

THE LAW JOURNAL:

A WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF

NOTES OF CASES AND LEGAL NEWS.

VOL. XXVI.—1891.

[The Notes of Cases and the Gazette List are arranged to be bound each in a separate volume.]

LONDON:

PUBLISHED BY

F. E. STREETEN, AT THE OFFICE, 5 QUALITY COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO., NEW-STREET SQUARE
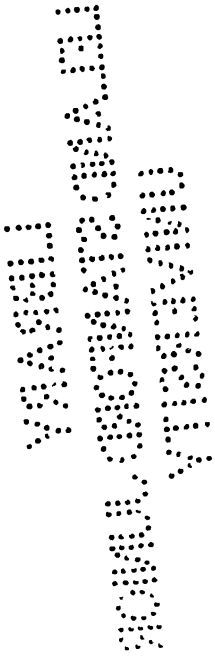
LONDON



INDEX TO VOL. XXVI.—1891.

	Per Annum £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:— If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

MR. SCULLY and the Parnellites are said to be threatening a petition against the return of Sir J. P. Hennessy for Kilkenny, on the ground of undue influence on the part of the priests. It may be worth while to point out that the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, amended the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854, in an important particular bearing on this question. The Act of 1883, by section 2, enacts that 'every person directly or indirectly . . . . make use of or threaten to make use of any force, violence, or restraint, or inflict or threaten to inflict by himself or by any other person any temporal or spiritual injury . . . . or loss upon any person in order to induce or compel such person to vote or refrain from voting shall be guilty of undue influence.' Now the words 'temporal or spiritual' did not occur in the repealed section 5 of the Act of 1854, for which this section is substituted. They were inserted, no doubt, with a view to the celebrated judgment of the late Mr. Justice Keogh in the two Galway cases, 1 O'M. & H. 46, 303, and 2 O'M. & H. 46. In the first of these cases the charges of undue influence failed, the learned judge declining 'to hold a very hard-and-fast line as to language which might be used in excited times either by Catholic ecclesiastics or by civilians.' In the second, Captain Nolan was unseated on the ground of undue influence, Mr. Justice Keogh holding that 'there was a foregone conclusion on the part of the Archbishop, his suffragan bishop, and the greater part, if not the whole, of the parish priests to strain every point, to move every engine, to use every influence to gain their object, to overthrow all free will and liberty' in Galway; and Mr. Trench, who had the minority of the votes, ultimately obtained the seat by the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas on a case stated under the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, as may be seen from Trench v. Nolan, 6 Ir. Rep. C. L. 464.

THE 159th section of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, re-enacting section 5 of the Municipal Corporations Act Amendment Act, 1861, which replaced section 102 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, enacts that the clerk to borough justices 'shall not, by himself or his partner or otherwise, be directly or indirectly employed or interested in the prosecution of any offender committed for trial by those justices, or any of them,' and that if any person acts in contravention of this enactment 'he shall, for every offence, be liable to a fine not exceeding 100*l.*, recoverable by action.' Clerks to county justices, however, are still allowed to conduct, and very frequently do conduct, the prosecution of offenders committed for trial by such justices, to the very great discredit of the administration of the criminal law. Mr. Justice Wills having recently stigmatised the system as 'abominable,' it may be expected that a determined attempt to abolish it will be made by the Government sooner or later. But would it not be well for the Law Society to take the initiative? The present 'abominable' system, so long as it exists, is a very great disadvantage to solicitors as a body, who are undeservedly suffering from the imputation that now and then committals, on the advice of the clerk to the committing justices, would not take place, and innocent persons would not be prosecuted if it were not for the desire of the clerk to get to himself the profit of prosecuting. An abominable system indeed!

A SERIOUS accident has recently happened at Redruth by reason of a platform giving way beneath a crowd which was apparently too great for its strength. It may be well to point out that the adoptive Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, provides new and fairly efficient means for insuring the security of platforms. By section 37 of this Act, 'whenever large numbers of persons are likely to assemble on the occasion of any show, entertainment, public procession, open-air meeting, or other like occasion, every roof of a building, and every platform, balcony, or other structure or part thereof let or used, or intended to be let or used, for the purpose of affording sitting or standing accommodation for a number of persons, shall be safely constructed or secured to the satisfaction of the surveyor of the urban authority;' and 'any person who allows to be used any platform not so safely constructed or secured' is liable to a penalty not exceeding 50*l*. This provision is a very reasonable one, and its enactment amongst the many sections of the third part of the Act of 1890 forms of itself a strong reason for the adoption by local authorities of that part of the Act at any rate. The common law liability, however, of the person allowing a platform to be used by the public is of a very extensive character, as was held by the Exchequer Chamber in Francis v. Cockrell, 39 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 291. In that case the plaintiff, who had been injured by the falling of a grand stand to which he had been admitted to view some races, successfully sued a person who had employed a competent contractor to erect the stand, and was not only himself quite free from negligence, but derived no profit from the admission money, which was appropriated to the race fund. Whether this common law liability would be extinguished upon the certificate of safety being obtained from the local surveyor under the new Act is doubtful; but we are inclined to think that it would not.

SINCE the repeal of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, a trustee who pays a fund into Court under the Trustee Relief Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96) is no longer required to set forth in his affidavit the names of the persons entitled to the fund; and, according to the decision of Mr. Justice Chitty in In re Graham's Trusts (Notes of Cases, p. 164), he is no longer bound to give notice to such persons under rule 5 of the Chancery Funds (Amended) Orders, 1874, that order having been rendered of no effect by such repeal. It seems that rule 41 of the Supreme Court Funds Rules, 1886, does not require trustees paying money into Court under the Trustee Relief Act to set out in the affidavit the names and addresses of the parties interested. Rule 34 of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874, was repealed by rule 2 of the Funds Rules of 1884. Rule 5 of the Chancery Funds (Amended) Orders, 1874, did require trustees so paying money into Court to give notice to the persons named in the affidavit which had to be made in pursuance of rule 34 of the Consolidated Rules, 1874, but since the making of rule 41 of the 1886 rules, rule 5 of the Amended Rules of 1874 becomes of no effect. Mr. Justice Chitty thought that the change must be taken to have been deliberately made because of the great difficulty in giving notice. Money is often paid into Court simply because the trustees do not know who are entitled to it, or what their addresses are. Moreover, as the matter must in every case come before the Court, the fund is sure not to be parted with until the right persons have been served.

IN In re The Agricultural Hotel Company (Lim.) (Notes of Cases, p. 168), which came last week before Mr. Justice Kekewich, the important question again arose whether, under the Companies Act, 1867 and 1877, a company has power to reduce a portion only of its capital, or whether it must reduce the whole capital; in other words, whether a company can reduce its ordinary shares without at the same time reducing its preference shares, and vice versâ. On this question there is some conflict of authority. In the case of In re The Union Plate Glass Company (Lim.), 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 767; L. R. 42 Chanc. Div. 513, Lord Justice, then Mr. Justice, Kay decided that a company had no power to reduce some of its shares without reducing the whole, and accordingly he refused to sanction a proposed reduction. That decision was, however, contrary to the opinion which had been previously expressed by Mr. Justice North in In re The Barrow Hæmatite Steel Company, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 148; L. R. 39 Chanc. Div. 582, and in In re The Quebrada Railway, Land, and Copper Company (Lim.), 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 332; L. R. 40 Chanc. Div. 363.

SHORTLY after Mr. Justice Kay's decision in In re The Union Plate Glass Company (Lim.) (ubi supra) the point came before Mr. Justice North in In re The Gatling Gun Company (Lim.), 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 279; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 628. The learned judge preferred to follow his own decisions than to give way to the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Justice Kay. His lordship adhered to the view which he had laid down in In re The Barrow Hæmatite Steel Company (Lim.) (ubi supra). With regard to the observation of Mr. Justice Kay that he could not find the smallest intimation that the statutes gave a company power to reduce certain of its shares without reducing the others, Mr. Justice North remarked that he could not find the smallest intimation that the Acts prevented a company from reducing some of its shares without reducing the others. If a proper case was shown, his lordship said, for the Court giving its assent to what was proposed, he thought there was nothing in the Acts to deprive the company of the power of doing it.

IN In re The Agricultural Hotel Company (Lim.) a petition was presented for the reduction of the capital of a company which had both ordinary and preference shares, but desired only to reduce the former. On the question whether this could be done without reducing the preference shares also, Mr. Justice Kekewich said that, if the decision of Mr. Justice Kay in In re The Union Plate Glass Company (Lim.) had stood alone, he would have followed it, but that, having regard to the several contrary decisions of Mr. Justice North, his lordship was bound to exercise his own judgment, which was in favour of the view of Mr. Justice North, and not of that of Mr. Justice Kay. It was to be hoped, Mr. Justice Kekewich added, that the point would soon be settled by the Court of Appeal. His lordship refrained from giving any opinion whether the Court could sanction the reduction of one part of one class of capital.

THE recent case of Barrow v. Isaacs requires very careful consideration, the more especially as it has a most important bearing on the everyday practice of underletting where the lease requires the lessor's consent to the underlease. The action was for forfeiture of a lease on the ground of the breach of the covenant not to underlet without the consent of the lessor in writing, 'such consent not to be arbitrarily withheld.' The defendant had underlet to a tenant admitted to be highly respectable and fully responsible, but without applying to the plaintiff for his consent, the omission so to apply arising simply from the defendant's solicitor's clerk having forgotten to refer to the lease, and consequently having overlooked the covenant and the necessity to apply for consent. Day, J., ruled that there was no answer to the action, and the Court of Appeal has in a considered judgment affirmed this ruling. We quite agree, if we may say so, with the learned judgment of Lord Justice Kay that the oversight of the defendant's solicitor's clerk was not one of those mistakes against which equity would relieve on general grounds. (See per Lord Eldon in Hill v. Barclay, 16 Ves. 402; 18 Ves. 56.) But was there a breach at all? Lord Esher, though perfectly certain that if the plaintiff had been asked at the time, it never would have crossed his mind to object to the subtenants, 'that his pretended objection, taken after he had found there had been this slip, was a mere afterthought, and that his consent ought not, according to the covenant itself, to have been withheld,' says, 'Nevertheless, as his consent was not asked, it is obvious that there was a breach of the covenant.' Is it so obvious? In Hyde v. Warden, 47 Law J. Rep. Exch. 121, Lord Justice Brett and Chief Justice Cockburn concur in effect in the proposition that where the subtenant is in fact respectable and responsible, the head landlord cannot eject as on a breach of a qualified covenant of this kind on the ground that no consent in writing has been obtained, and for this Treloar v. Bigge, 43 Law J. Rep. Exch. 95, is cited. In Treloar v. Bigge (which, however, was not a forfeiture case) consent had been asked for and refused, as indeed, for anything that appears to the contrary, it may have been in Hyde v. Warden. On the whole, we think that Hyde v. Warden is distinguishable, and if not distinguishable, is wrong on this point, and that the judgment in Barrow v. Isaacs is quite correct, and will be treated as a binding authority for the future. Whether the severity of the excluding subsection 6 of section 14 of the Conveyancing Act requires mitigating may perhaps be a question for Parliament, and we may mention that last session a bill was introduced by Mr. Lloyd Morgan to provide, amongst other things, that the exclusion should be done away with. Should the bill be reintroduced, Barrow v. Isaacs will give it not a little motive power, for the lease was a beneficial one, and the hardship on the tenant, who happens to have been recently the Lord Mayor of London, a very great one.

IF a suggestion had been made a few years ago that the Incorporated Law Society should give a subscription 'entertainment' in place of holding its annual London meeting, the idea would certainly have been scouted and its author regarded as forgetful of the dignity of his profession. But tempora mutantur, &c., applies no less to the chief Law Society than to other mundane institutions; and probably nothing more than a feeling of mild surprise, combined with a certain amount of curiosity as to the nature of the 'entertainment,' was caused by the somewhat vaguely worded circular of December 17 addressed to the members. A second circular, issued on Christmas Eve, gave more particulars, and it is now apparently settled that the 'entertainment' (some of the provincial members had evidently anticipated a 'variety entertainment'!) shall be a reception, a conversazione, and a dance at the society's hall in Chancery Lane in April next. If the guarantee fund be well supported, the 'function' will, no doubt, prove a great success and conduce to the cultivation of friendly intercourse between members of a profession whose future position depends very much on their hearty unanimity in resisting attacks from without and healing dissensions from within. This new departure is at least noteworthy as an example of the growing influence of 'lovely woman;' for who can doubt that the 'happy thought' emanated from the ladies?

WITH reference to our remarks last week upon the case of Mumford v. Collier, we are informed upon good authority that Ex parte Kennedy, in re Willis, is not to go to the House of Lords.

WE understand that at the Hardwicke Debating Society a resolution in favour of sympathy with, and support of, General Booth's scheme was carried just before the Christmas vacation by a small majority after two nights' debate. At the first debate General Booth himself attended and spoke, and there was a very large attendance indeed, the Inner Temple Lecture Hall being crowded. At the second debate Mr. Loch, the secretary of the Charity Organisation Society, had been expected to speak, but illness unfortunately prevented him from attending.

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR JANUARY.

To the January number of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS are prefixed seventy-six new Rules of the Supreme Court, constituting the General Rules under the Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 and 1890, dated November 26, 1890, to which copious forms are attached; the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890, 180 in number, and an appendix and index of forms; and two Orders of the Lord Chancellor, dated November 29, 1890, under section 1, subsection 5, and section 2 of the same Act, by the first of which County Courts 'excluded from having jurisdiction in bankruptcy' 'shall be excluded from having jurisdiction under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890,' and enacting that the district of any such County Court shall for the purpose of the Winding-up Act be attached to the Court to which that district is attached for the purpose of bankruptcy jurisdiction.

In the Chancery Division (pp. 1–48), in which eighteen cases will be found reported, Taylor v. Russell, in which Mr. Justice Kay was reversed, decides that in a contest between mortgagees for priority, a trust or equity, in order to affect the conscience of a mortgagee who has got in the legal estate, must be a trust or equity in favour of the mortgagee against whom the legal estate is set up. In In re Macgowan, Macgowan v. Murray the question was what constitutes an 'arrangement' for the sale of land which, within rule 11 under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, entitles a solicitor to the scale fee for negotiating. Mr. Justice Kay held that a solicitor who had brought about a conditional contract of sale of property forming the object of an administration action, such sale being subsequently sanctioned by the Court, was not entitled to the fee for 'negotiating.' This decision has, however, since been reversed by the Court of Appeal (see Notes of Cases, p. 161). According to In re Kershaw executors are not bound, in distributing their testator's estate, to retain assets in their hands to meet a liability of which they have notice unless the liability amounts to a debt. Ex parte The Scottish Economic Life Assurance Society enunciates the principle by which the return of the deposit required by the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, is regulated in the case of the amalgamation of two companies. The House of Lords, in Perry, Davis & Son v. Harbord, held that when a combination of words has been used as a trade-mark before the passing of the Trade-mark Regulation Act, 1875, a part of such combination cannot be registered as a trade-mark under section 10 of the Act. In re Winslow, Frere v. Winslow, was a case in which a beneficiary under a will, who had received more than his share, was not ordered to refund. Kelly v. Heathman decided that the amendment of a specification, which did not make the specification as amended claim an invention substantially larger than or different from the invention claimed by the original specification, did not invalidate the patent. In re Walker illustrates what constitutes such a possession of money by a defaulting trustee as will justify attachment. In Ashworth v. Roberts the duties of a licensee of a patent are discussed. In re Alsbury is an application of the doctrine laid down by the House of Lords in Bouch v. Sproule, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1037, with respect to income and capital as between a tenant-for-life and a remainderman. The House of Lords in Storer & Co. v. Johnson & Weatherall held that the Court has powers under its general jurisdiction, and not under the Solicitors Act, 1843, to refer part of an agent's bill to taxation. In re May was a case of the operation of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, on the administration of a man's estate by his widow. In re Cane settled a point of construction of a will and the practice under a special case stated under Order XXXIV. What is a 'public company' for the purposes of an investment clause was defined in Rickett v. Sharp: In re Sharp. In re The Earl of Lucan decides that, though a voluntary assignment of a reversionary fund effectually passes the equitable interest, a charge on such a fund, unaccompanied by an assignment, will not be enforced against the fund. In Mellersh v. Brown it was held that in a mortgage of reversionary personal estate, in which there was no covenant for payment of interest after the date fixed for repayment of the principal, interest must be paid by way of damages in a redemption or foreclosure action. In Jenkins v. Jackson the practice of the taxing-master in apportioning costs when each party is partially successful is settled in accordance with Knight v. Pursell, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 120. In re Hirst's Mortgage decides that a petition by a mortgagee under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 108, for leave to sell the surface of the mortgaged property with a reservation of the minerals, must be served on the mortgagor.

In the Queen's Bench Division (pp. 1-32), in which nine cases are reported, Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co. shows the effect of a strike with respect to liabilities arising under a charterparty and bill of lading. In Bird v. Davey, the oft-arising question of the attestation of a bill of sale was again the subject of decision by the Court of Appeal. In Wilding v. Bean it was held that there is no jurisdiction to order substituted service of a writ within the jurisdiction when the defendant is out of the jurisdiction, at any rate when he is not shown to have left the jurisdiction to evade service. The construction of a bill of sale was again raised in Haslewood v. The Consolidated Company, and the differences of judicial opinion discussed. The Overseers of Putney v. The London and South-Western Railway Company was a case of the liability of the promoters of a railway company in respect to the deficiency of poor rate occasioned by the company's taking land outside their limits of deviation. In The Mayor, &c., of Manchester v. Williams it was held that an action for libel could not be maintained by a corporation in the absence of an allegation that the corporation's property had been injured. Mackay v. M'Guire was a case of the retention of a bankrupt's name on the list of parliamentary and municipal voters, notwithstanding that his property vested in his trustee, inasmuch as the bankrupt had been in continuous occupation and paid rent to his landlord. The validity of entries of objection in respect of the occupation franchise was adjudicated in Sutton v. Wade and Gale v. Overend.

In the Magistrates' Cases (pp. 1-8), of which four appear in this number, in Showers and others (appellants) and The Assessment Committee of the Chelmsford Union (respondents), the ratability of premises occupied by the chief constable and men of the Essex constabulary was decided in favour of the poor-law authority. In Payne v. Thomas a conviction was affirmed for selling liquor otherwise than by standard measure. Edwards v. Roberts was a case of non-compliance with section 2 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857. In Foster (appellant) v. The North Hendrie Lead Mining Company (respondents) it was held that a mining shaft in which the process of sinking to a depth exceeding fifty yards is in progress, and which has not been exempted by the inspector, is a working shaft within the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, s. 23, subs. 10, and must be provided with guides, although it has not been worked for the ordinary purposes of a mine in operation.

THE AMERICAN COPYRIGHT BILL.

A PRINT of the American Copyright Bill, to which we have more than once adverted (see ante, pp. 728, 743), can now be had at Messrs. Sampson Low's. After careful perusal of the bill we are not surprised at the consternation it is causing in the English printing trade, as evidenced by the letters of Mr. Arnold Forster and Mr. Clowes to the Times, and of the chairman of the Printing and Allied Trades' Association to the Daily Graphic. Shortly put, the bill aims at nothing less than a transfer of a great portion of English printing business to the United States, in requiring that American mechanical production shall be a condition precedent to American copyright. Of the three chief parties to the circulation for sale of literary matter—the author, the publisher, and the printer—the first two have comparatively little concern as to the place where the printer plays his part, and both of them will be likely enough to prefer to home production that foreign production which will ensure the greatest amount of sale. Whether a policy of stand-off and acceptance of the American bill as it stands will be to the real interest of authors and publishers is another question. Mr. Tuer, who is well known as a publisher, but is, we think, also an author, has argued in the Times that it would be for the interest of neither, and we are inclined to agree with him; but the question is too wide to discuss here and now. Let us at present confine ourselves to ascertaining the meaning of the American bill. The crucial clause of it, omitting superfluous matter, is as follows:—

No person shall be entitled to a copyright unless he shall on or before the day of publication in this or any foreign country deliver . . . within the United States . . . a printed copy of the title of the book . . . for which he desires a copyright, nor unless he shall also, not later than the day of publication thereof in this or any foreign country, deliver . . . within the United States two copies of such copyright book. . . . Provided that the two copies of the same required to be delivered as above shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States or from plates made therefrom. During the existence of such copyright, the importation into the United States of any book so copyrighted, or any edition or editions thereof, or any plates of the same not made from type set within the limits of the United States shall be, and it is hereby, prohibited except in the cases specified in section 2,505 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and except in the cases of persons purchasing for use and not for sale who import not more than two copies of such book at any one time. . . . Provided, nevertheless, that in the case of books in foreign languages, of which only translations in English are copyrighted, the prohibition of importation shall apply only to the translations of the same, and the importation of the books in the original language shall be permitted.

Section 2,505 of the Revised Statutes exempts from duty books more than twenty years old, books for the use of philosophical societies or schools, professional books of foreigners, &c. The exceptions from the prohibition to import will, therefore, generally include books for use and not for sale. Where these exceptions do not apply, no English prints of books copyrighted in America will be allowed to be imported into America at all. In order to obtain the American copyright, the printing in America, before publication in England, of two copies will be required. This will not of itself necessitate the printing in America only, or even the printing in America of more than the two copies, but, of course, the practical effect in a considerable number of cases will be that all the copies of a book will be printed in America only and sent over to this country to be bound and sold. A point of greater importance is that the American copyright must be taken out at once or it will be lost. The unknown author therefore, for whose book the demand in America will be little or none, will, in many cases, lose the American copyright by not venturing upon the double expense of printing in the two countries. The 'advance' sheets system, in the event of no copyright being taken out in America, may go on as before.

The bill contains thirteen clauses. It applies to works of art and dramatic and musical compositions as well as books, but the crucial clause, which we have extracted above, affects, in its essential part, books only. The period of copyright will be twenty-eight years, with power to extend for fourteen years more. As to 'reciprocity,' it is proposed that—

This Act shall only apply to a citizen of a foreign State or nation when such foreign State or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens; or when such foreign State or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America copyright privileges substantially similar to those provided for in this Act; or when such foreign State or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocities in the grant of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States of America may at pleasure become a party to such agreement.

STOCKBROKERS' PLEDGES OF OTHER PEOPLES' SECURITIES.

IN a former article on this subject, soon after Mr. Justice Kekewich had given judgment in the cases of Simmons v. The London Joint Stock Bank and Little v. The London Joint Stock Bank, dissatisfaction was expressed with the decision, principally on the ground that the learned judge had been too much influenced by the decision of the House of Lords in The Earl of Sheffield v. The London Joint Stock Bank, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 986; L. R. 13 App. Cas. 333. As we then pointed out, the Lords there only drew a certain inference from certain facts, which were in some respects different from those in the cases before Mr. Justice Kekewich, where the pledges had been made by stockbrokers and not a money-dealer, as in Lord Sheffield's Case. The Court of Appeal has been to quite as great an extent overawed by the decision of the supreme tribunal. Lord Justice Bowen, in delivering the judgment of the Court, after stating the facts of Simmons's Case, says that Lord Sheffield's Case 'seems to show that, under such circumstances, the bank acquired no title to the bonds as against the true owner.' This is assuming that the facts were the same as in Lord Sheffield's Case. As a matter of fact, there is this great distinction between the two cases—that in the House of Lords' case the person who deposited the bonds payable to bearer belonging to his customers en bloc, with other customers' bonds, was a money dealer, whereas in Simmons's and Little's Cases the deposit of customers' bonds to bearer en bloc was by a stockbroker. The Court of Appeal has done its best to decide a neat point of law. Taking the circumstances of Simmons's Case it held, and we think rightly, that the securities to bearer belonged to the broker's client. Then it assumed, in order 'to avoid a miscarriage of justice,' what would, perhaps, have been difficult to prove, that the securities were 'completely negotiable' instruments. Then it proceeded to draw the inference of fact necessary in order to arrive at a decision against the bank. 'The bank,' says the Court of Appeal, 'were aware that the bonds might very probably belong, not to' the broker 'at all, but to one or more of his clients. The bank took it for granted that, if the bonds did not in fact belong to' the broker 'he had been authorised by the real owner to raise money on the bonds, within the limit of their market value. This assumption and belief were based, not on inquiry or investigation, but on the bank's faith in the honesty of' the broker, 'and was, in fact, erroneous. But the bank did not believe that' the broker 'had been authorised by the real owner to deposit the bonds en bloc, together with other securities which belonged to other persons, and to raise a lump sum upon the whole. The bank were, indeed, honestly of opinion that' the broker 'might lawfully do so,' but 'they based their view upon a mistaken assumption that such deposit en bloc, without authority from the client, was recognised by the law.' Explaining this, the Court says that the bank 'knew that the bonds in question might probably belong to a third person; they did not know and did not believe that the owner had authorised their being deposited and pledged en bloc, but they honestly believed that such an authority from the owner was not necessary in law, if he had sanctioned . . . the pledging of the documents for any sum of money whatever.' Assuming these to be the facts, the Court of Appeal held that the bank never became bonâ fide holders for value without notice, but had chosen to shut their eyes to a necessary part of the inquiry under a misconception of the law. This is straining the doctrine of notice beyond anything which has so far been done, except, perhaps, in The Earl of Sheffield's Case. The ruling applies to all negotiable instruments, including Bank of England notes. If a case as to money dealers is a binding authority as to stockbrokers, a case as to stockbrokers is binding in a case of anyone pledging a banknote or other strictly negotiable security when the pledgee knows that the security may belong to a third person. A mortgagee was long ago held to be a purchaser for value. Are all purchasers for value to be affected with notice when they purchase a negotiable instrument, or take banknotes in exchange for cash, 'knowing that they may belong to a third person?' In all cases they know of that possibility. The decision upsets all one's notions of the effect of a transfer of a negotiable instrument; it is opposed to a decision, exactly in point, of the Exchequer Chamber; and, if it is not reversed on appeal, it will be because the House of Lords considers itself bound by Lord Sheffield's Case to draw an inference of fact much stronger than that drawn by the Court of Appeal in Simmons's and Little's Cases.

Reviews.

THE ARBITRATION ACT, 1889.

The Law of Arbitration. Being the Arbitration Act, 1889, with Notes of Statutes, Rules of Court, Forms, and Cases, and an Appendix. By W. OUTRAM CREWE, Solicitor, &c., with Honours, Hilary Term, 1866. London: Wm. Clowes & Sons. 1890.

THIS handy manual supplies the reader in a convenient form with the Arbitration Act, 1889 (which repealed the previously existing general enactments relating to arbitration), the rules, forms, &c. Those who desire to inform their minds on the general history of the law of arbitration may be referred to the preface, where they will find it stated that that very ancient mode of settling disputes probably existed before the Twelve Tables of Rome, 450 B.C.; that it was recommended by Plato in his work on 'The Laws,' which was based on the actual legal system of the Athenians and Spartans; and that it is treated of in the 'Digest' of Justinian. It is more, however, to the purpose for the modern reader to be told that now, by section 1 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, a submission to arbitration, unless a contrary intention be expressed in it, is irrevocable, except by the leave of a judge, and that it is to have the same effect in all respects as if it had been made an order of Court; and that an award on a submission may, by leave of the Court or a judge, be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order to the same effect. The Act of 1889, s. 24, provides that the Act shall apply to every arbitration under any Act passed before and after its commencement, and accordingly at p. 79 we have a long list of the enactments containing arbitration clauses. The work is carefully done, and will prove serviceable to those who are engaged in arbitration cases.

Correspondence.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—LEGAL CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT.

SIR,—As it may be expected that law students will shortly return to their reading, I beg you will allow me to call their attention, through the medium of your journal, to the above-named auxiliary to legal education.

The object of the department is the discussion of legal points, obtained by an organised system of correspondence. The department is divided into sections. A like question is issued to each section on a large sheet of paper, on which is a list of members in the section. The first member on the list, on receiving the form from the secretary, writes his opinion upon it and forwards it to the next member, who acts similarly, and the form is kept moving till it reaches the last member on the list, who returns it to the secretary. He sends it round a second time, and thus every member has the opportunity of seeing the opinions respectively of the entire section, of commenting upon them, and of amending or defending his own opinion. It is not obligatory on members to write opinions, though it is very desirable that all should do so.

The advantages of the department are obvious. First, the attention of members is called to questions of doubt or interest. Secondly, members acquire the useful habit of expressing themselves clearly and forcibly on legal points. This habit proves invaluable in the answering of examination questions, as the finals of this and previous years disclose, many of the members having obtained honours. Thirdly, which is perhaps the chief advantage, law students in all parts of the country and in London are brought into friendly intercourse and become cognisant of one another's reasoning powers and acquaintance with the law.

Members are entitled to compete for the societies in union prizes, value five, three, and two guineas, offered annually by the United Law Society.

I shall be happy to give any further information to law students who may apply to me.

I hope to have a very large influx of new members to help me in maintaining the prestige of the department, which has been working efficiently for upwards of fifteen years. HENRY ENGLAND BARREN.

23 Bouverie Street, E.C.: Dec. 31.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS AS PROSECUTING SOLICITORS.

SIR,—In your issue of December 20, 1890, you have a few comments upon the remarks recently made by Mr. Justice Wills upon this subject. What, I ask, would the learned judge have said had he known that many country justices' clerks act as private solicitors in respect of business coming before their own benches of magistrates? The writer is aware of a case at present in which the justices' clerk for the division is acting in respect of an application to divert a public highway, and as solicitor for the applicant prepared the notices to come before justices of his own bench, and the same clerk to justices has for years been preparing nearly all the notices to come before his bench as solicitor for parties applying to transfer public-house licenses. Is it not holding a brief for the brewers as against the general public? W.

SIR,—The remarks of Mr. Justice Wills, at Liverpool, are hardly fair, as the hypothetical case he put was not parallel with the case of a clerk to justices.

It makes no difference whatever to a clerk whether a prisoner is convicted or not; and, in most cases, the question for committal is not one for the clerk, but for the bench.

It may not be generally known that a circular was some time ago issued from the Home Office to clerks to justices intimating to the effect that a previous conviction for felony was an antecedent under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which rendered it obligatory upon the justices to send a case for trial.

Let the public and the judges by all means quarrel with the law, and the Home Office, and the discretion exercised by justices in petty sessions as much as they like, but do not let them blame and attack the wrong body of men.

Again; why, in the name of common fairness, should justices' clerks be prohibited and disqualified from being prosecuting solicitors and exercising the ordinary rights of their profession?

I would suggest that justices in petty sessions—the Court being composed of not less than three—should have much greater powers conferred on them, either on a plea of guilty or otherwise, with regard to many cases now sent for trial at the assizes or sessions. It seems ridiculous to suppose that a burglar, caught red-handed and pleading guilty, could not have speedy justice meted out to him by three of Her Majesty's justices. Prisoners would not have to lie languishing in gaol awaiting trial, and a vast expense would be saved to the community. D.

December 20.

MONEY FOUND UPON CONVICTED PRISONERS.

SIR,—In answer to 'Inquirer,' probably section 8 of 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, may assist him as to money found on a vagrant. I cannot understand how a rogue and vagabond would be committed for trial, nor how he would receive nine months, as the limit of punishment for a rogue and vagabond is three months. Does not 'Inquirer' mean the man was committed as an incorrigible rogue? C. FORTESCUE.

SKY SIGNS IN LONDON.

SUMMARY OF THE COUNTY COUNCIL'S BILL.

THE following is a summary of the principal provisions of the bill which the County Council will ask Parliament to sanction for the prohibition of future and regulation of existing sky signs in the county of London.

The preamble recites that it is expedient, with a view to the safety of the public and the prevention of unsightly erections in London, to provide for the prohibition of certain erections above buildings or streets for purposes of advertisement, and for the regulation of such erections now existing.

Definition of 'Sky Sign.'—Clause 2 defines a 'sky sign' as meaning any word, letter, device, or representation supported on or attached to any pole, framework, or other support wholly or in part over any house or structure. It further includes any balloon or similar device employed wholly or in part for the purposes of advertisements, but it does not include any flagstaff or weather-cock unless used for advertising purposes.

Inspecting Officer.—Clause 3 enacts that for the purposes of this Act the district surveyor of each district in the metropolis shall inspect sky signs in his district and report from time to time to the council, as to any sky signs existing contrary to the provisions of the Act.

Prohibition of future Sky Signs.—Clause 4 enacts that from and after the passing of this Act it shall be unlawful to erect or place any sky sign wholly or in part above or over any house, building, structure, street, or public way.

Regulation of Existing Sky Signs.—Clause 5 provides that it shall be unlawful from and after the passing of this Act to retain any sky sign which shall have been erected, except in pursuance of, and in accordance with, the terms of a license to be granted by the council.

Certificates as to Existing Sky Signs.—Clause 6 enacts that any person desiring to retain any existing sky sign may at any time, within three months from the passing of the Act, make an application in writing to the surveyor for the district for the inspection of such sky sign, and, upon payment of two guineas to such surveyor (which shall be his fee for the inspection), he shall either grant his certificate for its continuance, or, in case of refusal, shall state the grounds of such refusal.

Application to Council for License.—Clause 7 provides that any person who shall have obtained a certificate of continuance of any sky sign from the surveyor shall, within fourteen days of its issue, forward the same to the council, with an application for a license to retain such sky sign, and, upon payment of a fee of 5*s.* for registration, the council shall grant a license for a period of two years.

Renewal of License — Ultimate Extinction. — Clause 8 enacts that every license may be renewed from the expiration of the first period of two years, for a further period of two years, and on the expiration of that period for one other period of two years, making, with the original term of the license, six years in all, but not longer. This clause further provides that upon every renewal the same payments shall be made, and the same procedure gone through as enacted in clauses 6 and 7.

Alteration of Sky Signs to meet Surveyor's Requirements.—Clause 9 empowers any owner of a sky sign to whom the surveyor has refused his certificate to make such modifications as shall meet the objections stated in the form of refusal, and may thereupon, upon payment of a further sum of one guinea to the surveyor, request him to reinspect the sky sign.

Refusal Certificates to be sent to the Council.—Clause 10 provides that, where a surveyor refuses to grant a certificate, it shall be his duty to forward forthwith a copy of his refusal to the council.

Appeal against Refusal of Certificate.—Clause 11 gives to the owner of an existing sky sign the right of appeal to the council against the refusal of the district surveyor to grant a certificate, provided that the appeal be made within seven days of the refusal.

Forfeiture of License.—Clause 12 enacts that licenses shall be forfeited and become void (1) if any addition, unauthorised, be made to the sky sign; (2) if any change be made in the sign or part thereof; (3) if any part of the sign fall, through accident, decay, or any other cause; (4) if the building over which the sign is placed is altered so as to involve a disturbance of the sign; and (5) if the building become unoccupied or destroyed.

Penalties.—Clause 13 imposes on any person who erects or retains a sky sign contrary to this Act, a penalty of 5*l.*, and for every day on which the offence is continued after conviction a further penalty of 2*l.*

Removal of Sky Signs.—Clause 14 provides that the County Council and the Corporation of London shall have power to remove sky signs erected or retained contrary to the provisions of this Act, as if they were dangerous structures within the meaning of the Building Act, 1855.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

A COMPANIES ACT FOR 1891.

DURING 1890 three statutes affecting companies were passed, and one of them only comes into operation with this year, and yet our wise legislators have already drafted a new measure to be called the 'Companies Act, 1891.' The following brief summary of the bill may give some idea of its intention. It has to be construed, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, as one with the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1886, though this should clearly be the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890. It is proposed that the bill shall become an Act on September 1, 1891. The real object and summum bonum of the bill, however, is to establish the system of provisional registration for companies, to be followed by complete registration. Before complete registration is permitted it will be necessary to show that not less than three-fourths of the shares of the company have been allotted; that not less than one-fifth of every such share, subject to payment in cash, has been so paid in cash; and, finally, that an extraordinary resolution to apply for a certificate of complete registration has been passed by the shareholders, or that the capital has been raised by private subscription without the issue of a prospectus to the public. On these conditions being fulfilled, the registrar will grant a certificate equivalent to the certificate of incorporation now issued under the Companies Act, 1862. It is further proposed to limit the amount of expenditure to be incurred between the provisional and complete registration. The waiver clause of 1867 is apparently to be abolished, as, according to the present bill, it is desired to enact that a waiver is to be absolutely void in point of law, and the consequent necessity will follow of requiring disclosure of every contract, payment, commissions, and the like, and any omission to do so would be fraudulent. Some useful provisions as to the system of keeping company accounts and the duties of directors in relation thereto conclude the principal features of this bill, of which, doubtless, a great deal will be heard in the professional organs of the accountants. Already a financial paper has discussed and virtually condemned it, and, perhaps, if it is likely to extend the present rage for 'officialism,' it would be as well if other professional papers did likewise. There should surely be a via media between the present system of conducting company matters and the infliction of officialism. Cannot some one suggest it?

VALUERS' FEES.

All the foremost towns of the United Kingdom in these latter years of the nineteenth century are bestirring themselves to improve their domains, and, naturally, in doing so have often to trench on private property, for which compensation has to be paid. The owner of the property calls in his valuer, who, as in manner bound, too often runs up the value of the property higher than need be; but, on the other hand, the municipal authorities safeguard themselves by electing a valuer on their side, who, of course, does not appreciate the property so expensively, and then between these two stools and the likelihood of a fall it is as well that an arbitrator can be appointed. For a private owner to value his property at 480*l.* and the arbitrator to award 180*l.* shows a considerable difference and points a moral—to make your claim as reasonable as possible. A nice question arises on these arbitration cases: Is the valuer to obtain his percentage on the amount at which he valued the property, or on the amount awarded by the arbitrator? Looked at from a practical point of view, most persons would say on the latter amount; and that is also the legal view, as demonstrated recently by a case in which a valuer sought to obtain the higher, but only obtained the lower percentage.

'THE COMMERCIAL HANDBOOK.'

Everybody knows Wilson's 'Useful Handy Books,' published by Effingham Wilson, of the Royal Exchange. The latest addition to this series is entitled 'The Commercial Handbook and Office Assistant,' by Mr. Michael Crowley, Fellow of the Society of Accountants and Auditors, and a chartered accountant. It is produced in a handy form in excellent clear, bold type, and divided into four parts, comprising respectively Commercial Definitions and Explanations, Business Forms, Miscellaneous Commercial Information, and Tables of Reference. The author gives a definition of partnership: 'A partnership is an association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business on the mutual understanding of participating in the profits and losses,' and, in a footnote, states that this merely conveys the mercantile idea of partnership. The curious reader is referred to legal text-books for legal definitions of it. In 'Lindley on Partnership' he will find numerous definitions by different lawyers, and in a variety of languages, though, from the difficulty of giving a legal definition positively and negatively correct, the learned author, Sir N. Lindley himself, recoils. Some capital remarks are made on books as evidence. The original entries in shop books with the oath of the bookkeeper are competent evidence, it is stated, to prove the items charged. Written orders for goods and railway and other receipts proving delivery should always be preserved. Books not appearing to contain the first entries or charges made at the time the transactions took place are excluded. Books with erasure or interlineations are also liable to be excluded. When the day-book contains marks which show that the items have been transferred to a ledger, the ledger must be produced. There are many other practical items likely to be of use to lawyers in this little volume, such as notes on payments of accounts, when demandable; method of opening sets of books, 'for sole owner,' for a new partnership, for a hitherto existing partnership; best method of writing off bad debts; and the best method of keeping partnership accounts, (1) where there are no profits or losses, (2) where there is a profit, (3) where there is a loss to be made good. Such a capital, well-written little work as this should be at every professional and commercial man's elbow, and each of his staff should have his own private copy.

DEEDS OF ARRANGEMENT.

The utility of deeds of arrangement seems to be becoming more and more recognised, but as every year new aspirants enter the different professions all cannot be expected to have the Act of 1887 at their fingers' ends. They may, however, obtain sufficient knowledge by perusing an epitome of the Act recently issued by Mr. John Lanham, of the firm of Messrs. Kerr & Lanham, in such a form that it can be carried in any pocket. As the editor states in his introduction, the design of the pages is that of placing concisely before the reader the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, with the Rules and Orders pertaining to the same, in a consolidated and useful form. The Inland Revenue authorities have adjudged that the ad valorem stamp duty payable upon the sworn value of the property passing under the deed attaches upon the net amount only, and not on the total estimated value. The registrar has also decided that the fee for filing is chargeable upon the lower amount. Another work of a similar character should prove a handy one, containing as it does a most valuable collection of precedents. Its title sufficiently indicates its contents: 'Arrangements between Debtors and Creditors, being a Collection of Precedents, by Mr. Frank Dodd, Barrister-at-Law, with an Introduction by Mr. Henry Bolland, F.S.A.' The popularity of the book is shown by its having run into a second edition. It is wise to suggest that, in circumstances of any complication, the deeds or terms of arrangement should be settled by an experienced legal man.

CATTLE—WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Agricultural practitioners would do well to draw the attention of their clients to the new pleuro-pneumonia order now in operation. By the new order boundary lines are to be formed round any district in which there has been an outbreak, the affected cattle and all others in contact with them being slaughtered, and this is compulsory. No movements of cattle from farm to farm within that district or out of it, except by special license, will be allowed, the Board of Agriculture in this matter being guided by their travelling inspectors. In the case of fat cattle intended to be slaughtered within three days, the local authority is allowed to grant such permission; but in all other cases the travelling inspector or other duly appointed person must grant it. Our contemporary the Estates Gazette also draws notice to another matter. Farmers would do well to note that an Act of Parliament comes into force on January 1, amending the Weights and Measures Act, under which they will not only have to get all weights and measures stamped, but all weighing instruments must also be examined and stamped before they can be legally used. Any person having in his possession any unstamped weight, measure, or weighing instrument for purposes of trade will be liable to penalties. There is, therefore, no farmer in the land to whom this Act will not apply, for there must be some part of the farm produce disposed of in such manner as to bring the farmer within the meaning of this measure, the neglect of which entails a penalty of 5*l.*, besides expenses, and also the publication of conviction for breach of the law.

A FLAW IN PROSPECTUSES.

Draftsmen of prospectuses seem to have overlooked the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, and still use in their prospectuses of new companies the stereotyped phrase, 'Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1887,' instead of '1862 to 1890.' The question has thereupon been raised whether persons who have subscribed upon prospectuses so inaccurately worded could not repudiate their liability. It is a very nice point, and doubtless may serve as the proverbial straw to save someone from drowning.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR QUEEN'S BENCH CHAMBERS.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

A to F.

ALL applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Pollock are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 173, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

G to N.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Butler are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 112, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

O to Z.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Manley Smith are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 114, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

The parties are to meet in the anteroom of Masters' Chambers, and the summonses will be inserted in the printed list for the day after the summonses to be heard before the master sitting in chambers, and will be called over by the attendant on the respective rooms for a first and second time at 11.30, and will be dealt with by the master in the same manner as if they were returnable at chambers. BY ORDER OF THE MASTERS.

MASTERS IN CHAMBERS.

A to F.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Kaye.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Johnson.

G to N.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Walton.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Macdonell.

O to Z.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Archibald.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Wilberforce.

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR MISSING HEIRS AND OTHERS IN 1890.

MR. SIDNEY H. PRESTON, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

During the very eventful year now closing numberless advertisements have been issued by solicitors and others inquiring for missing relatives, legatees, and next-of-kin to claim 'windfalls' more or less considerable. In some cases these notices are singularly successful as a means of conveying good news, while in others the persons sought are dead, absent beyond seas, or from other causes fail to respond. As this is pre-eminently the season when most families are thinking of relatives long lost sight of, it seems a convenient moment for summarising the more remarkable of these kindred notices, the subject being of universal interest, and likely to become each year more important as populations increase and our colonies extend.

To begin with 'Crown Windfalls.' Some forty persons died intestate or illegitimate without known heirs, consequently their estates fell to the Crown, and the Treasury solicitor, as the nominee of Her Majesty, advertised for the next-of-kin. The amount of each estate is not stated but some of these windfalls, in past years, have been of immense value, 200,000*l.* being about the maximum.

Henry H., or his representatives, are entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of a castle and other estate in Radnor; and some property has recently been discovered to which the representatives of E. S., of Wakefield, who died in 1857, may be entitled. The address is wanted of a person who obtained his living by conjuring in public-houses; and R. P. B., who went to Australia, and had the misfortune to break his leg, is wanted to claim 2,000*l.* The son of a grocer, last heard of in 1873 travelling with a menagerie, is inquired for; and E. J., of Londonderry, is entitled to 1,000*l.* The descendants of Pierre J., who married in 1742, are sought; 2,500*l.* has become divisible among the nephews and nieces of an innkeeper, who died in 1851; and the sons of a farm bailiff, who left England several years ago, are interested in an estate. W. G., of the Grenadier Guards, who may have died in a hospital, is wanted; also the relatives of a lady, formerly an inmate of the Fulham Union; while the German Consul inquires for H. M. C., of whom it is not known whether he is alive or dead. The papers relating to money and shares of T. J. R., who was burnt to death, are missing; the daughter of a postmaster has died possessed of freehold property to which her missing heirs are entitled; and 3,397*l.* awaits the unknown heirs of John Renny.

The next-of-kin of a governess who died at sea, and of a ship's captain who died at Tahiti, are sought; also information as to the relatives of an Indian princess. Mary T., believed to have died in 1863, or her children, are entitled to a legacy of 3,000*l.*; and a traveller in jewellery, who left for Canada in 1866, is wanted to participate in his father's estate; while R. W., Robert, and Eliza Yates, or their representatives, are only now inquired for as legatees of P. W., who died in 1816. Mr. Pyne, M.P., last seen in 1888, is supposed to have been drowned, and letters of administration have been granted to his estate accordingly. Many similar applications were made, pursuant to the Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Act, under which relatives of Scotchmen 'supposed to be dead' sought to 'uplift and enjoy' their estates. All inquiries as to the next-of-kin of a royal lecturer, who died at Munich, have proved futile; and the children of a captain who went to New Zealand thirty-eight years ago are missing.

Information was sought as to the kindred of a young gentleman who left his home in the eighteenth century, and became a tutor under an assumed name, owing to a breach with his parents; and it would be to the advantage of J. A., the son of a spirit merchant, of Glasgow, to communicate with his father's executors. Mr. de la R., of London, has died abroad leaving property, but his heirs are unknown; and the relations of S. B., who was killed in action on board H.M.S. Monmouth, are interested in an estate in Chancery. A gardener, late of Rosherville Gardens, is entitled to residuary estate; and H. S. C., who left for Australia in 1843, is also entitled to property. The relations of J. C., who died in 1844, are only now sought; also of a Scotch drover, who died in Queensland. Lady S. is wanted to participate in an unclaimed estate left by a lady who died at sea; and representatives of proprietors of shares in the West New Jersey Society some two hundred years ago are entitled to unclaimed dividends. B. E., who left Leeds for America in 1840, is sought; also G. D. S., who went to South Africa in 1880, and George E., who left Wakefield in 1830.

The heirs of the widow of a general; the children of an organ builder, and of a bootmaker who left his home in 1862 and not since heard of, are wanted. The sons of a Scotch supervisor of excise can receive a share of their father's means falling to them; and the nephews and nieces of a house steward are interested in the residue of an estate. John M., last heard of at Buenos Ayres, is entitled to property; Jane J., who emigrated many years ago, is interested in the estate of her cousin; and John K., who left for America in 1863, and not since heard of, is requested to make himself known, or he will be declared to be deceased, intestate.

Among many persons inquired for by the Court of Chancery may be mentioned J. G., who left for America in 1851, interested in a sum of 4,100*l.*; G. S., employed at a livery stable in 1841; a person who went to America, enlisted under a feigned name, and believed to have been killed in battle; the children of a porter, formerly of the University Hospital; J. M., who left for Australia in 1855; and Elizabeth G., who left for Paris in 1862.

The next-of-kin of the following, among many others, were sought: The daughter of a lady who died in Charing Cross Hospital; H. R., whose sons and daughters were last heard of at San Francisco, the Black Forest, and elsewhere; William Ritchie, who died at Tennessee; Martha B., of London, who died in 1848; T. F., of Liverpool, who died in 1843; a domestic servant; the wife of a surgeon, deceased in 1837; a professor of the harp; and a wine merchant, who died in 1823.

Numerous persons were wanted for 'something to their advantage.' These included the relations of a boy who left London with a party of Mormons; Sir Edward C., who was alive thirty-five years ago; John C., formerly of Liverpool, afterwards of Buenos Ayres; the widow of W. R., of Manchester, drowned at sea; an excavator; the son of a clergyman; a cabdriver; and the widow and son of a waiter; while the son of a riding-master in the Life Guards, and Patrick E., of Antrim, in 1856 were wanted for something 'greatly' to their benefit.

In addition to the foregoing examples of family vicissitudes, it may be noted that the Cape Government published a long list of intestates, whose 'unknown heirs' are entitled to about 35,000*l.*; the War Office issued lists of soldiers' unclaimed balances; and the New Zealand Government issued lists of intestates. The Bank of England issued notices respecting unclaimed stock or dividends, and numerous rewards were offered for missing birth, marriage, and burial certificates, not to mention lost wills, supposed bank deposits, &c.

Many other cases deserve a passing notice, but I fear I have already trespassed largely on your valuable space. The interesting nature of the subject must be my apology.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

WEDNESDAY, January 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Thursday, January 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Friday, January 9. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Saturday, January 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

SITTINGS PAPERS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

COURT OF APPEAL.

APPEAL COURT I.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION, THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY), AND THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION SITTING IN BANKRUPTCY.

Jan.

Monday 12 Appeal Motions, ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Tuesday 13, Wednesday 14, Thursday 15 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 16 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Saturday 17 Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 19 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 20, Wednesday 21, Thursday 22 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Friday 23 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 24 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Monday 26 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Tuesday 27, Wednesday 28, Thursday 29 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 30 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 31 Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Feb.

Monday 2 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 3, Wednesday 4, Thursday 5 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Friday 6 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 7 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Monday 9 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Tuesday 10, Wednesday 11, Thursday 12 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 13 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Saturday 14 Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 16 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeal from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 17, Wednesday 18, Thursday 19 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Friday 20 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 21 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Monday 23 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Tuesday 24, Wednesday 25, Thursday 26 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 27 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Saturday 28 Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

March

Monday 2 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, and Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 3, Wednesday 4, Thursday 5 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Friday 6 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 7 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Monday 9 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Mar.

Tuesday 10, Wednesday 11, Thursday 12 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 13 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Saturday 14 Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 16 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 17, Wednesday 18, Thursday 19 } Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Friday 20 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Saturday 21 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

Monday 23 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, and Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Tuesday 24, Wednesday 25 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors) are taken in Appeal Court I. on specially appointed days.

APPEAL COURT II.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE CHANCERY, AND PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISIONS (PROBATE AND DIVORCE), AND THE COUNTY PALATINE AND STANNARIES COURTS.

Jan.

Monday 12 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

Tuesday 13, Wednesday 14 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Thursday 15 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.

Friday 16, Saturday 17 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Monday 19, Tuesday 20 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Wednesday 21 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Thursday 22, Friday 23, Saturday 24 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 26, Tuesday 27 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Wednesday 5 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

Thursday 29, Friday 30, Saturday 31 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Feb.

Monday 2, Tuesday 3 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Wednesday 4 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.

Thursday 5 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Friday 6, Saturday 7 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 9, Tuesday 10 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Wednesday 11 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

Thursday 12, Friday 13, Saturday 14 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Monday 16, Tuesday 17 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Wednesday 18 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required

Thursday 19, Friday 20, Saturday 21 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

Monday 23, Tuesday 24 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Wednesday 25 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

Thursday 26, Friday 27, Saturday 28 } Chancery Final Appeals.

Mar.

Monday 2, Tuesday 3 } Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.

	Mar.
Wednesday	4	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required.
Thursday	5	County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.
Friday	6	Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.
Saturday	7
Monday	9	Chancery Final Appeals.
Tuesday	10
Wednesday	11	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday	12	Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday	13
Saturday	14
Monday	16	Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.
Tuesday	17
Wednesday	18	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Queen's Bench New Trial Paper if required
Thursday	19	Queen's Bench New Trial Paper.
Friday	20
Saturday	21
Monday	23	Chancery Final Appeals.
Tuesday	24
Wednesday	25	Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

N.B.—Lunacy Petitions (if any) are taken in Appeal Court II. on every Monday, at Eleven, until further notice.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

CHANCERY COURT I.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

	Jan.
Monday	12	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	13	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	14	Non-Witness List.
Thursday	15
Friday	16	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	17	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	19	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	20	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	21
Thursday	22
Friday	23	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	24	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	26	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	27	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	28
Thursday	29
Friday	30	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	31	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
	Feb.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	Witness List.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	7	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	Witness List.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	14	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	Witness List.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	21	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	Witness List.
Wednesday	25
Thursday	26
Friday	27	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	28	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
	Mar.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	7	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	14	Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday	21	Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	Remaining Motions and Non-Witness List.
Wednesday	25

N.B.—In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

N.B.—The following papers on Further Consideration are required for the use of the Judge—viz. Two copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, one copy Pleadings, and one copy Chief Clerk's Certificate, which must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Further Consideration is ready to come into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT II.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

	Jan.
Monday	12	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	13	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday	14	Further Considerations and General Paper.
Thursday	15
Friday	16	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	17	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	19	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	20	General Paper.
Wednesday	21
Thursday	22
Friday	23	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	24	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	26	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	27	General Paper.
Wednesday	28
Thursday	29
Friday	30	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	31	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
	Feb.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	7	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	14	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	21	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	General Paper.
Wednesday	25
Friday	26
Friday	27	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	28	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
	Mar.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	7	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12

	Mar.
Friday	13	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	14	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	21	Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	General Paper.
Wednesday	25	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.

Witness Actions will be taken on Tuesday, January 20, and continued on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays until further notice.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a Short Cause before Mr. Justice Chitty, or Mr. Justice North must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard. Two Copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk the day before the Cause is to be put in the Paper.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

	Jan.
Monday	12	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	13	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday	14	General Paper.
Thursday	15
Friday	16	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	17	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	19	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	20	General Paper.
Wednesday	21
Thursday	22
Friday	23	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	24	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	26	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	27	General Paper.
Wednesday	28
Thursday	29
Friday	30	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	31	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
	Feb.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	7	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	14	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	21	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	General Paper.
Wednesday	25
Thursday	26
Friday	27	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	28	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
	Mar.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	7	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	14	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday	21	Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	Remaining Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday	25	Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a short Cause must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard, and the necessary Papers, including Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, must be left with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Cause is to be put into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT IV.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

	Jan.
Monday	12	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	13	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Wednesday	14	General Paper.
Thursday	15
Friday	16	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	17	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	19	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	20	General Paper.
Wednesday	21
Thursday	22
Friday	23	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	24	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	26	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	27	General Paper.
Wednesday	28
Thursday	29
Friday	30	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	31	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
	Feb.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	7	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	14	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	21	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	General Paper.
Wednesday	25
Thursday	26
Friday	27	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	28	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
	Mar.
Monday	2	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	3	General Paper.
Wednesday	4
Thursday	5
Friday	6	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	7	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	9	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	10	General Paper.
Wednesday	11
Thursday	12
Friday	13	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	14	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	16	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	17	General Paper.
Wednesday	18
Thursday	19
Friday	20	Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday	21	Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday	23	Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday	24	General Paper.
Wednesday	25	Motions.

Liverpool and Manchester Business will be taken as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons, Liverpool and Manchester Summonses being taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Liverpool Summonses on Friday, January 16.

CHANCERY COURT III.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Actions transferred for Trial or Hearing only will be taken in the order in the Cause List on every day of the Sittings from January 12 to March 25, both inclusive.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JANUARY 5 TO JANUARY 10.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	January 5	January 6	January 7	January 8	January 9	January 10
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Altrincham	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Russell	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Ilkeston	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
28	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Hanley	Stafford	Leek	Cheadle
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Newton Abbot

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of this association on December 22 a debate was held on the following subject for discussion: 'Whilst A. is lunching at an hotel as B.'s guest, his hat and coat, which he had hung up in the place provided for them, are stolen. Neither A. nor B. are staying at the hotel. Can A. recover damages from the proprietor of the hotel for the loss of his hat and coat?' Mr. F. Archer, solicitor, in the chair.—Mr. H. Todd opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Messrs. E. W. Pierce, H. M'Master, Rutherford, and the secretary.—Mr. F. R. Martin opened in the negative, which was also supported by Messrs. R. B. Hughes, E. Lloyd, and H. Glover. —The question was decided in the affirmative by a majority of eleven.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. COLQUHOUN, Q.C., has been appointed County Court Judge for the county Down, in place of Mr. Lefroy, Q.C., who has resigned. Mr. Colquhoun was called to the bar in 1867.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed the ex-Mayor Albert Edward Shapland, Esq. (of the firm of J. T. Shapland & Son, solicitors), a Justice of the Peace for the Borough of South Molton.

Mr. Christopher Vickry Bridgman has been appointed Registrar to the High Court of Judicature for the Stonehouse District of Devonshire. Mr. Bridgman has also been appointed by Judge Edge to be Registrar of the Stonehouse County Court District. Mr. Bridgman has in consequence of these appointments resigned the registrarship of the Tavistock County Court district and of the clerkship to the justices of Plymouth, which offices he has held for twenty-three and eight years respectively. Mr. Bridgman was admitted in 1863.

Mr. William Smee, B.A., of 5 York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C., and Chiswick, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Smee was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Harry Pearce, of 25 Bedford Row, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths in the Supreme Courts of Judicature. Mr. Pearce was admitted in 1884.

Mr. James Frederick Griffith, of 4 Old Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Griffith was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frederick Adolphus Camidge, of York, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Camidge was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Alleyne Brown, of Southport, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Brown was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Joseph Edward Gilson, of Sheffield, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Gilson was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Thomas Howson (of the firm of Ainsworth, Sanderson & Howson), of Blackburn, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Howson was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Walter Foster, of Leeds, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Foster was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Edward Challinor (of the firm of Challinor & Shaw), of Leek, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Challinor was admitted in 1884.

THE 'LAW QUARTERLY' ON THE 'LAW REPORTS.'—We do not think the profession will be thankful for the change in the official style of the 'Law Reports.' The incorporation of the date in the reference is well meant, but the importance of making references short and simple appears to have been overlooked. And the Council of Law Reporting have lost the opportunity of effecting an improvement often urged upon them—the separation of the Court of Appeal cases from cases decided in Courts of First Instance, of which latter far too many are reported. The general management of the 'Law Reports' has been anything but satisfactory for some years past, and we see no signs of mending.—Law Quarterly Review.

BIRTHS.

On the morning of Christmas Day, at Queen Anne's Mansions, St. James's Park, Lady Charley, wife of Sir William Charley, Q.C., Common Serjeant of London, of a daughter.

On Christmas Day, at Cliff House, The Park, Nottingham, the wife of George Parr, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Dec. 28, at 2 Lynton Villas, Alexandra Road, Kingston Hill, the wife of Arthur P. Poley, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of the Inner Temple, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Dec. 22, at Holy Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells, James William Greig, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of John Borthwick Greig, Writer to the Signet, of 12 Hillgrove Road, South Hampstead, Middlesex, to Jennie Taylor Brown, only daughter of the late Captain Edward Brown, of Salem, Massachusetts, United States of America.

On Dec. 23, at 20 Lawrence Place, Partick, David Calder Leck, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, to Jane Hill, only daughter of the late George Wood, of Thornwood, Kilmalcolm, N.B.

On Dec. 23, at Cobham Church, Surrey, Leopold J. Maxse, second son of Admiral Maxse, of Dunley Hill, Dorking, to Katharine, eldest daughter of his Honour Judge Lushington, of Pyports, Cobham.

DEATHS.

On Dec. 20, at 48 Solon New Road, Brixton, S.W., after a long and painful illness, Helen Louisa (Nellie), the beloved wife of Charles J. Guy, Solicitor, aged 33.

On Dec. 22, at Hotel Euler, Bale, Switzerland, Meneen Margaret, dearly beloved wife of John Hony Trehane, of Tamar View, Yelverton, and Plymouth, Devon, Solicitor.

On Dec. 26, at Windsor House, 29 Westbourne Park Road, Bayswater, Sophia, widow of the late William Griffith, of Windsor, and French's, in the Island of Barbadoes, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, formerly Solicitor-General of that island, and mother of Sir W. Brandford Griffith, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Gold Coast Colony.

On Dec. 27, at Baroda, Ventnor, I.W., William Frank Jones, B.C.L., M.A., Barrister-at-Law, of Lincoln's Inn, late of 71 Lansdowne Road, W., in his 50th year.

On Dec. 27, Eliza Frances, widow of Francis Snowden, Judge of H.M.'s Supreme Court, Hongkong.

On Dec. 27, of pleuro-pneumonia, James William Lambert, Esq., Solicitor, 17 Bedford Row, London, aged 59.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

IT is understood that the strikes on the Scotch railways, whether they are now drawing to an end or not, have already caused much inconvenience and loss to the customers or intending customers of the companies concerned. As might have been expected, the question whether future difficulties of a similar kind could not be prevented or mitigated by legislation has been raised in more quarters than one. To a certain extent legislation has already taken place. It is provided by section 5 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, that, 'where any person wilfully and maliciously breaks a contract of service or of hiring knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to endanger human life or cause serious bodily injury, or to expose valuable property, whether real or personal, to destruction or serious injury, he shall on conviction thereof by a Court of summary jurisdiction or on indictment be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.' It is not difficult to imagine cases where this enactment might be put in force against engine-drivers or signalmen suddenly deserting their posts, but, of course, it would have no effect in the case of any servant whatever quitting his work at the expiration of due notice duly given. It has been suggested that railway servants should be considered to be engaged on a kind of permanent service determinable only on notice given by their employers, but such an heroic remedy, of which we greatly doubt the justice, is not likely to find favour in the present day. It might, perhaps, however, be feasible to provide for a certain compulsory length of notice to be given by all railway servants, and also to breach of contract before expiration of notice punishable simpliciter without the requirement that the servant should have reasonable cause to expect danger to the public from his act. On the other hand, and in the interest of the public as well as of the servants themselves, it would be perfectly reasonable to provide that where, as in the case of signalmen and engine drivers, overtime service is performed at great risk, a limit to the number of hours of continuous service should be prescribed by Act of Parliament. In the Report of the Railway Commission of 1877 on Accidents, we find it stated that 'there was abundant evidence to show that on exceptional occasions men, upon whom the safety of trains mainly depended, were either required or permitted to continue on duty for an excessive length of time,' and also that, 'in certain cases, the duties exacted from men of these classes were too protracted;' and the commissioners, though shrinking from the recommendations of restricted hours of labour, reported in favour of the fact of a servant having been too long employed being made primâ facie evidence of negligence in any proceedings against a railway company for injuries by an accident arising in connection with his employment.

OUR correspondent 'D.' (ante, p. 7) not a little surprises us. Commenting on the strictures of Mr. Justice Wills upon the practice of county justices' clerks conducting prosecutions, he says that 'it makes no difference whatever to a clerk whether a prisoner is convicted or not' (the italics are our own). This is quite true, but much beside the mark. It makes all the difference in the world to a person accused before justices whether he is prosecuted or not, whether he may be ultimately convicted or acquitted; and as he cannot be prosecuted without a committal, it is of vital importance to the administration of justice that the committal should have been advised by the clerk on grounds absolutely free from suspicion, if advised by the clerk it was. As to 'D.'s' second point, that 'in most cases the question for committal is not one for the clerk, but for the bench,' we must take leave to remark not only that in most cases the practice is just the other way, but that if in one single case it may be otherwise, 'D.'s' case is on this point practically gone.

WE have to thank Mr. C. Fortescue (ante, p. 7) for a reference to section 8 of the Vagrant Act (5 Geo. IV. c. 83) as to paying for a vagrant's keep in prison out of money found upon him. By that section every justice of the peace by whom any person shall be adjudged to be 'an idle or disorderly person, or a rogue and vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue,' may 'order that such offender shall be searched, and that his or her trunks, boxes, bundles, parcels shall be inspected,' and, further, that 'it shall be lawful for the said justice to order that any money which may be then found with or upon such offender, shall be paid and applied for and towards the expense of apprehending, conveying to the house of correction, and maintaining such offender during the time for which he or she shall have been committed.' On consideration, however, we cannot think that the power given by this section extends to the case of the incorrigible rogue committed, under section 10, to the house of correction, there to remain until the next quarter sessions, at which the justices of the peace there assembled may sentence him to further imprisonment for any time not exceeding one year; but the point is doubtful. If section 8 applies to cases under section 10, the committing justice, and not any of the justices in quarter sessions, would, we think, be the proper authority to make the order.

CONTRACTS with infants are beset with difficulties, for that privileged class seem able to blow hot and blow cold, 'to approbate and reprobate,' as the Scotch lawyers have it, but there seems no doubt of the reasonableness of the decision in Maw v. Jones, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 542. The plaintiff was apprenticed to the defendants to learn their business by a deed which provided that they could dismiss him at a week's notice if he showed incapacity or want of interest in his work. He did show a want of interest in his work, but his masters, instead of giving him a week's notice, dismissed him summarily on the ground that he had been guilty of frequent acts of insubordination and had gone out at night without permission. The apprentice brought this action for wrongful dismissal, and the alleged misconduct having been disproved, the jury gave as damages a sum greatly exceeding in amount the value of a week's notice, the judge having directed the jury that they could do so. On a motion for a new trial, the Divisional Court upheld the judge's direction. 'The jury,' said Lord Coleridge, 'were entitled to take into account the difficulty that the plaintiff, after being discharged, might experience in obtaining employment elsewhere.' As is well known, in the case of domestic servants, the master can either give a month's notice of dismissal or dismiss at once on payment of a month's wages. It is not, however, as clear as it might be, whether the wages are simply wages without respect to board, or board wages. In Smith's 'Master and Servant' (4th edition, p. 92 n (r)) it is stated that the wages would probably be a calendar month's, and the case of Gordon v. Potter, 1 F. & F. 644, is cited, in which Mr. Justice Hill, at Nisi Prius, told the jury that the plaintiff would be entitled to the accruing wages and a calendar month's wages in addition without board wages.

MUCH consternation has been caused by the refusal of the licensing justices of Aston, near Birmingham, to transfer a license to a certain 'district manager' of Messrs. Ind, Coope & Co., 'who admitted that he should not reside on the premises though responsible for the conduct of the house' in respect of which the license was proposed to be transferred, 'a barman being left in charge.' The ground of the refusal is stated to be 'that the Licensing Act laid it down that the house must be held by the responsible tenant and occupier, conducting the business as his own, and not for the profit of other persons,' which, of course, cannot be the case where the house is a 'tied' one, as thousands of houses are, and—which accounts for the consternation—the bulk of the houses in Aston. The question of construction of the Licensing Act is as difficult as it is important. Section 1 of the Act of 1828 speaks of the person to be licensed as 'keeping or about to keep' the house—an expression which would not be suitable in the case of a mere servant; and section 4, which deals with transfers, gives jurisdiction to the justices 'to license such persons intending to keep inns theretofore kept by other persons being about to remove from such inns as they the said justices shall in the exercise of their discretion deem fit and proper persons.' It is beyond doubt that the justices have an absolute discretion to refuse a transfer (see Regina v. Moore, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 121), but it is by no means so clear that they have not jurisdiction to transfer a license to a non-resident (though the language of the Act points in that direction), unless, indeed, the license be that of a beerhouse, in which case, as the Inland Revenue license can by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, be granted to a real resident holder and occupier only, it would be idle for the justices to grant the corresponding justices' license to a non-resident.

SUMMONSES against railway passengers for travelling without tickets have been pretty frequent lately, the offenders being in many cases small boys, as to whom a correspondent of the Globe has suggested that the maximum fine of 40*s.* should be imposed, with a promise of remission by the bench in consideration of an undertaking by the parents to whip the offending urchins. Any such arrangement, whether wise or unwise (and we think it would be unwise), is, of course, quite outside the law. It is material to point out, however, that for a second offence of (1) travelling without payment of fare and with intent to avoid payment thereof, or (2) on failure to pay, giving a false name and address to a railway company's officer, the offender is liable, in the discretion of the Court, to imprisonment for not more than a month, without the option of a fine. So it is provided by section 5 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 57), which replaces, though it does not repeal, the better known section 103 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, and the invalid bye-laws made thereunder, which have been the subject of so much controversy since, in Dearden v. Townsend, 38 Law J. Rep. M. C. 50, it was first decided that the ticketless passenger could not be convicted under either statute or bye-law unless actual fraud were proved. However great and systematic the fraud might be, there was, prior to the Act of 1889, no power to imprison without the option of a fine, which was rather hard upon the railway companies.

IT is not often that questions turning upon the provisions of section 3 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, have come before the Courts; and the point raised in Ex parte The Scottish Economic Life Assurance Society, reported in the current number of our Reports (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 14), seems to be quite a novel one. That section requires every life assurance society to deposit in Court the sum of 20,000*l.*, which is to be returned to the company so soon as its life assurance fund accumulated out of premiums shall have amounted to 40,000*l.* It appeared that two life assurance companies, the Scottish Economic and the Scottish Metropolitan, had agreed to amalgamate, the former of which had not accumulated 40,000*l.* out of premiums in accordance with the section. Consequently it was not entitled to the return of its statutory deposit of 20,000*l.* The Scottish Metropolitan, however, had accumulated a sum far exceeding that amount, and under the amalgamation scheme had agreed to take over the liability for policies of the Scottish Economic. Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Kay refused to allow payment out of the Scottish Economic's deposit fund of 20,000*l.* to the Scottish Metropolitan until there had been a further accumulation of 40,000*l.* out of the premiums of the two amalgamated companies. There can be no doubt that in an ordinary case, before payment out of a deposited fund can be sanctioned, there must, in order to satisfy the words of the section, be an accumulation of 40,000*l.* out of the premiums on the policies of the particular company by which the deposit of 20,000*l.* was originally made. It is true that here the joint life assurance funds accumulated out of premiums was greatly in excess of the prescribed amount; but, as Mr. Justice Kay observed, the letter of the statute had not been complied with. Moreover, in his lordship's opinion, the spirit of the Act had not been satisfied, there having been no sufficient accumulation in respect of or to meet the life assurance policies of the Scottish Economic. However, the order which the learned judge thought proper to make removed the difficulty.

AUDACITY—at least in evil doing—often commands success. A keen-witted and plausible scoundrel, who has for some months been engaged in swindling that easily deluded section of the British public willing to pay a bonus to any agent who will find a 'snug berth or remunerative employment,' hit upon a bold method of improving his credit and inspiring confidence in his correspondents at a distance. Having selected as his offices a set of chambers in a Southern seaport recently vacated (on their removing to other premises) by a firm of solicitors of good repute, he added to the heading of his notepaper 'late A. and B.' (the firm in question). Such of the victims as took the precaution to look up the name and address in a directory found that the solicitors had occupied the chambers for a long time and held sundry public appointments, and they apparently accepted the bona fides of the successors as established. When, at last, this trick was brought to the knowledge of the solicitors whose names had thus been used as a blind, the swindler had netted a considerable sum and disappeared. The police met with difficulty in obtaining a warrant, and the delay gave the swindler so good a start that he has for some weeks successfully eluded all attempts at his apprehension. Solicitors who are removing their offices will do well to bear this dodge in mind, and take steps to prevent its being made a precedent by the 'long firm' community.

MR. EDLMAN, a late wealthy director of the London and Westminster Bank, has, by his will, directed certain bequests to his children to be considerably reduced in event of their becoming Roman Catholics. There seems to be no doubt that such a restriction is good although there be no gift over. (See In re Dickson's Trust, 1 Sim. N. S. 37, in which a testator bequeathed a life interest in 10,000*l.* to his daughter, and revoked it by a codicil 'in event of her becoming a nun, continuing to reside in a convent, or in any other way associating herself permanently with any Roman Catholic establishment of that nature.') On the other hand, bequests for the propagation of the Roman Catholic religion which were unlawful before 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 115, as was held in Cary v. Abbott, 7 Ves. 490, and other cases, are expresely legalised by that statute, which places 'Her Majesty's subjects professing the Roman Catholic religion in respect of their schools, places of religious worship, and charitable purposes' under the same laws as Protestant Dissenters.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILL.

THE bill introduced by Mr. Howard Vincent, Mr. Warmington, Q.C., Sir Albert Rollit, and Mr. Bradlaugh 'for the appointment of a public trustee' is avowedly of an experimental character, as in its last clause it provides for the possible abolition of the office which it proposes to create 'at any time within five years from the commencement of the Act.' The authors of the bill must surely mean 'at any time after five years,' as it must be contemplated that time enough shall be given to discover whether the Act is likely to be successful. The explanatory memorandum prefixed to the bill states that in some of the American States and of our own colonies—notably in New Zealand—a public office exists for the purpose intended to be served by the present measure. The value or usefulness of a public functionary of this kind can hardly be appraised beforehand by an examination of the bill itself, but will be tested by the rules by which its objects will be carried out, and which are from time to time to be framed by the Lord Commissioners of the Treasury.

There are two remarks in the memorandum which will act in a somewhat deterrent manner on a testator who might be disposed to place his estate in the hands of the new officer. The first is: 'The Public Trust Office will, therefore, be not only self-supporting, but a profitable source of public revenue.' The second states: 'The supersession of professional men in relation to trust property is distinctly provided against by the bill.' If the State is to carry on a profitable debt-collecting and asset-realisation business, and the same number as heretofore of solicitors, accountants, and surveyors are to be employed, the administration of the estates of deceased persons is likely to prove very expensive to the estates so administered. Doubtless to many persons the bill would be a perfect godsend, as it would furnish a ready excuse for declining a thankless and responsible office of executor or trustee on behalf of their friends. Against all objections, however, may be urged the powerful argument of security. The public trustee will not abscond; he will never die or become incapacitated; he will not be induced out of mistaken kindness to commit breaches of trust, and he will not quarrel with himself as a body of trustees may quarrel with each other, and harass the estate with needless litigation; and, above all, there will be the guarantee of the Consolidated Fund. In the case of large estates, where a little more or less of expense is of no great consequence, when no business has to be carried on, and when the investments authorised are within the strict limits imposed by the Court, the public trustee will be an admirable harbour of refuge for perplexed testators. It would have been a serviceable guide to opinion if the framers of the bill had informed us how long a functionary of this character had been established in the countries in which he exists, and how far the system had proved satisfactory. It is to be hoped that either in the form of a return or of official statistics some information will be given on the subject. Small estates, which require careful nursing and individual labour and attention, are not likely to avail themselves of the new office.

The bill consists of forty-two sections. The trustee is to be a corporation sole with perpetual succession, with power to hold and acquire property, to execute deeds, to grant leases, and to do such other acts as may be necessary. He may have a staff of assistants, and his salary and those of his assistants and the expenses of the office are to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. Neither the trustee nor any of his assistants is to act professionally as counsel, solicitor, or auditor, but may in his discretion avail himself of professional guidance. The ordinary layman might reasonably expect that the mere proving of the will and the audit of accounts would be undertaken by the office itself. The auditing of accounts would seem to be one of the very objects contemplated, as otherwise the only gain by appointing the public trustee as executor or trustee would be the guarantee of the Consolidated Fund. The bill then provides that private persons may vest their property by deed or will in the public trustee, but that the latter shall not hold property for any religious or charitable purpose. This official may also be appointed under a power to appoint new trustees, and an executor or administrator may, after probate, with the consent of the Court, transfer the administration to the public trustee; and the Court may also order the retransfer of an estate to other trustees. Administrations and administrations durante minore ætate or cum testamento annexo may also be granted to the new official, who is also to be substituted for the Treasury solicitor as the Crown's nominee in the case of intestacies. It is probably in these instances that the new department will be most frequently and most usefully called into action. Public trust property may also be placed under the same authority. The trustee may also be appointed committee of a lunatic's estate, guardian of infants, or ad litem a receiver or manager. He is not to be required to give security, and may not act jointly with another, and he is not to hold property (except leaseholds) subject to liabilities. The commission chargeable and costs allowed are, of course, to be subject to rules framed under the Act. The Treasury is to make rules for the constitution of the office, the establishment of branch offices, the security to be given by the trustee and the other officials, the rate of commission, and the form and audit of accounts and balance-sheets. The new official may also advance money, repayable with 4 per cent. interest, for probate and other administration expenses. Any deficiency in the public trustee's account is to be made good out of the Consolidated Fund, into which also any excess is to be paid. There are also provisions for the recovery from the trustee of money improperly expended or not duly accounted for, and in respect of his liability for losses caused to his cestuis que trust. The last clause provides, as before stated, for the possible abolition of the office, in which event neither the trustee nor any official appointed under the Act is to be entitled to any compensation for the loss of such office.

SERVICE OUT OF THE JURISDICTION IN ACTIONS FOR INJUNCTIONS.

IN the recent case of Kinahan v. Kinahan, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 705; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 78, the principles upon which the Court ought to act when granting leave to serve out of the jurisdiction writs in actions for injunctions were clearly explained by Mr. Justice Kekewich. This is a jurisdiction which, to use his lordship's own expression, 'requires to be carefully watched and carefully exercised;' and the particular facts of each case have to be carefully weighed. Service out of the jurisdiction is an interference with the ordinary course of the law, and, apart from the Rules of Court, there is no power to give leave. Rule 1 of Order XI. of the Rules of Court, 1883, however, authorised service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons whenever, among other cases, any injunction is sought as to anything to be done within the jurisdiction. Rule 2 requires the Court or judge, in allowing service out of the jurisdiction, to have regard to the comparative cost and convenience of proceedings in England. But when an action is brought for an injunction it is not necessary that the injunction should be the only relief sought to bring the case within the order as to service out of the jurisdiction (The Lisbon-Berlyn Gold Fields v. Heddle, 52 L. T. Rep. (N.S.) 796).

Scotland and Ireland are both included in the order, and it extends not only to individuals but to foreign corporations. Before the writ is issued an application has to be made in chambers for leave to serve as well as to issue the writ. Where an ex parte application is made, the person making it must observe uberrima fides; otherwise, he is liable to have the order discharged at the instance of the person against whom it has been obtained (The Republic of Peru v. Dreyfus Brothers & Co., 55 L. T. Rep. (N.S.) 802). Every such application has to be supported by affidavit or other evidence, stating that in the belief of the deponent the plaintiff has a good cause of action, and showing in what place or country the defendant is or probably may be found, and whether such defendant is a British subject or not, and the grounds upon which the application is made. No such leave is to be granted unless it shall be made sufficiently to appear to the Court or a judge that the case is a proper one for service out of the jurisdiction (Order XI., rule 4). A judicial discretion is thus afforded. What is a proper exercise of that judicial discretion has to be considered in granting or refusing applications under this order, which is a complete code on the subject of service out of jurisdiction.

In the case before Mr. Justice Kekewich the action was brought in England by a firm having places of business in Dublin and London, to restrain the defendants, a limited company, having their registered office in Belfast, from infringing the plaintiff's trade-mark by the sale of goods under a similar trade-mark in England. The defendants had no agents or depôts in England, but supplied occasional customers here direct from Belfast. A motion was also pending in England by the plaintiffs, under section 90 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-marks Act, 1883, to expunge the defendants' trade-mark, and it was proposed by the plaintiffs that the action and motion should be heard together. An order was obtained ex parte by the plaintiffs, under rule 1, Order XI., from Mr. Justice Kekewich in chambers, giving them leave to issue and serve the writ out of the jurisdiction. On reconsideration, however, of the matter in Court, the learned judge was of opinion that the action ought to be regarded as practically an Irish and not an English action, and accordingly that, notwithstanding the pending motion to expunge, the ex parte order ought to be discharged. On the question of convenience, to which, under rule 2 of Order XI., the Court is to have regard, his lordship thought that there was an extremely strong reason for proceeding in Ireland because of the necessity for having discovery. As the learned judge pointed out, the only place in which the defendants' books could be inspected was in Ireland; and the examination of the books, both for the purposes of the action and the trial, and still more for the purposes of account, if account were ordered, really went to the root of the action. It was not overlooked that the plaintiffs would have to take some witnesses over to Ireland; but, on the other hand, if the action proceeded in England, the defendants would have had to bring all their witnesses over here. The ex parte order which Mr. Justice Kekewich had made in chambers was therefore discharged, and the plaintiffs were left to their remedy of instituting an action in Ireland.

A case in many respects resembling Kinahan v. Kinahan (ubi sup.) was that of In re Burland's Trade-mark; Burland v. The Roxburn Oil Company (Lim.), 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 591; L. R. 41 Chanc. Div. 542. But there Mr. Justice Chitty considered that the plaintiff was entitled to an order for leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction—namely, in Glasgow. The action was brought for an injunction to restrain the defendants, a limited company, from infringing the plaintiff's registered trade-mark. The registered office of the defendants was in Glasgow, but they had branches in London, Manchester, and Hull. The plaintiff's place of business was within a short distance of the last-mentioned town. According to the plaintiff's evidence the defendants were supplying the goods of which he complained as infringing his trade-mark from their branches at Manchester and Hull, and he proved the execution from Manchester of an order given by one of his own customers. The plaintiff also showed that it would be necessary to call in support of his case a considerable number of witnesses, all of whom were resident in England. In the result Mr. Justice Chitty, as we have already remarked, gave leave to serve the writ in Glasgow. His lordship thought that it would be more convenient that the action should proceed in this country because the wrong had been committed here, the business of which the plaintiff complained having been done in Manchester and Hull. Mr. Justice Chitty pointed out that the case before him was distinguishable from Marshall v. Marshall, L. R. 38 Chanc. Div. 330, which had been relied upon by the defendants. There the Court of Appeal under somewhat similar circumstances declined to grant leave to serve the writ in an action out of the jurisdiction on the ground that the injunction could not be enforced against the defendant personally. But in In re Burland's Trade-mark, as Mr. Justice Chitty observed, the injunction, if obtained, could be enforced by writ of sequestration against the property of the defendant company in England, so that, if that were the test of convenience, the test was satisfied. Moreover, the plaintiff was resident in England. In that respect the case resembled Tozier v. Hawkins, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 680, which case shows that no hard-and-fast rule can be considered as laid down by Marshall v. Marshall (ubi sup.).

Briefly stated, the facts in Marshall v. Marshall were these: A summons by the defendant, a manufacturer resident in Scotland, for leave to register a trade-mark, was pending before Mr. Justice North, and was opposed by the plaintiff, also resident and carrying on a similar business in Scotland, on the ground that the mark was similar to one belonging to the plaintiff. The plaintiff applied for leave to issue a writ against the defendant for an injunction and damages, on the ground that the defendant was selling his goods in England in such a way as to lead the public to believe that they were the plaintiff's goods. The plaintiff deposed that the same witnesses would be required on the summons and in the action, and that it would be most convenient and would save expense if the action was brought in England, so that the summons and action could be tried together. It was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of Mr. Justice North, that as an injunction in England could only be enforced against the servants and agents of the defendant, who were not the persons primarily responsible, and not against the defendant himself, leave ought not to be given to issue the writ, the matter being one which was better left to the Courts of Scotland.

On an application for leave to serve a writ out of the jurisdiction it is not sufficient that the form of the action and the nature of the relief sought bring the case within Order XI. The plaintiff must show to the satisfaction of the Court that he has a probable cause of action; and the Court, in exercising its discretion, will consider the facts of the case appearing on the affidavits so far as may be necessary for that purpose (Société Générale de Paris v. Dreyfus Brothers, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 276; L. R. 37 Chanc. Div. 215). In reference to this requirement, Mr. Justice Kekewich, in Kinahan v. Kinahan (ubi sup.), said that, in his experience, it very seldom happened that the affidavit in support of the ex parte application under the order strictly or satisfactorily complied with the exigencies of the order. In that particular case there was the omission in the affidavit of the statement, which it ought to have contained, of the belief that the plaintiffs had a good cause of action. This is a point, therefore, to be borne in mind.

STUDENTS' QUERIES.

A. Z. desires an opinion on the following point:—

'A. sold to B. a piece of freehold land forming part of his estate, on which B. subsequently built. A. covenanted with B. to make a road in ten years on land adjoining the properties of A. and B. This land also formed part of A.'s estate. B. covenanted to pay A. a moiety of the expense of the construction of the road, which was to be for the mutual benefit of A. and B. and their heirs, &c. A. has since sold the residue of his estate to C. The ten years have expired, and the road has not yet been made. B. wishes to enforce the covenant. How is he to do this, and who is liable—A. or C.?'

Correspondence.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS CONDUCTING PROSECUTIONS.

SIR,—With regard to the present crusade against magistrates' clerks conducting prosecutions, does it not come to this?—that (unless these solicitors are to be judged by a different standard than the rest of the profession) no solicitor ought to be allowed to act for any plaintiff in any case in which he has advised that proceedings ought to be instituted, because his advice may be influenced by the consideration that he will earn a guinea or two by issuing the writ? H.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURT.

LIABILITY OF BAILEES FOR DETERIORATION OF GOODS WHILE IN THEIR POSSESSION.

AT Evesham County Court his Honour Judge Sir R. Harington recently gave the following judgment in the case of Williams v. The Great Western Railway Company: This case, which was tried before me at the Court holden here on October 10 last, raises a question of considerable importance to carriers and their employers. The action was brought to recover 10*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.*, the alleged value of a hogshead of claret entrusted to the defendants for conveyance from the premises of the British and Foreign Dock Company in London to Evesham. The defence was that the defendants had been guilty of no breach of duty which entitled the consignee to sue for the whole value of the wine, and admitting that they were responsible in nominal damages, they counter-claimed a sum of 12*s.* 9*d.* for the carriage of the wine in question. No question was raised by the plaintiff as to the propriety or reasonableness of this charge. The facts, as I find them on the evidence before me, are as follows: On May 27 last two hogsheads of wine, one of which is the subject-matter of this action, were delivered to the defendants in London sound and in good condition for conveyance to the premises of the plaintiff in Evesham, and the defendants accepted them as common carriers to be so conveyed. On May 28 the two hogsheads were tendered by the defendants to the plaintiff at those premises. One was accepted and no question arises upon it; the other was found to be slightly leaking. No evidence was given me by the plaintiff as to how much wine had escaped, nor, except inferentially, as to the condition of the remainder. He said himself, it is true, that this was unmerchantable; but if by this he means absolutely valueless, I find against him on the facts. I am not satisfied that the wine was necessarily so much deteriorated in quality as to have ceased to be of value as wine or to be unsalable as such. That it was deteriorated in value and rendered less fit for the purpose of being bottled and sold in the course of the plaintiff's trade I do find; but to what extent this deterioration had proceeded the plaintiff has left me n the dark, and I have no means of judging. The defendants, who might in my opinion, so far as was necessary for raising the point submitted to my decision, have safely left the case as it stood on the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, proceeded, in spite of my intimation to the above effect, to call witnesses to show that a few days afterwards the cask was apparently sound. This evidence carried the case no further, and, after the admission of a liability for nominal damages which it would have been hopeless on the facts proved to deny, I regret that my notes should have been burdened with this evidence. Indeed the plaintiff rested his whole case on the contention that, the goods having been damaged in transit, he was entitled to refuse them, and throw them back in their then condition on the hands of the defendants without giving any evidence as to the extent of that damage. Unfortunately, notwithstanding the general importance of the proposition contended for, neither of the parties thought it necessary to instruct learned counsel to appear before me, the consequence of which is that I cannot feel sure that authorities which the industry of gentlemen of that branch of the profession, instructed in due time, might have laid before me may not have been overlooked. And I myself labour under the disadvantage, which I share with the majority of my country brethren, of having convenient access to no library much better than my own. The assistance which I did receive, however, from the solicitors engaged in the case has not, nor has my own research, enabled me to discover any authority binding on me precisely in point, or even nearly analogous to the present case, although some Scotch cases, to which I will refer more particularly, and a case which came before a late brother-judge of mine, were laid before me, not in any authorised report, but in the shape of memoranda which had been collected and preserved by some railway authorities for their own purposes. Two of these cases—Gavin, Paul & Sons v. The Caledonian Railway Company and Hutton v. The North British Railway Company—did, indeed, decide the point now in question. In the former no reasons for the decision are given; but it appears to have proceeded on the authority of the latter. Except, however, as regards the argumentum ab inconvenienti, the reasons stated for the judgment in that case—which appears to have been in an inferior Court, and not the Court of Session—are such as cannot be adopted in an English Court of justice. The sheriff-substitute, who appears to have been the judge, in giving judgment, says: 'A carrier is to almost every effect an insurer. The obligation upon an insurer is to compensate the owner of goods for all damage done to goods so long as they are covered by the insurance. The obligations laid upon carriers are construed strictly against the carrier, but the extent of his obligations must not be strained. It would surely be wrong to hold that, if a carrier, in the course of conveying, for example, a valuable brougham, broke a linch-pin or the spoke of a wheel, the owner would be entitled to demand that he keep the brougham and to sue him for its value. It has never been heard of that the insurer of a vessel was bound to take the vessel at the insured price if she lost a spar or sustained partial injury.' In using these expressions the learned sheriff-substitute seems to have forgotten that, in a contract of insurance, the obligations of the parties are to a great extent defined by the contract, and not wholly left to the inference of law, the contract being silent, as in this case, and that, in the case of marine insurance, the insured can in many cases, by giving notice of abandonment, convert an average into a constructive total loss, and thus do exactly what the learned sheriff says is unheard of. In my opinion the common expression that a carrier is an insurer is not a happy one. It is used, no doubt, as a brief and compendious way of saying that a carrier is responsible for injury to goods in his charge without actual default on his part. In point of fact, he is exempted by the common law from the perils most commonly covered by marine insurances—namely, the act of God and the Queen's enemies, and it seems to me to be pursuing a false analogy to liken him to an insurer in any other respect than that of the absence of actual default as an ingredient in his personal liability. The case in the County Court, Hammersley v. The London and North-Western Railway Company, only comes to this—that, in a case before the late Judge Spooner, a learned counsel admitted that he could not successfully contest the point now raised by the plaintiff. It remains then to deal with this question as one of principle, and to consider whether any light is thrown on it by the English authorities which I have been able to find, none of which unfortunately were cited before me at the trial. The true relation between a carrier and his customer is beyond all doubt that of bailee and bailor. Now, the essence of the contract of bailment, and that which distinguishes it from a contract of sale, is that the general property in the goods remains in the bailor, and that the bailee, unless he has some lawful excuse for failing to do so, is bound to return the goods bailed to the bailor on the determination of the contract of bailment. This obligation is universal, and subject only to exception when by the terms of the contract the nature of the article bailed is to be altered by the bailee, as in the case of cloth delivered to a tailor to be made into a coat, or the like. And if the bailee, without such excuse, fails to fulfil this obligation he is liable to the bailor either in detinue or trover, as the case may be. The difference between the incidents of the obligations of the various descriptions of bailees in relation to the return of the goods bailed arises from the various natures of the excuses which are accepted by the law as lawful excuses for failure to return them, of which the two extremes may be put perhaps as on the one side that of pawn, when non-payment of the loan at the stipulated time is a sufficient excuse, and that of a contract of carriage when no excuse avails the carrier except the act of God, the Queen's enemies, or the proper vice of the thing carried. It follows logically that, as there is an obligation on the part of the bailee to return the goods there must be a corresponding obligation on the part of the bailor to accept them on the determination of the bailment; otherwise he would at will be able to turn the contract of bailment into a contract of sale by the simple expedient of declining the goods and suing for their value—a proposition which carries its own absurdity on the face of it. The question then is, Has the bailee in this case constructively refused to deliver the goods bailed on the determination of the bailment so as to entitle the plaintiff to sue in detinue or trover? Now, no question of detinue, as distinguished from trover, can arise in this case, because it is now impossible for the defendants to satisfy the terms of the judgment, which, according to the rules of practice of this Court, I should give for the plaintiff in an action of detinue—viz. either for a specific return of the goods, or for their value to be reduced to a less sum on their return within a limited time. A tender of the goods in the condition in which they were on May 28 would, ex hypothesi, not satisfy the plaintiff, who would immediately contend that it was no performance of the order of the Court. He must, therefore, now contend that there has been a conversion of these goods by the defendants whilst bailees, and I proceed to consider whether there has been any such conversion. Now the nearest authority I have been able to find on the subject is that of Richardson v. Atkinson, decided at Nisi Prius before two judges—Eyre and Fortescue—and reported 1 Strange, 576. The marginal note in that case states its substance very pithily: 'Trover lies against him who takes part and spoils the whole.' In that case it appeared that the defendant had been bailee of a pipe of port wine, from which he, or someone for whom he was responsible, had abstracted a quantity and supplied its place with water. It is obvious, however, that it was the spoiling of the whole, and not the abstraction of part, which constituted the conversion. This is clearly the view taken in the later case of Philpot v. Kilby, 3 A. & E. 106, by Mr. Justice Patteson and Mr. Justice Coleridge, who there held that a misappropriation by the bailee of part of a stock of wine intrusted to him was no conversion of the whole, so as to make the Statute of Limitations begin to run from the date of the misappropriation. Richardson v. Atkinson, therefore, fails to benefit the plaintiff, because the facts are distinguishable. In this case I find that, though there was taking of a part, there was no spoiling of the whole. On the other hand, in the case of Heald v. Cary, 21 Law J. Rep. C. P. 97, Mr. Justice Maule says that a negligent dealing with goods by a bailee does not amount to a conversion. This, it is true, is a mere obiter dictum; but in this inferior Court it would, I think, be binding on me unless I believed that it had escaped the learned judge per incuriam, or unless it had been overruled or questioned by some later authority. Neither of these conditions has happened so far as I can learn. Having thus dealt with the authorities, let me consider for a moment to what extent the plaintiff must go to support his contention. He must go the length of saying that in the case of any bailee (for his argument must extend to every description of bailee as well as to a carrier), if the goods bailed are damaged to any extent, however slight, by reason of a default for which the bailee is in law responsible (as, for example, if one lends a carriage to a friend by the admitted negligence of whose coachman a little paint is scraped off one of the panels), he can force the bailee to become the involuntary purchaser of the thing bailed. Such a proposition is very startling, and I decline, without authority binding on me, to hold that the law is so. On the other hand, the obligation of the bailee (subject to the exception to which I have above referred, and which does not arise in this case) is to return the thing bailed, and not what is actually or substantially something else. For example, if a man bails a horse to a bailee, he cannot be bound to receive back a carcase of dead carrion, nor a carcase of beef instead of an ox, nor a cask of vinegar instead of one of wine, nor a horse with a broken leg (which motives of humanity must compel him immediately to convert into a dead carcase) instead of a sound one. In all these cases, either the thing bailed is not returned in specie, or (as in the case of the broken-legged horse), though returned in specie, it is of no value, so that the measure of damages would be the same as on a conversion, and the refusal to accept would be immaterial. The conclusion, then, which I draw on the whole case is, that whenever goods bailed are restored by the bailee still in ordinary parlance in specie and of some value the bailor must accept them subject to any right he may have to sue for the damage done; and his refusal to accept them does not create a constructive conversion by the bailee. In this case, therefore, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled only to the damages occasioned by the deterioration of his wine. As he has given me no evidence on which I can rely of the money loss occasioned by that deterioration, those damages must in this case be nominal. And as the counter-claim is practically undisputed, the defendants must succeed upon that. I give judgment, therefore, for the plaintiff on the claim, damages 1*s.*, and for the defendants on the counter-claim for 12*s.* 9*d.* And, inasmuch as the defendants have succeeded on the merits and by reason of the counter-claim, it would have been a mere idle form to pay money into Court, I think they are entitled to the general costs of the cause if they think proper to ask for them. It will be a matter for them to consider whether they will in such a case as this insist on their right. Payment of the sum due to the defendants to be made in fourteen days.—Thomas Cox, for Mr. G. L. Eades, represented the plaintiff, and Bentley (Worcester) the defendants.

MAYOR'S COURT.

A CURIOUS CLAIM.

On December 6, in the Lord Mayor's Court, a curious claim for damages came before the Assistant-Judge (Mr. Roxburgh) and a jury. The action was brought by Mr. A. F. Woodward, a compositor, against the Imperial Strength-Testing Machine Company (Lim.), to recover damages under somewhat peculiar circumstances. The defendant company are the proprietors of a patent machine which will test the strength of persons, who, after placing a penny in the slot, punch a pad provided for the purpose. The plaintiff on July 10 last was at Southend, where, at the entrance to the pier, was one of the defendants' machines. He read the directions upon it, which were: 'Place a penny in the slot and punch.' He placed a penny in the slot and punched, but the spring behind the pad would not move, and the effect of the blow was that his wrist was broken. He was unable to follow his occupation, and had lost his situation. This action was now brought to recover compensation for the injuries caused, on the ground of the negligence of the defendants in not keeping the machine in proper order, and also on the ground of warranty and of a promise of performance of a contract on the payment of a penny. Dr. Beswick, the medical attendant of the plaintiff, said that plaintiff had met with a serious accident, because he had dislocated the wrist. The ligaments were torn away. The pad which was on the machine to receive the punch was produced and handed to the witness, who gave it as his opinion that, if it were stationary, anyone punching it would break his wrist. For the defence technical evidence was given that the machine was so simple in construction that it was impossible for it to get out of order. The pad was in the nature of a buffer, and it would go back when punched, whether a penny was put in or not, the only work which the penny did being to put an indicator into motion showing the force of the blow struck. The owners of premises on which machines were placed were supposed to give notice to the company if any machine got out of order, and no such notice had been given. It was further suggested that the plaintiff had not struck the pad on the machine properly, and that the accident might have occurred in that way. The learned judge, in directing the jury, said if the defendants provided a machine which in itself was a source of danger, or contained a latent danger, so that anyone using it, at the invitation of the defendants, would be injured, then the defendants would be liable. The jury found for the plaintiff for 50*l*.

THE COST OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

ACCORDING to the annual report of the Liberty and Property Defence League the increase of local taxation caused by the excesses in 'social reform' committed by county councils and other district departments like the School Boards is already pressing heavily on the minority who pay the rates. In every American city such abuses have long ago necessitated the formation of ratepayers' protection societies for the purpose of curbing local expenditure. The need for some similar check in this country is beginning to be widely felt by the chief sufferers from municipal extravagance. With the object of assisting in the formation of some such system of self-defence here the League has opened communications in several directions. The dissatisfaction of those who foresee the mischief of all this 'municipal socialism' for the working classes themselves, and who, in spite of this, are forced to be its financiers against their better judgment, make it very probable that the action of the League in this matter will contribute to a practical result.

Local government exists by sufferance of the Imperial Government. It is everywhere exercised within the limits laid down by Parliament in statutes and charters. Among the duties of late taken up with much energy by municipalities is that of the free supply of books and newspapers to the working classes. In this case, the most important point in which the State has seen fit to use its right of restriction is that of expenditure. The Public Libraries Act of 1871 conferred upon localities the privilege of self-government in this matter on the condition that it should not cost the ratepayers more than a fixed fraction in the pound. Following this precedent, and in response to the request of an influential portion of ratepayers, the chairman of the League Council has given notice that he will at an early date ask Parliament to safeguard the rights of the minority against the abuse made of their powers by the County Council and School Board of London and other metropolitan municipalities by fixing a maximum to the rates leviable by them.

SIR ALFRED LYALL AND INDIAN MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

SIR A. C. LYALL, K.C.B., member of the Indian Council, and formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, contributes, says the Times, to the January number of the Indian Magazine and Review an article on infant marriage and widow remarriage. It is a distinct advantage to the Indian people, he points out, that they should be connected with a nation in which the standard of liberality, the habits of thought, regarding such matters, are much higher than in Asia generally; nor can their institutions long withstand the slow but sure attractions of the superior civilisation. Nevertheless, we have always to remember the nature of the power thus exerted by England over India. It is employed in the main, indirectly, by example, persuasion, and the steady inflow of larger ideas, which is produced by gradual changes in the material condition of the people. He is disposed to suggest to the National Indian Association—not to be confounded with the 'National Congress'—and to others who have, in England, so warmly taken up the questions referred to, that enough has been done for the present towards giving currency and movement to active measures for promoting reforms of child marriage and enforced widowhood in India. 'We have heard,' the writer goes on to observe, 'that the Government of India contemplates the early introduction of a bill to raise the legal age of consent, an amendment of law which I should thoroughly approve. The law as it stands is of our own making; so we are free—we are, indeed, bound—to alter it if we think right so to do.' While we have good ground for continuously loosening the bonds imposed by our own Legislature, we must act with the greatest circumspection. After alluding to the difficulties of interfering with early betrothals and the obstacles to widow remarriage, he continues: 'From the first there has been ground for the apprehension that anything like agitation on this subject in England would arouse opposition and set on foot a counter-movement in India, thereby embarrassing progress and turning discussion into controversy; and there are signs that this prognostication is being fulfilled. The influential meetings of Conservative Hindus at Madras and elsewhere, headed by men of weight, rank, and experience, like Sir Madahava Rao, are indications that must be taken into account.' Sir Alfred Lyall concludes as follows: 'There are certain cases in which it is the duty of the English Government to overcome friction and to push forward measures in which the safety of the country or the happiness of the people may be seriously involved. But the questions of child marriage or widow remarriage do not belong to that category, and when we have clearly explained the general principles upheld in England upon these very complicated social problems, we may well be content so to guide our further proceedings as to avoid any risk of a collision between the public sentiments of two friendly and associated nations.' Coming from an official of Sir A. Lyall's experience and authority, the suggestions in this article will, no doubt, receive the careful attention of the distinguished committee formed by Mr. B. M. Malabari, of Bombay, during his recent visit to this country.

THE YEAR'S INSOLVENCY.

WE said last year, in reviewing the statistics of failures for 1889, that 'It seems pretty certain that we are now entering upon a period of prosperity, or, as we may put it, a cycle of good business.' The figures for the year 1890 show that this view has so far been correct, as it is confirmed by the decrease in the various totals of insolvency. The statistical abstract is very satisfactory as far as it goes, and it may be taken to be a very fair indication of the improvement in the state of trade which the past year has shown in all departments of commercial activity. It is, of course, always to be remembered that these are only the official figures as contained in the Gazettes and records of the Bills of Sale Office, and that they, therefore, only show what may be called the public failures and the published insolvency, leaving out of account all really private arrangements with creditors, and also all the similar secret shifts in regard to loans of money by which the registration required by the Bills of Sale Acts is evaded. There are, of course, no means of knowing whether or not that class of insolvency has fallen in the same way as has the other. But it probably has done so, while it may be mentioned that the later decisions of the Court of Appeal, overruling some earlier cases, have put an end to hiring agreements as securities in any form, and so have stopped this very easy and private evasion of the Bills of Sale Acts, at all events for the future, and until some newer and wider scheme can be devised.

Taking open bankruptcies to begin with, we find a decrease during 1890 amounting to 10 per cent. upon the total for England and Wales for 1889, or about double the rate of decrease shown in 1889 upon the year 1888, which is certainly remarkable. Nor is this all, for we find that this decrease has been growing with greater force each year from the year 1886, although the falling-off during the last twelve months is far in advance of former improvements. For there to be over 500 less public bankruptcies in one year than in the year preceding is assuredly a striking fact, and one which should be a sign of a genuine revival in trade prospects. Then, again, we now have the figures for deeds of arrangement registered during the three years since the Act of 1887 came into operation, and these, too, are encouraging. Here also there has been a decline, smaller in 1889, but much larger in 1890, the decrease in the former year being only 38, as against about 180 in the last twelve months. Seeing how popular this form of arranging with creditors has become, it is clear that there must have been much less general insolvency to be dealt with during the latter period. It is true, of course, that numerous cases of small arrangements with creditors are carried out upon receipts for composition or dividend, and so without any formal deed or agreement that can be registered. But this has been the same for the last three years, speaking broadly, so that for purposes of comparison the figures above given offer reliable data, upon which we may base our conclusions.

If there had not been this striking decrease in registered deeds of arrangement as well as in bankruptcies, it might have been thought that many traders, instead of becoming bankrupt, had failed by deed. But when both have so rapidly fallen, there is only one deduction that can fairly be drawn from the statistics, and this is, fortunately, very favourable to a continuance of trade prosperity. It is curious that, in regard to bills of sale, the decrease has not kept pace with the decline in actual failures, nor has it maintained the high rate of diminution arrived at in 1889, when the total fall as compared with 1888 reached the large figure of 2,191. Of course, the decline of 1890, amounting to about 880, is upon a smaller number, but, in proportion to the decrease of 1889, it only amounts to about half. There is a possible explanation for this odd discrepancy in the fact that during 1889 the security of hiring agreements for loans was thought to be sound, and were doubtless largely used on the strength of a decision of the Court of Appeal. But in May of 1890 all this was upset, and these agreements were found to be worthless, so that it may possibly have tended to increase the total of bills of sale by driving all borrowers to give that form of security as the only one which lenders could safely accept. In Ireland, we notice, the falling-off in bills of sale during 1890 was well maintained, while it should be explained here that the increase in deeds of arrangements is only apparent in this country, and was entirely caused by the new Act of last session requiring the filing of petitions for arrangement in Dublin, with results that account for the rise.

In Scotland there has been but little change either one way or the other, for better or for worse, either in failures or in bills protested during the year, of which we give a table, as it affords some indication of commercial stability. But in Ireland the improvement in trade, as reflected in these figures, still continues. Thus there was a further decrease in the total bills of sales registered there, and also in the totals of bonds and judgments filed. This was, again, shown to be greatest amongst farmers, which tends to prove a better tone in agricultural matters. But this improvement in farming extends over the whole of the three kingdoms, and is very remarkable. Since 1886 the figures of official failures have been steadily falling, while during 1890 the decline upon the total for 1889 was as much as 30 per cent., which should certainly be a striking proof of better times in agriculture generally.—Kemp's Mercantile Gazette.

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM BULKELEY GLASSE, Q.C., died at Chettle, Blandford, Dorset, on December 30, 1890, at the age of eighty-four. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn on November 18, 1834, and was one of a batch of nearly thirty barristers whom Lord Truro, Lord Chancellor, made Queen's Counsel in July, 1851. Mr. Glasse ranked as a bencher of Lincoln's Inn at the time of his death immediately after the Earl of Selborne. Sir James Bacon stands senior, Mr. Walpole next, and Lord Selborne next. His name stands fourth in the list of Queen's Counsel for the present year, the names above his being those of Mr. Walpole, Mr. F. Calvert, and Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, and next to him stands Lord Grimthorpe. Mr. Glasse attached himself to the Court of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, where he divided the leading practice with Mr. John Bailly, Q.C. He subsequently practised before Vice-Chancellor Malins. Some years ago Mr. Glasse retired to his estate at Swaffham, Norfolk, but he afterwards sold it and removed to Chettle.

CAUSE LISTS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

THE COURT OF APPEAL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—During Hilary Sittings, until further notice, the Queen's Bench New Trial Paper will be taken every week, but not in the same Courts—that is to say, one week in Court I. and the next week in Court II., commencing the first week of the Sittings in Court I. Subject to the above arrangement, Chancery Final Appeals, Palatine Appeals, Chancery Interlocutory Appeals, and Lunacy Matters will be taken on the usual days in Court II. Queen's Bench Final Appeals, Bankruptcy Appeals, Admiralty Appeals, and Queen's Bench Interlocutory Practice Appeals will be taken on the usual days in Court I. The detailed order of Appeal Court work is given in the Hilary Sittings Paper.

Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors) will be taken in Court I. on days specially appointed by the Court.

Lunacy matters will be taken in Court II. on every Monday, at 11, until further notice.

APPEALS FOR HEARING.

(SET DOWN TO THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, INCLUSIVE.)

From the Chancery Division, the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Probate and Divorce), and the County Palatine and Stannaries Courts.

FOR JUDGMENT.

In re Standard Manufacturing Co. (Lim.), Lancaster Acts, and Co.'s Acts

FOR HEARING.

General List.

1890.

E. E. Warter, an infant, by her guardian v. H. de G. Warter, an infant, by his guardian
In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. / Crawford v. Royal Infirmary and other charities / In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. / Crawford v. Forshaw
Earl of Ilchester v. Raishley
Martin v. Heath (2)
In re Shipley Estates and Mundy's Settlement Trusts and Settled Land Act, 1882
In re Liverpool Household Stores Association (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts
Apollinaris Co. v. Snook
Attorney-General v. Morgan
Bellamy v. Debenham
In re Dick, deceased / Lopes v. Hume-Dick
E. M. G. De Vere Beauclerk, petitioner v. A. De Vere Beauclerk, respondent
Bown v. Centaur Cycle Co.
Elve v. Boyton
In re Jordan, deceased / Serjeantson v. Stokes
Vine v. Raleigh
In re Contract dated November 6, 1890, for Sale of Real Estate made between Eugene Arbib and C. G. Glass and another and Vendor and Purchaser Act
In re same Contract
Williams v. Marshall
Saxby v. Thomas
In re Sir E. H. Page-Turner, Bart., dec. (construction) / Maberley v. Blades
In re Woollcombe's Will Trusts / Woollcombe v. Woollcombe
Richards and others v. Butcher
In re Walbrum's Registered Trade-marks, 28,593, 28,594, and Trade marks Act
In re Halifax Sugar Refining Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts.

From the County Palatine Courts.

FINAL LIST.

1890.

Cheetham v. Oldham and Fogg

From Orders made on Interlocutory Motions in the Chancery Division.

SEPARATE LIST.

1890.

Burn v. London and South Wales Coal Co. (Lim.) and another Company
Welbourne v. Porter
Tussaud & Sons (Lim.) v. De Pinna
In re Thos. Owens, dec. / Owens v. Green
In re Messrs. Taylor, Stileman & Underwood, solicitors, ex parte A. M. L. Payne-Collier
Hamilton v. Brogden
Jenkins v. Bushby
In re Wm. Heseltine, dec. / Woodward v. Heseltine
Cox v. Bennett
J. W. Sey v. W. Griffith & Co.
Daniel v. Ferguson
In re Ormerod, Grierson & Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Official Liquidator
Barney and Birmingham, &c. Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Joshua Stubbs (Lim.) and another, in re Joshua Stubbs (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Jones v. Watts

From the Queen's Bench and Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty (Admiralty) Divisions.

FOR HEARING.

Final List.

1890.

Williams v. Buchanan (Alexander 3rd party)
Cronheim v. Sedgwick
Whitehaven Ship Building Co. (Lim.) (in liquidation) v. Russell and others
Davis (trading, &c.) v. Rogers and another
Mason & Barry (Lim.) v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris
Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line (1887) (Lim.) (damage to cargo)
Jones v. Williams
Winfield & Sons v. Snow Brothers
Dobell & Co. and others v. Steamship Bencroy Co. (Lim.)
Smith v. Northern Enamelled Iron Co. (Lim.)
Farnham v. Peel
Lawder v. Goucher
Irish v. Clayson
Europaische Wassergas Actien Gesellschaft v. London and Colonial Finance Corporation (Lim.)
Beckett and another v. Tower Assets Co. (Lim.)
South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Sickness and Accident Assurance Association
Overseers of Parish of Putney v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
Urmston (Treasurer, &c.) v. Whitelegg Bros. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Oakley v. Marston
Neil and another v. Hayward
North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Mayor, &c. of Kingston-upon-Hull
Fulton v. Pipe
Clink v. Radford & Co.
Shepherd v. Berger (Q. B. Crown Side)
Moir v. Marten and others
Hendry v. Von Weissenfeld
Lessing v. Horsley
Stogdon v. Lee / Same v. Same
Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Co. and others
Howlett, on behalf, &c. v. Mayor, &c. of Maidstone
Smith, Hill & Co. v. Pyman, Bell & Co.
Condy v. Blaiberg
A. Lavesseur and another, Liquidators of La Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux v. Mason and Barry (Lim.)
Lewis v. Pontypridd, Caerphilly and Newport Railway Co.
Baylis v. Hall, Son and Lord
De Souza v. Cobden
Murray v. Warren
Tyneside Steamship Co. (Lim.) v. Newcastle-on-Tyne Home Trade Insurance Association
Unwin v. Hanson
Newman v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
Kinnell & Co. v. Clements & Co.
Pyke v. Day and another

1891.

Armour v. Bate

From the Queen's Bench Division.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

(For Hearing before the Court of Appeal.)

1890.

Taylor and another v. Wheatley
Same v. Cragg
Terriss v. Cornwell and Empire Printing and Publishing Co. (Lim.)
Dibley v. Victoria Steamboat Association
Semmens v. Bute Docks Co. and Edward Robertson & Co.
Pittard v. Oliver
Lund v. Brocklesby and another
Heath v. Moore / Same v. Same
Bolander v. Davies
Webley v. Lowe
Evens v. Fenton
Robinson & Co. v. Ricardo
Williamson v. Savill Bros.
Horsman v. Croaker
Lamley v. Mayor, &c. of East Retford
Evans v. Langley
Gibbins v. Cumberland and another
Carey and wife v. Long's Hotel (Lim.)
Ball v. Corbett
Hayes v. Burgess / Same v. Same
Gower v. Tobitt and another
Steel v. Dartford Local Board
Phelps, James & Co. and others v. C. G. Hill and others
Turner v. Goldsmith
Stevens v. J. Hinshelwood & Co. / Same v. Same
Bennett v. M'Donald
Joyner v. Weeks
Crumble v. Wallsend Local Board
Shrapnel v. Everett
Jamieson v. Jamieson
Same v. Carden and others
Sheppards, Pelly & Co. v. Wilkinson
Foreign Wine Growers' Co. (Lim.) v. Hopkins

Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Bonas & Co. v. Alderson
Johnson v. Taylor
Blahton v. Hill
Knowles v. Duncan
Greaves v. Sykes
Speight v. Gosnay
Bradney v. Sanger
Stuart v. Bell
Brown & Co. v. Shropshire Iron Co. (Lim.)
Hammond v. Waterton
Allcock and others v. Hall and others
Heckscher v. Crosley & Burn and another
Pickett v. Lyon
Thomson v. Isaacs & Son
Union Bank of London v. Sweeting
Medawar v. Grand Hotel Co. (Lim.)
Hale v. Waterburg Prospecting Syndicate
Watkins v. Meek
Dobbin v. Wickes
Harris v. Gordon
Same v. Grindley
Heath v. Stokes
Mayfield v. Sheppard
Todd v. Sheppard
Gray v. Jones
Patmore (executors, &c.) v. Bell
Burriss v. Davis & Co. (Lim.)
Dickens v. Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. (Lim.)
Schroder v. Merchant Marine Insurance Co. (Lim.)
Wolff v. May
Walklin v. Johns
Carruthers v. Fisher
Saqui and another v. Lovering
Armitage v. Hornsby & Sons (Lim.)
Tucker v. Tucker
Corporation of the Hall of Arts and Sciences (commonly known as the "Royal Albert Hall") v. Dowager Countess of Winchelsea and another
Fox v. A. J. White (Lim.)
Drake v. Birchall
Hargraves v. Walker

1891.

Eslman v. Hassall

From Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty).

FOR HEARING.

(With Nautical Assessors.)

1890.

Great Grimsby Ice Co. (Lim.) owners of the smack Almoner and others v. Owners of the General Gordon
Elmore & Scott v. Owners of Steamship Dione
Stoomvart Maatschappy Nederland and others v. Owners of the Marpessa and freight
Owners of Ship Ovington v. Owners of ss. Queen Victoria and freight
Owners, Masters, and Crews of Steamships Inverness, Flying Scud, Heather Bell, and Spurn v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight
Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight and Owners of Ship Albert Edward and others v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals without Assessors (if any) are taken in order of date of setting down in the Queen's Bench Final List.

From the Queen's Bench Division, sitting in Bankruptcy.

1890.

In re Prince Alexis Soltykoff, ex parte H. G. Margrett

From the Queen's Bench Division.

INTERLOCUTORY LIST.

1890.

Roberts v. Tyser, and in re judgment obtained by Roberts against Tyser, dated May 19, 1888
Showers and others v. Chelmsford Union Assessment Committee (Q. B. Crown Side)
Pratt and another v. Russell

1891.

Armour v. Bate

SUMMARY OF APPEALS.

	Final	Interlocutory	Total
From the Chancery Division	23	14	37
From County Palatine Courts	1	—	1
From the Queen's Bench Division	43	4	47
From the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, Admiralty with Assessors	5	—	5
From the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy	1	—	1
New Trial Paper	73	—	73
Totals	146	18	164

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

CAUSES FOR TRIAL OR HEARING.

(Set down to Thursday, January 1, inclusive.)

Motions, Petitions, and Short Causes will be taken on the usual days, as stated in the Hilary Sittings Paper.

Mr. Justice CHITTY will take Witness Actions on the following days—viz. February 3, 4, 5, 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25, 26. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings. In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

Mr. Justice NORTH will take Witness Actions on Tuesday, January 20, and continue them on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, until further notice.

Mr. Justice STIRLING will take Witness Actions on days to be appointed by his Lordship, after the commencement of Sittings. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings.

Mr. Justice KEKEWICH will take Witness Actions on days to be appointed by his Lordship, after the commencement of the Sittings. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings.—Liverpool and Manchester Business will be taken as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses, on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons, Liverpool and Manchester Summonses being taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Liverpool Summonses on Friday, January 16.

Mr. Justice ROMER will taken Witness Actions every day in the order as they stand in the Cause Book.

Adjourned Summonses will be taken as follows: Mr. Justice CHITTY, with Non-Witness Actions, except Procedure Summonses, which (if any) are taken every Saturday; Mr. Justice NORTH, on Fridays and Saturdays; Mr. Justice STIRLING also on Fridays and Saturdays; Mr. Justice KEKEWICH on Saturdays.

N.B.—The above note as to Adjourned Summonses is subject to alteration as their Lordships may direct.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Freemantle v. Lafitte
Thompson v. M'Murdo
In re W. Rackham, dec.
Ormandy v. Rackham
Same Action, trial of third party
Boyle, Campbell & Co. v. Sacker
Western Wagon and Property Co. (Lim.) v. West
Hyslop v. Morel Bros.
Bolton v. Salmon and others
Chapman v. Caledonian Insurance Co.
Morris v. Bebro
Same v. Same
In re Hudson, dec.
Harris v. Strachan
M. Melacrino & Co. v. B. M. Melacrino and others
Holly v. Emmett
Blaydes v. Selby
Ramuz v. Earl Sondes
Arnold & Sons v. Lynch & Co.
Same v. Same
Sampson v. Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society (Lim.)
Creasy v. Dunmere
In re Robert Millard, dec.
Millard v. Millard
In re Harrison, dec.
Smith v. Allen
In re R. Harrison, dec.
Allen v. Cort
Birmingham Canal Navigations v. Tupper & Co.
Guardians of St. Saviour's Union v. Stanhope Co. (Lim.)
London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway Co. v. East and West India Dock Co. and London and East India Docks Joint Committee
Taylor v. Buzzard
In re John Lane, dec.
Hiscock v. Bankes
Dale v. Dale
Small v. Chapman
Fuller v. Impey
Hancock & Co. (Lim.) v. Fry
Inventions Trust Association (Lim.) v. Cole & Co.
Waugh v. Peacock
Anderson v. Lansdown
Dando v. New La Plata Mining and Smelting Co. (Lim.)
New La Plata Mining and Smelting Co. (Lim.) v. Dando
In re Baroness Craignish, dec.
Craignish v. Hewitt
Thomas v. Hume, Webster, Hoare & Co.
Wood v. Williams
Thornton v. Daniel
Bryen v. Glyn
Mapleson v. Boosey & Co.
Worthington v. Moore
St. Clair v. Manica Oplin Mining Co. (Lim.)
Lodge v. Ainley Sons & Co.
Leech v. Lewis (Lim.)
Nichols v. John Lewis & Co.
Boursot v. Boursot
Midland Railway Co. v. Metropolitan Railway Co.

Pink v. Pink
Matthew v. Munday
Hubbard v. Elverston
Eves v. Cook
Matthews v. Sanders
Fourth City Mutual Benefit Building Society v. Wood
Smith v. Bowler
Phillips v. Jones
Wigan v. Hoppe
Rickard v. Macalister
Lockyer v. Powell
Cameron v. Jones
In re Robson, dec. } Robson v. Hamilton }
Davies v. Plain
Singleton v. Mitchell
Oppenheimer v. Quinn
Redfarn v. Prime (2)
Sir W. G. Armstrong & Co. (Lim.) v. Pitkin
In re Thomas Price, dec. } In re E. B. Edwards, dec. } In re L. Price, dec. } Price v. Pontypool Gas and Water Co.
King v. Harry
Charsley v. Harris
Turner v. Elliott
Defence Vessel Construction Co. (Lim.) v. Scott
Hill v. Bischofswerder
Crossley Bros. v. Andrews & Co. (Lim.)
Andrew & Co. (Lim.) v. Crossley Bros. (Lim.)
Colman v. Colman
Jones v. Beard
Hartley v. Dearden
Garnett v. Carver
Goode v. Sharwood
Tooley v. Balkis Consolidated Co. (Lim.)
Bell v. Gresham Life Assurance Society
In re Gyles, dec. } Gyles v. Collinson }
Montagu v. Burton
Reid v. Whiteley
In re Whitchurch, dec. } Cotton v. Prowse }
Croydon Ironmongery Co. (Lim.) v. Davies
Skelton v. Schwabe
Lindsay v. Curtis
Richards v. Unett, Moore, Bayley & Co.
Warren v. Central Permanent Building Society
Bonham (married woman) v. Ellis
In re Earl of Caithness, dec. } Buchanan v. Sinclair }
George v. Greener
Royal Exchange Assurance and others v. Norton
Beecham v. Thompson
Unity Gold Mining Co. v. African Gold Share Investment Co. (Lim.)
Gunnell v. Woods
Brear v. Hirst
De Stafford v. Nevile
Bliss v. Hart and another
Cleworth v. National Provident Institution
A. Bosdet & Co. v. Patten
Nickalls v. Philips

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

Saxby v. Farmer
In re R. Davidson, dec. } Davidson v. Creek }
In re Symonds, dec. } Symonds v. Tuke }
In re Poor Allotments of the Parish of Walton-on-Thames and Trustee Relief Act (ex parte Hewitt and others) } In re Same Poor Allotments (ex parte Scott) }
Wearmouth Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Brown
Ratcliff v. Jowers
Ward v. Royal Exchange Shipping Co. (Lim.) (ex parte Lancaster, Speir & Co.)
Bush v. Smith
Rogers v. Hewitt
In re Earl of Abingdon, dec. } Bertie v. Abingdon }
In re J. Wicks's Estate } Wicks v. Wicks }
In re R. Woolfall's Estate } Caffull v. Woodfall }
Myers v. Myers
In re R. O. Perkins's Settlement Trusts } Jefferson v. Perkins }
Dean v. Dean
Perry v. Eames
Salaman v. Eames
Mercers' Co. v. Eames
Fareham Local Board v. Smith
In re Earl of Caithness's Estate } Leslie v. Caithness }
Witherby v. Rackham
In re B. Hodgkins's Estate } Boswell v. Pratt }
In re W. S. Dible, dec. } Rodgers v. Dible }
In re J. Eagling's Estate } Mines v. Walton }
In re W. Armitage's Estate } Holt v. Holt }
In re Davy's Trusts, ex parte A. B. Willoughby and Conveyancing Act, 1881
In re Drummond and Davies's Contract and Vendor and Purchaser Act
In re Howard's Settlement Trusts } Paget v. Castle Rising Hospital (ex parte Settlement Trustee) }
In re J. Stanger's Estate } Moorsom v. Tate }
In re W. Salmon's Estate } Bush v. Bush }
Armstrong v. Armstrong
In re Bullimore's Settlement } Willis v. Burchell }
Walker v. Walker } Same v. Same } Same v. Same } Same v. Same }
In re Moore and Burton's Contract and Vendor and Purchaser Act (ex parte Purchaser)
In re T. V. S. Gooch, an infant, and Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (ex parte Lady Gooch)
In re V. Nevin, an infant, and Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886
In re S. Lawson, dec. } Birt v. Hinton }
Twynam v. Neath Harbour Commissioners
In re M'Gregor and Ratcliffe's Contract (ex parte Vendors)
In re H. A. Gwynne, dec. } Brooks v. Gwynne }
In re Samuel Gurney's Trusts } Gurney v. West Ham School Board (ex parte Residuary Legatees) }

Procedure Summons.

Jones v. Insole

Further Considerations.

In re S. Hurst, dec. } Addison v. Topp }
In re W. B. Taylor, dec. } Stephenson v. Taylor } Loder v. Loder
In re Hawkins, dec. } Walker v. Smith }
Forster v. Forster
In re John Betts, dec. } Jones v. Butt }

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Graeme v. Walker
Bentinck v. London Joint Stock Bank (Lim.)
Parnell v. Halkett } Halkett v. Parnell }
Bruce v. Watling
Fletcher v. Golland
Lescher v. Hart
Gas Patents Syndicate (Lim.) v. Lindsay
Willoughby v. Paulet } Brandon v. Willoughby }
Philippe v. Whitehead
Smith v. Hanbury
In re Harrison } Usher v. Harrison }
Sunley v. Spratt
In re Webster } Webster v. Webster }
Low v. Bouverie
Lane v. Godfrey
In re Lawes } Baylis v. Rees }
Stuart v. Hobson
Davidier v. M'Murdo
Hards v. Ford, Lloyd & Co.
Ilbert v. Norris
Smith v. Andrews
Zefferti v. Park
In re Sharpe } In re Bennett } Masonic, &c. Assurance Co. v. Sharpe }
Cossey v. Roper
Chester v. Harris
Cowley v. Stocken
A. Pirie & Sons (Lim.) v. Goodall & Son
Commercial Bank of Scotland (Lim.) v. Sanders
Burgess v. Van Hoydonck
Matthews v. Martin
Sladen v. Shemwell
Garner v. Coad
Russell v. Sudeley
Beecham v. Turton
Parrot v. Burnett
Kenrick v. Danube Collieries, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Bullock v. Jones
Grosvenor v. White
Knowles v. Scott
Barker v. Furlong
United Friendly Societies Building Society v. Hobbs
In re G. Walker } Walker v. Walker }
Sykes v. Wigfield
Woolner v. Miskin
In re Grazebrook } Coxwell v. Paine }
Woodcock v. Parkyn
Tarbutt and others v. Holland
Faulders Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Bownass
Tippett v. Strutt
New Land Development Association (Lim.) v. Lewisham District Board of Works
In re W. Giles } Real and Personal Advance Co. (Lim.) v. Giles }
In re Walker } Turley v. Walker }
Hardwick v. Morton
Zuccato and another v. Young
Wilkinson and another v. Griffiths Bros. & Co.
Moore v. North-West Bank (Lim.)
In re Aspinall } Hudson v. Warburton } Collinson v. Hudson }
Mackenzie v. Newton
Cole v. Cole
Llewellyn v. Simpson
Mineral Residues Syndicate v. Levant Mine Adventurers
Potter v. Glover
Thomson v. Hughes
Jackson v. Pegg
Beadell v. Beadell
Rose v. Ainge
Holland v. Wilson
Stuckey's Banking Co. v. Cohen
Lindoe v. Alexander
Leveson-Tower v. Jarrett
National and Provincial Bank of England (Lim.) v. Daniel
Pritchard & Co. (Lim.) (in liquidation) v. Pritchard
In re M'Murdo } Penfield v. M'Murdo }
British Water Gas Syndicate (Lim.) v. Nottingham and Derby Water Gas Co. (Lim.)
Nicholaz v. Development and Investment Co. (Lim.)
Bright v. Eckersley
Newman v. Yeats
Walker v. Higgins
People's Co-operative, &c. Building Society v. Shaw
Showell v. Perrins
Merridew v. Morris
Hamilton v. Hamilton
Crawshay v. Cartland
Capel v. Brown
Filden v. Bond
In re Rendle } Rendle v. Rendle }
Danks v. Jones
Taylor v. Taylor
In re Bliss } Bliss v. Bliss }
Automatic Weighing Machine Co. (Lim.) v. National Exhibitors' Association (Lim.)
Rayner v. Winstanley
Jensen v. Hilder
Wilkinson v. Jennings
Booty v. Goodwin
Lincoln Brick Co. (Lim.) v. Handley
Manning v. Freshwater, &c. Co.
Oldham v. Metherell
Wilson v. Queen's Club (Lim.)
Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate (Lim.) v. Melvor's Patents (Lim.)
Morris, Wilson & Co. v. Coventry Machinists' Co. (Lim.)
Viney v. Lewis
Tims v. Schell } Schell v. Cutler }
Thesiger v. York
Lloyd v. Clingo
Belsey v. Brooks
Westinghouse Brake Co. (Lim.) v. Williamson
Norton v. Burr
T. & W. Smith v. Bullivant and others
Brett v. Bowles
Fielding v. Earl Northbrook
Beaumont v. Provident Assurance Co. (Lim.)
Ward v. Langdon
Farrell v. Joint Stock Association
Langham v. Hedges & Abell
Faull v. Harding
In re Stevens } Stevens v. Stubbington }
In re Clench } Draper v. Clench }

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

Charles v. Fuller
In re Gatward } Gatward v. Gatward }
Hunter v. Union Finance Co. (Lim.)
In re Keeley } Keeley v. Courtney } Woodhouse v. Bellairs
In re Cooper } Cooper v. Cooper }

Adjourned Summonses.

In re Earl of Leven and Melville
Deacon v. Earl of Leven
In re Barton-upon-Humber and District Water Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Burfield
Dean v. Burfield
In re Birmingham Concert Halls (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Boord & Sons
In re Same, ex parte J. J. Nunn
Elliott v. Steel
Gedye v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings
In re Muspratt
Muspratt v. Blake
In re Cox & Neave and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
In re Crawshay
Dennis v. Crawshay, &c.
Handley v. Hazlehurst
In re Wright
Whitehead v. Stares
In re Radcliffe
Radcliffe v. Bowes
Harper v. Eyre
Badeley v. Consolidated Bank (Lim.)
In re Harris
Fitzroy v. Harris
In re Thomas
Richard v. Thomas
In re J. T. Marshall, &c.
In re Rees
Williams v. Lloyd
Brown v. Clark
In re West
West v. West
Haseldine v. Haseldine
Same v. Same
Kennedy v. Smith
In re Miller
Bevan v. Miller
In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Nathage
Ellis v. Barfield
In re Capstick
Capstick v. Simmonds
Hamilton v. Brogden
In re Brace
Welch v. Colt

Further Considerations.

In re Stevens
Stevens v. Kelly
Page s. Page
In re Lockerby
Lockerby v. Muir
Stead v. Harper
In re Elliott
Elliott v. Johnson
Rowley v. Fiennes
Ager v. Blacklock

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

In re J. Davis
Joseph v. Davis
Denman v. Batten
Lowther v. Caledonian Railway Co.
General Auction, Estate and Monetary Co. v. Smith
In re Robertson
Moir v. Moir
Reid v. Ellis
Goodall, Backhouse & Co. v. Wilkinson
Mears v. Mockford
In re Brooke
Crosby v. Brooke
Hedger v. Hedger
In re Jennings
Jennings v. Jennings
Scott v. National Finance Corporation (Lim.)
Hornley v. Richards
Dodd v. Scholding
Burton v. Dodd
Armstrong v. Owray Gold Mining Co. (Lim.)
Edwards v. Beckett
Sebright v. Fitzgerald
Gledhill v. Maude
Hunt v. Parry
In re Parry
In re Pierce
Hunt v. Parry
Crump v. Minter
Keighley, Maxsted & Co. v. Bakewell
Laing v. Walker
Couling v. Gell
In re Fox
Fox v. Fox
Hill v. Bishton
Canning v. Stone
In re Hodgson
Thompson v. Wilson
Wilson v. Thompson
Fuller v. Duncan
New Asbestos Co. (Lim.) v. Same
Hyde v. New Asbestos Co. (Lim.)
Masters, &c. of the Skinners' Co., London v. Leadenhall Market, &c. Co.
Colchester Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Harwood
Simmons v. Henderson
In re Cooper
Greaves v. Cooper
Parnell v. Pitman
In re Nesbitt
Nesbitt v. Freeman
Faulkner v. Stevens
United Telephone Co. (Lim.) v. Lancashire, &c. Railway Co.
Same v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
O'Shea v. Wood
Staffordshire, &c. Bk. v. Partridge
In re Owen
Owen v. Allman
Benham v. Clarkson
Baring v. Abingdon
Whately v. Rippon
Birmington v. Hill
Morley v. Brodhurst
Ramsbotham v. Fielding
Turney v. Turney
Whitby v. Whitby
Pedder v. Pedder
Stephenson v. Ovington
Davies v. Gibson
Hooper v. Cullener
Cross v. Mein
Gavin v. Hughes
Robertson v. Hughes
Heathcote v. Blair
Steinwald v. Van Raalte
Rippon v. Brushfield
Buller v. Strange
Abbott v. Howard
In re Park
Cole v. Park
Park v. Cole
Brunton v. Red Moss Works Co.
Coombs v. Wilks
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Keen
In re Casey's Trade-marks, &c. and Patents, &c. Act
Stewart v. Casey
Duke of Sutherland v. Heathcote
Woodman v. Knowles
Cox v. Holman
Jones v. Merionethshire, &c. Building Society
Froude v. Wilberforce
Western Counties Railway Co. v. Anderson & Co.
Rugby Portland Cement Co. v. Rugby and Newbould Cement Co. (Lim.)
Birch v. Egan
Campbell v. Tate
Moul v. Douglas
In re Rudd
Peal v. Rudd
Adney v. Adney
Vernall v. Reed
Cunliffe v. Bellite Explosives (Lim.)
Best v. Dodd
Municipal Permanent Investment Society v. Pollington
Farbenfabriken Vorm Fried Bayer & Co. and others v. Bowker
Atkinson v. Bower
In re Bayley
Worthington v. Bayley
Hampton v. Davis
Wrensted v. Rede
Wagner v. Costeritz
Jones v. Wemyss
In re MacIvor's Patent & Co.'s Acts
Lewis v. Oldroyd
Lloyd v. Fox
Price's Patent Candle Co. (Lim.) v. Price & Co.
In re Heywood
Heywood v. Heywood
Leach v. Hearn
Williams v. Gregory
In re Carruthers
Talbot v. Carruthers
Simeon v. Freshwater, &c. Railway Co.
Wroath v. Coathupe
Newton v. Cohen
Bank of British North America v. Anderson & Co.
Pender v. Brass
Young v. Harris
Twyeould v. Chamber Colliery Co. (Lim.)
Coombs v. J. Jones & Son
Render v. Macpherson
In re Wells
Molony v. Brooke
Radway v. Titmas
Sykes v. Crust
Norfolk v. Harvey
Fritchley v. Marshall
In re Walsh
Underwood v. Haiden
Cunningham v. Todd
Willcox v. Black
Crowder v. Cooper
Farr v. British Sublimed Lead, &c. Co.
Beecham v. Fisher
Jackson v. Snell
In re Edgar
Edgar v. Edgar
Lampard v. St. George's House, (Lim.)
Foster v. Rowe
In re Bowman
Bowman v. Bowman

Causes for Trial without Witnesses and Adjourned Summonses.

In re Credit Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Blumberg & Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Aurum Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Act, ex parte Sulybach
Griffith v. Pound
Robertson v. Harlopp
In re Low
Gamble v. Low
In re Broughton
Barnard v. Stockton
In re Credit Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Liquidator
Barrow v. Barrow
In re Goodbody
Williams v. Roddand
In re W. J. Cross
Cuturi v. Cross
Stone v. Lickorish
Newby v. Richmond
In re Helen's and District Trams Co.
Watkins v. The Co.
Chalk v. Abethell
In re Reeve
Reeve v. Reeve
Wills v. Lycett

Further Considerations.

In re Forster
Forster v. Budd
Tayler v. Bell
Styles v. Stafford & Guy (Lim.)
In re Longley
Longley v. Wheater

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Edwards
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Hy. Dunkley
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte J. K. Aston
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte R. V. Green
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte R. Lord
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte A. A. Lord
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Perry
In re Same and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Kirkmann
Rendall v. Blair
London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans & Co.
Richards v. Butcher
In re R. Perry
Walker v. Walker
Wentworth v. Hull and North-Western Junction Railway Co.
In re Roper
Buxton v. Sheldon
Read v. Nesling
Hair v. Geddes
Sykes v. Burr
Provan v. Paterson
Smith v. Rogers
Reed v. Wollranch
Lucas v. Gillett
M'Clintock v. M'Clintock
Ashling v. Boon
Freeman v. Cheesman
Cheesman v. Freeman
Riddle v. Trim
Millen v. Gatfield
In re Fuente & Pinto and Trade-mark No. 67,419, &c.
In re Same and Trade-mark No. 65,643
In re Same and Trade-mark No. 67,418
Mackenzie v. Mackintosh
Ricketts v. Ricketts
Bythesea v. Bythesea
Wyatt v. Earl Cadogan
Pullin v. Reffell
Cronbach v. Uranium Mines (Lim.)
Same v. Same
In re Mountain
Beckett v. Mountain

Carter v. Sillier
Wertheimer v. Cohen
Holtz v. Couper
Hanley, &c., Coal Co. (Lim.) v. North Staffordshire Railway Co.
Crown Bank (Lim.) v. Newman
Perceval v. Burnett
Dixon v. Garnish
Fleetwood Estate Co. (Lim.) v. Drummond & Sons
Sanderson v. Allen
Westmoreland Green, &c., Slate Co. (Lim.) v. Feilden
Bower v. Tomkinson
Steel v. Evans
Gardiner v. Frith
Earl of Shaftesbury v. White
London Founders' Association (Lim.) v. Commercial Trust, &c. (Lim.)
Thomas v. Christmas
In re Yorath
Hughes v. Davies
Horsman v. Shorney
Hinde v. Burr
Smyrke v. De Peyer
Thornley v. Lupton
Cubitt v. New Land Development Association (Lim.)
Gray v. Purves
Holland v. Skidmore
Marshall v. Borrowdale Plumbago &c. Co. (Lim.)
Ward v. Miles
Lloyd v. Margrave
Nuttall v. Hargreaves
Beard v. Margrett
Margrett v. Beard
In re Joel's Letters Patent, &c. v. Petition
Haley v. Metcalfe
Jope v. Pountain
Jones v. Steamship Cairngoun (Lim.)
Edwards v. Covell
Campbell v. Skewis
London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co. v. Reeves
Lewis v. Morgan
Meux v. Cobley
Blackman v. Fysh
Baily v. Icke
Lawson v. Holt Bros.
Handley v. Willson
Bellite Explosive (Lim.) v. Belite Co. (Lim.)
Sawkins v. Stratford, &c. Junction Railway Co.
In re Whiteley and Roberts, arbitration, &c.
Brandon v. Viscount Bury
Godfrey v. Walker
Burroughs & Watts v. Orme & Sons
Denney v. Frisby
Alcock v. Smith
Klein v. Wagner
Dawson v. Church
In re Parker
Lowe v. Parker
Schott Bros. (Lim.) v. Wharfedale Fancy Knitting Wool Co.
Nicol v. Charaley
Horwood v. Milkins
Leach v. Gough
Munns v. Howard
Benson v. D'Arcy
In re Johnson
Johnson v. Johnson
Nokes v. Prior
In re Lyle & Kinahan's Trade-Mark, &c.
Coulson v. Lock
Savoy Publishing Co. (Lim.), &c. v. O'Reilly
Henry Clay & Co. v. Litsica Marx & Co.
Bendall v. A. D. Selfe & Co.
Duncan v. Baird
Wood v. Lamplough
Motum v. Wilmot
I'Anson v. Turner
Lewis v. Ellis
Richards v. Whitham
Marsden v. Thorne
In re Ewing
Beckett v. Small

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

In re Davidson
Faija v. Davidson
In re Fitzgerald
Fitzgerald v. Cary-Elwes
Greenwood v. Turner
Banks v. Scovell
Welchman v. Creigh
In re Wynn
Wynn v. Wynn
Lusk v. Plumbly

Adjourned Summonses.

Griffin v. Bishop's Castle Railway Co.
Haslehurst v. Rylands
In re Stephens
Warburton v. Stephens
In re Gartside
Taylor v. Butterworth
In re Newman
Bleste v. Slidolph
In re Darby
How v. Draper
In re Heathcote
Trench v. Heathcote
In re Same
Butchart v. Heathcote
In re Trade Investment Trust (Lim.) and King and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
Stewart v. Bessler
Langdon v. Grange
In re Hartley & Chirnside and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
Slater v. Slater
Hope v. D'Hedouville
In re Isaac
Cronbach v. Isaac
Cooke v. Smith
Windham v. Cooper
In re Garston, an infant
In re Same
In re Tutill
Storey v. Bridgland
In re Earl of Lisburne, &c. and Settled Lands Acts
Cox v. Bennett
In re Stuckey
Prankerd v. Roach
In re Croom
England v. Provincial Assets Co. (Lim.)
In re Pearce
Smith v. Arnold
In re Beresford
Beresford v. Beresford
In re Same
Same v. Same
Hicks v. Rose

Further Considerations.

Re Boultwood
Attorney-General v. Solicitor to Treasury
Pennington v. Smith
Griffith v. Mayhew
London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co.
In re Robson
Larkman v. Robson

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Causes for trial (with Witnesses).

Scott v. Snyder Dynamite Projectile Co. (Lim.)
Van Gelder Assurance, Simon & Co. v. Sowerby Bridge United District Flour Society (Lim.)
Roberts v. Lewis
Jones v. Dinas Steam Colliery Co. (Lim.)
Same v. Same

Transferred from Justices CHITTY, NORTH, and STIRLING, for trial or hearing only, by order dated September 2, 1890.

Smiley v. Primery
Scholes v. Brook
Howard v. Golland
Potter v. Passburg Grains Syndicate
Bigwood v. Same
J. B. Orr & Co. (Lim.) v. J. B. Orr
British Tanning Co. (Lim.) v. Groth
Hornsey Local Board v. Elder
Cooper v. Power
Barnhard v. Cumming
Steers v. Rogers
Gisborne v. Shipping Appliances Co. (Lim.)
Clifford v. Wilmot
In re S. Rees
Rees v. Jones
Hart v. Hyde
Haseldine v. Haseldine
Rickett v. Bennett
Harrison, Ainslee & Co. v. Mayor, &c. of Barrow-in-Furness
Riche v. Erlam
Ballard v. Hover
Gathorne-Hardy v. Rogers
Cochrane v. Stone
Gardner v. Cowcher
London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow Assurance Co. v. Turner
Veness v. Geary
Ellis v. Amhurst
Amhurst v. Ellis
Countess de Galve v. Forwood Brothers
South Staffordshire Water Works Co. v. Marquess of Anglesey
In re S. S. Smith
How v. Mee
Buckland v. Mills
In re Sir R. H. K. Lacon
Lacon v. Lacon
Martin v. Hemsworth
Tucker v. Kaye
Woolranch v. Woolranch
Barran & Sons v. Atkinson
Eves v. Tooth
Gilson v. Cheeswright
Sparrow v. Swiss Milk Powder Co. (Lim.)
Bristol Brewery, Georges & Co. (Lim.) v. Gillings
Avery v. A. Wood & Sons
Prew v. Sanders
Tweed v. Death
Griffith v. Evans
T. W. Mansell & Co. v. British Linen Co. Bank
Halford v. Hyam
Wright v. Law
Lee v. Smart
Cummins v. Sargent
Roberts v. Peckham
Alexander v. Wolsey
Dairy v. Bailey & Co.
Stavert v. Passbury Grains Syndicate

Jones v. South Staffordshire Coal, &c. Syndicate (Lim.)
Harbertson v. Bowser, Ounston & Co.

SUMMARY.

1.—Mr. Justice CHITTY—Witness Actions			103
	Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses		41
	Further Considerations and Procedure Summons		7
			151
2.—Mr. Justice NORTH—Witness Actions			117
	Non-Witness Actions		6
	Adjourned Summonses		30
	Further Considerations		7
			160
3.—Mr. Justice STIRLING—Witness Actions			126
	Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses		17
	Further Considerations		4
			147
4.—Mr. Justice KEKEWICH—Witness Actions			111
	Non-Witness Actions		7
	Adjourned Summonses		28
	Further Considerations		5
			151
5.—Mr. Justice ROMER—Witness Actions			56
Total Causes and Matters for Hearing in the Chancery Division			667

SPECIAL PAPER.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Set down October 31, 1890, due November 5, 1890.

Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Fowler

Set down December 6, 1890, due December 12, 1890.

Lister v. Wood

OPPOSED MOTIONS.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Orisford v. West Lancashire Railway Co.—Stand over till January 13
Owen v. Stark
In re M. R. E. Brandreth—Stand over till notice given to Law Society
Fisher, Meinhardt & Co. v. Hutchins & Co.
Weight v. Perrin
Davis v. Paris
East Acton Brick, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Hammer
Edleston v. Siddall and another
Morrison, Kekewich & Co. v. Baring Brothers and another
Hornfall v. Seal & Co.
In re Arbitration between Hendon and Ballard
Sarell v. Duke of Westminster
Curson v. Shillito and another
Dimsdale and others v. Wilkinson & Jarvis
Ward v. Proctor
Delta Metal Co. (Lim.) v. Maxim Nordenfeldt Gun, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Greenwell & Co. v. Linton and another
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Hartley v. Rickerby
Hobbs v. Gaskell and others
Selig v. Lion & Sons
Westacott v. Bevan and another
Hartcup v. Dealtry
Brandon and another v. M'Henry
Hills v. Rolls
Williams v. Mills and others
Nelson and another v. Taylor
In re Arbitration between Von Schoeller and others and Lorenz Ordnance Co.
Potts v. Russell
Ward v. Proctor
Roberts & Sons v. Wohlgemuth & Co.
Poulter v. Cowper and another
Assicurazioni Generali and others v SS. Bessie Morris Co. (Lim.)
Tanner & Co. v. Radclyffe and others
In re Arbitration between Thames Iron Works, &c. Co. (Lim.) and Barry Docks and Railway Co.
Drew and another v. Lewis
Street v. Doody
Same v. Same—Part heard before Pollock, B. and Cave, J.
Strauss & Co. v. Goldschmid
Williamson v. Ingham
Perry v. Pitt
Price v. Evans
Sykes's Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Chadwick
Pasburg Grains Syndicate (Lim.) v. North
Scott v. Potter
Anderson v. Tennant
Usher v. Porteous
Buckler & Co. v. Great Western Railway Co.
Hurd v. Morris
Humphreys v. Jude and others
Wilson v. Ellis
Hamerton v. Bradley
In re Griffith, Eggar & Griffith, gents. (delivery of documents)
In re W. A. Watts, gent. (costs)
Bennet v. Justices of the County of Northampton
Capel, Cure, and another v. Investors' Union (Lim.)
London and Universal Bank (Lim.) v. Abbott and another
Hammond v. Schofield and another
Nugent and others v. Leonard
Attenborough v. Hawker and another
Harrison v. Vergis
Gunn v. Tucker
Flower & Sons and others v. Rose and others
Hughes v. Sawrey
Bates v. Taylor
Hughes and others v. Howes and another
Hills v. Midgley & Sons
Massey v. Turner
Sheffield v. Trevor
Evans and another v. Davies
Reeve and another v. Gibson
Davey v. Thompson
New Westminster Brewery Co. v. Sanders
In re Blair & Girling, ex parte Grant
Tanner & Co. v. Radclyffe & others
Same v. Same
Jones v. Pontypool Guardians
Cumberland Union Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Caird
Archer and another v. Hobbs & Co. (Lim.)
Bloxsome v. Flinn
Cooke and another v. Hamlyn
Hughes & Kimber (Lim.) v. Popular Publishing Co. (Burgess and another third parties)
In re Arbitration between Jones and Davies
West and others v. Marks and another
Cave v. Leslie and others
In re Arbitration between Gollings and Tradesmen's Friendly Society, Peterborough
Aitken v. Batchelor
Collings v. Hawkins
Hutchinson and another v. Reid and others, trustees (urgent)
Barclay and others v. Seton, Karr, and others
Same v. Same
Same v. Same
Fowler and another v. Bowles (Bowles, claimant)
In re Adolphus Herman Louis, an unqualified person, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Morgan v. Harrison
Ross v. Bourke
Giddy & Giddy v. Benham
Prado v. Chamberlaine
Dreyfus v. Biedermann
Wood and another v. Bathe
Penberthy v. Venezuelan, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Snell, Son & Greenip v. Foakes
Devon and Cornwall Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Prior
Barlow and another v. Forbes, Munn & Co.
Haughton v. Hartmann and others
Newbigging v. Kirby
Joicey & Co. v. Allan & Co.
Sutton & Co. v. Zuccani (urgent)
In re an Arbitration between Williams and Stepney
Milisich v. Spottiswoode
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Trotter v. Fox
Day v. Moss

CROWN PAPER.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Brown v. Hawkes (cur. adv. vult. June 25; coram Cave, J. and Smith, J.)
Dover—In re Local Government Act, 1888 (ex parte Council of the Borough of Dover (cur. adv. vult. November 24; coram Stephen, J. and Williams, J.)

FOR ARGUMENT.

Metropolitan Police District—Fortescue v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green
Durham—Regina v. Felling Local Board, ex parte Davidson
Somersetshire (Yeovil)—Wilmot v. Darby and another
London—Smith v. Barber
Surrey (Croydon)—Moore v. East Surrey Iron Works
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Ashford v. Lonsdale and another
Monmouthshire (Newport)—Brace v. Abercarne Coal Co.
Monmouthshire (Newport)—Higgins v. London and South Wales Coal Co.
Cumberland / Westmoreland — Regina v. Joint Committees of Quarter Sessions and County Councils of Cumberland and Westmoreland (ex parte Bertram)
London—Regina v. Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbot, Kensington (ex parte Trickett)
London—Jones and others (trading, &c.) v. Dobson and others (trading, &c.)
Derbyshire (Derby)—Vernon and others (trustees, &c.) v. Watson
London—Regina v. Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbot, Kensington (ex parte Preston)
Metropolitan Police District—Noble v. Killick and others
Surrey (Croydon)—Pelton v. Harrison
Nottinghamshire (Nottingham)—Beeston Urban Sanitary Authority v. Cotton
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Surman v. Wharton
Middlesex—Lea Conservancy Board v. Tottenham Local Board of Health
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Shea v. Stanley and others (trustees, &c.)
Nottinghamshire (Nottingham)—Webster v. Wainwright
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Eagland and another v. Searle (Hoddinott and another, claimants)
Northamptonshire (Towcester)—French v. Imperial Livestock Insurance Association
Wiltshire (Swindon)—Large v. Munson
Middlesex (Edmonton)—Cornell v. May
Dover—Westmore v. Paine
Metropolitan Police District—Smith v. Bushel
Gloucester—Underwood v. Jones
Hertfordshire (Royston)—Favell v. Wright
Surrey (Lambeth)—Rathbone v. Long and another
Staffordshire—Wells v. Hill
Middlesex (Westminster)—Nicholls v. Chapman
Surrey (Southwark)—Moss v. Fisher
Cheltenham—Brydges v. Dix
Staffordshire (Cheadle)—Waring v. Seal & Co.
Carnarvonshire (Portmadoc and Festiniog)—Roberts v. Blaenau Festiniog, &c. Industrial Society
Middlesex—Regina v. Mitcheson, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. and Tyler (ex parte Kearley and another)
Birmingham—Proprietors Birmingham Canal, &c. v. Churchwardens, &c. Birmingham
Cambridgeshire (Ely)—Eaves v. Rickwood

Brecknockshire—Regina v. Doyle, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. (ex parte Price)
Durham (South Shields)—Crosthwaite v. Ainsley and others
Middlesex (Westminster)—Pelberman v. Rayner
Sussex (Brighton)—Wenman v. Lyon & Co. (Honeywill, claimant)
Macclesfield—Oldham and others v. Sheasby
Middlesex (Bow)—Fairweather and Wife v. North London Railway Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Regina v. Bros, Esq. Metropolitan Police Magistrate, and Miller (ex parte London County Council)
Essex—In re Local Government Act, 1888 (ex parte County Council of Essex and others)
Pembroke—Regina v. Morison, Esq. and others, Licensing Justices, &c. (ex parte Miles)
Lancashire (Blackpool)—Regina v. Birley, Esq. and others, Licensing Justices, &c. (ex parte Shepherd and another)
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Co.
Worcestershire (Kidderminster)—Stooke v. Mutual Providence Alliance
London—Stephens v. British Bechuanaland Co.
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Boydell v. Millar
Hertfordshire (Watford)—James v. Robinson
Salford—Hancock v. Haynes
Surrey (Croydon)—Oldaker v. Strutton
Coventry—Budd v. Lucas
Middlesex (Shoreditch)—Lane v. Ewin Brothers
Lancashire (Manchester)—Morris v. Kanfman
Cheshire (Chester)—Hopkins v. Hopkins
Middlesex (Brompton)—Searles and another v. Finch and another
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Bex v. Godfrey
London—Nash v. Cunard Steamship Co.
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Prime Brothers v. Slatford
Somersetshire (Wells) { In re Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 / Gough and others v. Gough and others
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Third Perseverance Ballot, &c. Building Society v. Keogh
Cumberland (Carlisle)—Dixon v. Thompson and others
Kent—In re Local Government Act, 1888, ex parte Kent County Council and Borough of Sandwich
Leicestershire—Regina v. Judge of County Court of Leicestershire, holden at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and Gill and another (ex parte Taverner)
Hampshire (Andover)—Kercher v. Portal
Cheshire (Hyde)—East End, &c. Permanent Building Society v. Slack and others
Hampshire (Bournemouth)—Bance v. Saunders
England—Regina v. Smith, Esq. and another, Commissioners, &c. under Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (ex parte Tyne Coal Co.)
Middlesex (Westminster)—Briton Medical and General Life Association v. Asher
Sussex (Brighton)—Hora and another v. Holdaway
London—Panton v. Cosh & Co.
Yorkshire (Sheffield)—In re County Courts Act, 1888, and In re Trusts of Will of G. Whitehead, dec.
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Standing v. Briggs
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Regina v. Kirkheaton Local Board
Middlesex (Westminster { Beasley v. Roney / Lilley v. Roney
London—Regina v. Registrar of City of London Court and Sibley (ex parte Davey)
Middlesex—Regina v. H.M.'s Secretary of State for War (ex parte Mitchell)
Yorkshire (Halifax)—Regina v. Judge of County Court of Yorkshire, holden at Halifax and Bairstow (ex parte Sutcliffe)
Lancashire (Manchester)—Jackson v. M'Gowan
Durham—Bell v. Bruce and others
Sunderland—Slaughter v. Mayor, &c. of Sunderland
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Reason v. Lewis
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Purser v. Holme and another
London—Regina v. Gregory (ex parte Hastie)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Saunders v. Legg
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Landsberg and another v. Moses
Surrey (Kingston)—Wimbledon Local Board v. Underwood (Simmons, claimant)
Lancashire (Bury)—Bailey v. Slatter
London—Abbott and another v. House Property and Investment Co.
Devonshire—Murch and another v. Baker
Monmouthshire—Bound v. Lawrence
Worcestershire (Great Malvern)—Jones v. Foley and another
Bedfordshire (Bedford)—Brightman v. Stafford and another (Gery, claimant)
Yorkshire (Bradford)—Lord v. Hobson and another
Dorsetshire (Blandford)—Butt v. Blandford Oddfellows' Lodge
Glamorganshire (Pontypool)—Edwards v. Lewis and others
Norfolk—Regina v. County Council of Norfolk (ex parte Marshland and others, Commissioners)
Middlesex—Barry and another v. Leycester and others
Middlesex (Bow)—Lowe v. Barralet (Barralet, claimant)
Surrey (Lambeth)—Croft (suing, &c.) v. Ward, Lock & Co.
Monmouthshire—Regina v. Carnegy and others, Justices, &c. and overseers of Llanfoist (ex parte Abergavenny Rural Sanitary Authority)
Northumberland (North Shields)—Taws v. Knowles
Shropshire (Shrewsbury)—Wardle (trading, &c.) v. Wanstall and another
Yorkshire (Doncaster)—Lamb v. Great Northern Railway Co.
Carlisle—Regina v. Dixon, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. (ex parte Dunn)
London—Brighton Guardians v. Strand Union
London—Williams v. Line
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Clark v. Finsbury Park Brick and Tile Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Regina v. Bros, Esq. Metropolitan Police Magistrate, and Jacobson (ex parte Allery)
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Cottrell v. Hudson
London—Webb v. Sutton
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Bishop v. Taylor & Co. (Harris, claimant)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Isaacs & Co. v. Spero
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Ebrey v. Rowbotham
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Manning and others v. Hine
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Haynes v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
Cambridgeshire (Cambridge)—Benton (trading, &c.) v. Mason (Booth and another, trading, &c. claimants)
Metropolitan Police District—Fletcher v. Fields
Devonshire (Newton Abbot and Torquay)—Davis v. Ferris
Kent (Greenwich)—Diprose v. Norfolk (Norfolk, claimant)
London—Regina v. Governor, &c. of Bank of England (ex parte Terrell)
Cheshire (Chester)—Jones v. Turner
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Erwin v. Wilson (Brackley, claimant)
Staffordshire (Lichfield)—Wellings v. York (York, claimant)
Surrey (Southwark)—Bransgrove v. Woodward and another
London—Kutner v. Phillips
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Clarke & Co. v. Widdowson (Palmer, claimant)
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Farnfield v. Lavers
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Mills v. Steward
Glamorganshire (Merthyr Tydfil)—Knight v. Jones
Shropshire (Shrewsbury)—Bevington v. Marriott
Essex—Guardians of Cardigan Poor Law Union v. Guardians of West Ham Poor Law Union
Middlesex (Westminster)—Great Western Railway Co. v. White & Co.
Middlesex (Shoreditch)—Brown v. Lilley (Chopping, claimant)
England—Regina v. Morgan
Middlesex (Brompton)—London General Omnibus Co. (Lim.) v. Aspinall & Co.
Surrey (Southwark)—Page v. Leach & Co.
Monmouthshire (Newport)—Jones v. Commissioners of Sewers of Levels of Hundreds of Caldicot and Wentloog
London—Pollock v. Glover (James, claimant)

REVENUE PAPER.

CAUSES FOR HEARING.

Attorney-General v. Mayor, &c., of Hythe and another
Same v. De Burton and others

CASES AS TO INCOME-TAX, STAMP, AND CORPORATION DUTIES.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Bank of Mexico, &c. appellants, and Apthorpe (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent

FOR ARGUMENT.

Whitehead, appellant, and Wilson (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent
In re Duty on the Bootham Ward Strays, York
Dillon (Surveyor of Taxes), appellant, and the Corporation of Haverfordwest, respondents
Cawes (Surveyor of Taxes), appellant, and the Committee of the Lunatic Hospital, Nottingham, respondents
Bowers (Surveyor of Taxes), appellant, and Harding, respondent
Reid's Brewery Co. (Lim.), appellants, and Male (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent

Motions for Attachment for Contempt, 3

Divisional List.

SUMMARY.

Special Paper	2
Opposed Motions	117
Crown Paper	143
Revenue	12
Total	274

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

APPEALS AND MOTIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Appeals for hearing before a DIVISIONAL COURT sitting in Bankruptcy.

In re Greaves, ex parte Official Receiver
In re Kennedy, ex parte Kennedy
In re Spencer, ex parte Dewhurst
In re Manning, ex parte Giles
In re James, ex parte James
In re Kirby, ex parte Wykes
In re Sartoris, ex parte Ross

In re Merritt, ex parte Chandler & Co.
In re Williams, ex parte Evans
In re Hulton, ex parte Manchester and County Bank (Lim.)
In re Poulton, ex parte Williams, W.
In re Sarl, ex parte Sarl
In re Entwistle, ex parte Turner
In re Ashton, ex parte M'Gowan
In re Tobias & Co. ex parte Tobias, A. H.
In re Same, ex parte Same (cross appeal)
In re Jenkins, ex parte Jenkins
In re Porteous, ex parte Brocklesby
In re Gold. ex parte Gold
In re Smith, ex parte Smith

Motions in Bankruptcy for hearing before

MR. JUSTICE CAVE.

In re Easton, ex parte Elliott v. Cope
In re Clift, ex parte Colquhoun
In re Pooles, ex parte Andrews v. Viney
In re Ridgway, ex parte Robinson and another
In re Frankenheim, ex parte Bohm v. Hardy
In re Deerhurst, ex parte Seaton and others v. Foreman
In re Frankenheim, ex parte Ehrlicksohn v. Hardy
In re Biennerhasset, ex parte Biennerhasset
In re Howard & Dorrell (joint estate), ex parte Board of Trade v. Trustee
In re Howard (separate estate), ex parte Same
In re Cornford, ex parte Same
In re Calderwood, ex parte Same
In re Dodds, ex parte Brown and another v. Coates
In re Braun, ex parte Sasson v. Official Receiver and others
In re Bates, ex parte Official Receiver v. Bates
In re Pollard, ex parte Official Receiver v. Hill
In re Gadda, ex parte Board of Trade v. Watkins
In re Duncan, ex parte Official Receiver v. Duncan
In re Trevor, ex parte Singleton v. Smith
In re Duncan, ex parte Official Receiver v. Gronow
In re Kirby, ex parte Hart v. Lescher
In re Raw, ex parte Trustee
In re Dodds, ex parte Appleton v. Browne and another
In re Newsom, ex parte Allen v. White

MATTERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Total Appeals and Motions 44

RAILWAY AND CANAL COMMISSION COURT.

Pelsall Coal and Iron Co. (Lim.) v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Same v. Same and Great Western Railway Co. (No. 2)
Maidstone Town Council v. South-Eastern Railway Co., and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co.
Winsford Local Board v. Cheshire Lines Committee
Stratford-upon-Avon, Towcester, &c. Railway Co. v. East and West Junction Railway Co.
Rhymney Railway Co. v. Bute Docks Co.
North Lonsdale Iron and Steel Co. (Lim.) v. Furness Railway Co. and others
Sowerby & Co. (Lim.) v. Great Northern Railway Co.

NOTICE.—The Court will sit on Monday, January 12, at 10.30, and on the following days. The first three Cases will be in the Paper for hearing on Monday, the 12th inst.

The following Courts will sit until Saturday, January 17, for the trial of the following classes of actions:—

Three Courts for Middlesex Special Juries.
One Court for Middlesex Common Juries.
One or Two Courts for Actions without Juries.
Two Courts for London Special Juries.

MIDDLESEX.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 561 in this List will not be taken before Monday, January 19.

142 Paine v. Chisholme
309 Goater v. Godfrey
23 King and another v. Sedgwick and another
36 M'Call v. Sheppards, Pellys, Scott & Co.
81 Fuller v. Longcroft
229 Lorck v. Kean and others
357 Dewey v. Windover
364 Gerrard v. Benda
370 Foot v. Elton
371 Same v. Lawson
379 Warton v. Parrott and another
87A Hudson & Sons v. Schadelooek
154 Mosdell v. Mitchell and others
155 Same v. Oldrey & Co.
391 Broughton v. Ocean Railway, &c. Co. (Lim.)
397 Terry v. Thomas
398 Lloyd v. Bowly
401 Lee v Hill
407 Couper, Millar & Co. v. Holtz & Co.
409 Higgs and others v. Vestry of Parish of Lambeth
415 Darley and another v. Reeves
417 Barker and Wife v. Bennett and others
418 Latimer, Clark, Muirhead & Co. (Lim.) v. Palliser
429 Lancaster Banking Co. v. Caird
435 Paxton and another v. Shillingford and others
436 Lound v. S. H. Lound
437 Same v. A. G. Lound
461 Cole v. Whitley
470 General Stock Exchange (Lim.) v. Baird
474 Chapman v. Morley
476 Courtney and another v. Guiness
478 Stapleton v. Beall
486 Hamlyn v. Fardell
496 Duncan v. Nicholson
19 Hannay's Patents Co. (Lim.) v. Harden Star, &c. Co. (Lim.)
28A School Board for London v. C. Wall
30A Wallis v. Nash
37 Orr v. Barwell
39 Walker v. Brown
50 Dawes v. Pilcher
69 Friend v. Morgan & Co.
82 Mooney v. Newman
204 Wynne-Roberts & others v. Manning and others
245 Southern Counties Dairies Co. (Lim.) v. Oldacres and another
288 Morgan v. Tennant
322 Maxim-Weston Electric Co. v. Palmer's Shipbuilding Co.
330 Wilson's Victoria Hansom Cabs Co. (Lim.) v. London General Omnibus Co.
369 Walker v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co
389 Matthews v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
412 Ogilvie & Co. v. Hyde & Son
440 Turnock v. Spence & Co.
441 Williams v. Weston-super-Mare Commissioners and another
442 Stark and another v. Same
504 Deverson v. Shepherd, Neame & Co.
522 Bannister v. Great Western Railway Co.
523 Turner v. Golden Valley Railway Co. and others
526 Holmes v. Moreira
533 Walker v. Collins
535 Ballard v. Weber & Sons
536 Lyndall v. Greenfield
551 Bendit v. Goldberg
559 James and others v. Carr and others
564 Jacks and Wife v. Owners of Darfield Main Colliery
574 Terry v. Hughes-Hallett
576 Creasey v. Ellis
585 Barnes and others v. London and County Banking Co. (Lim.)
597 Jeffreys v. Skeate
598 Waldron v. Pinkerton
180A Clark v. Hallam
602 Dale v. New, Prance & Garrard
606 Driscoll and others v. Hale and another
608 Hobbins v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
636 Whitney v. Molgnard
641 Lees v. King
642 Egan v. Francis & Co. (Lim.) and another
647A Margetson and others v. Glynn and others
651 Adams v. Austin
653 Hindes (Lim.) v. Singleton
654 Same v. Cowell
656 Lyons v. Beaumont
662 Favets v. Austin & Co.
663 Stratton and others v. Golden Valley Railway Co. and others
665 Bartlett v. Betts and another
678 Ford v. Blest
684 Winter v. Lyon and Wife
686 Lobb v. Stanley
698 Carrington v. Tank Storage and Carriage Co.
702 Robinson and another v. Heritage
708 Hunt v. Hairs and another
726 South v. Brighton Alhambra (Lim.)
729 Leitner v. Chambers
732 Druce v. Levy & Co.
735 Taylor v. Bowen
735 Turner and Wife v. Metropolitan Railway Co.
746 Lane v. Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. (Lim.)
749 Lewis v. Levy
761 Hawksley v. Norgate
765 Wilkinson v. Offord and another
768 Ives & Barker v. Cleveland Bridge Engineering Co.
770 Tipper v Mitchell
773 O'Reilly v. Matthews
778 Moore v. City of London and Southwark Subway Co.
780 Cleary v. Wakeley
781 Wiedemann v. Walpole
791 Campbell v. Golden Valley Railway Co. and others
811 Warne v. Linton
827 Fusee Vesta Co. (Lim.) v. Brown, Martin and others
836 Isaac and another v. Edwards and another
841 Wade-Gery and another v. Harrington
851 M'Lachlan v. Moorgate Street and Broad Street Buildings (Lim.)
880 Turney v. Side
881 Lotinga v. Sidebottom
884 Sullivan v. Allen
889 Crescitelli and others v. Monninger
890 Bird v. Swatheridge and another
895 Cookson v. Miller
896 Hacker v. Gosnell and another
897 Franks v. Viner
901 Wade v. Cookson
908 M'Manus v. United Printing, &c. Co. (Lim.)
913 Raw v. Lippert
916 Daye v. Kraus
917 Head v. Easton and Church Hope Railway Co.
918 Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others
921 Moore v. Wheaton
922 Tax v. Hill
923 Crow v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
924 Latimer v. Bathe and others
926 Green v. Briggs
946 Worswick v. Hobman & Co.
956 Butler v. Birnbaum
961 Mead v. Hughes and Wife
971 Sutherland v. Green
972 Read v. Boot
974 Figgis v. Bruce
979 Balls v. Reece
981 Whittaker v. Sitwell
995 Cox v. Lewis and others
997 M'Murdo v. Beall
999 Bowman v. Ackroyd and others

COMMON JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 868 in this List will not be taken before Monday, January 19.

581 Horn and Wife v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
633 Richardson v. Davis
638 Lemaitre v. Cranfield
652 Pendergast v. Baker
660 Brown v. Humphreys
668 Schmidt v. Nottage
669 Monk & Co. v. Bartram
675 Flower v. Hamilton

691 Foah v. Youngs
1 Walker v. Burslem
4c Scargill v. Green
65 Crutcher v. Still
307 Samuel v. London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.)
318 Pocock v. Preston
324 Cuthbe v. Wallis
406 Dale v. Coffin
456 Farrow v Hicklin
545 Ratliffe v. Preston
546 Stumore v. Same
624 Blake v. Brunton
643 Charnock v. Johnson
713 Vernon v. Green & Son
719 Jamieson v. Britton and another
728 Stratton v. Sumner
750 Lee v. Rumilly
756 Kerr v. Stephens
763 Shirley v. Furnell
790 Graham v. Scatterty
802 Hine v. Clements
805 Harraway v. Williamson
823 Keen v. Usher
825 Lloyd v. Eckersley
826 Drury v. Collier
831 King v. Porteous and others
834 Hiscocks v. Harris
842 Cross v. Thomas
845 Howard v. Williams
847 O'Brien v. Dumaresq and another
865 Hanberger v. Baars
868 Oakley v. Symes
869 Perryman v. Dunning
872 Winkworth v. Foy & Co.
882 Middleton v. Hill
883 Jelks v. Same
885 Brenchley v. Lawrence
887 Foreman v. London and Continental Association (Lim.)
891 Smith v. School Board for London
907 Blake v. Clifton
930 Nouvelle Banque, &c. v. Ayton
932 Taylor v. Marshall
949 Overton v. Robbins
955 Cotton v. Palmer
976 Guarneri v. Boisson
977 Same v. Same
982 Le Gros v. Pfahl
983 Same v. Roth
1010 Montmorency v. Lawrance and others
1015 Farrow v. Guarantee Society
1022 Jackson v. Reeve
1034 Kirby v. Elliott
1037 Young v. Pinn and another
1056 Warwick v. Fitter & Sons
1066 Horncastle v. Relph
1077 Tozer v. Short
1080 Jones v. Stotesbury
1094 Marquis de Leuville v. Hirst and Rennie
1096 Bishop v. Southern Counties Deposit Bank (Lim.)
1100 Beale v. Jewell
1101 Birchall v. Tylor and another
1106 Armstrong v. Watsak
1107 Williams v. Benning
1136 Curtler v. London Trams Co. (Lim.)
1139 General Stock Exchange, &c. Co. v. Newton
1151 Wilson v. Proprietors of "The Labour Elector"
1153 Rolfe v. Charrington
1157 Wright v. Harmer
1160 Brown v. Craig and others
1174 Crane v. Keane and others
1177 McElroy v. Thompson
1189 Somers v. Pocock

ACTIONS WITHOUT JURIES.

Actions beyond No. 707 in this List will not be taken before Monday, January 19.

