said without imprudence. The power given to the Courts to deal with 'settled estates' was certainly intended to be used for the advantage of all the persons interested in a property, and not as an inducement to extravagant living and improvidence. The ultimate result will be looked for with much interest.

In dealing with an appeal from Chambers on Wednesday, Mr. Justice Williams stated that the result of his experience at the bar and upon the bench was that English witnesses who are not parties to the proceedings usually speak the truth, but that the litigants themselves do not, but generally swear to whatever they think will suit their case. He added that, in his opinion, the best remedy for this growing practice on the part of suitors was the infliction of very severe punishment whenever perjury was detected.

The good-nature of the judge, rather than any special circumstances, seems to have been responsible for the adjournment of the 'Salvation Army' trial at Lewes last Saturday. Neither of the counsel engaged, nor the parties themselves, appear to have asked for delay; and the suggested compromise has now been rejected by the Eastbourne Corporation. Meantime a sort of armed truce has prevailed; and, in the interests of all concerned, the sooner a final and legal settlement is arrived at the better.

Lovers of animals will note with much satisfaction that Mr. Montagu Williams is not deterred by the success of appellants to quarter sessions from inflicting severe punishment in flagrant cases of cruelty. Where the owners of horses who are guilty of cruelty are well-to-do men, 'fining,' said the magistrate, 'is simply trifling with the law.' A sentence of two months' hard labour is, on the other hand, bound to act as a warning and a deterrent.

We are glad to observe that the defects of the one-judge system on circuit, upon which 'A Junior' has twice descanted in our columns (see ante, pp. 493, 512), are now being prominently brought into public notice by a correspondence between the Lord Chief Justice of England and Mr. Buszard, Q.C., who had approached the Lord Chief Justice on behalf of the Midland Circuit 'in accordance with a resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of the circuit.' The time for the trial of causes on that circuit has been so short that the members of the circuit represent that it is necessary to have two judges at the more important towns. The Lord Chief Justice in reply says that 'the present state of things is the result of an arrangement come to after much consideration between the Government, the Treasury and the judges, and there will be great difficulty in making any serious alterations,' but promises to bring the matter before the judges, and, what is of more importance, declares that 'the circuit may rely upon his sincere wish that their desire, so far as it can be, shall be gratified.' The Order in Council as to circuits which was issued on June 26, 1884, no doubt requires careful reconsideration, and so does the scheme for summer assizes set out in the first schedule thereto, to which effect is given by rule 2 of that order, whereby (as might have been expected) the scheme is to be put in force only 'so far as may be practicable and the business to be done may allow.' Under that scheme, we may observe, two judges are to give their services at Durham, York, Leeds, Exeter, Bristol, Winchester, Stafford, Nottingham, Lincoln, Derby, Warwick, Birmingham, Chester and Swansea. It is provided by rule 9 that 'in order to enable the judges, so far as may be possible, to leave no cause untried at any place on any circuit, one of the judges in London shall, with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor, and a request of the judge or judges on any circuit, proceed to any place on such circuit in aid of such judge or judges for such time as may be necessary.'

A modification, therefore, of the one-judge system may be considered as impending. What direction should this modification take? For ourselves, we have no hesitation in recommending the grouping of towns for the purpose of the trial of causes, in accordance with the suggestion of 'A Junior' in our columns. Two or three years ago, it will be remembered, a plan of grouping towns for assize purposes generally was set on foot, but had to be dropped owing to the strong local opposition which it evoked. The strength of this opposition would be very greatly decreased if grouping for the trial of causes only were to be set on foot. Let the Bar Committee take up a scheme for 'reasonable grouping and no remanets,' let them push this scheme steadily forward to success, and they will soon double the number of their subscribers. As a representative body, whose constituents are the whole bar, they have the right to make themselves heard. As for the statutory power to make the required alterations, that is to be found in subsection 4 of section 23 of the Judicature Act, 1875. Orders in Council may provide 'for the regulation of the venue in all cases, civil or criminal, triable on any circuit or elsewhere.'

A curious point arose in In re Reynolds; Williams v. Mitchell (Notes of Cases, p. 128), where real estate was settled in trust for such persons (not being her present husband or any friend or relative of his) as M., a married woman, should by deed or will appoint. M. (her husband being then dead), by her will, made a general devise of her real estate, and the question was whether the will operated as an execution of the power under the Wills Act, s. 27. Mr. Justice Kekewich held that the exception of any friend or relative of the husband was not so vague that it could not be taken into account, and on this footing had no difficulty in holding that the power was not a power to appoint as the appointor might 'think proper' within section 27 of the Wills Act. His lordship, however, expressed his opinion that the exception of the appointor's husband would not in the events which happened have prevented the power being so executed, since at the date of its execution the husband was dead; and said that he saw 'no reason why a power in its inception limited by an exception should not become a general power free from exception by subsequent events; why a power to appoint to all the world except A., B., and C. might not become a power to appoint to all the world by the death of A., B., and C. before the power was executed.'

The question, of course, only becomes of importance in considering the execution of such a power under section 27.

In In re Dick; Lopes v. Dick, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 177; L. R. 1891, 1 Chanc. Div. 423, the Court of Appeal took a wider view of the effect of the Trust Investment Act, 1889, than Mr. Justice Stirling in the same case was disposed to take, and held that the power to vary investments in section 3 of the Act applies to all investments authorised by the Act, whether made under the Act or not, so as to enable trustees of a will containing no power of varying securities to vary them accordingly. The Court, said Lord Justice Kay, should 'look at what was the scope and intention of the Act,' and construe it 'in such a manner as will best carry out its general purpose and object.' We cannot help thinking that Mr. Justice Kekewich construed the Act in a different and narrower spirit in the case of Owthwaite v. Owthwaite (Notes of Cases, p. 131) when he held that the additional powers conferred by the Act were not applicable to the case where a testator directed his trustees to appropriate a fund in the securities authorised by his will to answer an annuity with a view to release the rest of his estate from the charge, and that in such a case trustees are restricted to the actual securities authorised by the will. The will contained no express prohibition, and therefore it was admitted that, under section 6 of the Act, the trustees could invest in the further securities authorised by the Act, but they could not, said Mr. Justice Kekewich, make the appropriation out of such investments to answer the annuity. The distinction may be sound, but it is certainly a fine one.

The case of Warton v. Parrott, finally decided (after two trials) by the Court of Appeal on the 8th inst., is a good illustration of the difficulty of getting over the rule that the person liable for nuisance caused by the non-repair of premises is primâ facie the occupier, not the owner. The plaintiff had sustained injuries from the ruinous state of a wall on property owned by the defendant, but let to and occupied by a third party; and his first difficulty was to show that the obligation to repair lay on the lessor. The Court, in conformity with the authorities, refused to admit the fact that the lessor had repaired the wall after the accident as evidence that he was under a legal obligation to do repairs. Learning that there was a lease in existence, they declined to discuss the case without seeing it. The lease, however, was unstamped, and the plaintiff was compelled to give an undertaking to pay the penalty for not stamping before he could use it in evidence—a rigorous application of the law which bears hardly on a stranger to the lease. As the lease when produced proved that the liability to repair was imposed on the lessee, the plaintiff's last chance was to prove that the wall had been ruinous at the date of the lease. On this point the jury at the second trial found for the defendant; and there being evidence on which a jury might reasonably be of this opinion, the Court of Appeal refused to disturb their finding, remarking that there was no question of law involved. Indeed, the law is sufficiently clear that, where premises are let on a repairing lease, the lessor is free from liability for non-repair unless the premises were to his knowledge defective at the date of the demise, so that he can be said to have authorised the continuance of the nuisance.

Is it not high time that the Elementary Education Acts should be consolidated? The great Act of 1870 has now been five times broken in upon by amendments of importance. In 1873 the very miscellaneous statute 36 & 37 Vict. c. 86 dealt with School Board elections, united school districts, and other matters; in 1876 compulsory education was established by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79, an Act of forty-eight sections and four schedules; in 1880 'further provision' was made as to bye-laws requiring the attendance of children at school under the Elementary Education Acts; last year an 'Education Code, 1890, Act 1890,' had to be passed to render operative certain articles in the innovating Education Code of that year, and now the Act of 1891 has almost established free education. Meanwhile annual Codes promulgated by the Education Department of the Privy Council under the authority of section 97 of the Act of 1870 have so greatly altered the law of elementary education that it may be suggested that the Code of 1892 might with great advantage be scheduled to a consolidating bill which would give it the force of an Act of Parliament, and make it better known than it is likely to be if it continues to be issued merely as a Parliamentary paper.

Mr. Ford (see ante, p. 532) carried in July, 1890, a resolution at a meeting of the Incorporated Law Society 'calling for the repeal of so much of section 72 of the County Courts Act, 1888, as prohibits the solicitor of a suitor in a County Court from retaining another solicitor to appear in such Court as the advocate for such solicitor.' The section in question is mainly taken from section 1D of the County Courts Act, 1852, but words providing that 'the right of a solicitor to address the Court shall not be excluded by reason only that he is in the permanent and exclusive employ of another solicitor' were newly added in 1888. It appears that in many cases provincial law societies have, since 1890, adopted similar resolutions. We greatly doubt, however, whether Parliament would be induced to reopen a question which, looking to the amendment which we have referred to, was at all events considered so short a time ago as that of the passing of the Consolidation Act of 1888.

Presumably the form of legacy hitherto adopted to a charitable institution will now disappear. The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, received the royal assent on August 5 last, and applies to the wills of testators dying after that date. While the estates of persons dying on or before August 5 are being administered, the old learning as to pure and impure personalty, and as to a bequest to charity of an interest in land, must not be forgotten, but, in regard to testators dying after that day, 'money secured on land or other personal estate arising from or connected with land' will be able to be freely left to charities. The provisions of the new Act are so simple that we wonder that the present restrictions on charitable bequests have been endured so long. Any direction for laying out money in land given by the will of any testator dying now or in the future will be simply cut out of the will, but the Charity Commissioners or a judge (even at chambers) can order the direction to be carried into effect if satisfied that such land is required for actual occupation for the purposes of the charity. Land can be devised to charitable uses, but will have to be turned into personalty, unless the beforementioned authorities are satisfied as aforesaid. It may startle us at first to see that it is not to extend to Scotland or Ireland, but neither the Georgian Mortmain Act nor the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, extend to either of those countries (Tyssen's 'Charitable Bequests,' p. 172, and 51 & 52 Vict. c. 42, s. 11).

TWO POINTS ON A SOLICITOR'S RETAINING LIEN.

Two points of great importance to the profession were decided by the Court of Appeal in In re Taylor, Stileman & Underwood, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 525—the first as to the extent of a solicitor's retaining lien; the second as to its discharge by reason of the solicitor taking a security for his costs. In respect of the first point the solicitors set up their lien not only for their actual costs, charges, and expenses, but also for payments made on behalf of the client, such as the taxing officer would take into account under the common order for taxation, but which he would have no power to moderate. The Court held that the lien could not be sustained for these advances, and laid down as a fair working test of what can and what cannot be brought under the lien that the lien extends to all items properly included in the bill of costs, charges, and expenses which the taxing-master has a right to consider, and, if necessary, moderate, but not to advances, which do not come within that category. The only authority cited in argument on this point appears to have been In re Galland, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 478; L. R. 31 Chanc. Div. 296, which decided that a solicitor has no retaining lien for costs which he recovers by statute and not by contract between himself and his client. The case proceeded on the basis that the retaining lien arises out of contract. A similar view was taken in In re Sharpe, 1 Dowl. 432, where a solicitor was held to have no lien on deeds for expenses incurred by him in consequence of applications made to him by various claimants for the deeds. These authorities, however, have little direct bearing on the question before the Court in In re Taylor, where there was no dispute as to the existence of the contractual relation. More to the purpose is the passage from Sir Thomas Plumer's judgment in Woorall v. Johnson, 2 J. & W. 214, 218, quoted by Lord Justice Kay to the effect that a solicitor's lien 'does not extend to general debts, but only to what is due to him in the character of attorney.' Other cases bearing on the subject are Irving v. Viana, 2 Y. & J. 70, and Christian v. Field, 2 Har. 177, 183, which show that a second solicitor in an action who pays off the first on succeeding to his place has no particular lien for the amount so paid. On the other hand, it was held in Lambert v. Buckmaster, 2 B. & C. 616, that the general lien will cover the solicitor's costs of an action brought by him against the client to recover his bill of costs in respect of which the lien is claimed. This decision was approved in the House of Lords in Gray v. Graham, 1 Pat. Scotch App. 615, 618. Lastly, in In re Hill, L. R. 33 Chanc. Div. 216, the particular lien on a fund was held to extend to the costs incurred by the solicitor in proving his retainer (which was disputed by the client), even though incurred after the date of the order directing taxation. So far as we are aware, these decisions represent the reported cases on the subject, and appear to be all of them consistent with the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Taylor.

The other point before the Court arose in this way. The solicitors, while still acting for the client, took from her and her husband a joint and several promissory note for payment of the amount of their bill on demand with interest at the rate of 5 per cent., and this the Court held to amount to a discharge of the lien. Inasmuch as the security was plainly inconsistent with the lien—since a bill of costs for non-contentious business will only carry 4*l.* per cent. interest, and that only for one month after delivery of the bill—the case was indistinguishable from Roberts v. Jefferys, 8 Law J. Rep. (o.s.) Chanc. 137, which the Court of Appeal approved and followed, but at the same time the Court went a good deal further, and laid down that where a solicitor takes a security for his costs from a client, for whom he is still acting, the primâ facie inference, in default of evidence to the contrary, is that he has waived his lien. This proposition we believe to have been laid down for the first time in these broad terms, though it was discussed and considered an open question in Brownlow v. Keating, 2 Ir. Eq. (1840) 243. The following passage from Lord Justice Kay's judgment will show the reason and the limit of the rule: 'We are dealing here,' he says, 'with a case between a solicitor and his own client. A solicitor has a duty to perform towards his client, to represent to his client all the facts of the case in a clear and intelligible manner, and to inform him of his rights and liabilities; and where you find a solicitor dealing with his client, and taking from him such a security as was given in this case, not expressly reserving his right of lien, I quite concur in thinking that this is a case in which the inference ought to be against the continuance of the lien.'

UNWRITTEN CHAPTERS IN THE LAW OF DESIGNS.

VII.

(Continued from page 523.)

Fraudulent or Obvious Imitation.

The 'fraudulent or obvious imitation' of a registered design is (subject to certain statutory conditions) both punishable as an offence (Designs Acts, 1883–88, s. 58) and actionable (ib. s. 59). The meaning of the words which we have placed in inverted commas was considered in the cases of Grafton v. Watson, 1884, 50 L. T. (N. S.) 420, and 51 L. T. (N. S.) 141, and Sherwood & Cotton v. The Decorative Art Tile Company, 1887, 4 P. O. R. 207.

We will first consider the facts of these cases, and then endeavour to state in general terms the law as they establish it.

Grafton v. Watson.—Here both the plaintiffs and the defendants were calico printers. The plaintiffs had registered four designs, and some months after registration discovered that goods bearing designs similar in effect to theirs were being sold by the defendants. The defendants' designs did not actually reproduce the minutiæ of the plaintiffs' designs, but they were a combination of similar drawings so arranged and coloured as to produce a similar effect. The defendants admitted that they had submitted the plaintiffs' designs to their artist in Paris, so that he might, whilst producing the same effect, which was the fashion in vogue, avoid imitating the minutiæ of the plaintiffs' design. The question arose whether a registered design, consisting of a dominant and of subordinate parts so arranged as to produce a certain general effect, could be infringed by a design producing a similar effect, although such design imitated neither the dominant nor the subordinate parts of the original and registered design. It was held by Mr. Justice Chitty and by the Court of Appeal that the defendants' design was a 'fraudulent or obvious imitation' within the meaning of section 58 of the Designs Act, 1883, as the general effect of the defendants' design was a reproduction of that of the plaintiffs', and could not have been produced without copying the plaintiffs' ideas.

Sherwood & Cotton v. The Decorative Art Tile Company, 1887.—Here the plaintiffs, the registered proprietors of the copyright in a design for a tile, brought an action for the infringement thereof under section 58 of the Designs Act, 1883. The defendants' tile, of which the plaintiffs complained, though resembling the plaintiffs' registered design in most respects, differed from it in many details. It was held by Mr. Justice Manisty that the defendants' tile was a fraudulent, though not an obvious, imitation of the plaintiffs'. The following appears to be the judicial construction of the words 'fraudulent or obvious imitation,' as settled by these cases.

1. The defendant's design must be in fact an imitation of that of the plaintiff's. Cf. the judgment of Lord Justice Cotton in Grafton v. Watson, 51 L. T. (N.S) 144.

2. An obvious imitation is not an exact copy, nor yet an imitation obvious at a glance to the uneducated or unskilled eye. It is an imitation obvious to the judge or to a jury with the assistance of experts—persons conversant with the particular trade.

This proposition deserves and will repay analysis.

'Not an exact copy.'—In the leading case of Holdsworth v. M'Crea, L. R. 2 H. L. 380, an action for the infringement of a design registered under the old law by the simple deposit of a pattern, Lord Chelmsford had said: 'The designer is under this disadvantage, that when he registers a pattern of material there is no infringement unless it is exactly copied.' Of course, as we have seen in a previous paper, he merely meant that the man who registered a design as a whole could not claim each part of it—could not say, for instance, to somebody else, 'You cannot use a certain style which is found there, or use that style in a different situation.' But the ingenuity of counsel attempted to twist Lord Chelmsford's language into meaning that a defendant had only to convert the position of a star, or make some other trifling alteration, in a registered design in order to pirate it with impunity. Promptly crushed by Vice-Chancellor James and Lord Hatherley in M'Crea v. Holdsworth, L. R. 6 Chanc. App. 418, this attempt was renewed in Grafton v. Watson. But Mr. Justice Chitty and the Court of Appeal were not misled, and they 'slew it in the light.'

'Nor yet an imitation obvious . . . . to the uneducated or unskilled eye.' These are the words of Mr. Justice Chitty. It is interesting to note that he held a directly contrary opinion during the argument (see 50 L. T. (N.S.) 420).

'It is an imitation obvious to the judge,' &c.—The question of whether there is or is not an imitation is to be determined by the eye (cf. The Hecla Foundry Company v. Walker, Hunter & Co., 1889, 6 P. O. R. at p. 559). The two designs should be placed side by side. But the judge may, and ought to (Mitchell v. Henry, L. R. 15 Chanc. Div. 181), take into account and hear evidence as to the state of knowledge at the time of registration and in the respects in which the design was new or original, when considering whether any variations from the registered design appearing in the alleged infringement are substantial or immaterial (per Lord Herschell in The Hecla Foundry Company v. Walker, Hunter & Co., ubi sup.).

In the same connection, some sentences from the judgment of Mr. Justice Chitty in Grafton v. Watson may be quoted with advantage. One of the plaintiffs' designs consisted of an acorn and spray, in which the acorn was the dominant and the spray the subservient feature. The defendants' design, contrasted with the acorn pattern, consisted of what is called a mangostene—the contour of which closely resembled that of the acorn—and spray. 'The test,' said his lordship, 'is not merely to look at the two designs side by side, though no doubt that is one element of comparison in coming to a conclusion, but it is not the whole test. I think the designs should be looked at together, but then consideration should be given to what would be the effect supposing they were seen at different times or . . . at a little distance off. . . . It should be considered, also, how the patterns would look when worn as a dress, or as an apron, or used as a covering for furniture.'

This passage should be compared with that in which the Patent Office Inquiry committee of 1887 deal with the test of resemblance between two trade-marks. It is not so well known as it should be, and its adaptability to forensic purposes has, apparently, not been perceived. 'By section 72, subsection 2, of the Act of 1883 the comptroller is directed not to register with respect to the same description of goods a trade-mark so nearly resembling a trade-mark already on the register with respect to such description of goods as to be calculated to deceive. . . . Two marks, when placed side by side, may exhibit many and various differences, yet the idea left upon the mind by both may be the same, so that a person acquainted with the mark first registered and not having the two side by side for comparison might well be deceived, if goods were allowed to be impressed with the second mark, into a belief that he was dealing with goods which bore the same mark as that with which he was acquainted. Take, for example, a mark representing a game of football. Another mark may show the players in a different dress and in very different positions, and yet the idea conveyed by each might be simply a game of football. It would be too much to expect that persons dealing with trade-marked goods and relying, as they frequently do, upon the marks should be able to remember the exact details' (Report, pp. viii. ix. par. 15). And then the committee go on to recommend the substitution of the words having such resemblance to for the words so nearly resembling—a recommendation to which the Act of 1888 gave legislative effect.

3. A 'fraudulent imitation' is an imitation not obvious but varied for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud (per Manisty, J., in Sherwood & Cotton v. The Decorative Art Tile Company, ubi supra).

Reviews.

CARVER ON THE CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

The Carriage of Goods by Sea. By Thomas Gilbert Carver, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891. Price 32*s.*

The new edition of this book contains no changes in arrangement. There are no fresh chapters, and hardly any old heading has been altered except in the chapter on 'Demurrage.' It is a tribute to the excellence of the plan of this work that it has been possible, without any modification, to introduce 140 fresh cases, and yet with no sacrifice of the painstaking clearness which is the special characteristic of the book. Some seventeen pages of text have been added, and a little further room has been gained by a more economical distribution of type, and by the omission from the notes of what may be called the shipowners' bill of lading, and by the transference of the Liverpool bill of lading to an appendix (whither one may hope it will be followed in the next edition by the average statement on pp. 437–39). The space thus obtained has been chiefly filled by sixteen additional sections scattered through the book dealing with the new cases of most importance. The references to all the new cases—several of them Scotch—are careful, though they do not, of course, exhaust all the cases of the period; in the first year, for instance, one notices such omissions as Newall v. The Royal Exchange Shipping Company, 33 W. R. 868, on the subject of jettison, and Price v. Thomson, 22 Sc. L. R. 690, on demurrage. The references in the body of the work to the reports of cases are still most meagre and unsatisfactory. The list of cases has been improved by the correction of numerous misprints, but still refers to the sections, instead of, as it ought to do, to the pages of the text. Each page, however, in this edition contains in its upper marginal corner the number of the section to which it relates, and this facilitates reference. The index has been considerably extended, and the York Antwerp average rules of 1890 will be found in an appendix.

MACLEOD ON BANKING.

The Elements of Banking. By Henry Dunning Macleod, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Longmans. 1891.

The purpose of this work, the author tells us, is to exhibit in the simplest language possible the mechanism of the great system of credit banking and the foreign exchanges, and to explain the reasoning upon which the principle of currency is founded. The author has certainly written an interesting work which contains a great deal of information. Thus, on page 18, we are told of some of the many substances which nations have at different times adopted to represent money. Copper skewers, carved pebbles, leather discs, shells, blocks of compressed tin, and dried squirrel skins have at different times been employed to represent this universal want. In chapter viii. we have a discussion on the Bank Charter Act of 1844. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, set out in extenso, concludes the volume. Here something in the nature of comment or annotation would have been a desirable adjunct.

Correspondence.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERY DISPUTES.

Sir,—In your issue of August 1 you were good enough to refer to my pamphlet 'International Fishery Disputes' in complimentary terms, and at the same time you take exception to my proposals for specific reasons which I should be glad if you will permit me to take up.

(a) You say that it will be a long time before any Government can be expected to surrender its territorial rights over the waters adjacent to its own coasts.

(b) That the policy that leads to the admission of foreign merchantmen to a country's ports would prevent those ports being opened to foreign fishing vessels as a base for fishery operations in the adjacent seas.

(c) Except for some equivalent concession.

(a) In reply I would say I distinctly hold to maintaining fishing rights within territorial waters although I object to 'territorial rights' barring the common right of way through such waters. It is a universal and undisputed custom for vessels of all nationalities, especially wind-bound sailing vessels, to anchor under any headland of any country, port or no port, and thus to enter and occupy territorial waters without let or hindrance, although not in distress. The word 'adjacent' is employed in the Australian extra-territorial Acts as referring to waters beyond territorial waters, whereas you appear to apply it to territorial waters themselves in this case.

(b) You imply that the policy dictating the extent of commercial intercourse with foreigners is one of gain only, and that this would, if followed, prevent foreign fishing vessels using a country's ports as a base of operations in the adjacent seas. Here you take the correct sense of the term 'adjacent,' but I think that the policy that admits of commercial intercourse between foreign nations is twofold in character:

1. The desire for commerce—that is, the exchange of surplus products and the desire for profit.
2. The fostering of peace and goodwill by the cultivation of the acquaintance and friendship of strangers.

But for ships there could be no interchange of letters or goods between Great Britain and other countries, and peace without intercourse would be a mockery, unstable, and simply a suspension of formal hostilities, such as the peace with Spain during the piratical operations of our old navigators on the 'Spanish Main.' But, assuming for the moment the policy to be one of gain only, the exclusion of foreign fishing vessels from the conveniences of our ports cannot be gain for all, as it prevents them from buying stores and food from our merchants and producers, and deprives our steamers of the profit in transhipping the catch to other places. Individual rival fishermen may benefit by enhanced prices for their catch if their rivals are forced to quit, but how about the poorer long-shore folk who sell bait and ice, &c.? The ridiculous spectacle of Newfoundland blockading her own vessels bound to the Frenchmen with bait is a sufficient answer. You may urge that by preventing foreigners from competing in a fishery open to all the number of our own vessels would increase and their places would be taken, but experience does not favour this answer, as capital is not always available. This is exemplified in Western Australia and the pearl-ing industry. On the other hand, if we deny foreigners access to our coasts we invite not only similar treatment for our fishermen by foreigners in other parts of the world, but also we risk the loss of markets for our trade generally in retaliation, and the artificial destruction of our neutral markets, as instanced by the French bounties on French-caught cod sold in Spain and Italy.

(c) I stipulate for several important equivalents—viz.:—

1. The prohibition of all bounties interfering with neutral markets.
2. The establishment of international commissions to preserve ocean fisheries from injury.
3. The grant of extraordinary powers to the country adjacent to any ocean fishery to call to account foreign offenders against municipal laws notwithstanding their escape beyond territorial waters.
4. The reciprocal treatment of British fishermen by foreign nations.

T. W. HAYNES.

4 Fenchurch Avenue, London, E.C.
August 10.

COLLIE-DOGS AND FIRST OFFENCES.

SIR,—Referring to 'Law and Professional Notes' in your paper this week, I should like to have the statute referred to by Mr. Uttley, and alleged by him to have been acted upon by the judge at Guildford Assizes in an alleged dog case.

The last Act I am aware of upon the subject is the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60, and this makes no mention in particular of 'collie-dogs.' But legislation is so brisk nowadays that there may have been a later Act. If so, perhaps Mr. Uttley would mention it.

TEMPLAR.

August 11.

SIR,—With reference to the paragraph on p. 528 in the current issue of the LAW JOURNAL under the above heading, Mr. Uttley's statement of the learned judge's decision is evidently taken from the garbled and absurd version which appeared in one of the daily papers, and, if only for the sake of the reputation of Mr. Justice Mathew, who tried the case at Guildford Assizes, it seems proper that the real decision of his lordship should be presented to your readers.

The claim was for damages to the plaintiff's horse and trap occasioned by the defendant's dog. The general rule of law is that 'every dog has one worry,' but an exception is engrafted upon this rule in favour of sheep and cattle by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60, which provides that the owner of every dog shall be liable in damages for injury done to any cattle or sheep by his dog, and it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to show a mischievous propensity in such dog or the owner's knowledge. The case of Wright v. Pearson, 9 Bar Rep. 849, decided that 'horses' were 'cattle' within this section, so that as regards the damage to the horse it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove previous mischievous propensity to the knowledge of the owner; but as regards the damage to the trap such proof was necessary, as damage to the trap did not come within the protection afforded by the statute. At the trial the plaintiff succeeded in proving (1) the facts of the accident; (2) previous mischievous propensity of the dog; (3) scienter of the owner; (4) the damages to the horse and trap; and judgment accordingly was given in his favour in respect of the damages to both horse and trap. It is quite untrue that the judge stated (as reported in the daily paper) that the Act 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60, was passed for protection against collies and applies to them only. The Act applies to all dogs—

Both mongrel, puppy, whelp, and hound,
And curs of low degree.

CHAPPELL & GRIFFITH.

31 Golden Square, W.

BUSINESS AT ASSIZES.

THE following correspondence which has passed recently between Mr. Buszard, Q.C., and the Lord Chief Justice has been sent to us for publication:—

To the Right Honourable Lord Coleridge, Lord Chief Justice of England.

My Lord,—The members of the Midland Circuit desire respectfully to lay before your lordship the following matters with regard to the administration of Justice on this circuit:

1. For a very considerable time past the trial of criminal cases and causes by one judge at the more important towns has produced, not only great inconvenience and expense to litigants, witnesses, jurors, and others, but has so limited the time for the trial of causes as to amount almost in some instances to a denial of justice, parties often having been compelled to withdraw the record, change the venue, or otherwise dispose of the cases for want of time to try them.

2. It often occurs at our assize towns that the time is not more than sufficient for one judge to try the criminal cases; and even this is frequently only accomplished by the judge sitting till very late at night, which imposes too severe a strain upon all persons connected with the administration of justice.

3. Since the one-judge system has been in operation there has seldom been sufficient time to try, without undue pressure, the civil causes at the important towns of Leicester, Lincoln, Nottingham, and Derby.

4. It is impossible to forecast with any degree of accuracy how long the criminal business is likely to last. The result is that the parties, solicitors, and witnesses in the civil actions are necessarily kept waiting during most of the assizes, at very great expense, and often with a slender chance of trying their cases after all.

5. Therefore, taking advantage of your lordship's presence at these assizes, we respectfully submit the above matters for your consideration, especially the necessity of having two judges at the more important towns, and would request you to use your influence to secure the due and speedy trial of civil actions in the districts in which the causes of action arise; so that the inconvenience and hardship which are above indicated may be removed, and the efficiency of the circuit system may be restored for the benefit of the public.

Signed on behalf of the Midland Circuit, in accordance with a resolution unanimously passed at a meeting of the circuit held on the 23rd day of July, 1891.

(Signed) MARSTON C. BUSZARD.

Judge's Lodgings, Edgbaston, Birmingham:
August 1, 1891.

My dear Buszard,—I wish to put in writing that which I told you in substance at Nottingham by word of mouth as to the desire of the circuit to have two judges at more places than is the present rule. I think, with some modifications, the wish of the circuit is a very reasonable one; but unless you are actually engaged in the working of the judicial system, and have practically to strike a balance between the conflicting claims of London and the provinces, you can hardly appreciate as they deserve the very great difficulties of the task.

Personally, as you are aware, I have no authority to make the change suggested by the circuit. The present state of things is the result of an arrangement, come to after much consideration, between the Government, the Treasury, and the judges, and there will be great difficulty in making any serious alterations in it.

I will, however, bring the matter before the judges, and the circuit may rely upon my sincere wish that their desire, so far as it can be, shall be gratified.

Will you kindly communicate this to the circuit for me, and believe me to be always

Faithfully yours,

COLERIDGE.

Marston C. Bussard, Esq., Q.C.

The following correspondence on the same subject has since appeared in the Times:—

Sir,—There are two ways in which the great evil of our present assize system might be remedied. They have been frequently suggested in the Times and other publications by myself and others, but hitherto with little success. The subject being recalled to mind by the correspondence you published for Mr. Buszard, Q.C., yesterday, permit me to repeat these suggestions. Gutta cavat lapidem.

The first is an heroic remedy. Abolish the assizes in civil cases altogether, and establish Courts in the country with judges who should be members of the High Court of Justice, and sit locally in appointed districts for the trial of all causes brought before them. Why not? Why should justice be administered daily, except in vacation times, in London, but only twice a year at Birmingham, Bristol, Liverpool, Exeter, Norwich, and other populous districts; and why should London jurors be compelled to give their time and leave their own business to try the causes of country litigants?

Another remedy might be to require all civil causes to be commenced in the district in which the litigants live or carry on their business, with liberty to the High Court to remove them for trial in London, upon sufficient cause being shown for it, and thus reversing, as I think advantageously, the present system, under which so many causes commenced in the High Court in London are remitted for trial to the country. This might reduce the number of judges required in London, and would not necessarily increase the total number of judges, since in many districts judges of County Courts might be appointed to preside in the new Courts, upon being relieved of their jurisdiction in small debt cases, which might be left to the registrars, with power to refer to the judge when deemed necessary.

Other advantages would result from the adoption of either of these suggestions. For instance, it would greatly relieve the sheriffs, who now complain so much of the burden cast upon them by the present inefficient assize system; and, moreover, it would benefit the country in a pecuniary point of view and otherwise, by inducing barristers to locate themselves with their families and to spend their professional incomes where they earn them.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

JOHN J. POWELL.

The Lawn, Denmark Hill: Aug. 7.

Sir,—The second of the two suggestions made in the letter of Judge Powell, which appears in your issue of this morning, which is to the effect that the system of 'districts' should apply to cases in the High Court as well as to the County Courts, perhaps deserves some support from the fact that, although there has been no concerted action, or even communication, between Judge Powell and myself, the same practical suggestion has independently occurred to us both—and probably to others also. On May 28 last I had agreed to second a motion for a royal commission to inquire into the working of the Judicature Acts, to be made by Mr. Atherley-Jones on that evening. Such, however, is the want of interest shown by our legislators in this important question that, when the debate should have commenced, only thirty-eight members (or two short of the necessary forty) were present. Having thus failed to obtain an opportunity of stating my views in public, the speech which I had then intended to make was communicated to legal sources, and it appeared in the Law Times of June 13 last, a reprint of which I enclose you. In that speech the following remarks occur:—

'The system of allowing a plaintiff to name the place of trial wherever he pleases works extremely badly. You tell your judges that they should spend half their time in London and half in the country. Having regard to the absolute necessity for the judges to periodically travel into the country to transact criminal business, I do not see how this can be avoided. But you do not make any provision for insuring that, when the judges are in the country, they shall have anything to do. The consequence of this is that, in places like Middlesex or London, suitors cannot get their cases speedily tried, because the Courts are blocked with disputes coming from a distance. For example, one of the quickest and most eminent of our judges was occupied four days during last sittings in trying a dispute as to who should pay for the funeral of an old lady who lived, died and was buried at Chester. On the other hand, you send a judge down to Chester, either to find nothing to occupy him, or to try a man for stealing a leg of mutton or a pair of boots. The judges themselves, when they get the opportunity, do not hesitate to severely condemn the system—or rather want of system—which brings about the present ludicrous waste of time. Within the last few months I have heard certainly three of them comment pretty severely upon it, and I believe that the whole of the judges entertain similar opinions. As the remedy for this I would adopt the County Court rule, under which a plaintiff is reasonably restricted in the selection of the place of trial. Indeed, the County Court rule could be easily applied to the High Court by the mere substitution of the word "county" for the word "district," and the making of some other very small changes. This rule, as I would apply it to the High Court, would run then somewhat thus: "Every action, other than actions which by these rules are specially assigned to the Chancery Division, shall be tried in the county where the defendant resides, or in which the cause of action wholly or in some material part arose, or in the next adjoining county thereto; provided always that, for good cause shown, a master may direct that any action shall be tried in any county or place other than that directed by this rule."'

It will be, I think, found by anyone who goes into the subject with care that the crux of the situation is to obtain a local administration of justice without the drawback of the too great local knowledge and consequent (unconscious) prejudice which generally attaches where there is a local judge. In a small way, I have myself felt conscious of this difficulty in dealing with cases arising in the small local Court of which I have the honour of being the judge. And, on this ground, it is, I believe, the almost universal opinion now that small local Courts of civil jurisdiction ought to be abolished.

How can this difficulty best be met? The system of the judges taking a constant change of circuits meets it in the High Court. I would meet it in the local Courts in a somewhat analogous manner. I would convert all existing County Courts into 'district Courts,' and render them all 'districts' of the High Court. I would appoint those who are now 'County Court judges,' and all persons in future appointed to a similar position, to be 'district judges of the High Court,' and I would at the end of each specified period (say of three years), by order of the Lord Chancellor, appoint each judge to a particular district for the period specified (say, for instance, three years). As a recompense to existing and future district judges for the additional duties and continual expense of moving which would thus be entailed upon them, I would give them the improvement in their position by their becoming judges of a branch of the High Court, with a prospect of promotion to a higher position in that Court, and I also would give them a large addition to their salary, which I would make 2,500*l.* a year, or an increase of 1,000*l.* a year; and I would relieve them of the smaller, and what I may term the 'debt-collecting,' portion of their duties, by extending the already existing jurisdiction of the registrars (which, I believe, works well) from 40*s.* to 5*l.*

Such a change as that which I above advocate is apparently strongly supported by the existing state of circuit business. I believe that it is pretty well the same on all the circuits, but I can, at least, personally answer for one. On that the great majority of the cases tried have been petty actions which really might (under a proper system) well have been disposed of in a district Court, while that such was their character was pretty well proved by the fact that most of them were, on one side or the other, and many on both sides, deemed only of sufficient importance to require the services of a junior 'single-handed'—in fact, tried as they would have been in a County Court.

The change would involve the following additional advantages: That it would have the practical result (often advocated) of generally attaching all the interlocutory proceedings in every action to the judge before whom such action is eventually tried; that while actions for libel, slander, and breach of promise of marriage or seduction cannot now be tried in the County Court, and consequently, however paltry and frivolous they may be, if the plaintiff be successful, now 'carry costs,' all actions of every description, up to a named amount, could well be tried in a district Court; that it might well be the law that all actions claiming less than a specified sum must be tried in the district Court, unless, for some sufficient cause shown to it, the High Court expressly directed that it should be tried before itself (this question of where the trial ought to take place thus being, it will be noted, settled at the commencement of the proceedings and not left, according to the present upside-down procedure, to be discussed at their close and after all the expense of the mode of trial actually adopted has been incurred); and that there is no reason why the system of 'districts' suggested above should not (in place of the present inconvenient and obsolete arrangement of counties) be eventually extended to criminal as well as civil matters, subject (thus settling the much-agitated question of a Court of Criminal Appeal) to an appeal, under proper regulations, to the same tribunals as in a civil case.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

G. PITT-LEWIS.

4 Paper Buildings, Temple: August 10.

Sir,—As Lord Coleridge lends the weight of his disapproval, a revision of the existing circuit system must be seriously pressed upon the authorities.

I venture to think that the whole of the legal profession, from the Lord Chancellor down to the humblest articled clerk, sees the muddle, but there are the widest differences as to the remedy.

The metropolis demands sittings de die in diem. The provinces are starved in the endeavour to do impossibilities. On the other hand, the business at some country places is not worth the attention it gets.

I shall try to persuade the Law Congress, which meets at Plymouth on the 25th inst., to vote for a resolution recommending assizes at large centres only, and suspension of London Nisi Prius work, instead of pretending to combine the two—the result being fragmentary and vexatious to London litigants and their witnesses.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

FRANCIS K. MUNTON.

North Devon: August 10.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 6.

Regina v. A. H. Rourke (appeal of Eleanor G. Thompson (prosecutrix) from order of Cave, J., and Smith, J., dated July 25, discharging rule nisi for habeas corpus).—Part heard; stand over.

Wallis v. Edwards (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 30, at trial before Grantham, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Patten v. Potts (application of defendants for judgment or a new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated June 22, at trial before Mathew, J., and a jury at Durham).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 7.

In re Brown & Wingrove (ex parte Gustav Ador) (appeal of Gustav Ador from order of Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated June 23, refusing direction to trustee to pay dividend on admitted proof).—Cur. adv. vult.

In re C. W. Rogers, ex parte Holland & Hannen (appeal of Messrs. Holland & Hannen from order of Cave, J., dated July 2, on motion of trustee to refund payment after bankruptcy, heard August 3).—Allowed.

In re F. L. Malgarini, ex parte F. L. Malgarini (appeal of debtor in person from order of Mr. Registrar Brougham, dated June 19, upon debtor's application, refusing approval of scheme of arrangement).—Dismissed.

Horner v. Potts (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated June 22, at trial before Mathew, J., and a jury at Durham).—Judgment for plaintiff as to part of claim, and for defendants as to other part.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8.

Warton v. Parrott (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated June 29, at trial before Mathew, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

MONDAY, AUGUST 10.

In re Hilliard and others, solicitors, ex parte Arthur & Co. (appeal of Arthur & Co. from order of Romer, J., for North, J., dated July 24, refusing discharge of order for taxation).—Dismissed.

In re Peter Gapper, deceased.—Gapper v. Crocker (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated July 31, refusing application for trustees to exercise powers of advancement).—Dismissed.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM AUGUST 17 TO AUGUST 22.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Aug. 17	Aug. 18	Aug. 19	Aug. 20	Aug. 21	Aug. 22
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	—	—
15	Judge Turner	Barnard Castle	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Richmond	Guisborough	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	Belper	Derby	Burton	Wirksworth	Ashbourne	—
28	Judge Jordan	—	Longton	Atherstone	Bursiem	—	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—	—
55	Judge Mackonochie	—	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
57	Judge Paterson	Honiton	Chard	—	—	—	—

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. GEORGE SAMUEL TINKLER, of Wandsworth, S.W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Tinkler was admitted in 1860.

Mr. Edward Alfred Chandler, of 4 Park Prospect, Little Queen Street, Westminster, S.W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Chandler was admitted in 1876.

Mr. William Jackson Perkins, of Guildford, has been appointed Registrar of the County Court held at Guildford and Godalming (Circuit No. 45), in succession to the late Mr. H. F. Day, of Godalming. Mr. Perkins was admitted in 1881, and was a Law Society's prizeman at the June Honours Examination of that year.

Mr. Montagu Luff, B.A. Cantab., of Blandford, Dorset, has been appointed Clerk to Justices for the Wimborne Division and also Clerk to the Guardians of the Wimborne and Cranborne Union, in succession to Mr. Frank H. Tanner, dec. Mr. Luff was admitted in 1887.

Mr. Montague Herbert Grover (of the firm of Grover & Grover), of Cardiff, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Grover was admitted in 1882.

Mr. David Mainland Dodd, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Dodd was admitted in 1882.

JUDGE BERESFORD.—Owing to advanced years and failing health, Judge Beresford, who presided over the County Courts in the western district of South Wales, has signified his intention to resign. For several months past his duties have been attended to by his son, Mr. Cecil Beresford, deputy judge.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 12th inst., Mr. Richard Pennington in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. W. Beriah Brook, J. H. Kays, Sidney Smith, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 706*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, eleven new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

THE RETIREMENT OF MR. NAPIER HIGGINS, Q.C.—In the Chancery Division on August 11, at the conclusion of the business, Mr. Justice Romer, addressing Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., said: I believe, Mr. Higgins, this is the last case in which you will appear in these Courts.—Mr. Higgins, Q.C.: I believe so, my lord.—Mr. Justice Romer: Then, will you allow me, as an old friend and former junior of yours—one who has known you now for many years, and who is very glad as a judge to be able to make these observations—to express my hope, which I am sure is shared by all your old comrades at the bar, that on your retirement you may have many years of happy life, and enjoy the repose you have so well earned by your long and distinguished career at the bar.—Mr. Higgins: I am much obliged to your lordship.

THE FREE EDUCATION ACT.—The vicar of Yarmouth (the Rev. W. Donne) has published a statement to the effect that under the new Education Act all the voluntary schools of the town, in which 3,000 children are being educated, will suffer loss to the amount of at least 400*l.* a year. He adds: 'The balance will have to be made up, and Church folk will have to give the most of it. It is no use hiding this fact. If Chuch folk wish the managers to retain the 3,000 children within the influence of definite dogmatic Church teaching, some hard work and much self-denial lie before them in the next ten years. The next ten years will see the Church schools once more established, or will see the schools governed by the School Board, and at least 7,000*l.* a year added to the rates.'

BIRTHS.

On Aug. 2, at Worthing, the wife of Edward Francis Collet, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Aug. 4, at 19 Courtfield Road, South Kensington, the wife of R. Wright-Taylor, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Aug. 5, at Ringwood, Hants, the wife of Francis A. Johns, Solicitor, of a son.

On Aug. 5, at Oakley Lodge, Weybridge, the wife of Frank Newbolt, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Aug. 6, at Lorne House, Tenby, the wife of T. Aneuryn Rees, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Aug. 9, at 6 Rusham Road, Balham, S.W., the wife of J. King Farlow, Jun., Solicitor, of a son.

On Aug. 11, at 43 Thurloe Square, S.W., the wife of George M. Parker, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Aug. 6, at St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth, James Currie Macbeth, B.L. Edin., Solicitor, Dunfermline, to Medina, eldest daughter of W. W. G. Irvine, Tayside, Newburgh-on-Tay.

On Aug. 8, at St. Botolph's Church, Boston, Lincolnshire, Edward Brackenbury Myddelton, fifth son of the late Rev. Thomas Myddelton, of West Stockwith, Notts, to Sarah, third daughter of the late Henry Harwood, of Boston, Solicitor.

On Aug. 8, at St. Peter's, Bayswater, Arthur Lee Ellis, of 6 Westbourne Terrace, Hyde Park, and of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, second son of the late Henry S. Ellis, of Fair Park House, Exeter, to Harriet Louisa, younger daughter of the late Surgeon-Major Charles R. Nicoll, F.R.C.S., Eng., late Grenadier Guards.

On Aug. 8, at Ecclesall, Frank Alexander Milne, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of the late Frank Milne, Esq., of Monken Hadley, Middlesex, to Alice Healy, youngest daughter of Mrs. Burne, of Pyebirch Manor, Ecclesall, and the late T. S. H. Burne, Esq., of Loynton Hall, Staffs.

DEATHS.

On July 31, at 6 Moreton Crescent, Exmouth, John Jackson Smale, eldest son of the late Sir John Smale, Chief Justice of Hong Kong, in his 57th year.

On Aug. 1, at Bradford, Wilts, Sophia Mary, widow of William Merrick, of the same place, Solicitor, in her 70th year.

On Aug. 5, at 1 Prince's Square, W., Theodore Thomas, Barrister-at-Law, of Lucknow, aged 54.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

An important enactment affecting the mode of dealing with certain juvenile offenders was passed towards the end of the session. The Reformatory and Industrial Schools Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 23), which consists of only two sections, provides in effect that if a youthful offender detained in or placed out on license from a reformatory or industrial school conducts himself well the managers of the school may, with his own consent, apprentice him to, or dispose of him in, any trade, calling, or service, or by emigration, notwithstanding that his period of detention has not expired, and the apprenticing, &c., is to be as valid as if the managers were his parents. By a proviso, however, the consent of the Secretary of State is made necessary where the child is to be disposed of by emigration, and in any case, unless he has been detained for twelve months.

From a return recently issued of Quarter Sessions Boroughs, with the number of prisoners tried at each Court during the last three years, it appears that in three boroughs no prisoners were tried during the three years, in some only one prisoner and in many others not more than an average of one or two yearly. Mr. Matthews, being asked by Mr. Talbot in the House of Commons whether he would consider 'the propriety of gradually bringing this inconvenient system to an end,' stated that he had known some boroughs to avail themselves of the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1888, whereby they may obtain a revocation of the grant of quarter sessions made under section 160 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. The provisions referred to are contained in subsection 7 of section 38 of the Act of 1888, by which the Queen, on petition from the council of any quarter sessions borough which contained, according to the census of 1881, a population of less than 10,000, by Order in Council may revoke the grant of a Court of Quarter Sessions to the borough, and make such provision as to Her Majesty seems proper for the protection of interests existing at the date of the revocation. By the same subsection, on a similar petition, the Queen may by letters patent revoke the grant of a commission of the peace (see section 156 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882) for any of such smaller boroughs. It will not, of course, follow that because the grant of a Court of Quarter Sessions is revoked, the grant of a separate commission of the peace will be revoked also, nor even is it necessary, looking to the original jurisdiction of the recorder (see section 165 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882), that the revocation of the grant of a separate Court of Quarter Sessions should be accompanied by the revocation of the grant of a separate commission. But we believe we are correct in saying that in no borough subject to the Municipal Corporations Act is there a Court of Quarter Sessions without a separate commission, though there are not a few boroughs in which there is a separate commission without a separate Court of Quarter Sessions.

The Alien Registration Act is being so carefully and strictly (see ante, p. 411) enforced by the authorities that the compilation of immigration statistics will be an easy matter. The penalties under this Act are very severe. In addition to the penalties for making or uttering false declarations (offences not very likely to be committed), the penalty on any master of a ship neglecting (an offence likely enough to be committed), to declare the number of aliens on board his ship is 20*l.*, and the further sum of 10*l.* for each alien who shall have been on board at the time of the arrival of the ship, 'or who shall have, to his knowledge, landed therefrom within this realm.' Nor is it only the masters of ships who have to make returns. The alien himself is to show his passport, if he has any, and also to declare his name and to what country he belongs, to the chief officer of customs at the place of debarcation, under pain of forfeiting 2*l.* All offences against the Act are to be prosecuted within six months before two justices of the peace where the offence is committed, who may commit the offender to prison in default of payment of any penalty not exceeding 20*l.*

The important question whether a private firm is entitled to register under the Companies Act, 1862, was recently considered in Regina v. The Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, in which judgment had been reserved for some time. The surviving partner in the publishing firm of Allen & Co. with six others desired to be registered as a company. The registrar of joint-stock companies, obeying the instructions of the Board of Trade, declined to register, and application was made to the Divisional Court for a mandamus to compel him. The principal objections urged by the Attorney-General were that the body before the Court was not a company constituted by law, and that the only reason for applying for registration was in order that the company should be wound up. The Court, however, considered that the words 'constituted by law' were not intended to exclude companies constituted by agreement, and that section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862, conclusively disposed of the objection taken that registration ought not to be allowed if the only object was winding up. It appears that during the last three years doubts and difficulties have frequently arisen at the office of the registrar of joint-stock companies on the subject of the registration of private firms, and that a decision on this point was urgently needed.

It is the humour of many persons not members of the legal profession to avow contempt for the laws of evidence as administered in a Court of law. For instance, in the immortal trial of Bardell v. Pickwick, when Sam Weller added to his answer to the counsel's question the words 'as the soldier said ven they ordered him three hundred and fifty lashes,' the judge interposed, 'You must not tell us what the soldier or any other man said; it's not evidence.' This, according to Judge Pitt-Taylor in his 'Law of Evidence' (7th edit. p. 487, n.), is an amusing caricature of 'the rule excluding hearsay evidence, or rather the mode in which that rule is frequently misunderstood in Courts of justice.' Many, possibly even in the legal world, think that the rules are merely arbitrary and not founded upon the nature of things. It is refreshing then to come across the recognition of the correctness of the legal rules by so great a scholar and writer as Dr. Abbott, late Head-Master of the City of London School, in his recent work, 'Philomythus.' On p. 86 he says: 'What is "legal proof?" It is simply proof of the ordinary kind, by evidence direct and indirect, but stronger and stricter. Legal proof, being seldom required except where facts are affirmed and denied by interested parties, requires (in a greater degree than ordinary proof) that the evidence shall be deliberate, hence the use of the oath; free from exaggeration or misunderstanding, hence the rejection of hearsay evidence; consistent and truthful, hence the demand that every witness shall undergo cross-examination; free from suspicion, hence the preference of evidence as to character (and even of evidence as to facts) coming from witnesses who have no interest, one way or the other, in the ultimate decision. Occasionally, in the excessive desire to serve order, law has unfairly favoured despotism, and in the excessive desire to be fair to the accused it has foolishly excluded evidence that might have fairly helped the accused. But, on the whole, it may be said that legal proof is of the same kind as ordinary proof, only superior in degree.' That is a noble eulogy, and Dr. Abbott should be told that at least some part of the evidence which he deems to have been foolishly excluded will shortly be admitted on behalf of the accused.

At the Birmingham Assizes the Lord Chief Justice of England (see ante, p. 531), finding nine prisoners awaiting their trial at Birmingham Quarter Sessions, discharged them from gaol on their recognisances to appear there, regarding it as most objectionable that men, some of whom might be innocent, should be detained for months without being brought to trial. The Lord Chief Justice also said 'that in exercising their discretion under the Assizes Relief Act as to whether they should commit to sessions or assizes, magistrates should pay the utmost regard to securing as early a trial as possible.' What discretion have magistrates under the statute referred to (52 & 53 Vict. c. 12), passed 'to relieve the Courts of Assize from the trial of persons charged with offences triable at quarter sessions?' Section 1 of the Act enacts that whenever any person has been committed to gaol charged with an offence triable at quarter sessions, the persons bound over to prosecute shall be bound over by the committing justices to attend for that purpose at the next practicable Court of quarter sessions having jurisdiction to try such person, 'unless such justices for special reasons think fit otherwise to direct.' We cannot think that the mere distance of time of sessions, as compared with that of assize, would constitute a 'special reason' within these words, and it is even doubtful whether Rules of Court which may be made under section 6 of the Act, providing that justices should have regard to such distance, would be carrying the Act into effect within the meaning of that section. It seems to us that an amending bill will be required to enable justices to administer the Assizes Relief Act in the manner suggested. Section 3 of the Act amply provides for the discharge of prisoners by a judge of assize, on the application of the prisoners themselves, who have been committed for trial at quarter sessions but not tried there.

We are glad to observe that the Slander of Women Bill, by which imputation on a woman's chastity is made actionable without special damage, is amongst those which have received the royal assent. Threatened at one time by the serious opposition of the Lord Chancellor, the bill has been saved by the insertion of a clause cutting down a plaintiff's title to costs. It is very remarkable that a reform which has so frequently been advocated by so many high judicial authorities has been so long delayed. Lord Holt was the first, in Ogden v. Turner, 2 Salk. 696, to lay down the law as it has continued since his time till now, and the ground of his decision was that 'this kind of defamation is punishable by a spiritual Court,' so that even the reason for the law ceased to exist so far back as 1855, when, by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 41, the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in suits for defamation which had become 'grievous and oppressive to the subjects of this realm' was formally abolished.

A full note of the proceedings on the special case stated in Cleaver v. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association (The Maybrick Insurance Case) appears in our last week's Notes of Cases at p. 136. A careful reading of that note will show that the judgment against the plaintiff in that case is theoretically a conditional one only, to the effect that if it be proved in Mr. Cleaver's action that the convict Maybrick intentionally poisoned her husband, as the jury found, it will follow that Mr. Cleaver's action is barred. 'It is impossible to conceive a stronger case against public policy,' said the Court. But the further question, whether the conviction is conclusive or even primâ facie evidence in Mr. Cleaver's action, remains as yet undecided.

The Savings Banks Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 21), is one of the most important statutes of the late session, and being, as it was, a remanet of the session of 1890, was very greatly needed. It contains nineteen sections, almost entirely directed to improving the position of trustee savings banks. The establishment of a general inspection committee is provided for, and it is enacted that the office of trustee is to be vacated for twelve months' non-attendance at meetings, that trustees are to present their accounts in such form as may be prescribed by those personifications of financial wisdom the National Debt Commissioners. The powers of the banks to make special investments are also made subject to very many restrictions, the most important of which is that 'the money received for investment after the commencement of this Act shall not be invested in any manner not for the time being authorised by law in the case of investment by trustees, and shall not be invested on mortgage of land or any interest in land.'

A correspondent of the Times states that the Local Government Board contemplates ordering the destruction of the enumeration-books of the censuses of 1851 and 1861, which have been for many years stored in the clock tower at Westminster, the object of the proposed destruction being presumed to be to obtain a little more storage room. We hope that nothing of the sort will be done. The particulars contained in these enumeration-books may often turn out to be of very great use in tracing out pedigrees, and in establishing the rights of persons who have emigrated to succeed to property or to make good claims to unclaimed dividends in bankruptcy or on Government Stock; and it seems to us that, instead of destroying such books, the Local Government Board would do well to render them more accessible and intelligible to the public by the preparation of indexes. Perhaps one of the learned societies would take up the matter, which, looking to the fact that the establishment of a permanent census office is under consideration, should be agitated pretty soon, or the books may be destroyed before their real value has been properly appreciated.

At this time of year, when so many persons are taking houses or lodgings for short periods, it is well to direct attention to the provisions of the Sanitary Acts which have been framed specially for their protection from infectious diseases. By section 128 of the Public Health Act of 1875 'any person who knowingly lets any house, room, or part of a house in which any person has been suffering from any dangerous infectious disorder, without having such house, &c., disinfected,' is liable to a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*; and it is added that, 'for the purposes of this section, the keeper of an inn shall be deemed to let part of a house to any person admitted as a guest into such inn;' and by section 129 any person letting any house, &c., 'who, on being questioned by any person negotiating for the hire as to there being, or within six weeks having been, therein any person suffering from any dangerous infectious disorder, knowingly makes a false answer to such question,' is liable to a similar penalty 'or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding one month.' Nor is this all. The Infectious Diseases Prevention Act, 1890 (which is an adoptive Act), by section 7 imposes a penalty of not more than 20*l.* on every person ceasing to occupy any house, &c., in which any person has within six weeks previously been suffering from any infectious disease without having such house, &c., disinfected or without giving notice to the owner of the existence of such disease, and a similar penalty on every such person who falsely answers questions directed to these important points. Influenza has not been declared to be an infectious disease within the meaning of the Act of 1890, which as yet (see sections 2 and 6 of the Infectious Diseases Notification Act, 1889) applies only to 'smallpox, cholera, diphtheria, membranous croup, erysipelas, scarlatina, scarlet fever, and the fevers known as typhus, typhoid, enteric, relapsing, continued, or puerperal.' A ghastly list!

The 'Author' of this month contains a lengthy opinion of Sir H. Davey and Mr. Rolt upon five questions submitted to them in connection with the American Copyright Act. The writers are of opinion that copyright in books is conferred on aliens by Great Britain on substantially the same basis as on British authors, so that as law officers have advised, and as the President of the United States has assumed our law to be, the American Copyright Act fully applies to British subjects; but they point out that by virtue of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, copyright in paintings, drawings, and photographs is expressly confined to British subjects resident in the dominions of the Crown, so that the American Copyright Act cannot be properly applied to them. Musical and dramatic compositions appear to be in a somewhat doubtful position. It is also stated to be the opinion of the writers that the date of the first publication of a book as recognised by the English Courts is the date upon which the book is first offered to the public generally; that English authors will be entitled to American copyright in alterations, revisions, or additions to their books previously published in the States, unless the additions form part of a series or of a work published in parts in course of publication at the time when the American Copyright Act took effect.

ENGLISH CAUSES CÉLÈBRES.—I.

Regina v. Palmer.

Till the middle of the present century strychnia was, forensically speaking, all but unknown. Prussic acid, antimony, opium, and, above all, arsenic, served the purposes and seemed to exhaust the ingenuity of the poisoner, and retribution followed swiftly and surely in the footprints of crime.

On the night of November 22, 1855, John Parsons Cook, a young gentleman of means, once a solicitor's clerk, but at the date in question only an habitué of the turf, died suddenly in convulsions at the Talbot Arms, in Rugeley, Staffordshire. Little more than an hour and a half before his death his friend, betting companion, and medical adviser, William Palmer, of Rugeley, had administered to him two pills, which purported to be merely sedative, and to have been sent from the laboratory of another medical practitioner—a very old man—whom Palmer had called in to see the case. Cook had been ailing for some time. Violent vomiting had followed every attempt that he made to take food, and a few days before the 22nd he had been seized with an attack similar in character to, but less intense than, that which destroyed him. A number of strange circumstances soon came to light. It was known that Cook had won a considerable sum of money shortly before his death at Shrewsbury races. His betting-book was nowhere to be found, and it turned out that Palmer had realised the winnings and applied them in part payment of his own debts, which were instant and overwhelming. Again, although Cook's stepfather, Mr. Stevens, was on the spot, Palmer took upon himself to order a coffin, and eagerly pressed forward the funeral arrangements. Suspicion was aroused. Witnesses were forthcoming who said that it was only when Cook's food was prepared under Palmer's supervision that it made him sick. Men remembered that other persons, too, from whose deaths Palmer would derive pecuniary benefit—his brother, his wife, and at least one of his children—had died as mysteriously as Cook. A coroner's inquest was ordered. Palmer forthwith proceeded to manufacture the most damning evidence against himself. He misplaced and tried to overturn the jars that contained the stomach and intestines for chemical analysis. Although this effort failed, some one succeeded in slitting the skin of the stomach so that the larger portion of the contents escaped. He attempted to bribe the postboy that was to drive the jars to the railway station to upset the coach, and he induced the local postmaster to open the letter that contained the report of the experts, Dr. Taylor and Mr. Rees, and to acquaint him with its terms. He sent presents of game to the coroner. These artifices produced the result that was to be expected, and the sporting surgeon of Rugeley was fully committed for trial for the murder of John Parsons Cook. Rugeley, and, indeed, Staffordshire, had no doubt as to his guilt, and it was obvious that, if he was tried in his own county, the result of the trial would be a foregone conclusion. So the Legislature intervened to protect this blackleg from his neighbours, and an Act of Parliament was passed, which is sometimes described as Palmer's Act (19 Vict. c. 16), and which provides for the removal of a criminal prosecution to the Central Criminal Court when, for some cause personal to the prisoner, a fair trial cannot be had in the appropriate venue. The cause célèbre of Regina v. Palmer was heard at the Old Bailey in the beginning of May, 1856, before three judges — Lord Chief Justice Campbell, Mr. Justice Cresswell, and Mr. Baron Alderson. It lasted for twelve days, and resulted in the jury unanimously finding the prisoner 'guilty as libelled.' The Attorney-General (Sir A. E. Cockburn), Mr. Edwin James, and Mr. Huddleston appeared for the Crown. Mr. Serjeant Shee — vice Mr. Serjeant Wilkins, who was prevented by illness from conducting the defence—Mr. Grove, Q.C., whose scientific knowledge was considered valuable, and the unfortunate Kenealey appeared for the prisoner. The points of legal and medical interest connected with this trial are almost innumerable. We shall deal with a few of them and leave our readers to grapple with the rest. (1) Regina v. Palmer dissipated the delusion that poisoning by strychnia can be effected with impunity. When Dr. Taylor and his brother expert reported that they found no strychnia in the stomach of Cook, it was hastily assumed that this deadly alkaloid could not be detected, and a half-witted farmer in the Midlands, named Dove, poisoned his wife with it on the strength of this assumption.* But the trial conclusively established (a) that the failure of the experts for the prosecution to detect strychnia was due to the conditions under which their experiments were conducted; (b) that strychnia does not defy chemical analysis; and (c) that even if post-mortem appearances prove deceptive, the symptoms of poisoning by strychnia are unique and cannot be confounded by the practised eye with those of general convulsions, epilepsy, or tetanus, whether traumatic or idiopathic. (2) In the course of his powerful speech for the defence, Mr. Serjeant Shee said that he believed 'in his soul' that the prisoner was innocent; and Sir Alexander Cockburn in his reply was, with less excuse, betrayed into hinting that he held a contrary opinion. Lord Campbell directed the jury to disregard both of these observations entirely, and to confine their attention to the evidence. The feather thus plucked from the wings of counsel has never been replaced, and it is not now the practice, even in criminal cases, for an advocate to tell the jury his personal opinion as to the merits of the issues before them. (3) Regina v. Palmer, following Regina v. Macnaghten, 10 Cl. & Fin. 211-212, is an authority for the proposition that an expert will not be permitted to state that upon the facts proved at the trial he is of a certain opinion. But he may be asked what inference he as an expert would draw from certain facts or symptoms, assuming them to be proved. (4) In the course of Palmer's trial Mr. Grove was proceeding to cross-examine a medical student who had assisted at the post-mortem upon the appearances caused by strychnine poisoning, when one of the judges stopped him, saying, 'When you have here all the medical men in England, you had better not put such questions to an undergraduate of London University.' This is the nearest approach that we are aware of in any medico-legal case to the assertion by a judge of his undoubted right to reject the evidence of any expert who appears from his own statements incompetent to give an opinion upon the matter in question. Upon the histrionic features of this remarkable trial we shall not dwell, Sir James Stephen and, longo intervallo, Mr. Harris have made them familiar to all English lawyers. But a bibliographical note may be of some interest and value. The best report of the whole trial is the unillustrated reprint from the Times. The illustrated Times edition is curious and entertaining, but inaccurate. Messrs. Barnett and Buckley's shorthand notes of the evidence are admirable. The pamphlet literature on the subject fills pages in the catalogue of the British Museum, and is written in English, French, German, and even Greek!

(To be continued.)

* Dove subsequently expiated his faulty logic with his life.

IMPLIED RESERVATION OF EASEMENTS.

Probably in the non-legal world the legal theory of the creation and extinguishment of easements is 'caviare to the general.' Practically, however, many owners of property are aware, to their sorrow, that others have rights of way over their parks or fields, though they may be wholly ignorant of how or why these rights were created and in what manner they may be destroyed. The recently decided case of Taws v. Knowles, 26 L. J. N. C. 118, is an instance of those oft-recurring questions as to the implied reservation of an easement when there has been a unity of ownership of both the dominant and servient tenements. Strictly speaking, there is implied in the very idea of an easement the separate existence of two owners. If a man owns Whiteacre and Blackacre, and chooses to make a way from Whiteacre over Blackacre, that is merely an exercise on his part of proprietary rights, and he does not imply from his act that if in the future he sells Blackacre to A., and Whiteacre to B., there is always to be a right for B., and those claiming under him, to walk over the property sold to A. Where, however, one part of his property is landlocked, and the owner of Whiteacre, unless he has a right of way through Blackacre, cannot get out at all, then there is implied a way of necessity. In Taws v. Knowles the owner of the two houses let one and lived in the other, and made a walled passage from one over the other. She mortgaged the second house by a deed which included the passage and reserved no right of way. Before the mortgage was paid off the mortgagor died, having devised the houses to two different persons. The devisee of the second house, having satisfied the mortgage debt, took a reconveyance of all the mortgagee's interest and blocked up the passage. In order to try the question of right, the devisee of the first house brought an action of trespass against the devisee of the second, who in return counter-claimed for an injunction. Mr. Gale, we are told in the sixth edition of his treatise on the 'Law of Easements,' p. 123, was of opinion that upon a severance of two tenements connected by some apparent sign of servitude, whether by the grant of the quasi-dominant or the quasi-servient tenement, an easement was by implication created in favour of the quasi-dominant property. As regards the reservation in favour of the grantor of this quasi-easement, 'this opinion, which was shared by Mr. Willes, must now be considered to be overruled, the Courts considering that the operation of the doctrine in question, on a sale of the quasi-servient tenement, is prevented by the principle that "a man cannot derogate from his own grant."' Applying this principle to the case in point, when the mortgage was made the mortgagor did not expressly reserve (or, more technically, create) any easement over the mortgaged property, and as he could not derogate from his own grant, none was implied in his favour. The mortgagee thus owned the passage free from an easement or quasi-easement in favour of the mortgagor, and, when he conveyed his interest to the devisee on payment off, he conveyed the passage in the same condition as he had received it, that is, free from any easement or quasi-easement. So the Divisional Court held, and the Court of Appeal have affirmed their decision, subject to any possible right on the plaintiff's part to redeem.

But though as against the grantor these two maxims apply—viz. that 'no one shall derogate from his own grant,' and that 'the grant is construed most strongly against the grantor'—surrounding circumstances, and obvious, though unexpressed, intentions may rebut the presumption in favour of the purchaser. Two recent cases will suffice to illustrate this—namely, The Birmingham, Dudley, and District Banking Company v. Ross, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 601; L. R. 38 Chanc. Div. 295, and Russell v. Watts, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 158; L. R. 10 App. Cas. 590. In the former of these two cases the Corporation of Birmingham demised a house in the business quarter of the city to the plaintiff's predecessor in title. The house had certain windows in it that overlooked a plot of land which the corporation subsequently demised to the defendant, who proceeded to erect on it buildings of a considerable height, which obstructed the plaintiffs' windows. Obviously the defendant could stand in no better position than the corporation, so the question resolved itself into this, Was the defendant's building a derogation from the grant to the plaintiffs? 'We must,' said Lord Justice Cotton, 'in determining what obligation results from the position in which the parties have put themselves, have regard to all the existing facts which existed at the time when the conveyance was made, or when the lease was granted, and which were known to both parties. Of course we must be satisfied that they were known to both parties.' The Court of Appeal were of opinion in that case that both parties must have known at the time when the lease was granted that the corporation were going to put out the land for building houses suitable for the locality, so that the plaintiffs had no legal cause of complaint. Russell v. Watts is rather an oblique illustration than a direct one, as the House of Lords held that the mortgages of the respondents' blocks operated as agreements, mutually binding on the parties thereto and those claiming under them not to deviate from the prescribed plans. The opening dicta of Lord Selborne's judgment are well worthy of being committed to memory, as containing a summary of the law on this subject. They are to the following effect: 'We start in this case with the general rule of English law, that a man cannot be prevented from darkening his neighbour's window lights by any act, otherwise lawful, done on his own land, unless light has been enjoyed through those windows for twenty years, and also with another general rule (exemplified in the case of Wheeldon v. Burrows, 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 853; L. R. 12 Chanc. Div. 31), that if a man entitled to a house with windows, however long enjoyed, sells and grants away the adjoining land without any condition, reservation, or other form of contract which can operate restrictively against the grantee, he is not at liberty to derogate from his own grant so as to prevent any use, otherwise lawful, of the land granted, although the windows of his own house may be darkened thereby. It is manifest, however, that neither of those rules can be invoked in defence of any act contrary to the good faith of a particular contract.' In advising, therefore, on the relative rights of vendors and purchasers the man of law has to consider what was the exact state of things in regard to the whole property when part was put up for sale, bearing in mind that the vendor can impliedly reserve no easements against the purchaser, unless the state of the property, and his obvious intentions with regard to it, raise by implication an agreement to that effect.

Correspondence.

COLLIE-DOGS.

Sir,—Both 'Templar' and I are indebted to Messrs. Chappell & Griffith for their full report of this case, as no further statute could be found, and the decision as it originally appeared was certainly of a most astonishing nature.

T. F. Uttley.

Unreported Cases.

ASSIZE CASE.

BILL OF LADING—GRAIN CARGO—DESPATCH TERMS.

On the North-Eastern Circuit, at Leeds, before Mr. Justice Grantham, the case of The Steamship Albany Company v. Procter was heard on August 13.—This case, which possessed considerable interest both for shipowners and importers of grain, substantially turned upon what is the meaning of 'despatch terms' in connection with the discharge of cargoes of grain. Messrs. Ralli Brothers, of London, had shipped at Kurrachee 34,650 bags of wheat on board the steamship Albany. The bills of lading contained a clause to the effect that the ship's responsibility was to cease when the cargo had left the ship's tackles at the port of discharge, which in this case was Hull. The defendants, Messrs. Procter & Sons, of Liverpool and Hull, were the assignees of the bills of lading. On arrival at Hull the steamer was discharged on 'despatch terms.' This meant that the cargo, instead of being delivered direct from the ship to consignees, in which case it would be weighed and tallied on the ship's deck during the discharge, was delivered to a quay and then stored in a warehouse of the dock company. The cargo was then delivered from the warehouse to the consignees, the delivery not being completed until a fortnight had elapsed since the steamer had been discharged. The ship was unloaded in a very hurried manner, the discharge being carried on by night and day continuously, as the ship was urgently required elsewhere. It was admitted that the extra expense incurred in the delivery to the consignees was to be borne by the shipowners. When the delivery from the warehouse to the consignees was completed, it was found that there was a shortage of 120 bags from the bills of lading quantity. The value of these was 69*l.* 11*d.* 2*d.*, after deducting the freight that would be due upon them, and this sum was deducted by the consignees from the freight claimed, and the question was as to whether or not the consignees were entitled to make this deduction. It was alleged on behalf of the shipowners that their responsibility ceased when the cargo had left the ship's tackles, and there was nothing to show that the whole cargo had not been placed on the quay. For the consignees it was contended that the ship's risk continued until the delivery from the warehouse to the consignees had been completed, as the discharge of the ship on 'despatch terms' was entirely in the interest of the shipowners. It was further contended on behalf of the consignees that if they allowed an unreasonable time to elapse before they took delivery from the warehouse it was competent for the shipowners to give orders to the dock company to weigh over the balance of the cargo to them. It was probable that the missing wheat had been stolen between the ship's arrival and the final delivery. The learned judge upheld the contention of the defendants, and held that under the circumstances the risk of the shipowners continued until the final delivery of the wheat to the consignees had been completed. He, therefore, held that the defendants were entitled to deduct the 59*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* from the amount claimed for freight, and accordingly gave judgment for them for this amount on their counterclaim, with costs.—Mr. J. Lawson Walton, Q.C., and Mr. Boyd appeared for the plaintiffs; and the defendants were represented by Mr. Cyril Dodd, Q.C., and Mr. H. T. Kemp.

POLICE.

AUCTIONEERS AND SURVEYORS—INLAND REVENUE.

At the Mansion House, on August 17, Mr. Alexander Andrade, of 54 Cannon Street, attended before Mr. Alderman Tyler on two summonses at the instance of the Inland Revenue Department, the first alleging that he, not being licensed to carry on the business of an auctioneer, for which an excise license was required by statute, had on his premises certain inscriptions—viz. 'Alexander Andrade, auctioneer, surveyor, and land agent,' implying that he exercised that trade; and the second asserting that he directly or indirectly offered a bribe to Jeremiah Dennehy, an officer of Inland Revenue, with a view to corrupt him in the execution of his duty. To the first charge the defendant pleaded 'Guilty,' and to the second 'Not guilty.'—Jeremiah Dennehy, an officer of Inland Revenue, said on May 12 he went to the offices of the defendant at 54 Cannon Street, and observed an inscription on the brass plate and on other parts of the premises, showing that he purported to carry on business as an auctioneer. He saw Mr. Andrade, and pointed out the inscriptions to him, telling him that he had come from the Inland Revenue Office in Great Winchester Street on the subject. The defendant said he did not purport to sell by auction, for all the placards in his office related to sales by private treaty. Witness drew his attention to a placard relating to a sale by auction of some land in Suffolk. The defendant then took from his pocket some gold and silver, and, holding it out, said, 'Here is a sovereign for yourself if you will say nothing about it.' Witness declined, and said he felt insulted at being offered a bribe, and that there was a penalty incurred by his so doing. The defendant said he did not offer him a bribe.—Witness having been cross-examined, Mr. Fulton, for the defence, submitted that not even an indirect offer to bribe had been made by the defendant. What happened was that during the conversation with the officer the defendant lost his temper, and said, 'There are hundreds of persons acting as auctioneers who have not taken out licenses, and some have not got 10*l.* to take them out with; I suppose they grease your palm, and I daresay if I gave you a sovereign I should hear no more about it.' (The officer, in his evidence, had denied that this was said.) His client indignantly repelled the insinuation of attempted bribery, and it was hard for him to be charged there under a penal section, by which he might be fined 500*l.*, over three months after the alleged incident happened, and when he was unable to give evidence in his own behalf. The omission to remove the inscription of auctioneer was only a technical breach, for, as a matter of fact, he had sold nothing by auction since his license expired last year. —Mr. Alderman Tyler fined the defendant 3*l.* and 4*s.* costs on the first summons, and 25*l.* and 4*s.* costs on the second, or 28*l.* 8*s.* in all.—Mr. Alpe, barrister, appeared for the Inland Revenue Department; Mr. Forrest Fulton for the defence.

SUPREME COURT OF BRITISH HONDURAS.

POWERS OF LEGISLATIVE COUNCILS.

At a special session of the Supreme Court of the Colony of British Honduras on July 13, Mr. W. J. Anderson, the Chief Justice, heard the case of Stevens Brothers & Co. v. The Collector of Customs of Belize, which raised a novel and interesting point as to the jurisdiction of the Court over the Legislative Council of a Crown colony. The case was nominally to obtain from the Chief Justice a declaration as to what was the duty leviable on tobacco, but it really was to obtain a decision on the status of the unofficial members of the Council. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the amount claimed by the collector of customs on the importation of cut tobacco was not a legitimate tax, but an illegal exaction, because the ordinance in virtue of which it was levied was not a law, having been passed by a body which was not a Legislature. They founded their allegation on the fact that four salaried officers of the Government had been appointed unofficial members, who, the plaintiffs held, were not qualified to fill such offices.—The Chief Justice reserved judgment, and subsequently on the 15th decided in favour of the plaintiffs, with costs. In doing so he said the plaintiffs' contention was that the Legislative Council at the time of the passing of Ordinance 8 of 1891 was not constituted as provided in chapter 2 of the Consolidated Laws, and that the ordinance was not duly passed. The Legislative Council of the colony was constituted by a local enactment 34 Vict. sess. 3, c. 1, which was now known as chapter 2 of their Consolidated Laws. Section 2 gave power to the governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of the colony, and by section 3 it was enacted that 'it shall and may be lawful for Her Majesty the Queen from time to time, by any instructions or warrants under her sign-manual and signet, to designate such officers and appoint such persons as she may think fit to be respectively official and unofficial members of the said council.' Section 4 enacts that, until otherwise declared by any such instruction or warrant, certain officers therein designated should be the official members, and that in addition thereto there shall be not less than four unofficial members. The Attorney-General, on behalf of the defendant, contended that the words of section 3 were plain and unambiguous, that the word 'officer' was there used in a general sense, and that the term 'person' meant any individual with legal duties and responsibilities; that the expressions 'official' and 'unofficial' members were relative expressions, that the official member was the person designated by the title of his office, and the unofficial member was the individual appointment. There was no doubt whatever in the mind of the Chief Justice that the Legislature, when by section 3 it made it lawful for Her Majesty the Queen to designate such officers and appoint such persons as she might think fit to be respectively official and unofficial members of the council, intended that the unofficial members should be persons other than the officers of the Government. The very use of the words 'unofficial members' sufficiently showed this, for these words could only reasonably mean members who did not hold offices or who were not officers. To construe the section in the way that he was asked to do by the Attorney-General he would have to leave out entirely the word 'unofficial.' It seemed to him to be impossible by any process of right reasoning to say that the words 'and appoint such persons as she may think fit to be unofficial members,' as used in the section, could be extended to mean the appointment of such officers or persons who might not be ex officio members of the Council. He was, therefore, of opinion that the Legislative Council, as constituted on March 21, 1891, when Ordinance 8 of 1891 was passed, was not constituted as provided in chapter 2 of the Consolidated Laws. Then arose the question, Had that Court jurisdiction to decide as to the validity of Ordinance 8 of 1891? It was a point which had never arisen before. It could not arise with respect to any statute of the Imperial Parliament, and he was not aware that it had arisen in any other of Her Majesty's colonial possessions. The Attorney-General argued that it was a public ordinance of the colony, and that, as such, the Court was bound under section 9 of chapter 1 to take judicial notice of it, and could not go behind it. The laws of the Imperial Parliament, the Chief Justice held, bore no analogy to those of a colonial Legislature, and they could not look to the English Courts to throw any light on this point; but in America it was different. After quoting from Kent's 'Commentaries on American Law,' p. 448, his Honour continued: There is no doubt that there ought to be, and there must be, some restraining power upon a colonial Legislature, and that that restraining power should vest in the Courts of justice. There has been no objection taken as to the form of the action by which the question has been raised, but simply a general objection that the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to decide a question as to the constitution of the Legislative Council. If I were to decide that the constitution of the Legislative Council could not be questioned, I would really be holding that the Legislative Council was above the law, and that its acts and proceedings could not be questioned, however illegal or unconstitutional they might be. I cannot give effect to any such proposition. When the Legislative Assembly gave up its representative rights it passed in 1870 a statute—34 Vict. c. 1—by which the new Legislature was constituted. That statute is practically still in force, although for the purpose of consolidation it is known now in our statute-books as chapter 2, and as long as it remains in force and is unrepealed by competent authority the Executive is bound by it, and this Court is the proper tribunal to decide any question that may arise affecting the constitution of the council. Notice of appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has been lodged on behalf of the defendant, and as the affairs of the colony will be at a standstill until an authoritative decision is given, it is expected that the case will be dealt with as a matter of urgency immediately after the Long Vacation. —Mr. R. H. Logan, for the plaintiffs; Mr. C. R. Hoffmeister, the Attorney-General of the colony, for the defendant.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

The completed programme of the business to be transacted during the eighteenth annual meeting of the Incorporated Law Society (U. K.), to be held in Plymouth during the coming week, has been issued by the hon. local secretary (Mr. J. Woolcombe, of Plymouth), and it shows that in every respect ample provision has been made for the reception of the visitors both during the transaction of business and for their entertainment subsequently in the way of excursions. On Monday evening, the 24th inst., the Mayor of Plymouth (Mr. J. T. Borer) will receive the president, council and members of the Society, and the ladies accompanying them, at a conversazione at the Guildhall. On Tuesday morning the president of the Plymouth Incorporated Law Society (Mr. John Cheely) will receive the members in the Western Law Courts, when the president of the U. K. Incorporated Law Society (Mr. W. Melmoth Walters) will deliver his inaugural address, which will be followed by the reading and discussion of papers. Mr. and Mrs. Shelly will in the evening hold a reception at the Promenade Pier Pavilion. On Wednesday the reading and discussion of papers will be continued and concluded, and the annual banquet of the society will take place in the evening, presided over by Mr. Shelly. The Lord Chief Justice and the Solicitor-General are expected to be amongst the distinguished guests present. An ample programme of excursions has been arranged for the following days, including trips to Dartmoor, the country seats of Lord St. Levan, Lord Mount-Edgcumbe, and Earl Morley. Special arrangements have been made for the convenience and accommodation of visitors in many respects. Telegrams, for instance, addressed 'c/o Oyez, Plymouth,' will be forwarded by the hon. secretary to the temporary address of the member as supplied to him. All the principal clubs and institutions of the town will be placed at the disposal of the visitors during the week, and every effort made to render their stay as pleasant as possible.

THE APPROACHING REGISTRATIONS: HOW VOTES MAY BE SAVED.

'A Revising Barrister' writes to the Times as follows:—

In view of the approaching registrations of Parliamentary and local government electors, permit me, as a revising barrister of considerable experience, to point out to electors now on the lists how easily their votes may be lost and how easily they may be saved.

It is constantly the duty of the revising barristers, on objections taken, and often even without objections, to strike off the names of electors from the lists, undoubtedly qualified, but by reason of neglect or disregard of some statutory requisitions as to registration—as omission to record a change of address, an insufficient description of the qualification or of the qualifying property, or a neglect to mention 'successive' occupation, or the like, all of which could easily be supplied, but which too often are not supplied in time, so that the votes of electors duly qualified are constantly from such causes lost.

The Legislature, well aware of this, has taken care to afford facilities for the supplying of such defects and the correction of such omissions. Besides and beyond the power of amendment which the barrister is to exercise as to 'all mistakes in the list,' or mistakes of the overseers in making out the lists—and which would not suffice in such cases as above mentioned as they are not cases of mistake, but of mere neglect or omission, or misstatement of the voter—beside and beyond this, there is ample power given to the elector to supply any such omissions and correct any such misstatements up to a few days before the commencement of the revision; and yet, strange as it may seem, thousands and tens of thousand of votes are lost at every revision through simple ignorance or neglect of this salutary provision. It may appear incredible, but I am able to state from actual experience that it is hardly ever taken advantage of. The provision in question was made as to county (ownership) voters so long ago as 1865. In an Act of that year, the County Registration Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 36), s. 10, provision was made for the most common cause of loss of ownership votes—the omission to record a change of address—by this enactment: 'Any person whose name appears on the list of voters, and whose then place of abode is not correctly stated on the list, and who shall have possessed the same qualification, may make a declaration before any justice of the peace, or commissioner, or other person authorised to administer oaths (in a form given), such declaration to be on or before September 5 (only three days before September 8, when the registrations commence), transmitted to the clerk of the peace, and by him sent to the revising barrister.' It would be impossible to imagine a more useful or salutary provision, and there are thousands and thousands of cases in which it might be taken advantage of to save county votes lost or imperilled by a change of address. And yet, though it may seem almost incredible, I hardly ever have such a declaration, and in consequence have often an objection taken that the address on the list is no longer the true address, and to strike out names of county ownership voters. It is to be observed that the Legislature has required that if an ownership voter has changed his address he must not only supply it, but also prove that he still retains the same qualification, which may be by reclaim, but more easily by a declaration, on which the barrister can amend the address. Such cases occur at every revision, and yet, through ignorance or neglect, this salutary provision is hardly ever, according to my experience, taken advantage of.

The same provision is by the last Registration Act of 1885 still more widely extended and applied to occupation voters and borough and local government electors:

'Where any person is entered on a list of voters, whose name or place of abode, or the nature of whose qualification, or the name or situation of whose qualifying property is not correctly stated on such list, or in respect of whom there is any other error or omission in the list, he may make a declaration, &c., to be sent to the clerk of the peace on or before September 5, and by him to be sent to the revising barrister, who is to take it as evidence, and may amend accordingly' ('Rogers on Elections,' last edition by Powell, p. 288). And the Court of Appeal held a few years ago that with such a declaration, but not without it, the barrister may change the description of the qualification (Ib. p. 272, citing Foskett v. Kauffman, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 1; L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 279).

It must be obvious that if this salutary provision were duly taken advantage of no vote need be lost for any defect or omission in the statements on the register or lists of voters, and as I cannot help thinking that the reason it is so rarely taken advantage of is that it is little known I venture to take the best possible means of making it known by writing to you.

It is probable, indeed, that there is a very widespread ignorance as to the comparatively slight or subordinate causes by which votes may be lost, although there is an undoubted qualification. Perhaps few ownership voters are aware that their vote may be lost if objected to on account of a change in their address, or that it may be lost even without objection if the qualifying property is not so described as to be identified. Numbers of ownership votes are lost every year from these causes, though the qualifications are undoubtedly good. The Court of Appeal held this year that an ownership vote was lost by a misdescription of the legal nature of the qualification (which no layman could be aware of), and that the barrister was wrong in amending it without a statutory declaration, with which it could have been amended, and the vote might have been saved. Again, few occupation voters probably are aware that these votes are imperilled, though their names are on the overseers' list, if the overseers have made some error in description—as, for example, if the voter, having been during the year in two houses, they have only put down one. Yet any such misdescription may be set right up to September 5 by a statutory declaration.

The perils which beset the voters are, it will be seen, to a great extent latent, and only to be detected by lawyers or experts, and for these the only remedy is to consult a good registration agent. But a voter can at least tell by looking at the list of voters—first, whether his name be there at all (if not, he must at once send in a claim and take care that it is correct); next, whether his address be correctly given; and, lastly, whether, as far as he can tell, the qualification is correctly described; and if as to this latter point he is in doubt, he may consult an agent, and if he finds anything wrong he may correct it by a statutory declaration. The electors, however, hardly ever look at the lists, and if at the revision it is found their names are not on the list or are struck out, through some gross error in the description which might easily have been set right, they are very angry about it with everybody but themselves, and cannot be made to see that it is entirely their own fault.

If by the publication of this letter the attention of voters throughout the country is awakened to the subject, many thousands of good votes may be saved at the ensuing revision.

Quarter Sessions for Swansea.—The Mayor of Swansea has received an official intimation that Swansea had been created a quarter sessions borough, and that Mr. David Lewis, of 3 King's Bench Walk, Temple, and South Wales Circuit, has been appointed first recorder.

BUSINESS AT ASSIZES.

The following further correspondence on this subject has appeared in the Times:—

Mr. Buszard, Q.C., and his Honour Judge Powell, both very competent and experienced in such matters, have called public attention in your columns to the inadequacy and inconvenience of the existing arrangements for the conduct of assize business. These arrangements, which are an interesting but antiquated survival of our ancient legal system, still hold their ground, notwithstanding the assaults of many legal reformers; but they do so assuredly not by reason of any inherent virtue which they possess, but solely from that extraordinary tenacity with which every legal abuse in this country clings to life; still, as Judge Powell puts it, Gutta cavat lapidem, only life is unfortunately too short for us who have for many years pounded away at this particular abuse to hope to see the stone disappear.

By the courtesy of the Times I have been more than once permitted to state my view as to the remedy for the undoubted abuses attending our judicial system. That remedy is hinted at in desperation by Mr. Buszard, and is put in the foreground as an 'heroic remedy' by Judge Powell, and it is this—the exaltation of the County Courts into provincial Courts of first instance, with unlimited jurisdiction.

This was virtually the famous recommendation arrived at by a large majority of the Judicature Commissioners in 1872, including such great names of past and present judges as Lords Hatherley, Selborne, and Bramwell, Montague Smith and J. S. Willes, and such an eminent practical lawyer as Mr. John Hollams, of London, still happily with us. And it was the rock upon which a minority of the commissioners, who could not consent to give up the great central judicial system with its attendent central bar, split.

The report recommended that the County Courts should become branches of the High Court, with unlimited jurisdiction, and that the judges of the more important centres should be adequately remunerated and consequently men of high standing; and that the judges of proved ability should from time to time be promoted to the Supreme Court, thus linking together the entire judicial system.

The effect of this would be that, with comparatively rare exceptions, litigation, both on the common law and equity side, would be localised; the Courts in London no longer congested as they often are, more particularly on the equity side, with an accumulation of business which is to a great extent provincial; the hurry and scurry, the disappointments, and vexations attending the circuit or assize system would be at an end, and litigation would be far less costly.

May we hope that next session—the Irish Bill, the Education Bill, and the Tithe Bill being happily relegated to the statute-book—time may be found by our legislators to consider this surely not unimportant subject, and that in place of being shelved, as it was in the last session, it will in the next receive that measure of consideration which is its due?

In the meantime permit me once more to 'peg away' and add my mite to the discussion.

C. T. Saunders.

Birmingham: August 11.

In his letter to-day about substituting district Courts for the assize Courts, held under the present circuit system, Mr. Pitt-Lewis, commenting on the existing state of circuit business, says that he can answer for one circuit himself, but that on all the circuits it is pretty much the same. He then proceeds as follows:—

'The great majority of cases tried have been petty actions, . . . while their character was pretty well proved by the fact that most of them were, on one side or other, and many on both sides, deemed only of sufficient importance to only require the services of a junior single-handed—in fact, tried as they would have been in a County Court.'

I am very sorry indeed to hear that this state of affairs exists on the Western Circuit, but I do not think the statement should be allowed to pass that on all the circuits it is pretty much the same.

I will, at all events, describe the work on the North-Eastern Circuit, more especially at Leeds, during these assizes (where we now are), using Mr. Pitt-Lewis's sentence as my model.

The great majority of cases tried have been important actions, and their character has been proved by the fact that out of between thirty and forty already tried all of them, except, perhaps, in half a dozen instances, have required the services of a Queen's Counsel and a junior, and several of them of two Queen's Counsel and one or more juniors on each side, and hardly one action in the list could properly have been tried in the County Court.