613 Hirst (part heard Day, J.) v. Sadler
31A Williamson, Rosksms & Co. v. Hicklin
657 Smith v Hutchinson
658 Bechervaise v. White
672 Pugh, Jones & Co. v. Ingrey
680 Lefever v. Taylor
685 Daniel v. Henry
687 Tyler v. Child
689 Ditton v. Verheyden
690 Bynoe v. Parrott
694 Henderson v. Marcussen
696 Rogers v. Rogers
700 Halpin v. McLaren
704 Harle v. Riebold
3 Boyd v. Farrar
4B Montgomerie v. Lamplough
5A Justices of Kent v. Sandgate Local Board
5B Mack v. Anderson
20A Anderson v. Hucks
21 Tilt Cove Copper Co. v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris and others
30 Hilder v. Hume, Webster & Co.
45A National Provincial Bank of England v. Chapman
46 Coffin v. Leslie
47 Same v. Same
60 East v. Levy and others
64 Oldrey v. Michell
76A Cox and another v. Kemp, Welch and another
93 North v. Fickus and another
102 Baldock v. Barling and another
1302 Same v. Betts
118A Thompson v. Cottam
130 Clapham and others v. Howse
138 Rudd v. Owen
170 Braunstein v. Lewis
185 Deep Navigation Collieries Co. (Lim.) v. Rhymney Railway Co.
217 Yates-Hayward v. Wall
240 Johnston v. Naylor
246 Eichols v. Allbutt
259 Ellis, Parr & Co. v. Wiener
270 London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Mayor, &c. of Salford
286 Brandon v. Charlton
291 Handyside v. Gentry
292 Norman & Stacey (Lim.) v. Sharland
299 Lamplough v. Temple and another
321 Groth v. British Tanning Co. (Lim.)
382 Lucas v. Regent's Canal, &c. Railway Co.
388A Benson and another v. Dames
394 D'Halluin Lepers v. Kain and Son
414 Bennett v. Broughton
416 Low v. Low
461 Emmott & Co. v. Emmott and another
475 O'Reilly v. Roe and others
481 Oppert v. Linklater
499 Coats's Iron and Steel Co. (Lim.) and another v. Hume, Webster, Hoare & Co.
506 Garland v. Oram and another
513 Watkins v. Smith
514 D. Radford & Co. v. Burnett and Sons
572 Woodfin v. Marston & Co. (Lim.)
573 Zoutpansberg Prospecting Co. (Lim.) v. Hill
589A Dawson v. Huribatt
616 Baker v. Nottingham, &c. Bank
617 Collins v. Farthing
634 Fenton v. Thompson and others
649 Bourke v. Le Fleming
664 Smith & Co. v. Pennell
673 Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. (Lim.) v. International Co. Mexico
681 Orengo v. Levy
692 James v. Willis
697 Godfrey v. Scott
705 Measures Bros. v. Chappell
708 Davies and Hollies v. Wyatt
707 Las Casas v. Mapleson and others
716 Macfarlane and another v. Radford and another
718 Maison Helbronner (Lim.) v. Wileman
720 Reece v. Wood
727 Mitchell v. Bell
731 Lewis and another v. Gibson and another
733 Hoar v. Cantrell and another
739 Jacomb v. Lintott and others
742 Forbes v. Brunetti and another
751 Wheeler v. Hayter
753 Dreyfus Bros. & Co. v. Lamport and Holt
754 Penley and another v. Mahon
755 Henderson v. Henman
757 Stamford, Spalding and Boston Banking Co. (Lim.) v. Abel, Rey & Co.
759 Tylor and Sons v. Clark, Bunnett & Co. (Lim.)
760 Dimmock v. Joel and Levison
769 Mutual Loan Fund Association (Lim.) v. Wooster and another
775 Simpson v. Tobutt
776 Brown and others v. Miller and others
777 John v. Vickers
783 Wood v. Diprose
784 M'Ausland v. Waterhouse
789 Elise & Co. v. De Crespigny
793 Scott v. Anti-Friction Conveyor, &c. Machinery Co. (Lim.)
794 Dinn v. Sheppard
796 De Coninck v. Singer & Co. and another
797 Hammond v. Hart
801 Sprange v. Hannah
804 Maddock v. Devonshire
808 Harpley v. Swinburne
814 Joyce v. Beall & Mason
815 West v. Sartoris
816 Lambert v. Carden
817 Norris and Wife v. Consolidated Co. (Lim.)
818 Braithwaite v. Middleton
822 Smith and others v. Cox
832 Robinson v. Paulet
833 Hall v. Rayner and another
837 Nind v. Bicknell
838 Same v. Same
853 Ashford v. Richardson
856 Alias v. Roberts and others
857 Greenstreet v. Richardson
861 Wilkinson v. Girard Frères
864 Skeate v. Goldsmith
867 Mathews v. Allbutt
877 Hallett v. Baker
878 Hart v. Burroughs & Watts and another
879 Chetham v. Blofeld
886 Red Reef Gold Mining Co. v. North
892 Gush and another v. Noon and another
898 Fitz-Wygram v. Cole
905 Jarvis v. Union Deposit Bank
906 Backes & Strauss (Lim.) v. Allen
912 Lafone v. Ronaldson & Co.
914 Cox v. Vestry of Paddington
915 Neve v. Smith
920 Hubbard v. Bowyer
925 Thompson v. Woodhead
927 Chetwynd v. Fitzgerald
928 City Bank (Lim.) v. Siddaway & Sons
935 City Bank (Lim.) v. Chambers
936 Beatty v. Butcher
938 Planet Building Society v. Turnham and another
940 Raetzer v. Rotherham & Co.
943 Clements v. Richards
944 Lacy & Co. v. Honeywill Bros. & Co. and others
945 Kilkivan Mines (Queensland) v. Appleby
947 Dix v. Branson
948 Barnett v. Stowell
950 Fraser v. Genoa Waterworks Co. (Lim.)
952 Clark and another v. Brin's Metal Syndicate (Lim.)
953 Same v. Brin's Metal Foreign Syndicate (Lim.)
957 Wyman v. Burdus
958 Stroud Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Stephens and another
959 Beasley v. Venables
960 McNay v. Alt
963 Ward v. Jones and another
964 Tucker v. Basil, James & Co.
965 Vautin v. De Wolf
967 Gatcombe and another v. Wallis
968 Hosegood v. Burton
970 Golding v. Clark
985 Pell v. Rosenberg
986 Hobson and others v. Morrison and others
987 Gregory v Casselden
988 Simpson and others v. Cleveland Extension Railway
990 Vang v. Evers
993 London Taverns Co. (Lim.) v. Farnan
1000 Hinder v. Aland
1001 Aland and others v. Simpson
1002 Hartmont v Dorsey
1004 Mendelssohn v. Birn, and another
1006 Hays v. Linton and another
1007 Davis v. Dorrian.
1012 Red Reef Gold Mining Co. (Lim.) v. Rawlins
1014 Parker v. Loyd
1017 Fry v. Benham
1019 Tubbs v. Tubbs
1025 Nokes v. Brin's Metals Syndicate (Lim.)
1026 Hester v. Schouten
1029 Bridger v. Cooper
1030 White and Price v. Miller
1031 Bishop of Bangor and others v. Parry
1032 Wright and another v. Hempsted and another
1039 Cornforth and Rescher v. Brodie
1042 Beckett v. Power
1046 Burton v. Lutman
1047 R. A. Mudie & Son v. J. H. Hind & Co.
1048 Westmacott v. Inglis
1049 Ward v. Inglis & Burr
1051 G. Kynoch & Co. (Lim.) v. Gatling Arms and Ammunition Co.
1053 H. Whitworth and others v. Megson
1057 Curtice v. Morgan and another
1058 Rio Tinto Co. (Lim.) v. Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux
1059 Quebrada Railway Land and Copper Co. v. Same
1060 Newfoundland Consolidated Copper Mining Co. v. Same
1065 Salter & Sons v. Lee
1072 Lilley v. Best
1073 Ashmore & Co. (Lim.) v. Pini Ronocroni and Boucicina
1075 Boswell v. Copal Varnish Co. (Lim.)
1078 Lovering v. City of London and Southwark Subway Co.
1081 Dobson v. Cottam
1082 Emanuel v. J. Karpeles & Co.
1084 Mason v Dixie
1085 Bush v. Stamford
1086 Hansard Publishing Union (Lim.) v. Lazarus
1091 Duncan v. Lynch

1097 Morewood & Co. v. South Wales, &c. 88. Co.
1099 Bicknell v. Horsfall
1102 Jenner v. National Provincial Bank of England (Lim.)
1104 Morris v. Allison
1110 Dyer and another v. Kent
1111 Brown v. Melhuish
1114 Bartram v. Monk
1115 Hollebone Bros. and Trench v. Cloete
1117 Gregory v. Smith
1118 Gillingham and Oddy v. Headde
1119 Cross v. Roberts
1120 Laycock v. Manfield
1121 Morris v. Slade & Munk
1122 Rouet v. Railway Time Tables Publishing Co. (Lim.)
1125 Harris v. Pearless and others
1126 Whitmore v. Reade
1127 Société Continentale des Distributeurs Automatiques, &c. (Lim.) v. Willey
1128 Fahey v. Hansom and another
1135 Button v. Bain
1137 Grand Hotel, Prague (Lim.) v. Concessions Trust (Lim.)
1138 Ford and another v. Emerson and another
1140 Delta Metal Co. (Lim.) v. Maxim Nordenfelt Guns, &c. Co. (Lim.)
1141 Allen v. Turney and another
1145 Jewell v. Alexander
1148 Hinds v. Rawson
1154 Bell v. Emmott
1155 Lee v. Willett
1158 Warren v. Cox
1164 London Scottish Permanent Building Society v. Moss
1166 Dore v. Fletcher
1167 Armitage and another v. Royal Wax Candle Manufactory
1170 Eakon v. Favets and another
1171 Swears & Wells v. Blythe
1175 Fox v. De Veysy and another
1176 Mitchell v. Same
1178 Silveston v. Cohen
1180 Murphy v. London, Edinburgh, &c. Assurance Co.
1182 Waight v. French
1187 Freeth and another v. Middleton
1190 English, South American and Spanish Publishing Co. v. Johnson
1196 Danube Collieries, &c. Co. v. Ward
1200 Peat v. Webster
1203 Kennedy v. Morewood
1204 Bulman and another v. Beynon & Co. (Lim.)
1205 Lambourn Valley Railway Co. v. Billups
1206 James v. Rooper
1513 Patch v. Midland Railway Co.
1526 Harrison v. London and South Coast Land Co.
1528 Foley v. Turner and others
1534 Wilson v. Randt Mining, &c. Co.
1549 Pettit v. Southwark and Deptford Tram Co.
1570 Lobry v. Bown and another
1579 Brown v. Smith and another
1585 T. Wilson, Sons & Co. v. Gamman & Co.
1642 Coral Chocolate Co. (Lim.) v. Judge & Priestley & ors.
1647 Tufts and others v. Johnson
1654 Robson v. Tower Assets Co. (Lim.)
1663 Hollender and another v. Duke of Marlborough
1678 Roberts v. Harding
1681 Pinto v. Trott
1682 Same v. Badman
1705 Dangar, Grant & Co. v. Gospel Oak Iron, &c. Co.
1704 Scott v. Union Discount Co. of London (Lim.)
1718 Pasteur v. Skinner
1721 Jay v. Mockford

SUMMARY.

Actions entered for Trial to January 12, 1891.

Middlesex—Special Jury	252
Common Jury	192
London—Special Jury	56
Common Jury	40
Without Juries	423
Total	963

NOTE.—This Summary shows the total number of actions for trial up to and inclusive of the above date, and includes the actions contained in the foregoing printed Lists.

LONDON.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 1528 in this List will not be taken before Monday, January 19.

63 Paget v. Holland and others
178 Harris-James v. New Terras Mining Co. (Lim.)
555 Jackson v. Vickers
683 Bishop and another v. Tyser and another
715 Goldworthy v. Shavin
803 Lamb v. London and India Docks Joint Committee
880 Collins v. Levy
934 Castle Mail Packets Co. (Lim.) v. East and West India Dock Co.
984 Coban Shipping Co. (Lim.) v. London and India Docks Joint Committee
1055 Collins v. Hawkins
1082 Davis and another v. Gardner and others
1071 Shoetensack v. Heyl
1113 Grundy v. Mayer, &c. of London
1168 Wilson v. Proprietors of Fairplay
1169 Same v. Shipping Gazette
1217 Hutchinson v. Matthews and another
1263 Wilson v. Osborne
1275 Browning and another v. Samson & Co.
1283 Mora, Ona & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co.
1323 Fisher v. Union Newspaper Co. (Lim.) and another
1324 Faulkner v. Law
1341 Bala Steamship Co. (Lim.) v. Powley, Thomas & Co.
1342 Garle and others v. Schoetensack
1349 Grant v. Denton and another
1363 Scott v. Harris
1368 Chatterton v. London and County Banking Co.
1374 Batney v. Piloher
1388 Iliffe v. Offroy et Cie.
1400 Garle and others v. Lance
1410 Jones v. Southwell & Co.
1416 Wilson, Sons & Co. v. Morgan
1450 Seamell and another v. Daniell & Sons' Breweries (Lim.)
1451 Curtis & Sons v. Same
1456 Gjersoe v. Southampton Naval Works (Lim.)
1492 Pickering v. Gun and Shot and Griffin Wharves Co. (Lim.)
1496 Raeburn & Verel v. North China Insurance Co. (Lim.)
1500 Ray & Son v. Mowll

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

PROBATE CAUSES.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

A List of Actions in the order in which they are entered for Trial will be posted at the Registry, Somerset House, and Supplemental Lists will be printed from time to time.

Parties must be prepared to try their Actions ten days after the same have been entered for Trial.

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—WITHOUT JURY.

Ashwin and Addis v. Addis (Addis and others cited)
Burchell v. Webber (Cowie and others cited)
Stephenson v. Bayliff
Birtwistle v. Horton
Metcalfe v. Webb
Shaw v. Heddle
Collier and Rashleigh (Scott and Guy's Hospital intervening) v. Collier and Collier (Collier and others cited)
Bolton and Eyton v. Hudson and others
Meanley and Parkinson v. Parkinson and Parkinson
Day v. Jennings (Jennings and others cited, &c.)
Hawes and Waller v. Hawes
Petitt and Woods v. Case
Kidd and Gray (executors of Gray) v. Sangster and others
Piper and others v. Beavan and others (Beavan and others cited)
Ogle and Kane v. Boam and others
Maxwell v. Maxwell and others (Cooper and others cited)
Fonnereau v. Dighton and others
Hilliard and Thomas v. Thomas and others (Outuri and others cited)
Heynes v. Heynes
Morgan and Jenkins v. Kitchen
Massey (formerly Rockett, formerly Amos, formerly Hanna) v. Massey
Ashton and Clay v. Morrison (Anderson and others cited)
Fairfax and Ramsay v. British and Foreign Bible Society and others (the Churchwardens and Elders of Garvald cited)
Taylor v. Taylor

COMMON JURY CAUSES.

Cooper and Nield v. Gaston and Dale
Church and Maskell v. Williamson

SPECIAL JURY CAUSES.

Hampson v. Guy and others
Ashton and Bayley v. McDermott (sued as Atkinson)
Forde v. Pennington
Budd-Budd (Catala and others cited) v. Budd and Dalzell
Powell v. Barlow
Fox v. Priestman and Horsfall
Smith v. Smith
Fisher and others v. Postlethwaite and Brothers
Lloyd (Lloyd cited) v. Lloyd and others
Brooks v. Ridley

SUMMARY.

Before the Court itself—without Jury	24
Common Jury Causes	2
Special Jury Causes	10
Total	36

DIVORCE CAUSES.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

PART-HEARD CAUSES.

Notice to be given at Court when Parties are ready to proceed with the further hearing of these Causes.

Jennings v. Jennings, White, and Callard (undefended)
Kalbitzer v. Kalbitzer (undefndd.)
Briscoe v. Briscoe and Dockerty (undefended)
Mattock v. Mattock and Spencer (undefended)
Thorn v. Thorn and Matthews (undefended)
Dedman v. Dedman (undefended)
Sanders v. Sanders (J.S.) (undefd.)
Matters (by her Guardian, Thos. James Harvey) v. Matters

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—UNDEFENDED.

Trubner v. Trubner and Cristiani
Duncan, F. E. v. Duncan, A. S. D.
M'Donald, otherwise Churcher v. M'Donald (N.)
Garth v. Garth
Agar v. Agar (stay commission)
Macdonald v. Macdonald and Bignell
Robertson v. Robertson
Sargent v. Sargent and Weaver
Draysey v. Draysey
Thornbory v. Thornbory and Yardley
Papayanni v. Papayanni and Routier
Poole v. Poole
Treliving v. Treliving
Hammonds v. Hammonds
Falcke v. Falcke
Freear v. Freear
Cawley v. Cawley and Randall
Newton v. Newton (R.C.R.)
Sandall v. Sandall and Russell
Turner v. Turner and Sawyer
Blake v. Blake
Howring v. Howring
Todd v. Todd
Clarke v. Clarke and Bond
Dicker v. Dicker
Jennings v. Jennings and Harper
Roberts v. Roberts
M'Queen v. M'Queen and Bythell
Pohl v. Pohl
Sleemin v. Sleemin
Ley v. Ley and Smith
Baker v. Baker (R.C.R.)
Pearson v. Pearson
Hand v. Hand and Harvey
Glanville v. Glanville
Brown v. Brown and Hickman
Webley v. Webley (J.S.)
Bridge v. Bridge
Haddon v. Haddon
Williams v. Williams (J.S.)
Woollams v. Woollams and Ings (otherwise Carleton)
Hoadley v. Hoadley
Leech v. Leech and Norman
Gilbert v. Gilbert
Dwyer v. Dwyer (J.S.)
Morley v. Morley and Margrett
Hindmarsh v. Hindmarsh
Cook v. Cook
White v. White and Trainer
Banks v. Banks (J.S.)
Danvers v. Danvers
Henderson v. Henderson
Smith v. Smith and Allison
Shadbolt v. Shadbolt
Griffiths v. Griffiths and Wren (pauper cause)
Hurst v. Hurst (J.S.)
Collins v. Collins and Fallon
Burnet v. Burnet and Merriman
Faulks v. Faulks and Stainton
Chapman v. Chapman
Willis v. Willis and Brading
Davies v. Davies and Smith (pauper cause)
Waine v. Waine and Stott
Moreton v. Moreton
Williams v. Williams
Unsworth v. Unsworth
Cooper v. Cooper
Robinson v. Robinson (pauper cause)
Sweet v. Sweet, Seaney, and Hunt
Davis v. Davis and Davis (pauper cause)
M'Lean v. M'Lean and Duckworth
White v. White
Wilson v. Wilson
Leuty v. Leuty and Burdell (pauper cause)
Smith v. Smith
Furby v. Furby and Nixon
Jago v. Jago and Gooding (pauper cause)
Kellett v. Kellett and Pratt (pauper cause)
Cartwright v. Cartwright and Randle
Shaw v. Shaw and Prince
Lock v. Lock
Sculthorpe v. Sculthorpe
Salt v. Salt
Harding v. Harding
Sargent v. Sargent and Weaver
Rust v. Rust and Dodd
Langrick v. Langrick and Clubley
Brinham v. Brinham and Clark
Loftus v. Loftus and Crane
Elliot v. Elliot
Nettleton v. Nettledon
Spencer v. Spencer and Lee
James v. James and Johnson
Woolley v. Woolley and Forrester
Hart v. Hart
Wight v. Wight and Holland
Longfield v. Longfield
Minchin v. Minchin
Stromgvist v. Stromgvist
Taylor v. Taylor and Parrott
Bibbey v. Bibbey and Sheridan
Newman v. Newman
Willatt v. Willatt
M'Kenzie v. M'Kenzie
Armstrong v. Armstrong and Whitley
Govier v. Govier and Tomlinson (otherwise Smith)

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—DEFENDED.

Titford v. Titford (stay security)
Payne v. Payne, Carter, and Fry (cited) (stayed)
Relph v. Relph (stay security)
Wood, H. v. Wood, John (stay security) (J.S.)
Holmes v. Holmes and Pearson (stay security)
McConachie v. McConachie and Beal (stay security)
Darvall v. Darvall, Scutter, and Curtis (stay security)
Arnott v. Arnott and Fox (stay security)
Bennett, D. v. Bennett, M. (stay security) (R.C.R.)
Purchase v. Purchase and Allsop (cited) (stay security)
Richley v. Richley and Tate (stay security)
Piggott v. Piggott, Ball, and Kimber (stay security)
Amos v. Amos and Harding (stay security)
Cripps v. Cripps and Boutellier
Nathan v. Nathan (stay security) (J.S.)
Larro v. Larro (J.S.)
Harris v. Harris (J.S.)
Higgs v. Higgs and Clarke
Bailey v. Bailey and Mills
Bendall v. Bendall, Parker and Todd
Sneddon v. Sneddon
Wooder v. Wooder
Flateau v. Flateau
Potter v. Potter
Broad v. Broad
Storr v. Storr
Hipwell v. Hipwell
Bucknall v. Bucknall
Bramhall v. Bramhall and Dinely
Dobie v. Dobie
Treleaven v. Treleaven and Watling (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Hall v. Hall and Barnard
De Vear v. De Vear (R.C.R.)
Wild v. Wild (J.S.)
Vivian v. Vivian
Guttmann v. Guttmann
Johnson v. Johnson (stay)
Roberts v. Roberts
Taylor v. Taylor
Aarons v. Aarons and Wadmore
Jackson v. Jackson and Smith
Donkin v. Donkin, Salmon, Atkinson, Lusby, and Vivian
Jackson v. Jackson (R.C.R.)
Winter v. Winter and De Lara (cited as Cohen)
Taylor v. Taylor
Willcock v. Willcock (J.S.)
Willcock v. Willcock and Jenkins (stayed)
Murdoch v. Murdoch (J.S.)
Ellis v. Ellis (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Clarke v. Clarke and Robinson
Frericks v. Frericks and Lynch
Campbell v. Campbell (J.S.)
Kavanagh v. Kavanagh and Nesbitt
Hopper v. Hopper (stay security) (J.S.)
Taplen v. Taplen and Cowen (Queen's Proctor intervening)
Izod v. Izod (J.S.)
Hicks v. Hicks and Smith
Forde v. Forde (J.S.)
Yorke v. Yorke, Izod, and Matthews
Webster v. Webster (J.S.)
Windsor v. Windsor and Olsen (otherwise Alston)
Sharpe v. Sharpe
Chadwick v. Chadwick
Vale v. Vale

SPECIAL JURY CAUSES.

Beer v. Beer, Bath, Thomas, and Cox (stay security)
Beer v. Beer
Scarratt v. Scarratt and Bullock (stayed)
Northover v. Northover (J.S.)
Wainscott v. Wainscott and Twynam
Judkins v. Judkins
Hall v. Hall and Kay
M'Dowall v. M'Dowall and Jacob

COMMON JURY CAUSES.

Prime v. Prime and Hewett (stay security)
Hobbs v. Hobbs and Murdock (stay security)
Francis v. Francis and Alderman (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Hinton (stay security)
Corti v. Corti and Bruce (stay security)
Cardle v. Cardle and Jaggs (stay security)
Cairns v. Cairns, Stamford, and Binns (stay security)
Hodson v. Hodson and Seager (stay security)
Wakefield v. Wakefield and Patrick
Le Ball v. Le Ball and Carter
Edwards v. Edwards and Edwards (stay security)
Garwood v. Garwood and Harris
Goble v. Goble and Horne (pauper cause)
Sanders v. Sanders and Underwood
Pierce v. Pierce and Lockwood, Davies, Turner, and Greenwood
Aires v. Aires (J.S.)
Hirsch v. Hirsch and Adams
Fayers v. Fayers and Andrews
Best v. Best and Hirst
Stuart v. Stuart and Kirwan
Burnside v. Burnside and Hardy
Ward v. Ward, Pickworth, and Melville
Elliott v. Elliott and Dines
Park v. Park and Ashworth
Smalley v. Smalley, Dodds, and Charlesworth
Smith v. Smith and White
Hubbart v. Hubbart and Bond
Shemtob v. Shemtob and Vitali

SUMMARY.

Causes before the Court itself—Undefended	. .	106
" " Defended	. . .	63
Special Jury Causes "	. . . . .	7
Common Jury Causes	. . . . .	28
Total	. . .	204

CAUSES standing over by consent or otherwise; to be replaced in the List of Causes for Hearing on the Petitioner giving Ten Days' Notice in writing to the other parties for whom an appearance has been entered, and filing a Copy of such Notice in the Registry.

Constas v. Constas (J.S.)
Luck, S. v. Luck, W. V. (defended) (stay security)
Wood v. Wood and Brook (defended) (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Young (defended) (stayed)
Bates v. Bates and Baker (C.J.) (stay security)
Crowe, May v. Crowe, Robert (undefended)
Browse v. Browse (defended) (stay security)
Worsnop v. Worsnop and Roulstone (defended) (stay security)
Dodson v. Dodson (undefended) (stayed)
Wilson v. Wilson, Rand, and Wardell (stay security) (C.J.)
Lee, E. M. v. Lee, F. (R.C.R.)
Bagge v. Bagge
Pereira v. Pereira
Fearn, A. E. v. Fearn, G. (R.C.R.)
Nicol, M. A. v. Nicol, A. (J.S.)
Bridge v. Bridge
Bevington v. Bevington and Jameson
Clark v. Clark
Tribe v. Tribe
Lynch Blosse v. Lynch Blosse

ADMIRALTY CAUSES.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

ACTIONS FOR TRIAL.

The Accomac (1890, Folio 376 and 372)
The Activity (1890, Folio 350)
The Argomene (1890, Folio 380)
The Acupart (1890, Folio 441)
The Alert (1890, Folio 474)
The Aston Hall (1890, Folio 306)
The Barnsmore (1890, Folio 458)
The Bellenden (1880, Folio 299)
The Biscaye (1890, Folio 373)
The Bleville (1890, Folio 406 and 407)
The Bluebell (1890, Folio 378)
The Blythwood (1890, Folio 242 and 235)
The Boston (1890, Folio 420)
The Bradley (1890, Folio 360)
The Brinio (1890, Folio 265)

The Christine Elizabeth (1890, Folio 414 and 391)
The Cobden (1890, Folio 412)
The Countess (1890, Folio 419)
The Cygnet (1820, Folio 381)
The David Davies (1890, Folio 409)
The Emilie (1890, Folio 385)
The Empress (1890, Folio 429)
The Ethiopia (1890, Folio 456)
The Everilda (1890, Folio 204)
The Fatfield (1890, Folio 365 and 366)
The George Livesey (1890, Folio 312)
The George Lockett (1890, Folio 456)
The Gipsy Queen (1890, Folio 451)
The Glen Gelder (1890, Folio 474)
The Glenmanna (1890, Folio 471)
The Hartside (1890, Folio 476)
The Indian Prince (1890, Folio 400)
The Isle of Cyprus (1890, Folio 433)
The Juan M. Bigorday (1890, Folio 375)
The Kairos (1890, Folio 309 and 316)
The Larpool (1890, Folio 434)
The Lisbon (1890, Folio 459)
The Morglay (1890, Folio 397)
The Mount Stewart (1890, Folio 389)
The North Cambrian (1890, Folio 370)
The Oevelgonne (1890, Folio 238)
The Olivia (1890, Folio 404)
The Osiris (1890, Folio 472)
The Pinzon (1890, Folio 470)
The Pallion (1890, Folio 418)
The Resolute (1890, Folio 457)
The Robert Eggleton (1890, Folio 321 and 322)
The Rothiemay (1890, Folio 280)
The St. Donato (1890, Folio 356)
The San Tomaso (1890, Folio 377)
The Science (1890, Folio 426)
The Sir Garnet Wolseley (1890, Folio 285)
The Solide (1890, Folio 295)
The Strathlyon (1890, Folio 466)
The Tweed (1890, Folio 483)
The Ursula (1890, Folio 398)
The Vildosala (1890, Folio 449)
The Vulcan (1890, Folio 348)
The Walker (1890, Folio 479)
The Wellington (1890, Folio 333)
The William Fairburn (1890, Folio 269)
The Wylam (1890, Folio 480)
The Yorkshireman (1890, Folio 399)
The Argomene (Liv. Dist. Reg.)
The Dungonnell (Liv. Dist. Reg.)
The Mangalore (Liv. Dist. Reg.)
The Talbot (Liv. Dist. Reg.)
The Laureano (Liv. Dist. Reg.)
The Michigan (Liv. Dist. Reg.)

APPEALS OF THE DIVISIONAL COURT.

Jobson Brothers v. The Poole, Baltic, and Quebec Timber Co. (Lim.), for judgt. (1890, Folio 199)
The Cressington (1890, Folio 195)
The Zweena (1890, Folio 343)
The Circassia (1890, Folio 184)

SUMMARY.

Actions for Trial	69
Appeal to the Divisional Court . . .	4
Total	73

MEMORANDUM.—No complete List of Actions to be tried in this Division during Hilary Sittings can be given in advance, as the number and order in which they will be tried is necessarily dependent on the presence in this country of Seafaring Witnesses whose movements are unavoidably uncertain. The List will therefore be subject to alterations and additions.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, January 12. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Tuesday, January 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Wednesday, January 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Thursday, January 15.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Friday, January 16.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Saturday, January 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer; Mr. Jackson.

THE LEGAL OBITUARY FOR 1890.—Sir H. Manisty, Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir John Huddleston, Judge B. T. Williams, Serjeant Tindal Atkinson, Baron Dowse, Judge Naish (ex-Lord Chancellor of Ireland), Judge Litton, of the Irish Land Court; Judge O'Hagan; Mr. A. W. Simpson, Recorder of Scarborough; Judge Gillies, of New Zealand; Mr. T. W. Saunders, the Police Magistrate; Dr. Adam Thom, Judge of Rupertsland; Mr. George Francis, ex-Recorder of Faversham and Canterbury; Mr. Justice Reith, of Cyprus: Mr. David Buchanan, of Sydney; Mr. Ashurst Morris; Mr. John Clayton, Town Clerk of Newcastle; Mr. Clement Milward, Q.C.; Judge Molesworth, of Victoria; Judge Mein, of Brisbane; Judge Jackson, of Calcutta; Mr. John G. Hamilton, Advocate; Mr. Patrick Cumin; and Mr. Glasse, Q.C.

THE LAW COURTS.—The Law Courts, after having been closed for the Christmas vacation, will be opened for the Hilary sittings on Monday next, and these sittings will continue up to and include Wednesday, March 25. The winter circuits will commence in the early part of February, and by about the middle of that month thirteen of the judges of the Queen's Bench Division will have departed for the assizes, leaving two only in town to carry on the business of that division during the circuits, the work on which, it is expected, will fully occupy the judges until the end of the sittings. It will therefore be seen that, under present arrangements, about a clear month only can be reckoned upon during the sittings to dispose of the various causes and matters set down for hearing in the Queen's Bench Division. The business in the two Courts of Appeal, the Chancery Division, and the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division will be carried on uninterruptedly during the sittings.

THE LATE MR. BARON HUDDLESTON.—The gross value has been sworn at 64,579*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, and the net value at 62,544*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*, of the personal estate of the late Hon. Sir John Walter Huddleston, of 43 Ennismore Gardens, and The Grange, Ascot, one of the barons of Her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, who died on December 5 last, aged seventy-three years, and of whose will, dated August 7, 1888, the executors are his brother-in-law, the Duke of St. Albans, and the Right Hon. Sir Henry James. The testator confirms the settlement made in favour of his wife, Lady Diana Huddleston, on their marriage, and bequeaths to her 1,000*l.*, his pictures, plate, furniture, and household effects, horses and carriages, and the income for her life of all his residuary estate over which she is to have power of appointment. In default of such appointment the income of the residuary estate is, after the death of Lady Diana Huddleston, to be paid to the testator's sister, Miss Kate Huddleston, for her life, and on her death a legacy of 10,000*l.* is to be paid to the testator's nephew, Mr. Francis Heath. The remainder of the residuary estate is to be transferred to the trustees of the Barristers' Benevolent Association, to be used for the purposes of the association.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JANUARY 12 TO JANUARY 17.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	January 12	January 13	January 14	January 15	January 16	January 17
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Runcorn	Northwich	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Tadcaster	Easingwold	Knaresbro'	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	Derby	Derby	Matlock	Bakewell	Chapel-en-le-Frith	—
22	Judge Harington	Chipping Norton	—	Bromsgrove	Shipston-on-Stour	Evesham	—
26	Judge Jordan	Longton	Hanley	Lichfield	Burslem	Tunstall	Stone
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Mashonoshie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. GEORGE EUGÈNE SOLOMON, of London and Newcastle-under-Lyme, has been appointed a Commissioner in England of the High Court of Judicature for the North-West Provinces of India, and of the Supreme Courts of the Leeward Islands, South Australia, and New Zealand respectively.

Mr. Aubrey William Rake (of the firm of Howe & Rake), of 22 Chancery Lane, W.C., and 171 Norwood Road, Herne Hill, S.E., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Rake was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur Cuthbert Langham (of the firm of Langhams), of 10 Bartlett's Buildings, Holborn, E.C., has been appointed Deputy-Coroner for the City of London and the Borough of Southwark. Mr. Langham was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Benjamin Arthur Shires, of Leicester and Hinckley, has been appointed Clerk to the Guardians and Superintendent-Registrar of the Blaby Union. Mr. Shires was admitted in 1871.

THE HEARING OF PROBATE AND DIVORCE CAUSES.—The following are the arrangements made by the judges for hearing probate and divorce causes during the ensuing Hilary sittings, viz.:—Causes for hearing before the Court itself will be taken on Monday, January 12, and following days—first, probate; second, undefended divorce; third, defended divorce cases. Special jury actions will be taken on Wednesday, January 28, and following days, probate first and divorce second. Summonses will be heard in Chambers at a quarter-past ten, and motions will be heard in Court at eleven o'clock on Tuesday, January 13, and on every succeeding Tuesday during the sittings.

'WHAT is your proposition of law?' the late Lord Justice James would say to a counsel who was bungling his opening with a confused statement of facts. 'What is your proposition of law?' the distracted reader of the Chancery Law Reports might well exclaim in coming upon the portentous head-note of nearly two pages of small print to The Sheffield Building Society v. Aizlewood, L. R. 44 Chanc. Div. 412, and the exclamation might be repeated in a 'crescendo' of despair as case after case met his eye with nearly a page of head-note. An epitome of a case is not, as the editors of the law reports seem to think, a head-note at all. A head-note is or should be the key to the case, the clue of legal principle which we can follow as we progress through the intricacies of the report. On the clearness, the conciseness, and accuracy of the head-note, the value of the report very much, if not mainly, depends. It is, therefore, a great pity that more pains are not taken by those responsible for the law reports to give the 'legal pith' of the decision and no more. The latest law reports digest, it is only fair to say, shows a marked improvement both in brevity and arrangement.—Law Quarterly Review.

THE SITTINGS IN THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—The following are the arrangements made by the judges of the Queen's Bench Division for holding their Courts during the ensuing Hilary sittings—viz. three Courts will be formed to sit in banco, the first of which will be formed by Justices Denman and Wills; the second will consist of Mr. Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Charles; and the third of Justices Cave and Vaughan Williams. Eight Courts will be formed to try special and common and non-jury actions, the judges for that purpose being Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, and Justices Hawkins, Stephen, Mathew, Day, Grantham, Lawrance, and Wright. Mr. Justice A. L. Smith will be the judge at chambers.

BIRTHS.

On Jan. 1, at Menai Dale, Bangor, North Wales, the wife of S. R. Dew, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Jan. 2, at Clifton Villa, Plumstead, the wife of James Gault, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Dec. 29, at Christ Church, Hampstead, Charles Edward Dyer, LL.M., Barrister-at-Law, to Frances Ann, widow of the Rev. H. St. John Reade.

On Dec. 31, at St. Paul's Church, Glenageary, Ernest Proctor, of Clifton, Bristol, Solicitor, youngest son of the late Robert Proctor, Esq., to Edith Player, daughter of Alexander D. Kennedy, Esq., of Glen-na-geragh Hall, Glenageary.

On Jan. 1, at St. Stephen's, Clapham Park, Basil Frederic Forrester Jackson, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S., son of the late George Frederic Jackson, Esq., Solicitor, of Plymouth, and grandson of the late Samuel Jackson, Esq., J.P., of The Ferns, Mannamead, Plymouth, to Kate, only daughter of the late William Bennett, of Clapham Park, Member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours.

DEATHS.

On Dec. 4, Arthur Cæsar Hawkins, late Royal Scots, and subsequently Resident Magistrate at Natal, son of the late Sir John C. Hawkins, Bart., aged 74.

On Dec. 27, at 15 Alfred Place, Thurloe Square, S.W., Major Arthur G. Wyse, aged 60; for sixteen years in the 48th (Northamptonshire) Regiment, and subsequently Resident Magistrate in Ireland.

On Dec. 28, at Stoke Newington, N., Dorothy Nodes, widow of Frean Frederic Le Maitre, and second daughter of the late Frederick Wing, Solicitor, Bury St. Edmunds.

On Dec. 30, at Chettle, Blandford, Dorset, William Bulkeley Glasse, Esq., Q.C., aged 84.

On Dec. 30, John Marshall, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, Middle Temple, aged 70.

On Dec. 31, George Roots, Barrister-at-Law, late of Inner Temple, and Ashley Place, S.W., aged 85.

On Jan. 1, at his residence, 110 Elgin Crescent, Notting Hill, Herbert M. Low, of 12 Bread Street, E.C., Solicitor, aged 35.

On Jan. 1, at 6 Mount Royd, Bradford, Yorks, in his 69th year, David Little, of the firm of Taylor, Jeffery & Little, Solicitors.

On Jan. 2, suddenly, at Broomholm, Langholm, N.B., Harriette Elizabeth, widow of Henry West, Q.C., of Loughlinstoun House, co. Dublin.

On Jan. 3, at Diss, Norfolk, Eleanor Frances, widow of the late George Lyna, Solicitor, aged 83 years.

On Jan. 6, at Scarborough, in his 76th year, Benjamin Chadwick, Solicitor, late of Dewsbury.

At 10 Fernwood Road, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, aged 23, Dora Ethel, daughter of John Atkinson, Solicitor.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 17, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

Two judges of the Queen's Bench Division were absent on the opening-day of the Hilary Sittings on Monday last. The Lord Chief Justice was detained at his country seat owing to indisposition, and Mr. Justice Denman had not sufficiently recovered from his recent attack of pleurisy to enable him to resume his judicial duties. All the rest of the common law bench were, however, available for work, and on Monday and Tuesday ten Courts (consisting of twelve judges) were formed—viz. two Divisional Courts and eight Courts for the trial of jury and non-jury cases.

BEFORE our next issue is in the hands of our readers, Parliament will have met again, and met with a better prospect of ability to accomplish useful work than has been offered for many years. Amongst Government measures the Tithes Bill, an Education Bill, and Private Legislation Bills will no doubt be pressed forward, and as that 'time for further legislation' spoken of in the Queen's Speech will now probably be available, a District Councils Bill, a Small Holdings Bill, an Employers' Liability Bill, a Public Health Acts Consolidation Bill, a Public Trustee Bill, a Friendly Societies Bill, and a Savings Banks Bill, all of which measures Her Majesty has already 'directed to be prepared,' may be expected to be brought forward. Amongst private members' bills, the Rules Publication Bill, the Solicitors' Magistracy Bill, the Law of Slander Amendment Bill, and Mr. Pitt-Lewis's bill to amend the law relating to forged transfers, may be mentioned as being fairly likely to pass. The only measure of importance as yet before the House of Lords is Lord Monkswell's comprehensive Copyright Bill, which, as it differs but little from the bill of a Conservative Government introduced by the Duke of Rutland when Lord John Manners, in 1879, and is founded on the report of a royal commission of which Lord Herschell, when Mr. Herschell, was a member, may be reasonably expected to pass the House of Lords at any rate; while the Public Health Bill and the Public Trustee Bill might very properly be introduced in that House in the first instance. Lastly, it may be suggested that, as a general election can at the outside be only two years distant, occasion may be at last taken to make the Ballot Act, which has now been continued no less than eleven times by successive 'Expiring Laws Continuance Acts,' a perpetual statute.

MR. GLADSTONE, by his bill 'to remove the disabilities of Roman Catholics to hold the offices of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland,' which is backed also by Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Mr. John Morley, Sir Horace Davey, and Mr. Asquith, proposes to repeal so much of section 12 of 10 Geo. IV. c. 7 (the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829) as applies to those offices, and to enact that 'every subject of Her Majesty shall be eligible to hold and enjoy the said offices without reference to his religious belief,' an enactment which will remove all doubt as to the capacity of a Jew to hold the office of Lord Chancellor. Prior to the Oaths Act, 1888, an atheist would have been disqualified by his inability to take the official and judicial oaths, but the effect of that Act is, we think, to empower even a person having no religious belief to take those oaths. The 12th section of the Act of 1829 enacts that 'nothing herein contained' [i.e. contained in the Act of 1829] 'shall be construed to enable any persons professing the Roman Catholic religion to hold the offices of guardians or justices of the United Kingdom, or of Regent, nor to enable any person otherwise than as he is now by law enabled' (whatever that may mean) 'to hold or enjoy the office of Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain or Ireland.' Mr. Gladstone further proposes that if the office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain be held by any person not being a member of the Church of England, his ecclesiastical patronage shall be exercised by such person as Her Majesty may by sign-manual appoint, and his official trusts, if they be trusts of an endowment established for the benefit of members of the Church of England, shall be performed by such judge of the Supreme Court, being a member of the Church of England, as Her Majesty may by sign-manual appoint. Under the existing law, the ecclesiastical patronage of any official professing the Jewish religion devolves, by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 29, s. 4, on the Archbishop of Canterbury; and that of Roman Catholics, by 3 Jac. I. c. 5, as amended by 12 Ann, st. 2, c. 14, on the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; while Nonconformist patrons, whether official or private, labour under no disability whatever.

FEW thing are less intelligible to a lawyer than the ingenuity with which otherwise well-informed lay journalists blunder when dealing with matters connected with the administration of the law. We do not refer merely to the invincible stupidity with which the penny-a-liner insists on misspelling where it is possible the names of Her Majesty's judges. Mr. Justice Stephen has been a judge of the Queen's Bench Division for the last twelve years, and was before that a well-known writer on jurisprudence, a professor of the Inns of Court, and at one time a Member of Council to the Governor-General of India; yet to this day he remains, and probably will remain until he retires, Mr. Justice Stephens. A similar fate has befallen Mr. Justice Mathew, who is sometimes Mr. Justice Mathews, sometimes Mr. Justice Matthew, but is rarely, except by professional reporters, allowed to spell his own name in his own way. If none of the other members of the judicial bench suffer from the same orthographic capriciousness, their immunity is attributable to the fact that their names do not admit of a dual spelling. Mr. Justice Wright, when at the bar, was distinguished from his forensic brethren with the same surname by the initials 'R. S.,' which stand for Robert Samuel; but to the penny-a-liner he was Mr. Horace Wright (Horace being the phonetic reproduction of his initials as pronounced). The other day Sir Alexander Miller, who, after having sat for years on the Railway Commission as legal member, gave place to Mr. Justice Wills, and was thereafter appointed a Master in Lunacy, was described in a Sunday paper (which has no excuse for ignorance) as one of the existing Railway Commissioners. The same paper, foolishly attempting to find a precedent for the proposal now before the Legislature to make a Roman Catholic eligible for the office of Lord High Chancellor, quoted the case of Lord Herschell, who, it said, was well known to be a Jew! The St. James's Gazette, the other day, going out of its way to say something smart at the expense of the artists and others who resent the conversion of their favourite suburb into a coal depôt for a Manchester railroad, sneered at the opposition for having allowed the time to expire for lodging their petition or memorial. The slightest inquiry in the proper quarter would have saved the flippant scribe from such an obvious blunder. The ratepayers of St. John's Wood and South Hampstead are opposing the scheme of Sir E. Watkin on its merits (or demerits), and not on technical grounds of non-compliance with the Standing Orders of the House. Their petition will be in time if it is lodged within ten days of the first reading of the bill. The same paper, with a perversity which is the outcome of long perseverance in ill-doing, startled its readers by confounding Mr. Underdown, Q.C., who is very well known in his own line, but would be very much surprised to learn that he had been sitting as deputy for Sir Peter Edlin at Clerkenwell, with Mr. Underhill, Q.C. (Recorder of Newcastle-under-Lyme), who has several times filled the position of deputy-chairman of quarter sessions with credit. It would really pay the directors of journals which aspire to instruct the public on legal matters to keep a lawyer on the staff to correct the blunders of their lay writers. He would earn his salary, we feel certain.

OUR correspondent 'H.' (ante, p. 20) asks, 'with regard to the present crusade against magistrates' clerks conducting prosecutions,' whether, if the crusaders be right, it does not follow that no solicitor ought to act for a plaintiff whom he has advised to take proceedings, 'because his advice may have been influenced by the consideration that he would earn a guinea or two by issuing the writ.' Surely the two cases differ toto cœlo. In the one case the solicitor is chosen by the party supposed to be aggrieved; in the other, the party supposed to be aggrieved has no choice in the matter. In the one case it is a private person who suffers; in the other, it is the public administration of the criminal law which is brought into contempt. Of course, in neither case do improper motives exist, but the mere suspicion of their existence, in the case of magistrates' clerks, is sufficient, in the opinion of most persons who have thought upon the subject, to necessitate a remedy, the real strength of the argument for which, be it remembered, lies in section 159 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882. Does 'H.' think that section ought to be repealed?

SOME of the Colchester town councillors have been much ruffled by the Lord Chancellor's appointment of six new borough justices without previously submitting to the council the names of the gentlemen proposed to be appointed, in accordance with the request of the council in that behalf. Alderman Wicks roundly abused the Lord Chancellor, who, he stated, was "the highest paid functionary in England, and received 20,000*l.* a year' for this so-called affront to the borough, and a petition to the Secretary of State was eventually determined upon. It need hardly be stated that the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, contains nothing which subjects the appointing power of the Crown to the control, direct or indirect, of the town councils or any other authority. Section 157 of that Act simply enacts that 'it shall be lawful for the Queen from time to time to assign to any persons Her Majesty's commission to act as justices in and for each borough having a separate commission of the peace.' The salary of the Lord Chancellor, it may be added, is 10,000*l.*, not 20,000*l.* a year, nor is the Lord Chancellor the highest paid functionary in the kingdom, inasmuch as the Archbishop of Canterbury receives 15,000*l.* a year.

IN the two last numbers of the New York Medico-Legal Journal there have appeared two able papers—one by Mr. T. H. Tyndale, of the Boston bar, the other by Mr. Clark Bell, president of the New York Medico-Legal Society—upon the approaching abolition of the office of coroner throughout the United States of America. A very brief critical survey of the evidence on which the American indictment of 'crowner's quest law' is based and of the expedients which seem destined ultimately to displace it may be neither unseasonable nor uninstructive. The office of coroner, it should be premised, has no historic hold upon the affections of the American people; it is not, as in England, an outgrowth from early institutions; it is purely and simply a creation, intended to accomplish a certain result, and having no claim to preservation if it fails to do so. Again, the coroners of the United States have never been a homogeneous body, capable of organic action or of combined resistance to disintegrating influences. In Massachusetts they were nominated; in New York and other States they were elected. Their numbers were as capricious as the manner of their appointment. Boston alone had forty-three, many more than London, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Chicago, San Francisco, Baltimore, Washington, and Cincinnati put together. Once more, the coroner's inquest in an average American State seems to have been simply a costly and tedious way of doing nothing; the verdict of the jury was not only not conclusive, it was not even evidence, and the subsequent trial proceeded without any reference to it whatsoever.

ONLY three systems of preliminary judicial investigation in criminal cases seem to be known among men. One is the old-fashioned coroner's inquest. The second is that adopted by Massachusetts in 1878. It consists in giving the initiative to qualified medical examiners, upon whose report the proper judicial authorities act or not, as they think fit. Every reliable indication points to the conclusion that the other American States will follow Massachusetts in adopting this method of procedure. The third system may not inaptly be described as the European. It prevails in Scotland, France, Germany, Russia, Denmark, and even in Turkey, and consists in enabling the public prosecutor of every district to inquire into all cases of sudden death occurring in his jurisdiction, with the assistance, if necessary, of a medical expert.

Is there or is there not an appeal from a County Court judge upon interlocutory orders, such as an order against the defendant under the Debtors Act, 1869, for non-payment of the judgment debt? This very important question was raised, but not decided, in Voysey v. Armitage (Notes of Cases, p. 168), in which the Court heard an appeal on the merits, 'as the decisions seemed to be conflicting' (which, no doubt, they are), and dismissed it. The question depends on section 120 of the Act of 1888, which is wider in its terms than the repealed enactments which it replaces. A pretty confident opinion, after a careful review of the authorities, is expressed in favour of the appeal in Heywood's 'Annual County Court Practice,' vol. i., at p. 391, and with this opinion we are inclined to agree. It must be borne in mind, however, that, where the discretionary power of the County Court judge is brought to bear, the High Court, even if it should be held to have jurisdiction to reverse an order made in the exercise of such power, would be very reluctant to do so. It may be a long time before the point is decided; meanwhile, we commend it to the notice of the law students' debating societies throughout the kingdom.

THERE is no branch of the law which contains more anomalies than that relating to the taxation of costs. But, perhaps, the most curious anomaly is the allowance to scientific witnesses. The regulation amount per day is three guineas, though we believe Sir Frederick Bramwell is allowed five guineas. Of course the difference—a very large one—between the amount paid and the amount allowed falls on the client. It is ridiculous in these days that a larger sum is not allowed to scientific witnesses if they are necessary. We have no wish to encourage unnecessary evidence being tendered in our Courts, but it is very hard on successful litigants that they should be put to so much expense in regard to the fees of scientific witnesses. The latter class have sometimes charged a somewhat high fee, but it is not necessary that the whole of them should be allowed. But certainly a more adequate figure than the customary three guineas is desirable.

IT is stated that the appellants in the intimidation (?) case arising under section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, in which the recorder, Mr. Bompas, Q.C., affirmed a conviction, have applied to the recorder to state a case for the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, although the fines of two of the defendants have been paid, and although it was stated in Court that there would be no appeal. That a recorder has power to state such a case upon the trial of an indictment was decided shortly after the passing of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, in Regina v. Masters, 1 Den. C. C. 352, but an examination of that statute shows beyond doubt that the jurisdiction of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved does not extend to the appellate jurisdiction, but only applies to the original jurisdiction of a recorder. Could, however, the recorder state a case for the High Court otherwise than under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78? This is a question of very great doubt and difficulty. We think, however, that recorders have, by section 165 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, the same jurisdiction as county quarter sessions have in the matter, though we can find no instance of the jurisdiction being exercised by a recorder. But, no doubt, the usual course is for the sessions to give judgment 'subject to a case' (see Regina v. Stoke-upon-Trent, 13 Law J. Rep. M. C. 41), and not to entertain an application for a case after judgment given. If the appellants be not too late, it seems that the Court ought to state a case whenever a reasonable doubt exists on a point of law, and Lord Hardwicke a long time ago took occasion to say that if, when the matter is doubtful, the Court refuses to state the facts specially, this is very blamable conduct (see Rex v. Preston-on-the-Hill, Burr, S. S. 77). The case once stated may be taken from the High Court to the Court of Appeal and from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords, as was held in the celebrated Walsall Case, 48 Law J. Rep. M. C. 65, where the whole subject of appeal by case from quarter sessions was carefully discussed in the House of Lords.

LORD GRIMTHORPE has reviewed 'at great length' the Archbishop of Canterbury's judgment in the Lincoln case, and says that the first thing 'which strikes every lawyer' in connection with that judgment is that for the first time in legal history nearly every decision on the points decided against the prosecutors, 'which are all now as much law as if they were in Acts of Parliament,' are reversed by one of the two inferior provincial Courts, which may also differ from each other, 'the Archbishop in that respect filling actually a smaller position than the Dean of Arches.' 'The Supreme Court,' says Lord Grimthorpe, meaning by this expression the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 'had always decided five points out of the seven one way; the inferior Court had now decided them the other way, and an appeal is pending.' It is indeed difficult to see how the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council can do anything else than follow its own decisions, and reverse the decision of the Archbishop's Court, leaving Parliament to alter the law if it be so minded, whether the result may be to split the Church of England in two, as some anticipate, or not, and whether the result may be to incarcerate the Bishop of Lincoln or not.

INDIVIDUALISTS of the type of Mr. Herbert Spencer and Mr. Auberon Herbert would probably, if they acted up to their theories and had the power, restrain the Courts from interfering with the consequences of contracts entered into by free people. But 'our grandmother, the State,' as Lord Salisbury termed the powers that be, and her children, the Courts, exercise such a maternal care for contracting parties that they will sometimes refuse to enforce to the letter what has been previously agreed on. Purchasers have thus some grounds for their hopes that the stringent conditions to which their purchase is subjected, and the provisions as to their taking a title, which they afterwards discover to be a doubtful one, will not be rigidly enforced. There is a limit, however, to judicial interference, as the purchaser in the recent case of In re Sandbach and Edmondson (Notes of Cases, ante, p. 166) discovered to his cost. Certain houses were there put up for sale, and E. became the purchaser, subject to certain conditions, one of which provided that the purchaser should assume that a certain person, B., died intestate, and without an heir, before 1870. If B. did so die, then the property remained in his trustee, who would have the beneficial interest free from all trusts, under the law in force previously to the Intestates Act of 1884, and the vendor claimed through him. The purchaser, when he discovered the nature of B.'s interest, objected that the condition above referred to did not sufficiently disclose it, nor did the importance of the fact he was asked to assume appear from the conditions, and he required proof of it. The vendor stated his belief in the accuracy of the facts to be assumed, and offered to search for proof at the purchaser's expense. Some correspondence followed, and at length the vendor took out a summons for a declaration that a good title had been shown in accordance with the conditions. The Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster decided in his favour, and the Court of Appeal have upheld his decision. Their lordships said that a vendor was not compelled to point out the specific objection to his own title, provided that he did not intentionally mislead the purchaser or require him to assume that which the vendor knew to be untrue. The decision is certainly reasonable, for why should a vendor cry 'stinking fish' when he wishes to sell his property? On the other hand, it should be noted 'that a condition is bad as misleading (1) if it requires the purchaser to assume what the vendor knows to be false; or (2) if it affirms that the state of the title is not accurately known to the vendor when in fact it is known. And . . . a vendor is not at liberty to require a purchaser to assume as the root of his title that which documents within his possession show not to be the fact, even though these documents may show a title perfectly good on another ground' (Dart's 'Vendors and Purchasers,' 6th edit. p. 170).

THE hospitable institution of 'lunching' the recorder and sessions bar prevails in most quarter sessions boroughs. At Southampton this function is undertaken by the sheriff of 'the county of the town,' the office being held at present by a gentleman who is deservedly respected by his fellow-townsmen and is well known as an ardent teetotaller and disciple of Canon Wilberforce. True to his principles the sheriff provided no alcohol at the luncheon which followed the duties of the recent sessions. Need it be said that the genial recorder (Mr. E. U. Bullen) was equal to the occasion and good-humouredly rallied his host on their both being men of 'convictions?' But what would some of his predecessors say could they bridge time and space and witness the edifying spectacle of 'bench and bar' washing down their luncheon with ginger-beer or other teetotal mixtures on one of the coldest days in this Arctic winter? Verily 'the old order changeth, giving place to new.'

MR. SHERRARD, a justice of the peace, states in the Times that recently an incorrigible rogue was sentenced to receive thirty-six lashes—'whether with the birch or the rod he forgets'—after pointing out to a warder that he (the rogue) would be a fool to work, inasmuch as he could make more than a pound a week by begging. It may be doubted whether corporal punishment is frequently inflicted on 'incorrigible rogues' at the present day. The power to inflict it is undoubted, and is derived from 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 10. By this enactment a Court of Quarter Sessions may order that an incorrigible rogue be imprisoned for not more than a year, and 'further, that such offender, not being a female, be punished by whipping at such time during his imprisonment, and at such place within their jurisdiction, as according to the nature of the offence they in their discretion shall deem to be expedient.' The effect of the Act appears to be to authorise public whipping, which would be in conformity with the repealed 39 Eliz. c. 4. By that ancient statute any 'scholler going about begging,' or other person declared thereby to be 'a rogue, vagabond, and sturdy begger,' was directed 'to be stripped naked from the middle upwards and openly whipped 'untill his or her bodye be bloudye, and forthwith sent from parish to parish the nexte streighte way to the parish where he or she was borne;' while dangerous rogues or 'such as would not be reformed of their rogish kinde of lyfe' by the provisions of the Act, might be banished from the realm or 'be judged perpetually to the galleyes.'

THE Law Quarterly announces the commencement of a new venture by Messrs. Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.)—viz. the publication of a series of revised reports. That the idea is a good one and worthy of the support of the profession cannot be denied; but on the question whether such an undertaking can be made remunerative we are somewhat sceptical. This, however, concerns nobody but the enterprising publishers, who can safely be trusted to take care of themselves. We wish them all success.

THE LAW AND LAWYERS IN 1890.

WITH the year which has just passed the LAW JOURNAL has almost attained what, for anything legal in these days of incessant change, may be termed the patriarchal age of threescore years and ten. Its pages, from its foundation in 1822, when Lord Eldon was Chancellor and Sir Charles Abbott, afterwards Lord Tenterden, Lord Chief Justice, when Lord Eldon's scarcely less famous brother, Lord Stowell, was judge of the High Court of Admiralty, and Lord Lyndhurst, then Sir John Singleton Copley, who was actually born at Boston, now the intellectual centre of the United States, four years before the declaration of independence, was Solicitor-General, form almost the only continuous record extant of the growth and development of English jurisprudence during nearly the whole of the nineteenth century. This period in particular coincides with that remarkable expansion of our equity system which dates from the first Chancellorship of Lord Eldon and the appointment of Sir Thomas Plumer as Vice-Chancellor of England in 1813. It is an interesting study simply to glance at the names of the judges from the first volume to the last, and to note those whose memory is still fresh in our own times, and those whom posterity has been content to forget. In the list of gentlemen, also, who have contributed to the success of the 'Reports' will be found not a few who subsequently attained great distinction in the profession. Mr. Montagu Chambers, Q.C., was connected with our 'Reports' for more than half a century, and was one of the editors from 1834 to 1884; other former members of the staff were Mr. Herman Merivale, so long permanent under-secretary for India, Mr. Charles Beavan, Mr. Thomas Hare, Mr. G. M. Dowdeswell, Q.C., the present Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Staveley Hill, Q.C., Sir A. K. Stephenson, Q.C., Sir William Markby, and Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C. The lines originally laid down in 1822 have been faithfully followed for nearly three-quarters of a century, and the principles which guided the enterprise at its inception have been adopted and carried out by all the contemporary series of law reports and law newspapers. With a certain enlargement and greater fulness of detail, the aim of the LAW JOURNAL, as expressed in its first number, is its aim now, and the conscientious fulfilment of that aim has from the beginning to the present day been cordially recognised by both branches of the profession: 'To inform the profession of every change which takes place in the law; to present them with every species of information which the conduct of business can require; to afford to professional gentlemen resident at a distance from London faithful notes of the decisions of the Courts and a brief statement of the statutes made in Parliament; and to supply practitioners with an accurate account of all proceedings in any matter relating to legal business—are the objects contemplated by the proprietor of the Law Journal and the Law Advertiser.' The Law Advertiser was the precursor of the weekly newspaper now published under the title of the LAW JOURNAL, and probably the first legal newspaper ever published in this country.

Every spectator of the pageant of October 24 is led to consider the judicial changes which have taken place since the opening of the judicial year, and to speculate upon those which will probably occur in a year's time. Since the beginning of 1890 five new judges have taken their seats. Sir Edward Kay is a worthy successor in the Court of Appeal to Sir Henry Cotton, one of the most accomplished equity lawyers of our time; and the vacancy on the Chancery bench thus occasioned was filled up, to the general satisfaction of the profession, by the appointment of Mr. Romer, Q.C., whose judicial career may confidently be expected to be as brilliant as those of former senior wranglers who have reached the bench—Mr. Justice Maule and Baron Alderson and Mr. Justice Stirling. In February, Mr. Roland Vaughan Williams, Q.C., was appointed a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, in the place of the late Sir Henry Manisty, and later in the same month Mr. John Compton Lawrance, Q.C., M.P., was raised to the bench on the retirement of Mr. Justice Field, who was made a peer by the title of Baron Field, and has since occasionally sat in the House of Lords on the hearing of appeals. On the death, last month, of Baron Huddleston, Mr. Robert Samuel Wright, one of the junior counsel to the Treasury, was created a judge, and may be expected to crown a brilliant career at Oxford and at the bar by equal distinction on the bench. The death of Sir Barnes Peacock brings into operation section 14 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and rumour has been busy as to the appointment of a new Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. Our Indian fellow-subjects would doubtless like to see some distinguished ex-Indian judge sworn of the Privy Council to assist in Indian cases on the Judicial Committee, as Lord Hobhouse and Sir Richard Couch are the only judges who have any experience of Indian affairs. The Lord Chancellor has been more than usually sparing in the appointment of Queen's Counsel; and of these Sir A. K. Stephenson and Sir William Hardman were not active practitioners. The other new silks were Mr. Macrory, Mr. A. V. Dicey, Mr. Cyril Dodd, Mr. R. O. B. Lane, Mr. Sidney Woolf, Mr. C. A. Cripps, Mr. Haldane, M.P., Mr. Asquith, M.P., and Mr. Lawson Walton. Lord Halsbury is apparently a strong believer in youth, as the new judges, with the exception of Mr. Justice Lawrance who is about fifty-eight, are all men barely exceeding fifty years of age; and the gentlemen called within the bar are mostly young men, notably Mr. Haldane, who was barely thirty-four on his appointment, Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lawson Walton. He has also shown a laudable disregard of political considerations, for Mr. Justice Lawrance is the only one of the new judges who had any political record, and Mr. Justice Wright (whose office, however, gave him a sort of title to a judgeship) was known to be opposed to the Government.

With respect to legislation, as we have before remarked, private members scored more than they have done for many years past, and more than the Government itself, which, oddly enough, did almost more work in the first fortnight of the present session than in the six months from February to August. Seventy-two public Acts were passed in the session ending in August and two in the short part of the present session before Christmas, both of them dealing with Irish affairs. Those which more immediately relate to the administration of justice are the Bankruptcy Act, introduced by Sir A. Rollit and adopted by the Government, the Chancery of Lancaster Act, the Colonial Courts of Admiralty Act, the Commissioners for Oaths Amendment Act, the Companies (Memorandum of Association) and Winding-up Acts, the Deeds of Arrangement Amendment Act, Mr. Warnington's measure on Directors' Liability, suggested by the decision of the House of Lords in Peek v. Derry, the Elections (Scotland) (Corrupt and Illegal Practices), Foreign Jurisdiction, Lunacy Acts, the Lord Chancellor's Partnership Act, and Mr. Finlay's useful enactment, the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, by which motions for new trials in civil actions are heard by the Court of Appeal instead of a Divisional Court. Of measures of a constitutional character there were the Anglo-German Agreement Act, by which Heligoland was ceded to Germany, and the Western Australia Constitution Act. Allotment and Bills of Sale Acts are, of course, inevitable, and there are other measures dealing with Tenants' Compensation, Housing of the Working Classes, the Census (for which three Acts are necessary), Education, Intestates' Estates, the London County Council, Marriage of British Subjects outside the United Kingdom, Metropolis Management, the Police, Public Health, Public Libraries, Irish Railways, Irish Poor Law, Statute Law Revision, and Trustees Appointment for Lands held in trust for Religious or Educational purposes.

With respect to the decisions of the Courts, greater interest attaches to certain cases in the House of Lords and in the Privy Council on which judgment is reserved than to any actual judgments. The profession and the commercial community are awaiting with anxiety the decision of their lordships in Vagliano v. The Bank of England; the great licensing question, which in two successive years convulsed the country, is involved in Sharp v. Wakefield; the important question of employers' liability, the doctrine of volenti non fit injuria, and the supposed conflict of decisions of the Court of Appeal on these questions are awaiting the final pronouncement of the House of Lords; and the right of an Australian colony to exclude Chinese immigrants is to be settled one way or the other by the Privy Council in Musgrove v. Chun Teong Toy. Apart from sensational trials, such as O'Shea v. Parnell and the series of actions in which Dr. Barnardo has been involved, and cases of public rather than professional interest, like In re The Earl of Radnor's Trusts, involving the acquisition of great pictures for the nation, among the interesting cases of the year there were the celebrated judgment of the Archbishop of Canterbury in the Bishop of Lincoln's Case, The St. Paul's Reredos Case, Knill v. Towse, concerning the County Council Franchise, and The Marquis of Northampton v. Pollock, affirming in curious circumstances the ancient doctrine 'once a mortgage always a mortgage.'

The legal obituary is, as always, voluminous and melancholy. Mr. Justice Manisty died early in the year full of years and honours; the Irish bench sustained the loss of Baron Dowse, Lord Justice Naish, who was cut off at the early age of forty-nine, and Mr. Justice Litton, legal member of the Irish Land Commission. Sir Michael Westropp, Chief Justice of Bombay, died in his seventy-third year; Mr. Justice Molesworth, of Melbourne, expired at the ripe age of eighty-four; and the close of the year was marked by the death of Mr. Baron Huddleston, who had passed his threescore years and ten; and of Sir Barnes Peacock, who had reached the ripe age of eighty-six, and had sat in the Privy Council a few days before he died. The rapidly vanishing body of serjeants-at-law suffered diminution in the persons of Serjeant Tindal Atkinson, who was eighty-five, and the senior County Court judge; and of Serjeant Robinson, at seventy-eight, whose charming 'Reminiscences' will be fresh in our readers' minds. Other notable figures have disappeared in Sir J. T. Ingham, who had long passed eighty; Sir J. Blosset Maule, Q.C.; Mr. Glasse, Q.C., who took silk so long ago as 1851, and was for many years perhaps the most prominent leader of the Chancery bar; Lord Milltown; Mr. Charles Compton, Q.C., distinguished son of a distinguished father; Mr. Clement Milward, Q.C., whose sailorlike aspect was suited to the Court in which he practised; Mr. B. T. Williams, Q.C.; Mr. Swetenham, Q.C., M.P.; Sir William Hardman, Q.C., more of a journalist and politician than of a lawyer; Mr. T. W. Sanders; and Mr. A. W. Kinglake, the brilliant historian of the Crimean War. Other members of the profession who are no longer with us are Mr. Arbuthnot, the accomplished editor, in conjunction with Mr. Henn Collins, Q.C., of Smith's 'Leading Cases,' who died prematurely at the age of forty-six; Mr. Decimus Foulkes, a learned lawyer, long connected with this journal, who died at a still earlier age; Sir John Heron, town clerk of Manchester for nearly half a century; Master Francis; Mr. C. J. Baker, many years secretary of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy; Sir W. W. Streeten, formerly on the staff of the LAW JOURNAL, and late Chief Justice of the West African Settlements; Mr. David Pugh, many years M.P. for Carmarthen; Sir H. Connor, Chief Justice of Natal; Mr. J. Clayton, who reached the patriarchal age of ninety-eight, town clerk of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and a learned antiquary; Mr. William Marshall, of Ely, an accomplished naturalist as well as a lawyer; Mr. J. J. Johnson, Recorder of Chichester; Mr. Edwyn Jones; Mr. Ashworth Briggs, who was killed on the railway; Mr. Arthur Macnamara, a promising young counsel, who was killed on the Alps; Mr. W. F. F. Bingey; Mr. George Mander; Mr. Anderson Rose; Mr. Ruscombe Poole, a well-known solicitor at Clevedon; Mr. Thomas Belk; Mr. Enoch Harvey, of Liverpool; Mr. J. Hensman, of Northampton; Mr. T. Cornish, of Penzance; Mr. William Genn; Mr. Thompson Richardson, of Barnard Castle; Mr. William Langdon, of Messrs. Goldberg & Langdon, solicitors to the German Government; Mr. George de Morgan; Mr. T. T. Weightman; Mr. George Burnett, Lyon King of Arms for Scotland; Mr. A. O. Rutson; Mr. T. Minshall; Dr. James Lorimer, Professor of Public Law at Edinburgh; and Mr. Savill Onley, of Stistead Hall, near Braintree, who had completed his ninety-sixth year.

TAYLOR v. RUSSELL.

THE late case of Taylor v. Russell, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 756, and on appeal 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1; L. R. 1891, 1 Chanc. 8, is a striking example of divergence of opinion between judges of great eminence on the question in what cases a subsequent equitable incumbrancer, who has taken without notice of a prior equitable charge, can gain precedence by getting in the legal estate after receiving notice of such prior charge. The case involved, in the first instance, two questions—(1) whether, having regard to the conduct of the plaintiffs (the earlier incumbrancers), they were entitled to retain the precedence which would primâ facie result from priority of time; and (2) whether, if they had such precedence, it was displaced by the fact that the defendant had, after notice of their incumbrance, got in the legal estate. Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Kay decided in favour of the plaintiffs on both points. The Court of Appeal gave judgment for the defendants on the second, but did not discuss the first. The judgment in the Court of Appeal, and also that of Mr. Justice Kay, will repay attentive perusal.

The property was originally vested in the trustees of a person named Surtees, and they, under a power, had mortgaged it, with other property, on November 19, 1862, by a legal mortgage to the trustees of one Legard, but the property in question was not originally intended to be included in this mortgage. Afterwards the then surviving trustee of Surtees (and who was one of those who mortgaged in 1862) conveyed it on a sale to Toward by deed of January 30, 1883, and covenanted that he had not incumbered. Toward mortgaged the property to the plaintiffs by deed of February 15, 1883, but made out to them another title to it; and, of course, did not deliver the proper deeds. He afterwards, by deed of October 20, 1887, mortgaged the property to the defendant, to whom the deeds were handed, but Legard's trustees, who held the legal estate, did not concur, and the defendant took without notice of the plaintiffs' incumbrance. Afterwards the defendant, having become aware of the mortgage to the plaintiffs, an arrangement was made under which Legard's trustees, who were satisfied of the sufficiency of the other property included in their mortgage to answer their own claim, conveyed the legal estate in that purchased by Toward to the Surtees trustees, but upon the express condition that they should forthwith convey the same to the defendant. This transaction was effected by a conveyance of November 21, 1888, from Legard's trustees to Surtees's trustees, and a conveyance of November 26, 1888, from the latter to the defendant.

Mr. Justice Kay observed (59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 762): 'When Surtees' trustees obtained the legal estate,' after the conveyance from Legard's trustees, 'there was a duty incumbent upon them to convey it to Toward or to the assign of Toward, who had the best right to call for it;' and he referred to the facts in Harpham v. Shackloch, L. R. 19 Chanc. Div. 207 (November 18, 1881), citing the well-known remark of Sir G. Jessel, p. 214: 'Then, as regards the legal estate, nothing is better settled than that you cannot make use of the doctrine of tabula in naufragio by getting in a legal estate from a bare trustee after you have received notice of a prior equitable claim.'

The judgment of the Court of Appeal (Sir J. Hannen, Lord Justice Bowen and Lord Justice Fry) was read by Lord Justice Fry. That Court seems to rely in some measure on the fact that Surtees' trustees took the reconveyance upon a condition to convey it to the defendants. It is said in the judgment (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 4): 'Even if they ought never to have so taken the legal estate (which we see no reason to affirm), they could not, when they had taken it, refuse to perform the condition on which they took it without a gross violation of confidence and breach of good faith, of which no equity could, in our judgment, require them to be guilty.' Reliance was also placed on the ruling of Lord Selborne in Blackwood v. The London Chartered Bank of Australia, 43 Law J. Rep. P. C. 25, 29; L. R. 5 P. C. 92, 111, viz.: 'There is nothing more familiar than the doctrine of equity, that a man who has bonâ fide paid money without notice of any other title, though at the time of the payment he as purchaser gets nothing but an equitable title, may afterwards get in a legal title if he can and may hold it, though during the interval between the payment and the getting in the legal title he may have had notice of some prior dealing inconsistent with the good faith of the dealing with himself;' and on the following observation of Vice-Chancellor Wood, in Bates v. Johnson, Joh. 304, see p. 314: 'In every case down to Peacock v. Burt, 4 Law J. (N.S.) Chanc. 33, which is probably one of the most striking of the kind, it has been held that when once a subsequent incumbrancer, who, by advancing his money without notice of prior mesne incumbrances, stands in an equally good position with them in every respect, except as regards time, gets in the legal estate, he has a right to avail himself of that legal estate until the whole of his incumbrance is discharged.' But must not these observations be construed in connection with the facts then before the Court? And it is submitted that there are features in each case which, to some extent at least, distinguish it from Taylor v. Russell. Thus, in Blackwood v. The London Chartered Bank of Australia, the plaintiff's letter of deposit was, no doubt, first in point of time, but the bank registered their letter of deposit on July 15, 1870, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, while the plaintiff registered his at a later hour on the same day. In the Act of 7 Vict., No. 16, providing for registration of deeds and other instruments in New South Wales, priority seems to be given by mere registration. Indeed, it will be found that section 14 of this Act provides 'that upon the delivery into the Registrar-General's Office of any such certified copy or memorial' [as there mentioned of an original instrument] 'and verification of the same, the registrar shall grant and sign a receipt for such copy or memorial, in which shall be specified the certain day and hour on which the same shall have been delivered into the said office,' with other particulars. The receipt was to be endorsed on the original instrument, and 'the time so endorsed' is to be 'taken to be the time of the registration' of such instrument. In fact, the functions of the registrar seem to have been ministerial, and, as in Dodds v. Hills, 2 H. & M. p. 427, Vice-Chancellor Wood observed (in giving Smith priority), 'nothing but his own act was necessary to make him complete master of the shares' (in which he had previously only an equitable title), so with the bank the delivery at the registrar's office of the certified copy of their charge was a matter which depended only upon their own act. Thus in neither case could there have been any question who had the 'best right to call for the legal estate,' inasmuch as the persons who got the legal estate obtained it without any extraneous aid. But, in Taylor v. Russell, Russell required the assistance of both Legard's trustees and also of Surtees's trustees. Again, in Bates v. Johnson, Joh. 304, where a third mortgagee who had lent without notice of the second incumbrance took a transfer from the first mortgagee, and so acquired the legal estate, Vice-Chancellor Wood observes, p. 317: 'A first mortgagee is in the same position as any other unsatisfied mortgagee having notice of a subsequent incumbrance, and has a right to transfer the legal estate so vested in him to any person who will pay off his debt.' (It is suggested whether, as the law now stands, a first mortgagee would not, in case of requisition by a second mortgagee, be bound under section 12 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, to transfer to such second rather than to a third mortgagee.) But did not the Vice-Chancellor rely on the payment which the first mortgagee had a right to receive? Indeed, he himself seems (pp. 315, 316) to place a satisfied mortgagee on the same footing as the trustee of a satisfied term.

Allusion has been made to Peacock v. Burt; it may be worth while to refer to Lord Justice Lindley's criticism on this case in The West London Commercial Bank v. The Reliance Permanent Building Society, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1,081; L. R. 29 Chanc. Div. 963, where he observes: 'Peacock v. Burt looks very like a conspiracy between the first and third mortgagees to cheat the second, which cannot be right. That, however, is the aspect which many of the old cases on the subject bear. Still, I am not at liberty to question those decisions; for, although they are opposed to my ideas of morality, they are nevertheless law. However, I am not going to make them the pretext for doing further wrong.' In Peacock v. Burt the first mortgagees received their debt; in Taylor v. Russell they might, it is presumed, have refused to release at all or to do otherwise than transfer; but if they consented to release a portion, did they not, ipso facto, admit that as to such portion they were in the position of satisfied mortgagees?

Lord Justice Fry, citing Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 270, seems to admit that circumstances may exist which give an incumbrancer a better right to call for an assignment of a legal estate; but said 'the defendants were perfectly innocent holders of the equitable estate; they clothed themselves with the legal estate without notice, in our opinion, of any equity in the plaintiffs to prevent them so doing, and we see, therefore, no reason to deprive them of the benefit they have acquired.'

The decision of the Court of Appeal is, of course, binding; but the case is an instance of the difficulties which arise in questions of this nature, and, in the absence of any system of general registration, it seems likely that the question which of two innocent equitable incumbrancers has the better right to call for the legal estate may yet have to be frequently discussed.

THE TITHE BILL.

THE Tithe Rent Charge Recovery Bill, which it is proposed to call the Tithe Act, 1891, is a short but very important measure. All provisions as to redemption, and provisions for getting rid of small tithes, which, however well conceived they have been, formed a great impediment to the passing of previous tithe bills, have been entirely dropped, and the new bill becomes merely a measure for transferring the liability to pay tithe from the occupier to the owner, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary—a further invasion of freedom of contract between landlord and tenant which will be of great practical importance to estate agents and others. By clause (1), 'Tithe rent-charge, issuing out of any lands, shall be payable by the owner of the lands, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary between him and the occupier of such lands,' and where the occupier is liable under any contract before the Act to pay tithe, then 'he shall cease to be bound by that part of the contract, but in respect of the period during which his tenancy under such contract subsists, he shall, unless it is otherwise agreed between him and the owner, owe to the owner such sum as the owner has paid on account of' tithe, and 'such sums shall be recoverable from the occupier by distress in like manner as is provided by the Tithe Acts with respect to arrears of tithe rent-charge, and not otherwise.' Distress, therefore, for tithe is not to be abolished, but it is to be a distress at the suit of the landlord, and not at the suit of the parson or other tithe-owner. Such tithe-owner is, by clause 2, to recover his tithe, in case of default, from the land-owner by application to the County Court for a receiving order, which 'shall be executed by the appointment by the Court of a receiver of the rents and profits of the lands, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, also of the rents and profits of any other lands of the same owner which are occupied by the same occupier together with those lands.' This somewhat harsh provision in relation to 'other lands' is modelled on section 85 of the Tithe Commutation Act, 1836, so that it is not to be expected that any opposition to it will be successful. It only remains to notice that, by clause 3, the Court may order a remission of tithe when it exceeds two-thirds of the annual value of the land charged with it, and that by clause 5 the bill is to extend to every sum on account of tithe which first becomes payable on or after the half-yearly day of payment of such tithe which occurs next after its passing, but not to sums due on account of tithe which were in arrear before its passing. Such arrears, therefore, will still be recoverable by distress on the part of the tithe-owner on the goods of the occupier, in manner provided by section 67 of the Tithe Commutation Act, 1836.

The Tithe Rentcharge Owners' Union have just published the bill in pamphlet form, with very useful notes and criticisms by Mr. W. H. Squire, barrister, and Mr. E. W. I. Peterson, solicitor. The general contention of the tithe-owners is that one at least of the provisions of the bill will work injustice, that several others are unnecessary, and that the present procedure and remedies amply suffice, provided that those who have to work them are properly backed up by the authorities. That the property of tithe-owners is imperilled is undeniable, and the union must be vigilant in guarding their interests.

Reviews.

GARRETT'S LAW OF NUISANCES.

The Law of Nuisances. By EDMUND W. GARRETT, M.A., of the Inner Temple and the Midland Circuit, Barrister-at-Law. William Clowes & Sons. 1890.

THE aim of this book, the author tells us in his preface, is to collect and arrange for the first time in one volume the common and statute law as to nuisances. The subject of nuisances has lately been brought very prominently before the mind of the British public by the proceedings in the case against the Pelican Club, which, after occupying a large share of the time and attention of the vacation judge, became the subject of an elaborate hearing before Mr. Justice Romer. The Pelican Club case was a case of nuisance by noise, but nuisance, it is needless to remark, takes a great variety of forms, many of which are but little known except to trained lawyers, and the remedies which the law affords are also various. Mr. Garrett first considers the subject as a whole. He then passes on to consider nuisances in connection with highways, bridges, and waters. Next we have the consideration of nuisances in connection with what is termed the 'interdependence of neighbouring properties'—a branch of law which is based largely on the principle expressed in the Latin maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.' Here all the many authorities centring round the well-known case of Fletcher v. Rylands, 37 Law J. Rep. Exch. 161; L. R. 3 H. L. C. 330, are considered. The other forms of nuisance, beginning with the question of the responsibility of the owner of an animal for injuries inflicted by it, be it elephant, bear, or dog, or of whatever kind it may be, and ending with minor statutory nuisances, are next considered. We have then the subject of abatement in Chapter XII., and procedure in Chapter XIII., considered under the two heads: (1) 'On the Civil side,' (2) 'On the Crown side.' Among other useful points in the book may be mentioned an index to precedents of indictments, and the book concludes with an appendix of over a score of statutes bearing on the subject of nuisance. The work throughout is very carefully executed and the arrangement is good. It is admirably printed, and may be safely recommended to all who desire to master the subject with which it deals.

THE HOUSING OF THE WORKING CLASSES ACT, 1890.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890. Annotated. With Appendices, containing the Incorporated Statutory Provisions, the Working Classes Dwellings Act, 1890, the Standing Orders of Parliament relating to Provisional Orders, and the Circulars, Memoranda and Orders of the Local Government Board under the Act. By the Author of 'The Local Loans of England and Wales.' London: Knight & Co. 1890.

THE object of this work is to provide local authorities, &c., with Mr. Ritchie's Act and a commentary thereon, the Acts incorporated with that important measure, the Standing Orders of Parliament relating to Provisional Orders confirming improvements, and the Circulars, Orders and Memoranda issued in connection with the subject. We have carefully looked through the manual before us, and it seems to combine a great deal of useful information in a handy form. A good specimen of the work is to be found at p. 117, where the authorities on the important subject of compensation are collected.

BUCKLEY ON THE COMPANIES ACTS.

The Law and Practice under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, and the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872. Containing the Statutes, and the Rules, Orders, and Forms to Regulate Proceedings. By H. BURTON BUCKLEY, Q.C. Sixth Edition. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THE new edition of this, the leading text-book on company law, is doubly welcome, owing to the fact that it is entirely the work of the learned author, whose experience in this branch of law is probably unrivalled. The necessity for a new edition arose partly from the exhaustion of its predecessor, but chiefly from the necessity of incorporating recent legislative changes and judicial interpretation. It includes, as the author points out, three new Acts of Parliament of great importance. 'The first, commercial—to meet a recognised mercantile need, giving power, within limits and subject to control, to alter that which has been unalterable, to enlarge or restrict the objects specified in the memorandum of association. The second, administrative—intended to answer the demand for greater economy and more efficient control in winding-up, defining afresh the Court which shall have jurisdiction, and providing a new machinery for the appointment of the liquidator and the control of the funds. The third, deterrent—conceived as a terror to the prospectus-maker, and calculated to increase the income of the competent expert who has no scruples.' That the work of revision has been thoroughly done is assured by the fact, already mentioned, of its having been undertaken by the author. The Winding-up Rules, the tardy appearance of which somewhat delayed the edition, are included in the book, but for the purposes of pending liquidations the former Rules have also been retained. It was not to be supposed that there would not be some increase in bulk, and accordingly we find that from 734 in the fifth edition the number of pages in the present issue has increased to 867. Mr. Buckley acknowledges the assistance of Mr. Younger in revision for the press and in the correction of the indices. The value of the work would have been much enhanced if his assistance had further been enlisted for the purpose of extending the references to more than one set of reports.

JOHNSON ON PATENTS.

The Patentees' Manual. A Treatise on the Law and Practice of Patents for Inventions. With an Appendix of Statutes, Rules, and Foreign and Colonial Patent Laws, International Convention and Protocol. By JAMES JOHNSON, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and J. HENRY JOHNSON, Solicitor, Assoc. Inst. C.E., Past President of the Institute of Patent Agents. Sixth Edition. Revised and Enlarged. London: Longmans, Green & Co.; Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1890.

THE sixth edition of this standard work appears after an interval of six years. The fifth edition appeared soon after the Act of 1883, and during the time that has elapsed a great many important changes have taken place. Three supplementary Acts of Parliament have been passed in the years 1885, 1886, 1888. There have also been four new sets of official rules. Add to this that there have been a very considerable number of decisions, some of them of much importance. The fresh matter thus introduced into the law of patents has been carefully embodied in the present work. New chapters have also been introduced. We have tested the work in several places, and have found it brought down well to date. Part I. of the Appendix contains the statutes, international conventions, rules, fees, and forms. Part II. is devoted to the patent laws of foreign countries and of British colonies and possessions. The preface contains a useful summary of the effect of recent legislation, which is itself again summarised in the following words: The provisions of many earlier statutes were consolidated and amended; several features hitherto unknown in our system were introduced; the procedure was simplified; the fees payable to Government on application for patents were reduced, and greater facilities for the payment of the subsequent fees were afforded. Some interesting statistics as to the practical working of the present system are also given. The hope that the inventive talent of the nation would be stimulated into more vigorous action has not been disappointed. The average number of patents sealed in the four years prior to 1883 was 3,928, while in the five years after 1883 it was 9,314. The average annual number of applications during the four years after 1883 was 17,108, but of these 7,792, or 45 per cent., failed in some way or another. The applications increase at the rate of about 1,000 a year.

WILSON'S LEGAL HANDY BOOKS.

A Handy Book on the Powers, Duties, and Liabilities of Directors. Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, including the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. By THOS. W. HAYCRAFT, Esq., B.A. (Oxon.), of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Author of 'A Handy Book on the Bills of Sale Act.' Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

THE object of this book, the author tells us, is to place before those persons who are, or propose to become, directors of companies a brief but comprehensive sketch of the duties and liabilities attaching to their position. A new terror has been added to the law with regard to directors by the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, to which a chapter is devoted. This Act has, as our author puts it, 'created a statutory duty on the part of those who lend their names to a company towards those who are invited by its prospectus to subscribe for shares or debentures.' Attention is also directed to the Court's powers of dealing with delinquent directors under section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, which extends the provisions of section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862 (now repealed). The book is carefully written, and will be useful to the class of persons for whom it is intended.

A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Sale of Goods. Showing the Rights, Duties, and Liabilities of Buyers and Sellers as Wholesale or Retail Dealers or Consumers. With the Factors Act, 1889. By C. E. STEWART, M.A., of the Inner Temple and of the South-Eastern Circuit, Barrister-at-Law, Author of the 'Law of Wills' and 'Law of Water and Gas.' Effingham Wilson & Co.

THE law as to buying and selling goods is generally regarded as one of the subjects which is ripe for codification. A bill, as is well known, was introduced by Lord Herschell dealing with the subject, but the many difficulties which beset the path of legislation have hitherto defeated its progress. Meanwhile the author of the present little treatise thinks its desirable to collect the principles of this important branch of law in a moderate compass. His work will be found useful, for it is carefully executed. At p. 61 he ought to have alluded, under Derry v. Peek, to the Directors' Liability Act, and at p. 86 we ought to have been told that the Factors Act was last year extended to Scotland.

Unreported Cases.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT, IRELAND.

CHARITABLE BEQUEST—LEGACY TO ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY.

ON Thursday, May 1, 1890, the following judgment, in the case of In re Vandeleur; Armstrong v. Reeves, was delivered by Vice-Chancellor Chatterton: This is an action brought by the next-of-kin of the testator, Colonel Richard John Ormsby Vandeleur, for the purpose of charging the executors of his will with two sums of money—one 500*l.* and the other 784*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, the latter representing the residue of his personal estate—as having been improperly paid to persons who were not legally entitled to receive those legacies under his will. The question depends upon whether the two legacies in question were valid or not. The first bequest is in these words: 'I leave a legacy of 500*l.* to the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection, payable upon the receipt of the treasurer for the time being.' The other is the gift of the residue: 'I leave all the residue of my property to the Society of Carlsruhe for the Protection of Animals, to be paid to the treasurer for the time being of said society.' Those legacies were in due course paid by the executors to the persons authorised by the will to receive them, namely, the treasurer of the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection, and the treasurer of the Carlsruhe Society for the Protection of Animals. It is said by the plaintiffs that both of these legacies were void. Now, in the first place, we have to consider that we are dealing with two gifts which were of pure personal estate. There is nothing whatever to prevent any testator from disposing of his personal estate in any way he pleases, if he with sufficient clearness and certainty states the objects of his dispositions, if there is nothing illegal or immoral in those objects, and if he does not, by the terms of his gifts, delay the expenditure of the money beyond the legal limits of time. It is only in the case of uncertainty or perpetuity that it becomes necessary to consider whether the object of a bequest is charitable or not. In the present case, the subject of the bequests is pure personalty, and the objects are clearly stated—they are, in the one case, the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection, and in the other, a society in Germany for the protection of animals. Both of those societies were well known to the testator, and during his lifetime he appears to have been a supporter of both. He knew how to describe, and he did correctly describe, them. They were existing societies, although not incorporated. I assume the German society was not a corporation, because I have no evidence before me to show that it was. The Anti-Vivisection Society, of course, was not incorporated; so that I may deal with both alike in this respect, as being existing societies, but not incorporated. Another matter of importance in considering these gifts is that in each case there is a person designated by the testator, who is to be paid the amount of the legacies, and to give receipts, which he intends to be valid discharges to his personal representatives for such payment. In each case the bequest is directed to be paid 'to the treasurer for the time being of the said society;' the same words occur in both cases. The testator must be presumed to have known the constitution of the societies when he designated the treasurers as the fit and proper persons to receive payments. Now, the first question that arises is the validity of a gift to an existing unincorporated society, such as those with which we are now dealing. I have been urged with several arguments on behalf of the plaintiffs that the bequests are invalid, on the grounds of uncertainty and perpetuity, and that it would be impossible for this Court, were we called upon to undertake to discharge those trusts, to decree their performance. The societies are both existing societies, both capable of applying the money according to their respective rules and constitutions, and there would be no occasion whatever for the Court to interfere, unless, perhaps, a case might arise of an attempt at misappropriation of the money, after it had reached the hands of the persons to whom it was directed by the testator to be paid. That, however, is an equity that would not be enforced in an administration suit like the present. If anything of the kind arose it could, if attempted at all, be listened to only at the instance of those who are the objects of the charity—which in neither of these cases are capable of making such an application; or of the Attorney-General, as to the English Society, on behalf of the Crown. How it could be done in the case of the German society I do not know. This, however, is a point which, I think, need not be considered in the present case. It is admitted that if these were gifts to the members of the societies, which they could apply for their personal benefit, they would be valid; and I am entirely at a loss to understand why they should be rendered invalid if they apply them to the purposes and objects of their respective societies. I put aside, for the present, the consideration of the question of perpetuity. I am assuming there is no element of perpetuity involved in the case—I shall consider presently whether there is or not—but, assuming that there is no element of perpetuity, it is very clear, in my opinion, that the purposes of these societies are neither illegal nor immoral. The objects of the bequests are clearly stated, as being these two existing, known, and defined societies, each having an officer designated by the testator to receive the legacy and give a discharge for it. I am, therefore, at a loss to see in what way the element of uncertainty exists as applied to these institutions. Cocks v. Manners, 40 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 640; L. R. 12 Eq. 574, contains that important opinion of Vice-Chancellor Wickens, that those persons, if they would have a right to receive the money, supposing they could spend it for their own purposes, are not less entitled if they put the money into a common chest. When it gets there it becomes freed from the trusts connected with it, and, unless there is something in the terms of the bequest to the contrary, it may be expended in presenti, as part of the current income of the society. Looking at the constitution of these societies, there is nothing that I can find that in the slightest degree obliges them to capitalise these funds. Of course it cannot be contended for a moment that the treasurer of either of them could apply the money for his own private benefit, or that the persons who happened to constitute the societies at the time of the death of the testator would be allowed so to apply it; but that depends upon the internal constitution and regulations of the societies. All that the testator required was that the money should go to the societies, and that receipts for it should be given by the treasurer of each society. As soon as ever the gifts reached the proper hands, in my opinion, they ceased to be affected by the trusts of the will, and each society was at liberty to apply the money at its discretion in accordance with its own constitution and rules. I am of opinion that the Court has no duty imposed upon it to investigate the constitution and rules of a society, where a person is expressly designated and authorised to receive payment and give a receipt. It is not the practice of this Court—the practice is the other way—where a bequest is given to a society, whether charitable or not, where the money has been paid to the person expressly designated by the terms of the gift as the proper person to receive and give a discharge for it—it is not the practice of the Court to look beyond that; the moment the Court pays it over to that person it has done its duty, and the responsibility then rests upon those to whom it was given by the testator. As I have already said, there is nothing either illegal or immoral in the objects and purposes of either of those societies; but it was contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that there was an element of perpetuity in them, and that on that account the bequests were invalid. Now, in the first place, there is nothing whatever in the gifts themselves tending to perpetuity; and it is in my opinion a fallacy to incorporate into a bequest the rules and regulations of a society, which indicate that it is intended to have a permanent existence, in order to invalidate a gift in itself clear and free from any element involving that question. But even supposing that we were called upon to look at the rules, and to ascertain whether there was anything perpetual in them, I cannot yield to the arguments addressed to me on behalf of the plaintiffs and hold that, because they provide for an annual election of officers, and other matters implying permanence to some extent, that that indicates an intention that the gifts received by the society shall be applied in a manner exceeding the limits which the law prescribes with regard to perpetuity. Every society must, in its nature and constitution, contemplate some continued existence; and, of course, whether it is to continue one year, or ten, or 500 years, there must be some regulations and bye laws as to appointment of officers and other matters that must occur from time to time in the transaction of its affairs. It would be a monstrous proposition to hold that because we find, in a society to which an absolute gift of this kind is given, provision made in its bye-laws for keeping up the necessary officers, and other matters, as long as it continues to exist, those are to raise the question of perpetuity, and to invalidate a gift to such a society although the gift in itself contained no element of perpetuity. There is nothing in the rules of either society expressly providing for any period of duration. If the contention of the plaintiffs was to prevail, the Court would be bound to hold that a bequest to any society which did not contain in its constitution and rules a term indicating that it was intended that it should terminate within the legal limits of time, would, on that ground alone, be invalid. I do not think anybody ever saw or heard of a society whose constitution contained any limit of time of that kind, and in my opinion it would be absurd that it should. I am clearly of opinion that, where there is nothing in the subject of the gift involving the application of the mortmain doctrines affecting land, and where existence in perpetuity is not a necessary part of the constitution of the society, that the Court should not invalidate it merely because the rules and regulations of the society contain no express provision for the termination of its existence within the legal limits of time, and hold that the society must necessarily continue to exist beyond the legal period, or that every specific gift to it must remain applicable for the purposes of the society during its entire existence. The authorities which have been referred to—Obert v. Barrow, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 913; L. R. 35 Chanc. Div. 472, and Thomson v. Shakspeare, 29 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 140, 276—are distinguishable from the present case. In the first, from the very nature and terms of the gift, it was to be taken as intended for a perpetual institution. Thomson v. Shakspeare was the same thing; it was a gift for the perpetual keeping up of the house in which Shakspeare resided, and a museum, to last for all time, of interesting articles connected with Shakspeare. Those cases have no application to the gifts here. I am of opinion that the element of perpetuity does not exist in the present case, and that the objection on that ground cannot operate to invalidate the bequests. Even if I were wrong in this, the question would still arise whether these gifts are charitable or not. If the element of perpetuity is introduced in a gift, it fails, unless it be charitable; and in like manner, if there be uncertainty, it fails, unless it be a charitable gift; but if the gift be for a charitable purpose, then the objections founded upon perpetuity and uncertainty have no application. Now, is the bequest to the Anti-Vivisection Society a charitable gift? The rules of the society, so far as they apply to this question, are very short. They state that the object of the society is the total abolition of vivisection or putting animals to death by torture upon any pretext whatever; and this object is to be carried out (1) by procuring by legislative enactment the entire suppression of vivisection, and (2) by enforcing by legal process the provisions of any statute prohibiting or regulating the practice of vivisection. There is nothing in the remainder of the rules affecting the question I am now considering, which is, whether this is a society for charitable purposes or not. This point was not actually decided in Obert v. Barrow, as it did not become necessary there to decide the question, but there were intimations from the judges who decided the case that a gift to a society for procuring the abolition of vivisection would in their opinion be a charitable gift; and in Purdy v. Johnson it was expressly ruled that a gift for this object was a charitable one. It is said that there is something illegal in the nature of the society, which, it is stated, has been instituted for the purpose of interfering with the operation of an Act of Parliament. I cannot yield to that argument. The society does not profess to interfere in any way with the Act of Parliament. It is a society for the purpose, by legitimate means, by bringing public opinion to bear upon the Legislature, of inducing them to make certain alterations in legislation; and, instead of regulating the practice of vivisection, to procure a law abolishing it altogether. The statute at present allows vivisection to be carried on, under certain restrictions and limitations, for scientific purposes, and the object of the society, which is to influence the Legislature, by legitimate means, to make certain alterations in the law, does not contain in itself any element of illegality. I am not called upon de novo to pronounce a decision as to whether the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection is a charitable institution or society; because, as I have said, it has been ruled already that it is; but certainly, if I had to consider the question for the first time, I should say that it was clearly within the legal definition of a charitable society. The statute does not in the slightest degree profess to enumerate all the different charitable purposes which come within its scope; it only gives some, to be used as analogies; but in every case the Court has to consider whether there is some public benefit to be derived from an institution in order to determine whether its objects are fairly to be considered charitable or merely benevolent. Now, in the present case, I am of opinion that anything that tends to prevent the demoralisation of public opinion which would be caused by an unauthorised and unnecessary practice of dissection of living animals would be for the public benefit, as tending to correct and prevent cruelty or carelessness in reference to the sufferings of brute beasts. I do not mean in the slightest degree to express any opinion, I really do not entertain any opinion on the question of the total abolition of vivisection; but even if I differed in that respect from the objects of the society—which perhaps I might do as an individual—that is not the question. The question is whether the object in view is such as may fairly, within the principle of decided cases, be deemed a charitable purpose. The cases I have referred to show that it is. I may also observe that there is a strong tendency in our law, both statute and outside the statute law, against the practice of cruelty to animals; and if vivisection be, as it must, a cruelty to animals, it can only be justified on the ground of being attended with beneficial public effects of such importance as to render it desirable that the cruelty should be excused in view of the public benefits to be derived from such investigations. I have not myself formed any decided opinion on the subject; but if the members of this society honestly believe, as I have no doubt they do, that vivisection is a practice involving unnecessary cruelty to animals, I see nothing in their desire to procure its abolition by legal enactment either illegal or taking it out of the principle of those cases, which I think show it to be, in their view, a charitable institution. I have, therefore, no difficulty in holding that this legacy of 500*l.* to the Society for the Abolition of Vivisection is a good and valid legacy, whether on the grounds on which I first put it, as not open to objection for uncertainty or perpetuity, or on the ground that it is a charitable gift. [His lordship then proceeded to consider the bequest to the Carlsruhe Society, and said he failed to discover anything in the rules of the society which would show that its objects were not charitable.] The prevention of cruelty to animals has not only been a matter of legal decision, but it is a subject of statute. One of the arguments used on behalf of the plaintiffs was that I must take the statute for the prevention of cruelty to animals as the measure of what the limit is to be of the class of cruelty of which the law takes notice; and that, as the statute is confined to animals useful to man, so in every case, if you go outside the bounds of the statute in that respect, you go beyond the limit of what is a charitable purpose. That, in my opinion, is an entire fallacy. The statute, no doubt, enumerates certain animals, describing them as animals useful to man, and it confines the criminal prosecutions which it authorises, and the punishments which it enacts, to cruelty to animals of that class, and that class alone, but it does not in the slightest degree interfere with the general moral principle that cruelty to animals of every kind, whether useful to man or not, is a thing that is to be prevented and suppressed, as far as possible. In my opinion, it is for the benefit of the public that it should be prevented; and that any society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, whether domestic animals or not, is within the scope of charitable institutions. The rules of this society have been scanned minutely by counsel, in order, if possible, to find out something which would show that the objects for which it was instituted go beyond the legal limits of charitable purposes. What are they? To prevent by every means in their power the ill-treatment of animals, and to protect all useful animals, especially birds, and, whenever necessary, to provide them with food. Those are the two chief objects of the society, and they are objects of general mercy to animals of all kinds—especially useful animals—which has been interpreted by legal authority, to which I need not refer, as animals useful to man—but whether confined to animals useful to man or not, in my opinion the objects of the society are charitable. Having come to the conclusion (1) that these gifts, even if not charitable, are good and valid gifts; (2) that they are charitable gifts; it becomes unnecessary to decide the case on the question of estoppel. I think there is a good deal to be said on both sides of that question; but in the view I take of the case it is not necessary for me to express any opinion upon it. I think it right, however, to say that there is an entire absence of proof—and, indeed, I think there has been very little even of allegation—that there was anything in the slightest degree approaching to misrepresentation on the part of the executors, the Messrs. Reeves. All that they did was, when the plaintiffs (or the next-of-kin) came to them, and asked them as executors about the contents of the will, they informed them (as was the fact) that they took nothing under it, and that their names were not mentioned in it. In that, in my opinion, they were right: but even supposing that I am wrong in that opinion, it was a matter which they bonâ fide believed; it was a matter as to which they had been advised by eminent counsel, and I concur in his opinion. This is not an action which, in my opinion, is entitled to be regarded with favour by the Court; I believe there are no legal grounds for it, and I dismiss it with costs.

COUNTY COURT.

MARKET RIGHTS.

At the Bromyard County Court, on Friday, December 19, his Honour Judge Sir Richard Harington, Bart., sitting for his Honour Judge Sir Rupert Kettle, gave judgment in the case of Biddle v. Herbert. His Honour said: This was an action brought to recover 3*s*. 6*d*. for market tolls in respect of marketable commodities alleged to have been sold by the defendant on market day within the precincts of the plaintiff's market, or, in the alternative, for 1*l*. damages for the wrongful disturbance of that market. Although the amount claimed is very trifling, yet the questions involved are of considerable importance to the town of Bromyard, inasmuch as by consent the Court was empowered to entertain the question of title to the tolls in dispute, and thus to determine not only the limits of the market in point of area, but also the question whether the present Thursday's market is a lawful market at all. The action came on for trial at the usual bi-monthly Court holden here in October last, on which occasion I expressed the opinion I had then formed as to the limits of the area of the market, but adjourned the case until December 1 for the purpose of hearing further arguments upon the questions of law raised. Upon the adjourned hearing further evidence was called by consent, and some admissions were made. It will, therefore, I think, be convenient that I should now state the conclusions of fact at which I arrive on the whole of the evidence and admissions given and made on both occasions. I find, then, that the Bishops of Hereford, as lords of the manor of Bromyard, have been accustomed, under the authority of a charter from the Crown or other good title now lost, to hold markets for the sale (inter alia) of plants (but not of poultry, eggs, or live stock) on every Monday in the year in the open spaces and buildings known as the Market Square and Market Hall. They were also accustomed under an equally good title to hold at other times, and in at least four instances in the year, on Thursdays, hiring fairs (locally called 'mops'), and fairs for the sale of live stock. These fairs, as distinguished from the ordinary weekly market, were not limited to any particular area, but extended over the whole town. Contemporaneously with the custom of holding the weekly market, in the market square and hall, there arose a practice of selling on market days, in the streets adjoining the market square, poultry and eggs, for the sale of which I find on the evidence that no toll was ever successfully demanded or taken by the lord of the market, nor were those sales ever treated as a disturbance of the market rights. The title of the Bishop of Hereford to hold the markets and fairs above mentioned has by various valid assurances which, as they are not in dispute, it is unnecessary to specify in detail, vested in certain gentlemen who have let their rights to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has therefore the same right to take tolls as the Bishop of Hereford would have had if the title had still remained in him. In the summer of 1878, the persons then having the management of the market, without any fresh charter, or any other lawful authority, altered the weekly day of holding it from Monday to Thursday, on which day of the week it has since been regularly holden. On the day mentioned in the particulars, which was a Thursday (but not a fair or mop day), the defendant offered for sale plants, which are marketable commodities on which a toll was customarily taken when sold in the ordinary weekly market in the market square. This offering for sale took place in the public street, and not in any private house or shop of the defendant, and within a few hundred feet of the market square. The defendant refused to pay any toll in respect of such offering for sale, and offered his goods for sale where he did for the purpose, as I find, of evading the payment of toll. On the part of the plaintiff it was contended, first, that the origin of the weekly market being lost in antiquity, it must be presumed that the grantee had the right to hold it on any day in the week and in whatever part of his manor he chose, or, at all events, that he would be entitled to hold an overflow market anywhere in the neighbourhood of the market square; secondly, that even assuming that the original grant was of a Monday market only, yet that a sale in the street of marketable commodities on any other day in the week was a disturbance of that market, even though, in fact, the Monday market was not held. For the defendant it was contended, first, that the lost grant being presumed from the custom only, the only presumption was of a grant limited to Mondays; secondly, that if the Thursday's market was lawful it was confined to the market square and hall, and that the exposure for sale by the defendant of goods outside that market was neither a fraud on the market nor an act rendering the defendant liable to toll. The questions whether the area of the market extended to the place where the defendant exposed his goods for sale, and whether, if not, that exposure was a fraud on the market, are, in the view which I take of the other question raised, of minor importance. Still, I think it right to state my reasons for the conclusions at which I arrive upon each of them. At the end of the hearing in October last I expressed the opinion that the weekly market, as distinguished from the mops and fairs, must be taken to be limited to the market square and hall. The evidence given on December 1 confirmed me in this opinion. I agree with the proposition of Mr. Cave that a general grant of a market to the lord of a manor authorises him, as between the Crown and himself, to exercise the franchise of holding the market in any part of the manor he chooses to use for the purpose (see Curwen v. Salkeld, 3 East, 538), and to change that place at will (Mayor of Dorchester v. Ensor, 39 Law J. Rep. Exch. 11; L. R. 4 Exch. 335). But such a grant would not confer any right to trespass on the land or infringe the right over land of other subjects of the Crown. The grantee therefore would, as against those other subjects, have the right to hold the market only in land in his own actual possession, or in which the persons entitled to the possession have by grant or sufferance consented that it should be holden (see Moseley v. Walker, 5 Law J. Rep. K. B. 358; 7 B. & C. 52; Lockwood v. Wood, 15 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 36; 6 Q. B. 31; and the judgment of the Master of the Rolls in The Attorney-General v. Horner, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 227; L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 254), and per Lord Blackburn in the same case in the House of Lords (55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 193; L. R. 11 App. Cas. 66). In this case I am of opinion that the proper inference to draw is that the market square and hall were at the time of the presumed charter either demesne land of the manor in the actual possession of the lord; or, if waste, that the consent of the homage commoners or any other persons whose consent was necessary, was lawfully obtained to the holding of the market there. But there is no evidence before me that the soil of the streets is vested in the lord of the manor, and the presumption is that it is vested usque ad medium filum in the adjoining owners, nor is there any evidence of a consent by those owners to the holding by those under whom the plaintiff claims of a market in those streets. On the contrary, the evidence of the oldest witness called, James Davies, tends strongly to confirm the presumption of ownership and the absence of consent, for he says that the sellers of poultry refused successfully to pay toll to him because they stood in the street and not in the market, and that he believed that they had leave from the shopkeepers to stand in front of their shops, and refused toll on that ground. But whether the market extended beyond the limits of the market hall and square or not, I am of opinion that the offering for sale by the defendant of marketable commodities close to and outside the market on market days, with intent, as I think the defendants intended here, to avoid payment of the market toll, would be, if the plaintiffs are entitled to the franchise they claim, a fraud on the market. (See per Lord Mansfield, C.J., in Blakey v. Dinsdale, Cowp. at p. 664; and Prince v. Lewis, 5 B. & C. 363.) It was indeed urged by Mr. Tree that there was no evidence here that there was room in the market, but, on the other hand, there was none (as in Prince v. Lewis) that any part of the market square was devoted to purposes other than those of the market. I think, therefore, that the burden of proof that there was no room was on the defendant in this case. (See the judgment of Mr. Justice Littledale in Prince v. Lewis, at p. 373.) And no such proof was given by him. I now come, however, to the much more serious question whether those under whom the plaintiff claims have any franchise entitling them to hold this market on Thursday at all. And I am of opinion that they have not. No case has been cited to me to support Mr. Cave's proposition that the fact that the grant is lost in antiquity leads to the presumption that it was a grant to hold a market on any day in the week the grantee might choose. On the contrary, I agree with Mr. Tree that the usage leads to presumption, and that the only inference I can draw from the evidence before me is that there was some legal origin to the Monday market. That the day is material is shown conclusively by the authority of Com. Dig., Market, tit. Forfeiture (citing 2 Roll. Abr. 124) and Viner's Abr. tit. Market. For if a grantee held his market on a day other than the day granted, without holding on the day granted, it is a forfeiture of his franchise. It follows of necessity that he can acquire no right of monopoly against the public by holding his market on a usurped day. It might probably be successfully contended that the original franchise in this case of the Monday market exists . . . notwithstanding the forfeiture until the Crown interferes; but to hold that the plaintiff can, by usurping a franchise which he has not, acquire any right against the public, would be inconsistent with the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Attorney-General v. Horner (sup.). In that case the market owner succeeded in proving a valid grant of a market for Thursdays and Saturdays. He gave evidence also of a long-continued usage to hold the market on other days as well. In that case the Court, for reasons which it is unnecessary to refer to in detail here, thought that this evidence was not sufficient to lead to a presumption of the grant of a franchise for those other days. The case was, therefore, in that respect very similar to this, where the recency of the change and the admissions of the plaintiff forbid any such presumption. At the end of his judgment Lord Justice Lindley says: 'I come to the conclusion that we must hold this franchise restricted as far as the days are concerned to Thursdays and Saturdays, but of course that will not interfere with the owner of this market place from selling on other days. He has a right to sell, but he will not have his monopoly. His market franchise must be confined to Thursdays and Saturdays.' The judgment was afterwards affirmed generally in the House of Lords (55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 193; L. R. 11 App. Cas. 66), where, although the learned Lords guarded themselves from doing more than simply affirming the judgment on other points, they said nothing which in any way questions the opinion of the Lord Justice above quoted. In this case the essence of the plaintiff's claim is reliance on his monopoly. His monopoly is, in my opinion, limited to Monday, and he cannot avail himself of it on Thursday. Mr. Cave's argument that an exposure for sale of marketable goods on Thursday prejudiced the dormant right of the plaintiff to hold a market on Monday is too subtle for my comprehension. The authority relied on in support of it was that of The Mayor of Dorchester v. Ensor, 39 Law J. Rep. Ex. 11; L. R. 4 Ex. 335, in which it was held, following Yard v. Ford, 2 Wms. Saund. 174, that the holding of a rival market on a different day from that on which plaintiff's market is held may be evidence to go to the jury of a disturbance. But in this case the gist of the action is not for setting up a rival market, but for unfairly taking advantage of the market, which the plaintiffs do in fact, though, as I think, without a franchise, hold on Thursday by exposing goods for sale in its vicinity, with the object of evading toll. How this act in relation to a market which ought not to be but is holden on Thursdays can be a fraud on a market which may be but is not holden on Monday it surpasses my intellectual powers to conceive. There must therefore be judgment for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff had no right to any franchise conferring a monopoly on the day on which the act complained of occurred, and with such costs as are by the scale applicable to the case.—In reply to an application by Mr. Cave, his Honour said: Leave to appeal does not appear to be necessary, but if it is I give it.—The Registrar: The action is brought to recover a sum under 2*l.*, and the question of right of market was tried by consent of parties under section 61 of the Act of 1888, and not under section 64.—Mr. Tree: That being so, there will be no costs payable unless otherwise ordered. I ask for a special order for costs under section 119 of the Act, which was intended to apply to a case of this kind, as I submit.—His Honour: I award costs to the defendant to include all the four hearings on the higher scale A, except as to those of December 1 and to-day, in regard to which I allow to the solicitor for attendance the sum of 1*l.* 1*s.* and 6*s.* 8*d.* respectively.—Order accordingly. —Cave (Bromyard) for the plaintiff; Tree (Worcester) for the defendant.

MAYOR'S COURT.

LIBEL—PUBLICATION OF LIST OF JUDGMENTS.

On July 7, in the Lord Mayor's Court, the case of Foster v. The Trade Auxiliary Company (Lim.) came on for trial before the Recorder (Sir T. Chambers, Q.C.) and a special jury. The plaintiff, Mr. Henry Foster, a builder, residing at Willesden, sued the defendants, who carry on business as Stubbs' Mercantile Agency, and who are the proprietors and publishers of Stubbs' Weekly Gazette, to recover damages for an alleged libel. The facts of the case were peculiar, and were at the same time of importance commercially. It appeared that the plaintiff had been carrying on business for some years past at Willesden, and had been fairly successful. In August last he was sued for a sum of 14*l.*, the balance of an account for bricks. This sum he paid to the solicitor of his creditor, but he omitted to pay the costs. Judgment was therefore entered against him for the full amount of debt and costs, and an execution was put in for the costs. These he paid to the bailiff. A curious mistake was, however, made by the officials at Westminster County Court, where the action had been brought against him, for two judgments had been entered against him on one plaint note. Both were for the same amount, one being entered against 'W. Foster, builder, Portland House, Willesden,' and the other against 'H. Foster, builder, Chapland Road, Willesden.'

In the ordinary course of things these two judgments were registered at the official office for registering County Court judgments at Whitehall, and the defendants included them in the list of judgments which they publish in Stubbs' Weekly Gazette. This was the libel complained of; and it was alleged by the plaintiff that it had had the effect of stopping his credit, and thus ruining his business. For the defence it was argued that the defendants were justified in copying a list of judgments from an official document; that the mistake complained of was not theirs; and that their list was what it purported to be—namely, a copy of the registry of judgments. Further, it was said that there was a qualifying notice at the head of the list, stating that the judgments were not necessarily unsatisfied and might have been the result of bonâ fide disputed actions; and, moreover, there was no evidence of malice against the defendants.—The jury found for the defendants.—Mr. A. Cock, Q.C., Mr. Lewis Glyn, and Mr. Mote were counsel for the plaintiff; Mr. Asquith, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. R. M'Kenna for the defendants.

THE LATE MR. GLASSE, Q.C.

THE announcement of the death of Mr. Glasse, Q.C., must have caused surprise to many people—not that he was dead, but that he had only just died. When in practice he was seen and heard daily, but on retiring from professional work he went right away, first to Norfolk and then to Dorsetshire, where he died at a ripe old age If he ever returned to Lincoln's Inn it must have been at very rare intervals. An extremely active man during the greater part of his professional career, he probably disliked the idea of being a mere onlooker at the game which he had so often played successfully, and we should not be astonished if in his retirement he took up some other occupation to which he devoted the surplus of his vigour. 'Old Glasse,' as the name almost implies, was in a way perhaps the most popular man in the Lincoln's Inn of his time—even his little vices endeared him to the profession. Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court was amusing, and also instructive, for the veteran spoke by far the best English on the Chancery bench; and everybody had a look at Vice-Chancellor Stuart, or at any rate at his legs; but no Court in modern times has ever 'drawn' like Malins' Court. The principal attraction there was Glasse, but probably his idiosyncrasies would not have been so marked, and his talents would not have been so much brought into play, if he had had a different judge on whom, or rather before whom, to practise. People went to Malins' Court to see some fun, and they seldom came away disappointed. But Vice-Chancellor Malins did a great deal of good work, with the assistance, and sometimes, perhaps, in spite of the opposition, of Mr. Glasse. If a suitor had anything like natural justice on his side, Sir Richard Malins tried his utmost to find an equity in his favour, and his quasi-parental solicitude sometimes tempted the leader of his Court into expressions which led to a conflict with the bench. In these the Vice-Chancellor generally came off second best, for he had a certain amount of dignity to preserve, whereas Glasse did not apparently care twopence about anybody's dignity—certainly not the judge's. Malins' habit of telling anecdotes, principally about himself, also tended to develop the humorous side of Mr. Glasse's character. The squabbles were of daily and almost hourly occurrence, and the combatants got used to them. If Glasse had left the Court the Vice-Chancellor's health would probably have suffered. After Malins had gone Glasse soon ceased to practise. Probably each was almost necessary to the other. Glasse, however, had qualities which would have made him a leader in any Court. He was a fair lawyer and a bold but scrupulously honest advocate. Though he squabbled with his judge, there was seldom bitterness in their quarrels. He got on well with other judges. He was beloved by the junior bar, and his services were eagerly sought for. Up to the time of his retirement he had shown little sign of physical or mental decay, and there is no painful association in connection with his memory.

THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE writes to the Times as follows:

I think it is of great importance that those who are interested in the production of books in this country should make it quite clear to our American cousins, and to the whole world, that we have no desire for anything like protection, or, indeed, for anything else than the utmost freedom of trade. That is to say, the author should be free to publish where he thinks best, and the publisher should be free to print where he thinks best, without legislative interference save what may be necessary for the protection of rights of property. The Convention of Berne was practically the expression of the adhesion of the whole civilised world, except the United States, to this principle. The American Copyright Bill is, I think, a proof that the Americans themselves are already ashamed of their isolated position in this respect. It is an important step in the right direction; and we may fairly hope and expect that it will be followed to its logical conclusion by the Government of the United States notifying its adhesion to the Convention of Berne.

But in the meantime, as several of your correspondents have pointed out, the partial nature of the change in America is calculated to strike a deadly blow against freedom of trade, not only in the United States, but also, unless we take immediate measures to prevent it, in the United Kingdom. If a British author can secure copyright both in America and in the United Kingdom, by printing and publishing his book in America, whilst only securing a British copyright if he prints and publishes in England or Scotland or Ireland, it is obvious that he will be practically forced by the law, and by the law alone, to employ American printers and American publishers, even if English or Irish printers, or Scottish publishers, should be far cheaper, far better, or far more suited to his wants.

I propose, as soon as Parliament meets again, to introduce a bill to enact that British copyright shall be secured to those authors whose works are printed in the United Kingdom, in any of our colonies or dependencies, or in any country that has given in its adhesion to the Convention of Berne. Such a law would restore freedom of trade. Its immediate result would be that English works likely to attain a very large circulation would be printed both here and in America; while the British authors of less remunerative works would be free to print and publish here if they liked. I have little doubt that its ultimate result, and that before very long, would be that America would subscribe to the Convention of Berne, and thus secure free trade in books throughout the world.

I should be very glad to receive any communications from those who are interested in this question, addressed 'Sir Roper Lethbridge, M.P., care of the Hansard Publishing Union, 12 Catherine Street, Strand.' I would also venture to suggest that they should each communicate with his or her own member and lay the facts before him, so as to aid the passage of my bill through the House.

Mr. T. H. Farrer writes:—

Sir Roper Lethbridge invites communications on his proposed bill.

Will he, in accordance with the admirable principles enunciated in his letter, insert in his bill a provision that every book copyrighted by any author under the provisions of the Berne Convention and published—i.e. manufactured—in any of the countries parties to that convention shall have free access to the markets of the United Kingdom, in whichever of the countries in question it may have been published (or manufactured)?

And if he will not do so, will he tell us why?

THE BANKRUPTCY ACTS 1883 AND 1890.

Board of Trade, Whitehall Gardens:
Jan. 1, 1891.

NOTICE is hereby given, that Mr. Charles John Stewart, one of the official receivers of the Bankruptcy District of the High Court of Justice, having been appointed to be the official receiver attached to the said Court for the purposes of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, the Board of Trade have, by an order dated December 31, 1890, appointed Mr. Harold de Vaux Brougham to be official receiver of debtors' estates for the said Bankruptcy District of the High Court, and have further ordered:—

(a) As regards the bankruptcy proceedings instituted under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which at the said date are pending in the High Court, and in which at the said date the said Charles John Stewart was or is constituted official or interim receiver, that the said Harold de Vaux Brougham shall, in respect of the bankruptcy proceedings in which the initial of the first surname of the debtor or debtors is any of the letters Di to Ka, be the official receiver of the estates of the debtors in such proceedings, and discharge the duties of official receiver in relation to such estates.

(b) As regards all bankruptcy proceedings which from and after December 31, 1890, shall be instituted in or be transferred to the High Court under the Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 and 1890, that the said Harold de Vaux Brougham shall, in respect of the said bankruptcy proceedings in which the initial of the first surname of the debtor or debtors is any of the letters Di to Ka, be the official receiver, who shall be constituted official receiver of the estates of the debtors in such proceedings.

Notice is hereby given, that the Board of Trade have appointed Mr. Arthur Stewart Maples to be official receiver in bankruptcy for the districts of the County Courts holden at Kingston-upon-Hull and at Great Grimsby, by transfer from the district of the County Court, holden at Newcastle-on-Tyne, as from January 1, 1891, and that they have further appointed Mr. Frank Lowson Clark, as from the same date, to be official receiver in bankruptcy for the district of the County Court holden at Newcastle-on-Tyne, rendered vacant by the said transfer of Mr. Arthur Stewart Maples.

THE COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

(Statements by Liquidators in pending Liquidations to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies.)

GENERAL ORDER BY THE BOARD OF TRADE, UNDER RULE 175 OF THE COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) RULES, 1890.

IT is hereby ordered by the Board of Trade as follows in regard to the matters referred to in section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and rules 126 and 127 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1890.

Transmission of Accounts.

The statement of account required by subsection 1 of section 15 of the Act and by rule 127 to be transmitted in duplicate to the registrar of Joint-Stock Companies shall be in the Form No. 1, with such variations as circumstances may require, and shall be on sheets 13 inches by 16 inches, and shall be verified by an affidavit in the Form No. 2.

Receipts and Payments.

The statement shall contain a detailed statement of all the liquidator's receipts and payments on account of the company, but bank transactions as between the liquidator and the bank, and payments or receipts on account of investments made by or on behalf of the liquidator, should be inserted in the columns provided for that purpose, and not in the columns for 'other receipts and payments.' Each receipt and payment must be entered in the account in such a manner as sufficiently to explain its nature. The receipts and payments should severally be added up at the foot of each sheet, and the totals carried forward to the next sheet, without any intermediate balance, so that the gross totals shall represent the total amounts received and paid by the liquidator respectively.

Trading Account.

When the liquidator carries on a business, a trading account must be forwarded as a distinct account, and the totals of receipts and payments on the trading account must alone be set out in the statement. The trading account shall be in the Form No. 3, shall be on sheets 13 inches by 16 inches, and shall be sent in duplicate.

Petty Expenses.

Petty expenses must be entered in the statement or trading account in sufficient detail to show that no estimated charges are made.

Realisations.

Where property has been realised, the gross proceeds of sale must be entered under receipts in the statement, and the necessary disbursements and charges incidental to sales must be entered as payments.

Dividends, &c.

Where dividends or instalments of composition are paid to creditors or a return of surplus assets is made to contributories, the total amount of each dividend or instalment of composition or payment to a contributory must be entered in the liquidator's statement as one sum, and the liquidator must forward with his statement separate accounts in duplicate, in the Forms Nos. 4 and 5, showing the amount of the claim and the amount of dividend or composition payable to each creditor or contributory, distinguishing in such list the dividends or instalments of composition paid and those remaining unclaimed. Such list shall be on sheets 13 inches by 8 inches.

Affidavit of no Receipts or Payments.

Where a liquidator has not during the period comprised in the account received or paid any money on account of the company, he shall, at the period when he is required to transmit his statement to the registrar of joint-stock companies, forward to the registrar an affidavit of no receipts or payments in the Form No. 2.

M. E. HICKS-BEACH,
President of the Board of Trade.

Dated December 31, 1890.

[A schedule of forms follows the order.]

UNCLAIMED OR UNDISTRIBUTED ASSETS.

Preliminary Notice.

Whereas it is provided by section 15 of the said Act that any liquidator of a company (whether wound up by the Court, or under the supervision of the Court, or voluntarily) who has in his hands, or under his control, any money representing unclaimed or undistributed assets of a company which have remained unclaimed or undistri-buted for six months after the date of their receipt shall forthwith pay the same to the companies' liquidation account at the Bank of England.

And whereas it is further provided that, for the purpose of ascertaining and getting in any money payable into the Bank of England in pursuance of that section, the like powers may be exercised, and by the like authority as are exercisable under section 162 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the purpose of ascertaining and getting in the sums, funds, and dividends referred to in that section.

And whereas it is provided by the said section 162 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, that the Board of Trade may at any time order any trustee or other person empowered to collect, receive, or distribute any funds or dividends under any or either of the Acts of Parliament specified in the fourth schedule to that Act to submit to them an account verified by affidavit of the sums received and paid, and may direct and enforce an audit of the account.

And whereas the Board of Trade have opened an account at the Bank of England above referred to as 'the companies' liquidation account.'

Notice is hereby given to any and every liquidator of a company forthwith to pay to the said account the money in their hands or under their control, obtaining in the first instance a receivable order from the Board of Trade, and that upon such payment the Board of Trade will furnish to such liquidators a certificate of receipt of the money so paid, which shall be an effectual discharge in respect thereof.

Dated this 31st day of December, 1890.

M. E. HICKS-BEACH,
President of the Board of Trade.

ARE STRIKES ILLEGAL?

MR. W. M. THOMPSON writes to the Daily Chronicle as follows:—

Having appeared for the appellants in the Plymouth strike case, I do not intend to discuss the decision of the learned recorder, Mr. Bompas, Q.C., but only to point out its serious effect in connection with trade unionism. If it be the law, then, broadly speaking, nine-tenths of the strikes which take place are absolutely illegal, and the protection afforded by the Trade Union Acts to combinations of workmen are illusory.

Let me state one or two of the grounds upon which the recorder based his judgment:—

1. 'That Mr. Treleaven was afraid of injury to his trade through the course which the defendants stated the unions would pursue, and that he had reasonable grounds for that fear which would have influenced any man of ordinary sound views.'

4. 'That the union men, in leaving their employment at the request of the defendants, were, as the defendants knew, breaking their contracts.'

6. 'That the defendants had no ill-will against Mr. Treleaven personally, but acted with the object of obliging all the labourers to join the union as a means of getting employment and of obtaining for the members a monopoly of the labour of the port.'

And again: 'A strike for the purpose of compelling employers not to employ other persons, or to alter the terms of the employment of such other persons, is illegal, and renders all persons engaged in it liable to proceedings under this section.'

There have been many conflicting decisions as to the meaning of 'intimidation.' This case offers an exceptional opportunity to the trade unions of the country to obtain an authoritative declaration of the law on the subject by the High Court.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1890.

The following letter has been addressed to the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy:—

16 King Street, Cheapside, London: Jan. 2, 1891.

Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1867—re Ellen Layton.

Dear Sir,—Your circular of the 31st ult. has been brought to us by the trustee under this deed, and we have also during the last two days been consulted by other trustees under deeds of arrangement relative to the same circular which has been received by them. We have advised our clients that your circular is altogether misconceived, and that section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, has no application whatever to deeds of arrangement executed prior to the 1st inst., when that Act came into operation. We had carefully considered the statute and the rules before advising our clients, but in order to be more certain upon it we have deemed it expedient to take counsel's opinion on the subject, and we are glad to find that he confirms us entirely in the opinion we have formed. Our clients, acting upon our advice, do not propose to comply with the request contained in your circular, unless it is established by some decision of the High Court that they are bound so to do, and we therefore select this particular case to which to call your attention; and we accordingly invite you to take the earliest opportunity to institute such proceedings as you may deem necessary to obtain a decision on the point, and we will accept service of any process that you consider necessary to issue (whether it requires personal service or not), and we will waive any question of personal service.

Our clients object to comply with your request for the following (amongst other reasons):

1. That it involves labour in respect of which they can obtain no compensation.

2. Where cases are closed there can be no provision for payment of the fees you require, and therefore they ought not to be called upon to pay them.

3. In many cases it would be impossible to comply with the request, as the papers and accounts have changed hands, and in some cases been lost.

4. No duty was cast by law at the time of acceptance of the trust to preserve the necessary materials for the account. To have a duty cast by some future legislation upon a past acceptance of office is a condition of things highly detrimental to the interests of commerce, and calculated to prevent the acceptance of office in such unsettled conditions.

As to the objection No. 2, we are not unobservant of the proviso contained in the extract from scale of fees as set out on page 3 of your circular, but we would respectfully ask you, with regard to these, by virtue of what authority such a proviso has been made, and whether it is upon the language of this proviso you seek to base your present claim. If so, it appears to us to be clear that the rule is entirely ultra vires.

We should like, with all due respect to you, to point out that your circular is calculated to mislead and to give a false impression to the recipients as to the effect of the statute and rules, as though they provided that trustees of deeds executed and registered prior to 1891 were liable to account, which we think they are not. Take, for example, your reference to rules 7 to 16. A view wholly different from yours is at once obvious. Rule 3 clearly shows that the rules are intended to apply to returns made by the registrar every week, commencing January 8, 1891, which would be of registrations during and after the present year; and rule 6 with Form No. 1 are obviously intended for 1891 and subsequent years only, and, if you will look at the whole of the forms, the same observation will apply. Again, rule 16 clearly shows that the trustees' duties will be annual ones, so that what you call attention to in paragraph 2 of your circular as to Forms 6 and 3 does not apply in any sense to transactions prior to 1891.

To refer again to your instructions as to 'closed matters,' you say that Form No. 6 should be used as an affidavit. That form applies to a succession of accounts rendered under the Act of 1890. How could 'yearly accounts' have been rendered before, and, if not, how can Form No. 6 apply as you seek to instruct its application?

We have thus expressed ourselves somewhat fully to you in order that there may be no misunderstanding, and that a matter of so much importance may be brought to an issue without delay, and we shall be glad to hear from you at once what course you propose to pursue.

Yours faithfully,
ROOKS & Co.

John Smith, Esq., Inspector-General in Bankruptcy,
Board of Trade, Whitehall Yard, S.W.

Messrs. Rooks & Co. subsequently wrote to the Times as follows:—

Referring to the letter addressed by us to the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, and published in your issue of the 3rd inst., we now beg to enclose you copy of the reply received by us to-day.

We have received a large number of communications from solicitors and accountants throughout the country, and are pleased to learn that the views expressed in our letter of the 2nd have been confirmed in every case.

Under the circumstances, we hope that no trustee under any deed of arrangement executed prior to the present year will make any return under section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, unless and until a ruling of the High Court has been obtained compelling him to do so.

'Board of Trade: January 10.

'Gentlemen,—I am directed by the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst., and, in reply, I am to state that the Inspector-General notes your intimation that you will accept service of any process which the Board of Trade may be advised to issue when the time has expired for transmission of accounts pursuant to section 25 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, and the rules thereunder. The Inspector-General also takes note of the grounds upon which you are prepared to challenge a legal decision on behalf of your client.

'I am, Gentlemen, your obedient Servant,
'F. WREFORD.

'Messrs. Rooks & Co., 16 King Street,
'Cheapside, E.C.'

THE LORD CHANCELLOR AND THE APPOINTMENT OF MAGISTRATES.

A DISCUSSION arose on Tuesday, January 6, in the Colchester town council, when the formal announcement was made that his Honour, Judge Abdy, with six local gentlemen, had been added to the commission of the peace for the borough.

Alderman James Wicks, who was the Gladstonian candidate for the Harwich Division at the last general election, elicited from the town clerk that no reply had been received to a letter forwarded at the instance of the council, requesting that the Lord Chancellor would not depart from the precedent of submitting to that body the names of gentlemen whom it was proposed to appoint borough magistrates. Alderman Wicks thereupon declared that an affront, to use the mildest possible word, had been offered by the Lord Chancellor to the mayor, corporation, and inhabitants of a borough that had just celebrated the seven hundredth anniversary of the confirmation of its municipal rights. The Lord Chancellor, who received 20,000*l.* a year, and who was probably the highest-priced functionary in the kingdom, had seen fit to override their municipal institution, and he, for one, protested against such unwarrantable interference with their rights. It was conduct of this sort that cost Charles I. his head. He should propose a resolution which he did not think would debar him (Alderman Wicks) from bringing the matter before Parliament. He moved: 'That the council, having received no reply to their communication of a resolution unanimously passed at their last meeting, on December 18, would now address a representation to the Home Secretary upon the affront thus passed upon the constitutional municipal authority of the borough.'

Councillor Butcher (G. L.) seconded this resolution.

Councillor Hazell (C.) sympathised to some extent with the resolution, but objected to the word 'affront.'

Councillor Sanders, one of the newly-appointed magistrates, said he would have felt still more honoured if his name had in the first instance been submitted to the town council. He would vote for the resolution providing its wording could be modified.

Alderman Wicks said he would substitute 'want of courtesy' for 'affront.'

Alderman Elwes questioned whether the Home Secretary was competent to censure the Lord Chancellor.

Councillor Paxman said it would be absurd to report the Lord Chancellor to the Home Secretary. They might as well report him to one of the foremen of his ironworks. If they wanted a change they must try to alter the law.

Eventually it was decided to modify the resolution, and to forward it to the clerk to the Crown in the form of a remonstrance at 'the want of courtesy passed upon the constitutional and municipal authority of the borough.'

This decision was arrived at nem. con.

BAR COMMITTEE.

REPORT of the Bar Committee on the rules as to retainers published by the Incorporated Law Society, November 15, 1890, and purporting to be approved by the Attorney-General.

The communication from the Incorporated Law Society which the bar committee has considered is entitled 'Rules of Practice Relating to Retainers of Counsel,' and is stated to have been adopted by the council of the Society, June 13, 1890, and approved by the Attorney-General, June 17, 1890. The bar committee must, in the first place, enter their decided protest against the assumption that it is in the power of the council of the Society to frame rules of practice as to retainers of counsel which will bind the bar, even though approved by H.M. Attorney-General. While fully recognising the authority of the Attorney-General to determine questions arising on disputed retainers, the bar committee observe that neither the Society nor the Attorney-General can legislate on the subject, and the approval of the Attorney-General must be taken to express his personal and individual opinion, which, though entitled to the highest consideration, has no official character and no representative authority, and will not bind any future holder of his office.

It has been brought to the attention of the bar committee that the Law Society's rules have been included in the Supplement to the 'Annual Practice' of Messrs. Snow, Burney & Stringer, 1890-91. Of course they receive no additional authority from being printed in that very useful publication, and they will not be binding on members of the bar until they have been generally accepted and recognised.

The bar committee proceed to consider how far the rules in question express the present practice, and to what extent the alterations proposed by the rules are in their opinion expedient.

Rule 1 contains a material alteration from the present practice. It states that 'a general retainer applies, unless otherwise expressed, to all Courts or tribunals, including the House of Lords and the Privy Council.' It is not quite clear what is meant by tribunals as distinguished from Courts, but the rule quoted, even if confined to Courts, is not an accurate statement of the present practice. The bar committee believe that, before the Judicature Act, a general retainer applied only to the Court or Courts in which a counsel usually practised—e.g. a general retainer to a common law counsel secured his services in the three common law Courts only, and it was usual, if it was desired to retain the counsel's services in the Court of Chancery as well as in the common law Courts, to give two general retainers. Indeed, in the Court of Chancery, where leading counsel attached themselves to a particular branch of the Court, a general retainer was considered to apply only to the particular branch to which the counsel was attached. Since the Judicature Act a practice seems to have grown up of regarding a general retainer as applicable to all the divisions of the High Court and to the Court of Appeal. The bar committee understand that this practice has not been universally recognised, but they are not disposed to suggest any dissent from or disapproval of it. The bar committee, however, believe that neither before nor since the Judicature Act has an ordinary general retainer been understood to extend to the House of Lords or the Privy Council. It has, the bar committee believe, been the invariable practice to give a separate general retainer for the House of Lords, and also for the Privy Council. It may also be remarked that whereas the fee on an ordinary general retainer is five guineas only, the customary fee on a general retainer for the House of Lords or for the Privy Council is ten guineas.

The bar committee recommend the recognition of the practice of treating an ordinary general retainer, unless expressly limited, as applicable to all divisions of the High Court and the Court of Appeal, or, in other words, to the Supreme Court. But the question whether the present practice should be altered in the manner suggested in the proposed rules, namely, by extending the application of a general retainer to the House of Lords and Privy Council, has been considered by the bar committee with some anxiety. The interests of the bar in this question are not, in their opinion, separable from those of their clients. They are not disposed to object to the proposed alteration on the mere ground of the difference in the fee at present payable on retainers in the House of Lords and Privy Council. They are of opinion that it ought not to be possible for any party on an appeal, by giving a general retainer, or otherwise, to secure the services of the counsel who has appeared for the opposite party in the Court below, and received the confidence of his client, at any rate, if the original client desires to have his services on the appeal. On the other hand, it must be remembered that it is not altogether for the interests of the client to widen the extent of a general retainer, as it would compel the client to give a brief on every occasion to the counsel retained on the penalty of losing the retainer. And this objection is not altogether removed by a suggestion which has been made, that the client can always renew his general retainer, because the client may in that case lose his priority.

On the whole, the bar committee consider that no alteration should be made in the present practice as to the extension of a general retainer to the House of Lords and the Privy Council, but that it should be a recognised rule:

1. That a party shall not, on the ground of priority of a general retainer in the House of Lords, obtain the services on appeal of a counsel who has appeared for his opponent in the Court below, in case the original client desires to have the services of the counsel.

2. That no counsel who has appeared for either party in the Court below shall accept a general retainer, or special retainer, or brief in the House of Lords for the opposite party, without giving the original client due notice.

The proviso to rule 5 raises a question which has been much controverted. The rule proposed to be laid down is undoubtedly vague, and is open to the objection that it practically leaves to the solicitor instructing counsel to define the extent of the retainer, and to say whether he shall be bound by it or not. In spite of these and other objections which have been stated, the bar committee cannot find that any practical inconvenience has arisen when the usage has been adopted, and they are not prepared to suggest any amendment to this or the similar rule 9. With regard to the latter rule, it appears to assume, contrary to the fact, that retainers are given to leading counsel only.

It does not appear whether in rule 8 'the whole progress of the action' is intended to include proceedings in the Court of Appeal. Your sub-committee think that it should.

In like manner it does not appear whether rule 14 is intended to apply to appeals to the Court of Appeal as well as those to the House of Lords. As already stated, the bar committee think that proceedings in the Court of Appeal should be considered as covered by the special retainer in the action, but not an appeal to the House of Lords, subject to the conditions expressed in their previous observations.

Rule 15 is also, in the opinion of the bar committee, new. The bar committee entirely accept the principle intended to be expressed by it, which has sometimes been described as 'retainer by confidence,' and which they believe has been recognised and acted on by the present and previous holders of the office of Attorney-General in decisions given by them. But they think that the rule is expressed in too wide terms, and that in its present form it might operate unfairly on counsel particularly on circuit, and in case of counsel in large business it would impose on counsel and on their clerks a duty which in many cases they ought not to be required and could not safely undertake to discharge. With regard to junior counsel who have been instructed to settle pleadings or advise on evidence and other questions in the initial stages of the action, they recommend the adoption of the rule, but with this addition—that as the client gets the benefit of a special retainer the counsel should have the same benefit and be entitled to a brief on the trial, or (in other words) be placed in the same position as if he had received a special retainer. But with regard to advice given generally different considerations occur. That a counsel who has received the confidence of his client should not place the knowledge thus acquired at the service of his client's opponent is of course dictated by the plainest principles of honour and good faith. And the bar committee believe that the sense of fairness of counsel and solicitors and the power of referring to the Attorney-General in any doubtful case are sufficient to prevent any such scandal arising. But many cases in which counsel are required to advise involve no confidence whatever—such as questions of construction of wills and other documents, or mere questions of law on admitted or assumed facts. Counsel in large practice are frequently called on to advise on a case submitted to them long before an action is commenced, or an appeal to the House of Lords or Privy Council is presented, and in some cases counsel may even, without any impropriety, have advised both sides. The clerk of such a counsel, when offered a retainer or brief (say) on an appeal to the House of Lords or Privy Council, searches his retainer-book, and finds nothing which prevents his accepting it. He does not know, and cannot discover from his books, that counsel has at some former time advised on the case, because the case submitted may have been under a different name from the parties to the appeal, and the entry in the fee-book will not show the subject-matter of the case; and, indeed, it is at least doubtful how far the duty of making such a search ought to be imposed on the clerk. It is only when counsel reads his brief on the eve of the hearing that he may be reminded that at some former time he advised somebody on the case. If in such a case the client who has taken the advice desires to have the services of the counsel in event of litigation or an appeal, it is not too much to ask that he should protect himself by giving a retainer. The bar committee feel the difficulty of putting into the form of a rule what they believe to be the well understood, though unwritten practice, that a counsel is not compellable, and ought not to accept, a brief from one party which will involve a real breach of confidence towards another party. They, however, consider:

1. That counsel cannot be required, on the ground of priority of general retainer or otherwise, to accept a special retainer or brief in any case in which they have previously advised the other party on the case.

2. That counsel ought not to accept a retainer or brief in any case in which the acceptance of the brief will involve a breach of confidence reposed in them by the opposite party in reference to the case.

It will be observed that in the latter case the proposed rules go beyond what is required by rule 15.

Rule 17 should read 'in Parliament, House of Lords, and Privy Council.'

December 17, 1890.

RULES OF PRACTICE RELATING TO THE RETAINERS OF COUNSEL.

Adopted by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, June 13, 1890. Approved by the Attorney-General, June 17, 1890.

General Retainers.

I. A general retainer applies, unless otherwise expressed, to all Courts or tribunals, including the House of Lords and the Privy Council; but a separate general retainer must be given to cover business before Parliamentary committees of either House.

II. If the counsel who has accepted a general retainer should be offered a special retainer or brief by the opponent of the party who has given such general retainer, the general retainer entitles the party who has given it to notice before the offered retainer or brief is accepted.

III. Subject to these rules a general retainer lasts for the joint lives of the client and counsel.

IV. In case a special retainer or brief is offered to counsel against the party who has given a general retainer, the counsel, after giving notice to the party from whom he has received a general retainer of the offer of the special retainer or brief, is at liberty to accept the special retainer or brief of the other party, unless a special retainer or brief be given within a reasonable time by the party who gave the general retainer.

V. Where a general retainer has been given, and a brief is not delivered to the retained counsel in any action or other proceeding in which the party giving the general retainer is concerned, and to which it applies, the general retainer is forfeited; provided that the holding of a general retainer does not entitle a Queen's Counsel to the delivery of a brief on occasions when it is usual to instruct a junior counsel only.

VI. Where a general retainer is given for one person, and he sues or is sued with others, and appears separately, the retainer applies in that particular action; but if he appears jointly with others, the retainer does not apply, and remains unaffected.

Special Retainers.

VII. A special retainer cannot be given until after the commencement of an action or proceeding.

VIII. A special retainer gives the client a right to the services of the counsel during the whole progress of the action.

IX. The retained counsel is entitled to a brief on every occasion in which the case is brought before the Court, except on occasions in which it is usual to instruct one junior counsel only.

Circuit Retainers.

X. A special retainer must be given for a particular assize.

XI. If the venue be changed for another place on the same circuit, a fresh retainer is not required.

XII. If the action be not tried at the assize for which the retainer is given, the retainer must be renewed for every subsequent assize until the action is disposed of, unless a brief has been delivered.

XIII. A retainer may be given for a future assize, without a retainer for an intervening assize, unless notice of trial shall have been given for such intervening assize.

Appeals.

XIV. Counsel in the original action cannot accept a retainer or brief on appeal from the opposite party without affording the client in such original action the opportunity of giving such retainer.

Opinions and Pleadings.

XV. Where counsel has advised or drawn pleadings in contemplation or during the progress of an action or suit, a retainer cannot be accepted from, or pleadings drawn for, or advice given to the opponent, without notice to the first client.

Promotion of Counsel.

XVI. The retainer of a counsel does not cease upon his being promoted to a higher rank at the bar.

Amount of Fees.

XVII. The fees given for general retainers are as follows:—

In Parliament	£10 10
In all other cases	5 5

XVIII. The fees given for special retainers are as follows:—

In Parliament	£5 5
In the House of Lords and Privy Counsel	2 2
In all other cases	1 1

EVIDENCE OF PERSON CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

IN Græme v. The Globe Printing Company, which came before the master in chambers at Toronto on November 5, the question of the admissibility of the evidence of a witness under sentence of death was considered. The action was for libel growing out of a newspaper article in which, as the plaintiff charged, it was asserted that he was in some way connected with the murder of one Benwell. The article appeared subsequent to the trial and conviction of one Birchall for the murder of Benwell, and Birchall was at the time in gaol under sentence of death. The plaintiff desired to obtain the evidence of Birchall to establish that he (Birchall) had not said that the plaintiff was in any way connected with the murder of Benwell. The sentence of death was to have been executed on Birchall on November 14, 1890. On November 4, 1890, the plaintiff moved before the master in chambers for an order to examine Birchall as a witness in the case and to use his depositions at the trial, which would not take place in the ordinary course till after his execution. The defendant's counsel contended, inter alia, that Birchall was civilly dead, and was not a competent witness, and therefore that the order should not be made. Regina v. Webb, 11 Cox, 133, was cited. The plaintiff's counsel contended that all disabilities of witnesses are now removed in Ontario by sections 2 and 3 of the Evidence Act, R. S. O., c. 61. The master in chambers held, following Regina v. Webb, that Birchall, being a person under sentence of death, was not a competent witness, and refused to make the order. This order, on appeal, was upheld by Chief Justice Galt, but other grounds were assigned.—Montreal Legal News.

PERSONAL STATISTICS.

THE oldest Cabinet minister is Viscount Cranbrook, G.C.S.I., Lord President of the Council, aged seventy-six; the youngest is the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland, aged forty-two. The oldest member of Her Majesty's Privy Council is the Right Hon. Sir James Bacon, Knt., aged ninety-two; the youngest, the Duke of Portland, aged thirty-three. The oldest duke is the Duke of Cleveland, K.G., aged eighty-seven; the youngest, H.R.H. the Duke of Albany (a minor), aged six. The oldest Marquis is the Marquis of Northampton, K.G., aged seventy-two; the youngest, the Marquis of Camden (a minor), aged eighteen. The oldest earl is the Earl of Albemarle (who is the oldest peer of the realm), aged ninety-one; the youngest is the Earl of Dalhousie (a minor), aged twelve. The oldest Viscount is Lord Arbuthnott, aged eighty-four; the youngest Viscount Torrington (a minor), aged four. The oldest baron is Baron Ebury, aged eighty-nine; the youngest, Lord O'Hagan (a minor), aged twelve. The oldest member of the House of Commons is the Right Hon. Charles Pelham Villiers, M.P. for the Southern Division of the Borough of Wolverhampton, aged eighty-nine; the youngest, Lord Walter Charles Gordon-Lennox, M.P. for the Chichester Division of the County of Sussex, aged twenty-five. The oldest judge in England is the Right Hon. Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, aged seventy-five; the youngest, the Hon. Sir Arthur Charles, D.C.L., of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, aged fifty-two. The oldest judge in Ireland is the Hon. John FitzHenry Townsend, LL.D., of the Court of Admiralty, aged eighty; the youngest, the Right Hon. John George Gibson, of the Queen's Bench Division, aged forty-five. The oldest of the Scotch Lords of Session is the Right Hon. John Inglis (Lord Glencorse), Lord Justice General, aged eighty; the youngest, the Hon. Moir Tod Stormonth Darling (Lord Stormonth Darling), aged forty-six. The oldest prelate of the Church of England is the Right Rev. Richard Durnford, D.D., Lord Bishop of Chichester, aged eighty-eight; the youngest, the Right Rev. Alfred George Edwards, D.D., Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, aged forty-one. The oldest Prelate of the Church of Ireland is the Most Rev. Robert Bent Knox, D.D., Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland, aged eighty-three; the youngest, the Right Rev. Robert Samuel Gregg, D.D., Bishop of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross, aged fifty-six. The oldest Prelate of the Scotch Episcopal Church is the Right Rev. Charles Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of St. Andrews, aged eighty-four; the youngest, the Right Rev. James Robert A. Chinnery-Haldane, Bishop of Argyll and the Isles, aged forty-nine. The oldest Baronet is the Rev. Sir John Warren Hayes, of Newlands, Arborfield, Berks, aged ninety-one; the youngest, Sir Stewkley F. Draycott Shuckburgh (a minor), of Shuckburgh, Warwickshire, aged ten. The oldest Knight is Sir Provo William Parry Wallis, G.C.B., the senior Admiral of the Fleet, of Funtington House, near Chichester, aged ninety-nine; the youngest, Sir Henry Beyer Robertson, of Palé, Merionethshire, aged twenty-eight.

Who's Who in 1891.

PUBLICATION OF COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN CONVICTED PERSONS AND THE OUTSIDE WORLD.

FOUR executions have taken place in Canada within a few weeks for the crime of murder. There is no reason to suspect, in any of these cases, that the verdict of the jury was founded upon doubtful evidence, or that the punishment was not due to the crime. But there is one point in connection with these cases which seems to be forced upon the attention of the most indifferent observer, and that is the necessity of imposing more stringent rules upon sheriffs and gaolers with reference to the communications which pass between convicted persons and the outside world. In almost every instance there has been a daily and hourly correspondence permitted between the prisoner and the reporters for the press, as well as others who have no immediate connection with the convict or his family. This publicity we have been accustomed to regard as an evil incident of the administration of justice in the United States, and its introduction into Canada should be strenuously resisted as tending to bring the authority of the law into contempt. The sheriff ought not to permit communication between his prisoner and anybody who chooses to make him a visit; still less ought he to permit the gaoler or turnkeys to gossip with reporters over every act and saying of the man awaiting execution. A monstrous example of the length to which the abuse has gone is afforded by the publication of the following telegram from Mr. F. X. Lemieux to Remi Lamontagne, who was executed at Sherbrooke on the 19th inst. for a murder committed in circumstances of unusual atrocity:—

'All my efforts are in vain; entertain no further hope. Men do not pardon, but God alone is truly merciful. With all my heart I wish you the courage necessary to bear the terrible trial. It is sad to die young, healthy and vigorous, but in fifty years the judge and jury who have condemned you will in their turn be judged and will not, perhaps, like you, enjoy the advantage of being ready for death. Farewell for ever, dear client; au revoir in eternity. My children and myself pray to the good God for you. I wished to go and see you, but remained here to endeavour to save you. I know you will die like a Christian and a brave man. Farewell!'

We do not wish to make any comment upon this extraordinary communication. It could only have been written under the influence of excitement, and was evidently not intended for publication. But what shall be said of a system which tolerates the communication of such matter to the reporters? How are judges and juries to perform faithfully and conscientiously their painful duty if they are exposed to such attacks? The occasion seems to call for a united and energetic remonstrance from the bench and from all who are interested in the proper administration of justice, and the adoption of regulations which shall render the repetition of such a scandal impossible.

Montreal Legal News.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

PRISON CHAPELS AND JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

THE chairman of the Salford Hundred Quarter Sessions, Mr. W. H. Higgin, Q.C., in his address to the grand jury, touched on a point which so far seems to have escaped general observation—that is to say, the mingling of first offenders with hardened criminals during the services at the prison chapels. With reference to the system on which their prison was carried on, he desired to say that the only place where first offenders who were sent there could be contaminated was in the most unlikely and most improper place in the whole prison, and that was in the chapel. It did not appear that there was any means of keeping separate in chapel first offenders who were over the age of sixteen and old offenders. It was quite possible to separate the two classes of offenders there, and if it could be done it ought to be done, so that there might be no possible risk of contamination. The chairman also pointed out that the number of prisoners for trial at these sessions was extremely small, as it was at the corresponding sessions last year. At the January sessions last year the number of prisoners was nine, and now it was fourteen. Contrasted with the numbers that used to appear in the calendar these figures showed a remarkable falling off in the number of prisoners sent for trial. This diminution—large, substantial, and satisfactory decrease—appeared to be general all over the country, and it was certainly general in this county.

PRINTED TENANCY AGREEMENTS.

A correspondent in a Manchester newspaper—the City News—writes over the name of 'Harvey' a somewhat remarkable letter bearing on the law of landlord and tenant. It is not patent whether the writer of the letter is a solicitor or some person outside the profession who has been advising on the matter. The letter runs thus: 'A point of law in reference to tenancy agreements has been advised upon by me this week, and it is of such general importance that I think a short statement of the facts and the law will be the means of preventing your readers being led into the trap provided for them by unscrupulous landlords. In September, 1889, my client took a dwelling-house, and was asked by the landlord to sign a printed form of tenancy for the house, and he volunteered the information that it was the usual yearly tenancy agreement. My client examined the agreement, and, seeing that it was a form printed and published by one of the leading law stationers in this city, he presumed that he was merely following the ordinary course of conduct, and signed the agreement as requested. After being in the house a few months he found his wife's health to be very unsatisfactory, and the doctor informed him that the illness was probably caused by bad drainage. He, therefore, on March 23, 1890, gave the usual six months' notice to quit the premises at the expiration of the first year's tenancy. When September quarter came round he left the house, paid the rent, and offered the key to the landlord, who refused the key, and said that he should not release him until the end of the second year of the tenancy. After the Christmas quarter my client was handed a writ for half a year's rent, being three months' rent, September to December, and three months' rent in advance. He brought me the writ, and I immediately procured a copy of the tenancy agreement, which reads as follows: "Memorandum of agreement made (between the parties), whereby the said landlord agrees to let unto the said tenant, and the said tenant agrees to take, all that dwelling-house and premises situate, &c., to hold for the term of one year to commence from September 29, 1889, and so on from year to year until this agreement shall be determined by one of the said parties giving to the other six calendar months' notice in writing for that purpose, such notice expiring at the termination of the current year's tenancy." Upon turning to Woodfall upon the "Law of Landlord and Tenant," I read as follows: Where parties usually agree for a tenancy "from year to year," and possession is taken, such a tenancy may be determined at the end of the first or any subsequent year of the tenancy by a regular notice to quit. But where a tenancy is created "for one year, and so on from year to year, which is frequently done by mistake, it ensures a tenancy for two years at least, and cannot be determined at the end of the first year." The author then refers to the case of Cladborn v. Green, which, it appears, was decided in 1839, and which is the leading case upon the point. Another leading law stationer in the city issues a form of tenancy agreement which reads as follows: "To hold from the —— day of —— as tenant from year to year, until this agreement shall be determined by one of the said parties giving to the other six calendar months' notice in writing for that purpose, such notice expiring at the termination of the current year's tenancy." Under this latter form the tenant could leave at the end of the first twelve months by giving the proper notice to quit. The law stationer, it appears, who supplied the former agreement now tells me that he was in entire ignorance of the legal consequences of the form published by him, and that he has always issued the form believing that it did not bind the tenant beyond the first year.'

ACCOUNTANCY PERIODICALS.

With the new year the leading organ of the chartered accountants, The Accountant, is developing new resources. It announces that 'The Accountant Law Reports' will be continued as before. These reports, be it noted, are on topics of peculiar interest to accountants—i.e. arbitrations, administration, bankruptcy, bills of sale, company law, and mercantile law. It is also proposed to include a weekly summary of the decisions of the judges in the Courts under the title of 'Current Law, and also important debates in the Legislature. The other features of the magazine remain as usual. Such a periodical as this, catering as it does for a particular profession, should be of a more useful character, but it has been complained in the past that it devotes itself too much to legal matters and not enough to accountancy affairs. However, it looks, judging by the weekly numbers of the year so far issued, that some improvement will result in this respect. Everyone knows that new brooms sweep clean. The incorporated accountants have their quarterly organ under the title of the Incorporated Accountants' Journal, which has proved exceedingly popular. Its features are doubtless familiar to our readers, as we believe a copy is sent to every law library in the kingdom, a practice which no other accountants' journal seems wide awake enough to imitate. The editor of the Incorporated Accountants' Journal does not smother his readers with legal points, leaders, decisions, and so forth, but gives a useful epitome of legal decisions, and fills the rest of the magazine with accountancy matters proper. Considering the great interest which accountants take in legal matters, the rising ranks of lawyers ought to take equal interest in accounts. This can be done by following accountancy matters in the periodicals. Besides those already enumerated, there is the monthly Accountants' Journal, advocating the interests of students as well as practitioners, and the Auditor and Secretary, another monthly, which has struck out a separate line in accountancy matters by dealing at some length with company affairs. It would be excellent if copies of all these magazines could be seen regularly in all law libraries.

TESTAMENTARY LAW.

Do they do it better in France? That is the question which always rises to one's mind on reading about a will whose provisions are of an eccentric nature. According to French law men are not allowed to will their property at their death, but are compelled to distribute it among their heirs. It is considered that England is more sinning in respect of selfish and unjust wills than either her colonies or the United States of America. Certainly there have been many strange wills proved from time to time. Quite recently the annual income of certain property was left to a son, an M.P., with the provision that if he failed to be re-elected 2,000*l.* a year was to be struck off, but so long as he had a Parliamentary seat, no matter where, he could retain the income indicated. Looking at the present prominence of women in all matters of life, the practice of giving sons the major portion of a fortune should cease, and the property be equally divided amongst sons and daughters. Equitable arrangements like this are more common elsewhere than in England, but perhaps, with the spread of democratic teaching, we may hope for more consideration for women than heretofore.

OBITUARY.

MR. ALEXANDER WILLIAM KINGLAKE, barrister, died at his residence, 17 Bayswater Terrace, on the 2nd inst. He was the eldest son of Mr. William Kinglake, of Taunton, and was born in 1811. He was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in May, 1837, and for many years practised as a Chancery barrister. He retired from practice in 1856. In 1844 he published 'Eothen,' a book on Eastern travel, which created a great sensation at the time and achieved immediate success. He was with our army at the Crimea and watched keenly the tide of events, and afterwards wrote an elaborate and able history of the war, extending over eight volumes, the first published in 1863, and the last in 1877. He was a member of Parliament for Bridgwater from 1857 to 1869. He was deputy-lieutenant for Somerset, and lord of the manner of Saltmoor in the same county.

MR. THOMAS MARRIOTT DODINGTON, M.A., barrister, of Combe Dulverton, Somerset, and Horsington House, near Wincanton, died on November 17. Mr. Dodington was the eldest son of the Rev. Thomas Marriott Dodington, of Horsington, Somerset, and was born on July 22, 1839. He was educated at Trinity College and Marlboreugh College, Cambridge. He was called to the bar on January 26, 1865, and in June of the same year he married Lucy Elizabeth, fourth daughter of the Rev. G. E. Downe, rector of Rushden, North Hants. Mr. Dodington was lord of the manors of Stowell, Henstridge, Bowden, and High Ham. He was captain of the 3rd Battalion Somerset Light Infantry, and a justice of the peace.

MR. JOHN MARSHALL, barrister, died on the 30th ult. He was the eldest son of Mr. Thomas Harrison Marshall, of Hull, and was born on May 14, 1820. He was called to the bar at the Middle Temple on November 23, 1849, and was a member of the Northern Circuit. He married on April 28, 1869, Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Mr. Joseph Gardner, of Huyton, Lancashire.

MR. THOMAS AINSWORTH, solicitor, of Blackburn, died on the 6th ult. He was the son of Mr. Thomas Ainsworth, solicitor, of Blackburn, and was born about the year 1810. He was educated at the Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth in Blackburn. At first he intended to join the army, but in consequence of his elder brother's death he was articled to his father, and was admitted a solicitor in 1832. Both his father and mother were possessed of considerable property in Blackburn, to which, as well as to the business, Mr. Ainsworth succeeded on the death of his father. The deceased was an able lawyer, particularly well versed in conveyancing and magisterial work. For many years he filled the offices of town clerk, clerk to the magistrates, and clerk to the burial board, and he had for some considerable time been connected with every movement for the progress of the town, which he has not forgotten in his will, as he leaves his paintings and books to the Blackburn Free Library. These are of considerable value. For many years he was a collector, and, being a bachelor, he was not restrained by any considerations of economy from purchasing what he fancied. He has also left 2,000*l.* to the Blackburn and East Lancashire Infirmary, 2,000*l.* to the Blackburn Ragged School, 100*l.* to the Parish Church Higher Grade School, and 2,000*l.* to the governors of the Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth for the purpose of founding scholarships of the annual value of 10*l.*, tenable for two or three years, at the discretion of the governors. The total value of Mr. Ainsworth's bequests to the town amounts to upwards of 8,000*l.* During his life he was also very free-handed in helping any meritorious object.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, January 19. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Tuesday, January 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Wednesday, January 21.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Thursday, January 22.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Friday, January 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Saturday, January 24.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

DRAMATIC COPYRIGHT.—A correspondent asks whether a copyright play first produced in England, which has been taken down in shorthand at a London theatre, can be represented at a club where no payment is made for admission (such representation being a drawing-room performance) without infringing the provisions of the Copyright Acts or the author's rights.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JANUARY 19 TO JANUARY 24.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	January 19	January 20	January 21	January 22	January 23	January 24
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	—	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Stockton-on-Tees	—	Darlington	Leyburn	Stokesley	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Burton	Derby	Ashbourne	—
22	Judge Harington	Stratford-on-Avon	Coventry	Warwick	Rugby	Daventry	Southam
26	Judge Jordan	Tamworth	Rugeley	—	—	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	—	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	Totnes	Kingsbridge	Crediton	—	—	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, JANUARY 12.

Showers and others v. Chelmsford Union Assessment Committee (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Showers and others from order of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated November 4, affirming poor rate under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11).—Dismissed.

Roberts v. Tyser and In re judgment obtained by Roberts against Tyser, dated May 19, 1888 (appeal of plaintiff from order of Mathew, J., and Grantham, J., dated November 6, granting entry of satisfaction upon judgment signed May 19, 1888).—Dismissed.

Pratt and another v. Russel (appeal of defendant from Stephen, J., and Charles, J., affirming order of judge in chambers refusing unconditional leave to defend).—Allowed.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 13.

Taylor and another v. Wheatley (application of plaintiffs for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Williams, J., at Bradford). Taylor and another v. Cragg (application of plaintiffs for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Williams, J., at Bradford).—Dismissed.

Torriss v. Cornwell and Empire Printing and Publishing Company (Lim.) (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Dibley v. Victoria Steamboat Association (application of defendants for verdict and judgment upon findings of jury on appeal from direction and judgment at trial before Cave, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Semmens v. Bute Docks Company and E. Robertson & Co. (application of Bute Docks Company for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Huddleston, B., with special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, SIR JAMES HANNEN, and FRY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14.

Pittard v. Oliver (appeal of plaintiff from judgment or new trial on application from direction and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex).—Refused.

Lund v. Brocklesby and another (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex).—Judgment for defendants.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, JANUARY 12.

In re T. Owens (dec.). Owens v. Green (appeal of C. B. Cottam in person from order of Stirling, J., dated November 21, refusing a charging order for costs).—Dismissed.

Hamilton v. Brogden (appeal of defendant A. Brogden from order of North, J., dated November 18, giving liberty to sign judgment under Order XIV.).—Abandoned.

Jenkins v. Bushby (appeal of plaintiff from order of Stirling, J., dated December 1, refusing trial by jury).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 13.

Martin v. Heath (2) (appeal of T. B. Green, plaintiff in second action, from judgment of Chitty, J., dated August 1).—Dismissed.

In re Shipley Estates and Munday's Settlement Trusts, and Settled Land Act, 1882 (appeal of settlement trustees from order of North, J., dated August 7, declaring trustees not authorised to pay costs of improvement).—Allowed.

In re Liverpool Household Stores Association (Lim.) and Company's Acts (appeal of H. W. Blundell from order of Kekewich, J., dated August 11).—Dismissed.

Apollinaris Company v. Snook (appeal of defendant from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated August 6).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14.

Jenkins v. Bushby (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Stirling, J., dated December 1, refusing trial by jury).—Cur. adv. vult.

Attorney-General v. Morgan (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., dated August 6).—Part heard.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—It is stated that, in consequence of the transfer of the New Trial Paper to the Court of Appeal, three Queen's Bench Division Courts only will be formed to sit in Banco during the ensuing Hilary Sittings, instead of four as hitherto, while eight of the judges will, according to present arrangements, be told off to sit and dispose of special and common and non-jury actions, the lists of which are somewhat in arrear. The only difficulty in the way of carrying out this scheme will be the want of sufficient Courts, as, including the Lord Chief Justice's Court, there are only ten Queen's Bench Division Courts altogether, so that the problem will be where to locate the eleventh Court.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. EDWARD PINDER DAVIS, LL.B. (of the firm of Davis & Marcus), of 49 Chancery Lane, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Davis was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Thomas Wm. Tempany, of 25 Bedford Row, London, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Tempany was admitted in 1879.

Mr. William Dalziel Fisher (of the firm of Fisher & Williamson), of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Fisher was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Harry Morse Hewitt (of the firm of Morse, Hewitt & Farman), of 39 King Street, Cheapside, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hewitt was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Henry Kerby, of 2 Lancaster Place, Waterloo Bridge, London, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Kerby was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Munro Tapp, B.A., LL.M. Cantab (of the firm of Goren & Tapp), of 27 South Molton Street, Oxford Street, W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Tapp was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frederick Albert Wood (of the firm of Wood, Bird & Wood), of 23 Rood Lane, Cannon Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Wood was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Charles Walter Oddie (of the firm of Torr, Janeway, Gribble, Oddie & Sinclair), of 38 Bedford Row, W.C., and 19 Parliament Street, Westminster, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Oddie was admitted in 1879.

Mr. Thomas John Servington Savery King, of 41 Chapel Street, Marylebone Road, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. King was admitted in 1868.

Mr. Herbert Bamford, of 201 Great Portland Street, W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bamford was admitted in 1879.

Mr. George Henry Carthew, of 3 Raymond Buildings, Gray's Inn, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths in matters depending in the Courts of the Colony of the Bahamas. Mr. Carthew passed the final examination with honours, and was admitted in 1876.

Mr. Arthur Lamb (of the firm of Lamb, Brooks & Sherwood), of Basingstoke, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lamb was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur Stewart Maples has been appointed Official Receiver in Bankruptcy for the districts of the County Courts holden at Kingston-upon-Hull and at Great Grimsby, by transfer from the district of the County Court holden at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Mr. Percy Hamilton Hughes (of the firm of Thompson & Hughes), of Birkenhead, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hughes was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frederick Swinson (of the firm of Shute & Swinson), of Birmingham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. Mr. Swinson was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Thomas Walter Hall (of the firm of Sorby & Hall), of Sheffield, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hall was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frank Lowson Clark has been appointed Official Receiver in Bankruptcy for the district of the County Court holden at Newcastle-on-Tyne, rendered vacant by the transfer of Mr. Arthur Stewart Maples.

Mr. John Cross (of the firm of Cross, Barnard & Cross), of Norwich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cross was admitted in 1878.

Mr. Walter Brooke, of Woodbridge, has been appointed Deputy-Registrar of the County Court. Mr. Brooke was admitted in 1881.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

BANKRUPTCY ACTS (The), 1883-90. By Chalmers and Hough. Third Edition. London: Waterlow & Sons.

Bankruptcy Act (The), 1890. By Lawford Yate Lee and Henry Wace, Barristers-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.).

Dod's Peerage, &c. 1891.

Liability of Employers (The). Sir Henry James' Prize Essay. By T. W. S. Firth, Solicitor. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1890.

Sell's Dictionary of the World's Press, 1891.

Stock Exchange Year-Book (The), 1891.

Trevor on Railways in India. London: Reeves & Turner. 1891.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—The Lord Mayor has received a letter from Mr. E. J. Read, the Clerk of Arraigns at the Central Criminal Court, resigning that office through ill-health. Mr. Read, who succeeded Mr. Avory in 1881, was for many years previously Deputy Clerk of Arraigns.

THE EARL OF WESTMEATH, who attained his majority on Sunday, January 11, can boast of a lineage equalled by few of our peers. He is directly descended from Thomas Nugent, second son of Richard, second Earl of Westmeath, who was Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, and was created Baron Riverston, of Riverston, in 1689, but the title, having been conferred by James II. after he had abdicated the English crown, was not recognised. Lord Westmeath is also Baron Delvin, a title which dates from 1286.

A SMOKING concert will be given at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet Street, on Monday, January 26, in aid of the funds of the Royal Courts Cricket Club. This club has been established for the recreation of the large staff of attendants at the Law Courts. The chair will be taken on the 26th by Mr. Francis A. Stringer and the vice-chair by Mr. Arthur T. Pask. Mr. A. Leigh Pemberton will act as M.C. We are requested to state that tickets (prices—chairman's table, 2*s.* 6*d.*; other tickets, 1*s.* each) may be obtained from any of the attendants in uniform at the Royal Courts of Justice.

THE first smoking concert of the Clare Market Club (for working men) was given by the Plowden Bijou Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gillespie, at the Essex Hall, Essex Street, on the 13th inst.; Mr. Justice Grantham, a vice-president of the club, in the chair. A large and enthusiastic audience was present, and Mr. Lawler's violin solo, Mr. Gillespie's banjo songs, Mr. Tomkin's flute solo, and Mr. Broxholm's gavotte, accompanied by the band, had all to be repeated. The 'Pelican Lancers,' too, decidedly 'took.' At the conclusion of the concert, the Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to the orchestra, which was vociferously accorded, and himself received a similar compliment. The National Anthem brought a very successful evening to a close. Our readers' attention is called to our advertising columns, as money is much needed to support a club for the working-men inhabitants of the poor and populous district of Clare Market lying between Drury Lane and the Law Courts.

MR. BARKER, Q.C., the Leeds Recorder, was unable to attend the borough sessions on Monday, January 12, as he is suffering from an injury sustained by falling on a slide on New Year's Day.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE is confined to the house with a cold, and is not expected to sit in Court for a few days. His lordship, who is to be elected treasurer of the Middle Temple at a special parliament to be held this evening, has written from his Devonshire seat saying that in consequence of his indisposition he would be unable to attend personally.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 14th inst., Mr. John Hunter in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. W. Beriah Brook, H. Morten Cotton, Robert Cunliffe, G. Burrow Gregory, Edwin Hedger, J. H. Kays, Grinham Keen, R. Pennington, Henry Roscoe, Sidney Smith, R. W. Tweedie, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 260*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, ten new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

THE MOVABLE DWELLINGS BILL.—The following unsolicited expression of opinion from the 'King of the Gipsies' has been received at the central offices of the Liberty and Property Defence League: 'Gipsy Camp, Falcon Hall, Edinburgh, January 10, 1891.—Having been all my life a traveller on the roads, and living the life of a gipsy, as my forefathers have done for ages, I protest strongly against the assertions made by a man calling himself "George Smith, of Coalville," and against the attack on our liberties contained in his Movable Dwellings Bill. Let this man name and produce evidence of any cases among gipsies or showmen that bear out his assertions. I personally know all the gipsies and showmen in England, and I am bold to assert that in health and morality their lives will bear favourable comparison with either that of "George Smith, of Coalville," himself or those of his pet slum dwellers. Many members of the House of Lords and of the House of Commons have been in my tent, and those of other gipsies, and can speak to their cleanliness. It would be a gross injustice to put us on a worse footing than the lowest thief in a London slum.—GEORGE SMITH, King of the Gipsies.'

PLOUGH MONDAY IN THE CITY.—According to annual custom on the first Monday after the Feast of the Epiphany, or 'Plough Monday,' as it is generally called, a grand court of wardmote was held at Guildhall, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The Court is summoned at this season for the purpose of receiving the returns from the several wards of the City of the election of members of the Court of Common Council for the present year, of hearing petitions (if any) against those returns, and of admitting the City Marshal, the ward beadles, and the extra constables. The business was merely formal. There was but one petition, which was adjourned. With this exception, the Common Council, 206 members in all, may be considered as constituted for the year. In the evening, according to custom, the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress entertained the members of their household and other officers of the Corporation at dinner at the Mansion House. The entertainment is one of the first given by each chief magistrate. According to Ashe, the appellation 'Plough Monday' was given to this particular day as being the day on which our forefathers 'returned to the duties of agriculture after enjoying the festivities of Christmas.' Another writer states that, on Plough Monday, the ploughmen of the north country used to draw a plough from door to door and beg plough money to drink.'

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—The usual weekly meeting was held on Monday at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall; Mr. A. K. Common in the chair. This being the first meeting of the month was devoted to business.

HAMPSTEAD HEATH.—An arbitration case, in which the right of public way over Hampsted Heath is involved, was begun in one of the judge's rooms at the Royal Courts of Justice on Monday, December 22, and continued on the 23rd. Mr. Haldane, Q.C., M.P., is the arbitrator. The county council are represented by Mr. Byrne, Q.C, and Mr. Harrison; Sir Spencer Wells by Mr. Ambrose, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. White. The complaint against the county council is that, as successors of the late Metropolitan Board of Works, they have persisted in closing an old highway for carriages, and have converted it into a ride for equestrians only, to the injury of the public and of Sir Spencer Wells, who has four different gates of access from his property on to the old road, secured to him and his tenants by the Hampstead Heath Act. The public rights, as well as those of Sir Spencer Wells, were supported by Ordnance and parochial maps of various periods, and by the evidence of Mr. Tufman, agent to the lord of the manor before the Board of Works obtained control over the heath; by Mr. Garrard, formerly surveyor to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; by Mr. Baker, land agent, of Kilburn; Mr. Potter, surveyor and builder, of Hampstead; and by an old coachman upwards of eighty years old. Many more witnesses were in attendance when the case was adjourned until after the Christmas holidays.

BIRTHS.

On Jan. 7, at Hilcott, Bedford Hill, Balham, the wife of Arthur Robert Ingpen, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Jan. 9, at 36 St. George's Square, S.W., the wife of William Cecil Smyly, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 10, at St. James's Church, Spanish Place, John George O'Brien, Esq., of 2 Egerton Gardens, to Marian Dora, daughter of his Honour Judge Cooke, Q.C.

On Jan. 13, at the residence of the bride's sister, 16 Gloucester Place, Portman Square, W., Edward Montague Lazarus, Solicitor, 9 Union Court, Old Broad Street, third son of Montague Lazarus, of 536 Oxford Street, W., to Fannie, youngest daughter of the late Barnett Lyons, of Plymouth.

DEATHS.

On Dec. 16, Christopher Reader Harris, infant son of Reader Harris, Barrister-at-Law, aged 11½ months.

On Dec. 28, at Bombay, Robert William Spottiswoode Pinhey, Barrister-at-Law, of Lincoln's Inn, and one of the Judges of the Bombay Small Cause Court, aged 37, eldest son of Mr. Justice Pinhey, of Lincoln's Inn and Sylvester House, Eastbourne, late one of the Judges of the Bombay High Court.

On Jan. 6, at Scarborough, in his 76th year, Benjamin Chadwick, Solicitor, late of Dewsbury.

On Jan. 7, at his residence, The Poplars, Ealing, Middlesex, Chadd Ragsdale Randall, Solicitor, in the 86th year of his age.

On Jan. 7, Albert Barnes, Solicitor, of 60 York Terrace, Regent's Park, and 8 Sackville Street, Piccadilly.

On Jan. 8, at 46 Ladbroke Road, Notting Hill, Jane Emily, widow of the late J. G. Dobinson, of 57 Lincoln's Inn Fields, and sixth daughter of the late Charles Brookfield, Solicitor, Sheffield.

On Jan. 9, in London, William Mason Scharlieb, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Esq., and Colonel of the Madras Volunteer Guards, aged 62 years.

On Jan. 10, at the residence of his son-in-law, C. H. Fasson, Esq., 2 Meadow Walk, Edinburgh, Robert Robertson, formerly Solicitor in Calcutta, and of Strowan Lodge, Morningside, aged 88.

On Jan. 11, at Beaumont, Wells, Somerset, William Inman Welsh, Solicitor, in his 81st year.

On Jan. 12, at 1 Abbotsford Villas, Twickenham, Elizabeth Frances, daughter of the late John Hodgson, Q.C., and dearly-loved sister and life-long companion of Francis Cotterell Hodgson, of King's College, Cambridge, and the Education Department, Whitehall.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 24, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

LORD COLERIDGE had sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to be able to take his seat in Court on Monday. His lordship has been sitting during the week, and taking special jury cases. Mr. Justice Denman is, we regret to state, still upon the sick list.

A CURIOUS incident happened in connection with the nomination of candidates at the Hartlepool election. By rule 4 of schedule 1 to the Ballot Act, 1872, 'the time appointed' for an election 'shall be such two hours between the hours of ten in the forenoon and three in the afternoon as may be appointed by the returning officer, and the returning officer shall attend during those two hours and for one hour after;' by rule 8, 'the nomination papers shall be delivered to the returning officer at the place of election during the time appointed for the election;' and, by rule 13, 'the returning officer shall decide on the validity of every objection made to a nomination paper, and his decision, if disallowing the objection, shall be final; but, if allowing the same, shall be subject to reversal on petition questioning the election or return.' It so happened that the Hartlepool clocks were at variance, and that one nomination paper was objected to as being delivered too late. The decision of the returning officer was happily immaterial, inasmuch as the nomination paper objected to was one of a large number, of which at least one, and probably all the others, were unquestionably good. It is very material to point out, however, for the guidance of returning officers in general, that 'time,' where mentioned in an Act of Parliament, means 'Greenwich mean time.' Such is the clear effect of the Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 9).

WITHIN six weeks the bodies of three persons well known to the world—Baron Huddleston, Mr. Kinglake, and the Duke of Bedford—have been cremated. Attention having been so prominently directed to the subject, the number of cremations is likely to increase, and it is as well to inquire what is the law on the point. Now in Williams v. Williams, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 385, Mr. Justice Kay, declared it to be doubtful whether it is lawful to burn a dead body even if the deceased by his will directed some person to do so. But in Regina v. Price, 52 Law J. Rep. M. C. 57, Mr. Justice Stephen, in charging the grand jury at Cardiff, laid down, after an exhaustive examination of the learning on the subject, that to burn a dead body is no misdemeanour unless it be so done as to create a public nuisance, or done in order to prevent the coroner holding an inquest on the body—as to which last point see also Regina v. Stevenson, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 176, in which a conviction for unlawfully burning was affirmed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. Cremation, therefore, is, within certain very reasonable limits, a perfectly lawful manner of disposing of a dead body. But the questions may possibly arise, whether a clergyman of the Church of England (1) may legally read the burial service with such alteration as is necessary over the ashes of a cremated person, and (2) whether he might be compelled to do so, which questions are not quite without practical interest when the strongly worded objections to cremation of the late Bishop of Lincoln are considered. We slightly incline to the opinion that, technically, an ecclesiastical offence is committed by a clergyman altering the burial service to suit it to a cremation, and have little doubt that a clergyman could not be compelled so to alter it. The question seems now to require attention from Convocation.

COPYRIGHT in newspaper articles is not expressly given by the existing law, but, as was recommended by the royal commissioners who reported in 1878, it is proposed by Lord Monkswell's bill not only expressly to confer a newspaper copyright, but also to define the extent to which it shall exist. This is proposed to be done by clause 19 of the bill, which runs that 'the copyright given by this Act in respect of newspapers shall extend only to articles, paragraphs, communications, and other parts which are compositions of a literary character, and not to any articles, paragraphs, communications, or other parts which are designed only for the publication of news, or to advertisements.' Upon this clause the question might arise whether the newspaper copyright would extend to news so descriptively and tellingly announced as to invest the announcement with literary merit. Would such an announcement be literature, having the copyright, or would it be merely news, not having the copyright? The question is an interesting one. The words of the clause are 'designed,' which seems to point to the intention of the compiler or editor, which in this case would be twofold, one first to tell the news, and secondly to drive it home by the way of telling it. We think that the solution would be that, if the primary intention was to tell the news, as, for instance, when the fall of Sebastopol was announced, quite erroneously as it happened, the copyright would not attach, but if the primary intention was to write something fine, merely taking the news as a peg, as if it should be announced that Mr. Gladstone had cut down a very large tree in midwinter, the copyright would attach. But the word 'designed' is a little awkward. In many cases, if not most cases, the difficulty would be escaped by the practice of newspaper editors of printing their news in one part of their papers and their comments in another, as was done by the Times in the case of the recent Aristotelian discovery.

THE Court of our Sovereign Lady the Queen holden before the Mayor and Aldermen in the Inner Chamber of the Guildhall of the City of London—we beg to apologise if by a single word we have abbreviated or curtailed the full style and title of this ancient and august tribunal—must have been startled, if such an emotion as surprise may be predicated of the Lord Mayor or of the exalted civic dignitaries who support him on either side, when learned counsel, who was instructed to support a petition praying the Court to set aside an apparently valid election to the Common Council, actually submitted that the immemorial jurisdiction of the Court had been taken away by a modern statute, and that consequently his clients were not entitled to be heard. But if the submission of the petitioner's counsel took the Court by surprise, the objection to the Court's jurisdiction did not take the recorder by surprise. Sir Thomas Chambers is not likely to have overlooked the objection which was so ingenuously stated by the learned counsel under a sense of duty to the Court. But, in any case, we doubt if there is any civic corporation on the face of the earth so tenacious of its privileges as the Corporation of London is well known to be. That any advocate should have had the hardihood to stand up in the presence of the Lord Mayor, with the awe-inspiring mace lying on the table in front of him, and invite the City Fathers to admit that the ancient jurisdiction of their Court may by possibility have been taken away, not, indeed, by express enactment, but by implication and necessary inference from the language of a modern Act of Parliament, only shows how morally courageous an advocate may grow when impelled by a stern sense of duty.

LORD DERBY has complained of the premature publication, by 'a gross breach of confidence' on the part of some person as yet undiscovered, of a report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into Markets and Tolls. Does the Official Secrets Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 52), passed 'to prevent the disclosure of official documents and information,' apply to such a case? By section 2 of the Act, 'where a person, by means of his holding or having held an office under Her Majesty the Queen, has lawfully or unlawfully either obtained possession of or control over any document . . . or acquired any information, and at any time corruptly or contrary to his official duty communicates or attempts to communicate that document . . . or information to any person to whom the same ought not, in the interest of the State, or otherwise in the public interest, to be communicated at that time, he shall be guilty of a breach of official trust,' and be liable to 'imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term not exceeding two years, or to a fine, or to both imprisonment and a fine,' and the section applies 'to a person holding a contract with any department of the Government of the United Kingdom, where such contract involves an obligation of secrecy.' It may possibly turn out that the offence of which Lord Derby complains may be within the letter, as it is within the spirit, of this useful little statute, and since these lines were written it has been stated that Lord Derby intends to try the question—if he can only catch the offender.

THE Solicitors' Magistracy Bill, which was dropped last session before it had reached a second reading, has been reintroduced with the addition of Mr. Leng and Mr. M. Healy as backers to Mr. Maclure, Sir A. Rollit, and Mr. Lawson, by whom the measure was originally brought in. It is proposed to repeal 34 Vict. c. 18, and section 27 of 6 Geo. IV. c. 48 (a corresponding enactment applicable to Scotland only), and to enact 'that any solicitor shall be capable of becoming or being a justice of the peace for any county in England, Wales, or Scotland, although he shall practise and carry on the profession or business of a solicitor in such county; but it shall not be lawful for any solicitor himself or by any partner directly or indirectly to practise before any bench of magistrates of which he is a member.' It will be remembered that by section 33 of the Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), the disqualification of attorneys and solicitors for the county magistracy was absolute, but that by the Act of 1871 (34 Vict. c. 18) this section was repealed, and attorneys and solicitors became qualified to act in counties other than those in which they practise. The disqualification in Scotland under 6 Geo. IV. c. 48 was and is still confined to solicitors in inferior Courts.

IT is quite clear that life interests must be brought into hotchpot by appointees under the usual hotchpot clause. This was decided by Vice-Chancellor Wood in Rucker v. Scholefield, 32 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 46, and more recently by the late Master of the Rolls in Eales v. Drake, 45 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 51. In the latter case the life interest was determinable on bankruptcy or alienation, and the late Sir George Jessel said: 'The value must be ascertained in the best way you can, and if you cannot agree, there must be an inquiry at chambers on the subject.' In the case of Trench v. Heathcote, reported in our Notes of Cases for this week, at p. 7, Mr. Justice Kekewich had a similar point before him. In that case the trust funds were settled in trust for the children of the appointor as he should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the children equally, with the usual hotchpot clause. The appointor appointed by will life interests to two daughters, but made no other valid appointment, so that the reversion of the trust funds remained unappointed, and the question was whether the other children of the appointor were entitled to have the life interests valued at once, as at the death of the appointor, so as to immediately ascertain their own shares in the unappointed reversion. Mr. Justice Kekewich held that they were so entitled, and directed a reference to chambers for the purpose. 'The other children,' observed the learned judge, 'say: "We want to know now what our shares are. There is no difficulty in ascertaining our shares, because the value of the appointed life interests is not according to the time the appointee may live, but according to the actuarial value at the time the appointee values the life interest." I think that is so, and that it is right and fair that the other children should know now what their shares are, and that I am not infringing any rule of practice or expediency in saying that there must be an inquiry now as to the value of the life interests.' The conclusion appears to be a perfectly correct one when it is once admitted that life interests are subject to the operation of the hotchpot clause.

IN Cooke v. Smith, reported in our Notes of Cases for this week, at p. 7, a hitherto undecided point of practice came before Mr. Justice Kekewich for his decision. The point arose, under Order XXXI., rule 26, on an application by the defendants for an order, that the plaintiffs, who had obtained an order for discovery on August 19, 1890, might be ordered to pay into Court an additional sum by way of security for the costs of the discovery. No further payment in excess of the essential 5*l.* had been directed by the order for discovery itself, and the objection was taken by the plaintiffs that the defendants' summons, which was taken out on October 1, 1890, was too late; in other words, that the power of the Court to order a further payment under Order XXXI., rule 26, is limited to the time when the order for discovery itself is made. The terms of that rule are not, perhaps, so clear as they might be; but Mr. Justice Kekewich did not adopt this construction of the rule, but held that the Court has power to order a further payment at any time after the order for discovery is made on a proper case being shown. The point does not seem to have been previously decided.

THERE must have been considerable doubt in the profession on the question which was decided by the Court of Appeal in In re Dick; Lopes v. Dick on January 16, but the decision seems to be in accordance both with law and good sense. Trustees under the will of a testator, who died in 1858, held real and personal estate upon trust to convert such part (not being plate, &c.) as should not consist of moneys, securities for moneys, or Government securities, and to invest in the public stocks or funds of Great Britain, and to stand possessed of the same, and the other residuary estate, upon trust with the consent of the person entitled to the income to invest the same residuary estate in Irish freeholds, the will containing no express power to vary investments. Part of the residue had been invested in Irish freeholds, but large sums of Government stock still remained in the trustees' hands. The tenant-for-life having requested the trustees to realise a sum of stock sufficient to raise a large sum and invest it in an English freehold mortgage (one of the securities authorised by the Trust Investment Act, 1889), the opinion of Mr. Justice Stirling was sought, and his lordship, following Mr. Justice North's decision in the case of In re The Manchester Royal Infirmary, 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. Div. 420, held that, as the will contained no power to vary, the proposed realisation was not within the trustees' powers. This looks like a narrow view of trustees' powers independently of the special terms of the Act of 1889. Section 3 of that Act, after enabling trustees, unless expressly forbidden by the trust instrument to invest in (inter alia) public funds and Government securities of the United Kingdom and real securities in Great Britain, empowers them 'also from time to time to vary such investments.' Standing alone, the words would at first sight seem only to authorise a change in the investments authorised by the Act; but the Lords Justices have held that they apply to all the investments mentioned in the section. This may be a bold, but it is certainly a useful and sensible decision. Section 6 of the Act, it should be added, applies the statute to trusts previously created, and enacts that the new statutory powers 'shall be in addition to the powers conferred by the instrument, if any, creating, the trust;' but the words in inverted commas do not seem to affect the question.

THE various provisions of the Public Health Act of last session (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59) are being extensively adopted by the 'local authorities' to whom the option is given. The advantage of securing the powers contained in parts 2, 3, and 5 is so obvious that but little discussion is likely to arise over their adoption at the public meetings called for the purpose. But with reference to part 4 (music and dancing), there will, no doubt, be considerable divergence of opinion; and it is pretty certain that the influence of the brewing trade and the licensed victuallers will be thrown into the scale against its adoption. There is, indeed, almost a puritan severity in the clauses which, if strictly interpreted and enforced, would prove of the most stringent character. The evils aimed at are undeniable and require a remedy; but in checking the abuse of dancing and music it is surely unfortunate to adopt such measures as will practically extinguish two of the least expensive and most natural pastimes of the poorer classes. The cheap out-of-door concerts to be found in nearly all continental towns, crowded as they are by orderly, sober people of both sexes and all ages, is an example to be followed rather than avoided. But, apart from this, there exists a strong feeling in the mind of the average Briton that he does not want his pleasures and amusements prescribed for him, and that he can very well take care of himself. Lord Bramwell and other opponents of grandmotherly legislation will probably be asked to come to his rescue when part 4 is adopted by unsuspecting local authorities.

THE poor-law system of this country is now being tested in a practical way. Severe and long-continued frost during the present winter has, by throwing multitudes of labouring men out of employment, reduced them and their families to the desperate alternative of starvation or the workhouse. The local government officials are, it is well known, opposed to the principle of giving outdoor relief; and in most unions the guardians endeavour to carry this objection into practical effect, but whether wisely or not, especially in seasons of exceptional distress, is a question which will have to be answered before, at any rate, another winter comes round. An unusually intelligent and conscientious relieving officer, who for forty years has carried out his duties in the New Forest Union in Hants (and has, he calculates, walked as many miles as would have taken him round the globe), has recently been allowed to explain his views to his board on this important question of outdoor relief. This officer's wide experience has convinced him of its great value both in preserving the self-respect of the recipients and the maintenance of a 'home' and of family life, in contrast with the barrack-like existence which must be the lot of inmates of a workhouse. The subject is, however, too wide to be more than briefly referred to in these columns, but deserves the earnest consideration of all humane persons, and especially of those members of the legal profession who have to advise on the administration of the poor laws.

THE BORROWING POWERS OF BUILDING SOCIETIES.

THE position of building societies in relation to their borrowing powers has been further elucidated by two recent decisions, reported by us during the past year, of Mr. Justice Chitty, both of which are of great practical value. They serve to remove not a little doubt that formerly enshrouded a subject which is of interest to a considerable section of the community—the numerous class of depositors in building societies, as well as the societies themselves.

It is scarcely necessary to remind the reader that the building societies of this country are divided into two classes: (a) Societies established under the Building Societies Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 32) and not subsequently incorporated under the Building Societies Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 42)—commonly called 'unincorporated building societies;' (b) societies incorporated under the Act of 1874, whether established before or after its passing—known as 'incorporated building societies.'

As regards the borrowing powers of unincorporated societies, what there is to be said can be disposed of in a few words, such powers depending not on statute, but on the rules of each particular society. Neither 10 Geo. IV. c. 56, nor 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 40, nor 6 and 7 Wm. IV. c. 32—the statutes governing unincorporated societies—contained any provision concerning borrowing by those societies. But the point has been the subject of consideration in several cases before the Courts, and it is now settled by the authority of the House of Lords that such societies may lawfully acquire, by their rules, a power of borrowing (Murray v. Scott, 53 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 745; L. R. 9 App. Cas. 519). There must, however, be a clause in the rules authorising the borrowing, and in all properly drawn rules the clause is of a perfectly definite character. So long as the borrowing is sanctioned by the rules it is not obligatory that the sanction should be in anywise restricted, and it is immaterial as to how it is expressed, Lord Hatherley's dictum in Laing v. Reed, 39 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1; L. R. 5 Chanc. App. 8, as to an unlimited power of borrowing, having been overruled in Murray v. Scott (ubi sup.). The question as to the limitation on the power to borrow in the case of unincorporated societies was fully discussed by the House of Lords in Murray v. Scott; and, as was pointed out by Lord Justice Bowen in In re The Mutual Aid Permanent Benefit Building Society, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 111; L. R. 30 Chanc. Div. 434, Murray v. Scott shows that the only limitation is that the power is not to be so exercised as to make the society something different from a benefit building society formed in pursuance of the Act of Parliament.

As regards incorporated societies, the matter stands on an entirely different footing, the rules of every incorporated society being, by section 16 (2) of the Building Societies Act, 1874, required to set forth 'whether the society intends to avail itself of the borrowing powers contained in this Act, and, if so, within what limits, not exceeding the limits prescribed by the Act.' The limits are prescribed in the preceding section (section 15), subsection 1 of which authorises any incorporated society to 'receive deposits or loans, at interest, within the limits in this section provided . . . . to be applied to the purposes of the society.' Then subsection 2 enacts that 'in a permanent society the total amount so received on deposit or loan and not repaid by the society shall not at any time exceed two-thirds of the amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members.' In the case of terminating societies some distinction is drawn, not material, however, for our present purpose to be examined. The limit fixed by the Act of 1874 is expressly based on the decision in the case of Laing v. Reed (ubi sup.), where it was held by Lord Chancellor Hatherley, and Lord Justice Giffard, in 1869, that a rule empowering the trustees of an unincorporated building society to borrow money, for the purposes of the society, to an extent not exceeding two-thirds of the amount secured by the mortgages, was not illegal under 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 32.

In estimating the statutory two-thirds, how is the 'amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members' to be ascertained? This is a question which has puzzled the advisers of building societies ever since the passing of the enactment.

For an answer we turn to the first of the two cases which we referred to above as having been recently decided by Mr. Justice Chitty. In The Neath Permanent Benefit Building Society v. Luce, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 3; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 158, the learned judge held that, in calculating the extent of an incorporated society's borrowing power, the 'amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages' is not to be limited to the principal sum secured by such mortgages, but covers all sums due thereon at the date when the borrowing power is exercised, whether for principal, or interest, or fines, or otherwise, and all instalments not then accrued due, but secured by such mortgages and outstanding.

It was generally supposed that the words 'amount for the time being secured' ought to be construed as only including the principal sums secured by the mortgages, and not comprising interest, fines, and other payments due under the mortgages. There was considerable ground for this view, which it would be impossible within the limits of our space to discuss and explain, but which to a certain extent may be gathered from the argument in favour of that contention addressed to his lordship, as appears in our report. The decision, however, of Mr. Justice Chitty is based upon a process of reasoning so sound and convincing, if we may be permitted to say so, that it must, we think, be regarded as settling the point.

Sums lent to an incorporated society in excess of its borrowing powers clearly cannot be recovered. But it is established that the persons so lending have an 'equity of subrogation,' which is expressed by Lord Selborne in The Blackburn, &c., Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks & Co., 52 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 92; L. R. 22 Chanc. Div. 61, as the right to be repaid such portion of the amount lent as went to pay the legitimate debts of the society. To this extent the lenders are entitled to stand in the shoes of the creditors. This point had also to be considered by Mr. Justice Chitty in the case of The Neath, &c., Building Society v. Luce (ubi sup.). The society had borrowed in excess of the limit allowed by subsection 2 of section 15, and the question arose as to the right, in working out the equity of subrogation, which the quasi-lenders, as the learned judge termed them, possessed. It appeared that in making advances to its members the society had acquired a profit by offering such advances to such members at a premium. The result was that the members paid a premium of 10*l.* for every advance of 100*l.* In other words, an advance of 90*l.* only was received, with an obligation to repay 100*l.* The learned judge held that, in working out the subrogation, the advances were not to be treated as diminished by 10*l.* per cent, but that the quasi-lenders must get the benefit of the full advance of 100*l.* In his lordship's opinion, the right of persons who had lent money to an incorporated society in excess of its borrowing powers, to have the benefit of securities obtained from members of the society by means of the loans, extended to the whole amount covered by such securities, although a lesser amount was, in fact, received by the members from the society.

In the other case decided by Mr. Justice Chitty, to which we desire to draw attention—viz. In re The West Riding of Yorkshire, &c., Building Society, No. 2, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 823; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 463—several important points were raised. The first was whether the 'amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages from its members' included moneys secured to the society by mortgages from persons who were only borrowers from, but not members of, the society. Of course such advances were ultra vires, as under the Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 13, advances can only be made to members. Hence the words 'mortgages from its members' in section 15 (2). Mr. Justice Chitty accordingly held that such moneys were not to be included. On the other hand, his lordship very properly decided that moneys secured to the society by mortgages from persons who were members of the society, but not advanced to such persons in respect of their shares, ought to be included.

Then followed the question whether moneys secured to the society by mortgages from non-members were to be taken into account in estimating the extent of the society's borrowing powers. His lordship came to the conclusion that the total amount borrowed and not repaid by the society was not to be taken as reduced by sums secured to the society from non-members.

The borrowing by an incorporated society may be from anybody; but in ascertaining whether the statutory 'two-thirds' has been attained, the term with which the borrowing has to be compared is not the total amount for the time being secured to the society by mortgages generally, but it is by a particular class of mortgages—namely, 'mortgages from its members.'

With the assistance of these two cases there cannot now, it seems to us, be much room for uncertainty in determining some, at any rate, of the various complicated questions that arise in connection with the present subject.

THE BEHRING'S SEA QUESTION.

THE application to the American Supreme Court made by the Attorney-General of Canada, apparently with Lord Salisbury's approval, for a prohibition to be directed to the Circuit Court of Alaska restraining further proceedings against one of the sealers captured in the Behring's Sea, comes as a surprise to most English lawyers. The ground upon which it is based is that the American Government has, by the law of nations, no jurisdiction upon the high seas. In international law, no doubt, the claim of the United States to appropriate the fishing over a wide area of open sea is an almost absurd anachronism, and in this particular matter, moreover, the Americans are barred by their own conduct, and by the treaty which they concluded early in the century with Russia. But if the seizures have been made, as we assume they have, by the authority of Congress, judging from the analogy of our own law, these arguments have neither place nor weight in an American Court of law. Certainly, so far as our own Courts are concerned, it would be immaterial that a statute violated every principle laid down by Grotius or his successors, if its terms were clear, although, if they were not, for the purposes of construction, a judge would, no doubt, presume that no such violation was intended. 'It is freely admitted to be within the competency of Parliament to extend the realm how far so ever it may please,' Lord Coleridge asserted in The Franconia Case (Regina v. Keyn, 46 Law J. Rep. M. C. 60; L. R. 2 Exch. Div. p. 152), and others of the judges spoke to the same effect. The celebrated case just mentioned is, indeed, in one aspect the converse of the present application. There it was argued on behalf of the prosecution (inter alia) that by international law the English criminal Courts had jurisdiction over the seas within three miles of the coast, but the judges, by a majority of seven to six, decided that no such jurisdiction in fact existed. It is true that Sir R. Phillimore and Chief Baron Kelly relied on the uncertainty of the publicists themselves as to whether the jurisdiction was recognised by the law of nations, but Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and the judges who concurred in his elaborate judgment, and particularly Lord Bramwell, held that, if it were so recognised, statutes or precedents would still be required, and the case is generally taken to have decided, contrary to some earlier dicta, that what is called 'international law' is not, as such, part of the law of England. Here its rules, so far from being of greater authority than Acts of Parliament, are not binding on our Courts at all.

It may be urged that the Supreme Court occupies a position with regard to Congress which is different to that of our own Courts with regard to Parliament. Certainly it is accustomed to override the enactments of Congress when it finds them in conflict with the fundamental law of the constitution, and, moreover, no jurists have written more strongly of the binding force of international law than American lawyers. Chancellor Kent, to cite a single instance, declared that it is, in fact, part of the common law itself. But though we do not presume to speak with any confidence on this matter, it would seem that, within the limits of the constitution, Congress is as supreme as Parliament; and it is clear that the doctrine of the freedom of the high seas, or any other rule of international law, is no part of the constitution. There are, moreover, authorities in the American reports which suggest that the assumed subordination of the Legislature, before the municipal law, to the rules generally accepted by civilised nations would at once be repudiated by the Courts, however right and proper it may be for statesmen to defer to them in practice. For example, in The United States v. Kessler, Bald. 34, Judge Hopkinson declared that the Court (the District Court of Pennsylvania) derived its authority from Congress, and that it made, therefore, no difference whether an alleged offence at sea was committed within the territorial waters or outside them.

We trust that the difficulty we have dwelt upon was fully considered before the application for the prohibition was launched, and it may be found that the English case has been submitted to a jurisdiction where the arguments upon which it rests, extremely strong as they are, cannot even be considered. In any event, we cannot see what end could be served by lending to the application, which might well have been made in the name of the owner of the vessel alone, the authority of the Canadian, and possibly of the British, Governments.

Reviews.

INDIAN RAILWAY LAW.

The Law relating to Railways in British India. Including the Indian Railways Act, 1890, and the Relevant Portions of the Contracts between Government and the Companies. By HENRY EDWARD TREVOR, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, some time Judge of the Suburban Court, Hyderabad, Deccan. London: Reeves & Turner. Calcutta: Thacker, Spink & Co. Madras: Higginbotham & Co. Bombay: Thacker & Co. 1891.

THE object of this work is to exhibit the law relating to railways in British India as it stands at the present date, collected in its different branches within the compass of one volume. No work, the author tells us, has, so far as he is aware, been produced on this subject during the last ten years, and within that interval there have been many and considerable changes. The railway system has been expanded; new railway companies on new principles have been established; important cases have been decided by the High Courts; and last, but not least, the Indian Railways Act, 1890—to a consideration of which a large number of the pages of the work before us are devoted—has been passed into law. The first book deals with the railway companies and their contracts with Government. There are, Mr. Trevor tells us, four classes of railways: (1) Proprietary lines worked by guaranteed companies; (2) Proprietary lines worked by assisted companies; (3) State lines worked by guaranteed, assisted, and other companies; (4) State lines worked by Government. The mileage open in 1890 in each of these classes was 3,423, 720, 6,007, and 4,924 respectively. The three first are considered in this portion. Part II. deals with the law of companies applicable to railways, a path, as our author tells us, 'more than usually beset with thorns, as it involves the application of English common law and cases.' We have tested the book here in several points, and must bear testimony as to the care with which the work is executed. The law as to liabilities to servants is well discussed at p. 163 et seq. Part III. contains the Indian Railways Act, 1890, with a commentary, and there is also an appendix of Special Acts, &c., and the rules made under the Railway Acts of 1879 and 1890. The work will be found useful to those who desire to study the law as to the railways of India. There is a mistake on p. 128, where the Factors Act of 1877 (now repealed) is alluded to instead of the Factors Act, 1889.

Correspondence.

COUNTY COURT APPEALS.

SIR,—In your Obiter Dicta of last week you refer to Voysey v. Armitage (L. J. N. C. vol. 25, p. 168), in which Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice Charles were unable to decide whether an appeal lies from an interlocutory order in a County Court, and you say it may be a long time before the point is decided. But the point was decided in favour of such appeal by the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mathew, in Carruthers v. Fisher (L. J. N. C. vol. 24, p. 135), and against such appeal in The Cashmere (59 Law J. Rep. Adm. p. 57). The strange part of the controversy is that in The Cashmere the case of Carruthers v. Fisher was not cited, and in Voysey v. Armitage neither of these cases was cited, which proves how carefully judges and counsel read their Reports. J.

PRINTED TENANCY AGREEMENTS.

SIR,—I observe in your last issue, under the heading of 'Law and Professional Notes,' a communication from Mr. Uttley, solicitor, relative to a letter appearing in a Manchester paper concerning printed tenancy agreements.

The letter apparently accuses landlords of being unscrupulous and of leading tenants into traps, inasmuch as they grant tenancies 'for one year and so on from year to year' (thereby binding tenants to two years certain), instead of simple year to year tenancies, whereby tenants may leave at the end of the first year.

Now, surely, if a tenant chooses blindly to accept a tenancy agreement without having it perused by a solicitor (which doubtless might cost 6*s.* 8*d.*), he deserves to suffer. It is the old story that 'when a man is his own lawyer he has a fool for his client,' and I do not see that he can complain, for 'Ignorantia juris non excusat.'

It seems to me very unfair to accuse a landlord of being unscrupulous merely because a tenant chooses to accept the terms offered him; and surely that landlord is a wise man who draws his tenancy agreements so as to bind a tenant for two years rather than allow him to take a recently beautified house and then to have him leave at the expiration of a year, from perhaps mere caprice, having in the meantime during his tenancy pulled the house about, thus necessitating a fresh decoration.

Here in the North of England it is customary for yearly tenancies to be made for one year certain and so on from year to year, and I fail to see why a landlord may not dictate what terms he likes to an intending tenant, who is at liberty to accept or reject them as he thinks proper. R. W. WILDE.

Manchester: Jan. 21.

THE RECORDERSHIP OF NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

SIR,—In your comment at p. 38 of last week's issue of the LAW JOURNAL you lightly touch the legal blunders of some of your lay contemporaries, but there is an inaccuracy in the paragraph.

The present recorder of Newcastle-under-Lyme is Mr. H. T. Boddam, who was appointed to the office a few months since upon the resignation of Mr. Underhill, Q.C. You have, in the paragraph referred to, named Mr. Underhill, Q.C., as the recorder; it is a singular mischance. GEO. E. SOLOMON.

[We are obliged to our correspondent for the correction. He is quite right. Mr. Underhill is no longer recorder of Newcastle-under-Lyme, having been transferred in August last to the recordership of West Bromwich.—ED. L. J.]

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

BANKER—FORGED CHEQUES.

ON January 20, before Mr. Justice Mathew and a special jury, the case of Chatterton v. The London and County Bank was heard. This was an action by an insurance broker to obtain repayment of a sum of 520*l.* paid by defendants out of his account on forged cheques. The defendants denied that the cheques were forged, and said that if they were forged the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to the loss, and was not, therefore, entitled to recover. The case was originally tried before Mr. Justice Day and a special jury on April 16 last, when the jury found for the defendants. On application to a Divisional Court, consisting of Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Justice Charles, and Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, a new trial was ordered, and this was confirmed by the Court of Appeal, composed of the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Lindley and Lord Justice Lopes. The short facts of the case, as opened by counsel, were these: In 1887, the plaintiff, who banked, and still banks, with the defendants, had a confidential clerk named Noad, the son of a clergyman. It was Noad's duty to put cheques before him to sign, with the accounts on which they were due. Having examined the vouchers, he would sign the necessary cheques, which were to bearer, and were always crossed. The body of the cheque was filled up by Noad. Matters went on until August 14, 1888, when plaintiff had occasion to go to the bank himself. The cashier called his attention to the fact that his signatures varied a good deal, but as he had been using a box of sample pens he attributed the variation to that fact, and said so to the cashier. On returning to his office, however, he mentioned the incident to Noad, and told him to get him a box of his old pens. Next day Noad did not appear, and wrote saying he was ill, and from that day to this he has never been seen. Inquiries were then made, and it was found that not only had over 500*l.* been obtained by Noad on forged cheques, but over 200*l.* from the cash-box.—Mr. J. H. Chatterton, the plaintiff, examined by Mr. Robson, gave evidence as to the course of business in his office. He used to check the pass-book with the ledger. Noad would read entries from the ledger, and he would tick the amounts off in the pass-book. What Noad must have done was to get the forged cheques out of his pass-book at the bank and destroy them. All he would then have to do would be to read out the amounts of forged cheques as if they appeared in the ledger, and as they appeared, of course, in the pass-book, they would be ticked off. The cheques, the subject of the action, numbered twenty-five, and were almost all paid over the counter, being drawn in favour of regular customers of his, and were uncrossed.—Cross-examined by Mr. Finlay, Q.C.: His accounts had not been audited during the period over which the frauds extended, as his auditor was ill, and he waited for him to get well. He never compared his returned cheques either with the pass-book or the counterfoils in the cheque-book. He ticked off the entries in the pass-book as read out, as he supposed, by Noad from the ledger. With one exception—that of the last forged cheque—all the forged cheques were missing. Noad never had his authority to sign cheques. Noad could not have obtained his signature by fraud; the cheques must have been forged. Noad had left behind him memoranda relating to all the cheques, but no confession that he had forged them.—Evidence not having been called for the defence, Mr. Bigham, Q.C., addressed the jury on behalf of plaintiff, and submitted that there could be no doubt that the cheques were forged, and forged by Noad. That being so, what had plaintiff done to disentitle him from recovering his money from the bank? Was there any duty cast upon him to conduct his affairs in an unusual manner to protect the bank? He had said that he never signed a cheque except when he had the account on which it was due before him. He had never given Noad signed cheques in blank, or given him any authority to sign for him. That being so, the case was an undefended one.—Mr. Finlay, Q.C., on behalf of defendants, contended that Noad could not have obtained cheques without discovery unless he obtained them from the plaintiff, no doubt by fraud. Week after week the bank sent in its pass-book and returned cheques, and no complaint was made until after Noad had bolted. If plaintiff had adopted the ordinary precaution of comparing his old cheques with the pass-book or the counterfoil cheque-book, the fraud must have been discovered on the very first cheque being brought to his notice. Because Noad was a rogue, it did not follow that he was necessarily a forger, and he submitted that he would shrink from the more serious crime when he could obtain the same results by fraudulently obtaining his master's signature, in which case the bank would not be liable. Even if the cheques were forged, could it be said that plaintiff by his conduct had not led the defendants to believe that he had examined his book and found his accounts correct? It might be said that no duty was cast on plaintiff to examine his pass-book, but if he did so and ticked off the entries, surely it was his fault if the bank were deceived.—Mr. Justice Mathew, in summing up the case to the jury, described it as one of immense interest to all commercial men, dealing as it did with the relations existing between banks and their customers. What was the contract existing between a bank and its customers? To debit them only with such cheques as they drew. The meaning of that was that the bank took upon themselves the risk. It might be said that was hard on the banker, but he must be supposed to know his own business, and on that basis make his own bargain. The first question was, Were the cheques forged? But the bank had called no evidence to prove their genuineness. That Noad was a rogue and a forger no one could doubt, because it was common ground that the last cheque—the only one not destroyed—was a forgery. Was it, therefore, likely that that was his only effort in that branch of crime? It was said on defendants' behalf that Noad would shrink from forgery when he could obtain his master's signature by fraud, and then alter the figures. That, however, was a matter for them to consider. The second question was, Had the bank been misled by plaintiff's conduct, and had plaintiff by his conduct disentitled himself to recover from the bank? If the bank had proved that they were misled—and they had not done so—could it be said that plaintiff had done anything wrong because he conducted his business in his own way? People in business were not always guarding against fraud, but against mistakes. Supposing plaintiff had told Noad to examine his pass-book and compare the returned cheques with it and with the counterfoils, would the bank have any right to complain? And yet in that case the frauds would not have been discovered any sooner in the ordinary course of events. His lordship then proceeded to review the evidence carefully, and left the following questions to the jury: (1) Were the cheques forged? (2) If so, did the plaintiff so act as to lead the bank to believe they might honour the cheques now admitted to be forgeries, and did the bank do so because of his acts? (3) What were the plaintiff's acts which misled the bank?—The jury found for the plaintiff for the amount claimed—520*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.*—Judgment accordingly.—Mr. Bigham, Q.C., and Mr. Robson were for the plaintiff; Mr. Finlay, Q.C., and Mr. C. K. Francis for the defendants.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

INDICTMENT—ADDITION OF COUNTS WITHOUT LEAVE.

In the case of Regina v. Aylmer, which was heard by the recorder on January 14, the defendant was indicted for publishing a defamatory libel of and concerning F. Lange, and on this charge he had been committed by the magistrate. The bill preferred to and found by the grand jury contained counts charging a scienter. The leave of the Court to add these counts had been refused.—Mr. Forrest Fulton, M.P., on the case being called on, submitted, on behalf of the defendant, that the whole indictment must be quashed on the grounds—(1) that the counts charging scienter had been improperly added; and (2) that the evidence before the grand jury having been given on both sets of counts must have influenced them to find the whole bill.—Mr. Woodfall (with him Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., M.P.), for the prosecution, said that although the counts had been added contrary to the leave of the Court, yet they were properly added within 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1; that, if the Court had power to prevent these counts going to the jury, any such discretion in the Court could only be exercised after the evidence had been given, which would enable it to form an opinion as to whether the counts were founded on the same materials as those before the magistrate; that there being no error on the face of the indictment, the Court had no power to quash the indictment as a whole; and that it was not competent to this Court to inquire as to what had been the nature of the proceedings before the grand jury.—The recorder quashed the indictment.

ATTEMPTING TO CORRUPT A JURY.

On January 17, before the recorder, James Baker surrendered and was indicted for unlawfully and knowingly attempting and endeavouring to corrupt a jury sworn to give a true verdict according to the evidence in the issue joined between the Queen and Bernard Boaler upon an indictment against him for having published a defamatory libel concerning the directors of the Briton Medical and General Life Association (Limited), and to incline the jury to be more favourable to the side of the said Bernard Boaler by persuasion, entreaties, entertainments, and other unlawful means, and so committing acts of embracery.—Mr. Besley moved the Court to quash the indictment, and said that no search had been able to find any conviction for embracery. With regard to embracery, they had to go back to the time of Edward III. The learned counsel went on to quote 'Russell on Crimes,' and the report of the Royal Commission in 1879 on the criminal law. He submitted that there must be an attempt to influence an individual, and not a body like a jury. The jurors supposed to have been embraced were not named in the indictment. The indictment simply referred to 'a jury,' and did not mention names. The corrupt means were not set out.—Mr. Wightman Wood followed on the same side: 'Corrupting a jury,' he pointed out, was a conventional expression, and was inaccurate when mentioned in an indictment. What ought to be alleged was that certain jurors mentioned by name were corrupted. The learned counsel quoted 'Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law,' p. 77, and said that the word 'jury' was not used, but only 'a juryman.' The offence of embracery was the embracing of a juror. He therefore submitted that the indictment which alleged an attempt to influence a jury instead of an attempt to influence certain jurors, and mentioning their names, was bad. He argued also that the nature of the persuasion and entertainment ought to be set out, and that the words 'other unlawful means' were far too vague for an indictment. He therefore submitted that the indictment ought to be quashed as the names of the jurymen were not mentioned in it, and the means of corruption were not stated sufficiently, and the words 'other unlawful means' were too vague.—Mr. Fulton argued that the offence was sufficiently stated. The charge was unlawfully attempting to influence a jury. There was no precedent on which the indictment could be drawn.—The recorder said that this was an indictment at common law, and there did not appear to be any precedent for the indictment. What they found was that where the offence was alluded to in the Act 32 Hen. VIII., in 'Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law' and in the Report of the Royal Commission, and also in the draft bill drawn in conformity with the recommendations of that report, the language had been singularly uniform, and in every case the allusion had been not to a body as a jury, but always referred definitely to individuals. In his opinion the indictment was bad, and must be quashed.—The indictment was accordingly quashed, and the defendant was discharged.—Mr. Forrest Fulton and Mr. Courthope-Munroe were counsel for the prosecution; Mr. Besley and Mr. Wightman Wood appeared for the defence.

COUNTY COURT.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.

At the Brighton County Court Judge Martineau recently heard two actions brought by Mr. Moul and others against the Devonshire Park Company and Mr. Norfolk Megone, conductor of the company's grand orchestra. The actions were brought by the various plaintiffs to substantiate their claims under the International Copyright Acts. It appeared that the French authors of dramatic and musical works had formed themselves into a society for the purpose of protecting their works from piracy in other countries. The rights of foreign authors arise by virtue of the Convention of Berne, and the society, having discovered that, in this country, that convention was being practically defied, and that certain works by M. Gounod and other French composers were being represented in England at the Devonshire Park and other places without permission, instituted these proceedings. The works concerned were of three classes—namely, those first produced prior to the year 1882, which had not obtained any registration in England, including Massenet's 'Scènes Napolitaines' and Gounod's 'Faust'; those in which there was perfect copyright in France and England, including 'Mignon' and Bizet's 'Carmen;' and those which had been produced since 1882 and had been registered, including 'Le Cid' and 'Loin du Bal.' In all these works the plaintiffs claimed the copyright and the right of representation. Mr. William Boosey (Boosey & Co., music publishers), who was called for the defence, said the copyright of foreign music would rarely be bought by English publishers if there were any restrictions as to performance. If they were to give up this répertoire, which they had legitimately acquired, they might as well close their halls of entertainment at once. In this case his Honour reserved judgment. In an action brought by Mr. Moul against Herr Groening, of the Brighton West Pier, his Honour gave a verdict for the defendant, with costs. The claim in this case was in respect of the performance of the 'Valse Caprice,' by Mayeur. His Honour held that, the composer having failed to copyright it and acquire the sole right of performance in England, the composition became public property. The judge invited an appeal, so that his decision might be reviewed.

BAR STUDENTS' EXAMINATIONS.

HILARY, 1891.

GENERAL examination of students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on December 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, 1890. The Council of Legal Education have awarded studentships in Jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas, to continue for a period of two years, to WHITE, ARCHER MORESBY, of the Middle Temple.

CHAYTOR, ALFRED HENRY, of the Inner Temple.

And studentships in Jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas, for one year, to MAJID, ABDUL, of the Middle Temple.

KINGDON, FREDERICK WILLIAM WASHINGTON, of the Middle Temple.

The Council also awarded to the following students certificates that they had satisfactorily passed a public examination:—

ADAMS, WILLIAM H., of the Middle Temple.
ATKIN, PERCY H., of the Middle Temple.
BAILEY, JOHN C., of the Inner Temple.
BATESON, ALEXANDER D., of the Inner Temple.
BIRCH, FRANCIS H., of the Inner Temple.
BOND, JOHN W. G., of the Inner Temple.
BRODHURST, BERNARD E. S., of the Inner Temple.
BUCH, TRIMBUCKRAY TRICAMRAY MAZMOONDER, of the Middle Temple.
BULLER, WALTER L., of the Inner Temple.
BURNETT, WILLIAM F., of Lincoln's Inn.
CHARTERIS, HON. EDWARD E., of the Inner Temple.
CLEGG, THOMAS B., of Gray's Inn.
CONNOLLY, PAUL, of the Inner Temple.
CUTTER, THOMAS, of Gray's Inn.
DE VITRÉ, DENNIS F. D., of the Inner Temple.
DOVE, FRANCIS T., of Lincoln's Inn.
EVANS, PEPYAT W., of the Inner Temple.
EVANS, WILLIAM H., of the Middle Temple.
FRASER, JAMES A., of the Inner Temple.
GADDUM, ARTHUR L. R., of the Inner Temple.
GANDHI, MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND, of the Inner Temple.
GATES, FRANK C., of Lincoln's Inn.
GLOVER, ARNOLD, of the Inner Temple.
GREIG, THOMAS, of the Inner Temple.
HARDY, HAROLD, of Gray's Inn.
HENDERSON, JAMES S., of the Middle Temple.
HOGG, ALAN F., of the Inner Temple.
HUGHES, RICHARD, of the Middle Temple.
HUSSEY, HENRY P., of the Inner Temple.
JAY, WILLIAM C. P., of the Inner Temple.
KING, GEORGE C., of Lincoln's Inn.
LAWSON, HARRY LAWSON WEBSTER, of the Inner Temple.
LEEPER, ALEXANDER, of the Middle Temple.
MARRIOTT, CHARLES B., of the Inner Temple.
MATTHEWS, VIVIAN, of the Inner Temple.
MISRA, JAGDRI SUNKAR, of the Middle Temple.
MONEY, WALTER M'LACHLAN, of the Inner Temple.
MONGAN, HERBERT J., of Lincoln's Inn.
MOORE, ARTHUR, of the Inner Temple.
MORGAN-BROWN, HUBERT, of the Middle Temple.
MORTEN, VIVIAN, of the Inner Temple.
NAYUDU, COTTARI SOORYA PRAKASHA RAO, of the Middle Temple.
O'CONNOR, ARTHUR J. A., of the Middle Temple.
PAKENHAM, THOMAS C., of the Inner Temple.
PARODI, HORACE P., of the Inner Temple.
PHILLIMORE, GEORGE G., of the Middle Temple.
PHILLIPS, ARTHUR G., of the Middle Temple.
PIRES, GEORGE F., of the Middle Temple.
PORRAL, JOHN M., of the Inner Temple.
PRESTON, CHARLES S., of the Inner Temple.
NARAYAN, RAJ, of the Middle Temple.
RAM, DEWAN SHADI, of the Inner Temple.
ROCHERY, LOUIS G. G., of the Middle Temple.
RYAN, JOHN, of the Inner Temple.
ST. CLAIR, JAMES L. C., of Lincoln's Inn.
SAVAGE, GABRIEL H., of the Middle Temple.
SELBY-BIGGE, LEWIS A., of the Inner Temple.
SLADE, WYNDHAM N., of the Inner Temple.
SMITH, JAMES, of the Inner Temple.
STATHAM, FRANCIS, of Lincoln's Inn.
STONEY, WILLIAM, of Lincoln's Inn.
SWEET, HENRY T. D., of Lincoln's Inn.
TAYLOR, CHARLES, of the Inner Temple.
THOMPSON, WILLIAM L., of the Middle Temple.
THORNE, HERBERT S., of the Middle Temple.
THORNTON, ALFRED H. R., of the Inner Temple.
TIMMIS, THOMAS S., of Lincoln's Inn.
TINGEY, WILLIAM H., of the Inner Temple.
TOMLIN, THOMAS J. C., of the Middle Temple.
TURNER, GEORGE, of the Middle Temple.
TURNER, JOHN E. P., of Lincoln's Inn.
WATKINS, WATKIN J. Y. S., of the Inner Temple.
WATTS, WILLIAM N., of the Middle Temple.
WHITBREAD, FRANCIS P., of the Inner Temple.
WHITTAKER, OLDHAM, of the Inner Temple.
WOOD, KENNETH F., of Lincoln's Inn.
WRIGHT, CLAUDIUS E., of Gray's Inn.

Out of 109 candidates examined, 77 passed.

The following students passed a satisfactory examination in Roman Law:—

Motiram Showkiram Advani, of the Inner Temple; John G. Allen, of the Inner Temple; Edward E. H. Atkin, of the Middle Temple; Edmund A. Basilon, of Lincoln's Inn;

Charles D. Benham, of the Inner Temple; Thomas R. Blakeley, of the Inner Temple; Frank Brisley, of Gray's Inn; Philip V. Broke, of Lincoln's Inn; James Burchell, of the Inner Temple; William Burton, of Gray's Inn; Henry N. G. Bushby, of the Inner Temple; John G. Calverley, of the Inner Temple; Kamalanabha Rama Chandra, of Lincoln's Inn; Walter G. Clay, of the Inner Temple; John D. Lucas, of the Middle Temple; Frank H. Colam, of the Middle Temple; Ward Coldridge, of Lincoln's Inn; Basil W. Crump, of the Middle Temple; Herbert D. Darbishire, of Lincoln's Inn; Hugh M. Davidson, of the Middle Temple; Keshav Ganesh Deshpandi, of the Middle Temple; Francis X. D'Souza, of the Middle Temple; Jacob A. J. De Villiers, of the Middle Temple; Charles Dixon, of Lincoln's Inn; William V. R. Fane, of the Inner Temple; Alfred E. Field, of the Inner Temple; Algernon M. Fleet, of the Middle Temple; Frederick T. Galsworthy, of Lincoln's Inn; Richard P. Glasgow, of the Middle Temple; Harprasad Sing Gour, of the Inner Temple; James W. H. Gully, of the Inner Temple; Joseph Gundry, of the Inner Temple; Abdul Hakim Khan, of the Middle Temple; Frank O. Hartley, of the Middle Temple; George F. Howe, of Gray's Inn; Arthur Hudson, of the Inner Temple; Joseph H. Hume-Rothery, of Lincoln's Inn; Richard E. Jackson, of the Inner Temple; William Jones, of Gray's Inn; George H. B. Kenrick, of the Middle Temple; Gilbert A. Koek, of the Middle Temple; Richard O. B. Lane, of the Inner Temple; Hormasji Bapuji Liskari, of the Middle Temple; H. G. Leitner, of the Middle Temple; Charles H. C. Livesey, of the Inner Temple; Reginald H. Long-Innes, of Lincoln's Inn; George R. Lowndes, of Lincoln's Inn; Egerton M. C. Macdona, of the Middle Temple; Alick H. H. Maclean, of the Middle Temple; Robert R. Marett, of the Inner Temple; Joseph S. E. Martin, of the Middle Temple; George F. Milne-Redhead, of the Middle Temple; Edward A. Mitchell-Innes, of the Middle Temple; Hubert S. Moore, of the Inner Temple; John Nisbet, of the Middle Temple; Nurullah Shah, of the Middle Temple; Bernard Perks, of the Inner Temple; Alan Prentice, of the Middle Temple; Alexander P. O. Ramsay, of the Inner Temple; Belal Ahmed Mohamed Raoof, of Lincoln's Inn; Richard W. Reynolds, of the Inner Temple; John F. T. Royds, of the Middle Temple; Hugh M. St. Aubyn, of the Inner Temple; Harold Sands, of the Middle Temple; William H. Scratton, of the Inner Temple; Mohammad Shafi, of the Middle Temple; John R. Shaw, of the Middle Temple; Tranquebar Srinivasan, of Gray's Inn; Robert W. Stent, of the Inner Temple; Wasey Sterry, of Lincoln's Inn; Shunpei Uyemura, of the Middle Temple; Walter R. Warren, of the Inner Temple; Joseph Watson, of Gray's Inn; Thomas S. Whittaker, of the Middle Temple; Bernard Wicks, of the Inner Temple; Edward K. Williamson, of the Middle Temple; Joseph G. Willis, of the Inner Temple; Robert J. Willis, of Gray's Inn; and Mohammed Zahoor, of the Middle Temple.

Examined, 89; passed, 79.

At the December examination, 1890, on the subjects of the lectures of the professors of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, December 22 and 23, 1890, the Council of Legal Education awarded the following prizes to the undermentioned students:—

Roman Law, Jurisprudence, Constitutional Law and Legal History, and Public International Law.

ARCHER M. WHITE, of the Middle Temple, a prize of 50*l.*

ARTHUR S. MAY, of Gray's Inn, a prize of 25*l.*

JOHN B. C. STEPHEN, of Gray's Inn, a prize of 15*l.*

FREDERICK W. GILKS, of the Inner Temple, a prize of 10*l.*

Equity.

RICHARD DENISON CUMBERLAND-JONES, Inner Temple, a prize of 50*l.*

FERRAR REGINALD MOSTYN CLEAVER, Middle Temple, a prize of 10*l.*

Common Law.

The result of the examination was as follows:—(1) P. J. Padshah; (2) A. H. Graham; (3) C. B. Gedge; (4) Anthony Maxwell; (5) Fateh Chand. Mr. Graham was disqualified from receiving the second prize by reason of not having given the notice required by the regulations; the council, therefore, awarded as follows:

PESJANJI JAMASJI PADSHAH, Middle Temple, a prize of 50*l.*

CECIL BERTIE GEDGE, Inner Temple, a prize of 25*l.*

ANTHONY MAXWELL, Middle Temple, a prize of 15*l.*

FATEH CHAND, Middle Temple, a prize of 10*l.*

Real and Personal Property Law.

FREDERICK W. W. KINGDON, Middle Temple, a prize of 50*l.*

EDWARD C. JACKMAN, Middle Temple, a prize of 25*l.*

THOMAS G. DAVIES, Middle Temple, a prize of 15*l.*

The council have also awarded to the students who obtained the greatest aggregate number of marks in the subjects of the lectures given by two of the professors, viz.:

Equity and Common Law.

THOMAS P. PERKS, Gray's Inn, a prize of 70*l.*

Equity and the Law of Real and Personal Property.

KENNETH F. WOOD, Lincoln's Inn, a prize of 30*l.*

BAR LECTURES AND EXAMINATIONS.

ROMAN LAW.

THE Professor of Roman Law (Mr. E. C. Clark) will, during the ensuing educational term, deliver a course of twelve lectures in the Middle Temple Hall on 'The Roman Law of Persons, Legislative and Judicative.' The first lecture will be delivered on Friday, January 16, at 3 P.M., and the subsequent lectures on Wednesdays and Fridays at the same hour.

EQUITY.

The Professor of Equity (Mr. Horton Smith, Q.C.) will, during the ensuing educational term, deliver a course of twelve lectures in Lincoln's Inn Hall on 'Specific Performance.' The first lecture will be delivered on Thursday, January 15, at 4.15 P.M., and the subsequent lectures at the same hour on Mondays and Thursdays.

LAW OF REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

The Professor of the Law of Real and Personal Property (Mr. Elphinstone) will, during the ensuing educational term, deliver a course of twelve lectures in Gray's Inn Hall on 'Transfers of Personal Property.' The first lecture will be delivered on Friday, January 16, at 4.15 P.M., and the subsequent lectures at the same hour on Wednesdays and Fridays.

COMMON LAW.

The Professor of Common Law (Mr. E. Robertson) will, during the ensuing educational term, deliver a course of twelve lectures in the Inner Temple Hall on 'Negotiable Instruments.' The first lecture will be delivered on Thursday, January 15, at 3 P.M., and the subsequent lectures at the same hour on Mondays and Thursdays.

NOTE.—In December, 1891, there will be four examinations, one in the subject of the lectures given by each professor, open (subject as hereinafter mentioned) to all students who have during the year 1891 attended the lectures of any of the professors, but no student will be admitted to the examination in the subjects of the lectures of any professor unless he shall have attended at least two-thirds of the lectures given during the year by such professor. No student will be admitted to more than two examinations; and no student who shall have obtained a studentship will be admitted to any such examination. No student who has received a prize in any subject shall again compete for the same or any other prize in the same subject.

After the examinations the following prizes will, on the recommendation of the committee, be given (that is to say): To the students who shall have passed the best examination in the subjects of the lectures of each professor, first prize, 50*l.*; second prize, 25*l.*; third prize, 15*l.*; fourth prize, 10*l.* And a first and second prize, of 70*l.* and 30*l.* respectively, to the students who obtain the greatest aggregate number of marks in the examination in the subjects of the lectures given by any two of the professors.

No student will be entitled to more than one prize, but a student will receive the prize of the highest value to which he shall appear to be entitled.

The committee will not be obliged to recommend any of the above prizes to be awarded if the result of the examination be such as, in their opinion, will not justify such recommendation.

Any further information required by students may be obtained on application to the Clerk of the Council, Lincoln's Inn Hall.

By order of the Council,
(Signed) S. H. WALPOLE,
Chairman.

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn:
December 22, 1890.

LONDON EXAMINATIONS IN LAW.

AT the LL.B. examination for 1891 the examiners were: In Common Law and Law and Principles of Evidence—Lumley Smith, Esq., M.A., Q.C., and William Willis, Esq., LL.D., B.A., Q.C. In Equity and Real and Personal Property—Leonard Field, Esq., B.A., and R. Horton Smith, Esq., M.A., Q.C. In Roman Law—Prof. J. E. C. Munro, LL.M., LL.D., and Prof. Edmund Robertson, M.A., LL.D., M.P.

The following is the pass list: First Division—George Duncan Grey. Second Division—Benjamin Amsden, B.A., Frederick Walton Atkinson, Cecil George Brown, Edward Frank Champion, Leonard Scott Iliff, William Harrison Moore, John M. Newnham, B.A., Thomas Probert Perks, Arthur Sansome Preston, John Arthur Slater, B.A., George Charles Smith, and Ernest Ivens Watson.

At the Intermediate Examination in Laws the examiners were: In Jurisprudence and Roman Law—Prof. J. E. C. Munro, LL.M., LL.D., and Prof. Edmund Robertson, M.A., LL.D., M.P. In Constitutional History of England—Henry E. Malden, Esq., M.A., and T. E. Scrutton, Esq., M.A., LL.B.

The following is the pass list: First Division—Rowland Allen, James Sinclair Baxter, Alexander Millington Begg, B.A., Franklin Coles Boucher, Joseph Charleston, B.A., Edwin Thomas Close, Edwin Dodshon, James Frodsham, Frederick William Gilks, B.A., John Turnley Luscombe, Henry William Macrosty, B.A., John Davies Pryce, Frederick William Richards, Gerard Stanley Sanders, Roland Moffatt P. Willoughby, and Charles Norton Wood. Second Division—Frederick Broadbridge, Charles James Robb Brown, Charles Arthur Buckley, Lionel Cresswell, Thomas Wilson Dougan, M.A., Eugene Guye, Francis John Hunt, Gwyn Morris, James Murray, Ananias Henry Nash, David Nimmo, Arthur Claude Ormerod, Matthew Colbeck Preston, Montague James Raymond, George Sedgwick, Albert Ambrose Strong, Stephen Walter Thomas, William Henry Tindall, and Mark Francis Waters.

COUNCIL OF LEGAL EDUCATION.

EASTER EXAMINATION, 1891.

Examination of Candidates for Pass Certificates.

THE attention of students is requested to the following rules:—

No student shall receive from the council the certificate of fitness for call to the bar required by the four Inns of Court, unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination in the following subjects—viz. (1) Roman law; (2) the law of real and personal property; (3) common law; and (4) equity.

No student (except such as come under the next stated rule) shall be examined for call to the bar until he shall have kept nine terms; but students shall have the option of passing the examination in Roman law at any time after having kept four terms.

A student who, previously to his admission at an Inn of Court, was a solicitor in practice for not less than five years, may be examined for call to the bar without keeping any terms.

An examination will be held in March next, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a certificate of fitness for being called to the bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name, in full, personally or by letter, at the treasurer's or steward's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Monday, March 9, next: and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to obtain a certificate preliminary to a call to the bar; or whether he is merely desirous of passing the examination in Roman law under the above-stated rule.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, March 17, next, and will be continued on the Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday following.

It will take place in the Hall of Lincoln's Inn, and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order: Tuesday morning, March 17, at ten, on the law of real and personal property; Wednesday morning, March 18, at ten, on common law; Thursday morning, March 19, at ten, on equity; Friday morning, March 20, at ten, on Roman law.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, and on the same subjects, as above appointed for the examination by printed questions.

The examiner in the law of real and personal property will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of the law of real and personal property, including the provisions of the Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts, with reference chiefly to the following treatises on those subjects—viz. Williams' 'Principles of the Law of Real Property;' Williams' 'Principles of the Law of Personal Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Real Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Personal Property;' Edwards' 'Compendium of the Law of Property in Land.'

The examiner in common law will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of (1) The law of contracts; (2) the law of torts; and (3) the criminal law—with reference chiefly to Mr. Broom's 'Commentaries,' eighth edition, 1888; (4) the procedure in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice

—with reference to Book I. of the same work; and (5) Foulke's 'Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law,' third edition (founded on Smith's 'Action at Law').

The examiner in equity will examine in the following subjects as discussed in White and Tudor's leading Cases, or as affected by later statutes and decisions: (1) Implied trusts conversion (Howe v. Lord Dartmouth); (2) ademption and satisfaction; (3) injunctions in cases of waste, riparian rights, and nuisance; (4) marshalling; (5) defences to action for specific performance on grounds of (a) mistake, surprise, or unreasonableness in contract, (b) want of mutuality in contract; (6) married women's property.

The examiners in Roman law will examine in the 'Institutes of Justinian,' Books I. and II.; Book III., Title 13, to the end of the book; Book IV., Titles 1 to 5 inclusive.

TRINITY EXAMINATION, 1891

Examination of Candidates for Studentships and Pass Certificates.

The attention of students is requested to the following rules:—

As an encouragement to students to study jurisprudence and Roman civil law, twelve studentships of one hundred guineas each shall be established and divided equally into two classes; one class of such studentships to continue for two years, and to be open for competition to any student as to whom not more than four terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; and another class to continue for one year only, and to be open for competition to any student, not then already entitled to a studentship, as to whom not less than four and not more than eight terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; two of each class of such studentships will be awarded by the council, on the recommendation of the committee, after every examination before Hilary and Trinity terms respectively, to the two students of each set of competitors who shall have passed the best examination in both jurisprudence and Roman civil law. But the committee shall not be obliged to recommend any studentship to be awarded if the result of the examination be such as in their opinion not to justify such recommendation. Where any candidates appear to be equal or nearly equal in merit, the council may, if they think fit, divide the studentship between them equally, or in such proportions as they consider just. Where in any year a studentship in either class is not awarded by reason of the candidates not appearing to deserve it, the council may, if they think fit, appropriate it, or a portion of it, for that year to the other class, or may offer it for competition in some other subject.

No student shall receive from the council the certificate of fitness for call to the bar required by the four Inns of Court unless he shall have passed a satisfactory examination in the following subjects—viz. (1) Roman law, (2) the law of real and personal property, (3) common law, and (4) equity.

No student (except such as come under the next-stated rule) shall be examined for call to the bar until he shall have kept nine terms; but students shall have the option of passing the examination in Roman law at any time after having kept four terms.

A student who, previously to his admission at an Inn of Court, was a solicitor in practice for not less than five years, may be examined for call to the bar without keeping any terms.

An examination will be held in May next to which a student of any of the Inns of Court who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the bar will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name in full, personally or by letter, at the treasurer's or steward's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Thursday, April 29 next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or to obtain a certificate preliminary to a call to the bar, or whether he is merely desirous of passing the examination in Roman law under the above-stated rule.

The examination will take place in the Hall of Lincoln's Inn, and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order: Thursday and Friday, May 7 and 8, at ten until one, and from two to five on each day, the examination of candidates for studentships in jurisprudence and Roman law.

The examination of candidates for pass certificates, and for pass in Roman law only, will take place as follows:—

Monday morning, May 11, at ten, on real and personal property law.

Tuesday morning, May 12, at ten, on common law.

Wednesday morning, May 13, at ten, on equity.

Thursday morning, May 14, at ten, on Roman law.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, and on the same subjects, as above appointed for the examination by printed questions.

Jurisprudence, International Law, and Roman Law.

Candidates for the studentships will be examined in all the following subjects:—

I. 'Institutes of Gaius' and 'Institutes of Justinian.'

*II. 'Digest,' book 18, title 1, 'De Contrahenda Emptione;' book 17, title 2, 'Pro Socio.'

III. History of Roman law.

IV. Principles of jurisprudence, with special reference to the writings of Bentham, Austin, and Maine.

V. Elements of international law.

VI. Principles of private international law.

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined in the 'Institutes of Justinian,' books I. and II.; book III., title 13, to the end of the book; book IV., titles 1 to 5 inclusive.

The examiner in the law of real and personal property will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of the law of real and personal property, including the provisions of the Conveyancing and Settled Land Acts, with reference chiefly to the following treatises on those subjects—viz. Williams' 'Principles of the Law of Real Property;' Williams' 'Principles of the Law of Personal Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Real Property;' Goodeve's 'Modern Law of Personal Property;' Edwards' 'Compendium of the Law of Property in Land.'

The examiner in common law will examine in the following subjects: The elementary principles of (1) the law of contracts; (2) the law of torts, and (3) the criminal law—with reference chiefly to Mr. Broom's 'Commentaries,' eight edition, 1888; (4) the Procedure in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice—with reference to Book I. of the same work; and (5) Foulke's 'Elementary View of the Proceedings in an Action at Law,' third edition (founded on Smith's 'Action at Law').

The examiner in equity will examine in the following subjects as discussed in White and Tudor's 'Leading Cases,' or as affected by later statutes and decisions:

* Same portions of 'Digest' for Hilary Examination, 1892.

(1) Implied trusts, conversion (Howe v. Lord Dartmouth); (2) ademption and satisfaction; injunctions in cases of waste, riparian rights, and nuisance; (4) marshalling; (5) defences to action for specific performance on grounds of (a) mistake, surprise, or unreasonableness in contract; (b) want of mutuality in contract; (6) married woman's property.

[By order of the council,
(Signed) S. H. WALPOLE,
Chairman.

Council Chamber, Lincoln's Inn Hall:
December 22, 1890.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

THIS Act, which applies to England and Wales only, came into operation on the 1st inst.; and the first step taken under it appears to have been the issue on that day of a circular letter from Mr. Purcell, the registrar of joint-stock companies, to the liquidators of all companies that have not been legally dissolved.

In calling attention to section 15 of the Act, and to the rules framed thereunder by the Lord Chancellor, the registrar points out that, as soon as possible, and not later than the 31st inst., he must be furnished with an account, in a form prescribed by the Board of Trade, of the particulars of the liquidator's receipts and payments from the date of that functionary's first appointment down to the 31st ult.; and he at the same time reminds the liquidator that, if this account be not duly rendered within the time named, he will be liable to a penalty not exceeding 50*l.* for each day during which the default continues. Similar returns must also be sent to the registrar at intervals of half a year until the winding up of the company affected is completed. The registrar adds further, that the provisions of section 15 of the Act apply to all companies wound up, whether compulsory or under the supervision of the Court or voluntarily, and he appends to his circular letter extracts from the Act and from the rules, &c., bearing upon the matter in point, as well as the text of the forms of account, &c., that have been approved by the Board of Trade and of the affidavit required in verification of the same.

It is believed that considerable sums of money, by way of unclaimed or undistributed assets, lie in the hands of liquidators of companies. Under the provisions of the new Act, these will now have to be accounted for and at once paid into a special account at the Bank of England. The number of companies that have not been legally dissolved, and which will consequently come within the purview of the Act, is understood to be very large.

On payment to the registrar of joint-stock companies of a prescribed fee it will be open to any creditor or contributory to search the liquidator's statement of receipts and payment, or trading account (if there be one), which must now in due course be filed at Somerset House.

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

THE usual weekly meeting of the Council of the Administrative County of London was held on January 20 at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, Sir John Lubbock, M.P., the chairman, presiding.

APPEAL AGAINST ASSESSMENTS.

At the last meeting the council adopted the recommendations of the local government and taxation committee that the council should appeal to the quarter sessions against the totals of the valuation lists of the following parishes and unions: (a) St. George's, Hanover Square, (b) Holborn Union, (c) St. Marylebone, (d) St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George, Bloomsbury, (e) Shoreditch, (f) Lambeth, (g) St. George-in-the-East, (h) Stepney Union, (i) Mile End Old Town, (j) City of London Union, (k) St. Olave Union, (l) St. Saviour's Union, and (m) property at Streatham known as The Villa and Norfolk House. The council at the same time, however, resolved to adjourn until this meeting the question whether any of the appeals should be further proceeded with.

Mr. Boulnois, M.P., moved: "That no further proceedings be taken in respect of the appeals at the present time, the council not having sufficient or reliable information before it to justify the heavy expenditure (which would fall upon the rates) in prosecuting and in defending the appeals, and in furnishing professional evidence in the 5,448 cases and upwards suggested by the committee; especially as in many of the same cases the assessment committees of the metropolis have, in adjudicating, heard the ratepayers themselves as well as the Crown Surveyor of Taxes, and appeals to the Courts of law have been open in ordinary course to the Crown and others interested; and further that, in taking the extreme course proposed, the Council would not be able equitably to adjust any increased taxation between the ratepayers of the parish affected, but the same would fall upon the ratepayers now assessed to the utmost limit, as well as upon those alleged to be underrated.' He had been told that the public-houses in Marylebone were very much underrated. (Hear, hear.) Of course they would say something against the public-houses, but all he could say was that in St. Pancras precisely the same method of assessing public-houses was adopted, but they did not hear anything from the committee about underestimating such premises in St. Pancras. Those who cheered the idea that public-houses would be dealt with properly if the Council agreed to the suggestion in the report of the committee must see that the teetotallers would have to pay for the supposed laches of the licensed victuallers because there was no power to raise individual assessments. It must be done in one amount, and those unfortunate persons who were highly assessed would have to pay for those under-assessed. He complained of the report as being absolutely incorrect in stating that certain places were not assessed. The report had been got together hastily, as the committee wished to assert themselves and to show that they were doing something, and thus they thought to secure enormous renown. The question of the cost of prosecuting the appeals was also a most important one to the ratepayers, and it was said that it might cost them 50,000*l.*

Mr. Debenham, in seconding the motion, remarked that the council were asked to undertake a terrible risk in prosecuting the appeals. If they agreed to the committee's report they would be committed to an act of great injustice.

Mr. H. Vincent, M.P., supported the motion, and objected to the course of procedure adopted by the committee. Agents, he said, had been employed who had collected tittle-tattle (Cries of 'Oh, oh') as to the rents and premiums paid, and even asked. In fact, in some cases the assessments had been made at random. He trusted the council would be influenced by a sense of fairness, and not by any feeling against wealthy parishes.

Mr. Beachcroft supported the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. Campbell supported the committee, and said there had been no particular selection made in the parishes of Marylebone and St. George's, Hanover Square. If there had been any unfairness in the past it should be exposed.

Mr. H. Farquhar, in supporting the motion, stated that he believed in the honesty of their assessment committee. He suggested that some uniform rate of valuation should be agreed upon before contesting these cases in the Courts, or that if there were any cases of under-assessment they should be dealt with in conference.

Mr. Torr pointed out that there were no fewer than eleven parishes in which re-assessments were considered desirable. One case was that of Lord Revelstoke's houses, Nos. 37 and 38 Charles Street, for which 100,000*l.* was asked. That was equal to an annual value of 4,000*l.* And yet that house was rated at 1,800*l.* There was on behalf of the wealthy parishes a great amount of sound and fury signifying nothing, and when it came to a fight they would pay and the rich parishes would relieve the poor. The need for that was shown in the fact that whilst Bethnal Green was rated at 6*s.* 6*d.* or 7*s.* in the pound, the rates in Marylebone, Kensington, the City, and other parishes were not over 5*s.*

Mr. Lawson, M.P., maintained that the committee were doing good work in the endeavour to secure uniformity in the assessment of the various parishes. It was well, however, that the council should make sure that they were acting upon accurate information. Having explained that in the case of Lord Revelstoke's house the highest offer made was 50,000*l.*, and that in the case of the sale of the residence of the Earl of Aberdeen a special price was paid owing to the extraordinary expenditure made upon the building, he contended that there was little to find fault with in the instances cited, and expressed the hope that the chairman of the committee would show that they were acting on some less flimsy grounds than those put forward by Mr. Torr—(laughter)—because he believed they were performing a public duty.

Colonel Hughes, M.P., held that the amendment meant that all the parishes were to go and do just as they liked, and, so far as St. George's, Hanover Square, was concerned, it would mean that in five years they would save 200,000*l.*

After some further discussion,

Mr. Costelloe, the chairman of the committee, in reply, assured the council that before making their recommendations they had obtained all the information possible, and had only given weight to that which was reliable.

The council divided, and there voted: For the motion, 10; against, 75; majority against, 65.

The recommendations of the committee, except with regard to land at Streatham, were agreed to.

JURORS IN WAITING.

MR. W. W. GREEN writes to the Times as follows:—

Several of the jurors summoned to attend Court XI. of the Queen's Bench this week have requested me to thank Mr. Justice Mathew for the considerate manner he has treated 'jurors in waiting.' I forwarded the enclosed letter to his lordship on Saturday, and when the jurymen (about forty) assembled in Court on Monday morning they were released until 12 o'clock whilst a 'part heard' case was concluded. At half-past 12 o'clock a fresh jury was sworn, and the judge then asked counsel if his case would conclude that day, and being answered in the negative, the 'jury in waiting' were dismissed for the remainder of the day, instead of being kept uselessly in Court until 2 o'clock. To-day Mr. Justice Mathew allowed us leave from half-past 11 until 2 o'clock, the case in hand concluding about 3 o'clock.

I am sure the judge would have relieved us from returning to the Court this afternoon had he been informed by counsel in the next case that they proposed taking it without a jury.

It is certainly time that merchants and brokers attending the Courts as jurors should be treated with more consideration.

'25 Mincing Lane: January 17.

'My Lord,—The practice of keeping twenty to thirty commercial men in Court waiting to be called until two o'clock, whilst the case in hand drags through three to four days, is a serious loss to men whose business requires their personal attention. The objection is not against doing one's duty as a juryman, but the useless time waiting in Court "to be called." Might I suggest to your lordship that where an action bears certain signs of taking the whole day or more, counsel should be consulted on the point, and if they agree that the case cannot finish before four o'clock, the master could dismiss the jury in waiting at half-past ten o'clock instead of detaining them until two o'clock. I quite realise the necessity of jurors attending each morning, as cases are sometimes settled by arrangement after Court hours. If your lordship can kindly give the matter your consideration, you will confer a favour upon busy City men.

'Yours truly,

'WM. W. GREEN.

'Mr. Justice Mathew.'

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, SIR JAMES HANNEN, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15.

Bolander v. Davies (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Hawkins, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Webley v. Lowe (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Huddleston, B., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16.

In re A. Soltykoff, ex parte H. G. Margrett (appeal of petitioning creditor from order of Registrar Linklater, dated November 29, dismissing petition).—Dismissed.

In re Marquis of Ailesbury, ex parte P. C. Mitchell (appeal of debtor from refusal of Registrar Giffard, dated December 22, to adjourn petition and from receiving order made same day).—Adjourned.

Evens v. Fenton (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Day, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Robinson & Co. v. Ricardo (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 17.

Williamson v. Savill Bros. (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated July 1, at trial before Huddleston, B., with special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Horsman v. Croaker (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Lamley v. Mayor, &c., of East Retford (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated July 4, at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, JANUARY 19.

Williams v. Buchanan (Alexander, third party) (application of plaintiff from order of the Lord Chief Justice and Hawkins, J., on report of special referee (heard February 27, 1889—restored after referee's further report).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 20.

Williams v. Buchanan (Alexander, third party).—Heard January 19; dismissed.

Cronheim v. Sedgwick (appeal of defendant Sedgwick from judgment of Day, J., dated July 16, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21.

Whitehaven Ship Building Company (in liquidation) v. Russell and others (appeal of defendants from judgment of Williams, J., dated July 18, at trial without a jury at Carlisle).—Dismissed.

Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line (1887) (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from order of Smith, J., dated August 5, at a trial without a jury at Liverpool).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15.

Attorney-General v. Morgan (appeal of defendant from judgment of North, J., dated August 6).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16.

In re Dick, deceased. Lopes v. Hume-Dick (appeal of defendant from Stirling, J., dated November 29, refusing liberty for sale and investment of part of residuary estate).—Allowed.

Bellamy v. Debenham (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of North, J., dated July 15).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 17.

E. M. G. De Vere Beauclerk (Petitioner) v. De Vere Beauclerk (Respondent) (appeal of petitioner from judgment of Butt, J., dated November 18, refusing decree of dissolution of marriage).—Part heard.

MONDAY, JANUARY 19.

E. M. G. De Vere Beauclerk (Petitioner) v. De Vere Beauclerk (Respondent).—Dismissed.

Evans v. Langley (application of plaintiff for new trial on counter-claim or judgment on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Cave, J., at Worcester).—Dismissed.

Gibbins v. Cumberland and another (application of plaintiff to set aside judgment entered for defendant, dated July 11, at trial before Grantham, J., with a jury, in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and LOPES, L.J.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 20.

Welbourne v. Porter (appeal of defendants from order of Kay, J., dated June 6, refusing to set aside judgment).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21.

Attorney-General v. Morgan (Cur. adv. vult. January 15).—Dismissed.

In re W. Heseltine, dec. Woodward v. Heseltine (appeal of defendant Lewis Simmons from order of North, J., dated December 12, restraining, dealing, &c., with goods under bill of sale).—Dismissed.

Carey and Wife v. Long's Hotel (Lim.) (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from findings of special jury and judgment, dated July 9, 1890, at trial before Pollock, B., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Hayes v. Burgess (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated July 16, 1890, at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex. Hayes v. Burgess (application of plaintiffs for judgment).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, January 26. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Tuesday, January 27.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Wednesday, January 28.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Thursday, January 29.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Friday, January 30.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Saturday, January 31.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. JAMES BLACKLOCK-LEE (of the firm of Carrick, Lee & Sons), of Brampton and Haltwhistle, has been appointed Coroner for the Eastern Division of Cumberland. Mr. Lee was admitted in 1860, and is Clerk to the Commissioners of Taxes for Eskdale Ward, and Clerk to the Brampton and Haltwhistle Highway Boards, Registrar of the Haltwhistle County Court, Superintendent-Registrar for Haltwhistle, a Commissioner for Oaths, and a Perpetual Commissioner.

Mr. Charles Norwood, of Ashford, Kent, has been appointed Superintendent-Registrar. Mr. Norwood was admitted in 1881.

Mr. James Peter Piper, M.A., Cantab (of the firm of Whyley & Piper), of Bedford, has been appointed Town Clerk of Bedford. Mr. Piper was admitted in 1862.

Mr. Charles Henry Cowlishaw (of the firm of Cooper, Chawner & Co.), of Uttoxeter, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cowlishaw was admitted November 28, 1884.

GRAY'S INN.—January 19 being the Grand Day of Hilary Term at Gray's Inn, the treasurer (Mr. James Shell) and benchers of this honourable society entertained at dinner the following guests: The Right Hon. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, M.P., the Right Hon. Lord Justice Lindley, the Hon. Mr. Justice Mathew, the Hon. Mr. Justice Romer, the Recorder of London (Sir Thomas Chambers, Q.C.), his Honour Judge Snagge, Mr. Bulwer, Q.C. (Master in Lunacy), Mr. J. C. O'Dowd, C.B., Mr. Henn Collins, Q.C., Mr. C. S. Bagot, Mr. H. Corser, Mr. G. Denman, and Mr. Hannay; and the masters of the bench present, in addition to the treasurer, were masters the Right Hon. Lord Watson, Fooks, Q.C., Pine, K.C.M.G., Hugh Shield, Q.C., Bowen Rowlands, Q.C., M.P., Beetham, Middleton, Jeremy, and Rose, and the Rev. the preacher (the Rev. J. H. Lupton).

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM JANUARY 26 TO JANUARY 31.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	January 26	January 27	January 28	January 29	January 30	January 31
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
22	Judge Harington	—	Stow-on-the-Wold	Alcester	Pershore	Solihull	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Lymington	Bournemouth	Wimborne	Wareham	—

CIRCUITS OF THE JUDGES.

Mr. Justice Denman and Mr Justice Cave will remain in town.

NOTICE.—In cases where no note is appended to the Names of the Circuit Towns both Civil and Criminal Business must be ready to be taken on the first working day; in other cases the note appended to the name of the Circuit Town indicates the day before which Civil Business will not be taken. In the case of Circuit Towns to which two Judges go there will be no alteration in the old practice.

Winter Assizes, 1891	Western	Home	South-Eastern	Oxford	Midland	North-Eastern	Northern	South Wales and Chester	North Wales, Chester, and Glamorgan
Commission days	Ld. Coleridge, L.C.J. of England. Stephen, J.	Stephen, J.	Pollock, B.	Hawkins, J. Charles, J.	Wills, J. Grantham, J.	Mathew, J. Smith, J.	Day, J. Lawrance, J	Vaughan Williams, J.	Wright, J.
Jan. Friday . 30	—	—	—	—	Aylesbury	—	—	—	—
Feb. Tuesday . 3	—	—	—	—	Bedford	—	—	—	—
Thursday . 5	—	—	—	Reading	—	—	—	—	—
Friday . 6	—	—	—	—	Northampton	—	—	—	—
Monday . 9	—	—	—	Oxford	—	—	Appleby	—	—
Wednesday . 11	—	—	—	—	Leicester	—	Carlisle	—	—
Thursday . 12	Devizes	—	—	Worcester	Saturday 14	—	—	—	—
Friday . 13	—	—	Huntingdon	Monday 16	—	—	—	—	—
Saturday . 14	—	Maidstone	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Monday . 16	Dorchester	—	Cambridge	—	—	—	—	—	—
Tuesday . 17	—	—	—	—	Oakham	—	Lancaster	—	—
Wednesday . 18	—	—	—	Gloucester	Lincoln	Newcastle	—	Haverford W.	—
Thursday . 19	—	—	Norwich	Saturday 21	Saturday 21	—	—	—	Welshpool
Friday . 20	Taunton	—	Monday 23	—	—	—	—	—	—
Saturday . 21	Monday 23	—	—	—	—	—	—	Lampeter	—
Monday . 23	—	—	—	—	—	—	Manchester	—	Dolgelly
Tuesday . 24	—	Guildford	—	Monmouth	Nottingham	—	(2)	Carmarthen	—
Wednesday . 25	—	—	—	—	Friday 27	—	—	—	Carnarvon
Thursday . 26	Bodmin	—	—	—	—	Durham	—	—	—
Friday . 27	—	—	Ipswich	Hereford	—	—	—	—	—
Saturday . 28	—	—	Mon. Mar. 2	—	—	—	—	—	Beaumaris
Mar. Monday . 2	—	—	—	Shrewsbury	—	—	—	Brecon	—
Tuesday . 3	Exeter		—	—	—	—	—	—	Ruthin
Wednesday . 4	2		—	—	Derby	—	—	—	—
Thursday . 5	—	—	—	—	(2)	York	—	Presteign	Mold
Friday . 6	—	—	—	—	Warwick	—	—	—	—
Saturday . 7	—	—	—	Stafford	(2) if needed	—	Liverpool	Chester
Monday . 9	Winchester		Chelmsford	(2)	—	—	(2)	(2)
Tuesday . 10	2	—	—	Birmingham		Leeds	—	—	—
Saturday . 14	Bristol		Hertford	(2)	—	—	—	Cardiff
Wednesday . 18	2	—	Lewes	—	—	—	—	(2)
			Saturday 21

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

GRAY'S INN MOOT.—A moot will be held in Gray's Inn Hall, on Wednesday, January 28, at 7.30 P.M., before R. B. Haldane, Esq., Q.C., M.P. Question: 'A. is an employer of labour who has in his employment: (1) Members of a trades union who are under contract to give notice before leaving his employment; (2) members of a trades union who are under no such contract; (3) Non-union men. A. refused to dismiss the non-union men. B., C., and D., officials of the union, thereupon call upon all union men to leave the employment without notice. Have B., C., and D. been guilty of any, and what, wrongful act or acts?'——The annual meeting of the above society will be held in Gray's Inn Hall, on Friday, January 30, at 7.30 P.M. punctually; the Hon. President (his Honour Judge Russell) in the chair. Members of all the Inns of Court are urgently invited to attend and take part in the proceedings.

OBITUARY.

MR. WM. FRANK JONES, barrister, died at Baroda, Ventnor, Isle of Wight, on December 27, at the age of fifty. He was the only son of Mr. Wm. Jenkin Sayer, late of Newport, Mon. He was educated at St. Mary's Hall, Oxford, and was M.A. and B.C.L. of that university. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in July 1874, having obtained an exhibition in 1871, and went the Oxford Circuit. He subsequently assumed the name of Jones. He was joint-editor of Chitty's 'Index to Reported Cases.'

Mr. Edward Ashurst Morris, M.A., Solicitor (of the firm of Ashurst, Morris, Crisp & Co.), died at his residence, 44 Cadogan Square, on December 17. He was the son of Mr. John Morris, senior partner in the firm above mentioned, and was born in 1862. He was educated at Charterhouse School, and in Germany, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and was afterwards articled to his father, and after his admission in 1886 he joined his father's firm. He died of typhoid fever. He married, in 1889, Miss Puleston, daughter of Sir J. H. Puleston, M.P., and leaves a daughter five months old. Mr. Morris had a very amiable disposition, and leaves a host of friends to mourn his loss.

MR. JOHN LUKE HAIGH, solicitor, of Selby, died on December 5, at the age of ninety. Mr. Haigh was articled to Mr. Edward Parker, of Selby, and was admitted a solicitor in Easter Term, 1840. Mr. Haigh joined the Wesleyan Methodists about sixty years ago, and became an active member of that body and a local preacher. He carried on a very successful practice at Selby, and was widely known as an able lawyer and skilled conveyancer. He leaves three daughters and two sons. He was buried on the 10th ult. at the quiet little churchyard of Brayton, near his residence, and his funeral was largely attended by his numerous friends.

LORD COLERIDGE had so far recovered from his indisposition as to be able to resume his duties. He took his seat on Monday, January 19, in the Court of the Lord Chief Justice, and proceeded with the trial of Middlesex special jury cases.

CANTERBURY CONVOCATION.—Sir James Parker Deane, Q.C., the Vicar-General, attended on January 20 at the board room of Queen Anne's Bounty Office, Westminster, and, under a commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury, prorogued the Convocation of the Province of Canterbury from the 20th inst. until Tuesday, February 3 next, to meet for the despatch of business. Sir John Hassard, the Archbishop's registrar, was present.

PROPOSED DAY CENSUS FOR THE CITY.—The City Press says: 'A movement in favour of taking a day census in the City is, we are informed, about to be set on foot by a member of the corporation. Ten years ago, it will be remembered, a similar census was taken on the initiative of the corporation, who made all the arrangements and defrayed the whole expense, which amounted, it is worthy of note, to about 1,200*l*. For various reasons it is to be hoped that the proposal will be adopted when it is formally submitted at an early meeting of the corporation. A census of the sleeping population is more or less useless as far as the one square mile is concerned, for as it is a business, and not a residential city, it is practically deserted after the day's work is done. But a day census, on the other hand, is eminently desirable, as showing what the population of the City really is, and also what industries and callings engage the attention of those who pass their working hours within the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor.'

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.—It has now been announced that the late Duke of Bedford committed suicide by shooting himself during a paroxysm of pain, and a coroner's jury have returned a verdict of 'temporary insanity.' It will be remembered that the remains of his grace were cremated, and we may have to offer some remarks later on on the important bearing the sad event has on the legal restrictions which should safeguard cremation. It is certainly to be regretted that the true cause of the death of such a prominent member of the community should not have been at once announced.—Lancet.

PRESENTATION TO MR. REGISTRAR MIDDLETON.—On January 21, in the Probate and Divorce Registry at Somerset House, a number of managing clerks of firms practising in the division presented Mr. Registrar Middleton, senior registrar, with an address on vellum. Mr. Garnett (Chester, Mayhew & Co.) introduced the deputation. Mr. Registrar Middleton, in accepting the presentation, incidentally stated that, according to the Civil Service requirements, a man must resign at the age of sixty-five, but he was now in his eighty-second year. He sincerely thanked the deputation for their testimonial.

JURORS IN WAITING.—In the Queen's Bench Division on January 21, Mr. Justice Stephen said he had received a letter from a special juryman in waiting who wanted to be allowed to go. The writer observed that the Act of Parliament exempted pharmaceutical chemists, but did not exempt him; that he had been 'kicking around' since Monday, and ought now to be told to go. 'I must tell him,' his lordship said, 'that he must stay, and that I think he ought not to have addressed me in such inelegant slang; also that he had better not 'kick,' either 'around' or otherwise.' At a later period his lordship added: 'I find that the juryman who wrote the letter asking me to let him go took the opportunity in the first place to get the officer of the Court to let him go, and has gone. I give him notice that he must attend tomorrow, and if he does not attend he will be heavily fined.'

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.—Their lordships (the Right Hon. the President and Mr. Justice Butt) sat as a Divisional Court to hear Admiralty appeals from County Courts. When their lordships had taken their seats on Monday, January 19, Sir Walter Phillimore rose and said: My lords, before the business of the Court begins, may I take the opportunity, on behalf of my brethren of the bar, of whom I happen to be the senior present, of expressing respectfully to your lordships the pride and the joy and the satisfaction which we all feel in learning that the president's long and varied and most honourable career as a judge is not to find its termination in this Court, but is to be completed by his promotion to the dignity of a Lord of Appeal?—The President: Sir Walter Phillimore, I am deeply indebted to you for the kindness you have shown in what you have said on behalf of yourself and your brethren of the bar. I assure you it is not without very mixed feelings indeed, in which sadness I must not say largely preponderates, but largely enters, that I am separating myself from you. I beg leave to say that I have always considered myself most fortunate in the gentlemen of the bar who have habitually practised before me. I have to render to them my most hearty thanks for the assistance which they have given me. They have always shown that they feel themselves to be assisting in the administration of the law—which is the true function of a barrister. I again thank you most heartily for this unexpected expression of your feelings towards me, and I wish you all happiness and success.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—A sitting of the Court was held on January 19 for the purpose of the formal confirmation by the commissioners of the appointment of Mr. Henry Kemp Avory to the office of Clerk of Arraigns of the Central Criminal Court, vacant by the resignation through failing health of Mr. E. J. Read. The Lord Mayor nominated Mr. Avory to the office last week, and the nomination was now confirmed by the commissioners. The formal document confirming Mr. Avory's appointment was signed by Sir Thomas Chambers, Q.C., the recorder, and Mr. Alderman Evans, on the part of the commissioners of the Court. The business of the sessions was concluded and the sessions were adjourned.

THE NEW LORD OF APPEAL.—The Queen has been pleased to approve the appointment of the Right Hon. Sir James Hannen, D.C.L., President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, to be Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, in the room of the Right Hon. Sir Barnes Peacock, deceased. Sir James Hannen is just seventy years of age. It is forty-three years since he was called to the bar, and twenty-three since he took his seat on the bench as a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. He was soon transferred to the Court of Probate, and has now been for many years President of the Probate Division of the High Court. Those who remember the dignity and impartiality with which Sir James presided over the Special Commission Court, and the unwearied labour which he devoted to the inquiry, will recognise that this promotion has been well earned. Sir James was knighted in 1868, and added to the Privy Council in 1872. He is a widower.

LINCOLN'S INN.—The treasurer, Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., entertained at dinner on January 20, being the Grand Day in Hilary Term, the Earl of Cork and Orrery, Lord Carrington, Lord Coleridge (Lord Chief Justice of England), the Right Hon. Henry H. Fowler, Mr. Baron Pollock, Mr. Justice Day, Sir James Garrick, Q.C., K.C.M.G., Sir Gordon Sprigg, Mr. Reid, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Barnes, Q.C., Mr. Henry Maxwell Lyte, C.B., Mr. G. W. Kekewich, Mr. Reiss, and Mr. Robert Stewart. The benchers present on the occasion were Mr. Osborne Morgan, Q.C., M.P., Lord Justice Bowen, Lord Justice Fry, Sir William Grove, Mr. Justice Mathew, Mr. Justice Chitty, Sir Robert Stuart, Q.C., Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., Mr. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Mr. Justice Kekewich, Mr. Horton Smith, Q.C., Mr. Gibbs, Q.C., C.B., Lord Macnaghten, Mr. W. Karslake, Q.C., Mr. Everitt, Q.C., Mr. Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., Mr. Pembroke Stephens, Q.C., Mr. Giffard, Q.C., Mr. Simpson, Mr. Bush, Q.C., Mr. Leonard H. Courtney, M.P., Lord Morris, and the Rev. Dr. Wace, preacher.

THE CIRCUITS. — A meeting of the judges of the Queen's Bench Division was held on Friday afternoon, January 16 (the Courts having risen at 3 o'clock for the purpose), under the presidency of the Lord Chief Justice of England, to choose and arrange the circuits for the ensuing assizes. The following are the arrangements that were made: Western Circuit. — Lord Coleridge, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Cave. Home Circuit.—Mr. Justice Cave. South-Eastern Circuit.—Mr. Baron Pollock. Oxford Circuit (including Stafford and Birmingham).—Mr. Justice Hawkins and Mr. Justice Charles. Midland Circuit (including Warwick and Birmingham).—Mr. Justice Grantham and Mr. Justice Wills. North-Eastern Circuit. — Mr. Justice Mathew and Mr. Justice A. L. Smith. Northern Circuit.—Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Lawrance. South Wales Circuit (including Chester). —Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams. North Wales Circuit (including Chester and Glamorgan).—Mr. Justice Wright. Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Stephen will remain in town. These circuits are expected to commence about the middle of next month, but before then another meeting of the judges will be held to fix the dates.

INNER TEMPLE.—His Honour Judge Bristowe, the Treasurer, and the Masters of the Bench of the Inner Temple, entertained at dinner January 21, being the Grand Day of Hilary Term, the following guests: The Bishop of Southwell, Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice Wills, Mr. Justice Lawrance, Mr. Justice Romer, the President of the Royal College of Physicians, the Dean of Rochester, the Master of Trinity Hall, General Sir George Higginson, K.C.B., the Rev. Canon Ainger, reader at the Temple Church, Sir Reginald Cust, Mr. H. W. Lawrence, the subtreasurer, and Mr. Pickering, the librarian. The Benchers present were Mr. Mackeson, Q.C., Mr. Hare, Mr. Marten, Q.C., Mr. Baylis, Q.C., Mr. Justice Cave, His Honour Judge Holl, Mr. Marshall Griffith, Q.C., Mr. Poland, Q.C., Mr. Justice Grantham, Mr. Millar, Q.C., Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C., Mr. Potter, Q.C., Mr. Addison, Q C., M.P., Mr. Graham, Mr. Myburgh, Q.C., Mr. Horace Smith, Mr. Colt, and Mr. Ledgard, Q.C.

ELECTION PETITION IN THE CITY.—On January 20, at a meeting of the Court of Aldermen at Guildhall, at which the Lord Mayor presided, a petition was heard from certain electors of the ward of Portsoken against the return of Mr. Edwin Bell as a common councilman, and asking that such return be declared invalid. Mr. Macmorran and Mr. Stephen Lynch were counsel for the petitioners; Mr. Candy, Q.C., for the respondent.—The petition, which was read by the town clerk, alleged that the qualification in respect of which Mr. Bell had been elected was not a bonâ fide one. He claimed to be qualified in respect of No. 37 Houndsditch, of which he was the lessee, but for some years past the premises had been divided and sublet. Mr. Bell had reserved a right of access to a small room between the two subdivisions. This room was unfurnished and unoccupied, and it was only used as a ladies' cloak-room for meetings of the Concordia Club. Mr. Bell had mortgaged the premises, and an order nisi for foreclosure would be made absolute next month unless the principal and interest were paid. In these circumstances the petitioners demurred to Mr. Bell's qualification, and asked that his return might be declared void.—Mr. Macmorran questioned the jurisdiction of the Court, but the point was given against him.—After the arguments of counsel on both sides had been heard, Mr. Bell was called, and proved that he was the leaseholder of No. 3, the Circus, Minories, and occupied the top floor, where he had a bedroom, in which he slept when he was detained in the City. The premises were rated at 40*l.* per annum. He also had other property in the ward rated at 400*l.*—In the result the Recorder announced that the Court dismissed the petition, with costs.

BIRTHS.

On Dec. 25, at Waltair, Madras Presidency, the wife of John G. Smith, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Jan. 7, at Mostyn House, Sunningsfield Road, Hendon, the wife of Alfred Hardie, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Jan. 16, at Bargate, Grimsby, the wife of Charles S. Barton, Solicitor, Grimsby, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Dec. 27, at All Saints' Church, Borella, Colombo, Ceylon, by his Grace the Archbishop of Colombo, John Joseph Francis, of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, Queen's Counsel, Hong Kong, Knight of St. Gregory the Great, to Anna Magdalen Teresa, the eldest daughter of Heinrich Julius Fabel, of Frankfort-on-the-Main.

On Jan. 13, at the Parish Church, Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire, Edgar E. Lamb, of King's Norton, to Sophy, second daughter of the late Dr. Henry Kennedy, Barrister-at-Law, of 89 Marine Parade, Brighton.

DEATHS.

On Jan. 12, at 1 Abbotsford Villas, Twickenham, Elizabeth Frances daughter of the late John Hodgson, Q.C., and dearly loved sister and life-long companion of Francis Cotterell Hodgson, of King's College, Cambridge, and the Education Department, Whitehall.

On Jan. 15, at his residence, 13 Hampstead Hill Gardens, N.W., Charles Gatliff, late of 8 Finsbury Circus, Solicitor, in his 81st year.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE appointment of Mr. Jeune, Q.C., to be a judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, has falsified the rumours which were current last week, and has added strength to the judicial bench. The talented son of a talented father, the new judge was born in 1844, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, his elevation, as pointed out by a correspondent of the Times, giving that college the extraordinary distinction of having, at the present time, no less than seven representatives on the bench. Mr. Justice Jeune is best known as an ecclesiastical lawyer, but his talents and experience are such as to justify the prediction that his appointment will prove to be one of the best that the present Lord Chancellor has made. Mr. Justice Butt, who, we regret to learn, is in a very critical state of health, now becomes President of the Division.

THE Midland Circuit has just commenced, and in a little more than a fortnight all the winter circuits will be going on. Thirteen of the fifteen judges of the Queen's Bench Division are told off for the ensuing assizes, and, although they will not all be absent at one and the same time, it is to be feared that the common law business in London will practically be brought to a standstill, as is now usually the case during the circuits. The two judges to remain in town are Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Cave, but the former is still too ill to resume his judicial duties.

THERE is a growing practice amongst certain Queen's Counsel on the common law side of appearing in cases without juniors. In a case in the Crown Paper, which was argued last week before Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Williams, a Queen's Counsel appeared on either side, but no junior had been instructed in the case. Until very recently it has always been thought to be beneath the dignity of a Queen's Counsel to appear without a junior, but there are now certain leaders who appear to entertain a different opinion. Hitherto the only instance in which it was considered permissible for a leader to appear alone was where he was representing a defendant in a jury or non-jury action. In such cases the services of a junior are often superfluous, and Queen's Counsel have frequently been instructed alone.

IN the case of In re Soltykoff, ex parte Margrett (noted last week) the Court of Appeal went the length of holding that an infant cannot be liable upon an acceptance given for the price of necessaries supplied to him. Prince Alexis Soltykoff, a son of the well-known owner of racehorses, had accepted, when under age, four bills of exchange in payment for certain goods which it was admitted were necessaries. The drawer indorsed the bills to Margrett, and upon their not being paid at maturity the latter filed a petition against the prince in the Bankruptcy Court. The registrar dismissed the petition, and the Court of Appeal held that he was right in so doing. The Court were of opinion that as Margrett had not himself supplied the goods, the question whether they were necessaries was immaterial. His claim was merely upon the bills, and it was well settled that an infant could not make himself liable upon a bill. The Master of the Rolls, however, said that the cases showed that an infant could not bind himself by a bill of exchange even to the person who supplied the goods, and Lord Justice Lopes expressed himself to the same effect, while Lord Justice Bowen did not in any way dissent. Although these remarks were not strictly necessary in the particular case, there can be little doubt that the Court would so hold if the question were directly brought before them.

THE Attorney-General, at a meeting held not long ago at Exeter Hall to protest against the gambling tendencies of the present day, took occasion to remark that he did not see in what way further legislation against gaming and betting could usefully be placed on the statute-book. We beg respectfully to differ from so high an authority, and to refer to two branches of the law which may be very usefully amended. First, the status of professional bookmakers, which received so strong a confirmation in Read v. Anderson, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 532 (where a majority of the Court of Appeal held that the authority to a bookmaker to make a wagering contract could not be renounced), should be lowered to the level at which it stood before that unhappy decision was pronounced. For ourselves, we have little doubt that Lord Esher (who differed from Lord Justice Bowen and Lord Justice Fry in Read v. Anderson) and the late Mr. Justice Manisty (in Cohen v. Kettell, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 241) were in the right, and that Read v. Anderson is bad law. Secondly, the defect in the Betting Houses Act, which was on Wednesday last disclosed by Wells v. Hills, should be at once repaired. In that case a conviction for keeping a betting-house within the Act was affirmed; but the Court, before coming to this conclusion, had sent the case back to the justices to find as a fact whether money was paid or not. It seems, therefore, open to considerable doubt (though, apart from Wells v. Hills, we should have thought that the Act is perfectly general, and applies to credit as well as prepaid betting) whether the Act applies to betting through bookmakers on credit. Solve both the questions we have referred to in the direction of severity against betting, and much will have been done by the Legislature to check it.

SEVERAL bills introduced during the present session of Parliament bear witness to the increasing desire for State intervention and to the abandonment of the old laissez-faire theories, of which, in the practical sphere, Lord Bramwell and, in the speculative, Mr. Herbert Spencer are such doughty champions. Every class and trade wants to be organised and registered. One of the most curious developments of this tendency is the Midwives' Registration Bill, which has been introduced by Mr. Fell Pease, Sir F. Fitzwygram, Sir Guyer Hunter, Sir R. Lethbridge, Dr. Farquharson, Mr. Rathbone, and Mr. Pritchard Morgan. We suppose Sir G. Hunter and Dr. Farquharson have induced good-natured friends to back their medical fad, and will be asked to back some other fad in return. The bill provides for the examination of ladies by the General Council of Medical Education, and registration subject to rules framed by the council and approved by the Privy Council. After the publication of these rules every County Council is to provide for the execution of the Act within its county by appointing a sufficient number of examiners, granting certificates of competency, and keeping a record and register of women so qualified to discharge their responsible functions. Fees, of course, are to be paid for the examination certificate and registration, and section 6 provides that no unregistered woman shall, after January 1, 1892, be able to recover any charge for services rendered as a midwife. There is, however, no penalty in the bill to be imposed on unregistered practitioners in this useful but not hitherto aristocratic profession, and it is probable that the Act, if passed, would not be very operative. But there is, perhaps, no particular reason why a number of excellent people should be deprived of the opportunity of having letters attached to their names, and in case the bill passed we should understand that the letters R.M. in the case of a man meant 'resident magistrate,' but in that of a woman 'registered midwife.'

MORE ambitious and more defensible measures of the same class are the Teachers' Registration Bill, brought in by Sir R. Temple, Sir L. Playfair, and Lord Lymington, and the Architects' Registration Bill, of which the authors are Mr. Noble, General Goldsworthy, and Mr. Justin M'Carthy. Sir Richard Temple and Sir Lyon Playfair are specialists in education, and may be supposed to know what they are about. But none of the introducers of the other bill have any connection with the profession of architect; but, perhaps, they are bringing in the bill because they have suffered from architects. The Teachers' Bill is of a much graver character than its title indicates. It is in reality a bill for bringing almost the whole of the secondary education of the country under one system of control. It is true that the control so established is not directly State control, but it will go far to bring about absolute State control more or less disguised. It is a very big bill, of which 'Registration and Organisation of Teachers' is by far the less important part. The real object of the measure is far too large for private members to tackle, being nothing less than to bring all the schools in the Kingdom, 'at which intermediate education is supplied,' except Eton, Winchester, Westminster, Charterhouse, Harrow, Rugby, and Shrewsbury, under the government of one educational council of sixteen, of whom six are to be direct nominees of the Crown, two of the Education Department, and the remaining eight of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge and London, and the College of Preceptors. And these members of the council, to whom are to be entrusted the government of St. Paul's, Marlborough, Clifton, Cheltenham, Manchester, and other great schools, are to be paid fees like the directors of a company. The only assignable reason that no particular notice has been taken of this measure is, no doubt, that the provisions with respect to the appointment of an educational council have not the ghost of a chance of passing. The Architects' Bill is of a complicated character, and is apparently intended to be as stringent and operative in its effects as the laws regulating the practice of medicine and surgery.

IN reference to the inquest on the body of the late Duke of Bedford, attention may be directed to the provisions of the Consolidating Coroners Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 71), which lays down the law in a very clear manner. By section 3 an inquest is always to be held 'where a coroner is informed that the dead body of a person is lying within his jurisdiction, and there is reasonable cause to suspect that such person has died either a violent or an unnatural death, or has died a sudden death of which the cause is unknown.' By section 4, subsection 3, the coroner's jury, 'after viewing the body and hearing the evidence, shall give their verdict, and certify it by an inquisition in writing setting forth, as far as such particulars have been proved, who the deceased was, and how, when, and where he came by his death.' By section 18, subsection 2, an inquisition may be in one of the forms scheduled to the Act, the schedules of which contain, amongst others, a form applicable to felo de se, and a form applicable to suicide by a person of unsound mind; while, by subsection 3, 'the coroner, after the termination of an inquest on any death, shall send to the registrar of deaths, whose duty it is by law to register the death, such certificate of the finding of the jury and within such time as is required by the Registration Acts'—i.e. within five days after the finding of the jury (see section 16 of the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1874). Finally, by section 6 a fresh inquest may be held (see, as to this, Regina v. Carter, 45 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 711) where, by reason of any irregularity in the inquest first held, 'it is necessary or desirable in the interests of justice' that another inquest should be held. The better opinion seems to be, notwithstanding dicta of Lord Mansfield and Lord Kenyon to the contrary, that the coroner may in his discretion exclude the public from his Court (see 'Jervis on Coroner,' 5th edit. at p. 24, citing Gurnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611), and it seems also beyond all doubt to be within the discretion of any juror to divulge to any member of the public or refuse to divulge any part of the evidence given at the inquest.

LORD JUSTICE KAY, in his judgment in The Attorney-General v. Morgan, made a curious calculation as to the proportion of precious metal to other matter indicated by the expression—one ounce of gold per ton of quartz rock. 'At 12 ounces to the pound,' he said, '1 ounce is not one twenty-six thousandth part of a ton.' It seems clear that the learned judge was here guilty of a confusion between the two independent systems of troy weight and avoirdupois weight. An ounce which should consist of one-twelfth part of a pound avoirdupois would be one twenty-six thousand eight hundred and eightieth part of a ton, and thus we obviously arrive at the basis of the calculation. But no such ounce is known. The ounce troy is one-twelfth part of the pound troy; but the pound avoirdupois contains about 14½ ounces troy. Consequently the ounce troy is less than one thirty-two thousandth part of a ton. The point taken in the judgment is, of course, not weakened but strengthened by correction of the figures, inasmuch as the error was on the side of understatement.

IN dismissing an application for a new trial on Saturday week last, the Master of the Rolls took occasion to mention what he characterised as 'a scandalous multiplication of costs.' The solicitor to one of the parties had supplied the Court with three copies of the shorthand notes of the summing-up of the judge who tried the case. The Master of the Rolls observed that all that the Court required was given in the note taken by counsel, and that the copies of the shorthand notes were entirely unnecessary. He added that the Court wished public notice to be taken of the fact that, if a solicitor unnecessarily increased costs by the multiplication of documents, and made his client pay for them, he was guilty of misconduct for which he might be made answerable to the Court, under Order LXV., rule 11, and that it might be the duty of the Court to take action under that rule in cases where they thought there was a primâ facie case against a solicitor of unduly increasing the costs in that way. These observations of the Court of Appeal will probably check an abuse which has been frequently condemned.

AN important point of bankruptcy law came before Mr. Justice Kekewich in In re Croom; England v. The Provincial Assets Company, reported in our Notes of Cases for this week. The short question of law was whether, in the case of a scheme of arrangement under section 18 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, property acquired by the debtor subsequently to the date of the approval of the scheme by the Court passes to the trustee under the scheme, or belongs to the debtor. In the case before Mr. Justice Kekewich the scheme had been approved by the Court on July 16, 1888, and the after-acquired property consisted of an interest to which the debtor became entitled under a will. The will was dated January 27, 1888, but the testator did not die till September, 1889. The interest of the debtor, therefore, at the date when the scheme was approved by the Court was not known to exist, and did not in fact exist, except as a mere expectancy. Mr. Justice Kekewich, looking to the provisions of sections 18, 28, and 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and the contract between the parties—that is, the scheme of arrangement whereby the whole of the debtor's estate was assigned to a trustee for payment of the debts in full by instalments—held that the after-acquired property belonged to the debtor, and not to the trustee. The view of Mr. Justice Kekewich is in accordance with the dictum of the late Lord Justice Baggallay in the case of Ex parte Clark, in re Clark, 53 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1,063; L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 426, where he said: 'Speaking offhand, I am disposed to think that the approval of the scheme by the Court would be equivalent to the discharge of the debtor.'

IN Jenkins v. Bushby (Notes of Cases, p. 9) the Court of Appeal, in a considered judgment, elaborately reviewed the rules which relate to the trial of an action by a judge with a jury (Order XXXVI., rules 2–7). The construction which their lordships thought right to put upon those rules, in order to give full effect to all of them, had already been laid down in previous cases, notably in The Temple Bar, 55 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 1; L. R. 11 P. Div. 6; Timson v. Wilson; Fanshawe v. The London and Provincial Dairy Company, L. R. 38 Chanc. Div. 72. But the reason for reinvestigating the subject in Jenkins v. Bushby was because there appeared to be still some misunderstanding about it. The plaintiffs in that case desired that their action, which was instituted in the Chancery Division, should be tried by a judge with a special jury at the Glamorganshire Assizes. A view of the locus in quo would, they said, be necessary, and the best tribunal to try the case would therefore be a jury. Mr. Justice Stirling nevertheless sent the whole action to be tried at the assizes by a judge without a jury, and that was the order appealed from. The Court of Appeal were of opinion that, under the circumstances, the order was wrong, and that the trial ought to be with a jury. A view of the locality being essential, the choice, as regarded the mode of trial, really lay between a trial by a judge and jury, with a view by the jury, and a trial by some referee who could go to the locality. Of those two modes the former appeared to the Court of Appeal to be the best. Their lordships did not think that rule 6, upon which the plaintiff relied, was applicable, but that, on the contrary, so far as their appeal was based on rule 6, it failed. Rule 7, however, seemed to the Court of Appeal to apply to the case. And as the plaintiffs were in a position to discharge the onus thrown upon them by that rule of showing some good reason why their request should be acceded to—viz. that a view of the locality by a jury was all important—Mr. Justice Stirling's order was reversed.

THE recent case of In re Smith, ex parte Hepburn and others, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 554, was a decision of considerable importance upon the question of the rights of a landlord upon the bankruptcy of his tenant. Smith, who was the lessee of certain land for a term of years, mortgaged it to Messrs. Hepburn by way of underlease. Smith having become bankrupt, his trustee served on the mortgagees a notice of motion for leave to disclaim the lease under section 55, subsection 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The mortgagees thereupon, by deed of assignment, transferred the mortgage to one Adcock, a clerk in their employ, to hold the same in trust for themselves. The trustee having obtained leave to disclaim the lease, Mr. Justice Cave, upon the application of the original lessor, made an order, under section 55, subsection 6, excluding Adcock from all interest in the property, and also excluding the mortgagees, unless within two months they should apply for an order vesting the property in them subject to the same liabilities and obligations as the bankrupt was subject to under the lease at the date when the petition was filed. The mortgagees appealed, but the Court of Appeal held that the order was properly made, and that the assignment to Adcock must, as between the mortgagees and the original lessor, be treated as absolutely void. Lord Esher, M.R., in giving judgment, said: 'The only effect and the only intention of that transaction was to defeat the landlord's rights and to evade the Act of Parliament. It did not in any way alter the rights of the parties to the transaction. It seems to me that, in such a case, the Court ought to say that the transaction is a sham and an attempt to evade the law, and ought to treat it as absolutely void.'

MANY persons who would wish to be considered as having a high standard of honour as between man and man seem to have little sense of honesty when dealing with a company. It may be that they think that a company will not suffer much by their petty dishonesty, yet they would not defend a poor man who stole a 5*l.* note from a millionaire on the same ground. Railway companies are frequently and unblushingly defrauded in this way, and we are glad to see that the Great Western Railway Company are taking criminal proceedings against some passengers who travelled first-class with second-class tickets, and refused to pay the excess fare when it was demanded. We refer to the case of Noble v. Killick and others (Notes of Cases, ante, p. 4). The metropolitan magistrate before whom the case came refused to allow the summons to proceed, on the ground that the company, by demanding the excess fare, had forfeited their right to take criminal proceedings. This decision, if it had been allowed to stand, would have produced very inconvenient results, as the company would have been compelled in self-defence at once to summon a passenger who had been travelling in a class different to that marked on his ticket, unless the passenger volunteered payment of excess, or forfeit their right to have the offender punished by the magistrate. It frequently happens that a person travels in a superior class in order to enjoy the company of a friend, and means to pay the difference at the end of his journey. If he forgot to mention this to the ticket-collector, the latter could not ask him to pay it, as it might be urged that this would be a demand on the part of the company, and therefore a waiver of criminal proceedings. The innocent passenger might then have the annoyance of being served with a summons, and having to appear in the police court. Everyone is presumed innocent until he is proved guilty (at least, in the United Kingdom), and it would be unreasonable to compel the company to take criminal proceedings when a word would have obtained the extra money for the company and saved the passenger from an awkward position. At all events, we are thankful that a Divisional Court have held that the magistrate was wrong in stopping the case, and have remitted it to him.

THE appropriate terms in which Mr. Inderwick, Q.C., addressed Sir James Hannen on his taking leave of the Court last week must have found an echo in the hearts of hundreds of barristers and solicitors whose duties have brought them in contact with one of the most courteous, able, and impartial judges who have ever upheld the traditions of the English bench. No work is more anxious or delicate than that of the solicitor and counsel entrusted with a probate action or a divorce suit, in both of which 'the seamy side' of human nature is so often disclosed. But it is an undoubted fact that the decisions of the ex-President of the Probate Division were accepted, if not always with satisfaction—for one side must, of course, be disappointed—yet with the knowledge that they were the outcome of a clear, unprejudiced, judicial mind which had noted and weighed every point. If this is high commendation of a judge, it is none the less what suitors have a right to expect; and what, moreover, is absolutely essential in a Court entrusted with such grave issues.

A CORRESPONDENT recently asked (ante, p. 59) whether a copyright play first produced in England, which has been taken down in shorthand at a London theatre, can be represented at a club where no payment is made for admission (such representation being a drawing-room performance) without infringing the provisions of the Copyright Acts or the author's rights. In the first place, the mode of acquiring the language of the play—that is to say, whether it be by procuring a copy in the ordinary way or by taking down the words in shorthand from the lips of the actors—is perfectly immaterial. The right reserved to the author by the statute 3 Wm. IV. c. 15 is the sole right of representation in public during the statutory term of playwright. Again, the question of payment for admission is also immaterial, Duck v. Bates, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 338. The test is whether the representation is other than domestic and private. If any portion of the public are freely admitted, either with or without payment, the representation will be an infringement of the author's rights. This is a question of fact which must be determined in each case, and although in Duck v. Bates it was held that a performance in the board-room of a London hospital for the amusement of the patients and nurses was not within the prohibition of the statute, yet the Court of Appeal expressly warned those who should go beyond the facts of that case, that they might incur the statutory penalties.

AMENDMENTS TO THE SETTLED LAND ACT.

ENGLISH law passes, roughly speaking, through six stages: first, there is the common law, growing up by immemorial custom 'from precedent to precedent,' secondly, the Legislature steps in and alters the common law, bringing it into harmony with the growing wants of the nation; thirdly, the judges interpret the law; fourthly, the Legislature again interferes to support or oppose the judicial interpretations; fifthly, a Consolidation Act is passed which codifies the law; and sixthly, the judges are again called on to explain what still is ambiguous and to throw light on what still is dark. The law of settled land is in the fourth stage of development, and we propose to glance at most of the amendments and additions which the Legislature in its wisdom has made in respect of the Settled Land Act, 1882. The Settled Land Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 18), section 4, enacted that the fine received on the grant of a lease should be considered as capital. Section 5 authorised a tenant-for-life, in giving notice to the trustees, to give a general notice in the case of a sale, exchange, partition, or lease. This still leaves it necessary to give a specific notice in the case of a mortgage or charge (Lewin, 8th ed. p. 558). By the same section a trustee may in writing waive notice, or accept a shorter one than that provided by section 45 of the principal Act. It should be observed that nothing is said about waiving the notice to the solicitor for the trustees. Sections 6 and 7 set at rest the crucial question as to the position of trustees for sale, who can now exercise their trust, unless the Court gives the tenant-for-life power to sell, without any consent not required by the terms of the settlement. Further, where the consent of the tenant-for-life is required by the Act, and two or more persons together constitute the tenant-for-life, the consent of one of such persons is sufficient. The estate of a tenant by the courtesy is to be deemed, by virtue of section 8, to be an estate arising under a settlement made by his wife. Section 11 of the Working Classes Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 72), allows settled land to be sold, exchanged, or leased on terms favourable for the erection of buildings for the working classes, and adds to the list of improvements sanctioned by section 25 of the principal Act 'dwellings available for the working classes.' The recent Act of 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69, s. 18) defines 'working classes' as including 'all classes of persons who earn their livelihood by wages or salaries; provided that this section shall apply only to buildings of a ratable value not exceeding 100*l.* per annum.' Under the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 54), s. 6, money liable to be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled may be applied in redeeming extraordinary charges and rent-charges under that Act, and the tenant-for-life can mortgage or sell in order to raise money for redemption. The Settled Land Acts (Amendment) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 30), permits certain improvement-charges, previously payable by limited owners under the provisions of Acts of Parliament, to be paid out of capital. Certain provisions as to the constitution of Land Commissioners and their powers contained in section 45 of the principal Act were repealed by the Board of Agriculture Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 30), s. 13, and their powers and duties were transferred to the Board of Agriculture. The Settled Land Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 36), permits building leases and agreements for them under the Act of 1882 to contain an option to be exercised at any time within an agreed number of years not exceeding ten, for the lessee to purchase the land leased at a price fixed at the time of the making of the lease or agreement, such price being the best which, having regard to the rent reserved, can reasonably be obtained, and to be either a fixed sum of money or such a sum of money as shall be equal to a stated number of years' purchase of the highest rent reserved by the lease or agreement, such price to be considered capital. The Court of Chancery of the County Palatine of Lancaster had the powers of the High Court given to it by section 46 (8) of the principal Act as regards lands in that county palatine; and by 52 & 53 Vict. c. 47, s. 10, the powers conferred on the High Court by the Acts of 1882 and 1884 as regards land and estates in the County Palatine of Durham may be exercised by the County Palatine Court of Durham. We must not forget to notice that an incumbent has for some purposes the powers of a tenant-for-life, as the Glebe Lands Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 20), s. 8 (4), provides that, 'subject to the provisions of this Act, the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882, with respect to the sale of land by a tenant-for-life shall, so far as circumstances admit, apply to a sale under this Act by an incumbent in like manner as if he were the tenant-for-life of the land, and accordingly he shall have the like power with respect to contracts as a tenant-for-life under that Act, and may do all things necessary and proper for carrying into effect a sale under this Act.' The Act of last year (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69) has introduced many desirable changes. Section 4 provides in effect that a settlement on marriage, or as part or by way of any family arrangement, of a life-tenant's interest in settled land is to be deemed one of the instruments creating the main settlement, and not an instrument vesting in any person any right as assignee within the meaning of section 50 of the Act of 1882. Section 5 authorises easements, rights, or privileges to be created on an exchange or partition, or to be given or taken in exchange. A tenant-for-life may, under section 6, complete by conveyance any contract entered into by a predecessor, if the latter could have bound his successors by such a conveyance, and under the next section may grant leases for twenty-one years at the best rent, and not exempting the lessee from punishment for waste without giving notice to the trustees, and even if there are no trustees, and the lease need not be under seal if not for more than three years from the date thereof. In section 8 there are provisions for the rent under mining leases being made to vary according to the minerals or substances gotten. A tenant-for-life can, by virtue of section 9, grant settled land in fee simple for building purposes, reserving a rent-charge in fee simple to which all the powers and remedies attached to rent-charges by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 44, shall be incidental. The rent-charge will itself become subject to the settlement in the place of land sold. Although section 15 of the principal Act is repealed by section 10, it is re-enacted with certain modifications, so that the principal mansion-house, pleasure-grounds, park and lands usually occupied therewith, if exceeding twenty-five acres in extent, cannot be sold, exchanged, or leased without the consent of the trustees or an order of the Court, but a farmhouse is not to be considered a principal mansion-house. Under section 11 the tenant-for-life can raise money by mortgage of the settled land for discharging an incumbrance, and for payment of the costs of the transaction, but an annual sum payable only during a life or lives, or during a term of years absolute or determinable, is not to be deemed such an incumbrance. Section 12 authorises the tenant-for-life and the trustees to buy from and sell to, and make exchanges and partitions with each other, giving the trustees in those cases the powers of a tenant-for-life. Further improvements are sanctioned by section 13 in the nature of bridges, additions to or alterations in buildings to enable them to be let, the erection of buildings in substitution for buildings within an urban sanitary district taken by a local or other public authority, or for buildings compulsorily taken, and the rebuilding of the principal mansion, with limitations as to the expense of the last two items. By section 15 the Court may order payment for improvements out of capital, though a scheme was not submitted to the trustees or the Court before they were executed. Any capital money paid into Court may be paid out to the trustees (section 14). Section 16 extends the list of persons who, in the absence of trustees of the settlement within the meaning and for the purposes of the Act of 1882, shall be considered as such trustees. 1. Trustees under the settlement with a power of or trust for sale of other land comprised in the settlement and subject to the same limitations as the land to be sold, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such a power. In default of them, then (2) the trustees with a future power of or trust for sale of the land to be sold, or with power of consent to or approval of the exercise of such a future power of sale, and whether the power or trust takes effect in all events or not. It should be noticed, in passing, that this section only mentions land to be sold, and omits any reference to land to be leased, mortgaged, charged, partitioned, or given in exchange. The moot point as to whether the provisions of the Conveyancing Act relating to the appointment, discharge, and retirement of trustees apply to trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts is set at rest by section 17, which provides that they are to, and is retrospective in its operation. We have referred to section 18 already as defining the meaning of the expression 'working classes.' Section 19 gives power to any judge of the High Court to vacate the registration of a writ or order affecting land.

CLAIMS FOR INTEREST UNDER 3 & 4 WILL. IV. c. 42, s. 28.

AT common law it was the general rule that interest was not payable on any debts unless expressly agreed on, or unless a promise could be implied from the usage of trade or other circumstances, or unless the debt were secured by a bill of sale or promissory note (Chitty on Contracts, 8th edit. p. 595; Shelford's Real Property Statutes, 8th edit. p. 256). But the 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 28, it will be remembered, enacts, amongst other things, that upon all debts or sums certain the jury may allow interest to the creditor at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the time—in the case of debts or sums payable otherwise than by virtue of some written instrument at a certain time—when 'demand of payment shall have been made in writing, so as such demand shall give notice to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand until the term of payment.' The question, what is a sufficient notice that interest will be claimed, is one which is still of no unfrequent occurrence. The latest case on the subject is that of The Rhymney Railway Company v. The Rhymney Iron Company, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 414; L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 146, where the Court of Appeal, overruling Mr. Justice Grantham on this point, held that a claim for interest made in a writ of summons for the first time is not such a demand as is required by the section, and, accordingly, disallowed the plaintiffs any interest on the sum recovered in the action from the date of the writ. The action in that case was an action by a railway company for charges in respect of the carriage of goods. The point was very shortly disposed of in the judgments of Lord Esher and Lord Justice Lopes, and no authorities appear to have been cited. The nearest case appears to be that of Ward v. Eyre, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 697; L. R. 15 Chanc. Div. 130, where the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of the late Master of the Rolls, held that an allegation in an answer to a bill in Chancery, whereby a London agent alleged a balance on account due to him from the plaintiff and claimed interest thereon, was not a sufficient demand in writing or notice within the section. Sir George Jessel held that the necessary requirements of the statute were three, which he stated as follows: 'First of all, there must be a debt or sum certain payable; secondly, there must be a demand of payment in writing by someone, which I take to mean the creditor or his agent; and, lastly, the demand must give notice that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand until the time of payment.' It is obvious that interest might be claimed from the date of the writ consistently with these requirements if Sir George Jessel's statement is to be taken as exhaustive; and a perusal of the judgments of Lord Justice James and Lord Justice Baggallay in the same case on appeal will show that they, too, abstained from laying down any rule that interest cannot be claimed under the Act by the writ of summons or other initiatory step in the action, the actual result of the case as an authority on this point being, we think, accurately stated in the headnote to the LAW JOURNAL REPORT, which is as follows: 'Quære, whether a statement of claim or defence, averring a sum certain to be due and claiming interest, is, when delivered, a sufficient demand of payment and notice claiming interest.' This question, however, appears to be set at rest by the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in the case we have mentioned, which to the three requirements stated by Sir George Jessel seems to add a fourth—viz. that the demand contemplated by the Act is one before action. Before leaving this subject we may remind our readers that a proper demand in writing and notice under the section, in addition to the delivery of his bill, is still the only way in which, as between himself and his client, a solicitor can obtain interest on profit charges in respect of contentious business, though as to actual disbursements, as distinguished from profit charges, the taxing-master is now empowered to allow interest at such rate as he thinks just on such disbursements (33 & 34 Vict. c. 38, s. 17); while, in respect of non-contentious business, section 28 of 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, seems practically superseded by Order VII. made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, which entitles a solicitor to charge interest at 4*l.* per cent. on his 'disbursements and costs from the expiration of one month from demand from the client.' We may add that in the interpretation of this rule the Court of Appeal has adopted the sensible view that the mere delivery of the bill amounts to a sufficient demand (Blair v. Cordner, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 642; L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 516), but it is not the practice for the taxing-master to compute such interest on taxation under the common order (In re Keeping and Gloag, 23 L. J. N. C. 1888, p. 63).

Correspondence.

THE APPEAL IN THE BISHOP OF LINCOLN'S CASE.

SIR,—It seems to be generally taken for granted that the appeal in the above case will bring up for review before the Privy Council the whole of the points which have been so exhaustively discussed in the archbishop's learned judgment. It may be so, but it is at least just possible that the appeal may be disposed of in limine on altogether different grounds.

Centuries before our present Courts of law adopted what are now considered among the leading principles of English justice, two fundamental principles were standing rules of every Ecclesiastical Court: (1) No man can be held to be guilty unless he either pleads guilty or is proved to be guilty; the other (2) that no one may be twice placed on his trial for the same offence.

As early as the fourth century—and, indeed, in the 'Apostolic Constitutions' themselves, Book II.—St. Ambrose, in words which have since been incorporated in Gratian's 'Decretum,' A.D. 1144 (Caus. II. Qu. i. c. 17), lays it down that 'It is not the part of a judge to condemn without an answer, because Christ did not condemn Judas altho' he knew him to be a thief.' St. Augustine, whose words are also incorporated in the 'Decretum' (Caus. XI. Qu. iii. c. 75), says: 'Altho' many things may be true, yet no judge dare believe them until they are established by certain proofs,' and (Ibid. Caus. II. Qu. i. c. 1) 'We cannot pass sentence on anyone unless he is either properly convicted or spontaneously confesses.' The same language is used by St. Gregory in the sixth century (Ibid. Caus. XI. Qu. iii. c. 74) and by Pope Nicolaus in the ninth century (Ibid. Caus. XV. Qu. v. c. 2). The fourth Lateran Council, A.D. 1215, Caus. 8 (in 'Decret.' Greg. IX. Lib. V. tit. i. c. 24), which is generally allowed to be authoritative in this country, lays it down that, 'Not only when a subject, but also when a prelate is charged with an excess, the truth ought carefully to be enquired into before the ancients of the Church'—the ancients spoken of evidently being canonists, as in Concil. London., A.D. 1075, Caus. 1—where the bishops referred a question of precedence to the ancients, who took a day to consider it.

The other principle is also insisted upon by canonical enactments, and to prevent a person being tried again a second time on the same charge the spiritual Courts had a peculiar machinery of their own, which consisted in imposing perpetual silence on a plaintiff or accuser who had failed to substantiate his case. This practice did not prevent another person from making complaint of the very same thing, since an accuser might conceivably withdraw in collusion with the accused (see Lyndwode, p. 73), but it effectually prevented the same person from again moving in the same matter, since by so doing he would render himself liable to the penalties reserved for the contumacious. The decretals give many instances of silence being thus imposed. In the year 1180 A.D. Alexander III. addressed a decretal to the Archbishop of York concerning the church of Pontefract and its claimants (in 'Decret.' Greg. IX. Lib. V. tit. iii. c. 12), in which he enjoined perpetual silence on R. the claimant, not on the ground that his claim was bad in itself, but because he had himself been party to a simoniacal contract. In the year 1208 A.D. Innocent III. (in 'Decret.' Greg. IX. Lib. V. tit. xvi. c. 6) imposed perpetual silence on a wife who had failed to substantiate a charge of adultery against her husband, and (Ibid. Lib. V. tit. i. c. 15) on a clerk who, after promising to abide by the archbishop's decision in a complaint against his bishop, sought to go on with his complaint, notwithstanding the archbishop's direction to drop it. It is true that in Edward II.'s time, A.D. 1315, when the prelates wished to extend the principle forbidding a repetition of litigation to Courts spiritual and temporal among themselves, the King made answer (Coke, 2 Inst. 622): 'When any one case is debated before judges spiritual and temporal (as above appeareth upon the case of laying violent hands on a clerk), it is thought that, notwithstanding the spiritual judgment, the King's Court shall discuss the same matter as it shall deem expedient;' but the very terms of the answer imply that both then, as in after times, it was the rule alike of temporal and spiritual Courts that no one could be twice vexed for the same matter, and that the only cases in which departure from this rule was permitted were when proceedings had been taken in the spiritual Court pro salute animæ, and proceedings were also necessary in the temporal Court pro salute reipublicæ.

The Privy Council, to which the appeal is now pending in The Bishop of Lincoln's Case, is, in the eye of the law, not a temporal but a spiritual Court, and the appeal is made to it not by the Bishop of Lincoln, but by the Bishop of Lincoln's accusers. How can such an appeal lie consistently with the principle just enunciated?

For convenience, the articles may be divided into two parts, (1) those on which the Bishop of Lincoln has been condemned, and (2) those on which he has been acquitted. As regards the former, there is no doubt the Bishop of Lincoln might have appealed had he thought fit so to do, but since he has not thought fit so to do, but has submitted, that part of the accusation is finally disposed of.

In respect of the other articles on which he has been acquitted, it seems to be forgotten that he has been acquitted—whether rightly or wrongly is immaterial to the present issue—and that this is a criminal case. If a man who is acquitted of stealing cannot be put on his trial again, even when an Irish jury under the influence of party feeling has acquitted him in the face of the facts, how can an English bishop be put on his trial again when he has been acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction which no one accuses of bias?

There may or there may not be good grounds for believing that, if the bishop had himself appealed to the Privy Council on the points on which he has been condemned, his appeal would have resulted in the reversal of his condemnation on these points. But on what principle of English canonical or temporal law can an accuser, who has failed once, continue to harass one who has been acquitted under the disguise of an appeal?

OSWALD J. REICHEL.

COSTS UNDER ORDER XIV. RULE 1.

SIR,—I shall be glad to learn what is the experience of some of my professional brethren who practise in district registry chambers as to costs allowed when judgment obtained by plaintiff under Order XIV.

The district registrar in the town where I practise formerly allowed solicitors to take the 'allowance' (7*l.*) instead of undertaking all the trouble, delay, and extra expense of 'taxing costs.' But he has recently stated that, owing to a decision of one of the judges of the High Court in chambers, a fixed sum can no longer be allowed as formerly.

I forget the name of the case; but, assuming the registrar is right, is not this an instance where the Law Society should take steps to get the former practice reintroduced?

A COUNTRY SOLICITOR.

January 26.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—GIVING TIME TO PRINCIPAL DEBTOR—DISCHARGE.

AT the Ilkeston County Court, on Wednesday, January 7, before his honour Judge Barber, Q.C., the case of The Black Lion 20*l. Loan Club* (Lim.) v. Ryde & Smith was heard. His Honour: This is an action commenced in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court (Nottingham District Registry), which by an order dated November 18, 1890, was transferred by the master in chambers, pursuant to section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to this Court for trial; and by another of the same date, the master gave the defendant Ryde liberty to defend. The plaintiffs claim to recover from the defendant Ryde the sum of 32*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.*, which they allege to be the balance due to them on the following promissory note: 'Nottingham, June 1, 1888. 46*l.* On demand we jointly and severally promise to pay the Black Lion 20*l.* Loan Club (Lim.) the sum of 46*l.* sterling for value received, with interest at the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum.' This note is signed by Charles John Smallwood, Wm. Ryde, and Edward Henry Smith, and their signatures are attested by Mr. Thomas Carter Cave, who was then and is now the secretary of the club. Smallwood was a member of the club, and, in accordance with the rules of the club (a copy of which was put in), required and obtained from the club an advance of 40*l.* for his own purposes, and not being able at the time to pay the prescribed premium of 6*l.*, the club also advanced this sum to him to be applied for the purpose of paying the premium, thus increasing the principal debt to 46*l.* The defendants in this action derived no benefit from the advance; as between themselves and the club they were simple sureties for their friend's debt, and the club knew it when they took the note. There are certain defences raised in Ryde's statement which may be conveniently disposed of at this point, leaving for a subsequent part of my judgment the only substantial question which was raised in argument. It is suggested that the note was given merely for the accommodation of Smallwood, from whom no consideration proceeded; but it is quite clear (and I so hold) that as between themselves and the club the sureties, with full knowledge of what they were doing, guaranteed the principal debtor's debt, and the club accepted such guarantee. Another suggestion is, that there was an express agreement that the defendant should be liable only for a moiety of the debt and as surety for Smallwood only, and that the plaintiff had notice and knowledge of such an agreement having been made. No such an agreement was attempted to be proved at the trial; and it was conclusively proved that the note was intended to be a joint and several note for the whole 46*l.*, as it purports to be. There is another defence which ought never to have been made unless the defendant had strong evidence to support it—viz. that the signatures of the defendants to the note were obtained under false representations. There is not a tittle of evidence to justify any such charge. I now proceed to the only material issue which I have to decide, which depends on some further facts. The particulars showing how the 32*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* was the amount due when the action commenced are thus made out: to the loan of 46*l.* is added 2*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* for interest, making together 48*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*; from this is deducted 8*l.* 11*s.* paid by Smallwood, thus reducing the principal debt to 39*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.*, and this is further reduced by 7*l.* 10*s.* paid by the defendant Ryde, thus making the amount now claimed 32*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* It appeared from the evidence and also the correspondence that Smallwood (the date was not given) lost his situation in consequence of some bodily injury he received; he promised repeatedly to pay as soon as he got a situation he had in view, and the club was unwilling to press him too hard. He got the situation, but soon after lost it, and was adjudicated a bankrupt. The whole period during which he was allowed the indulgence of a little time for payment of his arrears was not long, and there is no evidence that the plaintiffs have lost or prejudiced their remedy against the sureties by their own laches or delay. When Smallwood lost his last situation, and before his bankruptcy, the plaintiffs began to press Mr. Ryde, and a correspondence took place between the latter and the secretary of the club, commencing with a letter of the secretary, dated April 16, 1890, claiming the sum of 24*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, the full amount then due; and he explains to Ryde, in a letter of April 21, 1890, the circumstances under which they had allowed Smallwood a little indulgence. After this it appears that the club, not wishing to press the defendant Ryde too hardly, authorised their secretary to accept payment from Ryde at the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* a month. Accordingly the defendant Ryde made three payments of 2*l.* 10*s.* each without any demur. During the early part of October the secretary pressed him for further payments, and eventually the defendant Ryde wrote and sent to Mr. Cave a letter of October 15, 1890, in which he said, 'I have taken legal advice, and consider I am not liable in the slightest degree to be called upon for any further payments.' Thereupon this action was at once commenced. The defence relied on is that because the plaintiffs allowed Smallwood for a few months a little time, asking him each month to pay up, and only postponing further pressure on the faith of his promises that when he got the new situation which he was then expecting and afterwards did get, the sureties are absolutely released from liability under the note. The law on this point is, to my mind, most clear. In Samuell v. Howarth, 3 Mer. 272, 278,

Lord Eldon thus states it: 'The rule is this—that if a creditor, without the consent of the surety, gives time to the principal debtor, by so doing he discharges the surety; that is, if time is given by virtue of positive contract between the creditor and the principal, not where the creditor is merely inactive.' In the case of The Oriental Financial Corporation v. Overend, Gurney & Co., 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 332; 7 Ch. App. 142, the same principle is enunciated by Lord Hatherley: 'It is not simply neglecting to sue the principal, but there must be a positive agreement with the principal that the creditors will postpone the suing of him to a subsequent period.' I may also refer to Wright v. Hickling, 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 40; L. R. 2 C. P. 199, and the still later case of Clarke v. Birley, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 616; 41 Chanc. Div. 422, where, in far more difficult circumstances than I have to deal with here, the same principle was strictly adhered to. In this case there is no evidence of any positive contract, or indeed of any contract at all, between the plaintiffs and Smallwood; if there were, why was not Smallwood called as a witness, and why did the defendant, after he knew all the circumstances, pay the three instalments of 2*l.* 10*s.* each? In my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the amount they claim. It appears to me that they were not bound to set off against the liabilities of the sureties the subscriptions paid by Smallwood as a member of the club, but as by so doing they have reduced, and not increased, his liability, I see no reason why I should not give them judgment for the whole amount claimed. I have purposely postponed referring to an important case of Greenough v. M'Clelland, 2 L. T. Rep. (N.S.) 571). The second headnote is misleading, and the principle of the decision is, when carefully examined, quite consistent with the law as I have stated. They find that the defendant was a surety only (a fact not really questioned here), and they base their decision on the principle laid down in Pooley v. Hawardine, 26 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 156; 7 E. & B. 431, and after observing that the Court of Queen's Bench had reviewed all the cases in the course of their judgment, incorporate the following extract from it into their own judgment: 'We give our judgment for the defendant on the present plea, on the ground that it appears to us sufficiently to state that the relation of principal and surety existed between the defendant and the principal debtor inter se, and that the plaintiff had knowledge of that fact when the notes were made and received by him, and when he entered into a binding agreement to give time to the principal debtor.' Williams, J., who gives the judgment of the Court, added these few words: 'These two facts' (i.e. the suretyship and that the plaintiff entered into a binding agreement with the debtor to give him time) 'exist in the present case, and therefore the principle is expressly applicable to it and ought to be binding.' The principle is not applicable to this case, because no positive or binding agreement for postponement has been proved.—Stevenson (instructed by F. F. Walker, Nottingham) for the plaintiffs; J. Wheatcroft (Belper) for the defendants.

CALLS TO THE BAR.

THE following gentlemen have been called to the bar during the present Hilary term:—

By the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn.

Frank Campbell Gates, Balliol College, Oxford.
George Russell Northcote, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford.
Thomas Sutton Timmis, jun., Christ Church, Oxford.
James Latimer Crawshay St. Clair, a Lieut.-Colonel in Her Majesty's army.
Herbert John Mongan, LL.B, Cambridge.
William Stoney, B.A., Oxford.
Kenneth Forbes Wood, B.A., Oxford.
George Chatfield King, B.A., Sydney, New South Wales, and B.A., Oxford.
Albert Charles Clauson, St. John's College, Oxford, a Tancred law student.
Roger Bernard Lawrence, B.A., London.
Frederick Beechey, Calcutta University.
Gerald James Thorne Seckham, B.A., Cambridge.
Henry Theodore Dempster Sweet, of the Madras Forest Department.
Oruganti Sivarama Krishnamma, B.A., Madras.

By the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple.

Gerald Yeo, B.A., Oxford.
Walter Leopold Buller, Cambridge.
Frank Mildred Birch.
Charles Taylor, M.A., Oxford.
Alexander Dingwall Bateson, B.A., Oxford.
Benjamin William Campion, B.A., Cambridge.
Richard Denison Cumberland-Jones, B.A., Cambridge.
William George Torr, B.A., Oxford.
Mark William Dixon, B.A., Oxford.
Stamford Hutton, B.A., Cambridge.
Thomas Percy Draper, B.A., Cambridge.
Norris Tildasley Foster, B.A., Oxford.
William Sharpe Stretton, LL B., Cambridge.
Pelham Rawstorn Papillon, B.C.L., M.A., Oxford.
George Walter Scott, B.A., Calcutta.
Pepyat Williams Evans, M.A., B.C.L., Oxford.
William Rennie, B.A., LL.B, Cambridge.
Charles Meikle Nelson, B.A., Oxford.

By the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple.

Ernest Frederick Abbott.
Cottari Soorya Prakasha Rao Nayudu, B.A., Downing College, Cambridge.
Percy Harland Atkin.
Andries Stockenström, B.A., Cambridge.
Hubert Morgan Brown, LL.B., Cambridge.
William Henry Adams.
Arthur John Aloysius O'Connor.
Richard Whitbourn Turner, B.A., Trinity Hall, Cambridge.
Louis George Gustave Roobery.
James Aitken.
Hubert Bayley Drysdale Woodcock (Middle Temple Common Law Scholar, 50 guineas).
Kaikhosro Edalji Ghamat (Middle Temple Common Law Scholar, 20 guineas).
Raghunath Das Garge.
Malwa Ram Mehta.
Henry Cowper Gollan, M.A., Edinburgh.
Peter Horace Martyr.

By the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn.

William Henry Cromie, University of London, first-class studentship (200 guineas) in Jurisprudence and Roman Law, Trinity, 1889, the Society's Lee prize, 1890, Barstow Law Scholarship, 1890.
James Richard Atkin, obtained the highest position at the examination for the Arden Scholarship held in Michaelmas Term, 1890, Demy of Magdalen College, Oxford.
Owen Cook, Her Majesty's Civil Service, Gray's Inn Holt Scholar, 1888.
William Richard Vale, University of Melbourne.
Thomas Probert Perks, LL.B., London, Lecture prize of 70*l.* (Hilary, 1891), in equity and common law.

The following scholarships have been awarded by the Treasurer and Masters of the Bench to students of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple, viz.:—

Real and Personal Property: P. E. Baldwin, a first-class scholarship of 50 guineas; R. W. Turner, a second-class scholarship of 20 guineas.

Common and Criminal Law: E. J. R. Surrage, a first-class scholarship of 50 guineas; W. J. Brown, a second-class scholarship of 20 guineas.

Equity: H. W. H. Knott, a first-class scholarship of 50 guineas; F. R. M. Cleaver, a second-class scholarship of 20 guineas.

International and Constitutional Law: R. C. Maxwell, a first-class scholarship of 50 guineas; J. Morrison, a second-class scholarship of 20 guineas.

THE NEW JUDGE.

HER MAJESTY has been pleased to approve of the name of Mr. Francis Henry Jeune, Q.C., to be one of the Justices of the High Court of Justice, a vacancy having arisen in that Court by the appointment of Sir James Hannen to be a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. Mr. Francis Henry Jeune, Q.C., has been appointed a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, to fill the vacancy caused by the recent appointment of Sir James Hannen to be a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. Mr. Jeune, who is the eldest son of the late Bishop of Peterborough, Dr. Magee's predecessor, was born in 1844, and was educated at Balliol College, Oxford. He had a brilliant university career, obtaining a first class in Classical Moderations in 1863 and a first in Literæ Humaniores in 1865. He also won two university prizes for historical essays, the Stanhope in 1863, and the Arnold in 1867. He has been a Fellow of Hertford College. Immediately on taking his degree in 1865 he came to London to read for the bar. He was called at the Inner Temple in November, 1868, and was created a Queen's Counsel in 1888. Mr. Jeune is the holder of several ecclesiastical appointments, and, in addition to being a well-known ecclesiastical lawyer, has been extensively engaged in commons and right-of-way cases. It may be remembered that Mr. Jeune was junior counsel for the Claimant in the civil action for the Tichborne estates, the present Lord Chancellor being one of the leading counsel on the same side. Mr. Jeune married, in 1881, Mary Susan Elizabeth, daughter of Keith William Stewart-Mackenzie, of Seaforth, and widow of Colonel the Hon. John Constantine Stanley, next brother of the present Lord Stanley of Alderley. The new judge was sworn in before the Lord Chancellor at Westminster on Thursday morning, and took his seat in Court the same day. Mr. Justice Butt will now become President of the Division.

INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

THE following notice has been issued:—

Incorporated Law Society,
Chancery Lane, London, W.C.:
January 15, 1891.

Dear Sir,—In pursuance of the resolution passed at the adjourned annual general meeting, held on July 15, 1881, to the effect that meetings of the society should be held in January and April, I am directed to inform you that a special general meeting of the members of the society will be held in the Hall of the society on Friday, the 30th inst., at two o'clock precisely, to consider the subjects hereafter mentioned, and of which notice has been duly given:—

Mr. Charles Ford will move: 'That this society in general meeting assembled hereby affirms its former declaration that the interest of suitors and the due administration of justice require that motions in the Courts of the Chancery Division should be set down in a list, and taken in the order in which they appear in such list, no precedence being given to leaders of the bar.'

Mr. F. K. Munton will move: 'That, having regard to the strongly expressed opinion at the annual provincial meeting at Nottingham (when dissenting from the principle of abolishing imprisonment for debt), that it would be expedient to procure legislative rules to guide the judges as to the sufficiency of evidence on which imprisonment for debt should be ordered, the council should now appoint a small committee to consider the matter, and report upon it.'

I am, dear Sir, faithfully,
E. W. WILLIAMSON, Secretary.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY IN THE YEAR 1890.

SPECIAL PRIZES OPEN TO ALL CANDIDATES.

Scott Scholarship.

THOMAS EDWARD SILVESTER being, in the opinion of the council, the candidate best acquainted with the theory, principles, and practice of law, they have awarded to him the scholarship founded by Mr. John Scott, of Lincoln's Inn Fields. Mr. Silvester served his clerkship with Mr. Frederick Theobald Langley, of Wolverhampton, and Mr. Henry John Smith, of London, and obtained the Clement's Inn and Daniel Reardon prizes at the Honours Examination held in January, 1890.

Broderip Prize.

Harry Opie Smith having shown himself best acquainted with the law of real property and the practice of conveyancing, having passed a satisfactory examination and attained honorary distinction, the council have awarded to him the prize, consisting of a gold medal, founded by Mr. Francis Broderip, of Lincoln's Inn. Mr. Smith served his clerkship with Mr. William Every, of Honiton, and Messrs. Torr, Janeways, Gribble & Oddie, of London, and obtained the New Inn prize at the Honours Examination held in January, 1890.

LOCAL PRIZES.

Timpron Martin Prize for Candidates from Liverpool.
Atkinson Prize for Candidates from Liverpool or Preston.

William Newby Gradwell having, from among the candidates from Liverpool, passed the best examination, and attained honorary distinction, the council have awarded to him the prize, consisting of a gold medal, founded by Mr. Timpron Martin, of Liverpool; and having, from among the candidates from Liverpool or Preston, shown himself best acquainted with the law of real property and the practice of conveyancing, otherwise passed a satisfactory examination, and attained honorary distinction, the council have awarded to him the prize, consisting of a gold medal, founded by Mr. John Atkinson, of Liverpool. Mr. Gradwell served his clerkship with Mr. Palgrave Simpson, of the firm of Messrs. Simpson, North & Johnson, of Liverpool, and obtained the John Mackrell prize and a second-class certificate at the Honours Examination held in November, 1890.

Birmingham Law Society's Prize for Candidates from Birmingham.

Arthur John Lees having, from among the candidates from Birmingham, been the first in order of merit, and recommended by the examiners as entitled to honorary distinction, and awarded a prize, the council have awarded to him the gold medal of the Birmingham Law Society. Mr. Lees served his clerkship to Messrs. Thursfield & Messiter, of Wednesbury, and Messrs. Bower, Cotton & Bower, of London, and obtained a prize from the Incorporated Law Society at the Honours Examination held in January, 1890.

Stephen Heelis Prize for Candidates from Manchester or Salford.

John Okell having, from among the candidates from Manchester or Salford, passed the best examination, and attained honorary distinction, the council have awarded to him the prize, consisting of a gold medal, founded in memory of the late Mr. Stephen Heelis, of Manchester. Mr. Okell served his clerkship with Mr. Robert Okell, of Manchester, and Messrs. Chester & Co., of London, and obtained a third-class certificate at the Honours Examination held in January, 1890.

On report of the Examination Committee, and
By Order of the Council,
E. W. WILLIAMSON,
Secretary.

Law Society's Hall.
Chancery Lane, London: January 23.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

THE usual weekly meeting of the Council of the Administrative County of London was held on Tuesday, January 27, in the Council Hall, Spring Gardens, Sir John Lubbock, M.P., the chairman, presiding.

THE SOLICITOR TO THE COUNCIL.

The general purposes committee presented a report with regard to the steps which should be taken with a view to the appointment of a successor to Mr. Ward in the office of solicitor to the council. They had had before them information as to the number of, and amount paid to, the salaried officers in the solicitor's department at different times during the last ten years, expenditure for Parliamentary business over the same period, salaries of that portion of the staff which had been chiefly occupied with Parliamentary business, and the number and amount of purchases carried out under each street or other improvement scheme since 1877 to illustrate the amount of conveyancing work. The duties and responsibilities hitherto attached to the office of solicitor to the late Board of Works and of the County Council were described as follows:—

(a) The solicitor to the London County Council has been called 'The Solicitor,' and conducted all legal business of the council, attended the meetings of the council and Parliamentary committees of the Houses of Parliament, taking the instructions of the chairman, vice-chairman, or deputy-chairman as to any matter not the subject of an order of the council or a committee, and, as regards the latter matters, keeping the chairman, vice-chairman, or deputy-chairman informed thereof.

(b) Reported to and advised on all legal matters of the different committees of the council, and attended them when necessary.

(c) Has been responsible for the entire staff in the solicitor's department and its conduct, and for the due expenditure of all moneys and fees disbursed in or connected with legal business, and for all books and accounts required to be kept. On the late solicitor's being appointed solicitor to the late Board of Works, in 1878, the salary was fixed at 1,200*l.* per annum, in 1881 it was increased to 1,500*l.*, and in 1884 to 1,750*l.*; and on his retirement he was granted a pension of 962*l.* 10*s.* per annum. After explaining the way in which the business of the department had hitherto been conducted, the committee recommend that the office of solicitor to the council be filled up, and that the salary attached to the office be 1,500*l.* per annum, and that an advertisement, inviting applications for the office, be inserted in certain publications, and that a copy of the advertisement be sent to the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society. After noticing the duties of the Parliamentary agent, the committee recommend that for such duties the Parliamentary agent be paid, in lieu of the Parliamentary taxed charges hitherto paid to him, a fixed amount of 1,100*l.* for work performed during the Parliamentary session, commencing in the autumn of the year 1890 to 1891, such sum being the average of the taxed charges for the same duties during the last ten years, and that such salary be paid quarterly, the first payment to be considered as due on December 31 last, and in substitution of any costs now payable for such duties; and, further, that the appointment be made on the condition that the Parliamentary agent shall not claim or be entitled to any superannuation or pension.

Consideration of the report was postponed until next meeting.

ELECTION OF COUNTY COUNCILLORS IN BOROUGHS.

THE Local Government Board have issued the following circular to all boroughs returning two or more county councillors:—

Sir,—I am directed by the Local Government Board to state that their attention has been drawn to certain apprehended difficulties in holding the triennial election of county councillors in boroughs.

The effect of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which makes section 52 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, applicable to the election of county councillors, is to require that the ordinary day of election of county councillors shall be the same as that of town councillors—viz. November 1; and subsection (1) of the first-mentioned section provides that in a year in which county councillors are elected, the elections of those councillors, and of councillors of a borough, shall be conducted together.

The first election in accordance with these provisions will be held on November 2 next, November 1 in the present year falling on a Sunday.

It appears to the board that the provision that the elections shall be conducted together requires not only that the two elections shall be held simultaneously, but also that where the elections are contested the polling shall be conducted for the same districts and at the same polling places and that the same officers and staff shall, as far as practicable, be employed for both elections.

In order that the elections may be conducted in accordance with these requirements in the case of a borough entitled to return more than one county councillor, it appears to be necessary that the electoral divisions for the election of county councillors should be coextensive with one or more wards or polling districts for the election of town councillors. Where this is not at present the case, the board would strongly impress upon the town council the desirability of taking steps to remove the obstacle thus occasioned to the elections being held together.

It seems to the board that this may be effected by the division of the borough or the wards of the borough into polling districts by the town council, under section 64 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, or by the alteration of the polling districts if the borough is at present divided into such districts. For example, in the case of a borough returning two county councillors, which has not been divided into wards or polling districts for the election of town councillors, it appears to the board that such polling districts should now be formed to correspond with the electoral divisions for the election of county councillors. If the borough is divided into two wards which are not conterminous with the electoral divisions, but contain portions of each division, each ward should be divided into polling districts coextensive with the parts of the ward in each electoral division.

It may be that in a few exceptional instances the part of an electoral division in a particular ward is extremely small. In such a case the town council may consider that it would be better that the electoral division should be altered rather than that the small overlapping area should be formed into a separate polling district. The board think that the electoral divisions should not be altered unless serious inconvenience would otherwise follow; but if this course cannot be avoided, it will be competent for the town council to apply to the Board to make the requisite alteration under section 54 (1) of the Local Government Act.

It is important that any alterations of areas that may be carried out in accordance with the suggestions in this letter should be made before the overseers commence the preparation of the burgess lists for the present year; and the Board are desirous, therefore, that the subject should be considered by the town council at the earliest possible date. Should an alteration in the electoral division be requisite, it is essential that the necessary application to the Board should be made at once, as a local inquiry would have to be held before any such alteration could be effected.

The Board may take this opportunity of pointing out the necessity for strict compliance by the overseers with the instruction in the precepts which they will receive from you, that if their parish is divided into, or forms part of, more than one polling district, electoral division, or ward, they must make out a list of burgesses for each part which is in a separate polling district, or separate electoral division, or separate ward, as if it were a separate parish. Neglect of this requirement might give rise to serious difficulties in holding the elections, and the Board suggest that the special attention of the overseers should be called to the matter when the precepts are sent to them.

I am, &c.,
HUGH OWEN, Secretary.

LORD SPENCER ON NEWSPAPERS.

LORD SPENCER, K.G., presided on Saturday, January 17, at Northampton, at the annual dinner of the Northampton District of the Institute of Journalists. There was a large attendance, including Sir Algernon Borthwick, M.P. (the president of the institute), Sir George Gunning, and his Honour Judge Snagge. The Bishop of Peterborough wrote regretting that a previous engagement prevented his attending.

Lord Spencer, in the course of his speech, said that every Parliamentary bill to relieve newspapers had tended to develop their influence and their power. From Mr. Fox's Libel Act in 1792 to Sir Algernon Borthwick's Libel Act in 1888, all the Acts which had tended to relieve newspapers of their disabilities had been direct incentives to their progress and to the educational work which they had taken up. The first Act which he had named might be called the Magna Charta of the newspaper press in these realms. The last Act had been one of enormous value, and they had to congratulate Sir Algernon Borthwick on having succeeded in carrying it through Parliament. This matter of legislation in regard to the press had not been wholly one-sided, and if he gave credit, as he did most sincerely, to his friend Sir Algernon for having carried that bill, he hoped he should not be unduly trenching on political matters if he took some consolation to himself from the fact that, from Mr. Fox to another great statesman, the party to which he had the honour of belonging had done a great deal towards this legislation. No one would contradict him when he said that the repeal of the stamp duty and the repeal of the paper duty had done more in the direction of spreading education and spreading the influence of a good press than any other measures that had ever been passed. Those measures were due to Mr. Gladstone more than to any other prominent statesman in this country. The growth of the press was wonderful. Not half a century ago there were only 400 newspapers in the United Kingdom, and now there were 2,200, and no less than 470 or 480 of these were in the metropolis alone. That was a marvellous development, and a marvellous influence for good or evil in the country. And the preponderance for good was very large. How marvellous, again, was some of the work that was done in the newspapers to-day. He looked to politics, which was the trade to which he belonged. How much he owed to the press in regard to that. Nothing could be more marvellous than the system which now prevailed of reporting public speeches. A great speaker had every word of his speech reported within a few hours of its delivery word for word. Then how much speakers owed to the newspaper reporters. He supposed there were not twenty speakers in England whose speeches would bear being reported exactly as they were delivered without correction whatever. Speakers, reckoned as very good speakers, had various tricks; they repeated certain words and certain sentences and certain phrases when they were passing from one subject to another. These would be monotonous and ridiculous if they were repeated in print. They also in their struggles, even with their prepared speeches, very often flounded in their grammar. A gentleman reading the speech might think how wonderful it was that a man could get up on his legs and make a long speech, very often of an hour and a half, and very often far too long, in such exquisite language. He did not remember that for its finishing-touch the speech owed a debt, not to the speaker, but to the reporter. He corrected the speaker's mistakes, omitted his repetitions, and dished up his speeches in excellent language, and yet somehow or other he managed to maintain the particular style that the speaker had. Speakers therefore were under a debt of the deepest gratitude to reporters for sending out their speeches in a readable form to the public.

AT THE LAW COURTS.

THE Hilary Sittings at the Law Courts began on Monday, January 12, and the most noteworthy point about it, whether to the legal profession or the public, is the marked decline in the number of causes down for trial. Last year there were 1,014, this year there are 963—a difference of 51. The Court of Appeal, too, has a comparatively light list. It would serve no end to cumber the discussion with a mass of figures. Suffice to say that the record of the last few years points in the same direction, and that the purely professional journals have some reason for the lamentations in which they are indulging over the decline of legal business. That decline is scarce to be measured by the figures quoted. The population grows fast, our wealth still faster. Under normal conditions we ought to be litigating not much less but much more than ever. Of course the public has not the least sympathy for the lawyer in his distress. Were the Courts shut up for 'lack of argument,' were leading counsel restored to the briefless condition of their earlier days, were the poet's vision realised of 'vile attorneys now a useless race'—even the man in the street would credit the millennium. The interests of a particular class or a particular profession are nothing as against the public weal; and if the decline could be explained by the consoling fact that people were growing more honest or less quarrelsome, then might we all rejoice. But what if the need be great as ever, while the remedy is not as efficient? What if the work is there to be done, and from various causes the work is simply not being brought to be done? It does seem to be a fact that a man will submit to injustice, forego his right, in fact do anything rather than appear as party to an action. Both professional and non-professional prints are agreed on this; so the practical reformer may well ask why it is so, and can the matter be remedied?

The obvious stumbling-block is costs, in which meagre word the difficulty is briefed. 'Were money no object and time of no importance, then were the Court of Chancery the most perfect of institutions;' so a great lawyer remarked of that once powerful institution, and so perhaps the ordinary layman thinks of all legal tribunals. But this has not very much to do with it. Small fees do not encourage litigation. In the Scots local Courts, where the scale of charges is notoriously inadequate, in most cases the business seems shrinking year by year. Opposite forces may produce the same result: 'Cold performs the effect of fire;' and if in one case the clients and in another the lawyers shun the tribunals, the results may be the same. But an action in the Supreme Court must always be costly. Probably a chief cause of complaint is the want of finality. Certain decisions may be appealed against as many as four times; with the expenses increasing in an increasing ratio with every move. There must be some liberty to appeal, otherwise there would be no uniformity in decisions; but at present that liberty is too great. A still more clamant cause of complaint is the bad arrangement of time, so that suitors and witnesses are often kept hanging about the Court for days before their causes come on. The judges' work is so heavy that materially to increase their weekly task would not be just; but some years ago they sat far longer than they do now. At any rate the change we are about to suggest would probably be as acceptable to them as it would certainly be to people having business in the Courts. The hours are from 10.30 to 4, with half an hour's interval. If the sitting were from 10 to 5, with an hour's interval, that would give five more hours a week; and in return therefor the Saturday sitting, which lasts about three hours, might be given up. The advantage to the suitor would be that his case would be tried on the day appointed very much oftener than now. Again, the system of circuits, by which most of the judges on the Queen's Bench Division are withdrawn for weeks at a time from town, is badly in need of revision; and arrangements once made should be more rigidly adhered to than they are. By small reforms like these the efficiency of our legal system would be vastly increased—there is neither need of nor room for sweeping changes.

After all, the decline of business in the Supreme Court has good points about it. Costs are felt most heavily where the subject-matter in dispute is small; and actions of this sort are either begun in the County Court or are sent down there at an early stage in their career in constantly increasing numbers. The statistics of these important tribunals show this; show, too, that the public does get a good deal of its law both cheaply and quickly enough. Moreover, it may be that we are less inclined to be quarrelsome than our fathers were before us. Let us hope that we are.—National Observer.

HER MAJESTY has been pleased to approve, on the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor, of the names of the following gentlemen for appointment to the rank of Queen's Counsel: John Francis Rotton, John Edward Barker, William Cecil Smyly, Ralph Wardlaw M'Leod Fullarton, James Douglas Walker, George Farwell, Charles Edward Heley Chadwyck-Healey, Ernest Laurence Levett, and William Robert Bousfield. These gentlemen on Tuesday last duly took their seats within the bar.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 22.

Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line (1887) (Lim.) (Damage to Cargo) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Smith, J., dated August 5, at a trial without a jury at Derby).—Cur. adv. vult.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 23.

Jones v. Williams (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Denman, J., and Wills, J., dated January 29, after trial before Manisty, J., with a special jury at Carmarthen).—Dismissed.

Winfield & Sons v. Snow Brothers (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Hawkins, J., dated August 14, at trial without a jury at Birmingham).—Dismissed.

Dobell & Co. and others v. SS. Bencroy Company (Lim.) (appeal of defendants from judgment of Smith, J., dated July 29, at trial without a jury at Liverpool).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 24.

Smith v. Northern Enamelled Iron Company (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Hawkins, J., dated August 18, at trial without a jury at Birmingham).—Judgment varied.

Farnham v. Peel (appeal of defendant from findings of judge and judgment of Lawrance, J., thereon, dated August 13, at trial without a jury at Birmingham).—Part heard.

MONDAY, JANUARY 26.

Cusack and another v. London and North-Western Railway Company (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 12, refusing extension of time for appealing from County Court).—Allowed.

Owners of Empress of India and Cargo v. Owners of SS. Rheinfels (appeal of defendants from refusal of Butt, J., dated January 20, of order for affidavit of discovery).—Order varied by consent.

Stevens v. Hinshelwood & Co. (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict at trial before Lawrance, J., in Middlesex).—Granted.

Same Action (application of plaintiff for judgment).—Refused.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27.

Bennett v. M'Donald (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Crumbie v. Wallsend Local Board (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., at Newcastle).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28.

Shrapnel v. Everett (application of defendant to set aside judgment entered for plaintiff at trial before Grantham, J., and for inquiry as to title and validity of patent).—Granted.

Jamieson v. Jamieson (application of plaintiff in formâ pauperis for new trial on appeal from verdict at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Refused.

Jamieson v. Carden and others (application of plaintiff in formâ pauperis for new trial on appeal from verdict at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Refused.

Sheppards, Pelly & Co. v. Wilkinson and another (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from judgment dismissing counter-claim at trial before Pollock, B., in Middlesex).—Refused.

Heath v. Moore (appeal of defendants Moore and Boyd for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Same v. Same (application of defendants King, Sell & Railton (Lim.) for new trial).—Withdrawn on terms.

Foreign Wine Growers' Co. (Lim.) v. Hopkins (application of defendant from judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Denman, J., with special jury at Guildford).—Refused.

Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Company (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., with special jury at Manchester).—Refused.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 22.

Hayes v. Burgess (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated July 16, 1890, at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex. Hayes v. Burgess (application of plaintiffs for judgment).—Record withdrawn.

Steel v. Dartford Local Board (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from nonsuit at trial before Grantham, J., in Middlesex).—Application refused.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 23.

Phelps, James & Co. and others v. C. G. Hill and others (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex).—Cur. adv. vult.

Turner v. Goldsmith (application of plaintiff to set aside judgment entered for defendant at trial before Grantham, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Application granted.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 24.

J. W. Sey v. W. Griffith & Co. (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated December 15, refusing application to examine plaintiff abroad under existing or further commission).—Varied.

Ingham v. Sutherland (appeal of defendant E. C. Sutherland from order of Kekewich, J., dated November 21, refusing application to open a foreclosure).—Dismissed for default of appearance.

Barney and Birmingham, &c., Banking Company (Lim.) v. Joshua Stubbs (Lim.) and another. In re Joshua Stubbs (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of official liquidator from order of Kekewich, J., dated December 3, granting leave to proceed with action and refusing motion to appoint appellant receiver).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, JANUARY 26.

In re Leavesley (heard January 12).

Jenkins v. Bushby (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Stirling, J., dated December 1, refusing trial by jury; heard January 14).—Appeal allowed and order varied.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27.

Bown v. Centaur Cycle Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated November 19).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28.

Jones v. Watts (appeal of plaintiffs from order of North, J., dated November 19, allowing objections to taxing-master's certificate).—Dismissed.

Mills v. Dunham (appeal of defendant from order of Chitty, J., dated December 5, restraining solicitation of orders from customers of plaintiff within certain radius).—Part heard.

OBITUARY.

MR. CHARLES FREDERICK FORD, late clerk of the papers in the Probate Registry, Somerset House, died on the 6th inst., in his eightieth year. He was a civil servant for fifty-seven years, having entered the old Prerogative Office, Doctor's Commons, so long ago as September, 1830. By his retirement in 1888 the Probate Registry lost its oldest servant, and one of the few remaining links which connect the present age and system with the past was severed. The death at the present time of a man who was acquainted with the old state of things as described by Dickens in 'David Copperfield,' and knew the originals of the characters portrayed under assumed names in one of the 'Sketches by Boz,' and who knew the late Sir John Rolt when that judge was a proctor's clerk in the Commons, is a matter of interest. Mr. Ford was a man whom to know was to like, although his earnestness of purpose and integrity of motive may not through his long life have always met with fitting appreciation.

GRAY'S INN.—The examiners appointed by the Arden trustees have awarded the Arden Law Scholarship of 60*l.* a year, tenable for three years, to Mr. James Richard Atkin, who was called to the bar by the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn on Monday. The special subjects for examination for the Arden Scholarship were the law of partnership and the law of trusts.

MIDDLE TEMPLE. — Wednesday, January 28, being 'Grand Day' in the Middle Temple, in the evening the treasurer (Lord Coleridge) and the benchers entertained a distinguished company at dinner in their hall. The guests included the Bishop of Peterborough (Archbishop-Designate of York), Lord Esher (Master of the Rolls), Lord Macnaghten, Lords Justices Bowen, Fry, and Lopes, Mr. John Morley, M.P., Mr. Justice Mathew, the Master of Balliol, Major-General Montgomery-Moore, the Rector of Exeter College, Oxford, Mr. Henry Craik, C.B., Mr. C. Cavendish Clifford, Mr. Duncan Darroch, Captain Coleridge, the Rev. Canon Ainger (Reader at the Temple Church), and Mr. J. W. Waldron (the under-treasurer). The benchers present were Lord Hannen, Mr. Hunter Rodwell, Q.C., Sir Thomas Chambers, Q.C., Mr. Joseph Brown, Q.C., Judge Prentice, Judge Sir Francis Roxburgh, Mr. Justice Day, Lord Justice Lindley, Mr. Cowie, Q.C., Mr. Hopwood, Q.C., Mr. Murphy, Q.C., Mr. Philbrick, Q.C., Mr. Macrory, Q.C., Mr. Lockwood Webb, Q.C., Sir Richard Couch, Mr. Ambrose, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Graham, Q.C., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Warmington, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Henn Collins, Q.C., Mr. Bigham, Q.C., Mr. Stallard, Mr. Finlason, Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Shiress Will, Q.C., M.P., Mr. John Digby, Mr. French, Q.C., Sir F. V. Smith, Mr. Crump, Q.C., and Mr. H. D. Greene, Q.C.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM FEBRUARY 2 TO FEBRUARY 7.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	February 2	February 3	February 4	February 5	February 6	February 7
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Altrincham	Northwich	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Derby	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
26	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Lichfield	Stafford	Leek	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Torquay

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, February 2. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Tuesday, February 3.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Wednesday, February 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Thursday, February 5.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Friday, February 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Saturday, February 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

MR. HENRY WILLIAM LORD, Registrar of the Court of Probate for the County of Lancaster, has been appointed a Registrar of the Chief Probate Registry, Somerset House, in succession to Mr. Middleton, who recently resigned, after having held the office for many years.

REPORTERS AND ARBITRATIONS. — A singular incident took place on January 22 in the arbitration case of Goater and Craven v. Godfrey, which refers to the ownership of a number of racehorses, including one named Primrose Day, a Cesarewitch winner. Mr. Hopkins, the new London police-magistrate, is the arbitrator, and during the proceedings a note was handed him. He then said that he understood that a reporter was in Court, and the proceedings were private. Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., protested against objections being taken by private notes instead of in open Court, and said that he had attended scores of arbitrations where reporters had been present. The arbitrator, however, decided that the reporter should withdraw.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, the 26th inst., a debate was held on the following subject for discussion: 'A., a director of a company, intending to send a letter to a co-director containing defamatory statements about B. in regard to the latter's conduct in the affairs of the company, by mistake sends it to C., a shareholder of the company. Is A. liable in an action for damages?'—Mr. E. G. Finch opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Mr. Barnes.—Mr. A. Forshaw opened in the negative, which was also supported by Messrs. F. W. Archer and H. Todd.—The question was decided in the negative by a majority of fourteen.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. J. BRADLEY DYNE, of Lincoln's Inn, has been appointed by the Attorney-General Conveyancing Counsel to the War Office, in succession to Mr. F. Ramadge, resigned.

Mr. Foster Henry Okey Nash, B.A. (of the firm of Bockett, Stunt & Nash), of 60 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Nash was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Percy Clarke (of the firm of Ellis, Munday & Clarke), of 23 College Hill, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Clarke was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Charles Alfred Wood (of the firm of Holder & Wood), of 40 Cheapside, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Wood was admitted in 1884.

Mr. James Leake, Jun., of Shifnal, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Leake was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur John Edward Newton (of the firm of Arthur Newton & Co.), of 24 Great Marlborough Street, W., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Newton was admitted in 1884.

Mr. John James Arnsby Soper, of 59 Chancery Lane, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Soper was admitted in 1884.

Mr. John Hart, LL.B., of 22 Great Winchester Street, E.C., has been appointed Solicitor to Reuter's Telegram Company (Lim.).

Mr. Frederick William Butler (of the firm of Rawlinson & Butler), of Horsham and Crawley, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Butler was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Thornton Jones (of the firm of Glynne, Jones & Jones), of Beaumaris & Bangor, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Jones was admitted in 1884.

Mr. John Thomas Roberts, of Carnarvon and Llanberis, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Roberts was admitted in 1884.

CREMATION FORBIDDEN IN DENMARK.—A Reuter's telegram, dated Copenhagen, January 16, says: 'In pursuance of a decision pronounced by the Supreme Court to-day, cremation will be prohibited in Denmark, pending the passing of the new law for the disposal of the dead.'

MR. THOMAS STAMFORD RAFFLES, stipendiary magistrate of Liverpool, died yesterday in his seventy-third year. A few days ago he contracted a cold, which turned into congestion of the lungs. He was appointed stipendiary of Liverpool in 1860, and was one of the oldest stipendiaries in the country. He was a barrister of the Inner Temple and an able lawyer. He was the son of the well-known Rev. Dr. Raffles.

THE MUZZLING ORDER.—The justices of the peace in the Osgoldcross Division of Yorkshire recently addressed a memorial to Mr. Chaplin, asking for a repeal of the muzzling order in that division of West Yorkshire. In reply, Mr. Chaplin states that he fears a relaxation of the order just as it is completing its work would be to undo all the good that has been done, but the memorialists may rely upon it that the order will not be maintained longer than is absolutely necessary, and quotes statistics showing a steady decrease of rabies in the county.

THE NORTHERN CIRCUIT.—The following are the arrangements made by the judges (Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Lawrance) for holding the ensuing assizes on the Northern Circuit—viz.: The commissions will be opened at Appleby on Monday, February 9; at Carlisle, on Wednesday, February 11; at Lancaster on Tuesday, February 17; at Manchester, on Monday, February 23; and at Liverpool on Saturday, March 7. Business will commence at each place on the day next after the commission day at 11 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered. Civil business will not be taken at Carlisle before Friday, February 13, or at Lancaster before Thursday, February 19. The trial of special jury cases will commence at Manchester on Thursday, February 26, and at Liverpool on Wednesday, March 11, at the sitting of the Court, unless otherwise ordered. When a cause in the list has been settled, immediate notice thereof must be given to the associate by the party who entered it.

THE HIGH COURT AND THE COUNTY COURTS.—Within the last few days two remarkable instances have occurred of the way in which difficult points of law, especially on the construction of modern Acts of Parliament, arise simultaneously in the High Court and County Courts. In Brentford County Court, on the 9th inst., the official receiver's trustee applied for the judge's ruling in a case—In re Grubb—as to whether the discharge of a man who was adjudicated a bankrupt before the Bankruptcy Amendment Act of 1890 came into operation was subject to the penalties provided in section 8 of that Act. His Honour Judge Stonor held that, by virtue of section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, he was not subject to these penalties, but only to those contained in the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. In the Bankruptcy Division of the High Court, on the 13th inst., precisely the same question arose before Mr. Justice Cave in a case—In re Raison—which he decided in the same way and on the same grounds. At the Brompton County Court, on Wednesday, the 21st inst., questions arose under the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, as to the correctness of the descriptions of the attesting witness and of the grantor of a bill of sale, which were the same as arose in the important case of In re Heseltine in the Court of Appeal on the very same day, as reported in the Times of January 23. The counsel concerned applied for an adjournment to await the decision in this case, which Judge Stonor naturally granted, ultimately deciding the case in accordance with the decision of the Court of Appeal.