I should add that the above fairly represents the state of business at all the assize towns on the North-Eastern Circuit, except perhaps at York. The judges who come on this circuit know too well the hard work they have to do; and I may add that some of them have told me that the cases tried at Leeds are now on an average more important than the cases tried in London.

I only write to show that, at all events here, Mr. Pitt-Lewis's picture of the work done on circuit does not apply; and I will not comment on his plan of district Courts, which would, no doubt, work well in some of the small assize towns in England.

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

C. F. Wade, Associate, North-Eastern Circuit.

Leeds, August 11.

In reply to the letter of my friend Mr. Wade, which appears in the Times of this morning, will you allow me to point out that the sources of information quoted in the leader in the Times of this morning appear to show that, speaking with reference to the general state of circuit business, I was right in the statement made in my former letter? Indeed, I was even more correct than the figures which are cited by you would at first show, for how many of the comparatively few paltry cases tried on circuit were actions for libel, slander, or personal injuries, in which the sole question tried was one exclusively for the jury, and the assistance of a judge skilled in the construction of commercial documents or in the usages of business was not in the least required, but the necessary instructions and guidance could well have been given to the jury by any County Court judge of average (and the average is a high one) experience and ability?

Lawyers generally will, I am sure, rejoice to learn that in the barren desert of legal work there exists such an oasis as is painted in Mr. Wade's letter as being furnished by the North-Eastern Circuit, and the mouths of many will water at the feast for lawyers which is described as there existing. But, accepting his statements to the full, Mr. Wade deals with only one (and, I fear, almost solitary) circuit, while my statements pictured the general condition of circuit business. Does the exceptional condition of matters on the North-Eastern Circuit furnish any reason for the general continuance throughout England of a system which has for the most part become obsolete, or do more than prove that in the application of the district system places on the North-Eastern Circuit should be centres of important districts, and always furnished with exceptionally able district judges?

Again, your correspondent Mr. Saunders points out that the district system now advocated is almost identical with that recommended by the Judicature Commissioners of 1872, of which, however, a minority of the commissioners could not approve on the ground (on which, indeed, it was eventually wrecked) that it would have destroyed the existence of a central bar. The library of my Inn of Court (the Middle Temple) being closed for six weeks or two months and its members relegated to Lincoln's Inn library, I cannot conveniently refer to the report itself, and therefore write from memory. But, if I remember correctly, the scheme recommended by this report was open to the twofold objection that, while it would have destroyed the central bar (and thus imperilled the independence of the profession), it also involved the existence of purely local judges, with the concomitant objections. The scheme propounded in my former letter endeavours to avoid both these disadvantages. The portion of it which suggests that the disadvantages of a fixed local judge can be avoided by a system of changing the judge every three years has been canvassed by some of the press on the ground that a similar 'three years' system' has been tried with Wesleyan ministers, and has become the ground of a recent agitation for its abolition. Without expressing any opinion on the merits of the Wesleyan system, I may point out that Wesleyan ministers are, as a rule, but poorly paid, and that the expenses of forced removal every three years fall upon their slender resources as a very severe tax. The increase of 1,000*l.* per annum in their salaries (which would then be 2,500*l.* per annum), and their improved position by being made judges of the High Court, and eligible for promotion thereon, would, I think, reconcile most County Court judges to the undoubted inconvenience of a triennial move. The disadvantage that the adoption of the scheme of district Courts would necessitate the destruction of a central bar is not necessarily incident to it. While an increased number of barristers would, no doubt, find it advantageous to practise locally, the appeal business arising from the district Courts would induce many to remain in London and form a central bar. Then, again, in these days of improved communication, the district Courts would be open to members of the central bar practising in London, being free from the trade unionism of the obsolete circuit system. For, when the County Courts were established nearly fifty years ago public opinion would not allow that practitioners in them should be fettered by the restrictions of the circuit system, and a barrister belonging to any circuit whatever is at perfect liberty now to practise in a County Court upon any other circuit as well as in those on his own. The same 'free trade' would doubtless prevail in the district Courts with, perhaps, the additional advantage that the possession of the rank of Q.C. (which is rapidly coming to mean that its possessor shall be excluded by restrictive rules of professional etiquette from a right to participate in the bulk of the business of the country) would not be considered to render it derogatory to its possessor to sometimes appear in such Courts.

For the information of those interested in the subject I may add that I have prepared, and intend to have privately printed, the draft of a bill embodying my views, which it is proposed to introduce in the next Session of Parliament. It is, of course, out of the question for a private member to hope to carry such a measure, unless he can raise such an agitation in its favour as will secure the support, or, at least, the neutrality (and this alone would, I believe, assure the passage of the measure in the House of Commons), of the Government. Meanwhile, I shall, after the middle of next week, be happy to furnish anyone interested in the subject with a copy of this tentative draft, and be very grateful for any suggestions for its improvement with which I may be favoured.

Your obedient Servant,
G. PITT-LEWIS.

4 Paper Buildings, Temple: August 15.

Amongst the numerous remedies which have been suggested for the defects of the present circuit system one seems to have been lost sight of which, if tried, might, at all events, serve as a test whether that system is really dying of inanition or only being artificially strangled by the employment of single judges.

By section 16 of the recent County Courts Act the names of judges of County Courts may be inserted in the commissions of assize, &c. If the names of such of those judges acting within the jurisdiction of each circuit as were recommended for the purpose by (say) the Lord Chief Justice or the judge of the High Court travelling that circuit were inserted in the commissions, there would be little difficulty, I believe, in finding in every circuit town a competent man to hold a second Court. The business might easily be divided on the principle adopted in the Central Criminal Court, the heavier cases, both criminal and civil, being tried before the judge of the High Court, the lighter of both classes before the judge of the County Court. Were this experiment tried the single-judge grievance would be at once removed and the civil and criminal business conducted simultaneously and without dragging out the circuits to their present extravagant length.

Among the County Court judges themselves there would, I am sure, be found enough competent men sufficiently public spirited to give up some of their spare time to an occupation which, to most of them, would be a pleasant relief from the alternatives of waiting at railway stations or elsewhere, travelling in slow trains, and listening to dull perjury, in which so much of their lives is now spent.

For myself I venture to hope that the circuits of the superior judges will not be destroyed. I write not without experience. Besides having had that of a counsel in practice under the old system, I have during my nearly twenty years' tenure of my present office devoted as much time as I could spare to local business—inter alia, acting as chairman of quarter sessions and serving regularly on the grand juries at the assizes in two counties. Keeping up my old friendships with my contemporaries of the bar, many of whom are now judges or in large practice as counsel, and forming new ones among the juniors—being also much brought into contact with solicitors—I am in a position to hear all opinions. And whilst condemnation of the present state of things is universal amongst the bar, I feel sure that the concentration of business in London is a greater evil. The expenses of the assizes are patent and conspicuous; but why not consider the cost to the wretched country suitor of the weary waiting with his witnesses in London while his case is in a congested list?

Nor is the importance of the circuits as a nursery of the bar to be lost sight of. Those are very short-sighted who think it of no consequence that the justice of a civilised country should be administered by men of the highest ability and independence, whether as advocates or judges. Many of the greatest names which have adorned the English bench and bar have come into notice from humble beginnings on rural circuits. And if this, almost the only arena on which a barrister has now an independent chance of earning distinction, be cut away, the only avenue to success will be that of family connection with, or subservience to, the solicitors of London and some few great manufacturing towns.

Let, then, my proposal be tried. It is an experiment which will cost nothing except an indemnity against their expenses to the judges employed. If successful, it will solve, simply, a great difficulty; if unsuccessful, it will at least provide valuable materials to those who have the responsibility of determining the direction in which the reform of a system, admitted on all hands to be faulty, should proceed. I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

RICHARD HARINGTON, Judge of County Courts, Circuit 22.

Whitbourne Court, Worcester: August 16.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

WHO SHOULD PROSECUTE?

AN unusual incident took place at the recent Liverpool Assizes. A railway signalman was indicted for manslaughter. On the case being called, a discussion took place as to what counsel was to conduct the case for the prosecution. It appeared that an inquest had been held on the deceased, and the jury found the signalman 'Not guilty.' The case was subsequently before the stipendiary magistrate, and the police offered no evidence against the signalman. The Director of Public Prosecutions stepped in, and through the Attorney-General the case was again taken up and sent to the assizes. The Attorney-General was represented by two legal gentlemen, and the public prosecutor for the borough of Salford by another. The latter counsel claimed under a local Act of Parliament that it was his duty to conduct the case, but the Attorney-General's counsel contended that it was his duty, seeing that the police of Salford had retired, that the coroner's jury had acquitted the signalman, and that the Attorney-General had now instructed him. His lordship hereupon remarked, 'You need not threaten me with the Attorney-General. I am here as judge of assize to do my duty. I have my own opinion about the case. If you gentlemen don't settle this between you, I know what course I will adopt. I am not going to decide between two gentlemen of the bar.' The Attorney-General's counsel said his lordship would see that this was a point in which there were rights of each party—he would be quite willing to withdraw if his lordship would give his sanction; but his lordship refused to sanction any withdrawal, and ultimately the counsel for the Public Prosecutor proceeded to state the facts of the case to the jury. His lordship, after hearing the evidence, remarked that the prisoner had been acquitted before the coroner, when he had his mouth open, and now he had his mouth shut he was to be tried again. At the conclusion of the case for the Crown the jury acquitted the prisoner, his lordship pointing out that the Attorney-General must have made some mistake in instituting the proceedings.

A COTTON-SPINNING CUSTOM.

Recently at the Colne County Court an important case affecting cotton spinners was heard. A cotton spinner and manufacturer was sued by a former spinner in his employ for 1*l.* 19*s.* for wages due in lieu of a fortnight's notice. The spinner said it was customary with operative spinners when they were under the impression that yarn supplied to them was of a finer count than they were being paid for to take some for the purpose of having it wrapped or tested. He did this, and was discharged. The manufacturer contended that he was justified in dismissing the man for stealing yarn. This custom, however, said the judge, was a rank bad one, and one which would paralyse the industry of Lancashire; he thought the yarn should have been weighed at the mill in the presence of all interested in the payment for working it, and where the necessary appliances were kept; however, bad as the custom was, had the manufacturer previously assented to it he would have been held as bound by that; the law would assist the operative if he had any difficulty in being present when the yarn was tested and seeing that he was fairly treated, but it would not assist him in taking things away from the premises of the proprietor and against his will. Judgment was, therefore, given for the manufacturer with costs. Referring to the fact that the case was brought at the instance of an Operative Spinners' Association, his Honour observed that actions brought by weavers' associations in his experience served a good and useful purpose. Had he any difficulty with his workpeople he would be very glad to deal with those who represented the operatives' associations. Referring to this decision, the Cotton Factory Times deals very severely with the judgment, viewing it, of course, from an operative's point of view. It contends that the custom in question, which is stated to have been in force for many years, will not paralyse trade, and even employers have never said it would. It is also pointed out that employers in the bulk will not have operatives about the warehouse testing their yarn. Our contemporary then advises its readers that, as the law does not help the operatives and is not likely to help them in the matter, they must consequently help themselves. The proper cure for the business is to insist upon payment by length, but, perhaps, this is too straightforward a system for the employers. The operatives must, therefore, continue to take out cops whenever it suits their purpose to do so, always, of course, taking them back after testing. If employers object to this, let them object; but, if they do more than this, and presume to discharge those who do it, let the operatives take the course they think best. Losing a lawsuit involves a few pounds only. Employers will find that the decision does not 'exhaust the resources of civilisation.'

'SIGNED, SEALED, AND DELIVERED.'

Referring to Stock Exchange customs and transfers, it has been proposed to our M.P. members that they should compass the doing away of those foolish little seals which we are all accustomed to affix to transfers, and without which no executed and attested transfer is really valid. What do they convey, it is asked, but the usages of a bygone age, before free education taught everybody to write? The gummed paper seals are symbols of the seals which our forefathers carried on their sword-hilts, and with which they transacted their business by affixing the seals—an equivalent to their signatures—to any document. Indeed, with one end or the other of their swords they used to settle everything in those happy days. In order that the words 'signed, sealed, and delivered' may be carried out exactly we are required to stick bits of red paper on a transfer. Perhaps, it is suggested, the Stock Exchange committee would recognise all transfers as good delivery which have not these dabs of coloured paper upon them. At any rate, if the Stock Exchange committee will not carry out this reform, Parliament is to be asked to do so, with, of course, the usual concomitants of delay and bitter discussion. The agitators for this reform seem to forget that they are reflecting severely on their forefathers, who, when they established the custom in question, must be presumed to have understood their own purpose.

RIGHTS OF BANK DEPOSITORS.

Rule 105 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, runs thus: 'A creditor may prove for a debt, not payable when the winding-up order was made, as if it were payable immediately, subject to a rebate of interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, computed from the winding-up to the time when the debt would have become payable according to the terms on which it was contracted.' Looking at this rule, how would depositors with a bank, whose money is at a fixed rate for withdrawal at one or two years' notice, be ranked as creditors? The rule just given supplies the answer, and it shows also that in the case of a compulsory winding-up there is but a very slight difference in the status of depositors for amounts placed in a company and repayable at different times. A contemporary considers it a wonder that the rule in question is worded in the language of everyday life.

ARMY OFFICERS AND CABINET MINISTERS AS COMPANY DIRECTORS.

Cabinet ministers should not be company directors if army officers should not. It appears, though, that there is no official prohibition against members of the Government, who are also members of the House of Commons, being directors of public companies. It is, of course, a question for shareholders as to whether they consider that members of the Government can attend to their official duties and at the same time pay proper attention to the interests of the shareholders of the companies of which they are directors. Shareholders can refuse to re-elect such directors. It will be remembered that an order has been issued forbidding officers in the army on full pay from acting as directors of public companies. Of course their half-pay confrères are still at liberty to eke out their incomes in this way, for the War Office order does not affect them. Many companies would be saved from wreck and ruin if the articles and memorandum of association of a company made it a sine qua non that the directors of a company should be persons accustomed to the business the company transacts, that they should have no interest in any other company as directors, and that they should have a substantial pecuniary interest in the concern. These suggestions, of course, virtually turn all companies into a limited kind of partnership; and is not that what it will ultimately have to come to with so many rotten companies with incompetent directors in whom the shareholders can repose but little faith?

UNDISCHARGED BANKRUPTS AND PARTNERSHIPS.

A person was adjudged a bankrupt in 1887, and did not obtain his discharge. He subsequently entered into partnership with another man, and they traded as 'Grantor & Co.' The creditors found out the fact of one member of the firm being an undischarged bankrupt and instituted criminal proceedings, the charge being obtaining goods on credit. Counsel for the prisoner set up a novel defence. He argued that the section of the Bankruptcy Act referring to the offence, which stated that when an undischarged bankrupt who has been adjudged a bankrupt obtains credit to the amount of 20*l.* or upwards from any persons without informing them that he is an undischarged bankrupt is guilty of an offence, was clearly intended to put liability only on that person who obtained the credit for himself. In the present case the goods which formed the subject of the charge were obtained not on the account of the bankrupt alone, but for the partnership uses, and the partnership was therefore liable, and not the bankrupt alone. Counsel for the prosecution agreed that this was an entirely new point. Certainly any doubt should not tend against but go to the favour of the accused, but in partnership dealings of this kind there was not only a joint liability but a separate liability of the partners. If the partnership obtained goods, not only could the partners be sued jointly but also severally, and as their civil liability held severally so must their criminal. The recorder of the Manchester City Sessions, before whom the case was argued, considered that the Act seemed to bear the interpretation put upon it by the prisoner's counsel, and his contention was good in law. The Legislature in framing the Act had overlooked the point. He accordingly directed an acquittal of the bankrupt. The matter is to be brought to the notice of the Treasury.

Sir Henry Hawkins.—The illness of Mr. Justice Hawkins is of a serious nature. Dr. Cowper saw Sir Henry on August 19, and expressed the hope that the crisis had passed, but there is stated to be no apparent change in the patient's condition. Sir Henry is suffering from nervous exhaustion, extreme weakness, sleeplessness, and lack of power to take sufficient nourishment.

Lincoln's Inn Fields.—Some time ago Lord Meath, as chairman of the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association, wrote to the trustees of Lincoln's Inn Fields, earnestly asking them to consider whether they could not see their way to open the grounds for a limited period of the year, if only for a short time each day, to the inhabitants generally of the district, or even to the children only. He pointed out that the experiment of opening such grounds for limited periods had been tried with entire success in the case of the Temple Gardens. With regard to the expense, Lord Meath said: 'Of course, a certain amount of expense is involved, as caretakers must be appointed to be on duty during the time the ground is open. We believe, however, the London County Council would be quite willing to undertake this "partial management," which, under the Open Spaces Act, 1881, ss. 2, 5, the trustees have power to permit, and the council to accept of, if the former do not themselves feel able to bear the cost.' The association suggested that the ground might be open in the afternoons and evenings after business hours, and on Sundays, when offices are closed, and when no objection could be raised on the score of noise. They offered to supply an adequate number of seats. Lord Meath pointed out that the trustees had power, by section 2 of the Open Spaces Act, 1881, to admit the public at any specified time. In replying to this appeal, Mr. Edward Upton, secretary to the trustees of Lincoln's Inn Fields, stated that some years since the trustees were advised by very eminent counsel that they had no power to admit the public generally to the gardens, and that they were unable to find that any power had been given to them by the Acts which had been referred to. He pointed out that neither the Open Spaces Act of 1877 nor that of 1890 could be applicable to these gardens, and that the trustees were not prepared to transfer the ownership to the London County Council under the Act of 1881. As to opening the fields to the inhabitants or the children of the neighbourhood, this would, in the opinion of the trustees, interfere with the enjoyment of the owners and occupiers of neighbouring houses and other respectable persons who are now admitted for a small annual fee. After pointing out that the Temple Gardens are different in character from Lincoln's Inn Fields, and declaring that by throwing the latter open generally to the public their whole character would be changed (by the abolition of the thickets and shrubberies and the introduction of numerous caretakers), the secretary concludes by saying that the trustees had with great reluctance come to the conclusion that it is impossible for them to accede to Lord Meath's request.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM AUGUST 24 TO AUGUST 29.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Aug. 24	Aug. 25	Aug. 26	Aug. 27	Aug. 28	Aug. 29
7	Judge Ffoulkes	Birkenhead	Runcorn	Northwich	Warrington	Leigh	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Christchurch	Bournemouth	Wimborne	—	—

NOTES OF CASES.*

Chancery Division.
ROMER, J.
Aug. 8.
} ALCOCK v. SMITH.

Bill of Exchange—Transfer of Property—Overdue Bill Transferred Abroad—Rights of Transferee—Conflict of Laws.

An English bill, drawn and accepted in London by English firms, and payable to the order of Andreson & Co., was indorsed to the order of one Mayer, who, in his turn, indorsed it in blank in Norway and handed it to Schiender, as agent for the plaintiffs, for valuable consideration. Whilst in Schiender's hands the bill was seized under the Norwegian law by the local authority in respect of a judgment debt obtained in Norway by a creditor of one of the members of the plaintiff firm. Schiender, as the plaintiffs' agent, protested, but the local authority decided that the seizure was valid, and after some months, long after the bill was overdue, the bill was sold at an auction, in accordance with Norwegian law, the effect of that sale being, according to Norwegian law, to confer a valid title on the purchaser, freed from any claim by Schiender or his principals, notwithstanding that the bill was overdue at the date of the sale. The defendant claimed under the sale; the plaintiffs claimed to assert as against them the equities attaching to the bill in the hands of the vendor, in accordance with the principles of English law.

Haldane, Q.C., and Farwell, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.

Kennedy, Q.C., and Daniel Jones for the defendants.

ROMER, J., held that a question affecting only the holders of the bill, and not affecting the drawers or acceptors, must be decided according to the law of the country where the transfer took place, and that in this case the Norwegian law prevailed, and the defendants were entitled to the bill.

Solicitors: Stokes, Saunders & Stokes; Murray, Hutchins & Stirling.

SINGULAR ACTION AGAINST AN M.P.—An extraordinary case was heard by Judge Bayley in the Westminster County Court on August 13, in which the plaintiff, a Mr. Travers, of 6 Sidmouth Street, St. Pancras, which is within the parliamentary division of South St. Pancras, sued Sir Julian Goldsmid, M.P., for damages for refusing to present a petition to the House of Commons. Sir Julian Goldsmid was represented by his private secretary.—The plaintiff, in opening his case, said he had searched, but without success, to find a case like the present, which, he submitted, was a novel one. He then referred to Lord Farnborough's book upon House of Commons Practice and Smith's Leading Cases. He had a grievance, and the only way he could bring the matter forward was by petition to the House of Commons, and on June 19 he sent a petition to Sir Julian Goldsmid, which was returned to him by one of the clerks of the House, stating that, as the petition reflected upon the character of a judge, it could not be received. He submitted that Sir Julian Goldsmid should have followed the matter up and not been put off by a clerk like that. A few days after that he sent Sir Julian Goldsmid another petition, which he returned and refused to present. The law did not allow any action against a judge, and the only remedy was that which Parliament could take. The second petition had the last paragraph struck out.—His Honour: It is equally objectionable.—The plaintiff: It is the duty of a member of Parliament to bring the matter forward if a petition fails. Continuing, he said he brought an action against Lord Esher for slander in the course of a case, and that was ordered to be struck out, as no judge could be sued. How could he question the conduct of a judge when the only course open to him was by petitioning Parliament, and that course was denied him on the ground that he was assailing the conduct of the judge?—After some further discussion, judgment was given for the defendant.

AMERICAN LAW CLERKS.—The several thousand law clerks who now toil in the city offices, says a New York journal, are quite a different set of beings from their predecessors. 'The majority of them are well educated. Some have graduated from well-known colleges—from Harvard, Yale, Cornell, and Princetown. Others are graduates of law schools. Never was there a time like the present, when so many college-bred men were glad of the opportunity to become law clerks at a beggarly salary. Every year lawyers of standing in our cities have applications from college graduates, ready and willing to work without pay, if he will only give them desk-room and the use of his books. Consider for a moment the pay of these ambitious young men. The college-bred law clerk usually begins at five dollars per week. He may reasonably expect to earn ten dollars per week by the end of the second year. The graduate of a law school, having had some technical training, is better paid. He gets ten dollars per week for the first year of his service, and perhaps he may begin his second year at fifteen dollars per week. Very few lawyers in New York pay their clerks over fifteen dollars a week, as they can hire all the talent they want at that figure. There are between six thousand and seven thousand lawyers in the city of New York. The struggle for practice and existence becomes more difficult each year. Many are called, but few are chosen. Some men never get beyond being a law clerk. It is no uncommon thing to find skilful lawyers, grey-haired men, serving as clerks year after year at a salary of from 1,200 dollars to 1,500 dollars per annum. Some of them are experts in a particular branch of the law. Again, there are men fit only to be law clerks—men who, for one reason or another, fail to become successful practitioners. The legal knowledge of such men is of more value to others than it is to themselves. Once more, there are highly educated law clerks who make it a business to write briefs. Indeed, it is an open secret that nearly one half of the law books published are written by ill-paid clerks. The lawyer with a reputation gets some clerk to write a treatise to which he lends the weight of his name.—Montreal Legal News.

* These cases will reappear in the regular series next November.

The oldest coroner in England, Michael Browne, died recently at the age of ninety. He had held the office of coroner for the borough of Nottingham during a period of fifty-five years. In length of service we believe he is about equal to Coroner Jones, of Montreal. The latter in age is but a few years behind.—Montreal Legal News.

Reformatory and Industrial Schools.—A blue-book was issued on August 15, giving the thirty-fourth report, for the year 1890, of the inspector of reformatory and industrial schools. Lieutenant-Colonel Inglis says the total number of schools under inspection is now 225—viz. fifty-five reformatory schools, 141 industrial schools, ten truant schools, and nineteen day industrial schools. Of these, three are reformatory and eight are industrial school ships. This shows an increase of two industrial schools and one day industrial school, and a decrease of one reformatory school. All the truant schools, and all the day industrial schools, with the exception of one in Liverpool and three in Glasgow, are under the management of School Boards. The total number of juveniles under sentence of detention in reformatory and industrial schools at the close of 1890 was 28,589—viz. 23,509 boys and 5,080 girls, this being an increase of 504 boys and eight girls as compared with the previous year. There were also at the end of the year 3,698 children attending day industrial schools. With regard to truant schools, Lieutenant-Colonel Inglis says that these are intended for children who, after due warning, have failed to make a satisfactory number of attendances at the ordinary day schools. They do good in two ways—exercising on the boys committed to them a most wholesome influence, enforcing habits of punctuality, regularity, and obedience, probably for the first time in their lives, and inducing many others to attend school regularly who would play truant if they did not know that truancy would lead to the truant school. He adds, however, that he should like to see a uniform system of management for truant schools. 'At present,' he says, 'there are several systems at work. In some schools a boy has to undergo a short term of solitary confinement on his first visit and a more lengthened one on each recommitment. In other schools this system has never been adopted, whilst in some, originally worked on this system, the use of the cells has been discontinued. My own experience is that they are quite unnecessary, and that the results where they are used are no better than where they are not. I should like to see them abolished altogether. In some schools no play is allowed, drill being substituted; in others, as in Sheffield, play is allowed daily and half-holiday on Saturdays, subject to good conduct; here, again, as the more lenient system shows quite as good results as the more severe one, I should like to see the former generally adopted.'

A Year's Bankruptcies.—The eighth report of the Board of Trade under section 131 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was issued on August 11. Sir Henry G. Calcraft, permanent secretary to the Board, in the report gives the financial statement prepared by the Treasury for the year ending March 31, 1891. From this it appears that a considerable decrease in revenue is apparent. The total income from various sources is less by 19,301*l.* than for the preceding year, while, on the other hand, the expenditure has been reduced by 2,638*l.* The deficit, however, is fully accounted for by the reduction in the amount of insolvency. The general working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, up to the end of last year—for the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, came into operation on January 1 of the present year—is dealt with in the form of an annex to the report by Mr. John Smith, Inspector-General in Bankruptcy. A comparison of the years 1888, 1889, and 1890 shows a satisfactory diminution in the volume of insolvency coming under the Bankruptcy Act and Deeds of Arrangement in England and Wales during the period under review. The total number of cases has fallen from 8,321 in the first-named year to 7,108 in the last, showing a total decrease of 749; while liabilities are less by 609,018*l.*, assets by 133,647*l.*, and the estimated loss to creditors by 544,985*l.* At the same time a somewhat common belief that there is a vast mass of insolvency which is kept quite private is pronounced to be clearly untenable. This marked shrinkage of bankruptcies is the more remarkable in view of the concurrent expansion of trade, and of the fact that statistics of failures in the United States for the year point to an increase in the estimated loss to creditors of nearly four millions sterling. As to the character of insolvency, the large proportion of failures in the building trade is noted, and the operations of the speculative builder are traced from his starting with little or no capital to the final crash. It is also remarked that the insolvency of trades based on commercial credit is diminishing, while that of the non-trading class is stationary or increasing—the bankruptcies of officers in the army, for instance, having increased 32 per cent. An annex by Mr. Walter Murton, solicitor to the Board of Trade, dealing with the legal proceedings conducted by him, concludes the report.

BIRTHS.

On Aug. 9, at 23 Lexham Gardens, Kensington, W., the wife of R. A. M'Call, Q.C., of a son.

On Aug. 12, at 33 Lancaster Gate, W., the wife of H. Widdrington Byrne, Q.C., of a daughter.

On Aug. 15, at Lyndale, Gayton Road, Harrow-on-the Hill, the wife of William John Tremellen, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Aug. 17, at St. Clair, Dunheved Road, West Croydon, the wife of Alfred George Dinn, Solicitor, of a son.

On Aug. 17, at Glen Gariff, Chesterfield Road, Ashley Hill, Bristol, the wife of Ernest J. Pillers, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Aug. 18, at Eastbourne, the wife of Arthur W. Chippindale, of 2 Harcourt Buildings, Temple, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Aug. 11, at St. Peter's Church, Lordship Lane, S.E., by the Rev. H. J. Pulley, M.A., Vicar, Robert Stephen Snape Walker, Solicitor, London, elder son of the late Rev. Robert Walker, Vicar of Wymeswold, Leicestershire, to Lisette, eldest daughter of C. E. Reiffenstein, of St. James's, Lordship Lane, S.E.

On Aug. 11, at St. Thomas's Church, Ferryside, Donald William, youngest son of the Rev. Canon Carr, of Holbrooke Hall, Derby, to Agnes Mary, second daughter of W. Hy. Nevill, J.P., of Ferryside.

On Aug. 12, at All Saints' Parish Church, Wigan, by the Rev. the Hon. G. T. O. Bridgeman, M.A., Rector of Wigan, Francis Ernest Bradley, LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, Northern Circuit, second son of Nathaniel Bradley, Esq., J.P., Hulme, Manchester, to Bessie Mary, second daughter of Alderman James Smith, J.P., of Wigan.

On Aug. 14, at St. James's Church, Sussex Gardens, by the Rev. G. C. Whalley, M.A., John Dixon, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, to Adeline Frances Mary, widow of Francis Baldwin Duppa, of Hollingbourne, Kent, Esq., F.R.S., and daughter of the late Joseph Henry Dart, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On Aug. 18, at the Parish Church, Hampstead, George Griffiths, Esq., J.P., of Glendower, Fitzjohn's Avenue, Hampstead, to Alice Maud Mary, third daughter of the late John Easton, Esq., and granddaughter of the late Charles Easton, Esq., of Coscombe Hall, Gloucestershire.

On Aug. 19, at Westminster Town Hall, Julius Wyatt Druce, Solicitor, of 14 Victoria Street, to Millie, eldest daughter of Charles Lynes, Esq., of 65 Gower Street.

DEATHS.

On Aug. 13, at Malden, Essex, William Crick, Solicitor, in his 85th year.

On Aug. 14, at Eye, Suffolk, Edgar Bond, Solicitor, aged 73, last surviving son of the late Barnabas Bond, of Pulham Hall, Norfolk.

On Aug. 17, at 23 Ruskin Road, Tottenham, Eliza Nield, daughter of the late William Henry Turner, Solicitor, of Bow, E., age 6

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 3s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

An Inland Revenue case which we reported last week (ante, p. 548) is a noteworthy one. It was the prosecution of a person for carrying on the business of an auctioneer without a license, and also offering a bribe to an Inland Revenue officer with a view to corrupt him in the execution of his duty. Mr. Alderman Tyler fined the defendant 3*l.* on the first summons and 25*l.* on the second. The enactment on which the first summons was based is 8 Vict. c. 15, and the foundation of the second is section 10 of the more recent Inland Revenue Regulation Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 21), which consolidated a large number of prior Inland Revenue Acts. By this section, 'if any person directly or indirectly gives or offers to give' to any Inland Revenue officer 'any sum of money or other recompense whatsoever, in order to corrupt and prevail upon him to do or abstain from doing, or to conceal or connive at, any act or thing whereby Her Majesty is or may be defrauded, or to do or omit or permit or suffer to be done or omitted any act contrary to his duty,' he incurs a fine of 500*l.* By section 36 all fines imposed by the Act 'may be proceeded for and recovered in the same manner, and in the case of summary proceedings with the like power of appeal, as any fine or penalty under any Act relating to the Excise.' As to the rather perplexing provision which we have italicised, see the unrepealed parts of 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 51, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 20, but large portions of those Acts are repealed by section 40 of the Act of 1890, and their whole procedure is subject to the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, as may be found by reference to section 53 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act of 1879. The High Court has a concurrent jurisdiction, by action for the penalties, under section 21 of the Act of 1890.

The Slander of Women Act (see ante, p. 544) provides that in any action for words spoken and made actionable thereby, 'a plaintiff shall not recover more costs than damages, unless the judge shall certify that there was reasonable ground for bringing the action.' Will a County Court judge be 'the judge' within these words in the case of an action for slander sent down to a County Court? We think he will, and also that there will be no appeal either from the grant or refusal of the certificate by a County Court judge in such cases, but the question of jurisdiction is rather a doubtful one. A further question may arise whether the grant or refusal of a certificate by a judge of the High Court, where the action is tried in the High Court, will be a judgment or order within the meaning of section 19 of the Judicature Act, 1873, so as to be appealable to the Court of Appeal. It is possible that it might be held to be an 'order' within the meaning of that enactment, but even if this be so, would it be an order 'as to costs only' within the meaning of section 50 of that Act, which provides that 'no order made by the High Court or any judge thereof as to costs only, which by law are left to the discretion of the Court, shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or judge making such order?' On the whole, we think it would, but neither is this point quite free from doubt.

At the conclusion of an able address at the annual provincial meeting of the Incorporated Law Society at Plymouth on Tuesday last the president (Mr. W. M. Walters) expressed some surprise that so little in the way of dignity or reward can be looked forward to by the solicitor, observing that he was 'obliged to stand by and see the rewards and prizes of the profession exclusively bestowed upon members of another branch of the profession.' This statement, if meant to be taken literally, is hardly accurate. It is no doubt true of the larger prizes of the profession, such as the judgeships of the High Court and the County Courts and police magistracies, but many of the smaller prizes are held, as is well known, exclusively by solicitors. We believe that it will be found that, in point of number, the legal appointments open to solicitors are more numerous than those exclusively appropriated to the bar, while the further fact must not be lost sight of that they may in most cases be held concurrently. Thus there is nothing to prevent a solicitor from holding the offices of County Court registrar, clerk to magistrates, and clerk to a board of guardians and the commissioners of taxes, and at the same time carrying on a lucrative private practice. A barrister, however, who is appointed a County Court judge or police magistrate must not only resign his practice, but must absolutely sever his connection with his profession. It is only subject to such considerations as these that the statement of the president upon this point can be regarded as correct.

One would scarcely have supposed that a solemn judicial decision would be required to determine that coke is not coal, yet in the recent case of Fletcher v. Field, 60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 102, the question submitted for the consideration of the Court was whether a conviction for unloading coke between the hours of 10 A.M. and 6 P.M. could be sustained under section 15 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 134), which provides that 'no coal shall be loaded or unloaded on or across any footway' within the limits of the Act between those hours. The Court (Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Grantham) were of opinion that the magistrate was wrong in holding that coke came within the term 'coal' as used in section 15, and quashed the conviction. It is difficult to see how they could have come to any other conclusion. If the section were extended to coke, there seems to be no reason why it should not also be held to include wood and other articles.

Most persons will be disposed to regret that Mr. Justice Collins could not see his way to pronounce a decree of nullity of marriage in the case of Crane (otherwise Cooper) v. Crane, decided on the eve of the recess. The story resembled in some respects the well-known case of Scott v. Sebright. There was the same element of cynical fortune-hunting on the part of a worthless man in each case, and in each the lady was of an exceptionally nervous and excitable temperament. In neither was the marriage consummated. In the Sebright Case the man threatened to shoot the girl if she refused to go through the ceremony. Crane declared he would shoot himself in the like event. The effect on a weak mind would probably not be greater from the one threat than from the other. The element of surprise was even greater in the later action than in the earlier. Miss Scott had had marriage with Sebright suggested to her as a means of avoiding the disgrace which was imminent in consequence of her acceptance of large bills on his behalf; and she met him by appointment at a given time and place. Miss Cooper's marriage was celebrated at an unusual time and in unusual circumstances. She went with Crane to a service at St. Paul's Cathedral on a Sunday without, apparently, having the least suspicion of the man's design. On the way to the City she partook of some sweets, of which she did not like the taste, and which she believed to have been drugged. The marriage was then celebrated, and the parties immediately separated. They subsequently corresponded on the footing of cousins (which they were), and not of husband and wife. The medical evidence as to Miss Cooper's health, which seems to have been given with a conscientious desire not to exaggerate, did not convince the judge that she was not a free agent. Such cases as the present and the Jackson case suggest, as we remarked in commenting on the latter, the desirability of a change in the law in the direction of facilitating the annulment of marriages which have not been consummated. Surely on so solemn an occasion a greater degree of conscious consent and purpose ought to be required than in ordinary contracts. Considering what human nature and desires are, one can hardly help thinking that non-consummation is of itself some evidence of the absence of deliberate volition; and when, in addition, there are sinister purposes and threats on the part of an unscrupulous man, the law ought surely to help the woman out of her distress, and even when such elements are absent there is much to be said in favour of affording a locus pœnitentiæ to parties who wish to be off their bargain.

It is the habit of the House of Lords to keep the profession for long periods in hungry expectancy for its pronouncements addressed urbi et orbi, and then to give them a surfeit of decisions to digest through the Long Vacation. They delivered just before the recess three judgments of great interest and importance. In Smith (pauper) v. Charles Baker & Sons the coup de grâce is practically given to the well-known case on employers' liability of Thomas v. Quartermaine, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 17; L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 647, and the venerable doctrine, Volenti non fit injuria, is shorn of much of the territory once thought to belong to it. Lord Watson, in his admirable judgment, says, referring to an observation of Lord Esher in Thomas v. Quartermaine: 'That does not lead us to the conclusion that the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act wholly exclude the application of the doctrine Volenti non fit injuria to claims falling within the scope of the Act; but it does, in my opinion, show that the Legislature did not intend that the statutory remedy given to the workman should be taken away simply by reason of his continuing in the same employment after he became aware of the defect from which he ultimately suffered.' Again, the Lord Chancellor expressly lays down that the maxim is only applicable where there has been a consent to the particular thing done. So that the employer who thinks he escapes liability on the ground that a workman knows that his employment is a risky one and still accepts it, will have a rude awakening. The second case was that of Johnson (pauper) v. Lindsay, in which the doctrine of common employment, or of collaborateur as it is sometimes called, fares little better than the maxim to which we have referred. The two cases constitute a veritable charter for the working man and a terror to lawless or unscrupulous employers. The third decision, Scott (pauper) v. Carfin Coal Company, is on Scotch law, which in this respect we imagine to be the same as our own, and is to the effect that the mother of an illegitimate child cannot recover damages from his employers for his death.

The good example set by Sir Henry James, Q.C., who recently entertained a number of the Royal Courts staff at his country seat, is, we are glad to hear, being followed by other barristers. The Long Vacation does not always bring recreation and country air to that useful body of men, barristers' clerks, many of whom in this age of competition are, like their employers, earning but limited incomes. To invite some twenty guests of this class to enjoy a day's outing amid the sylvan scenes of 'leafy Bucks' was 'a happy thought' successfully carried into effect a few days ago by a genial and well-known Q.C., whose 'innocence,' so lately commented on by the Court of Appeal, is probably acquired in his rustic retreat.

Swansea was the centre of attraction in the Principality last week. The opening of the National Eisteddfod in that town appeals to the sympathies of all Welshmen, and it was a happy coincidence which coupled with that event the granting to Swansea all the honours and privileges of a Quarter Sessions borough. The compliment would not, however, have been complete had not its first recorder been a Welshman. Mr. David Lewis, who, it is superfluous to say, possesses that qualification, will, we have no doubt, fully justify his selection as recorder, and we are glad to learn that 'his appointment is generally approved.'

In the case of Hunt v. The Great Northern Railway Company, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 498, the Court of Appeal had to apply the doctrine of privilege to a curious action for libel. The defendant company had dismissed the plaintiff, a goods guard in their employ, for alleged negligence. They afterwards published his name, offence, and the fact of his dismissal in a monthly circular which they were in the habit of publishing for the information of their other servants. The circular was exhibited in the rooms used by the company's staff, but not in any room to which the public had access. The plaintiff having brought an action for libel in respect of the publication, the defendants pleaded that it was privileged by reason of the occasion, and Mr. Justice Stephen, who tried the action, held that it was so and entered judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff having appealed, the Court of Appeal, without calling upon the company's counsel to argue, dismissed the appeal, holding that, as the company had an interest in informing their servants, and the servants a corresponding interest in learning, that certain negligent conduct would be punished by dismissal, the occasion was clearly privileged.

A Hammersmith solicitor, so it is stated by the Pall Mall Gazette, was so unfortunate as to have his orchard robbed by two small boys and large numbers of unripe pears stolen therefrom. Upon the offenders being brought before Mr. Partridge, that worthy magistrate is stated to have sentenced each of them, not to any punishment known to the law of England, but to that of finishing the consumption of the unripe fruits in question, adding the expression of the hope that 'they would make their stomachs ache.' This is not a precedent we should wish to see followed. Section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, makes full provision for cases of this kind. It enacts that, 'if, upon the hearing of a charge for an offence punishable on summary conviction, the Court think that, though the charge is proved, the offence was in the particular case of so trifling a nature that it is inexpedient to inflict any punishment or any other than a nominal punishment, the Court, without proceeding to conviction, may dismiss the information.' It is added that the Court may order the person charged to pay damages. Such an order would, no doubt, be generally futile in the case of a boy, and there is, no doubt, much to be said for the abandoned Government bill of the late session by which it was proposed that justices, on the hearing of a charge against a child, might order the parent of the child to pay damages to the party aggrieved by the offence.

One of the characteristics of this fin de siècle generation is an increasing disposition on the part of landowners to allow less favoured mortals to share the pleasures (without the expenses) of parks and gardens. Twenty years ago the public were rarely trusted within a great man's gates, and 'trespassers' were warned of the terrors of the law and 'prosecution' at every corner. Happily experience has proved that with the great mass of our law-abiding population a privilege graciously conceded is rarely abused.

A new edition of Mr. Alpe's Digest of the Law Relating to Stamp Duties is in active preparation, and will be published by Messrs. Jordan & Sons, of 120 Chancery Lane, London, at the beginning of October next. This edition, which will be entitled 'The Law of Stamp Duties on Deeds and Other Instruments,' is rendered necessary by the consolidation of the Stamp Laws effected by the Stamp Act, 1891, and the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891.

LIMITED COMPANIES AND THE BILLS OF SALE ACTS.

The recent case of In re The Standard Manufacturing Company (Lim.), 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 292, has given rise, we believe, to some misunderstanding, and when closely examined it will be found to contain an almost overt invitation to further litigation. The case decided two distinct points: first, that debentures of a limited company which create a charge on the floating real and personal property of the company need not be registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, being expressly excepted by section 17; secondly, that on the true construction of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, mortgages or charges of an incorporated company, for the registration of which statutory provision has already been made by the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, or the Companies Act, 1862, are not within the scope of that Act. Some practitioners have jumped to the conclusion that every charge of a company, which must be registered under section 43 of the Companies Act, 1862, is exempted from registration under the Act of 1878, and therefore à fortiori from registration under the amending Act of 1882. This last inference, however, is one which the Court of Appeal have taken anxious care to avoid drawing.

Lord Justice Bowen, who delivered the judgment of the Court, discussed the policy of the Bills of Sale Acts for the purpose of construing the Act of 1878. He observed that until the passing of the Act of 1882, the scope of which embraces larger objects, the express and avowed design of the Legislature had been to strike at the frauds perpetrated upon creditors by secret bills of sale. He then argued that debentures which charged the property of companies already required registration under section 43 of the Companies Act, 1862; that, therefore, they were not within the mischief of secrecy; that in 1878 such debentures were instruments well known in the commercial world; and that the Legislature could not have intended in the Act of 1878 to interfere with them by merely general words.

This argument relates in terms only to the Act of 1878. Now it is plain that merely general words may be construed in one way, but that the same general words may require to be construed somewhat more widely when they are coupled with an express and very specific exception. And the effect of the exception contained in section 17 of the Act of 1882 seems to be that documents specifically charging chattels belonging to a company are within the operation of that Act, whether they are or are not within the operation of the Act of 1878; and that such documents, being clearly bills of sale, are not exempted from the necessity of registration under the Act of 1882 by reason of the fact that they must also be registered under section 43 of the Companies Act, 1862.

In short, the actual decision of the Court of Appeal does not touch the decision of Mr. Justice Pearson in In re Cunningham & Co. (Lim.), 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 448; L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 682: 'It was argued on the part of the respondents that the Bills of Sale Acts in force do not apply to companies . . . That seems to me to be an impossible contention, certainly so far as ordinary bills of sale are concerned. A bill of sale by a company must be as much within the mischief of the Act as a bill of sale by a private individual. But the last section of the Act of 1882 contains these words: "Nothing in this Act shall apply to debentures issued by any mortgage, loan, or other incorporated company, and secured upon the capital, stock, or goods, chattels, and effects of such company." Now, if bills of sale executed by companies generally were entirely out of the Act, that clause was absolutely unnecessary and useless, and therefore, as far as that objection goes, the bill of sale is not rendered a good bill of sale simply because it was given by a company.'

Although the double registration of bills of sale by limited companies seems to be unnecessary and, as the Scottish lawyers say, 'nimious,' it is not essentially unreasonable. The manner and incidents of the two registrations are by no means identical. Under the Companies Acts a mortgagor company must keep a register of all charges specifically affecting its property; under the Bills of Sale Act it is the mortgagee who must register for the completion of his security. The consequence of a failure to register in the latter case is that the bill of sale is absolutely void in respect of the personal chattels comprised therein. No such penalty is imposed by the Companies Act. Even where a charge is granted by a company in favour of one of its directors it is not void for want of registration—at all events as regards creditors who are not shown to have inspected the company's register (Wright v. Horton, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 873; 12 App. Cas. 371). And it would be monstrous if, in the case of a charge granted by a company to a stranger, the failure of the mortgagor to keep a correct register in conformity with the statute were to deprive the mortgagee of his security.