BALLIOL AND THE BENCH.—Mr. Grigsby writes to the Times as follows: 'Sir,—It is a noteworthy fact that, by the elevation of Mr. Jeune to the bench, Balliol College has now seven representatives on the Supreme Court of Judicature—namely, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, Lords Justices Bowen and Lopes, Justices Chitty, Kekewich, Wright, and Jeune. This record is probably unparalleled. —Yours obediently, W. E. GRIGSBY, Balliol College, Oxon., 7 King's Bench Walk, Temple, E.C., January 27.'

BIRTHS.

On Jan. 20, at 82 Brooke Road, Stoke Newington, the wife of Frederick Armitage, Solicitor, of a son (Arthur).

On Jan. 20, at Bedford Lodge, Campden Hill, W., the wife of John Lawson Walton, Queen's Counsel, of a son.

On Jan. 20, at Parkview, St. Margaret's, Middlesex, the wife of J. R. R Godfrey, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Jan. 22, at 12 Palatine Square, Burnley, the wife of H. J. Ernest Holmes, Solicitor, of a son.

On Jan. 24, at Donbank, Aberdeen, N.B., the wife of A. J. W. Storie, Solicitor Supreme Courts of Scotland, of a daughter.

On Jan. 26, at 10 Woburn Square, London, W.C., Maude (née Bretherton), the wife of John Bamford Slack, Solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 14, at St. Paul's Church, Lindale-in-Cartmel, Ernest Newton, youngest son of the late Colonel Deakin, M.P., J.P., of Werrington Park, Devon, and Moseley Park, Cheshire, to Laura Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Deakin, of Eller How, Grange-over-the-Sands, Barrister-at-Law.

On Jan. 15, at St. Matthew's Church, West Kensington Park, Rev. George Crowle, vicar of Corringham, only surviving son of Charles Uppleby, Q.C., J.P., D.L., of Barrow Hall, Lincolnshire, to Margaret Augusta, daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel Charles Brown Constable, 18th B. N. I., J.P., D.L., of Wallace Craigie, Forfarshire, and 1 Lansdown Place, Cheltenham.

On Jan. 15, at the Parish Church, Hampstead, James Cross Phillips, of 10 Christchurch Road, Hampstead, and 17 Coleman Street, E.C., Solicitor, to Anna, second daughter of the late James Hepburn, of Camden Town and Hampstead.

On Jan. 21, at the Parish Church, West Bergholt, near Colchester, Anthony Nichol Bowman, Solicitor, Carlisle, younger son of the late John Bowman, of Newtown, Irthington, Cumberland, to Laura Phœbe, second daughter of William Wilberforce Daniell, of West Bergholt.

On Jan. 21 at St. Marylebone Church, Rev. Edward Arthur Bagot, only son of the late Rev. Edward Bagot, M.A., LL.D., and D.C.L., of Kildoon, county Kildare, Ireland, to Harriet Lilian, youngest daughter of the late Francis Dennis Massey-Dawson, of Ballinacourty, Ireland, and Barrister-at-Law of the Inner Temple.

On Jan. 24 (by license), at Gedney, Lincolnshire, Thomas Hawkesley Capes, Solicitor, Manchester, to Annie, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Foster, The Manor House, Moulton, Lincolnshire.

On Jan. 24, at the Church of St. Andrew's, Holborn, Benjamin Whitehead, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, only son of Mr. B. Whitehead, Holborn, to Annette Constance, daughter of Mr. Robert Ingpen, of 95 Chancery Lane.

DEATHS.

On Jan. 16, at 88 Crofton Road, Camberwell, Thomas Edmund Winn, many years Chief Clerk to the late Sir Richard Paul Amphlett, Lord Justice, aged 74 years.

On Jan. 21, at 12 Sevington Street, W., Richard Henry Cole, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, aged 40.

On Jan. 22, at his residence, Abercromby Square, Liverpool, Thomas Stamford Raffles, Police Magistrate of Liverpool.

On Jan. 23, at Thorn Bank, Marple, Cheshire, Francis Williams Johnson, Solicitor, Coroner for the Stockport and Hyde Magisterial Divisions of the County of Chester, aged 59 years.

On Jan. 23, at Florence, Catherine Mary Woodroffe, of Oaklea, St. Leonards-on-Sea, widow of Charles Henry Wilts Woodroffe, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, aged 42 years.

On Jan. 23, at New Southgate, N., Sarah Kezia, widow of the late George Horsey, Barrister-at-Law, aged 69.

On Jan. 25, at his residence, 106 Queen's Gate, S.W., Captain Henry Gillett Gridley, late one of Her Majesty's Body Guard, a Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and Barrister-at-Law, aged 70 years.

On Jan. 27, at Folkestone, Edgar Hyde, M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, formerly Fellow of C.C.C., Oxford, aged 61.

On Jan. 28, at the residence of her niece, 337 Brixton Road, Isabella, fifth daughter of the late John Gould, Solicitor, Brompton, Kent, in her 87th year, and late of 14 Cornfield Terrace, Eastbourne.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE whole question whether a Roman Catholic might in 1872 become Lord Chancellor or not will be found exhaustively treated in the reply of the Attorney-General (Sir John, now Lord, Coleridge) to Sir Colman O'Loghlen in the House of Commons (in the May of that year) to the question whether, 'according to the existing law, any religious qualification was necessary for the offices of Lord Chancellor or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; and, in particular, whether a Roman Catholic or a Jew, or either of them, was eligible to hold either or both of such offices.' It is there pointed out that the saving contained in the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863, which repealed the Test Act, prevents it having the effect of throwing the office open, and that the saving of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 62, which abolished the declaration against transubstantiation, might possibly have a similar operation. The Attorney-General gave it as his opinion, however, 'though a right hon. friend differed from him, and he (the Attorney-General) was quite ready to receive correction with the greatest possible humility,' that the effect of the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), which abolished the Test Act Amendment Acts of Geo. I. and Geo. II., 1 Geo. I., s. 2, c. 13, and Geo. II. c. 26, without any saving, was to abolish the restriction against Roman Catholics, and to throw open the office of Lord Chancellor. Since 1872 the law does not appear to have been altered, and we have little doubt that a Roman Catholic may become Lord Chancellor without the assistance of Mr. Gladstone's bill, though not by virtue of the Act of 1863, but by virtue of the Act of 1871. It would, however, be in the highest degree dangerous for a Roman Catholic Lord Chancellor to be appointed without special enabling legislation, as otherwise all his judicial acts might come to be called in question as being coram non judice. As to a Jew, or an atheist, there is no doubt whatever, Jews having become enabled in 1867, and atheists by Mr. Bradlaugh's Act of 1888.

IN Knowles v. Duncan the plaintiff recovered 10,000*l.* by the verdict of a jury in the absence of the defendant, who was the proprietor of the Matrimonial News, for breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff being a young lady about nineteen and the defendant being aged about seventy. On motion for a new trial on the ground that the damages were excessive, the Court of Appeal has, by consent, reduced the damages to 6,500*l.*, but if that amount, with costs, be not paid within a month, the original verdict is to stand. As a precedent, therefore, the case is valuable as being the first on record in which a Court has reduced the damages in a breach of promise action on the ground of excess. From the time of William III. downwards, when in Harrison v. Cage, Carth. 467, a jury found for the plaintiff for 400*l.*, the Courts have steadily set themselves against granting new trials on the ground of excess of damages in breach of promise cases. But, inasmuch as the largest sum ever known to have been recovered by the verdict of the jury (without any compromise, such as in Finney v. Garmoyle, where 10,000*l.* was recovered by consent) was 3,500*l.*, in Wood v. Hurd, 2 B. N. C. 166, we are not surprised that the course of leaving everything to a jury should at last have received some check. But we doubt whether complete justice will ever be done until, by the reintroduction and passing of Lord Herschell's or some similar bill, the law of this country in these matters has been more assimilated to that prevailing in European countries generally, where the damages are limited to actual pecuniary loss. See Hansard, vol. ccxlv. pp. 1867–1887, where a full account is given of the resolution of Lord (then Mr.) Herschell, which was carried in the House of Commons by 106 to 45 in 1879.

IN reporting the case of Regina v. Alderson, in which the trial of a person accused of crime was ordered to be held under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16 at the Central Criminal Court, although the offence was committed out of the jurisdiction of that Court, the Times reporter, probably by a printer's error, is made to speak of the Act in question as Palmer's Act. Surely the Act ought to have been described as The Palmer Act, it having been passed (see Regina v. Palmer, 5 E. & B. 1024) in order to amend the law by which apprehended indictments of the murderer Palmer had been removed from Stafford into the Queen's Bench on the ground that a fair trial could not be had in Staffordshire. The true Palmer's Act (more properly called Hinde Palmer's Act) is 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, which abolished the priority of specialty over simple contract debts in the administration of the estate of a deceased person, and was so called from having been introduced into Parliament by the late Mr. Hinde Palmer. Amongst Acts besides the Palmer Act known by the names of persons whose conduct gave rise to them are the Thellusson Act, the repealed Coventry Act (22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 1), and the Victor Townley Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 29), which was passed in consequence of the escape from justice of the murderer Townley, in order to require more strict proof of the condition of prisoners alleged to be insane. The Acts named after the persons more honourably connected with them by passing them through Parliament are far more numerous—e.g. there is Pollock's Act, Denman's Act, Campbell's Act, the Recorder's Act (introduced by the late Mr. Russell Gurney), Sir Morton Peto's Act, Mr. Finlay's Act (for while the author is still living some prefix is usual), and a host of others. But what a distinction between the two kinds of nomenclature!

THE case of Budd (appellant) v. Lucas (respondent) affords yet another instance of the beneficial operation of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, in weeding out trade irregularities. The respondent was the senior partner of a firm of brewers. The appellant, one of their customers, wrote to them in November, 1889, complaining that, in consequence of rumours he had heard, he had measured one of their barrels—a 'barrel' containing in the trade thirty-six gallons—and found it full two gallons short measure. Notwithstanding this, a barrel was delivered to him in January, 1890, which again contained short measure, and thereupon proceedings were taken against the respondent under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. With the beer the carman left an invoice, in which the cask in question was called a barrel. Was this an application of a false trade description to the cask within section 2, subsection 1 (d) of the Act? If so, the respondent was guilty of an offence against the Act, unless he could prove that he acted without intent to defraud. Much misapprehension appears still to exist as to the effect of the Act with respect to the responsibility of an employer for the act of his servants. Chisholm v. Doulton, 58 Law J. Rep. M. C. 133, which was cited, is not in point, as it turned solely on the words of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128, a statute for abating the nuisance arising from the smoke of furnaces in the metropolis, while Wood v. Burgess, 59 Law J. Rep. M. C. 11, in which mineral water was supplied in bottles bearing the name of a rival manufacturer, was also decided upon the words 'acted innocently' in subsection 2 of section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act. Storey v. The Chilworth Gunpowder Company, 59 Law J. Rep. M. C. 13, was upon subsection 1 of the section, but the question there was whether, when a false trade description had been intentionally applied to gunpowder equal in quality to powder of the respondents' own manufacture, which, owing to an accident, they were unable to supply, there was an intent to defraud within the meaning of the subsection, and it was held that there was. Little authority, however, is needed, since the words of the section, 'unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud,' are scarcely capable of two meanings, and the Court (Mr. Baron Pollock and Mr. Justice Charles) had no difficulty in deciding that the subsection does not alter the old law that a master is not criminally liable for the act of his servant, except to the extent of shifting the onus of proof on to the master to show that he personally acted without intent to defraud. With this intimation, therefore, the case was remitted to the justices, who had indeed found in favour of the defendant upon the point, but had, in doing so, excluded evidence of previous short deliveries, which, it is obvious, was in the highest degree material; and it was further intimated that, if the defendant failed to show that he acted without intent to defraud, the invoice might constitute an application of a trade description to the casks of beer within the meaning of the Act. The wide terms of section 5 (d) of the Act leave but little room for doubt upon this point.

THE question whether an action for damages will lie in respect of a personal injury accidentally caused to the plaintiff was fully considered by Mr. Justice Denman in the recent case of Stanley v. Powell, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 52. The learned judge held that, unless the defendant had been guilty of negligence, such an action was not maintainable. It is somewhat curious that such an important point should not have been actually decided before. There are, however, several authorities bearing upon the question, all of which were dealt with by Mr. Justice Denman in the course of his judgment. The defendant, who was one of a shooting party, fired at a pheasant which rose, and accidentally shot the plaintiff, who was employed to carry the game killed, in the eye. The jury found that the defendant was guilty of no negligence in firing as he did, and the accident was in fact caused by a shot from the defendant's gun striking the bough of a tree, and glancing off in the direction where the plaintiff was standing. Under these circumstances Mr. Justice Denman held that the action was not maintainable, the defendant having fired without any intention of injuring the plaintiff, and the jury having negatived negligence.

THE Bristol justices have declined to crack the nut presented to them, and the question whether the holder of a 'six-day' license is bound to close his premises on Good Friday and Christmas Day as well as on Sunday will remain an open one till after Good Friday next, at any rate, unless Sir Wilfrid Lawson should succeed in prevailing upon Parliament to interpose with a settlement. Meanwhile, let us see what the law is. By section 49 of the Licensing Act, 1872, 'the holder of a six-day license shall keep his premises closed during the whole of Sunday, and the provisions of this Act with respect to the closing of licensed premises during certain hours on Sunday shall apply to the premises in respect of which a six-day license is granted as if the whole of Sunday were mentioned in those provisions instead of certain hours only.' The provisions of the Licensing Acts as to closing were at first wholly contained in section 24 of the Licensing Act, 1872, but that, with other sections, was repealed by section 33 of the Licensing Act, 1874, which Act, however, is by section 1 'to be construed as one Act' with the Act of 1872. We think, therefore, though with some little doubt, that section 3 of the Act of 1874 is to be read exactly as if it stood in lieu of section 24 of the Act of 1872 in the Act of 1872 itself. Then what does section 3 of the Act of 1874 say? After prescribing certain hours for closing on Sunday for all licensed premises, it enacts that 'such premises shall be closed on Christmas Day and Good Friday, and on the days preceding Christmas Day and Good Friday respectively, as if Christmas Day and Good Friday were respectively Sunday and the preceding days were respectively Saturday; but this provision shall not alter the hours during which such premises shall be closed on Sunday when Christmas Day immediately precedes or succeeds Sunday.' A horrible complication! But the spirit of the Act is clearly in favour of Christmas Day closing on the part of the six-day man. Is the letter in favour of it also? We think so, for it seems to us that in section 49 of the Act of 1872 Sunday means what it means in section 3 of the Act of 1874.

A question of very great practical importance to the smaller shareholders in joint-stock companies was recently raised, but not decided, in an action by the Aylesbury Dairy Company, in which Mr. Justice Chitty ordered the name of the company to be struck out as plaintiffs. This question was simply whether, where a company has no articles of association except those prescribed by 'Table A,' it is within the power of the larger to disfranchise the smaller shareholders. By section 52 of the Companies Act, 1862, 'in default of regulations, every member of a company under that Act shall have one vote.' By Article 44 of 'Table A' 'every member shall have one vote for every share up to ten; he shall have an additional vote for every five shares beyond the first ten shares up to one hundred, and an additional vote for every ten shares beyond the first hundred shares.' By section 50 of the Act, any company may by special resolution alter all or any of the regulations contained in 'Table A,' where such table is applicable, or 'make new regulations to the exclusion of or in addition to all or any of the regulations of the company.' The Aylesbury Dairy Company passed a special resolution rescinding Article 44 of 'Table A,' and enacting in effect that no shareholder should have a vote unless possessed of a hundred shares. Was this resolution valid? On the whole we think not, but the question is an extremely difficult one, and quite untouched by direct authority. If, however, the law should be that such a resolution is valid, we think it ought to be altered in favour of giving each shareholder at least one vote. At the same time, the practice of dividing the capital into holdings of small nominal amount is greatly to be deprecated. We incline to think that the minimum value of a share should be 50*l*.

The Copyright Bill will now probably come on for second reading in the House of Lords next week, though we believe that the day has not yet been fixed. Like all bills which combine consolidation with amendment, it is necessary that it should deal with the substantially practical question, To what extent are existing copyrights to be affected? This question is attempted to be solved by clauses 6 and 7. By clause 6 it is proposed that, although all the existing enactments are to be repealed with respect to future copyrights, they are to continue in force with respect to existing copyrights. It is somewhat unfortunate that the existing Acts, which are a marvel of obscurity and confusion, should have to be kept up so long, and we think that, while existing rights should of course be fully preserved, the remedies for infringing them should be, as far as possible, the same as the remedies for infringing rights still to be created. A still more important provision is made by clause 7. In many cases the new term of copyright—for life of the author and thirty years afterwards—will probably last longer than the existing terms. It is proposed, following the precedent created by the Act of 1842, which lengthened the term of copyright previously existing, that any subsisting copyright 'shall endure for the term limited by the existing enactments, or for the term fixed by the Act, whichever shall be the longer;' but it is added, also following the precedent of the Act of 1842, that 'in all cases in which the copyright shall belong to a publisher or other person who shall have acquired it for other consideration than that of love and affection,' it 'shall not be extended, unless the original copyright owner if he be living, or his personal representatives if he be dead,' and the proprietor of the copyright shall, before the expiration of the existing term, 'agree to accept the benefit' of the new Act. This provision, which seems to be perfectly just, carries out one of the recommendations of the Royal Commission of 1878. It is, in fact, modelled upon section 4 of the Copyright Act, 1842, by which the pre-existing term of copyright was considerably extended—from twenty-eight years, roughly speaking, to its present term of forty-two years from publication, or seven years from the death of the author, whichever may be the longer period.

There are two 'Rating of Machinery' bills this session, one backed by Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Sir Bernhard Samuelson, Sir William Houldsworth, Mr. Winterbotham, Mr. Gerald Balfour, and Mr. Tomlinson, and the other by Mr. H. S. Wright, Mr. Oldroyd, Mr. T. H. Sidebottom, Mr. Herbert Gladstone, Mr. J. A. Bright, Mr. Mather, and Mr. Mowbray, the two bills thus having no less than thirteen backers between them. By the first bill the character of the machinery to be rated is first expressly defined as (1) 'water wheels, steam, gas, air, and electric engines, steam boilers, and all other fixed motive powers and the fixed appurtenances thereof,' and (2) 'shafts, wheels, drums, and other fixed power machinery which transmits the action of motive power to other machinery, fixed or loose,' and it is then proposed to be enacted that 'save as in the last section provided, no machinery, whether attached to the tenement or premises or not, shall be taken into consideration in estimating such ratable value.' By the second bill it is proposed that, in estimating value for rating purposes, 'any increased value arising from machinery which is machinery for any manufacturing process, and is only fixed to the hereditament for the purpose of steadying it, and which can be removed without injury to the hereditament or to itself (and does not require any special construction or adaptation of the hereditaments in which it is used) shall be excluded.' Neither bill is to apply to the rating of waterworks, gasworks, or collieries. In point of phrasing, the first bill appears to us to be by far the best. Probably both bills will be referred to the same select committee.

The decision in In re Cane; Ruff v. Sivers, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 36, is but a corollary to the settled rule 'that when there is a gift to a person for life, if she so long remains unmarried, or for life until bankruptcy, followed by a gift over in the event of marriage or bankruptcy, the remainder is not contingent, but vested so as to take effect either upon the death or marriage or bankruptcy, as the case may be, of the tenant for life' ('Theobald on Wills,' 3rd ed. p. 379). The reason why the opinion of the Court was asked was that other contingencies were referred to besides marriage, and the gift over was in the event of the testator's widow making default in repairing or insuring his said property, or marrying again or cohabiting. The widow died without having committed any of the acts or defaults on which her interest was expressed to be determinable. Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Kay held that the fact that the gift over was to take effect on more than one event strengthened, instead of weakened, the inference that the property was to go over on the widow's death also. The above-mentioned rule should therefore run: 'That when there is a gift to a person for life, until some event or events happen, followed by a gift over on the happening of the event, or one or more of the events, the remainder is vested so as to take effect either upon the death of the tenant for life or the happening of the event or events.' It may be useful to practitioners to observe that, where a special case of this kind is stated, and a judgment has been obtained on it, the simpler course, which has the sanction of the Lord Justice, 'is to take a declaration in the terms of the answer, and to stay further proceedings in the action.'

It has been suggested that our mode of publishing the advertisements for creditors under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, which we reprint from the London Gazette, is somewhat misleading, inasmuch as a hasty reader, seeing at the top of the page the words 'Law Journal Bankrupt List,' might be led to think that the persons whose names appeared below were insolvent. In order to remove the possibility of any such mistake, we propose in future to slightly alter the head-line of that part of our publication by substituting the words 'Gazette List' for 'Bankrupt List.'

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR FEBRUARY.

The February number of our reports constitutes a volume of 142 pages, containing thirty-seven reports of cases, of which nearly all were decided in the Michaelmas Sittings, some as recently as the end of December last. In the Chancery Division there are fifteen cases (pp. 49–104), in the Queen's Bench Division twelve cases (pp. 33–88), and in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division three cases (pp. 1–8). There are also seven Magistrates' cases (pp. 9–40).

In the Chancery Division Baker & Sons v. Rawson Brothers constituted an action, motion, and adjourned summons, the hearing of which occupied the Court of Appeal for about twenty days, and which involved complicated questions under the Patent Acts, 1883–88, and the Trade-Marks Act, 1875. In re Maria Smith decided that a testamentary paper executed by a widow and disposing of certain absolute property of the testatrix, but making no reference to a will executed before her husband's death in exercise of a power of appointment, did not constitute a republication of that will. In re Sandbach and Edmondson raised a question on a curious condition of sale involving the doctrine of Burgess v. Wheat (1 Eden, 177), by which a trustee became absolute owner. In De Francesco v. Barnum (No. 2) it was held that, though an infant's contract of apprenticeship is primâ facie binding on him, yet the contract will be void if it contains unreasonable terms which are not for the benefit of the infant. Blyth v. Fladgate, Morgan v. Blyth, and Smith v. Blyth are actions concerning the joint and several liability of solicitors for breaches of trust committed by a partner, the circumstances from which the relation of solicitor and client will be inferred, and the principles applicable to contributions made by the several persons liable in replacement of the trust fund. In re Alabama, &c., Junction Railway Company decides that the Court has power, under the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, to sanction a scheme of arrangement between a company and its creditors, although such scheme will deprive dissentient first debenture-holders of part of their security. In re Hemingway was a case of will construction, in which the words 'without having' a child were construed in their literal sense, and not in the sense 'without having had,' applied in Howgrave v. Cartier (3 V. & B. 79). What constitutes a specially indorsed writ was the subject of Hamilton v. Brogden. In re The New Chili Gold Mining Co. was a case of irregular forfeiture of shares for non-payment of calls. In re The Weymouth and Channel Islands Steam Packet Co. laid down the principle of distribution of the surplus assets of a company in course of winding up among the different classes of shareholders. In the case of In re Meeus's Application, the Court declined to direct the comptroller to register part of a proposed trade-mark, and held that a disclaimer under section 74, subsection 2, of the Act of 1883 (re-enacted by the Act of 1888, section 16) must be made in the application for registration, and not subsequently. In re Graham's Trusts illustrates the effect of the repeal of the Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874. Frames v. The Bulfontein Mining Company decides that directors who were to be remunerated by a percentage of the profits were not entitled to that percentage on the excess over the share capital for which the business was sold to a new company. According to In re Wilson, a defendant to an originating summons under Order LV. cannot serve a notice on a third party under Order XVI. In Curtis v. The Kesteven County Council the land lying between the metalled part of a main road and the hedges is 'roadside waste' within the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 11, subs. 1, and does not vest in the County Council under section 11, subsection 6.

In the Queen's Bench Division, in Plant (appellant) v. Potts (respondent), the Court of Appeal decided that a revising barrister had no right to make an amendment in the list of voters altering the nature of the qualification. Brown v. Tombs decided in favour of the validity of a claim signed by the clerk of the voter's agent. The Mayor, &c., of Salford v. Lever involved somewhat complicated questions arising out of secret commissions paid to an agent by a contractor, and the liabilities thence arising of the contractor and agent to the principal. In Conybeare v. The London School Board it was held that the plaintiff's imprisonment in Ireland under the Criminal Law and Procedure (Ireland) Act vacated his seat on the School Board. The South Staffordshire Tramways Company v. The Sickness and Accident Assurance Association involved the construction of a policy of assurance. In re Trehearne was a decision in bankruptcy in which a judgment creditor, who had obtained a garnishee order, gave place to the trustee in bankruptcy. In Stanley v. Powell an action was held not to be maintainable by a game carrier for injuries received from a shot fired without negligence by one of the shooting party. Beckett v. The Tower Assets Company was a case of a hiring agreement, which was held not to be a bill of sale requiring registration. In Regina v. Soutter it was held that a person was not qualified under the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, s. 6, for election to a vestry unless he occupied the premises in respect of which he was rated. In Heckscher v. Crossley it was held that a party moving in the Court of Appeal under Mr. Finlay's Act for a new trial after trial by a jury will not be ordered to give security for the costs of the motion. The Railway Commission in The Liverpool Corn Trade Association v. The London and North-Western Railway Company decided adversely to the railway company questions of undue preference and unequal rates. Allden v. Buckley & Co. was a case of a judgment improperly obtained against a firm after service of the writ on an alleged partner who denied the partnership.

In the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division The Vindomora is a decision of the House of Lords that there is no absolute rule as to the conduct of vessels approaching each other in a fog. The County of Durham decided in what County Court an admiralty notice was properly instituted; and The Umbilo decided a question of limitation of liability.

In the Magistrates' Cases, in The Durham County Council v. The Chester-le-Street Poor Law Union premises occupied by an industrial school, certified and carried on under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 118, were held liable to poor rate. In Regina v. Bowerman the Court of Crown Cases Reserved affirmed a conviction for misdemeanour under the Larceny Act, 1861, s. 75. In Regina v. Byrde and others (Justices) and the Pontypool Gas Company (ex parte Williams) was involved a wrongful application by justices of the principle of res judicata. In Charles (appellant) v. The Mortgagees of Plymouth Works (respondents) questions were decided under the Employers and Workmen's Act, 1875, of the jurisdiction of justices and limitation of action. In Ex parte Castioni extradition was refused of Castioni who, during the political rising last year in the canton of Ticino, shot Rossi. Mallinson (appellant) v. Carr (respondent) decided that exposure for sale of diseased meat was not a necessary element for conviction under the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 116, 117. St. Martin's Vestry (appellants) v. Gordon (respondent) defines 'refuse of trade' under the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, s. 128.

AMERICAN RAILROAD SHARE CERTIFICATES.

CONSIDERING the years which have elapsed since American railroad share certificates first became familiar to English investors, it is singular that the consideration of the legal effect of these documents by English tribunals should have been so long delayed, the earliest reported cases, if we are not mistaken, dating from certain notorious frauds committed at a comparatively recent date. Upon one question, whether the issues depend on American or English law, there seems to have been no real difference of opinion, and the result is very precisely stated by Lord Herschell in the case of The Colonial Bank v. Cady, L. R. 15 Ap. Cas. 267: 'I agree,' he says, 'that the question what is necessary or effectual to transfer the shares in such a company, or to perfect the title to them, where there is or must be held to have been an intention to transfer them, must be answered by a reference to the law of the State of New York. But I think that the rights arising out of a transaction entered into by parties in this country, whether, for example, it operated to effect a binding sale or pledge as against the owner of the shares, must be determined by the law prevailing here. Nor has there been much doubt in arriving at the conclusion that the usual American share certificate is not in the proper sense of the term a negotiable instrument (see The London and County Banking Company v. The London and River Plate Bank, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 232). Indeed, notwithstanding the practice in the city of London to treat these documents as transferable by delivery, one has only to look at the normal form of certificate to see the difficulty of maintaining this view in a Court of law. In the case before the House of Lords, to the facts of which we shall presently refer, the certificate of the New York River and Hudson Bay Railroad Company certified that the testator, the registered owner, was entitled to so many shares transferable in person or by attorney on the surrender and cancellation of the certificate, and had on the back a printed form of transfer in blank and appointment of attorney, also in blank, to execute the surrender and cancellation. A document like this, which on the face of it is intended to pass by transfer and not by delivery, cannot either on principle or authority be held to be a negotiable instrument.

Another point suggested in argument has been that the Factors Acts apply to the case, but no judge has ever adopted this view, and there is direct authority, to which it is needless to refer, against it. The rights of an innocent holder for value to whom the certificate is delivered in fraud of the true owner must, therefore (except where he has also obtained registration in his own name), arise from estoppel only—that is, to quote again from the judgment of Lord Herschell in The Colonial Bank v. Cady—on the ground that the 'owner may have so acted as to be estopped from setting up a claim as against a person who has bonâ fide and for value taken the instruments by way of sale or pledge.' In the application of this principle, however, there is room for difference of opinion. In The Colonial Bank v. Cady the testator was the registered holder of the shares, and on his death his executors, desiring to have the shares transferred into their own names, sent the certificates to their brokers to forward them to America for that purpose, having previously signed the blank transfers as executors, leaving the names of the transferee and attorney in blank. Thereupon Blakeway, one of the firm of brokers, fraudulently delivered the certificates to the Colonial Bank as security for advances. Under these circumstances, the shares still standing in the name of the testator, the executors claimed the certificates as against the bank. Mr. Justice Kekewich thought that the executors had by their signature represented that the brokers were at liberty to deal with the shares, and that they could not afterwards deny the authority so represented, and therefore decided in favour of the bank. On appeal his judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeal, and the reversal affirmed by the House of Lords, on the ground that the conduct of the executors, in delivering the transfers to the brokers, was consistent either with an intention to sell or pledge the shares or to have themselves registered as owners, and therefore did not estop them from setting up their title as against the bank, who—the document being open to these two constructions—ought to have inquired into the brokers' authority. The certificate, it will be seen, did not purport to be signed by the registered owner, but by his executors; and the importance of this distinction appears from the following passage in the judgment of Lord Watson. Had the transfers, he says, been executed by the testator and the certificates thereafter sent by him to the brokers 'for safe custody, I should not have hesitated to hold that Blakeway, though acting fraudulently, was, nevertheless, placed by his (the testator's) act in a position to give a title to an honest purchaser which his employer could not dispute.' And, again: 'Where the registered shareholder executes the transfer indorsed on his certificate, he can have only one intelligible purpose in view—that of passing on his right to a transferee. It is not so in the case of an executor, whose only title to the shares is by legal assignment to the interest of the defunct.' To the same effect Lord Herschell says: 'If, in the present case, the transfer had been signed by the registered owner and delivered by him to the brokers, I should have come to the conclusion that the bank had obtained a good title as against him, and that he was estopped by his act from asserting any right to them.' In the earlier case of The Colonial Bank v. Hepworth, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1059; L. R. 36 Chanc. Div. 36, as the final result of rather complicated dealings, share certificates of which the defendant was the registered owner, but which were unsigned by him, were fraudulently pledged by his broker with the plaintiffs, and Mr. Justice Chitty held that the defendant was not estopped from asserting his title. The distinct point was also considered whether the defendant, while unregistered owner (as he was at first) of certificates in blank, but signed by the last registered owner, was similarly estopped. Mr. Justice Chitty was able to decide, and did, in fact, decide the case, on the assumption that the defendant would have been estopped in that state of facts, but it is by no means clear that this was his own opinion; indeed, if we understand his judgment rightly, his opinion was the other way. The propositions laid down by Mr. Justice Chitty are as follows: 'The transferor who executes the transfer in blank confers on the holders of the documents for the time being an authority to fill in the name of the transferee, and each successive holder for the time being, when the documents pass through several hands, passes on this authority. The holders must, of course, be bonâ fide holders for value without notice;' and in another passage: 'Each prior holder confers upon the bonâ fide holder for value of the certificates for the time being an authority to fill in the name of the transferee, and is estopped from denying such authority; and to this extent and in this manner, but not further, is estopped from denying the title of such holder for the time being. By the delivery, an inchoate legal title passes; but a title by unregistered transfer is not equivalent to what has been termed "the legal estate" in the shares or to the complete dominion over them.' In The Colonial Bank v. Cady, before the Court of Appeal (57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 826, 841), Lord Justice Lindley expressed his approval of the latter proposition, understanding by 'bonâ fide holder,' 'the person entitled to the certificate,' and his lordship went on to add that if, in the case before the Court of Appeal (The Colonial Bank v. Cady), the documents had even been in order—that is, as we understand it, signed by the testator himself—he should have 'felt extreme difficulty, if not impossibility, in upholding the title of the bank.' This difficulty does not appear to have presented itself to Lords Watson and Herschell, and this must be remembered in connection with what the Lord Justice says in criticising Mr. Justice Chitty's language. The practical results to which we are led by a consideration of these authorities are: first, that the registered owner who leaves the share certificates unsigned by him with his agent, without authority to pledge or sell, is in no way estopped from asserting his legal title against an innocent holder for value to whom they are fraudulently delivered by the agent (The Colonial Bank v. Hepworth); secondly, that in the like case, if the certificates have been signed by the registered owner, and in that state left for safe custody with his agent, he probably is so estopped (per Lords Watson and Herschell in The Colonial Bank v. Cady), but that executors who sign for the mere purpose of obtaining their own registration are not so estopped (The Colonial Bank v. Cady); thirdly, that it seems an open question whether the doctrine applies to the case of an unregistered owner of certificates with the transferee and attorney in blank, but signed by the last registered owner, except to this extent, that the innocent holder may fill in his own name as transferee, and get himself registered as owner, and so obtain priority (see The Colonial Bank v. Hepworth).

Of course, in any case the person relying on the estoppel must be a holder for value without notice, and if the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Simmons v. The London Joint-Stock Bank, which has been previously discussed in these pages, is good law, bankers who take deposits of American railroad share certificates from stockbrokers making deposits of securities en bloc, may, on the special grounds taken in that case, fail to establish their claim as holders without notice of the true owner's right. This consideration, however, though of great practical importance, rests apparently on the character of the broker's business, and is really independent of the subject of this article.

The Naturalisation Act.—During the past month twenty-four certificates of naturalisation were granted to aliens by the Home Secretary under the provisions of the Naturalisation Act, 1870. Of these aliens seven are described as coming from Germany, six from Russia, two each from France, Greece, and Russian Poland, and one each from Austria, Denmark, Italy, Switzerland, and Turkey.

Correspondence.

FRAUDS UPON RAILWAY COMPANIES.

SIR,—You have been a doughty champion for the railway companies in one of your leading articles this week, and have written in loud approval of their efforts to check and punish that contemptible scoundrel, the fraudulent passenger, who tries to swindle and cheat them in almost every train that runs.

But, if you please, sir, now 'Audi alteram partem;' permit me to speak on behalf of the public.

Is the fraud and the cheating always to be found only on one side? What mean these breaches of contract and trespasses perpetrated almost as often by railway directors in their overcrowded carriages? If we do not defend the poor man who robs the millionaire of 5*l.*, can we admire the millionaire who robs the poor man of five farthings? Yet here are a body of educated, wealthy gentlemen, who would scorn, each in his own person, to be guilty of anything like questionable honesty—combining and caballing in boards and committee-rooms to enrich themselves and their shareholders by downright cheating and fraud—taking moneys which they have not earned, by breaking contracts which forbid them the right to earn these moneys at all.

The exhibition of this commercial immorality by such respectable and respected men is disgraceful and injurious to the State, which looks for and rewards honesty. 'Defendit numerus junctæque umbone phalanges.' Is that the excuse? The hound will not dare to attack alone in his skulking cowardice the animal which he hunts to death when joined by others in the pack. Have directors come to this, that each has only the courage to do with his board that which he will not dare to do alone?

Yes, sir; and the evil does not end there. The passenger who is cheated and driven out of his overcrowded carriage by the broken contract of the directors is immediately pounced upon as guilty of fraud when compelled by them to travel in a carriage of superior class which is not overcrowded. So here the company make a double dishonest gain: first, by receiving moneys for overcrowded seats, which moneys have not been earned; then by receiving the fines paid to them by the passenger whom they have dragged into the police court for fraud. You, sir, as a lawyer know that there is a remedy for this if the public will only enforce it.

They are not compelled to wait for the next train, but they may go to their destination as best they can and make the company pay. In The Great Northern Railway Company v. Hawcroft, 21 Law J. Rep. 178, it was laid down by Mr. Justice Patteson: 'A railway company are not excused from carrying passengers according to their contract upon the ground that there is no room for them in the train; but, in order to avail themselves of this answer, they should make their contract conditional upon there being room.'

'Many a man is made fraudulent because he believes that by overcrowding the companies make dishonest gains, and he cheats out of a sort of revenge' ('Railway Tyranny'—a letter to the President of the Board of Trade).

The Lord Chief Justice Coleridge gives the true solution in The London and Brighton Railway Company v. Watson, 48 Law J. Rep. C. P. 316: 'That companies are often and seriously defrauded I do not doubt, and I am sure that Parliament would not refuse them well-considered and fair powers of prevention or redress. But the interest of companies is not the only interest to be considered, and companies must not protect themselves by bye-laws unfair and unreasonable against the consequences of their own inadequate, careless, and inconvenient system of working.'

WILLIAM I. JENKINS, M.A.,
Author of 'Railway Tyranny,' &c.

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

POWER OF MARRIED WOMAN TO BIND HER SEPARATE ESTATE.

ON January 31, before Mr. Justice Day, without a jury, the case of Braunstein v. Lewis was heard. This action raised a difficult and important question as to the meaning of 'separate estate' in the Married Women's Property Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, subs. 2, 4, and the power of married women to bind the same by their contracts. The plaintiff is a solicitor, and he sued Mrs. Lewis to recover a sum of 400*l.*, made up of certain disbursements and legal costs incurred by him in course of professional services he had rendered to her and her late husband. The husband, who had originally been a co-defendant, had died since action brought. The plaintiff based his claim upon a certain covenant in a deed of mortgage dated August 9, 1887, under which Mrs. Lewis purported to charge certain specific separate estate to secure the said debt.—Mr. Crump, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. Bankes) submitted that, upon the authority of Whitaker v. Kershaw, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 9; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 327, upon the question as to the capacity of a married woman to contract under the Married Women's Property Act (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1, it did not matter whether her separate estate was 'free separate estate' or 'separate estate without power of anticipation,' and that, therefore, as it was here admitted that Mrs. Lewis had at the time when she contracted separate estate without power of anticipation, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment.—Mr. Justice Day intimated that from that case primâ facie that appeared to be so, and called upon the defendant's counsel to answer it.—Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C., pointed out that the Court in that case had never decided the present question—viz. the question of contract—and had distinctly pointed out that there the action was neither one of tort nor contract, and stated that 'the power to contract is distinct from the liability to be sued, for the section says that she shall be liable to be sued in contract or in tort, or otherwise. We cannot disregard the words "or otherwise."' That, said the learned counsel, distinguished that case entirely from the present one, and did not overrule Leak v. Driffield, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 89; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 98; Palliser v. Gurney, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 546; L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 519; Beckett v. Tasker, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 7; Harrison v. Harrison, 58 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 28; L. R. 13 Prob. Div. 180; and other cases upon this section of the Married Women's Property Act, which had decided that a married woman cannot bind herself by her contract unless at the time of such a contract she has 'free separate estate.'—Mr. Crump, Q.C., in reply, argued that a married women, since the recent legislation affecting her rights and position in reference to property, had the capacity to contract if she possessed separate estate at the time, whether restricted against power of anticipation or not, and that judgment could be signed against her in respect of such contract; but that in cases where there was no power of anticipation in regard to her separate estate, execution could not issue against such estate, as the judgment would be in the form of Scott v. Morley, and such judgment would be effectual only against any estate which the woman might subsequently acquire. That this was so was, he submitted, clear under section 1, subsection 4, of the Act of 1882 (ubi sup.), which enacts that 'every contract entered into by a married woman with respect to and to bind her separate property shall bind not only the separate property which she is possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract, but also all separate property which she may hereafter acquire.' In this case, the defendant's husband being dead, she became a feme sole and possessed of 'after-acquired property,' and it was submitted that the plaintiff was now entitled to enforce the original contract against this property. In the alternative, it was said that, at the time of making the contract in question, the defendant was, in fact, possessed of certain sums of money paid to her by her trustees as income from investments comprising her marriage settlement fund. But these, after hearing the evidence in point, the learned judge held were not separate estate free from the restriction against anticipation.—Mr. Justice Day in giving judgment for the defendant observed that the case raised a question of very great importance and some difficulty, and although he, by attention to the able arguments of counsel on both sides and the exhaustive discussion on all the cases in point, had been able to arrive at a decision which was satisfactory to himself, yet he had grave doubt as to whether that decision would ultimately be upheld. The question depending as it did upon the construction of certain Acts of Parliament made it extremely difficult to decide the case in favour of the defendant with absolute certainty. Prior to recent legislation affecting the relations, rights, and position of married women with reference to property, there was no doubt whatever that at law a married woman could not make a binding contract. In short, she possessed 'no contractual capacity.' In equity, however, subject to certain restrictions and limitations, married women were permitted to bind their separate estate, but only where such estate was theirs absolutely and not 'without power of anticipation.' In dealing with the question of separate estate, it would be convenient, he said, to use the expression 'free separate estate' when the former and 'non-free separate estate' when the latter class was meant. By the Married Women's Property Acts, now consolidated in the Act of 1882 (ubi sup.), powers were given to married women to contract both in law and equity. It had been held in many cases that this statutory right is not absolute. The right was given, in words difficult of construction, in section 1, subsection 2. The words seemed primâ facie to limit her power to contract only 'in respect of and to the extent of her separate property,' but some considerable doubt was thrown upon that by subsection 4 (see above). Apart from this section, under which she seemed to derive power to bind all subsequently acquired 'separate property,' it would seem clear that she could only bind separate property which she was possessed of or entitled to at the date of the contract. But for the purposes of this judgment it was not necessary for him to endeavour to reconcile these apparent discrepancies, as the question of after-acquired property in his opinion did not affect this case at all. Looking at all the cases carefully, he had no doubt whatever that a married woman's contractual capacity was confined and limited to her possessing separate estate at the date of her contract, and upon that arose the crucial question as to what was meant in the Act by 'separate estate.' Mr. Crump contended for the plaintiff that it meant any separate estate, whether 'free' or 'not free,' and argued the point with great ingenuity and cited many cases; but the learned judge could not agree with him or follow his argument that 'separate estate,' whether 'free' or not, gives a married woman the capacity of contracting. Such a right was never recognised prior to the Acts, even in equity. And it could not be said that the intention of the Legislature ever meant to go so far as that. It was much more consistent to suppose that the intention was to follow what equity allowed—viz. contractual capacity only over separate estate where there was no restriction as to anticipation, and which was absolutely under the married woman's control. The Legislature could never have intended—as would be the case if Mr. Crump were right—to revolutionise the rules of conveyancing and deprive persons of the benefit of settling capital on persons beyond their power of anticipation. Looking at the mortgage-deed itself, it was quite clear that the defendant never intended to bind or charge any other description of property but that which was beyond her power of anticipation. That was, that she never intended to bind or charge her 'free separate estate,' even if she possessed any. For this particular property—viz. 10,000*l.*—which she took under a will, was, by the direction of the testator, to be beyond her power of anticipation; and even if it had not been so left her marriage settlement trusts would have affected it in the same way. Therefore, from any view of the case, it was clear that Mrs. Lewis only charged her 'non-free separate estate.' But it was said that she had, in fact, at the time of the contract, or might have had, certain moneys in her pocket which would be 'free separate estate.' Well, he confessed he could not follow anything so minute. But, even supposing she had had any such 'free separate estate,' as he had pointed out already, it would make no difference, as she only contracted in respect of her 'non-free separate estate.' For these reasons the defendant, in his opinion, had no capacity at the time in question to make this contract, and was therefore entitled to judgment.—Execution stayed for a week.

THE CUSTOM OF KNIGHTING JUDGES.

Mr. G. F. Russell Barker writes to the editor of the Daily Graphic:—

It may interest some of your readers to know that there is a precedent for Mr. Justice Wright's refusal of knighthood. John Heath, who succeeded Sir William Blackstone in the Court of Common Pleas, in July, 1780, declined to accept the 'honour' in question, and declared that he would die 'plain John Heath.' To this resolution he firmly adhered, and after sitting on the bench for nearly thirty-six years, died unknighted, but not unhonoured, on January 16, 1816. Sir Samuel Romilly records, in the diary of his Parliamentary life, the strenuous efforts which Piggott and he made when appointed Attorney and Solicitor-General in the Ministry of All the Talents to avoid the self-same 'honour.' 'Never,' writes Romilly under the entry for February 12, 1806, 'was any City trader who carried up a loyal address to His Majesty more anxious to obtain than we were to escape this honour. We applied to Lord Dartmouth, the Lord-in-Waiting, to Lord Grenville, Lord Spencer, and everybody on whom we thought it might depend to deprecate the ceremony which awaited us. But the king was inflexible.' Romilly then goes on to state that 'for the last twenty years of his reign, it has pleased His Majesty to knight all attorneys and solicitors-general and judges on their appointment, though for the first five and twenty years he had never seen the necessity or propriety of it,' and feelingly adds, 'how every man who arrives at these situations must submit to the humiliation of having inflicted on him that which is called, but is considered neither by himself nor any other person, an honour.' Romilly also records that Spencer Perceval, 'the last Attorney-General,' was permitted to decline knighthood, 'because he was an earl's son.' The sons of peers seem to have been always successful in claiming exemption. The present Mr. Justice Denman is not a knight, nor was the late Lord Justice Thesiger. There is a story, for the truth of which I will not vouch, that a few years ago a newly-appointed judge remonstrated with the Prime Minister for the time being against the ordeal of knighthood through which his brethren had to pass. The Prime Minister is said to have delicately explained that it enhanced the value of the distinction in the eyes of all mayors, aldermen, and sheriffs. Whereupon the judge pointed out that the effect would be still greater if the Prime Ministers were knighted on their accession to office. This suggestion still remains to be carried out.

THE LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL.

THE usual weekly meeting of the Council of the Administrative County of London was held on Tuesday, February 2, at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, Sir John Lubbock, M.P., the chairman, presiding.

THE SOLICITOR TO THE COUNCIL.

The report of the general purposes committee as to the office of solicitor, a summary of which has already appeared at page 91, was next considered.

The Deputy-Chairman (Mr. Haggis), in moving a resolution assigning certain duties to the Parliamentary agent, and that the solicitor's department should render assistance and perform certain work, explained that on all matters of Parliamentary work and procedure the solicitor was in the habit of consulting the Parliamentary agent, and the Parliamentary agent reported to the solicitor, and the solicitor to the committees and the council. Before committees of Parliament the solicitor and the Parliamentary agent attended and generally there was a considerable amount of communication of work in regard to this branch of the solicitor's department. The committee felt that, although this was usual in connection with all railway and other companies having to do with Parliamentary work, yet the business of the council was so large not only in regard to the promotion of its own bills, but in regard to opposition to bills affecting the community, that it would be desirable that they should have a more direct representative and direct conduct of this particular department of the work, and they therefore came to the conclusion, if it could be arranged, that they should have their Parliamentary agent directly responsible to the council, and that he should attend their committees, that he should carry out the requests of the committees and of the council, and report directly to the council.

Mr. C. Harrison seconded the motion, and pointed out that this was not the creation of an office, but only a commuted payment to the Parliamentary agent.

Mr. Hunter moved, as an amendment, that the report be referred back, with an instruction that the committee should see whether the solicitor should not be responsible for all the legal work of the council.

Mr. Campbell, in seconding the amendment, hoped the council would have the good sense to leave things as they were, as by the new arrangement he did not believe they would save a penny.

After some discussion it was suggested to amend the resolution by introducing words limiting the continuance of the arrangement to next autumn; and this having been accepted the amendment was withdrawn, and the recommendation of the committee agreed to.

On the recommendation that the office of solicitor to the council be filled up, and that the salary attached to the office be 1,500*l.* per annum,

Mr. Beachcroft moved: 'That, until it is seen whether the system proposed in the report in reference to the Parliamentary work of the council can be settled on a permanent basis, the filling up of the office of solicitor to the council be deferred; that, in the meantime, the solicitor's department be worked substantially, as it has heretofore been nominally, as two separate branches—viz. (1) the general law branch; and (2) the conveyancing branch; Mr. Blaxland, the present chief assistant of the general law branch, being made provisionally responsible not only for the duties in the general law branch, but also for the entire staff in that branch and its conduct, and in addition performing such duties other than those relating to the Parliamentary business and the conveyancing branch as the late solicitor was accustomed to perform, being styled and officiating as "acting solicitor" and Mr. Jackson continuing in charge as heretofore of the conveyancing branch and being responsible for the staff therein and its conduct, retaining his present style of "assistant solicitor."'

Mr. Saunders seconded the amendment.

After discussion the council divided, and there voted—

For the amendment	55
Against	34
Majority	—21

The amendment was accordingly agreed to, and it was referred to the general purposes committee to consider and report what remuneration should be paid to Mr. Jackson and Mr. Blaxland for their increased responsibility in consequence of the office of solicitor to the council being vacant.

SHROPSHIRE LAW SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this society was held in the society's rooms, Talbot Chambers, Shrewsbury, on Wednesday, January 28. The members present included Mr. T. M. How (president), Mr. E. Hodges (vice-president), Messrs. I. Knowles, E. C. Peele, W. C. C. Peele, H. W. Hughes, G. H. Morgan, F. Nevett, Robert Marston, W. M. How, J. H. Sprott, W. C. Tyrrell, G. M. Salt, H. J. Osborne (hon. treasurer), and R. T. Hughes (hon. secretary).

The committees' reports, which were unanimously adopted, showed the satisfactory position of the society. There is a substantial balance in the treasurer's hands, and the number of members is steadily increasing, ten new members having joined the society during the year. The library committee have thoroughly reorganised the library, and issued a complete catalogue of all the text-books and reports. A number of new books have been added, and the regulations for lending books revised to meet the convenience of members residing out of Shrewsbury.

The President delivered an interesting address, referring to some of the principal Acts of Parliament passed since the last annual meeting, and to recent decisions on important questions. He also referred to the death of Mr. James Loxdale, an honorary member of the society, whose handsome gift of text-books and reports had considerably increased the value of the library.

Mr. Robert Marston read a valuable paper on the subject of 'Mortgages,' and it was resolved that the president's address and Mr. Marston's paper should be printed and circulated among the members.

The president and vice-president, honorary treasurer, and secretary were re-elected for the ensuing year, and Mr. G. H. Morgan was elected on the committee.

The usual vote of thanks to the officers and to the president for his conduct in the chair closed the proceedings.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

The following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Final and Intermediate Examinations of the Incorporated Law Society held on January 13, 14, and 15, 1891:—

Final Examination, January 13 and 14.

Adams, George Charles
Ainley, Herbert
Aitken, Robert
Aldous, Thomas Henry
Andrews, Frank Reginald
Ashby-Darby, Gerald Sorton
Barham, Cornelius Herbert
Barthorp, Henry Arthur, B.A.
Bartlett, William Abraham Wilberforce
Bellingham, Hugh
Bemrose, Arthur Cade
Bennett, William George
Bowling, Harry Clifford
Bowman, John Hungerford
Bracher, George Howes
Briggs, Basil Shaw
Brindley, Benjamin William
Brutton, Septimus
Buller, Alban Gardner
Burt, William Eaton
Butterworth, George Frederick
Butterworth, Robert Harry Smethurst
Cardale, William Henry
Carter, George Coplestone
Chiles, Thomas Henry
Clarkson, Henry William
Collin, John, B.A.
Colton, Michael Herbert
Comerford, James
Cook, Harry William
Cooke, David Frederick
Cookson, John
Coote, George
Cowley, Edward Rowland
Cross, Henry Wingfield
Cullingham, James Barry
Davies, Edward Gaskell, B.A.
Davies, William Sinclair
Davis, Alfred Sidney Newnham, B.A., LL.B.
Davis, Thomas Buffen
Dommett, William, B.A.
Edge, Sydney Vernon
Ellis, Cuthbert Frederick
Emanuel, Frederick Graham
Fawsett, William Claude
Franklin, William Vaughan
Gane, William Lawe
Galt, Algernon William Bruce
Garrett, Newson Littlewood, B.A.
Geoghegan, Joseph
Gilbert, Erasmus James Tenby
Gill, Benjamin Kemp
Gillson, Frank, B.A.
Goodair, Thomas
Gray, John Nevill
Green, Arthur
Griffith-Williams, Alfred Mortimer
Griffiths, William
Grunebaum, Martin
Hankinson, Kyrle Chatfield, B.A.
Hattersley, Albert Edward
Hawes, Charles Edward
Haworth, Richard Nimrod
Henderson, Arthur
Hiley, Ernest Varvill
Hill, William Thomas
Hitchings, Robert Lewis
Hodge, Egerton Francis, B.A., LL.B.
Honey, Henry Knollys
Hopwood, Frederick Flowers
Horsfall, William Heincken
Hughes, Thomas
Hutton, Harold Clarke
Jackson, Donald Frederick
Jackson, John George
Jeffery, William Frederick
Jeremy, John Edward
Jones, Frederick Llewellyn, B.A.
Jones, Thomas Estyn
Jones, William Morris
Keeble, Edward Moss
Keeling, Arthur Trowbridge
Kemble, Arthur Twiss
Kent, Henry Edwin Hunter, B.A.
King, Leonard Burrows
Leigh, Norman
Liveing, William Robert Francis
Lloyd, Francis Horatio
Locock, Henry Thornton, B.A.
Love, Robert Lachlan
Lovegrove, William Frederic
Ludford, Thomas Richard
Lumb, Mellor
Marriott, Douglas, B.A.
Mattley, Robert Dawson
Maynard, Temple William
Messer, Allan Ernest, B.A.
Miller, Harry Risch
Mills, Frederick Hellewell
Mitchell, Sidney Alfred
Murray, Francis
Nash, Arthur Peel
North, John William Allen
Openshaw, Joseph Thomas
Pacy, Gabriel Reay
Page, Maberly Charles, B.A.
Pain, Walter
Parmiter, Arthur de Clifton
Peel, Walter
Phillimore, George Ernest
Phillips, Frederick Charles
Phillips, Herbert Gwynne
Pinniger, Charles Witherington
Pritchard, Harry Goring
Randall, Francis John
Richardson, Arnold
Roe, Robert Ernest Burton
Rooke, Charles Keith Jago
Rudge, Howard Nouaille
Saunders, Percival George
Shea, Sidney
Smith, Frank Feusdale
Smith, Henry Thomas
Smith, Josiah
Smith, Thomas Molison
Spaull, William Sidney
Standring, Thomas
Stanley, Guy Wentworth
Stordy, George
Stringer, George Relph Herbert
Stubbs, Charles John
Terry, George Tytler
Thomas, Robert
Thomas, William Henry
Thomasset, Victor
Timbrell, Albert Edward
Treharne, Gwelym Thomas
Tyrwhitt, Beauchamp Edward
Wade, Richard
Walford, William
Walters, John Stewart, B.A.
Walthall, Thomas William
Watkins, Edwin Grover
Webster, James Hewitt
Welfare, James Henry
Wells, George Charles
Welman, Edward John
Whitehouse, Ernest Amphlett
Wilkinson, Herbert
Willett, Thomas Henry
Willmot, Francis Edgar
Woodbridge, Reginald George
Woodhead, William
Wright, James Hall
Wright, John
Wyatt, Frederick Bullen

Intermediate Examination, January 15.

Allen, Herbert Elliston
Atkinson, Thomas Lawrence
Auld, John Harrison
Austin, William
Baird, Robert George, B.A.
Barnes, Henry Pearcey Lewis
Bell, Herbert Alfred
Bennett, Herbert William
Borradaile, George Leycester
Breese, David
Bryant, John
Bryne, Rupert Henry
Carter, Alfred Walter
Chambers, Percy Holland
Clark, Henry Arthur, B.A.
Clarke, Arthur Blasdale
Collins, Edward William
Cooper, Francis John, B.A.
Covey, Arthur
Cowley, Oswald Beach
Cox, Lewis Latham, B.A.
Crowther, John Edward
Curtis, Frederick James, B.A.
Dammann, John Frederick Karl, B.A.
Davies, Joseph Pughe
Dawes, James Arthur, B.A.
Dickson, Campbell Cameron Forster
Draper, Ernest George
Eastwood, James Arthur
Ellis, Thomas
Evans, Ernest Septimus
Fache, Edward Charles
Fall, George Frederic
Fall, William Thomson
Fisher, William
Foyster, Bernard Brereton
Freer, John Thomas
Gait, John Clarke
Gilmer, John Horace
Gough, Harold
Green, Henry
Hargreaves, Richard Horner
Hart, Augustus Edwin
Hawkes, Robert Collins
Hayward, Percy Christopher Gallimore
Helmer, Frederick
Herford, Henry John Robberds, B.A.
Holbeche, Thomas
Holliday, Samuel Rowland, M.A.
Howard, Percy
Howell, William Gough
Hyde, Louis
Jarvis, Matthew Jervoise
Jeram, Frank Ernest
Johnson, John Richard Ockleshaw
Jones, James Stephens Tudor Cynfab
Knocker, Reginald Edward
Le Breton, Bertram
Leman, George Curtis, B.A.
Levi, Alfred David
Little, Thomas Holme
Maddocks, Henry
Mander, Charles Henry Waterland, B.A., LL.B.
Marks, Harold Bernard
Marsden, George Allen
Marsh, Norman Nevile, B.A.
Mason, Charles Eagleton Stuart
Mather, Edward
Matthews, William Edwin
Meakin, Wilfrid Johnson
Morgan, Lloyd Spear, B.A.

Moseley, Richard Evan
Newell, Charles Edward
Nind, Ronald Pitt
Osborn, Henry Walter
Owles, Thomas Frederick Beaumont
Page, John Edward
Parry, Thomas Parry Jones
Patchett, John Dixon
Paynter, Henry Ernest
Perkins, Herbert William
Platts, Matthew William
Pollock, Alexander, B.A.
Ramsden, Frederic Herbert
Reed, Walter
Rhodes, Henry Hirst
Robertson, William James
Rowlands, James David John
Rushforth, Francis M'Neil
Russell, Frank Ffrench Bromehead
Salt, Ernest Albert
Sharp, John Brudenell
Simpson, Harry Derwent
Speke, William George
Starkie, Frank
Stephens, Henry William
Stokes, Thomas Adrian Owen
Tatham, William Verity
Taylor, Arthur
Thesiger, the Hon. Percy Mansfield
Todhunter, William John
Toller, Montagu Henry
Walker, Henry Mansfield
Walton, Herbert Edward
Webber, Arthur
Welch, Arthur Frederick Budd
Wethered, Vernon
White, George Stanley
Wickes, George Boyd
Wilson, Edward Lorimer
Wilson, Edward Swain
Winch, George Bluett, B.A.
Witherington, Stephen
Wolfenden, Robert
Wragg, Edmund Arthur Windridge
Yeld, Francis Edward
Young, William, M.A.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 29.

Bishton v. Hill (libel) (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Cave, J., at Stafford).—Settled.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30.

Knowles v. Duncan (application of defendant for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Huddleston, B., and special jury at Lewes).—Damages reduced by consent.

Greaves v. Sykes (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., at Birmingham).—Adjourned.

Bradney v. Sanger (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., with special jury, at Birmingham).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31.

No sitting.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2.

Regina v. Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of defendants from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 13, for mandamus to hear agent of ratepayer on objections to valuation list).—Dismissed.

Sarell v. Duke of Westminster (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 21, affirming reversal of master's order for liberty to issue commission to Constantinople).—Dismissed.

Farnham v. Peel (appeal of defendant from findings of judge and judgment of Lawrance, J., thereon, dated August 13, at trial without a jury at Birmingham).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

Lawder v. Goucher (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., for Kekewich, J., dated August 11, at trial without a jury at Shrewsbury).—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

Lawder v. Goucher.—Adjourned.

Hammond v. Waterton (appeal of defendant from judgment of Williams, J., at trial without a jury at Carlisle).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 29.

Mills v. Dunham (appeal of defendant from order of Chitty, J., dated December 5, restraining solicitation of orders from customers of plaintiff within certain radius; heard January 28).—Dismissed.

Elve v. Boyton (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of North, J., dated November 26).—Dismissed.

Speight v. Gosnay (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on application from Charles, J.).—Application granted.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 30.

In re Jordan, deceased. Serjeantson v. Stokes (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated December 16, 1889).—Cur. adv. vult.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 31.

In re Jordan, deceased. Serjeantson v. Stokes; heard January 30.—Dismissed.

Vine v. Raleigh (appeal of defendants Alexander and wife from order of Chitty, J., dated November 15, declaring validity of trust for improvement and maintenance).—Varied.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 2.

Stuart v. Bell (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., with a special jury at Leeds).—Cur. adv. vult.

Brown & Co. v. Shropshire Iron Company (Lim.) (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Charles, J., at Leeds).—Appeal dismissed on agreed terms.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

Heckscher v. Crosley & Burn and another (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from judgment of nonsuit at trial before Denman, J., with special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Pickett v. Lyon (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Huddleston, B., with special jury at Lewes).—Dismissed.

Union Bank of London (Lim.) v. Sweeting (application of defendant in person for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment on counter-claim at trial before Denman, J., and a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Watkins v. Meek (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Denman, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4.

Allcock and others v. Hall and others (application of defendant for new trial on appeal from part of verdict and findings at trial before Hawkins, J., with a special jury, at Nottingham; heard February 3).—Allowed.

In re Taylor, Stileman & Underwood, Solicitors, ex parte A. M. L. Payne-Collier (appeal of A. M. L. Payne-Collier from refusal of Stirling, J., dated November 28, to direct payment in subject to taxation or production of documents).—Allowed.

Harris v. Gordon. Harris v. Grindley (application of defendants Grindley & Co. for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Charles, J., with a jury, in Middlesex).—Part heard.

ORDERS OF TRANSFER.

Tuesday, January 27, 1891.

Whereas, from the present state of the business before Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, Mr. Justice Kekewich, and Mr. Justice Romer respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes assigned to Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich should for the purpose only of hearing or of trial be transferred to Mr. Justice Romer; now I, the Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do hereby order that the several causes and matters set forth in the schedules hereto be accordingly transferred from the said Mr. Justice Chitty, Mr. Justice North, Mr. Justice Stirling, and Mr. Justice Kekewich to Mr. Justice Romer, for the purpose only of hearing or of trial, and be marked in the Cause-books accordingly. And this order is to be drawn up by the registrar and set up in the several offices of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

First Schedule.

From Mr. Justice Chitty.

Fourth City Mutual, &c. Building Society v. Wood—1890 F. 247
Smith v. Bowler—1890 S. 1,557
Phillips v. Jones—1888 P. 1,017
Wigan v. Hoppe—1890 W. 1.152
Lockyer v. Powell—1890 L. 930
Davies v. Plain—1889 D. 104
Singleton v. Mitchell—1890 S. 706
Oppenheimer v. Quinn—1889 O. 1.773
Redfarn v. Prime
Redfarn v. Prime—1889 R. 1,088
Armstrong & Co. (Lim.) v. Pitkin—1890 S. 1,385
King v. Harry—1890 K. 310
Charsley v. Harris—1890 C. 1,649
In re Price
In re Edwards
In re Price
Price v. Pontypool Gas and Water Co.—1889 P. 2,125
Turner v. Elliott—1890 T. 884
Hill v. Bischofswerder—1890 H. 308
Crossley Brothers v. Andrews & Co. (Lim.)—1890 C. 2,047
Andrews & Co. (Lim.) v. Crossley Brothers—1890 A. 168
Colman v. Colman—1890 C. 1,905
Jones v. Beard—1890 J. 514
Hartley v. Dearden—1889 H. 4,471

Second Schedule.

From Mr. Justice North.

Sladen v. Shemwell—1889 S. 784
Garner v. Coad—1889 G. 1,888
Russell v. Sudeley—1887 R 1,617
Beecham v. Turton—1890 B. 481
Parrott v. Burnett—1890 P. 132
Kenrick v. Danube Collieries, &c. Co.—1890 K. 226
Bullock v. Jones—1889 B. 4,457
Grosvenor v. White—1890 G. 1,292
Knowles v. Scott—1889 K. 921
Barker v. Furlong—1889 B. 5,156
United Friendly Societies, &c. Society v. Hobbs—1890 U. 76
In re Walker
Walker v. Walker—1890 W. 498
Sykes v. Wigfield—1889 S. 2,561
Woolner v. Miskin—1890 W. 796
In re Grazebrook
Coxwell v. Paine—1889 G. 1,249
Tarbutt v. Holland—1890 T. 732
Faulders Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Bownass—1890 F. 56
In re Giles
Real and Personal Advance, &c. Co. v. Giles—1890 G. 251
New Land, &c. Co. v. Lewisham Board of Works—1890 N. 133
In re Walker
Turley v. Walker—1889 W. 3,462
Hardwick v. Morton—1889 H. 4,309
Zuccato v. Young—1890 Z. 74
Wilkinson v. Griffith Bros. &c. Co.—1890 W. 803
Moore v. North-Western Bank (Lim.)—1889 M. 2,194
In re Aspinall
Hudson v. Warburton
Collinson v. Hudson—1887 A. 1,697
Mackenzie v. Newton—1890 M. 1,054
Cole v. Cole—1889 C. 3,711
Llewellyn v. Simpson—1889 L. 2.012
Mineral Residues Syndicate v. Levant Mine Adventures—1889 M. 2,863
Potter v. Glover—1890 P. 499

Third Schedule.

From Mr. Justice Stirling.

Armstrong v. Ouray Gold Mining Co. (Lim.)—1889 A. 139
Sebright v. Fitzgerald—1889 S. 4,107
Gledhill v. Maude—1890 G. 366
In re Parry
Hunt v. Parry
Parry v. Pierce
Hunt v. Parry—1889 H. 2,167; 1889 P. 278
Crump v. Minter—1890 C. 87
Laing v. Walker—1889 L. 3,118
Canning v. Stone—1890 C. 412
Fuller v. Duncan—1890 F. 357
New Asbestos Co. (Lim.) v. Duncan—1890 N. 317
Hyde v. New Asbestos Co. (Lim.)—1890 H. 553
Masters, &c. of the Skinners' Company, London v. Leadenhall Market Cold Storage Co. (Lim.)—1889 S. 4,695
Colchester Brewery Co. (Lim.) v. Harwood—1889 C. 2,014
In re Cooper
Greaves v. Cooper—1890 C. 4,138
Pannell v. Pitman—1889 P. 2,872
Simmons v. Henderson—1890 S. 1,568
Faulkner v. Stevens—1890 F. 688
Staffordshire Joint-Stock Bank (Lim.) v. Partridge—1890 S. 1,147
In re Owen
Owen v. Allman—1889 O. 829
Whately v. Rippon—1889 W. 3,803
Rippon v. Brushfield—1890 R. 341
Binnington v. Hill—1889 B. 4,219
Ramsbotham v. Fielden—1890 R. 334
Turney v. Turney—1889 T. 1.149
Pedder v. Pedder—1890 P. 827
Stephenson v. Ovington—1890 S. 373
Davies v. Gibson—1888 D. 1,225
Cross v. Mein—1890 C. 1,309
Gavin v. Hughes—1889 G. 2,171
Robertson v. Hughes—1890 R. 295
Steinwald v. Van Raalte—1889 S. 3,067

Fourth Schedule.

From Mr. Justice Kekewich.

Freeman v. Cheesman
Cheesman v. Freeman—1890 F. 170
Millen v. Gatfield—1889 M. 2,520
In re Jose Fuente and Trade-mark No. 67,419, ex parte Pinto
In re Same and Trade-mark No. 65,548, ex parte Pinto
In re same and Trade-mark No. 67,418, ex parte Pinto
Ricketts v. Ricketts—1889 R. 32
Wyatt v. Earl Cadogan—1890 W. 324
Pullin v. Reffell—1890 P. 581
Cronbach v. Uranium Mines (Lim.)—1889 C. 3,812
Carter v. Silber—1889 C. 2,044
Cronbach v. Uranium Mines (Lim.)—1889 C. 3813
In re Mountain
Beckett v. Mountain—1890 M. 544
Wertheimer v. Cohen—1889 W. 2,774
Holtz v. Couper—1890 H. 448
Perceval v. Burnett—1889 P. 2,504
Dixon v. Garnish—1888 D. 1,016
Fleetwood Estate Co. (Lim.) v. Drummond & Sons—1889 F. 1,554
Bower v. Tomkinson—1890 B. 905
Steel v. Evans—1890 S. 4,005
Gardiner v. Frith—1889 G. 2,472

Halsbury, C.

N.B.—The parties concerned in the above actions must be ready for trial on and after Monday, February 2.

N. Ward, Sen. Regr.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Sir Charles Alfred Cookson, K.C.M.G., C.B., has been appointed Her Majesty's Consul General for the City and Port of Alexandria. Sir Charles Cookson, who thus takes over a portion of the duties hitherto discharged by Sir Evelyn Baring, K.C.B., was called in 1867, and is a brother of Mr. Montague Crackanthorpe, Q.C.

Mr. Thomas Rolls Warrington, M.A., has been appointed Counsel to the Attorney-General in Charity Matters, in succession to Mr. Farwell, recently created one of Her Majesty's counsel. Mr. Warrington was called in 1875.

Mr. Arthur Beetham has been elected Treasurer of the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn for the ensuing year, in succession to Mr. James Shiel, whose term of office will expire in April next.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM FEBRUARY 9 TO FEBRUARY 14.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	February 9	February 10	February 11	February 12	February 13	February 14
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Haywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
16	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	—	Helmsley	Knaresbro'	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Belper	Bakewell	New Mills	—
26	Judge Jordan	Burslem	Longton	Hanley	Hanley	Tunstall	Market Drayton
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, February 3; Mr. Cuthbert Curtis in the chair. The subject for discussion, 'That the case of Taylor v. Russell, L. R. 1891, 1 Ch. p. 8, was wrongly decided,' was opened by Mr. E. W. Munton, in the absence of Mr. W. E. Elmslie; Mr. W. L. Plaskitt and Mr. F. H. Jones opposed. The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative, Mr. T. Douglas; in the negative, Messrs. W. Thorpe, H. E. Aston, and A. W. Watson. Mr. C. Harcourt replied for Mr. Munton. On the motion being put to the meeting, it was lost by a majority of eight.

GRAY'S INN.—A meeting of the Gray's Inn Moot Society took place on Wednesday, January 28, at which the following question, arising upon the decision in The Plymouth Trades Union Case, was discussed: 'A. is an employer of labour, who has in his employ (1) members of a trades union, who are under contract to give notice before leaving his employment; (2) members of a trades union who are under no such contract; (3) non-union men. A. refuses to dismiss the non-union men; B., C., and D., officials of the union, thereupon call upon all union men to leave the employment without notice. Have B., C., and D. been guilty of any, and what, wrongful act or acts?' Mr. Sinclair-Cox (with Mr. Burton) argued for the plaintiff—that B., C., and D. were both civilly and criminally liable, both in the case of the contract and the non-contract men.—Mr. Robertson and Mr. Tudor appeared for the defendant, and contended that no liability had been incurred.—In the result, after a careful review of the authorities, the President decided that the plaintiff had both a civil and criminal remedy in the case of the contract men, but that the defendants had been guilty of no wrongful acts so far as concerned the non-contract men.—A vote of thanks to the president terminated the proceedings.

LIVERPOOL.—The next meeting of this association will be held at the Law Library, on Monday, February 9, and will be the occasion of a joint debate with the Leeds Law Students' Society. Subject for discussion: 'Do secretaries of trades unions commit an offence within section 7 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, who threaten an employer that, if he does not discharge non-union men in his employ, unionists in his employ shall cease work for him, and who proceed to carry that threat into operation by calling out the unionists?'

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish Vol. II., Part 2, of Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod's 'Theory of Credit,' completing the work, next week.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, February 9. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Tuesday, February 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Wednesday, February 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Thursday, February 12.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Friday, February 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Saturday, February 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOMAS LEFROY, Q.C., late County Court judge of Down, and second son of the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, who preceded Mr. Whiteside, died on January 29, at the residence of his son Major Lefroy, Haddington Terrace, Kingstown. He was born on December 31, 1806, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. In 1831 he was called to the bar, and had considerable practice. In 1859 he was appointed chairman of the Quarter Sessions, co. Kildare, and in 1876 County Court judge of Armagh, from which he was transferred to Down in 1880. He continued to discharge his judicial duties until very recently, when he was attacked with illness and resigned. He was always held in the highest respect both personally and as a judge. He was a member of the General Synod, and took an active interest in all matters relating to the Church.

SIR EDWARD GROGAN died at his residence, Blantyre, Dundrum, recently. Some time ago he accidentally fell from a bedroom window to the pavement, a distance of about twenty feet, and sustained injuries from which he never recovered. Sir Edward was born in 1802, and was consequently in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He was educated at Winchester, and subsequently matriculated at Trinity College, Dublin, afterwards proceeding to the degree of M.A. He was called to the bar in 1840, but the bent of his mind led him into the field of politics. He contested the City of Dublin in the Conservative interest, his opponent being Mr. Gregory, whom he defeated. He and Mr. Vance, the other representative of the city, the two Conservative members for the county of Dublin, and the two representatives of the university constituted what was then called 'The Dublin Six,' which formed the watchword of Dublin Conservatives for many years afterwards. Sir Edward married, in 1867, Catherine Charlotte, eldest daughter of Sir Beresford Burton Macmahon, by whom he had several children. The eldest, Mr. Edward Ion Grogan, succeeds to the title.

The death is announced, at his residence at Hampstead, of Mr. Charles Gatliff, in his eighty-first year. Mr. Gatliff, a solicitor by profession, was the first to call the attention of the country, in the year 1841, to the necessity for the improvement of the dwellings of the artisan class, a subject which has since so largely occupied public attention. The result of Mr. Gatliff's labours was that on September 15, 1841, an association for improving the dwellings of the industrial classes was formed. This association obtained a royal charter of incorporation during the administration of Sir Robert Peel in the year 1845. The first block of improved dwellings was opened by the association in the year 1847 in the old Pancras Road, and was visited by the Prince Consort, who took deep interest in the movement. A medal was awarded to this association at the Great Exhibition of 1851, and since that date five other medals have been awarded to this association for their models of improved dwellings for the poor erected in all parts of the metropolis. Mr. Gatliff was secretary to the above-mentioned association from the time of its formation in 1841 till the year 1888.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

Gibson and Weldon's Students' Bankruptcy. Second Edition. London: 'Law Notes' Office.

Goddard on Easements. Fourth Edition. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

Guide to the Preparation of Bills of Costs. (Pridmore.) Ninth Edition. By C. W. Scott. London: Waterlow & Sons (Lim.).

Lockwood's Builders' and Contractors' Price-book. 1891.

Registration of Title v. Registration of Assurances. By H. Brougham Leech, LL.D. London: Wm. Ridgway. 1891.

Solicitor's Clerk (The). By Charles Jones. London: Effingham Wilson & Co.

Tutor and Pupils: Talks about Twelve Law Maxims. By W. Senior, Solicitor. London: 'Law Notes' Office.

The Queen has been pleased to approve that the Hon. Sir Charles Parker Butt, President of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice, be sworn a member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council. Her Majesty has also been pleased to confer the honour of knighthood upon Mr. Justice Jeune.

Tithe Rent-Charge Commission.—The Gazette of February 3 contains the names of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the question of Tithe Rent-Charge in England and Wales. They are: Lord Basing, Mr. G. Cubitt, M.P., Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., Sir H. Hussey Vivian, M.P., Mr. F. Meadows White, Q.C., Mr. W. J. Beadel, and Mr. C. N. Dalton.

Decimal Coinage.—Mr. Leng, M.P., recently forwarded to the Chancellor of the Exchequer a memorial from the Dundee Chamber of Commerce, and numerous merchants, manufacturers, and others of that town, in favour of a decimal system of coinage, weights, and measures. Mr. Goschen, in acknowledging the memorial, says: 'I must own frankly for myself that, though I am sensible that powerful arguments can be put forward in support of the decimal system, I cannot undertake to recommend its adoption to the country.'

Imprisonment for Debt.—At a general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society on January 30, the president, Mr. R. Cunliffe, occupying the chair, Mr. F. K. Munton moved a resolution to the effect that, having regard to the strongly-expressed opinion at the annual provincial meeting held at Nottingham in October—that it would be expedient to procure legislative rules to guide the judges as to the sufficiency of evidence on which imprisonment for debt should be ordered—the council should appoint a small committee to consider the matter and report upon it. In the discussion which took place a general opinion was expressed that it was desirable that the law should be altered so that the debtor might be compelled to prove want of means, instead of its being necessary for the creditor to prove that he was possessed thereof, as was at present the case. The resolution was carried unanimously in an amended form, so as to permit of the committee considering the matter.

Worcester and Worcestershire Incorporated Law Society.—The annual general meeting of this society was held at the Law Library, Pierpoint Street, Worcester, on Friday, the 30th ult.; present: Mr. A. W. Knott (president), in the chair, Mr. R. Canning Hill (vice-president), Messrs. E. A. Davis (hon. treasurer), G. W. Bentley, T. Southall, W. P. Hughes, J. Martin, J. Stallard, jun., S. B. Garrard, R. A. Essex, A. E. Lord, and F. Ronald Jeffery (hon. secretary). The report of the committee and the treasurer's accounts for the past year were received and adopted. Mr. R. Canning Hill was unanimously elected president, and Mr. William Chance Quarrell vice-president for the ensuing year. Mr. E. Amphlett Davis was re-elected hon. treasurer, and Mr. F. Ronald Jeffery was re-elected hon. secretary for the ensuing year. The following gentlemen—viz. Messrs. G. W. Bentley, F. Corbett, T. G. Hyde, A. W. Knott, and T. Southall—were elected members of the committee, in addition to the officers of the society; and votes of thanks were accorded to the retiring officers for their services during the past year.

BIRTHS.

On Feb. 1, at King's Heath, near Birmingham, the wife of Joseph Howlett, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 28, at St. Stephen's, Tonbridge, Alfred Carpenter, Commander, R.N., D.S.O., to Æthelreda, daughter of his Honor Homersham Cox, Judge of the County Courts for Kent.

On Feb. 4, at St. James' Church, Spanish Place, Manchester Square, Douglas Lyon Holms, eldest son of Mr. John Holms, of 16 Cornwall Gardens, Queen's Gate, to Eileen Mary, eldest surviving daughter of Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P.

DEATHS.

On Jan. 22, Catherine, only surviving daughter of the late James Allen Jackson, of Hull, Solicitor, aged 44.

On Jan. 28, at Highclere, Torquay, Charles Collett, late H.E.I.C.S., Madras, and formerly a Judge of the High Court of Madras, aged 64.

On Jan. 29, at Steyning, Sussex, Nathaniel White, of Oak Lawn, Castelnau, Barnes, and of 28 Budge Row, E.C., Solicitor, aged 51.

On Feb. 1, at his residence, Melton Hall, near Woodbridge, John Richard Wood, Solicitor, of Woodbridge, and 8 Finsbury Circus, London, aged 67.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

NOTWITHSTANDING the support of Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Lowther has failed to convince the House of Commons that the convict Hargan ought to receive a free pardon from Her Majesty, and withdrew his motion without going to a division. The facts were simply that Hargan, having killed two men in order, as was alleged, to save his own life, had been tried for murder, and, being convicted of manslaughter, sentenced by Mr. Justice Charles to twenty years' penal servitude. Her Majesty having, on the recommendation of Mr. Secretary Matthews, been graciously pleased to mitigate this sentence (with the general approval of all acquainted with the facts), Mr. Lowther now sought to have a free pardon substituted for the mitigated sentence of twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour. We are not surprised at the result. Perhaps it would have been more satisfactory if the original commutation had been to imprisonment without hard labour, but there must be an end to Parliamentary interference with the executive, and we think that that end had come when the original commutation had been once procured. Perhaps, however, the institution of a regular Court of revision of sentences, which would be a very different Court from the Court of Criminal Appeal which has been so frequently proposed, might be to the advantage of the community. Before such a Court of revision all the facts would be admitted, and the only question would be whether the sentence went too far, and, if so, to what extent it ought to be reduced.

THE 'bonâ fide traveller' branch of licensing law has recently given rise to a new and curious question in Oldham v. Sheasby, which was decided by the High Court upon a case stated by the justices of Macclesfield. It appeared that a certain number of persons had travelled from Ashton-under-Lyme to Macclesfield, a distance of twenty miles, on Sunday. Arrived at Macclesfield, they put up and dined at a public-house in the town. After dinner they walked about and entered and were supplied with liquor at the Railway Hotel, which was distant 'only 525 yards' from the public-house where they were staying. Were they, qud the Railway Hotel, bonâ fide travellers or not? This question depends upon the construction to be given to section 10 of the Licensing Act, 1874, and section 25 of the Licensing Act, 1872. By section 10 of the Act of 1874, 'nothing in the Acts of 1872 or 1874' shall preclude 'a licensed person from selling liquor' at any time to bonâ fide travellers or to persons lodging in his house, while by section 25 of the Act of 1872 any person found on licensed premises during closing hours is liable to a penalty, 'unless he satisfies the Court' that he is (inter alios) a bonâ fide traveller. It is also enacted by section 25 of the Act of 1872 (with which the Act of 1874 is to be read as one) that 'a person shall not be deemed to be a bonâ fide traveller unless the place where he lodged during the preceding night is at least three miles distant from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor, such distance to be calculated by the nearest public thoroughfare.' Now it must be observed upon the last provision that it does not follow, because a man is not a bonâ fide traveller unless he has travelled three miles, that if he has travelled three miles he is therefore a bonâ fide traveller. Thus much the laws alike of logic and common sense require. But when once the necessary status of bonâ fides is established, there is nothing in the Act to prevent the bonâ fide one from achieving his honest purpose of drinking to travel—as contradistinguished from the sorry purpose of travelling to drink—at as many sets of licensed premises as to himself may seem fit. Therefore the Macclesfield justices who convicted the Ashton men of being on licensed premises during closing hours, took a wrong view of the law. And so the Court decided, and quashed the conviction.

The Duke of Norfolk, in a letter of protest against the refusal of the House of Commons to give a second reading to Mr. Gladstone's Religious Disabilities Removal Bill, conveys the impression that the exclusion of Roman Catholics from the offices of Lord Chancellor and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, which that bill is intended to throw open to Roman Catholics, forms the sole remaining disability of Roman Catholics. 'If we have never thought it necessary,' writes the duke, 'to seriously press for the removal of the disabilities which Mr. Gladstone's bill was intended to take away, it is because we looked upon them rather as interesting remainders of the sufferings of the past than as enactments intentionally retained by our fellow-countrymen as an affront to our religion and a slur upon our loyalty.' It may be useful, however, at this juncture, to point out that the Roman Catholic Relief Act of 1829, while it contained enabling enactments of the most sweeping character in relation to franchises and offices, contained also enactments of a very restrictive, and not to say oppressive, character in relation to Jesuits and monks, and that these enactments are not only not repealed, but from having been travelled over without repeal in the Statute Law Revision Act of last session, will shortly be printed in the second edition of the Revised Statutes now in progress. The enactments in question (10 Geo. IV. c. 7, ss. 28-37) are long and elaborate. Nuns are excluded from their operation, but banishment of Jesuits and monks from the United Kingdom for life still hangs over the heads of these reverend fathers (see ss. 29, 34), it having been the avowed object of the Legislature (see s. 28) to 'make provision for the gradual suppression and final prohibition' of 'Jesuits and members of other religious orders, communities, or societies of the Church of Rome, bound by religious or monastic vows' in the United Kingdom.

Boldness and brevity were surely never more strikingly combined than they are in Mr. Haldane's Women's Disabilities Removal Bill, which is also backed by Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Howorth. It consists of four sections and about ten lines; it dispenses with a preamble, which, if there were one, could only be in some such form as this: 'Whereas society has hitherto, both in this realm and abroad, been constituted on a radically wrong basis, and it is desirable to establish it on a sound basis, be it enacted,' &c. Women suffrage is accepted, within the limits now assigned to men, by many persons on all sides of politics. Probably few will be found to object to the presence of ladies on boards of guardians and school boards. But some of the most zealous advocates of women's rights will have their breath taken away by the proposal in section 3: 'No person shall be disqualified from being elected or appointed to or from filling or holding any office or position merely by reason that such person is a woman, or being a woman is under coverture.' We should soon have women members of Parliament, judges, jurymen, even deans and bishops, foreign secretaries, and prime ministers. The Lady Bishop of Barchester and Mr. Proudie might soon be the ecclesiastical order of the day. The application of an Act of Parliament like this would afford an excellent arena for the conflict of Erastian and Anglican or Catholic theories of the Church. Yet the promoters of this bill are much too serious people to be suspected of a joke, and one at least of them is a Scotchman. Mr. Haldane has achieved considerable distinction in philosophy as well as in law, but his study of Schopenhauer has apparently led him to diametrically opposite views to those of that philosopher, who was a confirmed misogynist.

We referred two weeks ago to the dishonourable way in which persons travel in classes higher than those for which they have bought their tickets from the railway companies. Last week an indignant champion of the public took up the gauntlet by denouncing in our columns the way in which railway companies cheat the public by obliging them to travel in overcrowded carriages. We do not understand our correspondent to express approval of the fraudulent passenger, but to his mind the way in which the companies treat their passengers is an extenuating circumstance to be considered in judging of the passenger's fraud. There is, at all events, this difference between the case of the cheating passenger and the overcrowding company—namely, that the former is a fraud deliberately practised, while the company, at all events in many cases, can have no means of knowing beforehand that the train is going to be crowded. Further, if a person finds that he cannot get into a third class, for which he has taken his ticket, the company do not object to his going second, or, if necessary, first. Persons often avail themselves of this privilege on excursion days, even when the third classes might prove on examination not to be absolutely full. In the list of bye-laws and regulations appended to Browne and Theobald's 'Law of Railways' (2nd edition), p. 832, there is one bearing on this subject—viz. 'Any person travelling without the special permission of some duly authorised servant of the company in a carriage or by a train of a superior class to that for which his ticket was issued is hereby,' &c. The obvious implication from this bye-law would be that, a passenger using a superior class with the permission of an authorised servant of the company would not be required to pay the extra fare or be prosecuted. By bye-law 13, on the same page, provision is made for punishing a person who persists in entering a carriage already full when any person inside objects. True, it may be observed that we cannot tell on the spur of the moment whether the particular company on whose line we are travelling have adopted these bye-laws, but they show us at least the line which railway companies are most likely to adopt in this matter.

The Tithes Bill, as amended in committee, has now been printed. One of the most important amendments is that of clause 4, which the Attorney-General accepted under a protest that it was unnecessary. By this clause, 'if any person in any action or matter under this Act shall be dissatisfied with the determination or direction of the judge of the County Court in point of law or equity, or upon the admission or rejection of any evidence, the party aggrieved by the judgment, direction, decision, or order of the judge may appeal from the same to the High Court, in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be for the time being provided by the Rules of the Supreme Court regulating the procedure on appeals from inferior Courts to the High Court.' This clause is obviously modelled on section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, but whereas that section gives an appeal by leave only in actions of contract or tort in certain cases, the new clause in the Tithes Bill gives the appeal without any such restriction. Though it is not easy to see how an action of contract or tort can arise under the bill, which is mainly taken up with the appointment of a receiver by the County Court, the clause may possibly be found useful in time to come. Whether, now that it has been inserted, it would not be well to make the decision of the High Court final, may, perhaps, be doubted. Without such a restriction, there will be an appeal from the High Court by leave to the Court of Appeal, and a further appeal without any leave from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords. It may be pointed out that there is no limit in respect of amount to the right, under section 126 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to remove any action or matter commenced in the County Court 'under the provisions of this Act,' 'by certiorari or otherwise' into the High Court. It is doubtful whether a matter under the Tithes Bill would come under this enactment, and it might, perhaps, be well to substitute for the new appeal clause a provision that it should.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in reply to an interpellation by the Bishop of Truro, has recently stated in Convocation that the present doubtful state of the law against betting made it very difficult to propose amendments. No doubt the statutes down from Henry VIII.'s still unrepealed 'bill for maintaining artillery and debarring of unlawful games' (33 Hen. VIII. c. 9), whereby it is illegal for (inter alios) fishermen, watermen, labourers, and servants to play at (inter alia) cards, dice, or logating 'out of Christmas,' down to 37 Vict. c. 18, whereby advertising tipsters are subject to severe penalties—form a mass of frequently incomprehensible matter. A consolidation statute, at least, is therefore very much wanted. But wanted far more, as we have more than once pointed out, is an amending statute to do away with the bad judge-made law of Read v. Anderson, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 532, whereby certain harpies styling themselves 'turf commission agents' have become elevated to the dignity of a recognised profession. Instead of talking about this matter in Convocation, could not the bishops (who are peers of Parliament) see their way to introducing a bill to reduce to their proper legal position a set of agents whose sole business it is to make contracts not enforceable by law?

Lord Monkswell's Copyright Bill, to which we have more than once called attention, contains not a few departures from the recommendations of the Royal Commission of 1878, although it is, of course, mainly based upon the reports of that commission. Amongst these departures (almost all of which are set forth in the memorandum prefixed to the bill) is the reproduction by clause 25 of the requirements of the existing law (see Copyright Act of 1842, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 6–10), by which publishers of all books (including new editions of books) are bound to deliver free copies to certain libraries at Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Dublin. There is no doubt that this requirement is a heavy tax on literary production, especially in cases where a book has costly plates and the number of copies printed is small. The commissioners, therefore, recommended that the law should be altered, that the libraries should acquire by purchase such books as they felt disposed to pay for (the British Museum alone to retain the right of gratis supply), and to do without the others as best they could. Lord Monkswell, however, has not followed this recommendation. 'From communications which have been received from the librarians,' so it is stated in the memorandum prefixed to the bill, 'it appears that they are most anxious to retain their present privilege, that the libraries could not be properly supplied if it were abolished, and that the cases in which it can cause any real hardship are very few.' Is this proposal, which, if carried out, will continue the present slight increase of the normal cost of production of books, and, therefore, of their selling price, in the real interest of the public? We think it is, on the ground that, unless a copy of every book find its way to the libraries, there may be a risk of some books not becoming obtainable at all.

If the argument on behalf of the purchaser in the case of In re Sandbach & Edmondson, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 60, had prevailed, we should have had to add to our notions of a misleading condition any condition which requires the purchaser to assume a given fact, and does not point out the legal consequences involved in the particular case. The vendor's title in this case was derived from a trustee who—assuming his cestui que trust to have died intestate and without heirs before 1870—became beneficially entitled to the property (subject to a prior life-interest) according to the old law (Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177; see, too, Gallard v. Hawkins, 53 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 835). That law, it will be remembered, in the case where a cestui que trust dies on or after August 14, 1884, is altered by the Intestates Act, 1884, s. 4, whereby in such a case the property now escheats to the Crown. The trustee had himself died in 1870, whence the importance of that year. By the conditions the title was to commence with the settlement, made in 1840, constituting the trusteeship, the parties to which were named; and the condition in dispute required the purchaser to assume the death of the cestui que trust intestate and without an heir before the year 1870. It was not suggested that the vendor knew that the assumption was false, nor even that the facts assumed were not true, and the property had been enjoyed in accordance with the title since 1876, when the tenant-for-life had died. The argument was that, looking to the importance of the legal consequences involved, the condition was really a trap for the purchaser. The Court of Appeal, affirming Vice-Chancellor Bristowe, held that the condition was binding, the Lord Chancellor observing that 'an opposite view would establish the principle that, apart from intentional misleading, and apart from any knowledge by the vendor that the facts required to be assumed were not true, a condition requiring assumptions as to the title could only be supported where the specific objection to the title was pointed out,' for which, he added, he knew of no authority.

It seems very doubtful whether Mr. Justice Kekewich's decision in The Whitwood Chemical Company v. Hardman (February 7) can be supported. The defendant was a skilled manager of the plaintiffs' works, and by his agreement with them he was to serve as manager till 1895, and 'give the whole of his time to the company's business.' But there was no express provision that he should not enter into any other business or occupation. A rival company was being started in the neighbourhood, and the defendant was shown to be in negotiation for becoming a director thereof and a shareholder therein. He was willing to cancel his agreement with the plaintiffs, but contended that he was entitled to spend his leisure time as he liked, including, of course, the performance of his duties as a director in the proposed new company. Mr. Justice Kekewich thought otherwise, and granted an interlocutory injunction restraining him from giving less than the whole of his time to the plaintiffs' business. The decision is avowedly based on the line of authority of which Lumley v. Wagner, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 898; 1 De G. M. & G. 604, is a conspicuous feature, but it seems to go far beyond that case. In the first place, a chemical manufacturer's manager is not such a rara avis as a cantatrice. Another distinction between the two cases is that there was an express agreement of Mademoiselle Wagner not 'to use her talents at any other theatre, nor in any concert or reunion, public or private,' without the plaintiff's consent. The proper remedy against Hardman, if there is any, would seem to be an action for damages. To grant an injunction seems to be going dangerously near what Lord Justice Fry said was turning a contract of service into a contract of servitude.

In the case of In re Griffith; Eggar v. Griffith (noted at p. 27) the Court had to determine the curious question whether a solicitor, who refuses to make any charge for professional services rendered to a client, can be compelled to deliver a bill of costs. The solicitors in question had conducted certain proceedings in the Divorce Court on behalf of some clients. The solicitors alleged that the clients had verbally agreed to pay them 1,000*l.* for their services, and the clients actually paid them 500*l.* on account of expenses. Upon the termination of the proceedings, some two years after that payment, the solicitors applied for the balance, whereupon the clients asked for a bill of costs, denying that they had ever agreed to pay 1,000*l.* The solicitors not only refused to deliver a bill of costs, but paid the 500*l.* they had already received into the clients' bank, and wrote a letter refusing to make any charge whatever for their services. The clients then applied at chambers for an order under section 37 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, compelling the solicitors to deliver a bill of costs; but both the master and the judge refused to make an order, and the Court held that they were perfectly right in so doing. They were of opinion that, as no charge of misconduct was made against the solicitors, the application could not be founded upon the inherent jurisdiction of the Court over its officers, but could only be based upon section 37 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, and that that section had no application unless there were a 'party chargeable.' After the solicitors' letter renouncing all claim for costs the Court considered that the clients ceased to be 'chargeable,' and that there was, therefore, no jurisdiction to make the order. It would seem to be impossible to doubt the correctness of the conclusion at which the Court arrived. There can be no power to compel a man to make a charge for work done if he does not desire to do so, and there is certainly no reason for placing solicitors upon a different footing in this respect from other persons.

The attention of the legal profession should be drawn to the declaration of Mr. Justice Kekewich in Thomson v. Macdonald & Co. (1891, 8 P. O. R. p. 9), that in actions for the infringements of patents he will, in future, disallow the costs of the objection that the plaintiff is not 'the true and first inventor,' if that objection is employed merely as an alternative way of denying novelty. The distinction between the two pleas is obvious, and was insisted upon by Hindmarch nearly half a century ago. Mr. Justice Kekewich has done well in taking such stringent measures to save it from obliteration.

The decision of Mr. Justice Chitty in In the Matter of Meeus' Application (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 96; 1891, 8 P. O. R. p. 25) is well worthy of notice. The material facts were as follow: 'Louis Meeus,' a firm carrying on the business of distillers and exporters of 'Geneva' at Antwerp, applied to register a trade-mark alleged to have been used as such prior to August 13, 1875. The proposed mark consisted of a key ornamented with ears of corn, across which was the signature 'Louis Meeus' written in current hand. In a circle outside the key were the words 'Geneva Key Brand' and the name 'Louis Meeus' printed in special but not extraordinary type. There was also the word 'Antwerp' in the circle beneath the key. The application was opposed by Messrs. Blankenheym & Nolet, 'Geneva' distillers at Rotterdam, on various grounds that are, for our present purpose, immaterial. The evidence of the applicants failed to prove user of the proposed mark as a whole prior to August 13, 1875; and Mr. Justice Chitty, affirming the decision of the comptroller, held that the application must, therefore, be dismissed. Two important points are settled by his lordship's judgment. In the first place, the converse of the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in In re Palmer's Trade-marks, L. R. 24 Chanc. Div. 504, is judicially determined to hold good; and an applicant for the registration of an 'old mark' must henceforth be prepared to prove the user before the statutory date of the proposed mark, substantially in the form in which he claims to register it. In the second place, Orr-Ewing v. The Registrar of Trade-marks, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 479, 48 Law. J. Rep. Chanc. 707, has at length been 'explained.' The passage in which Mr. Justice Chitty deals with the case is too long to quote. Put shortly, his lordship's construction of the decision of the House of Lords is, that the committee of experts appointed to aid in the formation of the first register of trade-marks were not a tribunal of commerce, and that the general orders appointing them did not constitute a statutory barrier to the registrar of trade-marks even entertaining an application apparently inconsistent with the resolutions at which they arrived. We trust that Orr-Ewing v. The Registrar of Trade-marks will not again be cited as an authority against the 'Braided Fixed Stars' case.

'General' Booth does not like lawyers, unless, indeed, they are sitting on the 'penitents' bench.' At a recent meeting the 'General' seems to have delivered his soul of some strong feeling and his mouth of some hard sayings about the legal profession. But he would be a bold man who asserted that lawyers as a body were opponents of religion. On the other hand, their intellectual training and the habit acquired in practice of careful analysis undoubtedly make lawyers very unlikely converts to Salvation Army tenets, and therefore very unwelcome critics of the latest plan for reforming 'the submerged tenth.'

INNKEEPERS AND GUESTS.

What constitutes the relationship between innkeeper and guest? The reported cases which throw light on this point are so few in number as to give some value to the decision of the Court of Appeal last week in Medawar v. The Grand Hotel Company, in which this question was discussed. York v. Grindstone, 1 Salk. 388; 2 Ld. Raym. 388, sub nom. Yorke v. Greenhaugh, was a replevin of a horse, which the plaintiff, a traveller, had left at the defendant's inn, and which the defendant had detained for its keep. In this case Chief Justice Holt doubted whether the plaintiff was a guest, because he never went into the inn himself, but only left his horse there, which the innkeeper was not obliged to receive, and, if he did, did so as a livery stable keeper. Three other judges, however, held that the plaintiff was a guest by leaving his horse as much as if he had stayed himself, 'because the horse must be fed, by which the innkeeper has gain; otherwise, if he had left a trunk or a dead thing.' In Bennett v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 273, in 1793, an action for the value of goods stolen from an inn, the plaintiff's servant had taken the goods in question to market, and not being able to dispose of them went with them to the defendant's inn, and asked the defendant's wife if he could leave the goods there until the next market-day. She refused, and the plaintiff's servant then sat down in the inn and had some liquor, putting the goods on the floor behind him. When he got up, after sitting there a little while, the goods were missing. A verdict was, on these facts, found for the plaintiff, and, in reporting the case upon a motion for a new trial, Mr. Justice Buller observed that he was of opinion that, if the defendant's wife had accepted the charge of the goods upon the special request made to her, he should have considered her as a special bailee, and not answerable, having been guilty of no actual negligence; but, that not being the case, he considered it to be the common case of goods brought into an inn by a guest and stolen from thence, in which case the innkeeper was liable to make good the loss in accordance with Calye's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 8th edit. p. 140. This view was confirmed by the Court of King's Bench. In Farnworth v. Packwood, 1 Stark. 249; and Burgess v. Clements, 1 Stark. 251, where private rooms had been taken in an inn by travellers for the exposure and sale of goods, and it was held that a guest who takes exclusive possession of a room for such a purpose, and not animo hospitandi, discharges a landlord from his common law liability. In Jones v. Tyler, 3 Law J. Rep. K. B. 166; 1 A. & E. 522, an innkeeper was asked on a fair-day by a traveller driving a gig whether he had room for the horse, and he thereupon put the horse into his stable, received the traveller with some goods into the inn, and placed the gig in the street, whence it was stolen, and it was held that, as he had the benefit of the guest and provided provender for the horse, he was liable. In Strauss v. The County Hotel and Wine Company, 53 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 25, the plaintiff arrived at the defendants' hotel with the intention of spending the night there, and delivered his luggage to one of the hotel porters, but after reading a telegram decided not to spend the night there, and went into the coffee-room to order refreshments. Being unable to obtain what he required, he went to the station refreshment-room, which was under the same management as the hotel, and connected with it by a covered passage. Shortly afterwards he went out, telling the porter to lock up his luggage until the time for his train to start, and it was locked up in a room near the refreshment-room, but on his arrival on the platform a part of it was missing. In an action against the proprietors of the hotel, the plaintiff was nonsuited upon the ground that there was no evidence that he ever became a guest of the defendants at their inn, and upon argument the nonsuit was upheld, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge saying that he could find no ground for saying that the defendant was in any sense a guest within the defendants' inn at the time when his luggage was lost. In Medawar v. The Grand Hotel Company, the case recently before the Court of Appeal, the plaintiff went to the defendants' hotel early in the morning, having with him a portmanteau, hat-box, and dressing-bag. He was told that the hotel was full, but that there was a room engaged by persons who had not arrived which he could use for washing and dressing, and he was shown up, and his luggage was taken to this room. He there opened his dressing-bag and took out a stand containing, amongst other things, a jewellery case, and having washed and dressed went down to breakfast, leaving the door of the room unlocked and the stand on the dressing-table. After breakfasting, he paid for his breakfast, went out, and did not return till late at night. On asking for his room he was told that he had none, and it appeared that the persons who had engaged the room had arrived, and that on their arrival one of the defendants' servants had removed the plaintiff's luggage into the corridor, leaving the stand, as it was, out of the dressing-bag. On the luggage being brought to a room which had been found for him, the plaintiff found that some of the jewellery was missing, and brought an action against the hotel company to recover its value. The action was tried before Mr. Justice Smith, without a jury, who held that, whatever the plaintiff's position was during the short period of time during which he was dressing and having breakfast, he was not a guest after he left in the morning, and on that ground and on the ground that the plaintiff had not shown any negligence on the part of the defendants which would make them liable as bailees, gave judgment in their favour. This judgment has now been reversed by the Court of Appeal. The Court were much pressed with the argument that the use of the room by the plaintiff for the purpose of dressing was under the terms of a special contract, but refused to entertain this proposition. In their opinion the proper inference from the facts, construed by the aid of ordinary knowledge of the world, was that the room was given to the plaintiff, subject to the notice that if the expected guests arrived he must quit it, and that he remained a guest until their arrival, and that the innkeeper continued to be the guardian of the guest's property until it was duly delivered to him. This being so, the Court held that the hotel company must, in order to escape liability on their part to the extent of the 30*l.*, to which it is limited by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41, show that the goods were lost by the plaintiff's negligence in leaving them open to view in an unlocked room, and that as they failed to prove this, since it was equally likely that the theft took place after the goods were, by the negligence of their own servants, placed in the corridor, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for 30*l.*: Cashill v. Wright, 6 E. & B. 891, in 1856; Morgan v. Raney, 30 Law J. Rep. Exch. 131; Oppenheim v. The White Lion Hotel Company, 40 Law J. Rep. C. P. 231. As, however, the claim of the plaintiff exceeded 30*l.*, the Court held that, as to the excess, the onus was by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41, placed upon the plaintiff to prove, in order to entitle him to recover, that the loss occurred by the defendants' negligence, and as it was equally likely that the goods were stolen in the room in consequence of his own negligence, as in the corridor in consequence of the defendants' negligence, he had failed to discharge the burden of proof, and was not entitled to recover more than 30*l.* A more thoroughly illustrative case of the law upon this point it would have been difficult to devise.

THE NEGOTIATION FEE UNDER THE SOLICITORS' REMUNERATION ORDER.

A POINT of great importance to the profession was decided by the Court of Appeal in the recent case of In re Macgowan, Macgowan v. Macgowan, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 6; L. R. 1891, 1 Chanc. Div. 105, the short question being whether a solicitor who negotiates a sale by private contract, subject to the approval of the Court, which is afterwards obtained, is entitled to the scale fee for negotiating the sale, in addition, of course, to the costs of obtaining the sanction of the Court to the conditional contract. The taxing-master disallowed the fee, considering that the solicitors were only entitled to be paid according to schedule 2. Lord Justice (then Mr. Justice) Kay affirmed the taxing-master, but his decision was overruled by the Court of Appeal. The facts may be shortly stated. An action was brought in the Chancery Division for the administration of the estate of a testatrix, which comprised a mortgage for 6,000*l.* The solicitors of the trustees negotiated a sale of the property comprised in the mortgage, and it was not disputed that they conditionally arranged the price, terms, and prepared and procured the signature of a contract conditional on the sanction of the Court being given to it. In the course of the negotiation, but solely for the purpose of obtaining evidence to induce the Court to sanction the sale, they obtained the opinions of two valuers to whom they paid fees of 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* and 1*l.* 1*s.* The contract was ultimately approved by the Court without any alteration. The solicitors charged the sums paid to the valuers in their bill of costs, as well as the negotiation fee. It will be remembered that schedule 1, part 1, to the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, allows a scale fee to the 'vendor's solicitor for negotiating a sale of property by private contract,' while rule 11 says: 'The scale for negotiating shall apply to cases where the solicitor of a vendor or purchaser arranges the sale or purchase, and the price and terms and conditions thereof, and no commission is paid by the client to an auctioneer or estate or other agent.' The Court of Appeal, consisting of Lords Justices Lindley, Bowen, and Fry, on these facts held that the solicitors were entitled to the negotiation fee. The argument on the other side was twofold—first, that the Court and not the solicitors had really arranged the terms, inasmuch as they were of no binding force till approved by the Court; and secondly, that the employment of the valuers by the solicitors on behalf of the vendors brought the case within the prohibitive words of rule 11. The second argument on which the taxing-master's ruling was chiefly founded, but which does not appear to have much influenced Lord Justice Kay in the Court below, was readily disposed of in the Court of Appeal by the consideration that the valuers were really employed by the solicitors as expert witnesses for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of the Court, and therefore no question arose of any commission being paid on behalf of the client for the purpose of the negotiation for which the fee was claimed. The first argument is entitled to more consideration, as it formed the ground of Lord Justice Kay's decision in the Court below, which may be gathered from the following passage in his judgment: 'It seems to me,' Mr. Justice Kay said, 'that the word "arrange" in this clause of rule 11, which only applies to negotiation, means that there must be complete negotiation resulting in a binding contract, and that the solicitor is not entitled to the fee unless he carries out the negotiation himself, without paying anything to anybody else up to the time when there is a binding contract.' The additional expense to which the learned judge is here alluding was, as appears from the rest of his judgment, the expense incurred in obtaining the sanction of the Court, including the fees which had been paid to the valuers. This construction would, as Lord Justice Bowen points out, exclude from the operation of the rule a vast amount of business which, his lordship goes on to say, 'it must have been intended to cover.' It may be added that it seems to involve a remarkable interpretation of the word 'negotiating,' if we are to look at the language of part 1 of schedule 1, or of the word 'arrange,' if we are to look at rule 11; and we think there can be no possible question as to the correctness of the decision of the Court of Appeal. The following passage in Lord Justice Bowen's judgment will serve to show the construction of rule 11 which found favour with the Court: 'In cases where the sale is ultimately effected, the solicitor arranges the sale if he brings the negotiation to a close, which leaves his principal free to accept or not, and if, as a fact, his principal afterwards does accept. Negotiation, I should have thought, in the ordinary meaning of the English language, is that which passes between parties or their agents in the course of or incident to the making of the contract; and if the negotiation is brought to such a close as leaves the principal at liberty to say, "I accept the offer," then the agent has done all that a negotiating agent can do, and within the meaning of the rule he has arranged the sale, the sale afterwards being effected.' What consequence would have followed if the terms arranged by the solicitors had been modified by the Court so as to result in a new contract is not stated by any of the learned judges; but we conceive that it is not open to doubt, and that in this case the solicitors, not bringing themselves within the terms of rule 11, would, according to Parker v. Blenkhorn, 50 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 209; L. R. 14 App. Cas. 1, have made out their bill for the negotiation business under the old system as altered by schedule 2.

Reviews.

THE COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) PRACTICE.

The Companies (Winding-up) Act and Rules, 1890, and Part IV. (Winding-up) of the Companies Act, 1862. With Forms, Scales of Costs, Fees, and Percentages, Directors' Liability Act, 1890, Lord Chancellor's Orders, Board of Trade Orders and Forms, and Notes thereon. By M. MUIR MACKENZIE, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and C. J. STEWARD, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Official Receiver under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890. London: Shaw & Sons. 1890.

THIS work, the authors tell us in their preface, does not aim at being more than a practical guide to the new practice in the winding up of joint-stock companies, introduced by the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890. It accordingly comprises that part of the Companies Act, 1862 (Part IV.), which deals with winding-up, and the new Act of 1890, together with all the new orders, &c. The notes, which have been introduced, 'do not attempt to deal with any general questions of joint-stock company law, but are confined to points of practice, and particularly to the points in which the law and practice in bankruptcy has been and will be introduced into the winding up of insolvent companies.' Within the limits so defined, the work is executed in a satisfactory manner, and will be a useful handbook to those who are concerned with the winding up of joint-stock companies. At p. 113 are considered the provisions of section 10 of the new Act, which extend section 165 of the Act of 1862, which is now repealed. The new law includes any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of a company, and we have here enumerated, by way of example, 'promoters, solicitors, prospectus-makers, vendor-syndicates, brokers, and valuers.' Section 165 of 1862 was held to be a procedure enactment which created no new liability; but attention is drawn to the fact that new liability has been created by the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. The application may also now be made by the official receiver, and this must be read in conjunction with sections 7 and 8 of the Act, which provide for the submission of a statement of affairs to the official receiver, and give him a principal part in the conduct of the public examination.

THE GROWTH OF CRIMINAL LAW.

Lectures on the Growth of Criminal Law in Ancient Communities. By RICHARD R. CHERRY, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, Reid Professor of Constitutional and Criminal Law in the University of Dublin. London and New York: Macmillan & Co. 1890.

THE aim of the author of this interesting little volume has been to compare the early ideas of several nations as to the crimes and their punishment, or, as he elsewhere expresses it, to trace historically the manner in which criminal or penal law developed itself among ancient societies. He has accordingly selected various legal systems as far as possible apart from each other, his object being to show that identity of usage did not arise from one nation adopting the laws or institutions of another, but from the inherent principles of human nature. The subject is generally considered in Lecture I.; Lecture II. then deals with ancient Irish law, which is of special value in such a study as the present; Lecture III. is devoted to the law of Semitic races; Lecture IV. to Roman penal law; Lecture V. to early English penal law. The last lecture is devoted to Early English Criminal Law, and takes as its text, 'The distinguishing feature of Modern English Criminal Law is the fact that the Sovereign is in all cases the prosecuting party.' The Queen, as Mr. Cherry puts it, prosecutes every petty larceny, and at the same time, by her delegate the judge of assize, tries the offender. Theoretically, she is judge in her own cause, a position which is repugnant to every principle of jurisprudence. The consequences that flow from this are well traced out in the course of the lecture. Thus the general rule of law, the policy of which has been questioned, is that there is no prescription in criminal matters. This results from the maxim 'Nullum tempus occurrit regi,' and there are several other instances given where the law is governed by the same principle. The lectures are interesting and instructive.

THE BISHOP OF LINCOLN'S CASE.

The Bishop of Lincoln's Case A Report of the Proceedings in the Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. With Appendix. By E. S. ROSCOE, Barrister-at-Law. London: W. Clowes & Sons. 1891.

THIS book contains a report of the whole proceedings of the now historical case of Read v. The Bishop of Lincoln. Anyone desiring to study the case at leisure can now do so. The book is well bound and is printed on strong paper, so as to be essentially a library edition. The pages are 202 in number and the price is 10s.

THE STUDENTS' PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY.

Gibson and Weldon's Students' Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty. Intended as an Explanatory Treatise on the Law and Practice in Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Matters. Prepared specially for the use of Students; and more particularly for the use of Students for the Final (Pass) and Honours Examinations of the Law Society. Second Edition. By the Authors. London: The 'Law Notes' Publishing Offices. 1891.

THE second edition of this useful work appears after an interval of some three years, and bears the impress throughout of careful execution. Here and there, however, we must confess that we should have been glad of references to more recent authorities. Thus, on p. 13, on the subject of 'Incorporation of Documents,' allusion might very well have been made to several important cases in which the law as to incorporation has been considered—e.g. Singleton v. Tomlinson, to mention one case out of many. Under the head of 'Due Influence' the authors might have introduced with advantage the case of Wingrove v. Wingrove. Generally speaking, however, the work is well brought down to date, and will be found of solid service to the student.

Correspondence.

THE NEW COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT.

Sir,—The enclosed copy of a letter received from the Board of Trade on an important matter relating to the new procedure under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, will be of considerable interest to both branches of the legal profession. Alfred Emden.

5 New Court, Lincoln's Inn:
Feb. 11.

Board of Trade, Whitehall Gardens:
February 10, 1891.

Sir,—Referring to your letter of the 29th ultimo, addressed to the President of the Board of Trade, I am directed by the Board of Trade to inform you that while their solicitor will commonly act for the official receiver in proceedings under the Companies Acts involving questions of public policy or the investigation of conduct, it is not intended in the ordinary administration of a company's estate to establish any exclusive system in the employment of professional agents, but to leave such employment in each case to the discretion of the official receiver, subject to the control of the Board of Trade. Such discretion would be exercised only with reference to the interests of the shareholders and creditors of the company.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,
(Signed) Henry E. Calcraft.

Alfred Emden, Esq.,
5 New Court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

THE SALARY OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

Sir,—Your issue of January 17 has been sent to me, in which you impugn my statement made in our town council with reference to some high-handed action of Lord Chancellor Halsbury, whom I described as 'the highest-paid functionary in England,' at 20,000*l.* per annum.

May I trust to your allowing me to substantiate this statement from Parliamentary papers just issued, which give the salaries as under?—

	£
Lord Chancellor	10,000
Speaker of House of Lords . .	4,000
President of the Supreme Court .	6,000
Making a total . . .	20,000

the amount I named. James Wicks,
Alderman of Colchester.

Dereham Place, Colchester:
Feb. 11.

Unreported Cases.

NISI PRIUS.

ACTION OF DETINUE AGAINST AN INFANT.

On January 31, before Mr. Justice Wright, the case of Burton v. Levey, an infant, &c., was further considered. This case was tried before his lordship and a common jury on December 15 last year, when the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 70*l.*—The plaintiff is a harness maker carrying on business in Oxford Street, and was, in April, 1890, in possession of two diamond rings of the above value which he wished to dispose of. The defendant had his horses at livery at the stables of the plaintiff's father, and upon seeing the rings he told the plaintiff that he thought his mother, Mrs. Levey, would buy them; and he said he would show them to her. He added that if his mother took them he would bring back the price—viz. 70*l.*, on the following day. Accordingly, the plaintiff intrusted the rings to Mr. Montague Levey, but no money was forthcoming, nor were the rings returned to the plaintiff. Thereupon the plaintiff wrote to Mrs. Levey on April 22, asking for his rings or their price. To this the defendant replied that he had purchased the rings, saying that the plaintiff would have to wait for his, the defendant's, convenience to be paid for them. Upon this a correspondence took place between the plaintiff's solicitor and that of the defendant, which resulted in the present action, the writ being issued on April 28, 1890. The defendant entered an appearance by his mother, Catherine Levey, widow, as guardian ad litem, on May 6, 1890. The defendant, by his pleadings, denied the detinue of the plaintiff's property in the rings; alleged a purchase of the chattels for 75*l.*, to be paid for on July 4, 1891; accord and satisfaction by the exchange of a lady's dressing-bag; and infancy. At the trial the plaintiff gave evidence in support of his case, and the defendant was not called as a witness, and the plaintiff got an admission from the defendant that he had the rings in his possession. The jury found the verdict as above, assessing the value of the rings at 70*l.*—Mr. M'Call now called his lordship's attention to Regina v. M'Donald, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 323, where an infant over fourteen years of age converted to his own use goods which had been delivered to him by the owner under an agreement for the hire of the same; and it was held that he was rightly convicted of larceny as a bailee of the goods under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3; and relied on the expressions used by Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Wills.—Mr. Leresche argued that an infant could not contract, and his lordship said he must not treat this as a question of contract, but of bailment. It seemed to him that this was very like larceny; it was a very strong conversion, and like obtaining goods by false pretences. — Mr. Leresche cited Manly v. Scott, 1 Sid. 109, 1659; Johnson v. Pye, 1 Keb. 905; Grove v. Neville, 1 Keb. 778; Green v. Greenbank, 2 Mar. 485; Jennings v. Rundall, 8 Times Rep. 335; and Mills v. Graham, 1 B. & P., N. R. 140.—Mr. Justice Wright referred to 'Leake on Contracts' (1878 edit. p. 546): 'But an infant will not be permitted to take advantage of this privilege to effect a fraud, and, upon avoidance of a contract, he will be compelled, upon equitable grounds, to make restitution of the benefits obtained under it.' See Ex parte The Unity Banking Association, in re King, 27 Law J. Rep. Bank. 33; 3 D. & J. 63; and Nelson v. Stocker, 28 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 760; 4 D. & J. 458.) His lordship then gave judgment for the plaintiff for 70*l.*, no execution to issue if the rings were returned within seven days.—Mr. M'Call prayed for a judgment in detinue, and his lordship said: Very well; take it in that form if you wish; but you run considerable risk in so doing.—Mr. R. A. M'Call and Mr. Guiry appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Leresche for the defendant.

CONSISTORY COURT OF LONDON.

THE RECONCILIATION SENTENCE AND SERVICE IN ST. PAUL'S.

A sitting of the Consistory Court of London was held on February 7, in St. Paul's Cathedral before Dr. Tristram, Q.C., Chancellor of the Diocese of London. The Chancellor of London said: As I stated on the last sitting of the Court, on November 4, the Bishop of London referred the question raised as to the legality of the sentence of reconciliation pronounced in this case for my consideration as judge of this Court, which his lordship is enabled to do by the practice of the Court. I have considered it, and I will now proceed to deliver my opinion thereon. A suicide was committed in this cathedral on Sunday, September 28 last. The act was done openly during the morning service, and in the very midst of the congregation. The person who committed the act was stated in the evidence given at the coroner's inquest held on his body to have been at the time under the influence of suicidal mania, but not to have been otherwise insane, and was found by the verdict of the jury to have committed the act when of unsound mind. There have been several instances of the committal of acts of self-homicide in our cathedrals and churches, but this is the first recorded instance since the Reformation of such an act having been done during divine service and in the face of the congregation. The occurrence naturally excited painful feelings amongst those present, and attracted considerable attention. There was a notion abroad that some public notice was required by ecclesiastical law or practice to be taken of the occurrence. It was supposed, and even openly stated in some quarters, that the act in question made the reconsecration of the cathedral necessary. The late dean and the canons of St. Paul's very properly referred the matter to the Bishop of London, directing his lordship's attention to the suggestion that a sentence of reconciliation might be necessary, but leaving it to his lordship to determine what course, under the special circumstances of the case, should be adopted. Search was thereupon made by the bishop's secretary for precedents on the subject. There were several instances found of a sentence of reconciliation having, prior to the Reformation, been pronounced after a homicide by violence in a cathedral or church, notably the reconciliation of Canterbury Cathedral after the murder of Archbishop Becket, and of Westminster Abbey on two occasions, of Norwich and Chichester Cathedrals, and several others. Precedents of sentences of reconciliation subsequent to the Reformation were found principally in the records of the Protestant Church of Ireland, by which it appeared that such sentences had been frequently pronounced where a death by violence had been brought about in a church in Ireland. In England it was found that there had been a diversity of practice in this matter. In the diocese of Chichester the present Bishop of Chichester has on one or more occasions in the case of a suicide in a church felt it his duty to pronounce a sentence of reconciliation, accompanied with a penitential service. In the diocese of London about the year 1830, a man having committed suicide in the Church of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, in the City, the church was closed for service on the Sunday following. In the diocese of Rochester, about twenty years ago, a man having hung himself from a beam in a church, there was in consequence thereof a special service held in the church described as in the nature of a reconciliation. Some years ago, a verger having committed suicide in Norwich Cathedral, Dr. Goulburn, the then dean, and the Canons of Norwich gave the matter their most mature and careful consideration, and caused search and inquiries to be made on the subject, and in the result came to the conclusion that the occurrence ought not to be passed by unnoticed, and decided upon holding a special religious service, the same in form as that which was ordered by the Bishop of London on the present occasion. Instances were reported of two or more suicides having taken place in or within the precincts of St. Paul's, but on inquiry at the bishop's registry I ascertained that in the cases referred to no death had actually taken place within the cathedral. There have been, no doubt, cases of suicides in a church which have been passed over without notice. Upon the conclusion of the search and inquiry for precedents a case was submitted to me on October 11 to advise the bishop as chancellor upon the question raised as to reconsecration, and generally on the facts as stated. I advised his lordship on October 13 that the reconsecration of the cathedral was unnecessary, on the ground that the consecration of a cathedral or church is a judicial sentence pronounced by the bishop of the diocese in a special Court held by him for that purpose by which the building 'is set apart for ever from prophane and common uses and dedicated to the service of Almighty God for the performance of Divine worship according to the rites of the Church of England;' and that it was not in the power of an individual by committing a wrongful act within the building to reverse that sentence, so that, notwithstanding the suicide, the sentence of the consecration of the cathedral remained unimpaired. But I further advised, on the authority of Bishop Gibson and Dr. Burn (see 1 Gibson's Codex, 190; 1 Burn's 'Ecclesiastical Law,' by Phillimore, 335), that, under the circumstances, the bishop might properly pronounce a sentence of reconciliation in a Court to be held in the cathedral for that purpose, and that it might be legitimately accompanied, if his lordship so directed, with an appropriate religious service. The question whether or not a sentence of reconciliation shall be pronounced after such an occurrence is one for the bishop in his discretion to determine as well as the question whether or not it shall be accompanied with a religious service. His lordship having determined to adopt the course I had pointed out as conformable with law, communicated his decision to the Dean and Canons of St. Paul's. The reconciliation sentence was pronounced, accompanied with a penitential service in this cathedral. It attracted public attention and led to a correspondence and to inquiries and strictures in the public press as to the meaning and the legality and the utility of the procedure. As this is the first occasion in modern times, at least, in which this question has been the subject of public discussion I carefully perused the letters and articles in the public press relating to it, so as to enable me to form a judgment of the force of the objections raised. The main objections were that the procedure is not authorised by any law or practice in force since the Reformation; that the ceremony was a revival of a pre-Reformation practice; and that the petition presented by the dean and canons praying for a sentence of reconciliation and the sentence were in their terms antiquated and unsuited to the times. I will consider these objections in order. First, as to whether the sentence is authorised by law or practice. There is no law or canon of a date subsequent to the Reformation authorising a bishop to pronounce this sentence. A bishop of the Anglican Church had undoubted jurisdiction prior to the Reformation to pronounce it where a church had been polluted by the shedding of blood as well as in other cases of pollution. It was pronounced in an episcopal Court held for the occasion. Prior to the Reformation the bishop's ordinary Court was his Consistorial Court, presided over by his chancellor, and he was also entitled to hold what for convenience I will call three extraordinary Courts for special purposes on special occasions—namely, visitation Courts, Courts for the consecration of churches and churchyards, and Courts for pronouncing a sentence of reconciliation (1 Gibson's Codex, p. 189). The Consistory Courts, Visitation Courts, and Courts for the consecration of churches and churchyards have been held continuously since the Reformation, not by virtue of any particular statute or canon, but as being part of the ecclesiastical system established in this country prior to the Reformation, and which was continued by the Reformed Church as part of its ecclesiastical system, and so recognised in the civil Courts, and incidentally by the statutes and canons of 1603. Courts for the purpose of pronouncing a sentence of reconciliation have probably been rarely held since the Reformation, and then only on exceptional occasions. That they have been held is established beyond doubt by the instances mentioned by Bishop Gibson in his Codex (Bishop of London from 1723–1749), not as isolated cases, but by way of example only, and after reference to a case in which Archbishop Abbott insisted upon a reconsecration instead of a reconciliation, because the church after pollution had been pulled down and rebuilt, he adds: 'Instances of this and the foregoing kind do sometimes happen, and I was willing that those who may be concerned in them should have at least a general aim of the proper and regular mode of proceeding from the practice of former times in cases of the like nature' (1 Gibson, 190). Dr. Burn, in his great work on ecclesiastical law, published 1770, cites the cases referred to by Gibson as authorities in point. Thus two of the leading writers on ecclesiastical law and practice during the last century give their weight and authority in favour of a bishop's right to pronounce a sentence of reconciliation in the case of the pollution of a church. No doubt the three cases referred to by Bishop Gibson are instances of a lesser pollution of a church as distinguished from pollution by blood-shedding. But the admission of the bishop's right to hold such a Court and to pronounce such a sentence in any case of pollution necessarily involves the admission of his right to decide what cases of pollution are proper subjects for a sentence of reconciliation. Moreover, the Irish precedents since the Reformation are directly in favour of the bishop's right to pronounce the sentence in the case of blood-shedding. The objection as to its inutility raises the following legal considerations: The act in question was a clear contempt of a sentence of the bishop's Court. It is a rule of every Court, civil as well as ecclesiastical, that where its sentence has been treated with contempt the fact may properly be brought to its notice with a view of punishing the offender. When the offender is alive he is liable to be articled in the Consistorial Court of the diocese for contempt. When he is dead, as in the case of a suicide, his death terminates the jurisdiction of the Consistory Court to inquire into the contempt, the right to prosecute dying with him; and unless the bishop has authority to take notice of it in a Reconciliation Court he is powerless in the matter. On this ground, as a matter of ecclesiastical order, the right to hold such a Court is not without utility. The question, moreover, as appears to me, is one into which religious sentiment rather than legal considerations enter; and is, therefore, left appropriately for the bishop's sole determination. The Bishop of London desires me to state that, in his opinion, it is desirable that there should be a uniform practice observed in this diocese, and that when such an occurrence takes place hereafter it should be reported to the bishop by the minister or churchwardens with the facts, in order that he may inquire and decide whether or not it is a case in which there should be a reconciliation sentence accompanied with a penitential service. To meet the objections taken to the terms of the petition and sentence, his lordship requested me to prepare a form of a petition and sentence, which are now under consideration, and which will be deposited in the registry to serve as precedents in future cases.

CITY OF LONDON COURT.

MISREPRESENTATION AS TO DRAINS.

In the City of London Court, on January 29, before Mr. Commissioner Kerr and a jury, the case or Addison & Linklater v. Bebb was heard. The action was brought by the plaintiffs, the landlords of the house, 44 Radipole Road, Fulham, to recover from the defendant, Mr. George Bebb, draper, 134 Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, the sum of 9*l.* 10*s.*, a quarter's rent, alleged to be due. The defendant denied that the rent was payable, and set up a counter-claim for 9*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* for damages. It appeared from the evidence that the defendant in March, 1889, came from Manchester with his wife and family and took the house in Radipole Road of the plaintiffs on a three years' agreement at a rent of 36*l.*, rising to 40*l.* Before taking possession the defendant said he inquired of the plaintiffs' house agents whether the drains were in a perfectly sanitary condition, as his children had been suffering from fever in consequence of the bad drainage of the house they then occupied. He said he was assured that the drains were as good as any in London, but after he had been in the house some little time sewer gas commenced to escape in several places, the drain pipes were blocked, and rats made their appearance in various parts of the house. The sanitary inspector was called in, who, upon an examination, found that the drains were old and broken and more than one dead rat was discovered under the flooring. The defendant added that he had to send his children into the country because the smells arising in every part of the house were so very bad, and they had been ill with bad throats and sickness generally before they went. At last, when only eighteen months of the three years had expired, they left the house, a course which had put them to extreme inconvenience as well as expense. In answer to the defendant's case, Mr. Reginald Brown called evidence denying that any representation was ever made that the drains were as good as any in London. It was shown that the plaintiff had done all the repairs defendant asked for when taking the house, and it was asserted that the drains were all right when the defendant went into possession.—Mr. Brown contended that a tenant could recover no damages in respect of an unfurnished house. There was no implied warranty that it should be fit for habitation.—Mr. Commissioner Kerr said a tenant might recover damages for being induced to take premises which turned out to be uninhabitable by falsehood or misrepresentation.—The jury found that the tenant took the house by reason of misrepresentations. They found for the defendant on the claim, and awarded him damages on the counterclaim, but Mr. Commissioner Kerr said he thought the defendant could not recover the expenses for removing his furniture. If there was any authority for it he would allow it. The defendant was allowed the cost of the proceedings.

COUNTY COURTS.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT—MUSICAL COMPOSITION—BERNE CONVENTION, 1886—RETROSPECTIVE OPERATION—VESTED RIGHTS.

The action of Moul and Mayeur v. Grœnings was heard before his honour Judge Martineau, Q.C., on October 3, when judgment was reserved. Judgment was delivered on December 30. His Honour said: The plaintiffs claim damages for the infringement of the plaintiff Mayeur's sole right of performance of a musical composition called 'Caprice Polka,' and an injunction to restrain future infringements. The action is a test action to determine a question under the International Copyright Act, 1886. The plaintiff Mayeur is a French composer. Moul, the co-plaintiff, is a representative in this country of a society of foreign composers, amongst whom is included the plaintiff Mayeur, and the defendant Grœnings is the bandmaster of the pier band at Brighton. Shortly stated, the material facts appear to me to be as follows: Mayeur is a French subject. The 'Caprice Polka' is an original work composed by Mayeur, and first produced by him at Paris about November, 1877. I am not quite certain, but I gather that it was in the first instance published as a piece of military band music, the date of the French registration of this arrangement being November 5, 1877, and that subsequently the polka was published as a clarionet solo, the date of the French registration being December 2, 1879. I may add that the French copy of the clarionet arrangement bears on the face of it, 'Touts droits d'exécution et de production réservés.' The copyright and sole right of performance, so far as France is concerned, were, and still are, the property of Mayeur. The International Copyright Act, under which, in November, 1877, and December, 1879, Mayeur might have obtained copyright and sole right of performance in England was 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, and the Order in Council made thereunder and dated January 18, 1852. Mayeur took no steps to acquire the copyright or sole right of performance in England pursuant to that Act, and consequently, so far as England was concerned, the polka, both as regards the copyright and the right of performance, became public property, or, adopting the expression of the French language, fell into the public domain. For some years prior to December 6, 1887, every person in England was at liberty to print, publish, and perform the 'Caprice Polka' in England, just as he would have been at liberty to print, publish, and perform any English composition, the copyright or sole right of performance of which had expired by effluxion of time. In March, 1887, an English publisher named Lafleur printed and published the 'Caprice Polka' in England. The music was arranged for a military band, there being different parts for the different instruments, and also a part for the conductor. As published by Lafleur it was identical with the composition published by Mayeur in 1877. There was, however, no notice on the English copy that any rights of reproduction or performance were reserved. I may observe that any such notice, if it had been placed on the English copy, would, in my opinion, have been nugatory, as neither Mayeur, the composer, nor Lafleur had either copyright or sole right of performance in England. The defendant purchased a copy of the work published by Lafleur prior to December 6, 1887, and performed the piece of music by his band on the Brighton Pier. He also performed the polka on the pier subsequently to December 6, 1887. The precise sum which he paid for the copy was small—only a few shillings—but he bought it to perform it with his band, and the polka was, therefore, prior to December 6, 1887, part of his stock-in-trade and répertoire. He bought it to utilise and so made a profit by it. The plaintiff Mayeur contends that he became entitled under the International Copyright Act, 1886, the Order in Council thereunder, and the Berne Convention, 1886, to the copyright and sole right of performance in England of the 'Caprice Polka,' just as if the Act, convention, and order had been in force at the date of production by him in November, 1877. The defendant, however, contends that section 6 of the Act is not retrospective in its operation, and that the plaintiff Mayeur, not having acquired copyright and sole right of performance in England under the Act in force in 1877, lost it for ever. As regards this point, I am of opinion the Act, the convention, and the order are reasonably clear. The Legislature has, by section 6 of the Act of 1886, given to Frenchmen having copyright and sole right of performance in their own country—called the country of origin—copyright and sole right of performance in England, the only qualification of the right being the provision at the end of section 6 protecting rights and interests acquired by production in England prior to December 6, 1887. Does the defendant come within that proviso? To do so he must establish: (1) A lawful production in England prior to that date; (2) a right or interest arising from or in connection with such production subsisting on December 6; and (3) that such right or interest was valuable at that date. Unless the defendant can show that these conditions are complied with, I think Mayeur's claim to copyright and sole right of performance must prevail. First, did a person produce the polka in this country before December 6, 1887? In my opinion, looking at the meaning of 'produced' in the interpretation clause of the Act of 1886, the polka was so produced. It was 'produced' by Lafleur when he published in March, 1887. It was lawfully produced by both Lafleur and the defendant, for there was no copyright or exclusive right of performance. The retrospective operation of the statute did not obliterate the fact of production or render it unlawful ab initio. Secondly, did the defendant acquire either a right or interest arising out of or in connection with such production, and was such right or interest subsisting on December 6? In my opinion he did acquire such a right or interest, not only arising out of or in connection with the production by Lafleur, but also the production by himself. Lafleur lawfully sold and he lawfully bought the copy. He had a right to utilise and perform from the copy, and he had an interest in making his purchase profitable, and, in my opinion, that was subsisting on December 6. If the defendant was not at liberty to perform the polka which was part of his stock-in-trade and répertoire, the copy purchased was valueless. It was lawfully purchased with that object without any limitation of the right to perform for ever. As to the third condition, I entertain considerable doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in using the word 'valuable.' I think it meant to negative rights or interests of so small a value that they would come within the principle 'De minimis non curat lex.' If that is so, the question is one of fact and of degree. It does not appear that the polka was highly popular and attracted customers to the pier; but still it was part of the defendant's répertoire, and was no doubt to him of some value. I think I ought to put a liberal construction on the word 'valuable' in favour of persons having vested rights or interests on December 6, 1887; and, if there is any doubt as to the value, it should be solved in their favour. I have come to the conclusion that the defendant's right and interest was a valuable one. In my opinion, therefore, the defendant is protected, and the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover.—Judgment for defendant, with costs according to scale C, his Honour certifying that the action involved a novel and difficult question of law of general and public interest.—J. P. Mann (Mann & Taylor) for the plaintiffs; M. Watson Thomas (Thomas & Hicol, London and Brighton) for the defendant.

SPECIAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

A SPECIAL general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society was held on January 30; Robert Cunliffe, Esq., president, in the chair:—

The President called upon Mr. Ford to move the resolution of which he had given notice, but it was found he was not present.

The President then stated that the secretary had received a letter from Mr. Ford to the effect that he feared he would not be able to attend, and asking him to get a member to move his resolution. This, however, would not be in order, as, under bye-law 17B, it was essential that Mr. Ford should authorise, in writing, a particular member to move his resolution. With the consent of the meeting the matter was postponed until Mr. Munton's resolution had been disposed of, in order to give Mr. Ford an opportunity of attending.

Mr. F. K. Munton moved: 'That, having regard to the strongly expressed opinion at the annual provincial meeting at Nottingham (when dissenting from the principle of abolishing imprisonment for debt), that it would be expedient to procure legislative rules to guide the judges as to the sufficiency of evidence on which the imprisonment for debt should be ordered, the council should now appoint a small committee to consider the matter, and report upon it.'

Mr. W. J. M'Lellan, of Rochester, seconded the resolution.

Some amendments were suggested, and eventually the resolution was adopted in the following form: 'That, having regard to the strongly expressed opinion at the annual provincial meeting at Nottingham (when dissenting from the principle of abolishing imprisonment for debt), it would be expedient to procure legislative rules to guide the judges as to the sufficiency of evidence on which imprisonment for debt should be ordered, the council should now appoint a small committee to consider the matter, and also the question whether the onus of proving want of means should be cast on the debtor, and report to the council thereon.'

Mr. Ford not having attended the meeting, the President stated that his intended motion would be passed over. The President further stated that a joint committee of the bar committee and of the society had at present under consideration all matters affecting Chancery practice, including the subject-matter of the resolution referred to in Mr. Ford's intended motion.

A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

THE PROTECTION OF BRITISH TRADE-MARKS IN JAPAN.

The following correspondence has taken place between the British and Foreign Patents and Trade-marks Society and the Foreign Office:—

The British and Foreign Patents and Trade-marks Society, 61 and 62 Chancery Lane, London, W.C.:
January 21, 1891.

To the Most Noble the Marquis of Salisbury,
Foreign Office.

My Lord,—I venture to call your attention to a matter of the greatest importance to many commercial firms in this country trading with Japan.

On December 18, 1888, regulations were passed in that country respecting the registration of trade-marks. The regulations came into operation on July 1, 1889, and are of a most liberal and exhaustive nature. Unfortunately, however, upon inquiry being made at the Japanese Embassy and Consulate, we are informed that British subjects cannot avail themselves of this excellent system of trade-mark registration, which is so much needed for the protection of the interests of many persons in this country.

As far back as 1878, Sir Henry Parkes wrote to your lordship from Yedo, a letter in answer to your lordship's circular, calling for a report of the laws and regulations in force in that country relating to trade-marks, that steps were being taken to enact regulations at no distant date; and he added: 'I believe that they are greatly needed in the interests of foreigners, as all kinds of foreign trade-marks are forged by Japanese.'

It appears, therefore, a matter of great hardship to the subjects of this country that so enlightened a nation as the Japanese, in introducing so ample a system for the registration of trade-marks for their own subjects, did not admit other nations to the advantages derived therefrom. I cannot but think it would be of the greatest importance, if your lordship should see your way to make a communication to the Japanese Government upon the subject of permitting British subjects to register trade-marks in Japan, under the system now in force for native subjects.

I have the honour to remain, my Lord,
Your Lordship's obedient Servant,
(For the British and Foreign Patents and Trade Marks Society),
A. C. Bickley, General Manager.

Foreign Office: January 30, 1891.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 21st inst., I am directed by the Marquis of Salisbury to transmit to you, for the information of the British and Foreign Patents and Trade Marks Society, a copy of the despatch from Her Majesty's minister at Tokio, respecting the remedies open to British subjects on the infringement of their trade-marks in Japan.

I am at the same time to inform you that the question will not be lost sight of in any future negotiation for treaty revision, and that a copy of your letter will be sent to Her Majesty's minister, in case that he should think that any separate representations, apart from the question of treaty revision, are likely to be of use.

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient humble Servant,
The Secretary, T. H. Sanderson.
British and Foreign Patents and Trade Marks Society.

Copy.—Treaty No. 3.

Tokio: February 7, 1890.

My lord,—Your lordship's despatch, marked Treaty No. 9, of October 24, 1889, calls for information on the following points:—

1. What remedies are open to British subjects when their trade-marks are infringed in Japan
   (a) By British subjects;
   (b) By foreigners other than Japanese;
   (c) By Japanese subjects?
2. How far the existing state of affairs as regards trade-marks would be altered if the proposed treaty with Japan, now in the course of negotiation, should come into operation?

The remedies open to British subjects whose trade-marks are infringed by British subjects in Japan are, in view of the existence of extra-territoriality, the same as those open to them elsewhere wherever the offending parties are amenable to English law.

British subjects are protected against the infringement of their trade-marks in Japan by the subjects or citizens of such Powers as have joined the international convention for the protection of industrial property in so far as the laws of those powers apply in extra-territorial countries. Against the infringement of their trade-marks in Japan by the subjects or citizens of other Powers British subjects have no remedy.

There are no remedies open to British subjects whose trade-marks are infringed in Japan by Japanese subjects.

Until a few years ago the Japanese Government did not hesitate, when cases of such infringement were brought to their notice by the diplomatic representative of the country concerned, to lend its assistance in putting a stop to the practices complained of. Of late years, however, it has declined to interfere on the ground that so long as extra-territoriality exists, and its own laws are not binding on foreigners in Japan, it cannot, in accordance with any express provision of law, compel its subjects to respect foreign trade-marks.

. . . . . .

I have, &c., (Signed) Hugh Fraser.
The Marquis of Salisbury, K.G., &c. &c.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE WORDS 'LATE WITH

A SOMEWHAT singular case came lately before the Chancery Court of Lancashire in the case of Reddaway v. Benham, where the plaintiffs sought to restrain the defendant from the use of the words 'late with F. Reddaway & Co.' in a circular issued by the defendant which was calculated to mislead the mercantile world and do injury. The defendant at one time was in the service of the plaintiffs. On the one side it was urged that the object of the defendant was to mount on the shoulders of the plaintiffs, and that he would not have used the name of the plaintiffs if he had not wished to send it forth that he was a competitor in the market and could supply superior goods at a cheaper rate. If this kind of fraud were permitted, a copying clerk might make use of the reputation of a firm he had been with. It was alleged that great injury might be done to the plaintiffs in foreign countries where the natives were familiar with the name of Reddaway & Co., and knew what it meant, but might not be able to decipher the context on the circulars. For the defendant it was argued that there was no ground of action in this case. To establish such a ground it would be necessary to show that the defendant had attempted to pass off his goods as the goods of the plaintiffs. In the whole history of the law bearing on trade cases extending over three hundred years there was not one single case in which the cause of action did not rest on infringement of trade-mark or palming off goods as the goods of another party. It had been authoritatively laid down that no one had a right to put up his goods for sale as the goods of another trader; but that if any man had been in the employ of a firm of reputation, and set up business for himself, he had a right in any way he thought fit to inform the public that he had been in such employment, and in that way to appropriate to himself some of the benefit arising from the reputation of his former employers, but in so doing he must take especial care that it was done in such a way as not to mislead the public to the detriment of his former employers. The vice-chancellor, in giving judgment, said the cases read went to show that the only restrictions which could be laid on the defendant in his trade were that he must not foist his goods upon the public as those of another, and if he did so either by crafty words or crafty marking, then he fell within the law. A further restriction was that he must not in any manner cause the public to imagine that he was a successor to the business of the plaintiffs. A man who had been in the employment of a certain firm had a right to inform the public in any way he thought fit that he had been in such employment; but in doing so he must take care that it was not done so as to lead people to believe that he was carrying on the business in succession. There was nothing in this case that would cause anyone to assume that the defendant was carrying on the business of Reddaway & Co. Then came the larger question, Was the defendant right in using the words 'late with F. Reddaway & Co.' in the way he did? The vice-chancellor came to the conclusion that the words did not injure the plaintiffs, and that they would not mislead foreign customers in any way. The plaintiffs, therefore, had not made out their case; and if an injunction were granted, it would be placing a very great restriction upon the trade of the country and upon competition. He did not say he thought the defendant's circular was worded as accurately and as carefully as it would have been if he had submitted it to learned counsel to settle it for him, but it was fair to say there was in it no such either untrue statement of fact or infringement of the law, as he (the vice-chancellor) understood it, as to entitle the plaintiffs to the relief which they sought. The action was therefore dismissed.

IS THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1890, RETROSPECTIVE?

The accountants, whether incorporated or chartered, who act as trustees under deeds of arrangement have taken acute alarm at the action of the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, who, under section 25, subsection 2 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, has asked for the accounts of the closed estates under the Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887. Both bodies of accountants have taken counsel's opinion on the matter, and these gentlemen have intimated that in their opinion the trustees of estates which were closed prior to December, 1889, are not bound to comply with the requirements of the Board of Trade as at present set forth. The following is 'counsels' opinion' on a case stated by the solicitors to the Society of Accountants and Auditors, and which is of general interest: 'We do not think that section 25, subsection 2 (b) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, operates retrospectively on all deeds registered under "The Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887." But, in our opinion, the accounts prescribed by the rules must be rendered under deeds, the trusts of which have not been fully carried out before January 1, 1891, and probably when any funds have been received or distributed since since March 31, 1890, being the commencement of the financial year for which the first report contemplated by section 25 is to be presented. Where the trusts of the deed have been fully carried out before March 31, 1890, the trustee should not, in our opinion, be compelled to render accounts. We are also of opinion that the fee on trustees' accounts purporting to be imposed by Table F, under the order of December 18, 1890, is not, as regards deeds registered before January 1, 1891, authorised by section 128 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. We further think that the inspector-general's circular, in so far as it requires a memorandum concerning the trust banking account, not warranted by the rules. We recommend any trustee under a deed the trusts of which were fully carried out before March 31, 1890, to notify to the inspector-general that as trustee of such deed he is advised not to comply with the requirements of the circular. It may be questioned whether section 25 or the rules apply to any deed registered before January 1, 1891, but our opinion is not in favour of this contention. Whether accounts should be rendered under deeds the trusts of which have been fully carried out before the commencement of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, is not, in our opinion, free from doubt, and having regard to the importance of these questions, they will have to be determined. But we think that an authoritative construction of the section may probably be obtained if the Board of Trade do not accept the trustees' refusal to account as advised above. If the Board of Trade take no steps, a further refusal will raise such other questions as may be worthy of decision.'

RAILWAY TRUSTS.

Efforts are still being continued in the United States to inaugurate a railway trust in order to overcome the present manifold inconveniences arising from the present railway situation, where, according to Mr. Charles F. Beach, jun., in the Railway and Corporation Law Journal, the policy and practices of the road themselves are the one dominant and essential cause of the trouble which now besets the railways in the West, and in a lesser degree throughout the country, Mr. Beach points out that the furore against 'trusts' seems to be declining. Some newspapers still cry out against them on the editorial page, but the public is not any longer greatly concerned, and the news columns contain almost daily announcements of the formation of new 'trusts' in commercial enterprises without creating serious alarm. No new suits in the Courts are reported, and on the whole that particular spasm of the public may be believed to have spent itself. In the case of a railway trust, working a real benefit to the carriers and the shippers alike, the public and the politicians would hardly have much of a case in that greater court of conscience where, after all, these matters are ultimately adjudicated, in complaining that the railways, under the new alliance, pay to themselves in dividends the money which aforetime they spent in fighting and injuring each other. 'If it were thought safer, or for any reason better, we might have, instead of a trust pure and simple—which, it seems to me, is the best thing attainable—a corporation with a large capital stock in certificates to take the place and to perform the functions of a trust.' Concludes Mr. Beach, a little patience, only a little more than no knowledge of the law, some aptitude for dealing with conditions as they arise, some skill in managing men, and some capacity for detail, is all that is necessary to draft a trust deed, to work out the scheme in its several parts and to get it into shape for a practical test, if only the railway people will take it in hand.

HOW TO APPLY FOR SHARES.

A curious story is going the round of the press to the effect that a speculative agent of the name of B. made application for some shares in an exploration company floated not long ago. The form required the applicant to give his name, address, and 'description.' Mr. B., it seems, took this instruction very seriously, and, being of a naturally suspicious disposition, and chary of seeking the advice of others, this is what the astonished directors found on his application form immediately following the space for name and address: 'Description—height, 5 ft. 4½ in.; weight, 9st. 11lb.; complexion fair, hair light; features small and sharp; thin beard, short, no moustaches; teeth sound, with one exception in front; marks, none in particular; married, second time; family, three children by first wife, no issue by second; age thirty-six; occupation, none at present, lately in Government service, expect position in P—— when railway opens. Any other particulars, please apply Rev. ——. P.S.—Forgot to say have been out here seventeen years, understand the native character, and cattle, as Rev. Mr. —— will bear out.' This very literal gentleman handed in a draft for full amount of shares applied for.

ATHLETES IN THE LAW COURTS.

The recent trial of Richardson v. Davis will remind anecdote-mongers of the old story of the man who was being thrown from the gallery of the Theatre Royal, Dublin: 'Don't waste him,' cried a voice, 'kill a fiddler with him.' Only in the case tried before Mr. Justice Grantham the man was not thrown with the intent of hurting anybody. Plaintiff and his wife went one evening to a music-hall and seated themselves under a net spread across the auditorium; and into this net a gymnast walking on the wire dropped a man whom he was carrying in his arms. The falling body hit plaintiff on the nose. He was afterwards very ill and his eyesight was affected. The jury gave him 45*l.* damages. It was pleaded for the defence that the plaintiff had been repeatedly warned not to stand up, but that he had persisted in doing so, and had thus been himself a contributory to the accident which befell him. Such an argument obviously could not hold water. Ethically the mere dropping of the man into the net was an offence contra bonos mores. The stupid idea was to create an impression among the audience that the man had been accidentally dropped, and consequently to cause alarm. The net was safe enough, no doubt; but had it broken, and the dropped man been killed, would not the wire-walker have been liable to an indictment for manslaughter? It may be granted that to hit a man with a man is occasionally justifiable and even necessary. Turn over Flaxman's wonderful outline illustrations of Homer—he drew them in Rome and got but a guinea apiece for them—and you will find that the heroes of the 'Iliad' frequently assaulted each other with each other, although it must have required considerable gymnastic training for a valiant Greek to seize an equally valiant Trojan by one ankle, swing him round, and bang another Trojan with him. Then, again, does not Captain Marryat tell us in 'Peter Simple' how, when the hero and his friend O'Brien escaped from the French prison, they took refuge in the branches of a tree in the Forest of Ardennes, and, an inquisitive gendarme happening to be standing under the tree, O'Brien dropped upon him and killed him? But there was no necessity for the wire-walker to drop the man into the net. It was a piece of stupidly sensational tomfoolery which might have ended fatally. Thus writes Mr. George Augustus Sala, in the Manchester Evening News, in his usual witty style.

EVERY MAN NOT HIS OWN LAWYER.

The maxim that he who conducts his own cause has a fool for his client has been forcibly illustrated by a recent incident. A Mr. Robert Hymer has given a sum of 50,000*l.* to Hull for a grammar school, and the foundation-stone was laid the other day. Mr. Hymer, it appears, came into all his wealth through his kinsman, the Rev. John Hymer, of Brandsburton, leaving him an annuity of 60*l.*, and bequeathing all the rest of his fortune, amounting to about 200,000*l.*, to Hull for a grammar school. Here it is that the strange features of the case illustrating the above maxim come. In order to avoid paying a lawyer's fee the Rev. J Hymer had drawn his own will and so worded it that it became void under the Statute of Mortmain. Of course, the will not being provable, an intestacy resulted, and Mr. R. Hymer stepped in as his next-of-kin. It is stated that the case was so clear that the corporation did not even make any attempt to claim the money.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

Debating. — The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, February 10; Mr. Thomas Douglas in the chair.—The subject for discussion: 'That trades unionism is highly detrimental to the prosperity of this country,' was opened by Mr. I. D. Crawford, in the absence of Mr. Bodilly.—Mr. C. Herbert Smith opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative, Messrs. Kinipple, Campbell-Johnston, and Willson; in the negative, Messrs. Archer, White, Mawdesley, Arnold, and Watson.—Mr. Crawford replied.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was carried by a majority of five.—There were thirty-two members present.

Liverpool.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, February 9, Mr. F. Archer in the chair, who was supported by Messrs. Stewart and Hardy, barristers-at-law, a joint debate with the Leeds Law Students' Society was held on the following subject for discussion: 'Do secretaries of trades unions commit an offence within section 7 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, who threaten an employer that if he does not discharge non-union men in his employ unionists in his employ shall cease work for him, and who proceed to carry that threat into operation by calling out the unionists?'—Law Times, January 17, 1891. Mr. W. Stead opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Messrs. Pearson, Armstrong, and Bowling, who represented the Leeds Society.—Mr. E. Lloyd, LL.B., opened in the negative, which was also supported by Messrs. Glover and Barnes, representing the Liverpool Society.—The question was decided in the negative by the unanimous judgment of the Court, and was delivered by Mr. Hardy.—The Leeds law students were afterwards entertained at dinner at the Royal Hotel, followed by a smoking concert, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

ADDITIONAL CAUSE LIST.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.—QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

ADDENDA TO THE CROWN PAPER.

England—Regina v. Morgan
Middlesex (Brompton)—London General Omnibus Co. v. Aspinall & Co.
Surrey (Southwark)—Page v. Leach & Co.
Monmouthshire (Newport)—Jones v. Commissioners of Sewers for Levels of Caldicot, &c.
London—Pollock v. Glover (James, claimant)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Newman v. Cave and another
Cardiganshire (Aberystwith)—Evans v. Daniel and another
Monmouthshire (Dolgelly)—Lloyd and others v. Williams and others
Dorsetshire—Pitt-Rivers v. Glasse
Surrey (Croydon)—Bourne & Co. v. Wall (Wall, claimant)
Leicestershire (Market Harborough)—Williamson v. King
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Hoare v. Niblett
Middlesex—Allchurch and another v. Hendon Union
Durham (Darlington)—In re Building Society's Acts (Broad's appeal)
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Legg v. Oystermouth Local Board
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Bryan v. Atlantic Patent Fuel Co.
Sussex (Brighton)—Moul and another v. Groenings
Cheshire (Macclesfield)—Cooney v. Globe Cotton, &c. Co.
Devonshire—Dames v. Bond
Northamptonshire—Inwood v. Potter
Metropolitan Police District—Moir v. Williams
London—Regina v. Vestry of Paddington
Lancashire (Preston)—Crown Corn, &c. Manure Co. v. Knight
Manchester—Caminada v. Hulton
Manchester—Same v. Same
Manchester—Same v. Same
Manchester—Same v. Same
Aberystwith—Regina v. G. Williams, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. (ex parte J. Williams)
Lancashire—Same v. Guthrie, Esq. Justices, &c. (ex parte Taylor)
Middlesex (Brompton)—Bird v. Fenton
Bedfordshire (Leighton Buzzard)—Green v. Gordon
Lancashire (Manchester)—Wilson and others v. Statham
Devonshire (Exeter)—Ashford v. Franklin
Aberdare—Gery v. Black Lion Brewery Co.
Lancashire—Accrington, &c. Tram Co. v. Campbell
Newport—Hale v. Rice
Sussex (Eastbourne)—Everett v. Paxton
Surrey (Croydon)—Fox v. Stevens
Glamorganshire—Regina v. Powell, Esq. and others, Licensing Justices, &c. (ex parte Roberts)
Montgomeryshire (Llanidloes)—Same v. Mayor, &c. of Llanidloes
London—Lange v. Barton
Cardiganshire (Lampeter)—Evans v. Jenkins
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Cusack and another v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Dorsetshire—Regina v. Inhabitants of Tything of Longfleet, &c.
Lancashire—Same v. Mayor, &c. of Bootle-cum-Linacre
Monmouthshire—Same v. Colonel Byrde and others, Justices, &c. and Pontypool Gas Co.
London—Sipf v. Brown and Holt
Durham—Regina v. Justices for the County Durham (ex parte Maughan)
Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey) — Same v. Justices for the Parts of Lindsey (ex parte Evison)
London—Barlow v. Terrett
Devonshire—Regina v. Bowring, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. and Stentiford
Devonshire—Same v. Same
Carnarvonshire (Portmadoc)—Rowland v. New Welsh Slate Co.
Glamorganshire — Regina, Fowler, Esq. Stipendiary Magistrate for Swansea (ex parte Crabb)
Flintshire—Same v. Birch, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. (ex parte Gallard)
Chester (Birkenhead)—Bedford v. Holt (Holt, claimant)
Leicestershire (Leicester)—Coltman v. Davis, Moore & Co.

OBITUARY.

WE record with much regret the death on February 3 of Mr. THOMAS HUGHES EARLE, at the age of fifty-seven years. Mr. Earle was educated at Eton College and King's College, Cambridge, of which society he was for many years a Fellow. He was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in November, 1858, and practised as a conveyancer and equity draftsman. He also held the office of clerk of the peace for Hampshire. He retired from practice in town two years ago, and resided until his death at Enham, near Andover, where he had a large landed estate. He was a man of great abilities, and of a most amiable and generous disposition. Had his health been better and his private fortune less he would probably have risen to a high position at the bar.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, February 16. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Tuesday, February 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Wednesday, February 18.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Thursday, February 19.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

Friday, February 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pemberton.

Saturday, February 21.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Ward.

THE death is announced of Mr. Harry G. Rogers, the senior first-class clerk in Mr. Justice North's chambers. Mr. Rogers, who was in his seventy-eighth year, had held the posts of secretary and hon. secretary of the United Law Clerks' Society respectively for upwards of fifty years.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY. — The usual weekly meeting was held at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall; Mr. A. K. Common in the chair.—Mr. J. S. Green moved: 'That the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Dreyfus v. The Peruvian Guano Company, L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 316, is right.' The case is of a somewhat peculiar character, and involves difficult points.—Mr. W. F. Symonds supported the decision of Lord Justice Bowen. —The other speakers were: Messrs. J. R. Atkin, C. W. Williams, H. Walton, and J. L. V. S. Williams.—Mr. Green having replied, the motion was lost by three votes.—At the next meeting on Monday, the 18th inst., Mr. Bannerman will move: 'That cremation ought to be made compulsory by Act of Parliament.'

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM FEBRUARY 16 TO FEBRUARY 21.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	February 16	February 17	February 18	February 19	February 20	February 21
7	Judge Pfoulkes	—	Runcorn	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Barnard Castle	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Richmond	Guisborough	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber		Derby	Burton	Wirksworth	—	—
28	Judge Jordan	Atherstone	Uttoxeter	—	—	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	—	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	Churston	Okehampton	—	—	—	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5.

Beckett and another v. Tower Assets Company (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Cave, J., dated November 1, setting aside assessment of damages by jury after trial with special jury in Middlesex).—Cur. adv. vult.

South Staffordshire Trams Company v. Sickness and Accident Assurance Association (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated October 29, on special case).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6.

Medawar v. Grand Hotel Company (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Smith, J., dated November 1, at trial without a jury at Liverpool).—Allowed.

Lawder v. Goucher (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., for Kekewich, J., dated August 11, at trial without a jury at Shrewsbury).—Order on terms agreed between parties.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7.

Overseers of Parish of Putney v. London and South-Western Railway Company (appeal of defendants from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated October 23, on special case).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9.

Hartley v. Rickerby (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 22, affirming master's order, setting aside execution under writ of fi. fa.).—Dismissed.

Hobbs v. Gaskell (appeal of plaintiff from refusal of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 22, to set aside master's certificate and judgment entered thereon).—Part heard.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

In re Standard Manufacturing Company (Lim.) Lancaster Acts and Companies Acts (claim of debenture-holders) (appeal of J. Lowe and others (debenture-holders) from order of Vice-Chancellor of the Lancaster Palatine Court, disallowing claim; cur. adv. vult. November 10).—Allowed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

Hobbs v. Gaskell.—Allowed.

Mayfield v. Sheppard (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from findings and judgment at trial of issue in Mayfield v. Moxon before Charles, J., and a common jury in Middlesex). Todd v. Sheppard (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on application from findings and judgment at trial of issue in Todd v. Moxon before Charles, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Burriss v. Davis & Co. (Lim.) (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Stephen, J., with jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

Dickins v. The Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. (Lim.) (application of plaintiffs for new trial on appeal from judgment of nonsuit at trial before Stephen, J., with a special jury in Middlesex.—Granted.

Schroder v. The Merchants' Marine Insurance Co. (Lim.) (application of defendants from judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict, findings and judgment at trial before Denman, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5.

Harris v. Gordon. Harris v. Grindley (application of defendants Grindley & Co. for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Charles, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—New trial ordered.

Dobbin v. Wickes (application of defendant for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Application refused.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6.

Heath v. Stokes (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Smith, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 7.

Heath v. Stokes.—Application refused.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9.

Stewart v. Bessler (appeal of defendants Bessler, Wachter & Co. from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 15, refusing to strike out claim against appellants under Order XXV., rule 4).—Stand over with liberty for plaintiffs to amend.

Cox v. Bennett (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Kekewich, J., dated December 1, disallowing items in trustees' accounts).—Dismissed.

W. Driffield (petitioner) v. C. E. Driffield (respondent) (J. A. Clark and another, co-respondents) (appeal of respondent C. E. Driffield from refusal of Butt, J., dated January 20, to direct cross-examination upon petition to vary settlements).—Dismissed.

Green v. Archer (appeal of defendant from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 23, for appointment of receiver).—Order varied.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

Cooke v. Smith (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 20, for increase of security on obtaining discovery from defendants).—Dismissed.

In re Contract, dated November 6, 1890, for Sale of Real Estate, made between Eugene Arbib and C. G. Class and another and Vendor and Purchaser Act (appeal of C. G. Class and another from order of North, J., dated November 5). In re Same Contract (appeal of C. G. Class and another from order of North, J., dated November 24).—Dismissed.

Williams v. Marshall (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Romer, J., dated November 21).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11.

Simpson v. Pilling (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 16, refusing to restrain dealing with share).—Order varied by consent.

J. Powell v. W. J. Marsh (appeal of plaintiff from order of Butt, J., dated January 20, 1891, for payment by plaintiff of costs of administrator pending action).—Dismissed.

Kenrick v. Danube Collieries and Minerals Co. (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiffs from order of North, J., dated February 2, refusing issue of commission for examination of plaintiff at George Town, Demerara).—Order varied by consent.

PIG-IRON WARRANTS.—A bill has been introduced by Mr. Hingley, M.P., to restrain the making of contracts for the sale and purchase by means of warrants of pig-iron which is not at the time in existence. It declares that all contracts, agreements, and tokens of sale and purchase for the sale or transfer of any pig-iron to which any document of title shall be applicable shall be void unless the contract, &c., shall specify or incorporate a document of title specifying the name and address of the storekeeper or other person by whom the document was created, the number by which the document of title is distinguished at the time, the date on which the document was made, and the brand or quality of the pig iron. Every person, whether broker, principal, or agent, who wilfully inserts in the contract, agreement, or other token, or in the document of title any untrue statement in respect of any of these particulars is to be guilty of a misdemeanour and punished accordingly. By the expression 'document of title' is meant any dock warrant, storekeeper's warrant, maker's scrip, and any warrant or order for the immediate delivery of pig-iron, or authorising, either by indorsement or by delivery, the possessor of the document to transfer or receive delivery of the pig-iron. Should any person create or issue any instrument purporting to be a document of title when he has not at the time in his possession, or in that of some one on his behalf, the pig-iron to which it purports to relate, he is to be guilty of a misdemeanour and punished accordingly.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ANNUAL Digest, 1890 (The). By John Mews, Barrister-at-Law. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.).

Law of Joint-Stock Companies (The). By J. W. Smith, Barrister-at-Law. Effingham, Wilson & Co.

Supplement to Lindley on Companies. By Sir Nathaniel Lindley, Knt., LL.D. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.).

INNER TEMPLE.—Mr. A. M. Channell, Q.C., of the South-Eastern Circuit, has been elected a Bencher of the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, in succession to the late Sir Barnes Peacock.

WE are informed that the business of companies' registration agent, printer, and publisher, hitherto carried on by Mr. Richard Jordan at 120 Chancery Lane, London, will in future be carried on under the style of 'Jordan & Sons,' in consequence of the admission of two of Mr. Jordan's sons into the business.

IT is understood, though not officially announced, that Mr. W. J. Stewart, of the Northern Circuit, has been selected by the Home Secretary to fill the vacancy in the stipendiary magistracy of Liverpool caused by the death of Mr. T. S. Raffles. Mr. Stewart was for some time a member of the Liverpool City Council, and is on the council of the Liverpool University College.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 11th inst., Mr. Sidney Smith in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. W. Beriah Brook, H. Morten Cotton, Samuel Harris (Leicester), J. H. Kays, Grinham Keen, Henry Roscoe, R. W. Tweedie, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 469*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, five new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

THE FIRST OFFENDERS ACT.—A Cheshire magistrate, Mr. Charles Lister, of Arden Hall, Lymm, has recently written to several local journals drawing attention to the beneficial tendency of the First Offenders Act, in so far as it is put in operation by the Courts. But he expresses regret that, both in Lancashire and Cheshire, although more in the former county than in the latter, this useful measure has too generally been suffered to remain a dead letter. Quoting from the Judicial Statistics for 1890, he shows that in the preceding year, out of 10,108 persons proceeded against summarily in the rural, as distinct from the urban, portions of Cheshire, 8,751 were convicted and 1,357 were discharged; and he notes particularly that of the 8,751 nothing was previously known against these petty offenders, therefore it might be assumed that most of them were fair subjects for a merciful consideration. Mr. Lister writes: 'After many years' experience, I do not hesitate to say that a very large proportion of the occupants of our gaols are there through being unable to pay the fines and costs inflicted upon them; and the question necessarily arises, Ought this to be so? Is it desirable that our gaols should be, in the greater part, filled, and our criminal population permanently increased, by those whose offences have only been such as the magistrates consider may be expiated by a money payment, and because they have not the means of immediate payment?' Inasmuch also as the First Offenders Act expressly provides that magistrates may allow time for the payment of fines and costs, and may direct that the same shall be paid by instalments, it is urged that both justices and their clerks, especially in the counties of Lancashire and Cheshire, may, with great advantage to the community, more generally co-operate in giving effect to the humane and useful provisions of the Act in question.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Walter Henry Foster, of Sheffield, has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths. Mr. Foster was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Charles Bevan Jenkins (of the firm of R. & C. B. Jenkins), of Swansea, Morriston, and Swansea Valley, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Jenkins was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Richard Henry Spencer, of New Tredegar, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Spencer was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Frederick Gillett Peacock (of the firm of Rawnsley & Peacock), of Bradford, Farley, and Crosshills, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Peacock was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Stephen Lancelot Monckton, of Maidstone, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Monckton was admitted in 1884.

Mr. George Montague Butterworth (of the firm of Bradford, Davis & Butterworth), of Swindon, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Butterworth was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Francis Michael Greenep, of Woolwich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Greenep was admitted in 1883.

Personal Appeals by Natives of India to the Queen.—In consequence of natives of India having frequently come to this country to make personal appeals to Her Majesty against the decision of Indian tribunals, the Government of India has issued the following notification: 'Whereas much inconvenience has from time to time been caused by the poverty and distress of Indian litigants who have proceeded to England under the impression that their cases will receive the consideration of Her Majesty, the Queen-Empress, it is hereby notified for general information that appeals from the decision of the Indian Courts do not lie in England, except the ordinary appeals to the Privy Council, which are provided for in the Acts of the Governor-General in Council regulating civil procedure, and that no petitioners other than appellants to the Privy Council prosecuting their appeals according to the prescribed rules will obtain any hearing in England from Her Majesty. Petitioners who proceed to England merely waste their money and expose themselves to great inconvenience and hardships, with the risk of being unable ever to return to their native country.'

Supply of Water by Meter.—The London water companies are at present empowered by their private Acts to charge for a supply of water for domestic purposes according to the rateable value of the premises supplied. A bill introduced by Mr. Gainsford Bruce, M.P., proposes to give the water consumers of London the option of paying for water in proportion to the quantity used. With that view it enables any owner or occupier to require his company to supply water to his premises by meter for all purposes other than those of any trade, manufacture, or business. The Board of Trade is directed to make regulations respecting the provision, fixing, testing, and stamping of meters, and the fees to be paid in respect of them, and the inspection of meters, &c. The charge for the supply of water is not to exceed 1*s.* per 1,000 gallons where the quantity of water supplied in any quarter does not exceed 200,000 gallons. The maximum is 9*d.* per 1 000 gallons where the quantity is greater. The district intended to be covered by the bill is the administrative county of London and all other places within the limits of supply of any of the eight London water companies—the New River, the East London, the Southwark and Vauxhall, the West Middlesex, the Lambeth, the Chelsea, the Grand Junction, and the Kent.

Marks on Imported Goods.—The object of a bill introduced by Mr. Howard Vincent, is stated as being 'the further prevention of fraud by false marking.' A statute of 1887 prohibits the importation of goods of foreign manufacture bearing the name or trade-mark of any manufacturer or trader of the United Kingdom unless the name or mark be accompanied by a definite indication of the country in which the goods were made or produced. The bill proposes to prohibit altogether the importation into the United Kingdom of all goods which do not bear in a legible and conspicuous form a definite indication of the country in which they were made or produced. If any goods are brought into the country contrary to this prohibition, they are to be liable to forfeiture. However, goods may from time to time be specially exempted from the provisions of the bill by the published regulations of the Commissioners of Customs, on the ground that they are incapable of being thus marked. If any imported goods which do not bear a definite indication of the country in which they were made or produced, or from which they were imported, are exposed or offered for sale in the United Kingdom, it is required by the bill that a purchaser be made aware, either by means of express notice, or by a board, card, label, ticket, invoice, or other document, that the goods have been imported, and are not of home production.

BIRTHS.

On Jan. 5, at Tacoma, Washington, U.S., the wife of Robert Byerley Parkes, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Jan. 20, at Wymeston, Sydney, the wife of John Hubert Plunkett Murray, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 4, at Castlecarrock, Beckenham, the wife of Arthur J. Parker, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 5, at Denbigh Street, S.W., the wife of Arthur Cardew, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On Feb. 5, at Walton-on-Thames, the wife of Edward Manson, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 6, at 28 Broad Street, Peterhead, the wife of Robert Robertson, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Feb. 7, at Merfield, 18 Trinity Road, Tulse Hill, S.W., the wife of Lewis Boyd Sebastian, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 8, at 13 Evelyn Gardens, South Kensington, the wife of Hugh Fenwick Boyd, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 10, at 20 Sloane Gardens, S.W., the wife of Carteret F. Collins, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Jan. 17, at Christ Church, Rawal Pindi, India, Charles Richard Hodgins, Lieutenant Royal Artillery, youngest son of Thomas Hodgins, Esq., Q.C., Toronto, Canada, to Aimée Gertrude, eldest daughter of Col. H. M. Burgess, Royal Artillery.

On Feb. 4, at the Presbyterian Church, Rangoon, Edward Upton Eddis, Barrister-at-Law, to Ela Usher, daughter of Robert Binning, Dowannill, Glasgow.

On Feb. 7, at St. Mary Boltons, C. L. Saunders, of Ladbroke Gardens, W., to Rosetta, widow of the late Henry E. Swecting, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

On Feb. 10, at Neemuch, Bombay, Lieut. Alexander Fleetwood Pinhey, Bombay Staff Corps, and Assistant Political Agent, Rajputana, third surviving son of Mr Justice Pinhey, late one of the Judges of the Bombay High Court, to Violet Beatrice Gordon, youngest daughter of the late Sir Henry W. Gordon, K.C.B., and Lady Gordon, of Oak Hall, Hayward's Heath.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 1, at Rossmore House, Southsea, Colonel Rupert Barber Deering, late 99th Regiment and Rifle Depôt Battalion, last surviving son of the late John Deering, Esq., Q.C., of Mountjoy Square, Dublin, and Derrybrusk, co. Fermanagh.

On Feb. 3, at May Place, Crayford, Kent, the residence of her father, Edward Horner, Esq., Gertrude Elizabeth, the wife of Courtenay C. S. Fooks, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, aged 32.

On Feb. 5, at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, after a short illness, Edward Frederick Mammatt, Solicitor, aged 47.

On Feb. 5, Ella, daughter of the late Henry Macnamara, Barrister-at-Law and Railway Commissioner, aged 32.

On Feb. 7, Caroline Dorothea, beloved wife of Captain Barrington Crake, Rifle Brigade, and daughter of the late Brent Spencer Follett Q.C.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 3s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

At page 139 we print the new Rules under the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890. They will also appear in due course in the Law Journal Reports.

Mr. Justice Denman has, we are glad to be able to state, sufficiently recovered from his recent long illness to resume his judicial duties. The learned judge's return to work is especially opportune at the present time, as the bench of the Queen's Bench Division is, owing to the circuits, becoming very shorthanded. On Tuesday only five judges were available for the Courts of that division, while on Wednesday only four were sitting, and by the end of the week two more of the judges will have left town.

At the 398th page of 'Later Leaves,' by Mr. Montagu Williams, Q.C., only just issued, will be found a most interesting account of a mysterious circumstance in connection with the Whitechapel murders. It appears that Mr. Williams, foreseeing the possibility of 'the assassin,' if arrested, being brought before himself, as stipendiary magistrate, 'made it his business to personally visit all the scenes of the crimes, and to make what medical and other inquiries he thought desirable.' One day a visitor, whose name is not given, called on Mr. Williams and announced that he had set on foot a number of inquiries 'that had yielded a result which in his' (the visitor's) 'opinion afforded an undoubted clue to the mystery and indicated beyond any doubt the individual or individuals on whom this load of guilt rested.' 'My visitor,' proceeds Mr. Williams, 'handed me a written statement in which his conclusions were clearly set forth, together with the facts and calculations on which they were based; and I am bound to say that this theory—for theory it is of necessity—struck me as remarkably ingenious and worthy of the closest attention. . . . This gentleman also showed me copies of a number of letters he had received from various persons. . . . He had communicated his ideas to the proper authorities, and they had given them every attention.' This being so, all who have confidence in the proper authorities will probably be satisfied that everything will be done to test the 'theory' of Mr. Williams's mysterious visitor. But there is something more strange still to come. Mr. Williams, who had carte blanche from his visitor to make any use he pleased of the information afforded him, and who, doubtless, from good and well-considered reasons, declines to take the public further into his confidence at present, winds up as follows: 'The cessation,' writes he, 'of the East End murders dates from the time when certain action was taken as a result of the promulgation of these ideas.'