It is a curious circumstance that the words quoted above, 'the scope of which embraces larger objects,' which occurred in the judgment as delivered, are not to be found in the Law Reports, 1891 (1 Ch. Div. p. 645). Their omission may perhaps be explained by reference to the fact that in 1882 it was universally supposed that the Act of 1878 did apply to debentures (see the footnote, glowing with the pride of paternity, in Mr. Palmer's 'Company Precedents,' 4th edit. p. 387). On the other hand, the excision of these words, probably by Lord Justice Bowen himself, may perhaps indicate an unwillingness to commit himself to either view, and tends to leave the subject in confusion till some venturesome or unwary party gives occasion for an authoritative statement of the law. It is, of course, possible that if the learned judges of the Court of Appeal employ all their ingenuity they may succeed in clothing with a garb of plausibility what seemed to Mr. Justice Pearson an impossible contention; but at present the only safe rule in practice, the only strict rule laid down by the Court of Appeal, so far as the Act of 1882 is concerned, is to ask, not whether the charge must be shown on the company's register, but whether it is within the express exception contained in section 17.

ENGLISH CAUSES CÉLÈBRES.—II.

Lyon v. Home (1868, L. R. 6 Eq. 655).

This was perhaps the most amusing case of spiritualism and undue influence that has ever occupied the attention of the English Courts.

The plaintiff, Mrs. Jane Lyon, a wealthy and childless widow of more than seventy years of age, had no relations of her own, was not on intimate terms with those of her husband, and lived by herself in lodgings in the West End of London, at a rent of about 30*s.* or 40*s.* a week. Her husband had died in 1859, and she was under the impression, from something that he had said before his death, that she should not survive him more than seven years. In July, 1866, Mrs. Lyon called on a Mrs. Sims, a photographer in Westbourne Grove, and in the course of conversation mentioned what her husband had said, and expressed her conviction that she would soon meet him in the grave. Mrs. Sims replied that if the plaintiff would become a spiritualist her husband would 'come to her,' and it would not be necessary for her to 'go to him,' and she lent the plaintiff some books upon the subject. One of these was entitled 'Incidents of My Life.' It was written by the defendant, Daniel Dunglass Home, whom Mrs. Sims described as 'The Head Spiritualist,' and who had recently opened an Athenæum in Sloane Street. Mrs. Lyon called at the Athenæum, and, according to her evidence, which materially differed, however, from that of the defendant, she was forthwith introduced through the agency of 'The Head Spiritualist' into the society of her deceased husband. The modus operandi was thus described by the plaintiff: 'They sat down at the table in the sitting-room, and raps came to the table almost immediately. The defendant said: "That is a call for the alphabet;" and then repeated the letters of the alphabet from time to time, a rap being given each time that he arrived at the letter intended to be indicated, and so on until a complete word or sentence was spelled out. In this way the supposed spirit on that occasion spelt out: "My own beloved Jane, I am Charles your well-beloved husband; I live to bless you, my own precious darling, I am with you always. I love, love, love you as I always did."' On a second occasion the spirit of the deceased was more communicative. 'My own darling Jane' (the message ran), 'I love Daniel [meaning Home] as a son; he is to be our son, he is my son, therefore yours. Do you remember, before I passed, I said a change would take place in seven years? That change has taken place. I am happy, happy, happy.' Subsequent messages were even more explicit. 'Daniel' was to be adopted as a son, to be made independent, and to have stock worth 700*l.* a year transferred to him. The wishes of the deceased were implicitly obeyed—the widow and the defendant drove together in a cab to the City to execute the necessary transfers, constant raps being heard in and about the cab all the way, in testimony of the spirit's approval. In compliance with further directions from the land of spirits, the plaintiff made her will in the defendant's favour, gave him a present of 6,000*l.*, and settled upon him, subject to her life interest, a reversion of 30,000*l.—these gifts being made without consideration and without power of revocation. In the spring of 1867 Home left town on business. Mrs. Lyon's spiritual necessities were too imperious to await his return, and she was put into communication with the dear departed by another medium. But, alas, her beloved Charles was no longer 'happy, happy, happy.' He denounced 'Daniel' as an impostor, and advised proceedings at law. The advice was taken, and Mrs. Lyon brought a suit in Chancery for the recovery of the property so recklessly squandered upon her adopted son. The chief forensic interest of the case was the remarkable cross-examination of the plaintiff by Mr. Henry Matthews, Q.C., the present Home Secretary, who was leading counsel for the defendant: 'I have not,' said Vice-Chancellor Giffard in the commencement of his judgment, 'gone through the affidavits made by the plaintiff herself or her cross-examination, because I think no one could have read those affidavits . . . and heard that cross-examination without coming to the conclusion that reliance cannot be placed on her testimony, and that it would be unjust to found on it a decree against any man, save in so far as what she has sworn to may be corroborated by written documents or unimpeached witnesses or incontrovertible facts.' No forensic ability, however, could 'pull off' the defendant's case; by the decree of the Court the money was ordered to be restored, and 'to the credit of Home, who had it under his absolute control, let it be recorded that such was done.' The concluding paragraphs of the Vice-Chancellor's judgment, according to Mr. Hume Williams,† proved social death to spiritualist exhibitions. They ceased to be fashionable, and were accordingly denounced. 'I know nothing,' said his Honour, 'of what is called "spiritualism," otherwise than from the evidence before me, nor would it be right that I should advert to it except as portrayed by that evidence. It is not for me to conjecture what may or may not be the effect of a peculiar nervous organisation, or how far that effect may be communicated to others, or how far something may appear to some minds as supernatural realities which to ordinary minds and senses are not real. But as regards the manifestations and communications referred to in this cause I have to observe, in the first place, that they were brought about by some means or other after, and in consequence of, the defendant's presence—how there is no proof to show; in the next, that they tended to give the defendant influence over the plaintiff as well as pecuniary benefit; in the next, that the system as presented by the evidence is mischievous nonsense, well calculated on the one hand to delude the vain, the weak, the foolish and the superstitious, and on the other to assist the projects of the needy and of the adventurer; and, lastly, that beyond all doubt there is plain law enough and plain sense enough to forbid and prevent the retention of acquisitions such as these by any medium, whether with or without a strange gift, and that this should be so is of public concern, and, to use the words of Lord Hardwicke, "of the highest public utility."'

(To be continued.)

* Hume Williams's 'Unsoundness of Mind,' p. 58.
† Ibid. p. 59.

Reviews.

GODDARD ON EASEMENTS.

A Treatise on the Law of Easements. By John Leybourn Goddard, Barrister-at-Law. Fourth Edition. London: Stevens & Sons. 1891.

In his preface to this edition Mr. Goddard tells a tale of disappointment and blighted hopes, which were not, however, without some good results. He describes once more how his book came to be written, and the story is highly interesting to the present generation of lawyers who have grown up since the events to which he refers took place. His book, as he tells us, 'had its origin in an experiment preliminary to one of the grandest works ever contemplated in this land for the amendment of the law'—viz. the production of a code or digest of the law. That work has unfortunately never been accomplished, and the evils which it was designed to remedy have certainly not diminished, for the reports and statutes continue to be filled up case on case, chapter on chapter, and volume on volume, till it is almost impossible for the most industrious lawyer to keep pace with them. Without such a book as that which is now before us the profession might well despair of carrying on its work. With regard to the present edition it is only necessary to endorse the statement of the author that all the cases reported up to the end of last year have been included.

BYLES ON BILLS.

A Treatise on the Law of Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Bank Notes, and Cheques. By the Right Hon. Sir John Barnard Byles, late one of the Judges of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas. Fifteenth Edition. By Maurice Barnard Byles and Archie Kirkman Lloyd, Barristers-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

Only six years have elapsed since the publication of the last edition of this well-known text-book. When it appeared in 1885 the Codifying Act of 1882 had been already three years in operation, and the last six years have not been productive of many important cases on the subject. Such as there have been, however, have been effectively treated by the editors of the present edition. They were not, however, able to wait for the long-expected decision of the House of Lords in Vagliano v. The Bank of England, which was given while the book was passing through the press. The effect of that decision is given in the preface. The form of the book has not been altered, and the work of revision appears to have been carefully done. 'Byles on Bills' still retains its place as the standard authority on the subject.

Correspondence.

CANVASSING AT PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

Sir,—As the general election will shortly take place, I should like to have the opinion of some of your readers on the above subject.

Having regard to section 17 of the Parliamentary Elections Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 51), which provides that 'no person shall for the purpose of promoting or procuring the election of a candidate at any election be engaged or employed for payment or promise of payment for any purpose or in any capacity whatever, except for any purposes or capacities mentioned in the first or second part of schedule 1 to this Act, or except so far as payment is authorised by the first or second parts of schedule 1 to this Act,' can the election agent, sub-agents, clerks and messengers mentioned in schedule 1 by virtue of their appointment and as incident thereto legally canvass for votes on behalf of such candidate as 'a means to "promote and procure" his election, and as a purpose and capacity of their several appointments'?

I presume that a polling agent appointed as such would only act on the polling day and in the polling station, and that the question of canvassing would not therefore affect him.

Sub-Agent.

August 24.

THE SOLICITORS' REMUNERATION ACT AND ORDER.

A decision has been recently pronounced, which it is desirable to bring under the notice of practitioners, upon the construction of the General Order made in pursuance of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. The judgment was delivered by the Irish Master of the Rolls. The question, indeed, involved in the case, In re Purcell; ex parte Bonass, was uncovered by previous authority; for in In re Gallard; ex parte Harris, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 528; L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 38, though bearing a partial resemblance, there was no actual decision on the question that would have been in point, while neither was there in In re Emanuel and Simmonds, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 710; L. R. 33 Chanc. Div. 40, any binding analogy, though more nearly in point. In the latter case the controversy arose as to the remuneration to be paid for the preparation of a prior agreement for a lease under part 2 of schedule 1 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. The solicitor prepared an agreement for a lease and a lease as well, and claimed the scale fee for the lease and a separate fee for the agreement. The taxing-master disallowed the separate charge for the agreement, and Mr. Justice Pearson and the Court of Appeal affirmed his decision. Reliance had been placed in argument upon the fact that agreements for leases were specially mentioned in part 2 of the schedule, but both Courts held that 'agreements for leases' there meant agreements for leases intended to be relied on as regulating the tenancy without any formal lease, and that the preparation of the agreement in the case, being intended to be followed by a lease, was 'business connected with' the lease within the meaning of rule 2 of the General Order, and could not be separately charged for. Lord Justice Cotton said: 'I can quite understand that where a lease is granted there may be an agreement which, although it refers to the lease, is to be considered as a collateral matter, as a matter not amounting merely to a step in the negotiations for a lease, or providing for a step in the negotiations for a lease, but providing for something different. It must depend on the circumstances of each case whether an agreement is collateral or not. In the present case the agreement, in my judgment, is merely part of the negotiation for the lease which was afterwards granted, and, the transaction being complete, one charge must, in my opinion, cover all charges with reference to this agreement, as well as everything else connected with the granting of the lease or the negotiations for the lease. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be dismissed.' And Lord Justice Bowen observed: 'It does not follow necessarily as a matter of law or as a matter of business that a document which is called an agreement for a lease may not contain stipulations with regard to subject-matter so separate and so distinct as that those stipulations form no part of the agreement for the lease, but involve transactions outside. Looking at the matter from that point of view, the difficulty suggested by the appellant's counsel as to cases of reversionary leases and surrenders ceases to present a difficulty. It may well be that business done with regard to an agreement for a reversionary lease is a separate business totally distinct from the reversionary lease itself, and may be separate from it for the purpose of discussing the remuneration of the solicitor. The same observation applies to the case of a surrender. But it by no means follows that no collateral stipulations are part of the business which culminates in a lease.' That case, however, relating to a preliminary agreement for a lease, could not be taken to apply to the case of an outstanding incumbrance on the property the subject of sale, but those observations certainly seem to show that, if there had been a surrender or anything else collateral with the lease itself it would have been treated as a separate matter.

Now, in the case of In re Purcell and Lenehan, ex parte Bonass, the question directly arose as to whether the costs of obtaining the release of an outstanding incumbrance on property sold are, or are not, covered by the scale-charge allowed to the vendor's solicitor, by the General Order, 'for all charges, including charges for a negotiation by solicitor, connected with a sale of property by private contract, or by auction, including preparation of contract and conditions of sale, deducting title and furnishing necessary searches, and perusing and completing conveyance.' Mr. Henry Bonass, the solicitor for the vendor, had charged the amount of remuneration so allowed for the work done in making title and completing the business on the sale of certain property; but he had charged, moreover, the costs incident to obtaining a release of an outstanding mortgage, and these costs the taxing-master had disallowed, holding that they were covered by the fee charged under the former heading. Now, unquestionably the words of the General Order are very wide, but, said the Master of the Rolls (Porter): 'I am clearly of opinion that they do not cover the costs of obtaining the release of an outstanding incumbrance. It could never have been intended by the framers of the schedule that the scale of remuneration was to be the same whether there were or were not outstanding charges on the property to be sold which had to be released by separate deed. Such charges might be numerous.' Of course a sale might take place subject to an outstanding incumbrance, but that was not here the case; and, added the Master of the Rolls, 'when that is not done, and when the incumbrance is separately dealt with by a deed of release as here, I regard the release as a distinct matter, and am of opinion that the costs of getting in this incumbrance on the property sold is not included in the scale-charge. That is all I decide. It was for the taxing-master to say whether the work done was necessary, and what was the amount to be allowed for it'—the learned judge not himself deciding anything as to the rate of charge to be allowed for obtaining the release, but merely that the solicitor was not, under such circumstances, confined to the scale-charge.—Irish Law Times.

THE ALBANY LAW JOURNAL ON SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN.

THE retirement of Sir James Fitzjames Stephen from the English bench is an event deserving more than a passing notice. Probably no English judge of our time, excepting the late Chief Justice Cockburn, has been more highly esteemed in this country than the retiring justice. Whether it was the distinction of his combined literary and judicial career, or his invaluable researches in legal history, or the vigour and independence of his mind, that has won him his circle of friends and admirers on this side of the water, that circle is both large and influential. More than one society of law students in America has borne the name of the author of the history of the criminal law of England, and many, especially of our younger lawyers, have been wont to regard him as the chief ornament of the English bench. We are now told that we have overestimated him; that his general (and this includes his transatlantic) reputation was due largely to his historical and philosophical writings, and that his judicial career was something of a disappointment to his friends and to the English bar. It is conceded that he is a man of extraordinary mental powers and of great endowments; that he is learned, acute, and industrious. But it is said that his powers are those of the student and philosopher rather than of the lawyer or judge; that he is 'a jurist rather than a practical lawyer,' and that he has been a conscientious and capable but not distinguished judge. Very likely this nearer estimate of the man is the truer one. The judge is not a prophet, and need not go abroad to find the honour due to him. He is best known and most fairly estimated by the public he serves, especially by the bar over which he presides. Indeed, no man is surer of swift, accurate, and yet charitable judgment, based upon his fitness for the work he has undertaken, than is the judge on the bench at the hands of this bar and public. Accordingly we resign the retiring justice into the hands of our brethren of the English bar, assured that they will mete out to him neither more nor less than he has deserved at their hands. However this may be, Mr. Justice Stephen's retirement was invested with a very unusual degree of pathos, owing to the circumstances under which it was effected. It appears that his performance of his judicial duties on one or two recent occasions failed to give satisfaction to that hydra-headed and extremely sensitive monster the British public, and that the justice was promptly accused of the crime of senility (he is sixty-two years of age) and failing powers. Now the British public has for its voice that multitudinous oracle the British press (just as our own infallible public opinion utters its inspired voice through the American press), and proceeded at once, without more ado, and by the summary process which is so dear to its heart, to try and convict its eminent victim and depose him from the bench. He seems at first to have had some thought of resisting this arbitrary decree—the legal and judicial habit of mind being strong within him—and consulted his associates on the bench, eminent physicians and leaders of the bar, all of whom, with one accord and with apparent sincerity, assured him that they found no lack in him. But he finally and, we think, wisely yielded to the immutable decree of the omnipotent powers, and accepted his sentence with a very good grace. The impressive ceremonial with which he took his leave of the bench and bar—graced as it was by the presence of the Lord Chief Justice and the judges of England, as well as of all the leaders of the greatest bar in the world—may well in some degree have soothed the wounded feelings of the retiring jurist. His own remarks on the occasion, in responding to the well-chosen, eulogistic words of the Attorney-General, were in the nature of a protest against the injustice of the proceeding, but were marked throughout with good taste, dignity, and feeling. Probably the unusual honour of a baronetcy, the therapeutic value of which we do not profess to understand, was an additional consolation not to be despised. There is a lesson in this incident for our English brethren if they will but see it. There could hardly be a better illustration than this case affords of the value of a retiring limit of age for judges, such as we have adopted in this State. Such a provision is no less advantageous to the judge on the bench than it is to the public for whose benefit it is primarily intended. It operates to protect him against the unfounded suspicion of failing powers as well as against the dread of such suspicion. Such an incident as that of the forced retirement of an eminent judge, while still in the possession of unimpaired faculties, under the pressure of a popular suspicion, adds a new terror to the judicial office. Who will be the next one to be accused—by a disappointed litigant, it may be, or by a partisan or venal press—of having outstayed his usefulness upon the bench? If the date of Mr. Justice Stephen's retirement had been fixed by law, probably the question of his capacity would never have been raised, or at least would not have been pressed. It is the dread of an indefinite continuance of the alleged incapacity which impels the popular mind to the indelicacy or brutality of a direct attack upon the suspected official. It may be said that our law, in fixing the limit of age at seventy years, too often, perhaps, in a majority of cases, cuts off the career of its judges in the fulness of their powers, and deprives the State of their services just when they are of the most value to it, and this is doubtless true. Let us express the hope that it will do so in all cases, and that it may never be necessary to invoke the law to remove a judge who lags superfluous on the bench. It is true that such a law would have cut short Mansfield's brilliant career on the bench by thirteen years, and would have deprived our Constitution of ten years of Marshall's fostering care; it would have shortened Taney's administration of his high office by seventeen years (in which case there would have been no Dred Scott decision), and would drive Lord Chief Justice Coleridge into retirement in this year of grace. It has recently deprived the Court of Appeals of this State of the services of one of its ablest and most distinguished members, and will this year cause the retirement from the bench of the Supreme Court in this department of a judge distinguished alike for profound learning and for the uniform excellence of his judicial opinions. But this is a penalty which we cheerfully pay—the State on the one hand, the judges on the other—for security. The limit is, to be sure, an arbitrary one. It may be that a later date would be better (though we do not think so), and in the gradual lengthening of life and postponement of decay which, we are assured, the new era in which we live is bringing in, it may be assumed that a later limit will ultimately be fixed. But this is, after all, mere matter of detail, the essential thing being to have a definite limit of age, well within the anticipated period of senile decay, at which judges shall, by operation of law, retire from the bench. The benefits of this plan are completely missed by the Federal law, which makes the retirement of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States voluntary, merely holding out to them the inducement of a retiring pension. An ambitious judge, sure of his powers, will usually prefer the congenial activity of the bench to the retirement proffered him, and one whose powers have fallen into decay might cling to his seat from inability to comprehend his weakness or from sheer obstinacy. It is true a public sentiment might be generated or a custom established under such a statute as the Act of Congress, which would have the practical effect of retiring judges at the age contemplated by the Act, but this would be a very uncertain and indirect way of getting at a result which our statute accomplishes with certainty and directness. We believe we are safe in asserting that the law has given general satisfaction in this State, and that the bench and bar, as well as the people at large, are almost unanimously in favour of it. We have no hesitation, therefore, in recommending our example to the attention of our English brethren. We have given them other laws, and will not withhold this from them.

ORDER OF TRANSFER.

Saturday, August 22, 1891.

WHEREAS, from the present state of the business before Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice Stirling, Mr. Justice Kekewich, and Mr. Justice Romer respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes assigned to Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich should for the purpose only of hearing or of trial be transferred to Mr. Justice Romer; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that the several causes and matters set forth in the schedules hereto be accordingly transferred from the said Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich to Mr. Justice Romer for the purpose only of hearing or of trial and be marked in the cause books accordingly. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Lane v. Capsey—1889 L. 3,035
Burdett v. Eldershaw—1890 B. 1,694
Anstiss v. Gatti—1890 A. 1,136
French v. Burchell—1891 F. 58
Tucker v. Cooper—1889 T. 2,046
Smelt v. Broughton—1891 S. 646
In re Lanwer, dec. } Lanwer v. Rayden—1890 L. 3,040 }
Northwich District Local Board v. Northwich Salt Co. (Lim.)—1890 N. 1,003
Tester v. Hedgcock—1891 T. 225
James v. Isaac—1891 J. 359
Hall v. Thompson—1890 H. 2,839
Walker v. Walker—1890 W. 3,665
Bailey v. Greenwood—1891 B. 1,485
Cooke v. Collins—1890 C. 2,040
Smith v. Botolph & Nicholson's Wharves Co. (Lim.)—1890 C. 4,376
Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation v. Tod—1890 R. 908
Duke of Northumberland v. North Eastern Railway Co.—1890 N. 1,460
In re Banks, dec. } Blower v. Thomas—1890 B. 2,951 }
Edwards v. Edwards—1890 E. 750
Cruso v. Allenby—1890 A. 605
Joselyne v. Upton—1890 J. 710
Watson v. Watson & Son (Lim.)—1891 W. 625
Gadd and another v. Haslingden Union Gas Co.—1890 G. 2,020
Parry, Bart. v. Jones—1889 P. 2,364
Ogle v. Brins Metals Foreign Syndicate (Lim.)—1889 O. 1,492
David v. Sabin—1891 D. 346
Binney v. Clarke—1891 B. 613
In re M. Clarke, dec. } Harrison v. Sharp—1891 C. 847 }
Imbert-Terry v. Myers—1891 I. 659
In re J. Naylor, dec. } Hodson v. Sergeant—1891 N. 443 }
Gordon v. Ferris—1890 G. 2,403
Cooke v. Martin—1889 C. 3,647
Warden v. Alliance Bank (Lim.)—1890 W. 1,277
Maddock v. Girardot—1891 M. 42
Duncan v. Cole—1891 D. 532
Ramuz v. Southend Local Board—1891 R. 432
Farbenfabriken Vorm Fried Bayer Co. v. Jas. Ross & Co.—1890 F. 659
Wray v. Steven—1890 W. 3,952
Hewitt v. Crassidge—1891 H. 704
Elletson v. Carpenter—1890 E. 1,211

SECOND SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

Robinson v. Partridge—1890 R. 2,026
Dew v. Barley—1890 D. 2,083
Lewis v. Marquis of Allesbury—1890 L. 2,542
Steele v. Savory—1889 S. 732
In re J. Gurney } Mason v. Mercer—1890 G. 1,634 }
Campion v. Campion—1891 C. 442
Weatherall v. Burgess—1890 W. 1,496
Cloudsdale v. Townson—1890 C. 4,132
Moore v. Moore—1890 M. 3,768
In re Hampton } Hampton v. Stephens—1890 H. 4,223 }
Ryan v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association—1890 R. 2,334
Pullman v. Barker—1891 P. 241
Parton v. Ferme—1891 P. 261
Newen v. Mackey—1891 N. 161
Matthews v. Rogers—1890 M. 1,701
Richardson v. Westacott—1890 R. 2,179
Neville v. Lloyd—1890 N. 679
Hawksley v. Outram } Same v. Same } Outram v. Hawksley—1890 H. 3,061; 1890 H. 3,062 }
Bodger v. Raffety—1890 B. 5,636
Rehden v. Atkins—1891 R. 102
Everett v. Pennington—1891 E. 179
In re Jones } Williams v. Jones—1890 W. 2,562 }
Comte v. Perkins—1890 C. 3,905
In re Canadian Direct Meat Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, 1862 and 1867—Adjourned summons
Grosz v. Brown—1890 G. 2,281
Miles v. Berridge—1891 M. 252
Cameron v. Anstruther—1891 C. 594
Marsh v. White } White v. Marsh—1890 M. 2,018 }
In re Patents, Designs, &c. Act and Trade-marks Nos. 96, 822, and 96, 823 registered by Garcia Hno Y. Ca Sucs—Motion to rectify register
In re Huxham } Huxham v. Huxham—1890 H. 3,960 }

THIRD SCHEDULE.

From MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

Hill v. Hill's Waterfall Estate and Gold, &c. Co. (Lim.)—1889 H. 4,441
Williams v. Spargo—1891 W. 149
Elkington & Co. (Lim.) v. Hurter—1891 E. 80
Rogers v. Paragon Works (Lim.)—1891 R. 215-193
Kearney v. Blake—1890 K. 487
Ashworth v. Roberts—1888 A. 1,857
Lord Hatherton v. South Staffordshire Water Works Co.—1887 H. 3,119
Wellby v. Still—1891 W. 39
Siemens v. Taylor—1889 S. 4,408
Lyric Theatre (Lim.) v. Cordingly—1890 L. 2,822
In re Wigan } Wigan v. Carpenter—1891 W. 409 }
J. Richardson (Lim.) v. Weddall—1891 J. 16
J. Richardson (Lim.) v. Proctor—1890 J. 1,727
Cellular Clothing Co. (Lim.) v. Marsh—1890 C. 2,048
Starr v. 282nd Starr Bowkett Building Society—1890 S. 202
Hampton Wick Local Board v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.—1891 H. 72
Davis v. Mills—1891 D. 206
Lees v. West London Cycle Co.—1890 L. 2,862
Williams v. Jenkins—1890 W. 2,458
Fenner v. Holloway—1891 F. 270
Whittington v. Cusack—1891 W. 1
Corbett v. Saffery—1889 C. 759
In re Grover } Acworth v. Grover—1890 G. 1,574 }
Thomas v. Morgan—1891 T. 78
Official Liquidator of the Trafalgar Co. (Lim.) v. Francis—1890 T. 1,938
G. G. Sandemann & Sons & Co. v. Piner & Co.—1891 S. 933
Pares' Leicestershire Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Clerical, Medical, and General Life Assurance Society—1891 P. 599
Micklethwait v. Vincent—1891 M. 67
Smith v. Dickenson—1890 S. 2,739
Gill v. Green—1890 G. 1,327

HALSBURY, C.

OBITUARY.

THE death of the Right Hon. HENRY CECIL RAIKES, M.P., Postmaster-General, has elicited from all quarters expressions of regret. Though Mr. Raikes was a member of the bar and a bencher of the Middle Temple, he never actively pursued the profession, and from the first devoted himself to politics. Born in the Deanery at Chester in 1838, the grandson of a clerical chancellor of the diocese and of an archdeacon, Mr. Raikes naturally became a somewhat ecclesiastically minded layman, like his illustrious neighbour, Mr. Gladstone. His voice was heard at Church congresses; he was president for several years of the Council of Diocesan Conferences, and no later than last year he was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese of St. Asaph. It was a strange combination of offices for the same man to be Postmaster-General and chancellor of a Welsh diocese. Mr. Raikes was one of the late Dr.

Kennedy's pupils at Shrewsbury, whence he went to Trinity College, Cambridge. Politics must have interfered with scholarship, for, as the Times informs us, he was, in common with the late Lord Justice James, defeated at Derby in 1859, and his name appears near the top of the second class of the Classical Tripos, 1860. After unsuccessful attempts at Chester in 1865 and Devonport in 1866 to get into Parliament, he was returned for Chester in 1868, and retained his seat till 1880. He was beaten at the general election of that year, but re-entered Parliament for Preston in 1882 on Sir John Holker's elevation to the bench. In the same year he deserted Preston for the safe seat of the University of Cambridge. More than half of his political life was spent in office, as he was chairman of committees from 1874 to 1880, and Postmaster-General from 1886 to his death. He was always regarded as an excellent chairman, and his tenure of the office covered the transition from the decorous habits of an earlier Parliamentary generation to the stormy period of scientific obstruction. As Postmaster-General, if he did nothing heroic, he was laborious, anxious to consult the interests of the public and to improve the position and promote the welfare of the large staff under his command. Some notable improvements were introduced under his auspices. Submarine telegraphy was extended and private enterprises bought up by the Government. Telegraphic money orders were established, the price of post-cards lowered, and a large step towards Mr. Henniker Heaton's ideal in the way of a universal penny postage was taken at the beginning of the year in the reductions of postage on letters for India and the Australasian colonies. Mr. Raikes married in 1861 a daughter of Mr. Trevor-Roper, by whom he had a large family. His son, Mr. Henry St. John Digby Raikes, is a barrister and member of the South-Eastern Circuit. There is no doubt that the late Postmaster-General died of overwork, and like his predecessor, the lamented Mr. Fawcett, he was little over fifty when he succumbed.

Mr. William Edward Smith, solicitor, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, died, after a prolonged illness, at his residence, Hill House, Ashby, on Monday, August 3. He was the son of Mr. Thomas Smith, solicitor, of Carlton-on-Trent, Nottinghamshire, and was born on July 28, 1818. He was educated at Southwell Grammar School. He was articled to a firm of solicitors at Mansfield, and was admitted in Easter Term, 1841. He commenced practice at Ashby with Mr. E. M. Green in 1846. In 1867 he entered into partnership with the late Mr. E. F. Mammatt. Mr. Smith's loss will be keenly felt, not only by his clients, to whom he was a singularly sound, acute, and skilful adviser, but also by the poor, to whom he was also a devoted friend, dispensing his charity unostentatiously, but with no niggard hand, and by the inhabitants of Ashby generally, as he took a very active part in all matters having for their object the welfare of the town. For many years, and up to the date of his death, he was clerk to the magistrates for the Ashby-de-la-Zouch division of Leicestershire, and clerk to the magistrates for the Swadlincote division of Derbyshire. Mr. Smith was one of the oldest trustees connected with the Ashby Grammar School foundation, and for thirty years he was the vicar's warden at the Ashby Parish Church, in the restoration of which he materially assisted, both by his influence and his purse. For many years he was chairman of the burial board, but this position he through failing health resigned in December last. Mr. Smith was the senior partner in the old-established firm of Smith, Mammatt & Hale, of Ashby. At the Ashby Petty Sessions, on the magistrates taking their seats on the bench, the chairman said: 'Before commencing the business of the Court, as chairman of the bench, I wish to say that in consequence of the death of our late respected clerk we desire to adjourn the Court until one o'clock. Mr. Smith, our late clerk, was legal adviser to this bench for upwards of twenty-five years. During that time he earned the respect and esteem not only of the magistrates, but of all with whom he came into contact. It is only due to his memory that the bench should adjourn the Court out of respect for the deceased.'—Mr. W. A. Musson, speaking on behalf of the bar, said a more able and competent legal adviser the magistrates could not possibly have had. Mr. Smith had not only gained the confidence of the magistrates, but also of all the officials and the professional gentlemen practising at this Court during the long period he had held the office of clerk to the magistrates. Mr. Smith had for years and years had the respect and admiration of the profession to which he (Mr. Musson) belonged, and it would be long before his memory was lost from among them.

The death is announced of Mr. John Pritchard, D.L., J.P., formerly M.P. for Bridgnorth, at the great age of ninety-four years. He was born in 1796, was educated for the law, but was not called to the bar of Lincoln's Inn until 1841. He married, in 1845, Jane, daughter of G. O. Gordon. He was a D.L. and J.P. for Shropshire, and sat in the House of Commons for Bridgnorth from 1853 to 1868.

NOTES OF CASES.*

Court of Appeal.
Lindley, L.J.
Fry, L.J.
Lopes, L.J.
July 27.

Regina v. The Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, ex parte Johnston.

Company—Registration—Companies Act, 1862, Part VII., s. 180.

Appeal by the registrar of joint-stock companies from a decision of Cave, J., and Charles, J., granting a rule for a mandamus to register a company under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862.

The applicant, Johnston, and six other persons carrying on a publishing business in partnership under the firm of W. H. Allen & Co., sold the business to a limited company in consideration of 20,000 fully paid-up shares of 5*l.* each. Subsequently, by a deed dated March 13, 1891, the partners, reciting the sale and that they were desirous of defining the terms of their co-partnership with a view to registration as an unlimited company under Part VII. of the Act of 1862, agreed to become members of the company thereby constituted with the object of carrying on the co-partnership previously existing and get in its assets and satisfy its liabilities. The capital of the company was to be 770*l.*, divided into seventy-seven shares of 10*l.* each. The 20,000 shares in the limited company were to be brought into the company by the partners, and the provisions of Table A of the Companies Act, 1862 (with certain exceptions), were to apply to the company. Application was made to the registrar to register the company as an unlimited company under Part VII. of the Companies Act, 1862. On his refusal, a mandamus was applied for, and the rule appealed from was granted by the Divisional Court.

Sir R. E. Webster, Q.C. (Attorney-General) and Ingle Joyce (Sutton with them) for the appellant.

Finlay, Q.C., and Buckley, Q.C. (Theobald with them), for Johnston.

Their Lordships allowed the appeal, being of opinion

* These cases will reappear in the regular series next November.

that the company constituted by the deed was not formed to carry on any business, but for the purpose only of being registered in order to be wound up, and that such a company could not be registered under Part VII.

Quære per Fry, L.J., and Lopes, L.J., whether a company formed by the mere consent of the parties is 'otherwise duly constituted by law' within section 180 of the Companies Act, 1862.

Solicitors: The Solicitor to the Board of Trade for the appellant; Linklater & Co. for the respondent Johnston.

Court of Appeal.
Lindley, L.J.
Fry, L.J.
Lopes, L.J.
June 22, 23.
July 30.

Hick v. Rodocanachi and others.

Ship—Bill of Lading—Duty of Consignees as to Unloading—Strike of Dock Labourers.

Appeal by some of the defendants from a decision of Mathew, J.

The appellants were sued as consignees under a bill of lading for default in unloading a cargo from the respondent's ship. The bill of lading was silent as to the time within which the unloading was to be accomplished, and the questions raised by the appeal were, (1) whether it was the duty of the consignees to unload within what would be a reasonable time in ordinary circumstances or within a reasonable time considering the actual circumstances; (2) whether the consignees were relieved from liability by reason of clauses in the bill of lading, which empowered the master to land the cargo and retain a lien for money payable by the consignees.

The ship arrived in the port of London on August 14, 1889. On the 16th the consignees commenced unloading and continued doing so till the 20th, when the strike broke out. On the conclusion of the strike the unloading was resumed and completed with due despatch.

Mathew, J., held the consignees liable for the delay.

Sir R. E. Webster, Q.C., and Bucknill, Q.C. (Leck with them), for the appellants.

Barnes, Q.C., and Robson for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

Their Lordships held that the power given to the master to land the cargo was an alternative remedy of the shipowner which he was not bound to exercise, that the conditions in which it might be exercised did not arise, and that the appellants were therefore not relieved from liability by the clauses conferring the power. But they held that the obligation cast upon the appellants by the bill of lading was to unload within what was a reasonable time in the actual circumstances, and that they were not liable for the delay occasioned by the strike.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Lowless & Co. for the appellants; Downing, Holman & Co. for the respondent.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

Dilapidations. Fourth Edition. By Banister Fletcher. London: B. T. Batsford. 1891.

History of the Law of Prescription in England (The). By Thomas Arnold Herbert, Barrister-at-Law. London: C. J. Clay & Sons. 1891.

Statutory Rules and Orders issued in the year 1890. Published by Authority. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode; Edinburgh: John Menzies & Co.; Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Richard Henry Barrett (of the firm of Barrett & Dean), of Slough, has been elected President of the Berks, Bucks, and Oxfordshire Law Society. Mr. Barrett was admitted in 1865.

Mr. Thomas Colborne (of the firm of Colborne, Ward & Colborne), of Newport, Mon., has been elected President of the Monmouthshire Law Society. Mr. Colborne was admitted in 1852.

Mr. Henry John Whitehead (of the firm of Henry John Whitehead & Son), of Cambridge, has been elected President of the Cambridgeshire Law Society. Mr. Whitehead was admitted in 1850.

Mr. Arthur Pierre Rumbelow, of 76 Finsbury Pavement, E.C., and 28 St. Mary's Road, Canonbury, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Rumbelow was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Herbert Behan Taylor (of the firm of C. W. & H. B. Taylor), of 31 Crutchedfriars, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Taylor was admitted in 1885.

BIRTHS.

On Aug. 12, at Linton, Upton Lane, Forest Gate, E., the wife of Chas. C. Sharman, Solicitor, of a son.

On Aug. 15, at Twickenham, the wife of George James Duncan, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Aug. 19, at Offham, near Arundel, the wife of F. Sims Williams, Barrister-at-Law, prematurely, of a daughter, stillborn.

MARRIAGES.

On July 7, at St. Mary's Church, Johannesburg, Mr. Justice Morice, one of the Judges of the High Court of the South African Republic, son of the late David R. Morice, Advocate, Aberdeen, to Isabel, daughter of the late James Kirkpatrick, of Killaghlee, county Donegal, Ireland.

On Aug. 19, at St. George's Church, Deal, William Montgomery White, of the Outer Temple, Solicitor, son of William White, Receiver of Inland Revenue and Head Distributor of Stamps for Sheffield Collection, to Mary Augusta (Minnie), daughter of Capt. R. Mourilyan, R.N., of Deal.

On Aug. 19, at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, Francis Thomas, eldest son of T. H. Tristram, Q.C., D.C.L., of Parkhurst, Hampton Court, to Francis Emily, second daughter of J. J. Marsh, Esq., of Cressy House, Leeds.

On Aug. 20, at St. Augustine's, Queen's Gate, William Robert Sheldon, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, to Mary Forlong, youngest daughter of Charles Sanderson, of 12 Roland Gardens, S.W.

On Aug. 25, at St. Augustine's Church, Highbury, N., George Withington, youngest son of the late Robert Norris, Solicitor, Liverpool, to Clara, second daughter of William Oliver, of Highbury New Park.

DEATHS.

In August, at Riverbank, Rockhampton, Queensland, Charles Sydney Dick Melbourne, Solicitor.

On Aug. 20, at 8 Lyndhurst Road, Peckham, Henry Stoakes, in the 87th year of his age; for 66 years with the firm of Travers, Smith & Braithwaite, Solicitors, 4 Throgmorton Avenue.

On Aug. 20, at Loganbank, Midlothian, the Right Hon. John Inglis, of Glencorse, Lord Justice-General of Scotland, in the 81st year of his age.

On Aug. 24, at 31 Cambridge Street, Liverpool, Joseph Green Bickerton, Solicitor, aged 32 years.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE warm sympathy and anxiety displayed by men of all ranks during Mr. Justice Hawkins's serious illness testify to the feeling of respect and affection entertained by the public towards the learned judge. Always a hard worker, Sir H. Hawkins has at last found that his health and strength are no longer able to undergo the severe strain which he imposed on them when on circuit. Whether he is once more able to preside in Court, or prefers to retire into private life, the judge will have the best wishes of the legal profession and of the general public.

THE Corporation of Maidstone have had the courage to pass a bye-law which gives them the power to stop street processions of the Salvation Army or of any other religious body. To enforce it is sure, however, to provoke more or less active opposition, and with the example of Eastbourne before their eyes the peaceful inhabitants of Maidstone might well be excused for declining the contest. The subject is meantime becoming one of such vital importance to all lovers of peace and quiet, especially on a Sunday, that imperial legislation will probably be demanded.

AT Eastbourne, as we ventured to predict, the well-meant efforts to compromise matters have utterly failed. On Sunday last the street disturbances were worse than ever, and law and order were openly defied. The spectacle is not an edifying one.

MR. GODFREY LUSHINGTON, acting in the absence of the Home Secretary, exercised a very wise discretion in ordering the discharge from Maidstone gaol of the three excursionists from London who were recently imprisoned without the option of a fine. These young men were convicted, according to a London paper, 'of trespassing in a corn-field;' but, assuming that they were guilty of wilfully damaging growing crops, it is nothing less than an outrage on the public conscience to mete out for an offence of this nature such a punishment as should be reserved for offenders of quite a different type. Sentences such as this tend to throw discredit on the whole body of unpaid justices, whose duties are, as a rule, most conscientiously and fairly discharged.

IN the case of Hoare v. Niblett, 60 Law J. Rep. Q.B. 565, the Court applied the well-known rule that a judgment against one of two joint-contractors is a bar to a subsequent action for the same breach against the other to a case of husband and wife. The plaintiff had sued the defendant's husband for breach of an agreement to let a furnished house for a year, and obtained judgment against him for 30*l.* damages. The husband only satisfied the judgment in part, and then became bankrupt. The plaintiff thereupon commenced another action against the defendant upon the same contract and for the same breaches, there being evidence that the agent who let the house contracted on her behalf as well as on her husband's. The Court (Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Grantham) were of opinion, however, that the County Court judge was right in nonsuiting the plaintiff upon the ground that the husband and wife were in effect joint-contractors, and that the judgment against the husband must therefore be treated as a bar to the action against the wife.

THE Statute Law Committee are entitled to the gratitude of the profession on account of a work which, under their auspices, has just been executed by Alexander Pulling, jun. We refer to an index to the Statutory Rules and Orders which has been compiled by Mr. Pulling under the direction of the committee. That such an index is wanted no practitioner will be found to deny. The authority to make rules and orders has been entrusted by the Legislature to a variety of authorities, and the result has been such a confused mass of statutory regulations as renders it a matter of great difficulty to ascertain what orders are in force under any given Act, and where those orders are to be found. The index to which we have referred is intended to lessen that difficulty. The work is a monument of industry, and will no doubt meet with the appreciation it deserves.

THE absence of all system in the publication of Rules and Orders which has hitherto prevailed has frequently attracted attention. Some appear in official documents, such as the London Gazette or as Parliamentary papers or statutory office publications, while a portion of them are only to be found either in papers printed for the department concerned and circulated by the department among the authorities or persons immediately interested, or in text-books. A natural consequence of this state of things is that in some cases rules of importance do not come to the knowledge of the profession until they have been for some time in force. To meet this difficulty the Lord Chancellor and the Treasury have directed the publication henceforward of all 'Orders' which are of a public and general character in an annual volume uniform with the official annual volume of the statutes.

DEBENTURE-HOLDERS will be interested in the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Mercantile Investment and General Trust Company (Lim.) v. The International Company of Mexico. The plaintiff company held debentures issued by the defendant company and sued for unpaid interest. The defendant company had assigned all its assets, business, and liabilities to another company subject to the debentures, the new company covenanting to indemnify the defendant company against all its liabilities. An arrangement in the nature of a novation was subsequently broached whereby the new company offered to give fully paid-up preference shares to the debenture-holders of the defendant company in exchange for their debentures; and at a meeting of debenture-holders, held in accordance with the trust deed, a majority of the debenture-holders passed a resolution approving of the scheme. The defendant company relied on this resolution as binding the dissenting minority, and therefore as forming a good defence to the action. Before Mr. Justice Day it was successful; but the Court of Appeal held that the circumstances did not come within either the language or the object of the provisions of the deed which enabled a majority of the debenture-holders to bind the minority, and that the resolution was therefore ultra vires. Lord Justice Lindley, in construing the language of the deed as to the powers of a majority of debenture-holders, said: 'The power to release the mortgaged premises does not include a power to release the defendant company; the power to modify the rights of the debenture-holders against the company does not include a power to extinguish all their rights; the power to compromise their rights presupposes some dispute about them or difficulty in enforcing them, and does not include a power to exchange their debentures for shares in another company where there is no such dispute or difficulty.'

THE same case decided an interesting point as to the sufficiency of the notice convening the meeting of debenture-holders. The deed provided that 'the notice convening the meeting shall be given at least fourteen days before the date at which the meeting is to be held.' Notice was given by newspaper advertisement on September 23 for a meeting on October 8, and there are fourteen clear days between these dates. It was, however, contended that notice by advertisement was not sufficient, and that if it was sufficient 'the notice, though advertised on September 23, ought not to be held to have been given on that day, as it probably could not, or would not, reach the debenture-holders for some time afterwards.' Some support was given to these arguments by the fact that three days before the meeting circulars were sent out to all debenture-holders whose addresses were known. The Court rejected both contentions. They held that notice by advertisement was the ordinary course of business in such cases. They held, also, that the rule that notice is not good until it is received was inapplicable in the circumstances; otherwise, as the debenture-holders might be scattered all over the world, it would be impracticable to fix beforehand when any meeting could be held, and the limit of fourteen days would be rendered nugatory.

MR. HOWELL has given notice that early next session he will call attention to the condition of the statute law, and move that, in the opinion of the House of Commons, it is expedient that further steps should be taken with a view to its codification, and the expunging from the statute-book of all obsolete and unnecessary laws. The work of statute law revision was commenced so far back as 1856 by the passing of an Obsolete Acts Repeal Act of that year (19 & 20 Vict. c. 64), 'to repeal certain statutes which are not in use,' among the statutes thus repealed being one of Henry IV. (7 Hen. IV. c. 7), which provided that 'arrow heads should be well boiled (sic), braised, and hard.' This was followed by a series of 'Acts for promoting the revision of the statute law by repealing divers of Acts and parts of Acts which have ceased to be in force or have become unnecessary,' as having been impliedly repealed by subsequent Acts inconsistent with them, eleven such Acts being passed between 1861 and 1875 inclusive, four between 1878 and 1883 inclusive, and as many as five between 1887 and 1890 inclusive. The present statute law committee was formed in 1868, and having produced one edition of the Revised Statutes up to 1878, is now engaged in bringing out a second edition, of which four volumes (the last ending with the year 1880) have already appeared, and of which the expected completion 'within three or four years' was announced in November, 1888, when the first volume appeared. Beyond all doubt this second edition, of which Mr. G. A. R. Fitzgerald is editor, is a great improvement upon the first, but it necessarily contains a very large number of enactments which possess an historical interest only, as the 'Acte concerning restraynt of payment of Annates to the see of Rome' (23 Hen. VIII. c. 20), and an 'Act for the declaring unlawfull and void the late proceedings touching ship money and for the vacating of all records and processes concerning the same' (16 Car. I. c. 14).

MALINS'S ACT will presumably become obsolete as time goes on, but, though passed thirty-four years ago, a decision has recently been necessary as to whether the personal estate to which the Act applies includes legal choses in action. The Act, it may be remembered, allows a married woman by deed to dispose of every future or reversionary interest, whether vested or contingent . . . in any personal estate whatsoever to which she shall be entitled under any instrument made after December 31, 1857, though it was not to apply to property subject to her marriage settlement or which she was restrained from anticipating. In Witherby v. Rackham, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 511, a married woman, with the concurrence of her husband, assigned a policy on her life to R. The deed was duly executed by the husband and wife, and separately acknowledged by her under the provisions of Malins's Act. R. mortgaged the policy to the plaintiff, and after R.'s death the plaintiff brought this action against R.'s executrix claiming foreclosure. The property was ordered and agreed to be sold, but the intending purchaser took out the present summons asking to be discharged from his purchase on the ground that a legal chose in action was not included in the Act of 1857. As Mr. Justice Chitty pointed out, 'personal estate,' as used officially both in probate and administration forms, and also in Chancery decrees and accounts, includes debts and choses in action. It is not unreasonable to suppose that the purchaser was dissatisfied with his bargain, and so, like the proverbial drowning man, caught at this straw to save himself from it. Whatever difficulty there may be strictly and technically in speaking of an estate in personalty, to most legal minds the term 'personal estate' would certainly include moneys payable under a policy of assurance, though, of course, they would not be payable until the person insured was dead. In Stroud's 'Judicial Dictionary,' under the head 'Personal Estate,' this definition is given: '"The personal estate and effects," or its equivalent, the "personal property" of an individual may, perhaps, be broadly defined to be all his property other than that which, if he died intestate, would go to his heir. Either of these phrases includes all a person's goods and chattels, moneys, choses in action, leases for years, funded property, and shares, except New River and some canal shares.' It will be observed that Mr. Stroud adds the words 'and effects,' but as against this the Probate Division authorities in the grant of probate speak of the 'administration of the personal estate,' instead of the longer form, formerly in use—namely, 'the administration of all and singular the personal estate and effects' of the deceased. This shows that those authorities regarded the words 'and effects' as mere surplusage. The purchaser's summons was therefore overruled and the summons dismissed.

THE reconciliation service at St. Paul's and two recent inquests have brought into prominence the stigma still attached to suicide. Until 1823 this was so great that the law directed that the body of a suicide should be buried in a public highway and a stake driven through it. This barbarous custom was abolished in 1823 by 4 Geo. IV. c. 52, under which, however, the burial was still directed to take place between the hours of nine and twelve at night. In 1882 the Interments (Felo de Se) Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 19) abolished nocturnal burial, but directed that nothing therein contained should authorise the performance of the rites of Christian burial on the interment of a felo de se, which, however, was expressly permitted to take place in any of the ways prescribed or authorised by the Burial Laws Amendment Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 19). By section 13 of that Act, 'any minister of the Church of England, in any case where the office of the burial of the dead according to the rites of the Church of England may not be used, may use at the burial such service, consisting of prayers taken from the Book of Common Prayer and portions of Scripture, as may be prescribed and approved by the ordinary, without being subject to any ecclesiastical or other censure or penalty.' The reference is of course to the Rubric prefixed to the Burial Service, by which that service is not to be used 'in the case of those who die excommunicate, or have laid violent hands on themselves;' but we are not aware of any special service being prescribed by any ordinary for use at the burial, though the ordinary of St. Paul's emphasised the ecclesiastical stigma on suicide by authorising the recent service of reconciliation. As for the evidence of a felo de se as distinguished from suicide occasioned by unsoundness of mind, it is said in Blunt's 'Church Law' (2nd edit., p. 183) that 'the verdict of the coroner's jury should have respectful attention, though it is not to be considered as an invariable law for the clergyman.'

IN two cases which we noted last week the question was raised as to whether particular employés were workmen within the meaning of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10, and in neither case the question was decided. In the first case (Lamb v. The Great Northern Railway Company, Notes of Cases, p. 58) an ex-guard of that railway company claimed payment of sums deducted from his wages as his contribution to the Great Northern Railway Sick and Funeral Allowance Fund, established for the benefit of the company's servants, from the passing of the Truck Act Amendment Act, 1887 (September 16, 1887), to the time when he left their service. That Act provides that 'the provisions of the principal Act (1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 37) shall extend to, apply to, and include any workman as defined in the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 10; and the expression "artificer" in the principal Act shall be construed to include every workman to whom the principal Act is extended and applied by this Act, and all provisions and enactments in the principal Act inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.' The Court held that it was unnecessary to decide whether the ex-guard was a workman within the Act of 1887, as the exception in favour of deductions from wages for supplying medical attendance in the principal Act must anyhow be read into the amending Act. In the second case it was not necessary to decide the question, but Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Grantham could not agree upon the point. The magistrates convicted a grocer's assistant for leaving his employer without notice, and the assistant appealed on the ground that he was not within section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, an Act passed 'to enlarge the powers of County Courts in respect of disputes between employers and workmen, and to give other Courts a limited civil jurisdiction in respect of such disputes.' Section 10 provides that 'the expression "workman" does not include a domestic or menial servant, but, save as aforesaid, means any person who being a labourer, servant in husbandry, journeyman, artificer, handicraftsman, miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, whether under the age of twenty-one years or above that age,' &c. Mr.

Justice Grantham thought that the appellant did do the manual labour and kind of work meant in the section, and therefore the justices were right. Mr. Justice Smith, on the other hand, was of opinion that he did not come within the section, as he was mainly employed to serve customers in a shop, and only now and then assisted in carrying in heavy parcels. As the judges differed, the finding of the magistrates remains in force. Still it is unsatisfactory for the litigants to feel that the Court itself can form no opinion on the subject, and it might be more satisfactory if a third judge could be called in at such a crisis, just as a referee is generally appointed in submissions to arbitration in case the arbitrators differ.

TRAGEDY and comedy are curiously intermingled in the proceedings of a Police Court. It would be difficult to imagine a more ludicrous complaint than was made by an elderly lady at the Southwark Court one day last week. She appealed to the sitting magistrate for protection against some solicitors who she averred were constantly 'putting the telephone to her ear' to her great discomfort. How this was effected the applicant did not explain, though she added the information that the solicitors held money belonging to her late husband's estate. With the idea apparently of turning his own weapon against an adversary the clerk of the Court telephoned the solicitors not to further plague the old lady, who, it is to be hoped, is satisfied with this result. The telephone, though generally recognised as a necessary adjunct to a solicitor's office, is by no means an unmixed blessing, and is clearly not always appreciated by elderly clients.

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR SEPTEMBER.

OUR Reports for the present month, which were published on Monday, contain eighteen cases in the Chancery Division, seven of which were in the Court of Appeal and one in the House of Lords (pp. 537–616); nineteen cases in the Queen's Bench Division (pp. 505–576), including eight cases in the Appeal Court; nine magistrates' cases, one of which was in the Court of Appeal (pp. 105–144). A goodly instalment is also given (pp. 49–144) of the Statutes of the Realm from c. 26, the Russian Dutch Loan Act, to the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891, and the Stamp Act, 1891 (cc. 38 and 39).

In the Chancery Division the Court of Appeal decided, in Thorley v. Massam; in re Thorley, that annuities bequeathed to trustees whilst they should carry on a business, and an annuity to a son whilst he should manage the business, were liable to legacy duty. In re Nevin was one of the too frequent cases of religious conflict with respect to the education of a child in which the Court of Appeal, affirming Mr. Justice Chitty, disregarded an antenuptial declaration by the parents and considered only the welfare of the child. In re J. & J. Colman's Trade-marks defined the conditions under which alterations should be allowed in new marks under the Act of 1883. Dean v. Dean was a case of devise sustained as an executory devise which would have failed if it had been a contingent remainder. Trustees were held to be competent to execute powers of maintenance and advancement though they took no implied estate. In re The Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines Company was a case in which a director was estopped from denying that he held unpaid shares in respect of which he was qualified to act, as he did act, as a director. In re Freme was a curious case of an equitable contingent remainder and of the operation of the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877. In Jones v. The Merionethshire Permanent Benefit Building Society an agreement intended to stifle a prosecution was held to be void. In re Amos, Carrier v. Price decided that the word 'purchase' in the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 7, must be read in the ordinary and not in the technical conveyancing sense. According to Cooke v. Smith the power of the Court under Order XXXI., rule 26, to order a further deposit as security for costs may be exercised, not only when the order for discovery is made, but at any time thereafter. In the case of The Queensland Mercantile and Agency Company, proceedings having been taken in Scotland with respect to certain shares in a company in course of winding up in England, the rights and liabilities of the Scotch shareholders were held to be governed by Scottish law. In re Crayshaw decided that an antenuptial agreement to settle moneys made by a husband did not include moneys bequeathed in such a way as to be incapable of assignment. According to In re The General Service Corporation Stores, the Companies Winding-up Act, 1890, and the General Order thereunder have not altered the practice with respect to the stay of proceedings against a company against which a winding-up petition has been presented. In Gedye v. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, the owner of an unexpired term of years was held not to have acquired a right to a fund in Court representing the value of the reversion, though twelve years had elapsed since the expiration of the term and the owner of the reversion was unknown. By Thynne v. Sarl an order for delivery of possession of mortgaged property should contain the description of the property, so as to enable the sheriff to identify it. In re Cunningham and Frayling's Contract was a curious case of the appointment of new trustees. Low v. Bouverie decides that a trustee is under no obligation to answer a question as to the trust estate by an intending incumbrancer. Smith v. Cooke is a decision of the House of Lords reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, and restoring that of Mr. Justice Kekewich, that a resulting trust will not be implied in an assignment in favour of creditors. In re Smith's Settled Estates decides that the costs of abortive sale by a tenant-for-life of settled estates are payable out of capital moneys.

In the Queen's Bench Division, Cutner v. Phillips defines the jurisdiction of the City of London Court. Joyner v. Weeks lays down the measure of damages on a lessee's breach of covenant to repair. In The Metropolitan Railway Company v. Fowler the Court differed as to the liability of a railway company for land-tax in respect of lands taken. In Thiodon v. Tindall and the Committee of Lloyd's no action lay against Lloyd's for the wrongful classification of a vessel purchased. According to Unwin v. Hanson the power given by section 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, to the surveyor of highways to 'lop' trees does not authorise him to cut off the tops, but only the lateral branches. De Souza v. Cobden maintains the liability of a woman elected as county councillor to penalties even when the election has not been questioned for twelve months. In Westacott v. Bevan a solicitor's charging order was held only to affect the net result of the action, and not a whole fund in Court. In Hammond v. Schofield the consent of parties to set aside a judgment was held ineffective to revive extinct rights against a third party. Baker v. The Nottingham and Nottinghamshire Banking Company defines the rights of bankers to negotiable securities deposited as security for his private account by a broker. Regina v. The Commissioners under the Boiler Explosions Act, 1882, establishes the concurrent powers of the Board of Trade to institute an inquiry under that Act and under other Acts. Regina v. The Judge of the County Court of Yorkshire (Halifax) decides that the County Court has no jurisdiction to try a patent action. Chappell v. North decides what amounts to 'steps in the proceedings' in section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. It was held in Bishop v. Taylor & Co. that a covenant not to assign without the lessor's consent was not a 'usual covenant.' Tomkinson v. The Balkis Consolidated Company was a case in which a company was estopped from denying plaintiff's title to shares of which he held a certificate. Hoare v. Niblett illustrates the doctrine in the case of a married woman that a judgment, though unsatisfied, against one of two joint contractors is a bar to a subsequent action against the other. According to In re Parrot a creditor's proxy in bankruptcy cannot be attesting witness to the instrument of proxy. Howlett v. The Mayor, &c. of Maidstone defines the statutory liability of a quarter sessions borough for the maintenance of lunatics under the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 86, subs. 4. In In re Gamgee a creditor who was partly trustee and partly beneficial owner of a debt was held entitled to present a bankruptcy petition without joining the cestui que trust if the debt of which he is beneficial owner is sufficient for the purpose. Regina v. The Judge of the City of London Court decides that an action commenced in the High Court cannot be sent to the County Court for trial when the plaintiff has discontinued, and there only remains a counterclaim.

In the Magistrates' Cases, The Guardians of Brighton (appellants) v. The Guardians of the Strand Union (respondents) involved the construction of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, ss. 34, 36. The London County Council (appellants) v. Caudle & Sons (respondents) decides what amounts to a temporary wooden structure under the Metropolis Management Act, 1882, s. 13. Caminada (appellant) v. Hulton (respondent) involved the application of the Betting Act, 1874, s. 3, subs. 3, to a newspaper competition. According to Regina v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire an order cannot be made by justices ex parte for the payment of costs of maintaining a pauper incurred by reason of the suspension of an order of removal. In the Central Criminal Court, in Regina v. Hall, Mr. Justice Charles quashed an indictment against an overseer for offences against the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843, on the ground that the Act prescribes the penalty. In Borend v. Lawrence the judges differed as to whether a grocer's assistant was a 'workman' within the Employers' and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 10. Regina v. Huggins decides that the justices have an absolute discretion to grant or refuse a summons under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, s. 4. St. Helens District Tramways Company (appellant) v. Woods (respondent) was a case of rightful conviction of a tramway company for breach of Board of Trade regulations. Fecitt v. Walsh was an adulteration case, involving the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875, s. 9, and 1879, s. 3.

ENGLISH CAUSES CÉLÈBRES.—III.

BANKS v. GOODFELLOW (1870, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 549).

Banks v. Goodfellow, to the exclusion even of Regina v. Macnaghten, of which we shall have something to say in a subsequent paper, is the cause célèbre of the English law of lunacy.

The younger Holmes, in one of his admirable lectures on the common law (p. 108), has pointed out that the capacity and the responsibility of the insane ought not to be determined by any 'external standard' which leaves their 'personal equation' out of account. In the English lunacy law this just and wholesome doctrine was for a long time lost sight of, and the civil capacity and the criminal liability of persons affected with mental disease were ascertained by the application of different and contradictory tests: (1) Any, the least, delusion was fatal to testamentary capacity (Waring v. Waring, 6 Moo. P. C. 341; Smith v. Tebbitt, 36 Law J. Rep. P. & M. 97; L. R. 1 P. & M. 398). The argument in favour of this curious theory, for whose vitality Lord Brougham and Lord Penzance were responsible, was put in this way: 'To constitute testamentary capacity soundness of mind is indispensably necessary; but the mind, though it has various faculties, is one and indivisible. If it is disordered in any one of these faculties, if it labours under any delusion arising from such disorder, though its other faculties and functions may remain undisturbed, it cannot be said to be sound. . . . Testamentary incapacity is the necessary consequence' (Banks v. Goodfellow, ubi sup. at p. 559). (2) On the other hand, the criminal responsibility of the insane was determined first by the 'wild beast' theory, promulgated by Mr. Justice Tracy, according to which only that degree of mental disease which reduced the intelligence of a prisoner to the level of the mental endowments of an infant or a wild beast was regarded as a valid exculpatory plea; then by Lord Mansfield's 'right and wrong in the abstract' theory; and finally by the 'rules in Macnaghten's Case,' which made the test of responsibility the prisoner's knowledge not of the general ethical distinction between right and wrong, but of the wrongness and illegality of the act for whose commission he was being tried. (3) Again, the contractual capacity of the insane was ascertained by quite different criteria, derived first from the civil law, then from feudal policy, and lastly from equity jurisprudence. It is obvious that beneath these conflicting doctrines there lay one and the same fallacy—the assumption that general standards, external to individual characteristics and peculiarities, could with propriety be applied to the shifting and then imperfectly apprehended phenomena of mental disease. Banks v. Goodfellow gave this fallacy its deathblow. This was an action of ejectment, the result of which depended on the validity of the will of one John Banks, and the material facts were as follows: Banks had been confined in a lunatic asylum as far back as 1841. Discharged after a time from the asylum he remained subject to certain fixed delusions; he had conceived a violent aversion towards a man named Featherstone Alexander, and, notwithstanding the death of the latter, he believed that this man still pursued and molested him; the mere mention of Alexander's name was sufficient to throw him into a state of violent excitement. Banks also frequently believed that he was pursued by devils, whom he thought to be visibly present. These delusions were shown to have existed between 1841 and the date of the will (1862), and also between that date and the testator's death in 1865. It was admitted that at certain times the testator was incapable of making a valid will. But he was proved to have been rational at the time of giving instructions for, and at the time of signing, the testament in issue, and the manner in which he disposed of his property—viz. bequeathing it to a favourite niece—evinced no traces of insanity. It was strongly urged, however, that, 'though the delusions under which the testator laboured might not have been present to his mind at the time of making the will, yet, if they were extant in his mind so that, if the subject had been touched upon, the delusions would have recurred, he was of unsound mind, and therefore incapable of making a will.' But the Court of Queen's Bench, in a masterly judgment delivered, and obviously prepared, by Chief Justice Cockburn, repelled this contention, and held that, as the testator's delusions were quite foreign to the subject-matter of the will, and neither had nor could have had any influence upon its provisions, they were not fatal to his testamentary capacity. 'It is essential,' . . . said the Chief Justice, . . . 'that a testator shall understand the nature of the act and its effects; shall understand the extent of the property of which he is disposing; shall be able to comprehend and appreciate the claims to which he ought to give effect; and, with a view to the latter object, that no disorder of the mind shall poison his affections, pervert his sense of right, or prevent the exercise of his natural faculties, that no insane delusion shall influence his will in disposing of his property, and bring about a disposal of it which, if the mind had been sound, would not have been made.' The decision revolutionised the substantive law of lunacy. Of course it settled once and for all the criterion of testamentary capacity in mental disease. (Cf. Boughton v. Knight, 1873, 42 Law J. Rep. P. & M. 41; L. R. 3 P. & D. 64.) But it did, and is doing, much more than this. It has come to govern, by way of analogy, the law as to the capacity of the insane to marry (Durham v. Durham, 1885, L. R. 10 P. Div. 80, overruling Hancock v. Peaty, 1867, 36 Law J. Rep. P. & M. 57; L. R. 1 P. & D. 335, which corresponds to Waring v. Waring in this branch of the law); it has made its influence felt in the law of contract, so that we find a man held competent to grant a lease of a farm which he insanely believed to be impregnated with sulphur, and wished to get rid of on that ground, because the delusion sharpened his faculties (Jenkins v. Morris, 1880, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 392; L. R. 14 Chanc. Div. 674).* It is telling upon 'the rules in Macnaghten's Case' themselves. Finally, it directed the attention of the legal world to the facts that capacity and responsibility cannot be determined rightly by the application of rigid general rules, and that the only true test of soundness of mind for legal purposes consists in analysing the act and at the same time steadfastly regarding the mental and moral constitution of the actor.

(To be continued.)

* Cf. Grove v. Johnston, 1889, 24 L. R. Ir. 363, per Mr. Justice O'Brien: 'Mental health, like physical health, is but a form of the ability to perform which the law makes an understood condition of the contract, and the nature and effect of that disability must vary according to the thing to be performed.'

Reviews.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE GUIDE.

The Metropolitan Police Guide. By W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, one of the Masters of the Supreme Court, J. H. GREENHALGH and JAMES ROBERTS, Barristers-at-Law. London: H.M.'s Stationery Office.

THE object of this book is to provide for the metropolitan police a compilation of the statutes to which in the course of their duties they have constantly to refer. The book consists of three parts. Part I. consists of the statutes which specially affect the force, including, of course, the Metropolitan Police Acts. Part II. comprises the Acts relating to summary jurisdiction and procedure generally. Part III. gives the principal Acts relating to various matters and offences, which are arranged in alphabetical order. Such a book as this, of course, is simply invaluable to those for whose use it is intended—indeed, it is difficult to imagine how they can have been expected to do without it hitherto—but it will also be a great boon to magistrates and their clerks, and indeed to the profession generally. The Acts in Part I. are printed verbatim, with copious notes, while in Parts II. and III. only the material and important sections are given. The notes throughout are very full, and a capital index completes the book, which is published, substantially bound, at 15*s*.

GOODEVE'S MODERN LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Modern Law of Real Property. With an Appendix containing the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, the Conveyancing Acts, 1881, 1882, the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, and the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. By the late L. A. GOODEVE. Third Edition. Revised and partially rewritten by HOWARD WARBURTON ELPHINSTONE and JAMES W. CLARK, Barristers-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

THE present editors of this work have fully justified their selection by the publishers to carry on the work cut short by the premature death of the original author. That work was of unquestionable merit, and its value is certainly increased by the treatment it has received at the hands of Messrs. Elphinstone and Clark. For students a better book cannot be found, inasmuch as while it presents a clear and accurate statement of the present law it does not neglect to direct its readers to the sources from which that law has emanated. Practitioners also will often find in it a reliable guide in many a point of suggested doubt or difficulty.

WILLIAMS ON BANKRUPTCY.

The Law and Practice in Bankruptcy. By the Hon. Sir ROLAND VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, one of the Justices of H.M.'s High Court of Justice. Fifth Edition, by EDWARD WILLIAM HANSELL, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.); Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

THIS book will now, if possible, since the appointment of its distinguished author as Bankruptcy judge, take higher rank as an authority than before. It is certainly the most valuable work upon the subject. The Act of 1890 has been incorporated by introducing its sections immediately after the sections of the principal Act to which they relate, or in lieu of those which they replace, and the Rules and Forms of 1890 are treated in a similar way. All the recent bankruptcy legislation has been incorporated, but we regret to see that the Bills of Sale Acts have now been omitted, the literature of cases under those Acts being deemed by the editor a distinct branch of the law. We cannot help thinking that this is a considerable sacrifice to make to the necessity of keeping down the size of the volume. The work has been thoroughly revised and brought down to date.

Correspondence.

CORONERS ACT, 1887.

SIR,—By section 5 (1) of the above Act, in cases of murder or manslaughter the coroner shall bind the witnesses to appear and prosecute or give evidence at the next Court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery at which the trial is to be.

By section 5 (2) in case of manslaughter the coroner may accept bail by recognisance with sufficient sureties for the appearance of the person charged at the next Court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery at which the trial is to be.

By section 18 (4) the coroner shall cause recognisances taken before him from a person charged with manslaughter to be taken, so far as circumstances will admit, in one of the forms scheduled to the Act, or in such other forms as may be prescribed, and shall give notice of the recognisance to every person bound thereby.

The form of recognisance scheduled to the Act is made applicable to three cases—viz. (a) to appear and give evidence before the coroner, (b) to prosecute and give evidence at assizes, and (c) to appear for trial.

I should be glad to be informed whether, in practice, coroners use the form of recognisance (b) without variation in all cases where witnesses are bound over, and is the form of recognisance (c) without variation generally applicable to cases where a person committed for manslaughter is released on bail?

The form of recognisance scheduled to the Act is made to apply only to cases where all are bound over in the same sum, and this would imply that, on bail being granted in case of manslaughter, the person charged and the sureties would each be bound over in the same sum. Forms of recognisance, admitting to bail a person charged with manslaughter, used to be drawn applicable for binding over the person charged in one sum and each of the sureties in another sum, which in practice was generally half the sum the person charged was bound over for. Is it now the practice for coroners to bind the person charged and his sureties each in the same amount?

If a coroner commits a person charged with manslaughter, and the person charged some days afterwards applies for bail, what is the modus operandi?

I presume notice of recognisances has only to be given in manslaughter cases—i.e. to the person charged and his sureties. Should the notice be in writing?

I understand some stationers keep the forms of recognisance on parchment; but surely it is not necessary to have them on parchment. CORONER.

Unreported Cases.

CITY OF LONDON COURT.

LOSS OF PROPERTY IN RESTAURANTS.

IN the City of London Court, on September 2, before Judge Kerr, the case of Baggs v. Hodgson was disposed of, which raised an important question affecting the liability of restaurant proprietors for the loss of their customers' property. The defendant was the owner of the Raglan Hotel, Aldersgate Street, E.C., and the plaintiff (according to his solicitor's statement) went there to take his lunch. While there the defendant's wife, who assisted him in the business, asked the plaintiff to let her move his coat from where he had placed it behind the chair to some other place which would be more convenient, and make room for other customers who had come in. The plaintiff demurred to that being done, but the request was repeated, and then he allowed his coat to be moved. The defendant's wife hung the coat up, but afterwards it could not be found. It had been stolen, and the plaintiff therefore asked to be recompensed for the loss he had sustained. The question turned on the relationship existing between the plaintiff and the defendant, and whether they stood in the position of guest and innkeeper.—The defendant's solicitor said the defendant's establishment was a restaurant. On the question of law the defendant could not possibly be held liable for the loss of the plaintiff's overcoat.—His Honour said the plaintiff did not go as guest to an innkeeper. He went for his lunch, and that was all the difference. The law gave the plaintiff no remedy for the loss he had suffered. There must be judgment for the defendant, with costs.

DURHAM COURT OF CHANCERY.

LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES.

A question of some importance as to the liability of the estate of a deceased trustee for losses sustained by his negligence was raised in a case relating to the estate of the late John Cumming, of Manor House, Lanchester, heard by the registrar (Mr. A. O. Smith), of the Palatine Court of Chancery, on Saturday last.—Mr. Lisle said John Cumming died on December 27, 1876, having appointed William Cumming and Joseph Atkinson trustees and executors of his will, to whom he devised his estate upon certain trusts. Though for some reason the will had not been proved, William Cumming took possession of testator's personal estate, consisting of farming stock and household effects, which he sold to Mr. W. S. Wearmouth for 950*l.*, for which he gave Cumming a promissory note. In the following year Wearmouth paid 238*l.* on account, but there was nothing to show how Cumming had disposed of it. Wearmouth repudiated liability on his promissory note, claiming the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, no interest having ever been paid on the note. William Cumming died in July, 1888, having appointed the plaintiffs executors of his will, who issued the usual notice requiring claims against his estate to be sent in to them. In response to this they received from the defendants particulars of certain legacies granted to them by the will of John Cumming, amounting to upwards of 400*l.*, in respect of which they claimed to rank as creditors against the estate of William Cumming, the trustee. The creditors of the latter disputed these claims, and desired the opinion of the Court on the point of liability.—The registrar: Was Wearmouth's promissory note payable on demand?—Mr. Lisle: Yes.—Mr. Mawson, for the defendants, said but for William Cumming's negligence in allowing the promissory note to become statute-barred there would have been sufficient assets in John Cumming's estate to pay his client's legacies, and he contended that William Cumming's estate was liable to make good the loss which had been occasioned by his negligence.—The registrar held that William Cumming as trustee was not justified in accepting a promissory note for the price of his testator's effects, and in suffering it to become statute-barred was guilty of culpable negligence constituting a devastavit. On the facts two questions arose: first, was William Cumming in his lifetime personally liable, and is his estate now liable to make good the loss which had been sustained, having regard to the fact of his not having proved John Cumming's will? And, secondly, assuming he was so liable, was such liability affected by the Statute of Limitations, the breach of trust having occurred in 1882, when the promissory note became statute-barred? It was not necessary that an executor should have proved his testator's will to render him liable for a devastavit, the probate being merely the authenticated evidence of his title, and not the foundation of such title, which the executor derived from the will itself. On the death of a testator his personal property forthwith vested in his executor, who might lawfully sell it before taking probate, and any act of administration was sufficient to fix him with liability. The taking possession of and selling testator's effects was in his opinion such an act of administration as to render William Cumming liable both at law and in equity for any losses resulting from his acts. A third question arose whether the Trustee Act of 1888, which somewhat restricted the liability of trustees, and which applied to all actions commenced after January 1, 1890, had any bearing upon the case. Section 8 in effect provided that in any proceedings against a trustee, except in cases of fraud or fraudulent breaches of trust, or to recover trust property in the possession of a trustee, he was to enjoy all the rights conferred by any Statute of Limitations as if he were not a trustee. This, however, was followed by a proviso that the statute was not to run against a beneficiary unless and until his interest was one in possession. Having committed a flagrant breach of trust, he (the registrar) held that William Cumming could not, if living, nor could his representatives, now set up the Statute of Limitations (Obee v. Bishop, 1 De G. F. & J. 137). But, assuming for argument's sake that the protection conferred by the Act extended to cases of breach of trust, it was clear that the representatives of William Cumming could not avail themselves of its provisions, inasmuch as the interests of the defendants only became interests in possession on the death of the testator's widow in February, 1888. Applying the principles laid down by Lord Cottenham and other eminent judges in cases of that kind, he (the registrar) held that William Cumming's estate was liable to make good to the estate of his testator 950*l.*, with interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the date of Wearmouth's promissory note, but, as the only claims in dispute were those of the defendants, the simplest course would be to direct that they be enforced against the estate of the defaulting trustee.—Mr. W. Lisle (Durham) was solicitor for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Joseph Mawson (Durham) for the defendants.

THE TEMPLE GARDENS.—Both the Inner and Middle Temple Gardens, which have been thrown open nightly for the benefit of the poor children inhabiting the surrounding districts, are now closed; but the Lincoln's Inn Gardens will remain open every evening from five o'clock until dusk up to the 18th inst. It is satisfactory to state that the children have in no way injured either plants, trees, or flowers during the time the gardens have been open.

DELIVERY OF GIFTS.

IN the judgment in Cochrane v. Moore, L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 57, 'all the authorities are collected and reviewed,' says Mr. Justice Chitty in In re Alderson; Alderson v. Peel. But that he errs herein might be easily demonstrated if it would serve any practical purpose. Suffice it, however, to reproduce here a pithy critique on Cochrane v. Moore from a transatlantic source. That case, observes the Harvard Law Review, 'is one of much interest. The well-known decision of Irons v. Smallpiece, 3 B. & Ald. 551, that delivery was necessary to the parol gift of a chattel, though apparently settled law in this country, has not, as is shown by the collection of authorities in Professor Gray's note to Irons v. Smallpiece, Gray's Cas. Property, 167, been treated with great respect in England; and later decisions had so far shaken it that Lord Justice Lopes felt bound to hold in Cochrane v. Moore at Nisi Prius that delivery was not necessary to a gift. But the Court of Appeal has upheld Irons v. Smallpiece in an elaborate judgment. The point was not, indeed, necessary to the decision; various considerations arose on the facts, among others the inquiry whether the subject-matter of the gift, the undivided fourth part of a horse, was susceptible of delivery at all; and as to the actual decision the Court agreed with Lord Justice Lopes and dismissed the appeal. They discussed, however, at great length the question decided in Irons v. Smallpiece. The following passage from the opinion of Lord Justice Fry, speaking for himself and Lord Justice Bowen, indicates the grounds of the decision: "This review of the authorities [the opinion contains an extended investigation of the early reports and text-writers] leads us to the conclusion that according to the old law no gift or grant of a chattel was effectual to pass it, whether by parol or by deed, and whether with or without consideration, unless accompanied by delivery; that on that law two exceptions have been grafted, one in the case of deeds and the other in that of contracts of sale where the intention of the parties is that the property shall pass before delivery; but that, as regards gifts by parol, the old law was in force when Irons v. Smallpiece was decided;" and he concludes that that case has not been overruled. Among the citations collected by Professor Gray there are several which appear to have escaped the attention of the Court. Lord Hardwicke's comment in Ward v. Turner, 2 Ves. Sen. 431, 442, on the passage cited by Lord Justice Fry from Jenkins's "Centuries," 109, Case 9, is interesting; and the observation of Baron Parke in Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Exch. 572, 575, seems to throw light on the question discussed by the Lord Justice of that eminent judge's attitude towards Irons v. Smallpiece. The concurring opinion of the Master of the Rolls is noticeable. He draws a distinction—not wholly easy to understand—between "fundamental propositions of law" and the "amount or nature of the evidence which will satisfy a Court of the existence of such a proposition." The former, he says, nothing but an Act of Parliament can alter, while the latter may be changed by judicial decision; and since he concludes that delivery is not a piece of evidence to prove a gift, but "one of the facts which constitutes the proposition that a gift has been made," he feels constrained to hold that delivery must remain a necessary part of an oral gift until the law is altered by Parliament.' It may be added that Irons v. Smallpiece was commented on in the Irish case of Power v. Cooke, Ir. Rep. 4 C. L. 247, hidden away in the Irish Reports Digest under the heading of 'Divorce a mensâ et thoro.'

The later case of In re Alderson; Alderson v. Moore involved the determination of the question, whether delivery first and gift afterwards of a chattel capable of delivery is as effectual as a gift first and delivery afterwards. It came before Mr. Justice Chitty on a summons taken out by the Rev. F. Alderson and Mary, his wife, asking that a declaration that a portrait of her great-grandfather belonged to her father, the Rev. Christopher Alderson, and formed part of his estate at his death in 1880. On the other hand, it was claimed by Mr. C. M. Wilson as being his property in virtue of a gift which he alleged was made to him by the Rev. Christopher Alderson in 1879. It appeared that in 1848 the portrait in question, upon the death of its then owner, came into the possession of the Rev. George Alderson with other pictures, and that the Rev. George Alderson, having no room for the pictures, one of his sisters took charge of the portrait, and another sister took charge of the other pictures. In 1865, the two sisters of the Rev. George Alderson being dead, the portrait was placed by James Wilson, the husband of one of the sisters, with the other pictures, at the request of the Rev. George Alderson. In 1867 James Wilson died, and the Rev. George Alderson entrusted James Wilson's son, Charles Macro Wilson, with the care of the pictures, and they were accordingly kept in C. M. Wilson's house. In 1879 the Rev. George Alderson died, and by the terms of his will the pictures became the property of the Rev. Christopher Alderson, the father of the applicant, Mary Augusta Alderson. The Rev. Christopher Alderson and C. M. Wilson were appointed executors of the will of the Rev. George Alderson. Now, at that time the picture was in the house of the respondent, probably hanging on the wall of one of his rooms, and the respondent so held it as bailee for the Rev. Christopher Alderson, under whose will, it was claimed, the picture passed to his daughter. But it happened that the testator in the month of October that year, 1879, had gone to Sheffield, where the respondent's house was, and the respondent deposed in his affidavit: 'I then reminded him that by virtue of the will of the said George Alderson the picture in dispute in this matter belonged to him, and asked him about forwarding it to him. The said Christopher Alderson did not give me any instructions as to where I should send it. The only remark which I recollect he made with reference to the said portrait was that he said he had a very good copy of it, and that he did not then want the picture; but I did not understand that he had then given me the picture, or done more than allow it to remain in my custody.' In December following the respondent wrote to the testator a letter which referred to pictures, including the picture now in dispute, belonging to him which were in the respondent's possession, containing this passage: 'I think I told you I have all the pictures from Hornby at More Hall'—being the place where the respondent then resided—'I think as to one or two I must have them somewhat repaired in frames, &c. I conclude you will not object to this.' Then some particular pictures were mentioned, and the letter went on thus: 'You were good enough to say that you did not want the one picture my uncle left you on his death, that of my great-grandfather Alderson, by Wright, of Derby. If you are willing'—then there were some words that could not be made out in the press copy of the letter—'the pictures to let this remain up at More Hall.' The passage which was illegible was, however, of no great importance. The picture particularly referred to was the one in question. To that letter the testator replied: 'I agree with you that the pictures from Hornby, if needing it, ought to be repaired. I gave to you the original picture by Wright of my grandfather; you will therefore retain it, of course, at More Hall.' In due course of post on December 8 the respondent wrote to the testator thus: 'I have received your letter to-day, and write at once to thank you very much for giving me the picture now at More Hall.' Then he described the picture, and went on: 'Until your letter came to-day I did not understand you had given me the picture. When you were over I asked if I should send it to you, and only understood I was allowed for the present to retain possession of it, which I was very glad to do. I shall prize your kind gift very much, and am very glad that my two great-grandfathers who have for some years hung together will so remain.' In delivering his decision on this state of facts, Mr. Justice Chitty referred to Cochrane v. Moore, where, he observed, 'Lord Justice Fry mentions a case which was decided in the reign of Edward IV. He says: "In Michaelmas term, 21 Edw. IV. pl. 27, fol. 55, it was said by Mr. Justice Brian that in detinue of chattels it was a good plea to say that the plaintiff after the bailment gave them to the defendant and then he could have his law—quod fuit concessum." Then his lordship says upon that case: "The case appears to go only to this—that if A. after bailing a chattel to B. then gives it to B., B. might defend himself by his suit in an action of detinue. If good law, it seems to establish that delivery first and gift afterwards is as effectual as a gift first and delivery afterwards." That case does appear to me to be an authority for that proposition. The Lord Justice cautiously avoids affirming the case, but he mentions it as a decision, and does not question the correctness of the decision. He leaves the case just as it is, neither denying nor affirming its authority. That case, then, which I consider as an authority, and which, sitting here, I ought to follow, is sufficient to establish the claim of the respondent to the property.' He then proceeded to refer to Winter v. Winter, 4 L. T. (N.S.) 639 [see s. c., 9 W. R. 747, and see the Irish case in 7 Ir. Jur. (N.S.) 107], and distinguished the well-known case of Shower v. Pilck, L. R. 4 Exch. 478. Without deciding whether the transaction that took place in October, 1879, amounted to a gift or not, he continued: 'But assuming that, by reason of some misunderstanding on the part of the respondent, there was not a final acceptance, or any acceptance of the gift which the testator intended to make upon that occasion, I can see no ground for doubting that what subsequently took place is sufficient, so far as words are concerned, to constitute a gift. The argument for the applicant is that there are no words of present gift in the letter. What the Court must see, where words are used which are alleged to be sufficient to constitute a gift, is, that in point of substance they are sufficient for the purpose alleged. It is not necessary to say, if one man hands a book to another, "I intend to make you a present; I give you that book." It is quite sufficient if the book is handed over and placed in the hands of the intended donee, the donor saying: "My dear sir, that book is yours." The testator says in his letter: "I have given you the picture." Assuming that it was not a gift perfected according to the somewhat refined argument I have been listening to, he goes on to say: "You will therefore retain it, of course, at More Hall." What more could be required? I will read it a little differently, thus: "I intended to make the gift of the picture in October; you seem to have misunderstood me, but you are to retain it." It is clear that, except upon the most subtle, and I think upon the most erroneous interpretation of the letter, if the picture had not been previously given, the intention to give, and sufficient words to show that intention to give, are to be found in the letter. The matter does not stay there, because the donee writes back a letter of thanks, and it is as plain as can be that he accepts it as a gift then made. The testator does not write back, because it would be unnecessary for him to continue the correspondence any more. He acquiesces entirely in the view presented to him by the letter of thanks that there has been a complete gift.' And that there had been a complete gift in point of law the learned judge unhesitatingly held accordingly.—Irish Law Times.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

THE LAW OF DISTRESS.

NOT long since a distraint occurred for arrears of rent on the stock of two persons (defendants in this case) trading as dog and bird fanciers in London city, and the bailiff used the usual formula as to distraining everything on the premises. The defendants immediately said that certain dogs on the premises belonged to private owners, that they were left there for the purpose of sale, and that they should remove them whether the bailiff liked or not. Repeatedly warned not to do so, as stock being under distress was in bailiff's custody, and their attention drawn to the note on distress notice and inventory, nevertheless some dogs were taken off. The bailiff, of course, obtained a summons under 11 Geo. II. c. 19, ss. 3, 4, which provides forfeiture to the landlord by the tenant, and any person wilfully and knowingly aiding and assisting in fraudulently conveying away, carrying off or concealing goods, of double the value of the goods carried off or concealed, and a proper provision for the recovery of the double value before justices of the peace. The defendants at the hearing admitted the removal, but contended the dogs could not be distrained upon because left to sell. The magistrates, however, overruled the contention, but dismissed the summons on the ground that, as defendants simultaneously with the making of the distress gave verbal notice that the dogs belonged to other persons, they did not fraudulently remove the goods to avoid distress. With the aid of such a decision as this, asks the Estates Gazette, what is now to prevent a tenant and any persons from notifying to a bailiff who is making a distress that such and such goods belong to M. L. & O., and then, if the tenant removes them, he will not be responsible to the law? Clearly, whether a removal takes place before or after a distress is levied, the intent ought to be considered the same.

INSANITARY HOUSES.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, s. 75, provides that in all contracts for letting for habitation by persons of the working classes there shall be implied a condition that the house is at the commencement of the holding in all respects reasonably fit for human habitation. This appears to place the tenant of a 20*l.* house on the same footing as regards sanitary condition as the tenant of an expensive hall; in fact, it may be said he is better protected, for at common law there is no warranty in the case of an unfurnished house that it is at all suitable for a dwelling-house, though, as many cases show, a stricter rule applies in the case of a furnished house. It has been pertinently suggested that the above clause might be well extended to all houses of whatever class, princely mansion as well as humble cottage, and independent of the amount of their rent.

A PEOPLE'S MAGISTRATE.

A unique privilege is enjoyed by the inhabitants of the liberty of Havering-atte-Bower under an old charter of the liberty. They are entitled to elect a people's magistrate. The liberty bench consists of three magistrates—the high steward, who is appointed by the lord or lady of the manor; the deputy-steward, chosen by the high steward; and a third justice elected by the people. It is sought now, however, to merge the liberty in the county. At present, so far as judicial business is concerned, it constitutes a county in itself.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Marked as are the contrasts between the English monarchy and the American Republic, the institutions of the English people on both sides of the Atlantic are in essence, though not in form, the same, and they stand in marked contrast with the institutions of France. In the United States, as in England, custom has the authority of law. The constitutional history of the United States is as obviously as the constitutional history of England the record of attempts to close political contests by means of treaties, such as the North American Constitution, Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, and the Act of Settlement of 1700. Such is one of the conclusions drawn by Mr. E. Boutmey in his recent work, 'Studies in Constitutional Law: France, England, United States,' and which has been ably translated by Mr. E. M. Dicey, and an introduction given by Professor Dicey. 'The States created the American nation; it was certainly not the American people which created the States,' is one of Mr. Boutmey's apt sayings; but he also contends that the United States, 'as at present existing, are primarily a trading company and only secondarily a nation.' As to England and France, 'in France the nation is a single mass; in England it is an aggregate. In France the superior powers have all been created by the constitution; in England it is they who daily make and complete the constitution by the very action of their life and the natural play of the forces working in them.' The adoption of universal suffrage in America, it appears, was not merely to satisfy a speculative mind on the demands of natural justice; it was carried out chiefly in order to form a real premium on immigration. Mr. Boutmey states that his desire in publishing this work was to criticise and explain the constitutional ideas which govern the action of the English people in the light thrown upon them by a comparison with the ideas which have guided the constitution makers of France.

THE CROWN AND THE PEOPLE.

The imposition of the coronation oath on the sovereign and the oath of allegiance on the subject imply that the Crown rests upon contract. If the sovereign, whether by birth or other cause, had an inherent right to the throne, then the engagement to rule in a certain way and the promise of obedience would be alike needless. It is true that throughout the history of England the hereditary principle has been often invoked, and has at times exercised a most weighty and even preponderating influence in the succession; yet it is equally true that the last word has always remained with the people, and the popular will has on many occasions asserted its rights by dissolving the compact with the sovereign and by snapping the succession altogether. As far back as the Saxon times the sovereigns were spoken of as 'elected' to the throne, and, as a matter of fact, Edward was made king in preference to the sons of King Edward; whilst Edgar's brother was still more pointedly subjected to the popular will, for he, after being on the throne, was deposed for his bad government. William the Conqueror, it is said, could not obtain 'willing acceptance from the nation until he had sworn,' &c. William Rufus was willing to swear to do certain things 'if the nation would accept him as king.' The chroniclers of Stephen's time declare that his claim to the throne 'would not have been accepted' if he had not consented to the bargain imposed upon him at his coronation. Richard I. seems to have been accepted by right of succession 'after the solemn and due election of both clergy and laity.' King John, at his coronation, was bluntly told by the archbishop that no one ought to succeed another on the throne 'unless chosen with one consent by the nation,' whereupon the king took the oath. Edward II. became king, we are told, not so much by hereditary right as by the unanimous consent of the nobles and magnates, who further enforced the principle of choice by deposing him again later on. When Edward III., his successor and son, was crowned, we are told that 'all the people consented to the new election,' in much the same way as Richard II. was accepted and was afterwards formally dethroned by Parliament, the Duke of Lancaster being put in his place by the same power. Richard III. himself stated that 'he had become king by the consent of the three estates of the realm.' Even Henry VIII., not given to any unnecessary scruples, got sundry Acts of Parliament passed settling the crown on his different children, and Queen Elizabeth, on coming to the throne, admitted that 'she was elected by the consent of the nation.' The fate of Charles I. was a notable exhibition of the popular will, and the revolutionary character of that event does not make it less, but more so. William III. was placed on the throne by Parliament, and so too was the House of Brunswick. Do these incidents, it is asked, go to show that the English have accepted hereditary principles or not?

COSTS IN POLICE CASES.