It is material to point out, in connection with the baccarat scandals, that cheating at cards is (if successful, but not otherwise) a criminal offence, punishable by as much as five years' penal servitude. Such seems to be the clear effect of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, which enactment provides that 'every person who shall by any fraud or unlawful device or ill practice in playing at or with cards, dice, tables, or other game, or in bearing a part in the stakes, wagers, or adventures, or in betting on the sides or hands of them that do play, or in wagering on the event of any game, sport, pastime, or exercise, win from any other person to himself or any other or others any sum of money or valuable thing, shall be deemed guilty of obtaining such money or valuable thing from such other person by a false pretence, with intent to cheat or defraud such person of the same, and being convicted thereof shall be punished accordingly.' Turning to the Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), we find that 'whosoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for three years or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.' The three years' term of penal servitude was increased to five by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 47), s. 2, by which 'no person shall be sentenced to penal servitude in respect to any offence committed after the passing of the Act for a period of less than five years.' Inasmuch as the Larceny Act, 1861, was passed after 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, some little doubt might arise whether section 17 of that Act is prospective and applies the law of false pretences for the time being to the offence of cheating at play, but we think that this doubt, notwithstanding the rule that all penal statutes are to be construed strictly, would not be solved in favour of a convicted offender. We believe that few, if any, prosecutions have been instituted under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, since it was passed some forty-five years ago.

THE Senate of the United States has now passed the Copyright Bill, with two amendments, by thirty-six votes to fourteen, having previously rejected, or, as the transatlantic phrase is, 'killed,' a set of substantial amendments by a majority, if we remember right, of two only. The bill will now have to go to the Conference Committee of both Houses, which will have sufficient time for discussion of the points still in difference before the termination of the session on March 4. There is now, therefore, a reasonable expectation that the bill will pass, and become law on July 1 next, as at first intended by its promoters. Lord Monkswell's bill still stands for second reading in the House of Lords. It contains no provision for 'retaliatory measures.' Any such measures, indeed, would be flatly in opposition to the report of the Royal Commission of 1878, on which the bill is founded. The question will be found discussed in the report, paragraphs 249–252. The commissioners (amongst whom were the Duke of Rutland, Lord Herschell, and Lord Knutsford) came to the conclusion, 'on the highest public grounds of policy and expediency, that it is advisable that our law should be based on correct principles, irrespective of the opinions or the policy of other nations.'

IN the case of In re The Johannesburg Hotel Company, ex parte The Zoutspansberg Prospecting Company, L. R. 1891, 1 Chanc. 119, the Court of Appeal, affirming Mr. Justice Chitty, placed the prospecting company on the list of contributories of the hotel company in respect of shares which had been allotted as fully paid-up, but in respect of which no contract was registered under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. The appellants, it is almost needless to say, relied on Spargo's Case, 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 488; L. R. 8 Chanc. 407; but that case was clearly distinguishable, and the report seems to add little, if anything, to the law as laid down in White's Case, 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 820; L. R. 12 Chanc. Div. 511, and Kent's Case, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 977; L. R. 39 Chanc. Div. 259, in which Spargo's Case was distinguished on similar grounds. Its importance seems to lie directly in certain observations made by the Lord Chancellor upon the decision of Lords Justices James and Mellish in Spargo's Case, to which he refers 'as one which has, I think, unfortunately established that payment in cash need not be what the words literally signify;' and, in another passage, as 'an authority by which sitting in this Court I am bound.' Further on, he says: 'I venture to doubt whether what is described by those eminent judges as the absurdity of handing money backwards and forwards when two people have cross demands is so great as the absurdity of construing the words "payment in cash" as payment without cash. However, as I have said, I am bound by the decision in this Court.' It is worthy of remark that Spargo's Case, though repeatedly recognised and followed by the Appeal Court, appears never to have received the express sanction of, or indeed any consideration by, the highest tribunal. It was cited in Burkinshaw v. Nicholls, 48 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 179; L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1004, where it was not in point, but not, so far as we have been able to discover, in any other reported case before the House of Lords. The tendency in recent years has perhaps been rather to 'distinguish' Spargo's Case, but we conceive that, if any alteration is to be made in the law which would amount to the reversal of that decision, which is now nearly twenty years old, it must be effected by the Legislature alone.

OUR American cousins are an ingenious people and prone to give a trial to all sorts of legal and legislative experiments. Systematic attempts have been made and held up for our imitation to give effect to the remedial element in judicial punishments to a greater extent than ever entered the minds of English lawmakers. We commend to the consideration of Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Cardinal Manning the course taken by the judges of the Circuit Court of Ohio in the case of Scott-Huff v. B. F. Dyer, warden of the Ohio Penitentiary, decided last September. The plaintiff was sentenced in January, 1880, to a term of five years' imprisonment for assault with intent to rob. He was confined until October, 1888, when the governor granted him a pardon on the condition 'that he shall abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage.' The plaintiff was set at liberty, and observed the condition to the end of January, 1885. But in 1890 he indulged in alcohol, and was incarcerated for breach of the condition. He was released, however, on a habeas corpus, on the ground that, no time having been limited in the condition, a construction must be adopted favourable to liberty, and the condition could only be read as extending over the period of the original sentence. The judges, however, seem to have entertained no doubt that a condition of this kind would have been valid.

IN the Court of Appeal on January 21, during the hearing of a bill of sale case (In re Heseltine; Woodward v. Heseltine (Notes of Cases, p. 10), Lord Justice Lopes said he had introduced bills on the subject when in the House of Commons, and Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., excited some amusement by replying that he was glad his lordship was not responsible for the Act of 1882. It is time that that statute was repealed and something more intelligent and less stringent substituted. It is curious that there should be an outcry for simplicity in the transfer of land while people submit to such trammels on the assignment of a few sticks of furniture. Two points were raised. The bill of sale holder was called Simmons, but he carried on business as the Discount Bank of London, 6 Duncannon Street, Charing Cross. The bill of sale was made between the grantor of the one part and the Discount Bank of London, of 6 Duncannon Street, Charing Cross, in the county of Middlesex ('of which said bank Lewis Simmons is the sole proprietor'), of the other part. The consideration was expressed to be paid by the bank, and the assignment of the goods was to 'the said bank and its assigns.' One objection was that this alias, or description of the grantee, was not in accordance with the schedule to the Act of 1882. The Court held that this was a fatal non-compliance, and that the bill of sale was bad. But neither in the argument nor the judgments was the proposition crystallised as it might have been. Whatever defects it may have, the Act contains a schedule which, so far as it goes, is a correct piece of conveyancing. It assigns the chattels to the bill of sale holder, his executors, administrators, and assigns; in other words, it contemplates an assignment of chattels in proper form to a person capable of taking by assignment. If the bank in this case had been a corporation, the assignment to it and its assigns would have been correct, but if it had been an unincorporated partnership of two or more persons it may be doubted whether such an assignment would have passed the property to the members of the firm jointly. The fact of Simmons being described as the sole proprietor showed the unsoundness of the argument that the 'Discount Bank' was the trade name, or another name of Simmons, for a man cannot be the proprietor of himself. Another question was whether the attesting witness had complied with the statutory requirements by describing himself as clerk to the bank, and giving the bank's, and not his own private, address. The Court decided this point in the affirmative, reversing the somewhat narrow decision of Mr. Justice North, who had held that the omission of the private address was fatal to the bill of sale.

We commented a week or two ago on the growing tendency to State interference with almost all trades and professions. Two bills recently introduced still further illustrate this tendency. One is a little measure of thirteen sections which calls itself the Trading Registration Act, and is brought in by Mr. Arthur O'Connor, Mr. Addison, and Sir A. Rollit. The other is a more ambitious bill, with the title 'Registration of Firms,' and bears the names of Sir A. Rollit, Mr. Lockwood, Mr. Fulton, Mr. A. O'Connor, and others. The two bills are really complementary of each other. The Registration of Firms Bill requires the registration with the Registrar of Joint-stock Companies of all firm names which do not disclose the names of all the partners, the nature and place of business, the full name and other occupation, if any, of each of the persons carrying on or intending to carry on the business, and the date of the commencement of the business, if such business is started after the Act. Any changes in the constitution of a firm are, also, within a month of such change, to be registered in accordance with a form prescribed in the schedule. The penalty for default in registration is a fine not exceeding 1*l.* for each day the default continues. Firms in default instituting an action are also liable to an order by the Court or judge staying the action pending compliance with the statutory requirements. The making of false returns is to constitute a misdemeanour, for which imprisonment with hard labour for a term not exceeding two years may be inflicted. All particulars are to be filed, and certificates of registration issued, and the statements so registered may, like a will at Somerset House, be inspected on payment of 1*s.* The supervision of the whole business is, of course, to be given to the Board of Trade, which already promises to be the hardest-worked of all the Government departments.

The Trading Registration Bill, which is intended to secure 'the more effectual prevention of fraudulent trading' by the provision of a register, in all cases in which persons trade under names other than their own, of the name or style under which the business is carried on, the nature of the business, the place or places of the business, and the full name and other occupation (if any) of every person having a proprietary interest in the business. In this case no fee is charged for registration, but the penalty for non-registration is the same as under the other bill; and a like disability is imposed on the bringing of an action by a person trading under a name not his own. The official under the bill, however, is not the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, but the registrar of the County Court in whose district the business is carried on. No doubt these well-meant attempts at legislation are intended for the protection of creditors; but creditors can usually take care of themselves, and if they are not fools, know perfectly well with whom they are dealing; and it is difficult to see the necessity of solemnly registering the little enterprise of every suburban greengrocer or milkman who may buy a small business and carry it on under his predecessor's name. The actual credit and character of a business soon become known to all whom it concerns, and it is not easy to see what security registration would give. But it is possible that startling statistics of hitherto unsuspected evils may be brought before the House of Commons in support of these bills.

The Stamp Act, 1870, s. 54, subs. 1, enacts that the holder of a promissory note not being duly stamped, 'shall not be entitled to recover thereon, or to make the same available for any purpose whatever.' In the case of Ashling v. Boon, reported in our Notes of Cases for this week, at p. 30, Mr. Justice Kekewich had to decide whether an insufficiently stamped note could be put in evidence to prove the receipt of money by the maker of the note. In support of the evidence, counsel mainly relied on the case of Evans v. Prothero, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 772; 1 De G. M. & G. 572, where Lord St. Leonards held that a document purporting to be a receipt was admissible as evidence of a contract, though inadmissible as a receipt by reason of its being insufficiently stamped. Mr. Justice Kekewich rejected the evidence, and distinguished the case before Lord St. Leonards on the ground that there the contract was something entirely different from the receipt, and, consequently, the two facts which the document would prove were wholly independent, as there might be a good contract and no receipt, or there might be a good receipt and no contract. Mr. Justice Kekewich's ruling appears to be in accordance with the terms of the Stamp Act and with the current of authority which will be found in Roscoe's 'Nisi Prius' (15th edit. 1884), vol. i., pp. 211, 558.

Conveyancing barristers, no less than those who regularly practise in the Courts, have to keep their eyes open for decisions of judges which may materially affect the advice which they give. In particular, we refer to points which affect their opinions in advising on title. Mr. Justice Stirling's decision in In re Briggs & Spicer (Notes of Cases, p. 24) will make it difficult for those claiming under a voluntary settlement within ten years of its execution to show a good, enforceable title. Section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, makes a voluntary settlement void as against the settlor's trustee in bankruptcy if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years of its execution, or if he becomes bankrupt within ten years, unless the parties claiming under it can prove that the settlor could have paid all his debts at the time of its execution without recourse to the settled property. In In re Briggs & Spicer B. executed a voluntary settlement whereby he conveyed certain land to trustees on trust for sale, and to pay the income of the proceeds of sale to himself for life with remainder over. The trustees endeavoured to sell by entering into a contract with intending purchasers, in which B. joined. The purchasers objected to the title on account of the section referred to above. The vendors suggested that the words 'parties claiming under the settlement' did not include bonâ fide purchasers and lessees from the trustees. Mr. Justice Stirling thought that the words were wide enough to include them so that the title could not be forced on the purchasers, though a title might be made by B. conveying to the purchasers, and directing the consideration-money to be paid to the trustees of the voluntary settlement. Although, if the purchasers were willing, they would thus in effect acquire a good title through the voluntary settlement, it must not be supposed that there is no difference in principle between a conveyance from a person to whom or to whose nominees you have given a quid pro quo, and a purchase from persons who owe it to the bounty of some settlor that they have any interest in the property. If all sales in the former case were liable to be upset, there would be an end, or at all events an arrest of that free trade in property which it is the policy of the law to encourage, but in the latter case the voluntary settlement should at once suggest that there is need of care, because the settlor has dealt in a comparatively rare way with his property, a way indeed which but for such provisions as those in the Bankruptcy Act might enable him to exempt a large part of his available assets from liability to bear his debts.

Mr. Alderman Wicks (see ante, p. 118) reiterates his charge that the Lord Chancellor's salary is 20,000*l.*, substantiating, as he says, his statement 'from Parliamentary papers just issued.' We are not yet convinced. The Judicature Act of 1873 assigns to the Lord Chancellor the salary paid to him before the passing of that Act. On reference to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, s. 17, Mr. Wicks will find that the 10,000*l.* salary is made up of two sums, the history of which can be found by reference to 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 122. Practically it comes to this, that the Lord Chancellor has 6,000*l.* for the discharge of his official duties and 4,000*l.* for acting as speaker of the House of Lords. Mr. Wicks has put down the two separate amounts, and, by adding them together and adding the sum of the two to the total 'net yearly sum' fixed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, arrived at the 20,000*l.* of which he is in search.

There is a useful though short Act of Parliament, which is occasionally dragged out of oblivion, authorising the sale of land under trusts for, or powers of sale, with a reservation of minerals. The statute is 25 & 26 Vict. c. 108, and the material parts of section 2 are that 'every trustee and other person now and hereafter to become authorised to dispose of land by way of sale . . . . may, unless forbidden by the instrument creating the trust or power, so dispose of such land with an exception or reservation of any minerals . . . . or may (unless forbidden as aforesaid) dispose of by way of sale . . . . the minerals . . . . separately from the residue of the land, and in either case without prejudice to any future exercise of the authority with respect to the excepted minerals, or (as the case may be) the undisposed-of land.' There is one drawback to the beneficence of this statute, and that is, that the sanction of the Court is necessary before it can be made use of. In In re Hirst's Mortgage, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 48; L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 263, the mortgagees of property in Yorkshire endeavoured to avail themselves of the Act by petitioning the Court to give the requisite sanction ex parte. Vice-Chancellor Wickens, in In re Wilkinson's Mortgaged Estates, 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 392; L. R. 13 Eq. 634, expressed himself satisfied that the order might be made, notwithstanding the opposition of one of the later mortgagees or the mortgagor, and thought that if necessary the mortgagor might be dispensed with. The latter phrase is somewhat curious. But though the mortgagor's consent may be dispensed with, Mr. Justice North, in In re Hirst's Mortgage, refused to dispense with service on him. The same Vice-Chancellor, in In re Palmer's Will, 41 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 511; L. R. 13 Eq. 408, considered that, where trustees for sale made the application, the beneficiaries should be parties to it, and Mr. Justice North could see no difference in principle between the case of a mortgagee and mortgagor and that of trustees and their cestuis qui trustent. Since such large powers are now entrusted by the Legislature to trustees and mortgagees, it would seem reasonable to expect that they would soon be enabled to exercise the powers of this Act without having to apply for the sanction of the Court. Possibly a notice to the beneficiaries or some of them, or to the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers, of a kind similar to that which tenants-for-life have to give under the Settled Land Acts, would be a safeguard against any possible abuse of the powers.

DEBENTURES.

On February 10 the Court of Appeal, after deliberating for three months, delivered their judgment in the case of In re The Standard Manufacturing Company: Ex parte Lowe, and decided that debentures of an ordinary joint-stock company, creating a charge on its floating real and personal property, are not void for want of registration, or want of accordance with statutory form, under the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882, or either of such Acts.

This is a good, common-sense, commercial decision, and the short judgment is a combination of the shrewdness of Lord Halsbury, the breadth and force of Lord Justice Bowen, and the accuracy and caution of Lord Justice Fry.

The Court made short work of the contention that debentures are within the Act of 1882.

It may be remembered that section 17 of that wretched piece of legislation exempts from its baneful influence 'debentures issued by any mortgage, loan, or other incorporated company, and secured upon the capital stock or goods, chattels, and effects of such company.' The Court of Appeal expressly overruled the decision in Jenkinson v. Brandley Mining Company, L. R. 19 Q. B. Div. 568, that 'other incorporated companies' are words limited to companies ejusdem generis with mortgage or loan companies. Wisely giving up any attempt to define the meaning of the mysterious terms 'mortgage company' and 'loan company,' the Court boldly declared that every incorporated company which is authorised to raise money on loan or mortgage comes within the section.

Then the Court tackled, with a firm but light hand, the Act of 1878, which is not such a clumsy piece of drafting as the more recent statute. Section 4 defines a bill of sale, and the Court frankly admitted that a debenture came within the words 'any agreement . . . by which a right in equity . . . to any charge or security' 'on any personal chattels' 'shall be conferred.'

Then follows a very clever explanation how the Act cannot apply to the mortgages or charges—and this part of the judgment is most cautiously worded—'of any incorporated company for the registration of which statutory provision has already been made by the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, or the Companies Act, 1862.'

The judgment, read at a glance, seems wide enough to exempt all debentures from the operation of the Act of 1878, but a reperusal shows that the remarks of the Court on this head only apply to companies within the Act of 1845 and companies registered under the Act of 1862; and, of course, there are incorporated companies which are not within either Act, and the debentures of which would, therefore, seem to require registration under the Act of 1878.

Confining its attention, therefore, to incorporated companies within the Acts of 1845 and 1862, the Court points out that these companies are not within the mischief of the Bills of Sale Acts, and were not actively present to the minds of the draftsmen of these Acts.

So far the judgment is admirable. But now comes what seems to be the weak part of it. The Court proceeds to remind everyone that the Acts of 1845 and 1862 required registers to be kept by the companies within them of mortgages, charges, &c. But, passing by the objection that the register, under neither Act, is open to the public, it seems to have been forgotten that the House of Lords has decided that the omission to register does not—at any rate in the case of companies under the Act of 1862—invalidate, or affect the priority of the mortgages, which ought to be registered (Wright v. Horton, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 873; L. R. 12 App. Cas. 371); it is merely a question of money penalties payable by the person whose duty it is to register.

The Court of Appeal, however, says that, 'Having regard to the provision already made by statute for registration, such documents could hardly be described as secret or as belonging to the class of documents by which frauds were perpetrated upon creditors by secret bills of sale;' and their lordships 'cannot think that the Legislature could have intended in the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, to have interfered by mere general words with such well-known commercial instruments' as debentures.

We agree as to the intention of the Legislature; but there is no doubt that unsecured creditors have occasionally been defeated by means of unregistered mortgages and debentures, given by companies under the Act of 1862 on all their available assets, including uncalled capital, notwithstanding the registration clause (s. 43) of the Companies Act, 1862. To justify its inquiry into the intent of the Legislature the Court invoked the authority of a case in Plowden, which the Lord Chancellor had disinterred in the ecclesiastical case of Cox v. Hakes, L. R. 15 App. Cas. 518. The extract from the case in 'Plowden' is full of good sense, otherwise it would not have been brought forward by Lord Halsbury, and this part of the judgment may be passed over without further comment.

The Court then said that 'neither the cause nor necessity for the Bills of Sale Acts, 1854 and 1878, nor a comparison of the various sections'—and they particularised sections 4, 10, and 12 of the latter Act—drove them to the interpretation that debentures were included.

The judgment, so far as decision goes, practically ends with the observation, again cautiously framed, that 'it may be that the language of section 3,' of the Act of 1878, 'is wide enough to include the bills of sale of a corporation.' This means bills of sale 'whereby the holder or grantee has power, either with or without notice, and either immediately or at any future time, to seize or take possession of any personal chattels comprised in or made subject to such bills of sale.'

This part of the judgment may mean that the Court is ready to reconsider the decision in Brocklehurst v. The Railway Printing Company (Weekly Notes, 1884, p. 70), that a document which, although not expressly charging the property of a company, purports to give the holder, pari passu with other holders of similar documents, the benefit of an assignment to a trustee of the property, is not a debenture within section 17 of the Act of 1882, and consequently void.

But for some time those engaged in 'company drafting' have taken care not to include the chattels in an assignment in trust for debenture-holders; and they will be well advised if they continue to act with the same caution.

The fact that the execution creditors were ordered to pay the costs in both Courts may bring about an appeal to the Lords. A reversal of the decision would be a commercial disaster, and prompt legislation, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, would be hailed with the greatest satisfaction by the very many people who have advanced their money on debentures in the belief that the intent of the Legislature was that which is so tersely, yet eloquently, expressed in the judgment 'proposed by Lord Justice Bowen.'

THE LIABILITY OF SOLICITORS IN INVESTING TRUST FUNDS.

FEW cases have raised more points of interest to solicitors who are concerned with the investment of trust funds than the three actions of Blyth v. Fladgate, Morgan v. Blyth, and Smith v. Blyth, heard together before Mr. Justice Stirling and reported in the February number of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS (60 Law

J. Rep. Chanc. 66), from which we collect the following short statement of facts. Certain moneys subject to the Blyth settlement came with notice of the trust into the hands of a firm of solicitors consisting of three members, of whom Smith was one, at a time when there were no trustees of the settlement in existence. Smith, the member of the firm who attended to the affairs of the trust, negotiated an advance of the money on mortgage to one Searle, a client of the firm, and the mortgage was made in March, 1884, to Smith and two other persons, who had previously agreed to become new trustees of the settlement and had consented to the proposed investment. The three new trustees were duly appointed in April following. The investment resulted in loss, and in August, 1888, the beneficiaries obtained judgment against Smith and his two co-trustees, declaring that the investment was an improper one, and that the three trustees were jointly and severally liable to make good the loss. In May, 1884, the partnership between the solicitors was dissolved, and one member of the old firm died in 1888. In this state of things the first of the above-named actions was brought by the beneficiaries to make the surviving member of the old firm of solicitors and the representatives of the deceased member repay the trust-money to the trustees. The main question involved in this case, which Mr. Justice Stirling decided in favour of the plaintiffs, was whether Smith's copartners had become liable on the footing of constructive trusteeship, although they had no personal knowledge of the impropriety of the investment, which was entirely confined to Smith. There was obviously an important distinction between this case and cases like Barnes v. Addy, 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 513; L. R. 9 Chanc. App. 244—viz. that in this case the firm had not merely acted as solicitors for trustees who were guilty of a breach of trust, but had themselves received the trust-money while there were no trustees in existence, and had thus—knowingly in the case of Smith and with constructive notice in the case of his copartners—taken upon themselves the office of trustees de son tort, and rendered themselves liable as principals; and it is mainly on this ground, we apprehend, that Mr. Justice Stirling's decision must be sustained. Upon the constructive liability of Smith's copartners, Mr. Justice Stirling says: 'Smith, while acting as a member of the firm, became acquainted with the nature of the security on which the money under the control of the firm, and known by them to be a trust fund, was advanced; and the knowledge so acquired by Smith must, as it seems to me, be imputed to the other partners, whose agent he was, for the purpose of dealing with this trust fund under their control.'

The second of the above-named actions was brought by one of the trustees against Smith and the other surviving member of the firm of solicitors, for damages sustained by their negligence as solicitors in advising the improper investment. Smith, in this action, counter-claimed for contribution from the plaintiff of a proportion of the sum necessary to replace the trust fund. The first defence to the plaintiff's action was on the ground of no retainer. Mr. Justice Stirling, however, held that, though no express retainer was ever given by the plaintiff—the investment, it will be remembered, having been made before his actual appointment as trustee—the relation of solicitor and client subsisted under an implied contract to be inferred from the acts of the parties. 'It is not necessary, as I think,' he added, 'that the contract should be one for payment by him personally—a trustee or executor may retain a solicitor upon the terms that he is to look only to the estate for repayment.' In this case the costs of the mortgage had been deducted out of the advance to the mortgagor, but this circumstance was treated as immaterial. The next point was whether Smith, as solicitor, in fact took on himself the duty of advising whether the advance was a proper one. Mr. Justice Stirling thought that he did do so, and that he failed in his duty. 'The duty of a solicitor,' he observes, 'is not so much himself to form or express an opinion on the value of the property offered to a trustee as security for an advance—though the law does not prohibit him from so doing if he thinks fit—as to see that the trustee has before him the proper materials for forming a judgment of his own. He ought, therefore, to see that the trustee has before him proper valuations of the property and that he is acquainted with any facts known to the solicitor and not appearing by the valuation which may affect the value of the property, and that his attention is directed to any rules laid down by the Court for the guidance of trustees with reference to such matters.' A further defence was that the plaintiff's action was premature, as, though judgment had been obtained against him, he had not yet been called on to pay anything by the beneficiaries. This argument, however, as Mr. Justice Stirling points out, confuses a right to sue for damages on the ground of negligence with a right of indemnity against payment. In the latter case, time does not begin to run against the person entitled to the indemnity until he has made a payment; in the former case, the right of action accrues on the commission of the negligence, so that the damages, as is clearly laid down in Mr. Mayne's treatise on the subject, include the client's prospective as well as actual loss, and the client in such a case who waited for the actual loss to occur before bringing his action would run the risk of finding it barred by the Statute of Limitations.

The third action before Mr. Justice Stirling brought the other co-trustee before the Court, raising similar questions to those raised in the second action, and also the additional point whether the estate of the deceased member of the firm could be made answerable for the negligence. Mr. Justice Stirling—on the authority of Sawyer v. Goodwin, 36 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 578, amongst other cases—held that the maxim 'Actio personalis moritur cum personâ' was not applicable to the case, and that the estate of the deceased member was equally answerable for the damages occasioned by the negligence.

As regards Smith's claim in these two actions for contribution against his co-trustees, Mr. Justice Stirling held, in accordance with Lockhart v. Reilly, 25 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 697, that Smith, having been guilty of negligence as solicitor towards his co-trustees, could not claim from them any contribution in respect of the liabilities imposed by the original judgment obtained against the three trustees by the beneficiaries.

Mr. Roland M. P. Willoughby, who gained the highest place in Honours, and an Exhibition, at the recent intermediate examination in Laws at the University of London, is the son of the late Mr. H. W. Willoughby, Solicitor, of Clifford's Inn, and is articled to Mr. Nichols of 7 Warwick Court.

Reviews.

THE STUDENTS' BANKRUPTCY.

Gibson and Weldon's Students' Bankruptcy. Intended as an Explanatory Treatise on the Law and Practice of Bankruptcy. Prepared specially for the use of Students, and more particularly for the use of Students for the Final (Pass) and Honours Examinations of the Law Society. Second Edition. By the Authors. London: 'Law Notes' Publishing Offices. 1891.

In this edition the Bankruptcy Act and Rules for 1890 have been skilfully incorporated, and the authors have obviously taken great pains in adding the new cases which are of importance. A change has also been made by treating the principle and the practice of bankruptcy law together, and not separately, as was done in the former edition. By this course, no doubt, repetition is avoided, but it may well be doubted whether the student would not find the work clearer and easier to follow if principle and practice were kept apart. The book is certainly carefully executed, and will be found useful. Here and there we have observed some small matters where improvement might be made. On p. 138 or 139 we ought to have had an allusion at least to the change introduced by section 15 of the Act of 1890, noticed on p. 42, as to the employment of a solicitor. On p. 30 we find mention of two cases in which a man or his estate may be liable to the bankruptcy law though he has not committed an act of bankruptcy, and three cases are then enumerated immediately after. In chapter x., on 'the public examination,' attention ought to have been directed to the important case of In re a Solicitor, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 238; L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 17, where it was decided that the notes of the public examination of a solicitor under the Bankruptcy Act may be used on an application against him under the Solicitors Act, 1888.

HANDY BOOK FOR SOLICITORS' CLERKS.

The Solicitor's Clerk. A Handy Book upon the Ordinary Practical Work of a Solicitor's Office. With Precise Instructions as to the Procedure in Conveyancing Matters and the Practice of the Courts. By Charles Jones. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

This little work will prove both interesting and instructive to the class of readers for whom it is intended. In chapter i. the author indicates a strong opinion that a solicitor's clerk ought to be 'caught young.' He ought to enter on his duties immediately on leaving school, and the authority of a legal writer is cited for the proposition that 'it is easier to write upon a perfectly blank and white surface than upon one on which are confused, half-erased impressions.' Suppose now the aspirant obtains a footing in a good office—and the author, while having due regard to the old saying that beggars must not be choosers, recommends an office of general practice—to what subjects ought he to turn his attention? He will find a good many useful hints in the book before us, which commences by pointing out the value of good handwriting, then deals with the work of the copying clerk, touches on the subject of shorthand, and then treats of conveyancing practice, &c. A table of contents would be a useful addition to the book.

[Erratum.—In our notice of the second edition of 'The Students' Probate, Divorce and Admiralty' at p. 117 of last week's issue, five lines from the bottom of the second column, for 'Due Influence' read 'Undue Influence.']

Unreported Cases.

ASSIZE CASE.

ESCAPING FROM CUSTODY.

At Cambridge, before Mr. Baron Pollock, on February 18, Kate Elsdon, seventeen, prostitute, was indicted for that, whilst being in the custody of the keeper of the spinning-house or house of correction in the university and town of Cambridge, she did then escape and go at large on February 12. On February 11 last the defendant, who had previously been in prison, and had several times been confined as a prostitute by the university authorities in their spinning-house or house of correction, was arrested by the proctor and his constables or 'bulldogs' and taken by them to the spinning-house. Here she was kept all night, and next morning brought before the vice-chancellor, who, having heard the proctor and constables (who, however, were not sworn), ordered the defendant to be confined for twenty-one days for 'street-walking.' The spinning-house in which the defendant was to be confined is under the charge of a matron, who is a woman of advanced age, and a sub-matron, and whilst the sub-matron was out the defendant, having been allowed to walk in the yard, as she said she had a headache, got into the chapel, thence into the chaplain's room, and from there escaped out of the window into St. Andrew's Street. She was two days afterwards arrested at Dullingham.—Agnes Gray, assistant-matron at the spinning-house, said: The prisoner was brought in on the night of the 11th. The warrant under which she was committed is in the handwriting of the vice-chancellor. She was in my charge. I visited her. She complained of headache. I saw her last about 4 o'clock. I went out, and she escaped whilst I was gone.—Cross-examined: I was present at the proceedings. All the entries (in the spinning-house book) are in the vice-chancellor's handwriting. Defendant was not legally represented. She had no opportunity of getting counsel or solicitor to represent her. It was in a small room, not a public Court. They do not take evidence on oath. There is no clerk of the Court. The trial took a quarter of an hour, perhaps longer. I have known women acquitted. It depends on the vice-chancellor's view of the case and the proctor's. Police-constable Johnson then deposed to arresting the defendant after her escape. Dr. Louard, the registrar of the university, produced from the registry of the university the charter of James I. (dated March 9, 1604–5), by which it was provided that it should be lawful for the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the university, by themselves or by their deputies, as well by day as by night, at their pleasure, to make scrutiny, search, and inquiry in the town of Cambridge, and the suburbs of the same, of and for (inter alia) all common women, harlots, prostitutes, scholars passing the night out of their own colleges without just cause, and other persons suspected of evil; and all and singular upon whom any such scrutiny the said chancellor, masters, and scholars, or their deputies, officers, and servants, shall find guilty or suspected of evil to punish by imprisonment as they shall see fit, 'without the impeachment, molestation, disturbance, or troubling of us, our heirs, or successors,' 'any statute or Act of Parliament now passed, or hereafter to be passed, in any wise notwithstanding.' This closed the case for the prosecution.—Mr. Livett, on behalf of the defendant, submitted that there was no case to go to the jury, as what the defendant had done was not an escape at common law.—Baron Pollock: The spinning-house is not a prison, but the defendant was in lawful custody on a criminal charge.—Mr. Livett argued that the custody was not lawful, as it was on a charge of street-walking, which was not an offence known to the law.—Baron Pollock: I have only to look to the charter, which was expressly acted upon in Kempe v. Neville, 31 Law J. Rep. C. P. 158; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 523, and I cannot go behind the conviction. If a person is in custody under an order of a properly constituted Court, you cannot go into the character of the offence. All I have to look to is whether the defendant was de facto in lawful custody. —Mr. Livett asked for a case to be stated, but the learned Baron declined.—Mr. Rawlinson then summed up his case, and Mr. Livett addressed the jury on behalf of the defendant.—The learned judge, in summing up, after explaining to the jury the nature of the charge, said that when a case affected the liberty of anyone, either rich or poor, of good character or bad, it was of the utmost importance, and should be treated with the greatest jealousy and care. He was bound to direct them that the defendant was in lawful custody. It was not for him or the jury to discuss the conduct of the tribunal by which the defendant had been placed in custody; that could be done by a writ of habeas corpus, or other means well known to lawyers. If the Court was an improper one it could be swept away by the Legislature, but with all this they had nothing to do, for the defendant was in lawful custody, and by the common law, if anyone so in custody made his escape, he was guilty of the offence charged against the defendant. The whole question for them was, Did she, in fact, escape? If she did, she must be found guilty.—The jury, after an absence of about twenty minutes, returned a verdict of 'Guilty.'—The foreman said that they had a rider to their verdict.—The learned Baron asked if it referred to the defendant or to the Vice-Chancellor's Court, because, if the latter, he could not receive it.—The Foreman: Then we cannot give it.—The defendant was then sentenced to three weeks' imprisonment without hard labour.—Mr. J. F. P. Rawlinson appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Livett for the defendant.

COUNTY COURTS.

WHAT IS A WHARF?

At the Marylebone County Court, on Thursday, February 12, before his honour Judge Stonor, the case of Smead, Dean & Co. v. Allen & Sons was heard. A curious and interesting point arose in this case. The plaintiffs, who are brickmakers at Sittingbourne, and also bargeowners, sued the defendants, who are builders and contractors, for 5*l.* damage in respect of the detention of their barge John Bright, for five days, in consequence of the defendants not having properly instructed them as to the place of delivery of several thousand bricks conveyed by it. It appeared that the defendants had given orders to a carrier to receive delivery of the bricks as their agent, and in that capacity the latter had directed the plaintiffs to deliver the bricks at Puddledock, Blackfriars. The plaintiffs had signed an agreement to deliver the bricks at any 'wharf' eastward of Chelsea, and they objected, and had objected on a previous occasion, to deliver bricks at Puddledock, on the ground that it was not a 'wharf' where they could go alongside from the river, but an inlet between two large warehouses where the delivery was 'at end' on the level and had to be effected by planks, and where a large barge (as in the present case) could only deliver at or about spring tide. It appeared that Puddledock was a free parish dock, and that there was one other similar free parish dock in the city, and that at all the wharves on the bank of the river there were always charges to be paid by the consignees or carriers. A resolution had been passed by the Brickmakers' Union boycotting Puddledock as a place for delivery. On the plaintiffs objecting to deliver the bricks at Puddledock, as directed by the first carrier named by the defendants, the latter, after some delay, named another carrier, who directed the plaintiffs to deliver them on a wharf called Falcon Wharf, on the other side of the river. In consequence, however, of the delay the barge was detained five days, and thence the present claim arose. The question for the Court was whether Puddledock was a 'wharf.'—His Honour adopted the definition of a 'wharf' given in 'Johnson's Dictionary'—viz. 'A perpendicular bank or mole raised for the convenience of lading or emptying vessels—a quay,' and decided that Puddledock was not a 'wharf,' and entered judgment for the plaintiffs. His Honour offered to give leave to appeal, but said that in that case he would give costs on the higher scale. The offer was not accepted.—Stratton for the plaintiffs; Griffiths for the defendants.

RIGHT OF WAY—UNITY OF OWNERSHIP—CONVEYANCING ACT, 1881, S. 6.

At the Okehampton County Court, on October 21 and December 16, 1890, before his honour Judge Edge, the case of Berg and Lotheren v. Sanders and Dennis was heard. His Honour said: This is an action of trespass for pulling down a fence. The defendants justify the trespass on the ground that the fence had been erected across a way over which they had a right of passage. It appears that the plaintiffs and defendants are the respective owners and occupiers of two adjoining farms; the plaintiffs' farm being known as the Higher Coombe Farm and the defendants' farm as the Lower Coombe Farm. Prior to June, 1886, both farms belonged to the same owner, upon whose death they were put up for sale by auction by the trustees of his will. Neither of the farms were sold at the auction, but on August 28, 1886, Lower Coombe was sold to the defendant Dennis by private contract, and in the following month Higher Coombe was sold to the plaintiff Berg, also by private contract. Lower Coombe was conveyed to the defendant Dennis by a conveyance dated January 1, 1887, whilst Higher Coombe was conveyed to the plaintiff Berg by a deed dated March 25, 1887. Consequently both the defendants' contract and conveyance preceded, in point of time, the contract and conveyance respectively of the plaintiff Berg. At the time of the contract, and of the conveyance to the defendant Dennis, there was a road from Lower Coombe across Higher Coombe to a highway leading to Hatherleigh and Okehampton. For many years prior and up to the sale to Dennis this road had been used and enjoyed by the occupiers of Lower Coombe as the principal, or, I might almost say, the only way from Lower Coombe farm. There was another undefined way by which carts could get from Lower Coombe into a lane called Birchin Lane, but this road was inconvenient at all times, and generally impassable, and was very rarely used. In fact, one of the plaintiffs' witnesses stated that he might have taken lime that way twenty times in twenty-seven years. By the plan annexed to the conditions of sale, and by which the premises were subsequently sold, both roads are shown as being open, the first mentioned as traversing a portion of Higher Coombe and thence into the highway leading to Hatherleigh, and the other into Birchin Lane direct from Lower Coombe. Some time after the conveyance of Higher Coombe to the plaintiff Berg he built a fence across the first-mentioned road where it enters Higher Coombe, which fence the defendant removed; hence the present action. The conveyance to the defendant Dennis is in general terms, and does not refer in any way to either of the two roads, or indeed to any right of way whatever; but it is contended on his behalf that by section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a right of way is given to him over the road leading across Higher Coombe for such purposes and to such extent as the same was used by the occupiers of Lower Coombe at the time of the sale to Dennis. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff Berg that, inasmuch as there is no mention of the way in question in the conveyance to Dennis, and consequently no grant to him of such way, and as it is not contended that a right of way has been acquired by prescription, the only way which could possibly be claimed by the defendants would be a way of necessity, and inasmuch as there is another way by which Dennis could enter into the highway known as Birchin Lane, no right to the way in dispute as a way of necessity can be established. A considerable number of cases were cited to me in the course of the hearing, but I do not think I need refer to them in detail, as the cases of Barkshire v. Grubb, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 731; Kay v. Oxley, 44 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 210; L. R. 10 Q. B. 360; and Bayley v. The Great Western Railway Company, L. R. 26 Chanc. Div. 434, have modified, if not overruled, most of the earlier cases on the subject. In the above cases it was held that a grant of land, 'together with all ways now used or enjoyed therewith,' or, 'with all rights, members, or appurtenances to the hereditaments belonging or occupied or enjoyed, as part, parcel, or member thereof,' passed a right to use ways constructed during unity of possession, but used for the convenience of the land granted, though such ways were in strictness neither easements nor appurtenances. Now, by section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a conveyance of land, having houses upon it, shall be deemed to include 'all rights appertaining to the land or houses conveyed, or at the time of the conveyance demised, occupied, or enjoyed therewith;' thus, by a statutory implication bringing, unless the contrary is shown, every conveyance of land and houses within the decisions above quoted. In the present case the right to use the way in dispute at the date of the contract and of the conveyance to Dennis was undoubtedly enjoyed by the occupier of Lower Coombe, and, therefore, in my opinion, passed to the defendant Dennis. This view of the effect of the statute is, I think, confirmed by the dicta of Mr. Justice Chitty in Beddington v. Atlee, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 655; L. R. 35 Chanc. Div. 317. The verdict will therefore be entered for the defendants with costs.—Peter asked for leave to appeal, which was granted. —The appeal has since been abandoned.—Peter for the plaintiff; Sparkes for the defendant.

MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY ACT, 1882—RESTRAINT ON ANTICIPATION — SUFFICIENCY OF SEPARATE ESTATE TO FOUND A CONTRACT BY MARRIED WOMAN.

At the Eastbourne County Court, on Thursday, January 8, his Honour Judge Martineau gave judgment in the case of Everett v. Paxton: This is an action of contract remitted to this Court from the High Court. The defendant, Mrs. Paxton, at the time when the action was commenced was a married woman; her husband has died since the action was commenced. The action is brought to recover 53*l*., the balance of an account for grocery goods supplied to the defendant, who was living separate and apart from her husband. The plaintiff's bill consists of a number of small items for grocery goods supplied from time to time to the defendant; some of the items are for a few pence—e.g. a pot of jam, 6*d*. The account commenced some years back, I think, in 1885. Various payments on account were made by Mrs. Paxton from time to time, the last payment being in July, 1890, leaving a balance owing at the time when the action was brought of 53*l*. odd. There is no dispute as to the justice of the plaintiff's claim. It is an account for necessaries supplied to the defendant, who was living separate and apart from her husband. Her husband was in no way liable to pay for the goods, credit was given to Mrs. Paxton and to Mrs. Paxton alone, she was entitled to a separate income, and never raised any question as to her liability; she apparently intended to pay for them, and from time to time actually paid money on account out of her income. The defence set up is, that the only separate property to which she was entitled at the dates when she ordered the various items, the subject of the plaintiff's bill, was income subject to a restraint upon anticipation, and so she is not liable; and the defendant relies on the decisions in Palliser v. Gurney, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 546; L. R. 19 Q. B. 519; Leake v. Driffield, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 89; L. R. 24 Q. B. 98; and Harrison v. Harrison, L. R. 13 P. D. 180. Similar actions by other tradesmen who have supplied her with goods are threatened, and if she is liable to pay this bill she is liable to pay those, and in the result her income, as a widow, would be seriously diminished, and that perhaps is the real reason for resisting payment. The defence is to my mind shocking, but I am bound by the decisions referred to, and the only question is whether they apply to and govern the present case. The facts in evidence with respect to the separate property to which the defendant was entitled at the time the goods were supplied are apparently not in dispute. The defendant was entitled under the will of her father, who died in August, 1879, to an income arising from rents of houses or real estate. This income, which amounted to upwards of 300*l*. per annum, was payable to her for her separate use for life, but was subject to a restraint on anticipation. The solicitor to the trustees of the will received the income and paid it over to her by cheque from time to time as it was received. The payments were made month by month, there being sometimes two if not more payments in the course of a month. She was usually in debt to tradesmen, and as she received each cheque she cashed it and paid away the bulk of the money so received to tradesmen on account of their bills, but she admits she retained some portion, though only a few shillings, for her immediate use. The exact dates of the payments to her are ascertained. The exact dates of the different items for goods supplied are also known. Some of the claims for goods, as I have stated, are for very small amounts. I think it probable, and I infer, that at the times when she purchased numerous items for goods for small amounts, even if she had not got the cheque received from the solicitor to the trustees in her pocket, she actually had in her pocket sufficient money to enable her, if she thought fit, to pay for the goods purchased, but, having a running account, the price of the goods was entered up and not paid for at the time. In addition to the income as to which she was entitled during her life under her father's will, and which amounted to upwards of 300*l*. per annum, she was entitled, under a settlement dated May, 1879, to the use of some furniture during her life. She was entitled to the use of this furniture separately from her husband. If the furniture was sold under a power in the settlement, the trustees of the settlement had power to invest the proceeds in the purchase of other furniture. I have not got a copy of the settlement before me, but I think, if the proceeds were not reinvested in the purchase of furniture, that the income of the sale proceeds, which would be invested in securities, was payable to Mrs. Paxton to her separate use without power of anticipation. Mrs. Paxton lived separate and apart from her husband in a house at Eastbourne, which belonged to her brother. She held this house from her brother during the whole period over which the plaintiff's account extends. According to her evidence, which I accept, there was an arrangement between her and her brother that she should pay her brother 50*l.* a year by way of rent, but the payment of rent was a nominal arrangement only, as she never in fact paid any rent, and her brother never attempted to enforce payment. The house was furnished with the furniture included in the settlement, to the use of which Mrs. Paxton was entitled for life under the settlement, and some furniture which she had purchased in substitution for some of the furniture included in the settlement, such as carpets, which had been worn out. Mrs. Paxton purchased this other furniture out of the income which was paid to her. This was not done under any arrangement between herself and the trustees of the settlement, and she does not appear to have been under any obligation to replace worn-out furniture; apparently, therefore, the purchased furniture was her separate property absolutely. Mrs. Paxton lived in this house so furnished during the whole period over which the plaintiff's account extends, except that on two occasions Mrs. Paxton let her house. She first let in 1888 for eight weeks, and then received 40*l.* or thereabouts for letting this house. It was let a second time in the year 1890, in July, August, and September. Mrs. Paxton was entitled to some trinkets worth about 4*l.*, but which no doubt cost more, and besides other wearing apparel, to a sealskin jacket which cost about 15*l.* She does not appear to have been possessed of, or entitled to, or interested in any other property during the period over which the plaintiff's account extends.—Mr. Gore, for the defendant, contended first, that in an action of contract against a married woman the plaintiff must prove that at the time the contract set up was entered into the married woman was entitled to separate estate, with respect to which she could enter into the contract in question; and he relied on Pallisser v. Gurney, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 546; L. R. 19 Q. B. 519; Harrison v. Harrison, L. R. 13 P. D. 180, and other cases. Secondly, that when the only property which a married woman was possessed of or entitled to at the date of the alleged contract was income subject to a restraint on anticipation, the contract is not only not proved, but the contrary is shown within the meaning of section 1, subsection 3. Thirdly, that in the present case she had no separate property except income subject to a restraint on anticipation, her interest in the house which her brother allowed her to occupy rent free, and in the furniture, and in the trinkets and sealskin jacket and other articles of wearing apparel, being property as to which it is not reasonable to infer that she contracted to pay for the goods supplied out of them. Mr. Dale Hart, for the plaintiff, contended that the income, when actually received, was separate property, as to which she could contract, and that even if she at once spent most of the money received in paying bills, still the few shillings left in her pocket were sufficient on which to found a contract to pay for a pot of jam or the like, and that the enjoyment of the house and furniture, and the right to let and to take the rent for her separate use, was separate property, and so also as regards the sealskin jacket and the trinkets, they were sufficient to found a contract to pay for the grocery; and counsel relied on the decision in Bonnor v. Lyon, 38 W. R. I may mention that, in addition to the cases to which I was referred by counsel, I have looked at the case of Whittaker v. Kershaw, L. R. 45 Chanc. Div. 320, which was not referred to. In the present case I entertain no doubt that Mrs. Paxton contracted, and intended to pay, for every item of the grocery goods out of her separate estate. It was not intended that the husband should pay for the goods, and he was in no way liable. 'I cannot,' to use the language of the Court in Johnson v. Gallagher, impute to Mrs. Paxton 'the dishonesty of not intending to pay for the goods which she purchased.' When it is open to doubt whether a married woman has entered into a contract in respect of her separate estate, and it appears that she had no separate property out of which she could pay, except income subject to a restraint on anticipation or the clothing in which she stands up, the nature and value of her separate property afford grounds for coming to the conclusion that there was no contract to pay out of separate estate; but, assuming that a married woman clearly enters into a contract to pay for goods out of income as to which there is a restraint on anticipation, I should have thought that the contract was complete within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, though the remedy by execution would fail. Lord Justice Cotton, in Whittaker v. Kershaw, uses words indicating that he thought section 1, subsection 2, admitted of such a construction, for he says in that case: 'It was urged that Mrs. Kershaw had no separate estate. This is not so; she has separate estate, and although the remedy against it may be defeated by the restraint on anticipation, still she has separate estate.' I cannot, however, reconcile that observation with the judgment in Harrison v. Harrison, nor with the earlier decision of Mr. Justice Pearson in In re Shakespear, L. R. 30 Chanc. Div. I feel bound by the decisions in Palliser v. Gurney, Harrison v. Harrison, and Leake v. Driffield. The only question, then, is whether, having regard to the fact that each item of goods purchased is comparatively small, and that Mrs. Paxton probably had savings of separate estate, though only a few shillings, in her pocket when she purchased, and the fact that she occupied a house with some small quantity of furniture in it, which belonged to her, to her separate use, having been purchased by her out of savings, and that she was able if she thought fit to let it furnished and receive rent, which was hers to take without any restraint on anticipation, constituted separate estate, with respect to which she could contract under section 1, subsection 2. I entertain a doubt on the point, but, in my opinion, these facts are sufficient to enable me to hold that she had separate estate sufficient to form the ground of a contract within section 1, subsection 2. I give no opinion as to the trinkets and sealskin jacket. There will be judgment for the plaintiff, with costs. The costs will be taxed according to scale C. I will certify for conference and refresher to counsel. I will stay execution for fourteen days. If there should be an appeal I will stay execution until the appeal is heard.—Dale Hart for the plaintiff; Gore for the defendant.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS AND ACCEPTANCES.

Lecturing before a crowded audience in the theatre of King's College last week, Mr. J. R. Paget, B.A., LL.B., said that in his opinion, outside bills, notes and cheques, there was absolutely nothing that could be, really and separately, considered as being negotiable. The reason was that there was no other class of documents that had a sufficiently general circulation or market. There was no such consent of the mercantile world brought to bear on any other class of instruments. Without such acceptance and recognition true negotiability could not exist. When they fairly classed them together for the Courts, even what were called international securities were of too limited recognition to be called negotiable. He did not think that their being dealt with on foreign bourses as well as on the English market made them negotiable. Our law was one we made for ourselves, with which foreigners could not intermeddle. From our standpoint international bonds had no pre-eminence. When they found security which every English banker and stockbroker agreed was negotiable in every sense of the term he would admit its negotiability. Even though the Court assumed the negotiability of documents in favour of the defendants in some recent cases they were still held liable. It seemed as though nothing would stop the tide that had set in against bankers, except some legislation on the point. Referring to acceptances, Mr. Paget said that 'marking' a cheque as between banker and banker meant a binding acceptance that the cheque would be paid. Acceptance concerned bills alone. A signature of an acceptor which is gratuitous—which is not required by nor written at the request of the drawer—would constitute or render the acceptor liable. It was probably a sufficient acceptance if the drawer wrote on the back of the bill instead of on the front. Why a man should do so he (the lecturer) could not say, but the eccentricities of mankind were manifold. If a man only signed his name thus it was a question whether he would be liable as acceptor or endorser. The section (Section 17 Bills of Exchange Act) said that a man must not express that he will perform his promise by any other means than the payment of money. That seemed a self-evident proposition. An acceptance was either general or qualified. A general acceptance assented without qualification to the order of the drawer. A qualified acceptance in express terms varied the effect of the bill as drawn. If certain express terms were used the effect of the acceptance might be restricted or modified. The lecturer dwelt at considerable length on the question of the law as affecting bills drawn in one country and payable in another, as also on the liability of acceptors under certain conditions. In the course of his lecture he said that he had got into very hot water during the week owing to reports which appeared in the Times and the Financial News respecting his remarks in the previous lecture as to the liability of bankers for endorsements on cheques. He had received various communications on the subject calling his attention to sections of the Bills of Exchange and Stamp Acts. He had reconsidered his views on the matter, and was bound to say that there was a considerable amount of doubt encircling the question. He dealt at length on the various objections that had been raised, but did not alter his opinion as expressed in the lecture of the previous week, a short report of which appeared in the Times.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

General Rules made pursuant to section 26 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890.

PETITIONS AND ORDERS.

1. AFTER a petition has been presented the petitioner shall, on a day to be appointed by the registrar, not less than two days before the day appointed for the hearing of the petition, attend before the registrar and satisfy him that the petition has been duly advertised; that the prescribed affidavit verifying the statements therein and the affidavit of service (if any) have been duly filed, and that the provisions of the rules as to petitions for winding up companies have been duly complied with by the petitioner. No order for the winding up of a company shall be made on the petition of any petitioner who has not, prior to the hearing of the petition, attended before the registrar at the time appointed and satisfied him in manner required by this rule.

2. Every advertisement of a petition shall contain a note at the foot thereof stating that any person who intends to appear on the hearing of the petition, either to oppose or support, must send notice of his intention to the petitioner within the time and in the manner prescribed by the next succeeding rule; and an advertisement of a petition for the winding up of a company by the Court which does not contain such a note shall be deemed irregular. Form 2 shall be used in substitution for the form of advertisement prescribed by the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890.

3. Every person who intends to appear on the hearing of a petition shall serve on or send by post notice in writing of his intention to the petitioner at the address stated in the advertisement of the petition. The notice shall be signed by such person or his solicitor, and shall be served, or, if sent by post, shall be posted in such time as in ordinary course of post to reach the address, not later than six o'clock in the afternoon of the day previous to the day appointed for the hearing of the petition. The notice may be in the Form No. 1, with such variations as circumstances may require. A person who has failed to comply with this rule shall not, without the special leave of the Court, be allowed to appear on the hearing of the petition.

4. The petitioner shall prepare a list of the names and addresses of the persons who have given notice of their intention to appear on the hearing of the petition, and of their respective solicitors, which shall be in the Form 3. A fair copy of the list shall, on the day appointed for hearing the petition, be handed by the petitioner to the registrar in Court prior to the hearing of the petition.

5. When an order for the winding up of a company or for the appointment of the official receiver as provisional liquidator prior to the making of an order for the winding up of the company has been pronounced in Court, the registrar shall, on the same day, send to the official receiver a notice informing him that the order has been pronounced.

The notice may be in forms 4 and 5 respectively, with such variations as circumstances may require.

6. It shall be the duty of the petitioner, and of all other persons who have appeared on the hearing of the petition, at latest on the day following the day on which an order for the winding up of a company is pronounced in Court, to leave at the registrar's office the petition stamped with a proper filing stamp, and the counsel's brief and other documents required for the purpose of enabling the registrar to complete the Order forthwith.

7. It shall not be necessary for the registrar to make an appointment to settle or pass the Order or to give notice to any of the parties thereto, unless in any particular case the special circumstances make an appointment or notice necessary.

8. The costs of the solicitor to the petitioner, or of any persons whose costs of appearing on the hearing are allowed by the Court, properly incurred in carrying out these Rules shall be allowed as part of the costs of appearing on the petition.

9. Instead of the fee of 1*l.* on the petition and 1*l.* on the order, there shall be paid on the presentation of a petition a fee of 2*l.* to be stamped on the petition, which fee of 2*l.* shall cover the prescribed fee on drawing up and entering the order.

10. In these Rules—

'Petition' means a petition 'to the Court for the winding up of a company by the Court, or subject to the supervision of the Court.'

11. These Rules shall be construed as one set of Rules with the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890. These Rules may be cited separately as the Companies Winding-up Rules (February), 1891.

"12. These Rules shall commence and come into operation on March 16, 1891.

(Signed) HALSBURY, C.

I concur,

M. HICKS-BEACH,

President of the Board of Trade.

Feb. 14, 1891.

FORMS.

No. 1.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO APPEAR ON PETITION.

In the matter of the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, and

In the matter of the [insert name of company].

Take notice that A.B. [state full name, or, if a firm, the full name of the firm] a creditor [or contributory] of the above company intends to appear on the hearing of the petition advertised to be heard on the day of , 189 , and to support [or oppose] such petition.

(Signed) [To be signed by the person or his solicitor.]

[Name of person or firm.]

To [Address.]

No. 2.

ADVERTISEMENT OF PETITION.

In the matter of the Companies Act, 1862 to 1890, and

In the matter of the [insert name of company] Company.

Notice is hereby given that a petition for the winding up of the above-named company by [if the winding-up is to be subject to supervision, insert instead of 'by' the words 'subject to the supervision of'] the High Court of Justice [or the County Court of holden at] [or, as the case may be] was, on the day of 189 presented to the said Court by the said company [or by A. B. of a creditor [or contributory] of the said company] [or, as the case may be]. And that the said petition is directed to be heard before the Court sitting at on the day of 189 ; and any creditor or contributory of the said company desirous to support or oppose the making of an Order on the said petition may appear at the time of hearing by himself or (in the County Court add 'his solicitor or') his counsel for that purpose; and a copy of the petition will be furnished to any creditor or contributory of the said company requiring the same by the undersigned on payment of the regulated charge for the same.

(Signed)

(To be signed by the solicitor to the petitioner, or the petitioner if he has no solicitor.)

(Name).

(Address),

(Solicitor to the petitioner).

Note.—Any person who intends to appear on the hearing of the said petition must serve on or send by post to the above-named notice in writing of his intention so to do. The notice must state the full name and address of the person (or, if a firm, the name and address of the firm), and must be signed by the person or firm or his or their solicitor (if any), and must be served, or, if posted, must be sent by post in sufficient time to reach the above-named not later than six o'clock in the afternoon of the of 189 .

No. 3.

LIST OF PARTIES ATTENDING THE HEARING OF A PETITION.

(Title.)

The following are the names of those who have given notice of their intention to attend the hearing of the petition herein on the day of 189 :—

Names	Addresses	Creditors	Contributories	Opposing	Supporting

No. 4.

NOTIFICATION TO OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF ORDERS PRONOUNCED ON PETITIONS FOR WINDING-UP.

(Title.)

To the Official Receiver of the Court.

(Address.)

Orders pronounced this day by the Honourable Mr. Justice (or, as the case may be) on petitions for winding up of companies under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890.

Name of Company	Registered Office of Company	Petitioner's Solicitor

No. 5.

NOTIFICATION TO OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF ORDER PRONOUNCED FOR APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIAL RECEIVER AS PROVISIONAL LIQUIDATOR PRIOR TO WINDING-UP ORDER BEING MADE.

(Title.)

To the Official Receiver of the Court.

(Address.)

Orders pronounced this day by the Honourable Mr. Justice [or, as the case may be] for the appointment of the official receiver as provisional liquidator prior to any winding-up order being made.

Name of Company	Registered Office of Company	Petitioner's Solicitor

---

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. W. P. W. PHILLIMORE, M.A., B.C.L., of 124 Chancery Lane, has been appointed a Commissioner to Administer Oaths.

Mr. William Davies George (of the firm of Davies, George & Co.), of Haverfordwest, has been appointed a Commissioner to Administer Oaths. Mr. George was admitted in 1877.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. Uttley, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

INSURANCE COMPANIES AND COMMISSIONS.

Under the title of 'Modern Legal Abuses' a barrister is contributing a series of articles to our weekly contemporary the Citizen. He opens the course by raising the question as to solicitors receiving commission from insurance companies for the introduction of business, and seeks to prove that it is a most unpardonable professional sin to do so. He apparently admits, however, that if a solicitor openly proclaims to his client that he receives the commission then the sin is not so grievous. We assume, of course, that barristers' principles would apply equally mutatis mutandis to accountants. Several solicitors have written to our contemporary approving the views enunciated, and stating their entire disapproval of commissions. These gentlemen evidently forget the maxim, 'Other times other manners,' and do not reflect, in their eagerness to uphold the morale of the profession, that with the present keen competition growing keener every year, and there being no opportunity of extending business owing to the absurd etiquette of the profession as to advertising, insurance agencies, and so forth, legal business is likely to decline steadily to zero. A little more Radicalism is really wanted in the profession and less straitlaced Conservatism. The editor of the Citizen, who, we believe, is an accountant, does not coincide with his contributor altogether. After pointing out that insurance companies extend their business by advertising and by agents, he goes on to advance extenuating circumstances, and suggests that there need be no difficulty in a solicitor's informing his client or the insurance applicant that he will receive a commission. A solicitor's only other course would be to charge for the interview and accept no commission; but, says the editor, 'we would limit the payment to a stipulated sum, and not allow a single introduction to prove a source of income to the introducer.' This question seems one more for the insurance companies than the legal world, and, if its ventilation has the effect of drawing their attention to the matter, they will doubtless move in the case as to them seemeth best. As it is, the status of the insurance world is doubtless improved by its transactions with such responsible persons as the legal profession, and, if the agency has to descend to inferior rank, so much the worse for the insurance bodies.

CONSPIRACY AND INTIMIDATION.

The secretary of the Ashton Trades Council has been in correspondence with Mr. Addison, Q.C., M.P., with respect to the recent attempt in Parliament to amend the law of conspiracy and intimidation. Mr. Addison considers that there ought to be no new legislation until the High Court has given its decision upon the cases stated by Mr. Bompas and (County Court) Judge Seymour, for this short reason, that the Act of 1875 is perfectly satisfactory, and cannot be improved upon, if it was rightly interpreted by Mr. Justice Cave at Liverpool (following a decision he gave at Bristol in the previous April). He believes those judgments to be as good in law as they are in sense, and that the decisions of the inferior tribunals will be set aside. Referring to the present matter, he states that a union is strictly within its rights in warning employers that it will withdraw its men if others to whom it chooses to object are further employed, even though the effect be to stop works or to prevent a ship going to sea. This is what Mr. Justice Cave said in Liverpool, and he added: 'To hold otherwise would be to repeal the Acts of 1871 and 1875. No single workman or body of workmen need continue to work for a moment under conditions which they disapprove. If by leaving without notice they are breaking their contracts, that is a civil wrong, for which each workman is individually liable; but it is not "intimidation," whether done by one man or in combination with others, either in the case of workmen or of those who advise them. Let me remind you that by the express words of the Act of 1875 that which is not an offence when done by one man cannot be made a crime when done by several in combination (section 3). "Intimidation" is an offence when committed by one person, and so is an offence when committed by more than one; but the word "intimidation" is used in the Act in its natural sense, and means "to frighten," "to inspire with fear by threats of violence." This is made clear to a legal mind by the words with which it is connected in the same sentence—"uses violence," "injures property" (section 7, subsection 1). I do not understand that in the Plymouth case there was any intimidation in the natural sense of the word. The word "intimidate" was strained to cover some constructive or non-natural meaning; and so it was wrongly held that the employers, because they were alarmed at the consequences with which they were threatened, and contracts of service were broken, were intimidated within the meaning of the statute. But this sort of alarm and apprehension is a weapon which the unions may lawfully use. The Act, by carefully defining the four ways of compulsion which may not be used, makes (by a familiar rule of construction) all others lawful, or at least non-criminal. This is the interpretation I have given to the statute, and which I had thought until recently was the view of every skilled person, so that if I turn out wrong I shall be personally interested in the matter being set right by a declaratory Act.' Discussing the views given in this letter, one of the labour organs states that: 'Workmen generally, but the officers of trades-unions in particular, ought to feel some relief after the information which has been given them by that eminent lawyer, the M.P. for Ashton-under-Lyne, Mr. Addison, Q.C. If workmen are to be governed by such law as was recently laid down by the Recorder of Plymouth they might as well break up their trades-unions and throw themselves on the mercy of those who don't care a rap about their welfare, but are always on the outlook to take advantage of their weakness. When workmen give a legal notice to leave their employment, and do leave in a body, as in the case of a strike, it is absurd to suppose they have intimidated their employer by their action, and yet, when a trades-union officer sends a letter to an employer informing him that his workmen will strike unless certain terms which they require are granted, he is held liable to be summoned for intimidation, and must either pay a fine or suffer imprisonment. Where does the difference come in, whether an employer gets his information of what is about to happen if he does not comply with conditions which his workmen require from the men or from the secretary of the trades-union, as he is bound to get from one or the other? It is a part of the work of trades-union officials to correspond with employers and managers when disputes take place, and it is most unreasonable to think that they should be open to charges of intimidation for sending word that a strike will take place if so-and-so is not done by an employer.' The labour paper concludes its views thus: 'It may at first sight look unfair that workmen should threaten employers with a strike for employing non-union men; but, whether bad or good policy—which depends on circumstances—there can be no doubt but that in fairness the men must have this right. Employers do not bring themselves within the law when they discharge a workman for belonging to a union, and the converse of that being the refusal of a man to work with a non-unionist, they must both be placed on the same footing.

SOME ACCOUNTANCY ITEMS.

Now and again there are discussed in the accountancy periodicals matters which are of as equal interest to the legal profession as to the accountant. For instance, the following point was recently given in the Accountant, which, it was admitted, was rather a solicitor's point than an accountant's. It has been held that an accountant, employed by the plaintiffs, cannot criticise the statement made by the defendant's accountant in reply to interrogatories until such replies have been put in as evidence. It therefore follows that, unless the plaintiff can make a primâ facie case without calling his accountant, and reserve power to call him after the witnesses for the defence have been heard, there is a risk of the case being dismissed without the counsel for defence being called upon to reply. An A. C. A. has been discussing the questions set at the recent examination of the Institute of Chartered Accountants, and pertinently asks what bearing question 4 of the mercantile law paper has upon accountancy work. It was as follows: 'A parcel of watches delivered to a common carrier comes open in transit through being insufficiently packed. Some of the watches are broken and some stolen. What is the liability of the carrier? What would have been the liability if the carrier had been a railway company?' 'Possibly,' says the writer, 'the provincial members of the profession may not yet be awakened to the advisability of combining the functions of a lawyer with those of an accountant, but I should like respectfully to submit that any accountant who in actual practice took upon himself to decide such a point as that raised in the above question would be meddling with matters altogether outside the scope of his profession.' No doubt the counsel of the institute will be taking these criticisms into consideration. Referring to company prospectuses and waiver clauses, the same contemporary submits that no amount of 'waiver clauses' can deprive a shareholder of the rights conferred upon him by section 38 of the 1867 Acts, and that the presence of such a clause would afford no excuse for the concealment of a contract affecting the desirability of the investment. Section 38 may not be perfect, but at least it cannot be made non-existent. We believe contrary opinions are held to this, and as much may doubtless be said on the one side as the other and with equal force.

'WODGERTOUCHITFOR.'

In our last Notes allusion was made to Mr. George Augustus Sala's versatile remarks on legal points. Here is another instance: 'Wodgertouchitfor?' Was not this the laconic retort of the philosophical builder (in Mr. Sullivan's inimitable picture in Fun) to the householder who complained that the brand-new tenement which he had leased had collapsed under simple pressure from the forefinger? One is reminded of 'Wodgertouchitfor?' in reading a recent case just decided in the Queen's Bench Division, in which the plaintiff, a working bricklayer, obtained 25*l.* damages under the Employers' Liability Act for injuries sustained by him in demolishing a chimney stack. The bricklayer had been directed by his employer's foreman 'to take a pickaxe, and, standing on a ladder placed on a scaffold, to pull a stack of chimneys down.' He objected to the pickaxe as an unsafe implement under the circumstances, and used a chisel instead. He had got down three feet of the stacks when the residuum suddenly caved in, throwing down ladder, working bricklayer, chisel and all. The man was badly hurt and brought a stiff action for compensation. With the legal bearings of the case I have nothing whatever to do, but it may be considered as a slightly remarkable one, inasmuch as it had been four times before the Court, and even after the last verdict the defendant wanted to appeal. 'Oh no,' quoth Mr. Baron Pollock, in refusing the application, 'it is for the interest of the suitors that there should be no more litigation.' I should say so, indeed. 'Wodgertouchitfor?'

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, February 17; Mr. Crawford in the chair. The subject for discussion, 'That Trial by Jury should be abolished in civil cases,' was opened by Mr. W. E. Windsor, followed by Mr. W. M. Woodhouse.—Mr. W. T. Wilkinson and Mr. W. R. Kinipple opposed. The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative, Mr. Allen; in the negative, Messrs. Watson, Maudesley, Blagden, and Curtis. Mr. Windsor replied. On the motion being put to the meeting, it was lost by a majority of 9. There was a large number of members present. At the next meeting of the society, on Tuesday, February 24, Mr. F. K. Munton will deliver an address on 'The Outlook for Law Students,' to be followed by a discussion. Any gentlemen interested in the subject, whether members of the society or not, are invited to attend.

LIVERPOOL.—The next meeting of this association will be held at the Law Library on Monday, the 23rd inst. The chair will be taken at 5.30 P.M. by R. A. Hampson, Esq, Solicitor. Subject for discussion: 'A., a builder, was employed to build a house under an agreement with a landowner, the agreement providing that C. & Co., a firm of ironfounders (selected by the landowner's architect), should do certain work on the premises, for which the builders were to pay. C. & Co. employed their own workmen. B., one of the builder's workmen, was injured by the negligence of one of C. & Co.'s workmen. Can B., in an action, recover damages against C. & Co.?' (Johnson v. Lindsay, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 581; 23 Q. B. Div. 508).—Mr. W. H. T. Brown in the affirmative; Mr. F. J. Priest in the negative.—The subject for discussion at the joint debate with the Leeds Law Students' Society was decided in the negative by the unanimous judgment of the Court.

BETTING BY BOYS.—Lord Herschell has introduced a Bill to render penal the inciting of youths or boys to betting. He proposes to make it a misdemeanour if any one, for the purpose of earning commission, reward, or other profit, sends to a person whom he knows to be an 'infant' any circular, notice, letter, telegram, or other document which invites, or may reasonably be implied to invite, the person receiving it to make a bet or to enter into or take any share or interest in a wagering transaction, or to apply to any person or at any place with a view to obtaining information or advice for the purpose of any bet, or for information as to any race, fight, game, sport, or other contingency upon which betting is generally carried on. For such a misdemeanour the penalty is to be imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, or a fine not exceeding 100*l.*, or both imprisonment and fine. If the document is sent to any one at a University, college, school, or other place of education the person sending it is to be deemed to have known that the recipient was an 'infant,' unless he proves that he had reasonable ground for believing him to be of full age.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM FEBRUARY 23 TO FEBRUARY 28.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	February 23	February 24	February 25	February 26	February 27	February 28
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	—	Northwich	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	Thirsk	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Ashborne	Ilkeston	Burton	—	—
47	Judge Powell	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Christchurch	Bournemouth	Wimborne	—	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12.

Schroder v. The Merchants' Marine Insurance Co. (Lim.) (application of defendants from judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict, findings and judgment at trial before Denman, J., and special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

Wolff v. May (application of plaintiff in person for new trial on appeal from judgment of nonsuit, at trial before Stephen, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Granted.

Walklin v. Johns (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Charles, J., and a common jury in Middlesex).—Judgment for defendant.

Armitage v. Hornsby & Sons (Lim.) (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment of nonsuit at trial before Denman, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Refused.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14.

No sitting.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 16.

Franks v. Viner (appeal of plaintiff for leave to enter judgment in accordance with the verdict of jury or reverse refusal of judge to enter judgment).—New trial ordered.

Rowcliffe v. Goldthorp (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 10, discharging master's order for commission to Australia).—Dismissed.

Urmston (Treasurer, &c.) v. Whitelegg Bros. (Q.B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated November 5, on appeal from judgment of County Court).—Dismissed.

Oakley v. Marston (appeal of defendant from judgment of Pollock, B., dated November 7, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Neil and another v. Hayward (appeal of defendant in person from judgment of Day, J., dated June 10, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

Great Grimsby Ice Company (Lim.), Owners of the Smack Almoner, and others v. Owners of the General Gordon (appeal of defendants from judgment of Butt, J., dated June 12).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18.

Stoomvaart Maatschappy Nederland and others v. Owners of the Marpessa and freight (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Butt, J., dated July 22).—Dismissed.

Elmore & Scott v. Owners of Steamship Dione (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Butt, J., dated August 8).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12.

Bown v. Centaur Cycle Company (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated November 19).—Settled.

Gibbens v. Kenrick (apeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 7, restraining defendants from acting on resolution to wind up company).—Stand over.

Saxby v. Thomas (appeal of defendant from judgment of Romer, J., dated December 16).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13.

In re Halifax Sugar Refining Company (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of executors of Hugh M'Calmont, dec., from order of Stirling, J., dated December 16, directing executors to be placed on contributory list).—Dismissed.

In re Sir E. H. Page-Turner, Bart., dec. (construction). Maberly v. Blaydes (appeal of defendant Rev. F. H. M. Blaydes from order of Kekewich, J., dated November 29, on originating summons and notice of contention by Lady A. P. T. Guest).—Allowed.

In re John Lawrenson, dec. (construction). Payne-Collier v. Vyse (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Pearson, J., dated July 1, 1885; drawn up in December, 1890).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14.

No sitting.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 16.

No sitting.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 17.

Tucker v. Tucker (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Charles, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Settled.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18.

Corporation of the Hall of Arts and Sciences (commonly known as the 'Royal Albert Hall') v. Dowager Countess of Winchilsea and another (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Stephen, J., and a jury in Middlesex).—Cur. adv. vult.

Foa v. A. J. White (Lim.) (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., and special jury at Leeds).—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

Rota of Registrars.

Monday, February 23. — Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Tuesday, February 24.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Wednesday, February 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Thursday, February 26.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Friday, February 27.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Saturday, February 28.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

United Law Society.—The usual weekly meeting was held on Monday, Mr. Common in the chair. Mr. G. L. Bannerman moved 'That cremation be made compulsory by Act of Parliament,' and referred to the opinion of Mr. Justice Stephen to the effect that it was not illegal in this country. Mr. Meyer opposed the motion in a maiden speech of some ability. The motion gave rise to a very interesting discussion, in which Messrs. G. D. Elliman, Herbert Smith, F. B. Moyle, D. McMillan, M. Ahmad, J. L. V. S. Williams, A. K. Common, J. R. Atkin, and W. S. Sherrington joined. Mr. Bannerman replied. A vote was taken, when the motion was lost by a large majority. The subject for discussion on the 23rd inst. is the Chinese immigration question in the colonies.

Shakespeare's Birthplace.—Lord Morley, the Lord Chairman, had before him on February 17 the Bill to vest in certain trustees the property in Stratford-upon-Avon known as Shakespeare's Birthplace, and to provide for the maintenance in connection therewith of a library and museum, and, after the usual formalities had been gone through, the Bill was allowed to pass through committee. The trustees named in the Bill are the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Warwick, the High Steward of the Borough of Stratford-upon-Avon, the justices of the peace and town clerk, the vicar of the parish, the master of the Free Grammar School ex officio, and Ernest Edward Baker, the Rev. Charles Evans, Charles Edward Flower, Edgar Flower, Henry Graves, Frederick Haines, Sir Arthur Hodgson, K.C.M.G., Henry Irving, Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B., and Samuel Timmins, to be denominated the trustees and guardians of Shakespeare's birthplace.

Mr. Justice Denman.—Mr. Justice Denman, who has been absent from Court for some weeks past on account of indisposition, resumed his judicial duties on Monday the 16th inst., when he attended at Queen's Bench Judges Chambers, and disposed of a long list of summonses.

Coroners' Inquests and the Payment of Jurors.—In thirteen of the counties of England and Wales jurors attending coroners' inquests have hitherto been paid fees ranging from 4*d.* to 1*s.* each, and in the rest of the country nothing. When the county of London was formed it was found by the London County Council that, whereas coroners' jurors in that part of Surrey within the new county received fees, no remuneration was paid to those of Middlesex and Kent. The Sanitary Committee of the Council have now presented a report to the Council, which the latter have adopted, disallowing fees in all the three counties, so far as they are comprised in the county of London. The committee, in their report, say that the coroners themselves declined to give any opinion as to the payment or non-payment of jurors. 'But,' add the committee, 'we think that there can be but little question that on the whole the principle of the non-payment of jurymen is the soundest. Every citizen is expected to share to some extent in the administration of the law, and to make the necessary sacrifices for so doing. To many persons it is doubtless the cause of loss to serve upon the coroner's jury, and in the case of workmen it may be a serious matter We do not, however, think that the payment of the fee of a shilling goes very far in reducing the hardship; and, indeed, we believe that in a large number of cases the fee is not taken by the jurymen at all. It has been pointed out that the shilling fee is only tempting to a certain class of persons who may not be the most desirable class from which to select jurymen. We think any system of payment, to be really just, should not only be extended to the whole country, but should be based upon the real cost to the individual jurymen of the time given to the duty. As this would entail an enormous expense, and is practically impossible, we have come to the conclusion that no fee should be paid for this service.'

BIRTHS.

On Feb. 15, at Chapel Allerton, Leeds, the wife of Arthur Thomas Perkins, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On Feb. 13, at 11 Kensington Square, the wife of E. B. Westherall, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On Feb. 13, at 37 Norland Square, W., the wife of George Wallace, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Feb. 6, at the Presbyterian Church, Rangoon, Edward Upton Eddis, Barrister-at-Law, to Ela Usher, daughter of Robert Binning, Dowanhill, Glasgow.

On Feb. 12, at Karachi, Lucas White King, Deputy-Commissioner, Dera Ismail Khan, Punjaub, eldest son of Deputy-Surgeon-General H. King, of Dublin, to Geraldine Adelaide Hamilton, eldest daughter of the late Alfred Harmsworth, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

On Feb. 12, at Holy Trinity Church, Southwark, Cyril Lloyd Jones, M.A., M.D., late of Caius College, Cambridge, and the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of 2 Ashley Gardens, Victoria Street, S.W., and Blackfriars Road, S.E., second surviving son of the late Frederick Charles Jones, M.D., to Catherine Gertrude (Katie), youngest daughter of Dr. John Sleeman, of Southwark Bridge Road, S.E.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 7, Caroline Dorothea, beloved wife of Captain Barrington Crake, Rifle Brigade, and daughter of the late Brent Spencer Follett, Q.C.

On Feb. 15, at Holmlea, Ryde, Isle of Wight, Arthur Chichester Crookshank, late Chief Magistrate of Sarawak, Borneo, son of the late Colonel Chichester Crookshank, K.H. (33rd Duke's Own Regiment), and grandson of the late Right Hon. Sir Alexander Crookshank, Chief Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE Lord Chancellor sat for the greater part of last week in Appeal Court I., which was occupied with the hearing of Admiralty appeals and appeals from the Queen's Bench Division. His lordship's attendance was due to the absence of Lord Justice Lopes owing to the illness of Lady Lopes. On Tuesday last the lord justice sat with the second Appeal Court, but on Wednesday Lord Justice Lindley and Lord Justice Kay sat alone, and took interlocutory appeals from the Chancery Division.

As to the acceptance of any reduced pension by a judge suffering from illness, it may be well to call attention to section 14 of the Judicature Act, 1873, by which, as read with 39 Geo. III. c. 110, s. 7; 53 Geo. III. c. 153; 6 Geo. IV. c. 82, s. 10; 6 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 9; and 6 Geo. IV. c. 84, s. 4, Her Majesty may grant to the Lord Chief Justice a pension of 4,000*l.*, to the Master of the Rolls a pension of 3,750*l.*, and to any other judge of the Supreme Court a pension of 3,500*l.*, upon any of those learned judges having served fifteen years, or having unhappily become 'disabled by permanent infirmity from the performance of the duties' of their office. Neither the Judicature Act nor any other Act we know of contains anything about a reduced pension. It may be added that the late Mr. Justice Hill and the late Mr. Justice Honeyman retired on a pension (of what amount we know not) within about two years of their appointment.

THE Penal Servitude Bill, recently brought in by the Home Secretary, proposes to introduce what we venture to think is a very desirable alteration in the administration of the criminal law. Under the present law the least term of penal servitude which can be awarded is a term of five years. There has long been a very general impression that this minimum is excessive, and the Home Secretary's bill proposes to reduce it to three years, and also to empower the Court to substitute a sentence of imprisonment for a sentence of penal servitude. Section 1 provides that, where under any enactment a Court has power to award penal servitude, 'the sentence may, at the discretion of the Court, be for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding either five years or any greater period authorised by the enactment.' By the same section it is further provided that, 'where under any Act now in force or hereafter to be passed a Court is empowered or required to award a sentence of penal servitude, the Court may in its discretion, unless any future Act otherwise expressly provides, award imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.' It is proposed that these alterations shall come into operation on October 1 next.

THE debate in the House of Lords on the second reading of the Tithes Bill is a very instructive one, and we think all interested in the subject will do well to study it carefully. In particular it is of importance to bear in mind that, as Lord Salisbury pointed out, the bill, in expressly substituting the owner for the occupier as the person on whom tithe is to be levied, is really returning to the original policy of the great Tithe Commutation Act of 1836. 'The present state of things,' observed his lordship, 'by which the payment of the tithe and the risk of all alteration in the value of the tithe fall upon the farmer, which is a state of things over a large part of the country, certainly was not contemplated by the Act of 1836;' and, no doubt, the words of section 80 of that Act contemplate that the precise sum which the occupier has paid to the titheowner he shall afterwards recover from his landlord. For various reasons, however, it has long been a common form in all written contracts of tenancy that the tenant shall bear and pay the tithe-rentcharge. In future this common form will be absent, but the landlord will in most cases take care that the rent is increased by a sum equivalent to the tithe-rentcharge. The bill will, no doubt, be considerably amended before it is returned to the House of Commons, and the Archbishop of Canterbury's important point, that the tithe-owner ought to have a right to take possession of land seemingly valueless for cultivation, is likely to find much favour in the Upper House, though it will find but little in the Lower.

'Quid leges sine moribus?' asked Horace. The modern legislator would reverse the order, and say, 'Quid mores sine legibus.' Proposals are made in the present Parliament to interfere with and regulate almost every relation of life, as well as many professions and callings, from architects to midwives. Children are, of course, the especial care of the philanthropic press and M.P.s, and the bill to amend the law relating to their custody is in a fair way to become an Act. The bill is a short one of six sections, and gives the Court power to refuse a parent the custody of his child, and to enforce repayment by the parent of the cost of bringing up the child when the child has been maintained by another person or boarded out by the poor-law guardians. A special clause is devoted to the question of religious belief, and the right of the parent is recognised to prescribe the faith of the child even in cases in which he or she is judged unfit to have the custody of the child. The Court, however, has a discretion, and is entitled to consult the wishes of the child. It will be a great boon if some such legislation as this will avail to diminish the number of actions, some painful and others scandalous, in which benevolence has not been accompanied by wisdom or discretion.

Another measure founded on the maxim that to 'spare the rod is to spoil the child' is Mr. Matthews's bill to amend the Summary Jurisdiction Acts with respect to the punishment of youthful offenders, which empowers a Court of summary jurisdiction, with or without proceeding to conviction, and without prejudice to its other powers, to adjudge the offender to be whipped. No regard is had to women's rights in this respect, as the whipping is confined to males. The bills debated a few days ago in the House of Lords intended to prevent infant betting and the distribution of betting circulars are of a still more parental—some would say grandmotherly—character. It is doubtful, however, whether they are calculated to be so repressive of this particular evil as the course which was taken many years ago by the present Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Goschen, though he obtained a first-class in classics in 1853, did not take his degree until 1875, and consequently his name appeared in the calendar for many years as the Senior Commoner of Oriel. Accordingly a money-lender sent a circular to Mr. Goschen as well as to all the other undergraduates, and must have been more surprised than pleased when the right hon. gentleman—who was then either a Cabinet Minister or a director of the Bank of England—published in the Times the circular in full, with the money-lender's name, and accompanied it with a letter of his own.

There will, however, be general approval of Lord Herschell's effort to mitigate this abominable nuisance. The Peers, who discussed the bill on Monday last, were unanimous in adopting the principle, and contributed some interesting examples of the extent to which the evil had grown. Lord Aberdeen mentioned that his son (only twelve years of age) had already received communications from the money-lending community, inducements being held out to the boy to borrow money, which (as he was considerately informed) his father would be happy to repay on his behalf. Legislation which shall provide an adequate and summary remedy for the admitted evil is not, however, so simple as it appeared at first sight to some of the Peers who supported Lord Herschell. The Lord Chancellor, with the shrewd common sense for which he is renowned, made a suggestion which was adopted, and at any rate secured the summary character of the measure, without which, indeed, its effect would be little felt. Lord Salisbury also summed up the discussion with some caustic but practical remarks, and the public will look with considerable anxiety for the appearance of the bill in its amended shape.

Besides Lord Herschell's bill, which has passed the second reading, Mr. Pickersgill has given notice of his intention to move in the House of Commons that the laws relating to gaming ought to be consolidated and amended; and Mr. Morton has, with indifferent success, endeavoured to elicit from Mr. Matthews a definition of 'unlawful game' with especial reference to baccarat 'club prosecutions.' It is, therefore, evident that some alteration of the law is impending. Nothing can exceed the complexity and difficulties of the existing statutes. They were, however, very fully and carefully reviewed by Mr. Justice Hawkins in Jenks v. Turpin, 53 Law J. Rep. Chanc. M. C. 161. In that case it was held that the proprietor of the Park Club and four members of the committee could be convicted under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38, for using and managing the club for unlawful gaming, but that the players could not be convicted for assisting by playing, the game played being baccarat, which Mr. Justice Hawkins held to be an 'unlawful game.' Other unlawful games are 'ace of hearts, pharaoh, basset, and hazard,' by virtue of 12 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 2; passage and other games with dice, except backgammon, by virtue of 13 Geo. II. c. 19; and 'roulet, otherwise roly-poly,' by virtue of 18 Geo., II. c. 24; and in Jenks v. Turpin Mr. Justice Hawkins inclined to think that any game of mere chance was an unlawful game.

The Financial News of Thursday last very properly calls attention to a new feature in prospectuses. 'The customary waiver clause relating to contracts which may be within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, is,' so says our contemporary, 'now supplemented by one of almost sublime audacity.' In a prospectus recently issued, it appears that the following words occur: 'Applicants for shares shall be deemed absolutely to waive all rights to compensation under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890.' In the opinion of many, the waiver clause in respect to section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, is of doubtful validity (see, e.g., 'Palmer on Companies,' p. 58; 'Lindley on Company Law,' p. 92). If such a waiver clause be invalid, à fortiori will the new one be? But, looking to the maxim, 'Cuilibet licet renunciare juri pro se introducto,' we incline to think that in either case the waiver clause would be good. Perhaps Mr.

Warmington may see his way to coming forward with an amending bill to make the waiver clause in either case bad. The matter is a very serious one.

Mr. Oldroyd, Sir Matthew White Ridley, and others have introduced a little bill, amending the Trust Investment Act, 1889, to authorise trustees to invest 'in nominal, inscribed, or debenture stock, or in mortgages, debentures, or other securities issued, or to be issued by the corporation of any municipal borough, whether according to the returns of the last census prior to the date of investment the population exceeds fifty thousand or not.' It is necessary to add that this bill is only to extend to England and Wales. It is startling enough as it is, but the wildest imprudence would hardly suggest its extension to Ireland. A New Tipperary, or even an Old Tipperary, debenture would hardly be saleable at par.

The plaintiff in an action is allowed very wide scope in framing his reply to the defence; he is not restricted to a joinder of issue, but may set up in answer to the defence any matter which he thinks relevant, so long as he does not contradict his own statement of claim. Under the old system of pleading, generally speaking, the defendant had a similar range in rejoining; but now, whatever new matter may be contained in the reply, the defendant must apply to the Court for leave if he wishes to rejoin specially, 'no pleading subsequent to reply other than a joinder of issue being allowed without leave of the Court or a judge' (Order XXIII., rule 2). Curiously enough, however, these words are so wide that they refuse to a defendant who has set up a counterclaim the wide right of replying which is possessed by an ordinary plaintiff, and this in spite of the general principle that a counterclaim is for practical purposes to be treated as a cross-action. If he wishes to reply to his opponent's defence-to-counterclaim ('rejoin to the reply-to-counterclaim' is the unfortunate expression sanctioned by the rules) otherwise than by joining issue, he must apply for leave. This appears to be an unjustifiable anomaly, probably due to oversight, since the same reasons are applicable to the latter case as to the former, and the latter case is not more liable to abuse than the former. A few words in Order XXII. would remove a difficulty which may not often arise, but which, whenever it arises, causes quite needless expense.

In the recent case of Budgett & Co. v. Binnington & Co., 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 1, the Court of Appeal had to decide the question whether the owner of a ship or the owner of the cargo was to bear the loss arising from a delay in unloading the vessel caused by a strike amongst the dock-labourers at the port of discharge. The Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of the Divisional Court, held that the loss must fall upon the owner of the cargo. Lord Justice Lindley, in giving judgment, said: 'I protest against the idea of a shipowner being held responsible for a strike of dock-labourers; the shipowner does not hire them, he cannot discharge them, and in no sense are they his servants. It cannot, therefore, be said that by reason of such strike the shipowners here prevented the freighters from performing their part of the contract.' The frequency of dock-strikes at the present time makes the decision one of great practical importance to merchants and shipowners.

An important point of building society law that has never been previously decided came before Justices Wills and Vaughan Williams in the case of In re An Arbitration between Knight and the Tabernacle Building Society (Notes of Cases, p. 28). Their lordships held that they had no jurisdiction to order arbitrators, appointed to determine a dispute between an incorporated building society and one of its members, to state a case raising a question of law for the decision of the High Court. Under section 36 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, arbitrators 'may, at the request of either party, state a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Judicature on any question of law.' In the opinion of their lordships that provision gives the arbitrators complete jurisdiction over the matter in dispute, free from the control of any Court, unless they choose to state a case. According to that view 'the request of either party' that a case should be stated is to be of no avail unless it coincides with the arbitrators' notion of what is necessary under the circumstances of the case. Seeing that the word 'may' is used in the section. and not 'shall,' this conclusion seems to be inevitable. The arbitrators have a discretion. They are not to incur needless expense simply because one of the parties considers that there is some question of law that the arbitrators cannot themselves satisfactorily adjudicate upon. It is only if the arbitrators are personally in doubt, and desire to have the opinion of the Court upon a question of law, that they are at liberty to state a case; but they cannot be compelled to do so.

Section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, empowers the Court to order an arbitrator to state a special case for the opinion of the Court; and section 24 renders that statute applicable to every arbitration under any Act passed before or after the commencement of the Act of 1889, 'except so far as this Act is inconsistent with the Act regulating the arbitration, or with any rules or procedure authorised or recognised by that Act.' It was urged that the Arbitration Act, 1889, extended to the case of arbitrators appointed under the Building Societies Act, 1874. Mr. Justice Wills and Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams could not, however, be prevailed upon to adopt that view. Their lordships thought that it would be highly 'inconsistent' with section 36 of the Building Societies Act, 1874, that arbitrators should be ordered to state a case when the substance of that section was that the Court should have jurisdiction only where its assistance was invoked by the arbitrators themselves. And with this opinion it seems impossible to disagree.

The Court of Appeal have, in In re Mundy's Settled Estates (Notes of Cases, ante, p. 3) refused to give the narrow construction to the meaning of a 'settlement' under the Settled Land Act, 1882, which was given, though with hesitation, in the Court below. A testator by his will gave real estate, and money to be laid out in the purchase of real estate, to trustees to be held upon the trusts of a certain settlement. The trustees of the settlement were with one other person also trustees and executors of the will. Did the settlement and will form one settlement within section 22 of the Act above referred to? The section mentions, 'any deed, will, ... or other instrument, or any number of instruments.' In Wolstenholme and Turner's fifth edition, p. 218, it is stated that, 'where land is settled by reference to the limitations of an existing settlement, the result is the same as if the limitations referred to were repeated. A separate settlement is created, and capital money under the first settlement cannot be applied to pay charges on land comprised in the settlement made by reference. If this were not so a solvent estate under the first settlement might be made the means of paying the charges on an insolvent estate comprised in the second settlement. That the reverse proposition holds good is not so clear, and may depend on the terms of the second settlement. It seems clear that an order appointing trustees of one settlement would not constitute them trustees of the other settlement.' Now, in In re Mundy's Settled Estates the application to the Court was made by the tenant-for-life asking that the trustees of the settlement might be directed to approve of certain drainage works on property within the settlement, and it was desired that some of the money directed by the will to be laid out in the purchase of land, but which had not been so laid out, should be applied in defraying the cost of those works. The Court of Appeal decided that the money in question was 'capital money,' as the express language of section 33 of the principal Act declares that money under a settlement in the hands of trustees, and 'liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement,' may be applied as such. Further, their lordships held that the settlement and will together constituted one settlement within the meaning of the Act, and granted the application of the tenant-for-life.

'Lady Delmar' is the title of a novel written by Mr. Thomas Terrell and Mr. T. L. White, and published by Trischler & Co. It is not within our province to comment on the socialistic delineations, misaristocratic sentiments, and religious disquisitions which are scattered broadcast through it, nor on the transcendental alchemistic feat achieved by the Jew lapidary in the manufacture of millions and millions' worth of rubies and emeralds, an idea worthy of Mr. Rider Haggard's imagination. We are commonplace matter-of-fact people we lawyers, and infinitely more than the above do we realise the last few lines of the author's description of the Temple: 'Go yourself to the Temple, not with a guide, but alone; wander about its old courts and passages, wander into the halls and chiefly into the church sacred to the memories of the Knights Templars, and, if you are not an iconoclast, you will see for yourself what we feel about it.' The unscrupulous aristocrat's trick in marrying the heroine in Scotland without banns and before the parties had resided in Scotland for twenty-one days opens some questions of Scotch marriage law upon which we, from our happy ignorance of that branch of jurisprudence, are unable to form an opinion. With the remark that the English counsel is too clever for the wicked aristocrat, and in the end shows the marriage to be valid, we commend the story to our readers.

THE ELECTORAL DISABILITIES REMOVAL BILL.

We took occasion last year (Law Journal, May 17, 1890), in connection with the bill then brought in to relieve soldiers, sailors, and policemen from disfranchisement by absence on duty, to examine the existing law on the subject, with the view of considering whether the proposed legislation was satisfactory. The result was to show that there were very strong grounds for contending that the distinction taken in recent times between the absence of a man on duty and his absence for his own business or pleasure—the former being held a break of residence, the latter no break—is as unsound in law as it is wanting in common sense. The authority in its favour is weakened by the great reluctance shown by the Irish judges in adopting it, and, as we may now add, by the doubt that must be felt, since the observations made in Watt v. M'Guire, 16 Sess. Cas. 4th ser. 263, whether it would be adopted in Scotland. It seemed probable that, if the decisions which have created the disqualification could be brought for review before the Court of Appeal, they would be overruled, and the electors affected would obtain a full restitution of the rights they formerly enjoyed. We therefore expressed the opinion that no legislation affecting the matter would be adequate unless it went directly to the root of the evil by sweeping away the distinction altogether, for an imperfect measure would frustrate the efforts which might otherwise be successful to get complete relief by means of an appeal. Since the bill left the distinction in full force—with the addition of an implied legislative sanction—in all cases of absence for more than four months at a time, it could not be regarded as satisfactory.

It is disappointing to find that the bill, as reintroduced this year, is not, except in its extension to others besides soldiers, sailors, and policemen, a larger measure than that of last session. Fortunately, there are indications that it will not be allowed to pass in its present shape; there is room, therefore, for hoping that it will come out of committee with amendments which will make it—what it is not now—a valuable and useful measure. We propose in this article to point out in detail what we consider to be the faults of form and substance of the bill as drafted, and to submit an alternative clause which, we think, would correct those faults.

It may be noted, in passing, that the very title of the bill is somewhat ill-chosen, for it would be better to confine the word 'disabilities' to personal incapacities, such, for instance, as are dealt with by the Police Disabilities Removal Act, not to use it, as here, of the failure to qualify through what has been held to be non-residence. 'Electoral Disqualifications Removal Bill' would be an improvement.

The substance of the bill is contained in section 2, as follows:—

> A man shall not be disqualified from being registered
> (a) in the Parliamentary register of electors for a county or borough in respect of his inhabitant occupation of a dwelling-house or lodgings or his occupation of any land or tenement; or
> (b) in the local government register of electors for a county or borough in respect of his occupation of any house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, building, land, or tenement, by reason only that during part of the qualifying period not exceeding four months at any one time he has in the performance of any duty arising from or incidental to any office, service, or employment held or undertaken by him been absent from his dwelling-house or lodgings, or not resided in or within the required distance from such county or borough.

'A man.' Since the measure is to apply to electors who need not necessarily be of the male sex, for 'man' should be read 'person,' the term adopted in the Municipal Corporations Acts and County Electors Act.

'Shall not be disqualified from being registered.' Would it not be as well to add 'or from voting'? No doubt the meaning is clear enough, but it is clumsy in point of style to confer the franchise indirectly by merely authorising registration.

'His inhabitant occupation of a dwelling-house' is an awkward phrase and questionable English. 'His inhabitant occupation of . . . lodgings, is doubly objectionable, for though 'inhabitant occupier' is a term well known to election law it has nothing to do with the lodger franchise.

'In the local government register.' What is this? Does it include the burgess roll of a borough for all purposes, for the purposes, that is, of the Municipal Corporations Acts as well as for those of the Local Government Act?

'Has not resided in or within the required distance from.' 'The required distance' is a strange expression for the distance within which a man is required to live. What is meant is the 'authorised' or 'allowed' distance.

The above are defects of form rather than of substance; the following are more important.

Residence is required by law as an element of other qualifications than those mentioned in the section—e.g. of the qualifications in respect of reserved rights in certain boroughs, and of the qualification of occupiers who, not being entitled to elect, may yet be elected to county or borough councils. There can, of course, be no real intention to introduce a fresh anomaly into the law by leaving the conditions of residence for these purposes on their present footing, yet the words as they stand certainly have that effect.

According to the most obvious interpretation of the clause a man would not be disqualified though he were away off and on for practically the whole qualifying period, provided that no one spell of absence exceeded four months. This presumably is the meaning of section 3 of the Police Disabilities Removal Act—a section, by the way, that the bill ought to repeal as no longer necessary—which allows 'temporary absence . . . in the execution of duty as a police officer during a part of the qualifying period not exceeding four consecutive months.' On the other hand, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 3, a statute sometimes cited as a precedent for the proposed legislation, entitles a man to be registered and to vote as an inhabitant occupier, though he has let his house furnished 'during a part of the qualifying period not exceeding four months in the whole.' There is great difference between four months at one time and four months in the whole. The difference between permitting absence on duty for four months at a time and permitting it for the whole qualifying period, though slight, is likely to prove vexatious.

As we read the clause it provides that while absent on duty for the four months an elector is, for the purpose of a 10*l.* occupation, or old burgess, qualification, excused altogether from the requirement of residence. Those to whom the bill does not apply must, if temporarily absent, be constructively resident—that is, they must retain throughout a home in the qualifying district to which they have either right or permission to return at any time, and intention to return whenever it suits their convenience or pleasure to do so. Thus, instead of assimilating the positions of those absent on duty and those absent for other causes, the bill creates a new distinction between them. What its precise effect may be is not quite clear; difficult cases may arise under it; but the following may be put as illustrating its operation:—

If a 10*l.* occupier, having duties which require him to be absent almost continuously throughout the qualifying six months, has a residence kept up for him, and is allowed a day's leave when he might return, then, provided that day's leave occurs not more than four months from the beginning or from the end of the six months, he is not disqualified. It would not be necessary that he should return; he would be constructively resident if he had the legal power to do so. But an occupier whose leave occurred a little earlier or a little later would be disqualified. On the other hand, an occupier whose duties required him to be absent during the last four months of the six might, so far as we can see, sell his house as soon as he goes away without thereby losing his title to a vote.

We doubt very much whether those responsible for the bill intend these results. Why in the two former cases, where the man has in substance the character and interests of a resident, should his vote be made to depend on the date at which he gets his holiday, a wholly unimportant detail? Why in the last case should a vote be acquired by one who for the greater part of the qualifying period has been to no intent or purpose a resident? Can any good reason be given for thus increasing the confusion and complications of the law, instead of resorting to the simple remedy of obliterating the distinction between absence on duty and other absence?

We append a clause embodying the alterations which we suggest should be made in section 2:—

The absence of any person during the whole or part of the qualifying period from his dwelling-house or lodgings in any county or borough, or from his residence in, or within the authorised distance from, any county or borough, shall not, by reason only that such absence is required for the performance of some duty arising from or incidental to an office, service, or employment, held or undertaken by him, disqualify him

(a) from being registered or enrolled or from voting as a Parliamentary or county elector or burgess for such county or borough in respect of a household qualification or in respect of any qualification for which residence in, or within a certain distance from, such county or borough is required;

(b) from being registered or voting as a Parliamentary elector for such county or borough in respect of a lodger qualification;

(c) from being registered or enrolled as an occupier entitled to be elected, or from being elected a councillor or alderman for such county or borough;

(d) from being elected chairman of the council of such county or mayor of such borough.

We have not here dealt with the question of disqualification through absence in prison, though we think that on this point also the law is unsatisfactory, and ought to be amended by the bill. The effect of the decision in Powell v. Guest, 34 Law J. Rep. C. P. 69; 16 Com. B. Rep. (N.S.) 72, is that imprisonment, after conviction, out of the qualifying district constitutes a break of residence, and disqualifies for the 10*l.* occupation franchise. The Court of Session in Scotland has recently decided in a case already mentioned—Watt v. M'Guire—that imprisonment does not disqualify for the household franchise. It is difficult to see how the two cases can be reconciled in principle; and, whatever may be said in favour of a disqualification imposed on convicted criminals, we fail to see why the infliction of this penalty should depend on the situation of the prison where they are confined.

EXTENSION OF RELIEF AGAINST FORFEITURE.

Section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which gives very full powers of relief against forfeiture of a lease for causes other than non-payment of rent (which is still provided for by the Common Law Procedure Acts), contains an excepting subsection of the greatest importance. This is subsection 6, by which section 14 does not extend to covenants against assignments or underletting, or conditions for forfeiture on bankruptcy, or conditions for forfeiture on taking in execution of lessee's interest, or covenants in mining leases to allow inspection.

Mr. T. H. Bolton, Mr. Warmington, Mr. Kimber, and Mr. Cobb have brought in a bill to amend the Conveyancing Act, 1881, with reference to leaseholds, and the first thing the bill does, is, sans phrase, to repeal subsection 6 of section 14, in order, as is said in a very full memorandum prefixed to the bill, to allow the Court to possess full power to relieve from forfeiture in all cases upon fair terms. Now, with regard to underletting, there is no doubt that Barrow v. Isaacs, upon which we recently commented (ante, p. 2), has shown great hardship in the existing law. In that case a lessor 'actually ejected' (as the memorandum puts it) 'his lessee for underletting without consent, although it was admitted that such consent could not have been refused if it had been applied for, as the lease contained a provision that the consent was not to be arbitrarily withheld, and that the underlessees were most desirable and responsible parties. In cases like this, and in cases which must frequently occur of a landlord being resident abroad and difficult to get at, while the tenant may have urgent reasons for wishing to underlet, and more than one unexceptionable person may be desirous of becoming undertenant, it seems very hard that the Court should have no power to relieve, especially when it is borne in mind that all reasonable compensation in money must be given as a condition of the relief, and that it is absolutely discretionary with the Court whether relief shall be granted or not. Thus far the bill has our decided approval. But we have some doubt about the removal of the other exceptions. With regard to bankruptcy and taking in execution, it must be borne in mind that, in the absence of these conditions—in the case of bankruptcy, at all events—the landlord might be saddled with a tenant not of his own choosing, whereas, both in the case of an assignment and underlease, the tenant of the landlord's original choice continues liable. Then, again as to the mining covenant. The breach of covenant to allow inspection is so wilful a breach that it is not without reason that it finds a place amongst the existing exceptions. Perhaps, however, the fact that the breach may really be caused in many, if not most, cases by the guilty servants of an innocent master may afford a reason for doing away with the exception.

But the bill goes still further. It not only enables the Court to relieve against forfeiture for assignment or underletting without license, but endeavours to prevent a breach occurring at all. Clause 3 provides that—

> In all leases containing a covenant, condition, or agreement against assigning, underletting, or parting with the possession, or disposing of the land or property leased without license or consent, such covenant, condition or agreement shall be deemed to be subject to a proviso to the effect that such license or consent shall not be unreasonably withheld, and no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine shall be payable for or in respect of such license or consent.

The proviso which it is proposed to require by this clause has, no doubt, been very frequently inserted of late years (see as to the effect of it, Treloar v. Bigge, 43 Law J. Rep. Exch. 95), but the express barring of a pecuniary consideration for the license is as yet unusual (see 'Woodfall,' 14th ed. at p. 679). In many cases, more especially of underletting, perhaps even the strong course of an express bar by Act of Parliament may be justifiable, but it is easy to conceive cases, more especially of assignment, where to require a premium for the license would be perfectly just, and the clause as it stands certainly seems to require alteration.

The bill goes on to provide that, where a lessor is proceeding for a forfeiture, the Court may, 'on application by any person claiming as underlessee any estate or interest in the property comprised in the lease or any part thereof, either in the lessor's action or in any action brought by such person for that purpose, make an order vesting the property,' for the whole time or any part of it, in the underlessee 'upon such conditions as to costs, &c., as the Court in the circumstances of the case should think fit.' Here it is to be observed that all reliance is placed in the Court to do complete justice in the matter. But surely the clause goes too far in allowing the Court to grant the underlessee the whole interest created by the lease. What seems to be perfectly sufficient (assuming the principle to be agreed upon that the underlessee is not to suffer for the lessee's default) is, that the underlessee should continue to enjoy the property for the length of the underlease. Why, because the lessee is in default, should the underlessee get more than he ever contracted to have from anyone?

The only remaining clause in the bill contains a provision that in the Conveyancing Act 'lease' shall include 'agreement for lease,' thus solving the question which appears to have been left open in Coatsworth v. Johnson, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 220, and Swain v. Ayres, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 428.

The New Queen's Counsel.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Her Majesty's Counsel, learned in the law:—Mr. John Edward Barker, M.A., called at the Inner Temple in 1862; Mr. Joseph Francis Leese, B.A., called at the Middle Temple in 1862; Mr. Henry Wilson Worsley-Taylor, B.A., called at the Middle Temple in 1871; and Mr. Robert Alfred M'Call, M.A., LL.D., called at the Middle Temple in 1871.

Unreported Cases.

ASSIZE CASE.

APPRENTICESHIP INDENTURE.

The case of Walter v. Everard, involving an important question of law, was tried at Lincoln before Mr. Justice Grantham and a special jury, on February 25. The plaintiff, who was an auctioneer and valuer with a large business in Lincolnshire, sued the defendant for a balance of 30*l.* due under a covenant in an indenture of apprenticeship, dated May 21, 1886, executed by the defendant at a time when he was under age. The defendant was the son of a farmer who had died some years since, leaving a will, under which the defendant was entitled on his coming of age to a sum of about 4,000*l.* By the indenture of apprenticeship the defendant was bound for a term of four years at a premium of 500*l.*, which was to cover board and lodging for four months in each year. The indenture contained no restrictive covenant by the apprentice against after-trading. A sum of 200*l.* was paid upon its execution, and the balance, 300*l.*, in respect of which the present action was brought, was payable by the defendant on his attaining the age of twenty-one, which happened in December, 1889. The defence rested in the main on the plea of infancy, and there was a counterclaim in respect of the alleged negligence of the plaintiff in discharging his duty under the indenture.—Mr. Gould contended, on the authority of the well-known case of Gilbert v. Fletcher (Cro. Cas. 179), that an infant could not be sued on the covenant in an indenture of apprenticeship, and pointed out that the authority of that case was recognised in the recent case of De Francesco v. Barnum, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 151; 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 63; L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 165. Mr. Dugdale, for the plaintiff, argued that this was an action for necessaries, and that an infant might be sued on a bond for necessaries suitable to his estate, and that Lord Justice Fry, in the course of his judgment in De Francesco v. Barnum, had expressly recognised the teaching of a trade as a necessary in certain circumstances. In answer to questions left by his lordship to the jury, they found that the indenture was a provident and proper arrangement; that the arrangement was necessary if the defendant wished to learn a trade; and that, irrespective of the indenture, the premium was fair and reasonable. They found, however, that the plaintiff had to a certain extent neglected his duty in not exercising sufficient control over the defendant, and expressed an opinion that 50*l.* should be deducted.—His lordship entered judgment for the plaintiff for the balance of his claim after deducting the 50*l.*, but granted a stay of execution.—Mr. Dugdale, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Garrett appeared for the plaintiff; and Mr. Gould for the defendant.

MAYOR'S COURT.

CURIOUS ACTION BY A SOLICITOR.

On February 20, in the Lord Mayor's Court, the case of Hope v. Williams came on for trial before the assistant-judge and jury. The plaintiff, Mr. John Henry Hope, a solicitor, practising at Bell Yard, Temple Bar, E.C., sued the defendant, Miss Elizabeth Williams, an artist, of North Audley Street. It appeared that the present defendant was defendant in an action brought against her in the High Court, and the present plaintiff acted for her. The plaintiff, in cross-examination, said that he had an office with a Mr. Miller, a solicitor, and there were two other solicitors in the same office. Mr. Miller was the solicitor against Miss Williams in the High Court, and the plaintiff admitted that, in the course of doing clerical work for Miller, he had actually made out the writ and statement of claim which was served upon Miss Williams. It was further suggested, in cross-examination, that the plaintiff had never acted towards Miss Williams other than as Miller's clerk; but this was denied. Eventually, before the defence was entered upon, the plaintiff consented to judgment against him, with two guineas agreed costs.—The learned judge said he should report the peculiar circumstances of the case to the Lord Chancellor.

QUARTER SESSIONS.

RATING APPEAL.

At the Tewkesbury Quarter Sessions, on February 18, before Mr. L. Morton Brown, recorder, an appeal in which the Tewkesbury Gas Company (Lim.) were appellants and the Guardians of the Tewkesbury Union respondents, and which was partly heard on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 10th and 11th inst., and adjourned for the decision of the recorder upon several preliminary points of law raised by the appellants, was continued. The learned recorder gave judgment upon the questions raised by the appellants' counsel, in pursuance of the seventh ground of objection mentioned in the notice of appeal to the quarter sessions, which was to the effect that the appellants' hereditaments were not rated according to the annual rateable value thereof appearing in the valuation list in force in the parish of Tewkesbury at the time of the making of the rate. He said the three objections which were urged on behalf of the appellants to be fatal to the rate were founded upon the seventh ground of appeal. First, it was urged that the rate was bad because the requirements of the Acts of Parliament as to the deposit and re-deposit of the valuation list with the overseers, and the posting of notices on the doors of the churches and chapels concerning the last deposit and re-deposit, had not been complied with. Having reviewed the evidence on this point, he (the learned recorder) had come to the conclusion that the appellants had failed to satisfy him that their contention was correct, and he found as a fact that the supplemental valuation list was deposited when and as often as it was incumbent by law it should be, and he found that the necessary notices of the deposit and re-deposit were fully published. That brought him to the second point, 'Was the rate void because section 30 of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122 had not been fully complied with, that section directing a fair copy of the valuation list, signed by three members of the assessment committee, and countersigned by their clerk, to be delivered to the overseers?' In the case before the Court the copy valuation list relates to the parish of Tewkesbury, and as delivered to the overseers undoubtedly and admittedly was not signed by three members of the assessment committee and countersigned by their clerk. It was copied throughout, the signatures being copied as well as the rest of the valuations. He had to decide which was the valuation list in force for the parish of Tewkesbury, the original or the copy delivered to the overseers, and was the omission sufficient to render the rate void? He thought the original valuation list of July 30, 1890, retained by the guardians of the union, must be looked upon as the one in force for the parish of Tewkesbury, and not any copy; and he was not prepared to hold, and did not hold, that the omission he had alluded to invalidated the rate, but he regarded the requirements of the statute as to signature and counter-signature as merely directory. He then came to the third and last objection raised to the rate under the seventh ground of appeal—i.e. that the rate was bad because it did not properly and sufficiently appear in the valuation list at which sum the special properties (among which the Tewkesbury Gas Company's properties appeared) were rated, the contention being that the entries made were uncertain and confusing. He did not think the objection sustained, as he believed any one desirous of ascertaining could ascertain at what these properties were assessed, and he was borne out in this belief by the fact that the appellants themselves were not misled. One further point raised on behalf of the respondents, but which in the face of the above judgment it was almost unnecessary to consider, though one on which perhaps he had better give a decision, remained to be considered. The learned counsel for the respondents contended that it was not open for the appellants to raise any of the objections in the notice of appeal to the Court, which were not specified in the notice of appeal against the valuation list given to the assessment committee, because there could be no failure to obtain relief thereunder until the objections had been heard and determined by the committee. This contention was based on section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39. It appeared to him (the learned recorder) that if objections were allowed to be there raised which had never been previously raised and considered it would be a misnomer to call the proceedings an 'appeal.' After reviewing the various cases decided upon this section, he thought that appellants could not avail themselves of any objections to the rate except those of which notice had been given to the assessment committee, and on which they had, prior to coming there, failed to obtain such relief as they deemed just.—Mr. Moore then applied for a special case to the High Court upon the above points.—Mr. Stewart Sim opposed the application, urging that the arbitration which had been agreed upon in the event of the judgment on the preliminary points being, as it was, in favour of the respondents should be first proceeded with, and then a special case might be granted on these and on any other points which then arise.—The Recorder decided that he could not grant a special case upon points as they arose. but they must conclude the whole appeal and arbitration, and then state any questions upon which the opinion of the High Court was desired by either side.—The Court was then adjourned until the award in the arbitration was given, and the question of costs was also reserved.—Mr. C. H. S. Moore (with Mr. Hugo Young), instructed by Messrs. Moore & Romney, appeared for the appellants; and Mr. J. D. Stewart Sim (with Mr. Alfred Young), instructed by Mr. H. A. Badham, represented the respondents.

COMPANIES (WINDING-UP) ACT, 1890.

ORDER AS TO FEES.

I, THE Right Honourable Hardinge Stanley, Baron Halsbury, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, do, by virtue of the powers vested in me by the Companies (Winding-up) ACT, 1890, direct that the fees in the scale hereto annexed shall, from and after January 1, 1891, be the fees to be paid in respect of proceedings under the said Act.

HALSBURY, C.

Dated December 18, 1890.

SCALE OF FEES.

Table A.

	£	s.	d.
Every petition	1	0	0
Every bond with sureties	0	10	0
Every subpœna or summons	0	3	0
Every order made in Court	1	0	0
Every order made in chambers	0	5	0
Every affidavit filed other than proof of debts	0	2	0
For taking an affidavit or an affirmation, or attestation, upon honour in lieu of an affidavit or a declaration, except for proof of debts, and except declaration by a shorthand writer under rule 16 (Form 6) for each person making the same	0	1	6
And in addition thereto for each exhibit referred to therein and required to be marked	0	1	0
On every proof of debt above 2*l.* (other than proof for workmen's wages under rule 106)	0	1	0
Every application for search other than by petitioner, liquidator, or officer of the company	0	1	0
Every office copy, each folio of seventy-two words	0	0	4
Every application to inspect liquidator's statement lodged with registrar of joint-stock companies under section 15 of the Act	0	2	6
Every copy of, or extract from, such statement, each folio of seventy-two words or figures	0	0	4
Every application by a committee of inspection to the Board of Trade for a special bank account	1	0	0
Every order of the Board of Trade for a special bank account	2	0	0
Every application by a liquidator to an official receiver acting as committee of inspection	0	10	0
Every application under section 15 of the Act to the Board of Trade for payment of money out of the companies liquidation account; and every application for the re-issue of a lapsed cheque or money order in respect of moneys standing to the credit of the companies liquidation account	0	2	6
On one copy of the cash-book showing assets realised, forwarded by the official receiver or liquidator to the Board of Trade, a fee according to the following scale on the gross amount of the assets realised and brought to credit—viz. 1*l.* on every 100*l.* or fraction of 100*l.* up to 5,000*l.*, and 10*s.* on every 100*l.* or fraction of 100*l.* above that amount.
For taxation of costs.—The same fees as those directed to be paid and collected by the order for the time being as to Supreme Court fees.

Table B.

I.—Where the official receiver acts as provisional liquidator only

(a) If the petition is withdrawn or dismissed:—

Such amount as the Court may consider reasonable to be paid by the petitioner (in addition to the fee payable on the petition) in respect of the services of the official receiver as provisional liquidator.

(b) Where a winding-up order is made but the official receiver is not continued as liquidator:—

(1) In respect of every ten members, creditors, and debtors, and every fraction of ten . 0 10 0

Provided that where the net assets of the company are estimated to exceed 500*l.*, three-fifths of the above fee only shall be charged.

(This fee to cover cost of official stationery, printing, books, forms, and postages.)

(2) On the value of the company's property, as estimated in the statement of affairs:—

On the first 5,000*l.* or fraction thereof, 1 per cent.

On the next 20,000*l.* or fraction thereof, ½ per cent.

On the next 75,000*l.* or fraction thereof, ¼ per cent.

On all above, ⅛ per cent.

II.—Where the official receiver is continued as liquidator of the company (including his services as provisional liquidator)

	£	s.	d.
(1) In respect of every ten members, creditors, and debtors, and every fraction of ten	1	0	0
Provided that where the net assets of the company are estimated not to exceed 500*l.*, three-fifths of the above fee only shall be charged.
(This fee to cover cost of official stationery, printing, books, forms, and postages.)
(2) Upon the total assets, including produce of calls on contributories, realised or brought to credit, after deducting sums paid to secured creditors (other than debenture-holders), and not being moneys received and spent in carrying on the business of the company:—
On the first 1,000*l.* or fraction thereof, 5 per cent.
On the next 1,500*l.* or fraction thereof, 4 per cent.
On the next 2,500*l.* or fraction thereof, 3 per cent.
On the next 5,000*l.* or fraction thereof, 2 per cent.
Above 10,000*l.*, 1 per cent.
(3) On the amount distributed in dividend or paid to contributories, &c., half the above percentages.
III.—Travelling, keeping possession, legal and other reasonable expenses of the official receiver, the amount disbursed.
IV.—On every payment, under section 15, of money out of the companies liquidation account, threepence on each pound or fraction of a pound to be charged as follows:—
Where the money consists of unclaimed dividends, on each dividend paid out.
Where the money consists of undistributed funds or balances, on the amount paid out.

Table C.

High bailiff for attending sittings of the Court, under each winding-up order, per case	0	6	0
Serving every petition or subpœna or winding-up or other order (not serviceable by post) within two miles, including affidavit of service	0	3	6
If serviceable by post	0	1	0
Executing every warrant of seizure, or search warrant, or warrant of apprehension, or order of commitment within two miles of Court	0	10	0
Keeping possession under a warrant, for each day the man is actually in possession, including affidavit of possession being actually kept (Not less than 3*s.* 6*d.* of the above sum is to be paid to the man in possession, and his receipt produced.)	0	4	6
High bailiff's, or (in the London district) officer's man, travelling to place of possession, or to execute a warrant of or order of commitment, or to serve a summons or subpœna, or for any other purpose specially directed by the Court, per mile	0	0	5
His time, per day, where distance exceeds ten miles	0	4	6
His expenses, per day	0	4	6
If high bailiff of a County Court or officer of Supreme Court directed by the Court personally to travel, per mile	0	0	7
His time, per day	0	10	0
His expenses, per day	0	10	0

We, the undersigned Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, do hereby sanction the foregoing scales of fees, and do direct that the fees mentioned in Table A shall be taken in money, except when they are to be taken by an officer of the Supreme Court of Judicature, or an officer of the Board of Trade, or an officer in the Companies Registration Office, and that the fees mentioned in Tables B and C shall be taken in money.

The documents to be stamped and the description of stamps to be used shall be as provided in the schedule annexed hereto.

The adhesive stamps shall be judicature fee stamps, when the fee is to be taken by any officer of the Supreme Court of Judicature; they shall be stamps overprinted with the words 'Companies Winding Up,' when the fee is to be taken by the official receiver or any other officer of the Board of Trade; and they shall be the stamps used for the purpose of the 'Companies Act,' when taken by any officer in the Companies Registration Office.

They shall be cancelled by the various Court or other officials by perforation, or in such other manner as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may from time to time direct.

The impressed stamp shall be of such character as the said commissioners may adopt for the purpose.

And we further direct that wherever practicable the stamp shall be affixed or the money paid in respect of every fee before the proceeding is had in respect of which the fee is payable; and that the charge to be made by the London Gazette for the insertion of each notice authorised by the Act or Rules shall be 5*s.*

HERBERT EUSTACE MAXWELL,
SIDNEY HERBERT,
Two of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

Dated December 19, 1890.

The Schedule above referred to.

Proceeding	Document to be stamped	Character of Stamp to be used
Every petition	Petition	Impressed
Every bond with sureties	Bond	Impressed
Every affidavit filed	Affidavit	Impressed or adhesive
Every subpœna or summons	Subpœna or summons	Impressed
Every Order made in Court or Chambers	Order	Impressed
For taking an affidavit or an affirmation, or attestation upon honour in lieu of an affidavit or a declaration	Affidavit	Impressed or adhesive
Every proof of debt above 2*l.*	Proof	Impressed or adhesive
Every application for search	Application	Impressed
Every application to inspect liquidator's statement	Application	Impressed
Every copy or office copy	Office copy	Impressed or adhesive
Every certificate of taxation by any officer of the Court for any costs, charges, or disbursements	Certificate	Impressed or adhesive

ILLNESS OF MR. PLOWDEN.—At West London Police Court, on Tuesday, February 24, Mr. Plowden became seriously unwell, and was attended by Dr. Walker. He left the Court in a cab, and in the morning a telegram was received stating that he was unable to attend to discharge his magisterial duties. A telegram was at once sent off to Bow Street for assistance, and it was not until nearly one o'clock that Sir John Bridge was able to commence the business of the day.

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

The following candidates (whose names are in alphabetical order) were successful at the Preliminary Examinations of the Incorporated Law Society held on February 4 and 5, 1891:—

Abbott, Lionel Cranfield
Adams, Cadwallader Edmund
Anderson, Edgar James Varden
Ashe, St. George
Ayrton, Edwin
Barber, Charles Gilbart
Barchard, Eustace Heywood
Barnes, Goodwin Howard
Bass, Arthur John Vere
Bate, Launcelot Brabant
Bates, Arthur
Battiscombe, Henry James
Bayliffe, Alfred Danvers
Bedford, Herbert
Birt, Ernest William
Blair, Herbert
Brevitt, Arthur Nelson
Brown, Frederick William
Buchanan, William Samuel
Cardell, Maurice George
Cotes, Herbert Victor Merton
Cox, Henry Herbert
Curry, Charles Hector
Daly, Edwin Newton
Daniel, Henry Edwin
Davies, Arthur
Davies, Harry Arthur
Dawson, Harold Worrall
Duffell, Tom Haynes
Ellett, Robert William
Elliott, John Fisher
Ellis, John
Elmslie, John Edward Graham
Francis-Williams, Herbert
Gledhill, Willie
Green, Bernard Nuttall
Gregory, Charles
Haigh, Hubert
Haigh, William Mackenzie
Hales, Percy
Hands, Arthur William
Hankey, Charles Frederick Thornhill
Hardcastle, Guy Ralph
Harris, Alfred
Hartley, Holliday
Heath, George Somerville
Hebblethwaite, Samuel
Henderson, Walter Scott
Hewitt, Joseph
Howard, Arthur Edward
Jackson, Frederick
Jackson, Hugh MacDonald Caunter
Jackson, William
Jesson, Richard Charles
Jones, Gwilym Cleaton
Josselyn, John
Kino, Granville Montague
Kirkup, George Edward Kyle, George
Landau, Isaac
Laurance, Howard
Laycock, William Ewart
Lean, Frederick John
Livesey, Frederick William
M'Candlish, George Glennie Leslie
Marks, Henry
Martinez, Robert John
Nutt, Walden Hubert
Orchard, James William
Outram, Herbert Ridsdale
Parry, Alfred Ivor
Pocock, Ernest William
Pumfrey, Henry
Rastall, Herbert George
Redfern, John Edward
Russell, Edwin
Shortt, Charles Septimus
Skynner, Charles Reginald
Smith, James Robert
Snow, Arthur
Spencely, Hugh
Spencer, Edmund Tyndale
Stanton, Arthur William
Stephens, John
Stevens, Edgcombe
Taylor, Claude Philip Eaton
Thompson, Charles Edward
Tochatti, Frederick Vincent
Tompson, Edward Harvey
Trafford, Wilfred Broughton
Turnbull, Arthur
Vaughan, Herbert
Vaux, Alfred Julian
Walker, Laurence Edward
Watts, Robert Phillip Hooper
Williams, Alfred Benjamin
Wilson, Charles Eustace
Wilson, Walter
Wootten, George Albert

United Law Society.—On February 23, Mr. Common in the chair, Mr. H. D. Woodcock moved: 'That Colonial Legislatures have no power to pass enactments forbidding the immigration of Chinese" (see Musgrove v. Ah Toy, Times L. Rep., Nov. 14, 1890). Mr. Herbert Smith opposed. The other speakers were Messrs. H. Walton, J. L. V. S. Williams, J. R. Atkin, and H. W. Marcus Gwyn (visitor). Mr. Woodcock having replied, the house divided, and the motion was lost by four votes.

HONOURS EXAMINATION FOR SOLICITORS.

January, 1891.

At the examination for honours of candidates for admission on the roll of solicitors of the Supreme Court, the examination committee recommended the following candidates as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

First Class (in Order of Merit).

Harry Goring Pritchard, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Young & Sons, and Messrs. Sharpe, Parker, Pritchard & Sharpe, both of London.

Thomas Henry Aldous, who served his clerkship with Mr. Charles Butcher, of London.

Thomas Estyn Jones, who served his clerkship with Mr. Samuel Smith (of the firm of Messrs. Walker, Smith & Way), of Chester, and Messrs. Chester, Mayhew, Broome & Griffith, of London.

Second Class (in Alphabetical Order).

William Henry Cardale, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Iliffe, Henry & Sweet, of London.

George Coplestone Carter, who served his clerkship with Mr. John Durham, of Kingston-on-Thames and London.

Martin Grunebaum, who served his clerkship with Mr. Hugh Mewburn Walker (of the firm of Messrs. Walker & Mewburn Walker), of London.

Arthur Trowbridge Keeling, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Charles Woodhouse and Mr. Walter Trower, of London.

Sidney Alfred Mitchell, who served his clerkship with Mr. Edward Roy Longcroft, of Havant, and Messrs. Powell & Rogers, of London.

Walter Peel, who served his clerkship with Mr. Samuel Field, of the firm of Messrs. Field, Son, & Hannay, of Liverpool.

Henry Thomas Smith, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Corner & Corner, of Hereford, and Messrs. Crowders & Vizard, of London.

Third Class (in Alphabetical Order).

Robert Aitken, who served his clerkship with Mr. Henry George Church, of London.

Hugh Bellingham, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Stricks & Bellingham, of Swansea, and Messrs. Tamplin, Tayler, & Joseph, of London.

Alban Gardner Buller, who served his clerkship with Mr. Alban Gardner Buller, of Birmingham, and Dr. Alfred Henry Arnould, of London.

David Frederick Cooke, who served his clerkship with Mr. Arthur Proudfoot, of London.

Frederick Graham Emanuel, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Mitchell, of London.

William Claude Fawcett, who served his clerkship with Mr. Thomas Henry Faber (of the firm of Messrs. Fawcett & Faber), of Stockton-on-Tees.

Thomas Goodair, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Hamilton Maynard, of Preston.

William Griffiths, who served his clerkship with Mr. Gwilym Cristor James, of Merthyr Tydfil; and Messrs. Schultz & Son, of London.

Kyrle Chatfield Hankinson, B.A., who served his clerkship with Mr. Henry Stopford Ram (of the firm of Messrs. Bannister, Williams & Ram), of London.

Robert Lewis Hitchings, who served his clerkship with Mr. John Pope, of Exeter; and Messrs. Taylor, Hoare & Box, of London.

Sidney Shea, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Henry Dees and Mr. Charles Robinson, both of London.

Frank Feusdale Smith, who served his clerkship with Mr. Alfred Taylor, of Sheffield.

Thomas Standring, who served his clerkship with Messrs. Dixon, Watts & Elkin, of London.

William Walford, who served his clerkship with Mr. Alfred Waterhouse, of Wolverhampton; and Mr. Charles John Howe, of London.

James Henry Welfare, who served his clerkship with Mr. Charles Butcher, of London.

Edward John Welman, who served his clerkship with Mr. Joseph Welman, of London.

Frederick Bullen Wyatt, who served his clerkship with Mr. William Alford, of Crewkerne.

The council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly given class certificates and awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Pritchard, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clement's Inn—value 10 guineas; and the Daniel Reardon prize—value about 25 guineas.

To Mr. Aldous, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's Inn—value 10 guineas.

To Mr. Jones, the prize of the Honourable Society of New Inn—value 5 guineas.

To Mr. Carter, the John Mackrell prize—value about 12*l.* 10*s.*

The council have given class certificates to the candidates in the second and third classes.

On report of the Examination Committee, and
By Order of the Council,
E. W. Williamson,
Law Society's Hall, Secretary.
Chancery Lane, London: February.

THE COUNTY COUNCILS ASSOCIATION.

The first annual general meeting of the Association of County Councils in England and Wales was held on February 25 at the Westminster Town Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. J. T. Hibbert, and there was a very large attendance. In replying to a resolution re-electing him president of the association, the Chairman remarked that, on the occasion of the previous meeting nine months before, there were twenty-nine county councils in association with them, whilst, at the present time, they had forty-four out of the fifty-six or fifty-seven councils in existence. He claimed that, since the county councils had been established, they had achieved great success, and had had very little friction with the Local Government Board, while the establishment of the councils had given new life to local government in the counties.

A discussion on the Electors' Registration (Acceleration) Bill was opened by Mr. Holton, and it was eventually agreed: 'That the Association of County Councils have heard with the deepest regret of the threatened withdrawal of the Registration (Acceleration) Bill, and urge upon the Government the necessity of passing such a measure. That, in the event of such bill being withdrawn, the date of the ensuing county council elections be postponed until the new registers are completed and provided for the use of the public. That a committee be appointed to wait on the President of the Local Government Board for the purpose of representing to him the views of the association, and of taking such further action as may be necessary, to consist of the President, Lord Monk Bretton, Sir John Dorington, M.P., Mr. G. W. Hastings, M.P., and Mr. Hobhouse, M.P.

The council proceeded to discuss questions referring to the maintenance of footpaths by the side of main roads in urban districts, and passed a resolution requesting that power should be given to county councils not only to create main roads, but also to dismain roads, wholly or in part, without the necessity of a provisional order, but with the assent of the Local Government Board.

A further resolution was then passed approving of a County Councillors' Disabilities Removal Bill; and

On the motion of Sir H. St. John Halford, seconded by Mr. A. Sperling, a resolution was also passed approving of Sir Henry Roscoe's Technical Instruction Bill.

Mr. Graham proposed a resolution expressing the desirability of legislation with the view to the settlement of one basis of assessment for all purposes, imperial, local, and parochial, and this was seconded by Sir H. St. John Halford and agreed to.

After discussing the question of delay in creating district councils, the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

MR. MUNTON ON THE OUTLOOK FOR LAW STUDENTS.

Last Tuesday Mr. F. K. Munton delivered an interesting extempore address to the members of the Law Students' Debating Society. He contrasted the practice of the law at the present day with the system which obtained when he was a student himself, some thirty years ago, and pointed out that the proportion of solicitors to the number of inhabitants, about one in 2,500, had been maintained during all those years, though much of the work of a purely ministerial character, on which members of the profession then largely subsisted, had, and very properly, been swept away. The volume of real business, however, had kept pace with the advance of the country until the last few years, when a falling off commenced in the commercial and other important issues submitted to the public tribunals. Many causes had contributed to this, one of them being, he contended, from the Treasury action in not providing an adequate judicial staff—a state of things accentuated by difficulties of organisation and the objectionable circuit arrangements. Such great uncertainty existed as to tire business men into adjusting their disputes more speedily, though less satisfactorily, in a private way. The mere machinery of the law was providing much less work, and he believed that as time went on the bulk of the solicitors' labours would be confined to that which, after all, he ventured to think was the more agreeable part of their duties—that is to say, such work as fell to the homme d'affaires across the Channel as distinguished from that of the avoué. We had no separate equivalent in this country, the business being merged in the general avocation of a solicitor. It was well known that the number of trials in the High Court from one year's end to the other would not, if it were equally distributed, mean a single cause apiece for all the barristers and less than half a cause each for all the solicitors, so that, irrespective of the falling off of this class of business, the major portion of the work of solicitors must always be that of general advisers and diplomatists in the management of the affairs of their clients. To acquire the ability to perform this satisfactorily a man had to do much more than become learned in book law—he had to study his fellow-man, and to obtain that kind of knowledge which of all others was wanted to safely, securely, and dexterously attain the rights to which a client might be entitled. He was of opinion that many young men were wrecked in the early stage by disregarding the necessities of the position and overlooking the circumstance that tact was sometimes more valuable than all else put together. He did not undervalue close attention to the study of the law; on the contrary, he was glad to see the present stringency of the test in this respect, and there was no question that under the system now in force—that for honours especially—first-rate lawyers pure and simple were daily admitted to the profession. But even honours—of which he wished to speak gently, as he himself was lucky enough to get a place in his day—counted for very little in the affairs of life—cultivation of business memory, carefulness of detail, caution when on delicate ground, careful listening to others to make sure of grasping the correct point, conciliatory firmness with an adversary, mixing with the world in various other pursuits—thus getting to know something of its ways—in short, the acquiring of a general knowledge of men and manners which went so far to make up the successful lawyer. He had come to the conclusion that the outlook showed that it was absolutely impossible for all the solicitors who were now admitted to find lucrative employment for their time, and that work was gradually becoming of such a character that people would do well to carefully consider the real aptitude of those they desired to send into the profession instead of merely seeking a place because the avocation was one that stood well in the eyes of the world. If a solicitor in good practice advertised for an admitted clerk he was inundated with answers, many of the candidates being so closely packed with law that it was difficult to unpack any of it in an emergency; but he believed that there was abundant work ready for many young men unfavourably situated if they would only bear in mind that, besides reading law, they should take every opportunity of storing up miscellaneous information, essential attributes to what was popularly known in the profession as a 'good all-round man.' Mr. Munton touched upon a number of other topics, and especially the advantages of debating societies.

A discussion ensued, in which several members of the society took part, and Mr. Munton was accorded a hearty vote of thanks.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

Manchester.—The seventh meeting of the session was held on Tuesday evening, Mr. H. T. Crofton, solicitor, in the chair. The following was the subject for debate: 'The owners of an hotel erected a stove in their kitchen, which, though only used in an ordinary way and protected in the rear by asbestos, rendered the wine cellar of the adjoining house unfit for ordinary and reasonable use. Was an injunction rightly granted to restrain them from using the stove?' (Reinhardt v. Mentastie, 58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 787).—Mr. Gibbons opened in the affirmative, and was supported by Messrs. Simpson, Hardicker, and Watts.—Mr. Pott opposed, and was supported by Messrs. Risque and Foyster.—The question was ultimately decided in the affirmative by a majority of four.

Liverpool.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, February 23, a debate was held on the following subject for discussion: 'A., a builder, was employed to build a house under an agreement with a landowner, the agreement providing that C. & Co., a firm of ironfounders (selected by the landowner's architect), should do certain work on the premises for which the builders were to pay. C. & Co. employed their own workmen. B, one of the builder's workmen, was injured by the negligence of one of C. & Co.'s workmen. Can B., in an action, recover damages against C. & Co.?'—Mr. E. Lloyd opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Messrs. F. H. Wilson, jun., H. Glover, F. Gittins, jun., F. Barnes, H. Macmaster, and H. Todd.—Mr. F. J. Priest opened in the negative, and was also supported by Mr. F. R. Martin.—The question was decided in the affirmative by a majority of six.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Walter Spyer (of the firm of Spyer & Son), of 53 New Broad Street, London, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths. Mr. Spyer was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Arthur Wright, B.A., LL.M., of Cambridge, has been appointed Deputy-Clerk of the Peace for the county. Mr. Wright was admitted in 1888.

Mr. Joseph Thornthwaite Jackson, B.A. Oxon (of the firm of Meek, Jackson & Jackson), of Devizes, has been appointed Town Clerk of Devizes, Clerk to the Urban Sanitary Authority, Clerk to the School Attendance Committee, and Clerk to the Committee of Visitors to the County Lunatic Asylum. Mr. Jackson was admitted in 1886.

Mr. Thomas Cousins, who recently retired from the office of Clerk to the Justices of the Borough of Portsmouth after twenty years' service, has been appointed a Magistrate of that borough in compliance with the unanimous memorial of the magistrates to the Lord Chancellor. Mr. Cousins was admitted in 1854.

Mr. Charles Frederick Johnson (of the firm of Johnson & Johnsons), Stockport, has been appointed Clerk to the Guardians and Superintendent Registrar of the Stockport Union, rendered vacant by the death of the late Mr. Francis Williams Johnson. Mr. C. F. Johnson was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Lawrence William English, of Norwich, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. English was admitted in 1876.

Mr. Edward Sharman Giles, of Chester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Giles was admitted in 1884.

Mr. James Deakin Yates, of Eccleshall, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Yates was admitted in 1884.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

Rota of Registrars.

Monday, March 2.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Tuesday, March 3.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Wednesday, March 4.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Thursday, March 5.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Friday, March 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Saturday, March 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MARCH 2 TO MARCH 7.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	March 2	March 3	March 4	March 5	March 6	March 7
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Altrincham	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Tadcaster	Easingwold	Knaresborough	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	—	Derby	Derby	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
26	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Lichfield	Stafford	Leek	Cheadle
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	Newton Abbot

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19.

Elmore & Scott v. Owners of Steamship Dione (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Butt, J.).—Dismissed.

Owners of Ship Ovington v. Owners of ss. Queen Victoria and freight (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Butt, J.).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20.

In re Kennedy, ex parte Moss (application of Mark Moss, a creditor, for payment of costs of an abandoned appeal; notice of appeal, dated February 3, served February 6; not set down).—Refused.

In re Cuninghame, ex parte Wylie and another (appeal of Messrs. Wylie and another (creditors) from Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated February 10, refusing to rescind receiving order, dated January 26).—Dismissed.

In re J. Hodgkins, ex parte J. Hodgkins (appeal of debtor from order of Mr. Registrar Linklater, dated February 6, adjourning the hearing of petition until another person added as joint petitioner).—Dismissed.

North-Eastern Railway Company v. Mayor, &c., of Kingston-upon-Hull (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated October 31, on special case).—Dismissed.

Fulton v. Pipe (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Lopes, L.J., dated July 30, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21.

No sitting.

Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS and FRY, L.J.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23.

Drew and another v. Lewis (appeal of Martin from order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 27, affirming refusal to rescind charging order absolute, dated August 9).—Dismissed.

Deramore Steamship Company (Lim.) v. Wheatley & Co. (appeal of defendants from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 9, refusing to stay proceedings under section 4 of Arbitration Act, 1889).—Dismissed.

Ward v. Proctor (appeal of plaintiff from order of Cave, J., and Williams, J., dated January 30, refusing liberty to sign final judgment and giving unconditional leave to defend).—Dismissed.

Brandon v. M'Henry (appeal of plaintiffs from part of order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 26, setting aside execution under judgment entered July 15, 1885).—Part heard.

Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

Wilson, Sons & Co. v. Morgan (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on application from verdict and judgment at trial before Day, J., with a jury in Middlesex).—Struck out.

Paine v. Chisholm (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on application from verdict and judgment at trial before Stephen, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

Pinto and another v. Badman (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment on counterclaim at trial before Day, J., with a special jury in Middlesex, and motion by order).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19.

Fox v. A. J. White (Lim.) (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., and special jury at Leeds) —Application refused.

Hargraves v. Walker (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Lawrance, J., and common jury at Leeds). —Application refused.

Woodhall v. Bamber (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., with a special jury at Leeds).—Application refused.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20.

Devaney v. Davies (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., at Liverpool).—Application refused.

Lorck v. Keun and others (application of defendant L. Cloete for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

Le v. Rumilly (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Grantham, J. (jury discharged), in Middlesex). —Application refused.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21.

Lorck v. Keun and others.—Part heard.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23.

Lorck v. Keun and others.—Cur. adv. vult.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

Esilman v. Hassall (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wills, J., at Salford).—Dismissed.

Coutts & Co. v. The Irish Exhibition in London (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of. Kekewich, J., dated October 28, 1890).—Part heard.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.,

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

Gibbens v. Kenrick (apeal of defendants from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 7, restraining defendants from acting on resolution to wind up company).—Allowed by consent on terms.

Daniel v. Ferguson (appeal of defendant from order of Stirling, J., dated December 19, restraining continuance of wall interfering with access of light).—Dismissed.

Beecham v. Thompson (appeal of defendant from refusal of Chitty, J., dated February 6, for trial at Durham assizes with a jury).—Dismissed on terms.

Cox v. Bennett (appeal of defendant, L. Midwinter, from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 21, for retention of costs by trustees of real estate).—Cur. adv. vult.

BARRISTERS AND SOLICITORS.—Barristers are supposed to be more learned in the law than solicitors, and, as a rule, they are so; still there are exceptions, as is shown by the recent examinations for the LL.B. degree at the London University. Two solicitors head the honours list—viz. Mr. E. Ivens Watson, of Coleman Street, and Mr. Fred. W. Atkinson, of Finsbury Circus. As there were no fewer than forty candidates for the degree, which is, as is well known, the severest examination test that lawyers can undergo, the solicitors' branch of the profession have no reason to be ashamed of their candidates.

TRUST INVESTMENT BILL.—A bill to amend the Trust Investment Act, 1889, was issued recently. The object of this bill is to remove the restriction which at present exists under that Act, forbidding the investment of trust money in corporation stocks where the population is under 50,000. The bill, which only extends to England and Wales, proposes to enact that, 'notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Trust Investment Act, 1889, it shall be lawful for a trustee, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument (if any) creating the trust, to invest any trust funds in his hands in nominal, inscribed, or debenture stock, or in mortgages, debentures, or other securities issued or to be issued by the corporation of any municipal borough, whether, according to the returns of the last census prior to the date of investment, the population exceeds 50,000 or not.'

THE MUZZLING ORDER IN MIDDLESEX.—The reports of the veterinary inspector of the county of Middlesex for the quarter ending December last show that there were seized in the county in the preceding three months under the Rabies Order, 518 dogs, 70 of which were claimed and the remainder slaughtered. These figures compare with 38, 2 and 36 respectively in the preceding quarters, and 903, 151 and 683 in the corresponding quarters of last year. The total number of dogs seized in Middlesex since September, 1889, is 3,806, of which no less than 3,093 were destroyed. During the quarter just ended no case of rabies was reported, while in the corresponding quarter of last year there were 13. Since the passing of the order in September, 1889, 72 cases of rabies occurred. The cost of enforcing the order during the last quarter was 178*l.* 17*s.* There were 177 persons prosecuted for disobeying the order, and the total fines and costs imposed amounted to 97*l.* 7*s.*

INCOME-TAX ASSESSORS.—Mr. Jackson, financial secretary of the Treasury, has introduced a bill to regulate the remuneration payable to clerks to commissioners of income-tax and inhabited house duties, and to assessors. The bill proposes to abolish the present method of payment by way of 'poundage.' In lieu of poundage, the commissioners' clerk is to receive the same sum as the amount of his allowances by way of poundage for the year which commenced on April 6 last. The assessor is to receive—(1) in respect of assessments of the duties under Schedules D and E of the Income-tax Acts the same sum as the amount of his allowance for the year just mentioned; and (2) in any year in which he acts as assessor under Schedules A and B, he is to receive the same sum as the amount of the allowance to the assessor appointed for the year which commenced on April 6, 1888, in respect of the assessments for those duties. The bill is not intended to have any effect in the case of an assessor appointed to act in a division or district where the commissioners of income-tax and inhabited house duties fix the amount of his remuneration, under section 25 of the Inland Revenue Act of 1885, which enables them to do so where they think that the ordinary amount would exceed a fair remuneration for his trouble.

BIRTHS.

On Feb. 16, at Midge Hill, Tottenham Green, N., the wife of Herbert Nield, Solicitor, of a son.

On Feb. 20, at the Elms, Bushey, Watford, the wife of Gurney Coombs, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Feb. 20, at Geraldine, New Zealand, Hugh Wastel Postlethwaite, Barrister-at-Law, Inner Temple, second son of William Postlethwaite, Esq., of Raukapuka, Canterbury, N.Z., late of the Oaks, Cumberland, to Mildred Evill, third surviving daughter of B. Fox Overbury, of Palace Court Mansions, Bayswater, and First Avenue, Brighton.

On Feb. 21, at Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, Bernard Abrahams, Solicitor, of 22 Great Marlborough Street, W., and Queen Anne's Gate, to Madge Mildred, widow of the late Laurence Grey Buist, of the Hermitage, Porchester Gate, Hyde Park.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 8, at Manor Cottage, Walton-on-Thames, Elsie, the beloved wife of Edward Manson, Barrister-at-Law, aged 42.

On Feb. 11, at Cheltenham, General G. Cliffe Hatch, C.S.I., formerly Judge-Advocate-General in India, aged 71.

On Feb. 15, at Belle Vue House, Lindley, Huddersfield, Elizabeth, the beloved wife of John Haigh, Solicitor.

On Feb. 15, at Holmlea, Ryde, I.W., Arthur Chichester Crookshank, late chief magistrate of Sarawak, Borneo, son of the late Colonel Chichester Crookshank, K.H. (33rd Duke's Own Regiment), and grandson of the late Right Honourable Sir Alexander Crookshank, Chief Justice of Common Pleas, Ireland.

On Feb. 19, at 33 Steele's Road, Haverstock Hill, Thomas Freeman Morse, Barrister-at-Law, aged 69.

	Per Annum £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE sittings of Appeal Court I. were suspended on Friday and Saturday last. This short holiday would appear to have been warranted by the present state of the business of the Court. Out of a list of forty-three appeals from the Queen's Bench and Admiralty Divisions at the beginning of the sittings, some thirty have already been disposed of, while the New Trial Paper, which has been taken in the two divisions of the Court in alternate weeks, is almost finished.

THE article which appeared in the Times last week advocating the appointment of an additional judge of the Chancery Division did not overstate the pressing necessity for such an appointment. We are quite unable to agree, however, with the alternative remedy suggested in the article. The writer appears to think that a few changes in the Queen's Bench Division, similar to those contained in Mr. Finlay's original bill, would set free one of the judges of that Division for the trial of causes entered in the Chancery Division, many of which, it is pointed out, are virtually common law actions. We cannot share this view. Unless the present circuit system is to be done away with, the bench of the Queen's Bench Division is by no means overmanned, as is clearly shown by the fact that at the present time there are only three judges of that Division in town, and that for the remainder of the sittings—a period of nearly three weeks—it is very improbable that there will ever be more than four judges available. Nothing short of the total abolition of the Divisional Courts would enable the Queen's Bench Division to spare even one of its judges.

THE Government Penal Servitude Bill, which we noticed shortly last week (ante, p. 145), is prefixed by a very full explanatory memorandum which is almost as long as the bill itself. The main object of the bill is to reduce the minimum term of penal servitude from five years, at which it now stands, fixed by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864 (impliedly repealing many scores of enactments in the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861), to three years, the term originally fixed by the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts. With this object it is proposed that 'where under any enactment in force when this section comes into operation a Court has power to award a sentence of penal servitude, the sentence may, at the discretion of the Court, be for any period not less than three years, and not exceeding either five years or any greater period authorised by the enactment.' We can find no words in the bill providing that this enactment is to be retrospective. Will it by its own force be retrospective or not—that is, will it have application whether the crime in respect of which the sentence of penal servitude is to be awarded was committed before the passing of the bill or not? Grammatically, no doubt, it is retrospective, but we have some doubt whether the rule 'Nova constitutio futuris legem imponere debet, non præteritis' would not apply so as to avoid the retrospective operation. It might be suggested that, as the change was for the benefit of a sentenced prisoner, he would not be likely to try to bring this rule into effect. But we are not so sure of that. There is also a rule to the effect that, where less than a minimum sentence is awarded, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal; and we think it would be desirable to provide expressly that the bill is to be retrospective in the fullest sense. Of the other amendments proposed by the bill, which are all of a comparatively minor character, the most important is that of clause 8, by which it is proposed to extend the power of photographing so as to enable photographs to be taken of prisoners before conviction, and also to provide for the measuring of prisoners. These objects are to be attained by Home Office regulations to be made for that purpose, but there is no provision in the bill for the regulations being laid before Parliament. The present law as to photographing prisoners, which only applies after conviction, is to be found in section 6 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 112).

MR. PEEK'S article on the 'Eclipse of Justice,' in the current number of the Contemporury Review, will well repay a careful study. The writer argues with much force that, from the too light sentences passed in some cases, and the too heavy sentences passed in others, confidence in the administration of justice has become to a very serious extent impaired, and he especially dwells on the practical mischief which, as he maintains, has followed from a succession of exceptionally light sentences passed by Mr. Hopwood as Recorder of Liverpool. The policy of our criminal law is to invest the judges with an absolute and uncontrolled discretion in the matter of sentences, and there are many enactments by which a sentence may range between penal servitude for life and a day's imprisonment, the crime of manslaughter, which indeed may be punished by a nominal fine, affording a conspicuous instance of the confidence which the Legislature reposes in the Judicature. Mr. Peek does not propose to abolish the judicial discretion; all he wishes is that some distinct principles should be laid down to guide it, so that some of the most glaring inequalities of the present system may cease to exist. The establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal, and the codification of the criminal law, which was set on foot under such happy auspices by Mr. Justice Stephen's bill so long ago as 1878, are also strenuously advocated. As to the first, we think that a Court merely to revise sentences might very easily be established. As to the second, we think that it should be preceded by a consolidation of the Criminal Procedure Acts, as distinguished from the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, which latter are of a comparatively modern date, having been passed in 1861.

THE American Copyright Bill has at last passed, and those concerned in the production of literature in the English tongue will now be carefully considering what they will get by it. As to the term of copyright, this is at present a little less than that obtainable on this side of the Atlantic, being only for twenty-eight years from registration, with a power of extension for fourteen years at the end of the twenty-eight; whereas the English term is for forty-two years from publication or till seven years from the death of the author, whichever shall be the longer. The Royal Commission of 1878 and Lord Monkswell in his consolidating and amending bill now before Parliament would substitute for this uncertain period the life of the author and thirty years after his death, being the same as that which obtains in Germany, though less by twenty years than that which obtains in France, Russia, Spain, and Portugal. Perhaps it is not too much to expect that before many years are over one and the same term of copyright may be adopted throughout the civilised world. The Royal Commissioners of 1878, in recommending the term of life and thirty years, recommended also that, 'in the event of an international agreement being concluded by which a common term is fixed for all countries, power should be given to Her Majesty to adopt by Order in Council, in lieu of such term of life and thirty years, the term fixed by such international arrangement.'

MR. T. H. BOLTON'S important bill to amend the Conveyancing Act, on which we commented fully last week (ante, p. 150), was read a second time last Wednesday, in the teeth of the Attorney-General's opposition, but, no doubt, profiting greatly by the support of Sir H. James and Sir H. Davey, by a majority of 159 to 141. The bill, as was admitted by most of its advocates, needs considerable amendment, but in its main principle it is quite just and fair. In one particular, moreover, it is as much to the advantage of landlords as of tenants. Where a tenant falls suddenly into difficulties, and his landlord is abroad, under the present law the underletting which would save the landlord his rent is impossible, for no person would become an undertenant at the risk of forfeiture. Perhaps the chief faults of the bill are its failure to provide for a premium to the landlord in cases where it may be justly due, its giving to the undertenant the tenant's unexpired interest instead of his own in case of the landlord proceeding successfully for a forfeiture, and its treating the breach of covenant in mining leases for inspection of books with too great leniency. But these and other faults can be easily removed if only the bill be approached in a friendly spirit. One substantial addition would be a great advantage, and that is a reshaping of the law of relief against forfeiture for non-payment of rent, which Lord Cairns so unhappily omitted from the Conveyancing Act; and, inasmuch as this law at present is too hard upon landlords, and would probably be amended in their favour, the landlord interest would do well to come forward with a set of clauses to amend it. We incline, on the whole, to think that the bill will ultimately pass, and that during the present session.

WE expressed a doubt some little time ago (ante, p. 113) whether Mr. Justice Kekewich's decision in The Whitwood Chemical Company v. Hardman could be supported, and our hesitation in accepting it as good equity has been justified by its reversal in the Court of Appeal on March 2. The decision was supposed to be based upon the celebrated decision in Lumley v. Wagner, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 898; 1 De G. M. & G. 604, and that of Vice-Chancellor Malins in Montague v. Flockton, 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 677; L. R. 16 Eq. 189. But in the case under comment, although the defendant had contracted to devote his whole time to his employers' business, he had not entered into a negative covenant—he had not said that he would not carry on any other business. The case, therefore, differed on a material point from Lumley v. Wagner, in which, as we pointed out, Mademoiselle Wagner had expressly agreed not to use her talents elsewhere without the plaintiff's consent. The case, however, before Mr. Justice Kekewich resembled Montague v. Flockton in this respect (though it differed widely in other respects), for Flockton's agreement contained no negative covenant restricting him from performing elsewhere. The Court of Appeal have now said, as Lord Justice Fry said lately, that the doctrine of Lumley v. Wagner is not to be extended, and that Montague v. Flockton cannot be supported. The decision is quite what we expected, and the case is not likely to be carried to a higher tribunal.

IN one sense, no doubt, a clergyman is a public official; he is 'the parson'—i.e. the person whom the State recognises as having the cure of souls of a particular locality. In most cases, however, the endowment of the living was created, and often augmented, by the generosity of private donors, and, as Professor Freeman has shown, the endowment of any particular church was a gift to that church, and not to the Church of England at large. When a clergyman becomes chaplain to a workhouse he is more nearly becoming a State-paid official than the rector or vicar of an ordinary parish. But Mr. Justice Cave, in In re Mirams, Notes of Cases, p. 36, has held that even such a chaplain is not a public official, and, therefore, he can mortgage his salary without infringing on the rule of public policy which forbids an officer of the State to do so. Nor does he come within the provisions of the statute 13 Eliz. c. 20, which provides 'that all chargings of such benefices with cure hereafter with any profit out of the same to be yielded or taken, hereafter to be made, other than rents to be reserved upon leases hereafter to be made according to the meaning of this Act, shall be utterly void.' In a note on this Act in Chitty's 'Statutes' (4th edit. vol. ii. p. 616), it is stated that, though this statute was repealed altogether, it has been revived by a later Act, so that 'the invalidating of all charges on benefices is still in full force.' A workhouse chaplaincy is not a benefice with cure, therefore it is not within that Act. The chaplain in question, after charging his salary, had become bankrupt, and the salary, subject to the charge, was therefore vested in the official receiver as his trustee in bankruptcy under section 44 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. But even what remains after the satisfaction of the charge cannot be divided as of right amongst the creditors in the bankruptcy of the chaplain, as, under section 53 of the last-mentioned Act, 'the Court, on the application of the trustee, shall from time to time make such order as it thinks just for the payment of the salary . . . or of any part thereof to the trustee to be applied by him in such manner as the Court may direct.'

LORD HERSCHELL has again introduced the Sale of Goods Bill. This important measure first saw the light in 1888. In 1889 it was read a second time and referred to the House of Lords' standing committee on law, but pressure of other business prevented its being proceeded with. In 1890 it does not appear to have been reintroduced. The object and scope of the bill may be fully gathered from the recently published treatise of his Honour Judge Chalmers on the sale of goods, 'the large type propositions' of which, so we are told in the preface, are taken almost verbatim from the bill. With the exception of section 17 of the Statute of Frauds, the legislative enactments relating to the sale of goods are of very little importance, and the bill is mainly a reproduction of the case law as to the sale of goods framed in a similar manner to the reproduction of the law of bills of exchange which was so successfully accomplished by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, and to the reproduction of the law of partnership, which in an equally neat manner has been placed upon the Statute-book under the name of the Partnership Act, 1890. The codification of mercantile law, if Lord Herschell succeeds in adding a Sale of Goods Act to the Bills of Exchange Act, the Factors Act, and the Partnership Act, will be fast advancing towards completion.

A MARKED feature of House of Commons practice is the increase in the number of names of members, not unfrequently of opposite sides in politics, who, by 'backing' bills to which they are specially favourable, no doubt greatly facilitate the passing of such bills. There is no corresponding practice in the House of Lords. Again, if the bill should succeed in passing the House of Lords it will not, when introduced in the House of Commons, have the advantage of being backed specially by any member of that House. It will be marked simply as 'Brought from the Lords.' We would venture to suggest that a change in the practice of both Houses might be made, with the view of allowing all House of Lords' bills to be 'backed' as in the House of Commons, and all such bills, when brought down from the Lords, to have an advantage equal to that which they would have had if originally introduced in the Commons.

IN the recent case of In re Evans, ex parte Evans, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 143, the Court of Appeal had to decide whether the London Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to make an order under section 125 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor, who had resided for more than six months prior to his death in Africa, where he had carried on his business and where he died. It was contended that such an order could only be made in the Chancery Division, upon the ground that 'Court' is defined in section 125, 'unless the context otherwise requires,' as 'the Court within the jurisdiction of which the debtor resided or carried on business for the greater part of the six months immediately prior to his decease.' The Court of Appeal, however, declined to adopt this view, and held that the Bankruptcy Court had jurisdiction to make the order by reason of section 95, which provides that, if the debtor against whom a bankruptcy petition is presented is not resident in England, the petition is to be presented to the High Court.

THE Stamp Act, 1870, amongst other definitions, defines 'settlement' as any instrument whereby 'any definite and certain amount of stock' is settled, and makes it chargeable with an ad valorem duty of 5*s.* per cent. In Onslow v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 138, by marriage settlement, the wife assigned reversionary and, in certain events, defeasible interests in certain specified amounts of stock standing in the names of prior trustees with power to vary investment; and the question raised on a case stated by the commissioners was whether the settlement, so far as it related to these funds, was chargeable with the ad valorem duty. It was admitted that the duty applied to reversionary interests, but not, it was contended, to contingent or defeasible interests. The words 'definite' and 'certain,' it was argued, are not synonymous terms. The word 'definite' means something which can be ascertained by description, and the word 'certain' means sure. The Court of Appeal, affirming the Queen's Bench Division, held that the ad valorem duty was payable. On the construction of the words Lord Justice Bowen, whose judgment is a model of brevity, says that these words 'are terms applied, not to the interest or the nature of the interest, but to the amount of the stock, and that the amount of the stock does not become uncertain because the chance of getting the stock may be uncertain.' The point does not seem to have been previously raised.

THE indictment in Regina v. Hall, in which the defendant, an overseer, was charged with wilfully omitting voters' names from the electoral lists, and with the wilful insertion of unqualified persons' names in the same lists, has been quashed by Mr. Justice Charles, on the ground that the offences charged were statutory offences having a statutory penalty attached to them, so as to exclude the remedy by indictment. The question turns upon the construction to be given to a series of enactments, of which section 76 of the Reform Act, 1832, and sections 51 and 97 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843, are the most important. By section 76 of the Reform Act, 1832, 'if any overseer shall wilfully contravene or disobey the provisions of that Act with respect to any matter or thing which such overseer is required to do, he shall for such his offence be liable to be sued for the penal sum of 500*l.*, and the jury before whom such action shall be tried may find their verdict for the full sum of 500*l.*, or for any less sum, provided that no such action shall be brought except by an elector or candidate or member actually returned or other party aggrieved.' This section is still unrepealed, though the sections to which it mainly applies are repealed by the Act of 1843, with which, it is presumed, it must be read. Then, by section 51 of the Act of 1843, revising barristers have power to fine overseers for neglect of duty, and, by section 97 of the same Act, 'every overseer required by this Act to do any matter or thing shall, for every wilful misfeasance or wilful act of commission or omission contrary to this Act, forfeit to any party aggrieved the penal sum of 100*l.* or such less sum as the jury consider just: provided always that nothing herein contained shall be construed to supersede any remedy, or action against any returning officer' [which officer is one of those against whom the remedy by penal action is given] 'according to any law now in force.' We have no doubt that the judgment is correct. As to whether it is desirable on public grounds that the remedy by indictment should be called into existence, we incline to think with the learned judge that no such change ought to be made. The liability to fine by the revising barrister and the liability to penal action appear to us to be quite sufficient.

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR MARCH.

IN the March number the work of the Chancery Division is represented by sixteen cases (pp. 105–176), of which two were in the House of Lords and seven in the Court of Appeal; the Queen's Bench Division by nine cases, comprising two House of Lords and four Appeal cases; whilst the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division contribute six cases, of which two were in the Court of Appeal. There were also five Magistrates' Cases, of which two were heard by the judges of the Appeal Court.

In the Chancery Division, the House of Lords, in Vickers, Sons & Co. v. Siddell, affirming the Court of Appeal and Mr. Justice Kekewich, held that the provisions as to the form of a specification contained in section 5, subsection 5, of the Patents Act, 1883, are discretionary only, and have not the effect of rendering a patent void when the specification does not 'end with a distinct statement of the invention claimed.' In re Langham and the Langham Hotel Company decides that where an heir-presumptive of an estate in fee agreed to sell his interest free from incumbrances, the succession duty ought to be paid by the purchaser. In In re Patrick it was held that a voluntary settlement by which certain debts, including money due on bills of sale, were assigned to trustees was a complete assignment within the principle of Kekewich v. Manning, 21 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 577, though no notice was given to the debtors and no express assignment made of the bills of sale or the chattels comprised therein. In re Pyle Works established the validity of a mortgage by way of indemnity in favour of directors upon the uncalled capital of a company in pursuance of a power contained in the memorandum and articles. In re M'Gowan settled a question arising under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, and rule 11, part 1, schedule 1, of the General Order under that Act. In Williamson v. Hine the procuring of charters and freights was held to be one of the ordinary duties incumbent on the managing owner of a ship, for which he is not entitled to retain as against the ship commissions on the charters or freights procured. In The Attorney-General v. Morgan, the famous gold-mining case, the Court of Appeal defined, on January 21, the scope of 1 Wm. & Mary, c. 30, and 5 Wm. & Mary, c. 6, with respect to the discovery and working of gold and silver in mines. The House of Lords, in The Colonial Bank v. Cady & Williams; The London Chartered Bank v. Cady & Williams, applied the principles of English law in adjudicating against the validity of the transfer by a broker of shares in an American company where such transfer would have been good by American law. In In re Lashmar it was held that a bare trustee for an illegitimate son of a remainder in fee vested in the testator, which fell into possession after that son's death, was not entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate. According to Barnett v. King a covenant for the payment of a sum of money out of the covenantor's estate within six months after his death creates a debt provable in bankruptcy, and any action upon such covenant is barred by bankruptcy proceedings in respect of the covenantor's estate. In re Whiteley and Roberts's Arbitration decides that an arbitrator's admission that his award was improperly obtained must be made on oath to the Court in order to be made evidence for impeaching the award. The Liverpool and Manchester Aërated Bread and Café Company v. Firth establishes that on application for discovery against several defendants who have severed in their defences and appeared by different solicitors, the plaintiff must pay into Court separate sums of 5*l.* in respect of each defendant. In Bellamy v. Wells (the Pelican Club case) an injunction was granted in favour of the freeholders, lessees, and tenants of a house against the proprietors of a club to restrain a nuisance caused by cabs and carriages and the assembling of crowds between midnight and 7 A.M. In Makins v. Percy Ibotson & Sons a receiver and manager of a company was appointed on the motion of the owner of debentures charging all the present and future property of the company including uncalled capital. In Bellamy v. Debenham the question was involved of a contract constituted by letters and the repudiation of the contract by the intending purchaser.

In re Foster; Lloyd v. Carr was an interesting case laying down the principles of apportionment of loss applicable between a tenant-for-life and remainderman arising from a deficiency of capital.

In the Queen's Bench Division, in Bell-Cox v. Hakes, the House of Lords held that an order made upon a writ of habeas corpus to discharge from custody a prisoner attached under a writ de contumace capiendo is not a judgment in a criminal cause or matter within the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 47, and a majority of five to two of their lordships also held that, notwithstanding section 17 of the same Act, no appeal lies from such an order of discharge. In The Darlington Wagon and Engineering Company v. Harding the effect was considered of sections 14 and 15 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, when not only an action but other matters in difference were referred. In Cox v. Ambrose, under section 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, a candidate in a municipal election was disqualified because he was a member of a firm interested in continuing contracts with the corporation, although, before offering himself as a candidate, he had dissolved partnership and assigned his interest in the contracts to the other partner. In The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company v. The Assessment Committee of the Bolton Union the House of Lords decided that where, under section 161 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a rural sanitary authority was invested with the powers of an urban sanitary authority, the order did not affect the conditions as to rating applicable under sections 207 to 211, and that a railway company was liable to be assessed to the whole and not to one-quarter only of the net value of its land. According to In re Langlois and Biden, on taxation as between solicitor and client of the costs of a County Court action, in which the amount claimed exceeded, but that recovered was less than 10*l.*, the trustee has a discretion to allow costs on the higher scale. In Smith, Hill & Co. v. Pyman, Bell & Co. the charterers of a ship which was lost by an excepted peril were held liable for advance freight under a charter-party containing the following clause: 'One third freight, if required, to be advanced, less 3 per cent. for interest and insurance.' The Railway and Canal Commission Court in Ford & Co. v. The London and South-Western Railway Company decided a question of undue preference as between the railway company and competing carriers. In Onslow v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue it was held that a settlement of contingent and defeasible interests in certain specified amounts of stock vested in trustees with a power to vary investments was chargeable with an ad valorem duty under the Stamp Act, 1870, section 3, schedule, as being a settlement 'whereby any definite and certain amount of stock is settled.' In re R. M. Evans decides that the London Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to make an order for the administration of the estate of a domiciled Englishman resident abroad for more than six months immediately prior to his decease.

In the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, in Redfern v. Redfern & Williams, discovery was refused against a litigant in a divorce suit to prove adultery, and a doubt was expressed whether or not, in accordance with the Chancery practice, an infant litigant in a divorce suit is exempt from discovery. In Swift v. Swift, evidence was held to be admissible of the conduct of a husband or wife against whom a decree of restitution of conjugal rights had been pronounced in an application for an allowance under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, s. 3. In the Goods of J. C. Crawford settled questions arising from a testamentary appointment in England and a subsequent will reciting the appointment in New Zealand. In the case of The Goods of Timothy Evans, the president appointed the receiver in a Chancery action to be administrator pendente lite in a probate action relating to the same estate. In Bethuen v. Bethuen a wife whose health had been impaired by the habitual insults and studied unkindness of her husband obtained a decree nisi, although the respondent had committed no act of physical violence. Beauclerk v. Beauclerk was a case of unreasonable delay in the presentation of a petition, disentitling a wife to a divorce.

In the Magistrates' Cases The Merthyr Tydfil Local Board of Health (appellants) and The Assessment Committee of Merthyr Tydfil Union gives an exposition of the principles applicable under a local Act for the purpose of arriving at the rateable value of waterworks. In Ex parte The Leicestershire County Council the powers conferred upon the justices in quarter sessions by the Police Act, 1840, ss. 3, 27, with respect to the determination of police districts was held to be vested by the Local Government Act, 1888, in the standing joint committee of the quarter sessions and county council. The Hornsey Local Board v. Brewis settled questions of liability for paving expenses in respect of a building used partly as a chapel and partly for secular purposes. In Regina v. The Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington, the defendants were held to have no right to refuse to hear a surveyor who had been sent by a ratepayer to appear as his agent before the committee in support of the objection to the valuation list. In Showers and others v. The Assessment Committee of the Chelmsford Union premises used exclusively as police residences, for which rent was paid by the police officers, were held not to be exempt from rateability, as they were neither one building occupied solely for public purposes nor an ordinary police-station.

FINANCING AN EXHIBITION.—II.

IN an article with the above heading in the LAW JOURNAL of November 1, 1890, we commented on the decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich in the case of Coutts & Co. v. The Irish Exhibition. Before the defendant corporation was registered under the Companies Act a banking account was opened in its name with Messrs. Coutts & Co., who received a letter from the secretary of the exhibition enclosing the 'signatures of the gentlemen who are authorised to draw upon the account of the council of the Irish Exhibition.' These gentlemen, or some of them, drew, and even overdrew, the account to a very considerable amount, both before and after the exhibition had been incorporated. After the exhibition had gone into liquidation it was sought, in the action above mentioned, to make those who signed the cheques personally liable for the overdraft. Mr. Justice Kekewich, however, held that they were not liable; in other words, that the bank financed the exhibition in the hope that the contributions of the public would ultimately recoup them, and make the business one of profit. In our former article we stated our expectation that, if the matter went to the Court of Appeal, 'a more businesslike view would be taken of the transaction.' The case has now been taken to the Court of Appeal, with the result that the decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich has been reversed and that Messrs. Coutts & Co. have established the joint liability, in respect of the overdraft, of those who were responsible for it. The very idea of a bank without a customer shocked the Court of Appeal, which, with Lord Justice Lindley presiding, took the eminently businesslike view that such an absurd state of things required to be proved by much stronger evidence than that which was adduced by the defendants in the case before them. As, in our former article, we warned bankers to take professional advice before undertaking to finance exhibitions, so we may advise the promoters of exhibitions to consult their lawyers before they incur liability as the customers of banks which are willing to do the financing.

PROGRESS OF LEGISLATION.

An extraordinary amount of legislative work, good or bad, has been accomplished during the last week. In the list of births are two Government bills, introduced by Mr. Ritchie on February 26—viz. the Public Health (London) Law Amendment and the Public Health (London) Law Consolidation Bills; a bill brought in by Lord Herschell in the House of Lords to codify the law relating to the sale of goods; one by Mr. Tomlinson to remove doubts as to the powers of public bodies in reference to provisional order bills under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888; bills by Mr. Philipps to improve the position of sheriff clerks depute in Scotland; by Sir E. Grey to amend the laws respecting the branding of herrings on the coast of Northumberland; by Mr. Atkinson to relieve landed estates from payments to dowagers in proportion to the amount of decrease in the net income of such estates since the allowances to the dowagers were fixed—a bill the introduction of which was unkindly received with laughter; a bill to extend to county councils the provisions of the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1863; and a bill to amend the Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act, 1890.

The following bills have been read a second time:—

Factories and Workshops (Mr. Secretary Matthews).

Factories and Workshops (Sir H. James)—both referred to the Standing Committee on Trade.

Assessment of Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration).

Factories, Certificate of Birth (Fees).

Fishery Board (Scotland)—Lords.

London County Council General Powers.

London Overhead Wires—subject to an instruction to the committee to which it is referred to consider how it can be amended in accordance with the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.

The last two, though nominally private bills, are really of a public character.

Smoke Nuisance Abatement (Metropolis)—Lords.

Army Schools.

Penal Servitude.

Technical Instruction.

Corn Sales.

Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, Amendment Bill.

Metropolitan Water Companies' Charges and Metropolis Water Supply Bills.

Bills which have been forwarded beyond second reading are—

Tithe Rent-Charge Recovery—which has passed through the committee of the House of Lords.

Museums and Gymnasiums.

Registration of Electors Acts Amendment—read a third time.

Electors Registration Acceleration—committed pro formâ and Government amendments inserted.

Pollen Fisheries (Ireland)—read a third time.

Marriages of Nonconformists (Attendance of Registrars) and Local Authorities (Scotland) Loans—which are safely in committee.

Bills thrown out:—

Justices of the Peace Qualification Amendment—Lords.

Parochial Boards (Scotland).

The following bills have been withdrawn:—

Rating of Machinery—introduced by Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Sir B. Samuelson, and others.

Parliamentary Elections.

Parliamentary Voters Qualification.

The debate on the second reading of Mr. H. S. Wright's Rating of Machinery Bill stands adjourned.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

BILLS OF SALE AMENDMENT ACT, 1882, s. 9.