The provisions of section 8 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, enact that where a fine inflicted by a Court of summary jurisdiction does not exceed 5*s.* an order shall not be made for payment of costs by the defendant, and all fees payable by the informant or already paid by him shall be remitted unless the Court thinks fit to order otherwise. The Court may, moreover, order the whole or any part of the fine to be applied towards the payment of the informant's costs. The non-imposition of costs is the course that should be ordinarily followed where the fine imposed is not more than 5*s.*, and an express order to the contrary should be made only when the justices have some special reason for so doing. In many Courts, however, the express order for the payment of costs is made as a matter of course, while the remission of the justices' clerk and the constables' foes is regarded as justifiable only in exceptional circumstances. The disproportion thus occasioned between the fine imposed and the costs payable by the defendant is very much to be deprecated, as apt to give rise to a complete misconception of the principles on which justice should be meted out to offenders. . . . The number of persons sent to prison for non-payment of sums of money, the greater part of which is made up of costs, ought not to be so large, for it is only a small proportion of the total that can properly be regarded as the penalty for the offence proved. In estimating the quantity of work done by a justices' clerk as one of the matters to be considered in determining the amount of salary to be paid to him, the amount of fees remitted ought always to be taken into account, no less than the amount of fees received. This imposition of heavy costs has grown out of the pernicious habit of basing the income of magistrates' clerks on the amount collected over a period of one or more years. It has been continued and developed for generations. In many petty sessional divisions it is the regular practice to visit drunkards of the accidental or occasional as distinct from the habitual and tippling class with a fine of 5*s.* and costs, the costs in hardly any case being less than double the amount of the fine. The scales of fees in boroughs are very much more moderate, simply because the magistrates' clerks' salaries are generally definitely fixed. This, then, is a matter that calls for the serious consideration of members of Parliament, county councillors, and county magistrates themselves. Many of whom have felt that, unless these excessive costs are inflicted, it would be unfair to their clerks, these gentlemen being paid on an average of what the Court yields. The burden is the greater and the more grievous, because in country districts defendants have often to travel miles to the Court and generally lose a day's wage. For ordinary drunk one bench have modified their '5*s.* and costs' (total 15*s.*) to '10*s.*, including costs.' It is a reduction of 33 per cent.; but it is not enough, and cannot be satisfactory until it is at least as low in amount as the fine generally inflicted by other stipendiaries in cities and boroughs and by borough magistrates—e.g. 5*s.* The following are fair samples of fines and costs inflicted in different parts of the country:—

	Fines	Costs
Boroughs.
Boston	1 0	3 6
Northampton (including costs)	7 0	—
Stalybridge	1 0	5 0
Oldham (first offence, including costs)	2 6	—
„ (second offence, including costs)	5 0	—
Grantham (including costs)	6 6	—
County Divisions.
Ambleside	5 0	9 0
Bolton	5 0	10 0
Alfreton	5 0	15 6
Wigmore (Hereford)	5 0	12 0
Ingleton	5 0	8 0

In one instance for a trivial offence a fine of 1*s.* was imposed, but when the man was about to pay the magistrates' clerk claimed the sum of 18*s.* 6*d.* as costs. Again, in school attendance cases, where the fine and costs must not exceed 5*s.*, it cannot be right to insist in every case on having the maximum sum, yet it is so in some places, while in other townships 2*s.* is an ample penalty, in others 1*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.*

UNCLAIMED MONEY JOTTINGS, SESSION 1891.

MR. SIDNEY H. PRESTON, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

During the eventful Parliamentary session just closed some important questions have been asked in the House of Commons on the subject of unclaimed funds, and many interesting returns presented with reference thereto for public information. As these returns have but a very limited circulation, I venture to send you a short summary of them.

Dormant Funds in Chancery.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Budget speech, remarked that 'he had to provide another and quite unexpected 100,000*l.* in respect of successful claims on the dormant funds in Chancery. It was supposed that a large sum, amounting to 2,500,000*l.*, owing to suitors would never be claimed, and it was written off. Experience had proved that an increased spirit of research, assisted by those means of increased publicity which the day demands and receives, had enabled many suitors who, it was believed, would never claim, to make their claim.' It is a remarkable fact that the surplus interest of the suitors' moneys has been treated as a bankers' profit, and 1,000,000*l.*, part thereof, applied towards the erection of the Royal Courts of Justice. A return was issued showing the receipts and expenditure of the Paymaster-General in respect of these suitors' funds. The balances in Court on February 28, 1890, amounted to 71,203,035*l.* The total 'unclaimed,' however, is not stated. The number of suitors' accounts is now no less than 41,325, so it can be readily imagined that many sums become unclaimed owing to death, absence abroad, lunacy, &c.

Unclaimed Dividends.—In reply to a question as to further publicity of the unclaimed dividends on Government stocks, the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not see his way towards directing the official publication of the lists, although many families are interested without their knowledge in such unclaimed funds. A return presented by the Bank of England shows that on April 3, 1890, the dividends 'due and not demanded' amounted to 421,110*l.*; on July 4, 382,204*l.*; on October 3, 394,224*l.*; and on January 2 last, 369,094*l.*—of which the greater portion was advanced to the Government till claimants appear.

The unclaimed dividends on colonial stocks amount to upwards of 150,000*l.*, and one beneficial result of the Colonial Conference of 1887 has been the preparation of a bill with reference to these forgotten moneys. A clause providing for the annual publication of the names and addresses of the stockholders and the amount unclaimed in each case would make this a really valuable measure.

Estates reverting to the Crown.—The 'Crown's Nominee Account' gives the receipts and expenditure of the Treasury solicitor during the year 1890 in respect of estates which fell to the Crown by reason of the owners thereof dying intestate without known heirs, or illegitimate, &c. The receipts from this source were 55,224*l.* In a schedule to this return a list of the intestates is given, with their addresses and descriptions. Since the passing of the Treasury Solicitor Act, 1876, the receipts have been no less than 1,562,922*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.*

Army and Navy Prize Money.—Further returns give statistics as to these funds. In reply to a question in the House of Commons as to whether part of the unclaimed army prize-money could not be appropriated towards the relief of the infirm veterans who served in the Crimean War, Mr. Stanhope could not see his way to adopt the suggestion.

The unclaimed naval prize-money amounts to 257,000*l.*

Soldiers' Unclaimed Balances.—By the Regimental Debts (Consolidation) Bill it was proposed to provide for the publication of lists of any surplus moneys due to the representatives of deceased soldiers. Should no claim be made after a period of six years, such funds to be applied towards the benefit of other soldiers' kin; such application, however, not to bar any subsequent claim. The amount of the 'soldiers' effects' fund is now no less than 93,206*l.* This fund represents the amount of the soldiers' unclaimed balances accumulated since 1863. As the only publicity these windfalls for soldiers' kin at present get is through the medium of the London Gazette, the amount unclaimed is yearly increasing. Newspaper publicity should surely be substituted for the old-fashioned London Gazette notification.

The Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Act exacts that any person who has not been heard of for seven years or upwards may be assumed to be dead, and his heirs entitled to 'uplift and enjoy' his estate. Should, however, the absent person reappear within thirteen years he may demand and receive back his estate.

Other returns might be noticed, but I venture to think that the foregoing facts are sufficient to justify the publication of an annual list of all unclaimed funds as a Parliamentary return. Such a return would certainly be more widely read than most of the documents at present published.

THE NATURALISATION ACT.—During the past month thirty-nine certificates of naturalisation were granted to aliens by the Home Secretary, under the provisions of the Naturalisation Act, 1870. Of these aliens eighteen are described as coming from Russia, twelve from Germany, and one each from Bavaria, France, Greece, Holland, the Netherlands, Prussia, Roumania, Switzerland, and the United States of America.

MR. PARTRIDGE.—It is stated on most reliable authority that Mr. Partridge, who is next to the oldest metropolitan police magistrate, has, owing to failing health, decided to retire. He has been for twenty-eight years a magistrate, the greater part of which has been spent in the metropolis.

THE LAW OFFICERS' FEES.—A return has been issued to-day of the amount paid by the Treasury to the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General of England, and the Scotch and Irish law officers. From this it appears that the Attorney-General, in addition to his salary of 7,000*l.*, received as fees for contentious business in 1887-88, 4,655*l.*; 1888-89, 5,014*l.*; 1889-90, 2,179*l.*; 1890-91, 2,782*l.* The Solicitor-General received, in addition to his salary of 6,000*l.*, fees as follows: 1887-88, 3,779*l.*; 1888-89, 5,056*l.*; 1889-90, 2,300*l.*; 1890-91, 2,044*l.* The Lord-Advocate of Scotland received, in addition to his salary of 3,279*l.* 10*s.*, fees ranging for the year from 47*l.* to 89*l.* for non-contentious business, and from 137*l.* to 547*l.* for contentious business. The Solicitor-General for Scotland, with a salary of 955*l.*, received annually as fees for contentious business sums ranging from 135*l.* to 421*l.*, and for non-contentious business, from 19*l.* to 39*l.* The fees of the Attorney-General for Ireland, whose salary is 5,000*l.*, ranged from 989*l.* to 1,722*l.*; and those of the Solicitor-General for Ireland, whose salary is 2,000*l.*, ranged from 127*l.* to 789*l.*

BIRTHS.

On Aug. 25, at 13 The Terrace, St. Helier's, Jersey, the wife of Ernest Le Sueur, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Aug. 28, at 78 Cambridge Terrace, Hyde Park, the wife of Ernest L. Levett, Q.C., of a daughter.

On Sept. 1, at Elmhurst, Eaton, Norwich, the wife of Charles Storey Gilman, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Aug. 25, at the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, London, Thomas Leathes Johnston, Solicitor, of Walkden, Lancashire, youngest son of Robert Henry Johnston, Esq., of Grantham, to Marian, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Alfred Gott Woolward, Rector of Belton, Grantham.

On Aug. 25, at the Parish Church, Twickenham, Geoffrey Stratford Crawshay, Solicitor, son of the late Edward Crawshay, of Othorpe Hall, Leicester, to Edith Alice, sister of Dr. A. W. Robinson, of Arragon Towers, Twickenham, and second daughter of the late William Arthur Robinson, Solicitor.

On Aug. 26, at the Standesamt, Wiesbaden, George Barnard Milbank Coore, Barrister-at-Law, youngest son of the late Henry Coore, of Scruton Hall, Yorkshire, to Augusta Fanny, youngest daughter of His Excellency General Von Schmeling, late H.P.M.'s First Guards.

On Aug. 27, at St. Bartholomew's Church, Ripponden, Edward Maurice Hill, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of G. Birkbeck Hill, Esq., D.C.L., of Oxford, to Susan Ellen Berta, fourth daughter of G. B. Hadwen, Esq., of Kabroyde, Halifax, Yorkshire.

On Aug. 27, at Drayton, St. Leonards, Alexander Coghill, of Welham, Shepton Montague, Somerset, and 19 St. Edmund's Terrace, Primrose Hill, Barrister-at-Law, only surviving son of Andrew Wylie, of Prenlaw, Fifeshire, to Adela Maude Mary Bigland, fifth daughter of Sir Henry de Burgh Lawson, Bart., of Gatherley Castle, Richmond, Yorkshire.

On Aug. 31, at Pirton, Herts, John Charles Bourne, son of the late Robert Hodgson Bourne, of Staindrop, in the county of Durham, Solicitor, to Anne Maria Lindsay Watson, daughter of the late John Watson, of Durham, Solicitor.

On Sept. 1, at Christ Church, Ealing, Edgar Vaux Huggett, M.A., Barrister-at-Law, to Alice Mary, third daughter of the late Rev. Henry Eastfield Bayly, Rector of Piddington, Somerset.

On Sept. 1, at St. Andrew's Church, Walsall, William J. Disturnal, B.A., LL.B., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of Thomas Disturnal, of Walsall, to Charlotte E., second daughter of Thomas Southern, of Bescot, Walsall.

DEATH.

On Aug. 26, whilst bathing at Bervie, N.B., Alexander Clarke, of Colby House, Walton-on-Thames, and of 14 Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, Solicitor, aged 29.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

WE are glad this week to be able to record the convalescence of Mr. Justice Hawkins. The learned judge has been taking carriage exercise for some days, and leaves London on Saturday for the Continent.

THE Queen's Printers have issued a list of the public Acts of the late session. They are seventy-six in number. The most bulky are the Statute Law Revision Act, the Stamp Act, and the Public Health London Act, the two first costing 1*s.* 1*d.* each, and the latter 1*s.* 2*d.* The most important, in addition to the Stamp Act and the Public Health London Act, are the Custody of Children Act, the Tithe Act, the Savings Banks Act, the Forged Transfers Act, the Elementary Education Act, the Factory and Workshop Act, the County Councils Elections Act, the Penal Servitude Act, the Stamp Duties Management Act, and the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, which may be had at prices ranging from 1*d.* to 3*d.* The nine Railway Rates (Provisional Orders) Acts do not make their appearance in the table, although it seems to have been provided by section 24, subsection 10 of the Railway and Traffic Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 25), that 'the Act of Parliament confirming any provisional order made under that section should be a public general Act.' Amongst minor Acts, those of special interest to the legal profession are the Commissioners for Oaths Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 50), the Slander of Women Act, c. 51, and the Judicature Act, c. 50. The Slander of Women Act we have already noticed (ante, pp. 544, 557). The Judicature Act provides that an ex-Lord Chancellor may sit in the Court of Appeal, that any barrister of not less than fifteen years' standing may be appointed President of the Probate, &c., division upon any vacancy in that office, and that assessors may assist the House of Lords in the hearing of Admiralty appeals. The Commissioners for Oaths Act provides that declarations under the Merchant Shipping Acts, the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, the Customs Act, 1876, or the Patents Act, 1883, may be made before a commissioner for oaths at any place.

MR. POLAND, Q.C., who was recently interviewed by the representative of an evening contemporary upon the subject of the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal, is clearly of opinion that such a step is unnecessary. He pointed out that, in the course of his forty years' experience at the bar, he had not known of six proved cases of wrongful conviction, and he appears to think that, in regard to these very isolated cases, the right which at present exists of petitioning the Home Office is a sufficient safeguard for prisoners. Mr. Poland bears strong testimony to the careful and thorough manner in which such petitions are dealt with by the Home Secretary and his subordinates, and is of opinion that if prisoners were enabled, as was proposed by the Lord Chancellor's bill, to give evidence in their own behalf, the cry for a Court of Criminal Appeal would be much less heard. Coming from such an eminent criminal lawyer, these views, if not conclusive, are at least entitled to very great weight.

'A GOVERNOR OF A GAOL,' writing to the Pall Mall Gazette in connection with the presence of pressmen at the scaffold, states that the authority by which press representatives are admitted to executions rests with and is vested in the members of the visiting committee of the gaol, and adds that doubtless by courtesy the high sheriff's order would hold good, though 'he knows of no statute to that effect.' The only statute bearing on the subject is the Capital Punishment Amendment Act, 1868 (31 Vict. c. 24), which, in accordance with the report of the royal commission, of which the Duke of Richmond was chairman, substituted private for public executions. By section 3 of the Act 'the sheriff charged with the execution, and the gaoler, chaplain, and surgeon of the prison, and such other officers of the prison as the sheriff requires, shall be present at the execution;' and 'any justice of the peace for the county, borough, or other jurisdiction to which the prison belongs, and such relatives of the prisoner or other persons as it seems to the sheriff or the visiting justices of the prison proper to admit within the prison for the purpose, may also be present at the execution.' If the ejusdem generis rule applies, the right of the sheriff or justices to admit representatives of the press seems doubtful, as they could not be taken to be of the same class with the relatives of the prisoner, attending as they do entirely in the public interest; and, considering that the public interest is represented by the coroner's jury (upon which, by section 5 of the Act, no officer of the prison may sit), it would seem to be quite sufficient if a verbatim report of the proceedings at the inquest only were allowed to be made public. Such sensational accounts of execution horrors as recently appeared in the columns of the Pall Mall Gazette are very greatly to be deprecated.

THE release of Hargan from Lewes gaol after twelve months' imprisonment recalls one of the most remarkable trials for manslaughter during recent years. The strong local feeling which was excited, and which found vent in physical violence as well as in the newspapers, the contradictory evidence at the various stages of the inquiry and trial, and the heavy sentence of twenty years' penal servitude passed by the judge on the prisoner, all combined to arouse public interest in a remarkable degree. A memorial from over 70,000 persons was sent to the Home Office, and Mr. Matthews certainly carried the feeling of the country with him when he reduced the sentence to the term of twelve months' imprisonment, which expired a few days ago.

EASTBOURNE is still unhappy. The special constables sworn in for service last Sunday were selected, it would appear, without much discretion, and were themselves retained in what was practically the custody of the police. The Mayor of Eastbourne is not blamed for this new development, but a strongly-worded protest has been sent to him by the tradesmen, mechanics, and others who were sworn in. The fact that exceptional, and, happily, rare circumstances alone justify the employment of special constables, whether in London or the provinces, makes it of the highest importance that only suitable persons should be selected. To keep a number of citizens out of temptation to join in disorderly conduct, or out of harm's way, by swearing them in as special constables is, no doubt, a novel and original plan, but it cannot be recommended for general adoption.

IT is in the main satisfactory when Courts of Justice interpret documents according to their literal meaning, without qualifications derived from the nature of the transactions of which they are the record. The decision of the House of Lords in Smith v. Cooke is a useful illustration of this principle. The House declined to read a clause into a deed which was not there simply on the ground that it was a creditor's deed. A deed of assignment was executed by a firm in favour of creditors and recited the inability of the firm to pay its debts. The deed assigned the business to trustees on trust to pay the profits and proceeds rateably among the creditors. There was also a clause enabling the trustees immediately to pay or make arrangements with creditors for less than 30*l.*, but no resulting trust was expressed in favour of the assignors. Mr. Justice Kekewich declined to imply such a trust, but he was reversed by the Court of Appeal. His decision, however, has been restored by their lordships, and the assignment is held to have been absolute. No doubt the primary object of a creditor's deed is to pay the creditors and to reserve the surplus, if any, for the benefit of the debtors. But the usual character of the class of deed to which a particular deed belongs ought not to be allowed to influence its construction. There has been some diversity in the practice of conveyancers, but it is perfectly easy to insert a resulting trust, and indeed one is often inserted. We are inclined to think that the majority of Chancery lawyers would have agreed with the Court of Appeal, but there can be no question of the salutary effect of a rigid and literal adherence to the words in which contracts are expressed.

Low v. Bouverie, reported in the current number of the LAW JOURNAL, is a decision which will not bring comfort to mortgagees of trust property who make inquiries as to prior incumbrances on that property. The plaintiff lent money to a cestui que trust on the security of a life interest. He was authorised by the borrower to make inquiries of the trustees, of whom the defendant was one. He, therefore, asked specifically whether the life interest was in any way mortgaged. The reply was that a particular charge did exist, of which the nature and amount were specified. A further question was asked whether the trustee held any mortgage or knew of any incumbrance. The answer was that the trustee could not explain himself further, and that he held no mortgage but a certain charge for interest. Plaintiff thereupon advanced the money, which he lost, as it turned out that there were several other incumbrances. The lender then brought his action against the trustee, and Mr. Justice North made him liable for the loss sustained. It is clear that the decision went too far, as the liability could not exceed the surplus value of the life interest over the disclosed incumbrance. But the Court of Appeal reversed the decision, on the ground that it was no part of a trustee's duty to disclose incumbrances on the trust estate, and that there was no case of estoppel, fraud, breach of duty, or warranty. It is, no doubt, undesirable to make a trustee's position more onerous than it already is, but, at the same time, as the trustee must have forgotten and failed to look into his papers, there certainly was some culpable carelessness in his conduct. It is true there was no direct statement that there was no incumbrance, but it is questionable whether, with respect to facts which, if he did not at the moment know, he might have ascertained, a trustee or other person, if he undertakes to communicate knowledge, ought not to be bound to give accurate information. It is clear that Derry v. Peek largely affected the decision, because Lord Justice Lindley said: 'Until that case was decided, it was generally supposed to be settled in equity that liability was incurred by a person who carelessly, though honestly, made a false representation to another about to deal in a matter of business upon the faith of such representation.'

IT is not always an unmixed blessing to have one's land taken compulsorily for a public purpose. If the title is good, no doubt the price is also generally good; but if the title is only a ripening one, the transaction is apt to disclose blots which time was rapidly hiding. Gedye v. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works (reported in the current number of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS) is a very hard case of this character. Mr. Gedye bought a house in 1856, and his vendor stated that the title was derived under a long term of years, the commencement of which was unknown, but that in an old deed there was a recital that at Michaelmas, 1771, there were still 107 years to run. The vendor assigned all the estate and interest which he had to Gedye. No rent was ever paid by Gedye nor by his predecessors in title for many years. The commissioners requiring the house for the then projected Royal Courts, Gedye in 1866 sent an abstract of title to the solicitors of the commissioners. The solicitors discovered that the field on which the house and other adjoining houses were built were demised for a term of 300 years from June 24, 1578, at an annual rent of 5*l.* for the whole field. In these circumstances the commissioners declined to pay, and ultimately part of the money representing the value of the leasehold interest was paid to Gedye's assignee, and the remainder, the value of the reversion, was paid into Court to be accumulated for whoever should prove to be entitled. Twelve years after the expiration of the 300 years Gedye's assignee applied for payment of the fund in Court. His claim was rejected by Mr. Justice North, whose decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal. Lord Justice Lindley observed that the applicant had not brought himself within section 79 of the Lands Clauses Act, which enacts that, when lands are in possession of persons as owners, they shall be deemed to be lawfully entitled until the contrary be proved. Surely if ever a lost grant is to be presumed it should be so in a case like this. In every civilised country adverse possession for a long period confers title. But it now appears that a case is possible in which the longer the possession the worse is the title. A hundred years ago the reversion in this case would have been practically valueless. But a deed is unearthed, like an implement of the Stone Age. There was nothing to show, said the Lord Justice, that some rent had not been paid in respect of the adjoining property. Very likely not; but who can prove a universal negative? The non-payment of rent for a long period ought to confer a title even against a lessor. One would think that if a vendor, even if his title began with a recital that there was some ancient lease to which the property was believed to be subject, could prove undisturbed possession without payment of rent for 100 years, the title would be a tolerably safe one. The present decision, however, shows that the title may in such a case have been steadily deteriorating, and the misplaced zeal of an antiquarian solicitor may dispossess a family of estates which it was imagined had acquired an ancestral character.

A TRUSTEES' and Executors' Association is in the course of being formed. Its objects are the co-operation of trustees and executors of the United Kingdom with a view to remedy and, if possible, remove such liabilities and responsibilities of trusteeship as appear to press harshly and unjustly upon trustees, and to obtain such amendments of the existing law as may seem desirable. The association will assist, by advice, legal assistance, or money grants, cases of difficulty and hardship arising amongst its members, and a series of monthly meetings will be held by the association at which members will be invited to read papers and discuss matters connected with the objects of the association. 'A provisional committee of eight gentlemen' has been formed, and 'Mr. T. Bowden Green, Finsbury Circus, E.C., has been requested to act temporarily as secretary of the association.' So it has been stated in the Times, and we are not surprised that the unexpected failure of the Public Trustee Bill has called forth some action of this kind. That bill appears to have been cast far too much in the official mould no doubt, but some greater relief of trustees than has been provided by the Acts of 1888 and 1889 is very clearly called for. One reform, that of the moderate remuneration in some, though not in all, cases of trustees and executors, we have frequently advocated in these columns, and we hope that the new association will carefully consider it.

IF any donor of a general power of appointment has any dislike to the execution of the power by a general devise or bequest contained in the donee's will, he can prevent such an execution in two ways. He can require the donee to refer to the power, or he can forbid the appointment to some unlikely person. The former device is clearly settled to be a successful one, and the latter will take its rise from the case of In re Reynolds, Williams v. Mitchell (Notes of Cases, vol. 26, p. 1128). Certain freeholds were settled upon trust for such person or persons, except her present husband or any friend or relative of his, as M. should by deed or will appoint. M. survived her husband, and made a general devise of her realty to certain persons. Was the property subject to the power included in this devise? The power which the famous section 27 of the Wills Act provides shall be exercised by the general devise is one which the testator can exercise 'in any manner he may think proper.' Obviously this was not such a power, inasmuch as the wife might have thought proper to appoint to a friend or relative of her deceased husband, but she could not do so under the terms of the settlement, and Mr. Justice Kekewich held that the power had not been exercised. The ratio decidendi of this case suggests that any exception to the complete generality of the objects of the power would prevent the operation of section 27. If, for instance, the donee could appoint to anyone in the wide world except the Emperor of China, although it is not probable that he should wish to appoint to that distant monarch, still he would not have the absolute control over the power which he would have had if that one exception had not been made, and presumably section 27 would not apply.

THE Conveyancing and Law of Property Act Amendment Bill, by which Mr. Bolton and Mr. Warmington had proposed to mitigate the hardships to which lessees are occasionally exposed in connection with underletting, successfully passed the House of Commons, but met with a most singular reception in the House of Lords on the day before the prorogation. Lord Kimberley moved the second reading, which being agreed to, the House went at once into committee, and it seemed as if the bill was going to pass. When the third clause was reached, however, which provides that the common stipulation that the license to assign or underlet is not to be unreasonably withheld, is to be read into all leases, and that no fine is to be exacted for granting the license to assign or underlet, Lord Salisbury intervened, and though he did not deny the existence of grievances in connection with leases, some of which ought to be remedied, declared that the House had no time to consider adequately a bill which would introduce very sweeping changes. The Lord Chancellor having delivered himself of the oracular statement that 'it had appeared to him that certain provisions of the bill would be useful and might safely be passed, but that he agreed to a great extent with the view of the circumstances expressed by the noble marquis,' Lord Salisbury moved to report progress. The motion was agreed to, the House resumed, and the bill was lost from sheer lack of time—to be reintroduced, of course, and carried in the next session. Meanwhile, those who advise lessees will do well to see that the still uncommon provision that no fine be exacted for a license to assign or underlet be inserted in leases, while those who advise lessors will do well not to object to the provision, unless the lease should be for a longer term than twenty-one years.

DISCRETIONARY TRUSTS.

IN the third edition of his introduction to 'Conveyancing' (p. 304), Mr. Howard Elphinstone expressed his opinion that 'the free use of determinable life interests and discretionary trusts appears to be one of the most fertile fields for improvement in modern conveyancing.' Whether that improvement has taken place so as to satisfy that learned author it may be difficult to say, but certainly the use of that kind of trust is not infrequent where it is desired to save a man from himself and prevent him from anticipating his future income. In In re Stanger; Moorsom v. Tate, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 326, the testator left his residue to trustees upon trusts for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds upon trust after his widow's death to pay and transfer a twentieth part thereof to W. and H. on trust to pay and apply all or any portion of the income or corpus of the same in or towards the support or maintenance or otherwise for the benefit of their brother R. in such manner and proportions in every respect and at such times as they should deem most conducive to his welfare. R. died before the testator's widow, and a summons was taken out on her death to determine (inter alia) if the one-twentieth had so vested in R. that it passed to his legal personal representative. Long ago, in In re Sanderson's Will, 26 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 804; 3 K. & J. 497, a somewhat similar question arose. There a testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust yearly, and every year during his brother's life to pay and apply the whole or any part of the rents, issues, and profits of his real and personal estate and effects for and towards his maintenance, attendance, and comfort, giving him the use and enjoyment of his household goods and furniture, with gifts over. The brother was not altogether in a sound state of mind or capable of directing his own affairs, and a portion of the income was employed for his benefit. After his death the decision of the Court was required as to whom the surplus income belonged. Vice-Chancellor Page-Wood was of opinion that the brother was absolutely entitled to have everything necessary for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort, and that if during his lifetime he had filed a bill to have a sufficient part drawn out of that fund for those purposes, the trustees could not have claimed to exercise their own discretion in the matter, but, nevertheless, his representative could not claim the surplus of income not so applied. The Vice-Chancellor distinguished the class of cases to which the one before him belonged from another class that somewhat resembles it, though 'the precise line of demarcation is occasionally somewhat difficult to ascertain. If a gross sum be given, or if the whole income of the property be given, and a special purpose be assigned for that gift, this Court always regards the gift as absolute, and the purpose merely as the motive of the gift, and therefore holds that the gift takes effect as to the whole sum or the whole income, as the case may be.' Mr. Justice Chitty, in In re Stanger, held that the personal representative had no right to the fund. In the same volume of our current reports, p. 341, Mr. Justice Kekewich had another point to decide on the subject of this kind of trust in the case of In re Bullock; Good v. Lickorish. A testatrix directed certain persons to hold 15,000*l.* upon trust to invest and to pay the income to T. for life, or until he should become a bankrupt or a liquidating debtor, or cease to be entitled to receive such income, or any part thereof, for his own personal use or benefit by any means or for any purpose, and in the event of his becoming a bankrupt or a liquidating debtor or ceasing to be entitled as aforesaid, to pay to him or apply for his benefit during the remainder of his life, either the whole or so much and so much only of the said income as the trustees in their uncontrolled discretion thought fit, and subject as aforesaid the trustees were to hold capital and income as therein provided. After the testatrix's death interest was paid to T. up to July 16, 1890. In August, 1890, the trustees received notice that T. had charged all his interest in favour of certain solicitors. In October a receiving order was made against T., and the official receiver first claimed that T.'s interest should be paid to him, but afterwards withdrew that claim. The particular assignees urged that they were entitled to the income which had accrued before the date of their notice, as the assignment was not complete till then. Mr. Justice Kekewich held that as between assignor and assignees the charge was perfect when it was given, and therefore T.'s interest ceased from that moment. The object of the notice is to protect third parties, who can inquire of the trustees as to what notices the latter have hitherto received, before they take an assignment. It is not to destroy the rights of the assignees further than is necessary to protect third parties. Thus the real point for decision was, could the trustees in any way benefit T. or were the persons entitled in remainder the proper persons to receive the capital and income alone? In most of these discretionary trusts the other objects of the testator's or settlor's bounty are made objects of the discretionary trust as well as the person whose act has caused his direct interest to cease. Mr. Elphinstone, in the work referred to above (p. 303), speaks of the importance of extending 'the class of objects of the discretionary trust somewhat wide, for if, as sometimes happens, owing to misunderstanding the object of the clause, it is restricted to the husband, the intended wife, and his children by her, it may fail.' The learned writer proceeds to explain that, if the wife and children were to die, the husband would be the sole object of the trust, 'and the protection to him would partially fail, for even supposing that the trustees could, after he had assigned his life interest or had been made a bankrupt and had not received his discharge, safely apply any money for his benefit, still his assignees or the trustees in bankruptcy might be able to recover from him any moneys paid to him by the trustees.' Mr. Justice Kekewich held that, though T. was the sole object of the discretionary trust, the trustees could still apply income for his benefit. 'The assignment in this case,' said his lordship, 'called the discretionary power of the trustees into operation, and it would be a contradiction to hold that the power is inoperative just when it was intended to be exercised. What the trustees, in the exercise of their discretion, do not from time to time think fit to apply for the benefit of' T. 'goes, by the words of the will, to those entitled under the gift over; but they take only this overplus, and cannot claim what the trustees determine to apply.' The trustees could not, however, pay the income straight to T., as that 'would be to make a payment in derogation of the overriding title of the trustee in bankruptcy, and therefore a wrongful payment, which would be no discharge to the trustees of the will, and would render them accountable to the trustee in bankruptcy.'

ENGLISH CAUSES CÉLÈBRES.—IV.

REGINA v. MACNAGHTEN.*

THE criminal law of England contains no chapter more worthy of careful and critical study than that which deals with the 'Rules in Macnaghten's Case.'

The criminal responsibility of the insane has been determined by three distinct tests or criteria at different periods in the history of English law: (1) In Regina v. Arnold, 16 St. Tr. 764, it was actually laid down that in order to be exempted from punishment a man must be totally deprived of his understanding and memory, and as ignorant of what he is doing as an infant, a brute or a wild beast. This is sometimes called 'the wild-beast theory,' and the equivocal honour of having promulgated it belongs to Mr. Justice Tracy. It should be remembered, however, in fairness to this much-abused judge, that contemporary medical opinion practically recognised no other forms of mental disease than idiocy, mania, and dementia, and that contemporary asylum treatment speedily and surely converted hysteria, eccentricity, and other transient or trivial types of mental disorder into violent and incurable madness. (2) In Regina v. Bellingham, Lord Mansfield formulated a second test, known as 'the abstract right and wrong theory.' According to this new light, the proper subject for judicial inquiry was whether the prisoner, at the time of committing the act in question, was able to distinguish generally between right and wrong. The objections to this theory were decisive. No legal tribunal could determine with accuracy whether a prisoner did know the difference between right and wrong in the abstract; and even if this point could be satisfactorily settled, the question of his responsibility for the particular act under investigation was as far away as ever from being solved. The judges of the day found themselves face to face with a type of lunatic (unknown to their predecessors) whose general notions of right and wrong were perfectly clear and correct, and who, nevertheless, committed acts forbidden alike by morality and by law under a fixed belief that his conduct was not only pardonable but positively meritorious. It might well be that such persons deserved punishment, but it was certain that the existing law offered no guidance as to the principles on which their punishment should be based.* (3) The third, and (at least nominally) the existing criterion of responsibility in mental disease was adopted in 1843. In that year Daniel Macnaghten was tried before Chief Justice Tindal and a jury on a charge of having murdered Mr. Drummond, whom he shot by mistake for Sir Robert Peel, to whom the unfortunate gentleman was private secretary, and towards whom Macnaghten bore an insane grudge. The prisoner was defended with consummate ability by Mr. A. E. Cockburn, afterwards Attorney-General and Lord Chief Justice of England, and although he knew 'the difference between right and wrong,' and ought certainly to have been hanged according to the law laid down in Rex v. Bellingham, the jury returned a verdict of 'Not guilty.' Thereupon the House of Lords propounded certain questions to the judges as to the plea of insanity, and the answers of the judges to these questions are called the 'Rules in Macnaghten's Case.' In substance they are as follows: (a) Every man is presumed to be sane till the contrary is proved. (b) To establish a defence of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act in question the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing wrong. (c) An insane delusion is a defence to a criminal charge only when the imaginary facts would, if really existent, be a legal justification. The 'Rules in Macnaghten's Case' have had an eventful history. Hardly had they been formulated when they were literally riddled by medical criticism. Dr. Maudsley, in a very able, though somewhat truculent, essay on 'Responsibility in Mental Disease,' pointed out the absurdity of expecting a lunatic to reason sanely about his delusions. Authentic cases were recorded of persons whose volitional powers alone were affected, and who were yet undoubtedly insane. The French theory of moral insanity in all its Protean forms invaded England, and, in spite of judicial denunciation and opposition, steadily gained ground. Even the legal profession failed to defend the answers of the judges. Sir James Stephen, in a brilliant paper on the subject (now unhappily forgotten), treated them as Dr. Newman treated the Thirty-nine Articles. He tested 'their elasticity,' and argued that they might be so construed as to protect even the victims of 'irresistible impulses,' to whom, we may be sure, the grim school of Maule had no thoughts of showing mercy. Other critics, equally bold, contended that the rules were not really 'law,' but were simply obiter dicta, and that the only legal test of responsibility in mental disease was the charge of Lord Kenyon in R. v. Hadfield. American and Continental lawyers set the 'Rules in Macnaghten's Case' contemptuously aside. English juries defied them. Many English judges 'manipulated' them, and one, at least, boasted of having done so. The present position of the 'Rules in Macnaghten's Case' is somewhat peculiar. They are still nominally law. Some of the judges administer them. But the legal profession is now as keenly alive as the medical to their shortcomings—their absurd view of the nature of * 1843, 10 Cl. & F. 200; 1 C. & K. 130.

* 'Handbook of English Law' (Hodder & Stoughton), p. 128.

delusions, and their ostrichlike blindness to the existence of insanity of the will; they run counter to the current which Banks v. Goodfellow set flowing, and they will certainly not be incorporated in their entirety into our coming Code of Criminal Law.

(To be continued.)

Reviews.

FOA ON LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The Relationship of Landlord and Tenant. By Edgar Foa, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

Mr. Foa has struck out a line of his own, and in point of arrangement has produced a work of some originality. His method of treatment is to divide the subject into two parts, the first dealing with the creation of the relationship of landlord and tenant, and the second with its determination. Each part is again subdivided into two books, treating respectively of the modes and incidents of the creation of the tenancies and of the modes and incidents of their determination. The author does not claim for this classification that it is scientific, but adopts it rather on the ground of convenience, as presenting the whole subject in a symmetrical form. In point of style, the book is clear in expression and not unnecessarily prolix in statement. Every proposition is backed up by authority, and the work, as a whole, is entitled to be regarded as a compendium of the law upon the subject. The index is full and reliable, and in the Table of Cases references are given to all the reports together with the dates of the decisions. The volume is well printed and remarkably handy in size.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURT.

STOLEN GOODS AT AUCTION SALES.

A case of considerable importance to persons attending sales by auction came on for hearing at the Croydon Court on September 8, when Messrs. Bradbury & Co. (Lim.), of High Holborn, sought to recover from a bootmaker named Heathman, carrying on business at Aldershot, a sewing-machine, valued at nine guineas, which had come into the defendant's possession under peculiar circumstances. On September 6, 1889, the plaintiffs sold to one Dunn the machine in question on the hire-purchase system, to be paid for by weekly instalments of 2*s.* 6*d.* After paying 2*l.* 1*s.*, Dunn, on April 7 last, took the machine to Messrs. Aldridge's auction-rooms at South Norwood, where it was sold on the following night to the defendant Heathman. About a month since, Messrs. Bradbury, at the Croydon Petty Sessions, prosecuted Dunn for the theft of the machine, and he was sentenced to a month's imprisonment with hard labour. Heathman now brought the machine into Court, and explained that he had made Messrs. Aldridge co-defendants with him, because he considered they were responsible.—The judge: A very unwise step, for you are throwing good money after bad, having to pay their costs.—Mr. Frank Aldridge having stated that Dunn represented the machine to be his own property, the judge made an order on Heathman for its delivery to the plaintiff.—Defendant: Have I any claim against Messrs. Aldridge?—His Honour: I am not going to advise you. You will deliver the machine at once.—Defendant: It is very hard on me. When you go to a public sale and buy anything under the hammer you naturally think it is all right.—His Honour: I agree it is rather hard luck, but I have to administer the law. You have been very ill-advised in this matter.

CONSISTORY COURT OF LONDON.

FACULTY FOR THROWING CHURCHYARD INTO ROADWAY.

At a sitting of this Court held on August 17 in St. Paul's Cathedral, before Dr. Tristram, Q.C., Chancellor of the diocese of London, the case of St. Botolph, Aldgate, was heard. Mr. Atlay said that he appeared on behalf of the vicar and churchwardens of St. Botolph, Aldgate, and the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London. The matter had been before the Court on previous occasions. The Commissioners of Sewers were engaged in widening certain thoroughfares on which the churchyard of St. Botolph abutted, and they applied to the Court to grant a faculty under which certain portions of the churchyard might be thrown into the roadway. That faculty was issued on August 20, 1890. One of the most important points in the application related to the disposal of any human remains which might be found during the work. At the time of the application he was instructed that such remains would not be found in any considerable quantity, and one condition on which a faculty was asked for was that any bones which might be found should be removed, with due care and decency, to the City of London Cemetery at Ilford and there re-interred. The decision of the Court, however, as conveyed in the faculty, was that it would be better to reinter the bones in a vault in the churchyard. The works were proceeded with, and it was found that a very large quantity of human remains were in the ground, according to his information no fewer than thirty-nine coffins and 123 large chests being full of them. It was, therefore, felt that much difficulty would be encountered in the construction of a vault in any part of the churchyard which would be large enough to contain all these remains. It was feared, also, that the sinking of so large a vault would endanger the foundations of the church, and that in the course of the construction other human remains would necessarily be disturbed, and a difficulty would then arise as to their disposal. Accordingly, in February of the present year, a further application was made to the Court, and a faculty was granted by which, instead of ordering the erection of a vault outside the church, it was decreed that the remains should be deposited in the vaults underneath the church. In accordance with the terms of the amended faculty of February, 1891, the coffins had been removed, and had been placed in a vault on the west side of the church underneath the tower, and had then been sealed up, while the rest of the bones had been deposited in the crypt under the north aisle, but the communications with the vault and the rest of the church had not been sealed up. That was the present state of affairs, and this application was founded on apprehensions, which had been confirmed by Dr. Sedgwick Saunders, the medical officer of health for the City, as to the danger which might arise to the health of the worshippers and the neighbourhood generally from any effluvium which might emanate from these remains. —The Chancellor inquired whether the learned counsel was instructed that any effluvium which might escape could not be prevented by the use of concrete or cement, or something of the kind.—Mr. Atlay replied in the affirmative. He was, he said, in the difficulty of being unable to call Dr. Saunders, who had made a report on the subject, and Dr. Hofmann, of the Home Office, whose opinion was entitled to great weight, owing to their being away from town. —The Chancellor observed that the proposition laid before him would seem to involve the removal of all the bodies now lying in St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey. There was a difference with regard to the boxes of bones underneath the church and the boxes underneath the tower. The coffins under the tower were discovered in vaults, and for those vaults very large sums must have been paid by the relatives of the dead, while, in addition, the faculty which it was necessary to obtain for burial in the church would cost about 90*l*. The practice of the Court where, in case of alteration in a churchyard, it became necessary to remove a vault, was to grant a faculty ordering the construction of new vaults, and the removal of the remains under the direction of the family concerned. The application of the learned counsel was that not only the boxes of bones, but the coffins should be removed to the cemetery. There was no precedent for such an application. The Court had jurisdiction to order the removal of coffins from a consecrated churchyard to another consecrated churchyard on the application of the relations of the dead, but there was no case where the Court had ordered the removal without the application of the relatives. He understood, however, that there was some difficulty with regard to the Sewers' Act.—Mr. Atlay said that that was the case. That Act, in fact, seemed to him almost to contemplate the application he was making, for it seemed to give power to do what was asked subject to the consent of the Bishop of London.—The Chancellor said that the Bishop of London always acted through the Court in every such matter, and his attention was not called to the section of the Act on the previous occasion.—Mr. Atlay said that that was so. He was of opinion that the Court had full power to do what was then asked, and therefore he did not bring it forward. He contended that under that Act the Court had full power to do what he now asked, while the facts of the case rendered it highly desirable that that discretionary power should be exercised. He tendered as evidence in support of his case the report of Dr. Saunders, the medical officer of health of the City of London.—The Chancellor observed that he should like to hear one of the churchwardens, who, he understood, was a medical man, on the subject. He might mention that during the 19 years he had sat in that Court he had repeatedly heard it stated by medical men, and architects and surveyors as well, that if the flooring of a crypt were properly concreted, the concrete would prevent any effluvium from arising from the bodies beneath, and it struck him that the report of Dr. Saunders was at variance with that evidence. He should have liked to see Dr. Saunders, so as to ask him whether he could not devise some means of preventing effluvia arising. It occurred to him when he made the order that such a plan as he had referred to made it practically safe for him to take that course. He thought that the section of the Act of Parliament to which he had been referred gave him the power to order the removal of these bodies to a cemetery, but at the same time he doubted whether he should be within the rights of the Court in ordering the coffins found in the vaults to be so removed. The Court was in great difficulty with regard to that matter on the evidence presented to it, and he should like to hear Dr. Cotman's view on the subject.—Dr. Cotman then deposed that he was one of the churchwardens of St. Botolph, and was quite prepared to consent to the removal of the remains in question to Ilford Cemetery. He was constantly in the vaults while the remains were being removed. He observed no effluvium whatever from them. In fact they were perfectly dry bones. It did not occur to him that the least danger could possibly arise from their being placed in a vault under the church, especially if it were properly concreted or cemented. Such a step as that was not even necessary, for the bones were as clean and dry as any that might be seen in an anatomical museum. He was present also when forty-one coffins were taken out of a vault. He went into the vault before they were removed, and perceived no effluvium. The vault under the porch of the church was now bricked up, and the entrance completely covered with cement, which prevented any effluvium rising. He did not consider that there was any danger to the congregation from the boxes of bones being placed under the north aisle. He thought it desirable, however, that the coffins should be walled in. His evidence was general in its character. He was not a specialist.—The Chancellor intimated that he should like to hear further evidence on the subject. In the meantime it would be desirable to keep the coffins bricked up, and reserve leave to apply for a faculty to remove them. There was less difficulty in dealing with the bones than with the remains taken from the vaults.—Mr. Atlay asked whether the Court would grant a faculty for the removal of the boxes of bones, and adjourn the question of the removal of the other remains until October, so that Dr. Saunders might be heard.—The Chancellor said that he should require much more evidence than that, because he was bound to protect the persons whose friends had been buried there. If he was bound to order the removal of the coffins, then the Home Office would have to call upon the dean and chapter of St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey to remove all the coffins within those walls. He ordered the bones to be placed under the north aisle, with the sanction of the Commissioners of Sewers, and on the evidence that they were innocuous. He believed that he had power to order their removal to Ilford Cemetery, but he did not think it was necessary that he should make that order.—After some further argument, Dr. Coleman admitted that Dr. Hofmann had expressed the opinion that the remains ought to be removed to Ilford, and that concrete would not keep out effluvia. He, however, maintained that there was no effluvium; but Dr. Hofmann said that there must be. He did not think the removal necessary, but would not oppose it. —The Chancellor, in giving his decision, said that in this case the vicar and churchwardens and the vote of the vestry were in favour of the removal of these boxes to a consecrated portion of Ilford Cemetery, and Dr. Hofmann thought it would be advisable, and the Court had power to make the order. The Court was not satisfied with the evidence that it was essential to the health of the persons attending the church that the order should be made, and the proposition of Dr. Hofmann was at variance with the evidence of scientific medical men, architects, and surveyors, which had repeatedly been given during the past nineteen years upon the subject, and upon which the Court had felt it to be its duty to act. But the Court had jurisdiction by faculty to order the removal of bodies from one churchyard to another on the application of the relatives of the dead, and frequently made orders to that effect. In this case it was to be done by consent. The bodies which were buried in the churchyard were placed under the jurisdiction of the Court, and were entitled to its protection. He would communicate with the Bishop of London on the matter, and he thought that the Court would make an order, but the faculty must remain in the registry for fifteen days, and must not be acted upon during that period. That was in accordance with the practice, so as to give any person who might be dissatisfied with the order an opportunity of appearing before the Court. With regard to the coffins found in the vault he gave leave to move for a new trial. He adjourned the consideration of that question, observing that, in the interest of the public and of the families of the dead, he should require further evidence of the proposition which had been brought forward for the first time in any Ecclesiastical Court in the kingdom.

WRECK INQUIRY COURT.

COLLISION—SAILING VESSEL.

On September 2, 3, and 4, before Mr. R. H. B. Marsham, with Admiral Grant, Captain Ronaldson, and Captain Bragg as assessors, the case of The Godmunding and The Lorma was heard. This was an inquiry ordered by the Board of Trade into the circumstances of a collision which occurred off Dover at about midnight on July 30 last between the Norwegian schooner Lorma and the steamship Godmunding, of London. The sailing vessel immediately foundered, and seven of her crew were drowned.—Mr. M'Connell, in his opening statement, said that this collision occurred near the South Foreland, and unfortunately resulted in the loss of the whole of the crew of the sailing vessel, with the exception of her carpenter. The Godmunding was an iron screw steamship of 1,263 tons, built at Blyth in 1888, registered at the Port of London, and owned by Messrs. John Cory & Sons, of Cardiff. She left Sundswall, in Sweden, on July 24 last with a cargo of 1,600 tons of timber, and a crew of seventeen hands, bound for Bordeaux. The Lorma was a Norwegian schooner owned by Mr. Ole Kittlesen, of Grimstadt. She left Liverpool on July 24 last with a cargo of about 200 tons of salt, and a crew of eight hands all told, bound for Copenhagen. Both vessels proceeded on their respective voyages, and all went well until the evening of July 30, when they were in the Straits of Dover. The only survivor from the Lorma was below at the time of the casualty, and the evidence as to the circumstances of the collision would, therefore, be entirely from the crew of the steamer. The statement of the carpenter of the Lorma was that he went below at about 8.15, and that his ship was then under full sail beating up channel, and that the side-lights were in their places and burning properly. At about 11.45 P.M. he was awakened by hearing the mate hailing a steamer, and the collision occurred almost immediately afterwards. He at once ran on deck, when he found his vessel was sinking, and she went down head foremost. He kept himself afloat by clinging to some wreckage, and was ultimately picked up by a fishing boat. The rest of the crew were all drowned. Stated generally, the account given by the witnesses from the steamer was that they saw the green light of a sailing vessel at a distance of a mile or a mile and a half, and that when the two ships were within four or five lengths of each other the Lorma shut in her green and opened her red light. The helm of the Godmunding was starboarded and her speed slackened, but the collision took place, with the consequences stated.—Johannes Jensen, the carpenter of the Lorma, said that he was awakened shortly before midnight by hearing the mate shouting 'Steamer, ahoy,' and very shortly afterwards he felt the shock of the collision. He at once rushed on deck, but the Lorma foundered almost immediately. He was in the water clinging to a boom for about two hours, and was ultimately picked up by a boat, which landed him at Dover.—By Mr. Kennedy: The whole of the schooner's sails were set, including the royals and fore and aft sails. The side lights were carried seven or eight feet forward of the mizzen rigging on stanchions which projected about two feet and a half outside the rail or bulwarks. There were no compartments in the ship, only one long hold. When he reached the deck after the collision he saw the steamer going away from them, and the bows of the Lorma were then under water. He did not then see anything of the other members of the crew.—By Mr. Pyke: No part of the sails interfered in any way with the side lights being seen from ahead.—Captain Jones, the master of the Godmunding, said that they passed the South Foreland shortly before midnight on July 30. The wind was north-west, and it was a good night for seeing lights. At about five or ten minutes before twelve he went below to the chart room, leaving the chief officer in charge. He returned to the bridge shortly before twelve, when the chief mate called his attention to a green light about a point on the starboard bow and from half to three-quarters of a mile distant. It was the light of a sailing vessel, which proved to be the Lorma. The mate also said that he had starboarded a point before witness returned to the bridge. The two vessels were then in position to pass clear, starboard side to starboard side, but when the Lorma was only three or four ships' lengths distant she suddenly shut in her green and opened her red light. Witness immediately ordered the steamer's helm hard a starboard and put the engines full speed astern, but a collision was then inevitable. The schooner forced herself right under the steamer's bows. He heard no hailing before the collision. He at once ordered the boats to be got out and two boats were lowered into the water within a few minutes.—Edwin Bevan, the chief officer of the Godmunding, who corroborated the evidence of the captain, said that when he first saw the green light of the Lorma it was a mile and a half or two miles distant. The collision was entirely due to the sailing vessel improperly porting.—The Court found that the Godmunding was supplied with boats and life-saving apparatus in compliance with the Life-Saving Appliances Act, 1888. The Godmunding complied with article 3 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea, as her lights were good and sufficient, but she did not comply with either article 17 or 18, in respect to article 17 by not keeping out of the way of the sailing ship, and with regard to article 18 by not stopping or slackening her speed and reversing her engines before the collision was inevitable. The Lorma did comply with article 6, and the Court could only conjecture from the evidence before it that she did not alter her course, and that if she did it was only at the last moment. The master of the Godmunding having stated that he saw the Lorma when from half to three-quarters of a mile distant, and the look-out man having reported her light fifteen minutes before the collision, it could not be said that a good and proper look-out was not kept on board the steamer. The cause of the collision was the unseamanlike handling of the Godmunding in not taking proper precautions to avoid the Lorma when it was seen that her green light was not altering its bearing. The Court was satisfied that all reasonable efforts were made by those on board the Godmunding to save life. The Godmunding was not navigated with proper and seamanlike care. The Court found the master of the Godmunding in default, and suspended his certificate for six months. Although under the circumstances the Court did not deal with the chief mate's certificate, it considered that he should be censured for not having taken earlier steps to keep out of the way of the Lorma when he was in charge of the steamer.—In answer to Mr. Pritchard, Mr. Marsham said that the Court would recommend the Board of Trade to grant the captain a first mate's certificate during the period of suspension.—Mr. M'Connell appeared for the Solicitor to the Board of Trade (Mr. W. Murton); Mr. W. R. Kennedy, Q.C., and Mr. A. Pritchard for the owners, master, and mate of the Godmunding; and Mr. L. E. Pyke for the owners of the Lorma.

THE SHARP v. WAKEFIELD CASE.—It is understood that Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. James Cropper have obtained subscriptions from temperance friends more than enough to meet the costs incurred by the justices in defending their decision in this celebrated licensing case. A circular has been forwarded to the subscribers congratulating them on the fact that the Sharp v. Wakefield decision has established once for all the legality of magisterial discretion.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

THE following correspondence has appeared in the Times:—

Sir,—Why Lord Grimthorpe should think it necessary to introduce so many personalities into a discussion on capital punishment I cannot understand. He accuses Mr. Tallack of getting angry, and in this reminds me of Sir Anthony Absolute with his 'None of your passion, sir, none of your violence!' and 'So, you will fly out; why can't you keep cool like me?' All the passion is on Lord Grimthorpe's side, and, to use his elegant phrase, he tries to give 'one for his nob' to all whose names have been mentioned, both living and dead. To sneer at my late father, as eminent a man as himself, quite as well acquainted with the subject, and, I may say, no more given to forcible language than his lordship, is now, unhappily, a safe amusement for him. With the suavity of his manners and the judicial calm of his assertions he is, of course, well qualified to criticise the manners of those who have at any time vigorously opposed his antique opinions. There is no reason that I know of why anyone, unless, indeed, it be Lord Grimthorpe, should not be able to discuss the question without personalities, flippancy, or anger.

The opponents of capital punishment object to it, I take it, on four grounds:—

1. That it does not deter from murder.
2. That through taking human life it diminishes rather than increases the belief as to its sanctity.
3. That the prospect of the death penalty often prevents the (perhaps illogical) juryman from convicting when a conviction would be just.
4. That in some cases the terrible calamity of the execution of an innocent person has taken place.

Surely all these points are capable of dispassionate argument by anyone but Lord Grimthorpe.

Yours, &c., JOHN A. BRIGHT.

One Ash, Rochdale: Sept. 6.

Sir,—Having had during my past life to prepare five men within three years for execution, I wish to protest against that false sentimentality which would represent them as having been 'hurried into eternity unprepared,' and which, in the words of the late Lord John Russell, quoted by Mr. Tallack in the Times of to-day, would plead for the commutation of the murderer's sentence into penal servitude for life 'in order that time and opportunity may be given them to turn repentant to the Throne of Mercy.'

Not counting the time between committal and sentence, often extending over months rather than weeks—time spent in solitude, and with such visits and books as are favourable to calm reflection—murderers after condemnation have more than three times the notice of approaching death that the average ordinary mortals have. During the whole of that time every means of grace is afforded them in the religion they profess, and, so far as preparation for eternity is concerned, they are felices opportunitate mortis. The experience of all the prison chaplains I have ever known has corresponded with mine, that such men usually die with as much true penitence as their natures, morally and intellectually disordered, are capable of feeling, and with good hopes surely grounded of having found forgiveness. On the other hand, to prolong their lives, henceforth useless to society, amidst the association of cold-blooded criminals and perfunctory warders, is to damn their souls to gradual petrifaction and to the hardness of the nether millstone, and to put them, humanly speaking, outside the probabilities of repentance whilst on earth. Yours obediently,

Sidcup: Sept. 4. AN EX-CHAPLAIN OF PRISONS.

Sir,—If Mr. J. A. Bright really meant to help Mr. Tallack, who justly complains of being left in the lurch, he had better have tried to supply some proofs of what he 'takes to be the four grounds' of the Murderers' Protection Society—if there is one surviving. Stating them again at the end of a controversy is doing less than nothing; and the 'gaol chaplain' has completely disposed of one of them.

But just for curiosity I should like to know what authority they profess to have for their favourite bit of cant, 'the sanctity of human life,' except the very one which was intended to protect it for all time by condemning murderers to execution. Everybody knows what murder means, and nobody knows what such phrases mean as 'the sanctity of human life.'

It was Mr. Tallack, and not I, who introduced Mr. J. A. Bright's father; and I am not aware that men acquire either sanctity or authority in controversies by dying. I have not the least objection to his saying that 'John Bright was no more given to forcible language than I am;' and certainly he was no less, nor distributed his forces over a smaller area. Nor do I see that his sagacity or farsightedness were proved by his tardy discovery that he had been for years exerting his forces in supporting the worship of a false idol, though I respect him for confessing it while a good many of his friends stuck to their Dagon, and want to set him on legs once more.

I promised to reply no more to Mr. Tallack, and will keep my promise, especially as he had nothing to say beyond quoting a couple of unmeaning phrases, and he seems, after all, to think I have done well in following my own judgment here instead of that of a set of noodles who expected to be my 'popes' at my expense and not theirs.

Yours obediently,

St. Albans: September 8. GRIMTHORPE.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ELEMENTARY Education Act, 1891 (The). Introduction and Notes. By A. Ernest Steinthal, Barrister-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.); Manchester: Meredith, Ray & Littler.

Index to the Statutory Rules and Orders in Force on January 1, 1891. Published by Authority. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode. Edinburgh and Glasgow: John Menzies & Co. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co. 1891.

Treatise on the Power and Duty of an Arbitrator, and the Law of Submission and Awards (A). With an Appendix of Forms and of the Statutes relating to Arbitration. By Francis Russell, M.A., and Herbert Russell, B.A., Barristers-at-Law. London: Stevens & Son (Lim.); Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.).

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. CHARLES GREENWOOD, solicitor (firm of Nye, Greenwood & Moreton), vestry clerk of the parish of Christ Church, Southwark, steward of the manor of Old Paris Garden, was on September 3 elected Steward to Edward Edwards Charity (admitted under a scheme of the Charity Commissioners), the post having recently become vacant by the death of Mr. Ferdinand Grat.

Mr. Arthur Wightman (of the firm of Broomhead, Wightman & Moore), of Sheffield, has been elected President of the Sheffield District Incorporated Law Society. Mr. Wightman was admitted in 1865.

Mr. Walter Storey (of the firm of Storey, Bedford & Willans), of Halifax, has been elected President of the Halifax Incorporated Law Society. Mr. Storey was admitted in 1863.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM SEPTEMBER 14 TO SEPTEMBER 19.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Sept. 14	Sept. 15	Sept. 16	Sept. 17	Sept. 18	Sept. 19
22	Judge Harington	—	—	—	Stourbridge	Dudley	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

OBITUARY.

BY the death of the RIGHT HON. JOHN INGLIS, of Glencorse, Lord Justice-General, which took place on Wednesday morning at Loganbank, his country residence, Scotland has lost her greatest lawyer and most distinguished judge. The physical strength of the right hon. gentleman had been evidently failing for some months, though his mental force was abated in no degree; and at his advanced age he could not have been expected to continue at his post much longer. It was only, however, after the Court rose for the summer vacation in July that his debility assumed a serious form. He may, therefore, be said to have died in harness, as it was his wish to do. John Inglis was born in 1810 at Edinburgh, where his father, the Rev. Dr. Inglis, was minister of Old Greyfriars parish. He received his school education at Edinburgh High School, whence he passed to the University of Glasgow. From Glasgow he went, as a Snell Exhibitioner, to Balliol College, Oxford, and there he graduated B.A. in 1834 and M.A. in 1837. In the meantime he had been called to the Scottish bar in 1835, and there he very soon made his mark. His rise was unusually rapid; and while still a young man, comparatively, he took rank as senior counsel and appeared in most of the important cases in the Court of Session. In the short-lived Derby Administration of 1852 he was first Solicitor-General and afterwards Lord Advocate; but he did not at that time enter Parliament. When the Conservatives returned to power in 1858 Mr. Inglis resumed the post of Lord Advocate, and was returned to the House of Commons as member for the borough of Stamford. In the interval his position as head of the bar had been recognised by his brethren electing him to the honourable office of Dean of the Faculty of Advocates; and it was as Dean that he made his memorable defence of Madeline Smith, who was charged with the murder of L'Angelier—a defence which secured her acquittal on a verdict of 'Not proven.' Another case by which he added to his reputation was that in which Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston sued a Western firm for alleged plagiarisms from their maps. The strong point made by Mr. Inglis, who was counsel for the Johnstons, was that the defendants had copied the errors in the maps of his clients. 'There are landsharks,' he said, 'and there are watersharks; but the defendants are at once land and water sharks, for they make themselves free to appropriate both elements.' The most important legislative achievement of Lord Advocate Inglis was the passing of the Scottish Universities Act of 1858, which gave these universities a new constitution and started them on a career of unexampled prosperity. The Act, however, deprived the town council of Edinburgh of the patronage of a number of chairs in the university, and this brought on the Lord Advocate a good deal of ill-will from a section of the citizens. His elevation to the bench as Lord Justice Clerk before the end of the same year gave Mr. Inglis further opportunities of serving the universities. As chairman of the executive commission appointed under his own Act, he devoted all his leisure during four years to the task of bringing the new system into working order. It is recorded of him that he presided at every meeting of the commission without exception; and not an ordinance was issued which did not bear the impress of his firm hand and mature judgment. In 1859 he was made a Privy Councillor, and in the same year he received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford.

RESIGNATION OF A COUNTY COURT JUDGE.—Judge Theophilus Hastings Ingham, who since 1847 has been County Court judge for the district including the whole of Cumberland and Westmoreland and parts of Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Northumberland, has sent in his resignation to the Lord Chancellor. Called to the bar of the Inner Temple in 1834, he practised on the Northern Circuit, especially in Lancashire, until the establishment of County Courts in 1847, when he was appointed one of the sixty judges to whom the various districts were assigned. Of these sixty he is the only survivor, and, having attained the age of eighty-three, he is now determined to retire. Judge Ingham qualified as a magistrate of the West Riding in 1838, and he is also justice of the peace for Cumberland and Westmoreland. In 1842 he took an active part in suppressing the riots at Skipton. He subsequently identified himself closely with agricultural and educational progress in the district of the West Riding in which he lived. As a County Court judge he has remained active at his post until almost the very end of his long term of office, and his judgments have seldom, if ever, been reversed on appeal. His resignation will take effect on the 30th of this month, and he will be entitled to a pension of 1,000*l.* a year.

MARRIAGES.

On Aug. 26, at St. Augustine's, Ramsgate, Robert Cunningham, eldest son of the late General W. T. Williams, Madras Army, to Mabel, daughter of the late William Clarke, Barrister-at-Law.

On Aug. 27, at St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater, Alfred Edward, son of the late A. Sacksen, of Königsberg, to Olive, eldest daughter of Henry Bennett, Solicitor, late of Rus in Urbe, county Galway.

On Sept. 2, at St. Andrew's, Much Hadham, Herts, Charles Augustin Prideaux, Barrister of the Western Circuit and of the Middle Temple, only child of Charles Greville Prideaux, Q.C., Recorder of Bristol, to Helen Cardozo, second daughter of the late Philip Vincent, Surgeon, Camborne.

DEATHS.

On July 25, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Woodhouse Marlesford, Campbelltown, N.S.W., Penelope Mary, widow of the late Henry Bingham, Commissioner of Crown Lands, N.S.W., and late surviving daughter of Thomas Checkley, Solicitor, of Mallow, Ireland, in her 93rd year.

On Sept. 1, at 32 Plas Turton Gardens, Cardiff, Algernon Morton Smith, son of the late A. B. Smith, of Melksham, Wilts, Solicitor, aged 31 years.

On Sept. 1, at Folkestone Road, Dover, Charles Speke Forbes-Mosse, Esq., younger son of B. Forbes-Mosse, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, aged 26 years.

On Sept. 1, at 19 Emperor's Gate, South Kensington, Frederick Carpenter, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, in his 44th year.

On Sept. 3, at Iron Acton, Gloucestershire, Henry Carpenter Ray, Esq., Justice of the Peace for the county, aged 68 years.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE appointment of Mr. John Rose as a Metropolitan Police Magistrate in succession to the late Mr. Partridge cannot fail to meet with the approval of the profession. Mr. Rose, who was called to the bar in June, 1868, was a member of the Oxford Circuit, where he had a very fair practice. He has always had the reputation of being a sound lawyer, and, as he possesses a good temper and very genial manners, there is every reason to expect that he will prove a great acquisition to the metropolitan bench. Mr. Rose was for some years a reporter on the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS.

THE sudden death of Judge Powell, Q.C., on Tuesday last, will be a source of great regret to many members of the bar. Upon the appointment of Mr. Huddleston, Q.C., to the bench, Mr. Powell became leader of the Oxford Circuit, a position which he retained for several years. He was very popular at the bar, and considerable surprise was evinced at his acceptance of a County Court judgeship. For some years Judge Powell had been in failing health, and had frequently had to avail himself of the services of deputies. He was a bencher of the Middle Temple, and at one time represented Gloucester in the Liberal interest.

A FEW weeks ago we published the return of the salaries and fees of the law officers of the Crown for England, Ireland and Scotland. From this it appeared that the official income of the Attorney-General was about 10,000*l.* or 11,000*l.* a year and that of the Solicitor-General about 9,000*l.* a year. It has not infrequently been suggested of late that the law officers of the Crown should give up private practice and devote themselves exclusively to the service of the Government. To that course weighty objections have been taken. It would involve a temporary separation from the other members of the profession, and the position would not tempt the best man to accept the office of Attorney- or Solicitor-General, as he would run great risk of sacrificing his professional income and status for an uncertainty. If a party were in power for two or three years, the law officer's private business would probably have vanished, and he might almost have to begin life again. It has also been proposed that the Attorney-General should be a member of the Cabinet, as he is usually in the colonies. Lawyers, however, do not enjoy the universal popularity in the Legislature which their merits deserve, and most Prime Ministers would think that one lawyer in the Cabinet is enough. Or the office of law adviser might be made non-political. To that there are insuperable objections, and it would be incompatible with our present party system. In the main the existing system probably works best. Anomalous circumstances may now and then arise out of the double capacity of Government official and private counsel, and an individual may be guilty of indiscretion. But such cases have not been frequent, and the public and the profession are too severe critics to allow such instances to pass without animadversion.

THE question of salaries, however, is of a totally different character. The two English law officers are by far the highest paid of all our public servants. A man gains rather than loses in the matter of private practice by being Attorney- or Solicitor-General. Yet the public goes on contentedly paying 10,000*l.* a year for part, perhaps only half, of a man's time, or less. No man is worth the money. The work of a foreign secretary, especially when, like Lord Salisbury, he is also Prime Minister, is probably a good deal greater, and is certainly of vastly more importance than that of a law officer; his expenses are far greater, but his salary is only about half, whilst that of the President of the Board of Trade, or of the Local Government Board, both Cabinet ministers, is only one-quarter of the Attorney-General's salary. If the official incomes of these two gentlemen were reduced to 3,000*l.* and 4,000*l.* respectively the best man would still be glad to take the post. Such an economy would also make a judgeship relatively a better thing than it is at present. The abolition of the Chief Justiceship of the Common Pleas and the Chief Barony of the Exchequer tended to produce a dead uniformity on the bench. If this change were effected, and an additional 1,000*l.* a year given to each of the Lords Justices, especially if, as we have on former occasions suggested, the latter were made life peers, men in the largest practice would be more willing to sit on the bench than they are at present. Scotch and Irish law officers habitually accept judgeships; their English brethren rarely accept puisne judgeships. The country loses when men of conspicuous learning and ability are still at the bar, when so many men not their equals wear the judicial ermine.

The public conscience is far more alive than formerly to cases of cruelty to children, and it is very desirable that magistrates should realise the indignation caused by this unfortunately far too common offence. A strongly-worded protest appears in last Saturday's issue of an influential 'lady's periodical' against what seems to the editor the inadequate sentence recently passed by a magistrate for an unusually refined and fiendish act of cruelty. A father who could dangle his three-year-old child out of a three-story window till it was almost crazy with terror, and a mother who could thrash the child when dragged back into the room, deserved a very much heavier punishment than the one month's imprisonment which was inflicted. Notwithstanding the explanation (familiar to lawyers though not so intelligible to laymen) why offences against property are more severely punished than those against the person, it is clear that certain classes of personal offences, and notably cruelty to children, should have exceptional treatment. Public opinion, supported by the Home Secretary, is probably sufficient to enforce this distinction, but if such is not found to be the case, legislation should provide a remedy without any unnecessary delay.

A few days before the Long Vacation the Court of Appeal decided two interesting questions in bankruptcy law, and laid down useful guiding principles for cases of a like character. In the case of In re Browne and Wingrove the registrar went ingeniously wrong with respect to the proof of a debt payable by instalments bearing interest. Mr. Gustav Ador had advanced 1,000*l.* to the bankrupts, which was to be repaid by instalments extending over ten years, with 6 per cent. interest on the amounts from time to time due. He simply sent in a proof for the 1,000*l.* as a debt then due, without any claim for future interest. The trustee, acting as he thought under rule 21 of the Bankruptcy Rules, by which a proof cannot be allowed for interest subsequent to the order of adjudication, even though it is made payable by the contract, deducted a rebate of 5 per cent. per annum from the 1,000*l.*, and, as the debt was not to be finally extinguished till 1895, the rebate amounted to 210*l.* The trustee accordingly, and subsequently the registrar, refused to allow proof for more than 790*l.* The decision was on the face of it wrong, as no part of the proof was for interest at all, and the rule only applies to future interest. Lord Justice Lindley, in reversing the registrar's decision, gave an interesting historical résumé of the various changes in the law with respect to the proof of interest on debts and of liabilities as distinguished from debts, and laid down the principles applicable to such cases. First, he said, the debt should be proved as a present debt, and rule 21 applied to the dividend payable on it; then the liability to pay interest should be valued and dividend allowed without rebate on that value. If by contract the debt bears interest at 5 per cent., the rebate and the interest would neutralise each other, and the result would be the same as if the debt had been admitted to proof without interest. If the interest were more or less than 5 per cent. there would be no such resulting equation, and the figures would have to be worked out. He could not say whether it was intended to alter by the rules the old law by which a debt payable at a future date with interest was to be treated as presently payable without interest; but it could never have been intended first to strike out the interest and then to reduce the principal by application of rule 21.

In the other case, In re Rogers, ex parte Holland & Hannen, Mr. Justice Cave showed a like desire to sweep everything possible into the estate. Holland & Hannen had recovered judgment against the bankrupt for 633*l.* Shortly afterwards, on April 24, 1890, the bankrupt's solicitors informed Holland & Hannen's solicitor that a friend had provided a sum of money to pay the bankrupt's pressing creditors. The solicitor had notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the debtor shortly before this date. In the result, the bankrupt's friend paid the appellants' solicitor 200*l.* for the debt and 70*l.* costs, on the condition that Holland & Hannen would not take further proceedings against the debtor for sixty days unless bankruptcy proceedings should intervene. Two or three weeks afterwards a petition was filed against the debtor, who was adjudicated bankrupt in October, a few days after his death. The learned judge made an order that Holland & Hannen should repay the trustees the 270*l.*, on the ground that it was the property of the debtor. Lord Justice Lindley, however, pointed out that the trustee was endeavouring in part to affirm and in part to repudiate the transaction. He wanted to claim the money and at the same time to disregard the conditions on which it had been advanced. There was no doubt that the bankrupt's friend could have obtained an injunction restraining the bankrupt or his trustee from applying any part of the money so advanced for any other purpose than that for which it was given—viz. the payment of pressing creditors.

What may without disrespect be called 'debating society questions' always come to the front in the Long Vacation, and the Times has devoted much space to characteristic letters of Lord Grimthorpe, Mr. Tallack, and others on the subject of capital punishment. Opinion in a case like this is largely governed by sentiment, and particular instances do not prove much one way or another. The 'bit of rope' operated as a salutary deterrent on the Australian convict mentioned by 'D.' in the Times, but Mr. Tallack's story of the man who was hanged for theft in Ireland, and, after being suspended for six minutes, was cut down and on his way home committed another theft is as strong on the other side, unless, indeed, it be regarded as an exceptional illustration of Hibernian humour. Many, however, would be in favour of giving the judge greater latitude in the matter of sentences, either by a division of murder into first and second degrees, as in continental countries, or in the form of a general discretion. It would be a great relief to Home Secretaries if such a discretion were given, and there certainly are cases of undoubted murder in a technical sense which ought to be visited with something less than capital punishment. There would, too, in such circumstances, be less unwillingness to convict on the part of juries. Sentiment is inexplicable, and it is not every one who would sympathise with the Home Secretary who a few years ago commuted the capital punishment in the case of a man who, for the sake of the insurance money, which was many times the value of the property, recklessly set fire to his premises and burnt several of his children to death.

THE case of Rockett v. Clippingdale, which was recently before the Court of Appeal, turned upon the proper application of the principles laid down by the House of Lords in Garnett v. Bradley, 48 Law J. Rep. Exch. 186. In an action for damages in respect of a collision between two vessels the defendant denied the alleged damage, but in the alternative paid 50*l.* into Court to cover any damage which might be proved. The action was then referred to an official referee, who found for the plaintiff for 50*l.* beyond the amount paid into Court, but refused to allow him the costs of the action on the ground that by reason of section 9 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act he had no power to do so. That section enacts that a person taking proceedings in a Superior Court which he might have taken in a County Court shall not be entitled to costs unless the judge certifies that it was a proper cause to be tried in a Superior Court, and section 3 gives the County Courts Admiralty jurisdiction where the amount claimed does not exceed 300*l.* A Divisional Court having held that the official referee was wrong in refusing to allow the plaintiff his costs, the Court of Appeal affirmed the decision, upon the ground that section 9 of the Act of 1868, being applicable to all suitors, and not being limited to any particular class of litigants, was, according to the decision in Garnett v. Bradley, impliedly repealed by Order LV., rule 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1875, for which Order LXV., rule 1, has since been substituted, and that, therefore, the referee had a discretion as to costs which, under the circumstances of the case, ought to have been exercised in the plaintiff's favour.

No less than five statutes relating to education have been passed in the late session. The Free Education Bill and the Schools for Science and Art Bill received the royal assent on the day of the prorogation. The Education Acts passed before that date are the Technical Instruction Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 4), the Army Schools Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 16), and the Reformatory and Industrial Schools Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 23). By the Technical Instruction Act local authorities are empowered to provide for technical instruction in schools outside their own districts; by the Army Schools Act army schools are to be deemed public elementary schools within the meaning of any schemes which give to such schools the benefit of educational endowments; and by the Reformatory and Industrial Schools Act children detained in such schools may be apprenticed or allowed to emigrate, notwithstanding that their period of detention has not expired. This period is, in the case of reformatory schools, not less than two years (see Reformatory Schools Act, 1866, s. 14), and in the case of industrial schools such period, not extending beyond the age of sixteen, as to the justices having cognisance of the case seems proper for the teaching and training of the child dealt with (see sections 14–18 of the Industrial Schools Act, 1866). This statute may turn out to be a very beneficial one.

THE almost unprecedented lateness of the harvest this year must cause considerable delay in the full exercise of sporting rights, and those who have bound themselves to pay handsome rents for the exercise of such rights during short terms will find themselves considerable sufferers. What are the ordinary rights of the landlord, the agricultural tenant, and the shooting tenant respectively? Under no circumstances whatsoever would the shooting tenant be entitled to any reduction of rent on the ground of partial failure of consideration, and under no circumstances whatever would the agricultural tenant be bound to allow his harvest to be interfered with. In many cases the lease of the sporting rights very properly binds either the landlord or the shooting tenant to make full compensation to the agricultural tenant for damage done to standing crops by the shooting tenant, while in some cases a milder stipulation is used to the effect that the shooting tenant will do (as Woodfall puts it, see 14th edit. at p. 976) 'no more damage to the land or the crops thereon growing than what necessarily happens in killing, taking, and following the game,' a stipulation framed in the spirit of the existing law, it having been ruled at Nisi Prius (see Hilton v. Green, 2 F. & F. 821) that a grant of shooting rights does not allow the grantee to tread down crops in an unreasonable manner. All things considered, it might be reasonable to provide in a lease of sporting rights for an abatement of rent to meet such a late harvest as that of the present year, but, as we have said, without such express provision, the full rent would undoubtedly be payable, even though, as the poet puts it, 'the summer and autumn have been so wet, that in winter the corn would be growing yet.'

CAPITAL AND INCOME.

LORD JUSTICE KAY, whilst a judge of first instance, laid down in the case of In re Foster; Lloyd v. Carr, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 175; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 629, what may be a useful rule for those who have to determine the relative rights of a tenant-for-life and remainderman, where the capital and interest have to be apportioned. A testator had given his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds in trust for his widow for life with remainder to certain other persons absolutely, and had thereby given the trustees powers to postpone the sale and to invest on real securities. After his death the trustees invested a sum of 7,535*l.*, part of the residuary estate, upon mortgage of a freehold property with interest at 5 per cent. The trustees some years after entered into possession of the mortgaged property, and paid the rents to the widow. In three particular years the rents exceeded the interest, but, as a rule, fell below it; so that at the widow's death nearly 3,400*l.* was due to her for deficient interest. Soon after her death the property was sold for 7,005*l.*, and it was stated that nothing further could be recovered from the mortgagor. His lordship directed that the loss of tenant-for-life and remaindermen should be apportioned in the following way: 'Treat the capital moneys which have been produced by the sale, and all the moneys received by the tenant-for-life, as the fund recovered from the mortgagees. Add them together. Then divide the total sum in this way: Estimate how much the tenant-for-life would have received if the mortgage interest had been regularly paid, deducting income-tax; then take the capital sum which the remaindermen would be entitled to on the supposition that the capital of the mortgage debt had been fully paid; then divide the total between the tenant-for-life and the remaindermen in the proportion of these two amounts, which each ought to have received; and in making that division the tenant-for-life should give credit for what she has actually received.' The remaindermen, of course, were entitled to add to the principal interest at 5 per cent. per annum from the widow's death, and the widow's estate had to give credit for what she had actually received. The widow's estate was rather fortunate by this arrangement, as if the money had been invested on some security which only yielded 3 per cent., probably the capital would not have suffered. However, the trustees were allowed to invest on mortgages by the terms of the will, and there is no rule of law or equity which says that trust moneys must be invested at a rate of interest lower than 5 per cent. The tenant-for-life, it would seem, could not charge interest on the 3,400*l.* in arrear. Sometimes it is sought to make the tenant-for-life liable to form a capital fund out of any high interest which he may be receiving, and add that fund to the original capital. For instance, in In re Sheldon; Nixon v. Sheldon, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 25; L. R. 39 Chanc. Div. 50, a testator having bequeathed his residuary estate in trust as to parts thereof for his sisters for their lives with remainders over, empowered his trustees to continue all or any part of his personalty in the state or investment in which it was at his death, 'however doubtful or hazardous or limited the description or nature of the property or investment might be, or otherwise to call in and compel payment of the same,' and invest in certain investments of which a limited range was given. Part of the testator's property consisted of speculative investments not within the range authorised by the testator, though not of a wasting nature. In an administration action the principal question argued on further consideration was whether the tenants-for-life were entitled to receive in specie the income of those unauthorised securities which were certified to be proper to be retained. The judgment of Mr. Justice North was short and to the point. 'I do not see,' he said, 'how I can direct the retainer of the existing investments, and at the same time hold that the tenants-for-life are not entitled to receive the whole of the income produced by these investments. The securities are not of a wasting character, and I cannot, therefore, see anything to prevent the tenants-for-life from receiving the whole income of the securities which are retained.' The securities of a wasting character there referred to are, of course, leaseholds and terminal annuities, which, unless the contrary is directed by the testator, must be converted. In Porter v. Baddeley, L. R. 5 Chanc. Div. 542, a testator, having left some of his property to trustees in trust for his widow for life with remainder over, authorised the trustees to allow all the moneys which he possessed to remain in the state of investment in which they should find the same at his decease. Part of the estate consisted of long annuities, expiring in 1885, and Vice-Chancellor Hall decided that the power given to the trustees to retain investments did not authorise them to retain wasting securities unconverted, and so the annuities must be treated as having been converted at the testator's death, and the widow could only receive the income arising from the proceeds of such conversion. The result of these last two cases may be briefly summarised thus: Where a testator empowers his trustees to retain unauthorised investments, not of a wasting nature, the trustees must pay the whole of the income to the tenant-for-life, however high, but if the investments are of a wasting nature, then the tenant-for-life can only have the interest which he would have had if the wasting investments had been converted, unless the testator in effect directs that they are not to be converted.

Our readers should also consult in this connection the recent case of In re Thomas; Wood v. Thomas (26 Notes of Cases, p. 128), where Mr. Justice Kekewich held that by the terms of the will the tenants-for-life were entitled to the net income of certain American railroad bonds, repayable at a fixed date, but bearing a high rate of interest.

ENGLISH CAUSES CÉLÈBRES.—V.

SAURIN v. STAR.*

IN this case the plaintiff, Miss Susanna Mary Saurin, sued the defendants, Mrs. Star, the Lady Superior, and Mrs. Kennedy, one of the members of a convent at Hull, for having conspired to procure her expulsion from the said convent, for assault and false imprisonment, and for having libelled her to the Roman Catholic Bishop of Beverley. The defendants denied the charges, alleged that the matters in dispute had been referred to the bishop (whose award had been unfavourable to the plaintiff), and put on record the plea of 'leave and license' (see the charge of the Lord Chief Justice, ubi sup., at p. 215). The case was tried before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and a jury in the Court of Queen's Bench, and lasted for three weeks. The Solicitor-General (Sir John Coleridge), Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., and the present Mr. Justice Wills appeared for the plaintiff, while Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Hawkins, the late Lord Justice Mellish, and Mr. (now Sir) Charles Russell represented the defendants. The material facts were as follow: The plaintiff, who was the daughter of an Irish gentleman, entered the convent at Hull in 1858, taking upon herself the vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience. For two years all went well. But in 1860 the defendant Mrs. Star, according to the plaintiff's story, was seized with a sudden desire to know what passed between Miss Saurin and her father confessor, pressed the plaintiff repeatedly for information on this point, and set about procuring her expulsion from the convent when it was withheld. These statements were, of course, denied by the defendants. The conflict of testimony to which the case gave rise was very severe. According to her own account, Miss Saurin was subjected to a system of continuous persecution, was compelled to black stoves, brush boots, and do other household work which belonged to the province of the lay sisters and not of the nuns; was obliged to eat mutton, towards which she was 'known to have a constitutional aversion;' was deprived of writing materials, of clothing, and of bedding, was watched night and day, was falsely accused of levity, if not unchastity o behaviour, and, to crown all, was deposed from the rank of sister as the result of an ex parte and grossly unfair commission of inquiry before the Bishop of Beverley. By the defendants and their witnesses these charges were either denied or 'explained,' and the plaintiff's character was painted in colours very different from those in which she had herself portrayed it. According to the defendants, Miss Saurin was a very troublesome person to deal with. She 'borrowed boots,' and ate 'at improper hours.' Her letters to her father and mother were 'too tender in their affection.' She 'meddled with the laundry work by washing her own things when another had been appointed to that duty,' 'gathered unripe gooseberries,' 'had a candle to go to bed with and hid the bits left,' would not hurry herself to avoid the 'grievous sin' of being late for mass on Sunday, altered the clock without permission, gave hard crusty bread to a sister suffering from the 'mumps,' wrote letters without leave, told lies, once made a younger sister 'blush' by asking her if she 'intended to marry,' and moistened the dying lips of one of the sisterhood with salt-butter. Some of these enormities Miss Saurin may possibly have committed; but the following points, elicited by Sir John Coleridge in the course of a series of very skilful cross-examinations, told heavily against the defendants and eventually gained her a verdict of 200*l.* damages.* (1) One of the charges on which the plaintiff relied was that the defendant Mrs. Star had taken from her certain parcels of papers and relics. Mrs. Star alleged that she had no other motive for this act than to prevent the plaintiff from writing upon them 'anything that was disparaging' to the sisterhood. Thereupon the Solicitor-General handed to the witness a small card representing our Saviour kneeling at the cross, and underneath the words, 'Pray for your sister Mary Theresa Magdalen,' and asked her if she supposed Miss Saurin would write upon that? The witness answered in the affirmative! (2) The defendant was cross-examined as to the plaintiff's conduct with a priest at Hull. The following passage is so short that we shall transcribe it. 'You say in your statement that you perceived a great forwardness, and that she was in a state of excitement when he was at the convent, and that you had an undefined feeling of uneasiness, &c.; now, what do you mean by all that? Do you mean a charge of improper behaviour against her?—By no means. What do you mean by excitement? That she was not in her ordinary state, so that it made you uneasy?—Yes. Now you saw the statements of the other sisters and the lay sisters?—Yes. Well, in one of them there is this passage: "I have noticed her manner very familiar with one of the priests; I saw her once on her knees beside him entreating him to go with her." Now what did you mean by sending that to the Bishop?—It turns entirely on the rules. Turns on the rules—what rules? The witness referred to a passage in the rules, which was read, as to a becoming gravity of demeanour. "Then all you meant by sending that statement was that she had not preserved in her deportment a gravity becoming a religious. That was all you meant?—Yes. Don't you think it would have been better to have said so? —It did not occur to me."'

* Cf. 'The Annual Register for 1869,' pp. 177-213.

Sir Alexander Cockburn summed up the case to the jury with his accustomed power. His charge contains only one passage of distinctly legal interest—that in which he dealt with the constitution of the convent and the authority that the Lady Superior was entitled to exercise. 'There are three vows entered into, but we have only to deal with two of them—poverty and obedience. What is the meaning of the vow of poverty? It is the renunciation of all rights of property, of all capacity for acquiring any, so that any which is acquired is for the benefit of the community, and to be administered at the will of the Superior, so that what is done in the honest exercise of that authority cannot be complained of. It is important, again, to observe the scope of that authority. The vow is that of obedience to this unlimited extent, that the voice of the Superior is as the voice of God. A form more emphatic could not be used, nor to my mind one more shocking, though by that, as I have already said, we must not allow ourselves to be influenced. But we have to consider the extent to which this authority can be considered as legitimately going, and whatever is intended under it a sister has sworn on all occasions to submit to. I take it to be clear that it must be reasonably exercised, and must be restrained within reasonable limits. There must be nothing contrary to the laws of God or man; and, further, what is meant by obedience is obedience to the rules or customs, whether written or traditional, established or exercised in the community. For instance, suppose it had occurred to the Superior that the discipline of flagellation would be salutary for the soul of (Miss Saurin), and the sister protested against it as contrary to the rules and customs, and it was forcibly inflicted upon her, I do not doubt that an action would be maintainable for it. . . . So here, if the Superior has committed an assault, I should hold it not within the scope of her authority. But as to other matters within the scope of her authority there would be no legal cause of complaint, unless you thought that they were vexatiously committed.' This charge, and indeed the trial as a whole, will be found to form a fitting prelude to the study of the class of cases of which Allcard v. Skinner is the latest, and not the least interesting, example.

(To be continued.)

* On the counts of libel and conspiracy; there was no evidence worthy of the name to support the charges of assault and false imprisonment.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

BRICKWORKS CLASSIFIED AS FACTORIES.

ACCORDING to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, an accident in a factory has to be reported to the inspector forthwith—that is to say, within forty-eight hours after the occurrence. That applies to a factory. Can a brickworks be considered a factory within the meaning of the Act, and, therefore, liable to inspection? The bench, in a recent case in Yorkshire, thought it could, and accordingly inflicted a penalty on the owner of the works for having omitted to send notice of an accident which had occurred on his premises. It appeared that the brickmaker occupied some premises used for making bricks, and machinery was used in the trade. The magistrates' clerk said he had a doubt as to whether this was a factory within the meaning of the statute, for the words used in the schedule of the Act were 'any place not being a mine in which persons work to get slate, stone, coprolites, or other minerals,' and here only clay was obtained. If the works came under that Act it must be as a quarry or under the term 'other minerals.' The inspector who prosecuted contended that the place being one in which machinery was used in the manufacture of the bricks, therefore it came within the Act, for it was clearly the intention of the Legislature to class places where steam power and machinery were used as factories. These places, he also pointed out, were constantly inspected. He defined a factory as being a place in which steam power was used for the purpose of carrying on any particular trade, and where bricks were made on the premises with the aid of steam power those premises came within the meaning of the Act. This was the view taken by the bench, and unless the decision is upset, brickworks must be classed as factories, and liable to inspection.

MAINTENANCE OF HUSBAND BY WIFE.

It will be remembered that by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a wife having separate property may be summoned for the maintenance of her husband, and the justices may, where the husband becomes chargeable to the parish, make and enforce an order against the wife for his maintenance. The husband, however, need not be relieved in the workhouse. It will be sufficient to prove that he is chargeable. Not long since a summons was heard, preferred by a board of guardians against a woman trading as a grocer and beer-seller, for not contributing to the support of her husband. Some seven years ago he had made over to her all his property, but five years later he was convicted of assault, and the wife was granted a separation order. Subsequently the husband went to the workhouse, and became chargeable to the guardians. When the present summons was heard the question was whether the wife could be held to have had a separate estate apart from her husband; and it was considered that the woman had not come into property since the separation order making her liable. She had, however, separate estate before the making of the order, and was now accordingly ordered to pay so much per week towards the maintenance of her husband so long as he remained in the union. In this connection it may be pointed out that an order can be enforced against the wife only, and not, it would seem, against the trustees of her separate property.

THE LEGAL PROFESSION IN THE COLONIES.

Lawyers in the colonies do not find matters so easy as is reasonable, considering that there are local laws. In Canada the professions of barrister and solicitor are generally combined, and legal firms usually consist of a partnership in which one of the members devotes himself to advocacy. In Ontario a barrister belonging to an English inn has no further examination to pass, but a solicitor must serve under contract for a year with a local solicitor. In Quebec all lawyers are called advocates, and no one can practise without having passed the local examination; and further, as the law is mostly French, its practice necessitates a knowledge of the French language. In Manitoba an examination has to be passed in local law, though there is a clause in the local Act which seems to repeal this necessity as to the local knowledge in the case of barristers. In the North-West Territories a British qualification is held to be sufficient, but in British Columbia a local examination and residence are essential, except in the case of such as hold the degree of D.C.L. or LL.B. In Prince Edward Island a lawyer must have at least a year's residence in the colony, and submit to examination in local law if the authorities think fit. In New Brunswick the solicitor must have served a local solicitor for a year. In Nova Scotia a barrister can practise with a British qualification only, but a solicitor must pass an examination after serving a clerkship of four years. In New South Wales a barrister of a British Inn is admitted without examination on a motion made in Court in that behalf, and a solicitor from the old country can practise without examination after a residence of three months. In Victoria the conditions are the same, and application must be made to the Court in the same way. The call fee for barristers is fifty guineas, for solicitors the admission fee is forty guineas. In South Australia the fee in both cases is ten guineas, and a three months' residence is all that is necessary. In Queensland the fee is also ten guineas, and there is no distinction between barristers and solicitors, the only peculiar condition being that the applicant must have two householders as a reference and advertise his application in the newspapers. In Western Australia a lawyer must reside for at least six months in the colony, and then give four months' notice of his intention to apply for permission to practise. The fee is 10*l*. In Tasmania all that is necessary is for the candidate to pay twenty guineas. In New Zealand the candidate must pass an examination in law, including the law of New Zealand in so far as it differs from the law of England; but should he be fortunate enough to be an LL.B., his examination will consist only of matters concerning the local law. In the South African colonies no examinations are needful; in fact, nothing is required with a British qualification but fees.