At the Marylebone County Court, last week, his Honour Judge Stonor delivered judgment in the case of Brajg v. Hoeffler (Jolliffe, claimant) as follows: This is a perfectly honest bill of sale to secure the payment of the sum of 81*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*, due to the claimant for work and labour, together with interest for the same at the moderate rate of 5 per cent. per annum. It is, however, contended that it is not in accordance with the form contained in the schedule to the Bills of Sales Amendment Act, 1882, and therefore void under section 9 of that Act. By the instrument in question, dated November 18 last, the mortgagor assigns to the mortgagee the chattels described in the schedule thereto by way of security for the payment on May 18 next of the said principal sum and interest, and 'the mortgagor further agrees (1) that he will duly pay to the mortgagee the said principal sum and interest on the said May 18 next; and further (2) that if the said principal sum, or any part thereof, shall remain due and unpaid after the said May 18, the mortgagor will pay the mortgagee interest thereon, or on as much thereof as shall for the time being remain due, by equal half-yearly payments, on May 18 and November in every year; and further (3) that the mortgagee will not require of the mortgagor payment of the said principal moneys or any part thereof, except on the happening of one or other of the events, on the happening of which the said chattels are, by virtue of these presents, made liable to seizure or to be taken possession of by the mortgagee; or on the three months' previous notice in writing to be given by the mortgagee to the mortgagor of intention to demand payment of the said principal moneys.' It is contended that the second of these covenants or agreements is not in accordance with the form in the schedule, because the rate of interest to be paid after default is not specified. Now, the word 'interest' must be either regarded as signifying interest at the rate previously mentioned, or as signifying interest at the rate which the rules of equity prescribe in respect of mortgage debts after default, and which, in either case, would be 5 per cent. per annum, and I do not think that this provision ought to be regarded as not in accordance with the form in the schedule, or as anything more than surplusage. It is also contended that the third of these covenants or agreements is not in accordance with the form in the schedule, and this is to my mind a serious objection. In the first place, it is objectionable in point of form. For it is primâ facie only an agreement by the mortgagor that the mortgagee will not require payment of the mortgage debt without demand, and without three months' previous notice of his intention to make such demand; but I think that the mortgagee, having executed the deed, must be considered to have entered into this agreement, and, but for its being prefaced by the words 'and further' with the previous agreements by the mortgagor, there would be no difficulty, and the mortgagee would be clearly bound by it. Again, the word 'the' prefixed to the words 'three months' previous notice in writing' is clearly incorrect, as it points to some provision not contained in the antecedent part of the instrument, and otherwise is perfectly senseless. I am inclined to adopt the latter view; but there remains a great difficulty in the substance of this agreement dependent on the question—viz. whether it extends to the payment of principal and interest agreed to be made on May 18 next, or only to any payment after default on that day. If the first, it seems to fall within the rule that a 'bill of sale is void if it contain a power to seize upon the grantor making default in payment of the sum and interest secured after the demand in writing,' there being of course an implied power in the present case to seize upon nonpayment (see Mr. Probyn's valuable treatise on the 'Statutory Form of a Bill of Sale,' p. 42, and the numerous authorities there cited). If, on the other hand, the agreement (3) does not extend to payment on May 18, but only to payment after default, then the whole clause is a nullity, because the mortgagee will always have the power to require payment without demand and without notice after default shall have been made on May 18, it being 'an event on the happening of which the said chattels are made liable to seizure' by virtue of the instrument in question, under the alternative contained in the agreement which I am now considering. I have great difficulty in coming to any conclusion on the point whether or not the payment on May 18 is contemplated by the clause. The inclination of my opinion is that it is, and that the bill of sale is consequently void on that account; but, if it is not, the clause must still, in my opinion, render the bill of sale void for ambiguity and uncertainty. I have come to this conclusion with great regret. It is a great hardship on the claimant that a clause evidently inserted for the benefit of the mortgagor, if operative, and which possibly is wholly inoperative, should avoid a perfectly fair and honest bill of sale. In the event of an appeal being brought I shall give the execution creditor his costs, but not otherwise. The costs of the high bailiff and hearing fee must, in any case, be paid by the claimant. The claimant to elect to appeal or not within a week, and judgment to be entered accordingly.—E. Pollock for the claimant; R. Minton-Senhouse for the execution creditor.

ACTION BY A SOLICITOR FOR EXPENSES AS A WITNESS.

At the Sheffield County Court, on February 25, his Honour Judge Ellison gave a decision in the case of Howlett v. Clarke. The plaintiff was Mr. England Howlett, a solicitor, of Kirton-in-Lindsey, and the defendant, Walter Clarke, certificated bailiff, Silver Street Head, Sheffield. Some time ago Mr Howlett wanted a clerk in his office, and a man named Fielding applied for the post, and in his statement gave the name of Mr. Clarke as a person with whom he had been engaged. This proved to be false, and Mr. Clarke prosecuted Fielding, calling as his chief witness the present plaintiff. Mr. Clarke refused to pay Mr. Howlett any expenses or conduct-money, and the present action was taken to obtain the sum of 1*l.* 14*s.*—His Honour, in giving judgment, said this was a claim for expenses or allowance to a witness in a criminal prosecution in which the defendant was informant. Such a claim as that could only arise by contract, and there was no express contract here. That was clear. It appeared that the plaintiff was served with a subpœna signed by one of the Sheffield magistrates. His Honour had no evidence before him that the informant had anything to do with the issue of the subpœna. He had simply put the person in the position that he refused to attend at his peril. It might be that he might refuse to attend successfully. He was told that under the Act only a low scale of costs were allowed; and unless a certain Act of Parliament had been repealed—and his Honour did not know that it had been—he would run no risk unless he had been paid his full costs. He proposed, therefore, to nonsuit the plaintiff.—Mr. A. Howe (on behalf of Mr. A. Muir Wilson) was for the plaintiff; and Mr. A. Neal for the defendant.

POLICE CASE.

UNQUALIFIED VETERINARY SURGEONS.

On Thursday, February 19, Mr. Charles Lambert, farrier, of Pond Place, Chelsea, appeared before Mr. de Rutzen, at Westminster, to a summons obtained at the instance of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, Red Lion Square, London, charging that 'he, not being on the register of veterinary surgeons, and not holding at the time of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881, the veterinary certificate of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, did at Pond Place, Chelsea, unlawfully use and take an addition and description stating that he was specially qualified to practise a branch of veterinary surgery.'—Mr. Colam, in opening the case, said the prosecution was instituted under section 17 of the Veterinary Surgeons Act of 1881, which set out, as in the summons, the qualification of a practitioner of veterinary surgery or of any branch thereof. The facts were very simple: the defendant was not on the register of veterinary surgeons, nor was he on the register of the Highland and Agricultural Society; he carried on business as a farrier, and it was to decide the legality of his use of the word 'veterinary' that these proceedings were brought. The words in the section of the Act of Parliament had a very wide interpretation, and he (Mr. Colam) thought the defendant had committed the offence they were intended to meet. Outside his premises at Chelsea defendant had a board displayed: his name appeared on the first line, on the next were the words, in large letters, 'South Kensington Veterinary,' and on a third line underneath was painted 'Shoeing Establishment.' The word 'veterinary' was employed to catch the eye, and obviously suggested that the person using it undertook a branch of veterinary science. The public were easily deceived by such a notification by a person carrying on a business of this sort, and, accordingly, the defendant was written to, as far back as July of last year, requesting him to discontinue the use of the word; he replied on note-paper headed in the same way as his notice board, that for six years he had used a similar board with the words 'Veterinary Shoeing Forge' on it, and that as a farrier he was constantly working under the orders of veterinary surgeons. The board remained up from that time down to the month of December. On December 27 Mr. Thatcher, solicitor to the college, wrote to him threatening a prosecution unless the word 'Veterinary' was removed, and no notice being taken of his communication the present proceedings were at length instituted.—Mr. De Rutzen: You would not say that a man who calls himself a veterinary shoeing smith was representing himself to be a 'veterinary surgeon?'—Mr. Colam: We say that he has no right to use the word 'veterinary' at all. It is wholly redundant or it has a meaning—the meaning that the person using it is qualified. Many veterinary surgeons carry on forges as a part of their business, and great injury can be done to the hoofs of horses by unqualified and therefore unskilled persons. I go to the extent of saying that a person not qualified to practise the veterinary art has no right to put up a notice that he keeps a veterinary shoeing forge.—Mr. De Rutzen: Very well, I will hear the evidence.—Mr. Charles Davis, clerk in the office of Mr. Thatcher, solicitor to the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, proved that the defendant exhibited the board complained of in December last and since.—Mr. Colam: Are the words 'South Kensington Veterinary' in one line?—Witness: Yes.—Mr. Colam: And are large letters used?—Witness: Yes, very large. The words, 'Shoeing Establishment,' underneath, are in the same sized letters.—Do you produce the register of the college?—Yes, and the defendant's name does not appear on it.—Mr. Dutton said he had no question to ask.—Mr. William Hunting, F.R.C.V.S., was the next witness. In answer to counsel he said it was very common in some country towns for veterinary surgeons to have a shoeing forge as a branch of their business, and of course it followed that their use of the word 'veterinary' was perfectly legitimate.—Mr. Colam: In such cases is the use of the words 'veterinary shoeing forge,' or 'veterinary forge' very common?—Witness: I cannot say it is very common, but it is likely enough used to designate that part of the premises where the branch is carried on.—Mr. Colam: What is the practice as far as your knowledge goes?—Witness: Not to do so.—Mr. Colam: In your judgment, does the use of the word 'veterinary,' as employed by the defendant, imply that he is qualified to practise veterinary surgery?—Witness: I know of no other signification which it could convey. The word was never used in this country until the Veterinary College was established by a French veterinarian—Mr. Bell. It was used in connection with the doctoring of animals to mark the distinction between a qualified person and a farrier, the latter designation being previously employed.—Mr. De Rutzen: We may take it that a veterinary forge is very often attached to a country veterinary surgeon's premises, but did you ever know an instance in which it was not very plainly described outside that the proprietor was a veterinary surgeon?—Witness: His name would generally be up as a veterinary surgeon, and the forge would only be distinguished as a mere branch of the business.—The Magistrate: Can you tell me one single instance of a veterinary surgeon possessing a forge who does not plainly designate himself, 'Mr. ——, Veterinary Surgeon'?—Witness: No, I think it is the rule to do so.—The Magistrate: You don't know any exception?—Witness: I don't remember one just now.—The Magistrate: Then does not the use of the words 'Veterinary Shoeing Establishment' point to a distinction? Only to-day I saw outside a shop the words 'Hygienic Boot Establishment.' I confess I did not quite understand the meaning of it, but you would say that 'veterinary,' used in the same sense as 'hygienic'—a mere advertisement—could not be legitimately employed?—Witness: Yes; 'hygienic' has a general application, and has been used for years, whereas 'veterinary' has a specific definition. If I may say so, it is a word we 'coined' ourselves.—Another professional gentleman was put in the box, but counsel said that, as there had been no cross-examination for the defendant, it would be unnecessary to examine an additional witness.—Mr. Dutton, on behalf of Mr. Lambert, said he had no witnesses to call, but he contended that his client had not brought himself within the terms of the Act, by representing himself as a person specially qualified. He used the word 'veterinary' on his notice board only to signify that he shoed under veterinary surgeons' instructions. It was a case analogous to a doctor who carried on a chemist's business. A shoeing forge might be an adjunct to some veterinary surgeons' businesses, but they had no monopoly of the trade, and a shoeing smith might say he was a veterinary shoeing-smith without implying that he was a veterinary surgeon. Section 16 of the Act clearly defined what was a false representation, and had reference to a person who was unqualified putting initials or letters after his name.—Mr. De Rutzen: 'Or otherwise stating or implying' that he is qualified.—Mr. Dutton said the defendant for eight years had used a similar board to the one now in use.—Mr. De Rutzen: What is an ordinary interpretation of the words used? A veterinary shoeing establishment to my mind means a place where a man shoes on something like veterinary principles. I look in the dictionary to see the meaning of the word 'veterinary,' and find that it is given as one 'who practises the art of treating the diseases of domestic animals.' Therefore, coming to the conclusion that the defendant does hold himself out to the public as shoeing on veterinary principles, I think that he comes within the meaning of the words of the section, 'a practitioner of veterinary surgery, or of any branch thereof.' But I will willingly grant a case on the point if he is not prepared to discontinue the use of the word.—Mr. Colam: That is all we ask for.—Mr. De Rutzen: I should be quite prepared to inflict a fine, but I don't want to do so, for I have never heard of a case of this kind before.—Mr. Dutton: After the expression of your view, sir, I am not going to allow my client to go to the expense of a case. Under the circumstances he will follow my advice and discontinue the use of the word.—Mr. De Rutzen: He has had the benefit of the use of it for some years, and I don't suppose he will be much the loser now; I will adjourn the case if it is desired, and then, if defendant does what is required, no more need be heard of it.—Mr. Colam: I should prefer a nominal fine, sir.—Mr. Dutton: Say a fine of sixpence. I quite understand what the college require.—Mr. De Rutzen: Very well.—Mr. Colam: And we do not ask for costs.—The proceedings then terminated.—Mr. Colam, barrister, prosecuted, and Mr. T. D. Dutton, solicitor, appeared for the defendant.

POLICE AND ASSIZE COURTS.

IN the House of Commons on March 3, in answer to Sir R. Fowler, Mr. Matthews said: With regard to sessions and assize Courts in England, I am glad to inform my hon. friend that as the result of correspondence during the last year there are twenty-six additional places in which the accommodation may now be regarded as satisfactory, bringing up the total number of such places to 145. There are forty-two places in which improvement is desirable, and correspondence is still going on with hopes that a satisfactory result will shortly be arrived at. There are two cases in which the local authority have failed to comply with the requirements of the Secretary of State. I hope my hon. friend will not ask me to name them publicly, as I trust the force of example may still influence them in the right direction. With regard to police Courts, I am not able to give complete explanations within the limits of an answer; but I can assure my hon. friend that substantial progress is being made, especially in the metropolis.

In answer to Sir R. Fowler, Mr. A. J. Balfour said: The question of the accommodation of persons awaiting trial at police and assize Courts in Ireland was fully investigated by the Irish Government in 1887 and 1888, and everything possible under the existing law was done to remedy any defects that were brought to light. No complaints have recently been made except as regards Green Street Court House, Dublin. In that case, however, the complaint is against the building generally.

In answer to Sir R. Fowler, the Lord Advocate said: As my hon. friend is possibly aware, a report was made to the Secretary for Scotland by a departmental committee appointed to inquire into this matter. Following upon this report communications were addressed to the responsible authorities of those Court houses specially named in the report as requiring alterations. In certain cases the Secretary for Scotland has been informed that the necessary alterations have already been carried out.

CURIOSITIES OF THE LAW AND LAWYERS.

UNDER the above title a collection of scraps of legal jokes and jokelets was published some time ago by Mr. Croake James. A new and enlarged edition has now been published (Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington), from which we take the following extracts:—

A tenant of Lord Halkeston, a judge of the Scotch Court of Session, once waited on him with a woeful countenance, and said: 'My lord, I am come to inform your lordship of a sad misfortune. My cow has gored one of your lordship's cows, and I fear it cannot live.' 'Well, then, of course, you must pay for it.' 'Indeed, my lord, it was not my fault, and you know I am but a very poor man.' 'I can't help that. The law says you must pay for it. I am not to lose my cow, am I?' 'Well, my lord, if it must be so, I cannot say more. But I forgot what I was saying. It was my mistake entirely. I should have said that it was your lordship's cow that gored mine.' 'Oh, is that it? That's quite a different affair. Go along, and don't trouble me just now. I am very busy. Be off, I say!'

Judge Willis about 1780 sentenced a boy at Lancaster to be hanged, with the hope of reforming him by frightening him, and he ordered him for execution next morning. The judge awoke in the middle of the night, and was so affected by the notion that he might himself die in the course of the night, and the boy be hanged though he did not mean that he should suffer, that he got out of his bed and went to the lodgings of the high sheriff, and left a reprieve for the boy, or what was to be considered equivalent to it, and then, returning to his bed, spent the rest of the night very comfortably.

At the Old Bailey it was customary to sentence the whole of the prisoners found guilty at the sessions at one time. It fell to Baron Graham's lot to perform this duty, and he accordingly went over the list with due solemnity, but omitted one person brought up for sentence—Mr. John Jones. The judge was on the point of finishing the sentences when the officer reminded his lordship of this omission. Whereupon the judge said gravely, 'Oh! I am sure I beg Mr. Jones's pardon,' and then sentenced him to transportation for life.

Sir George Rose had a friend who had been appointed to a judgeship in one of the colonies, and who, long afterwards, was describing the agonies he endured in the sea passage when he first went out. Sir George listened with great commiseration to the recital of these woes, and said, 'It's a great mercy you did not throw up your appointment.'

A young French advocate, in the course of his address to the Court, flourished about his hand in such a manner as to show off a magnificent diamond ring. He was young, good-looking, and pleading for a lady of quality, who demanded a separation from her husband. The husband, who happened to be present, interrupted him in the middle of a period, and, turning to the judges, exclaimed theatrically: 'My lords, you will appreciate the zeal which Monsieur M. is displaying against me, and the sincerity of his argument, when you are informed that the diamond ring he wears is the very one which I placed on my wife's finger on the day of that union he is so anxious to dissolve.' The Court, said M. Berryer, who relates the story, was struck, and rose immediately. The cause was lost, and the advocate never had another. To add to the poignancy of the catastrophe, the husband's insinuation had no foundation in fact.

George IV. asked Dr. Gregory what was the longest sederunt after dinner that he had ever heard of on credible authority. The doctor answered, 'The longest I know of was at the house of a learned Scottish judge, Lord Newton. A gentleman called at his house in York Place, Edinburgh, at a late hour, and was informed that his lordship was at dinner. Next day the same gentleman called at an early hour, and being again informed that the judge was at dinner, expressed surprise that the dinner of that day should be so much earlier than the dinner of the day before. "It is the very same dinner," replied the servant; "his lordship has not yet risen from table."'

Man of the World.

THE FACTORY BILLS.

THE ponderous and voluminous report of the Lords' Committee on Sweating is at last bearing fruit. For a while not a few persons despaired of seeing any practical result arise from so many disclosures and so much dissertation. The evils of the sweating system, which the Lancet was the first to bring to public notice, were admitted on all sides, but doubts were expressed as to the possibility of dealing with such questions by legislative enactment. We then sketched out what improvements to the existing laws would beneficially affect the condition of the workers who toil in sweating dens. Parliament, however, adjourned, and it seemed as if nothing was to be done. But our hopes were not abandoned, they were only deferred, and now at last we are rewarded with a deluge of bills on the question which, in a great measure, we have made our own. The principal difficulty to-day is to sort and to select the best suggestions from these many projects. In the House of Lords we have the Sanitation of Factories Bill, introduced by Lord Thring, who was an active member of the sweating committee; and the Factories and Workshops Bill, presented by Lord Dunraven, who was the chairman of that committee. In the House of Commons Sir Henry James and Mr. Sydney Buxton have each bills dealing with the same question; while Mr. Matthews, on behalf of the Government, has introduced a fifth bill, on which should be grafted, it is suggested, the best clauses of all the other bills. It will, however, we fear, be necessary not merely to add new clauses to the Government bill, but there is also need to extract some of the proposals it contains. For instance, on all sides there is a consensus of opinion that it is the application rather than the law itself which is most at fault. If inspectors were more numerous and more active, if the authorities entrusted with the duty of applying the law were not themselves interested in eluding its provisions, the grievances which have been so loudly denounced would not have arisen—at least, in their present aggravated form. The greatest of all necessities is the creation of an army of inspectors who will be perfectly free from local influences and local corruption. But the Government bill proposes to do away with certifying factory surgeons, who number in all about twelve hundred. An increase of inspectorships in other directions will not compensate this very severe loss. We trust, however, this clause (No. 19) in the bill will be left out. In this respect, as on all other points, advantage should be taken of the present favourable disposition of Parliament to arrange matters in as large and broad a spirit as possible.

The Lancet.

THE SHEFFIELD DISTRICT INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

THE sixteenth annual general meeting of this society was held on Thursday, February 26. Present: Mr. Joseph Binney in the chair, and Messrs. Allen, Ashington, J. C. Auty, Bagshawe, C. Barker, Bennett, A. J. Binney, J. Binney, Bowman, Brailsford, Bramley, G. E. Branson, Bromley, Chambers, W. E. Clegg, Cole, Esam, Foster, Greaves, F. L. Harrop (Rotherham), Howe, Kesteven, A. E. Maxfield, Neal, D. M. Nicholson, Parker, Pickford (Rotherham), Porrett, Pye-Smith, C. H. Smith, W. Smith, W. F. Smith, Tasker, Taylor, Van Wart, Vickers, Wells (Eckington), J. B. Wheat, A. M. Wilson, and Willis (Rotherham).

The report presented by the committee was received, confirmed, and adopted.

The report stated that the number of members is now 151.

Legislation of the Session (53 & 54 Vict.).

Though the past session of Parliament is popularly spoken of as a barren one, the Acts which have been passed of interest to the profession are neither few nor unimportant. Among the most important are:—

The Intestates' Estates Act, c. 29.

This Act, which came into operation on September 1 last, provides that the whole estate of an intestate dying without issue, if under 500*l.* (net), shall belong to the widow; if over, that the first 500*l.* and interest, until payment, at 4 per cent. from the death (to be charged on the realty and personalty in proportion to their net values) shall belong to her, and in addition she will have the same share in the residue as she would have had before in the whole estate. There are provisions by which the net value of the realty and personalty are to be ascertained. It appears very doubtful if this Act applies in the case of a partial intestacy.

This Act will prove beneficial in the case of small estates, in which intestacies mostly occur, and where the neglect of the deceased to make his will often worked hardly on the widow. It makes a breach in the long-lasting Statute of Distributions of 1679.

Partnership Act, c. 39.

A very carefully drawn Act of fifty sections, to declare and amend the law of partnership. It repeals and re-enacts, with slight alterations, Bovill's Act, and embodies the result of a great number of decisions, in which, up to now, partnership law was almost entirely to be found. Perhaps the most important alteration in the law is that contained in section 23, which gives a creditor of a partner the power to obtain a charging order on that partner's share in the partnership property, and to have a receiver thereof appointed, instead of allowing the creditors, as formerly, to issue a writ of execution against the share. The rules of equity and of common law applicable to partnership are to continue in force, except so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act (section 46).

It is mainly based on Sir Frederick Pollock's work on the subject, and deserves particular attention. It is, in fact, a code explaining the law of partnership. It came into operation on January 1, 1891.

Supreme Court of Judicature Act, c. 44.

From October 24, 1890, motions for new trials, or to set aside verdicts, findings, or judgments, are to be heard before not less than three judges of the Court of Appeal, instead of a Divisional Court. Motions for judgment in such causes shall be heard (if possible) by the judge before whom the trial took place. This does not apply to criminal or bankruptcy matters. Section 5 contains a very wide provision as to costs, which seems to have excited the dismay of the president of the Incorporated Law Society; but it is made subject to the Judicature Act and the Rules, and its object is probably to remove all doubt whatever as to the jurisdiction of the Court to award costs in all cases not specially comprised within rule 1 of Order LXV.

Companies (Memorandum of Association) Act, c. 62; Companies (Winding-up) Act, c. 63; Directors' Liability Act, c. 64.

These three Acts, which make important changes in company law, may conveniently be considered together. The object of the first of them, which came into operation on August 18 last, is to enable a company to alter its objects in certain respects or to substitute a memorandum and articles of association for a deed of settlement. The alteration must be confirmed on petition by the Court, which will have regard to the rights and interests of creditors, debenture-holders, and members.

The second of these Acts extends still further the principle of officialism which now enters so largely into the law, assimilating the procedure in the winding up of a company to the procedure in bankruptcy. Its effect will be that the official receiver will, in nearly all small cases, be the liquidator of a company being wound up. In the case of provincial companies, whose paid-up capital does not exceed 10,000*l.*, the winding-up will take place under the supervision of the local County Court. Under this Act, anyone who has taken any part in the promotion or formation of a company, or has been a director or officer of the company, may be examined in Court, and damages may be summarily assessed against him by the Court. Moneys received by liquidators of companies being wound up by order of the Court must, unless otherwise ordered by the Board of Trade, be paid into an account at the Bank of England. Very lengthy rules have been issued under the Act, and the authorities are construing it as applying to companies in course of winding up, as well as those where the winding-up commenced after its coming into operation on January 1, 1891.

The Directors' Liability Act is really meant to alter the law as laid down by the House of Lords in Derry v. Peek, but the bill underwent so many changes in becoming law, and its provisions seem so ambiguous, that it remains to be seen what alteration it has effected. If it causes directors to be more careful what statements are inserted in company prospectuses it will certainly achieve a useful end. It operates from its passing on August 18, 1890.

Settled Land Act, c. 69.

This Act, brought in by Lord Herschell, and largely due to the exertions of the Incorporated Law Society, supplies what have been discovered to be omissions in the Settled Land Acts of 1882 and 1884, and deserves very careful study. Amongst other alterations it effects are—that a tenant-for-life may make the necessary conveyance for giving effect to a contract entered into by his predecessor (section 6); that a notice to the trustees of an intention to lease is not necessary when the term does not exceed twenty-one years (section 7 (i.)); that in a mining lease the rent may be made to vary according to the price of the minerals gotten (section 8 (i.)). It also gives the tenant-for-life power to raise money on mortgage for the purpose of discharging an encumbrance on the settled land (section 11), and enables him to sell to or purchase from the trustees (section 12). Section 13 extends the improvements authorised to be made out of capital money to bridges, and making additions to or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable them to be let, &c.; and section 14 enables capital money in Court to be paid out to the trustees. Section 15 alters the law as laid down in decisions, and enacts that capital money may be applied in payment of authorised improvements, although no scheme was before the execution thereof submitted for approval to the trustees or the Court—a most important and beneficial provision. Two more classes of persons are added to those who are deemed to be trustees for the purposes of the Acts (section 16); and the powers of the Conveyancing Act with reference to the appointment and retirement of trustees are to apply to trustees for the purposes of these Acts (section 17). This last section is retrospective.

This Act, which is a further proof of the strong objection of the Legislature to the tying up of land, commenced as from its passing on August 18, 1890.

Bankruptcy Act, c. 71.

A portion of our law that is always being altered and patched up has not been let alone this session. The bankruptcy law has received a further amendment in the shape of an Act of thirty-one sections, which came into operation on January 1 last. Its effect may be shortly stated to be that it makes the bankrupt's position more penal than before; makes it more difficult to carry through a scheme of arrangement, and more difficult for the bankrupt to obtain his discharge; extends the period allowed to a trustee for disclaimer to twelve months, and that the execution creditor and the landlord both suffer by it, while the general creditor is correspondingly a gainer. Restrictions are also placed on voting by proxy. The landlord can now only distrain for six months' rent after adjudication (section 28). The provisions in the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, relating to compositions and schemes of arrangements are repealed, and others substituted. Numerous rules have been already issued under the Act.

Its promoters hope that its rather stringent provisions may render men more cautious in their commercial dealings.

BILLS IN PARLIAMENT IN 1890.

The Land Transfer Bill.

This bill has not been reintroduced this year, and though arrangements for opposing it were discussed at the meeting of the Associated Provincial Law Societies, in March last, they were rendered unnecessary on account of its non-introduction. It can, however, by no means be regarded as finally dropped.

The Public Trustee Bill.

The committee considered this bill, and passed a resolution strongly disapproving of it, and the secretary communicated their resolution to the local members of Parliament, requesting them to oppose the bill on its second reading. It had eventually to be dropped.

The Government had given notice of their intention to bring in a Public Trustee Bill during the present session. Several private members have also introduced a bill having the same object.

Remuneration of Private Trustees.

A communication was received from the Manchester Incorporated Law Association, accompanied by a report on the above subject, but the secretary was desired to write in reply, and say that, 'in the opinion of your committee, no statutory provision should be made for the payment of private trustees.'

Registration at Wakefield.

The committee considered the question of registering, at Wakefield, wills or letters of administration affecting leasehold estate only, and passed a resolution, which has already been communicated to members, that it was unnecessary to register them.

Stamps on Contracts for Sale.

The committee, in view of the desirability of assuring a uniform practice in such cases, reaffirmed the resolution passed on December 14, 1877, that the vendor's solicitor should furnish to the purchaser, or his solicitor, a duplicate of the contract, duly stamped, without any cost to the purchaser.

Status of Solicitors.

A communication from the Liverpool Law Society as to improving the status of solicitors, and in particular rendering them eligible for numerous appointments, which are at present only open to barristers, was considered by the committee, and a resolution was passed that the society would join the Liverpool Law Society in taking any steps which might be thought advisable in the matter.

Solicitor-Mortgagees.

In connection with this subject attention is directed to the case of Ex parte Liquorish, in re Wallis, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 500; L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 176, in which the Court of Appeal appears to have decided that a solicitor-mortgagee may charge profit costs in connection with mortgage security if there is an express contract to that effect, thus somewhat modifying the harshness of the rule apparently laid down in Field v. Hopkins, W. N. Jan. 25, 1890, and In re Roberts, L. R. 43 Chanc. Div. 52, noticed in the last report. A recent case has just been decided on the same lines—Stone v. Liquorish, L. T. Feb. 7, 1891—in which it was stated that, prior to the decision in In re Wallis, six out of the seven taxing-masters always allowed profit costs, but since three of the six had discontinued to do so. It is understood, however, that the Incorporated Law Society are only waiting the advent of a favourable test-case in order to have the question thoroughly settled.

Stamps on Transfers of Mortgages.

The Board of Inland Revenue, on August 15 and September 1 last issued somewhat ambiguous circulars on this subject. They afterwards replied to individual inquirers that they do not claim stamp duty on a transfer of the current interest on a mortgage. As it had, since the year 1870, been generally understood in this district that duty was payable on accruing as well as accrued interest, and penalties had been imposed on several of our members who had not stamped deeds in accordance with this custom, the committee thought it ought not to be left to a letter to determine these matters, and that the Incorporated Law Society should endeavour to obtain a clause in the Customs and Inland Revenue Act of 1891, setting this entirely at rest, and they were written to accordingly. A reply was received that the council thought it hardly necessary to take any action in the matter.

In answer to an inquiry from the committee, the Board of Inland Revenue, on December 8, wrote, stating definitely, that an 'arrear of interest' on which, as stated in their circular of September 1, stamp duty has to be paid, means an arrear due at and prior to the last day fixed for payment of interest, and does not include the current interest between that day and the date of transfer.

Residuary Accounts.

The committee have had under consideration the inconvenience caused by section 21, subsection 2, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, under which legacies payable out of a mixed fund, under the usual trust for sale, have to be apportioned for duty purposes between the realty and personalty in a residuary account.

The secretary wrote to Mr. Williamson, who replied that the Incorporated Law Society would take up the matter if the committee would formulate some definite scheme. The committee are now taking steps to do this, and would be glad if any member who has a suggestion to make would communicate it to the secretary.

The inconvenience that this enactment would be sure to cause was pointed out in the Committee's Report of 1888, p. 11.

Succession Accounts on Sales.

The question of including succession accounts, when retained by the vendor in an acknowledgment of right of production, particularly with regard to recent legislation, was brought before the committee at their meeting on January 29, 1891.

The following resolution, unanimously passed by the committee of the society in 1877, was read: 'The committee recommend that the vendor should covenant to produce succession duty accounts, when he retains them, on the ground that they relate to other property. That in such case he should furnish, at his own expense, a full copy of so much of the account as relates to the property sold. That where the account relates exclusively to the property sold, the vendor should hand it over to the purchaser.' And the committee saw no reason to alter that resolution. As the committee have been informed that several firms in Sheffield do not carry out the recommendation, it has been thought well to again refer to the subject.

Sheffield Stamp Office.

The committee passed a resolution that it is desirable that there should be a stamp office in Sheffield similar to the one existing in Manchester and the one just granted to Leeds, and a sub-committee was appointed to endeavour to obtain the same. The Chamber of Commerce have also decided to present a report on the subject, and it is hoped that the Chamber of Commerce, the Cutlers' Company, and the corporation of Sheffield will co-operate with your society in obtaining this desirable object.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

THE CARRIAGE OF THEATRICAL PROPERTY.

AT the Manchester Assizes which lately opened, Mr. Justice Lawrance commented on the lightness of the calendar. In the civil Court a case of some interest was decided with reference to the carriage of theatrical properties by railway companies. The plaintiffs in this case, the Bolton Theatre and Entertainments Company (Lim.), claimed from the North-Eastern Railway Company damages for the loss and destruction of scenery, and also for consequential damages. The defendants pleaded protection under the provisions of the Carriers Act. According to the statement of counsel, the plaintiff company were the proprietors of two touring theatrical companies, who played 'The Harbour Lights.' One of the companies had been performing at Bishop Auckland early in 1890, and from thence they went to Scarborough. At the close of the engagement at Scarborough the scenery was taken to the railway station for removal to Spennymoor, and on the way thither the scenery by some means caught fire, and the truck covering it was placed under an engine-pump, and so the fire was extinguished, but the scenery was found to have been entirely destroyed. They claimed damages for the loss of the scenery, and consequential damages were asked for on account of the loss sustained through their not being able to carry on their performances. Counsel said that the Carriers Act provided that railway companies should not be held responsible for packages containing paintings, engravings, or pictures of the value of more than 10*l.*, unless such value was declared at the time of sending. He, however, submitted that this scenery was not such a 'painting' as was contemplated by the framers of the Act. The judge: Take the case of a signboard forwarded by railway. Counsel replied it might be contended that signboards were pictures. The judge remarked that if by a painting was meant a thing painted, the scenery in question was a painting, and the railway company's defence ought to succeed. But if one had a house painted it did not necessarily constitute such painting a work of high art. Would it be argued that the statute did not contemplate a distinction between pictures of high art and pictures of low degree? For the defendant company it was argued that under the Carriers Act, unless the person who forwarded goods of the nature of those for which damages were now claimed made a declaration of the value of such goods at the time of sending, the company could not be held responsible. Notices to that effect were posted in the stations of the company, and those notices had always been held to be good in law. Under those provisions, when such a declaration was made, a higher charge for conveyance followed, and he suggested that the declaration was not made in this case in order that a lower rate of pay for carriage might be taken advantage of. As to the question of whether these scenes were or were not paintings, counsel submitted that they clearly were. They were not the very highest works of art, but, on the other hand, stage scenery had been, and still was, painted by men who stood the very highest in their profession. It was ridiculous to contend that a painting was not a work of art because of its size. If damages of this kind were brought to affect a railway company where would they end? He submitted that on the question of consequential damages the jury had no option in law but to find for the defendant company. The judge said one question for the jury to determine was, whether the items of scenery which were valued at over 10*l.* were pictures or not. If pictures, they came under the provisions of the Act, and the company were not liable. As to the question of consequential damages, the jury would have to consider whether the company had received proper notice that the pictures or paintings were property that it was necessary for the plaintiffs to be in possession of for carrying on their performances, and whether the plaintiffs were hindered or delayed in their performances by not receiving their goods. The jury found for the plaintiffs, with damages, both on the claim for the loss of the property and on the claim for consequential loss.

PARCHMENT v. PAPER.

A curious point came lately before the Vice-Chancellor of the Chancery of Lancashire, in The Case of the Manchester and Liverpool Permanent Benefit Building Society and Kilvert's Purchase. Counsel for the purchaser said his client, by contract dated November, 1890, purchased certain property from the society, and he now asked whether a good title had been shown to the hereditaments purchased in accordance with the conditions of sale, and to whom to pay the money. The society was registered under the Act of 1874, and put up certain property for sale last November, completion being arranged for in January. A few days prior to completion, however, the purchaser discovered, quite accidentally, that the society had entered into an ordinary dissolution deed in 1884. If that deed had been properly carried out the whole of the funds and property of the society would have been vested in a liquidator and committee of inspection who would have had power to act. Under the Building Societies Act it was provided that the deed should be registered. It appeared, however, that the deed was written on parchment and not on paper, and the registrar refused to register it. They found that the society was stated to be still in liquidation, but the deed was not in any way disclosed. His client was a willing purchaser, the purchase being believed to be of value, and the only question was whether he could have a satisfactory title made under the circumstances. The Treasury rule said that the deed should be written on paper. The Vice-Chancellor said he did not think anybody could enforce that unless it was by Act of Parliament. Supposing the deed of conveyance was good, the purchaser had the property. Counsel replied that the conveyance had not been executed. We do not know whom to take it from, although we have got what we believe to be a good property. The society is in liquidation, and it is hard to say where the legal estate in a building society is. Under the Act of 1874 there are no trustees as there used to be in the old days. Notwithstanding the action of the registrar, and the incidents connected with it, the society was still in liquidation, and therefore the directors had no power to give a good title. Counsel for the society, however, said it was not dissolved. The question was, whether the instrument itself or registration was the act of dissolution. Dissolution could be carried out with the consent of three-fourths of the members of the society, holding not less than a certain number of shares, that consent being testified to by their signatures to the instrument of dissolution. They had got the signatures, but that only testified to the consent of the individual shareholders, and did not operate in itself. Some other act was required, and that was the registration of the instrument. Until the deed was registered there was really no dissolution at all. The Vice-Chancellor said three things were required before they arrived at a dissolution. First, there must be consent from the required number of persons; secondly, that consent must be testified by their signatures to the instrument of dissolution; and, thirdly, it was provided that there 'shall be' registration, not 'may be.' If any one of those three things failed, there was no dissolution; and if there was no dissolution, the society was in existence. There must be in this case a declaration that under the existing contract the present directors were entitled, under their rules, to give a title, fix a sale, receive money for the purchase, and give a discharge for it. This is a very valuable decision and contribution to the existing law on building societies, and the point as to registration is of considerable moment.

INSURANCE COMPANIES AND LIFE POLICIES.

A question as to the surrender of life policies was lately before the same Court in the case of In re Findlow. Counsel stated that it was a petition under the Married Women's Property Act to obtain the appointment of a trustee for the purpose of obtaining the surrender value of a life insurance policy from the Edinburgh Insurance Society, and dealing with it for the benefit of the children of the marriage. The Vice-Chancellor expressed his surprise at the small amount offered by the insurance society, and said the public ought to know how these things were dealt with. Here was a person who had been insured for fifteen years and had paid 385*l.* in premiums. The premium appeared to have been 25*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per annum, and that in fifteen years would amount to 385*l.*, and yet the total amount offered by the society was 174*l.* He could only say that in certain other offices the sum of 174*l.* for the surrender value of a policy on which 385*l.* had been paid would be considered very small. A trustee was then appointed, and instructed to present to the Court every six months an account showing how the money had been expended. Commenting on this decision in a local paper, the manager of the company considers that it contains reflections upon this company totally undeserved. He points out that the policy in question was effected in 1875 under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, for the benefit of the wife and children of the assured. The Act protects such policies against the claims of creditors by making them the subject of a trust, and thus debars the assured from dealing with their policies by way of assignment, surrender, or otherwise, at their own hand. A trustee, however, may be appointed by the Court, and such trustee is empowered to discharge the policy. The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has placed matters on a simpler footing, but its provisions do not apply to policies effected under the previous Act. The half-yearly premium under this policy, due in March, 1890, was not paid, but the company, in accordance with their rules for preventing the lapsing of policies, kept the assurance in force, holding the premium as a debt. The same thing occurred in September following, so that at the date of the application to the Court there were two half-yearly premiums in arrear, amounting to 25*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* In November last application was made to the company to quote the amount of paid-up policy that would be allowed if the premiums were entirely discontinued. The answer was given that the company would allow a paid-up policy for 42*0l.* 16*s.*, after providing for the arrears of premium, and that in order to effect this it would be necessary to have a trustee appointed by the Court in the terms of the Act. An appeal was made that the application to the Court should be dispensed with in order to save expense, and the company replied in effect that the granting of a paid-up policy would necessitate the appointment of a trustee, but that if the policy was to be surrendered for its cash value, and the company thus finally discharged, the directors would entertain an application for such payment on an indemnity being given by two responsible persons. The surrender value quoted was 174*l.* 0*s.* 10*d.*, after allowing for the unpaid premiums. At a later date it was again expressly pointed out that the necessity for an appointment by the Court applied only to the case of a paid-up policy being taken, and that the company were still prepared to pay the surrender value without the discharge of a trustee if a sufficient indemnity were offered. Without further notice the company received intimation by a letter that an application was to be made to the Chancery Court of Lancashire for the appointment of a trustee, but that it would not be necessary for the company to be represented.

LIQUIDATORS AND THE WINDING-UP ACT, 1890.

A case of great importance to liquidators was In re Wood & Wright (Lim.), which company was in liquidation, the liquidation having been commenced by voluntary resolution; and an order had been made appointing a voluntary winding-up under the supervision of the Court. The liquidators were about to pay a further dividend in the pound when they received an intimation from an official of the Board of Trade calling upon them to hand over the balance in their hands after January 1 of this year. The question was whether the liquidators would be justified in handing this over. The question also arose whether the Companies (Winding-up) Act applied to a voluntary winding-up which was continued under the supervision of the Court. Counsel pointed out there were as yet no Palatine orders which prescribed any time. The orders were not yet made, but the forms were made before the Lord Chancellor's secretary or some other authority in London, and therefore the Act was effective. Under such circumstances under the statute the practice of the High Court is applicable to this Court. It was then asked whether the money would have to be paid into the Companies' Liquidation Account at the Bank of England, or whether a special account would have to be opened. The Vice-Chancellor said he thought it ought to be paid into the Companies' Liquidation Account. The result would be that a percentage would have to be paid to get it out again. The Vice-Chancellor said he was of opinion that the winding-up, being a voluntary winding-up under the supervision of the Court, was a winding-up within the meaning of section 15 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, and that the money must be paid into the account which the Board of Trade directed. On application to the Bank of England the liquidators would obtain a receiving mandate, and then they would get directions as to what was to be done. If they did not get those directions within a fortnight, then they could apply to that Court for liberty to apply to the Board of Trade for power to do anything they liked with the money that was proper.

A MARRIAGE AT SEA.

Is the captain of a ship capable of performing a legal marriage? Such is the nut which Mr. Clark Russell in his latest novel, 'A Marriage at Sea,' offers to be cracked. The captain in this case seemed apparently to have perfect faith in his powers to tie the marriage knot, and perhaps his faith was not so misplaced either, for though there is no statutory provision for marriage on board merchant vessels, yet the requirements of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 282, providing for their proper registration in the diocesan registry of London, assumes that they may take place. So, too, though there do not appear to be any statutable provision for marriages entered into on board Her Majesty's ships of war. Yet the Queen's regulations and the Admiralty instructions assume that such marriages may legally take place, as Article 21 provides for the making and preserving of authentic records of such marriages. Since 1849 records of such marriages have been duly forwarded for entry in the London Diocesan Registry.

THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.—Mr. Cobb asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he would ascertain from the Lord Chancellor whether he was aware that dissatisfaction and regret existed among the members of the legal profession and the public as to the manner in which one of the judges of the Queen's Bench was able to perform his duties, and that attention was being called to this subject in the legal newspapers; and whether any change was contemplated at an early date in the constitution of the bench in that division.—Mr. W. H. Smith: The Lord Chancellor thinks that it would be going altogether beyond any province assigned to him by law if he were to assume such a disciplinary attitude towards Her Majesty's judges as appears to be suggested by the hon. member's question. If there is any matter of fact within his jurisdiction in relation to the Supreme Court as to which the hon. member desires information, the Lord Chancellor would be very happy to give it; but in this case the question states neither any fact nor any person in relation to whom such information is desired.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, March 3, Mr. Marshall in the chair. The subject for discussion: 'That this society disapproves of the Religious Disabilities Removal Bill,' was opened by Mr. J. Cornelius Wheeler.—Mr. H. Foden Pattinson opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative—Messrs. Hinchliff, Harcourt, Alder, and Thirlby; in the negative—Messrs. Archer-White, Nimmo, Watson, and Baldwin.—Mr. Wheeler replied.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was lost by a majority of two. There was a large number of members present.

LIVERPOOL.—The next meeting of this association will be held at the Law Library, on Monday, March 9. The chair will be taken at 5.30 P.M. by C. Collins, Esq., solicitor. Subject for discussion: 'A. is the legal personal representative of B., who on May 17, 1887, shot himself while temporarily insane. On April 17, 1886, B. had insured his life for 1,000*l.* with an insurance company, the policy containing the following clause: "In case the assured die by the hand of justice or in personal combat, and also in case of suicide his representatives shall be entitled to half the amount provided his membership shall have reached two years." Two annual payments of premium have been made by B. Can A. recover from the insurance company?' 1 Sm. L. C. 405. Affirmative—Mr. C. H. Sweny; negative—Mr. F. Cuthbert Smith.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, March 9.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Tuesday, March 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Wednesday, March 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Thursday, March 12.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Friday, March 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Saturday, March 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—March 2, being the first meeting in the month, was devoted to business. Mr. C. W. Williams was in the chair. At the next meeting, on the 9th, Mr. H. W. Marcus will read a paper giving his experiences during his recent visit to Canada, which will be followed by a discussion.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MARCH 9 TO MARCH 14.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	March 9	March 10	March 11	March 12	March 13	March 14
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Leyburn	Stokesley	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Derby	Bakewell	Buxton	—
22	Judge Harington	—	Solihull	Bromsgrove	Shipston-on-Stour	Evesham	—
26	Judge Jordan	Longton	Rugeley	Hanley	Hanley	Tunstall	Stone
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Fordingbridge	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

OBITUARY.

WE have to record the death of one of the oldest members of the Colonial Service, Sir BENJAMIN CHILLEY CAMPBELL PINE, K.C.M.G., which occurred at his residence in Wimpole Street, Cavendish Square, towards the close of last week, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was the son of the late Mr. Benjamin C. Pine, of Tunbridge Wells, and was born in the year 1813. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the usual degrees, and was called to the bar at Gray's Inn in 1841. He was appointed in the following year Queen's Advocate at Sierra Leone and Acting-Governor there in 1848. In 1849 he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, from which post he was transferred in 1856 to that of Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Gold Coast Settlements. In 1859 he was made Lieutenant-Governor of St. Christopher's, and subsequently held at different dates the Governorships of Western Australia, the Virgin Islands, and the Leeward Isles. He held the Governorship of Natal from 1873 till 1875, when he retired on a well-earned pension. He was elected a bencher of his Inn in 1880, and served as Treasurer in 1885. Sir Benjamin was twice married; he was knighted in 1855, and made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George in 1871.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26.

Pinto and another v. Badman (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment on counterclaim at trial before Day, J., with a special jury in Middlesex, and motion by order).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27.

No sitting.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28.

No sitting.

MONDAY, MARCH 2.

Brandon v. M'Henry (appeal of plaintiffs from part of order of Wills, J., and Wright, J., dated January 26, setting aside execution under judgment entered July 15, 1885).—Dismissed.

Davey v. Thompson (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 11, setting aside judgment and execution and giving unconditional leave to defend).—Dismissed.

TUESDAY, MARCH 3.

Clink v. Radford & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of Pollock, B., dated November 5, at trial with a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4.

Shepherd v. Berger (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., and Lawrance, J., dated November 4, on appeal from Mayor's Court).—Allowed.

Moir v. Martin and others (appeal of defendants Puleston, Brown & Co. from judgment of Grantham, J., dated November 4, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Hendry v. Von Weissenfeld (appeal of defendant from judgment of Charles, J., dated November 7, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Lessing v. Horsley (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated November 12, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26.

Cox v. Bennett (appeal of defendant, L. Midwinter, from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 21, for retention of costs by trustees of real estate; Cur. adv. vult. February 25).—Dismissed.

Coutts & Co. v. The Irish Exhibition in London (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated October 28, 1890).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27.

In re Bridgewater Navigation Company (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of T. H. Birch from order of North, J., dated December 3, 1890, declaring rights of shareholders and notice of contention by representative of preference shareholders).—Part heard.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28.

Phelps, James & Co. v. Hill (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex; heard January 23).—Refused.

In re Bridgewater Navigation Company (Lim.) and Companies Acts.—Cur. adv. vult.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.,

MONDAY, MARCH 2.

Whitwood Chemical Company (Lim.) v. Hardman (appeal of defendant from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 6, restraining defendant giving less than his whole time to plaintiffs' business).—Allowed.

Doherty v. Doherty and Perkins (appeal of co-respondent from order of Butt, J., dated February 10, affirming refusal to order petitioner to file further affidavit of documents).—Allowed.

Day v. Gregory. Gregory v. Day (appeal of plaintiff A. A. Day from order of North, J., dated February 20, refusing application to strike out counter-claim).—Allowed, plaintiff undertaking to amend.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MARCH 3.

Kilpin v. Knill and another (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated January 26, at trial before Lawrance, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Oakley v. Symes (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated January 29, at trial before Wright, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Druce v. Levy & Co. (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment on counter-claims at trial before the Lord Chief Justice with special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Jamieson v. Britton and Wife (application of plaintiff in person for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated January 22, at trial before Grantham, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Warton v. Parrott (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Stephen, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—New trial as to question of liability.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated January 15, at trial before Butt, J., and a special jury).—Part heard.

A SOLICITOR CHARGED WITH ATTEMPTING TO RESCUE A PRISONER.—At the Greenwich Police Court on Wednesday, John Underdown, forty-four, labourer, 114 Hudson Road, Plumstead Common, was charged with being drunk and disorderly at the Greenwich Market, and John Henry West, twenty-nine, solicitor, of 67 Lee Road, Blackheath, was charged with attempting to rescue Underdown from the custody of P.C. Bragg.—On the previous night P.C. Bragg had to take Underdown into custody for being drunk. He became violent, and West attempted to rescue him, and P.C. Perks then took West into custody. He was subsequently bailed out, and on his name being called over at the Court he failed to appear, and Mr. Kennedy directed that the police should summon him. Underdown was fined 10*s.* or seven days in default.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. WILLIAM LENN WEST, LL.B., of 15 Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths. Mr. West was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Edward Owen Langham, LL.M., B.A., of the firm of Langham & Son, of Eastbourne, has been appointed Clerk to the Justices for the Uckfield Petty Sessional Division. Mr. Langham was admitted in 1879.

Mr. Edwin Sidney Hartland, F.S.A., of Gloucester, has been appointed Registrar of the County Court and District Registrar of the High Court. Mr. Hartland was admitted in 1870.

Mr. George Porter, Blackburn, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Porter was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Henry Green, of Howden, has been appointed Clerk to the Rural Sanitary Authority and High Bailiff of the County Court. Mr. Green was admitted in 1867.

Mr. Edgar Kempson, of the firm of Knight, Saunders & Kempson, has been appointed Clerk to the Managers of the District School of the Farnham, Alton, and Hartley Wintney Unions. Mr. Kempson was admitted in 1886.

Mr. Rowland Benjamin Cliff, Blackburn, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cliff was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Robert Nevill, of Tamworth, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Nevill was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Stephen Herbert Belk, of West Hartlepool, has been appointed Solicitor to the Hartlepool Port and Harbour Commissioners, Clerk to the Justices for the Borough of Hartlepool, and Clerk to the Justices for the West Hartlepool Division of the County of Durham. Mr. Belk was admitted in 1874.

Mr. William J. Read, of Blackpool, has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths. Mr. Read was admitted in 1885.

BIRTHS.

On Feb. 26, at Burleigh House, Scarborough, the wife of Hugh Richard Soulsby, of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On March 2, at Northampton, the wife of Rowland M. Estcourt, Barrister-at-Law, District Auditor to the Local Government Board, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On Feb. 21, at St. George's, Hanover Square, Edward John Quintius Maggs, of Hanover Square, W., Solicitor, youngest son of Thomas Charles Maggs, of Brighton, to Josephine Eliza, youngest daughter of Thomas Rought Jones, of Market Drayton, Shropshire.

On Feb. 25, at Worcester, Cape Colony, South Africa, Alphonse Pierre Nicolas du Toit, of the Transvaal, Judge of the Supreme Court, and of the Middle Temple, London, to Bessie, second daughter of George Spafford, of Wilderspool Hall, Urmston, near Manchester.

On Feb. 27, at St. Saviour's, St. George's Square, S.W., F. A. Ormiston Bowra, only son of the late Frederick and Emily Bowra, to Clara (Dolly), only daughter of the late Richard G. Dar, Barrister-at-Law, of 85 St. George's Road, S.W.

On Feb. 28, at All Souls' Church, Manchester, Samuel Herbert Linley, of Stone, Staffordshire, Solicitor, to Edith Mary, only surviving daughter of the late Dr. Arthur Neville and Anne Hawthorne, of Eccleshall, Staffordshire.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 7, at St. Michael's, Barbados, after a lingering illness, George Williams Carrington, of the firm of Messrs. Carrington and Sealy, Solicitors, Bridgtown, in his 50th year.

On Feb. 20, at Stanford House, Beach Street, Deal (suddenly from acute bronchitis), Thomas Cave Hall, solicitor, aged 82 years.

On Feb. 25, at Broughton-in-Furness, Jane Muncaster, for upwards of forty years a faithful friend and servant in the family of the late Clement Millward, Q.C., of Alice Holt, Hants.

On Feb. 26, at his residence, Fern Bank, 6 Grove Hill, Dulwich, William Henry Townsend, Barrister-at-Law, M.A., Oxon.

On March 2, at Belgrave House, Chiswick, in his 75th year, Thomas John Angell, Solicitor (late of Maida Hill), the dearly-loved husband of Eliza Angell.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE Lord Chancellor has again this week come to the aid of the Court of Appeal. Lord Justice Lopes being still an absentee from Court II., his place has been taken by Lord Justice Bowen, and the Lord Chancellor has been sitting in Court I. with the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Fry.

So far as the Queen's Bench Division is concerned, the Hilary Sittings may be considered as practically at an end. It is announced that no more special jury actions will be taken this side of Easter, and the scarcity of judges is becoming painfully apparent. On Saturday there was no Court sitting in that division, and on Monday the assistance of Mr. Justice Jeune had to be invoked to sit with Mr. Justice Cave as a Divisional Court. On Tuesday, owing to the absence of the latter judge, no Court sat; while on Wednesday Mr. Justice Grantham, who has just returned from circuit, was the sole representative of the common law bench.

PRIOR to the Act of Settlement, the commissions of the judges of the land were durante bene placito (see Stephen's 'Commentaries,' 11th edit. vol. ii. p. 481), but by that Act (12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2) they were directed to be made out quamdiu se bene gesserint, and it was also directed that on the address of both Houses of Parliament it might be lawful to remove them. Afterwards by 1 Geo. III. c. 23, after reciting that 'His Majesty had been graciously pleased to declare from the throne that he looked upon the independence and integrity of judges as essential to the impartial administration of justice, &c., and had recommended to the consideration of Parliament to make further provision, &c., and that,' in return for this paternal goodness, and in the justest sense of His Majesty's 'tender concern for the religious laws and liberties' of his people, Parliament 'had taken this important work into their consideration, and had resolved to enable His Majesty to effectuate the wise, just, and generous purposes of His Royal Heart,' it was enacted that the commissions should be during good behaviour, subject to power of the Crown to remove on Parliamentary addresses as before, notwithstanding the demise of His Majesty, his heirs, and successors. The next alteration was that effected by the Judicature Act, 1873, which by section 9 enacted that 'all the judges of the High Court and Court of Appeal should hold their offices for life,' subject to removal as before. This was repealed by the Judicature Act, 1875, which substitutes for it the enactment now in force of section 5, that 'all the judges' of the Supreme Court, 'with the exception of the Lord Chancellor,' shall hold their offices as such judges respectively during good behaviour, subject to a power of removal by Her Majesty on an address presented to Her Majesty by both Houses of Parliament.'

. . . 'LONGA decem tulerunt fastidia menses.' After nine months' consideration and reconsideration the Lords have at last given judgment in the Vagliano Case. It was generally expected that the decisions of the Courts below would be reversed, and that their lordships would not be unanimous. Six judges against two have held that the loss on the bills of exchange so ingeniously forged by the convict Glyka must be borne by Messrs. Vagliano. In a question of such importance, it is too early to discuss in detail the conclusions arrived at by the noble and learned lords. We are disposed to think that the majority of the profession regard the decision with disapprobation, and the effect of this protracted litigation can hardly be considered satisfactory when we find that, taking all the trials together, there is actually a majority of judges in favour of the respondent Vagliano: viz. Mr. Justice Charles, five out of the six members of the Court of Appeal, and two law lords, as against Lord Esher and six law lords.

IT is clear, from a perusal of the judgments, that all the judges were by no means influenced by the same considerations. The three elements which form the basis of the decision were: (1) Negligence generally on the part of Vagliano, and a conduct of his business which facilitated the frauds; (2) the doctrine of estoppel; and (3) the language of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 7, subs. 3. To these, perhaps, may be added, as Lord Bramwell suggested, a dislike of the case of Robarts v. Tucker (20 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 270). Lord Selborne and Lord Macnaghten relied mainly on the first ground; the second was emphasised by the Lord Chancellor, who spoke of Vagliano by his letters of advice to the bank and acceptance, giving the bills as against himself, 'qualities which in their inception they did not possess,' 'a genuineness' which did not otherwise belong to them. Lord Herschell took great pains to show that the persons named as payees on the forged bills were 'fictitious' persons within s. 7, subs. 3 of the Act, notwithstanding that they were the names of well-known existing persons, who were actual correspondents of Vagliano. Lord Selborne expressly declined to take this view, of which Lord Bramwell's criticism is characteristically trenchant and vigorous. But Lord Selborne did expressly say that Robarts v. Tucker, in which a banker who had paid a bill on which the indorsements were forged had to lose his money, was not to be extended; and Lord Macnaghten devoted a considerable part of his concise and luminous judgment to distinguishing the case before the House from Robarts v. Tucker.

LORD BRAMWELL'S judgment was in his pithiest and most amusing style. He applied with great force what Mr. Grote calls the 'cross-examining elenchus of Socrates' to Lord Herschell's verbal dialectic, on which he remarks, 'That beats me.' He concludes his judgment with what looks like an afterthought—a farewell Parthian shaft of sarcasm against his colleagues. He remarked that the headnote of his and Lord Field's opinion might be expressed in the most abstract form—viz. 'A banker cannot charge his customer with the amount of a bill paid to a person who had no right of action against the customer'—whereas the opinions of the majority would have to be in a strictly concrete form, dealing with the facts of the particular case. The criticism is just—but not conclusive; logic and symmetry are not final criteria of truth. But it certainly is more satisfactory to be able to apply some definite principle, such as that enunciated by the learned lords.

IN the case of Ex parte Bellencoutre (reported in our Notes of Cases for last week at p. 39) Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Wills delivered judgment in favour of the Crown for the extradition of a French notary, who was charged with abus de confiance according to the term of French law—that is, with the fraudulent misappropriation of money which had been deposited with him in his character of notary. Out of no less than nineteen instances of misappropriation stated to be criminal under French law, the Court was, however, able to find only four cases that were criminal under the provisions of sections 75 and 76 of the Larceny Law Amendment Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96). The unsatisfactory state of the law of England, as compared with that of France, on this subject was alluded to in no ambiguous terms by the learned judges. As regards misappropriation of money, the authorities, of which Regina v. Newman, 51 Law J. Rep. M. C. 87; L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 706, is a recent example, show that under section 75 an agent entrusted with money to invest is liable to conviction only when there is a direction in writing as to the application of the money: while under section 76, which applies to the case of money where there is no direction in writing, he is liable to conviction only when the money is entrusted for 'safe custody.' The result is, that the case of an agent entrusted with money for investment without any direction in writing is not within either section, unless, indeed, it can be brought within section 76 by evidence that the money was entrusted for safe custody till the time when it was to be invested (see Regina v. Fullagar, 14 Cox C. C. 70). The French law, as we understand, does not require a direction in writing such as is required by section 75 to constitute the offence of misappropriation of money entrusted for investment. As regards four of the charges, the Court, as we have stated, held that there was a primâ facie case of an offence under section 76, but as regards the other charges, which were not brought within the provisions of section 76, the absence of a direction in writing as to the application of the money prevented the commission of any offence according to English law under the provisions of section 75.

IN connection with the recent so-called 'abduction' of a wife by her husband, it may be well to point out that it is the law of this country that a husband has the right to all his wife's time, and to direct her manner of life and her associates, and, if she refuses to submit to his orders, he can legally confine her to his house, from which she cannot be released by habeas corpus. (See 'Chitty on Contracts,' 12th edit. p. 241, citing In re Cochrane, 8 Dowl. P. C. 631, decided in 1840; and an earlier case of Winsmore v. Greenbank (1746), Willes, 577, in which an action by a husband against a third person for 'harbouring' his wife was held to lie.) No doubt the Legislature in 1884, by the Matrimonial Causes Act (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68), interposed to prevent the enforcement by imprisonment of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but the power of the Court to make the decree still survives, with results affecting property as provided in the Act. The Married Women's Property Act is concerned with property alone, and the municipal rights of a married woman are merged in those of her husband, as was pointed out by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn in Regina v. Adwald, 41 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 173. In Regina v. Mead, 2 Ken. 279—a case in which John Wilkes endeavoured to obtain repossession of his wife by habeas corpus—Lord Mansfield held good a return to the writ that Mrs. Wilkes was living apart under a separation deed, but laid down the law that, where a husband has not waived his right by such a deed, 'he has a right to seize his wife wherever he finds her.'

FROM the answer given by the Home Secretary on Monday night to Mr. Cobb's question with reference to the Inflammable Liquids Bill, it appears that the measure is not to be withdrawn in deference to the opposition which it has called forth from the trade. The object of the bill is to place certain restrictions upon persons dealing in inflammable liquids, and to provide for their storage upon registered or licensed premises. Mr. Matthews stated that large concessions had been made in the bill to the convenience of traders, and that it had been introduced after repeated conferences with the trade, and in consequence of strong representations from local authorities, from the Admiralty, the Board of Trade, the Thames Conservators, the London County Council, and other public bodies, that amended legislation was urgently needed in the interests of public safety. Such representations must surely form a strong case in favour of the principle of the bill, and the Home Secretary expressed his willingness to consider any proposal for amendments in detail, where it was shown that the provisions were of too restrictive a character.

IN the case of Regina v. The Assessment Committee of St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington, 60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 52, the Court of Appeal had to determine the question whether an assessment committee has a right to refuse to hear a person who has been sent by a ratepayer to appear as his agent in support of an objection to a valuation list. The Court held that an assessment committee has no such right, and granted a mandamus to compel the defendants to hear the agent. The question turned mainly upon section 19 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 103), which by section 19 provides that the assessment committee shall hold meetings for hearing objections to the valuation lists, and 'may at such meeting hear and determine such objections.' The ground of the decision was that, as the statute was silent upon the point, the committee, in the words of Lord Justice Fry, 'had no power to limit the common-law right of a person to appear before them by an agent.'

In re Baker, reported in the Times of Saturday last, raises a question of the very greatest importance in connection with the personal liability of an official receiver in bankruptcy on the covenants of a lease not disclaimed by him. The case was this. Mr. Baker became a bankrupt in 1884, and the predecessor of the present official receiver became official trustee of his estate. Amongst the assets was a twenty-one years' lease, which commenced in 1882 and was determinable at the option of the lessee at the end of the first seven or fourteen years. The bankrupt's wife paid the rent, and the official trustee neither disclaimed the lease nor determined it at the end of the first seven years. The amount of the assets was 1½*d.* in the pound. In June, 1890, Mr. Wreford, the present receiver, signified his wish to disclaim, but the landlord's solicitor would not assent to this, and claimed damages for breach of the covenant to repair. The official receiver then applied to Mr. Justice Cave for extension of time to disclaim, which was granted; and the order of Mr. Justice Cave was confirmed by the Court of Appeal. 'In this case,' said Lord Esher, 'it is clear that the landlord has suffered no prejudice; he has had his rent paid for the whole time, and paid by one who was a stranger to the lease, not by the bankrupt or out of the estate, which would not pay either rent or repairs. . . . It would be the harshest measure of justice, amounting even to injustice, to hold the official receiver personally liable for the rent and repairs for the whole term of fourteen years;' and no doubt it would have been. It appears, moreover, that notwithstanding the extreme length of the time during which, no disclaimer being applied for, the official receiver was legally the tenant, section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act allows the Court to free from all personal liability 'as from the date when the property vested in him.' Without disclaimer, and without extension of time to disclaim in, the personal liability of the official receiver would have been undoubted. See Titterton v. Cooper, 51 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 472.

THE report of the Sheffield District Law Society, which we published last week (ante, p. 168), contains two curiously conflicting expressions of opinion on the subject of the remuneration of trustees. Commenting on the Public Trustee Bill, the committee say that they passed a resolution strongly disapproving of it, and that the secretary communicated the resolution to the local members of Parliament requesting them to oppose the bill on its second reading. The bill, it is added, 'had eventually to be dropped.' But, as to the remuneration of private trustees, we read in the same report that 'a communication was received from the Manchester Law Association' in respect thereto, but that the secretary was desired to say that, in the opinion of the committee, 'no statutory provision should be made.' Now, the Public Trustee Bill (which has been reintroduced, and may be reasonably expected to pass) may be detrimental to the best interests of the profession and the public or it may not. But it is perfectly plain that those who are opposed to it will do well to welcome rather than oppose any measure for the remuneration of private trustees. It is the long and arduous services of trustees without payment which have given rise to difficulties in obtaining trustees, and consequently laid a foundation for the Public Trustee Bill. Remove these difficulties by following the Colonial system of remunerating trustees, and one of the chief reasons for the Public Trustee Bill will cease to exist. We hope that the question of adequate remuneration of trustees and executors will be taken up by the law societies generally.

A FARRIER, if he advertises himself in any way as a 'veterinary,' is liable to penalties under the Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881, s. 17, for 'unlawfully using and taking an addition and description stating that he is specially qualified to practise a branch of veterinary surgery.' So it was held by Mr. De Rutzen in a case we reported last week (ante, p. 165), with the result that the offending farrier was fined sixpence, the maximum penalty being 20*l.*, and the summons having been obtained at the instance of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons. We think the decision, which is of very great importance, indisputably correct. It is material to point out that by section 17, subsection 2, of the Veterinary Surgeons Act, which follows the language of the Medical Act and the Dentists Act in pari materia, a person who is not registered as a veterinary surgeon is not entitled 'to recover in any Court any fee or charge for performing any veterinary operation or for giving any veterinary attendance or advice, or for acting in any manner as a veterinary surgeon or veterinary practitioner, or for practising in any case veterinary surgery, or any branch thereof.' Shoeing simpliciter is, of course, not a veterinary operation, but it may be performed in such a manner, and under such difficulties, as to become so; and there is no doubt that many country farriers habitually give advice on matters quite unconnected with farriery. Such persons will now have to be careful.

NEVER in the history of this country has the final Court of Appeal which is provided by the House of Lords been so strong both in numbers and in quality as it is at the present day. No less than eight peers—Lord Halsbury, Lord Selborne, Lord Herschell, Lord Bramwell, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Watson, Lord Morris, and Lord Field—delivered judgment in Vagliano v. The Bank of England, three of these noble lords being Lords of Appeal in ordinary, so created under the powers of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act. In addition to this galaxy of talent, the services of Lord Hannen, who, it is presumed, took no part in the judgment in the Vagliano Case, as not having heard the arguments, are also available. What a contrast does our highest legal tribunal now offer to the days when the late Lord Westbury 'held up his hands in respectful amazement' at the decision in the Brownlow Case, 23 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 348, and even to what it was in the days when, by a majority of one only in a House of three members, Ricket v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 36 Law J Rep. Q. B. 205, and Brand v. The Hammersmith Railway Company, 38 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 265, were successively decided in the teeth of the emphatic dissent of Lord Westbury and Lord Cairns respectively, and in reversal of the judgments of majorities of the judges!

THE attempts made in the House of Lords last week and in the House of Commons on Tuesday night to disturb the existing status of country J.P.'s were, we think, very wisely, as well as successfully, opposed by the Government. No system is perfect, and no alteration in the qualification or mode of selection would prevent eccentric or unsatisfactory men being occasionally placed on the commission. But, taken as a whole, the administration of justice in county Petty Sessional Courts is remarkably pure and efficient. For this result the clerks to justices are largely responsible, and when the subject was debated at the Nottingham meeting last year there was an overwhelming majority in favour of the present system being maintained.

THE Hampshire County Council have done honour to themselves as well as to Mr. G. A. Webb by appointing him Clerk of the Peace and Clerk to the Council in the room of the late Mr. Earle. The unfailing courtesy and kindness of Mr. Webb during the many years he has been an active official at Winchester have secured for him the respect and good will not only of the magistrates and county councillors, but also of the barristers, solicitors, reporters, and witnesses whose duties have taken them to assizes and quarter sessions. It is a good omen for the county council régime that in this case ability and industry have proved passports to promotion.

COMPENSATION UNDER LANDS CLAUSES AND RAILWAY CLAUSES ACTS.

THE metropolis, especially its north-west side, is at present more than commonly threatened with important railway schemes which, if carried, must seriously interfere with existing interests. Under these circumstances reference to some of the leading cases on compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, may be useful.

It may be premised (a) that where there is a case for compensation the proper remedy is by application under the Lands Clauses Act, and not by way of injunction (The Duke of Bedford v. Dawson, 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 549; L. R. 20 Eq. 353; Wigram v. Fryer, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 1,008; L. R. 36 C. D. 96); (b) that where railways or other undertakings make a proper use of statutable powers given to them they are free from action or injunction on the part of the neighbouring owners, although the latter may have suffered annoyance to such an extent as would but for such powers have entitled them to an injunction (The London and Brighton Railway Company v. Truman, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 354; L. R. 11 App. Cas. 61); (c) that, as observed by Chief Justice Earle in Chamberlain v. The West End of London and Crystal Palace Railway Company, 32 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 113; 2 B. & S. 639, 'the party claiming compensation must bring forward his claim in unity as far as he can foresee the damages which will arise, estimating them as having as much permanency as the railway;' and (d) that, if there is a wrong done which is not authorised by powers conferred by the Legislature, the common-law right of action exists for it (The Imperial Gaslight and Coke Company v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. 612). An early authority for proposition (b) is Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30, where the defendants were empowered by Parliament to make a railway (part of which ran parallel and near to a highroad) and also to use locomotive engines, and 'the Court held that the unqualified authority of the Legislature legalised what would otherwise have been a nuisance, and saved the defendants harmless from an indictment' (2 Law J. Rep. M. C. 26; L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 736). A reason assigned in Rex v. Pease (p. 41) is that 'there is nothing unreasonable or inconsistent in supposing that the Legislature intended that the part of the public which should use the highway should sustain some inconvenience for the sake of the greater good to be obtained by other parts of the public in the more speedy travelling and conveyance of merchandise along the new railroad.' The ratio decidendi of Rex v. Pease was applied in Vaughan v. The Taff Vale Railway Company, 29 Law J. Rep. Exch. 247; 5 H. & N. 679, to the case of an injury to private property resulting from a spark caused by a locomotive engine running on a railway, the company having been, by section 86 of the Railway Clauses Act, authorised to use locomotive engines. On the other hand, in Jones v. The Festiniog Railway Company, 37 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 214; L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 733, where the company had no statutory power to use such engines, they were held, in accordance with proposition (d), liable at common law for similarly caused damages, and this notwithstanding that negligence was negatived.

To cases connected with railways, the clauses of the Railway Clauses Act are, generally speaking, applicable as well as those of the Lands Clauses Act. To other cases, such as The Duke of Buccleuch v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 Law J. Rep. Exch. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418 (1872), The Metropolitan Board of Works v. McCarthy, 43 Law J. Rep. C. P. 335; L. R. 7 H. L. 243 (1874), Cowper-Essex v. The Local Board for Acton, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 153 (1889), only the latter Act applies.

The Lands Clauses Act at least presupposes that some land or interest in land is taken or interfered with by the undertaking; and it is self-evident that compensation is only to be given in respect of lands which are not taken. Otherwise the promoters would have 'to arrange for compensation for permanent damage or injury to lands which did not continue to belong to the landowner, but which had been taken by themselves' (Stone v. The Corporation of Yeovil, 46 Law J. Rep. C. P. 137; 2 C. P. Div. 113). But in The Hammersmith and City of London Railway Company v. Brand, 38 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 265; L. R. 4 H. L. 171 (1869)—to which reference will again be made—Lord Cairns urged, but without success, that the Railway Clauses Act applied where no land was taken.

It seems plain that to warrant compensation under the Acts (i.) the damage must be 'substantial' and neither 'remote nor indefinite,' and (ii.) it must relate to land or its incidents. Thus, Lord Chancellor Selborne, in The Caledonian Railway Company v. Walker's Trustees, 7 App. Cas. 283-84, 'Scotch,' assigns as the true ground of the failure of the claim in Ricket v. The Metropolitan Railway Company, 36 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 205; L. R. 2 H. L. 175 (1867)—a case of alleged interference by the temporary obstruction of a way with the trade of a publichouse—that 'the damage was too remote and indefinite.' Lord Chelmsford, however, in McCarthy's Case, 43 Law J. Rep. C. P. 385; L. R. 7 H. L. 255, observes that the question in the special case in Ricket's Case related to loss of trade. As Lord Westbury remarks in Ricket's Case, L. R. 2 H. L. 203, 'many persons, such as the proprietors of stage-coaches, stage-waggons, and the owners of posting inns, may be ruined by the user of the railway by the public, but they have no claim to compensation. Compensation is given by the statute only to individuals who, in respect of the ownership or occupancy of [qy. immediately adjacent] lands or tenements, sustain loss in or through the construction of the railway or the execution of the incidental works.' So a claim for compensation on account of the inconvenience caused by a level crossing of a railway over a highway, even when close to the claimant's property, has been disallowed (Caledonian Railway Company v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. 229). This case has, however, been criticised (see Walker's Trustees Case, 7 App. Cas. 302, 305, 'Scotch,' and The Cowper-Essex Case, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 156).

With regard to the question, What is a sufficient interest in or right connected with land, it may be observed that compensation is allowed for interference with easements or with public rights when the claimant has special interest in such rights. Thus compensation was allowed for interference with a right of way (Glover v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 20 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 376; 16 Q. B. Rep. 212, and see Ford v. Metropolitan and Metropolitan District Railways, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 296; L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 12); with light (Eagle v. The Charing Cross Railway Company, 36 Law J. Rep. C. P. 297; L. R. 2 C. P. 638); with access to the river frontage of the Thames (The Duke of Buccleuch's Case); with access to a draw dock communicating with the Thames (McCarthy's Case); and for inconvenient alteration of streets immediately adjoining premises owned by the claimant (Walker's Trustees Case). So, too, Lord Chancellor Cairns spoke, in M'Carthy's Case (L. R. 7 H. L. p 253), with approval of Beckett v. The Midland Railway Company (L. R. 3 C. P. 82), where 'there was in front of the premises in question one single highway, the farther half, or the farther third portion of which, was taken off and blocked up by the execution of the defendant company's works.' It was there held that that was an injury which 'permanently and injuriously affected the premises in question.' The narrowing of the road was from 50 ft. to 33 ft. (p. 258). Lord Chelmsford also held Beckett's Case to have been rightly decided (ib. 259). In Fleming v. The Newport Railway Company (8 App. Cas. 265) it appears to have been considered (p. 281) that the claimant had not any right to the street in question. In Wadham v. The North-Eastern Railway Company (54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 343; 14 Q. B. Div. 747; on app. 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 272; 16 Q. B. Div. 227) compensation was allowed for the depreciation (caused by stopping up a road) of premises used as an hotel, and which the arbitrator considered specially suitable for that purpose; but he stated that in assessing the compensation he did not 'take into account the depreciation in the value of the license, or the loss in the trade then being carried on in the premises.'

(To be continued.)

CONTRIBUTION BETWEEN TRUSTEES.

Probably the case of Blyth v. Fladgate and the two actions connected with it (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 66) have by this time been sufficiently discussed as regards the general principles applied by Mr. Justice Stirling in his considered judgment. The words of his lordship on p. 76, 'I come, therefore, to the conclusion that Smith, having been guilty of negligence as solicitor to Wm. Blyth, cannot claim from him any contribution in respect of the liabilities imposed by the judgment in Blyth v. Smith,' may be considered as the text upon which this article is founded. The facts very shortly were that Smith, Morgan, and Wm. Blyth, as trustees, were held liable, jointly and severally, to make good the loss of trust funds caused by an improper investment thereof. William Blyth was also a beneficiary under the settlement on the trusts of which the funds were held, and Smith acted as solicitor in the matter. Smith claimed contribution from Wm. Blyth of a proportion of the sums necessary to replace the trust fund pursuant to the judgment before referred to, and to be recouped out of Wm. Blyth's share under the settlement. Wm. Blyth counter-claimed against Smith and partners for damages sustained by him owing to the negligence of Smith's firm, as solicitors to him and his co-trustees in the matter. The result of Smith's claim we have given above. The rule as to contribution between co-trustees is given thus in Mr. Lewin's treatise on 'Trusts' (8th edit.), p. 909: 'Though, as respects the remedy of the cestui que trust, each trustee is individually responsible for the whole amount of the loss, whether he was the principal in the breach of trust, or was merely a consenting party, yet, as between the trustees themselves, the loss may be thrown upon the party on whom, as recipient of the money or otherwise, the responsibility ought in equity to fall, or, if he be dead, upon his estate. . . . If all the trustees be equally guilty, then (unless the transaction was vitiated by not only constructive but such actual fraud that the Court will hold itself entirely aloof) an apportionment or contribution amongst the trustees may be compelled.' In Lockhart v. Reilly, 25 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 697; 1 De G. & J. 464, Lord Cranworth held that as between one trustee, J., and the estate of a deceased co-trustee who had had the management of the trust as solicitor, and had caused most of the evil by his negligence, the costs which the deceased trustee's estate and J. were ordered to pay in an action against them for breach of trust, and also all charges and expenses properly incurred by J., as trustee, should be borne by the deceased solicitor-trustee's estate. That case and the recent one were similar, as in each case the Court, having discovered that the solicitor-trustee had brought about the loss by his negligence, made him (or his estate) primarily liable. It must not be supposed from these decisions that one trustee who has remained inactive can always throw the whole liability on to his active co-trustee. If anyone ever supposed that, his supposition was dispelled by the judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Bahin v. Hughes, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 472; L. R. 31 Chanc. Div. 390. In that case one trustee who had not taken any active part in the execution of the trust sought to make one of the active trustees indemnify him; but the Court pointed out that the authorities only went the length of deciding that a trustee would be held secondarily liable 'who had an independent right of indemnity from his co-trustee who had acted as solicitor for the trust, and raised an independent case of right to indemnity.' Lord Justice Fry pointed out that the Court should be very jealous against raising the idea of there being any implied liability on the part of one trustee to indemnify his co-trustee; for, 'if any such right existed, it would act as an opiate to the consciences of the co-trustees, and instead of the cestuis que trust having the protection of several acting trustees to look to, all that the trustees would do would be to look to their co-trustees for indemnity, and so neglect the performance of their duties.' Lord Justice Cotton stated that 'it is obvious that where one of two or more trustees has got hold of the fund and made use of it, he will be liable to indemnify his co-trustees. . . . So far as the cases have gone in the Court at present, it seems that it must be where the one has personally got the benefit of the breach of trust, or where there is such a relationship between him and his co-trustee as justifies the Court in holding him solely liable for the breach.' Lord Justice Bowen, having pleaded less experience in matters of equity, could not repress doubts as to whether the actively guilty trustee had not incurred obligations to her co-trustee, but declined to differ from the other lords justices. The law does not recognise such a capacity as that of a sleeping trustee, and, if anyone prefers to remain dormant and leave the execution of the trust to his more wakeful trustees, he must run the risk of being held liable for their misdoings. The position of a trustee should be useful, and not merely ornamental. From the authorities to which we have referred, the following propositions seem deducible—namely, that where a breach of trust has been committed, all the trustees are liable to their cestuis que trust, and also are equally liable as between themselves, unless any one of them has an independent right to an indemnity from his co-trustee or co-trustees, as he would have if the latter acted professionally for the trust, and caused the breach of trust by his negligence.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

IN the House of Lords the Clergy Discipline (Immorality) Bill has been read a second time, the Fishery Board (Scotland) Bill has passed through committee, and the report of amendments to the East India Offices Bill has been agreed to.

The following resolution has been agreed to in both Houses: 'That all bills of the present session to confirm provisional orders made by the Board of Trade under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, containing the classification of merchandise traffic and the schedule of maximum rates and charges applicable thereto, be referred to a joint committee of Lords and Commons.'

In the Commons the City and South London Railway Bill and a great number of Railway Companies (Rates and Charges) Provisional Order Bills were during the past week read a second time, and the South Kensington and Paddington Subway Bill was referred to a select committee of nine members, five to be nominated by the House and four by the committee of selection.

The Seed Potatoes (Supply) Ireland Act (1890) Amendment Bill and the Museums and Gymnasiums Bill were read a third time.

The Technical Instruction Bill passed through committee.

The Penal Servitude Bill was sent to the grand committee on law.

The Electoral Registration (Acceleration) Bill was read a second time, and the order for its further consideration in committee discharged.

The Teachers Registration Bill was read a second time, and referred to the select committee on the Teachers Registration and Organisation Bill.

The Army Annual Bill was read a second time, and a new bill introduced to abolish the property qualification required by persons acting as justices of the peace.

The Small Holdings Bill and the Possession of Game Bill have been read a second time.

The following new bills have been introduced: A bill to amend the General Pavement (Metropolis) Act, 1817, and a bill to amend the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889.

Correspondence.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

SIR,—The following case, which has occurred in actual practice, will, I venture to think, be of some interest to your readers, as it shows one of the advantages of being a married woman. The facts are as follows:—

A wife, having no separate estate and living with her husband, removed (whilst he was absent at his place of employment) his household furniture from his house to the house of her son-in-law S. The husband, on discovering this, ordered her to bring them back, and, on her refusal, threatened her with proceedings. She repeats the offence on two subsequent days, the husband each time forbidding her and repeating his warning. On the last day she deserts him for the house of a daughter's husband, S., where she takes up her abode.

Both she and S. refuse to return the goods when demanded by the husband.

The justices refused to convict her of larceny. Now what are the rights of the husband?

On searching the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it will be found to contain nothing expressly enabling a husband to sue his wife for torts affecting his property. Our attention, however, is attracted to sections 1 (2), 12, and 17; but upon construing these sections it is submitted that—

Section 1 (2) contemplates actions by strangers against the wife and vice versâ only.

Section 12 (giving a wife, inter alia, civil remedies against her husband and third parties) does not give the husband any similar remedies against his wife.

On section 17 (giving the Court jurisdiction to decide disputes between husband and wife, &c., as to property and to make orders) the question suggests itself, What order can a judge in the case put make? Has it not been held that a personal order cannot be made against a married woman? It would seem, therefore, that she could not be attached, e.g., for not obeying an order made in an action of detinue (if, indeed, such order could be obtained), nor could execution issue, as she has no separate estate.

Nor would an action of detinue succeed against S., in whose house the goods lie, as he would take proceedings to compel husband and wife to interplead, and in the result no judgment could be obtained against the wife, as she has no separate estate.

The self-remedy by recapture would expose the husband to an action of trespass for entering the house of S., and the latter would be justified in forcibly resisting such entry for the purpose of removing the goods.

The law would seem, then, to be shortly this, that—

1. It is doubtful whether a husband has any civil remedy against his wife for torts committed by her affecting his property. (See Married Women's Property Act, 1882, ss. 1 (2), 12, 17.)

2. Even if he has, he could not succeed (unless she had separate estate upon which execution could issue), even by attachment.

3. That, admitting the Act gives him such a right to sue, an action by husband against a third party—e.g. S. —say in detinue, would be defeated by S. taking steps to bring wife in on interpleader, for if wife had no separate estate the action would fail.

4. Section 17 of the Act is useless where the question of property is raised by the husband as against the wife and she has no separate estate, as there is no means of putting in force (if made) any 'order' under that section.

G. N. G.

March 10.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

ACTION FOR ASSAULT IN A CHURCH.

Phillips v. Stuart and others was an action for damages for assault, in the Clerkenwell County Court, which was tried before his Honour Judge Eddis and a jury on March 3. The defendants were the Rev. E. A. Stuart, vicar of St. James's Church, Holloway, the churchwardens, the beadle, and one of the sidesmen.—The plaintiff, in his evidence, stated that for a long time past he had attended this church and had sat in one particular seat in a side gallery. On the morning of February 8, about twenty minutes to eleven, he was there as usual, when the beadle came to him and said the vicar wanted to see him. Plaintiff declined to leave his seat. A churchwarden said, 'You must go and sit in the body of the church.' He answered, 'This is a free seat, and I shall remain.' A Mr. Brewis then said, 'We are the churchwardens, and we insist upon your removal.' They then called up the beadle, who dragged him along to the end of the gallery to a policeman, who caught hold of his wrists. He was pinioned and was conveyed to the vestry. After that he was ejected and remained outside during the service, as the constable refused to let him re-enter. He returned in the evening, but the constable still declined to allow him inside, and the officer had been on guard at the door ever since. Cross-examined, the plaintiff admitted that he was in the habit of publishing handbills under the name of 'Diogenes II.,' and said it was true that he had commenced an action against his father. On Sunday, the 1st ult., he forbade the banns in eight cases directly they were published, and he did so because the beadle had annoyed him. There was a collection in the church nearly every Sunday, and he had complained that it was an imposition.—The judge said that plaintiff's conduct amounted to brawling.—For the defence, Police-constable Tinson said he searched the plaintiff, because it was believed he had bullets upon him. He put his hand on something hard, which he thought was bullets, but which turned out to be acid drops. (Laughter.) No more force than was necessary was used.—The jury stopped the case and gave a verdict for the defendants, and the foreman said the jury regretted that the plaintiff should have been advised to bring such an action.

ASSIZE CASE.

STAGE SCENERY—PAINTING.

At Manchester, on February 27 and 28, the case of The Bolton Theatre and Entertainments Company (Lim.) v. The North-Eastern Railway Company was tried before Mr. Justice Day and a special jury. The action was brought to recover damages for non-delivery and loss of certain scenery. On February 9, 1890, the plaintiffs handed to the defendants at Scarborough the scenery of a play called 'The Harbour Lights,' to be carried by their railway to Spennymoor, in Durham, for the purpose of being used on the following day. According to the plaintiffs, when the scenery was delivered back it was considerably damaged by fire and water, and by reason of this damage they were prevented from performing the play on February 10, 11, and 12, for which they claimed 20*l.* a night. The defence was that no notice was given of the nature of the goods or of the purposes for which they were required, and they further pleaded the Carriers Acts (11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 68), and said that, as the goods were carried in a parcel and were of more than the value of 10*l.*, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, on the ground that the scenery was 'a painting' within the meaning of the Act.—His lordship said that primâ facie a painting was a thing painted.—Mr. Wheeler replied that if the railway company considered that these articles came within the technical meaning of 'paintings,' they treated them in a very unceremonious manner, as they simply piled them on two trucks, and when they caught fire placed them in a siding and pumped on them. —Mr. Elliston, the manager of the plaintiff company, stated that he was very familiar with theatrical scenery. The backcloth, which was the first item claimed for, was painted in distemper, and represented a seaside village. In itself it was not a complete picture, but required other pieces to make up a scene. Another backcloth simply represented an horizon. The value of all the scenery injured was, in his opinion, about 150*l.* After the fire it could not be used. No witnesses were called for the defendant company.—Mr. Gully, in addressing the jury, submitted that, in order to render the defendants liable for the injury to the scenery, which, he submitted, came within the term 'paintings' as employed in the Carriers Acts, it must have been proved that the plaintiffs had, at the time they delivered them to be carried, declared their value.—The learned judge said that the jury must say whether, in their opinion, this scenery was included in the terms 'picture' or 'painting.' If it was, the company would not be liable in respect of the packages, which exceeded 10*l.* in value. With regard to the consequential damages, they must say whether or not, in their opinion, the railway company had notice that the plaintiff company would be damaged by any delay of, or injury to, their scenery.—The jury found for the plaintiffs, and awarded them 120*l.* for the damaged scenery and 40*l.* for the consequential damage.—Mr. Wheeler, Q.C., and Mr. C. A. Russell appeared for the plaintiffs; and Mr. Gully, Q.C., and Mr. Lankester for the defendants.

THE EFFICIENCY OF THE BENCH.

THE following correspondence has passed between Mr. Cobb, M.P., and the First Lord of the Treasury:—

House of Commons: March 2, 1891.

My dear Sir,—I am anxious that I should not misunderstand the meaning of the reply which you were good enough to give to the question I put to you on Thursday night with reference to one of the judges of the Queen's Bench Division.

I asked you whether the Lord Chancellor was aware that dissatisfaction and regret existed amongst members of the legal profession upon the subject referred to. You did not answer that question, although I put it pointedly a second time, but you repeated what you had already told me on the previous Monday (although I did not ask it), that no communication had been made to the Lord Chancellor.

I feel sure that neither the Lord Chancellor nor either of the law officers will deny that they are aware that dissatisfaction and regret exist among members of the legal profession as to the manner in which one of the judges, owing to an infirmity which every one deplores, is able to perform his duties. It is notorious that this dissatisfaction exists, and the Lord Chancellor must be aware of it, and also of the name of the judge, which has more than once been mentioned in legal and other newspapers. Having had the privilege of knowing the judge in question some years ago, and having received from him much personal courtesy and kindness, and feeling that it would be invidious and out of order to mention any name in the questions which I put to you in the House, I carefully refrained from doing so, but, as on Thursday you distinctly asked me to name the judge, I feel that it would be sacrificing the interests of the public to a sentimental, although a genuine, feeling, if, in answer to your challenge, I hesitated to say that the judge referred to is Mr. Justice Stephen.

I apprehend that one of the most important duties of a Governm nt is to jealously watch, in the interests of the public, the proper and efficient administration of justice by those who have in their hands the decision of questions of grave moment, and even of life and death. Surely, if it has become notorious that grave dissatisfaction exists among those in the legal profession who have the best opportunity of forming an opinion as to the manner in which a judge is able to perform his official duties, it is incumbent upon the Government to take steps for ascertaining if there is substantial cause for that dissatisfaction, and then to act in the interests of the public in such a way as may seem to be necessary.

It seems incredible that a responsible Government should ask me, as a private member (as I understood you to ask me on Thursday), to put down on the notice paper some specific statement as to the cause of dissatisfaction, and to name the judge referred to, although the causes and the name of the judge were then, and are now, perfectly well known to the Government, and especially to its legal members.

If the Government feel themselves in a difficulty it is for them to deal with it, knowing well, as they do, that they have, and that I have not, the power to investigate the alleged grievance and to apply the remedy.

I should have preferred that some member of the House, with more authority than I shall ever have, should have undertaken the unenviable task of bringing this matter forward. I waited hoping that this might be so. I have now brought it pointedly under the notice of the Government, and if they allow this scandal to continue litigants and the public will know upon whom the responsibility rests.

I am sure that you will agree with me that in such a personal and painful matter it is better that I should write to you instead of putting down any notice on the paper.

Yours very truly,
HENRY P. COBB.

To the Right Hon. W. H. Smith.

10 Downing Street, Whitehall: March 6, 1891.

My dear Sir,—I have read your letter with reference to Mr. Justice Stephen with care, and I observe that while you throw the whole responsibility on the Government for the continuance of a condition of affairs which you describe as 'notorious' and creating 'a general dissatisfaction,' you do not advance a single specific allegation as to a failure of justice on which it would be possible to take action.

The only course of action open to the Government in the case of a judge whose conduct merits removal is by address to the Crown in both Houses of Parliament.

The Constitution has very properly made the judges absolutely independent of the Government of the day, which, so far as they are concerned, possesses no paternal or disciplinary authority; and any member of Parliament is equally entitled to move an address with any member of the Government.

But this power, which you possess in common with ourselves, should obviously only be exercised with abundant specific proof of the necessity in the public interest of that course.

I am not in possession of evidence of that character on which I could feel it to be my duty to proceed.

Believe me, yours very faithfully,
W. H. SMITH.

Henry P. Cobb, Esq., M.P.

House of Commons: March 9, 1891.

My dear Sir,—I thank you for your letter of March 6. I have no right to expect that you should accept my statement that the painful circumstances alluded to are 'notorious,' but, surely, you will accept as evidence of notoriety the statements of newspapers like the Times, the Daily News, and the Law Times. In a leading article on March 6 the Times writes in reference to this case: 'It is certainly impossible to be any longer oblivious of what, wherever lawyers are gathered together, has for many days been the subject of their talk.' And, again, in the same article the Times writes: 'Should things which have been the subject of wonder and regret for some time continue, a question which fortunately we have seldom had to consider must be solved.'

It is, in my opinion, for the Government, which is responsible to the country for the proper administration of justice, to solve this question, and not for a private member of Parliament. You cannot seriously mean that the course you point out as being open to the Government of moving an address to the Crown in both Houses of Parliament is left to be originated by a private member like myself, while the Government looks on and does nothing. Nor is it my duty to collect and bring before you specific proof of an evil which is notorious. The Lord Chancellor and the law officers are well aware of the sources from which they can obtain abundant and direct evidence, and surely it is their duty to make full inquiry now that the subject has been brought so publicly forward.

I have so far almost alone performed, most unwillingly, a very unpleasant duty, and I am sure that the members of the bar and other members of the profession (and especially those in the House of Commons) will not from any mistaken idea of professional etiquette forget that they have duties to perform to the public, out of whose pockets the judicial system of the country is maintained, and who are entitled to demand that justice shall be efficiently administered. Yours very truly,

HENRY P. COBB.

To the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, M.P.,
First Lord of the Treasury, &c.

UNIVERSITY JURISDICTION IN OXFORD.

A DEBATE took place in the Oxford City Council on March 4, when it was reported that the Vice-Chancellor had been communicated with on the subject of a proposed conference between the city and the university on the matter of the jurisdiction of their respective Courts, and that the question had been referred by the Vice-Chancellor to the Hebdomadal Council, whose definite reply was now awaited.

Councillor Carver moved: 'That recent events have emphasised the necessity of limiting or ending the jurisdiction of the Vice-Chancellor's Court over Oxford citizens, and that in any conference between the university and city the members appointed by the council, or any committee of it, shall direct their efforts to this end. In the event of such conference not being speedily arranged, the Parliamentary committee be authorised to take any steps necessary in their judgment to effect this purpose.'

Councillor Salter, in seconding this, said there were other questions besides the jurisdiction of the Vice-Chancellor's Court that were to be found in obsolete charters, such as the power of veto over public entertainments. The whole of these powers should be vested in one authority.

Councillor Hall thought a mistake had been made in introducing the subject at a time when they had agreed to submit the whole matter to a conference.

The Warden of Merton said he would only remind them that this jurisdiction had existed for centuries, and both the university and city had grown up under it, and he thought it was sufficient ground for caution in their action.

The Vice-Chancellor felt as strongly as they did how desirable it was to bring this matter to a speedy and final issue. Early next term the university would be in a position to enter into the conference, and he hoped the question would be settled in a way satisfactory to both corporations.

Alderman Wilson (Exeter College) said the proctorial jurisdiction had for its aim the protection of the decency of the streets, and he should be rather in favour of extending that protection and giving to the civic magistrates the same power exercised by them in most of the decent towns on the Continent.

Alderman Carr, who could go back to the time when the mayor went before the vice-chancellor with a rope round his neck, and promised to submit to the laws of the university, thought that if the matter was dealt with in a fair spirit and without anger, the university would see the desirability of bringing the jurisdiction to an end.

The proposition was carried by thirty-nine votes to fifteen, all the university members present voting against it.

HOW TO SELECT A LIFE OFFICE.

THIS is the title of a pamphlet from the pen of Mr. G. M. Dent, F.S.S., of which a second edition has just been published. It takes the form of a cleverly written dialogue between a well-informed insurance broker and certain individuals named Mr. Prejudice, Mr. About-to-Insure, Mr. Already Insured, and others, in which the broker clearly lays before his clients all the different systems of insurance, and points out the advantages or otherwise of insuring in this or that particular class of office. In his preface the writer says that some years ago he had occasion to effect a second insurance on his own life, and, being desirous of obtaining the very best value for his money, he determined to analyse the relative merits of all the life insurance companies doing business in the United Kingdom. As a preliminary he obtained prospectuses from over eighty offices, and waded through the material parts of the whole collection only to find how impossible it was to select the best office in a given case from such data. In consequence of this difficulty, he obtained a set of Government Blue-books on insurance, and set to work as a statistician to digest the information contained therein and to present it in a form which would be of some assistance to the helpless uninitiated. The result of his investigation into this difficult subject is given in these pages in as interesting and intelligible a manner as possible, and we cannot imagine that Mr. About-to-Insure could have any better guide to forming a sound opinion upon the many and important questions which must be considered before arriving at the conclusion that he has found the best office to insure in. At the end of the pamphlet are given two tables. Table I. shows in a concentrated form the more essential points to be considered in the selection of a life office. The facts and comparative figures in this table are extracted or calculated from returns made by each office to the Board of Trade according to the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870. The principles employed in determining the order of merit of the offices thus analysed are: primarily, according to their relative financial strength as measured by the tables of mortality used, and rates of interest assumed in the valuation of liabilities. Secondly, by assigning to each office, using the same method of valuation, its position in a particular group, according to the economy displayed in the management.

The second table shows the different results to policyholders produced by the payment of the same money to the various offices referred to. Both these tables are explained with great lucidity by Mr. Dent's friend, the insurance broker; and although, of course, the names of the various offices whose returns are thus tabulated and compared are not given, we presume that anyone interested could easily identify any particular office which, from the data given in these tables, appeared to offer the advantages which he was seeking to obtain from an insurance upon his life.

The pamphlet is published by Mr. John Heywood, of London and Manchester. In order to illustrate what widely different results can be obtained in different offices we append a table showing the actual amounts paid upon eleven policies for 5,000*l.* each, effected on a life which dropped in December, 1890, in as many first-class offices:—

Office	When effected	Annual Premium	Bonus additions	Amount paid in 1891
		£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
No. 1	1858	251 9 2	6,452 17 0	11,452 17 0
„ 2	„	252 14 2	3,870 10 0	8,870 10 0
„ 3	„	254 15 10	2,804 0 0	7,804 0 0
„ 4	„	253 6 8	2,690 0 0	7,690 0 0
„ 5	„	248 19 2	2,335 16 0	7,335 16 0
„ 6	„	248 19 2	2,238 13 8	7,238 13 8
„ 7	„	251 17 6	1,687 19 0	6,687 19 0
„ 8	1861	275 4 2	4,022 0 0	9,022 0 0
„ 9	„	272 1 8	2,945 19 11	7,945 19 11
„ 10	„	271 9 2	2,218 14 0	7,218 14 0
„ 11	„	275 4 2	2,050 0 0	7,050 0 0

ADVOCACY IN THE HIGH COURT OF MADRAS.

AMENDED RULES FOR THE QUALIFICATION AND ADMISSION OF PERSONS AS ADVOCATES OF THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

IN supersession of all existing rules for the qualification and admission of proper persons to be advocates of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, the High Court, in the exercise of the authority conferred by sections 9 and 10 of the Letters Patent (amended), has made and passed the following rules, and is pleased to direct that they shall come into force on February 4, 1891.

Provided that any person who on January 1, 1891, was actually serving as an apprentice to an advocate of the High Court, and who, on or before January 31, 1892, shall make application for admission in accordance with the rules now in force, shall be entitled to have his application dealt with as though those rules were still in force, anything in the rules now made to the contrary notwithstanding.

1. Subject to the conditions hereinafter stated, any person who is entitled to practise as a barrister in England or Ireland, or as an advocate in the principal Courts of Scotland, any person duly admitted and on the roll of advocates of the High Court of Calcutta, Bombay, or Allahabad, and any person who, having been admitted to the degree of Master of Laws in the University of Madras, has studied for eighteen months with an advocate of the High Court of Madras, may be admitted as an advocate of this Court.

2. In the case of a person entitled to practise as a barrister in England or Ireland or as an advocate in Scotland, the applicant must produce a certificate showing that he is so entitled to practise, together with satisfactory testimonials to his good character and ability.

3. In the case of an advocate duly admitted and on the roll of advocates of the High Court of Calcutta, Bombay, or Allahabad, the applicant shall produce a certificate of such admission and enrolment and also a certificate of character and ability signed by a judge of the Court of which he is an advocate or by the advocate-general of the same Presidency.

4. The application referred to in the two preceding rules shall be made by letter to the registrar, and shall show the date when the applicant was called to the bar and the number of terms kept by him. If it shall appear that any applicant has been called to the bar without keeping the full number of terms, he shall not be admitted as an advocate unless he shall satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for failing to keep the full number of terms.

Every application for admission under these rules shall be brought and moved before a bench of which the Chief Justice is a member.

ARTHUR COLLINS. Chief Justice.
T. MUTTUSAMI AIYAR.
G. A. PARKER.
FRANK WILKINSON. Judges.
H. H. SHEPHARD.
J. W. HANDLEY.

High Court of Judicature, Appellate Side, Madras, February 2, 1891.

H. W. FOSTER, Registrar.

ADDITIONAL CAUSE LIST.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.—QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Hilary Sittings, 1891.

ADDENDA TO THE CROWN PAPER.

Cumberland (Cockermouth)—Towerson v. Jackson
Northamptonshire (Wellingboro')—Austin and another v. Goodman and another
Southampton—Regina v. Freshwater, &c. Railway Co.
Dorsetshire—Smith v. Davy
London—Vestry of Fulham v. Flew
Surrey (Southwark)—Hughes v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Middlesex (Westminster) — London and Westminster Loan Co. v. Tabraham
London—Spaul v. Baker
Glamorganshire (Cardiff)—Hacquoil & Co. v. Tapson & Co.
Kent—Regina v. Lyddon
Birkenhead—Elliott v. Osborne
Staffordshire (Wolverhampton)—Norton & Co. v. Dalby
Surrey (Croydon)—Hood v. Fletcher
Surrey (Southwark)—Minshaw v. London Metallic Capsule Co.
Warwickshire (Coventry)—Sidney v. Taylor
Yorkshire (Sheffield)—In re Estate of C. H. Hill, dec.
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Regina v. Goole Local Board
England—Regina v. Keeper of H.M.'s Prison at Holloway (Bellencontre)
Cardiganshire (Lampetre)—Hughes v. Gilbert
England—In re Hearson, habeas corpus
Somersetshire (Axbridge)—Seaton v. Hole
Hampshire—Regina v. Judge of County Court of Southampton and Fisher & Son (Lim.)
Montgomeryshire—Regina v. Bayard
Middlesex (Whitechapel) — Ward and Wife v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Hertfordshire (Bishop's Stortford)—Gibbons v. Procter
Metropolitan Police District — City and South London Railway v. London County Council
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Ystradgynlais, &c. Colliery Co. v. Hughes & Co.
Metropolitan Police District—London County Council v. Candler & Son
Northumberland—Gibson v. Lawson
Metropolitan Police District—Smith v. Francis
London—Loader v. London and India Docks, &c. Committee
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Hayes and others v. Kneeshaw, Lupton & Co.
South Shields—Kennedy v. Cowie
Hampshire (Portsmouth)—Dyson and another v. Dyson and another
Cheshire (Stockport)—Cowen v. Southern
Kent (Gravesend)—Regina v. Huggins, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. and Humphreys
Sussex—Smith v. Fovargue
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Davies v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Plymouth—Curran v. Treleaven
Cheshire (Congleton and Sandbach)—Parrott v. Perry (Perry & Son, garnishees)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Crestman v. Stephens
Glamorganshire (Merthyr Tydfil)—Harman v. Rees, Powell and others
Gloucestershire (Bristol)—Ball v. Baker
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Nelson & Co. v. M'Leod & Co.
London—Regina v. Read and others
London—White v. Bird
Lancashire—Fecitt v. Walsh
London—Barnes v. Gibb & Co.
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—France v. Dutton (Dutton, claimant)
Staffordshire (Burslem)—Mellor v. Willett & Co.
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Boumphrey v. Houghton & Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Cohen v. Lakeman
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Regina v. Wilkinson, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. and others (ex parte Leeds Union)
London—Regina v. Judge of City of London Court and Hirschman
Lancashire (Oldham)—Central Mill Co. v. Mortimer
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Mayor, &c. of Sheffield v. Wortley Union and others
Cumberland (Cockermouth)—Atkinson v. Flimby Colliery Co.
Brecon—Nott and another v. Davies

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MARCH 16 TO MARCH 21.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	March 16	March 17	March 18	March 19	March 20	March 21
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Runcorn	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	Ilkeston	Burton	Derby	—	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Stratford-on-Avon	Coventry	Warwick	Rugby	Daventry	Southam
26	Judge Jordan	Buralem	Tamworth	—	—	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Poole	Lymington	Bournemouth	Wimborne	Wareham	—
58	Judge Edge	Totnes	Kingsbridge	Crediton	—	—	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5.

Lessing v. Horsley (appeal of defendants from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated November 12, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Stogdon v. Lee (appeal of defendant from judgment of Day, J., dated July 4, at trial without a jury in Middlesex). Stogdon v. Lee (notice of contention by plaintiff in person). Stogdon v. Lee (appeal of defendant from order of Mathew, J., and Grantham, J., dated November 5, refusing to limit receivership by excluding income and arrears) (to come with the final appeal by order).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 6.

In re W. Baker; ex parte R. Axford (appeal of R. Axford from order of Cave, J., dated February 9, extending time for disclaimer by trustee). In re W. Baker; ex parte Official Receiver (cross appeal of official receiver on appeal of R. Axford to vary order of Cave, J., by directing payment of costs to official receiver occasioned by Axford's opposition).—Dismissed.

In re Cameron and others; ex parte Debtors and others (appeal of debtors and others from order of Mr. Registrar Giffard, dated February 21, refusing to rescind receiving order).—Part heard.

SATURDAY, MARCH 7.

Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Company and others (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Smith, J., dated November 22, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

MONDAY, MARCH 9.

Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Company and others.—Cur. adv. vult.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10.

Thomas v. Kempthorne (application of plaintiffs for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before the Lord Chief Justice without a jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11.

In re Kent County Council and the Council of the Borough of Sandwich and the Local Government Act, 1888 (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of Kent County Council from decision of Stephen, J., and Williams, J., dated January 31, on questions submitted under Local Government Act, 1888, s. 29). In re Kent County Council and the Council of the Borough of Dover and Local Government Act, 1888 (Q.B. Crown Side) (appeal of Kent County Council from like decision as in previous case).—Cur. adv. vult. on preliminary objection.

Reeve and another v. Gibson (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 11, allowing costs in copyright action, damages under 10*l.*).—Dismissed.

Hammond & Co. v. Schofield and another (appeal of plaintiff from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 17, discharging order to set aside judgment and amend).—Dismissed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others (application of defendants for new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated January 15, at trial before Butt, J., and a special jury).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, MARCH 6.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others.—Part heard.

SATURDAY, MARCH 7.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others.—Stand over.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

MONDAY, MARCH 9.

Royal Albert Hall Corporation v. Dowager Countess of Winchilsea and another (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Stephen, J., in Middlesex; heard February 18).—Dismissed as to Lady Winchilsea, allowed as to Mr. S. Finch Hatton.

Lorck v. Keun and others (application of defendant L. Cloete for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Mathew, J., in Middlesex; heard February 23).—Dismissed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., LOPES, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

In re Bridgwater Navigation Company (Lim.) and Companies Acts (appeal of T. H. Birch from order of North, J., dated December 3, 1890, declaring rights of shareholders; Cur. adv. vult. February 27).—Allowed.

Winby v. Manchester, Bury, Rochdale, and Oldham Steam Trams Company (application of defendants for security for costs of plaintiff's appeal from judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, dated December 15).—Allowed.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10.

Indigo Co. (Lim.) v. Ogilvy, Gillanders & Co. and Others (appeal of plaintiffs from order of North, J., dated Feb. 13, refusing liberty to amend writ of summons by adding parties).—Cur. adv. vult.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11.

Mayor, &c. of Wolverhampton v. Bilston Township Commissioners (appeal of defendants from judgment of North, J., dated Dec. 10, 1890).—Part heard.

In re Anne Flint, deceased; Allen v. Isaacson (appeal of plaintiff from order of North, J., dated Jan. 12, 1891, on originating summons).—Dismissed.

In re Blantern, deceased; Lowe v. Cooke (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Stirling, J., dated Jan. 22, varying Chief Clerk's certificate).—Allowed.

Roberts v. Cooper (appeal of Leila Elkins and others (representatives of C. Lamb, deceased) from order of Kekewich, J., dated Jan. 24, 1891).—Part heard.

IRISH SOLICITORS.—The chief objects of a bill introduced by Mr. O'Neill, M.P., are stated by him as being to give to the Council of the Irish Incorporated Law Society more complete control over the educational course connected with the entrance into the solicitor's profession in Ireland, and also to give to the society the custody of the Roll of Irish Solicitors.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—The usual weekly meeting was held on Monday at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall, Mr. Commin in the chair.—Mr. H. W. Marus gave an interesting account of his recent visit to Canada, and his impressions of political and social life in the Dominion. He concluded by moving a resolution to the effect 'That this house views with profound satisfaction the determination of the people of Canada to preserve their national life and independent existence as an integral part of the British Empire.'—A discussion followed, in which Messrs. J. L. V. S. Williams, D. M'Millan, C. Kains-Jackson, C. Herbert-Smith, H. H. Blazeby, W. F. Symonds, and W. S. Sherrington took part.—The motion was carried nem. con.—The subject for debate on Monday next will be the case of Simmons v. The London Joint-Stock Bank.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES.—A proposal has been made by Mr. Lloyd Morgan, M.P., that county councils should be enabled to provide for the appointment of stipendiary magistrates. Whenever any county council by a majority of its members thinks it expedient that a stipendiary magistrate or magistrates be appointed to execute the office of justice of the peace within the county, it is empowered by Mr. Morgan's bill to make a bye-law or minute fixing the amount of salary to be paid. On receiving this bye-law or minute the Home Secretary is to appoint from among barristers of at least five years' standing a person or persons to be police magistrate or magistrates, and a justice or justices of the peace for the county during Her Majesty's pleasure. Whenever a stipendiary magistrate sits his decision on any question of fact or law is to determine the matter then before the Court, irrespective of the opinion of any other justice of the peace who may be sitting at the time.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, March 16.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Tuesday, March 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Wednesday, March 18.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Thursday, March 19.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Friday, March 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Saturday, March 21.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

THE annual general meeting of the bar will be held (subject to the permission of the masters of the bench) in the Old Dining Hall, Lincoln's Inn, on Saturday, March 21, at 2.30 P.M.

BOY MESSENGERS.—Some correspondence has passed between the directors of the Boy Messengers Company (Lim.) and the Postmaster-General. The directors, after recapitulating the communications that have passed between the Post Office and the company, state the position as follows: 'We are authoritatively told by you that it is illegal, and an infringement of the law, and a direct contravention of the Telegraph Acts, to work the Electric Call System; at the same time you, for months past, have permitted a company who you have informed us do not hold a license, to work the system, and yet you threaten us with penalties should this company do likewise. At the same time you practically, on one ground or another, decline every proposal that we put forward.' The following reply was received on March 10 from the Post Office: 'I am directed to inform you that the Postmaster-General does not assent to the accuracy of the account, given in your letter of the 7th inst., of the communications which have from time to time passed between the Postmaster-General and the Boy Messengers Company (Lim.). I am also directed to reiterate the statement, which has already been repeatedly made to you, that the introduction and use of the Electric Call System without the license or permission of the Postmaster-General is illegal, and, further, that the carriage of letters by the messengers of a company such as the Boy Messengers (Lim.) is illegal. The Postmaster-General desires me to add that, having informed the company of the state of the law, he declines to pledge himself to any course of action at the instance of the company.' The directors, in reply, deny that their recital of the circumstances, which was taken from the actual correspondence, was inaccurate.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING. — The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, March 10; Mr. Pattinson in the chair. The subject for discussion, 'That the case of In re Watson, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 394; L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 27, was wrongly decided,' was opened by Mr. Parker, followed by Mr. Marchant; Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Willson opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: in the affirmative, Mr. Jones; in the negative, Messrs. Blagden, Hitchins, and Addington Willis. —Mr. Parker replied.—On the motion being put to the meeting it was lost by a majority of seven. There was a large number of members and visitors present. The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society on Tuesday, March 17, is: 'That legislation is urgently needed to place further restrictions on gambling.'

LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, March 9—Mr. C. Collins in the chair—a debate was held on the following subject for discussion: 'A. is the legal personal representative of B., who on May 28, 1887, shot himself while temporarily insane. On April 17, 1886, B. had insured his life for 1,000*l.* with an insurance company, the policy containing the following clause: "In case the assured die by the hand of justice or in personal combat, and also in case of suicide, his representatives shall be entitled to half the amount provided his membership shall have reached two years." Two annual payments of premium have been made by B. Can A. recover from the insurance company?'—Mr. Sweny opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Messrs. Glover, Nevins, Bielby, and Tonge.—Mr. Smith opened in the negative, which was also supported by Messrs. Martin, Rodgers, and Lockwood.—The question was decided in the affirmative by a majority of thirteen.

LEEDS.—A meeting was held on Monday evening at the Law Institution, Albion Place, at which Mr. A. W. Bairstow, barrister, presided.—At the conclusion of the private business of the society the following point was discussed: 'A., an employé, is injured by neglect on the part of his employer, B., to fence machinery in pursuance of the Factory and Workshops Act, 1878. A. does not avail himself of the penalty provided by the Act. Does the neglect by B. of the statutory duty of fencing give A. in such a case a right to damages at common law?'—Mr. Cecil P. Lankester supported the affirmative, and showed the common-law rights to be, in his opinion, very strong. —Mr. Ernest H. Foster replied in the negative, quoting several authorities, and relying principally on the case of Atkinson v. The Newcastle Waterworks Company.—A discussion followed.—The chairman summed up the arguments on both sides in a clear and interesting speech, and then put the question to the vote, when it was decided in favour of the negative by six votes to five.—A vote of thanks to Mr. Bairstow concluded the meeting.

THE BAR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The next smoking concert of this society will take place at the Drill Hall, Lincoln's Inn, on Friday, March 20, at 8.30 P.M. In addition to glees and part-songs by the vocal section of the society, we understand that the orchestra, which has this season been revived, will take part in the performance. In addition to the support which the society has throughout received from the benchers of Lincoln's Inn, further assistance is now being given by the benchers of the Inner Temple, who have kindly placed their Lecture Hall in King's Bench Walk at the disposal of the orchestra for the five o'clock Friday practices.

THE NEW LAW COURTS IN BIRMINGHAM.—The new Law Courts in Corporation Street, Birmingham, are now so nearly complete as to permit of arrangements for their formal opening. The first stone of the Courts was laid on March 23, 1887, by Her Majesty, who visited Birmingham especially for that purpose in the mayoralty of Sir Thomas (then Alderman) Martineau. Hopes had been entertained that the Prince of Wales might be induced to visit Birmingham in order formally to open the new buildings, and thus complete the work of the Queen. It is now known that his Royal Highness has complied with the request made to him, and that, accompanied by the Princess, he will go to Birmingham in the course of the ensuing summer for the purpose of opening the Victoria Courts. The Mayor (Alderman Clayton) will probably be in a position to make a communication on the subject to the council at its meeting on April 7, and the date of opening the Courts may be arranged by that time. The last visit of the Prince of Wales was on November 28 and 29, 1885, when his Royal Highness opened the Jaffray Hospital and the Corporation Art Gallery. The last visit of the Princess of Wales was on November 3, 1874, in company with the Prince of Wales, during the mayoralty of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain.

EAST INDIA (FACTORY ACT).—A Parliamentary paper has just been published containing copies of despatches from the Secretary of State in Council to the Government of India, dated May 15 and July 3, 1890, relating to the amendment of the Indian Factory Act, 1879. On the former date the Secretary of State forwarded a copy of correspondence with the Blackburn Chamber of Commerce on the subject. The following is the general instruction sent in this letter: 'The general principle of all factory legislation, as already adopted in this country and in India, is that life and limb must be protected, and that the health of all women, young persons, and children must, so far as possible, be assured. To this principle Her Majesty's Government have recently, in the Berlin Conference, declared their adhesion, thus recommending it for adoption by the other Powers of Europe. How far this general principle has been already applied in India is a matter for your consideration. As regards any additional factory legislation in India, due regard must be had to the circumstances of that country, which are in many respects different from those of any European nation. But the same general principle is nevertheless applicable, and the object of any such legislation must be to secure without fail, for the various classes of operatives in India, an amount of protection for life and limb, and an amount of security for the health of women, young persons, and children, not inferior to that which is afforded by the law of England.' On the latter date the Secretary of State forwards the proceedings of the Berlin Conference and Mr. Howarth's question in the House of Commons (May 12) on the extension of the Factory Act to the native States, together with the reply of the Government. He adds, on this latter subject: 'Any law passed by the Indian Legislature would be applicable to British India only; but there are factories, and gold and coal mines in native States, and we may hope that the numbers of such industries will increase. It is probable that the rulers of such States may be willing to follow the example of the British Government in the matter; and when the new law is passed and in working order, your Excellency might see fit to advise some of the chief native States upon the subject.'

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 11th inst., Mr. John Hunter in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. H. Holland Burne (Bath), H. Morten Cotton, Robert Cunliffe, Edwin Hedger, J. H. Kays, Grinham Keen, R. Pennington, Henry Roscoe, Sidney Smith, R. W. Tweedie, E. W. Williamson, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 360*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, six new members were admitted to the association, and other general business was transacted.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS AS SOLICITORS.—On February 27 Mr. Channing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been called to the statement made recently at the Liverpool Assizes by Mr. Justice Wills, to the effect that the practice of magistrates' clerks acting as prosecuting solicitors in cases where they had a direct interest in the number of convictions was an 'abominable system.'—Mr. Matthews: Yes, sir. I have seen the statement of the learned judge. The practice condemned by him is that of clerks to the justices acting as prosecuting solicitors in the cases of persons as to whose committal they have at an earlier stage advised the justices. If they afterwards prosecute at sessions or assizes, and thereby earn the allowance for costs, it may be alleged that they have an interest in obtaining as many committals as possible. But their salaries as clerks to the justices are not affected by the number of convictions. The practice is, no doubt, theoretically indefensible, and I will consult the Attorney-General on the question whether it produces any practical evils calling for legislation.

IMPORTATION OF GAME BIRDS.—Under the Game Act of 1831 a penalty may be imposed on dealers in game who buy, sell, or have in their possession birds of game after ten days after the expiration of the season for killing them; and on other persons who buy or sell such birds after that time, or who possess them, except for breeding purposes, after forty days. Some time since the question was raised whether this prohibition applied to birds imported from abroad. Considering that the decision of the Courts as to its not so applying 'is practically to permit the sale of game at all times, as the origin of the game is difficult of proof,' Sir J. Dorington, M.P., has introduced a bill to make the prohibition apply to imported game. However, he would 'restrict its operation to such kinds of game birds as breed and are found wild in the United Kingdom, thus excluding from its operations the Norwegian and Canadian and other game birds which are imported in large quantities.' His bill accordingly declares that the enactment of 1831 shall apply only to certain named birds, but shall apply to them whether they have been imported from abroad or not. The birds named are—pheasant (phasianus)—English (Colchicus), Chinese or ring-necked (torquatus), Japanese (versicolor), and the hybrids thereof; partridge (perdrix)—grey (cinerea), red-legged (rubria); grouse (tetral)—red (Scoticus), black (tetrix); ptarmigan (lagopus); capercailzie (tetrao urogallus); bustard (otis)—great (tarda), little (tetrax).

JURYMEN'S FEES.—Prior to opening an inquest at Guy's Hospital, on March 9, Mr. S. F. Langham, coroner for the City and Southwark, said he wished to speak to the jury on a matter which had appeared in the public Press, and which had reference to the County Council's proposal to do away with the shilling fee paid to jurymen who served on coroners' inquests in South London. The report—he had read it in the Times—was to the effect that the County Council had reason to believe that the shilling which was paid did not reach the hands of the jury. The statement pained him very much, for it cast an insinuation upon the officers in the district for which he was perfectly sure there was not the slightest grounds. Whatever the County Council did with regard to the fees, he was perfectly sure that every shilling charged for the juries had reached them. He had seen his officer hand the money to the foremen, and the foremen distribute it amongst their brother-jurymen. He thought it would be very unfair to abolish the fee, and he should regret it, as he was of opinion that juries who gave up their time and ordinary vocations ought to be remunerated. He concluded by again saying how pained he was at the statement made at the County Council, and he felt sure that, with regard to the insinuation that the juries did not get their fee, they would bear him out when he said it was entirely without foundation. The foreman of the jury said he wished most decidedly to refute the statement that they had not been paid, and the jurymen corroborated the coroner.

THE SALE OF GOODS.—An excellent principle is adopted by Lord Herschell in introducing a bill for codifying the law relating to the sale of goods. If the whole of the law of contract were codified, this bill would form a single chapter in the code. By the passing of such bills, therefore, gradual steps are being taken towards the establishment of a complete code of law. The bill, he tells us, is drafted on the same lines as the Bills of Exchange Act of 1882. It endeavours to reproduce as exactly as possible the statutory and common law rules relating to the sale of goods, leaving for introduction at a later stage any amendments that may seem desirable. The bill is almost entirely a reproduction of the common law. With the exception of the Statute of Frauds, the legislative enactments relating to the sale of goods deal only, Lord Herschell reminds us, with isolated points of not much general importance. In so far as such enactments deal solely with the law of sale, they have been reproduced in the bill, but where they relate mainly to some different subject-matter, and deal only incidentally with the law of sale, or where they affect only certain specified classes of goods, they have been covered by saving clauses. In accordance with the principle of the bill, no attempt is made to reproduce the effect of cases which, though arising out of sales, merely illustrate principles common to the whole law of simple contracts. The bill does not extend to Scotland, the law of that country on the subject differing in many important respects from that of England.

BIRTHS.

On March 2, at Belmont, Stoke, Devonport, the wife of Foster J. Bone, Solicitor, of a son.

On March 3, at 1 Alexandra Gardens, Ventnor, the wife of Wm. T. Way Buckell, Solicitor, of a son.

On March 10, at Fondilla, Bromley, Kent, the wife of A. R. Cluer, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On March 11, at St. Mary's, Stapleton Hall Road, Stroud Green, the wife of Minton Slater, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Feb. 2, at the Free Church of Scotland, Calcutta, Peter O'Kinealy, Barrister-at-Law, son of the late James P. P. O'Kinealy, M.P., of co. Cavan, to Grace, sixth daughter of E. Lewis, Esq., J.P., Maindee Hall, Newport, Mon.

On March 7, at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, Henry Francis Coghlan White, Assistant-Magistrate, Perak, Straits Settlements, to Emily Violet, third daughter of Frederick A. Ducroz, of Courtlands, East Grinstead, Sussex.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 15, Susannah, third daughter of the late Anthony Ellis Arkell, Solicitor, Cheltenham.

On March 5, at Minchinhampton, Gloucestershire, Agnes Anne, the wife of J. W. Hume-Williams, Barrister-at-Law, in her 69th year.

On March 6, of bronchitis, Leofric Temple, Esq., Q.C., Recorder of Carlisle, in his 72nd year.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

WE understand that, at the commencement of next sittings, two of the Lords Justices of Appeal will sit to try actions in the Chancery Division. Such an arrangement, of course, implies that only one division of the Court of Appeal will be sitting, and it may be presumed that appeals from the Chancery Division will not be taken during the early part of the sittings. The plan may possibly answer sufficiently well as a temporary expedient for getting rid of the block in the Chancery Courts, but we venture to think that the appointment of another judge will be found to be ultimately necessary.

IN the Clitheroe so-called 'abduction' case, to which we referred last week (ante, p. 176), the Divisional Court (Cave, J., and Jeune, J.) refused to grant a habeas corpus or even a rule nisi for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of a wife now detained by her husband who had forcibly seized her. The motion was made on behalf of the wife's sister, the wife herself being no party to it, and the contention was that the custody and detention were so strict as to afford evidence that if the wife were a free agent, she would be able to show the Court that she was entitled to be discharged from it. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, whereby imprisonment for disobedience to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights was abolished, was also relied upon. The Court, after full argument, had no hesitation in refusing the motion, being of opinion that to authorise the granting of the writ it should either have been shown that something illegal was being done or that the husband was being guilty of cruelty, and that neither of these grounds had been made out. It appeared, too, that the husband had recently obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, so that the seizure by the husband was in aid of the decree, and the applicant for the motion was attempting to render it futile. Very full reference was made in the judgment of Mr. Justice Cave to Regina v. Cochrane, 8 Dowl. P. C. 631, in which all the authorities up to 1840 are collected by Mr. Justice Coleridge, and we do not think that the High Court could properly have overruled those authorities. As for the Act of 1884, it is material to point out that what that Act abolished was imprisonment by the Court in aid of its own decree, leaving quite intact the power of a husband to seize and detain the wife as defined by Regina v. Cochrane and other cases.

THE Court of Appeal has emphatically reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Jeune and set Mrs. Jackson at liberty by writ of habeas corpus, thus overruling the dictum of Lord Mansfield in Regina v. Mead, 1 Burr. 542, to the effect that a husband may seize his wife wherever he finds her, and the carefully considered judgment of Mr. Justice Coleridge (sitting alone in the Bail Court) in In re Cochrane, 8 Dowl. 630, to the effect that a husband is entitled to exercise a certain degree of constraint towards a wife till she should be willing to return to her conjugal duties. Regina v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781, where the Court refused a habeas to a husband for the purpose of restoring to him his wife, who was living with her son by her own desire, is, no doubt, to some extent, in conflict with In re Cochrane, but not to such an extent as to make it impossible that the House of Lords, on the point of authority, should reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal.

Is there an appeal from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords in Jackson's Case? By section 3 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, 'an appeal shall lie to the House of Lords from any order or judgment of' (amongst other Courts) 'Her Majesty's Courts of Appeal in England.' In Bell Cox's Case, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 80, it was held that no appeal lies from the High Court to the Court of Appeal on an order of discharge by the High Court on habeas corpus. But in Jackson's Case the High Court refused the writ, so that the question would be a new one as between the High Court and the Court of Appeal. But assuming that the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction, as we are bound to do at present, that jurisdiction is clearly subject to review by the House of Lords, which might reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal on any one of three grounds: (1) on the ground of want of jurisdiction; (2) on the law; and (3) on the merits, if the House of Lords should see its way to taking a different view of Mr. Jackson's conduct to that taken by the Court of Appeal.

THE judgments of the House of Lords in Bell-Cox v. Hakes, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 89, which we report in our March number, will long be cited as authorities upon the procedure in habeas corpus and upon the construction of sections 19 and 47 of the Judicature Act, which give an appeal from the High Court to the Court of Appeal except in criminal cases. The House held unanimously that an order made upon a writ of habeas corpus to discharge from custody a prisoner attached under a writ de contumace capiendo (the prisoner was a clergyman whose imprisonment had resulted from disobedience to a monition requiring him to abstain from certain illegal practices in matters of ritual) is not a judgment in a criminal cause or matter within section 47 of the Act, whereby no appeal lies from the High Court to the Court of Appeal 'in any criminal cause or matter.' This is quite clear, and appeared so clear to the House that they did not care to have the question argued. Upon the general question whether an appeal lies from a discharge on habeas corpus great difference of opinion prevailed; but the majority of the House (five lords out of seven) held that no appeal lay, notwithstanding the very express words of section 19 of the Act of 1873, by which 'the Court of Appeal shall have jurisdiction and power to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order save as hereinafter mentioned, of Her Majesty's High Court of Justice.' 'Probably no more important or serious question,' observed Lord Halsbury in giving judgment, 'has ever come before your lordships' House,' and Lord Bramwell and Lord Herschell delivered separate judgments. The point of authority is now of course finally settled. In point of principle we cannot help thinking that the majority were wrong and the minority right. As it is put by Lord Field, the Legislature, in section 19 of the Act of 1873, 'has reduced the generality of the word "order" to specific orders by making careful and specific exceptions. All orders not excepted, and therefore orders in habeas, in civil causes or matters, are thus included.' The contrary view proceeds from seeing in statutory enactments greater reasonableness and consistency than their subject-matter admits of. As a general authority upon the construction of statutes the decision is, we think, a rather unfortunate one.

THE Parliamentary bar has been thrown into a state of great excitement by the decision of Mr. Hanbury, the chairman of the Select Committee on an electric railway extension bill, not to allow any counsel to cross-examine a witness unless he had been present at the examination-in-chief of such witness. The witness out of whose evidence the difficulty arose was an engineer, 'who had explained at great length the engineering details of the scheme of the bill and the methods of construction.' Mr. Pope, Q.C., on behalf of the Gas Light and Coke Company, rose to cross-examine the witness, when the chairman at once interfered as above stated, with the result that 'Mr. Pope, who was supported by all the leading members of the bar, entered a strong protest against the chairman's conduct, and then in a body the members of the bar refused to take any part in the proceedings, and retired from the room.' It has been since made known that Mr. Hanbury was following a Parliamentary rule laid down in 1861, but long disused. Two questions now arise: (1) Which is the procedure most beneficial to the parties promoting and the parties opposing bills—that revived by Mr. Hanbury, or that contended for by Mr. Pope and those members of the Parliamentary bar who support him? and (2) Whether it is not entirely within the discretion of the chairman of a committee to regulate the procedure as he pleases, subject only to the operation of the rule that both parties must be fully heard? Both of these questions are very serious ones. We venture to suggest that the Bar Committee is a more proper body to settle what should be the action of counsel in the matter than those members of the bar who are immediately interested in it.

THE chairman of the County of London Sessions recently horrified his bar by announcing that 'he was prepared to sit on Good Friday, the following Saturday, Easter Monday, and the Tuesday after. He had,' observed he, 'never before had to sit on Good Friday, but he could remember cases in which judges on circuit had sat in the afternoon of that day.' The Solicitor-General at once protested against such an interference with 'arrangements which many had already made.' The chairman said 'his position was a painful one, and he was subjected to observations which made him wish to have it understood that, as far as he was concerned, he was ready to sit on those days;' but added that 'he should of course be swayed by the general feeling of the bar, and would say at once that the Court would not sit on Good Friday'—a very wise determination. The allusion to alleged Good Friday sittings of judges on circuit makes the incident one of great general importance. Our impression is, that in the pre-Judicature Act times at least one judge once sat on Good Friday, but that since the passing of that Act there has been no such sitting. For what is the law under that Act? By section 26, subject to Rules of Court, the High Court and any judge thereof may sit 'at any time and at any place.' Read by itself, no doubt (as the Solicitors' Journal once put it), this section might be taken to authorise a midnight sitting in mid-winter in the middle of Salisbury Plain; but it is expressly made subject to Rules of Court, and by the Rules of the Supreme Court, Order LXIII., rule 4, the Easter vacation commences on Good Friday, which therefore, we submit, is a dies non.

AN important question with reference to the County Courts was raised last week in the House of Commons. Mr. Fowler asked the Attorney-General whether his attention had been called to a return recently presented to the House, from which it appeared that eleven of the County Court judges held less than 120 sittings each during the year 1889, and whether any steps would be taken to put in force sections 10 and 13 of the County Courts Act, 1888, so as to secure more frequent sittings of the Courts, and to provide for a redistribution of judicial work among the judges. The Attorney-General stated that he was informed by the Lord Chancellor that orders were constantly made under section 10, and that every effort was made to secure that the sittings should be as full as possible, and added that in many cases where there was a small number of sittings, the time occupied in travelling was considerable. There can be no doubt that this would be an important element for consideration in any scheme for the redistribution of work amongst the County Court judges, but there is another which is certainly not less material—viz. the amount of business to be disposed of at each sitting. The work of a County Court judge is to be measured not so much by the number of days on which he sits as by the amount of work to be got through at each Court. This of necessity varies enormously—a sitting in many country towns often lasting less than an hour, while at other places the judge is occupied for seven or eight hours. These considerations are sufficient to show that the suggested redistribution would be a matter of considerable difficulty.

IT is an inevitable result of a great measure like the Local Government Act, 1888, that a number of measures should be proposed of an ancillary character to further and develop that legislation. No body of men have been more assailed or been subjected in the discharge of their duties to a more microscopic criticism than the 'Great Unpaid,' the borough and county magistrates. And now a bill has been introduced by Mr. Lloyd Morgan, Mr. Dillwyn, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Lockwood, and others, the evident aim of which is gradually to abolish the old-fashioned justice of the peace. The bill professes to enable any county council, by a majority of its members, if they shall think it expedient that a stipendiary magistrate or magistrates shall be appointed, to make a bye-law or minute fixing the amount of salary to the office so created. The bye-law or minute is then to be transmitted to the Home Secretary, who will proceed to the appointment of the new functionary in accordance with section 1 of the Stipendiary Magistrates Act, 1863. Stipendiary magistrates so appointed will have all the powers of magistrates under the Act, and their decisions on matters of fact and law are to override the opinions of their honorary brethren. The council will, it is to be inferred, though it is not stated, have to provide the funds whilst the patronage will rest with the Secretary of State. The bar is not likely to complain, but the ratepayer may feel that the county council is addressing him in the words of Rehoboam: 'My father chastised you with whips; but I will chastise you with scorpions.' Whether justice will be better administered is another question. Many of us think that country magistrates have deserved well of the public, and all parties during the progress of the Local Government Bill agreed in commendation of quarter sessions; and in London and the large towns stipendiary magistrates have been known to make grave blunders.

THE decision of the Scottish Court of Justiciary last week as to the legality of the practice of dishorning cattle is the culminating-point in a strange history of judicial conflicts. In the first case on the subject, Brady v. M'Argle, 14 L. R. (Ir.) 174, the Irish Court of Exchequer in 1884 held that the operation was illegal under the Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (12 & 13 Vict. c. 92); the judges in this case were Baron Dowse and Justice Andrews. But the very next year, in Callaghan v. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 16 L. R. (Ir.) 325, Chief Justice Morris and Justices Harrison and Murphy came to the contrary conclusion, and held that the act is not illegal when performed with due care and skill, and for the purpose of rendering the animals more profitable to farmers in the course of their trade. Following these cases in 1888 came the leading Scotch case of Renton v. Wilson, 15 Ct. Inst. Ca. 84, in which Lords Young, M'Laren, and Rutherford Clark decided that the practice was legal, being customary in certain counties, and justified by a reasonable purpose. Then in 1889, in Ford v. Wiley, 58 Law J. Rep. M. C. 145, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Hawkins discussed the subject with great care, and emphatically dissented, on the evidence before them, from the views expressed by the Scotch and Irish judges. In reliance on this decision the question was again raised in Scotland in Todrick v. Wilson; and on March 13 last the Lord Justice-Clerk, and Lords M'Laren, Trayner, Welwood, and Kyllachy pronounced judgment, reviewing all the previous decisions, and unanimously resolving to abide by the view that the operation of dishorning cattle, when performed with skill and in the usual manner, for the purpose and with the effect of preventing the animals from injuring one another, is not an offence under the statute. A curious and perhaps unique feature in this history is that each Court has been unanimous; and this suggests that there may have been substantial diversity in the evidence collected in the different cases. Lord M'Laren observed that the decision in Ford v. Wiley proceeded upon the supposition that the following facts were proved: That the operation was neither necessary nor customary in England, that it was productive of no benefit to the owners of the animals, and was the cause of needless cruelty and suffering to the animals themselves; while, in his lordship's opinion, the facts in evidence before the Scotch Court pointed to very different conclusions. The case, in short, belongs to the obscure borderland between fact and law, to the region of confusion between the dictates of science and the natural inclination of humanity; and it seems desirable that the Legislature should intervene to put the question one way or the other beyond doubt.

SIR AUGUSTUS STEPHENSON'S return 'showing the working of the regulations made in 1886 for carrying out the Prosecution of Offences Acts, 1879 and 1884, with statistics setting forth the number, nature, costs and results of the proceedings instituted by the Director of Public Prosecutions in accordance with those regulations' during 1890, has just appeared as a Parliamentary paper, and a most valuable and important return it is. It appears that during 1890 the conduct of 453 cases was undertaken by Sir Augustus as Director of Public Prosecutions, while in 667 cases application was made unsuccessfully for his interference. The detailed tabular statement of these 667 cases presents many interesting features. Very frequent are the applications, generally anonymous, to put down lotteries, and in many, under the heading 'Result of application,' we read, 'warning letter sent.' 'M—— H——,' of 'Bow and Boulogne,' was complained of as 'sending betting circulars to boys at school through the post,' by Dr. Warre, of Eton, whereupon 'the director forwarded to Dr. Warre a report of proceedings instituted by the police for keeping betting-houses.' Applicants are frequently advised to consult their own solicitor. As to an alleged bigamy case, we find the sagacious note that 'if the police will rearrest this man (A—— J——) when they find him, director will then take up case.' 'N—— and others' were charged with conspiracy and fraud by C—— L——, but the noted result is: 'An old case. Applicant under delusions.' 'D—— W—— was charged with conspiracy, boycotting and interference with administration of justice' by his Honour Judge Metcalfe, but the result was that 'after communication with judge and personal interview with deputy chief constable,' it was found that 'evidence was not procurable to justify criminal proceedings against D—— W—— or any other person.' This interesting return should be in every law library, and in the hands of all clerks of the peace and clerks to justices. It only costs 10½*d.*

THE Attorney-General, in answer to a question by Mr. Stansfield in the House of Commons, has replied that 'his attention had not been called' to a prospectus of a company stating that applicants for shares should be deemed absolutely to waive all rights to compensation under the Directors' Liability Act. 'The practice,' continued the law officer of the Crown, 'would rather be an avoiding than an evasion of the Act of 1890, and would not be a criminal offence,' as of course it would not. We have already expressed the opinion (see ante, p. 146) that this new waiver clause would be good in law to protect directors who may employ it in prospectuses. 'An Act evaded is an Act not broken,' said Mr. Justice Grove in the famous Ramsden v. Lupton, 43 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 17, in which the Bills of Sale Act of 1854 was held to have been successfully evaded by successive bills of sale of which the last only was registered, so that the obligation to register within seven days after execution became practically inoperative. But Ramsden v. Lupton was followed, though after a considerable lapse of time, by an amending enactment; we refer to section 9 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, which completely circumvented the money-lenders, by providing that such duplicate bills should be wholly void. And we hope that, long before the close of the present session, Mr. Warmington will have seen his way to circumventing promoters by a bill providing that the Act of 1890 is to take effect notwithstanding any stipulation to the contrary. By the same bill also occasion might be taken to nullify the waiver clause in reference to contracts within section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867.

THE annual general meeting of the bar will be held this day (Saturday, March 21), at 2.30 P.M., in the Old Dining Hall, Lincoln's Inn, by the kind permission of the masters of the bench. It is to be hoped that there will be a full gathering. Last year's meeting (see a report of it in the LAW JOURNAL for April 26, 1890, at p. 253) was held a month later in the year. The principal subject then discussed was that of the appointment of common law barristers as revising barristers in the metropolitan districts. The construction of the 'Bar Committee,' which was formed in 1883, is fully described in the LAW JOURNAL for April 19, 1890. We take occasion to repeat that, 'though every barrister is requested to subscribe half a guinea a year, every barrister, whether a subscriber or not, is entitled to vote at the annual election of members, and to attend the annual meetings.'

Is the sea 'a place or country' within the meaning of Order XI., rule 4, which provides that the affidavit or other evidence supporting an application for leave to serve a writ or notice on a defendant out of the jurisdiction must show 'in what place or country such defendant is or probably may be found?' Such was the question which a Divisional Court had to answer in Seagrove v. Parks (Notes of Cases, p. 39). The defendant was a British subject, but was on board H.M.S. Cockatrice in the Mediterranean. Mr. Justice Denman, at chambers, had refused the application on the ground that the affidavit did not show, nor could it be shown, within reasonable limits, in what 'place or country' the defendant was. In Fowler v. Barstow, 51 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 103; L. R. 20 Chanc. Div. 240, the late Master of the Rolls, in speaking of the equivalent rule under the old rules, said: 'The object of the rule was this—that if you have a British subject anywhere, you may serve him with a writ; there is no objection to it, whether he is residing in a foreign country or whether he is residing in a part of the Queen's dominions; but if he is not a British subject, and you want to serve him out of the Queen's dominions, you must not serve him with a writ, because most foreign countries would object to that.' In the case of a foreigner, the raison d'être of the rule, according to Sir George Jessel, might necessitate particularising in what part of the Mediterranean he was, though on a British man-of-war he would surely be within Her Majesty's dominions. The defendant in Seagrove v. Parks was a British subject, so according to Sir G. Jessel's dictum it was immaterial whether he was in a foreign place or a place under British jurisdiction. The Divisional Court, however, held that the 'place or country' was not sufficiently specified in the affidavit in question, and refused the application for leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction.

A LIVELY correspondence has taken place between the 'Boy Messenger (Limited)' and the Postmaster-General, from which it appears that the department has taken up a thoroughly 'dog-in-the-manger' attitude. The question at issue seems to be vital to the existence of the company, whose work has already been such as to command the sympathy of the public. All those who are familiar with the ubiquitous brigade of neatly-uniformed boys will rejoice if the legal difficulties can be surmounted in such a way as to enable the enterprising company not only to continue their present operations unhindered, but to increase their utility by the establishment of what is known as the 'Electric Call System.'

OWING to pressure on our space we are compelled to hold over a number of reviews and other matter.

THE PARTNERSHIP ACT, 1890.—I.

THIS Act, which came into operation on January 1, 1891, is entitled 'An Act to declare and amend the law of partnership,' and these objects it proceeds to effect in exactly fifty sections. The part of the Act which is occupied with the work of declaring the law of partnership is very much more extensive than that which is devoted to its amendment. The Act, in fact, while altering the law on some few points and settling definitely the law on other points which were doubtful, introduces only one change of anything like first-rate importance—viz. in section 23, which deals with procedure against partnership property for a separate judgment debt, and provides that after January 1, 1891, a writ of execution shall not issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against a firm. The main operation, in fact, of the present Act is to some extent to codify the law, but, as has been pointed out by Lord Justice Lindley, it is by no means a complete code of partnership law. The mode of administering partnership assets in the event of death or bankruptcy is not to be found in the Act, neither is there anything in the Act relating to goodwill. The Act itself provides, by section 46, that existing rules of equity and of common law shall continue in force except so far as they are inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act. The same high authority, however, proceeds to point out that, though incomplete work is doubtless unsatisfactory, it by no means follows that such work is not worth executing. On the contrary, if well done, so far as it goes, it may be a great boon. His judgment upon the present Act is that, 'although imperfect, it has the merit of reducing a mass of law hitherto undigested, except by private authors, into a series of propositions authoritatively expressed and as carefully considered as any Act of Parliament is likely to be.'

The definition of partnership has from time to time furnished ample scope for the powers of text-writers, and in 'Lindley on Partnership' a vast number of definitions of more or less scientific merit are collected. This point is now definitely settled by section 5 of the present Act, where partnership is defined as the relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business in common with a view of profit. It is pointed out by Lord Justice Lindley that the definition that appeared in the bill as introduced into the Lords was inaccurate in including agreements for partnership, while the present definition possibly goes too far in the other direction, and makes the actual carrying on of business the test.

What is the test of partnership? A number of rules are stated in section 2, to which regard is to be had in determining whether a partnership does or does not exist. These rules may or may not be of importance according to the circumstances of the case, and each of the facts enumerated in the new rules (all of which are, with a very slight exception, only declaratory of the previous law) may, in some cases, be decisive of the question, while in other cases they may weigh very lightly. It would, we think, have been well if the Act had gone on to lay down specifically by far the most important principle to be applied in determining whether a partnership exists which, having regard to the provision of section 46, that the rules of equity and common law shall continue except when inconsistent with the express provisions of the Act, is unquestionably still the law. This rule is that established by Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. C. 268, and confirmed by Badeley v. The Consolidated Bank, 38 Chanc. Div. 238—viz. that the true contract and intention of the parties as appearing from all the facts of the case is the thing to be chiefly regarded. The slight change to which we alluded in section 2 is that the words 'nor give him the rights of a partner' are now omitted, so that the participants in profits would seem to be clearly entitled to an account—a point which was doubtful under the former law.

(To be continued.)

COMPENSATION UNDER LANDS CLAUSES AND RAILWAY CLAUSES ACTS.

(Continued from p. 179.)

THE expression 'injuriously affected,' section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, has led to great divergence of judicial opinion. In the words of Lord Penzance (L. R. 7 H. L. 261), 'there are many things which a man may do on his own land with impunity, though they seriously affect the comfort, convenience, and even pecuniary value which attach to the lands of his neighbour. In the language of the law, these things are damna absque injuriâ, and for them no action lies.' And Lord Chancellor Chelmsford adopted, in Ricket's Case, L. R. 2 H. L. 187, Lord Campbell's ruling In re Penny and The South-Eastern Railway Company, 26 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 225; 7 E. & B. 660, that, 'unless the particular injury would have been actionable before the company had acquired their statutory powers it is not an injury for which compensation can be claimed.' This opinion seems to have been shared by Lord Cranworth (L. R. 2 H. L. 198), by Lord Hatherley (L. R. 7 H. L. 260), and by Lord Penzance (ib. 261). On the other hand, Lord Westbury strenuously urged in Ricket's Case, p. 202, that 'injuriously affected' was only equivalent to 'damnously affected;' and in The City of Glasgow Union Railway Company v. Hunter, 2 Sc. App. 86, he adopts as the test the question, 'Does the thing done detract from the marketable value of the premises?'

In the Duke of Buccleuch's Case, 41 Law J. Rep. Exch. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 460, we find Lord Chelmsford saying: 'It can hardly be doubted that, in addition to the damage sustained by the loss of the river frontage, the house must have been "injuriously affected"—i.e. depreciated in value by the interposition between it and the river of an embankment to be used as a public highway;' and in McCarthy's Case, L. R. 7 H. L. 253, Lord Chancellor Cairns was willing to adopt the test proposed by Mr. Thesiger, Q.C.—viz. that 'where by the construction of works there is a physical interference with any right, public or private, which the owners or occupiers of property are by law entitled to make use of in connection with such property, and which right gives an additional market value to such property apart from the uses to which any particular owner or occupier might put it, there is a title to compensation if by reason of such interference the property as a property is lessened in value.' Lord Chelmsford (ib. p. 256) also accepted this test, with the qualification that 'where the right which the owner of the house is entitled to exercise is one which he possesses in common with the public, there must be something peculiar to the right in its connection with the house to distinguish it from that which is enjoyed by the rest of the world.'

Certainly the phraseology employed in the Lands Clauses Act is far from consistent. Thus, there are the terms 'damage' in sections 18, 21, 120; 'compensation or damage' in section 48; 'injuriously affected' in sections 22, 63, 68; 'compensation in respect of the loss' in section 114 (by reason of the acceleration of payment of a mortgage which had been made for a fixed term); 'loss or injury,' 'injuriously affecting' in section 121 (relating to lessees); 'by reason of the execution of the works' in sections 18, 21, 120; 'by the execution of the undertaking' in section 22; 'by the execution of the works' in section 68; and 'by the exercise of the powers of this or of the special Act or any Act incorporated therewith' in section 63; but it is submitted that the force of Lord Macnaghten's reasoning in the Cowper-Essex Case must be acknowledged when he says (58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 176): 'I think it is impossible to read the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act without seeing that it was the intention of the Legislature that full compensation should be given in all cases where lands are taken under the powers of the Act for the purposes of a public undertaking.'

The Cowper-Essex Case seems to have finally decided that depreciation is the test of 'injuriously affecting,' at least for the purposes of the Lands Clauses Act. There, the local board required land for sewage works; the owner had other immediately adjoining land which had been laid out for building purposes, but which, it was proved, would be depreciated by the proximity of the sewage works, even though they might be so conducted as not to create an actionable nuisance (p. 155), and he was held entitled to compensation for the depreciation. Lord Chancellor Halsbury said (p. 161) that it had been conclusively established that 'where part of a proprietor's land is taken from him, and the future use of the part so taken may damage the remainder of the proprietor's land, then such damage may be an injurious affecting of the proprietor's other lands, though it would not be an injurious affecting of the land of neighbouring proprietors from whom nothing had been taken for the purpose of the intended works.' Lord Bramwell (p. 169) refused to read into section 49 of the Lands Clauses Act (as, it would seem, the Attorney-General had suggested ought to be done) the words 'and for which, but for these powers hereby given, an action would lie;' and Lord Macnaghten observed (p. 177) that the 'elaborate provisions' (imposed on local boards in regard to taking lands) 'designed, apparently, for the protection of private as well as public interests, would be something of a mockery if a person from whom land is taken is to be told, when he asks for compensation, that at that stage of the proceedings it is all one whether his land be required for a public garden or for a sewage farm. The Stockport Case, 33 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 251, and 12 W. R. 762 (1864), where Mr. Justice Crompton had sanctioned compensation for an increased rate of insurance of a cotton mill consequent on the proximity of a railway (the railway company had taken other lands of the owner of the cotton mill), was approved in the Cowper-Essex Case; and the latter case has been followed in The London, Tilbury and Southend Railway Company and Trustees of Gower's Walk Schools, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 326, where, (1) ancient lights and (2) other lights which could not be blocked without interference with the former, being affected by a railway building, compensation was allowed for both. There Lord Justice Lindley said (p. 332): 'The moment a case is brought within the compensation clauses, whether by reason of injurious affecting or under section 63' [of the Lands Clauses Act], 'the measure of compensation is in all respects the same. It is full compensation for all damage.'

When, however, neither land nor any interest therein is taken it would seem that, in the absence at least of special legislative provisions, compensation cannot be claimed, though, as a matter of fact, adjoining land may be seriously depreciated by the undertaking. Thus, in Brand's Case, 38 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 265; L. R. 4 H. L. 171, where the claimant had land immediately adjoining the proposed railway, and in respect of which, although no part of such land was taken, a jury had assessed 272*l.* as damages for vibration from the use of the railway after construction (p. 174), compensation was not allowed. It was argued (p. 181) (and see Walker's Trustees Case, 7 App. Cas. 279) that 'this is, in fact, a servitude imposed on the plaintiff's land, and the imposition of that servitude, which is a cause of damage, must be the subject of compensation.' Lord Cairns also urged in favour of the claimant (L. R. 4 H. L. 219), that the condition upon which alone the company were empowered to make their structural works under section 16 of the Railway Clauses Act was: 'That in the exercise of the powers—that is, of all the powers by this or the special Act granted—the company shall do as little damage as can be, and shall make full satisfaction in manner herein and in the special Act and any Act incorporated therewith provided, to all parties interested for all damage by them sustained by reason of the exercise of such powers, that is, of all the powers vested in the company.' The opinions, however, of Lords Chelmsford and Colonsay were adverse to the claim, it would seem, chiefly on the ground that in their view under the Railway Clauses Act compensation was to be limited to damage caused by the construction of the railway, not by reason of or in consequence of such construction or by the user of the railway (see pp. 206, 214); and these opinions prevailed. Lord Chelmsford had, in Hunter's Case, 2 Sc. App. 82, admitted the force of Baron Bramwell's remark in the Duke of Buccleuch's Case, L. R. 3 Exch. 328: 'It does seem strange that the taking of a piece of a man's land should let him in to prove all sorts of damage for which he could not otherwise recover;' and even in Brand's Case he was, to use his own words (p. 206), 'compelled very reluctantly in a case where real damage has been sustained, though not to a very large amount, to come to the conclusion that the Legislature has not provided for the case of these respondents, but has left them without remedy.' Lord Blackburn referred to the same subject in Truman's Case, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 354; 11 App. Cas. 60: 'No doubt, when compensation is not given to those interested in the neighbouring land, this is, as against them, harsh legislation;' and so Lord Macnaghten, in the Cowper-Essex Case, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 594; 14 App. Cas. 177, observes: 'It may be said that an adjoining lessee or owner, from whom no land is taken, might suffer in the same way, and that he would be without redress. That is true; but I cannot see why a person whose case is within the spirit and within the very letter of the Act should be deprived of the full measure of compensation because his neighbour who is not within the Act at all is perhaps hardly dealt with.' His lordship was dealing with the Lands Clauses Act only; possibly it might be thought that, comparing the phraseology of that Act and of the Railway Clauses Act, Brand's Case may be shaken by the reasoning in the Cowper-Essex Case; but at present Brand's Case must be considered law. Mr. Justice Hannen had suggested in the Duke of Buccleuch's Case, L. R. 5 H. L. 445, as a reason for the distinction that, as the person whose land was taken 'was possessed of something without which the proposed public purpose could not be accomplished, he could have prevented the carrying out of the undertaking if he had not been deprived of his power by Act of Parliament, whereas the person whose lands are not taken had no such power, and could not have hindered the appropriation of lands not his own to any purpose not amounting to a nuisance.' But if the aid of the Legislature is to be invoked in order to carry out works on lands, and such works, whether in their construction or in their user must involve substantial damage to immediately adjoining premises, is it not reasonable that Parliament should of its own accord protect the owners of such adjoining premises and see that they are properly indemnified? On this point reference may be made to section 20 of the Gasworks Clauses Act (10 Vict. c. 15) and 53 & 54 Vict. c. ccxlvii. s. 4—London Streets Removal of Gates.

The general course of procedure under the Lands Clauses Act has been, first, to ascertain the amount of compensation, and then, by separate proceeding, to determine the question (if any) of liability (The Brierley Hill Local Board v. Pearsall, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 25; 9 App. Cas. 595). In Oliver's Claim, L. R. 24 Q. B. Div., it was argued (p. 509) that the question between the parties tried (before a judge and jury) under section 41 of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 110, must mean the whole question of right to compensation as well as the amount; but the Court of Appeal decided that this section applied only to the amount, so that this liability must still be determined by separate proceeding. It may therefore be conjectured that the section will rarely be of practical utility.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

THE record of Parliamentary work of the past week has been varied and considerable.

In the Lords the following bills have been read a third time and passed:—

The East India Officers.

The Tithe Rent Charge Recovery.

The Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Act, 1890, Amendment.

The following bills have passed through committee:—

The Clergy Discipline Immorality.

The Pollen Fisheries (Ireland).

The Registration of Electors Acts Amendment.

The Registration of Certain Writs (Scotland).

Bills read a second time were: The Technical Instruction Bill and the Sale of Goods Bill. The latter is to be referred to a sub-committee of the standing committee.

In the House of Commons the Technical Instruction Bill was considered as amended, and read a third time.

Two bills passed through committee, viz.:—

The Army (Annual).

The Public Bodies (Provisional Orders).

The House has gone into committee on the following bills:—

The Possession of Game.

Assessment of Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration).

The Electoral Disabilities Removal.

The undermentioned bills have passed the second reading:—

Consolidated Fund (No. 1).

Law Agents (Scotland).

Savings Banks.

Custody of Children.

Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Wales).

Solicitors and Apprentices (Ireland).

The following bills were read a third time:—

Army (Annual).

Public Bodies (Provisional Orders).

Private bills of great public interest which have passed the second reading were the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Bill and the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway (Extension to London) Bill.

The following new bills were introduced:—

To Amend the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (Baron De Worms).

To Amend the Law relating to the Disability of Married Women in Local Elections.

To Facilitate the Recovery of Rent Charges, &c., owing to Charities.

To Amend the Law of Scotland as regards Presumption of Life (Lord Advocate).

To Regulate the Charges of Returning Officers at Parliamentary Elections in Scotland (Lord Advocate).

To Amend the Law relating to the Means of Compelling Persons to Maintain their Destitute Parents.

To Amend certain Provisions of the Law with respect to Money Charged on or Payable out of the Consolidated Fund and with respect to Public Accounts.

The Registration of Electors (Acceleration) Bill was withdrawn.

The order for the Kensington Subway Bill was discharged; and a great number of railway bills were referred to the joint committee of Lords and Commons.

Correspondence.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

SIR,—If 'G. N. G.' will refer to the St. James's Gazette of July 31, 1888, he will find an instructive poem on the rights of a married woman. C. J.

Croydon: March 13.

BAR COMMITTEE.

EIGHTH ANNUAL STATEMENT OF THE BAR COMMITTEE.

ON the second Saturday in Trinity Sittings, 1890, the following members of the committee retired by rotation: Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., Mr. Montague Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Mr. W. C. Gully, Q.C., M.P., Mr. John Rigby, Q.C., Mr. F. A. Bosanquet, Q.C., Mr. Frank Lockwood, Q.C., M.P., Mr. A. M. Channell, Q.C., Mr. W. Rann Kennedy, Q.C., Mr. H. Bargrave Deane, Mr. J. W. Dunning, Mr. William Graham, Mr. W. English Harrison, Mr. W. A. Meek, Mr. J. H. Etherington Smith, Mr. R. S. Wright, and Mr. Alfred Young.

To fill the vacancies caused by the retirement of the above-named members, twenty-three candidates were duly nominated, and at a poll held during the week ending the first Saturday in Trinity Sittings, the following received the largest number of votes, and were duly declared elected by the chairman: Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., Mr. Montague Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Mr. W. C. Gully, Q.C., M.P., Mr. John Rigby, Q.C., Mr. F. A. Bosanquet, Q.C., Mr. Frank Lockwood, Q.C., M.P., Mr. A. M. Channell, Q.C., Mr. W. Rann Kennedy, Q.C., Mr. H. Bargrave Deane, Mr. H. F. Dickens, Mr. J. W. Dunning, Mr. W. English Harrison, Mr. W. A. Meek, Mr. A. J. Ram, Mr. W. C. Smyly, Q.C., and Mr. Joseph Walton. Seven hundred and fifty-one voting-papers were received. The total number of votes was 5,926; 1,623 votes were given to candidates practising in the Chancery Division, 4,303 to candidates practising in the Common Law Divisions. The smallest number of voters who could have returned a candidate was sixty-five.

The committee appointed Mr. William Graham an additional member of the committee under regulation 14, and Mr. Yate Lee a member in the place of Mr. Justice Romer.

At the first meeting of the committee after the election, the Right Honourable Sir Henry James was reappointed chairman, Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., vice-chairman, Mr. E. P. Wolstenholme, treasurer, and Mr. Lofthouse, hon. secretary.

During the past year the bar committee have had their attention directed to numerous subjects affecting the profession, and amongst others the following:—

The call of solicitors to the bar.
Sittings of the Queen's Bench Division.
Chancery business.
Circuits.
Retainers.
Counsel's fees.
Public Trustee Bill.
Rules under the Act.
Winding up of Companies Bill.
Rules under the Act.
Court of Appeal in Criminal Cases Bill.
Supreme Court of Judicature Amendment Bill.
Rules under the Act.
Settled Land Bill.
Rules under the Lunacy Act, 1890.
Rules under the Friendly Societies Act, 1885.
Rules under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890.
Interrogatories and inspection in common law actions.
Supervision of bills introduced into Parliament.
The Royal Courts of Justice.

The Call of Solicitors to the Bar.

Representations were made by the committee to the masters of the bench of the four Inns of Court that in the case of solicitors seeking call to the bar under the new regulations it was desirable, in the interests of the profession, that in addition to the names and present addresses of such solicitors, information should be published to the members of the bar, as to the place or places where such solicitors have practised since their admission, with dates, the name of the firm or firms of which they have been members, and what appointments for profit or otherwise they have held, or do hold. The committee understand that the desired particulars will be given in future. Where information has been given to the committee that any such solicitor should be called to the bar, the committee have brought the matter before the benchers.

Chancery Business.

At the request of the Incorporated Law Society a committee has been appointed, consisting of the chairman, the vice-chairman, Sir Horace Davey, Q.C., Messrs. Crackanthorpe, Forbes, Rigby, Romer, Cozens-Hardy, Renshaw, Hall, Farwell, Chadwyck-Healey, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Ingle Joyce, Leigh Clare, Methold, Sturges, and Joseph Walton, to confer with a committee of solicitors, appointed by the Incorporated Law Society, upon the best mode of facilitating the despatch of business in the Chancery Division of the High Court. It was the unanimous opinion of the joint committee that the present number of judges attached to the Chancery Division is insufficient to dispose of the important work of that Division, more especially in regard to witness actions. At the commencement of Hilary Sittings, 1890, the total number of causes in the Chancery list was 573, and at the commencement of Hilary Sittings, 1891, 667, being an increase of ninety-four during the year. Owing to the fact that Chancery actions invariably involve substantial issues, and to no cause being allowed to stand over by consent, unless reasons, approved by the judge, are given in writing for the postponement, it rarely happens that the list falls to pieces as not unfrequently happens in the Queen's Bench Division. It, therefore, appeared to the joint committee that, before any suggestions could usefully be made as to the despatch of business, the appointment of an additional judge was necessary. A deputation, consisting of Sir Henry James, Mr. Robinson, Q.C., Mr. Farwell, Q.C., and the hon. secretary, and the president, vice-president, Mr. Rawle, and Mr. Munton, waited on the Lord Chancellor in order to lay the views of the joint committee before his lordship. His lordship promised to bring the matter to the attention of the Government.

Retainers.

A copy of the Rules of Practice relating to the retainers of counsel adopted by the Council of the Incorporated Law Society of June 13, 1890, and approved by the Attorney-General on June 17, 1890, having been sent to the committee by the Law Society at the request of the Attorney-General, the committee published a report on the same, a copy of which has been sent to each of the subscribers. The committee entered their decided protest against the assumption that it is in the power of the council of the society to frame rules of practice as to retainers of counsel which will bind the bar, even though approved by Her Majesty's Attorney-General. While fully recognising the authority of the Attorney-General to determine questions arising on disputed retainers, the committee observed that neither the society nor the Attorney-General can legislate on the subject, and that the approval of the Attorney-General must be taken to express his personal and individual opinion, which, though entitled to the highest consideration, has no official character and no representative authority, and will not bind any future holder of his office. A copy of this report was sent to the Law Society, and was referred by the council of the Law Society to a committee, who requested a conference on the matter. A conference took place between Sir Horace Davey, Mr. Leigh Clare, and Mr. Joseph Walton on behalf of the committee, and the president and vice-president on behalf of the society. After the report had been fully discussed, the committee were requested to draw up a set of rules, carrying out their views as expressed in their report, for the consideration of the committee appointed by the Law Society. A copy of the report may be had by members of the bar on application to the hon. secretary.

Counsel's Fees.

The committee having had a correspondence with the Incorporated Law Society extending over some years on the subject of counsel's fees, the committee drew up a report on the subject for the use of the bar. The committee expressed the opinion (inter alia) that by long-settled practice the fees on the briefs of leader and junior respectively stand to one another in the proportion of three to two or five to three, and that such a practice is reasonable and works satisfactorily. There is, however, no rigid rule on the subject. A junior is entitled to refuse a brief which is not marked in this proportion, but he is not bound to do so, and he may accept a brief marked in smaller proportion without any breach of professional etiquette; and a leader may, without any breach of professional etiquette, accept a brief, the fee on which does not exceed that on the brief of his junior in this proportion.

That upon the question as to what special fees are recognised by the practice of the profession and are not taken as part of the brief fee, the usage of the bar appears to be as follows: A barrister is considered to be prepared to take any brief in the Courts in which he professes to practise, at a proper professional fee, according to the length and difficulty of the case. Any counsel is at liberty to say that he will not practise in a particular Court without a special fee of a named amount, or that he will not go into Court at all without a special fee of a named amount; but such special fees, when asked, should, according to the practice as hitherto understood at the Chancery bar, be asked in all cases, or in all Courts, except the one or more in which the barrister usually practises. At the Common Law bar the practice has been governed rather by the rules of the various circuits, and the special fees to be taken by members of circuits accepting briefs on other circuits have been fixed by the rules of the circuits, and not by the individual members of the bar. It appears to have been generally understood on all circuits that no one should take a special fee, properly so called on his own circuit. There appears, however, to be no objection in principle to a counsel having a special fee for going out of town to a circuit of which he is a member, or to particular towns on that circuit, provided that the special fee is taken in all such cases. In no case ought a fee, which is really a brief fee given for getting up a case in order to conduct it in Court and for conducting it there, to be divided and marked in part as a special fee merely for the purpose of paying a less fee to other counsel engaged in the case.

A copy of the report may be had by members of the bar on application to the hon. secretary.

Public Trustee Bill, 1890.

In anticipation of this bill becoming law, the Lord Chancellor confidentially requested the committee to make suggestions and observations on the draft rules thereunder. A sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Crackanthorpe, Byrne, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Digby, Farwell, and Ingle Joyce, drew up a report on the subject, which was adopted by the committee, and a copy sent to the Lord Chancellor.

Winding up of Companies Bill, 1890.

A sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Cozens-Hardy, Renshaw, and Buckley, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Chadwyck-Healey and Methold, were requested to report on this bill. Their report was afterwards adopted by the committee, and copies thereof were sent to the President of the Board of Trade, the Attorney-General, and to certain members of Parliament. A copy of the report may be obtained by members of the bar on application to the hon. secretary.

The bill having become law, and the Lord Chancellor having requested observations on the draft of the rules thereunder, the same were considered by Messrs. Cozens-Hardy, Buckley, and Hall, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Chadwyck-Healey and Oswald, who drew up a report thereon, which was afterwards presented to his lordship.

Supreme Court of Judicature Amendment Bill, 1890.

A report of this bill was drawn up by Messrs. Gully and Channell, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. English Harrison, Smyly and Chadwyck-Healey, and adopted by the committee, and copies were sent to the Lord Chancellor and the law lords.

The bill having become law, and observations by the committee on the rules as to new trials and motions for judgment as affected by the bill having been requested by the Lord Chancellor, Messrs. Finlay, Channell and Kennedy, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Graham, Digby, Dickens and Lyttelton, at the request of the committee, drew up a report on the subject, which was afterwards presented to the Lord Chancellor.

The Settled Land Bill.

A report on this bill was drawn up by a sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Robinson and Crackanthorpe, Queen's Counsel, and Messrs. Dunning and Wolstenholme, and afterwards adopted by the committee, and a copy thereof was sent to the Lord Chancellor.

Rules under the Lunacy Act, 1890.

The observation of the committee having been invited by the Lord Chancellor on the draft of the rules under the Act, Messrs. Hall, Q.C., Dunning, Methold, and Sturges were appointed a sub-committee to report on the same. Their report was afterwards adopted by the committee, and a copy thereof was sent to the Lord Chancellor.

Rules under the Friendly Societies Act, 1885.

A draft of these rules having been sent to the committee by the Lord Chancellor, the same was considered by Messrs. Crackanthorpe and Pitt-Lewis, Q.C., and Messrs. Sturges and Ram, and their report having been adopted by the committee, a copy was sent to the Lord Chancellor.

Rules under the Bankruptcy Act, 1890.

The committee having been requested by the Lord Chancellor to make observations on the draft of these rules, Messrs. Pitt-Lewis, Q.C., Digby, Smyly, and Joseph Walton drew up a report on the same, which was afterwards sent to the Lord Chancellor. The committee have to acknowledge the valuable assistance of Mr. Sidney Woolf, Q.C., and Mr. Yate Lee, not members of the committee, in drawing up this report.

Interrogatories and Inspection in Common Law Actions.

The committee having had their attention called by the Lord Chancellor to the observations of the Master of the Rolls in the House of Lords, on July 17, 1890, on this subject, the matter has been referred to a sub-committee, who have it now under their consideration.

Law Reports.

The opinion of the committee was requested by the proposed publishers as to whether it was desirable to publish a revised edition of the common law and equity reports from the earliest period down to such time as would not interfere with existing interests and copyrights. The committee informed the proposed publishers that such a work was, in their opinion, practicable, and that, if carried out by careful and competent editors, it would be very useful to the profession.

Royal Courts of Justice.

The sub-committee, which consists of Messrs. S. Hall, Q.C., Farwell, Q.C., W. W. Knox, English Harrison, and Bargrave Deane, have given a considerable amout of time and attention to matters connected with the Royal Courts, and representations and suggestions made by them have, by the direction of the Lord Chancellor, been carried out in the following respects:—

1. An additional robing-room has been provided for the bar on the west side of the Strand entrance, and has been fitted not only with lockers, but also with shelves and pegs, the exclusive use of which may be obtained for a small annual payment. Improvements have also been made in the lighting of all the robing-rooms at the Strand entrance.

2. The way past the west of the building from the Strand to Carey Street has been properly lit.

3. Improvements have been made with the view of (a) remedying the draughts which pervade the Courts; (b) securing the more efficient reservation of seats in Court for the junior bar; (c) completing the alterations suggested in the fittings of the Courts, lavatories, and passages. The sub-committee have co-operated in the arrangements as to the room provided for the reception of persons taken suddenly ill within the building.

Representations have also been made to the Lord Chancellor as to (amongst other things) the ventilation, drainage, and sanitary condition of the Courts and other portions of the building, and as to providing a reading-room for the bar. These representations have all been cordially received by his lordship, and while some of them have already been attended to, others are under consideration.

March, 1891.

MR. HANBURY AND THE PARLIAMENTARY BAR.

THE following correspondence has appeared in the Times:—

Sir,—As the difficulty which has arisen between Mr. Hanbury's committee of Parliament and the bar appears to have excited considerable interest, by desire I beg to ask you to publish the correspondence now enclosed. Yours respectfully,

SAML. POPE.

38 Parliament Street, Westminster: March 18.

---

38 Parliament Street: March 14, 1891.

R. W. Hanbury, Esq., M.P.

My dear Sir,—The sympathy between committees of Parliament and the bar has hitherto been so complete, and their relations have been so cordial and satisfactory, that, as the senior practitioner, I have been requested, in the hope of avoiding any friction, respectfully to lay before you the view which, after consideration among themselves and consultation with the Attorney-General, as the head of their profession, the members of the bar practising in Parliament take of the difficulty which has arisen in the committee over which you preside. The simple issue is that you refuse to allow counsel to cross-examine any witness unless he has been personally present during the whole of the examination in chief.

We respectfully deny the competency of any committee so to limit the rights of petitioners or counsel. To petition Parliament is the constitutional right of every subject. Certain petitions have been received by Parliament, and have been referred to your committee with instructions to hear the petitioners by themselves or their counsel. We demur to any attempt to limit or control that right. No other tribunal in the kingdom has ever attempted such a limitation as is involved in your resolution. Of course, every tribunal has the right to secure order in its own proceedings, but always with a full regard to the rights of suitors and the independence of the bar. It does not remove the difficulty to say, 'Under special circumstances the committee will allow the counsel to proceed.' We claim to be heard as a right, and not by any allowance.

I am anxious to clear the matter of any personal interest on either side. The bar does, and will do, its utmost to assist committees in discouraging irrelevancy or needless repetition, but they cannot acquiesce in any course which must have the effect either of limiting the choice by a suitor of his representative or of greatly increasing the costs of the proceedings.

We shall all of us endeavour to avoid any occasion of difficulty, but should circumstances arise we hope that our insistence on what we conceive to be not only our own rights but those of our clients will not be supposed to involve any want of personal respect.

I write this as a private communication, but reserve the right to make it, with any reply, public, should necessity arise.

I am, my dear Sir, on behalf of the members of the bar practising in Parliament, and by their authority,

SAML. POPE.

From Attorney-General. Enclosed to Mr. Hanbury, March 15, 1891.

2 Pump Court, Temple, E.C.: March 14, 1891.

Dear Pope,—I am extremely sorry to hear that a difficulty has arisen in one of the Parliamentary committee-rooms respecting the cross-examination of witnesses, and that the committee have laid down a rule that no counsel shall be allowed to cross-examine who has not heard the examination in chief.

I have been asked by some members of the Parliamentary bar to send you my views upon the matter, and I think it right to do so, as the profession and the committee are entitled to whatever assistance I can give to them in the matter.

I am satisfied that the enforcement of any such rule would work great injustice to the parties appearing before the committees, and would deprive the committees of the assistance to which they are entitled from proper cross-examination of the witnesses who appear before them. To anyone acquainted with the practical working of such inquiries, the above will, I think, be obvious, but out of respect to the committee I will state my reasons.

In the great majority of important cases counsel must be instructed days, and sometimes weeks, before the bill comes on for hearing. No one can tell the day or the hour at which any particular witness will be examined. The cross-examination of skilled witnesses must be, and is, carefully prepared by the leading counsel appearing for promoters or opponents respectively long before the evidence in chief is given. I may say, parenthetically, that many of the best cross-examinations on engineering matters which I have ever heard have been to my own knowledge prepared long before the case had been opened or any witness examined.

The evidence in chief frequently does not bear directly upon the points which it is the duty of the cross-examining counsel to elicit. In my judgment the committees would be deprived of the most useful assistance if the leading counsel, who are selected on account of their experience, and have prepared themselves to cross-examine, are not entitled to do so simply because a witness may be called when they may be temporarily absent without the possibility of their knowing beforehand when they will be required, the order for examining witnesses depending entirely upon the judgment of the counsel who are conducting the case for the time under the notice of the committee.

I may add that in no one of the Courts of law, either Chancery, common law, or assizes, has such rule ever been enforced.

I am quite satisfied that, as far as possible, members of the bar would desire to fall in with the wishes of the committee in the matter, so far as their duties to their clients would permit them to do, but such a rule must in many cases occasion a miscarriage of justice.

With regard to any particular line of action which should be taken by the bar in consequence of the ruling to which I have referred, it seems to me that this must be left to the judgment of the members of the Parliamentary bar themselves, having regard to the interests of their clients and the necessities of the particular case in which the question has arisen; but I think that a firm but respectful protest should be made against the adoption of any such rule, on the ground that it is beyond the competence of the committee, and also by reason of the mischief which would be thereby occasioned to the clients whose interests are entrusted to the counsel and to the committee, who are entitled to the very best assistance which counsel can give them.

Believe me very truly yours,

RICHARD E. WEBSTER.

S. Pope, Esq., Q.C.

House of Commons: March 16, 1891.