CROSSES IN CHURCHYARDS.

A certain vicar died and was buried, his friends desired to place a cross over his grave, but the new vicar demurred, considering a cross in the churchyard would promote idolatry. The parishioners thereupon took the case before the Consistory Court at Wells, and the Chancellor declared that there was not the slightest ground for apprehending any offence being caused to the conscience of any reasonable or educated man. It was pointed out that Englishmen do not worship crosses wherever they see them, and that crosses in churchyards and cemeteries are quite legal. They are not confined to one particular creed or sect either, as Nonconformists, as well as other religious persuasions, erect them over the graves of relatives. The symbol of the cross has of recent years, if one may say so reverently, become so popular, that when the practice of cremation increases it will, doubtless, be the custom to surmount or paint on the urn the cross, and there would be no idolatry in doing so.

JACKDAW LAW.

A paragraph has been running the round of the dailies under the above title. A lady had lost a jackdaw, and, seeking to recover it from a man who said he had bought it, she now desired the assistance of a bench of magistrates. It was pointed out to her that a jackdaw is an English wild bird, and if it flies out of the possession of the person who has been keeping it, and is caught by someone else, the person so catching it cannot be charged with unlawful detention, for there is no criminal act by such retention. It was suggested to the applicant that she could proceed in the County Court as regards the bird.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

The Hamburg Law Courts have a nice question to decide. An old gentleman left 20,000 crowns each to his manservant and cook on condition that if either married the whole sum should go to the one who remained single. The servants married each other, and secured the whole 40,000 crowns. A relative, who disapproves of this cuteness, now seeks to overthrow the will and obtain the return of the money on the ground that by the servants marrying they have defeated the intention of the will. One would imagine that the servants ought to be allowed to keep the money for their ingenuity.

CONVICT PRISONS.

THE report of the directors of convict prisons in England for the year 1890-91 has just been issued. From this it appears that the number of male convicts received into the convict prisons under fresh sentences during the year ended March 31, 1891, was 605, besides eighty with licenses revoked or recommitted to serve out the period remitted from their former sentences. The number of female convicts received into the convict prisons under fresh sentences during the year ended March 31, 1891, was seventy-three, besides twenty-two with licenses revoked or recommitted to serve out the period remitted from their former sentences. The number of sentences of penal servitude passed by ordinary Courts in England and Wales in 1890—namely, 729—was lower than in any previous year. The following table illustrates in a striking manner the great and progressive decrease in the number of sentences for serious crime:—

Yearly average number of persons sentenced on indictment to penal servitude in England and Wales		Estimated average population of England and Wales
During 5 years ended December 31, 1859 . .	2,589	19,257,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1864 . .	2,800	20,370,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1869 . .	1,978	21,681,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1874 . .	1,622	23,088,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1879 . .	1,633	24,700,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1884 . .	1,427	26,399,000
During 5 years ended December 31, 1889 . .	945	28,252,000
During the year ended December 31, 1890 . .	729	29,407,649

The decrease in the convict prison population, which has resulted from the smaller number sentenced and the shorter sentences, is shown by the following figures, which, for the reason given in former reports, rather understate (particularly in the earlier years) the effective decrease for purposes of comparison:—

Total Number in Custody under Sentence of Penal Servitude in Great Britain, Gibraltar, and Western Australia.

1869 (on December 31) ..	11,660	1881 (on March 31) ..	10,676
1870 " ..	11,890	1882 " ..	10,587
1871 " ..	11,712	1883 " ..	10,529
1872 " ..	11,488	1884 " ..	9,938
1873 " ..	11,061	1885 " ..	9,154
1874 " ..	10,867	1886 " ..	8,379
1875 " ..	10,765	1887 " ..	7,836
1876 " ..	10,725	1888 " ..	7,257
1877 " ..	10,763	1889 " ..	6,572
1878 " ..	10,671	1890 " ..	6,129
1879 (on March 31) ..	10,884	1891 " ..	5,522
1880 " ..	10,839	Number in July, 1891 ..	5,334

The labour of the convicts has been used in the construction and maintenance of prison buildings, in the manufacture and repair of clothing, bedding, utensils, &c., required for the use of officers and prisoners, in the preparation of the food of prisoners, in washing their clothing, and in various services connected with the internal economy of the prisons, including the enforcement of a high degree of cleanliness. In addition, convict labour has been largely devoted to the performance of works, to the construction of buildings, and to the manufacture of a multiplicity of articles for the Admiralty, the War Department, the Post Office, and other public departments. The medical inspector states that the mortality in the prisons was very low. Only thirty-six deaths occurred among prisoners from natural causes, being 7·4 per 1,000 of the daily average population—a rate lower than any heretofore recorded, the next lowest in the last thirty-five years having been 8·0 per 1,000. The medical inspector concludes with the observation that 'no death occurred during the year from any defect in the sanitary arrangements of the prisons.'

It is stated that, as a result of the diminution of crime, no fewer than eight convict prisons have since 1882 been assigned to other public purposes, and that the number of persons in Western Australia the cost of whose maintenance is borne by the Imperial Government is gradually decreasing. The directors also quote an account of the prison farm at Dartmoor.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

THE following further correspondence has appeared in the Times:—

Sir,—Those who advocate the abolition of capital punishment boldly assert that it does not deter from murder. How can they possibly know this? Their only attempt at proof is by an arithmetical computation, with even less foundation than Mr. Gladstone's 'electoral facts.' But there is direct and positive proof that it has this deterrent effect. A convict in Western Australia wrote home surreptitiously to his old 'pal' in England, informing him of some of the conditions under which he was living, and, among other things, that by the law of the colony a convict who committed a murderous assault on a warder might be hung. The letter chanced to fall into the hands of the authorities. His words were as follows: 'They tops a cove out here for slogging a bloke'—i.e. 'they hang a convict out here for assaulting a warder.' 'That bit of rope, dear Jack, is a great check on a man's temper.'

A sentence of penal servitude for life cannot have the same deterrent effect, for there is always the chance that it may not be carried out. Mr. Gladstone let out the Fenians who were sentenced in 1867 for life after a few years. There is now a party in the House of Commons and in the country who are trying to procure the release of John Daly and other atrocious dynamiters sentenced only five or six years ago for life, and nobody can doubt that if the Phœnix Park murderers had been sentenced to penal servitude instead of being hung they too would have a good chance of being released by or before this time. Can anybody doubt that under these conditions a sentence of penal servitude would be far less deterrent to these desperadoes than that of capital execution?

Your obedient Servant,
D.

Sir,—My object in writing to the Times was not to argue the question of capital punishment, but to urge that it was a subject to be discussed without passion or personalities such as Lord Grimthorpe imports into it. I do not think that his reply will put his good taste in any better light. I was not so foolish as to claim that a man 'can acquire sanity or authority by dying,' but I do think that it is usual for gentlemen to refrain from insulting epithets and insinuations against men who have only recently left us. My father's reputation, however, will probably survive the attacks of Lord Grimthorpe. I have no intention to discuss the question of capital punishment with him, nor, indeed, any other question—his style of controversy is not inviting. To call all his opponents a 'set of noodles' and all that they advance 'cant' is not enough to settle the question, but quite enough to keep sensible people from discussing it with him.

Yours, &c.,
JOHN A. BRIGHT.

One Ash, Rochdale: Sept. 10.

Sir,—Some years before his death the late John Bright happened to be travelling in company with a man who had held a high official position in Van Diemen's Land, now Tasmania. The conversation turned on the convict system, and Mr. Bright showed great interest in the success in life of men who had been transported and subsequently liberated. At last he asked the colonial official whether he could tell him anything about a particular man, whom he mentioned by name. In answer to inquiries, he said that man, a medical practitioner, had been condemned to death in England for murder, but through his (John Bright's) efforts the death sentence had been commuted to transportation for life. He was greatly opposed to capital punishment, and he would be glad to learn that his intercession in that case had resulted satisfactorily. The colonial official, after further questions as to name, date, &c., was obliged to inform Mr. Bright that his protégé, whom he had saved from the gallows in England, had committed two murders by poison in Van Diemen's Land, and had then been hanged.

AN EX-COLONIAL MINISTER.

Sir,—Once when I had used the word 'hung' in the connection in which Sir J. Stephen uses it in his letter to-day, a friend corrected me, alleging the dictum of a judge. 'Beef,' sir, 'is hung, men are hanged.' A judge's authority ought to be supreme in the matter. S. T. P.

Sept. 10.

Sir,—If Mr. J. A. Bright tells the truth in saying that he had no intention to discuss capital punishment with me, why did he begin and state his 'four grounds' in a way which he evidently thought conclusive, or at least impressive? He says he only meant to defend his father's reputation. But he admitted the only thing I had asserted about it—viz. that he was 'no more addicted to forcible language than I am,' which obviously meant also 'no less.' As for his oratorical reputation (and I know of no other), nobody thinks more highly of it than I always did, even when I most disagreed with him. But I do not think we have far to look, on both political or theological sides, to learn that wisdom and the power of doing good may vary inversely as the power of either speaking or writing the very best English and commanding a party.

If this very small luminary with a brilliant name could see what he is about, he would have seen that I have not 'called all,' or any, 'of my opponents' in this matter 'noodles,' but only those who have been proved to be so on every occasion when they have attacked me on quite another subject, and generally false ones besides. I take 'cant' to mean the constant repetition of a phrase either without any real meaning or none that can be defended by argument. The anti-hangmen are first-rate proficients in that, as has been proved abundantly.

Yours obediently,

Sept. 11. GRIMTHORPE.

Sir,—I believe I may add a practical man's opinion on this point. Some years ago, when Sheriff of London and Middlesex, before Lord Cross took the control of the prisons out of the hands of the magistrates, I had some experience of the 'condemned cell.' On one occasion, visiting a prisoner under sentence of death, in respect of whom some considerable efforts had been made to get a reprieve, I entered the cell accompanied by Mr. Jonas, the governor, who had been in charge of Newgate Prison for very many years, and who may be said to have had an almost unequalled experience of the effects of hanging.

On the governor telling the prisoner that he could state anything that he desired to me as sheriff, the prisoner immediately began to compare his own case with that of a recent convict, and urged that his act was exactly on the lines of the crime of this man, and that he had been reprieved—evidently expecting a similar result in his own case. On quitting the cell, Jonas made use of this remarkable observation: 'It is always the case; when we get one reprieve we have three murders follow!' I believe there is nothing which acts more upon the human mind than the certainty of punishment, or, as the Australian convict describes it, 'The bit of rope is a great check on a man's temper!'

There is, however, another side of this question, and that is the difficulty of dealing with a human being who has imbrued his hands in blood. In the public interests he is better out of the way. Shut in a prison, brooding upon his past deed, he becomes in all probability insane, or excites sympathy, is released, and becomes an encouragement to other evil-doers.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

J. WHITTAKER ELLIS.

29 Fleet Street, E.C.: Sept. 11.

Sir,—Mr. Tallack's theology and logic are equally queer. Moses is now introduced in the new character of a direct authority for murder, though he first figured on Mr. Tallack's boards as the author, for temporary and local purposes only, of the injunction to execute murderers a thousand years before him. He did not 'participate in a murder,' but performed it alone, believing it to be an act of justice to defend 'one of his brethren.' Whether that would have been a good plea in the Egyptian King's Bench I don't know; but Somebody did know, who made him the leader of His people and 'an eminent saint.'

Mr. Tallack's next specimen of a murderer is St. Paul. He did participate in one certainly, but broke no law of his country evidently, and was accepted by the same Authority as having 'done it ignorantly.' And so Mr. Tallack's logic is that, because these two men 'became eminent saints,' therefore any woman who poisons her husband, or any burglar who shoots an opponent, ought to be let off. If it is not that, it is nothing. Even Ahab gave a more rational answer than he does in quoting Moses, St. Paul, and Cain's cases—'Am I God to kill and to make alive?'

He has now made five attempts to 'quote theological arguments both ways.' Whose arguments except his own? He means to be understood as saying that he has quoted five pieces of Scripture. He has not quoted one that is in the smallest degree to the purpose.

Perhaps the story of the Irishman, 105 years ago, who was hung and restored, and committed another theft on going home, is to the purpose, or would have been if it had been murder that he was hung for, for it shows how beneficial to the world his restoration to society was. He has his Newgate chaplain too, but, as usual, a long dead one; and, what is of more consequence, of the time when women were hung for stealing a shilling's worth of stuff off a shop counter.

He ends with a relapse into the stereotyped rubbish about circumstantial evidence and a stupid jury. I suspect the Australian chaplain's experience of the value of the penitence of reprieved murderers is, after all, more valuable than that of the ex-chaplain the other day, who had no means of tracing or testing the genuineness of the repentance of those who were hung, though his answer was a good one to Lord Russell's sentimental piece of nonsense. I do not see that the convict's remark about the 'bit of rope' is the worse for having been 'trotted out before,' as it did not break down like all Mr. Tallack's. He will have done more good than he expected when he started this discussion, and blew up its embers again now when they were going out. Yours obediently,

Sept. 16. GRIMTHORPE.

THE REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

An Overseer writes to the Times the following letter:—

It is not generally known that Parliament has from time to time cast upon overseers the duty of performing impossibilities, and especially is this so as regards the registration of voters.

In populous places, if overseers do their duty never so well, and in this I include all their servants, they cannot publish lists of voters as the law requires; hence these lists, when published, are necessarily imperfect. Why should this be so?

For instance, the statute of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, enacted that the qualifying year should include July 31, and the statute 6 Vict. c. 18, enacts that the complete register of those so qualified—i.e. all voters—shall be published and ready for sale to all comers on the next day. Could any legislation be more absurd than this? Of course the thing was never done, but imagine the wisdom of such an enactment in the year 1867! It is true that a list of voters was, and is now, published on August 1 in each year, but such lists do not now, and never did, contain the names only of those qualified upon that or any other day, for the palpable reason that the information required, in order that such lists might be published on that day, must necessarily have been obtained at the houses of the people, and from the public records, many weeks previously, and so these lists are always imperfect, because when published they contain the names of persons who have died, removed, or become otherwise disqualified since the information was obtained, although during the qualifying year.

Then a later statute, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26, altered the qualifying day from July 31 to July 15, leaving the publishing day as before. This, no doubt, in many places afforded some slight relief to overseers, but it did not accomplish much, seeing that seven out of the sixteen days of apparent gain were taken away, because the qualifying day of payment of rates and taxes remained as before—viz. July 20—while registrars of deaths were allowed until July 22 for the sending to the overseers their returns of deaths.

The initial work of registering voters is an inquiry from door to door, amounting, in fact, to the taking of an occupation census, and if at one stroke a photograph could be taken on the qualifying day of the names and addresses of all occupiers, together with the description and situation of the qualifying premises as they then exist, correct lists could not be published, seeing that their compilation involves further inquiry as to: (1) the qualifying period of occupation; (2) qualifying value; (3) distance of residence; (4) payment of rates and taxes; (5) parochial relief; and (6) nationality, all of which must be ascertained by reference to public books and documents in the hands of at least four public bodies. When all this has been done, if it is ever done, which I much doubt, the lists have to be made up in four divisions at least, and again subdivided into wards and polling districts, from two to twenty as the case may be, according to the size of the parish, before they can be sent to the printer; the printing alone occupying the whole of the time allowed by law for all the process.

Then all the procedure is based upon the assumption that occupiers are always to be found upon their premises during business hours, and that they are under an obligation to supply the overseers with the information they require in order to enable them to perform their duty. Parliament, however, has forgotten to provide for these matters, or, indeed, any machinery by which persons removing from one parish to another parish can be traced, and, if qualified, registered in respect of successive occupations.

As if further to insure the publication of incorrect lists of voters, Parliament, by the Registration Act of 1885, 48 Vict. c. 15, enacted that in the months of April and May overseers were to make certain inquiries as to dwelling-houses and their occupiers, and to compile the register from the information so obtained. How either the voter or the overseer in April or May could say that A. B. would be alive and qualified three months hence does not transpire, but the fact shows that, even at so late a date, Parliament was not very anxious that correct registers of voters should be published.

In this parish changes of occupation occur at an average of ten per day, and therefore it may be readily understood how, during a period of three months from the time of making the statutory inquiry up to the expiration of the qualifying year, a register of voters so made becomes incorrect, although made in accordance with law, and so overseers are continually face to face with an impossible task.

These facts show that Parliament has not only not done all that might reasonably be expected of it to emancipate the voter from the toils of political influences, but, on the contrary, has persistently continued to do much which is the exact reverse, notwithstanding the condemnation of a select committee, comprising such names as Northcote, Lefevre, Rathbone, Morley, Bourke, and Harcourt. That committee in 1869 said that the work cast upon overseers 'is one which is obviously impossible of execution,' and that it leads to results 'objectionable in principle and mischievous in practice.' The report goes on to say:—

'The correction of the errors in the overseers' lists is undertaken by rival registration associations, an expensive machinery is set to work to strike off assumed opponents, and to place upon the register persons who are assumed to be adherents frequently on the very ground that their vote is obtained at the expense of those who sustain the claim. The action of such associations is necessarily prejudicial to the independence of a constituency, and not only affords the means, but supplies a grave temptation, to illegitimate practices and corrupt inducements, whilst, at the same time, the imperfect operation of the responsible registration authority justifies their existence and forms an excuse for their operations. It is notoriously difficult to discriminate between money legitimately expended in registration and money which, under the name of registration, is practically employed to corrupt a constituency.'

If this was the deliberate judgment of a committee in 1869, how much must the facts of to-day intensify it? 'A Revising Barrister' will have gained further information from my second letter written before his criticism appeared; his second letter, however, amply justifies the paragraph with which I prefaced my observations—viz. that I proposed to give some information relating to 'things not generally known or imperfectly understood,' and I was not unaware that in challenging the conclusion at which you had arrived in the matter I was taking a bold step, a conclusion evidently arrived at through imperfect information, and applicable only to a village or small community, in reference to the operation of certain statutes which cause more unnecessary friction, heartburning, and waste of time and money than any other set of laws under which we are locally governed.

When I read 'A Revising Barrister's' second letter I rubbed my eyes, read it again, and finally came to the conclusion that we must be occupants of different hemispheres. To his statement that the Act of 1878 'only applied to boroughs,' I would reply that his way of putting the case thus might stand if the 'only' did not comprise the major part of the whole. What are the facts? The registers of voters to which this word 'only' applies are the registers upon which are elected probably two-thirds of the total of English members of Parliament, four-fifths of the total of municipal councillors, and seven-eighths of the School Boards. County registers, no doubt, are important, but I venture to assert that those of boroughs are not less so.

He further states that the lists are 'all of them arranged alphabetically for the purpose of facilitating reference.' This is somewhat amazing in face of the statutory provisions to the contrary. By the Acts of 1878 and 1888 the lists may or shall 'be arranged in the same order in which the qualified premises appear in the rate-book'—that is certainly not 'alphabetically.' I have seen hundreds of rate-boots and have not seen half-a-dozen so arranged, and there is no provision for such an arrangement in either the statutes or the orders of the Poor Law Board. Here the county lists are arranged alphabetically and the borough lists are arranged in street order, but, whichever the plan adopted, it is of no moment in this controversy, for the reason that the multiplicity of lists is unaffected thereby and remain to the confusion of the voter and every one else, myself included.

Then he says 'The general scheme of registration remains just as it was,' &c. This is rather a comprehensive way of putting the case, and is, moreover, misleading; whatever it may mean I would reply that under the 'general scheme' as existing before the Act of 1878, the unit of list was the parish, and the unit of publication was the parish; now the unit of list is the polling district, whilst the unit of publication remains as heretofore, hence much of the chaos now existing.

The vestry clerk and his duties have no bearing upon the question and are simply red herrings.

Finally, your correspondent says: 'I do not see what more the Legislature could have done.' I will not contest the proposition; the answer is, however, to be found in the number of bills for some years back before Parliament in the matter, bills backed in the aggregate by forty or fifty members. Last session at least half a dozen such bills were upon the order book, showing that 'the Legislature could have done,' and probably will do, something more to remedy the defects in the present lists. To seriously reiterate 'that any name may be found in a few moments or at the utmost in half a minute' provokes nothing worse than a smile, in which no one, if he read it, would more heartily join than the learned gentleman who has heretofore been so worried at his revision of these chaotic productions.

The registration of voters which is made so much of may be accomplished in a simple and efficient way without the aid of politicians or of revising barristers; to be effective it should be a continuous act from January 1 to December 31; the officials charged with the duty, whoever they may be (I do not seek such an appointment), might confer and, if necessary, join in stating cases for a superior Court whenever any doubt arises as to the law; but 99 per cent. of these doubts may be removed beforehand by a judicious code of rules for their guidance, whilst the expenses now incurred might with little difficulty be reduced by 100,000*l.* a year.

THE 'TIED-HOUSE' SYSTEM.

MR. J. DANVERS POWER writes to the Times as follows:—

The various questions raised in connection with the sale of that commodity which it is accurate or the reverse to call 'intoxicating' liquor, according to the conduct of the consumer, cannot be all satisfactorily dealt with in one letter or one correspondence. But, with your permission, I will venture an opinion on the tied-house section of the general controversy.

When I was secretary of the Country Brewers' Society I had many opportunities of hearing all sides of this question, and while I can easily see how, by magisterial or legislative attempts to hinder the tied-house system, such monopoly as the brewers possess in some places may be increased, I never could see how it is to be diminished as long as any semblance of freedom of contract is preserved for the not unimportant part of the commercial body which manufactures, imports, and distributes alcoholic drink. No one will dispute that anything which tends towards monopoly possesses some disadvantages. When we try to preserve a system which savours of monopoly, hoping at the same time to suffer no inconvenience whatever, we are expecting what is impossible. As well might a country adopt a protective tariff and grumble if prices are raised.

As free trade in alcoholic liquor is out of the question, the proper inquiry to make is as to whether the admitted disadvantages of the partial monopoly are abnormal. I think I can show that in reality they are, with a few slight exceptions, almost non-existent. It may be that in some small villages the local brewer has an actual monopoly, and there may be brewers who find it to their advantage in such cases to abuse their privileges and supply inferior beer. But if this is granted it does not take the opponents of tied houses very far. Simple contracts to supply goods, even to a tied customer, imply that the goods are to be merchantable. There are also the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts which are well able to cope with adulteration, did it really exist to the frightful extent which so many people—without the shred of an actual case in support of their assertions—persistently declare is the fact. My experience has certainly been that whenever actions arising out of the quality of beer supplied to a tied tenant have been brought the brewers have won, and that there is an entire absence of prosecutions for the adulteration of beer under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts. If anyone is inclined to dispute this perhaps he will give a few specific instances. I am quite ready with facts in support of my statements.

What I have said applies to village monopolies and to only the limited number of villages with one publichouse apiece. In such places, were it necessary to do so, the magistrates in practice have the power to license a second house tied to a second brewer. This is what is actually done in large villages. In towns the number of publichouses is, of course, increased, so that as a matter of fact there are few places with 5,000 inhabitants which are not served by three or four local brewers, keenly competing with each other as to the quality of their beer, and by the Burton brewers as well. If the tied-house system could be abolished it is not difficult to forecast what would happen. The owners of the publichouses—namely, the local brewers—would, as simple landlords, at once add to the rents the amount of the additional tied-house profits on the beer which they, as brewers, had previously supplied to the houses in question. They would then, as ordinary brewers, offer their beer to the freed tenants at what are called cutting prices. What does this mean? Simply that the nearest brewer would be able to deliver his beer at the lowest price. The monopoly might then indeed press hardly on the public in some places. I do not say that there would not be anywhere found enterprising publicans, but there would not be more of them than there are free houses at the present time. The general tendency would be in the opposite direction to that desired; for there is no reason to suppose that a free publican is less greedy of gain than an ordinary brewer, or less likely to take advantage of his monopoly when he has one.

As regards the relative advantages of the tied-house and the free-house systems in respect of good conduct, the best test to apply is to inquire into the freeholder's security against depreciation in the value of his property owing to forfeiture of the license after misconduct by the occupier. If I, not being a brewer, own a licensed house worth 200*l.* a year as a publichouse, but only 100*l.* a year if its license were lost, would I, as a freeholder anxious to preserve its higher value and to guard against the loss of the license, rather lease it to a firm of brewers or to a publican? The brewers would certainly offer the best security. They would not only be liable to pay the full rent in any case, but they would, being capitalists, be able to pay even if the license were taken away and they, in consequence, lost 100*l.* a year for the remainder of their term by the transaction. In addition to this security I should know that they would certainly underlet my house to a tied publican, who would lose the value of his fixtures if the license were forfeited. Thus I should have a double security. But if I let the house to a free publican I know that, although he may have entered into obligations under a lease, he still, as a matter of fact, has generally only his fixtures to lose; and if he is a man who breaks the law and endangers the license the Bankruptcy Court has probably few terrors for him, even if it were worth my while to take him there. Of course, where publicans actually own their houses the circumstances are different; but it is quite a mistake to suppose that a free tenant is the same thing as a freeholder. Nobody is so wild as to propose that all publicans should be ordered to purchase the houses they occupy. If bad influences on the part of brewers over publicans really exist they are most likely to be manifested when a free publican owes a brewer money, and thus gets into his power. In such a case an unscrupulous brewer might possibly be tempted to urge illegal methods of increasing the sale of beer, because he would know that the forfeiture of the license would not entail upon him any greater loss than the failure of a doubtful customer.

MUNICIPAL CONTRACTS.—The report of a special committee appointed to inquire into alleged sweating in carrying out corporation contracts, and to consider and report as to a proposed fair-wage clause in future contracts, was discussed at the meeting of the Liverpool City Council on September 16. The committee recommended that each person or firm applying to be placed on the list of corporation contractors be requested to sign an undertaking to pay the rate of wages and observe the hours of labour recognised and agreed upon between the trade-unions and employers respectively in the locality in which the work for carrying out the contract is to be performed, or such a rate of wages and hours as are equivalent or approximate thereto, so that they will not transfer, assign, or underlet, directly or indirectly, the contract or any part, share, or interest therein, without the written consent of the corporation, under the hand of the town clerk, and that they agree to a condition being inserted in the contract to carry out this undertaking. When Mr. Houlding, the chairman of the committee, moved the adoption of this recommendation, an amendment was moved to leave out the words 'or such a rate of wages and hours as are equivalent or approximate thereto.' The amendment was rejected by twenty-five votes to three, and the recommendation was adopted. Contractors who fail to comply with the covenant may be struck off the list of corporate contractors. The watch committee are to consider the desirability of arranging 'the acceptance of contracts for such periods as will enable Liverpool tradesmen to compete on equal terms with those of other towns.'

OBITUARY.

WE record with much regret the death of Mr. WILLIAM PARTRIDGE, the well-known metropolitan police magistrate, which occurred on the 10th inst. Mr. Partridge was born on January 2, 1818, and educated at Winchester College, whence he proceeded to Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in 1840. He was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1843, and first went the Home Circuit, subsequently joining the Oxford Circuit. In 1860 he was appointed a stipendiary magistrate for the Wolverhampton district; but in 1863 he was transferred to the metropolis, and acted at the Thames, Southwark, Westminster, Lambeth, and Marylebone Police Courts. He sat at Marylebone for the last time on Saturday, August 29. Mr. Partridge also for some time sat on the Brighton borough bench, and was a deputy lieutenant for the county of Hereford and a magistrate for that county, as well as for the counties of Monmouth, Gloucester, Sussex, and Stafford.

THE LONG VACATION JUDGES.—Mr. Justice Collins did not sit after September 17. Mr. Justice Jeune will commence his public duties in that capacity on Tuesday next, when he will attend at Queen's Bench Judges' Chambers. His lordship will sit in open Court for the first time as vacation judge on Wednesday next, September 23.

JUDICIAL VACANCIES.—There are at present three County Court judgeships vacant, caused by the resignation of his Honour Judge Ingham and the deaths of Judges Melville and Powell. By the death of the latter gentleman and the appointment of Mr. Rose as a metropolitan police magistrate there are also two recorderships vacant on the Oxford Circuit—those of Wolverhampton and Hanley respectively. The County Court judgeships are in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, while the appointment to the recorderships rests with the Home Secretary.

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES IN ST. HELENA.—The action of the Colonial Office in consenting to the establishment in the small colony of St. Helena of a Court for divorce and matrimonial causes would seem to indicate a change of policy on the part of the home authorities on this question. At present the number of Crown colonies with a divorce law is extremely small, but now that, after many years' persistent effort, St. Helena has overcome the opposition of the Colonial Office, other colonies may think it a fit time to claim equal facilities. As far back as 1858 the then governor, Sir E. H. Drummond Hay, passed a divorce bill, which was, however, disallowed in England on the ground that it was better to submit to known wrongs rather than to run the risk of inflicting terrible evils on society by introducing a remedy which, if ignorantly or recklessly applied, would inevitably do incalculable harm. Since that time the local bar has disappeared, and the governor of St. Helena also acts as Chief Justice, at the same time combining in his own person the functions of commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's forces in the island. The non-existence of a local bar and the fact that an executive officer is also the judicial officer in the island have not, however, prevented the Colonial Office from making the experiment of allowing the inhabitants of St. Helena a Divorce Court. Accompanying the proclamation are the new rules and regulations and a list of fees to be paid in the new Court. These are of the most moderate character, the highest being 4*s.* for 'swearing a jury of eight,' and 5*s.* for taxing costs. To file a petition and enter a cause in the action book costs only 2*s.*, and a rule nisi can be had for 3*s.*, the fee for a rule absolute being the same.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM SEPTEMBER 21 TO SEPTEMBER 26.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	Sept. 21	Sept. 22	Sept. 23	Sept. 24	Sept. 25	Sept. 26
22	Judge Harington	—	Daventry	Alcester	Pershore	Solihull	—
47	Judge (?)	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
58	Judge Edge	Churston	Okehampton	—	—	—	—

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish on the 24th inst. the first part of a new fine art work, entitled 'Historic Houses of the United Kingdom,' containing a descriptive and historical account of the principal ancestral homes of Great Britain and Ireland. The work will be abundantly illustrated with high-class engravings from original drawings and trustworthy photographs, and with ground-floor plans of the buildings. It will be uniform with 'Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches of England and Wales,' which has attained such widespread popularity.

THE number of Cassell's Saturday Journal, to be published on the 23rd inst., will form the commencement of a new volume, and will contain the opening chapters of two new serial stories, entitled respectively 'Tracked to Doom' (a Detective Tale), by Dick Donovan, and an 'Excellent Knave,' by J. Fitzgerald Molloy. Among the leading contents of this number will be a personal sketch of Mr. J. R. Robinson, of the Daily News (forming the first of a series of articles on 'Editors of To-day'); 'Parisian Cafés and their Frequenters;' 'The Tell-Tale Hand,' a complete story by Richard Dowling; 'All for All,' a new feature containing a variety of entertaining notes; humorous illustrations by Frederick Barnard and J. F. Sullivan, &c.

CORPORATION FINANCE.—A tabulated statement of the receipts and payments of the City's cash during the last ten years—namely, from 1881 to 1890—has been recently circulated as a Corporation Blue-book. The receipts of this source of income during this period was 7,666,910*l.*, of which 3,466,202*l.* were ordinary and 4,200,707*l.* extraordinary receipts. The expenditure during the same period was 7,651,375*l.*, or ordinary 3,298,590*l.* and extraordinary 4,352,784*l.* Among the ordinary expenses were charitable donations, 170,353*l.*; the Freemen's Orphan School, 54,331*l.*; technical education, 14,702*l.*; music, 36,059*l.*; City Library and Museum, 52,949*l.*; Fine Art Gallery, 4,680*l.* The extraordinary expenditure consists mainly of repayments of loans and interest on markets.

THE LATE BARON HUDDLESTON.—At the Liverpool City Council on September 16, the mayor asked permission for Alderman John Hughes to move a resolution in regard to the following letter which he had received from Lady Diana Huddleston: 'August 30, 1891. The Grange, Ascot Heath, Berkshire. My dear Mr. Hughes,—Liverpool having been on the first circuit I ever went with my late husband after he was created a judge, and, knowing his admiration for your great city, I should much like to present the Law Courts of Liverpool with a framed engraving of the Baron, to be placed in the senior judge's private room. Will you kindly tell me to whom I should apply to know if this would be an acceptable gift? The engraving, I may mention, is similar to the one hung in the Council Chambers of the Royal Courts of Justice, London. Trusting that you are well, believe me, very sincerely, DIANA HUDDLESTON.' Alderman Hughes moved a resolution thanking Lady Diana Huddleston for her kind and courteous offer, and stated that the council would have much pleasure in accepting the engraving and placing it in the senior judge's private room at St. George's Hall. The resolution was unanimously adopted.

A REPRESENTATIVE collection of stories of all ages and all countries is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Company under the title of 'The World of Romance.' The serial will be edited by 'Q,' author of 'Dead Man's Rock,' 'The Splendid Spur,' &c., and will be fully illustrated with new and original engravings. Part 1 will be published with the October magazines at the end of this month.

THE NEW POLICE MAGISTRATE.—The Queen has approved the appointment of Mr. John Rose as a metropolitan police magistrate in the place of Mr. Partridge, deceased. Mr. Rose, who was called to the bar in 1868, is a member of the Oxford Circuit, a revising barrister, recorder of Hanley, and a bencher of Gray's Inn. Mr. Rose took the oaths and was sworn in as a magistrate on September 16, before Mr. Justice Collins at Queen's Bench Judges' Chambers. He will sit at Marylebone Police Court for the remainder of the week, as the regular magistrates are away on vacation.

BIRTHS.

On Sept. 7, at Kirkheaton, Yorkshire, the wife of W. B. Pilkington Solicitor, of a son.

On Sept. 10, at 6 Oxford and Cambridge Mansions, the wife of E. A. Armstrong, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Sept. 15, at Upper Tooting, the wife of Philip Scott Stokes, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Sept. 5, at Curdridge, Botley, Hants, Ernest William Way, eldest son of the late W. A. Way, Solicitor, of Portsmouth and Botley, to Margaret Fanny, daughter of E. H. Clark, of Botley.

On Sept. 7, at St. James's Church, Great Grimsby, William Henry Forbes Montanaro, Lieut. Royal Navy, youngest surviving son of Alfred Montanaro, Esq., of Bank House, Bargate, Great Grimsby, and grandson of the late Hon. G. Montanaro, to Dulcie Frances, only daughter of Aubrey George Butterfield, Postmaster-General of the Bermudas, and granddaughter of the late Chief Justice T. Butterfield.

On Sept. 8, at St. George's Church, Worthing, William Michael Spence, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law and Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge, to Ida C. M. Spence, second daughter of the late Rev. Robert Spence, M.A., of Dundee.

On Sept. 8, at the Parish Church, Bakewell, Derbyshire, Lieutenant Frank Henry Peyton, R.N., youngest son of the late Commander Lumley Woodyear Peyton, R.N., of Penzance, to Janet Wynyard, youngest daughter of John E. Barker, Q.C., of Brooklands, Bakewell.

On Sept. 15, at the Parish Church, Shepton Mallet, William Henry Gane, Solicitor, Boston, to Florence Amy, youngest daughter of Robert Kelley, of the Coombe, Bowlish, Somerset.

DEATHS.

On Sept. 8, at 141 King Street, Great Yarmouth, Daniel Philip Meadows, Solicitor, aged 35 years.

On Sept. 8, at Perth, Eliza Johnston Robina Dowie, widow of Robert Dowie, Solicitor, Glasgow, and daughter of the late Robert Urquhart, of Moss, Lanarkshire.

On Sept. 10, Charles Edward Hawkins, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, third son of the late John Hawkins, Esq., of Hitchin, Herts, aged 65 years.

On Sept. 10, at 103 Edith Road, West Kensington, Charles Edward Hawkins, Barrister-at-Law, in his 67th year.

On Sept. 15 (suddenly), John Joseph Powell, Q.C., Judge of the Lambeth and Greenwich County Courts, Recorder of Wolverhampton, and formerly M.P. for Gloucester, aged 75 years.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE translation of Mr. Montagu Williams, Q.C., from Worship Street to Marylebone Police Court furnished an opportunity for the expression of the high respect entertained by solicitors and officers of the former Court for the worthy magistrate. With a hearty contempt for humbug, and a bluff disregard of conventional maxims and official routine, Mr. Montagu Williams has proved himself not only a dispenser of justice, but of charity also. He has profound sympathy for the masses with whom a metropolitan magistrate is brought into such close contact, and in his response to Mr. Bedford's remarks, Mr. Williams said 'he had always felt that the sufferings of the poor were borne with the greatest patience, and that the struggle was often heroic.' That his health may be benefited by somewhat lighter work is the wish of his many friends both rich and poor.

IN filling up the three vacant County Court judgeships the Lord Chancellor may be trusted to recollect and recognise the increase and ever-increasing importance of the duties of these 'inferior' judges. In many rural districts 'His Honour' is practically the sole arbiter of 'civil' justice, as the justices assembled in petty sessions are omnipotent in 'summary' criminal offences. In large towns, on the other hand, convenience and a desire for economy bring into the County Court cases of great interest to commercial men. In either case it is of the highest importance that the judge should be not only a thoroughly competent lawyer, but possessed of that patience and knowledge of the world which are equally necessary in dealing with important issues and petty disputes. 'Failures at the bar' are not always successful judges, and the public expect and are willing to pay for competent and vigorous men.

'A PEW,' said Mr. Justice Buller more than a century ago in Stocks v. Booth, 1 T. R. 428, 'may be annexed to a house by a faculty as well as by prescription, for the latter supposes a faculty.' In the case of Phillips v. Halliday, L. R. 1891, App. Cas. 228, Mr. Halliday proved acts of ownership in relation to a pew which, taken by themselves, were amply sufficient for the presumption of a faculty; but, on the other hand, the vicar and churchwardens showed that as long ago as 1680 there was evidence that the alleged right arose out of what purported to be a sale by the churchwardens of a portion of the site of the church to Mr. Halliday's predecessor in title—a curious transaction, which it was admitted could have no validity; and it was now contended, on behalf of the present vicar and churchwardens, that the alleged right being thus in its origin acquired in a manner not legal, the Court would not make the presumption of a faculty for the purpose of establishing it. The House of Lords, however, affirming the Court of Appeal, held that the subsequent ownership being perfectly consistent with the presumption of a later faculty, it ought to be presumed. The doctrine, as Lord Herschell puts it, ought to 'apply just as well to the acts necessary to confirm a title originally invalid, as to the acts necessary to create a valid title in the first instance.'

THE decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich on the point of practice in Cooke v. Smith, to which we previously drew attention (LAW JOURNAL, p. 65), has now been affirmed by the Court of Appeal (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 573). The case decides that the power of the Court under Order XXXI., rule 26, to order a further deposit as security for costs of discovery may be exercised not only when the order for discovery is made, but at any time afterwards on a proper case being shown. The contrary construction, which would limit the power to the time when the order for discovery itself is made, would, as Lord Justice Kay says, 'be a most narrow and inconvenient construction of the rule.'

IN Ward v. Gamgee (Notes of Cases, p. 138) a motion was made before Mr. Justice Stirling that affidavits might be taken off the file on the ground that they were not taken before a commissioner or a person duly appointed to administer oaths, and were a fraud on the Court and the defendant. The affidavits in question appear to have been sworn before a gentleman who, being at the time an attorney, had been duly appointed a commissioner by the Court of Exchequer, but who was afterwards struck off the roll of solicitors in 1883. His appointment as commissioner was made under 22 Vict. c. 16. The jurisdiction is now vested in the Lord Chancellor by the recent Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889. The appointment not having been revoked by the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Justice Stirling was of opinion that this commissioner could act under his commission though no longer a practising solicitor or, indeed, a solicitor at all.

THE Reformatory and Industrial Schools Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 23), 'to assist the managers of reformatory and industrial schools in advantageously launching into useful careers the children under their charge,' is a humane and useful one. By the present law a child convicted of crime, &c., may be sent to an industrial school (see Industrial Schools Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 118), s. 18) for such time as to the convicting justices seems proper for the teaching and training of the child, but not in any case extending beyond the time when the child will attain the age of sixteen years, and to a reformatory school (see Reformatory Schools Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 117), s. 14) for a period of not less than two and not more than five years. The new Act provides that, if a child conducts himself well in either class of school, 'the managers of the school may, with his own consent, apprentice him to or dispose of him in any trade, calling, or service, or by emigration, notwithstanding that his period of detention has not expired,' and further enacts that 'such apprenticing or disposition shall be as valid as if the managers were his parents.' In case of emigration, and in any case, unless the child has been detained for twelve months, the consent of a Secretary of State is to be required for any exercise of the powers of the Act.

THE recent case of Regina v. The Judge of the City of London Court, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 575, disclosed what would seem to be an unfortunate omission in section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43). It was there held that an action commenced in the High Court cannot be sent down for trial in a County Court under that section where the plaintiff has discontinued, and only a counter-claim remains to be tried. Section 65 provides that where in any action of contract brought in the High Court the claim does not exceed 100*l.*, or where such claim, though it originally exceeded 100*l.*, is reduced by payment, an admitted set-off or otherwise to a sum not exceeding 100*l.*, it shall be lawful for either party to the action at any time, 'if the whole or part of the demand of the plaintiff be contested,' to apply to a judge to order the action to be tried in a County Court. Upon the language of the section as it stands the Court could hardly have arrived at any other conclusion, for, as Mr. Justice Smith pointed out, the above condition does not exist where the plaintiff's claim has been abandoned. Bearing in mind, however, that one of the principal objects of the Act is to discourage litigation in respect of small amounts in the High Court, it seems difficult to suppose that it was intended by section 65 to create any distinction in this respect between a contested claim and a contested counter-claim.

IN the case of Bishop v. Taylor & Co., 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 556, the Court had to determine the question whether a covenant in a lease that the lessee should not assign or part with possession of the premises without the consent of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld, was a 'usual covenant.' Sir G. Jessel, M.R., in the case of Hampshire v. Wickens, 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 243, had laid it down that a covenant by a lessee that he would not without the lessor's consent 'assign, underlet, or part with the possession of the said premises, but such consent not to be withheld to a respectable and responsible tenant,' was not a usual covenant, and the Court (Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Grantham) were clearly of opinion, upon the authority of that case, that the covenant in question was not a usual one, and that, as it had not been disclosed to the purchaser prior to his signing the agreement, he was entitled to refuse to complete the purchase upon the ground that it had been inserted in the lease.

THE case of Stables v. Eley, 1 C. & P. 614, which has long been the object of adverse criticism, has at last been emphatically disapproved of by the Court of Appeal in Smith v. Bailey, L. R. 1891, 2 Q. B. Div. 403. The latter case was an action against the owner of a traction-engine, which had been let by him for three months, for damages caused by the negligent management of it upon a highway. Stables v. Eley was cited by counsel as authority for the proposition that if a man allows a carriage to go out with his name upon it he holds himself out as liable for injury occasioned by the negligence of any person driving it. Both Pollock ('Partnership,' 5th edit. p. 53) and Lindley ('Partnership,' 5th edit. p. 47) have pointed out that in principle the doctrine of holding-out applies only where a person has altered his position on the faith of a representation, and therefore does not apply in cases of tort. This view was taken by the Court of Appeal, but they thought it unnecessary to express an opinion whether, under the circumstances in Stables v. Eley, there would be any primâ facie evidence of liability against the owner. This has more than once been suggested as the true effect and substance of the decision; see, for instance, 'Lindley on Partnership,' pp. 47, 214. Lord Justice Bowen, however, incidentally said that the provision of section 7 of the Locomotives Act, 1865, which requires the name and address of the owner to be affixed to an engine, was probably intended to assist any member of the public in finding out the person responsible. This is often a difficult point in practice; and in this view the rule of primâ facie liability in such circumstances appears to be a most salutary one, tending in some measure to protect the public against a persistent and unreasonable refusal on the part of the owner to supply the plaintiff or his solicitor with information necessary for the preparation of his case.

THE Recorder of London shows no signs of failing strength in the discharge of his duties as judge of a Criminal Court. In such 'sensational' trials as that of Newton, the prisoner charged with the abduction of a young girl living in the Strand, there is always danger of a weak judge being more or less affected by the strong tide of public sentiment which ebbs and flows according to the latest disclosures of details in the press. The case was interesting because of the romantic affection displayed by the girl for a man more than double her age; but there were no legal difficulties, and if there had been a chance of escape for the prisoner on any technical ground he destroyed it by his voluntary confession. The learned Recorder, in passing sentence of six months' imprisonment, showed that, while alive to the necessity of protecting female chastity, he could make some allowance for 'human nature,' and for the peculiar circumstances of a case in which there was evidently something to be said 'on the other side.'

The late Mr. Bernard Wake, of Sheffield, whose attendance at the provincial meetings of the Incorporated Law Society made him familiar to hundreds of solicitors, had a lofty ideal of professional duty. His will has lately been proved for a large sum, and in the bequest to one of his sons of such 'goodwill' as subsisted in him in regard to his profession of a solicitor, the testator impresses on his son his earnest desire that he will continue his profession of a solicitor, which Mr. Wake regarded 'as a high calling and worthy of the full exercise of all the powers which a man possesses.' If this standard were more generally reached, or at least aimed at, there would be fewer scandals to the discredit of the legal profession.

TENANTS HOLDING OVER.