Dear Sir,—I have to thank you on behalf of the committee for your letter of March 14, addressed to us in the name of the Parliamentary bar. Although disputing the action of a public committee of the House of Commons on a question of public importance, it concludes, we observe, with an intimation that I must treat it as a private communication, while you reserve to yourself the right to make it and my reply public or not, as you may prefer. This unusual suggestion I hardly feel bound to accept, and I trust you will prefer publicity, as we do.

We more readily endorse the first part of your letter, which alludes to the sympathy existing between committees of Parliament and the Parliamentary bar, and to the desire to avoid any friction by a clear understanding of the rights of each. You fully admit, we observe, that every tribunal has the right to secure order in its own proceedings, and any difference of opinion between the committee and the leaders of the Parliamentary bar is therefore confined to the claims of the latter. In this instance the particular right claimed is the right to be absent during the whole examination of a witness hostile to your client, and to cross-examine him on that client's behalf without having heard one word of his evidence, and even without having had a junior present to report to his leader the general purport of that evidence. Last Friday, when I declined to allow you, among others, to cross-examine a witness, neither you nor your junior had been present while that witness was under examination in chief. Whether this right is claimed and admitted in the Courts of law appears to be disputed, but whether recognised there or here, it must, we think, conflict with the rights of suitors. The circumstances, however, of a Parliamentary committee differ much from those of the Courts of law, and make the rules of the one not of necessity applicable to the other.

When I gave effect to the decision of the committee last week we were not aware of precedents for our action, and were prepared to defend it on the ground of public convenience and common sense, even in the face of authority and precedent. We are now glad to find that the latter also are on the side of the committee, and, in fact, go beyond our recent ruling.

On April 19, 1847, a committee, consisting of Sir J. Yarde Buller, the present Duke of Rutland, Mr. John Tollemache, Mr. Newdigate, and Captain Plumridge, resolved that 'no counsel, who shall not have been present at the examination in chief, shall be entitled to cross-examine witnesses except under special circumstances and by the express permission of the committee.'

On May 12, 1847, another committee, the members of which were Mr. Forbes Mackenzie, Sir John Guest, Lord Norreys, Mr. G. R. Phillips, and Mr. G. H. Cavendish, passed a resolution in identical words, with the suggestive addition that where two or more parties have substantially the same interest only one counsel be heard.

In 1861 the General Committee on Railway and Canal Bills passed the following resolution, which remains the official authority upon this subject, and is quoted as such by Sir Erskine May:—

'As to examinations of witnesses by counsel: Resolved, that counsel shall not cross-examine a witness unless he has been present during the entire examination in chief, and that counsel shall not re-examine unless he has been present during the entire cross-examination.'

This resolution, which requires the presence of counsel during the whole time of the examination in chief or cross-examination, while it is more stringent than the rule laid down by a majority of our committee, is, we think, an improvement upon it. It removes all danger of dispute as to whether a counsel has or has not heard enough of the evidence to entitle him to cross-examine a witness thereon. Even to-day two leading Queen's counsel came into the committee-room when the examination in chief had nearly concluded, with the result, though probably not the intention, of raising this very issue—the question, namely, of what minimum of attendance entitles a counsel to cross-examine. This points to the need of avoiding all doubt on that matter in future by adhering more strictly to the terms of the authoritative resolution which I have last quoted.

These precedents are, as we hope you will agree, inconsistent with your claim to be heard of right, and not by any allowance.

A full regard of the rights of suitors points, we think, in an opposite direction to that indicated in your letter. We fail to understand how the interest of suitors is fully consulted if their principal advocate or, as happened on Friday, both their advocates are engaged elsewhere upon other business (possibly in three or four different cases), if their counsel do not attend to hear the evidence of their opponents, or if their leading counsel is absent during the greater portion of their own case. This means, we think, more counsel, more expense to suitors, and more time occupied in committee. It would appear also to produce in practice the evil which theoretically you assert might result from our ruling, and 'limits the choice' of counsel to a few leading members of the Parliamentary bar.

For these reasons, but at the same time with every desire to respect the legitimate claims of a bar to whom Parliamentary committees are under many obligations, we regret that we cannot admit the particular claim now put forward or alter a decision at which we arrived after due deliberation, which is in accordance with the existing regulations for the conduct of committees, and which we feel it our clear duty to maintain until otherwise instructed by the House of Commons itself.

I am, dear Sir, faithfully yours,

R. W. HANBURY.

Since the above was written we have received, and desire to thank you for, your second letter, enclosing the opinion of the Attorney-General. The great deference which we pay to his high legal authority must be subject to the fact that the opinion so given is opposed to the actual Parliamentary authority on the subject. It no doubt coincides, on the other hand, with the existing practice of many eminent Queen's counsel, a practice which is the real point at issue.

Samuel Pope, Esq., Q.C., &c.

---

38 Parliament Street: March 18, 1891.

R. W. Hanbury, Esq., M.P.

My dear Sir,—Your letter dated March 16 has only this moment been placed in my hands. In accordance with your wish, I send the whole correspondence, including this note, to the public press.

I am glad to note that you do not allege that the action of your committee was caused by any pressing inconvenience arising at the time. You will remember I informed you that the cross-examination which you refused to allow had no relation to anything which had been proved in chief, and it seems to us difficult to understand how 'public convenience and common sense' would be vindicated by compelling counsel to listen, it may be for hours, to matter in which his client has no interest, and to which his cross-examination is not to be directed.

I am a little astonished to find that your committee were unaware of the precedents given in May's 'Parliamentary Practice.' They have long been familiar to us, and some of us are old enough to recall the incidents upon which they are supposed to be founded.

It is true that in 1847 and 1861 the resolutions you quote were passed, but, if ever acted on at all, they were speedily found to be so unworkable that they were never enforced. It is, again, difficult to understand how resolutions can be regarded as 'authoritative' which for thirty years have been abandoned by the wisdom of all Parliamentary committees.

If the existing practice works injustice to clients, those clients have the remedy in their own hands.

I remain, my dear Sir,
Faithfully yours,
SAML. POPE.

Sir,—The thanks of the public are due to Mr. Hanbury for his ruling against the practice of cumulative cross-examination by eminent counsel who take briefs and draw fees for half-a-dozen cases at once.

To the unprofessional person it has long seemed anomalous that a man should be handsomely paid for work that he does not do. Unlike Sir Boyle Roche's bird, these learned gentlemen spend their time scuttling like rabbits in and out of the various committee-rooms, picking up scraps and shreds of evidence from juniors, and justifying their existence by repeated cross-examination of witnesses and breathless attempts to be in two places at once.

Having for the last week been subjected to the exuberant rhetoric of Mr. Littler, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Taylor, in addition to the forensic eloquence of their juniors, I wish Mr. Hanbury the success he deserves in attacking this time-honoured abuse and monopoly of the business of the bar.

I am, Sir, yours,
'SERVING ON COMMITTEE.'

A correspondent writes: 'It is considered improbable that any further steps will be taken with reference to the differences which have arisen between Mr. Hanbury and the Parliamentary bar. The rejection of the City and South London Railway (Extension to Islington) Bill removed the opportunity of reviewing in Parliament the revival of the resolution of 1861 with regard to the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, as the intention of the principal opponents to move for the recommittal of the bill to a new committee has become unnecessary. The two bills remaining in the group of bills referred to Mr. Hanbury's committee—namely, the West Metropolitan Tramways and the Latimer Road and Acton Railway (Extension of Time) Bills—not having been read a second time, will now, in accordance with custom, be placed, when ready for committee, in another group, so that the labours of Mr. Hanbury's committee are concluded for this session.'

LAW SOCIETIES AND THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILL.

THE following petition has been presented by the Manchester Law Association to the House of Commons:—

The humble petition of the Manchester Incorporated Law Association sheweth:

That a bill has been introduced into your Honourable House, intituled 'A Bill for the Appointment of a Public Trustee.'

That it is the opinion of your petitioners, who are a body of solicitors carrying on business in the city of Manchester and the neighbourhood thereof, that such an appointment as is proposed by this bill is unnecessary and inexpedient.

That by the bill it is proposed to establish a Government department for the transaction of private business, and your petitioners humbly submit that this is unjustifiable in principle unless under the stress of some urgent necessity.

That the only reasons urged in support of such a demand are (a) the difficulty of finding suitable private trustees and (b) the misappropriation of trust funds or their negligent administration by private trustees. In the experience of your petitioners these cases are very inconsiderable when compared with the multitude of trusts which are honestly and carefully administered, and in which no practical difficulty exists in providing suitable trustees.

The cases in which any difficulty does in practice arise in securing trustees are mainly cases where new trustees have to be found on the death or retirement of the original trustees. This difficulty would be greatly diminished, if not removed, if legal provision were made for the remuneration of private trustees, in the manner in which it is proposed to remunerate a public trustee.

That the following objectionable results are likely to arise from the administration of trusts by a Government office:

1. The public trustee would not take a personal interest in the beneficiaries such as a private trustee usually does.

2. While a private trustee's office is administered with a large amount of discretional elasticity, and he frequently benefits his trust estate by carrying on a business until it can be advantageously disposed of and by other means at some personal risk, a public trustee's duties would certainly be carried out in a more rigid manner in order to avoid any liability on his part or on the part of the Consolidated Fund, which would stand behind him as his guarantor.

3. While a private trustee will incur some trouble to find a safe investment which will yield a reasonable amount of income to the life tenant, a public trustee would naturally prefer consols as involving the least amount of trouble. The effect of this would be not only to reduce the income of life tenants to the low level of dividends on consols, but also to make that level lower still by the rise in the price of consols which would follow the large investments by the public trustee in their purchase.

4. Apart from the question of remuneration, the expenses of administration by a public trustee would be greater than those of administration by a private trustee, owing to the fact that the public trustee would require strict evidence of many facts which the personal knowledge of the private trustee would enable him to dispense with.

That your petitioners do not overlook the fact that to some extent the adoption of the Act would not be compulsory, but they are also impressed with the feeling that if a public department is established there is a natural desire amongst officials to justify its existence by attracting business to it, and that there are many modes of doing this; and, further, though it is true the Act in some parts would be permissive, there are other provisions which would enable the Court in appointing a new trustee to appoint the public trustee as sole trustee, whether the beneficiaries wished it or not (see section 2 (1)), and also to appoint the public trustee in cases of probate or administration, irrespective of the wishes of the beneficiaries (see section 3).

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that the proposed bill may not be passed into law.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

The Seal of the Manchester Incorporated Law Association was affixed hereto in the presence of } L.S.

THOS. JOSH. GILL, Chairman of Committee.
JOHN BURY, Secretary.

The following circular has been sent by the Liverpool Law Society to various persons and societies interested in this important matter:—

With respect to this important bill now standing for second reading in the House of Commons, a meeting was held in London, on Thursday last, March 5, when deputies from twenty-five provincial law societies were present, together with the president and vice-president of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom.

At that meeting the following resolution was unanimously passed: 'That in the opinion of this meeting of the associated provincial law societies, the Public Trustee bill now before Parliament is objectionable, as being an effort in the direction of State interference with private business of a kind which especially requires the personal attention and local knowledge of those acquainted with the circumstances of the case. Further, that there is no evidence that legislation is needed or has been demanded, the difficulties which have been lately experienced having been greatly diminished by recent legislation; and that, should there be any legislation on this subject (a proposition which we do not affirm), such legislation would be better taken in the direction either of the establishment of public trust companies, or by giving to private trustees the advantages, and extending to them the immunities proposed to be given to the public trustee under the Act.'

The deputies afterwards attended before the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chancellor being also present, to urge their views upon the Government.

The Government appear to be of opinion that there is a desire on the part of the public for a State trustee, in consequence of the number of cases of defaulting trustees and the supposed difficulty of obtaining persons to act as trustees.

The committee of this society in common with, as it seems, the whole of the profession, are of a different opinion. Their experience is that the cases of misbehaviour by trustees are very rare in comparison with the immense number of existing trusts, and that any difficulty in finding suitable trustees can easily be overcome.

They regard with apprehension the foundation of a new State department, which will absorb from the provinces and retain in London, and in the hands of the State, a large part of the trust funds of this country; they think that the necessary cost of working a trust from London, either direct or through a deputy, will be great, and that, in the absence of local knowledge, the most delicate part of a trustee's duties will be imperfectly done.

They are of opinion that, by the inevitable predilection of a State official to select State investments and to avoid the trouble and responsibility of investigating mortgage and other securities, the income of the life tenants will be greatly and unnecessarily diminished; and they believe that the proposals in the bill would in effect have most of the disadvantages of a suit in Chancery.

With this conviction they beg to express the hope that you will give us your active co-operation in urging these views on members of Parliament and other influential persons, so as to secure the rejection of the bill.

I am, dear Sir,
Yours truly,
F. ARCHER, President.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

LIMITED COMPANIES AND THEIR ACCOUNTS.

ATTENTION has been drawn in the daily press to the fact that the balance-sheets of many of the American Brewery and Industrial Companies set on foot here within the last few years have been made up to show large profits beyond what has been legitimately earned. No small part of the capital of these companies remain upon the hands of underwriters, and it is necessary for the interest of this class of persons that everything should be made to look well. Stocks in hand are often valued, not at cost prices, but at the market or selling prices of the day, and, in other ways, profit-and-loss accounts which are essentially false, and to which no respectable accountant ought to put his name, are. states the Standard, issued to cover payment of unearned dividends. Shareholders ought to look carefully into this matter, and no one should buy a share in any of these companies upon hasty, and perhaps interested, recommendations. On this subject of underwriting it may be pointed out that with the plethora of companies now existing many useful definitions have been given, and amongst others it has been laid down that underwriting means that, in the event of the public not taking the whole of the shares in a company, the underwriters would take an allotment of the shares remaining unapplied in the proportions for which they have been underwritten; or, as it may be more briefly expressed, 'underwriting is agreeing before issue to take any shares not taken up by the public.' By 'underwriting at a discount' one understands agreeing to have a commission. With regard to the statement as to profit-and-loss accounts, it is curious to compare them with remarks given in a paper once read before an accountants' students' society, the paper bearing the title of 'The Poetry of Accounts.' It was there suggested that, as an epic, an ordinary set of commercial accounts was often grand, often thrilling, showing the ups and downs of commercial life, and a ledger, if well arranged and well expressed, was a clear and succinct history of a business life. A skilful person, it was pointed out, can prepare accounts so clearly that they are both interesting and instructive. When the accountancy profession grows older, doubtless the fierce light of public opinion will beat upon it as strongly as it now does upon the law, and we shall be treated to disclosures of modern accountancy abuses. Our daily contemporary, however, seems to have anticipated that time. In connection with company matters it may be added that Australia has taken a leaf out of our book, and is moving to suppress bogus companies. It is proposed that no mining company shall be allowed to register until the locality of the claim concerned has been carefully examined and reported upon by experts, and until the proportion of the capital required by the Companies Act has been subscribed. It is also proposed that money subscribed shall not be withdrawn except for working purposes, and further, that the Stock Exchange shall inquire into the bona fides of a company before placing it on its list. According to the Victorian Companies Act, the amount of capital which must be subscribed before registration is fixed at 5 per cent., and this amount ought to be actually paid up before registration and remain so paid up, for the law is now evaded by withdrawing the capital immediately after registration.

SOME TORT POINTS.

At the assizes in different parts of the country decisions are often given which are of interest to students of the common law text-books. Everyone knows the decisions bearing on nuisances—e.g. as to chapel bells. To these may be added the decision that boiler works are an inconvenience and not a nuisance, but regard must be had to the character of the neighbourhood. Noisy businesses must be carried on, and provided they are carried on in the ordinary manner and at an ordinary place, they are not a nuisance. With regard to defamatory statements, it was held at Chester Assizes that to call a surgeon a 'bit of a boy,' evidently meaning that a person so young is not fit to be a doctor, was not a slander. The plaintiff has complained that a false and malicious slander was contained in these words: 'I am surprised at you having a bit of a boy like that to vaccinate your baby. He is not fit to do anything of the sort. Didn't I tell you not to have any of that lot on my premises?' On the other hand, it was held to be slander to utter in respect of a plaintiff the following words: 'It is said about the plaintiff—I was told by a gentleman at Manchester—he paid 10*s.* or 10*s.* 6*d.* in the pound.' 'What do you think about the plaintiff? He is a young idle man. He employs so many hands, and does not look after them. He has called his big creditors together and paid 10*s.* 6*d.* in the pound.' 'Have you heard about plaintiff? He has offered to pay 10*s.* in the pound, but it is no more than we could have expected.' The judge held that the words were slanderous.

'MORTGAGE OR LOAN TABLES.'

A very useful work has been compiled with the object of supplying a want to those who periodically have to make calculations to ascertain the amount to advance on loans repayable by instalments or to find the amount required to pay off a loan. The full title of the work is 'Mortgage or Loan Tables, showing amount to be lent repayable by instalments, including principal and interest at 5 per cent. per annum at 10*s.* per share per month from one-fifth of a share to ten shares, also showing the amount due on redemption at any period. The author, Mr. Thomas D. Challinor, in his preface, states that the thirty-years' limit has not been fully worked out, as there are few advances or loans made over this period; but, as there may be a few, a skeleton of the work is given as a guide in these cases. The work has been compiled as nearly as possible to the tables used by land and building societies charging interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. Such a work as this should be acceptable to members and secretaries of land and building societies and others lending money repayable by instalments, and borrowers also will find it handy. Useful specimen tables and examples are given, with the aid of which no one should have any difficulty in finding any amount desired.

ADVANCE FREIGHT.

Maritime practitioners should peruse carefully the case of Smith, Hill & Co. v. Ryman, Bell & Co., 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 127, given in the March issue of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS. There, amongst other matters of weighty interest, will be found a useful explanation of what 'advance freight' is. Freight, of course, is paid for carriage of goods; but advance freight, though it is in a sense freight, it has been decided is a payment made in consideration of the reception of the goods on board ship. It was pointed out that it has been held that if advance freight has been paid it cannot be recovered back, though the vessel be lost; and that, if an absolute obligation to pay advance freight has been entered into, such agreement can be sued upon, though the vessel in which the goods have been shipped has been lost before action. Very many years ago it was quaintly stated in a judgment that freight was the mother of wages, the safety of the ship, the mother of freight; that was the general rule of the maritime law.

THE GOSPEL OF WEALTH.

At a recent meeting of the United Law Society, which meets weekly at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall, King's Bench Walk, Temple, one of the members, Mr. Washington Fox, moved: 'That this house approves of the principles laid down in Mr. Carnegie's "Gospel of Wealth."' Attention was drawn to Mr. Carnegie's statement of the three modes in which surplus wealth can be disposed of. (1) It can be left to the families of the descendants. The objection to this being that it makes men wanting in self-reliance and all the good qualities engendered thereby. Moderate allowances should be left to wife and daughters and to sons where they have not been brought up with a view to earning their own living. (2) It can be bequeathed for public purposes. This is to be strongly deprecated at best; the gift is a sort of tip to Charon. Bacon says: 'Defer not charities till death; for certainly if a man weigh it rightly, he that doth so is rather liberal of another man's than his own.' Other objections to such bequests are that the donor's object often remains unattained. He has no opportunity of seeing how his benefaction works, and so of altering the destination of his future gifts, and he is not subject to public criticism. (3) It can be administered by the owner during his life. This is the best mode of disposing of surplus wealth, and this states the principle contained in Carnegie's 'Gospel.' Those who, seeing so much misery around and having the power to relieve it, do nothing to this end, are not to be admired. The man of wealth is, as regards his surplus wealth, a mere trustee for the public good, which is only a recognition, or rather part, of the broader principle that we are trustees of all our gifts, whether of mind, body, or estate. Carnegie thinks surplus wealth might be properly disposed of in—e.g. establishing universities, free libraries, hospitals, providing public parks, halls, and swimming baths, and building churches. And these, when once made over to the public to be by them maintained. This is to promote individualism. There were then two commandments in Carnegie's 'Gospel': 'Defer not charities till death,' and 'Do your utmost to promote the independence and development of the individual.' This is a capital epitome of the article in the Nineteenth Century, and it is an excellent idea of this society to have an evening devoted to the discussion of points other than strictly legal ones. Law students who are in London would gain great advantage by attending these weekly Monday night meetings, and the full reports of them in the society's magazine are specially useful for reference. Country societies who see this magazine would find many a hint for moot points for discussion.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

The House of Commons lately gave some time to the discussion of friendly society matters. It was pointed out that there were three classes of friendly societies—first of all, what might be called the genuine friendly societies or benefit clubs, which were about 12,000 in number; next, the collecting societies, of which there were about fifty, the benefits of which were practically confined to life insurance; and, thirdly, the industrial assurance societies. All these classes were admitted to registration on the register established in London under the Friendly Societies Act, as well as working-men's benefit clubs. But it could not be too strongly insisted upon that the Registrar of Friendly Societies could not ensure the good management of these societies, and the mere fact of registration afforded no guarantee that the society was solvent or even honest. The position of friendly societies was in many respects highly satisfactory, but still it was capable of great improvement. They might be improved by the admission of women, by the reduction of convivial gatherings—(laughter)—and in other ways. During the last few years a comprehensive inquiry had been made into the subject by a Parliamentary committee, but few of the thirty recommendations they made had been carried out. All friendly societies appealing to the working classes for funds for alleged future benefits should be compelled to submit the accounts to audit. With regard to the question of provident insurance and voluntary provision for sickness and old age, the old age pension provided by the Post Office was very little called for. The aim of the State should be to induce the industrial and domestic classes by every possible means to insure in health and youth against sickness and old age, and to take care that their savings should be protected not only against fraud but against incompetence. The State should work through the established friendly societies, and should help them by pecuniary contributions and by counsel. On behalf of the Government it was pointed out that there was the office of friendly societies for which an annual sum was voted to enable it to deal with a rapidly increasing and most complicated business, and very few of the managers and members of friendly societies would speak of that office as worthless. One of its most useful functions was to circulate information which was of general use to friendly societies, and one of the most important works it did was to send out annually to every society whose rules were registered a form reminding them of their obligations in regard to valuation. Collecting societies, as a means of encouraging thrift, were absolutely valueless, for all that the ordinary members knew of the society was the weekly visit of the collector for his subscription. The members had little control over the management in industrial insuring companies such as the Prudential, against the management of which he had not a word to say. No one could hear the evidence of the manager of that institution without being impressed with his ability and the wonderful success that institution had achieved. But what he was concerned with was to show the people of this country what expensive institutions they preferred to the Post Office. The history of the Prudential was very remarkable, and showed the vast sums of money which were drawn from the working classes. Comparing the terms of the Prudential with the terms of the Post Office, the Post Office for a 1*d.* a week insured a man at the age of twenty-three for 10*l.*, while the Prudential on the same terms only paid 7*l.* 10*s.* For 6*d.* a week the Post Office would insure a man for 70*l.*, while the Prudential only offered 45*l.* 10*s.*, and so on. If these facts were known and were circulated among the people, a real service would be done to the nation. If the Government were to give a subsidy, they must assume responsibility also. State aid meant State control and State responsibility as well, and the effect of a subsidy would be that the Government would be undertaking a guarantee of that which they had absolutely no power to carry out.

EASTER VACATION NOTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

There will be no sitting in Court during the Easter Vacation.

DURING the Easter vacation all applications which may require to be immediately or promptly heard are to be made to the Honourable Mr. Justice Lawrance.

Mr. Justice Lawrance will act as vacation judge from Thursday, March 26, to Monday, April 6, both days inclusive. His lordship will sit in Queen's Bench Judges' Chambers on Thursday, March 26, Thursday, April 2, and Monday, April 6. On other days, within the above period, applications in urgent Chancery matters may be made to his lordship at 3 Paper Buildings, Temple.

In any case of great urgency the brief of counsel may be sent to the judge by book-post, or parcel prepaid, accompanied by office copies of the affidavits in support of the application, and also by a minute, on a separate sheet of paper, signed by counsel, of the order he may consider the applicant entitled to, and an envelope capable of receiving the papers, and addressed as follows: 'Chancery Official Letter: To the Registrar in Vacation, Chancery Registrars' Chambers, Royal Courts of Justice, London, W.C.'

On applications for injunctions, in addition to the above, a copy of the writ, and a certificate of writ issued, must also be sent.

The papers sent to the judge will be returned to the registrar.

Chancery Registrars' Chambers,
Royal Courts of Justice: March 16, 1891.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, March 17, Mr. Harcourt in the chair. The subject for discussion—'That legislation is urgently needed to place further restrictions on gambling'—was opened by Mr. G. H. Bower. Mr. Savory opposed. The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: in the affirmative, Messrs. Bilney and Woodhouse; in the negative, Messrs. Crawford, T. H. Bower, Addington-Willis, Parkes, Windsor, Hitchins, Hunt, Willson, Jones, and Arnold. Mr. G. H. Bower replied. On the motion being put to the meeting, it was lost by a majority of nine. There were thirty members and visitors present. The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society on Tuesday, March 24, is: 'That all bonâ fide communications made by Trade Protection Societies in answer to inquiries are privileged.'

LIVERPOOL.—The next meeting of this association will be held at the Law Library on Monday, March 23. The chair will be taken by W. T. Rogers, Esq., solicitor. A paper will be read by T. R. Hughes, Esq., barrister-at-law, on 'The Dangers of Directors.' The subject for discussion at the last meeting was decided in the affirmative by a majority of 13.

MR. JOHN DOUGLAS JOHNSTONE, solicitor, of Tavistock, has been appointed by his Honour Judge Edge to be registrar of the Tavistock County Court, in the place of Mr. C. V. Bridgman, promoted to the registrarship of East Stonehouse Court. Mr. Johnstone, who was educated at Eton, was admitted Hilary Term, 1872. He already holds the clerkship to the Board of Guardians, Income Tax and Land Tax Commissioners, is clerk to the Tavistock Highway Board and to the School Boards of Whitchurch and Lydford, and is a perpetual commissioner and commissioner for affidavits.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MARCH 23 TO MARCH 28.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	March 23	March 24	March 25	March 26	March 27	March 28
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	Northwich	Warrington	—	—
8	Judge Heywood	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Ashbourne	Matlock	Burton	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Chipping Norton	Stow-on-the-Wold	Alcester	Pershore	—	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	—	—	—	—

House of Lords Register.

APPEALS FROM COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

THURSDAY, MARCH 12.

In re Gorton. Dowse v. Gorton (appeal from decision of Cotton, L.J., Lindley, L.J., and Lopes, L.J., dated February 7, 1889 [58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 403], which varied an order of Sir H. Bristowe, vice-chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, dated November 23, 1887).—Cur. adv. vult.

FRIDAY, MARCH 13.

Montgomery v. Thompson (appeal from decision of Cotton, L.J., Lindley, L.J., and Lopes, L.J., dated February 21, 1889 [58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 374], which affirmed judgment of Chitty, J., dated November 9, 1888 [58 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 93]).—Cur. adv. vult.

MONDAY, MARCH 16.

Attorney-General v. Emerson (appeal from the judgment of the Court of Appeal [Lord Esher, M.R, Fry, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.], dated December 1, 1888, reversing the decision of the Divisional Court [Mathew, J., and Cave, J.]).—Cur. adv. vult.

TUESDAY, MARCH 17.

Johnson v. North-Eastern Railway Company (appeal from considered judgment of Court of Appeal [Lord Halsbury, L.C., Lord Esher, M.R, and Bowen, L.J.], dated November 14, 1888, which reversed judgment of Day, J.).—Dismissed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 12.

Regina v. Commissioners under Boiler Explosions Act, 1882 (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of the Tyne Coal Company (Lim.) (prosecutors) from order of Cave, J., and Charles, J., dated March 2, discharging nisi for prohibition from proceeding from inquiry).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 13.

In re J. Hodgkins, ex parte Debtor (appeal of debtor from receiving order, dated March 4, made by Mr. Registrar Linklater, on petition of Dawe and another).—Dismissed.

In re W. F. Nuthall (judgment debtor summons); Ford v. Nuthall (appeal of defendant Nuthall from order of Cave, J., dated February 14, directing monthly payment by debtor notwithstanding receiving order).—Allowed.

In re Viscount Deerhurst, ex parte Seaton and another (appeal of Seaton and another from judgment of Cave, J., dated February 11, upholding trustee's rejection of proof).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, MARCH 14.

No sitting.

MONDAY, MARCH 16.

No sitting.

TUESDAY, MARCH 17.

The Nouvelle Banque de l'Union (in liquidation) v. Ayton (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment at trial before Wright, J., with a common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18.

Heighway and another v. Kirk and Randall (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Stephen, J., dated February 19, at Maidstone, directing reference of trial of action to official referee).—New trial ordered.

Sowerby & Co. (Lim.) (applicants) v. Great Northern Railway Company (respondents) (appeal of Sowerby & Co. from judgment of the Railway and Canal Commissioners, dated February 27, on preliminary point as to legality of station terminal charges).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 12.

Cheetham v. Oldham & Fogg (appeal of plaintiff from order of the Vice-Chancellor, dated January 15, 1890).—Settled.

Lawrence v. Welsby (appeal of defendant Ann Hall from judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, dated August 6, 1890).—Allowed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 13.

Indigo Co. (Lim.) v. Ogilvy, Gillanders & Co. and Others (appeal of plaintiffs from order of North, J., dated February 13, refusing liberty to amend writ of summons by adding parties; heard March 10).—Dismissed subject to a slight modification.

Roberts v. Cooper (appeal of Leila Elkins and others (representatives of C. Lamb, deceased) from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 24).—Allowed.

SATURDAY, MARCH 14.

In re J. Slevin, dec. Slevin v. Hepburn (construction) (appeal of Attorney-General from order of Stirling, J., dated December 13).—Cur. adv. vult.

In re Stephenson, dec. Stephenson v. Tear. In re Stephenson, infants (construction) (appeal of plaintiff from order of Kekewich, J., dated January 12).—Dismissed, with liberty to amend summons.

MONDAY, MARCH 16.

Aas v. Benham (appeal of defendant from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated June 6).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, MARCH 17.

Aas v. Benham.—Part heard.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18.

Aas v. Benham.—Part heard.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, March 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Tuesday, March 24.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

Wednesday, March 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Farmer.

Thursday, March 26.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Rolt.

The Easter Vacation will commence on Friday, March 27, and terminate on Tuesday, March 31, both days inclusive.

THE DISHORNING OF CATTLE.—At Edinburgh it was decided by five judges, on an appeal, that the operation of dishorning cattle was necessary in the interests of the animals themselves, and that, therefore, the perpetrators could not be found guilty of cruelty. The judgment of the Scottish Court on this point is contrary to that pronounced by English judges.

WE have received a new weekly periodical called The Weekly Gallery of Celebrities, containing this week, among others, an excellent picture of Sir Charles Russell, and promising for next week one of Mr. Montague Williams. The other portraits this week are Mr. W. Besant, Mr. Jerome, Miss Edna Lyall, and Dr. Koch, with short biographical sketches. The paper is well printed and got up, and is likely to prove attractive.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE POOR LAW IN LONDON.—Some time ago the proposal was made that the St. Marylebone Guardians of the Poor should be elected for three years instead of for one, the annual elections being costly and troublesome. The Local Government Board left the parishioners to decide the question, and a poll was accordingly taken; and yesterday Mr. Joseph Bedford, who was the returning officer, gave out the results. The total number of voters in the four wards of St. John's Wood, the Grove and Regent's Park, the Portman, and the Portland and Cavendish was 34,091. More than half the voters, with the Londoners' characteristic indifference to local questions, did not return their voting papers, though the voting papers were brought to the houses and were collected, and only 14,268 valid votes were given. Of these 9,608 were in favour of making the election of guardians triennial, and 4,660 were against change. Hereafter, therefore, the guardians will sit for three years.

OBITUARY.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES, of Medwyn, the oldest member of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh, died on March 12. Born in 1803, he was eldest son of the late Lord Medwyn, a well-known judge of the Court of Session in the early part of the century. Mr. Forbes was called to the bar in 1825, and after practising for some years he was appointed secretary to the Board of Lunacy, an office which he filled with much ability until his retirement a few years ago. He was a keen Conservative, and was warmly attached to the Scottish Episcopal Church.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—On March 16 the usual weekly meeting was held at the Inner Temple Lecture Hall; Mr. C. W. Williams in the chair. Mr. J. L. V. S. Williams moved: 'That the decision in Simmons v. The London Joint-Stock Bank was correct.' This was opposed by Mr. L. W. Browne. The other speakers were Messrs. W. F. Symonds, B. Hawkins, and J. R. Atkin. The motion was carried. The subject for debate on the 23rd inst. is 'The Roman Catholic Disabilities Question.'

WE are informed that the fourteenth edition of Mr. Jordan's well-known 'Handy-Book on the Formation, Management, and Winding-up of Joint-Stock Companies' is in the press, and will shortly be ready for publication. This edition is being prepared under the editorship of Mr. F. Gore-Browne, of the Inner Temple, who will be responsible for the strictly legal portions of the book. The new edition will be brought down to date, and in particular will deal at some length with the three Acts of last session relating to companies—viz. the Memorandum of Association Act, the Winding-up Act, and the Directors' Liability Act, and will contain other additions.

EQUITY AND LAW LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The annual general meeting of this society was held on Tuesday, March 17, at the Society's House, 18 Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, W.C. The directors' report states that the business of the past year, the forty-sixth of the society's existence, has been most successful. The new sums assured have amounted to 611,307*l.*, of which 104,300*l.* has been reassured. The new premiums have amounted to 26,270*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.*; of this 3,011*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* has been paid away for reassurances. The new premiums retained by the society amount therefore to 23,259*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*, of which 19,794*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* are renewable premiums, the largest addition yet made in any year to the income of the society. The renewal premiums show a substantial increase, having been 164,621*l.* 6*s.* 5*d.*, as against 152,864*l.* 10*s.* 7*d.* last year (exclusive of commutations); the amount running off by death, surrender, lapse, &c., being comparatively small. The claims by death have amounted to 127,998*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*, a sum considerably less than the expected amount. The amount of the funds at the end of the year was 2,342,993*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.*, being an increase of 27,958*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* during the year. In connection with this the directors point out that 42,471*l.* 13*s.* has been paid away as cash bonus, being an exceptional item following the division of profits. One of the most healthy signs of the state of this flourishing company's business is the very small proportion which the expenses of management bear to the premium income—viz. 11,094*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* to 187,880*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.* The report must be highly gratifying alike to shareholders and assured.

THE NEW REGISTRAR IN BANKRUPTCY.—Mr. Herbert James Hope, the private secretary of the Lord Chancellor, has been appointed a Registrar in Bankruptcy, in the place of Mr. William Hazlitt, whose resignation has been announced. The learned gentleman was called to the bar in 1875.

WITH reference to the paper lately read by Mr. L. S. Bristowe, M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, before the Hospitals Association on 'The Legal Restrictions on Gifts to Charity,' it has been resolved by the council of the Hospitals Association to draft a short bill for presentation to Parliament, with a view to removing the disabilities at present existing.

PEERS AND PUBLIC-HOUSES.—The Parliamentary return of the owners of two and more on-licensed houses, recently issued at the instance of Mr. Summers, M.P., shows that 172 members of the House of Lords own 1,539 licensed drinkshops; nineteen dukes hold 321, twelve marquises hold 106, seventy-four earls hold 645, seven viscounts hold forty-five, one bishop holds two, and sixty-nine barons 420. The Bishop of Llandaff is the only bishop on the list.

CERTIFICATES OF ORIGIN.—Continuing the correspondence on the subject of certificates of origin required by various foreign countries, Sir James Fergusson informs the London Chamber of Commerce, under date the 13th inst., that as far as the Argentine Republic, Nicaragua, Salvador, Persia (Bushire and Tabriz consular districts), Japan, and the United States of Colombia are concerned, no certificates of origin for shipments to those countries are requisite. Costa Rica, Honduras, and Guatemala require certificates, but those issued by chambers of commerce are not received, whilst for Peru goods must be accompanied by the consular invoice of the Peruvian consul at the port of shipping. As regards Spain, it is not necessary that certificates accompanying British goods should bear the manufacturer's name.

THE POSSESSION OF GAME BILL.—At the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street, on Tuesday, March 17, a largely-attended meeting of dealers in fish, game, and poultry was held, having been convened by the London Central Poultry and Provision Trade Association, to protest against the passing of this bill. Mr. Liversidge, C.C., presided. Some of the leading members of the trade were present, and the letters in support of the action of the association were read from dealers in various provincial towns. The secretary (Mr. Key) stated that the progress of the bill had been conducted so quietly that the association received intimation of it only last Wednesday, when immediate action was taken by them. The object of the bill was to stop poaching—to stop traffic in an article which was not only unsaleable but also uneatable, and yet the provisions of the bill would, he said, crush out thousands of tons of food supplied to England. The chairman stated that the bill would practically prevent the sale in this country of any kind of game from Russia or Norway, although our dealers relied on those countries in the English close season. On the motion of Mr. Berry, seconded by Mr. Bewley, and supported by Mr. Bastard, a resolution was adopted protesting against the passing of the bill in its present form 'as injurious to the interests of this country, and contrary to the spirit of the age.' Mr. G. F. Brooke afterwards proposed that the resolution should be sent to Lord Salisbury, Mr. W. H. Smith, and Sir M. Hicks-Beach, and that a petition setting forth the facts should be presented to Parliament. Mr. Broome, in seconding the motion, argued that it would not pay a poacher to poach English game and send it to market to be sold as foreign game. The resolution was adopted, and a committee was appointed to take the necessary steps to oppose the bill in Parliament.

MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.—SPECIAL NOTICE FOR NEXT SITTINGS.—Witness cases will be commenced on Tuesday, April 14. The case of Savory & Moore v. The London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.) motion treated as trial, and advanced by order, is fixed for that day.

THE SHARP v. WAKEFIELD LICENSING APPEAL.—Owing to the importance of the question at issue the House of Lords has decided to give judgment in this appeal on Friday, March 20. The case raises the whole question of the right of justices at their discretion to refuse the renewal of a licence.

LIFE ASSURANCE AND PROFESSIONAL SECRECY.—The French Court of Appeal has just delivered judgment in a case in which a widow had brought an action against a life assurance company for the amount of her husband's policy, which the company declined to pay because the medical man who had attended him refused to fill up the usual form with the name of the disease and its duration, declaring himself bound by the law of professional secrecy not to reveal the nature of his patient's disease. The Court has decided against the company, holding that the medical man himself is the sole judge as to whether facts revealed to him by a patient were confided to him under the seal of professional secrecy.—Lancet.

PRESENTATION TO LORD HANNEN.—On March 18 Lord Hannen was presented with a handsomely-framed address, engrossed on vellum, by the managing clerks representing solicitors practising in the Probate and Divorce Division. The presentation took place in Sir C. Butt's private room, which was numerously attended. Mr. Garnett introduced the deputation, after which Mr. Smith read the address, which expressed their respectful thanks for the uniform courtesy and kindness they had always received at his lordship's hands during the eighteen years he had presided at the Court, and of their high regard and esteem. They also hoped that he would for many years be enabled to exercise in that higher tribunal to which he had been summoned those great judicial functions for which he was so justly renowned. Lord Hannen, in reply, said that amongst the many expressions of good feeling and sympathy that he had received on the occasion of leaving the Courts, he could assure them that none had touched him so much as this presentation. He had been a judge for twenty-three years, eighteen out of which were passed in the Probate and Divorce Division, and it was an enormous satisfaction to him to feel that their verdict was in his favour, and that they had at least recognised that he had used his abilities to the utmost to do his duty. In thanking them most cordially for this testimonial of their good feeling he could only say that he would ever treasure in his heart the warmest gratitude for this kindness they had done him. His lordship then shook hands with all present, and the proceedings terminated.

BIRTHS.

On March 12, at 5 Elms Road, North Dulwich, Surrey, the wife of Frederick Broadbridge, of Lincoln's Inn, of a son.

On March 12, at Wimbledon, the wife of George A. Rimington, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On March 12, at Lowdale Hall, Sicights, Yorks, the wife of Arthur English, Solicitor, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

On Feb. 8, at Singapore, James Guthrie Davidson, Advocate and Solicitor, Supreme Court, Straits Settlement.

On March 8, Charles Welsby, Barrister-at-Law, of Southport, and formerly of Chester, aged 45.

On March 10, at Calcutta, Algernon Fiennes Nowell Watkins, Solicitor, youngest son of the late Rev. C. F. Watkins, Vicar of Brixworth, Northants.

On March 11, at Woodcote, Chislehurst, Clement Alexander Middleton, Barrister-at-Law, and a Bencher of Gray's Inn, aged 52.

On March 14, at Pau, William James Small, Solicitor, Dundee.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE Bar Committee having brought to the notice of the senior common law master the inconvenience of taking counsels' summonses at one o'clock, and the time wasted in consequence of the adjournment for luncheon, he has arranged that from the commencement of Easter sittings such summonses shall be first called at 1.30, except on Saturdays, when they will be taken at 12.30.

MANY interesting and important questions arise in connection with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Mrs. Jackson's case. On the main point the authority of Lord Eldon appears not to have been cited. It is worth noting, however, that, so far from sharing the views of his present successor on the relations of husband and wife, he expressed doubts in the case of St. John v. St. John, 11 Ves. 532, whether The King v. Mead had not gone too far in treating a separation deed as a renunciation of the marital right. 'The question,' he said, 'occurs, what was to be done if the husband had sought to get his wife back by force—that is, by force of his marital right—which, according to The King v. Mead, would have been an indictable offence; but that I desire may not be understood as being universally acceded to until it shall be determined upon a special verdict.'

WAS Lord Halsbury right in saying that any attempt by Mr. Jackson to exercise his 'supposed power' again would be a contempt of Court? In other words, has an order of discharge on a writ of habeas corpus the effect of a perpetual injunction against recapture? This does not seem to have been the opinion of the judges who decided The King v. Mead, for they distinguished the case of molesting the wife 'in her present return from Westminster Hall,' which they declared would be a contempt of Court, from a subsequent attempt to seize her by force, which they said would be a breach of the peace—by reason of the separation deed. The point is not without interest considering the great importance of the questions which arise on habeas corpus and the necessarily hasty manner in which the Courts are called upon to determine them. If no direct appeal lies from such an order as was made against Mr. Jackson, a formal attempt at recapture might be a necessary step in proceedings to bring the question of right before a higher Court. It would be unfortunate if the Court whose decision is disputed should have power to interfere summarily, and (as the law now stands) without appeal, with the due course of such proceedings.

ANOTHER dictum of Lord Halsbury, to which exception may be taken, is the following: 'If,' he is reported to have said, 'any one now were to contend that slavery ever existed by the law of England, he would be regarded with ridicule.' It is strange that this statement, which goes far beyond anything expressed or implied in the decision in Somersett's Case, should be made in the present day. The contention that slavery never existed by the law of England would justly be received with ridicule by any one acquainted with the history of this country. 'It is characteristic,' says Mr. E. A. Freeman, 'of English history, that slavery was finally wiped out from among us, not by a legislative enactment, but by a judicial decision, which did more credit to the hearts of the judges who gave it than it did to their knowledge of history' ('Norman Conquest,' vol. v. p. 480). The criticism is indeed hardly fair to Lord Mansfield and his colleagues, seeing that they confined their judgment to the particular form of slavery disclosed on the return before them, without committing themselves to any such general proposition as has now been enunciated by the Lord Chancellor.

PERHAPS never in the history of judicial decisions has authority been so boldly overruled and disregarded as in Jackson's Case. Let any person read the carefully considered judgment of Mr. Justice Coleridge in Cochrane's Case, 8 Dowl. 630, and after consulting

Regina v. Mead, 1 Burr. 542, and other authorities therein referred to, together with the more recent In re Prince, 2 F. & F. 263, contrast it with the judgments of the Court of Appeal. Regina v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781, is the only authority on which the Court of Appeal rely, and when it is borne in mind that the rule in that case was granted on the authority of Cochrane's Case, and that Mr. Justice Coleridge himself was actually a party to it, the conclusion that in Regina v. Leggatt the Court did not intend to overrule Cochrane's Case is irresistible. It may very well be that, looking to the altered views of the marriage relationship which have become prevalent since Cochrane's Case was decided, the common law rights of a husband have become altered in a somewhat similar manner as the common law liabilities for blasphemy were not many years ago so eloquently declared to have been altered by the Lord Chief Justice of England. But this is not what we take the Court of Appeal to have said in Jackson's Case.

THE Clitheroe abduction case has been the subject of leading articles and letters in the newspapers in which sentiment has been at least as apparent as judgment. But there is one important question raised by the case which has not received sufficient attention. History and fiction supply us with numerous instances of complication arising from the performance of the ecclesiastical ceremony where the parties have not lived together as man and wife. In truth, consummation is of the essence of marriage, and is so recognised, we believe, by the canon law and other systems. The evidence in this case seemed to imply that the marriage had not been consummated, and we can hardly imagine that any moral or ecclesiastical opinion or prejudice would be violated if the Matrimonial Court had jurisdiction under proper conditions to annul a marriage contracted in such circumstances.

THE Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, was carried through Parliament by the Government at the instance of Lord Hannen, who, as Mr. Justice Hannen, had expressed a very strong opinion, in issuing an attachment in Weldon v. Weldon, 53 Law J. Rep. P. D. & A. 9, against the obligation, existing until extinguished by that Act, of the judge of the Divorce Court to enforce a decree for restitution of conjugal rights by issuing such attachment. The measure was carried through the House of Lords absolutely sub silentio, and through the House of Commons with little or no debate, Mr. Warton alone, so far as we have been able to discover, protesting against it, and predicting that the result would be that, 'if any wife took it into her head to leave her husband she might do so, and the judge who had originated the measure might compel that husband so deprived of the solatium of his wife to pay something for her maintenance if she had nothing of her own.' 'The measure,' continued the honourable member, 'would certainly not improve the sanctity of marriage.'

WE remarked a short time ago on the exceptional strength in both numbers and ability of the House of Lords as the highest Court of appeal. Eight judges sat and voted in the case of The Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers, and to these might on occasion be added Lord Coleridge, Lord Esher, Lord Ashbourne, and Lord Moncrieff. Lord Hannen having recently been added to that august tribunal, there are now no fewer than thirteen judges available for the hearing of final appeals. Still, Lincoln's Inn can hardly be said to be satisfied. Of this large number only two noble and learned lords were members of the Chancery bar—viz. Lord Selborne and Lord Macnaghten; and as the former is now rapidly approaching fourscore years and very rarely sits, only one equity judge is practically available in the House of Lords. The other day, in the case of Gorton v. Dowse, which involved equitable questions of an extremely intricate and technical character, the House was constituted of Lords Herschell, Macnaghten, and Hannen. Judgment has been reserved, but it is hardly too much to say that when delivered it will be regarded as that of Lord Macnaghten; and, if in reversal of the Court of Appeal, it will practically amount to one equity judge overruling Lords Justices Cotton and Lindley, and possibly also the Vice-Chancellor of the Lancaster Palatine Court. For the purpose of really strengthening the House, although all must fully recognise the propriety in itself of Lord Hannen's elevation, it is to be regretted that one of the Appeal judges on the Chancery side, or Sir H. Davey or Mr. Rigby, was not chosen to fill the recent vacancy. This unsatisfactory state of things might also be remedied by the grant of a peerage to Lord Justice Lindley or Lord Justice Fry, so as to make their services available in the House of Lords.

IT is extraordinary how little foresight or grasp of all the circumstances requiring to be dealt with is shown in our legislation even when the subject is both simple and of great importance. The Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, disqualified a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary who was not a peer from sitting and voting in the House of Lords after his retirement. Then the Act of 1887 was passed, removing this disqualification. It really does not much matter whether Lord Blackburn or any retired Lord of Appeal is or is not qualified to take his share in the legislative business of the country. It might, however, be very desirable on occasion to obtain the services of a retired judge, but that the Acts give no power to do. It is very conceivable that a judge, either from occasional ill-health or desire for leisure and repose, might wish to retire and yet might, when there was no compulsion in the matter, be willing to strengthen the House on occasion by his presence and advice. It is very absurd, also, that the Lord Chancellor can, and the Lords of Appeal cannot, sit in the Court of Appeal. It would have been more convenient for the despatch of business, and probably, also, for the Lord Chancellor's political duties, if Lord Macnaghten or Lord Herschell, Lord Watson, or Lord Morris could have come to sit in the Royal Courts instead of Lord Halsbury. In a word, the holder of the higher judicial office ought to be empowered, if willing, to discharge the duties of a lower office.

WE pride ourselves, and not without reason, on the increased rapidity in the administration of justice in our own days as compared with those of our forefathers. It behoves us all the more to see that there be no backsliding. Other causes, as we well know, than the promptitude and efficiency of the judges determine the periods which elapse between the hearing of a case and appeals therefrom; and these causes are more operative in an appeal from the Court of Appeal than from a Court of first instance. Litigants think twice before they go to the House of Lords. But one cannot help feeling that there must be something wrong when one finds, after looking at the intervals in a number of cases between the decision of the Court of Appeal and the hearing in the House of Lords, that the foot of justice is getting lamer and not more nimble. Sharpe v. Wakefield, a case in which there was probably no hesitation as to whether there was to be an appeal or not, was heard by the Appeal Court in December, 1888; by the House of Lords in January, 1891. In Abrath v. The North-Eastern Railway Company the interval was from June, 1883, to March, 1886. In Essex v. The Local Board of Acton the interval was nearly three years. In the recent appeals in the House of Lords the period has been two years and sometimes more. A cursory examination of the reports in the Chancery and Queen's Bench Divisions leads to the conclusion that, in Lord Selborne's Chancellorship, from 1880 to 1885, an appeal was sometimes heard by the Lords in less than nine months, as in the famous case of Dobbs v. The Grand Junction Water Works Company; very frequently in less than a year from the decision of the Court of Appeal; whereas, under Lord Halsbury, scarcely a case appears to have been heard within the twelvemonth. In a word, Lord Selborne's average time—if we may employ this somewhat loose phraseology—was one year, and Lord Halsbury's very nearly two years.

THE House of Commons has 'agreed to the Lords' amendments to the Commons' amendments to the Lords' amendments' of the Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Bill, as passed by the Commons, and the bill will, if Her Majesty shall have been pleased to assent to it, have become law before these lines meet the eyes of our readers. The final cause of dispute between the two Houses was upon words providing that 'no costs should be given in any case where no notice of opposition had been given.' The Commons wanted these words in, but the Lords struck them out, and eventually they were struck out by the Commons also, on the motion of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, after no less than three divisions. The new Act, there being no provision to the contrary, becomes law at the beginning of the day of the royal assent (see Tomlinson v. Bullock, 48 Law J. Rep. M. C. 95), a rule of law which in this, as in many other cases, may cause serious inconvenience to the profession, who are thus frequently bound by a statute which they cannot possibly know the contents of. It is greatly to be desired that this rule should be altered, and that Acts should be directed not to come into operation until after a reasonable period from their becoming law.

COURT of Appeal No. I. only sat on Saturday for the purpose of delivering two considered judgments, and has held no sitting this week owing to the continued absence of Lord Justice Lopes and the inability of the Lord Chancellor to continue his attendance. There are, however, no arrears of any importance. The new trial paper has been practically disposed of, and the Court is quite abreast of its work so far as interlocutory and bankruptcy appeals are concerned. Of the list of forty-three final appeals from the Queen's Bench Division, thirty have been disposed of, and those which have not been reached will probably be heard early next sittings, as the new trial paper is likely to be of very small dimensions.

THE question put to the Attorney-General by Mr. Darling, M.P., in the House of Commons last week raised two points of considerable interest: first, whether it was intended to re-establish sittings for the trial of causes at the Guildhall; and secondly, whether the accommodation at the Royal Courts was insufficient for the judges of the Queen's Bench Division in the matter of Courts for the trial of causes. To the latter part of the question there could be only one answer, and the Attorney-General admitted that the existing accommodation is not sufficient when all the judges of the Queen's Bench Division are available. There are only ten Courts for fourteen judges, whereas eleven or twelve are required according to whether two or three Divisional Courts may be sitting. In answer to the first part of the question, the Attorney-General stated that there have been communications between the Lord Chancellor and the Corporation of London with reference to the possibility of holding two Courts for special jury actions in the London list at the Guildhall at the commencement of each sittings, when the Royal Courts are insufficient to accommodate all the judges of the Queen's Bench Division available for work. It is much to be hoped that this suggestion will be carried into effect, as, besides preventing a waste of judicial time, it will enable mercantile men once more to have their disputes settled by the tribunals of the country, which, owing to the inconveniences of attending the present law Courts, they are now practically prevented from doing.

THE recent case of The Hornsey Local Board v. Brewis and Others (60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 48) raised the question whether the trustees of a chapel, in which they had no beneficial interest, could be made liable for paving expenses under the Public Health Act, 1875. The chapel consisted of two floors, the upper floor being the chapel itself, and the lower containing a lecture hall, which was used for the purposes of a Sunday school and of an institute. Lectures, concerts, &c. were also from time to time given in the hall, but the trustees personally derived no profits from these entertainments, and upon that ground refused to comply with a notice under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring them to pave, &c. the portion of the street upon which the chapel abutted. The local board having executed the work themselves, the Court (Hawkins, J., and Stephen, J.) held that the trustees were liable for the expenses so incurred upon the ground that they were the 'owners' of the premises when the works were completed, within the meaning of section 257 of the Act, and did not come within the exemption in section 151 of 'the incumbent or minister of any church, chapel, or place appropriated to public religious worship.'

IN answer to Mr. Stewart in the House of Commons, Mr. Matthews has stated that it is not possible to find time (as we can well believe) for a Government Consolidation Bill on betting and gambling this session, but that 'he would not lose sight of the subject.' An opportunity may perhaps be afforded of making a much-needed amendment of the law when Lord Herschell's Betting (Infants) Bill comes down to the House of Commons. In meeting Mr. Pickersgill's motion for a select committee on the subject, and his reference to the desirability of altering what we will venture to call the bad judge-made law of Read v. Anderson (see ante, pp. 82, 111), Mr. Matthews said he did not see how this law could be altered without altering the general law of contracts. We confess ourselves unable to perceive the difficulty. Before Read v. Anderson turf commission agents exercised their profession of making void contracts for other people at considerable risk; since that decision was pronounced they have become enabled to make bets and pay them in exactly the same manner as a buyer of cattle might buy cattle for his employer and pay for them. There is, however, the material distinction between wagering contracts and others, that before Read v. Anderson an agent paying a lost bet in defiance of a revocation of the authority to make it would have lost the money, whereas in the case of other contracts the authority to make them, once exercised, cannot, of course, be revoked. All that is needed is a short enactment to restore the status quo ante Read v. Anderson, and how such an enactment could affect the whole law of contracts, it is to us, with all deference to the great authority of the Home Secretary, quite impossible to conceive.

Is the position of a bankrupt whose first application for discharge has been refused an utterly hopeless one; and must he, no matter how exemplary his behaviour, go through the remainder of his life as an undischarged bankrupt? This was the important question raised before Mr. Justice Cave and Mr. Justice Williams in the case of In re Tobias & Co., ex parte H. A. Tobias. Up to the present there has been no authority upon the point with the exception of certain obiter dicta thrown out by Mr. Justice Cave in In re Lloyd, ex parte Lloyd, 6 Mor. 297, and expressly stated by him to be an unconsidered opinion upon, and not a decision of, the point. The views so expressed have now been found to require modification. In Lloyd's Case the bankrupt, fifteen months after the absolute refusal of his discharge, applied a second time upon the same materials as were before the Court upon the original application. The County Court judge held that the matter was res judicata, and that, his first refusal being final, he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. The bankrupt then applied, under section 104 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for a review of the first refusal to discharge, and this was heard on the merits and refused. The bankrupt then appealed; and in granting the bankrupt his discharge, Mr. Justice Cave observed that if after a lapse of years a bankrupt could show that he had learned that in which he had failed before, perhaps on such fresh facts a Court might have jurisdiction to entertain a second application, but that, where the bankrupt relied upon the same facts as on the first occasion, an application for a review of the former order was the only course. In In re Tobias, ex parte Tobias, the bankrupt, relying upon subsequent good conduct, after the lapse of more than six years made a second application, which was refused on the ground of want of jurisdiction. An alternative application to review the first refusal was withdrawn under the mistaken impression that Mr. Justice Cave, in saying in In re Lloyd that, where the same facts as were used on the first occasion were relied on, an application to review was the proper course, meant that an application to review was improper when fresh facts were brought forward. Upon appeal from the refusal of the second application the Divisional Court held that the second application was properly refused, but that the bankrupt could rightly apply for a review, and upon it was entitled to his discharge. From the judgment of the Court we gather the following points: First, where a judge, in refusing a bankrupt his discharge, does not feel at liberty to fix a period of suspension, he may give the bankrupt liberty to apply again, but, having regard to the power of reviewing any order given by section 104 of the Act of 1883, the more convenient course is to refuse absolutely. Secondly, where a discharge is refused absolutely the Court has no power to entertain a second application. It will thus be seen that the suggestion made in Lloyd's Case, that on fresh facts—i.e. proof of subsequent good conduct—a second application might be made, is withdrawn. Lastly, the proper course for a bankrupt whose first application for a discharge has been refused to take is, whether he relies upon the same or on fresh materials, to apply for a review of the first order of refusal. This the Court must be careful not to grant where the sole object is to obtain an opportunity of appealing, when the time for appealing has gone by, but should grant in cases where good cause is shown; for the maxim 'Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium,' in accordance with which the time for appealing against a decision is always limited, must not be extended too far, and it is not for the good of the respublica that a punishment should be continued after the necessity for it has passed away. The practice upon a very important point is thus placed on an intelligible footing, and at the same time a motive for good conduct is supplied to undischarged bankrupts, which, if not previously lacking, had at any rate not been discovered.

SHARPE v. WAKEFIELD AND ITS RESULTS.

THE House of Lords, in a House of five peers strong, has unanimously affirmed the unanimous judgments of the Court of Appeal and High Court to the effect that persons licensed under the Licensing Act, 1828, have no vested interest in their licenses, similar to that possessed by persons licensed before 1869 under the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869; and that, in considering whether the licenses of the persons licensed under the Act of 1828 ought to be renewed or not, the licensing justices may and ought to consider the number of houses in the neighbourhood already licensed, and ought to refuse to renew if they consider that too many licensed houses already exist in the licensing district. At the time that the Solicitor-General laid down the law otherwise in the House of Commons, we fully reviewed the law of the subject, and pointed out how and why the Solicitor-General's view was utterly untenable (see 'Ale and Beer Houses,' LAW JOURNAL for June 7, 1890, p. 345). We do not propose to criticise the judgments of the House of Lords in any way, but rather to treat them, as all such judgments ought in our opinion to be treated, in the same manner as we should treat an Act of Parliament. Happily for lawyers, the judgments are in writing, and their meaning in connection with the questions raised is unmistakable.

Let us now consider a few of the practical questions which may be expected to arise in consequence of the judgment in Sharpe v. Wakefield: first from the side of those who are interested in the renewal of licenses, and, secondly, from the side of those who are interested in opposing such renewals on grounds other than those affecting the character of the licensed person or his house. The attention of those interested in renewals may be directed to three points. First, they should bear in mind that they must be prepared with affirmative evidence of their own that it is for the advantage of the licensing district that the house in which they are interested should continue to be licensed. It is quite possible that justices may have determined to reduce the number of houses, and they may proceed by way of selecting for renewal, say, the best eighty out of any 100 applicants for renewal. Secondly, very careful attention must be given to section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1874, which added together constitute a wall of defensive procedure not to be easily surmounted or broken through. Thirdly, the right of appeal against a refusal to renew is absolute and comprehensive (see Garrett v. The Middlesex Justices, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 81).

Now for those interested in the refusal of renewals. The main point for them to bear in mind is that justices are bound in point of law to hear evidence as to the requirements of the neighbourhood. This important rule had been laid down, as regards new licenses, in Regina v. The Lancashire Justices, 40 Law J. Rep. M. C. 17, long before Sharpe v. Wakefield; but it is undoubtedly the effect of Sharpe v. Wakefield that it applies to renewals. Another question of very great consequence is, What in an opposition to a renewal is the locus standi of those who would oppose a renewal on the ground that no licenses ought to be renewed at all, not because the peculiar circumstances of the neighbourhood require such a general extinction of houses licensed under the Act of 1828, but because, in the opinion of the opponents of the renewal, no license whatever ought anywhere to be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors? Section 42 of the Act of 1872 and section 26 of the Act of 1874 say that the licensed person is entitled to a written notice of an intention to oppose, 'stating in general terms the grounds on which the renewal of the license is to be opposed.' Would a general notice to all licensed persons stating that the renewal of their licenses would be opposed, on the ground that there ought to be no licensed persons anywhere, be good in law? We think not. But the point is a doubtful one. One thing, however, is not doubtful, and that is, that the view that such a notice would be good is not borne out directly or indirectly by Sharpe v. Wakefield.

BALANCE ORDERS UNDER THE COMPANIES ACT, 1862.

THE two sections of the Companies Act, 1862, under which liquidators obtain what are commonly known as 'balance orders'—that is, orders for the payment by contributories of the balance unpaid upon their shares—are sections 101 and 102. The first of these sections applies to moneys due in respect of calls made before the winding-up, which by section 75 are expressly made a specialty debt, while section 102 applies to calls made by the Court itself in the winding-up. Commenting on section 101, Mr. Buckley in his last edition of 'The Companies Acts' (6th ed. p. 288), says: 'The object of this and like sections is to avoid a double process and to do complete justice in the winding-up. And, therefore, it is only in rare instances (as where some of the parties concerned are not amenable to the jurisdiction in the winding-up) that an action should be brought.' The balance order, whether made under section 101 or section 102, is by virtue of section 120 enforceable as an order of the Court of Chancery—that is to say, by the usual modes of execution under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and the Rules of Court, 1883, Order XLII. So far, therefore, the liquidator who obtains the balance order has the best of the game; but the usefulness of the balance order is certainly subject to two important exceptions, one of which is indicated in Mr. Buckley's note to section 101, which we have quoted, and to which we shall presently refer; and the other of which is shown by the decision in Ex parte Grimwade; in re Tennent, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 459; L. R. 17 Q. B. Div. 357, where the Court of Appeal, affirming a previous case of Ex parte Whinney, L. R. 13 Q. B. Div. 476, held that a balance order is not a final order within the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 4, subs. 1 (g) on which to serve a bankruptcy notice.

The other and more important drawback to the balance order is based on the jurisdiction, and did not, apparently, exist under the Joint-Stock Companies Act, 1848, under which power was given to serve notices by post out of the jurisdiction; but under the Companies Act of 1862 there is a direct decision of the Court of Appeal in In re The Anglo-African Steamship Company, 55 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 579; L. R. 32 Chanc. Div. 348, that the Court has no jurisdiction to give leave to serve notices of orders in the winding-up on persons out of the jurisdiction. The result of this decision is illustrated by the case of The Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Company v. Fielden, recently decided by Mr. Justice Kekewich (reported in Notes of Cases, p. 48). In that case the liquidator had obtained a balance order, under section 101, for payment by a contributory of a large sum of money which became payable on the allotment of, and for calls on, his shares, the calls having been made before the winding-up. The contributory was residing in Guernsey, and the liquidator was, therefore, unable to serve or enforce the order, and the proceedings which he took with that object were set aside on the authority of In re The Anglo-African Steamship Company. In this state of things his only course was to proceed by action, obtaining leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction. In taking this course, however, he had to meet a rather adverse decision of Mr. Justice North in Chalk, Webb & Co. v. Tennent, 36 W. R. 263, an action which arose out of the case to which we have referred, of Ex parte Grimwade, in re Tennent, where the liquidator being, as we have stated, unable to serve a bankruptcy notice, brought an action on the balance order in the name of the company in order to obtain a final judgment on which a bankruptcy notice could be served, and Mr. Justice North held that no action was maintainable on the balance order. Warned, probably, by this example, the liquidator in The Westmoreland Green and Blue Slate Company v. Fielden brought his action in the name of the company, not upon the balance order, but for payment of the original debt in respect of which the balance order had been obtained. The argument on behalf of the plaintiff, however, went a little beyond the pleadings, and it was contended that, if the action had been brought on the balance order in this case, it would have been maintainable because the balance order was obtained under section 101 in respect of calls made before the winding-up and constituting a debt under section 75 of the Companies Act, 1862, whereas in the case of Chalk, Webb & Co. v. Tennent the balance order on which the action was brought was obtained under the special jurisdiction of section 102 in respect of calls made in the winding-up. Mr. Justice Kekewich, however, refused to recognise the distinction, holding that as section 120, making the orders enforceable as orders of the Court of Chancery, applied equally to both classes of balance order, so, too, did the decision of Mr. Justice North, and that no action was maintainable upon the balance order. So far his decision was in favour of the contributory; but on the question directly raised by the pleadings he decided in favour of the liquidator—viz. that the action was maintainable for the original debt, notwithstanding that the liquidator had obtained a balance order in respect of the same debt; in other words, he held that the original right of action for the debt was not merged in the balance order. It appears that Mr. Justice North, in the case before him, refused to allow an amendment in order to raise this issue; but the point is so shortly reported that it is of little value as an authority on this head. Mr. Justice Kekewich's judgment is worth quoting at length so far as it deals with this subject. 'The defendant,' he says, 'seeks to apply the principle expounded by Mr. Baron Parke in the judgment in the Court of Exchequer in King v. Hoare, 47 Law J. Rep. Exch. 29; 13 M. & W. 504, where, as noticed by Lord Penzance in Kendall v. Hamilton, 48 Law J. Rep. C. P. 705; L. R. 4 App. Cas. 504, not only is the law stated, but reasons for it are given. It is enough to quote a few words of Mr. Baron Parke: "The cause of action is changed into matter of record, which is of a higher nature, and the inferior remedy is merged in the higher." In my opinion that rule has no application to a balance order. True it is that the balance order is a matter of record, but it does not fulfil the conditions of a judgment. In Ex parte Grimwade a balance order was held not to be a final judgment within the meaning of subs. 1 (g) of section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; it does not prevent an executor from retaining his own debt out of his testator's assets, and, according to the authorities which I have followed on the first point, it cannot be sued upon. It may be used for the purpose of obtaining a writ of ne exeat, but that is because such a writ was a remedy of the Court of Chancery, and is, therefore, directly within the language of the Companies Act, 1862, s. 120. To hold that the rule which I have quoted from King v. Hoare applies to a balance order would be to extend that rule to cases not contemplated by it, and to merge the original right of action in a remedy which cannot properly be styled of a higher nature.' The question of merger raised by this case seems to be one of considerable difficulty, and, notwithstanding Mr. Justice Kekewich's decision, liquidators will probably be pursuing the safer course in bringing their actions in the first instance against contributories who are out of the jurisdiction without going through the useless step of first obtaining a balance order which they have no power to enforce.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords the amendments made by both Houses to the Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Bill were finally adjusted.

The following bills were read a third time and passed:—

Consolidated Fund (No. 1).
The Army (Annual).
The Fishery Board (Scotland).
The Clergy Discipline Immorality.
The Pollen Fisheries (Ireland).
Technical Instruction.
The Registration of Certain Writs (Scotland).

On the Custody of Children Bill the Commons' amendments were agreed to.

The Borrowing (Infants) Bill was read a second time.

The Newfoundland Fishery Bill was presented by Lord Knutsford and read a first time.

In the House of Commons the following bills were read a third time:—

Consolidated Fund (No. 1).
The Custody of Children.

The Lords' amendments on the Technical Instruction Bill were agreed to, and the Savings Bank Bill passed through committee.

The following bills were read a second time:—

The Mail Ships.
The Merchandise Marks.
The Slander of Women.
The Tramways (Ireland) Act, 1860, Amendment.

The following new bills were introduced and read a first time:—

To Amend the Ancient Monuments Protection Act, 1882.
To Amend the Pharmacy Acts.
To Confer Powers upon the London County Council with respect to the Supply of Water.
To Improve the Procedure for making Statutory Rules.
To Assist the Managers of Reformatory and Industrial Schools in advantageously launching the Children under their Charge.

On the London Water Commission Bill an instruction was agreed to, on the motion of Mr. Ritchie, that the committee should have power to inquire into all matters connected with the natural price, management, sources, and sufficiency of the water supply of London and its suburbs, and to insert in the bill such provisions in connection therewith as in their judgment are expedient.

Reviews.

SERRELL ON ELECTION.

The Equitable Doctrine of Election. By GEORGE SERRELL, M.A., LL.D. (Lond.), of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THE object of this work, the author tells us, is to state the law on the doctrine of election with greater fulness than is possible in general treatises on equity, where, although the leading features can be given, little more can be done in the way of stating details than to supply references to the cases in which those details may be found elaborated. A good reason is given why the law of election may be made the subject of a special work or, to borrow the author's phrase, 'treated by way of monograph.' It is not a branch of any large subdivision of equity, but rests upon a simple principle, which is worked out to its logical conclusion. The broad outlines of the subject have long been settled, but several recent decisions have determined doubtful and important questions, and these cases are specially commented on and examined in the work before us. The first chapter is devoted to the doctrine of election and the principle on which it rests, with general observations, and in its opening sentences the general doctrine of election is elaborately stated, but our author finds it necessary to supplement his statement in a note. The doctrine of election is an equitable doctrine—i.e. a doctrine which, so long as the Courts of Equity and Law were separate, was recognised and enforced only in the Court of Chancery. Now, as we are reminded, under the Judicature Acts not only may the doctrine of election be raised in a defence to an action in the Queen's Bench Division, but proceedings may be commenced there (for election is not specially assigned to the Chancery Division) and damages sued for. The work is divided into seventeen chapters, and each point of the doctrine is carefully considered. In Chapter XI. we have the consideration of the principle of compensation, which has now been established in lieu of forfeiture, and in Note B to the same chapter there is a case elaborately illustrating how the right to compensation is worked out. Among other subjects of special interest may be noticed the questions of election by infants and married women, considered in Chapters XIII. and XIV. In Chapter XVI. the admission of extrinsic evidence is discussed. The work is well executed, and will be of service to all who desire to master the doctrine of election.

LAND REGISTRATION.

The Irish Landowners' Convention. Registration of Title v. Registration of Assurances. By H. BROUGHAM LEECH, LL.D., Examiner of Titles to the Irish Land Commission, Regius Professor of Laws in the University of Dublin, late Fellow of Caius College, Cambridge. Published by the Executive Committee of the Irish Landowners' Convention. London: William Ridgway. Dublin: Hodges, Figgis & Co. 1891.

THIS elaborate essay has been written at the request of the executive committee of the Irish Landowners' Convention. Its primary object and aim, as we are told in the preface, is to advocate the principle of registration of title as against the registration of deeds or assurances, and perhaps the spirit of the advocate is a little too much displayed throughout its pages. The committee under whose auspices the work is published consider that the first and most necessary step towards removing the difficulties that beset the path of reform is to inform and rouse public opinion. They have accordingly determined to place in the hands of the public a clear statement of the problem, of the manner in which it has been solved in other countries, and of the principles on which it is proposed to solve it in England and in Ireland. The case of the Irish landowners, to a considerable extent, is based on the proposition which this work supports with great force, that many of the difficulties which stand in the way of legislation in England do not exist in Ireland. Chapters V. and VI. are occupied with a review and criticism of the Royal Commission of 1878, and Chapters VII. and VIII. with remarks on the Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill and the Registration of Assurances (Ireland) Bill which are now before Parliament. The essay will be found interesting and instructive to those who desire to master this very difficult subject.

A BANKRUPTCY MANUAL.

Bankruptcy. A Manual of Practical Law. By CHARLES FRANCIS MORRELL, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Adam & Charles Black. 1891.

THE aim of the writer of the present manual has been to give a concise statement of the laws of bankruptcy, which, it is hoped, may be sufficiently intelligible to the general public, and yet not wholly without value to the professional reader. The work is much more to be recommended for the former than for the latter purpose. The general reader who desires to obtain some knowledge of bankruptcy will find the work useful, though he will probably find it a little difficult to understand a good many of the technical phrases which are to be found in its pages. The fault of the book from the standpoint of the professional reader is that there is a great absence of authority. Thus, on the question whether a married woman not carrying on a trade separate from her husband can be make a bankrupt, it would have been desirable to have had a reference to In re Gardiner, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 149; L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 249, and on the subject of infants' bankruptcy, Ex parte Jones, 50 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 673: L. R. 18 Chanc. Div. 109, might have well been mentioned. It is, however, stated in the preface that the work has been written subject to certain rules and directions which may explain the want of authorities to which we have adverted.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURT.

JURISDICTION—CLAIM FOR INJUNCTION AND DAMAGES.

AT the Brompton County Court on March 5 the case of Kellett and another v. Dews was heard. It was an action remitted to this Court by an order of Mr. Justice Stirling. The plaintiffs' claim was for an injunction to restrain the defendant, his servants and agents, from interfering with the trade or business of a milkman, carried on by the plaintiffs at No. 3 Uxbridge Terrace, in the county of Middlesex, in which the defendant had been employed as a carrier for some years, and from interfering with, soliciting, or supplying, or endeavouring to supply, the customers of the said business served from No. 3 Uxbridge Terrace aforesaid, and from committing any further or other breach of an agreement, dated August 30, 1890, made between John Edward Jones—the predecessor of the plaintiffs in the said business—of the one part, and the defendant of the other part, and for damages for breach of the said agreement. The damages claimed by the plaintiffs were liquidated damages under the above agreement at the rate of 20*s.* a day for a period of ten days from January 17 to the issue of the writ in the action on January 28 last, amounting, therefore, to 10*l.* Evidence of certain breaches of the agreement was given. Barnes v. Geary, L. R. 35 Chanc. Div. 154, was cited by counsel for the plaintiffs.—His Honour Judge Stonor said that the plaintiffs' claim was primarily in the nature of what was formerly termed an injunction bill, and the County Court had no jurisdiction to try an action of the kind, nor had the Chancery Division of the High Court any jurisdiction to remit it to the County Court, but, as it was coupled with a claim for damages for breach of contract, which, both in its nature and amount, was within the jurisdiction of the County Court, and which any Divisional Court of the High Court could remit to a County Court, he thought he had the power to try this case as one of contract under 100*l.* remitted by the High Court; and, curiously enough, if he found for the plaintiffs thereupon, also to grant an injunction against future breaches under section 89 of the Judicature Act, 1873, thus reversing the order of the plaintiffs' claim, converting the action from a Chancery suit to a common law action, but still dealing with the whole relief claimed. His Honour then found for the plaintiffs, with 40*s.* damages, and granted an injunction against future breaches of the agreement so far as regarded the customers of the trade or business during the period of defendant's service, but, inasmuch as the agreement and claim for an injunction were clearly too wide in terms, and the defendant was an illiterate man, who had signed the agreement without consideration, his honour gave no costs. Judgment accordingly. — Counsel: Shearman; Stevens.

ASSIZE CASE.

SLANDER AND LIBEL.

The case of King v. Hastie was heard at Lewes, on March 21, before Mr. Baron Pollock and a jury. The plaintiff was Mr. Thomas King, a farmer and corn dealer, of Uckfield, who sought to recover damages for alleged slander and libel from Mr. Arthur Hastie, solicitor, of Lincoln's Inn Fields, London.—Mr. Kemp, in opening, stated that this action became necessary in consequence of a long course of malicious conduct on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff occupied a farm which belonged to a Mrs. Sandwith, who formerly lived at Brighton, and was now at Odessa. A lease was drawn up from September, 1884, for fourteen years, the rent being 90*l.* a year, and the defendant, who represented Mrs. Sandwith, acted as solicitor in the matter. He made charges which, upon the introduction of a solicitor, he was compelled to reduce. He afterwards had considerable ill-will towards the plaintiff, as his conduct showed. Mrs. Sandwith went to Odessa, but before going, in September last, she requested the plaintiff to pay his rent into Glynn's Bank in London. Previously he had paid it to Mrs. Sandwith, and they were on the most friendly terms. On December 23 last the plaintiff paid 22*l.* 10*s.* for a quarter's rent due on September 29, 1890. Had he paid it to Mrs. Sandwith no doubt nothing would have occurred, for although the rent was not paid just at the time at which it was due it was usual, especially in the case of farmers, to allow some time for payment. On January 5, 1891, however, the defendant wrote to Mr. King demanding two quarters' rent, whereas it was clear that there was only one quarter's rent then due. The letter contained the demand for two quarters' rent, and threatened proceedings if it was not paid. On the following Friday the plaintiff called at Glynn's Bank and paid in one quarter's rent, which was then due. This was on January 9. Having paid this in, no rent was due. On the following day the defendant's clerk went to the plaintiff's farm and served him with a writ for a quarter's rent due at Christmas, this being the rent he had previously paid. In the writ there was a claim for what the defendant was certainly not entitled to—namely, 4*l.* 12*s.* for costs, the amount being excessive. The action was commenced before the rent was paid. Mr. Wells, the plaintiff's solicitor, advised him that he was bound to pay such reasonable costs as the law would permit. Mr. Wells offered the proper amount to the defendant, who said he did not care a ——, and if the plaintiff was not satisfied he could take the matter before a judge. The defendant declined to discuss the matter, and referred Mr. Wells to his clerk, telling him that he was an unmitigated scoundrel, and never paid anyone until he was sued. There was no possible justification for this statement. Mr. Wells paid the 4*l.* 12*s.*, thinking it was the best thing to do at the time, but paid it under protest. A receipt was sent by the defendant, and he went out of his way to say: 'We have had former experience with Mr. King, and know how difficult it is to induce him to pay without a writ.' These were the words complained of, and words that were written at a time when the defendant was demanding that to which he was not entitled. Such statements as were made by the defendant were of course derogatory to the plaintiff in the course of his business, and he asked the jury to award substantial damages.—Mr. Wells was called to prove the statement made to him by the defendant, and then the plaintiff stated that the allegations made against him had injured his reputation at the Mark Lane Corn Exchange, which he attended two or three times a week for the purpose of buying corn. He had a contract to supply on several occasions.—Mr. Alfred Agate, corn and seed merchant, of Horsham, and of the Mark Lane Corn Exchange, and Mr. William Lillies, corn merchant, of Church Street, Croydon, and of the Mark Lane Corn Exchange, were called, and stated that they had had business transactions with the plaintiff for over twenty years, and had never had any difficulty in obtaining money from him.—Mr. Gill submitted that the statement made by the defendant, if made at all, was upon a privileged occasion.—Mr. Kent having closed his case, Mr. Gill addressed the jury for the defence. He asked them to say that the plaintiff had sustained no damage at all, and contended that the action was supported by a solicitor with the view of making costs.—His lordship, in summing up, pointed out, if the jury thought the plaintiff was entitled to damages it was not their duty to give damages for the purpose of punishing the defendant, but simply such damages as would recoup the plaintiff for the loss he might actually have sustained.—The jury found for the defendant on the verbal communication, and for the plaintiff on the written libel, and assessed damages at 30*l.*—His lordship gave judgment accordingly.—On the application of Mr. Gill, who said the money should be paid into Court, execution was stayed.—Mr. Kemp, Q.C., and Mr. Horace Brown appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Gill and Mr. Hansell for the defendant.

THE MARRIAGE OF NONCONFORMISTS (ATTENDANCE OF REGISTRARS) BILL.

MR. TOWNLEY wrote to the Times on March 12 as follows:—

Will you permit me as an officer with some years' experience of one of the largest registration districts in England to call attention to a great danger which threatens the present system of marriage registration owing to the inconsiderate haste with which the House of Commons has passed the second reading of Mr. Atkinson's bill to relieve Wesleyans of the attendance of registrars of marriages at their places of worship? For some four or five years representatives of Nonconformity in the House, who, judging by the frequent errors in their bills, have not deeply studied the laws they seek to alter, have endeavoured to obtain the ear of the nation to what they term a grievance—that, while the Church of England is permitted to conduct its own marriage registration, Nonconformists are compelled to call in a registrar of marriages. They do not, they say, covet the small fee which is paid to the officer for his services; they object only to being placed at a disadvantage to the members of the Church of England. In order to secure uniformity they invariably propose, as Mr. Atkinson now does, to make the contrast even more marked, and as I shall show, in order to cure a small evil, propose to do a great wrong to the whole Nonconformist community. The great registration reform of 1837 was, as you are aware, the outcome of a royal commission which inquired into the whole question of birth, death and marriage registration of the country. The commission found the existing system of registration by the Church of England a scandal to the nation, and it was determined to provide a system under the immediate authority of a State department that should secure to every man, woman and child proper registration and the preservation of records of vital interest to the country. The clergy of the Church of England were made registration officers responsible to the State for a system of duplicate registration of marriages, and Nonconformists were permitted to enjoy something more than the privilege of marriage in their own places of worship—an exemption from ministers' fees. At that time the Nonconformists declared, as they declare now, that they would not, by accepting the position of the clergy, become registration officers of the State. They declined to be the custodians of registers, or responsible to the Registrar-General for a proper performance of duty. In this position it was imperative that provision should be made for the registration and preservation of the all-important marriage contract wherever made, and hence the creation of an officer called the 'registrar of marriages,' whose duty it is to attend at Nonconformist places of worship to see that the proper legal declarations are made by the contracting parties and to duly register the contract. It is idle to say that his presence is in any sense an intrusion. He is merely a silent witness—a well-trained, educated clerk to the officiating minister, and preferable, I regret to say from experience, in the way of education to many of the clerks who perform the same functions for the clergy. He is responsible under heavy penalties for the performance of his duties, and it is a libel on him to suggest, as Mr. Atkinson does, that he is given to 'spirituous' influences, or is in any sense a discreditable person. The effect of the reform of 1837 has been emphatically this, that the Nonconformists have secured the most perfect and reliable marriage registration known in England. If they doubt the fact, let them go to the nearest district register office or to Somerset House and judge for themselves. While Church registration still has many faults, Nonconformist registration, owing to the skill of the registrars and the process of revision it undergoes from the superintendent registrar to the lynx-eyed examiner at Somerset House, is, as nearly as such things can be, perfect.

Now, sir, it is proposed on a mere sentimental grievance, as feeble as it is undignified, to sweep away this safe and admirable system, and substitute what? Well, according to Mr. Atkinson, a system by which a Wesleyan minister who declines to be responsible to the State shall within seven days after performing a marriage certify under his hand that he has done so and send a certificate to a registrar, who is gratuitously to record the fact. No provision is made for registers, and should the minister forget the fact on which the birthright of a whole family may depend, he is to suffer a penalty not exceeding 40*s*. It may be said that this is too absurd to receive the sanction of Parliament. It has not been found too absurd to receive the sanction of principle implied in the second reading of the bill. We are told it will be amended in committee. Well, what are the amendments proposed? Mr. Henry H. Fowler proposes to extend its principle to all Nonconformists with an option to them to call in the registrar when they please. When he is not called in he is to furnish the registrar with a loose sheet on which he, the registrar, is to draw up the form of contract which in 50 per cent. of the cases will require amendment as to ages, names, and residences on consideration by the parties to it. This sheet is to be signed by the parties and the minister and forwarded to the superintendent registrar, who, if he does not receive it within three months of the marriage, is to prosecute the minister, if he can find him, and get him mulcted in a sum not exceeding 40*s*. Thus, guarded only by a small penalty, Nonconformist marriage registration is to become a thing of chance, dependent upon the will and educational capacity of ministers who may be ignorant of the laws they are supposed to administer. Mr. Fowler tries to preserve some sort of consolation fee for the disestablished registrar, but here his terms are so obscure and he so confuses the respective duties of superintendent registrars and registrars, that it is impossible to understand what he proposes except a very decided all-round reduction of fees without a vestige of compensation. Worse than all, Mr. Fowler proposes to substitute for penal servitude a fine not exceeding 10*l*. as a penalty for performing an illegal marriage in a licensed building.

A more dangerous alteration of the law can hardly be imagined. As the present law stands the Nonconformists have decidedly the best of it as compared with the Church of England, for they not only have a more perfect system of registration, but the fee of 5*s*. which the registrar earns, after possibly a journey of several miles to get it, is surely in pleasant contrast to the much higher fees and gratuities demanded in the Church of England. I ask, then, sir, is it wise to alter, without a proper examination of the whole question by evidence in a select committee, a marriage law which has worked well for fifty-three years, and which can only be attacked on some frivolous objection to the presence of a public officer in a place of worship? Moreover, is it fair and in accordance with that spirit of equity and justice which has hitherto guided the Legislature when making sweeping changes to deprive a large body of officials of the means by which they live without a penny of compensation? A meeting of registration officers over whom I had the honour to preside on Saturday last ask these questions, not only in their own interests, but in the interest of a considerable section of the population, to whom good registration is all-important.

MERRY LAW REPORTS.

THE English Law Reports are not the place one usually resorts to for occasions of amusement, and yet one sometimes comes upon some bright jewel in their dull and decorous pages suitable for the mirth of grave and sober men, such as, we all know, the legal profession is composed of. One of these solemn jokes is the case of Haslewood v. The Consolidated Credit Company, L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 555. The action was one of trespass, instituted in the Lord Mayor's Court. The defendants justified their acts under a chattel mortgage for 30*l*. made by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs claimed the mortgage was void under the Bills of Sale Act, and its validity turned upon the question whether the variations it contained from the form prescribed by the Act were of such a character as to be readily understood without legal assistance. The plaintiffs claimed that they were not, and that the stipulations for repayment of the loan were obscure and difficult to understand. The plaintiff was non-suited in the Mayor's Court, and then appealed to the Queen's Bench Division, and it so happened that the Divisional Court on this occasion was composed of no less exalted personages than the Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls, who, after a solemn, critical, grammatical consideration of the terms of repayment, were agreed that they were obscure and difficult to understand, and that the chattel mortgage was therefore void. With a persistence paralleled only by the insignificant amount at stake, the defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal, where Lords Justices Lindley and Bowen presided. After hearing argument, they evidently felt a little delicacy in overruling the two chiefs, so they ordered the case to be reargued before the full Court (Lords Justices Cotton, Lindley, and Bowen), and upon its coming up before them the counsel for the appellants were not even called on. After hearing what the respondents' counsel had to say, they unanimously reversed the decision of the Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls, and not only dissented from their law, but politely ridiculed their grammar, and held the clause perfectly plain and unambiguous. One would have thought that the very fact that two eminent judges should differ from three others on its construction was primâ facie evidence that it could not be very clear; but it so happened that, in Goldstrum v. Tallerman, L. R. 18 Q. B. Div., to which Lord Esher, M.R., himself had been a party, the Court of Appeal had decided that such a difference of opinion among judges had no such result. Lord Justice Bowen tried to soften the blow by ascribing the difference of opinion between the Court of Appeal and the Divisional Court to the fact that the Court of Appeal had the case of Goldstrum v. Tallerman in their minds, which the Court below had not, yet the reporter, with a brutal regard for accuracy, is careful to state in a foot-note that that case was cited to the Divisional Court. Perhaps the true explanation of the decision of the Divisional Court is to be found in the fact that the mortgage bore interest at the modest rate of 60 per cent. per annum; and it was, as Carlyle would say, a case of 'approximate justice striving to accomplish itself in one way or another.' As an instance of the marvellous persistency of litigants, and the occasional apparent obtuseness of the ablest judges, and the indiscretion of law reporters, the case in question is a striking instance.—Canada Law Journal.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

THE sixty-sixth half-yearly meeting of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 18th inst., Mr. John Hunter (deputy-chairman of the board) presiding.

The Secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting, and the following report, as circulated among the members present, was taken as read:—

'The board of directors, in compliance with rule 16 of the association, present their report for the half-year ending December 31, 1890.

'Since the last half-yearly meeting fifty-eight new members have been admitted, making with those added during the previous six months a total of 194 new members during the year.

'The aggregate number of members enrolled is 3,247, of whom 1,144 are life and 2,103 annual subscribers. Fifty-nine life members are also contributors of annual subscriptions of one to ten guineas each.

'The directors hope for continued assistance in their endeavours to increase the present number of supporters, as many subscribers are lost every year from death and other causes.

'During the half-year the receipts of the association from all sources amounted to 3,722*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.*, of which the following is a general summary: Life subscriptions, 105*l.*; new additional subscriptions, 33*l.* 12*s.*; donations, 1,073*l.* 0*s.* 1*d.*; arrears, 46*l.* 4*s.*; renewals, 1,045*l.* 16*s.*; legacies, 525*l.*; dividends, 862*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.*; and festival tickets, 31*l.* 5*s.* The successful financial result of the half-year is mainly due to the receipt of a further munificent gift of 1,000*l.* from Mr. John Hollams. The members will doubtless desire to express their hearty thanks to Mr. Hollams for this renewal of his generous assistance; meanwhile the directors have invested the donation, and thereby created an annuity of 30*l.* to be known as "The Hollams Annuity No. 2." The creation of annuities by special gifts most materially strengthens the work of the association.

'The following legacies, received during the half-year, are gratefully acknowledged—viz. 500*l.* under the will of the late Mr. William Henry Oliver, of 4 Lincoln's Inn Fields; and 25*l.* under the will of the late Mr. Benjamin Bradley Hewitt, of Bishop's Waltham. As empowered by rule 4, the board have admitted Mr. Robert S. Gregson, of London (one of Mr. W. H. Oliver's executors), as an honorary life member of the association.

'The total capital of the association now consists of 50,660*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* stock, in addition to the sum of 5,263*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* pertaining to the Reardon bequest.

'During the half-year ninety-three grants were paid from the funds, amounting to 1,853*l.* Of this sum two members and fifteen members' families received 785*l.*, while eighteen non-members and fifty-eight non-members' families received 1,068*l.* The sum of 75*l.* was also paid to annuitants from the income of the late Miss Ellen Reardon's bequest; 14*l.* to the recipient of the "Hollams Annuity No. 1;" and 15*l.* to the recipient of the "Victoria Jubilee Annuity."

'These grants, together with the amounts recorded in the last half-yearly report, make a total of 3,721*l.* given in relief by the association during the year 1890.

'On December 31, 1890, a balance of 177*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.* remained to the general credit of the association at the Union Bank of London, together with the Reardon Trust balance of 86*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.*

'With much regret the directors record the decease of their colleagues Mr. John Clayton, of Newcastle-on-Tyne; Mr. James Anderson Rose, of London; and Mr. John Kendall, of London; in whose places they have elected Mr. Robert Richardson Dees, of Newcastle-on-Tyne; Sir Thomas Paine, of London; and Mr. Robert Cunliffe, of London.

'Mr. Gray Hill (Liverpool) has kindly consented to preside at the thirty-first anniversary festival of the association, to be held on Friday, June 26, at The Albion, Aldersgate Street, London. The co-operation and support of the profession on this occasion is earnestly hoped for.

'A statement of receipts and payments for the financial year ending December 31, 1890, is appended.

'(Signed on behalf of the Board)

'T. H. STEPHENS, Chairman.

'Feb. 11.'

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said he was glad to be able to state that the society had made steady progress in every respect. The number of subscribers were now 3,247, against 3,177 at this time last year, most of the new members being annual subscribers. Looking at the accounts for 1890, it would be found that, apart from the exceptional and munificent gift of 1,000*l.* from Mr. John Hollams, the receipts were in excess of those of the previous year—viz. 5,366*l.*, as compared with 5,020*l.* The invested capital had also been increased from 48,580*l.* to 50,660*l.*, by the addition of donations and legacies that had been received. The grants made in cases of distress had also been slightly in excess of those for the previous twelve months—viz. 3,721*l.* in 1890 and 3,636*l.* in 1889. He (the Chairman) hoped their festival in June next would be the means of adding considerably to the funds, and that the support of the profession would be largely given to Mr. Gray Hill, of Liverpool, who has undertaken to preside. This will be the first occasion on which a provincial solicitor has taken the chair at a Solicitors' Benevolent Association dinner.

Mr. Robert Cunliffe (president of the Incorporated Law Society) having seconded the motion,

The report was unanimously adopted.

Mr. R. Walters moved a vote of thanks to the directors and auditors for their services during the past year, which was seconded by Mr. H. E. Gribble, and carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks to Mr. John Hollams, for his further munificent gift of 1,000*l.*, was moved by Mr. C. Mylne Barker, seconded by Mr. Francis Parker, and carried with acclamation.

On the motion of Mr. Sidney Smith, seconded by Mr. W. Beriah Brook, the proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman for presiding.

EASTER SITTINGS, 1891.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Order of Business.

Queen's Bench Court I. (First Court).—Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, ex parte motions on the civil side, and opposed motions on the civil side.

Queen's Bench Court I. (Second Court).—Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays, ex parte motions on the Crown side and Crown paper. Revenue paper.

Queen's Bench Court VII. (Third Court).—Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, special paper and Crown paper. Fridays and Saturdays, opposed motions on the civil side.

Opposed motions (other than those on the Crown side and on appeals from inferior Courts) will be put in a list and taken in their order.

Notices of motion must be given to the officer in charge of the list in Room 468.

Rules and other opposed motions on the Crown side and appeals from inferior Courts assigned to this Division will be entered in the Crown paper and taken in their order.

REPORTS AND REPORTING.—We see by a supplement to the LAW JOURNAL for January 17 that these most excellent REPORTS are now entering upon their seventieth year of existence. The proprietor announces this fact in a modest and unassuming notice, but he might have been excused a flourish of trumpets on this occasion had he felt disposed to indulge in it. We do not know of any series of reports which has attained such a distinction in the history of legal reporting. The LAW JOURNAL and its invaluable REPORTS are still in the van, and we hope they will long continue to be.—Western Law Times (Canada).

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, March 23, Mr. W. T. Rogers in the chair, a most interesting and instructive paper was read by Mr. T. R. Hughes, barrister-at-law, on 'The Dangers of Directors,' which was thoroughly appreciated.—Mr. Leslie moved and Mr. M'Master seconded a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Hughes for his paper, which, on being put to the meeting, was carried unanimously.

OBITUARY.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE SIR FRANCIS ROXBURGH, Q.C., who died on Thursday, March 19, at 53 Westbourne Terrace, Hyde Park, in his seventy-seventh year, was married, in 1847, to Mary, daughter of the Rev. Henry Walker, of Great Bromley-Hall, Essex, who died in 1876; and in 1888 he married Eleanor, daughter of Sir T. Chambers, Q.C., Recorder of London. He was called to the bar in 1845, became a member of Lincoln's Inn in 1849, and a Q.C. and bencher of the Middle Temple in 1866, and in 1882 treasurer of that Inn. He was a justice of the peace for Suffolk. From 1878 to 1885 he was recorder of Aldeburgh. Since 1881 he had been judge of County Court Circuit No. 33. He was made a knight on the occasion of the opening of the Royal Courts of Justice in 1882.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will dine with the treasurer and benchers of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple on Grand Day of Easter Term at that Inn, which has been fixed for Thursday, April 9.

THE RAILWAY RATES COMMITTEE.—It has been arranged that the Joint Committee of the Lords and Commons, which has been appointed to consider the rates and charges bills of the various railway companies, shall sit on April 9, when the chairman will be chosen and the business of the committee proceeded with. Accordingly, petitions against any of the bills will have to be deposited at the Private Bill Office by Friday, April 3, five clear days before the sitting of the committee.

SIR PATRICK COLQUHOUN.—It was reported in the evening papers on Monday, March 23, that Sir Patrick Colquhoun, the eminent jurisconsult, had died at Cannes on the previous evening. We are happy to say that this is incorrect, as Sir Patrick is at present in London, and in the enjoyment of good health. A Reuter's telegram says that it was the Chevalier James Colquhoun, father-in-law of the Earl of Limerick, and Sir Patrick's brother, who died at Cannes on Sunday night. Deceased was in his sixty-sixth year.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR'S JURISDICTION IN OXFORD.—At a meeting of the Oxford City Council last week it was resolved that the town clerk should be instructed to write, on behalf of the council, to the vice-chancellor, asking him to empower the university delegates, at a conference proposed between the city and the university, to discuss the jurisdiction of the University Courts, the powers of the proctors, and the right of veto possessed by the vice-chancellor with regard to the entertainments intended to be given in the city 'in so far as in the opinion of the city council any of them are, or may be, prejudicial to the interests or liberties of the citizens who are not members of the university.' Another resolution instructed the city delegates at the proposed conference that the vice-chancellor's veto on entertainments should be abolished.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM MARCH 30 TO APRIL 4.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	March 30	March 31	April 1	April 2	April 3	April 4
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	—	Altrincham	—	Birkenhead	—
26	Judge Jordan	—	—	—	Stafford	Leek	Market Drayton

House of Lords Register.

THURSDAY, MARCH 19.

Longbottom v. Shaw (appeal from judgment of the Court of Appeal, dated February 4, 1889, affirming judgment of Kay, J., dated June 28, 1888).—Dismissed.

Ritchie & Co. v. Sexton (appeal from an interlocutor pronounced in the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland on March 18, 1890, affirming an interlocutor pronounced by Lord Kinnear, ordinary, on January 23, 1890).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20.

Philipps v. Halliday (appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal dated February 14, 1889 [58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 404], allowing an appeal from a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, dated June 26, 1888).—Dismissed.

Sharpe v. Wakefield (appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal, dated December 15, 1888 [57 Law J. Rep. M. C. 121; 58 Law J. Rep. M. C. 57]).—Dismissed.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHANCELLOR, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 19.

Howlett on behalf of the Committee of Visitors of the Kent County Lunatic Asylum v. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Maidstone (appeal of defendants from judgment of Denman, J., dated November 15, at trial without a jury at Maidstone).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20.

Sowerby & Co. (Lim.) (applicants) v. Great Northern Railway Company (respondents) (appeal of Sowerby & Co. from judgment of the Railway and Canal Commissioners, dated February 27, on preliminary point as to legality of station terminal charges).—Dismissed.

Howlett on behalf of the Committee of Visitors of the Kent County Lunatic Asylum v. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Maidstone.—Cur. adv. vult.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21.

Steinman & Co. v. Angier Line (1887) (Lim.) (damage to cargo) (appeal of defendant from judgment of Smith, J., dated August 5, at a trial without a jury at Derby; heard January 22).—Dismissed.

Beckett and another v. Tower Assets Co. (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Cave, J., dated November 1, setting aside assessment of damages by jury after trial with special jury in Middlesex; heard February 5).—Allowed.

MONDAY, MARCH 23.

No sitting.

TUESDAY, MARCH 24.

No sitting.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25.

No sitting.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, MARCH 19.

Aas v. Benham (appeal of defendant from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated June 6).—Cur. adv. vult.

FRIDAY, MARCH 20.

In re J. Slevin, dec. Slevin v. Hepburn (construction) (appeal of Attorney-General from order of Stirling, J., dated December 13; heard March 14).—Allowed.

SATURDAY, MARCH 21.

Dashwood v. Magniac (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Chitty, J., dated January 14).—Part heard.

MONDAY, MARCH 23.

Dashwood v. Magniac.—Part heard.

TUESDAY, MARCH 24.

Aas v. Benham.—Allowed in part.

Michell v. Michell (appeal of respondent from order of Jeune, J., dated February 10, for argument of question as to amount payable to husband out of settled property).—Allowed.

Thornton v. Union Discount Company of London (Lim.) (appeal of defendant company from order of North, J., dated February 28, refusing jury trial in London).—Dismissed.

Symington v. Cann (appeal of F. W. Moore Cann from order of North, J., dated March 13, for receiver of partnership assets until trial).—Dismissed on terms.

In re an Action, Young v. Solly (appeal of defendant H. A. Schultes-Young from order of Stirling, J., dated March 10, refusing to extend time for applying to rescind charging order).—Dismissed, charging order to be amended by consent.

Abdy v. Abdy (appeal of petitioner from order of Jeune, J., dated February 24, staying proceedings until further order).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25.

No sitting.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. CECIL BRANDRAM FIELDING MOUNT (of the firm of F. W. Mount & Son), of 17 Gracechurch Street, London, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner to administer Oaths. Mr. Mount was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Sidney George Spreat, of 57 Gracechurch Street, London, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Spreat was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Frank Edwin Barber (of the firm of Carter & Barber), of 6½ Austinfriars and Walthamstow, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Barber was admitted in 1876.

Mr. Charles Edward Bloomer (of the firm of Pearce-Jones & Co.), of 33 John Street, Bedford Row, and Watford, Herts, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bloomer was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Herbert Frederick Oddy, of 58 Lombard Street, London, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Oddy was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Samuel Parks Clare, of 25 Fenchurch Street, E.C., and Lewisham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Clare was admitted in 1885.

Mr. A. Mozley Stark, of 62 Strand, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Stark was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Walter Henry Hunt, of 13 Old Jewry Chambers, London, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hunt was admitted in 1882.

Mr. Francis William Preston, M.A. (of the firm of Hewlett & Preston), of 2 Raymond Buildings, Gray's Inn, London, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Preston was admitted in 1883.

Mr. William Lenn West, LL.B. Lond., of 15 Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. West was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Edward Frederick Green (of the firm of Cheese & Green), of 123 Pall Mall, S.W., St. Margaret's, Twickenham, and Fulham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Green was admitted in 1885.

Mr. John George Clabburn (of the firm of Oldman & Clabburn), of 2 Old Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, W.C., and Chiswick, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Clabburn was admitted in 1883.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BAR.—The annual meeting of the bar was held on Saturday, March 21, in the old dining-hall of Lincoln's Inn. The business was of a formal character. The chair was taken by Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., who said, in opening the proceedings, that among the matters which that meeting had to consider was the eighth annual statement of the Bar Committee. That statement necessarily contained a very small portion of the work which the Bar Committee had done during the past twelve months. The committee had had during the past year several meetings with committees of the Incorporated Law Society, which, he thought, had been productive of much good. One of the subjects which had been discussed was the subject of counsel's retainers, and another was the dispute as to the proper ratio of one counsel's fees to those of another when a leader and a junior were engaged in a case. That was a matter which had been carefully considered by the Law Society and themselves, and he hoped it was now generally established that the fees on the briefs of leader and junior respectively should stand to one another in the proportion of three to two or five to three, and that such a practice was reasonable and worked satisfactorily. The chairman having briefly referred to other matters contained in the report, and the meeting having proceeded with the election of auditors and other formal business, the proceedings terminated

THE CHARITY COMMISSIONERS.—The thirty-eighth report of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales has just been published. The commissioners have made 438 orders during the past year, making a total of 11,118 since 1860. The total sum of stocks and investments held by the official trustees of charitable funds at the end of last year amounted to 15,161,457*l.* The commissioners have now on their registers 15,398 charities, of which 644 were entered in 1890.

THE GATES AND BARS IN ST. PANCRAS.—It will be remembered that last year an Act of Parliament was passing authorising the County Council of London to arrange for the removal, upon certain conditions, of the gates now existing in several streets in the parish of St. Pancras. Those conditions having now been fulfilled, the clerk of the said council has issued a formal notice addressed to the Duke of Bedford, ordering his grace, as the ground landlord of this portion of St. Pancras, to take down and remove these obstructions within three months from the present date, and to repair the footway and roadway on which they stand, 'together with any sheds, fences, rails, or posts, or other erections.' The gates and bars specified in this notice are those across Upper Woburn Place, Gordon Street, and Torrington Place. A similar notice has been issued to a Mr. Alfred Henry Harrison, ordering him in like manner to remove the gate and bar on his property which runs across Sidmouth Street, near Gray's Inn Road and King's Cross.

MERCHANDISE MARKS.—An addition to the Merchandise Marks Act of 1887 is proposed in a Government bill introduced by Baron H. de Worms. The first proposal is that the Customs entry relating to imported goods shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be a 'trade description applied to the goods.' Consequently if it be false, there will be an offence against the Act. The second proposal is to empower the Board of Trade, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, to make regulations providing that in cases appearing to the Board to affect the general interests of the country, or of a section of the community, or of a trade, the prosecution of offences under the Act shall be undertaken by the Board. The regulations will also prescribe the conditions on which such prosecutions are to be undertaken. The expenses of prosecutions so undertaken are to be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament; and whenever any regulations are made, they are to be laid before Parliament. Nothing in the bill, however, is to affect the power of any person or authority to undertake prosecutions otherwise than under these regulations.

NEWSPAPER STATISTICS.—From the 'Newspaper Press Directory' for 1891 we ascertain that 'there are published in the United Kingdom 2,234 newspapers, distributed as follows: England—London, 470; provinces, 1293—total, 1,763; Wales, 90; Scotland, 201; Ireland, 157; Isles, 23. Of these there are 142 daily papers published in England, six in Wales, nineteen in Scotland, fifteen in Ireland, and one in the British Isles. On reference to the first edition of this useful directory for the year 1846, we find the following interesting facts—viz. that in that year there were published in the United Kingdom 551 journals; of these fourteen were issued daily—viz. twelve in England and two in Ireland; but in 1891 there are now established and circulated 2,234 papers, of which no less than 183 are issued daily, showing that the press of the country has more than quadrupled during the last forty-five years. The increase in daily papers has been still more remarkable, the daily issues standing 183 against fourteen in 1846. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 1,778, of which more than 448 are of a decidedly religious character, representing the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and other Christian communities.

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE.—A useful bill has been introduced by the Lord Chancellor for consolidating a variety of enactments relating to evidence. These enactments are numerous, and in the dates of their passing extend to an Act of last year, from a portion of a statute of the time of Queen Elizabeth, being 'an Act for the Punyshement of suche persones as shall procure or comit wyllfull perjurye.' The subjects dealt with are the competency of witnesses, the examination of witnesses, the attendance of witnesses, the proof and admissibility of public and other documents, evidence by commission in civil proceedings, depositions under special Acts, evidence for foreign proceedings, the ascertainment, for the purpose of proceedings in any part of the Queen's dominions, of the law as administered in any other part or in a foreign country.

STREET MUSIC.—A bill relating to street music in London has been introduced by Mr. Jacoby, M.P. It proposes to empower any householder, personally or by his agent or servant, to require any person grinding or playing upon any street organ or other instrument of music in front of or near his house or premises to desist, and to refrain from again performing within a quarter of a mile. For refusing to comply with such a requirement a performer is to be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40*s.*, or, in the discretion of the Court, to imprisonment for fourteen days, with or without hard labour. The same penalty is reserved for anyone who grinds or plays upon any street organ or other instrument of music before eight in the morning or after eight in the evening. However, the bill is not intended to apply to any person not playing for reward, or to any musician belonging to Her Majesty's forces, whether naval, military, or auxiliary, or to persons taking part in a procession, whether it have a religious or political object, or be for the purposes of any charitable institution or of any labour organisation.

ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSURANCE CORPORATION.—The report of the actuary on the quinquennial valuation, December 31, 1890, has just been presented to the court of directors. It states that the quinquennium just closed has been an important one in the history of the corporation. It has been marked by the establishment of branch offices in several large commercial centres, by a complete revision of the terms and conditions of assurance and of the rates of premiums, and by an alteration in the methods and basis of valuation. These changes have enabled the corporation to maintain its high position among the large and flourishing companies which are actively seeking the support of the insuring classes throughout the United Kingdom. The new business during the period is represented by 2,111 policies assuring in the aggregate a sum of 1,338,725*l.* and producing a premium income of 56,800*l.* The consolidated revenue account throws light upon two of the principal elements in the prosperity of a life assurance company—namely, the rate of interest and the ratio of expenditure. As to the former, the life funds have yielded a clear 4 per cent. after deduction of income-tax; and, seeing that the valuation estimates are based upon the assumption of 3 per cent. only being obtained, a large annual profit has accrued, and may be expected to accrue, from this source. Concerning the highly important question of expenditure, it is, again, satisfactory to remark that the ratio of working charges to the premium receipts (13 per cent.) remains practically stationary at a very moderate figure, especially as it proves that the increase in the business has been secured by economical means. The result of the valuation is to show that the life assurance exceeds by 278,131*l.* the net liability under life assurance contracts, a result which cannot but be considered highly satisfactory to all who are interested in this company. The actuary recommends that 258,000*l.* be alone distributed on the present occasion, and that the remainder—namely, 20,131*l.*—be carried forward to the credit of the next valuation. Of the above surplus, the proprietors would take 86,000*l.* and the policy-holders 172,000*l.*, a sum sufficient to provide a handsome bonus.

THE TREATMENT OF UNCONVICTED PRISONERS.—The English law holds that, however strong the evidence may be against him, a man must be considered as innocent till such time as the verdict and sentence are pronounced. This being the case, it is surprising that better care is not taken to provide suitable accommodation for unconvicted persons awaiting their trial. The rough treatment of prisoners in police cells is a constant subject of complaint, while the cells under the Central Criminal Court, which has just been officially visited by Mr. Justice Grantham and Mr. Sheriff Harris, consist of solitary boxes about 7 feet high and 4 feet square, with only a little hole to admit fresh air. So impressed were both judge and sheriff that they have brought the matter to the notice of the Lord Mayor, and the Court of Aldermen discussed the subject. Surely Newgate is large enough to supply suitable accommodation for prisoners awaiting their trial. With the telephone at hand there is no need to keep the prisoners cooped up just under or close to the Court. They can be brought from the prison cells rapidly enough for all practical purposes. It is not fair, it is not humane, to torture a prisoner just before his trial by such close and cruel confinement. At such a moment the prisoner should be spared from all disturbing influences, so that he may collect his thoughts and be in a frame of mind to make the best defence possible. But if the prisoner is to be subjected to prolonged suspense and confinement, not in a cell, but in a sort of box, it can scarcely be said that he has a fair trial. Nor does an unconvicted prisoner deserve such treatment. We are glad, therefore, to note that this grievance has attracted the attention of the Court of Aldermen, and that they have summoned the governor of Newgate and the chairman of the City Lands Committee to attend their next meeting to discuss the matter. Much has been said of late in the lay press concerning the barbarous treatment of prisoners in Russia; perhaps it would be well if we put our own house in a little better order.—The Lancet.

BIRTHS.

On March 18, at Heathland Lodge, Hampstead Heath, the wife of Johnston Watson, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On March 18, at Wroxham Mansions, Canfield Gardens, South Hampstead, N.W., the wife of F. H. Priestley, Solicitor, of a daughter.

On March 20, at 32 Albert Square, Stepney, E., the wife of Corrie Grant, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On March 24, at 40 Norland Square, Notting Hill, the wife of Henry John Mead, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On Feb. 27, at St. Paul's Church, Paget, Bermuda, the Rev. Ralph Venables Wilson, Chaplain Royal Navy, to Emily Darrell, daughter of the Hon. Richard Darrell Darrell, Solicitor-General, Veranda House, Bermuda.

On March 17, at Christ Church, Mayfair, Loftus Balfour, son of the late John Moreton, Moseley Court, Wolverhampton, to Grace, daughter of Joseph Underhill, Q.C., 113 Piccadilly.

DEATHS.

On March 17, at 4 Nicholas Street, Chester, Alfred Carrington, Solicitor, aged 45.

On March 18, at Wellington College, Edward Hutton, younger son of W. H. Coohran, of Liverpool, Barrister-at-Law, and Edith, his wife, aged 15.

On March 19, at 53 Westbourne Terrace, Hyde Park, his Honour Judge Sir Francis Roxburgh, Q.C., aged 76.

On March 22, at 28 Park Terrace, Stirling, Alexander Bennett M'Grigor, LL.D., of Cairnoch, Solicitor in Glasgow, aged 53.

	Per Annum £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

THE Lord Chancellor will read with some amusement (possibly with other feelings also) the practical application of his recent judgment in the Jackson Case by Mr. Plowden, the metropolitan magistrate. Whether spoken ironically or in 'all sincerity,' the advice given to applicants at the Police Court on Tuesday last was startling news to the ill-used wives of London. It is impossible that the matter can remain where it is, and the sooner a final decision is given in the Jackson Case the better will it be for the country at large.

IT is of the greatest importance at the present time to understand the exact distinction between the sets of licensed houses which are affected by Sharpe v. Wakefield and the sets of houses which are not. The sets of houses which are affected are (1) the 'alehouses' licensed under the Licensing Act of 1828 (9 Geo. IV. c. 61) for the sale of all or any intoxicating liquors for consumption on or off the premises where sold, and (2) the houses licensed under any of the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), for sale of beer, wine, cider, or perry for consumption on the premises where sold, in event of such houses having had a license attached to them since May 1, 1869. The sets of houses which are not affected by Sharpe v. Wakefield are (1) houses, or, more properly speaking, shops, licensed under some one or more of the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, for consumption of beer, wine, cider, or perry off the premises where sold, and (2) houses having had on May 1, 1869, and continuously kept up by renewal since then (Regina v. Curzon, 42 Law J. Rep. M. C. 155) a license for the sale of beer, wine, cider, or perry under some one or more of the Acts recited in the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, for consumption on the premises where sold.

THE census will be taken in England and Wales in pursuance of the Census (England and Wales) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 61), Scotland and Ireland having each separate Acts (53 & 54 Vict. c. 38, and 53 & 54 Vict. c. 46). By section 5 of the Act occupiers are to fill up the census papers 'with the following particulars and no others—namely, particulars showing the name, sex, age, profession, or occupation, condition as to marriage, relation to head of family, and birthplace [there will be great difficulty in getting at this in most cases, as, at all events, no person can know his own birthplace except by hearsay] of every living person who abode in every house on the night of the census-day,' which is, by section 1, Sunday, April 5. By section 6, the enumerators have the duty of completing defective papers and correcting 'such as they find to be erroneous,' and by section 20 they may ask all questions necessary for obtaining the returns required by the Act, any person refusing to answer or wilfully giving a false answer being liable to a fine of not more than 5*l.* 'for each offence.' The first census was taken in 1801, under 41 Geo. III. c. 15, and a census has been taken decennially ever since, but the early Acts only got at the numbers and occupations of the people by a series of questions addressed to clergymen and overseers, the Act of 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 99) being the first to get at the name, sex, &c. of each individual.

THE lamented death of Mr. Price removes from the Railway and Canal Commission a valuable public servant, who had filled the office of commissioner since its first establishment by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. Under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, as under that Act, Mr. Price's successor must be 'of experience in railway business,' and although the opinion of Mr. Justice Wills must prevail on a question of law, each of the three commissioners has an equal vote upon those questions of fact as to what are 'reasonable' facilities, what is an 'unreasonable' preference, which are ever and anon coming before the commissioners, who, indeed, act as a special jury in deciding these questions. The new toll clauses, which are expected shortly to be promulgated after due inquiry before the joint select committee of the two Houses, will greatly increase the responsibilities of the commission, and the appointment of Mr. Price's successor will be watched with great interest. The salary is 3,000*l.* a year, and the commissioners are prohibited from holding railway investments.

Sowerby v. The Great Northern Railway Company (Notes of Cases, p. 50) is a case of very great importance to railway companies and their customers. It was there held, affirming the judgment of the Railway Commissioners, that railway companies may, under the head of terminal charges, make a charge for station accommodation. It will be remembered by those interested in the subject that in Hall v. The London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company, 5 Nev. & Mac. 28, a similar view was taken by the High Court on appeal from and in reversal of the late Railway Commission (which sharply criticised the judgment of the High Court in their twelfth annual report), and also that the Court of Appeal was somewhat unexpectedly found to have no jurisdiction in the matter (see ibid. 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 238). The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, has since effected two important changes. In the first place, Sir F. Peel, though still remaining a commissioner, has been deposed from his high place, and Mr. Justice Wills reigns in his stead, it being especially provided by section 5, subsection 3, of the Act, that the opinion of the ex-officio commissioner (which Mr. Justice Wills is in England) 'shall prevail upon any question which in the opinion of the commissioners is a question of law.' In the second place, by section 17 of the Act, an appeal lies from the Railway Commissioners, not as before to the High Court, but direct to a 'Superior Court of Appeal'—i.e. in England or Ireland to the Court of Appeal, and in Scotland to the Court of Session in either division of the Inner House. Nor is there any further appeal to the House of Lords unless there shall have been a difference of opinion between any two 'Superior Courts of Appeal,' one of which may have given leave to appeal.

We have before us the Tithe Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 8), containing twelve sections and a schedule of fees in connection with the new procedure for recovery of tithe through a County Court instead of by distress. As we stated last week (ante, p. 209), the Act became law on the beginning of the day (March 26) on which it received the royal assent. But section 10 enacts that 'this Act shall extend to every sum on account of tithe rent-charge which first becomes payable on or after the half-yearly day of payment of such tithe rent-charge which occurs next after the passing of this Act, whether such sum accrued before or after that day, and shall not extend to sums due on account of tithe rent-charge which were in arrear before the passing of this Act.' Turning to the Tithe Commutation Act of 1836 (6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71), we find that by section 67 of that Act tithe rent-charge is payable by two equal half-yearly payments, on July 1 and January 1, in every year. Therefore the substituted procedure for recovery of tithe will not come into force till after July 1. Other parts of the Act, however, came into force on March 26. Thus any contract made on or after that day between an occupier and owner for the payment of the tithe rent-charge by the occupier was, and will be, by virtue of s. 1, subs. 1 of the Act, absolutely void. It is clear that many Lady-day leases, which, if made on the day of their commencement, have just come under subs. 2 instead of subs. 1 of s. 1 by a single day, will require careful attention in connection with the liability to tithe rent-charge, which now falls on the owner instead of on the occupier.

Lord Grimthorpe writes to the Times to explain 'the law and practice relating to the addition and selection of the members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for such a case as the Lincoln or Lambeth appeal from the Archbishop of Canterbury now pending.' Mr. W. H. Smith had stated in the House of Commons that 'the Government has nothing to do with the selection of the members who are to try any particular case,' but Lord Grimthorpe declares it 'to be clear that Mr. Smith was imperfectly informed by some legal adviser who knew little of either the Acts of Parliament or the practice,' and points out that the Act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41 'contains a dormant power for the Crown to send any Privy Councillor into the Judicial Committee pro hâc vice only. In the Bennett Case it appears that the President of the Council gave what Lord Grimthorpe calls 'the very proper order' that all the then members of the Judicial Committee 'should be summoned, being left to arrange among themselves who should sit.' By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 31, as amended by the Judicature Acts, the President of the Council, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Master of the Rolls, and any other judge of the High Court, and all persons who have at any time filled those offices, constitute the Judicial Committee, 'provided nevertheless,' so it is enacted by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41, 'that it shall be lawful for' Her Majesty 'from time to time as and when' she 'shall think fit, by sign-manual, to appoint any two other persons, being privy councillors, to be members of the said committee.' It is further provided by section 14 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, that 'Her Majesty, by Order in Council, with the advice of the Judicial Committee or any five of them, of whom the Lord Chancellor is to be one, and of the archbishops and bishops, being privy councillors, may make rules for the attendance as assessors on the Judicial Committee of so many archbishops and bishops as may be determined by the rules.' The existing rules, which bear date November 28, 1876, provide for attendance by rota, and that at least three assessors must be present.

Very important is the point decided in Gibson v. Reeves (Notes of Cases, p. 45). The action was for penalties under the Dramatic Copyright Act, which gives double costs to a plaintiff recovering penalties. As is well known, Pollock's Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 47) substitutes for double costs a 'full and reasonable indemnity' in each case. A Divisional Court, therefore, in Gibson v. Reeves, held that the plaintiffs (there were two of them) were entitled to have their costs taxed as between solicitor and client, and the Court of Appeal has now affirmed that judgment, mainly on the authority of Hasker v. Wood, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 416, in which it was held that the general provisions of the Judicature Acts (see especially section 67 of the Judicature Act, 1873) did not overrule any earlier statute giving an indemnity as to costs to a particular plaintiff as a matter of right. This decision is as satisfactory as it is correct. It is material to point out that the recent enactment (section 5) of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, respecting costs, which caused so much general excitement in the profession in November last, provides that, 'subject to the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts and the Rules of Court made thereunder, and to the express provisions of any statute whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act,' costs in the Supreme Court are to be in the discretion of the Court. Looking to the great risk in the present day as to costs, it may be expected that in many Acts to be passed in future Parliament will provide that a plaintiff is to have a right to costs. Penal actions, for instance, no person can be expected to bring unless at least his costs out of pocket are secured to him.

ARE officers on full pay disqualified for being county councillors? The Army Act, 1881, by section 146, enacts that 'a person who is commissioned and in full pay as an officer in Her Majesty's regular forces shall not be capable of being nominated or elected to be sheriff of any county, borough, or other place, or to be mayor or alderman of, or to hold any office in, any municipal corporation in any city, borough, or place in the United Kingdom;' and by section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888, 'the council of a county shall be constituted and elected in like manner and be in the like position in all respects as the council of a borough.' This leaves the question rather doubtful. The Government, however, propose to solve it for the future by a clause to be inserted in the annual Army Act to the effect that 'to section 146 of the Army Act, 1881, there shall be added a proviso that nothing in that section shall disqualify any officer for being elected to, or being a member of, a county council.' It may be pointed out in connection with this proposal that by subsection 14 of section 75 of the Local Government Act, 1888, 'twelve months shall be substituted for six months,' in section 39 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 'as the period of absence which disqualifies an alderman or councillor.'

VOLUME IV. of the 'Second Revised Edition' of the Statutes has just appeared, containing statutes or parts of statutes from 1814 to 1830. An 'introductory note' explains that a new procedure has recently been adopted in respect of Statute Law Revision Bills. A select committee of the House of Commons 'has proposed to go beyond the bounds to which the Statute Law Committee had confined themselves, and to recommend the omission from the revised statutes of any preambles to an Act or introductory words to a section which, though not dead, were, in their opinion, inoperative.' In the present volume, therefore, preambles and other similar matter have been omitted, brief statements of the effect of the omitted matter being substituted where necessary, as authorised by the Statute Law Revision Acts of 1890. 'In cases where no such statement is necessary, the word "preamble" alone is printed, to show that a preamble to an Act is left out, and the word "recital" alone, to show the omission of introductory words to a section subsequently to the first.' We observe that the ferocious enactments against Jesuits and monks to which, as still part of the Roman Catholic Relief Act, we have more than once referred, appear without any omission of a recital in section 28 of that Act, that it is expedient to make provision 'for the gradual suppression and final prohibition' of such Jesuits and monks.

ACCORDING to the decision of Mr. Justice North in In re Wray, a decision that was not interfered with by the Court of Appeal, the attachment for non-compliance with an order is not in the nature of civil process, but punitive or disciplinary; and the bankruptcy of the defaulting person who ought to have made the payment is not in itself a sufficient reason for refusing to issue an attachment against him, but the Court has a discretion, under subsection 2, section 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. From the judgment of Lord Justice Cotton in the Court of Appeal, it may be gathered that, in his opinion, the existence of a receiving order did not deprive the Court of jurisdiction to order a writ of attachment to issue. Mr. Justice North held that section 9 did not apply to proceedings pending against a debtor at the time when a receiving order was made against him, the application for an attachment being merely a continuation of the proceedings which led to the making of the order for payment. In re Wray was approved by the Divisional Court in Mitchell v. Simpson, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 425; 59 Ib. 355; L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 373; 25 Ib. 183.

LAST year Mr. Justice Kekewich, in In re Simes; Simes v. Newbery, W. N. 1890, p. 114; 38 W. R. 70, decided that, having regard to section 9 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, there was no jurisdiction to direct the issue of a writ of attachment against a defaulting trustee for non-compliance with an order to pay a sum of cash into Court, he having been adjudicated a bankrupt on his own petition subsequently to the order, but before the date of the notice of motion for attachment. That decision, however, was not generally accepted as correct, notwithstanding that the learned judge had relied upon the authorities of Cobham v. Dalton, 44 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 702; L. R. 10 Chanc. App. Cas. 655, and In re Ryley, 54 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 420; L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 329. For the case of In re Wray, 56 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 737, 1106; L. R. 36 Chanc. Div. 138, was not brought to the attention of his lordship, and, consequently, was possibly overlooked by him when deciding In re Simes as he did.

ON January 13 the point came before Mr. Justice Chitty in In re Edye, a Solicitor (Notes of Cases, p. 4), a solicitor having made default in complying with an order to pay a sum of money into Court. His defence to a motion for a writ of attachment against him was that, having since been adjudicated bankrupt, he was protected from imprisonment by section 9. Mr. Justice Chitty referred to the cases of In re Wray and In re Simes, and, with regard to the latter, observed that he was persuaded that if the authorities against such an operation of the Act of 1883 had been cited to Mr. Justice Kekewich his decision in In re Simes would have been different. In this position of things Mr. Justice Chitty felt bound to follow In re Wray, and his lordship accordingly made an order of attachment. It may, therefore, we think, be now taken to be settled law that the Court has jurisdiction to order a writ of attachment to issue against a trustee, or person acting in a fiduciary capacity, for default in payment of any sum in his possession or under his control which he has been ordered to pay by a Court of equity, notwithstanding that he has subsequently become bankrupt; and that the same rule applies to a solicitor who has made default in payment of a sum which he has been ordered to pay in his character of an officer of the Court making the order.

Beati possidentes well applies to the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Lashmar; Moody v. Penfold, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 143; L. R. (1891) 1 Chanc. Div. 258, the contest in that case being as to whose the land should be when neither of the claimants was intended to take it. Peter Lashmar gave his real estate to three trustees, and then specifically devised three houses unto a man and his wife during their lives, with remainder as to the premises in question to a nephew for life, with remainder to C. in fee-simple. C., by his will, devised the premises to L. and M. upon trust to pay the rents to his widow, or to permit her to receive them during her life, and after her death upon trust for his illegitimate son in fee. The illegitimate son died without issue and intestate before the passing of the Intestates Act, 1884, so that there was no escheat to the Crown of his interest. The survivor of the man and his wife abovementioned survived the first testator's nephew, C.'s widow and the intestate, and remained in possession and enjoyment of the house in question till November, 1889. Then arose the question as to whether the surviving trustee of Peter Lashmar's will, or the survivor of the trustees appointed by C.'s will, was entitled to the property, all the beneficiaries being dead. Penfold, the trustee of the first will, was in possession, and C.'s trustee took proceedings to recover it from him. The Court of Appeal held that as on the death of the tenant-for-life under C.'s will the trust for the illegitimate son, when he had attained twenty-one, was a bare trust, the legal estate (if C. had had a legal estate to dispose of) would have vested in that son, and nothing would have remained in C.'s trustees. Accordingly, those trustees, having no estate in them, could not claim it from Penfold, who had the legal estate in him. In their judgments their lordships referred to Doe v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109, with reference to the question whether the trustees of C.'s will had any estate in them during the life of the tenant-for-life. The effect of that ancient decision, according to 'Lewin on Trusts,' 8th edit. p. 212, is that in the case of words which direct that the trustees should pay the rents to a person or permit that person to receive them, 'the former or latter words shall prevail, as the instrument in which they are found happened to be a deed or a will.' The Court of Appeal did not absolutely overrule that case, but they spoke of it as 'a rock ahead that everybody knows,' and suggested that 'in most cases there is sure to be a context which displaces the conclusion at which the Court arrived in that instance.'

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR APRIL.

THE April number constitutes a volume of 160 pages, sixty-four of which comprise cases in the Chancery Division (pp. 177–240), sixty-four in the Queen's Bench Division (pp. 145–208), sixteen in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (pp. 25–40), and sixteen are devoted to Magistrates' Cases (pp. 57–72). A large proportion of these cases were decided during last sittings. The interest of the number, however, centres in the great Bank of England case, in which the House of Lords delivered their considered judgments on March 5 last.

In the Chancery Division there are sixteen cases, of which six were appeals. In Lopes v. Dick; in re Dick, the Court of Appeal, reversing Mr. Justice Stirling, decided that, notwithstanding the absence of a power to vary investments in a settlement, the trustees had power under the Trust Investment Act, 1889, to sell out securities for the purpose of investing in other securities authorised by the Act. In The Halifax Joint-Stock Banking Company v. Gledhill it was held that 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5, protects a purchaser for value of any interest, legal or equitable, devised under a settlement which is fraudulent and void under the statute as against creditors, provided such purchaser had no notice of the fraud. Coventry's Case involved the question of the liability, in respect of the registration of shares, of an agent acting without his principal's authority. In re Joshua Stubbs was a case in which debenture-holders were allowed to continue an action notwithstanding a winding-up order, and their receiver was allowed to continue in his office in preference to the official liquidator. In re Parker was one of the numerous mortmain cases which have recently come before the Court in which a mortgage charging the undertaking of a corporation was held not to create an interest in land within 9 Geo. II. c. 36. In re Slevin involved the failure of a charitable legacy on the ground that the institution for which it was intended had ceased to exist before the payment of the legacy. The decision of Mr. Justice Stirling has since been reversed by the Appeal Court. The Earl of Aylesford v. Earl Poulett settled a question falling within the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, schedule 1, part 1, rule 10. In Jenkins v. Jackson the Court of Appeal approved the form of order with regard to the apportionment of costs in a Chancery action, settled in Knight v. Pursell, 49 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 120. In re The Agricultural Hotel Company decides that the Court has power to confirm a special resolution of a company for the reduction of the whole of its ordinary capital, notwithstanding that preference capital is left intact. Dashwood v. Magniac, following Honywood v. Honywood, 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 652, affirms the rule that timber estates are exempted from the general law relating to timber.* In re Thorley makes annuities given to trustees whilst they should carry on their testator's business liable to legacy duty. In re The Alabama, &c. Railway Company defines the position of debenture-holders of a company who do not prove as creditors in the winding-up. According to Fillingham v. Wood a tenant of part of a house for a greater interest than from year to year is the 'adjoining owner' within the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, s. 82, and entitled, under section 85, to three months' notice of intended alteration to a party structure. The British Tanning Company v. Groth was a case in which no protection was afforded against the consequences of the prior publication in this country of an invention patented in a foreign country with which Her Majesty had made international arrangements under the Convention of 1883, and defined the effect of section 103 of the Patents, &c. Act, 1883, as amended by section 6 of the Patents, &c. Act, 1885. Scott v. Homer states it to be the absolute unqualified right of the suitor to adjourn a summons in chambers from the chief clerk to the judge at his own risk as to costs. Bolton v. Salmon decides that where a person joins in a mortgage as surety for the mortgagor by giving security and covenanting for payment of the mortgage debt, if the surety be discharged from liability on the covenant by alteration of the contract, the surety's security is also released.

* This case was, however, during the last days of the past sittings argued on appeal before Lords Justices Lindley, Bowen and Kay, who reserved judgment.

In the Queen's Bench Division there are ten cases reported, of which one was in the House of Lords and six in the Court of Appeal. In The Governor and Company of the Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers it was held by a majority of six to two of the House of Lords, reversing both the Courts below, that the loss on forged drafts accepted by the respondents and paid over the counter by the appellants must fall on the respondents, and an authoritative interpretation was given to the term 'fictitious' in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 7, subs. 3. Barrow v. Isaacs was a hard case, in which the Court of Appeal was unable to give relief against the forfeiture of a lease incurred by the inadvertent failure of the lessee to obtain the landlord's consent to an underlease. This case has been the main cause of the introduction of a bill now before the House of Commons. Rogers, Sons & Co. v. Lambert & Co. was a case involving the principles of bailment, jus tertii, and estoppel. Stevens v. Marston decided that a covenant in an agreement giving the landlord power of distress for the non-payment of money due for goods supplied was void for want of registration as a bill of sale. The London Bank of Mexico and South America v. Apthorp was an unsuccessful attempt by the appellant to obtain exemption from income-tax in respect of transactions in a foreign country. The National Bank v. Silk involved the negotiability of specially crossed cheques and an abortive attempt by the drawer to stop payment. Edwards v. Marston was a bill of sale case in which Goldstrom v. Tallerman, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 22, was distinguished. In Vernon and others v. Watson a defendant who had been convicted and sentenced for misappropriating the moneys of a friendly society was held not to be afterwards liable in a civil action. According to Ex parte Raison, a person adjudicated bankrupt under the Act of 1883 has a right to apply for his discharge under section 28 of that Act, notwithstanding the repeal of section 28 by the Act of 1890. Cusack v. The London and North-Western Railway Company decides that the Court has a discretion under Order LIX., rule 16, to extend the time for appealing from a County Court.

In the Probate, &c. Division there are five cases, one of which was in the House of Lords. The Cressington was a case in which shipowners were protected from liability in respect of damage to cargo by reason of an exception in the bill of lading. Long v. Long & Johnson was a divorce petition in which the co-respondent was amerced in damages, though the petition was dismissed, as the connection had been against the respondent's will. The Calliope, in the House of Lords, discharged wharfingers from liability for damages caused by obstructions in the bed of the river. The judgment of the Court of Appeal was reversed and that of Mr. Justice Butt restored. In The Asia the Court refused, in the absence of special circumstances, to give a successful plaintiff his costs in an action which might have been commenced in the County Court. The Marianne decided the meaning of 'necessaries' for the purposes of a charterparty and brokers' commission.

There are five Magistrates' Cases, one of which was a Crown case reserved. In Underwood (appellant) v. Jones (respondent) it was held that the functions of justices, under 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7, with respect to the appointment of an assistant-overseer are ministerial only. The Burnley Equitable Co-operative and Industrial Society v. Casson decided that the contract of apprenticeship is not necessarily personal, and may be fulfilled by a society. In Noble v. Killick a railway company were held entitled to proceed criminally against the defendants for travelling in a higher class than the tickets were taken for, notwithstanding a demand made for payment of the excess fare. In Regina v. Vreones (Crown case reserved) an attempt to mislead, by the manufacture of false evidence, a tribunal which might have been, but never was, in fact, called into existence was held to be a misdemeanour. In The Farmers' and Cleveland Dairy Company (appellant) v. Stevenson (respondent) the existence of a warranty for the quality of goods was held to entitle the appellants, who supplied the goods, to the protection afforded by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, s. 25. Conviction quashed.

THE SMALL HOLDINGS BILL.

THE Small Holdings Bill of Mr. Jesse Collings, which is backed also by Mr. Robert Reid, Mr. Burt, Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, Mr. Broadhurst, Colonel Cotton Jodrell, Mr. Cyril Flower, and Mr. Hobhouse, and was read a second time, shortly before Easter, amid a chorus of applause from all parties, may be considered as safe to pass before the close of the present session. It is a very important and lengthy measure, containing sixty-eight clauses. The following is a brief outline of its contents:—

Meaning of 'Small Holding.'—The term 'small holding' means land of not less than one acre and not exceeding fifty acres in extent, including buildings. Here mark the distinction between the scope of this measure and that of the Allotments Act, under which no allotment is to exceed one acre.

Sale of Small Holdings.—Any sanitary authority, whether urban or rural, may sell a small holding to any one person on the terms, amongst others, that the purchaser shall pay on completion one-fourth only of the purchase-money, so that three-fourths shall always remain unpaid, the purchaser paying half-yearly interest on the balance at the rate of one per cent. above the rate of interest paid by the local authority to the Treasury (clause 4), 'which may advance from time to time out of any moneys from time to time supplied under any Act of Parliament for that purpose such sums as the Treasury may deem expedient to any local authority for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act upon such terms as to payment of interest and repayment of principal and otherwise as the Treasury may determine by a minute from time to time' (clause 48).

Conversion of Present Occupiers into Owners.—Existing occupiers of small holdings may be converted into owners by the following process. Any urban or rural sanitary authority may, out of the moneys in their hands borrowed from the Treasury, advance sums not exceeding three-fourths of the purchase-moneys in each case to the existing occupiers of small holdings to enable them to purchase their holdings within the district of such authority. The sales are to be completed at a fixed price, according to a scale to be settled from time to time by the Local Government Board. No advance is to be made by the local authority unless they are satisfied that the title is good, the sale bonâ fide, and the price reasonable, nor is any such advance to be made except in cases where it is made to one person for the purpose of occupying and farming the holding in respect of which the advance is made (clauses 7 and 8).

Alienation, Transfer, and Transmission.—Holders may not alienate except by mortgage of the entire holding, or by sale or devise to one person of the entire holding (clauses 10 to 13).

Registration.—'Every local authority which shall establish any small holding under this Act shall open a separate register for the registration of titles to such small holdings. The business of such registry shall be conducted by a registrar with any necessary assistance, and any number of local authorities may combine to have a joint office and joint registrar.' Each registry is to have a plan or plans. The register is to show the number of the holding on the plan, the description of each holding, the mode and date of its creation, and many other particulars. 'The local authority may charge on any registration or application to register any matter or thing under this Act, such fees as may from time to time be prescribed by the Local Government Board.'

Letting of Land for Small Holdings.—The local authority may let any of their land for small holdings. They must be let free of rates and taxes, the local authority being deemed responsible for these. 'Each small holding let to one person shall consist of not more than ten acres; but the local authority shall have power to let one or more small holdings to a number of persons working on a co-operative system, provided the same be approved by the local authority,' and the local authority may use any of their land for public pasture (clauses 37 to 41).

Acquisition of Land.—Any local authority may for the purposes of the Act purchase, sell, hire, or exchange any lands, whether situated within or without their district. There are no powers of compulsory purchase.

Expenses of Local Authority.—These are to be defrayed out of a special district fund, leviable under the Act (clause 49). Amongst the expenses chargeable on this fund are 'expenses of officers, offices, books, stationery, stamps, legal charges, insurances, repairs, and other current expenditure of a like nature;' and, what is of still greater importance, 'any deficiency whereby the annual net receipts of such local authority fall short of the sums they are annually required to pay to the Treasury for interest or repayment of instalments of principal sums advanced to them by the Treasury' (clause 66). As for limitation of rate, similar to that under the Libraries Acts, there is none. Clause 52 is, indeed, marginally noted 'limitation of rate,' but when examined it will be found not to limit the amount, but merely to deal with the question how far a rate may be retrospective.

Such is the Small Holdings Bill. It differs from the Allotments Act in the amount of land (fifty acres as against one) which may be acquired for the small holding; in the class of people who are to be benefited, being all the world as against the labouring classes; and in the mode of procedure, being a purely optional as against a partially compulsory procedure. Perhaps, like the first Agricultural Holdings Act, Lord Westbury's Declaration of Title Act, Lord Cairns's Transfer of Land Act, and other statutes of a similar character, it will become a dead-letter Act; perhaps, on the other hand, it will change the face of rural England, drive French eggs out of the English market, lead to the re-establishment of protective duties on corn, tend to the abolition of hunting, and make the fortune of many a country solicitor.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

ON Thursday, the 26th ult., the royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—

Consolidated Fund (No. 1).
Seed Potatoes Supply (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1890.
The Army (Annual).
The Custody of Children.
Technical Instruction.
Tithe Rent-charge Recovery.
Local Government Provisional Order (Poor Law).
Shakespeare's Birthplace, &c., Trust.

The House of Lords stands adjourned till Tuesday, April 14, and the House of Commons till Monday, April 6.

Reviews.

STOCK EXCHANGE CUSTOMS.

The Rules and Usages of the Stock Exchange. By G. HERBERT STUTFIELD, B.A., Oxon, late Vinerian Scholar of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

THIS work will be found useful to those who desire to become acquainted with the rules and usages of the Stock Exchange. In the introduction we have some interesting observations on the struggles between commercial men and lawyers, between whom we are told, with perhaps a trifle of exaggeration, there is but little sympathy. 'Business men,' says the author, 'with their love of despatch and their reverence for credit, have found no congeniality either in the law itself or in the habits of lawyers—a body of men who are hardened to delay and take nothing for granted.' Special attention is directed to the decisions in Grissell's and Cole's cases. The most eminent lawyers of the day, we are told, advised against the validity of the custom there established, and the result was consequently 'a great triumph for the Stock Exchange, and perhaps the same may also be said for the law.' Would it not, however, have been better in a work presumably designed to a large extent for business men to employ somewhat simpler language than the following: 'So far as the law recognises the usage with reference to which the parties contract the usage constitutes the law uti nuncupassit ita jus esto prevails now as it did in the days of the XII. Tables.' We have next a short 'preliminary' sketching the effect of the Rules, and then the Rules themselves are considered seriatim. Throughout the work the author wisely, as we think, declines to discard the everyday colloquialisms which have long obtained currency on the Stock Exchange, and it will be observed that 'bulls,' 'bears,' 'stags,' 'corners,' and 'contangos' are all unceremoniously introduced as familiar household words. In Chapter VI. the relations between the broker and his client are considered. The observations here made will be found of value, for, as Mr. Stutfield points out, 'the client, often through ignorance or thoughtlessness, subjects his broker to great trouble and inconvenience when a slight acquaintance with the necessities of the case, of the ways of dealing on the Stock Exchange, to which, of course, the brokers must conform, would make him rather more considerate.'

SMITH'S COMPANY LAW.

The Handy-book of the Law of Joint-Stock Companies, under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890. With directions for Forming a Company. By James Walter Smith, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Twenty-first Thousand. New and Revised Edition. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

This work made its first appearance nearly thirty years ago, and it has been from time to time almost entirely rewritten. It is almost pathetic to follow the account which the author gives us in his preface as to the rapid changes in the law of joint-stock companies, and we wholly agree with his observation on p. 6 that a consolidation of 'the Companies Acts would be very convenient.' In 1888 we had several additions made bearing on the subject, one of them being, in the author's opinion, 'an important contribution to the unintelligibility of the Stamp Acts.' The three Acts added by the legislation of 1890 are very important, and are embodied in the present work, which will be found handy and useful.

M'ARTHUR ON MARINE INSURANCE.

The Contract of Marine Insurance. Second Edition. By Charles M'Arthur. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.). 1890.

The five years which have passed since the first edition of this work appeared have been productive of many changes in the law of marine insurance. The general effect of these changes is summed up by Mr. M'Arthur as follows: Numerous and important decisions have been given by the Courts on points in respect of which the law had previously been doubtful or undeclared, and to give effect to these decisions as well as to reconcile divergencies of practice, additional rules have been made for the guidance of average adjusters. New clauses have been framed for insertion in policies, and some of the previously existing clauses have been modified to suit the ever-varying exigencies of business. Finally, an important step has been taken in the direction of an international system of general average by the revision of the York-Antwerp Rules. The York-Antwerp Rules, 1890, are given in Appendix VI., and a new chapter has been added on the subject of mutual insurance contracts, in which the many cases decided in recent years in this subject are collected. The work is carefully executed and brought down well to date. A good specimen of Mr. M'Arthur's work is to be found at p. 5 et seq., where he discusses the law as to 'the communication of material facts,' ending with the decisions in Blackburn, Low & Co. v. Vigors, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 114; L. R. 12 App. Cas. 531, and Blackburn, Low & Co. v. Haslam, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 479; L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 144. The book would be improved by further references to other reports of the cases cited.

FISHER AND STRAHAN'S LAW OF THE PRESS.

The Law of the Press. A Digest of the Law specially affecting Newspapers: with a Chapter on Foreign Press Codes and an Appendix containing the Text of all the Leading Statutes. By J. R. Fisher and J. A. Strahan. London: Clowes & Sons. 1891.

There is slowly growing up, as stated by the authors of this book in their preface and as recently evidenced by the Newspaper Registration and Libel Act of 1881 and the Law of Libel Amendment Act, 1888, a distinct law of the press. This law has, we think, been very successfully dealt with, the leading cases being fully brought out and the comments being appropriate and clear. We find successive chapters on registration, postal regulations, advertisements, copyright, proprietor and staff in the first part; the law of libel in the second; and foreign press laws in the third. There is, perhaps, a little too much about copyright and libel; and, in comparing the Postmaster-General and the Treasury to Pilate and Herod respectively, the indignation of the authors against post-office regulations has carried them too far. There are more than three hundred pages. The price is nowhere stated.

SMITH ON HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A Handy-book on the Law of Husband and Wife. By James Walter Smith, Esq., B.A., LL.D., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Eleventh Thousand. New and Revised Edition. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

In this handy treatise the law of husband and wife, and matters relating thereto, is summed up in twenty chapters. The first chapter is devoted to the consideration of the law respecting the position of parties who have not yet entered into the matrimonial state, and deals with engagements to marry and of contracts to bring about a marriage. The last chapter treats of the law relating to children, and in the Appendix the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is set out in full. Mr. Smith's opinion of this measure is that it shows as a patched piece of work, and lacks the unity of design and uniformity of expression which it would have had if left wholly to one draftsman, even though not one of the best. The book is carefully written, and will be found useful.

Commercial Failures.—According to Kemp's Mercantile Gazette the number of failures in England and Wales gazetted during the week ending March 28 was eighty-one. The number in the corresponding week of last year was eighty-seven, showing a decrease of six, being a net decrease in 1891, to date, of 131.

Unreported Cases.

CONSISTORY COURT OF LONDON.

ST. GABRIEL, FENCHURCH—FACULTY FOR RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS CHURCHYARD.

A SITTING was held on Wednesday, March 25, in St. Paul's Cathedral, before Dr. Tristram, Q.C., Chancellor of the Diocese, who was attended by Mr. Lee, the registrar. This was an application by the rector of the united parishes of St. Gabriel, Fenchurch, and St. Margaret Pattens, in the city of London, and the churchwardens of the parish of St. Gabriel, Fenchurch, and the City of London Real Property Company (Lim.) for a faculty to authorise the granting to the company of a right of way across the churchyard of St. Gabriel, Fenchurch. The City of London Real Property Company (Lim.) are the owners of the property adjoining and abutting on the west side of the churchyard of St. Gabriel, Fenchurch. By an agreement made on April 24, 1890, between the rector and churchwardens of the parish and the company, the rector and churchwardens concurred in granting to the company a right of footway across the churchyard from Fen Court to the property of the company for a term of eighty years, and at a yearly rental, payable to the rector, of 45*l.*, the pathway over which the right of way was granted to be paved, drained, and fenced in with iron railing sand gates in accordance with the specifications and drawings to be approved by the surveyor of the rector and churchwardens and under his superintendence, all such works to be executed at the cost of the company. The present application was now made for a faculty to authorise the granting of the right of way.—Mr. H. C. Richards said the Court had already granted a faculty authorising the company to open windows on the churchyard, and the present application was for a faculty to authorise the granting of a right of way to the company across the churchyard. The right of presentation to the living was alternately with the Lord Chancellor and the Corporation of London, and it had been necessary to obtain the consent, not only of the Lord Chancellor, but also of the Corporation of London. Both the Lord Chancellor and the Corporation of London had consented. The Corporation of London had suggested that the passage or way through the company's premises into Lime Street should remain an open one for fourteen years from December 25, 1890, and that, instead of the right of way being granted for 500 years, as originally proposed, it should be granted for eighty years and at a yearly rental of 45*l.*, and this had been agreed to. The churchyard was closed for burials by Order in Council in 1853.—Evidence was then given in support of the application. Resolutions of the vestry were produced agreeing to the granting of the right of way.—Mr. Soulsby, for the City of London Real Property Company (Lim.), supported the application.—Mr. W. A. Godwin, secretary to the City of London Real Property Company (Lim.), said the company were owners in fee of the premises 35 and 36 Lime Street, in respect of which the right of way across the churchyard was asked for. The company assented to the requirements of the Corporation as regarded the increase of the rent to 45*l.*, and the reduction of the term for which the right of way was to be granted from 500 to eighty years. The whole of the work was to be undertaken at the entire expense of the company, and carried out under the superintendence of the parish surveyor. It was also agreed that the way should be open to the public between certain hours and on certain conditions.—The Chancellor of London granted the faculty asked for. It was no detriment to the churchyard or to the houses adjoining to make the pathway, and it was of advantage to the church by increasing the rector's income, and it would also be of material advantage to the public, inasmuch as the public, subject to certain conditions, would have a right of way, not only through the churchyard, but also through the property of the company. The Court would grant the faculty as prayed.—The faculty was accordingly granted.—Mr. H. C. Richards and Mr. Nelson appeared for the rector and churchwardens; and Mr. Hugh R. Soulsby for the City of London Real Property Company (Lim.) in support of the application.

ST. PAUL'S, CAMDEN SQUARE—FACULTY FOR CHANCEL SCREEN.

This was an application for a faculty to authorise certain alterations in the church of St. Paul's, Camden Square. It was proposed, among other alterations, to place a chancel screen with gates in the church.—The Chancellor of London said that, as a general rule, the practice of the Court was not to permit chancel gates until it was proved that they would be of real utility to the church. As it was now the practice for churches to be open during the daytime, it was no doubt desirable that persons should not have an opportunity of going into the chancel. The evidence before the Court satisfied it that the gates would be of utility. It was in the discretion of the Court to grant a faculty for a chancel screen with or without gates, and, where the Court was satisfied that the gates would be of real utility to the church, the Court was prepared to grant a faculty for a chancel screen with gates. In this case the Court was satisfied that the gates would be of real utility to the church, and he granted the faculty as prayed.—The faculty was accordingly granted.

COUNTY COURT.

INJURY TO CATTLE—BARBED WIRE.

At Crediton County Court on November 19, 1890, and January 21, 1891, before his Honour Judge Edge, the case of Bennett v. Blackmore was heard. His Honour: This is an action to recover damages for an injury sustained by the plaintiff's mare, alleged to have been caused by the defendant placing a barbed-wire fence on a portion of his land which adjoined the plaintiff's field. I find the facts to be as follows: The plaintiff is the tenant of a farm at Morchard Bishop, and the defendant is the rector of the parish, and, as such, occupies the glebe land which adjoins the plaintiff's farm. Between a field, a part of the glebe, and a field of the plaintiff's called Wood Park, there is an ordinary fence, consisting of a ditch and a bank, and upon the latter a hedge of underwood. The ditch and bank are upon the defendant's land, and it was admitted by the defendant at the hearing that the fence had always been maintained and repaired by himself and his predecessors in the living. Neither the plaintiff nor his father or grandfather, who had occupied the farm for a great number of years, had ever repaired the fence, which, I have no doubt, had been maintained by the owners of the glebe for the mutual benefit of the occupiers of both farms. For some time previous to the occurrences forming the subject of this action, horses placed in the defendant's field occasionally forced their way through the fence and got into plaintiff's field, and it is alleged that animals from the plaintiff's field had in like manner got into defendant's land. However that may be, a gap had been made between the two fields, and on August 13 last two horses from the defendant's land got through the gap and were found trespassing in the plaintiff's field. They were at once turned out by the plaintiff or his men, and a message was sent to the defendant informing him of what had occurred, and requesting him to make up the gap. The defendant was not at home, but the message was received and acted upon by his hind, for whom the defendant accepts responsibility. The next day the hind proceeded to make up the gap by placing wooden rails on the side next the glebe land and field-stakes with three lines of barbed wire on the side next the plaintiff's field. The lowest wire was fixed about fourteen inches from the ground below it, but this ground was higher than the natural level of plaintiff's field, owing to the bank having fallen down and filled up the ditch and made a small mound above it. The plaintiff's mare was placed in his field on August 15, and the same day the plaintiff saw and examined the barbed wire; but I do not think the mere fact of his allowing the mare to remain in the field amounted to contributory negligence. The next day the mare was found to be injured on one of her legs, just about fourteen inches from the bottom of her hoof. There was great contention as to the possibility of this injury having been caused by the barbed wire, and several witnesses were called by defendant to show they had experimented by trying to get a horse into such a position as it could touch the barbed wire, and failed to do so; but I do not attach much importance to this evidence, inasmuch as there is a great difference between forcing an unwilling horse into a certain position and a willing horse of its own motion placing itself in that position. From the cumulative evidence of a number of facts, pointing in one direction, as to the size, shape and position of the wound; the hoof marks at the gap, sworn to as being those of the mare; the injury being caused so soon after the wire had been put up, and so soon after the mare had been put in the field, and there being no evidence of anything else likely to cause the injury, I have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that it was caused by a barb on the wire. I have already said that the wire was placed on the defendant's land. As a matter of fact, it was from two to three feet within his boundary, and it is consequently submitted on behalf of defendant, that, in point of law, no action will lie, as he was entitled to put what he pleased on his land, so long as the thing put there did not project into or come upon the plaintiff's land. I consider the barbed wire, placed in the position it was in, very dangerous, especially at a gap where horses had been accustomed to congregate; but, in answer to my questions, defendant's counsel contended that a man liable to fence might put up a fence which was dangerous to his neighbour's cattle if the fence was, as in this case, three feet within his own boundary. I cannot believe that to be the law. It seems to me that, if a man is liable to fence for the benefit of himself and his neighbour, he must put up such a fence as, having regard to the use to which the lands are put, is a benefit and not a source of danger to his neighbour. To state the contrary proposition is to show its absurdity. But even if he is not liable to fence, but does put up a fence, he must, in altering the normal state of things, take care to protect his neighbour from injury (Hawken v. Shearer, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 284). Nor does it make any difference that the dangerous thing is on his own property. If he makes it his fence he must, as was observed by the Lord President of the Court of Session in the Scotch case of the Elgin Road Trustees v. Innes (14 Rettie's Court of Session Cases, 48), be taken to have abandoned everything outside it for the time being, and 'it must be dealt with, therefore, on the same footing as if it were on the very line of the boundary.' That was a case in which barbed wire had been placed on the defendant's land, but so as to leave a narrow strip of land between the fence and the highway; and the Court held it to be dangerous to persons and cattle using the highway, and removable as a nuisance. That is the only case I am aware of where the use of barbed wire has been in question, and where it has been held that an action was maintainable though the thing complained of was on the defendant's land and never came upon the plaintiffs'. It is true the fence in that case was placed along the public highway; but I cannot see that makes any difference, except that there it was an actionable wrong to the public, whilst here it is an actionable wrong to an individual. The cases cited by Mr. Bullen as to dog-spears and spring-guns appear to me to have been decided upon very different considerations. In those cases the injuries were caused by the plaintiffs wilfully going where they had no right to be; but even then, in the majority of cases, damages were recovered. In the dog and hare case, the dog ran some considerable distance into the plantation after the hare, and was injured by a dog-spear there, and the Court held in effect that the owner, in taking it along a footpath through a plantation, ought to have had it under control. That is a far different case to this, where the barbed wire was dangerous to cattle lawfully in the plaintiff's field. There was not much cross-examination as to the damages, which are probably from their nature uncertain; but, as Mr. Heath put them at from 20*l.* to 25*l.*, I think I shall be doing fairly if I assess them at 21*l.* The verdict will be for the plaintiff for 21*l.* and costs.—Leave to appeal was given, but the appeal has been abandoned.—Roberts (instructed by Searle) for plaintiff; Bullen (instructed by Carter) for defendant.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Lord Grimthorpe writes to the Times as follows:—

I learn both from some newspaper articles and from private inquiries that there is considerable misapprehension about the law and practice relating to the addition and selection of the members of the Judicial Committee for such a case as the Lincoln or Lambeth appeal now pending. Some persons are alarmed at the possibility of the Court being packed again as it was in the Bennett case, while others are confidently repeating the answer of the First Lord of the Treasury to Colonel Sandys on March 10 that it is impossible, for that 'the Government has nothing whatever to do with the selection of the members who are to try any particular case.' It is desirable that both the legal possibilities and the practice should be better understood. It is clear that Mr. Smith was imperfectly informed by some legal adviser who knew little of either the Acts of Parliament or the practice, as explained by the late registrar to the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission in 1882.

He said that for the Bennett Case Lord Hatherley, with or for Lord Ripon as President, gave the very proper order that all the then members should be summoned, and they were, being left to arrange among themselves who should sit. He added that the same practice had been continued ever since in ecclesiastical cases, though not in others, where some judges were summoned according to the nature of the case and their previous experience, besides some of general experience. It is evident that no other plan would escape accusations of the Court being packed according to supposed ecclesiastical prejudices. And in that very case, after the general summonses were gone, and only four days before the trial, Mr. Gladstone filled up the vacancies of the two nominee members, under 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41, one with Sir Montague Smith, a perfectly proper appointment, and the other with Montague Bernard, the editor of the Guardian, whose vote was afterwards rejoiced over by another of the High Church newspapers as having turned the scale in favour of Bennett. The committee itself all but stated that the majority was as small as possible. For Lord Cairns's illegal 'muzzling order' had not then been issued (as it was after the Ridsdale Case, where there was a small minority afterwards disclosed), pretending to interpret the Privy Councillor's oath for them and ordering them not to tell how they had voted, even out of Court. Sir Fitzroy Kelly smashed its validity to pieces in the opinion of every lawyer I ever heard speak of it, except a relation of Lord Cairns. There is one vacancy in those two nominee places now.

But, besides that, Mr. Smith's adviser does not appear to know that the same Act contains a (dormant) power for the Crown to send any Privy Councillor into the Judicial Committee pro hâc vice only; and Mr. Gladstone, in the Collier job, also taught it how to make a Privy Councillor, like a judge of the Supreme Court, for the purpose. So the true answer to Colonel Sandys's question (for which he also does not seem to have been well instructed) would have been, not that 'the Crown has nothing to do with the selection of the members to sit,' but has everything to do with it, if it chooses to be unscrupulous. I am far from suspecting the present president of an intention to do anything of the kind, though, oddly enough, we learnt from Bishop Wilberforce's suicidal Life that it was Mr. Gathorne Hardy's hand that, assidente Gladstone, slew the three episcopal judges of the committee, at Wilberforce's instigation. They were afterwards, with all the bishops, reintroduced in rotation batches of five assessors only in 1876—an altogether amusing incident now.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILL (No. 2), 1891.

THE Sheffield District Incorporated Law Society have formulated the following observations on and objections to the above bill:—

1. The bill is objectionable in its principle, as creating a State department for the transaction of private business of a kind which essentially requires personal knowledge of the circumstances of each case, and tact and delicacy of management. It is not to be supposed that the officers of a public department, who necessarily proceed by rule, can satisfactorily transact business of this kind.

2. There is no evidence that any legislation whatever is required.

3. Although the bill is permissive, the office will gradually appropriate to itself a large part of the trust business of the country, both owing to the inclination of the Courts to appoint an official, and the tendency of every public department to increase the scope of its powers, so as to become self-supporting.

4. The business, as conducted by a public department, will be done, if not badly, at all events, neither so expeditiously nor so cheaply to the cestuis que trust as under the present system.

5. The patronage the Act will place in the hands of any Government is objectionable.

6. The great expense which will be entailed by the appointment of the public trustee, with branch offices in the large provincial towns, and the great cost it will cause by the payment of salaries to officials, is uncalled for, and will prove to be oppressive to the country at large.

7. The necessary large expense caused to each trust estate, payable either out of capital or income, is a serious objection. If the commission charged on the administration of bankruptcy estates (say 6½ per cent.) affords any guide to the cost of the administration of an estate by the public trustee, the amount will be very heavy, and out of all comparison with the present cost of administering trust estates, and the beneficiaries will suffer accordingly.

8. The withdrawal from the provinces and the accumulation in London in the hands of a public official of vast sums of money is detrimental to the interests of commerce and business, and financially unsound.

9. Owners of property will suffer, trust funds being no longer available for loans on their estates. The rate of interest will probably rise, and the expense and difficulty in the negotiation of mortgages will be greatly increased.

10. A serious diminution in the income of trust estates will result, inasmuch as the tendency of the public trustee will be to resort to consols, paying now only 2*l.* 15*s.*, and before long 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. Great hardships will be occasioned, particularly in small estates.

ARTHUR WIGHTMAN, President.
HERBERT BRAMLEY, Hon. Secretary.

Sheffield: March 20.

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

HINTS ON COMPANY MATTERS.

A RECENT lecture under the title 'Suggestions for the Consideration of Accountants' has attracted much attention. The lecturer, Mr. T. B. Moxon, in the first place, pointed out the stringent nature of the requirements of the French Code de Commerce as to the books to be kept by a trader; and, further, that the French Code insists upon a yearly stock-taking and balance-sheet. The lecturer was of opinion that articles of association ought to set forth clearly how the powers of companies in drawing, endorsing, accepting, and negotiating bills, and in entering into commercial contracts should be exercised. The articles should empower the directors of a company by resolution to authorise any one or more persons, jointly or severally, to do such things for the company, with power to revoke such authority or to substitute fresh agents; and similar provision might advantageously be made in respect of the exercise of borrowing powers granted by the articles of association. The last word in the name of a limited liability company must be the word 'limited,' and the requirements of the Act are not satisfied by the adoption of the abbreviation 'ld.' The Act required that the name of the company should be exhibited outside every office or place where its business was carried on, and that it should have its name engraved in legible characters on its seal, and mentioned in all notices, bills, cheques, orders for money or goods, bills of parcels, invoices, receipts, &c., and the penalty on the company for not thus publishing its name was 5*l* a day, and every director or manager who issued or authorised the issue of any of the above documents 'whereon its name is not mentioned in manner aforesaid' was liable to a penalty of 50*l.* for each offence, and was further personally liable to the holder of any such document for the amount thereof unless the same was duly paid by the company. The Act further required that bills of exchange and other documents of a like nature must be distinctly made 'on behalf of the company.' The proper form of signing for a company was 'For Brown, Jones & Co. (Limited), A. Brown, director.' An instance lately arose in which officials, who described themselves as officials, but did not say they signed for the company, were held to be personally liable. Reference was also made to the register of mortgages and charges which every company is required to keep and to submit to the inspection of any creditor or shareholder on application; the annual list of shareholders which every company must send to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies within twenty-one days after its first general meeting in each year, and the register of members from the date of registration of the company, which must be open to inspection for at least two hours a day, free of charge to shareholders, and on payment of not more than 1*s.* to any other person.' It has been held that it was the duty of the auditor, in auditing the accounts of the company, not to confine himself to verifying the arithmetical accuracy of the balance-sheet, but to inquire into its substantial accuracy and to ascertain that it contained the particulars specified in the articles of association and was properly drawn up, so as to contain a true and accurate representation of the state of the company's affairs, and as improper payments which had been made with the natural and immediate consequence of the breach of duty on the part of the manager and auditor they were held liable in damages to the amount so paid, as far as the Statute of Limitations did not cover them. In this case the directors also were held jointly and severally liable to make good the loss incurred, because they had fallen short of the standard of care they ought to have applied to the affairs of the company. The lecture was delivered under the auspices of the Manchester Society of Incorporated Accountants.

BICYCLES AND THEIR MANUFACTURE.

Mr. Justice Charles lately, at the Midland Assizes, gave judgment in a case of some interest to cyclists, which will touch them more especially now that the summer season is fast approaching. It appeared that a bicycle manufacturer sought to recover from a bicycle retailer damages for breach of contract in not taking certain machines contracted to be supplied to him by the plaintiff. Out of an order for 100, twelve had been delivered, and then the defendant repudiated the contract on the ground that the machines were rubbish and constantly needed repairs. Nevertheless, judgment was delivered for the plaintiff. The judge pointed out that, where reasonable steps were taken to secure the safety of a machine and where the defect was latent, there was no blame to be attached to the vendor. If the machines which had been refused were articles which the plaintiff could have taken to the market and sold at the same price which he would have received from the defendant, then the case would have been one for nominal damages. Having regard to the nature of the case and to the articles, he could not say that they could have been taken to the market and sold for the price which defendant would have paid. If they were absolutely unsaleable the plaintiff would have been entitled to the whole value, but he still regarded them as saleable articles, and said he had lost a profit on each. Judgment would therefore be in plaintiff's favour. During the course of the trial it was stated that, if a machine broke down the first time it was used, it would be called a 'waster.' Sometimes the joints are not perfectly brazed, but in fitting a machine that might happen, and the workman not be aware of it. Brazing could not always be done with certainty, but when it was found to be faulty it could be easily remedied. Some machines sold at 12*l.* only cost 5*l.* 10*s.* These are curious revelations, but doubtless well understood in the trade.

THE EXAMINATION OF TITLE.

There has been much dispute as to the advantage of having land transferred in the same way as other property is sold—that is to say, apparently without examination of title. The recent strictures on the present law as to forged transfers seem, however, to point out more clearly the undoubted advantages of such examination as to land and the desirability of its extension to shares. According to a contemporary, if a purchaser buys shares under a title which in any link depends upon a forgery, although he may have been entered upon the books of the company and have enjoyed the position and privileges of a shareholder for many years, he is liable to be ousted from his position and to be compelled to repay the dividends he has received whenever the true owner turns up and discovers the forgery. It is of no avail to the purchaser that his transfer has been passed to the directors or that it has been duly 'certificated'—that is, that in answer to the usual inquiry made by the lawyer before he pays his money the company have assured him that the seller has lodged with them his certificate for the purposes of transfer. If, however, the purchaser has bought shares from a vendor to whom the company have issued a share certificate, and it turns out that the vendor claimed under a forgery, and had therefore no title, the company are liable in damages to the purchaser since he bought a worthless right upon the faith of their representation in the certificate. As no one thinks of making an inquiry into the title to shares upon a sale, as is done under similar circumstances where land is sold, the present law is most unsatisfactory. Some railway companies propose to get out of the difficulty by means of guarantees. According to the bill in Parliament, however, it is proposed to make registration of transfers compulsory, the company to make reasonable bye-laws as to (a) execution and attestation, (b) reasonable inquiries as to persons, circumstances, documents, dealings, and the demand of a statutory declaration at company's expense. Compensation in event of forgery to be either new shares or market value of old.

DIRECTORS' LIABILITY.

It is a nice question whether directors can contract themselves out of the provisions of the Liability Act of last year. The waiver clause must first provide that the applicant for shares agrees not to put in force the statutory remedy. An application in this form followed by an allotment would constitute a contract; then follows the question, Can a contract which is virtually an abrogation of a statutory right be deemed to be a valid contract? A contemporary thinks not, on the ground that it is contrary to public policy. A propos of this subject our contemporary points out it is a curious phase of our method of administering law that it is nobody's business to see that Acts of Parliament are complied with. The Attorney-General gave it as his opinion the other day that the insertion of a waiver clause in prospectuses as to the Directors' Liability Bill would certainly be an avoiding—he was not prepared to go so far as to say an evasion—of the provisions of the Act of 1890; but it was not his duty to undertake a prosecution. Upon whom, then, does the duty devolve? Whose duty is it to see that the law is enforced? What is the use of having a lot of Acts of Parliament which are merely dead letters on the statute-book? Perhaps some persons would say that the only way to find out what is the legal interpretation of any given Act or clause of an Act is to bring an action. But this frequently throws the onus on the wrong shoulders, and an innocent shareholder is forced into litigation in order to obtain his rights and a proper fulfilment of the law.

A BIT OF FRENCH LAW.

It is customary among French peasants to donate and divide land and goods prior to death. When the father increases in years and can no longer work he usually decides to divide his land among all his children. On a certain fixed day they accordingly all adjourn to the village lawyer, and there the poor old man transfers all his land. According to the law of France an equal division of the father's property is allotted to each child, and therefore a surveyor makes the measurements. Assuming there are five children, then the land will be divided into five lots. The name of each lot is then written on a bit of paper, the children draw for the lots, and all is done. The amount to be allowed to the parents who have thus lost all the property must, however, be arranged, but the unscrupulous children try and beat the amount down. Remembering that possession is nine points of the law, and having once got it, the children frequently ignore their parents altogether. The superiority of one plot of land over another, however, often occasions quarrels among the children themselves. Do they really manage these things better in France?

MODERN LAW BOOKS.

Law books, like their subject, have in the past been wont to be conservative in their forms. Law being a science, it was treated scientifically in the texts, and for the initiated who knew the key to the stores of legal lore such treatment was at once the clearest, most regular, and most satisfactory. It is now some time since English lawyers hit on the happy expedient of writing popular law books to save laymen from lawyers' bills, with the result of provoking more litigation than ever. Yet another sort of law book has of late years been making its appearance—namely, that expounding the law applicable to a particular trade, profession, or business. This class can certainly be justified. It makes no pretence of rendering every man his own lawyer, but it enables every one to form some idea of the legal relations which affect his sphere of life, and it is by no means to be despised by the practising lawyer. All these views were written à propos of 'The Law of the Press,' which the Scotsman recently reviewed in its columns. It conceives that we, the English, with an insatiable appetite for legislation, are on the fair road already to having a newspaper law code of considerable size, but they (the Scots) have fortunately been spared up till now such an infliction. Considering the sweeping changes which have been made in the direction of simplifying English law, it is a matter for surprise that the canny Scots should still permit their legal lore to be enshrouded in uncouth words and phrases when more simple language would answer the purpose quite as well.

HEIRS WANTED.

Mr. Sidney H. Preston, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

The 'agony' columns of our leading newspapers are sources of considerable amusement to many people, as notices of an extraordinary and generally romantic character are often to be found there. Probably by far the more numerous kindred notices are those issued by solicitors and others inquiring for missing persons for their 'advantage.' The more noticeable cases of this description during 1890 were the following:—

Jane Allnatt (children of), Maud C. Baylis, James H. Blandy (last heard of 1873), William Bottomley, Annie H. Bridgman, James Brown (son of Robert), Augustus A. Campbell, John Cayzer, Sir Edward Cheetham, John Childs, Henry S. Church (emigrated 1843), Edmund Clark (sailor), John Clint (Liverpool), Clara Cooper, Henry Cozens, Edwin A. Dadds, Charles Denton (last heard of 1874), George and Benjamin Emmerson (or descendants), Patrick Ewing, Helen Geary (children of), William Geary (supposed to have died in some hospital), Honora Green (next-of-kin of), Edward Hall (or children), Charles and Thomas Harrison (formerly of Newcastle-on-Tyne), Mary Hayward (Portsmouth), Hayward family, Frederick Hooker (next-of-kin of), Emma Hunt (milliner), George R. Jackson (cabdriver), Ellen Kenna (next-of-kin of), Knighton family, Robert Lynd, Owen M'Cabe, Frank Marshall (sailed from Liverpool 1881), Archibald E. Mathison, Millett family (Wilts), Henry Mossop (Cumberland), Arthur R. Payne, John Pedler (seaman), John R. Pringle (Edinburgh), William Purchase (emigrated 1848), James H. Roberts, or children, Elizabeth Sargent, Jane Shesring, Henry G. Standley, Mary B. Steel, Robert and William Tait (Edinburgh), Richard Tallett, or Tullett, Charles Tarry, James Wainwright, Thomas B. Waterhouse (last heard of 1863), Sarah Winkle, Sarah Wormald, and the Yates family (Manchester).

Many of these missing individuals are wanted to claim money or property more or less considerable, and you may therefore like to record the fact in your widely-read paper. Mr. Punch may have been quite right when he observed that the first, or 'hatches, matches, and despatches,' columns of our leading papers were the most widely read, yet I venture to think that the 'agony' columns far outshine them in general interest.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR QUEEN'S BENCH CHAMBERS.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

A to F.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Johnson are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 110, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

G to N.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Walton are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 175, at 11.30 A.M., on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

O to Z.

All applications by summons or otherwise in actions assigned to Master Wilberforce are to be made returnable before him in his own Room, No. 179, at 11.30 A.M., on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

The parties are to meet in the anteroom of Masters' Chambers, and the summonses will be inserted in the printed list for the day after the summonses to be heard before the master sitting in chambers, and will be called over by the attendant on the respective rooms for a first and second time at 11.30, and will be dealt with by the master in the same manner as if they were returnable at chambers.

By Order of the Masters.

Masters in Chambers.

A to F.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Kaye.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Pollock.

G to N.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Macdonell.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Butler.

O to Z.

Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays: Master Archibald.
Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays: Master Manley Smith.

SITTINGS PAPERS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

COURT OF APPEAL.

APPEAL COURT I.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION, THE PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (ADMIRALTY), AND THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION SITTING IN BANKRUPTCY.

April

Tuesday 7 Appeal Motions, ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Wednesday 8, Thursday 9 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 10 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 11 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 13 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 14, Wednesday 15, Thursday 16 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 17 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals
Saturday 18 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 20 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 21, Wednesday 22, Thursday 23 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 24 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 25 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 27 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 28, Wednesday 29, Thursday 30 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

May

Friday 1 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 2 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 4 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 5, Wednesday 6, Thursday 7 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 8 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Saturday 9 Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Monday 11 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions, and Queen's Bench Final Appeals if required.
Tuesday 12, Wednesday 13, Thursday 14 — Queen's Bench Final Appeals.
Friday 15 Bankruptcy Appeals and Queen's Bench Final Appeals.

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors), and also the Queen's Bench New Trial Paper, will be taken on days to be appointed by the Court.

APPEAL COURT II.

FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY APPEALS FROM THE CHANCERY, AND PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISIONS (PROBATE AND DIVORCE), AND THE COUNTY PALATINE AND STANNARIES COURTS.

April

Tuesday 7 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Wednesday 8 Chancery Final Appeals.
Thursday 9 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday 10, Saturday 11, Monday 13, Tuesday 14 — Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 15 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 16, Friday 17, Saturday 18, Monday 20, Tuesday 21 — Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 22 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 23, Friday 24, Saturday 25, Monday 27, Tuesday 28 — Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 29 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.

May

Thursday 30, Friday 1, Saturday 2, Monday 4, Tuesday 5 — Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 6 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 7 County Palatine Appeals (if any) and Chancery Final Appeals.
Friday 8, Saturday 9, Monday 11, Tuesday 12 — Chancery Final Appeals.
Wednesday 13 Appeal Motions ex parte, Original Motions, Appeals from Orders made on Interlocutory Motions (sep. List), and Chancery Final Appeals if required.
Thursday 14, Friday 15 — Chancery Final Appeals.

N.B.—Lunacy Petitions (if any) are taken in Appeal Court II. on every Monday, at Eleven, until further notice.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

CHANCERY COURT I.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

April

Tuesday 7 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Wednesday 8, Thursday 9 — Non-Witness List.
Friday 10 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday 11 Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday 13 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 14, Wednesday 15, Thursday 16 — Non-Witness List.
Friday 17 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday 18 Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday 20 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 21, Wednesday 22, Thursday 23 — Causes with Witnesses.
Friday 24 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday 25 Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday 27 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 28, Wednesday 29, Thursday 30 — Causes with Witnesses.

May

Friday 1 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday 2 Petitions, Short Causes, Opposed Petitions, Procedure Summonses, and Non-Witness List.
Monday 4 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 5, Wednesday 6, Thursday 7 — Non-Witness List.
Friday 8 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Saturday 9 Petitions, Short Causes, Procedure Summonses, Opposed Petitions, and Non-Witness List.
Monday 11 Sitting in Chambers.

May

Tuesday 12 } Non-Witness List.
Wednesday 13 }
Thursday 14 Motions and Non-Witness List.
Friday 15 Motions continued and Non-Witness List.

N.B.—In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

N.B.—The following papers on Further Consideration are required for the use of the Judge—viz. Two copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, one copy Pleadings, and one copy Chief Clerk's Certificate, which must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Further Consideration is ready to come into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT II.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

April

Tuesday 7 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday 8 } Adjourned Summonses.
Thursday 9 }
Friday 10 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 11 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 13 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 14 }
Wednesday 15 } Adjourned Summons.
Thursday 16 }
Friday 17 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 18 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 20 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 21 }
Wednesday 22 } Adjourned Summonses.
Thursday 23 }
Friday 24 Motions and Adjourned Summonses
Saturday 25 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 27 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 28 }
Wednesday 29 } General Paper.
Thursday 30 }

May

Friday 1 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 2 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 4 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 5 }
Wednesday 6 } General Paper.
Thursday 7 }
Friday 8 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 9 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 11 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 12 }
Wednesday 13 } General Paper.
Thursday 14 }
Friday 15 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a Short Cause before Mr. Justice Chitty or Mr. Justice North must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard. Two Copies of Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order must be left in Court with the Judge's Clerk the day before the Cause is to be put in the Paper.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE STIRLING.

April

Tuesday 7 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Wednesday 8 } General Paper.
Thursday 9 }
Friday 10 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday 11 Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday 13 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 14 }
Wednesday 15 } General Paper.
Thursday 16 }
Friday 17 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday 18 Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday 20 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 21 }
Wednesday 22 } General Paper.
Thursday 23 }
Friday 24 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday 25 Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday 27 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 28 }
Wednesday 29 } General Paper.
Thursday 30 }

May

Friday 1 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday 2 Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday 4 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 5 }
Wednesday 6 } General Paper.
Thursday 7 }
Friday 8 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Saturday 9 Short Causes, Petitions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.
Monday 11 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 12 }
Wednesday 13 } General Paper.
Thursday 14 }
Friday 15 Motions, Adjourned Summonses, and General Paper.

Any Cause intended to be heard as a short Cause must be so marked in the Cause Book at least one clear day before the same can be put in the Paper to be so heard, and the necessary Papers, including Minutes of the proposed Judgment or Order, must be left with the Judge's Clerk one clear day before the Cause is to be put into the Paper.

CHANCERY COURT IV.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE KEKEWICH.

April

Tuesday 7 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Wednesday 8 } General Paper.
Thursday 9 }
Friday 10 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 11 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 13 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 14 }
Wednesday 15 } General Paper.
Thursday 16 }
Friday 17 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 18 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 20 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 21 }
Wednesday 22 } General Paper.
Thursday 23 }
Friday 24 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 25 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 27 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 28 }
Wednesday 29 } General Paper.
Thursday 30 }

May

Friday 1 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 2 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 4 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 5 }
Wednesday 6 } General Paper.
Thursday 7 }
Friday 8 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.
Saturday 9 Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses.
Monday 11 Sitting in Chambers.
Tuesday 12 }
Wednesday 13 } General Paper.
Thursday 14 }
Friday 15 Motions and Adjourned Summonses.

Liverpool and Manchester Business will be taken as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Short Causes, Petitions, and Adjourned Summonses on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons, Liverpool and Manchester Summonses being taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Liverpool Summonses on Friday, April 10.

CHANCERY COURT III.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Actions transferred for Trial or Hearing only will be taken in the order in the Cause List on every day of the Sittings from April 7 to May 15, both inclusive.

CAUSE LISTS.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

THE COURT OF APPEAL.

Appeal Court I.—Notices.

N.B.—Queen's Bench Interlocutory Appeals will be taken in Court I. on Tuesday, April 7, and afterwards on every Monday in Easter Sittings.

N.B.—Subject to Interlocutory Appeals on Tuesday and Bankruptcy Appeals on Friday, Queen's Bench Final Appeals will be taken in Court I. during the first week of the Sittings, and afterwards subject to the Order of the Court.

N.B.—The Queen's Bench New Trial Paper will be taken at times to be appointed by the judges after the commencement of the Sittings

N.B.—Admiralty Appeals (with Assessors) will be taken in Court I. on days specially appointed by the Court.

Appeal Court II.—Notices.

N.B.—Interlocutory Appeals from the Chancery and Probate and Divorce Divisions will be taken in Court II. on Tuesday, April 7, and afterwards on every Wednesday in Easter Sittings.

N.B.—Hampson v. Guy (part heard) and Reeves v. Pennington will follow the Interlocutory Appeals in the paper of Court II. on Tuesday, April 7.

Appeals from the Lancaster Palatine Court (if any) will be taken in Court II. on Thursday, April 9, and on Thursday, May 7; see Notice at end of List of Palatine Appeals.

Lunacy matters will be taken in Court II. on every Monday, at 11, until further notice.

APPEALS FOR HEARING.

(SET DOWN TO THURSDAY, MARCH 26, INCLUSIVE.)

From the Chancery Division.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Dashwood v. Magniac

FOR HEARING.

Final List.

1890.

In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec.
Crawford v. Royal Infirmary and other charities
In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec.
Crawford v. Forshaw

In re Henry Woollcombe, dec.
Woollcombe v. Woollcombe (construction)

1891.

Tucker v. Kaye and others
Redman v. Rymer
Angus v. Clifford
In re Aurum Co. & Co.'s Acts, ex parte S. M. Sulybach & Co.
Walthamstow Local Board v. Staines
In re National Debenture and Assets Corporation (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts (petition)
In re C. Palmer, dec.
Palmer v. Hardwick
In re Lacon, dec.
Lacon v. Lacon
In re Williams, dec.
Morgan v. Williams
In re V. Nevin, an infant, and Guardianship of Infants' Act, 1886
Jones v. Dinas Steam Colliery Co. (Lim.) (construction of lease)
Cossey v. Roper
Scholes v. Brook
In re J. Thorley, dec.
Thorley v. Massam
In re W. R. Thorley, dec.
Thorley v. Massam

Cronbach v. Uranium Mines (Lim.)
Goodall, Backhouse & Co. v. Wilkinson and another
In re Courts of Justice Concentration Site Act, 1884, and Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1855
Gedye v. Commissioners of H.M.'s Works and Public Buildings
In re J. Bald, dec.
Bald v. Bald.
In re Tredwell, dec.
Jaffray v. Tredwell
Boulton v. Carter, Paterson & Co. (Lim.)
Low v. Bouverie
In re Shaw Hall Cotton Spinning Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts
Hair v. Geddes
Odhams v. Biggar
Barrow v. Barrow
Gray and others, exors. of Margaret Gray, added by order v. Sangster and others

From the County Palatine Courts.

FINAL LIST.

1891.

Winby v. Manchester, Bury, Rochdale, and Oldham Steam Tramways Co.
Perry v. Glazebook

In re Higginbotham and Orrell's Settlement Trusts (construction)

N.B.—The County Palatine Appeals, as the dates of setting down are reached in the General and Separate Lists, are taken on the first Thursday in every Sittings, and afterwards on the first Thursday in the following months during the Sittings.

N.B.—During Easter Sittings Palatine Appeals (if any reached) will be taken on the following days, viz.:—
Thursday, April 9.
Thursday, May 7.

From the Chancery Division, and from the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty (Probate and Divorce) Divisions.

INTERLOCUTORY LIST.

1890.

In re Ormerod, Grierson & Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts.

1891.

S. A. Hampson v. W. Guy and others
M. P. Reeves (otherwise Stonehill, spinster) v. E. Pennington
Bonnard v. Perryman

In re D. H. Porrett, one, &c. and Animal Products Co. (Lim.)
In re W. Cheesman, one, &c. (application of W. L. Vernon)
Salomons v. Knight

From the Queen's Bench and Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty (Admiralty) Divisions.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Stuart v. Bell
In re Kent County Council and Council of the Borough of Sandwich and Local Government Act, 1888 (Q. B. Crown Side)

In re Kent County Council and Council of the Borough of Dover and Local Government Act, 1888 (Q. B. Crown Side)
Howlett, on behalf, &c. v. Mayor, &c. of Maidstone

FOR HEARING.

Final List.

1890.

Rogers, Sons & Co. v. Lambert & Co.
Evans v. Newfoundland Railway Co. and others
Smith, Hill & Co. v. Pyman, Bell & Co.
Condy v. Blaiberg
A. Lavesseur and another, Liquidators of La Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux v. Mason and Barry (Lim.)
Lewis v. Pontypridd, Caerphilly and Newport Railway Co.
De Souza v. Cobden

Murray v. Warren
Tynedale Steamship Co. (Lim.) v. Newcastle-on-Tyne Home Trade Insurance Association
Unwin v. Hanson
Newman v. London and South-Western Railway Co.
Kinnell & Co. v. Clements & Co.
Pyke v. Day and another
Richards and others v. Butcher
In re Walbaum's Registered Trade-marks, 28,593, 28,594, and Trade-marks Acts 1891.

Armour v. Bate
Same v. Same
Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Co.
Hick v. Tweedy
Coles v. Fisher
Pelsall Coal and Iron Co. (Lim.) v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Same v. London and North-Western Railway Co. and Great Western Railway Co.
Vernon and others (trustees of Loyal Mundy Lodge of Independent Order of Oddfellows, Manchester Unity) v. Watson (Q. B. Crown Side)
Attorney-General v. Sharpe and another (Q. B. Revenue Side)
Deep Navigation Collieries (Lim.) v. Rhymney Railway Co.
Goddard and another v. Hill
Cox and another v. Welch and another
Skinners' Co. v. Knight and others
F. H. Wenman v. Lyon & Co. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Kingsford v. Oxenden
Woodfin v. Marston & Co. (Lim.)
Braunstein v. Lewis and another
Hilder v. Hume, Webster & Co.
School Board for London v. Wall, Bros.
London Bank of Mexico and South America (Lim.) v. Apthorpe (Surveyor of Taxes) (Q. B. Revenue Side)
Justices of the Peace for the County of Kent v. Sandgate Local Board
De Cosinck v. Singer
Levin & Co. v. Seligsen (trading, &c.)

Lethbridge and another v. Harris and another
Handyside & Co. (Lim.) v. Gentry
Tomkinson and another v. Balkis Consolidated Co. (Lim.)
Gregory v. Casseldon
Brown v. Hawkes (Q. B. Crown Side)
Nash v. Cunard Steamship Co. (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side)
Hick v. Rodocanachi, Sons & Co. and others
Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. (Lim.) v. International Co. of Mexico
Brinkworth v Pentelow
Rhymney Railway Co. v. Bute Docks Co.
Lovering v. City of London and Southwark Subway Co.
Bishop v. Southern Counties Deposit Bank
Brace v. Abercarn Coal Co. (Lim.) (Q. B. Crown Side)
Huggins v. London and South Wales Coal Co. (Q. B. Crown Side)
Challoner v. Vaughan
Cross v. Roberts
Pinto and another v. Trott & Co.
Thomas v. Searles and another (first issue)
Same v. Same (second issue)
Kirkman v. British Shipowners Mutual Protection Association (Lim.)
Tinkler v. Smith and another
Le Messurier v. Taylor
Parkyn and another v. F. Campbell & Co.
Grazebrooke v. Weatherby and others
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Passey

From the Queen's Bench Division.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

1891.

Kilpin v. Knill and another
Bendit v. Goldberg
Worswick v. A. C. W. Hobman & Co.
Wilkinson v. Offord
Daye v. Krauss
Smith v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
Stockings v. Lambeth Waterworks Co.
Butler v. Birnbaum & Son
Crichton (trading, &c.) v. Saunders
Walter v. Everard
Greening v. Ingram
Cotton v. Palmer (extrix. &c.)
Comfort v. Betts
Hembry v. Morgan and another
Knollys v. Mudford and another
Same v. Croes and another
Same v. Goulden (consolidated actions)

From Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Admiralty).

FOR HEARING.

(With Nautical Assessors.)

1890.

Owners, Masters, and Crews of Steamships Inverness, Flying Scud, Heather Bell, and Spurn v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight
Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight and Owners of Ship Albert Edward and others v. Owners of Ship Accomac, Cargo and Freight 1891.

Owners of Eloy Palacios and Cargo v. Owners of Homewood and Freight
Owners of Homewood v. Owners of Eloy Palacios
G. B. Vassals and others v. Owners of Boston City
Owners of The Star of England v. Owners of The Vesper
Owners of Eaton Hall v. C. B. Theobald (captain of H.M.S. Rupert
Teeside Iron Engine Works Co. (Lim.) v. C. C. Duncan
Owners of Ship Sudbourne and others v. Owners of Ship Mangalore

From the Queen's Bench Division, sitting in Bankruptcy.

1891.

In re Cameron and others, ex parte Debtors and others
In re H. R. Wallis, ex parte Board of Trade
In re T. R. Coffey, ex parte Board of Trade
In re A. Spencer, ex parte T. A. Beasley (trustee)
In re L. J. Twyne, ex parte Debtor
In re J. Best, ex parte Lewis (trustee)
In re A. Webber, ex parte S. Slater

From the Queen's Bench Division.

INTERLOCUTORY LIST.

1890.

Giffard v. Mayor, &c. of Wolverhampton

1891.

In re an Arbitration between J. Knight and Tabernacle Permanent Building Society and Arbitration and Building Societies Acts
Regina v. Justices of Lancaster (Q. B. Crown Side)
Same v. Same
Hollewell and another v. Rawstorn
Same v. Scott & Co.

SUMMARY OF APPEALS.

	Final	Interlocutory	Total
From the Chancery Division	28	7	35
From County Palatine Courts	3	—	3
From the Queen's Bench Division	61	6	67
From the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, Admiralty with Assessors	7	—	7
From the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy	7	—	7
New Trial Paper	15	—	15
Totals	121	13	134

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

CAUSES FOR TRIAL OR HEARING.

(Set down to Thursday, March 26, inclusive.)

Motions, Petitions, and Short Causes will be taken on the usual days, as stated in the Easter Sittings Paper.

Mr. Justice CHITTY will take Witness Actions on the following days—viz. April 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 30. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings. In the weeks when Non-Witness Actions are taken Further Considerations will be taken on Tuesdays. In the weeks when Witness Actions are taken, Further Considerations will not be taken on Tuesdays, but may be taken on Saturdays.

Mr. Justice NORTH will take Adjourned Summonses, specially, on the following days—viz. April 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, in addition to the ordinary days stated in the Sittings Paper. At present Mr. Justice NORTH has not fixed any days for Witness Actions.

Mr. Justice STIRLING will take Witness Actions on days to be appointed by his Lordship, after the commencement of the Sittings. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings.

Mr. Justice KEKEWICH will commence Witness Actions on Tuesday, April 14. The case of Savory & Moore v. London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.). Motion treated as Trial and advanced by Order is fixed for that day, and two other cases of a like character are fixed for Tuesday, April 21. His Lordship will sit in Chambers every Monday during the Sittings.—Liverpool and Manchester Business will be taken as follows: Motions on days appointed for Motions. Petitions, Short Causes, and Adjourned Summonses, on Saturdays. Summonses in Chambers on Friday afternoons, Liverpool and Manchester Summonses being taken on alternate Fridays, commencing with Liverpool Summonses on Friday, April 10.

Mr. Justice ROMER will take Witness Actions every day in the order as they stand in the Cause Book.

Adjourned Summonses will be taken as follows: Mr. Justice CHITTY, with Non-Witness Actions, except Procedure Summonses, which (if any) are taken every Saturday; Mr. Justice NORTH, on Fridays and Saturdays; Mr. Justice STIRLING also on Fridays and Saturdays; Mr. Justice KEKEWICH on Saturdays.

N.B.—The above note as to Adjourned Summonses is subject to alteration as their Lordships may direct.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CHITTY.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Freemantle v. Lafitte
Thompson v. M'Murdo
Morris v. Bebro
Same v. Same
M. Melacrino & Co. v. B. M. Melacrino and others
Ramuz v. Earl Sondes
Sampson v. Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society (Lim.)
In re Robert Millard, dec.
Millard v. Millard
Birmingham Canal Navigations v. Tupper & Co.
Guardians of St. Saviour's Union v. Stanhope Co. (Lim.)
Ratcliff v. Jowcss
In re W. E. Jones, dec.
Jones v. Greenwood
Inventions Trust Association (Lim.) v. Cole & Co.
In re Baroness Craignish, dec.
Craignish v. Hewitt
Lodge v. Ainley Sons & Co.
Nichols v. John Lewis & Co.
Boursot v. Boursot
Midland Railway Co. v. Metropolitan Railway Co.
Pink v. Pink
Hubbard v. Elverston
Matthews v. Sanders
In re Robson, dec.
Robson v. Hamilton
Defence Vessel Construction Co. (Lim.) v. Scott
Garnett v. Carver
In re Gyles, dec.
Gyles v. Collinson
Barlow v. Gyles
In re Gyles, dec.
Gyles v. Collinson
Reid v. Whiteley
In re Whitchurch, dec.
Cotton v. Prowse
Croydon Ironmongery Co. (Lim.) v. Davies
Skelton v. Schwabe
Lindsay v. Curtis
Richards v. Unett, Moore, Bayley & Co.
Warren v. Central Permanent Building Society
Bonham (married woman) v. Ellis
In re Earl of Caithness, dec.
Buchanan v. Sinclair
George v. Greener
Royal Exchange Assurance and others v. Norton
Beecham v. Thompson
Gunnell v. Woods
Brear v. Hirst
De Stafford v. Neville
Bliss v. Hart and another
Cleworth v. National Provident Institution
Nickalls v. Phillps
Aston v. Grazebrook
In re R. Fell, dec.
Fell v. Fell
In re G. Freeland, dec.
Freeland v. Freeland
Hamerton v. Bex

Jackson, Clayton & Co. v. Baker
Copping v. Gilmore
Watson v. Hawthorn
Leak v. Ross
Thomas v. Gillard
Wood v. Dunn
Howard v. Goode
Savage v. Jessup
Belanzchi v. Zirzinia
Thornton v. Union Discount Co. of London
Stephens v. M'Kellar
Wintle v. Oldridge
Ogilvie v. Blything Union Rural Sanitary Authority
Barker v. Pybus
Eastwood & Co. v. Craig
Wenham Co. (Lim.) v. Champion Gas Lamp Co.
Acme Wood Flooring Co. (Lim.) v. J. S. Vigers
Yeoman v. Robinson
De la Mare v. Mayor, &c. of West Ham, Essex
Landseer v. Zeffert
Van Buch v. Watson
Perceval and another v. Van Buch
Peachey v. Serle
New Wire Wove Roofing Co. (Lim.) v. Humpage
Hayman v. Cooper
Clark v. Smith
Carter v. Walter
Smith v. Rowbotham
Rowbotham v. Wilson
Ward v. Keen
North v. Abbey Mills Distillery (Lim.)
Sutton v. Gillings
Kite v. Bell
Marquis of Bute v. Barry Docks and Railways Co.
Hill & Paddon v. Fuller
Bailey v. Fuller
Fuller v. Hill & Paddon
Same v. Bailey
S. Kidd & Co. (Lim.) v. Perry
Allen v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
In re Swain, dec.
Swain v. Bringeman
Patent Enamel Co. (Lim.) v. Baugh
Bew v. Gale
Webster v. Puleston
Meek v. Traver
Marquis of Aylesbury v. Darling
Spalding v. FitzGeorge
Green v. Wyatt
Delvallé v. Palmer
In re R. J. Smart, an infant, ex parte Stoner
Same, ex parte Gregory
L. Hirsch & Co. v. Dean Swift
Faithfull v. Millar
Molineaux v. Gartside
In re Thomas Bateman, dec.
Bateman v. Bateman
Uniacke v. Scott
Scott v. Uniacke
Soppitt v. Whiting
Layton v. Patent Lithographic Zinc Plate Co. (Lim.)

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

Walker v. Walker
Same v. Same
Same v. Same
Same v. Same
Same v. Same
In re S. Lawson, dec.
Birt v. Hinton
In re J. Taylor's Estate
Greenwood v. Taylor
In re C. Alderson's Estate
Alderson v. Reed
Dickens v. Lang
In re R. Sayle's Estate
Clark v. Sayle
In re G. Schreiber's Trusts
Hanson v. Mount (ex parte Settlement Trustees)
Baring v. Lord Ashburton
In re Boratynski's Trusts
Boratynska v. Arnould
Sovereign Life Assurance Co. v. Adam (ex parte Ehrhart)
In re W. Lory's Trusts
Lory v. Lory
In re Dolphin's Settlement Trusts
Dolphin v. Dolphin
In re Robert Akired (ex parte Metropolitan Board of Works)
In re Dugdale's Estate
Dugdale v. Dugdale
Rhins v. Berkley
In re S. Kidd & Co. (Lim.) (ex parte J. H. Chapman)
In re W. Smith, dec.
In re R. Smith, dec.
Smith v. Smith (ex parte Executors and Trustees)
In re W. J. Barron & Sons
In re E. Budd, dec.
Scott v. Budd
Hartley v. Cooper
In re M. J. Sartoris's Estate
Sartoris v. Sartoris
In re J. R. Schweder's Estate
Oppenheim v. Schweder
In re Bingemann & Walmesley's Contract and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (ex parte Purchaser)
In re Bingemann, dec.
Bingemann v. Bingemann
In re Allen, a Solicitor (ex parte West)
J. H. Taylor v. Taylor
In re G. Baynham, dec.
Hart v. Mackenzie
In re T. H. Gloyne's Estate
Clarkson v. Rawsthorne (Order 55)
Levy v. Lyon
Same v. Same
In re W. Ostle's Estate
M'Mullon v. Redfern (Order 55)
In re J. B. Lousada's Estate
Ponting v. Lousada
In re R. H. Millett, dec.
Millett v. Marriott
Salmon v. Cheswright
In re W. S. Lewis, a Solicitor, ex parte Jane D. Moir
In re F. J. Edlmann
Edlmann v. Edlmann
Mockford v. M'Donald
Dibb v. Walker
In re J. C. B. Hadson, dec. and Conveyancing Act, 1881
Boulderson v. Inderwick
In re Joseph Hudson, dec.
Bell v. Hudson
In re Lindley, dec.
Lindley v. Lindley
In re Sovereign Life Assurance Co. (Salter's claim)
In re C. Blackburn, dec.
Smith v. Cook
In re J. F. G. Cook's Estate
Ayer and others v. Wrightson and others
In re W. Shaweross's Estate
Thackeray v. Coe.

Further Considerations.

In re W. B. Taylor, dec.
Stephenson v. Taylor
In re W. Evans, dec.
Evans v. Evans
In re S. Lang, dec.
Bettsley v. Proctor
In re John Betts, dec.
Jones v. Butt
Forster v. Forster
In re G. J. Lang, dec.
Stephens v. Stephens
In re Redman, dec.
Redman v. Barter
In re A. Evans, dec.
Evans v. Randall

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE NORTH.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Bentinck v. London Joint Stock Bank (Lim.)
In re Sharpe
In re Bennett
Masonic, &c. Assurance Co. v. Sharpe
Chester v. Harris
A. Pirie & Sons (Lim.) v. Goodall & Son
Commercial Bank of Scotland (Lim.) v. Sanders
Burgess v. Van Hoydonck
Matthews v. Martin
Tippett v. Strutt
Thomson v. Hughes
Stuckey's Banking Co. v. Cohen
Lindoe v. Alexander
Leveson-Tower v. Jarrett
National and Provincial Bank of England (Lim.) v. Daniel
In re M'Murdo
Penfield v. M'Murdo
Bright v. Eckersley
Walker v. Higgins
People's Co-operative, &c. Building Society v. Shaw
Showell v. Perrins
Merridew v. Morris
Hamilton v. Hamilton
Crawshay v. Cartland
In re Crawshay
Walker v. Crawshay
Capel v. Brown
Tilden v. Bond
In re Rendle
Rendle v. Rendle
Danks v. Jones
Taylor v. Taylor
In re Bliss
Bliss v. Bliss
Automatic Weighing Machine Co. (Lim.) v. National Exhibitors' Association (Lim.)
Jensen v. Hilder
Booty v. Goodwin
Lincoln Brick Co. (Lim.) v. Handley
Oldham v. Metherell
Wilson v. Queen's Club (Lim.)
Alliance Pure White Lead Syndicate (Lim.) v. M'Ivor's Patents (Lim.)
Morris, Wilson & Co. v. Coventry Machinists' Co. (Lim.)
Viney v. Lewis
Tims v. Schell
Schell v. Cutler
Thesiger v. York
Lloyd v. Clingo
Belsey v. Brooks
Westinghouse Brake Co. (Lim.) v. Williamson
Norton v. Burr
T. & W. Smith v. Bullivant and others
Brett v. Bowles
Fielding v. Earl Northbrook
Beaumont v. Provident Assurance Co. (Lim.)
Ward v. Langdon
Langham v. Hedges & Abell
In re Stevens
Stevens v. Stubbington
Faull v. Harding
In re Clench
Draper v. Clench
In re J. Cooper
Cooper v. Cooper
Byers v. Gray
Lawrence v. Edge
Day v. Pyke
Bolton v. National Land, &c. Co. (Lim.)
Webb v. Harden
Kennedy v. Smith
Fairfax v. J. Lyons & Co. (Lim.)
Robinson v. Trust and Investment Corporation of South Africa (Lim.)
Douglas v. Gerald & Co. (Lim.)
Heibert, Wragg & Co. v. Ransford & Co.
Mainwaring v. Cyclone Pulveriser
Church v. Gilford (Bonsall third party)
In re Lee
Lee v. Dickinson
Val de Travers, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (Lim.)
Dance v. Hope
Yates v. Agnew
Hanbury v. Jewell
In re MacMahon
Phillips v. MacMahon
Garnett v. Wigley
Block v. Edwards
Allen v. Union Discount Co. of London (Lim.)
British Water Gas Syndicate (Lim.) v. Nottingham and Derby Water Gas Co. (Lim.)
In re Milnes
Milnes v. Milnes
Coxon v. Schofield
Laybourn v. Gridley
M'Bryne v. Kay
Mara v. Brown
Grylls v. Biederman
Bunnalls v. Rodd
Attorney-General ex-relat. Barnett Local Board v. Vestry of St. James and St. John, Clerkenwell
In re Boyce
Boyce v. England
Baird v. East Riding Club and Race Course Co. (Lim.)
In re Raisbeck
Keenlyside v. Leefe
Law Property Assurance, &c. Association v. Wilson
Pegler v. Drake-West
Morris v. Speyer
London Printing, &c. Alliance (Lim.) v. Cox
Harris v. Hackett
In re Coningham
Coningham v. Coningham
Speyer v. Morris
Hartley v. Jones
Choudens Fils v. Lago
Vennell v. Meakin
Rothwell v. Abrahams
In re Cann
Symington v. Cann
Universal Stock Exchange (Lim.) v. Stevens

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

Swaffield v. Robinson
Nicholay v. Development and Investment Co. (Lim.)
Wilkinson v. Ellison
Brougham v. Theobald
In re Sykes
Deane v. Duffield
Lands Trading Co. (Lim.) v. Rathbone
Harrington v. Heaven
Cotton v. Pemberton
Bartlett v. Carlton Engineering Co. (Lim.)

Adjourned Summonses.

Elliott v. Steel
In re Barton-upon-Humber and District Water Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
In re Burfield
Dean v. Burfield
In re Wright
Whitehead v. Stares
In re Corsellis
Bawtree v. Harrison
In re Radcliffe
Radcliffe v. Bowes
Badeley v. Consolidated Bank (Lim.)
In re Harris
Fitzroy v. Harris

Harper v. Eyre
In re Thomas
Richard v. Thomas
In re Rees
Williams v. Lloyd
Brown v. Clark
In re West
West v. West
Haseldine v. Haseldine
Same v. Same
Kennedy v. Smith
In re Miller
Bevan v. Miller
In re Northage
Ellis v. Barfield
In re Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Hamilton v. Brogden
In re Brace
Welch v. Colt
In re Allan
Havelock v. Havelock-Allan
In re Same
Same v. Same
In re Staffordshire Joint-Stock Bank (Lim.) (in liquidation) and Co.'s Acts
In re Brymer
Brymer v. Brymer
In re Tod-Heatley & Hobson and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
In re C. E. Withall, &c.
In re Sir J. Heron
Willert v. Lady Heron
In re Price
Wyndham v. Fowle

In re Hannah
Watt v. Hannah
In re Derbyshire
Derbyshire v. Downs
In re Rumball
Rumball v. Charrington
In re Nockells
Nockells v. Thornton
In re Fitzgerald
Jones v. Bowling
Allen v. Union Discount Co. of London
In re Irwin
Saul v. Irwin
Fawkes v. Fox
In re Price
Price v. Saunders
In re Fitzgerald
Fitzgerald v. Martin
In re Eardley & Meir
Brett v. Hawthorn
In re Johnson
Moore v. Johnson
In re T. Ponsford
In re Raynor & Lee and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
In re J. Dunlop, &c.
In re Same
In re Yates
Bostock v. D'Eyncourt
In re Evans
Jenkins v. Thomas
In re Wise
Leeke v. Wise
Litchfield v. Jones
In re Rawlins
Rawlins v. Todd

Further Considerations.

Bedford v. Drakeford
Wood v. Gregory

Guardians of Pontypridd Poor Law Union v. Howells

Before Mr. Justice Stirling.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

In re J. Davis
Joseph v. Davis
Hedger v. Hedger
In re Jenninge
Jennings v. Jennings
Dodd v. Scholding
Burton v. Dodd
Armstrong v. Owray Gold Mining Co. (Lim.)
Edwards v. Beckett
Keighley, Maxsted & Co. v. Bakewell
In re Fox
Fox v. Fox
Hill v. Bishton
In re Hodgson
Thompson v. Wilson
Wilson v. Thompson
In re Nesbitt
Nesbitt v. Freeman
Baring v. Abingdon
Heathcote v. Blair
Abbott v. Howard
In re Park
Cole v. Park
Park v. Cole
Brunton v. Red Moss Works Co.
Coombs v. Wilks
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Keen
In re Casey's Trade-marks, &c. and Patents, &c. Act
Stewart v. Casey
Duke of Sutherland v. Heathcote
Jones v. Merionethshire, &c. Building Society
Froude v. Wilberforce
Western Counties Railway Co. v. Anderson & Co.
Rugby Portland Cement Co. v. Rugby and Newbould Cement Co. (Lim.)
Adney v. Adney
Vernall v. Reed
Cunliffe v. Bellite Explosives (Lim.)
Best v. Dodd

Farbenfabriken Vorm Fried Bayer & Co. and others v. Bowker
Hampton v. Davis
Wrensted v. Eede
Wagner v. Costerlits
Jones v. Wemyss
In re MacIvor's Patent & Co.'s Acts
Lewis v. Oldroyd
Lloyd v. Fox
In re Heywood
Heywood v. Heywood
Williams v. Gregory
In re Carruthers
Talbot v. Carruthers
Simeon v. Freshwater, &c. Railway Co.
Wroath v. Coathupe
Newton v. Cohen
Bank of British North America v. Anderson & Co.
Young v. Harris
Twyeould v. Chamber Colliery Co. (Lim.)
Coombs v. J. Jones & Son
Render v. Macpherson
In re Wells
Molony v. Brooke
Radway v. Titmas
Sykes v. Crust
Norfolk v. Harvey
Fritchley v. Marshall
In re Walsh
Underwood v. Halden
Cunningham v. Todd
Willcox v. Black
Crowder v. Cooper
Same v. Same
Beecham v. Fisher
Farr v. Bristol Sublimed Lead, &c. Co.
Jackson v. Snell
Lampard v. St. George's House, (Lim.)
Foster v. Rowe

In re Edgar
Edgar v. Edgar
In re Bowman
Bowman v. Bowman
Alexander v. Miller
Field v. Nichols
Pearson v. Petrovitch
In re Bridger
Jones v. Armfield
Reade v. Hall
Wood v. Hamblet
Bailey v. Barnes
Sugden v. Cridlan
Earl de la Warr v. King
Schreiner v. Bormard
Holdsworth v. Hull, &c. Railway Co.
Same v. Same
Freeman v. Penn
Baxter v. Brodhurst
President, &c. of St. George's Hospital v. Rumney
Svertchkoff v. Huth
Lord de Ramsay v. Powell
Walker v. Turner
Brown v. Vince
Sibley v. Bingham-Cox
Swift v. Copeland
Brown v. Brown
West of England Paper Mills Co. (Lim.) v. Gilbert
In re Cash
Cash v. Hancock

Barnett, Bouvet & Co. v. Whalley
In re Laureto
Kiddle v. Lawrence
Fearnley v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Lloyd v. Collings
Harris v. Harris
Trimble v. Wall
Bevan v. Wall
Taylor v. Waddyn
Folkard v. Carter
In re J. S. Smith
Smith v. Smith
Clarke v. Vickers
Bird v. Goodwin
White v. Swaine
In re Gas Lighting Improvement Co. (Lim.)
In re Linton
Linton v. Read
Lilly v. Ellam
Meux v. Thomas
Times & London Printing Alliance, &c. (Lim.)
Rough v. MacIvor's Patents (Lim.)
Nelson v. Wortham
Goodrham v. Goodrham
Beddoe v. Jones
Isaacs v. Isaacs
Woodman v. Knowles
Robinson v. Partridge

Causes for Trial without Witnesses and Adjourned Summonses.

In re Blumberg & Co. (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Robertson v. Hartopp
Lowther v. Caledonian Railway Co.
In re Broughton
Barnard v. Stockton
Wills v. Lycett
In re C. F. Bacon and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
Cooper v. Burrard
In re Cochrane
Sharrod v. Mather
In re Same
Same v. Same
In re Thompson
Thompson v. Thompson
In re Speakman
Speakman v. Bond
In re Liversedge
Boden v. Liversedge
In re Warren
Randleson v. Randleson
Black v. Black
Ward v. Hyam
In re Gater
Gater v. Hely
In re Wickham
Markwick v. Wickham
Bruzard v. Franqueville
In re Eccles
Carr v. Eccles
In re Clavering, Bart. and Statute of Limitations Act, 1882
De Fontaine v. Attorney-General
In re Martyn
Green v. Mitchell
In re Missouri Estates Railway and Iron Co. (Lim.)

In re Cunningham to Trayring and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
In re Wheeler
Chaffey v. Brading
In re Mervin
Mervin v. Crossman
In re Wilks's Estate
Child v. Bulmer
In re Russell
Russell v. Shoolbred
Smith v. Belch
In re Richmond
Watson v. Watson
In re Hobson
Appach v. Weldon
In re Clutterbuck and others, infants
Philbeam v. English
Greenwood v. Sutcliffe
In re National Pure Water Engineering Co. (Lim.) & Co.'s Acts (Dr. Fyfe's case)
In re W. Rogers, &c.
In re Gootoo and Invekwane Infants, &c.
Guardians of the Poor of Tendring Union v. Dowton
In re Wyatt
White v. Ellis
Hudson v. Lavington Bros.
Fenton v. Ford
In re Allen
Allen v. Allen
In re Mason
Mason v. Mason
Whiteley v. Ackroyd
Lloyd's Bank (Lim.) v. Neale
Weatherley v. Layton

Further Considerations.

In re Foster
Foster v. Butt
Adams v. Wood
In re Pride
Shackell v. Colmett
In re Harris
Harris v. Baker

In re Rieder
Dobell v. Tonlon
In re Fasenmeyer
White v. Merrill
Palmer v. Hargrave
In re Fitchett
Simmins v. Fitchett

Before Mr. Justice Kekewich.

Causes for Trial (with Witnesses).

Sykes v. Burr
Bentinck v. Cape Breton Co. (Lim.)

Hanley and Bucknall Coal Co. (Lim.) v. North Staffordshire Railway Co.

Sanderson v. Allen
In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Edwards
Horsman v. Shorney
In re Paul Elwell
Elwell v. Elwell
Gray v. Purves
Holland v. Skidmore
Lloyd v. Margrave
Nuttall v. Hargreaves
Beard v. Margrett
Margrett v. Beard
Haley v. Metcalfe
Jones v. Steamship Cairngoun (Lim.)
Edwards v. Covell
Campbell v. Skewis
London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co. v. Reeves
Lewis v. Morgan
Blackman v. Fysh
Baily v. Icke
Bellite Explosive (Lim.) v. Bellite Co. (Lim.)
Sawkins v. Stratford, &c. Junction Railway Co.
In re Whiteley and Roberts, arbitration, &c.
Brandon v. Viscount Bury
Godfrey v. Walker
Denney v. Frisby
Alcock v. Smith
Dawson v. Church
In re Parker
Lowe v. Parker
Nicol v. Charsley
Horwood v. Milkins
Leach v. Gough
Manns v. Howard
Benson v. D'Arcy
In re Lyle & Kinahan's Trade-Mark, &c.
Greenwood v. Turner
Coulson v. Lock
Savoy Publishing Co. (Lim.), &c. v. O'Reilly
Bendall v. A. D. Selfe & Co.
Duncan v. Baird
Wood v. Lamplough
Motum v. Wilmot
D'Anson v. Turner
Lewis v. Ellis
Richards v. Whitham
Marsden v. Thorne
In re Dunk
Dunk v. Dunk
Wright v. Cauler
Oliver v. Hall
Smith v. Tasker
In re Baker
Baker v. Baker
In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts
Bruff v. Howard
Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) v. Shadbolt
Cooke v. Smith
Secretary of State for India v. British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Co.
Thomas v. Gillard
Burra v. Philips
In re Hewit
Lawson v. Duncan
In re Crosland
Sykes v. Mallinson
Dyke v. Rutherford
Edison and Swan United Electric Co. (Lim.) v. Woodhouse & Rawson United (Lim.)
In re Perry
Walker v. Walker
Stengel v. International Commercial Co. (Lim.)
Shepherd v. Mason
Smyrke v. De Peyer
Provan v. Paterson
Castle v. Stone
Cooksedge v. Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association
Upton v. National Mercantile Bank
Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.
Matthews v. Wells
Perry v. White
Tavner v. Martin
Clinch v. Clinch
Same v. Same
Cipri, trading, &c. v. Metal Recovery Co. (Lim.)
Mackenzie v. Sanders
Van Heck v. Isaacs
Hickman v. Harris
M'Dowall v. Sanders
Dale v. Fortescue
Cowney v. Thomson
Watling v. Watling
Banks v. Scovell
Jope v. Pountain
Cameron v. Dandicolle & Gaudin (Lim.)
Savory & Moore v. London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.)
Mapleson v. Lago
Wilkins v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Same v. Same
Jahncke v. R. Bell & Co. (Lim.)
Beecham v. Clue
Williams v. Jones
Petre v. Ferrers
Nettlefolds (Lim.) v. Reynolds
Same v. Same
Hazlehurst v. Rylands
Burdett & Harris v. Gorton
Robertson v. Robertson
Hall v. Hall
Driggs Ordnance Co. v. Driggs, Schroeder, &c. Co.
Falk v. Falk
Cameron v. Stretton, Hilliard, Dale & Newman
Whitaker v. Whitaker
Allison v. City and South London Railway Co.
New Skegby Colliery Co. (Lim.) v. Dodsley
Cowood v. Vernon
Lowson v. Wheatley & Sons
Howell v. Broomhead
Lane-Fox v. Kensington and Knightsbridge Electric Lighting Co.

Point of Law.

Blaiberg v. Medhurst

Causes for Trial (without Witnesses).

Smith v. Rogers
In re Wynn
Wynn v. Wynn
In re Hunter
Hunter v. Hunter
Hingston v. Hingston
Page v. Tunks
Headland v. Fallows
Scadding v. Burial Board for St. Pancras
Shepherd v. Webb
Larkin v. Lloyd

Adjourned Summonses.

In re Withington
Clays v. Corkling
In re Stephens
Warburton v. Stephens
In re Wythes
West v. Wythes
Wythes v. West
In re Same
Same v. Same
Same v. Same
In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association (Lim.) and Co.'s Acts, ex parte Cunningham
In re Atherton and Settled Land Act, 1882
In re Longmire
Comrie v. Longmire
In re Chubb
Finney v. Messent
In re J. Reynolds, &c. and Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874
Smith v. Rogers
In re Hughes
Williams v. Owens
In re Tooting Independent Chapel, &c. and Charitable Trusts Acts
In re Garland
Garland v. Mead
In re W. C. Smith and others and Settled Land Act

Further Considerations.

London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co. v. South-Eastern Railway Co.
In re Russell
O'Donoghue v. Bussell
Bussell v. Bussell

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE ROMER.

Causes for trial (with Witnesses).

In re Fuller, Smith & Turner and Trade-marks Act, &c.
Howard v. Golland
J. B. Orr & Co. (Lim.) v. J. B. Orr
Gisborne v. Shipping Appliances Co. (Lim.)
Rickett v. Bennett
Martin v. Hemsworth
Cummins v. Sargent

Transferred for trial or hearing only, pursuant to Order, dated January 27, 1891.

In re Parry
Hunt v. Parry
In re Pierce
Hunt v. Parry
Crump v. Minter
Laing v. Walker
Canning v. Stone
In re Mountain
Beckett v. Mountain
Sykes v. Wigfield
Faulkner v. Stevens
In re Owen
Owen v. Allman
In re Giles
Real and Permanent Advance Co. (Lim.) v. Giles
Whateley v. Rippon
Rippon v. Brushfield
Hardwick v. Morton
Zuccato v. Young
Wilkinson v. Griffiths
Turney v. Turney
Stephenson v. Ovington
Moore v. North-West Bank (Lim.)
Davies v. Gilson
In re Aspinall
Hudson v. Warburton
Collinson v. Hudson
Llewellyn v. Simpson
Mineral Residues Syndicate v. Levant Mine Adventurers
Cross v. Mein
Potter v. Glover
Robertson v. Hughes
Fourth City, &c. Building Society v. Wood
Smith v. Bowler
Phillips v. Jones
Wigan v. Hoppe
Lockyer v. Powell
Davies v. Plain
Singleton v. Mitchell
Oppenheimer v. Quinn
Redfarn v. Prime
Same v. Same
Sir W. G. Armstrong, Mitchell & Co. (Lim.) v. Pitkin
In re Price
In re Edwards
In re Price
Price v. Pentypool Gas and Water Co. (Lim.)
King v. Harry
Turner v. Elliott
Hill v. Bischofswerder
Crossley Brothers v. Andrews & Co. (Lim.)
Andrews & Co. (Lim.) v. Crossley Brothers
Colman v. Colman
Jones v. Beard
Hartley v. Dearden
Wilkinson v. Jennings

SUMMARY.

1.—Mr. Justice CHITTY—Witness Actions		99
Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses		43
Further Considerations		8
			150
2.—Mr. Justice NORTH—Witness Actions		98
Non-Witness Actions		9
Adjourned Summonses		50
Further Considerations		3
			160
3.—Mr. Justice STIRLING—Witness Actions		114
Non-Witness Actions, including Summonses		45
Further Considerations		8
			167
4.—Mr. Justice KEKEWICH—Witness Actions		110
Point of Law		1
Non-Witness Actions		9
Adjourned Summonses		14
Further Considerations		2
			136
5.—Mr. Justice ROMER—Witness Actions			51
Total Causes and Matters for Hearing in the Chancery Division			664

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

SPECIAL PAPER.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Fowler

FOR ARGUMENT.

Set down February 14, 1891, due February 21, 1891.

Mayor, &c. of Tunbridge Wells (acting, &c.) v. County Council of Kent

Set down February 20, 1891, due February 26, 1891.

Borrowman, Phillips & Co. v. Wilson

Set down February 21, 1891, due February 27, 1891.

Ocean Steamship Co. v. National Steamship Co.

Set down February 24, 1891, due March 3, 1891.

Gough v. Mayor, &c. of Liverpool

Set down February 27, 1891, due March 5, 1891.

In re an Arbitration between Mordey, Jones & Co. and Great Britain Steamship Small Damage Association (Lim.)

Set down March 11, 1891, due March 19, 1891.

Salaman v. Warner and others

Set down March 16, 1891, due April 7, 1891.

Same v. Same

Set down March 19, 1891, due March 24, 1891.

Same v. Same

Set down March 24, 1891, due March 29, 1891.

Cleaver & others v. Mutual Reserve Fund Association

Set down March 26, 1891, due April 10, 1891.

Reeves v. Butcher.

OPPOSED MOTIONS.

FOR JUDGMENT.

Joyner v. Weeks (heard before Wills, J., and Wright, J., on January 19 and 20, 1891)
Heineman & Co. v. Hall & Co. (heard before Cave, J., and Charles, J., on March 5, 1891)

FOR ARGUMENT.

Cristord v. West Lancashire Railway Co.
In re M. R. E. Brandreth—Stand over till notice given to La wSociety
Assicurazioni Generali and others v. SS. Bessie Morris Co. (Lim.) and another
West and others v. Marks and another
Cave v. Leslie and others
Aitken v. Batchelor
Fowler and another v. Bowles (Bowles, claimant)
In re Adolphus Herman Louis, an unqualified person, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Morgan v. Harrison
Ross v. Bourke
Giddy and another v. Benham
Dreyfus v. Biedermann
Penberthy v. Venezuelan Austin Gold Mining Co. (Lim.)
Snell, Son & Greenip v. Foakes
Barlow and another v. Forbes, Munn & Co.
Haughton v. Hartmann and others
Juicey & Co. v. Allan & Co.
In re an Arbitration between Williams and Stepney
Milissich v. Spottiswoode
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Trotter v. Fox
Day v. Ross
Dean v. Bayly
Williamson and others v. Pilbrow and another
Parsons & Co. v. Davies
Thompson & Bedford Co. (Lim.) v. Parry & Co.
Wakeley, Bros. & Co. v. Tull
Percival v. Burraud
Cullum v. Strousberg
In re Arbitration between Baylis and Burr
Emmett & Co. v. Watters and others
Lloyd v. Craddock
Rawlins v. Burton, Yeates & Co. and others
Laidlaw & Son v. Nanson
Bryant and another v. Lorimer (trading, &c.)
Lotinga v. Curtice and another
Bennett v. Board of Guardians of the Union of Daventry
Sutton v. Whytell and others
Lewis v. Lovell
Bennetts v. Ludlow and another
Marcoso v. Thomson
Schneider v. Edelstein and another
Giles v. Goldberg
Commercial Bank v. Strousberg
Gordon v. Sheather
Central Bank of London (Lim.) v. Foster
Burton v. Mears
Burt and another v. Gray and others
Roche v. Rogers
M'Kean's Size Co. v. Weichsel
In re Arbitration between Chaudefield and Barker & Co.
West Riding Union and Banking Co. v. Ramsden and others
Reimann v. Keenan
Foote and another v. Wilkinson
Sambas Exploration Co. (Lim.) v. Nersessian
Salaman v. Warner and others
Persian Investment, &c. Co. v. Mikayl Khan
Ungar v. Sugg and others
Same v. Same
Grey v. White
Chaffers v. Esher
Lee v. British Equitable Life Assurance Co.
Beaujeu v. Smyth
Same v. Same
Rowles v. King
Hind v. Raikes and others
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Beddall
Prichard v. Morton
Bottomley v. Dean & Son
Pascoe v. Bengal Baragunda Copper Co.
Walford v. Prince Steam Shipping Co. (Lim.)
Sheen v. Link
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
In re Arbitration between Marshall & Co. and Hicks Bros.
Harvey v. Bentley
Guinea Coast Gold Mining Co. v. Irvine and others
Dugmore and another v. Nelson and others
Fountain and others v. Same
Hamond and others v. Same
King v. Fowler and another
Dan Rylands (Lim.) v. Wohlgemouth & Co.
Green and another v. Martinne
Williams v. Clydesdale Bank (Lim.)
Rockett v. Clippingdale and Thornhill
Jamieson v. Britton and another
Boot v. Harris and others
Lewis v. Shaw and another
Edinburgh Ballarat Gold Quartz Mine (Lim.) v. Herivel
Wainwright and another v. Powis
National Whole Meal Bread and Biscuit Co. (Lim.) v. Stiven
Price v. Richardson
In re a Solicitor, ex parte Incorporated Law Society
Nugent and others v. Leonard
Nevill & Co. (Lim.) v. Briton Ferry Steel Co. (Lim.)
Bridcut v. Duncan & Sons
Cawley & Co. (Lim.) v. Wilkinson
Baron Dynevor and others v. Neath Harbour Commissioners
Sheen v. Link
Elise & Co. v. De Crespigny
Horner v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Hale v. Fiatau
Reynolds v. Soltykoff
Adamson v. Gilbert
Cutler & Sons v. Kionne (Aird & Sons, garnishee)
Metropolitan and Birmingham Banking Co. v. Dodds and others
Tuppenney v. New
Jones v. Hutchinson
Union Bank of Australia (Lim.) v. Trower
Bellyse v. M'Ginn
Westcott and another v. Blumann & Stern (Lim.) (Schibaeff & Co. (Lim.) claimants)
Campbell and another v. Von Buck
Phillips, Son & Vallings v. Fowler & Co. (Leeds) (Lim.)
National Whole Meal Bread, &c. Co. v. Morris
Oldman and another v. Grimmer
Challinors and another v. Wright and others
Boyce v. Williamson
Bonney v. Hunt
Steamship Albany Co. (Lim.) v. Proctor, Sons & Co.
Capital and Counties Bank (Lim.) v. Castiglione
Bohringer v Cloete
Pallister v. Bolokow, Vaughan & Co.
In re Neale, a Solicitor
North Wales Gold Exploration Co. v. Seaver and others
Same v. Same

CROWN PAPER.

For Judgment.

Somersetshire (Wells)—In re Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 Gough and others v. Gough and others— (argued January 29; coram Cave, J., and Williams, J.)
Middlesex—Regina v. H.M. Secretary of State for War (ex parte Mitchell) (argued February 26 and March 25; coram Cave, J., and Charles, J.)
Yorkshire (Halifax)—Regina v. Judge of County Court of Yorkshire holden at Halifax and Bairstow (ex parte Sutcliffe) (argued February 9 and 10; coram Pollock, B., and Charles, J.)

For Argument.

Metropolitan Police District—Fortescue v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green
London—Jones and others v. Dobson and others
Salford—Hancock v. Haynes
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Reason v. Lewis
Surrey (Kingston)—Wimbledon Local Board v. Underwood (Simmons, claimant)
Monmouthshire—Bound v. Lawrence
Worcestershire (Great Malvern)—Jones v. Foley and another
Monmouthshire—Regina v. Carnegy and others, Justices, &c. and overseers of Llanfoist (ex parte Abergavenny Rural Sanitary Authority)
Northumberland (North Shields)—Taws v. Knowles
Shropshire (Shrewsbury)—Wardle v. Wanstall and another
Yorkshire (Doncaster)—Lamb v. Great Northern Railway Co.
Carlisle—Regina v. Dixon, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. (ex parte Dunn)
London—Brighton Guardians v. Strand Union
London—Williams v. Line
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Clark v. Finsbury Park Brick and Tile Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Regina v. Bros, Esq. Metropolitan Police Magistrate, and Jacobson (ex parte Allery)
London—Webb v. Sutton
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Bishop v. Taylor & Co. (Harris, claimant)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Isaacs & Co. v. Spero
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Ebrey v. Rowbotham
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Manning and others v. Hine
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Haynes v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Fletcher v. Fields
Kent (Greenwich)—Diprose v. Norfolk (Norfolk, claimant)
London—Regina v. Governor, &c. of Bank of England (ex parte Terrell)
Cheshire (Chester)—Jones v. Turner
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Erwin v. Wilson (Brackley, claimant)
Staffordshire (Lichfield)—Wellings v. York (York, claimant)
Surrey (Southwark)—Bransgrove v. Woodward and another
London—Kutner v. Phillips
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Clarke & Co. v. Widdowson (Palmer, claimant)
Surrey (Wandsworth)—Farnfield v. Lavers
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Mills v. Steward
Glamorganshire (Merthyr Tydfil)—Knight v. Jones
Shropshire (Shrewsbury)—Bevington v. Marriott
Essex—Guardians of Cardigan Poor Law Union v. Guardians of West Ham Poor Law Union
Middlesex (Westminster)—Great Western Railway Co. v. White & Co.
Middlesex (Shoreditch)—Brown v. Lilley (Chopping, claimant)
Middlesex (Brompton)—London General Omnibus Co. (Lim.) v. Aspinall & Co.
London—Pollock v. Glover (James, claimant)
Middlesex (Brompton)—Newman v. Cave and another
Cardiganshire (Aberystwith)—Evans v. Daniel and another
Monmouthshire (Dolgelly)—Lloyd and others v. Williams and others
Dorsetshire—Pitt-Rivers v. Glasse
Surrey (Croydon)—Bourne & Co. v. Wall (Wall, claimant)
Leicestershire (Market Harborough)—Williamson v. King
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Hoare v. Niblett
Middlesex—Allchurch and another v. Hendon Union
Durham (Darlington)—In re Building Society's Acts (Broad's appeal)
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Legg v. Oystermouth Local Board
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Bryan v. Atlantic Patent Fuel Co.
Sussex (Brighton)—Moul and another v. Groenings
Cheshire (Macclesfield)—Cooney v. Globe Cotton, &c. Co.
Devonshire—Dames v. Bond
Northamptonshire—Inwood v. Potter
Metropolitan Police District—Moir v. Williams
Lancashire (Preston)—Crown Corn, &c. Manure Co. v. Knight
Manchester—Caminada v. Hulton
Manchester—Same v. Same
Manchester—Same v. Same
Manchester—Same v. Same
Aberystwith—Regina v. G. Williams, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. (ex parte J. Williams)
Lancashire—Same v. Guthrie, Esq. Justices, &c. (ex parte Taylor)
Middlesex (Brompton)—Bird v. Fenton
Bedfordshire (Leighton Buzzard)—Green v. Gordon
Lancashire (Manchester)—Wilson and others v. Statham
Devonshire (Exeter)—Ashford v. Franklin
Aberdare—Gery v. Black Lion Brewery Co.
Lancashire—Accrington, &c. Tram Co. v. Campbell
Newport—Hale v. Rice
Sussex (Eastbourne)—Everett v. Paxton
Surrey (Croydon)—Fox v. Stevens
Glamorganshire—Regina v. Powell, Esq. and others, Licensing Justices, &c. (ex parte Roberts)
London—Lange v. Barton
Middlesex (Bloomsbury)—Cusack and another v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
Monmouthshire—Regina v. Colonel Byrde and others, Justices, &c. and Pontypool Gas Co. (ex parte Williams)
London—Sipf v. Brown and Holt
Durham—Regina v. Justices for the County of Durham (ex parte Maughan)
Lincolnshire (Parts of Lindsey)—Same v. Justices for the Parts of Lindsey (ex parte Evison)
London—Barlow v. Terrett
Devonshire—Regina v. Bowring, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. and Stentiford (ex parte Fenton)
Devonshire—Same v. Same
Carnarvonshire (Portmadoc)—Rowlands v. New Welsh Slate Co.
Glamorganshire—Regina v. Fowler, Esq. Stipendiary Magistrate for Swansea (ex parte Crabb)
Flintshire—Same v. Birch, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. (ex parte Galliard)
Chester (Birkenhead)—Bedford & Co. v. Holt (Holt, claimant)
Leicestershire (Leicester)—Coltman v. Davis, Moore & Co.
Cumberland (Cockermouth)—Towerson v. Jackson
Northamptonshire (Wellingboro')—Austin and another v. Goodman and another
Southampton—Regina v. Freshwater, &c. Railway Co. (ex parte Tatham)
Dorsetshire—Smith v. Davy
London—Vestry of Fulham v. Flew
Surrey (Southwark)—Hughes v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Middlesex (Brompton)—London and Westminster Loan Co. v. Tabraham
London—Spaul v. Baker
Glamorganshire (Cardiff)—Hacquoil & Co. v. Tapson & Co.
Birkenhead—Elliott v. Osborne
Staffordshire (Wolverhampton)—Norton & Co. v. Dalby
Surrey (Croydon)—Hood v. Fletcher
Surrey (Southwark)—Minshaw v. London Metallic Capsule Co.
Warwickshire (Coventry)—Sidney v. Taylor
Yorkshire (Sheffield)—In re Estate of C. H. Hill, dec.
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Regina v. Goole Local Board (ex parte Foster, Earle and another)
Cardiganshire (Lampeter)—Hughes v. Gilbert
Somersetshire (Axbridge)—Seaton v. Hole
Hampshire—Regina v. Judge of County Court of Southampton and Fisher & Son (Lim.)
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Ward and Wife v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Hertfordshire (Bishop's Stortford)—Gibbons v. Proqter
Metropolitan Police District—City and South London Railway Co. v. London County Council
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Ystradgynlais, &c. Colliery Co. v. Hughes & Co.
Metropolitan Police District—London County Council v. Candler & Son
Northumberland—Gibson v. Lawson
Metropolitan Police District—Smith v. Francis
London—Loader v. London and India Docks, &c. Committee
Glamorganshire (Swansea)—Haynes and others v. Kneeshaw, Lupton & Co.
South Shields—Kennedy v. Cowie
Hampshire (Portsmouth)—Dyson and another v. Dyson and another
Cheshire (Stockport)—Cowen v. Smethem
Kent (Gravesend)—Regina v. Huggins, Esq. and another, Justices, &c. and Humphreys
Sussex—Smith v. Fovargue
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Davies v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co.
Plymouth—Curran v. Treleaven
Cheshire (Congleton and Sandbach)—Parrott v. Perry (Perry & Son, garnishees)
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—Crestman v. Stephens
Glamorganshire (Merthyr Tydfil)—Harman v. Rees, Powell and others
Gloucestershire (Bristol)—Ball v. Baker
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Nelson & Co. v. M'Leod & Co.
London—White v. Bird
Lancashire—Fecitt v. Walsh
London—Barnes v. Gibb & Co.
Middlesex (Clerkenwell)—France v. Dutton (Dutton, claimant)
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Boumphrey v. Houghton & Co.
Metropolitan Police District—Cohen v. Lakeman
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Regina v. Wilkinson, Esq. and others, Justices, &c. and others (ex parte Leeds Union)
London—Regina v. Judge of City of London Court and Hirschman
Lancashire (Oldham)—Central Mill Co. v. Mortimer
Yorkshire (West Riding)—Mayor, &c. of Sheffield v. Wortley Union and others
Cumberland (Cockermouth)—Atkinson v. Flimby Colliery Co.
Brecon—Nott and another v. Davies
Cheshire (Stockport)—Turner and another v. Tonge and another
Durham (Darlington)—Henderson v. North-Eastern Railway Co.
Yorkshire (Huddersfield)—Whiteley v. Clough

St. Helens—St. Helens and District Trams Co. (Lim.) v. Wood
St. Helens—Same v. Same
Surrey (Lambeth)—Rathbone, the younger v. Long and another
Worcestershire (Dudley)—Marsh v. Great Western Railway Co.
Yorkshire (Leeds)—Kendall v. Kirk & Sons
Middlesex (Whitechapel)—Braidman v. Frost
London—Hast v. Lea Bridge, Leyton, and Walthamstow Trams Co.
Newcastle-upon-Tyne—Connor v. Kent
Surrey (Southwark)—Dalgleish v. Watson
Middlesex (Shoreditch)—Lane v. Ewin Bros.
Lancashire (Liverpool)—Blues v. Harrison & Co.
Carnarvonshire (Carnarvon)—Owen & Son v. Iles & Co.
London—Savage v. Taunton
Middlesex (Marylebone)—Williams v. Metropolitan Railway Co. and Metropolitan District Railway Co.
Middlesbrough—Sampson v. Harris
Surrey (Lambeth)—Heath v. O'Brien
Yorkshire (Sheffield)—Flanagan v. Armitage and another
London—Peach v. Makings
Kent (Bromley)—Neville and Wife v. Hall
Cumberland (Whitehaven)—Graham v. Cleator Iron Ore Co.
Middlesex (Brompton)—Shattock v. Rintoul, jun.
London—Regina v. Bird, Esq. and others, justices, &c. (ex parte Jones)
Surrey (Kingston)—Bec Land, House, &c. Investment Co. v. Sim
Devonshire (Exeter)—Michelmore v. Harding
Warwickshire (Birmingham)—Price and another v. Lovegrove
Surrey (Southwark)—Matthews v. Dawson
Northumberland—Spraggon v. Carling.
Middlesex (Brentford)—King v. Overton (Notley claimant)
London—Digby v. Robertson

REVENUE PAPER.

CAUSES FOR HEARING.

Attorney-General v. Mayor, &c., of Hythe and another
Same v. De Burton and others
Same v. Chapman & White

CASES AS TO INCOME-TAX AND CORPORATION DUTIES.

FOR ARGUMENT.

Whitehead, appellant, and Wilson (Surveyor of Taxes), respondent
In re Duty on the Bootham Ward Strays, York

Motions for Attachment for Contempt, 9

Divisional List.

SUMMARY.

Special Paper	10
Opposed Motions	128
Crown Paper	171
Revenue	14
Total	323

The following Courts will sit until Saturday, April 11, for the trial of the following classes of actions:—

Two Courts for Middlesex Special Juries.
One Court for Middlesex Common Juries, after the cases to be taken by the Railway Commission.
One Court for London Special Juries. A Second Court will sit after the Bankruptcy Matters are disposed of.
Two Courts for Actions without Juries.

MIDDLESEX.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 1129 in this List will not be taken before Monday, April 13.
The following Numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, April 7: Nos. 1103 to 1244, both inclusive.

1103 Smith v. Bottomley and others
1207 Willey v. Great Northern Railway Co.
1222 Barnes v. Batchelor and anr.
1234 Sherwood v. Lavington
1235 Pringle and another v. Burraston and another
1238 Roberts & Co. v. Jones
1243 Krell v. Russell, Cordner & Co.
1244 Satchwell v. Perks
1255 M'Ausland v. Johnston and another
1266 Smee v. Law's Dairy Co.
1276 Hansard Publishing Union v. Kelland and another
1280 Coburn v. Great Northern Railway Co.
1284 Nevill v. Smith
1286 Styles v. Vestry of St. George, Southwark, and others
1287 Boehmer v. Baxter
1294 Heatall v. Burrup and others
1325 Humphrey v. Leuville
1328 Martin v. Carter & Co.
890 Bird v. Swatherbridge and another
1067 Jay v. Delap
1132 Roberts and another v. Cuddon & Co.
1339 Papworth v. Punchard and others
1089 Nott v. Mile End Vestry
19 Hannay's Patents Co. (Lim.) v. Harden Star, &c. Co.
23 King and another (April 9) v. Sedgwick and another
39 Walker v. Brown
50 Dawes v. Pilcher
71 White v. Moignard
87 Cameron v. Buller
98 Wilkinson v. Clark
139 Williams v. Bourke, Sandys & Co.
204 Wynne, Roberts & others v. Manning and others
288 Morgan v. Tennant
574 Terry v. Hallett
636 Whitney v. Moignard
740 Tyrrell v. Lyon
781 Wiedemann v. Walpole
806 Dean v. Read & Campbell
841 Wade Gery and another v. Harrington
917 Head v. Easton and Church Hope Railway Co.
943 Clement v. Richards
974 Figgis v. Bruce
1005 Thompson and others v. Horsell
1009 London Electric Supply Corporation (Lim.) v. Friese, Green & Collings
1035 Newell v. Corporation of Liverpool
1129 Greenfield v. Midland Railway Co.
1161 Zapp & Bennett v. Ruddiman, Johnston & Co. (Lim.)
1165 Palmer v. Reliance Mutual Life Assurance Society
1181 Gordon v. Sheather
1197 Pearce v. Barnett
1225 School Board for London v. Johnson
1247 Emden v. Tod-Heatly
1291 Gladstone v. Kearney
1315 Worley v. Hindley
1334 Wath-upon-Dearne Main Colliery Co. v. Wakefield and Barnsley Union Bank and another
1338 Tuppeney v. New
1345 James and others v. Land and Water and others
1352 Lord Penrhyn v. Licensed Victuallers' Newspaper Co. and another
1358 Gilbert v. Perryman
1371 Holloway v. Barrow
1372 Bates v. Dickson
1397 Alldred v. West Metropolitan Trams Co.
1398 Amstell and another v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
1405 Clarke v. Tebb
1413 Foster v. Kelland
1433 Wigg v. Eidmans
1443 Chapman v. Lawson
1444 Noakes v. Swancott
1448 Parker v. Balls and another
1454 Allen v. Kelland and another
1458 Webb and another v. Taylor and others
1460 Anderson v. Dodsworth
1487 Memory v. Annesley and others
1493 Reynolds and others v. Fox and others
1495 Mara v. London and North-Western Railway Co. and others
1497 Fenwick v. Trench
1507 Stumore v. Campbell and others
1508 Gillespie v. Salmon and others
1518 Guinness, Mahon & Co. v. Heritage
1521 Lowry v. Hulbert
1525 General Stock Exchange (Lim.) v. Cronheim)
1536 Dodsworth v. North-Eastern Railway Co.
1546 Mappin v. Murray, Robertson & Co.
1551 British Water Gas Syndicate v. Nokes & Stammers
1557 Lovekin v. Fitz Payne
1566 Torkilson v. Claymore Steamship Co. (Lim.)
1567 Emberson v. South-Eastern Railway Co.
1575 Steward v. West Metropolitan Trams Co.
1580 Harry v. West Metropolitan Trams Co.
1592 Civil Service Mutual Furnishing Association (Lim.) v. Knowles
1597 Ranken and another v. Fox and others
1604 Shalless v. North Metropolitan Trams Co. (Lim.)
1611 De Pass v. Lady Lister Kaye
1612 Vallancey v. Beevor
1641 Jenkins v. Toulmin, Smith & Fuller
1649 Baghino v. Clamond Gas Co. (Lim.) and others
1651 Griffith v. Labouchere
1655 Crompton & Co. (Lim.) v. Phillips
1660 Emery v. Bateman and others
1661 Robinson v. Same
1662 Stewart and another v. Booth Brothers
Rashley v. Same
1664 Clarke v. Stratton, Gentry & Co.
1670 Barber v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society (Lim.)
1671 Bellard v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
1687 Richardson v. Livesey
1688 Rawson and another v. Birmingham Gazette Co. (Lim.)
1689 London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. East London Water Co.
1720 Langfield v. Allen
1722 Cottrell v. Lloyd and another
1724 Eriksson v. Douglas
1732 Sharp and another v. North Metropolitan Trams Co.
1735 Dawes v. Petty and another
1736 Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
1739 Botterell v. Fitt
1744 Green v. Archer
1752 Collins v Houghton
1758 Morris v. Jones & Co.
1760 Hill's Waterfall Estate, &c. Co. v. Benjamin
1769 Trachtenberg v. Binswanger
1770 Same v. Newgass and others
1771 Eyre v. Paddington Vestry
1797 Morling v. Dainty and others
1801 Pearse v. Taylor
1808 Heal v. Crosland
1815 Investment Registry, &c. (Lim.) v. Beaumont
1819 Brunlees v. Dickson
1821 Usher v. Roberts
1837 Smart v. Burton
1845 Bertie v. Ireland
1849 Marshall v. Burgoine
1852 Colbourne v. Southwark, &c. Trams Co. (Lim.)
1855 Gwynne v. Shippey
1856 Loibl v. London and St. Katherine Docks Co.
1858 Brown v. Sadler
1860 Douthwaite v. Great Northern Railway Co.
1885 Glasier and Wife v. Hastings, &c. Omnibus Co. (Lim.)
1886 Sansoms v. Rothschild
1901 Coombs v. Barber and others
1912 Boyton v. Williams
1920 Nelson v. Chapman
1925 Nobel v. Stewart

1986 Same v. Same
1987 Cowley v. Soames
1988 Bauman v. Isaacs
1990 Nobel v. Stewart
1998 Uxbridge v. Galsworthy
1992 Perry v. London Street Trams Co.
1971 Hawker v. Attenborough and others
1978 King v. Lewis
1981 Scovel v. Publishing Co. (Lim.) and others
1987 Lee-Smith v. Commercial Trust, &c. (Lim.)
1999 Linton v. Mackenzie
2001 Commercial Trust and Agency Co. (Lim.) v. Smith
2002 Hamerton v. Flatau
2003 Dicker v. Lacoma, Yonell & Co.
2004 Minter v. Hilton and others
2020 Craig v. London Street Trams Co.

COMMON JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 1306 in this List will not be taken before Monday, April 13.

1359 Harris v. Newby
1548 Gumner v. Gidjer
1549 Gidjer v. Gumner
1015 Barrow v. Guarantee Society
1239 Cox v. Read & Co.
1574 Hardy v. Barker & Co.
1581 Lagenbach v. Crist
1584 Lockhart v. Powdrill
1239 Vince v. Andrews
1344 Lane v. Vickers
1558 Whatford v. Rogers
1560 Cross & Sons v. M'Connell
1580 Gathard v. Rowe
1586 Mollett v. Smith
1632 Harford v. Jones
1632 Banks and another v. Kelly and another
1652 Carroll v. Bone
1653 Sharp v. Diprose
1658 Wright v. M'Rae
273 Ozoski v. Lee
406 Dale v. Coffin
825 Lloyd v. Mekersley
1151 Wilson v. Proprietors of the Labour Elector
1269 Olney v. Gerridge
1274 Dovaston v. Watson
1303 Virgoe, Middleton & Co. v. Peapes and another
1304 Allston & Co. v. Same
1305 Doubleday, Son & Co. v. Same
1306 J. H. Buckingham, Son & Co. v. Same
1321 Pickup v. Talbot
1398 Heitzmann v. Gowenlock
1408 Maddock v. Simpson & Co.
1462 Guinness & Co. v. Langham
1494 Gipps v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
1566 Levy & Co. v. Taylor
1642 Jones v. Dunkley
1662 Perdrey v. Sparks
1666 Lockhart v. Bunn
1669 Hutchings v. Pullen
1672 Loveland v. Hagger
1674 Pape v. White Lead Co. (Lim.)
1675 Rees v. Vallentine, Robinson & Co.
1686 De la Fosse v. Edwardes
1690 Freedman v. Percival
1691 Willson v. Cochrane
1702 Remandas v. O'Connor
1705 Warwick v. Goulding
1707 Jackman v. Baxter
1714 Hurley v. London General Omnibus Co.
1728 Carter v. Gems
1730 Stuart v. Morley
1750 White v. Law
1761 Schouten v. Hill and others
1763 Nash v. Brown
1764 Simpkins v. Same
1774 Buchler & Co. v. London and North-Western Railway Co.
1779 Price v. Crouch and another
1780 Same v. Ackermann
1788 Dowden v. White
1790 Bartlett v. Hasdicke
1791 Bonnamaur Aime v. Same
1792 Smith v. Atlas Mineral Water Co.
1799 Dimbleby v. Hoby & Co. (Lim.)
1800 Naylor v. Stanley and others
1802 Hounsell v. Land and Water (Lim.)
1803 Patten v. Jones
1804 Escott v. Southern
1811 Campbell v. Dagnall
1824 Ellis v. Grant
1825 Green v. Same
1829 Cannon v. Neighbour
1850 Studd v. Victoria Steamboat Association (Lim.)
1862 Harris v. North London Tramways Co.
1867 Abadie v. Baudouin
1871 Wright v. Barwell
1873 Hill Bros v. Wilson & Co.
1876 Biggs v. Healey
1880 Horsfall v. Howard
1883 Rayner v. Richards & Co.
1894 Reynolds v. Graham

ACTIONS WITHOUT JURIES.

Actions beyond No. 1252 in this List will not be taken before Monday, April 13.

The following Numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, April 7: Nos. 1121 to 1261, both inclusive.

1121 Morris v. Slade & Mank
1190 English, South American and Spanish Publishing Co. v. Johnson
1196 Danube Collieries, &c. Co. v. Ward
1208 Lewis v. Gastrell
1213 Airey v. Fiddimore
1219 Clee v. Cobb
1225 Payne-Gallwey v. Fraser and Fraser
1229 Miller v. Vidall and another
1236 Woodhouse Park, &c. (Lim.) v. Hall
1245 Jones v. King
1254 Champion & Brotherhood
1257 Rose v. Forster
1260 Emden v. Marsden
1261 Rodham v. Dodds
1268 Baumwoll Manufactur Von Carl Scheibler v. R. L. Gilchrest & Co. and another
1268 Wilson v. Christie
1273 Clulow v. Housley
1277 Croner v. Ward and others
1278 Green and another v. Martinne
1282 Arnold v. Heffer
1292 Brown v. Clifton
1299 B. Verity & Sons v. Terry
863 Woolford's Trustee v. Levy & Co.
886 Red Reef Gold Mining Co. (Lim.) v. North
960 M'Nay v. Alt
963 Ward v. Jones and another
988 Simpson and others v. Cleveland Extension Railway
1019 Tubbs v. Tubbs
1307 Moir v. Lyon
1312 Holdstock v. Richardson
1314 Brown v. Wright and another
1316 Paddington Land and Building Society v. Aaron
1317 Johnston v. Bellairs and another
1318 Arthy v. Harrison
1322 Oswalt & Co. v. Harris
1331 National Guardian Assurance Co. (Lim.) v. Lee
1335 Quick v. Armstrong
1336 Brimall v. Bennett
1340 Freeman v. Freeman
682 Conservators of River Thames v. Leonard
742 Forbes v. Brunetti and another
818 Braithwaite v. Middleton SS. Wharf Co.
1018 Levy & Sons v. Bensuade
1347 Strong v. Kirby
368 Kleman v. Hope
382 Lucas v. Regent's Canal, &c. Co. (Lim.)
634 Fenton v. Thompson and others
734 North Staffordshire Pneumatic Pulverizer Co. v. Burton
835 Young v. American Telephone Co.
1099 Bicknell v. Horsfall
1126 Whitmore v. Meade
1215 Spencer v. Tucker
70A Snow v. Colonna
352 Crowther v. Turner
681 Orengo v. Levy
777 John v. Vickers
1237 Tarn v. Cloete and others
1350 Gwyn v. Fletcher
613 Watkins v. Smith
1206 James v. Beeper
1252 Edwards & Co. v. Ellery & Lund
1353 Hoare and another v. Oronzo
1354 Lepard & Smiths v. Walker
1356 Samworth v. Powell
1366 Saffery and another v. Newman
1360 Hedger v. Payne and another
1364 National Standard, &c. Investment Co. v. Williams
3 Boyd v. Farrar
21 Tilt Cove Copper Co. (Lim.) v. Comptoir d'Escompte and others
41 Edwards v. Bumpus
72 Head v. Bumpus
138 Rudd v. Owen
321 Groth v. British Tanning Co. (Lim.)
388A Benson and another v. Dames
666 Watkins v. Chaney
711 Belinson v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co.
789 Elise & Co. v. Le Crespigny
912 Lafone v. Ronaldson & Co.
945 Kilkivain Mines (Lim.) v. Appleby
950 Fraser v. Genoa Waterworks Co. (Lim.)
1031 Bishop of Bangor and others v. Parry
1102 Jenner v. National Provincial Bank of England (Lim.)
1140 Delta Metal Co. (Lim.) v. Maxim-Nordenfeldt Gun, &c. Co. (Lim.)
1166 Dore v. Fletcher
1176 Mitchell v. De Veysey and another
1180 Murphy v. London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (Lim.)
1200 Peat v. Webster
1205 Lambourn Valley Railway Co. v. Billups
1216 Tripp v. Hall
1250 White & Sons (Lim.) and others v. Batey & Co. (Lim.)
1300 Native Dog Creek, &c. Co. v. Earle
1319 Jenner v. Thomas and another
1365 Schaap, Hilburn & Co. v. Jackson
1378 St. George's Hospital v. Stein
1379 Lee v. Barry Dock and Railways Co.
1380 Lyle v. Annesley
1385 Van Knoop v. Moss and others
1394 Keynes v. Offord
1399 Guiterman & Co. v. Dreyfus
1401 Woolford & Sons and another v. Weatherall
1403 Radford v. Crane
1404 New Westminster Brewery Co. v. Rothschild
1407 Daniel v. Walker
1409 Wilson & Whitworth v. Ilcs
1412 Société Générale de Paris v. Cheque Bank (Lim.)
1414 Levy v. Jessop
1415 Real and Personal Advance Co. v. Westminster Advance, &c. Bank
1418 Beilby v. Frejus Oil Co. (Lim.)
1421 Jones v. Whitlock
1429 Davis v. Ellenborough
1431 Steamship Insurance Syndicate v. Mortgage Insurance Corporation
1439 Lazarus v. Dixon
1440 Lawton v. Tucker
1445 Carlin v. Corsellis
1446 Harper v. Henderson
1449 Plumbly v. Schotborgh
1452 Oxley v. Howard
1453 Budd v. Barnes
1455 Walmisley v. Helby
1457 Deli Bedagei Tobacco Plantations (Lim.) v. Martin
1458 Wills v. Freeman
1466 Hubbard v. Staunton
1468 Allbutt v. Detroit Breweries (Lim.)
1470 Sanderson v. Condie
1471 Scott v. Same
1472 Aplin and others v. Herzberg and another
1474 Thorne v. Miller
1475 Bolling and Lowe v. Birdseye & Co.
1476 Levy v. Roberts
1477 Bone v. Bird
1480 Pocock and another v. Thorn
1483 Goslin v. Agar
1486 Middleton v. Baines & Co.
1498 General Stock Exchange &c. Co. v. Teale
1503 Peek v. Cock
1504 Middlesex Joint Stock Banking, &c. Co. (Lim.) v. Berry
1505 Hamerton v. Bex
1509 Abud v. Mansfield
1511 Buckley v. Brodie
1515 Waterloo House and Swan and Edgar (Lim.) v. Baker
1517 Seaton v. Maxwell
1523 Wightman & Co. v. Leuville
1524 Cookson v. Barker
1529 Kitchin v. Beckwith
1531 Robinson v. Dennis
1537 Harvey v. Sherwood
1540 Osborn v. Griffith
1541 Thompson v. General Stock Exchange, &c. Co. (Lim.)
1544 Oppenheim v. Neild
1553 Hargan v. Kirby and others
1556 Hill v. Adams
1562 Clayton v. Crisp
1563 Grose v. Wadge
1564 Cole v. Howell
1565 Ackland v. Ackland
1571 Lilley v. Smith
1578 Norton v. Burr and another
1583 Lamplough v. Harries
1589 Harrod v. Elliott and others
1593 Hogarth v. Nanson
1594 Jackson v. Crowther
1595 Lavington v. Richardson
1598 Bertrand v. Escarl
1600 Hirst v. Page

1602 Radford & Co. v. Brown, Cork & Co.
1605 Castle v. Payer and others
1606 Wightman v. Barrow
1613 Quartermaine v. Blumson
1614 Curtis v. Hoare
1616 Beasley v. Bull
1619 Boecher & Co. and others v. Henley's Telegraph Works (Lim.)

SUMMARY.

Actions entered for Trial to April 7, 1891.

Middlesex—Special Jury	250
Common Jury	205
London—Special Jury	68
Common Jury	51
Without Juries	628
Total	1,203

NOTE.—This Summary shows the total number of actions for trial up to and inclusive of the above date, and includes the actions contained in the foregoing printed Lists.

LONDON.

SPECIAL JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 2150 in this List will not be taken before Monday, April 13.

The following numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday April 7: Nos. 12 to 674, both inclusive.

12 Leadville Mines v. Green
178 Harris-James v. New Terras Tin Mining Co.
294 R. R. Dobell & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co.
416 Low v. Low
674 Hornoastle v. Smith
803 Lamb v. London and India Docks Joint Committee
578 Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co. v. Seaward Bros.
1028 Cole & Co. v. Same
911 M'Fariane v. Lonargan
1081 Dobson v. Cottam
1283 Mora, Ona & Co. v. Watts, Ward & Co.
1456 Gjersoe v. Southampton Naval Works (Lim.)
1569 Davis v. Zambesi Gaza Concessions Co. (Lim.)
1609 Kirschbaum and another v. Decker & Co.
1618 Reich & Co. v. Gardiner
1703 Dangar, Grant & Co. v. Gospel Oak Iron, &c. Co.
1777 Aktiebolaget - Bodtraakfors v. Smith & Co.
1789 Johns v. Fuller and another
1806 Fuller v. Cooper and another
1813A Jeffrey v. Crawford and others
1828 Sanders v. New Westminster Brewery Co.
1831 Horsnell v. Great Eastern Railway Co.
1842 Nelson, Donkin & Co. v. Lomer & Co.
1864 Adamson v. 'Bayonne' SS. Co. (Lim.)
1900 Neilans v. Cuthbertson
1907 Wilks & Co. v. O'Hagan
1909 Bewick and others v. Sllati River, &c. Co. (Lim.) and others
1919 Marten v. Munich Assurance Co. (Lim.)
1984 Honischer & Co. v. Cresswell & Co.
1989 C. Churchill & Co. (Lim.) and others v. National SS. Co. (Lim.)
1992 Evelyn v. Hurlbert
2007 Naylor v. Daws and others
2009 Clark v. Alderson
2015 Stanton v. Freebody
2025 Clubb v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co.
2037 Urling v. Nordaas
2055 Scott v. Union Discount Co.
2069 Marchioness of Huntly v. Bedford Hotel Co. (Lim.)
2088 Central Bank v. Hawkins and another
2097 Foster v. Grosvenor & Co.
2117 Smith & Wife v. Bailey and another
2138 Ames v. Great Western Railway Co.
2474 Bannister v. Same
2150 Flynn v. Worthington & Co.
2155 Were v. Darby & Co. (Lim.)
2158 Farmer v. Poulter & Sons (Lim.)
2175 Dinn v. O'Malley and the Star
2192 Hogarth v. Staley, Radford & Co.
2212 Pinto v. Avies
2224 J. & C. Harrison v. Dreyfus & Co.
2228 Redfern, Alexander & Co. v. McKeone & Co.
2240 Vickers v. Gardiner
2282 Standard Bank of South Africa v. Marcus
2282A Calvert v. Inglis
2289 Wilson, Sons & Co. (Lim.) v. 'Lanarkshire' Ship Co. (Lim.)
2299 Marx & Co. v. Moxon, Alger & Co.
2322 Marten v. Munich Assurance Co. (Lim.)
2338 Brown, Janson & Co. v. Ward, Hawkins and others
2339 Blackater v. Paul
2352 Lilly, Wilson & Co. v. Mark, Whitwell & Sons
2389 Crown Accident Insurance Co. (Lim.) v. Scottish Accident Insurance Co. (Lim.) and others
2403 Sir W. Gordon Cumming, Bart. v. Wilson and others
2449 Bourke, Sandys & Co. v. Vivian
2452 Steinfeld v. Morris
2455 Maclay and another v. Hine Brothers
2467 Miln v. Easton
2488 Bolitho and others v. Guy and others
2506 Austin v. Alexander, Maw & Co.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING. — The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, March 24, Mr. Wheeler in the chair. The subject for discussion: 'That all bonâ fide communications made by trade protection societies in answer to inquiries are privileged' was opened by Mr. Rupert Blagden; Mr. E. H. Thirlby and Mr. John J. Seager opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative, Messrs. Crawford, Aston, Meadmore, Windsor, Watkins, and Reed; in the negative, Messrs. Parkes, W. C. Arnold, F. E. Arnold, Windsor, and Harcourt.—Mr. Blagden replied.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was carried by a majority of seven.—The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society on Tuesday, April 7, is: 'That it is inadvisable to interfere with the present relationship between owners and occupiers of house property as to the incidence of local taxation.'

LIVERPOOL.—The next meeting of this association will be held on Monday, April 6. The chair will be taken at 5.30 P.M. by Sydney Style, Esq., Solicitor. Subject for discussion: 'Does the present system of appointing trustees require any alterations such as those proposed by the Public Trustee Bill and the Trust Companies Bill?' Mr. E. Mather in the affirmative; Mr. J. Hood in the negative.

ILLEGAL ARREST.—At the County Court at Swansea, on March 25, Judge Williams gave his decision in the case of Rigby & Bowden v. Hindle, plaintiffs, having sought to recover damages for being illegally arrested whilst serving on the ship Starlight at Savannah. His Honour found that Captain Hindle induced the justices of the peace to sign a warrant upon which the men were imprisoned for larceny, but were not afterwards brought before the judicial tribunal, but were taken on board the ship in irons. Believing Bowden's description of what he had been subjected to, being compelled to sleep in a place swarming with vermin, he assessed the damages at 20*l.* and costs.

THE CORONER AS INTERPRETER.—Without prejudice to the capacity for office displayed by lawyers in other spheres of usefulness, we have always maintained that the functions of the coroner can best be exercised by a medical man. The subject-matter comes naturally within his proper sphere of thought. Provided, in addition, as he must be, with an appropriate knowledge of law, his position is really that of an expert, and his judicial opinion of necessity reliable in a corresponding degree. Moreover, his very familiarity with medical technicalities is in his favour. A somewhat amusing illustration of this latter point occurred a few days ago at an inquest in Chelsea, where the descriptive terms employed by a medical witness were as Greek to a jury of workmen until they were properly translated into good coroner's English. We do not for a moment pretend that it is expedient or necessary for medical men in giving evidence to confine themselves to a technical nomenclature. In this matter, if in anything, simplicity is the essence of good expression. It is obvious, however, that whatever care is taken to observe this desirable clearness of speech, the need of explanation must arise from time to time, and with it the medical coroner's opportunity.—Lancet.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM APRIL 6 TO APRIL 11.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	April 6	April 7	April 8	April 9	April 10	April 11
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	—	—	—	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—
19	Judge Barber	Derby	Derby	Belper	Chesterfield	Chesterfield	—
28	Judge Jordan	Stoke	Newcastle	Lichfield	Uttoxeter	Tunstall	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
55	Judge Machonochie	Shaftesbury	Wincanton	Crewkerne	Yeovil	Salisbury	—
58	Judge Edge	—	Exeter	Exeter	Exeter	Newton Abbot	—

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, April 6.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Tuesday, April 7.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Bolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Wednesday, April 8.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Thursday, April 9.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Bolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

Friday, April 10.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Clowes.

Saturday, April 11.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Bolt. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Jackson.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF MILLTOWN died at the Imperial Hotel Torquay, on March 24. The deceased, who was the seventh Earl of Milltown, was the third son of the fourth earl, and was born in 1837. He graduated B.A. in the University of Dublin in 1858, was called to the Irish bar in 1860, and last year succeeded his brother in the title. He has twice been Chamberlain to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

MR. JAMES WINKWORTH WINSTANLEY, barrister-at-law, who died on Sunday, March 29, at his residence, Hove, Brighton, aged seventy-five, was registrar of the Chancery Court for the County Palatine of Lancaster for about thirty years. Mr. Winstanley was called to the bar on June 11, 1839, and retired from the registrarship about ten years ago. A son of Mr. Winstanley is registrar for the Manchester District of the Chancery Court.

MR. THOMAS RICHARD TUCKER HODGSON, clerk of the peace for Birmingham, died on March 31, at his residence, Hunton Hill, Gravelly Hill. The deceased gentleman, who was upwards of eighty years of age, had been in delicate health for some months past. He was admitted a solicitor in 1835, and in 1847 was elected to serve on the Birmingham Town Council, of which body he was for many years an active member, being appointed an alderman, and, in 1855, mayor. He was one of the first mayors of the borough to give municipal entertainments. He was elected deputy clerk of the peace in 1864, and clerk of the peace in 1868.

MR. EDWARD WAUGH, solicitor, Cockermouth, who represented that borough from 1880 until it was disfranchised in 1885, died somewhat suddenly at his residence, The Burroughs, Papcastle. He was a justice of the peace for Cumberland, an alderman of the county council, and from time to time held many offices of trust and responsibility in the county. He was in his seventy-fifth year.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

THE Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. G. Harris Lea, of the Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn, to be the Judge of the Suffolk County Court (Circuit No. 33), in succession to the late Sir Francis Roxburgh, Q.C.

The Queen has approved of the appointment by the Home Secretary of Mr. Alexander Henry, of the Northern Circuit, to the Recordership of Carlisle, in succession to the late Mr. Leofric Temple, Q.C. Mr. Henry was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1866.

Mr. John Moodie (of the firm of Moodie & Mills), of 30 Basinghall Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Moodie was admitted in 1881.

Mr. Henry Warren Jones, M.A. (of the firm of Nicol, Son & Jones), of 39 Lime Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Jones was admitted in 1873.

Mr. Frank William Brazil (of the firm of Sandom Kersey & Knight), of 52 Gracechurch Street, E.C., 12 High Street, Deptford, and Kelso Cottage, Morden Hill Lewisham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths' Mr. Brazil was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arnold Austin (of the firm of Austin & Austin), of 8 Union Court, Old Broad Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Austin was admitted in 1877.

Mr. Arthur James Isard, of 14 Queen Street, Cheapside, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Isard was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Walter Edmund Brook, of 3 Clement's Lane, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Brook was admitted in 1885.

Mr. William Lovell, M.A. (of the firm of Lovell, Son & Pitfield), of 3 Gray's Inn Square, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lovell was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Charles William Inman (of the firm of Wontner & Sons), of St. Paul's Chambers, Ludgate Hill, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Inman was admitted in 1879.

Mr. Arthur Herbert Onslow, of Cheltenham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Onslow was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur George Symonds (of the firm of Symonds & Son), of Dorchester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Symonds was admitted in 1883.

Mr. Alfred Henry Thorn, of Ironbridge, Salop, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Thorn was admitted in 1888.

Mr. Frederick Williams Bayley, of Newcastle-under-Lyme, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bayley was admitted in 1885.

Mr. William Dawber Lord, of Hull, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Lord was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur William Barnes (of the firm of Barnes & Son), of Lichfield, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Barnes was admitted in 1884.

Mr. John Jones Morris (of the firm of Brease & Co.), of Blaenau Festiniog, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Morris was admitted in 1880.

Mr. C. E. Bonner, B.A., of Spalding, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bonner was admitted in 1885, and is the registrar of the Spalding County Court.

An Apology from a Judge.—At the conclusion of the Liverpool Assizes yesterday Mr. Justice Day said he had to withdraw and apologise for some remarks he had made in his charge to the grand jury condemning the arrangement of the cells in St. George's Hall beneath the Courts in which prisoners were detained pending trial. He had since making the remarks personally visited the cells at the instance of the corporation, and found no ground for complaint, and his observations had been founded on misapprehension.

The Law of Pawn.—An interesting legal question arose at Salford on March 25. Some months ago William Edwards pledged a watch worth 7*s.* with a pawnbroker named Riley. At the same time a watch worth 5*l.* was pawned by another person, and the shop assistant, while giving the proper tickets to the contracting parties, by a misadventure placed the corresponding check tickets on the wrong watches. Consequently, when Edwards went to redeem his 7*s.* timepiece, the shopman handed him the one worth 5*l.* Riley now charged him with stealing the watch, and he was committed for trial. A conviction in a precisely similar case was appealed against some years ago, when fourteen judges were equally divided in opinion as to whether the retention of the watch amounted to a larceny.

The Hearing of Probate and Matrimonial Causes.—The following are the arrangements made for hearing probate and matrimonial causes during the ensuing Easter sittings—viz. causes for hearing before the Court itself will be taken on Monday, April 13, to Saturday, April 18; Monday, April 27, to Saturday, May 2; Monday, May 11, to Friday, May 15 inclusive, in the following order: (1) Undefended matrimonial causes; (2) defended matrimonial causes; and (3) probate causes. Matrimonial and probate causes will also be taken between April 8, 11, 20, and 25, and May 4 and 9, when Admiralty cases are not ready, of which notice will be inserted in the daily lists from time to time. Jury causes will not be taken during the Easter sittings. Summonses will be heard at chambers at 10.15, and motions will be heard in Court at 11.30 on Tuesday, April 7, and on every succeeding Tuesday during the sittings.

Presumption of Life.—It is proposed by the Lord Advocate to alter the law of Scotland as regards presumption of life. At present the rule, briefly stated, is that, after the expiration of seven years from a person's being heard of, the Court can grant the income of his property to the person entitled to succeed: and, after fourteen years' absence, the capital of movable estate; and, after twenty years' absence, any heritable estate. The proposal of a Government bill introduced by the Lord Advocate is that, when a person has disappeared and has not been heard of for seven years, the Court, on the petition of persons entitled to property on his death may, after such procedure and inquiry by advertisement or otherwise as it may direct, find that the person has disappeared and find what was the date on which he was last known to be alive, and further find that on the facts proved he died at some specified time within seven years after the date on which he was last known to be alive. Where there is no sufficient evidence that he died at any definite date, the finding will be that he is to be presumed to have died exactly seven years after the date on which he was last known to be alive. Thereupon it will be competent to the petitioner to 'make up titles' and to enter into possession of the property and sell or dispose of it, just as if the missing person had actually died at the date fixed on. However, nothing in the bill is to entitle anyone to any part of the intestate movable succession of a person who has disappeared, if this latter was not a domiciled Scotchman at the date at which he is proved or presumed to have died. Notwithstanding a judgment of the Court, the person who has disappeared, or any person claiming superior title through him, is to be entitled to demand the property or the price thereof, if sold, including the income accrued thereon, 'all so far as not bonâ fide spent or consumed,' from the person taking possession in this way or from anyone acquiring it from him by gratuitous title. But after a further space of thirteen years this claim will be barred. The bill is not intended to apply to any claim under a policy of assurance upon the life of a person who has disappeared.

BIRTHS.

On March 21, at Cornwall House, Dorchester, the wife of Gustavus Phelps Symes, Solicitor, of a son.

On March 25, at Roseneath, Hoylake, Cheshire, the wife of T. F. Squarey, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On March 23, the wife of Thomas H. E. Foord, of Forest Hill, Kent, and Philpot Lane, E.C., Solicitor, of a son.

On March 29, at Polmear, Camelford, the wife of H. H. M. Lawrence, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On March 28, at Healington, York, John Arthur Nicholson, of York and Osbaldwick, Solicitor, to Mary Gertrude, younger daughter of Francis Carr, of Healington.

On March 31, at the Parish Church, Horsham, Sussex, Alexander Claude Forster Boulton, of Osgoode Hall, Toronto, Barrister-at-Law, to Florence Marian, only child of Henry Harms, of Harstleigh, Horsham.

On March 31, at the Parish Church, Knighton, Leicestershire, James Brush, second son of the late Martin Boshell, of Bogotá, Colombia, to Mabel (May), second daughter of Thomas Watts, Solicitor, Leicester.

On March 31, at the Parish Church, Sonning, Berks, Arthur Wilberforce Bird, Solicitor, Bristol, youngest son of Edward Wheler Bird, of Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol, late Madras Civil Service, to Alice Laura, only surviving daughter of George Shackel, of Erleigh Court, Reading.

DEATHS.

On March 25, Jemima Lock, widow of the late James Muirhead, Esq., Advocate, and Professor of Civil Law at the University of Edinburgh, only surviving daughter of the late Georga Eastlake, Esq., of Plymouth, Admiralty Law Agent and Deputy Judge-Advocate of the Fleet, aged 62.

On March 25, at Hastings, Matilda, widow of the late J. D. Marsden, Esq., Solicitor, formerly of Friday Street, Cheapside, and Edmonton.

On March 28, at 2 Hyde Park Mansions, Elizabeth Ann, wife of J. H. Nelson, Esq., Barrister-at-Law (late M.C.S.), aged 51.

On March 29, at his residence, Hove, Brighton, James Winckworth Winstanley, late of Riverside, Chester, Barrister-at-Law, J.P., aged 75 years.

	Per Annum £ s. d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3 4 0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.

Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.

Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

Sir James Stephen's dignified farewell to the judges and the bar forms a pathetic close to his brilliant judicial career. We deeply regret that failing health has prematurely brought about his retirement and inflicted on the country a loss of judicial strength which can hardly be repaired. We cannot but deplore also the unnecessary pain which must have been caused to a sensitive and generous nature by much that has appeared in the press during the past few weeks, and we rejoice in being able to think that no word of ours can have contributed to that suffering.

We print elsewhere an article by the learned editor of the 'Annual Practice' upon the question of the necessity for the appointment of an additional judge. We quite agree with our contributor that a readjustment of the duties of the judicial staff upon the principle of interchangeability might, at any rate, temporarily meet the difficulty, and we think the experiment might well be tried.

On Tuesday, the opening-day of the Easter Sittings, there were only ten judges of the Queen's Bench Division sitting in Court. Mr. Justice Wright was at chambers. The three absentees were Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Justice Wills, and Mr. Justice Charles. On Wednesday the two last-named judges were sitting, but Mr. Justice Lawrance was absent, and the Lord Chief Justice sat in Appeal Court I., so that there were again only ten judges available for the Courts of the Queen's Bench Division.

Rumour is, of course, busy with some favoured names in connection with the vacancy upon the bench of the Queen's Bench Division caused by the retirement of Mr. Justice Stephen. It is thought by some that it will be filled by the appointment of Mr. Bosanquet, Q.C., of the Oxford Circuit. There can be but little doubt, however, that Mr. Henn Collins, Q.C., is considered by the bar generally to possess greater qualifications for the judicial office, but the appointment of Mr. Bosanquet would doubtless be regarded as satisfactory, and his claims would seem to be at least equal to those of Mr. Gully, Q.C., or Mr. Bigham, Q.C., who have also been mentioned in the Times in connection with the appointment. Mr. Bosanquet went the Northern Circuit as commissioner of assize during the sitting of the Parnell Commission.

'Justices sit to grant licenses, not to suppress public-houses,' writes 'Amicus Cauponum' in his pointed comments on Sharp v. Wakefield and its results (see ante, p. 310), which we print elsewhere. 'Will you tell me,' asks he, 'that it would be a legal and regular exercise of a judicial discretion to reduce the number of houses which did the least business?' 'Nux ecce,' as Persius might say, 'facillima frangi!' Most undoubtedly such a reduction, as being founded on a principle applicable to licensing (though, perhaps, an unsound one), would be in conformity with the exercise of a judicial discretion. Amongst refusals to renew which would not be in the exercise of a judicial discretion we may mention refusals grounded on the redness of the hair of the applicant, or on his persistent neglect to take off his hat to the parson of the parish, or on his being a member of an association for the support of political principles distasteful to the majority of the licensing justices. We incline to think, however, that tied houses might be extinguished in the exercise of a judicial discretion, and also, though with great doubt, that all female licensees might be judicially swept away, for the Legislature seems to have evinced a clear preference for males in allowing (see section 51 of the Licensing Act, 1872) 'the defendant and his wife to give evidence in all cases of summary proceedings under that Act.'

MR. CHAMIER has kindly favoured us with a correction, which we print elsewhere, of an obiter dictum last week (ante, p. 222) as to the date of the commencement of the Tithe Act. In addition to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 69, s. 11, the amending Act referred to by Mr. Chamier, our readers may refer to 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 10; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, s. 13; and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54, s. 3 (which enactments, however, do not fix any other dates for payment of tithe than January 1 and July 1 or April 1 and October 1), and to the very special 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, s. 1, which appears to admit of half-yearly days of payment other than these. It may be added that, in the many cases in which the tithe is only collected annually, it is payable within the meaning of the Act on the half-yearly dates originally fixed under the Tithe Commutation Acts.

THE Tithe Act, 1891, now (see ante, p. 222) in operation, contains one provision of pressing importance to landlords and their agents. We refer to subsection 6 of section 2, the effect of which seems to be that, in the majority of cases where tithe is payable, that is, in all cases where the contract of tenancy binds the tenant to pay the tithe, a certain 'notice of such liability' will have, for the future safety of the landlord, to be served by every landlord on every tithe-owner to whom tithe is payable in respect of the land demised. The subsection, omitting immaterial words, is as follows: 'Where the occupier . . . is liable under any contract made before the passing of this Act to pay the tithe rent-charge, and is consequently liable' [see section 1, subsection 2] 'to pay the amount thereof to the owner . . . the owner shall serve notice of such liability on the owner of the tithe rent-charge . . . Any owner of the lands who fails to serve such notice as aforesaid on the owner of the tithe rent-charge shall not be entitled to recover from the occupier any sum which he has paid on account of tithe rent-charge as aforesaid, unless and until he has, after notice to the occupier of his application for the same, obtained from the County Court a certificate that there was good and sufficient cause for the failure to give such notice, and that the occupier has not been prejudiced thereby.' It is not clear within what time the notice ought to be given. It is required, with a view to serving the occupier with notice of application, for a receiving order to be made by the County Court in favour of the tithe-owner. Perhaps the Rules of Procedure to be made under subsection 7 of section 2 'by the Lord Chancellor after consultation with the Rule Committee of County Court Judges' may throw some light on the matter, for it is by one of these forthcoming rules that the manner of service on the occupier in addition to the owner is to be 'prescribed.'

IT is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the decision in Barrow v. Isaacs, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 179, which we report this month. The facts were simply these. The plaintiff had sued in ejectment for breach of covenant against underletting without his consent, the breach having arisen out of pure negligence on the part of the defendant's solicitor, the underlessee having been a person to whose respectability and solvency no objection could have been taken, and no damage having been done to the plaintiff by the underletting. Yet Mr. Justice Day, and subsequently the Court of Appeal, declined to grant any relief against the forfeiture. The breach of the covenant against assigning or underletting without leave of the lessor is one of those excepted from the operation of section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, but the Court does not rest its judgment on that ground. 'If the sole objection of granting relief in the present case were the negligence of the defendant's agent,' observed Lord Esher, 'I should, notwithstanding that negligence, come to the conclusion that the Court ought to relieve against this forfeiture, but I do not think that this is a case of mistake. It is a case of mere forgetfulness, and as I think this is not a mistake, then the case does not come under any of the heads under which equity will grant relief.' The judgment of Lord Justice Kay, in which Lord Justice Lopes concurred, proceeds on the ground that the defendant was responsible for the negligence of his solicitor, and the authorities cited in that judgment seem to show conclusively that no 'head of equity' under which relief could be given existed in the case. Mr. Bolton, Mr. Warmington, and Mr. Cobb, who have backed the Conveyancing Act Amendment Bill, by which it is proposed that the exception of breach by assigning or underletting without consent from the operation of the law of relief should be abolished, must very greatly rejoice in Barrow v. Isaacs, for a greater case of hardship has seldom occurred.

Stevens v. Marston, which we also report this month (60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 192), decides two questions of great difficulty and interest upon the construction of the Bills of Sale Acts. It was there held by the Court of Appeal (1) that a distress on the goods of a publican-tenant for money owing by him to a brewer-landlord in pursuance of a clause of the contract of tenancy was illegal, inasmuch as the clause constituted 'a license to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt,' within section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and the contract had not been registered as a bill of sale; but (2) that the contract itself was not invalidated by the invalidity of the distress clause. It is noticeable that the case originally came before Mr. Justice Denman, who, somewhat doubting his own decision in Pullbrook v. Ashby, 56 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 376 (which is now affirmed), had left the parties to move for judgment. On both points we think the judgment unimpeachably correct. On the first point there does not seem to be any authority, except Pullbrook v. Ashby and Hughes v. Little, 55 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 503, but it is impossible to see how the fact that the debt is a future one can prevent the clear words of section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, from operating. On the second point there is abundance of authority (see Baker v. Hedgecock, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 889, and the cases there cited), in addition to In re Burdett, 57 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 263, and In re Yates, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 697, cited in the judgment. If the Court had decided otherwise on this second point the consternation amongst the lessors of tied houses would have been only second to that excited by Sharp v. Wakefield, for every lessee of a tied house would have had to be asked to assent to a new lease.

We printed last week (ante, p. 230) ten formal objections to the Public Trustee Bill formulated by the Sheffield District Incorporated Law Society. Some of them—for instance, the first, that officers of a public department cannot satisfactorily transact trust business which is of a kind 'which essentially requires personal knowledge of the circumstances of each case, and tact and delicacy of management'—have very great force in them; but we cannot agree with others, especially the second, that 'there is no evidence that any legislation whatever is required.' The foundation of certain trust companies and the comparative success which they have already achieved show, we think, beyond a doubt that the present haphazard system is not satisfactory. One reform is urgently needed, as we have frequently pointed out in these columns (and we observe that the committee of the Birmingham Law Society are of the same opinion), and that is, that executors and trustees should here, as in the United States and the colonies, be primâ facie entitled to remuneration out of the fund which they administer. It would not, of course, follow that they would in every case accept this remuneration. Where the estate was small and the beneficiaries poor, they would almost as a matter of course decline it. But numerous cases occur where enormous sums are administered for the benefit of comparatively rich persons by comparatively poor ones without any remuneration and with unceasing worry and vexation. Solicitors can obviate such a state of things in the case of wills by insisting on a sufficient legacy to an executor in every case until the law is altered as it ought to be.

We are glad to see that the Times is fully alive to the importance of the Jackson Case. It now appears to be absolutely necessary to reconsider our whole law of marriage and the relationship of the sexes. The law of breach of promise, by which a man must perform his promise at the risk of his life; the law of the nubile age, by which marriage between a boy of fourteen and a girl of twelve is valid, and the consent of parents or guardians, though nominally required, may be easily misrepresented to exist—a point which we hope to see dealt with by the Bishop of London's bill to amend the Marriage Act of 1823; the law of liability of a husband for his wife's debts and torts; the law by which a married woman alone of all debtors is exempt from imprisonment, when she can pay her debts but will not; and, lastly, the law of divorce, by which a woman may leave her husband for no reason, good or bad, the day after marriage, with no remedy but a judicial separation—all these and many more points in our law of marriage require immediate and careful consideration and revision.

In the case of The Burnley Equitable Co-operative and Industrial Society (Lim.) v. Casson, 60 Law J. Rep. M. C. 59, the Court had to consider the question whether a contract of apprenticeship is necessarily a personal one. The defendant had bound himself by deed to the society to serve them as an apprentice for seven years to be instructed in a certain trade. The society was registered under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 45). The Court were of opinion that the contract of apprenticeship is not always a personal one, and held that it was no objection to the validity of the deed in question that the society was a corporation incapable of giving personal care and instruction to the apprentice. The only authority in favour of the contention that the contract is necessarily a personal one, is a passage in Bacon's Abridgment, tit. 'Master and Servant (E),' but Mr. Justice Hawkins, in giving the considered judgment of the Court, said: 'I can find no case in which anything has been said against the validity of an apprenticeship indenture merely upon the ground that the master to whom the apprentice was bound was a corporation. The corporation in such a case undertake nothing except to give the best instruction they can through their managers.'

Another of the numerous decisions upon the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, is reported in the April number of the Law Journal Reports under the title of The Earl of Aylesford v. Earl Poulett, 60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 204. In this case the trustees of large family estates, in exercise of a power conferred upon them by a special Act of Parliament, mortgaged the fee-simple for 232,000*l.* for the purpose of paying off the debts of the late tenant-for-life, who had mortgaged his life-interest for 192,000*l.* to the same mortgagees. The mortgagees retained the latter sum out of the advance, paying over the balance of 40,000*l.* only to the trustees. The same solicitors acted for the mortgagees in these transactions; and the questions raised in an action against the trustees of the settlement was, whether the mortgagees' solicitors were entitled to charge the scale fee on the whole amount of the second statutory mortgage, or whether this mortgage was to be treated as a further charge within rule 10, in which case the plaintiff did not object to allow the scale-fee on the 40,000*l.*, though this was more than would have been allowed according to schedule II. The case forms no exception to the difference of judicial opinion which has so frequently occurred in the construction of the orders and rules, Mr. Justice North holding that the mortgage ought to be treated as a further charge merely, while the Court of Appeal reversed his decision. 'The second mortgage,' said Lord Justice Lindley, 'is an entirely new mortgage, made under statutory authority and under the circumstances described in the Act. It is in truth and in substance a new mortgage. It is not a mortgage on the same property, if we understand by the word "property" that over which the mortgagees had their security, for their mortgage was only on the life estate. It is not by the same parties. In my opinion it is neither more nor less than a new mortgage. It is true it is a further charge in the sense that only 40,000*l.* was advanced in money, but that does not make it a further charge within rule 10.' The difference in the remuneration, according to the construction adopted, was that between 455*l.* and 145*l.*; but, apart from the amount involved, the case is of general importance to solicitors with reference to their remuneration when one mortgage is paid off by means of money raised by another mortgage and the same solicitors act for the mortgagees on each occasion.

There appears to be ample authority for Mr. Justice Chitty's decision in Lawrence v. Edwards (Notes of Cases, p. 51), that the office of parish clerk is a temporal one. Therefore his lordship was right in holding that he had jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the defendant in that case from acting as parish clerk. The authorities, although not very numerous, range from The Case of a Parish Clerk, decided in the reign of James I. (reported 13 Co. Rep. 70), down to Tarrant v. Haxby, 1 Burr. 367. The temporal nature of the office of parish clerk is also shown by Rex v. Warren, Cowp. 370, and Rex v. Davies, 9 D. & R. 234, where it was laid down that a mandamus would lie to a clergyman to restore a parish clerk who had been deprived of his office without sufficient cause. In Lawrence v. Edwards the plaintiff had obtained an interim injunction restraining the defendant from receiving the emoluments of the office of parish clerk. It appeared that the rector of the parish had been adjudicated bankrupt, and a writ of sequestration was issued. The bishop then appointed and licensed a stipendiary curate to perform the ecclesiastical duties of the parish. During the sequestration the office of parish clerk became vacant, and the curate, considering himself the minister for the time being, within canon 91, appointed the defendant to be parish clerk. Subsequently the bankrupt rector appointed the plaintiff to the same office. On December 5 last Mr. Justice Chitty decided that the appointment of parish clerk had been rightly made by the rector, notwithstanding the sequestration, and granted the interim injunction referred to (vide LAW JOURNAL, 1890, Notes of Cases, p. 155). The plaintiff then sought to have the defendant restrained from acting as parish clerk, and, as we have before stated, Mr. Justice Chitty gave the plaintiff the relief he asked for.

MANY thinkers like Mr. Herbert Spencer and Mr. Auberon Herbert (the spoiled child of politics, as, we think, the Saturday Review once called him) are disposed to believe that we attempt far too much by legislation, and no doubt the billmongers in Parliament do aim at very minute interference with men's affairs. But we are far behind our American cousins. Bailie Nicol Jarvie, in Scott's novel, thought that suicide ought to be put down. The New York Legislature, it appears, is of opinion that blindness ought to be put down, for it has recently passed an Act for the prevention of that affliction. The Act declares that 'should any midwife or nurse, having charge of any infant in this state, notice that one or both eyes of such infant are inflamed or reddened at any time within two weeks after its birth, it shall be the duty of such midwife or nurse having charge of such infant to report the fact in writing, within six hours, to the health officer or some legally qualified practitioner of medicine of the city, town, or district in which the parents of the infant reside.' Health officers and doctors in the State of New York will certainly have no sinecure, as it is tolerably certain that, either from crying or some cause not necessarily connected with the eyesight, every child's eyes will be more or less 'inflamed or reddened' at some period within two weeks of its birth; and we should imagine that redness or inflammation are by no means the only symptoms of approaching blindness. And if the symptoms of blindness are to be so noted, why not those of every human infirmity—deafness, and dumbness, and even every form of intellectual weakness? It will be interesting to discover whether any good will arise from this specimen of legislative wisdom.

'OUIDA' writes at length to the Times to protest against the dramatisation of novels. It should be pointed out that the required alteration of the law of copyright in this respect was recommended by the royal commissioners of 1878 without a single dissentient voice, and that a clause to carry out the alteration suggested by those commissioners is embodied in Lord Monkswell's bill to consolidate and amend the Law of Copyright, which now stands for second reading in the House of Lords. The Little Lord Fauntleroy Case, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 689, in which Mrs. Burnett obtained a victory over her dramatiser, was a very peculiar one, whole sentences from the novel having been copied into the drama; and it must not be supposed by novelists, or others interested in the reform of the law of copyright, that because in one of the last and best known of the contested cases a novelist happened to be successful the law does not require alteration.

IS AN ADDITIONAL JUDGE NECESSARY?

THE number of witness actions in the list for trial in the Chancery Division at the commencement of Hilary Sittings was 515, those in the present list (for Easter Sittings) number 472, to be disposed of in thirty-four working days.

The president of the Incorporated Law Society describes the existing state of things as 'scandalous,' and a deputation from that body has waited upon the Lord Chancellor for the purpose of pressing upon him the necessity of appointing an additional judge of the Chancery Division, and the Times and most of the legal journals support this view of the situation.

Is this the true solution of the difficulty? If it is, the public will not grudge any extra cost necessary for the proper administration of justice. But it is the object of the writer to show that by the application to the whole of the legal machine of a principle which at present is only applicable to part, the existing judicial power can be so utilised as to make any further addition unnecessary.

The work of the Law Courts varies in amount and direction. Sometimes all the Courts are full of business; at other times, and far more frequently, some divisions will be overburdened whilst others are comparatively unoccupied. The congestion is never general, but partial only; never permanent, but temporary.

Now, the probability of this occasional and partial congestion of business seems to have been foreseen and provided, so far, at least, as the judicial and official staff of the Supreme Court is concerned.

For example, the judges of the Court of Appeal may, when their own special work is concluded, at the request of the Lord Chancellor, sit and act as judges of the High Court (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 51). The judges of each division of the High Court may sit and act on behalf of other judges of that Court, and the officers of the central office are to be interchangeable one with another, and are to be liable to perform the duties of each other as occasion may require (Judicial Officers Act, 1879, s. 12).

Again, in dealing with judicial officers outside the scope of the Judicature Acts, the same principle is kept in view, and the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary are, subject to the performance of their duties as to hearing appeals in the House of Lords, to sit and act as members of the Judicial Committee (Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, s. 6).

Now, it is submitted that it is the principle of 'interchangeability of duties' which furnishes a key to the present difficulty. You have excess of power in one part of the machine, deficiency of it in another. This principle should enable you to transmit the power from the place in which it is in excess to the place where it is wanted. To see how this works out, it will be necessary to examine a part of the legal machine.

The existing Court of Review may be divided into two tribunals—the final and the intermediate Court of Appeal. The final Court consists of two branches, the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; the intermediate Court, of the Court of Appeal established by the Judicature Acts.

The constitution of the branches of the final Appellate Court is as follows: For the hearing and determination of appeals in the House of Lords there must be present not less than three 'Lords of Appeal' chosen from the following persons: the Lord Chancellor, the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and peers of Parliament holding or who have held high judicial office.

The members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are very numerous, consisting of the persons qualified to sit therein by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41, and amending Acts. The Court is generally composed of from three to five of the following judges: the Lord Chancellor, the ex-Chancellors, Lords of Appeal, Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, and other persons who hold or have held 'high judicial office.'

Including the Chancellor and the ex-Chancellors, it may be said that the judicial staff of the final Court of Appeal consists of about thirteen persons, whose united salaries or pensions amount to upwards of 50,000*l.* per annum.

The intermediate Court of Appeal consists of the Master of the Rolls and five ordinary judges (Lords Justices of Appeal). The Lord Chancellor and the Presidents of Divisions are ex-officio judges. But the ordinary working staff of this Court consists of six judges, whose united salary is 31,000*l.* per annum.

It appears, therefore, that the judges of the final Court of Appeal (House of Lords and Privy Council) are double the number of those in the intermediate Court of Appeal, and that the cost of the judicial staff in the former Court is considerably larger than that of the latter.

Then as to the amount of business disposed of in these Courts respectively. During the year 1890 the House of Lords sat 113 days, the Judicial Committee ninety-six, making the total of the sittings of the final Court 209. The intermediate Court of Appeal sat, in each of its branches, 197 days, making a total of 394.

A rough but sufficient standard of comparison is also obtained by comparing the number of cases reported in the final Court of Appeal with those reported in the intermediate Court. Such a comparison shows that during the year 1890 the number of cases reported in 15 App. Cas. amounts to forty-two, whilst those reported in the intermediate Court of Appeal number 158; and it must be remembered that a larger proportion of the cases heard in the final Court is reported than of those which are heard in the intermediate Court.

Now between the final Court of Appeal and the intermediate Court there is no provision for 'interchangeability of duties.' The Lord Chancellor, it is true, is president of the Court of Appeal, and occasionally, when his other duties will allow of his doing so, and occasion requires, sits in that Court. But between the staff of the final Court of Appeal and that of the intermediate Court of Appeal there is no power of rendering mutual assistance.

Therefore, when the comparatively small amount of work which goes before the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee is disposed of, or when there is an occasional 'break' in that work, the Lords of Appeal and the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary are left, so far as judicial work is concerned, in a state of enforced idleness.

It is obvious that if, when their own special duties were discharged or suspended, these distinguished judges were enabled to sit with or for the Lords Justices of Appeal, or with or for the Justices of the High Court, in the same way as the Lords Justices may by the provision of the Judicature Act now do, a very large amount of judicial power would become available. During Hilary Term, 1890, which consisted of sixty-four working days, the House of Lords sat twenty-seven days and the Privy Council thirty-six, making in all sixty-three days, about seven judges being employed during that time. During the same period the Court of Appeal (six judges) sat upwards of 180 days. If the four Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, one of the ex-Chancellors, and the members of the Judicial Committee could have availed themselves of this principle during that term, it is certain that there would be no arrears in the Chancery or any other Division.

A very slight alteration would meet the difficulty. A short Act of Parliament, following the principle of section 51 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and enabling all persons holding or having held 'high judicial office' as defined by the Appellate Jurisdiction Acts, 1876 and 1887, at the request of the Lord Chancellor to sit and act as judges of the Supreme Court, would be all that would be required.

This would be a temporary remedy sufficient to meet the present difficulty, but the true cure for this and many other evils in the administration of justice lies deeper, and cannot be dealt with in this article.

Thomas Snow.

LOAN OR PARTNERSHIP.

The recent admirable Act codifying the law of partnership, which came into operation on January 1 in this year, has not interfered much with the law previously in force as to a loan to a partnership in return for which the lender receives a share of the profits, as declared by Bovill's Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 86). While community of profit is declared to be a sine quâ non of a partnership by section 1 of the new Act, section 2 provides that a receipt of a share of profits does not of itself make the receiver a partner. Omitting the other subsections, we pass to section 2, subsection 3 (d), which enacts that 'the advance of money by way of loan to a person engaged or about to engage in any business or a contract with that person that the lender shall receive a rate of interest varying with the profits, or shall receive a share of the profits arising from carrying on the business, does not of itself make the lender a partner with the person or persons carrying on the businesses or liable as such, provided that the contract is in writing, and signed by, or on behalf of, all the parties thereto.' That is substantially a re-enactment of a similar clause in Bovill's Act, except that the requirements as to signature are new. However, the late Master of the Rolls held, in Pooley v. Driver, 46 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 466; L. R. 5 Chanc. Div. 458, that an unsigned contract was not a contract in writing required by the Act. For the future, not only the ostensible partners have to sign it, but all the parties must do so or have it signed on their behalf. The first thing to be noticed is that the loan must be to a person, not to a business. If the loan is to a business, it is probably in reality an advance of capital, which the pretended lender is willing to put into the concern, and to risk the loss of, provided that he is not made subject to the other liabilities of the borrower. An illustration of this may be found in In re Megevand, ex parte Delhasse, 47 Law J. Rep. Bankr. 65; L. R. 7 Chanc. Div. 511, where, upon the evidence, Lord Justice Baggallay said: 'However much the parties may have intended it, I cannot consider that this was a loan within the provisions of the Act, and for this reason: the Act expressly provides only for a case in which the loan is made "to a person engaged or about to engage in any trade or undertaking," and, according to my view of the agreement in this case, this was not a loan made to the two ostensible partners, but a loan made to the business. It was made by Delhasse to himself as well as to the two partners, and this imposed on him, as on them, an equal obligation of bearing any loss in respect of it.' Reference was made in the agreement in that case, which was treated by the Court as the articles of partnership, to Bovill's Act, but that was not allowed to interfere with the general result of the agreement. Otherwise, it would become a matter of common form for partners simply to declare in their articles that they were not partners, and thus they would be able to obtain the advantages without the correlative liabilities of a partnership. Pooley v. Driver is an instance of a similar abortive attempt. Two deeds were employed there, the first being between the two ostensible partners, and the second, which was never executed, being between those two partners and the lenders, and referring to Bovill's Act. The substance of the deeds is summarised by Sir George Jessel as follows: 'That they (the ostensible partners) should contribute certain shares of the capital, and should give their services in order to carry on the business; that the rest of the capital should be contributed by other persons who were disposed to come forward under the provisions of the Act to which I shall call attention presently . . . and then that the capital should be divided in certain proportions, giving everybody who put in 500*l*. . . . a share in the capital in proportion, and a share in the profits indefinitely. When the partnership is wound up this capital is to be paid back preferentially. The contributors were to take their share of the profits; but if it turned out that, on taking a final account, the profits of any years which had been paid, being added together, exceeded the total profits made from the business, the contributors were to pay back the excess, not exceeding in any event the amount they had contributed, and of course not exceeding in any event the amount they had received in profits.' There were also certain other provisions which an ordinary dormant partner would have had. Indeed, in both the cases to which we have referred there was an attempt to make a man practically a sleeping partner as long as all things went well with the partnership; but if they took a bad turn, then he was to claim for himself the position of a creditor who took the chance of profits instead of specified interest. The danger of being treated as a partner, and, therefore, of being held liable for the borrower's debts contracted on account of the partnership, causes Mr. Morris, in his 'Patents Conveyancing' (1887), p. 31, to suggest that, 'in view of the construction which the Court might, adversely to a lender, put upon an agreement so as to hold him liable as a partner, it seems safer, in his interest at least, not to give him as interest a share of the net profits in specie, but some percentage on the principal moneys dependent on the amount of net profits.' Discretion may be the better part of valour, but this would not in all cases carry out the intentions of the parties. Besides, the Act speaks of a lender receiving 'a share of the profits,' and, as is pointed out in Professor Pollock's fifth edition of his 'Digest of the Law of Partnership,' p. 16: 'The true doctrine, as laid down in recent authorities, and now declared by the Act, is that sharing profits is evidence of partnership, but is not conclusive. We have to look not merely at the fact that profits are shared, but at the real intention and contract of the parties as shown by the whole facts of the case.' If, for instance, a wealthy person wishes to help a friend less well off to bring out and work a patent, for which the former is to receive a share of profits in lieu of interest, he must take care that a loan is made for which the patentee is personally liable (Pollock, p. 17), so that, if the patent business came to grief, the patentee would still be responsible for the money. He should be careful, too, to have no further control over the business than a mortgagee would naturally have, for it is now 'decided that persons who share the profits of a business do not incur the liabilities of partners, unless that business is carried on by themselves personally or by others as their real or ostensible agents' (Lindley, 5th edit. p. 30); so that, if he had further control, he would run the risk of the patentee being held to be his agent.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

THE House of Commons met on Monday, after the Easter recess, and has accompliahed in that short period the following items of work:—

Third readings:—

The Army Schools Bill.
The Electoral Disabilities Removal Bill.
The Savings Bank Bill.
Merchandise Marks Bill.
The Assessment of Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration) Bill passed through committee.
The Public Health (London) Law Amendment and Consolidation Bills, having been read a second time, were referred to the standing committee on law.

Second readings:—

The Presumption of Life Limitation (Scotland) Bill.
The Returning Officers (Scotland) Bill.
The Charities Recovery Bill.
The Rating of Machinery Bill (No. 2).
The Hares Bill.

New bills:—

To Provide for the Holding of Fire Inquests.
To Enable Local Authorities to Acquire Land.
To Provide for the Trial of Civil Cases in the City of London.

To Extend the Park Regulation Act, 1872, to Ireland.

To Amend the Act of 47 & 48 Vict. c. 22 (Loans to Schools and Training Colleges).

These bills were introduced and read a first time.

Bill withdrawn:—

Crofters Holdings (Scotland) (No. 2).

Reviews.

FROST ON PATENT LAW AND PRACTICE.

A Treatise on the Law and Practice relating to Letters Patent for Invention. With an Appendix of Statutes, International Convention, Rules, Forms, and Precedents, Orders, &c. By ROBERT FROST, Barrister-at-Law. London: Stevens & Haynes. 1891.

THIS book is an attempt to bring within a reasonable compass the law relating to patents. Hitherto, until the recent appearance of Mr. Lewis Edmunds's work on the same subject, the field cannot be said to have been too well occupied. It is not our intention to institute any comparison between the two, but, having noticed the former at some length, in justice to the present author we have carefully examined the book before us, and have no hesitation in saying that it will undoubtedly be found useful by patent lawyers. It contains a very clear exposition of a complicated subject. The first chapter, under the head of the Patentee, refers briefly to the early history of legislation, and deals with the question of who is entitled to take out letters patent for an invention. Next in order the subject-matter is considered, and the questions of Novelty and Utility follow in appropriate sequence, a separate chapter being devoted to each. Then come the Specification and its amendment. Chapter VII. points out the mode of applying for a patent, and Chapter VIII. deals with assignments, Chapter IX. with licenses, and Chapters X. and XI. with the revocation and extension of letters patent. Chapter XII. relates to the now familiar principle, first embodied in the Act of 1883, of restraining by action the issue of threats of legal proceedings, a most valuable and necessary weapon in the hands of the 'person aggrieved,' and the last chapter is reserved for the consideration of the action of infringement. The appendix contains the Acts, rules, and forms, and a short collection of useful precedents. A capital index concludes the book. Few practice-books contain so much in so reasonable a space, and we repeat that it will be found generally useful by practitioners in this important branch of the law.

CHALMERS AND HOUGH ON BANKRUPTCY.

The Bankruptcy Acts, 1883 to 1890. With Rules, Forms, Scales of Costs, Fees, and Percentages, Board of Trade and Court Orders, and the Debtors Act, 1869, Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887, &c., and a Commentary thereon. By his Honour Judge CHALMERS and E. HOUGH, Inspector in Bankruptcy, Board of Trade. Third Edition. London: Waterlow & Sons (Lim.). 1891.

THE authors of this work, in the preface to the present edition, tell us that they have adhered to the original scheme of the work, which was to make it a handy, practical guide to the Acts, rules, and forms, without attempting to produce a complete treatise on the law of bankruptcy. The various amending Acts and the new rules, forms, &c., have now been added to the work. By far the most important of these additions is the Bankruptcy Act of 1890, and in the preface we have a short sketch of the Parliamentary history and general effect of this measure. The repealed sections of the Act of 1883 are printed in italics, the reason assigned being that 'it may often be important to compare the repealed with the substituted enactment.' It must, however, be borne in mind that it has been decided by Mr. Justice Cave (since this work appeared) that in all cases where the adjudication has been made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the bankrupt has a right to have his application for discharge dealt with under the old law. Section 28 of the Act of 1883 is, therefore, still of considerable practical importance. After the ordinary table of cases we are encountered by a formidable list of considerably over a hundred Bankruptcy cases overruled or discussed since the Act of 1883. This will probably be found of considerable value to the student of bankruptcy law. The book throughout is carefully edited and will prove of service to practitioners.

WILLIAMS ON WILLS.

Wills and Intestate Succession. A Manual of Practical Law. By JAMES WILLIAMS, B.C.L., M.A., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. London: Adam & Charles Black. 1891.

THIS work is the first of a series of similar manuals. It is believed, the author says in his preface, 'that these manuals will be found of service to lawyers and laymen.' Let us consider the case of the laymen first. To some extent this work will be useful and interesting to them. There is a great deal of information in it carefully collected, beginning with a history of succession generally, in which the antiquarian aspect of the subject is not neglected. The testaments of Adam and of the Twelve Patriarchs were, we are told, at one time received as of at least apocryphal authority, and Eusebius asserts that Noah made a will disposing of the whole world. So far, moreover, as more recent transactions are concerned, we must give Mr. Williams considerable credit for his work. It is, however, too technical in its language for the ordinary reader, and on several pages, beginning at p. 86, we have whole sections of the Wills Act set out verbatim. If now we look at the book from the point of view of the lawyer, its obvious defect is the almost complete absence of authority. The concluding chapters of the book give some interesting information on the subjects of conflict of laws and succession to property in Scotland and Ireland.

A NEW LAW COURT.—It having been found that, when all the judges of the Queen's Bench Division are sitting, there was not sufficient accommodation for them, an additional Court has been formed out of the large room facing the bar library, situate up the staircase, opposite Appeal Court I., hitherto used as an arbitration-room. This room has been fitted up with a raised bench and a witness-box, and for the present counsel and others engaged in the Court will be accommodated with chairs instead of the regulation seats. Should it be found suitable for the purpose, it is intended to make this a permanent Court.

Correspondence.

SHARP v. WAKEFIELD AND ITS RESULTS.

SIR,—I congratulate you on the accuracy with which (in the LAW JOURNAL for June 7, 1890, p. 345) you forecasted the decision in the House of Lords. It is refreshing to meet a lawyer who understands the legal difference (for some purposes) betwixt ale and beer. I have read the LAW JOURNAL regularly for the last twenty years, and I can certainly affirm that it has never wavered on the question of the absolute discretion of licensing magistrates under 9 Geo. IV. c. 61. Now that the House of Lords has affirmed the judgments of the Courts below, the controversy is at an end. No one could have listened to the discussion in the Lords without being reminded of Juvenal's line: 'Si rixa est ubi tu pulsas, ego vapulo tantum.' It was obvious that the object of the appellants was not so much to reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeal as to get the question of jurisdiction authoritatively and finally settled, with such dicta mitigating the severity of the blow as the good nature of the noble and learned lords could be induced to contribute.

I observe with pleasure that you grasp the practical importance of the recent judgment. How is the new jurisdiction (for new it is in fact, if not in law) to be administered? Justices sit to grant licenses, not to suppress public-houses; and the number of public-houses within a given radius is important only from the point of view of public order, of which the justices of the peace are the guardians. If a given house is a public nuisance, it ought to be suppressed. If it is an orderly and well-conducted house, the license ought not to be taken away simply because the justices think the neighbourhood might get on with a smaller number. Directly the test of order is applied the difference between one house and another becomes apparent. But suppose a district (and I have known several) where, though the houses are as plentiful as blackberries, all are so well managed that the police have no complaint against any one of them. Will you tell me that it would be a legal and regular exercise of judicial discretion to reduce the number of houses by shutting up those which did the least business?

The truth is that the powers conferred on justices to license alehouses were never intended to be used for the purpose of dislicensing them in the absence of disorder. I invite you, sir, to follow this question up, as I am quite certain that at the next general annual meeting for the provinces a tremendous effort will be made by the prohibitionist agitators to get at the unpaid magistracy in the interest of 'temperance;' the publicans will then discover what value is to be attached to the appeal to quarter sessions. AMICUS CAUPONUM.

Temple: April 6.

THE MIDDLESEX REGISTRY.

SIR,—Irrespective of the circumstance that Lord Truro recently died, I have for some time past been collecting final materials, not only to complete my long-promised book (the greater portion of which has been in MS. for many months), but for the information of the Incorporated Law Society; and it seems a suitable moment to ask you to publish this summary.

It will be remembered that the results of my several actions were: (1) To fix the fees; (2) to settle that an enfranchisement deed was registrable; (3) the mode of execution of the memorial; (4) that oaths could be administered outside by Chancery commissioners; (5) the like by Judicature Act commissioners; (6) that oath could be indorsed, and need not be by affidavit; and (7) that a solicitor's clerk sufficiently described himself as of the place of business of his master. I will, therefore, number the further points in consecutive order; and let me say that the officials are aware that I intend to publish this letter.

I asked the following questions: (8) Does the registry ever undertake official or other searches and give certificates of the result, and, if so, at what cost? If not, could and would the registry entertain a proposal in this direction? (9) Is a uniform charge of 1*s.* made for searching the Parliamentary index, and is the fee 1*s.* per name or 1*s.* per transaction, and has any, and what, alteration in practice taken place since 1883? The like as to the private index at 2*s.* 6*d.*? (10) What is the average time before a deed is returned to a person registering with the indorsed certificate thereon, and what is the average fee charged for expediting such return? (11) Is there any reason why the registry should not be open from 10 till 5 for the transaction of all classes of business?

The following answers were received: (8) The registry does not make official general searches, and, after careful consideration and consultation with practical men, the difficulties appear to be so enormous that it is not proposed to reopen this question. (9) Charges of 1*s.* and 2*s.* 6*d.* respectively are uniformly made for searching the Parliamentary and lexicographical indexes in one interest, which may include more than one name—e.g. in the case of trustees. I am not aware of any change since 1883. (10) In the ordinary course of things a registered deed with the certificate thereon is returned after the expiration of three clear working days—e.g. a deed left on Monday is ready for return at 10 o'clock on the following Friday morning. Half-a-crown is the uniform expedition fee, and, in the ordinary course, we endeavour to have the deed ready by 12 o'clock on the following morning. (11) It is not proposed to alter the hours, because the examination of the memorials has to be completed and the index for the next day prepared after the office is closed.

I replied thus: (9) Rightly or wrongly, the separate parish calendar contemplated by section 6 of the Act does not actually exist. I submit, however, that it will be conceded that the profession ought not to pay a larger fee for a search than would be payable if such separate calendar did exist. If this be admitted, it would appear by section 11 that 1*s.* and no more for a complete search in such calendar would have been payable, such 1*s.* covering not only the names of the parties to the last transfer, but to any previous transfer should the solicitor searching think it needful (as, for example, is the practice of the London County Council) to verify the dealings for, say, the last thirty years. I observe that you admit that 1*s.* covers more than one name in the case of trustees, but do I understand that in practice you would not allow me for 1*s.* to search in the names of thirty distinct and separate vendors' dealing with one particular messuage, if by chance such messuage should have changed hands once a year? I observe that whatever argument applies to the Parliamentary index is applied in practice to the half-crown index. (10) Will you please tell me what was the total number of memorials registered during the last official year, and the proportion which were expedited at an additional cost of 2*s.* 6*d.*? (11) This answer would apparently assume that the same official who takes the oath completes the index. Similar work is classified and carried out independently during the same hours in more than one other public office, and with all respect I ask you to reconsider this answer.

The reply was as follows: (9) It is possible that your contention respecting the one-shilling index may be well founded, though I should be of opinion that it is by no means unlikely that the practice indicated in my last answer would not be held to be unreasonable. With regard to the half-crown index, which is on a different footing, I have no hesitation in adhering strictly to the confinement of the search to each distinct interest. (10) Number of memorials taken in 1890, 35,054; expeditions paid on, 1,288. (11) This matter had received my careful attention before you first communicated with me, and I gave a considered answer, which I must ask you to kindly allow me to adhere to.

I will not here comment on the foregoing correspondence, which I shall in due course bring before the committee of which I am honorary secretary.

FRANCIS K. MUNTON.

95A Victoria Street, E.C.: April 8.

THE TITHE ACT.

SIR,—Your obiter dictum in the JOURNAL for last week may mislead many who are not tolerably familiar with the Tithe Acts.

You have apparently overlooked 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 11, which places the April and October tithes on the same basis as the January and July ones.

There is no doubt that the tithes due this April 1 must be collected according to the new Act.

Stratton, Cornwall: April 6. E. CHAMIER.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY OF LONDON SESSIONS.

VALUATION LIST TOTALS.

ON April 3, in the case of The London County Council v. The Parishes of St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George, Bloomsbury, Sir E. P. Edlin, chairman, sitting at Clerkenwell, delivered the following considered judgment of the Court: In this case we have refused to alter the totals in the valuation list in the manner required by the litigant parties, and, the appellants having stated that we are bound to do so, and declared their intention of applying for a mandamus, we have thought it desirable to state more fully our reasons for that refusal. It should have been unnecessary to remind the parties that we are sitting here as a Court of Appeal to perform judicial functions, not as clerks to adopt without question agreements in obedience to their behest. We can well understand that in the adjustment of many differences it might be more convenient to the parties to disregard detail and particular errors, and agree upon an alteration of values in bulk; but when there has been a joinder of issue as to each particular error alleged, it is difficult to see how that could be accepted as a judicial decision. In assessment appeals at the suit of private individuals or public companies, it frequently happens that before the hearing mutual concessions are made, and the parties agree together as to what are the proper values, &c. In such cases the Court gives effect to the mutual agreement by a simple correction of the figures, and, it may be, also of the 'description' or 'class' in the valuation list; and it is obvious that the entire entry, as so corrected, presents a complete adjudication. The case now before us is of an entirely different character. The appellants are a public body authorised to levy rates and require contributions payable out of rates, and they have presented a petition to this Court complaining of the valuation by the assessment committee of the united parishes of St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George, Bloomsbury; and in the particulars furnished in the 'case' accompanying their petition they have set forth the several hereditaments which they allege are under-assessed, and also certain other properties which they allege are not assessed—that is to say, which have been altogether omitted from the valuation list. The former are fifty-three in number, and comprise premises of various kinds—shops, Meux's Brewery, Novelty Theatre, hall, public-houses, baths, offices, &c. In respect of each of these distinct properties, the appellants present their own valuation, and it appears therefrom that the under-assessments of gross values by the committee amount to 10,053*l.*, and the under-assessments of ratable values to 7,376*l.* Then with regard to the properties not assessed (twenty-eight in number), separate valuations have also been made by the appellants, showing omissions of 3,435*l.* in gross and 2,854*l.* in ratable values. Therefore upon this appeal, if we look only at the several assessments specified, irrespective of the proper deduction to be made from gross value in order to fix the ratable value, eighty-one distinct issues are raised. The respondent committee assert their ability to answer the appellants' case in detail, and to support their own valuations, and they allege also that the appellants have not furnished figures. In point of fact the appellants had furnished figures, showing, with regard to each property respectively, the required alterations in, or additions to, the list. What has transpired since the respective cases were lodged we know not, but when the appeal first came on for hearing we were asked to determine it by simply erasing the present totals in the valuation list, and substituting therefor other figures, which would involve an addition in St. Giles's parish of 6,240*l.* to the total gross, and 5,208*l.* to the total ratable value; and in St. George's an addition of 350*l.* to the gross and 292*l.* to the ratable value, without making any entry in the valuation list that would show in respect of which properties, whether as to those under-assessed or those not assessed, nor, if referable to the former only, in respect of which of the present assessed values these additions to the totals are made. This we declined to do. Such an erasure of the arithmetically correct totals and substitution of other figures would present a manifest incongruity on the face of the valuation list. It is now desired that we should simply subjoin an additional amount—the one agreed upon—for 'gross' and 'ratable' respectively, and write thereunder the desired new totals 'as agreed.' It seems to us that this also would be insufficient and not less unsatisfactory. The statute empowers the Court to confirm or alter the valuation list, so far as it is questioned by the appeal, in such manner as we think just; and we do not think that the mere inscription of one total for another, thus avoiding all reference to the questions raised under both heads, would meet the just requirements of this case. In short, we cannot accept the agreement, in the form in which it is here presented, as in itself a proper one, or as sufficiently precise and explicit to enable us to determine the questions raised upon this appeal. There being several similar appeals awaiting trial, it may be as well that I should add a few words. It is not to be inferred that in every case such as this we should require the several corrections, constituting the total of the alterations agreed upon between the parties, to be specified with distinct reference to the particular assessments impugned; although, if an agreement be arrived at after due consideration of each alleged error, there ought not to be any difficulty in furnishing that information; and when non-assessments as well as under-assessments are complained of—as in this case—the simple insertion of one additional sum, possibly intended to relate in part to both, but not shown to be referable to either, would be the less defensible. If the Court abstained from exercising judgment and dispensed with supervision, the parties might agree upon deductions for repairs and insurance in excess of the maximum allowed by the statute; and practically in no appeal against totals would it be necessary for the appellants to specify particular errors or omissions; a general impeachment of the total of the value in a parish or union would suffice to effectuate an agreement for an unexplained addition to it. The case of The Fulham Union and St. Mary Abbott's, cited by the appellants' counsel, has no bearing upon what we have here to consider; nor is the objection to the entry prescribed for us in this case answered by pointing out that the alteration of the totals would not affect the ratepayers whose assessments were impugned. It would not, apart from the rest. It would, I presume, subject the ratepayers, as a body, to a heavier poundage to meet the increase in the parochial contribution arising from the unappropriated addition to the total in the valuation list. Inequality in assessments is a ground of appeal, and were it only in view of future valuations, intermediate or quinquennial, every ratepayer may justly claim to be informed what are the properties in his parish which the assessment committee publicly admitted were either underestimated or altogether omitted. The pleadings filed in this Court are not open for inspection by ratepayers; nor, were this otherwise, would those in the present case throw any light on the proposed alteration in the totals. Mr. Avory was not correct in saying that it had become the duty of the County Council to 'revise' the list—that is the statutory duty of the assessment committee; but, of course, the larger the parish totals constituting the metropolitan valuations upon which contribution has to be levied pro ratâ for general county purposes, the smaller would be the nominal rate upon the whole required to produce it; and in this practical effect of an increase in the valuations may be seen the importance attached to these appeals. Every assessment committee in the county—nay, more, every ratepayer in the metropolis—might have appealed to this Court upon the same grounds as the present appellants have done; and it may be that, but for this proceeding on the part of the County Council, others would have undertaken the task. Hence the greater reason that the judgment should be intelligible to all persons interested, and be directly pertinent to the issues raised.—Mr. Avory said that in the event of the parties desiring to move a higher Court in this matter the question might arise whether this case had been called on.—The learned chairman said it had not come on in its order, but he thought it must be taken to have been called on by mutual consent.—Mr. Avory appeared for the appellants; Mr. Buckmaster for the respondents.

COUNTY COURT.

BREACH OF WARRANTY—SALE OF COW.

At Bakewell County Court, on Thursday, March 12, before his Honour Judge Barber, the case of Bramwell v. Wardman was heard. His Honour: This was an action for an alleged breach of warranty on the sale of a cow. The facts proved at the trial were shortly these: On October 4, 1890, the defendant called on Mr. Charles Kidd, a farmer living at Rowsley, and saw two cows belonging to Kidd among a job lot of cattle. After a little bargaining the defendant bought the cow in question and a smaller one, giving 10*l.* for them, and remarking they were both screws, as unquestionably they were; the former, described as a hollow-faced one, the result of illness, was far the worse of the two. The defendant took the two cows to his own farm. The plaintiff, who never had a cow of his own before, met the defendant in Winster on October 11, and told him he wanted to purchase a cow; the defendant said he had one, just the very thing to suit him. They went to the defendant's field and saw the two cows the defendant had purchased about a week before. The bigger of the two, he said, was an honest cow; was poor only because fed on poor land among ducks and geese, and would be quite well if placed on good pasture land. The negotiations were continued till they reached the public-house, and in the presence of Arthur Kenworthy and others he said that the cow was an honest one, and its poverty-stricken appearance was due entirely to its having been poorly fed. On October 13, when the cow was delivered to the plaintiff, the same representations were repeated in the presence of two other witnesses. The purchase-money, 11*l.* 10*s.*, was then paid. The plaintiff treated it well, but on November 17 it became much worse, and was seen by a veterinary surgeon, who found that she was suffering from tuberculosis of long standing, and was in a most unsound condition. The other witnesses fully corroborated the evidence of the witness Kenworthy, saying that defendant stated that the cow was 'honest, but poor.' I need not detail the other evidence, but the only inference I can draw from it is, that the defendant did say, over and over again, that the cow was an honest one, and that he had attributed its poor condition to the right cause. I am quite satisfied that the defendant did represent that the cow was honest and sound when he knew it was not so, and that he misrepresented the cause of its ill condition. The only point which I thought deserved a little consideration was, is the plaintiff debarred by his own laches and acquiescence from relief to which he would otherwise be clearly entitled? Under the circumstances and considering the dishonest trickery practised on the plaintiff, I think that he is entitled substantially to the relief he claims—i.e. 11*l.* 10*s.*, the purchase-money paid for the cow, and the 2*l.* the veterinary surgeon's fee. But I must punish him a little for his folly, by not allowing him anything for keep of the cow. Of course the defendant must pay the plaintiff's costs.—Ainsworth for the plaintiff; Potter for the defendant.

RETIREMENT OF MR. JUSTICE STEPHEN.

IN the Court of the Lord Chief Justice, before Lord Coleridge (Lord Chief Justice of England), Lord Justice Bowen, Lord Justice Lindley, Mr. Baron Pollock, Mr. Justice Hawkins, Mr. Justice Cave, Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams, Mr. Justice Grantham, Mr. Justice Lawrance, Mr. Justice Wright, and Mr. Justice Jeune on April 7, it having been announced that Mr. Justice Stephen would take his leave of the bar on his retirement from the bench, the Court was crowded in every part with members of the bar, comprising all the leaders, among them Sir R. Webster (the Attorney-General), Sir E. Clarke (the Solicitor-General), Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P., Sir Charles Hall, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Haldane, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Addison, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Reid, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Ambrose, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Bigham, Q.C., Mr. Henn Collins, Q.C., Mr. Murphy, Q.C., Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C., Mr. Aspland, Q.C., Sir Walter Phillimore Q.C., Mr. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Mr. F. M. White, Q.C., and a host of others, with as many members of the junior bar and the general public as could find room. All the officers of the Court also attended, the masters of the Crown Office, the Queen's Remembrancer of the Exchequer, the Masters of the High Court, &c. At eleven o'clock the above-mentioned judges, headed by Lord Coleridge, who was accompanied by Mr. Justice Stephen (who, having already retired, appeared without his robes), came into Court and took their seats on the bench, the Lord Chief Justice putting into his own seat the retired judge and seating himself by his side, Lord Justice Bowen sitting on the other side, and the other judges grouped around them standing.

The Attorney-General then rose, the whole bar rising with him and standing while he spoke, and addressed their lordships in these words: My Lord, Mr. Justice Stephen,—It was with great regret we saw the announcement that you would to-day take your leave of the bar, with which you have been so long connected, and it falls to my lot, on behalf of the profession, to offer to you the expression of our regret in bidding farewell to you as a judge. In doing so it may not be inopportune to recall one or two incidents of your long and distinguished career. Coming from the University (Cambridge) and the College (Trinity Hall) which claim so many of our distinguished judges, you joined the circuit (the Midland) to which have belonged in our time so many members of the bench—Lord Field, Mr. Justice Mellor, Mr. Justice Hayes—to say nothing of those who are now on the bench, and some of whom now attend to take part in this farewell. It is unnecessary for me to remind so many who remember it of your career at the bar on that circuit. But one incident in your career is, so far as my knowledge goes, without precedent, and deserves a passing notice. It is not in this country alone that you have rendered distinguished public service. For four years you served as Legal Member of the Council of India, and, following the example of your great predecessor Macaulay, you rendered valuable service in codifying and improving the law of our great Indian Empire. When, after your period of office had expired, you returned to active work at the bar, your brethren found that they had still in you an able rival and antagonist, one whose experience and knowledge had been only ripened by change of scene and change of work. And when, in 1879, it pleased Her Majesty to select you for the judicial office you have since filled, I need not say how universal was the feeling of approval and congratulation which hailed your appointment. And since then, for more than twelve years, you have fulfilled the duties of that office from which you now retire. I need not remind your brethren of the bench, nor the members of the profession, nor the public whom you have served, of the value to the bench of your profound knowledge of and vast experience in the criminal law, your practical experience in its administration, and your knowledge of matters of business and keen insight into legal principles. We learn with regret that failing health has induced you to determine to retire from judicial work. We deeply regret the cause, but we honour and esteem the man who, as soon as he became aware that any question might be raised as to his absolute or unimpaired capacity to fulfil his duties, determined that he would no longer retain his post, nor allow such a question to be raised, however he might think himself able to discharge the duties of the office. We cannot follow you into your retirement, but we are sure that you cannot long be in want of an avocation or a pursuit. Your fertile mind, we are well assured, will again enrich the storehouse of literary wealth to which you have already made so many valuable contributions. We wish you many years of restored health to enjoy your well-earned repose, and you will be able to realise from this crowded assemblage the feelings by which you are accompanied in your retirement—feelings to which I have given some feeble expression—and you must be well assured that you carry with you into your retirement our regard, our respect, and our esteem.

The learned judge, at the conclusion of this address, remained some moments silent, evidently unable to find immediate utterance for the feelings by which he was oppressed. After some moments, the Lord Chief Justice and Lord Justice Bowen rising and remaining standing, with the other judges and the bar, while he spoke, the learned judge, in a low tone of voice, marked by deep and suppressed emotion, spoke as follows: My lords, Mr. Attorney-General, gentlemen of the bar: I have come here for the purpose of wishing you 'Good-bye,' and I just wish to say a few words as to the causes which led to my retirement. I myself had very little expected to have to take such a step; indeed, it never entered into my mind, except so far as every man must look forward to the ultimate conclusion of his career. However, not very long ago I was made acquainted, suddenly, and to my great surprise, that I was regarded by some as no longer physically capable of discharging my duties. I made every inquiry to ascertain what grounds there were for this impression, and I certainly rejoice to say that no single instance was brought to my notice in which any alleged failure of justice could be ascribed to any defect of mine. I consulted physicians of the highest eminence, and they told me that they could detect no sign whatever of decay in my faculties, and that, therefore, it was not a matter of immediate necessity in the public interest that I should retire. But they told me at the same time that they thought it would be well, for my own sake, that I should do so, and that opinion they grounded upon the state of my health. I communicated their decision to the Lord Chancellor, and with his sanction I determined to retire, as I now do. I should have thought it unbecoming of any person in my position to strive to hold on to his office to the last possible moment, even although at the time I had no doubt as to my capability for discharging my duties. I could not have done so under any circumstances; and accordingly I avoided all occasion for any further discussion on the subject after I received the intimation which I have mentioned. I wish to add this remark as to my own feelings on the subject. So far as I am conscious of my own condition of mind and body, I do not think that retirement would be necessary; but I have thought it right and becoming to take that step out of respect for the office which I have held, and because I feel it to be important not only that its duties should be well discharged, but that there should be no question as to their being so discharged. These are the grounds upon which I have thought it right, with regard to my own reputation and the public good, that I should cease to hold the office which I have held for more than twelve years. I have more to say, and what more I have to say it is by no means easy for me to say in the presence of so many whose faces are so familiar to me, and so many of whom are so dear to me, and have long been so. I have always felt—though I never was yet in a position to feel it with so much keenness as I do now feel it—that there is a fellowship which pervades every branch of the profession to which we all belong, and especially those who have the honour to sit on the judicial bench. During the years which I have sat here, I have found myself a member of a society which, I think, hardly can be equalled elsewhere. I have been, and hope I shall be for the rest of my life, the intimate friend of many around me. I have been, I believe, perfectly friendly with all. I do not think there is a single member of the profession towards whom I have other than friendly feelings. Enmities are doubtful things; one hardly knows, perhaps, always who is absolutely one's friend or one's enemy. But I am not conscious of having any unkind feeling against any member of the profession, and I have no impressions of relations not perfectly satisfactory with the very large number of persons with whom at one time or another I have been brought in contact. Of course, in the office I have held it is not possible but that mistakes should occur, and under the present system opportunities for bringing forward everything in the nature of complaints against any person in such a position are easily used, and have, I believe, been used against me. But, whatever may have been the result, and in whatever instances I may have been appealed against, and my judgments reversed, or in whatever other way what I have said or done has been called in question, I can affirm with absolute certainty that nothing has been done in relation to me of which I have had any unkind recollection. As I have already said—and I say it again—I believe the mutual understanding between the bench and the bar is one of the great advantages of the present constitution of English society, and long may it continue so; long may it be true that, while the bar supply the keenest and most impartial criticism of the bench, the bench can rely with the greatest confidence upon the kindness, the respect, and the support—the moral support—of the bar who practise before them. I do not remember in the course of the twelve years during which I have sat on the bench—I do not remember any dissension between me and any members of the bar which has left on my mind any sense of bitterness. I do not remember ever to have been treated with disrespect in the exercise of my judicial functions; certainly nothing has occurred at variance with that feeling of fellowship and goodwill which, as I have said, pervades the profession, and of which what the Attorney-General has said has been an expression. I do not desire to make a tragedy of this occasion, nor to dwell on those feelings with which I leave the seat on the bench by which my ambition has been fully gratified. My feelings towards my friends in the profession have been very strong, and I am now conscious of having sustained a part which I shall look back to with feelings of gratitude, in whatever may be left to me of life. I have now said what came into my mind to say on this occasion, and I will only add these words, with more feeling than, perhaps, may be supposed—'God bless you all, every one of you!'

These words the learned judge uttered with evident emotion and sat for some moments silent, quite subdued by his feelings. He then rose slowly, shook hands warmly with Lord Coleridge and Lord Justice Bowen on each side of him, and then went out of Court, shaking hands with such of the judges as he passed, and so retired.

BAR STUDENTS' EXAMINATIONS.

EASTER, 1891.

As the result of a general examination of students of the Inns of Court, held at Lincoln's Inn Hall, on March 17, 18, 19, and 20, 1891, the Council of Legal Education have awarded to the following students certificates that they have satisfactorily passed a public examination:—

ACTON, EDWARD, of the Inner Temple.
ALADE, OLUSOMOKA ROTIMI, of the Inner Temple.
ALLISON, CHARLES S., of the Inner Temple.
ATTENBOROUGH, CHARLES L., of the Inner Temple.
BAIRD, JOHN S., of Gray's Inn.
BARTLEY, DOUGLAS C., of the Inner Temple.
BAUMBACH, JOHN G., of the Inner Temple,
BERENS, RICHARD, of the Inner Temple.
BRANCH, CHARLES C., of the Inner Temple.
BROADBRIDGE, FREDERICK, of Lincoln's Inn.
BULAKI, RAMA, of the Middle Temple.
BUSHELL, FREDERICK E., of the Middle Temple.
CASPERSZ, CHARLES P., of the Inner Temple.
CHAND, LALA PARKASH, of Lincoln's Inn.
CLARKE, WILLIAM J. T., of the Inner Temple.
COLBECK, WILFRED B., of the Inner Temple.
COLVILLE, HON. GEORGE C., of Lincoln's Inn.
CONNER, DANIEL H., of the Inner Temple.
COOKE, THOMAS P., of the Inner Temple.
CRUMP, BASIL W., of the Middle Temple.
DAMIAN, ANTHONY G., of Gray's Inn.
DICKINSON, THOMAS L. D., of Lincoln's Inn.
DOCTOR, FRAMROZE PESTONJI, of the Middle Temple.
DODSON, GEORGE, of the Inner Temple.
DU CANE, ARTHUR G., of the Inner Temple.
DUGDALE, JOHN A., of the Inner Temple.
EVAN-THOMAS, CHARLES H., of the Inner Temple.
FITZGERALD, JOHN F. V., of the Middle Temple.
FOTHERGILL, SYDNEY R., of Lincoln's Inn.
FULTON, DAVID, of the Middle Temple.
GALLOP, REGINALD G., of the Inner Temple.
GEDGE, CECIL B., of the Inner Temple.
GILKS, FREDERICK W., of the Inner Temple.
HANNEN, HENRY A., of the Middle Temple.
HAQ, SHAIKH MAZHARUL, of the Middle Temple.
HARKISHEN, LAL, of the Middle Temple.
HASSAN, MIRZA FUKHUNDEEN, of the Inner Temple.
HAYTON, ARTHUR E., of the Inner Temple.
HEWETT, HERBERT T., of the Inner Temple.
JACKSON, JOHN H., of the Inner Temple.
KAYS, REGINALD K., of the Middle Temple.
LAWRANCE, THOMAS D., of the Inner Temple.
M'ARTHUR, ALLEN G., of Lincoln's Inn.
MACDONA, EGERTON M. C., of the Middle Temple.
MACFARLANE, TENNANT, of the Middle Temple.
MACLEAN, ALEXANDER, of the Middle Temple.
MARTIN, MALCOLM E., of the Inner Temple.
MASON, WILLIAM J. P., of the Middle Temple.
MAXSE, LEOPOLD J., of the Middle Temple.
MEYER, ROBERT M., of the Inner Temple.
MITRA, HEMENDRA NATH, of the Middle Temple.
MONK, JAMES HENRY, of the Inner Temple.
MOORE, FREDERICK W., of Lincoln's Inn.
MORRIS, ROBERT, of the Middle Temple.
MURRAY, JAMES, of the Middle Temple.
NORMAN, OSWALD, of Lincoln's Inn.
O'BRYEN-TAYLOR, PHILIP S., of Lincoln's Inn.
PARRY, JOSEPH H., of the Inner Temple.
PARSONS, ALBERT, of the Middle Temple.
PEASE, WILSON, of the Inner Temple.
PETERS, JOHN W., of the Middle Temple.
PHILLIPS, LIONEL C. W., of the Inner Temple.
PRASHAD, DIWAN RAM, of the Inner Temple.
PRICHARD, MATTHEW, of the Inner Temple.
RADFORD, ALFRED, of the Middle Temple.
RAM GOPAL, of the Middle Temple.
RAYNER, OSCAR W., of the Inner Temple.
SARBADHICARY, SASI BHUSHAN, of Gray's Inn.
SCOTT-CRICKITT, PERCY S. H., of the Inner Temple.
SCRATTON, WILLIAM H., of the Inner Temple.
SHARP, ERNEST H., of the Inner Temple.
SHEPHERD, HERBERT H., of the Inner Temple.
SIBLEY, NORMAN W., of Lincoln's Inn.
SINCLAIR, JOHN A., of the Middle Temple.
SLATER, EDWARD T., of the Inner Temple.
STAVELEY-HILL, Henry, of the Inner Temple.
STEDMAN, MATTHEW R., of the Middle Temple.
THOMAS, JAMES R., of the Inner Temple.
THOMPSON, PERCY G., of the Middle Temple.
THURSBY, JOHN O. S., of Lincoln's Inn.
TRUEFITT, EDGAR F. G., of the Inner Temple.
UYEMURA, SHUNPEI, of the Middle Temple.
VALLANCE, HENRY W., of Lincoln's Inn.
WHYATT, HERBERT, of the Inner Temple.
WILLS, SAMUEL E., of the Middle Temple.
YATES, ARTHUR R., of the Middle Temple.

Of 104 examined, 86 passed.

The following students passed a satisfactory examination in Roman Law:—

Charles H. Bardswell, of the Inner Temple; William A. N. Battenburgh, of the Middle Temple; Henry Beaumont, of the Middle Temple; Julian E. Bellamy, of the Inner Temple; Purnanand Mahanand Bhatt, of the Middle Temple; Syed Hashim Bilgrami, of the Inner Temple; Syed Zainul Abiden Bilgrami, of the Middle Temple; Selwyn J. C. Brinton, of the Inner Temple; Malcolm Campbell-Johnston, of the Inner Temple; Francis D. P. Chaplin, of Lincoln's Inn; Charles B. Clapcott, of Lincoln's Inn; Richard P. Clowes, of the Middle Temple; John H. Codrington-Hobkirk, of Gray's Inn; Jehanghir Dossabhoy Cola, of the Middle Temple; John E. Cooney, of the Middle Temple; Frank S. Cooper, of the Inner Temple; Eduardo Patricio Avelius Dalgado, of the Middle Temple; John Asirvadam David, of the Middle Temple; James E. G. De Montmorency, of the Middle Temple; John F. Devenish-Meares, of the Middle Temple; Thomas Dixon, of the Inner Temple; Hugh C. S. Dumas, of the Middle Temple; Balthazar S. S. Foster, of the Inner Temple; Arthur Gee, of the Inner Temple; Felix H. V. Gottlieb, of the Middle Temple; John W. Grant, of the Inner Temple; Alexander L. Hannay, of the Inner Temple; Francis H. Harding, of the Inner Temple; Julius Hirschfeld, of Lincoln's Inn; Dady Hormusji (Dadabhoy), of the Middle Temple; Syed Hasan Imam, of the Middle Temple; Henry B. Isherwood, of the Inner Temple; John C. Jordan, of the Middle Temple; Moti Lal Kaistha, of Gray's Inn; Edmund G. Kimber, of Lincoln's Inn; Richard C. Lambert, of the Inner Temple; Thomas S. Lea, of Lincoln's Inn; Edward J. B. Macarthur, of Lincoln's Inn; Kenneth L. Macdonald, of the Inner Temple; Abdul Majeed Khan, of the Inner Temple; Satis Chandra Moorkerjee, of Lincoln's Inn; Charles B. Morgan, of the Middle Temple; George F. L. J. Mortimer, of the Inner Temple; William H. Nagle, of the Inner Temple; Horace J. Norton, of the Middle Temple; Thomas W. Nussey, of the Inner Temple; Robert P. Page, of the Inner Temple; Ernest J. Phelps, of the Inner Temple; John M. Prichard, of the Middle Temple; Roda Mull Quanugoe, of the Inner Temple; Alexander Pandia Ralli, of the Inner Temple; Florance T. S. Rippingall, of the Middle Temple; Thomas P. G. Robinson, of Lincoln's Inn; James C. Roe, of the Inner Temple; Louis A. Salomon, of Gray's Inn; Gurdas Ram Sawhny, of the Middle Temple; Charles F. Scott, of the Inner Temple; Chandra Sekhar Sen Gupta, of the Middle Temple; William C. E. Serjeant, of the Middle Temple; Conrad J. Simmons, of the Middle Temple; Satchida Nanda Sinha, of the Middle Temple; Thomas R. Spyers, of the Inner Temple; Joseph F. B. Sutherland, of the Middle Temple; Edward L. R. Thornton, of the Inner Temple; Hirondo Tomidzu, of the Middle Temple; and George R. T. Upton, of Lincoln's Inn.

Examined, 74; passed, 66.

NEWSPAPER LIBELS.—Mr. Justice Wright recently gave expression to his feelings upon the subject of newspaper libels, and it cannot but be admitted that lawyers too frequently look upon newspapers as a source of income which they are ever ready to tap by commencing trivial actions for alleged libel on behalf of some impecunious client. The law of libel, so far as newspapers is concerned, is a grotesque travesty upon justice, and it is surprising that with men like Sir Algernon Borthwick in Parliament the great newspaper interest is not more considered. Besides being full of anomalies, the newspaper law of libel is positively ridiculous and illogical.—City Press.

PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILLS, 1891.

THE Birmingham Law Society have just issued the following report on the above bills:—

The committee of this society have recently had these bills under their consideration, and are of opinion that the appointment of a public trustee is both unnecessary and inexpedient. Petitions against the bills have already been presented to Parliament on behalf of the society, but the committee consider it desirable, by means of this report, to enter somewhat more fully into the matter.

They would, at the outset, point out that their objections are directed to the principle of the bills, and they, therefore, deem it unnecessary to criticise the details.

In the first place, the committee consider that the principle of individualism, as opposed to that of officialism, is that which is generally required in trust matters, and they view with no small amount of uneasiness the proposed creation of another public administrative office, for which there does not seem to be any adequate demand or necessity. Anyone who is constantly brought into contact with Government offices and officials, as a solicitor of necessity is, cannot fail to be struck with the delays and expense which are inseparable from a Government office; the introduction of officialism into private and family affairs, in the way which is proposed by the bills, would inevitably have the effect, not only of increasing the cost which is unavoidably incident to trusts of all kinds, but of rendering the administration of trust estates more cumbrous, more tardy, and less elastic, results greatly to be deprecated.

Moreover, the committee feel that in all but very exceptional cases—too few to call for special legislation—the position of a trustee will be better filled by a private individual than it can possibly be by an official, such as the public trustee would be. The office of trustee is, under any circumstances, one which requires the exercise of discretion, tact, and judgment, and in many instances the truest objects of the trust would be practically unattainable were it not for that element of personal and individual interest and care which can only be ensured by the appointment of a private trustee.

It is well known that in many cases, especially where the interests of minors are concerned, the difficulties and delicacy of the trustee's position are often greatly increased owing to his having to take into consideration circumstances of a personal, and perhaps moral, nature. In such cases a trustee will often assume some personal responsibility in order to advance the interests of his cestuis que trustent, especially where, as not unfrequently is the case, such a course is practically the only one open, if the objects of the founder of the trust are to be carried out in the best and most effective manner. But a public trustee would, from the very nature of his office, be unable, except to a very limited extent, to exercise any discretion. He could not feel any personal interest in beneficiaries who would be absolutely unknown to him, and who would have no identity beyond a mere name or number. He would be bound by the regulations laid down for his guidance in rules and orders, as also by the traditions of his office, and it can hardly be supposed that any element of elasticity would be found in these regulations. Practice before him would, it is apprehended, be, to a large extent, a reproduction of the old administration suit—dilatory and costly in its progress, and often harsh in the application of its rules to the circumstances of particular cases.

It is, however, said that a demand exists for a public trustee, partly by reason of the growing disinclination amongst business men to undertake onerous trusts, and partly on account of the loss that is sometimes incurred owing to the dishonesty of a trustee. The committee are, however, of opinion that neither of these arguments, when carefully examined, has sufficient weight to furnish a valid reason for the proposed legislation. As a matter of fact the cases in which a man experiences serious difficulty in obtaining the services of a trustee are, comparatively speaking, few and far between; and as to the loss caused by the misconduct of trustees, the committee submit that, considering the almost infinite number of private trusts which exist at the present day, the instances where the trustee proves to be unworthy of the confidence placed in him are extremely few. This argument, grounded, as it may be said to be, on the weakness of human nature, may be used with more or less strength in respect of all human institutions; but where it applies with no greater force than in the present instance, it cannot, in the opinion of the committee, form a good ground for State interference.

The supporters of these bills say that they are permissive only, and therefore can do no harm. The committee, however, feel that this argument is specious and illusory. Apart from the fact that some of the provisions of the bills are somewhat of a compulsory character, to say the least, experience has proved that the creation of a State department is an evil of itself, unless it is an absolute necessity or undoubtedly expedient. In the present instance the committee, as practical men, feel that a strong disinclination would exist on the part of the public generally to employ the public trustee, because of the public nature of his position; and if, as the committee venture to predict would be the case, the office were to prove a failure, or only a limited success, then the fees and percentages would not pay its expenses, and the result, judging from past experience, it is not difficult to foresee; the new branch of the public service would have to be made self-supporting, the jurisdiction of the department would be extended, and pressure would be brought to bear in order to provide work of some kind for its unemployed officials.

The committee submit that the more rational and effective way of meeting some of the least of the difficulties complained of would be to give to private trustees the right to remuneration for their services, as is proposed in the case of the public trustee. Such remuneration should be restricted to a reasonable though varying amount, the mode of settling which it would not be difficult to devise.

The legislation of recent years has done much to put the position of a private trustee upon a more rational footing, and the committee cannot but think that a further step in the direction just indicated would prove of far greater advantage to beneficiaries in general than the creation of a special department to safeguard their interests; whilst testators and others would have a wider field from which to select trustees, and would be able to secure the services of men of standing and ability, who, under the present system, in many instances cannot be, or certainly are not applied to, owing to the thankless nature of the office, an argument which would especially hold good in cases of appointments of new trustees.

THOS. MARTINEAU, President.
ARTHUR GODLEE, Vice-President.
THOS. H. RUSSELL, Hon. Secretary.

Wellington Passage,
Bennett's Hill, Birmingham.

CAUSE LISTS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

APPEALS AND MOTIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Appeals for hearing before a DIVISIONAL COURT sitting in Bankruptcy.

In re Whiteley, ex parte D. Smith & Co.
In re Burgoyne, ex parte Burgoyne
In re Hand, ex parte Townend
In re Parrott, ex parte Stringer
In re Whitley, ex parte Mirfield, &c. Co.
In re Same, ex parte Same
In re Parrott, ex parte Cullen
In re Cohen, ex parte Cohen
In re Angel, ex parte Angel
In re Gillo, ex parte Dollar
In re Fiddian, Squire & Co. ex parte H. Fiddian and H. V. Squire
In re Poulton, ex parte Williams
In re Cubitt & Utting, ex parte Gould
In re Cook, ex parte Murray
In re Bullock & Sons, ex parte Ibeson

Motions in Bankruptcy for hearing before

MR. JUSTICE CAVE.

In re Duncan, ex parte Official Receiver v. Duncan
In re Bates, ex parte Official Receiver v. Bates
In re Collier & Sons, ex parte Collier v. Nicholls
In re Nathan, ex parte Official Receiver v. Nathan and another
In re Same, ex parte Same v. J. Nathan
In re Rouquette, ex parte Young v. Steinthal
In re Matthews, ex parte W. A. Matthews v. Henderson
In re R. B. Wood, ex parte Wood and others v. Trustee
In re Wood, ex parte Roberts v. Sonan
In re Williams, ex parte Pepper v. Macqueen
In re Spanton, ex parte Official Receiver v. Lenantson and others
In re Wickes, ex parte Halse v. Foreman
In re Ashby, ex parte Official Receiver v. Green and others
In re Snyder, ex parte Picley v. Crossfield
In re Artolo Bros. ex parte Pardinus v. Hurlbatt

MATTERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

Total Appeals and Motions 30

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

PROBATE CAUSES.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

A List of Actions in the order in which they are entered for Trial will be posted at the Registry, Somerset House, and Supplemental Lists will be printed from time to time.

Parties must be prepared to try their Actions ten days after the same have been entered for Trial.

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—WITHOUT JURY.

Ashwin and Addis v. Addis (Addis and others cited)
Burchell v. Webber (Cowie and others cited)
Petitt and Woods v. Case
Wilde and others v. Lloyd (Joyce and others cited)
Beles v. Potter and others
Askew and Johnston v. Askew
Gee v. Gee and others
Redhouse v. Blakeslee
Lees v. Lees and others
Phillips v. Barton and others
Groffman and Groffman v. Groffman (by Groffman, her grdian.)
Martyr (by Blackabey, his attorney) v. Perry
Paton v. Ormerod (Paton and Paton, by Corbould, their guardian, intervening)
Jones and Jones v. Edwardes
Radcliffe and Field v. Mellor (Mellor and others cited)
Barber v. Larrett and others
Main and Graham v. Robinson and others (Arnold and others cited)
Featherstone v. Catterns
Witton v. Humphries (otherwise Witton)
Clark v. Dixon and others
Harris v. Hawker and others
Solicitor of the Treasury v. Harker
Ennis v. Leahy and others
Monk v. Higson and others
Banks and Ivens v. Burcher
Meads and Bland v. Smith
Rooms v. Rooms and Jones
Jones and Eastham v. Eastham
Peacock (otherwise Peacod) v. Peacod
Cavendish v. Cavendish (by Cavendish, his guardian)
Perry and others v. Norman and Blundy

FOR JUDGMENT.

Budd-Budd (Catala and others cited) v. Budd and Dalzell
Reeves v. Pennington

SUMMARY.

Before the Court itself—without Jury 31

DIVORCE CAUSES.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

PART-HEARD CAUSES.

Notice to be given at Court when Parties are ready to proceed with the further hearing of these Causes.

Kalbitzer v. Kalbitzer (undefndd.)
Briscoe v. Briscoe and Dockerty (undefended)
Thorn v. Thorn and Matthews (undefended)
Sanders v. Sanders (J.S.) (undefended)
Matters (by her guardian, Thos. James Harvey) v. Matters

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—UNDEFENDED.

Robertson v. Robertson
Pohl v. Pohl
Sleemin v. Sleemin
Ley v. Ley and Smith
Wilson v. Wilson
Smith v. Smith
Furby v. Furby and Nixon
Jago v. Jago and Gooding (pauper cause)
Kellett v. Kellett and Pratt (pauper cause)
Cartwright v. Cartwright and Randle
Shaw v. Shaw and Prince
Lock v. Lock
Sculthorpe v. Sculthorpe
Salt v. Salt
Harding v. Harding
Rust v. Rust and Dodd (pauper cause)
Langrick v. Langrick and Clubley
Brinham v. Brinham and Clark
Loftus v. Loftus and Crane
Elliot v. Elliot
Nettleton v. Nettleton
Spencer v. Spencer and Lee
James v. James and Johnson
Woolley v. Woolley and Forrester
Hart v. Hart
Wight v. Wight and Holland
Longfield v. Longfield and Squire
Minchin v. Minchin
Stromgvist v. Stromgvist
Taylor v. Taylor and Parrott
Bibbey v. Bibbey and Sheridan
Newman v. Newman
Willatt v. Willatt
M'Kenzie v. M'Kenzie (J.S.)
Armstrong v. Armstrong and Whitley
Chadwick v. Chadwick
Roberts v. Roberts
MacLean v. MacLean and Duckworth
Crowe v. Crowe
Henshall v. Henshall
Davis v. Davis and Davis
Turner v. Turner and Abbott
Beanland v. Beanland and Lightowler
Wilson v. Wilson, Wilson, and Fawcett
Beacon v. Beacon and Nash
Drew v. Drew
Martin v. Martin and Clark (pauper cause)
Snook v. Snook, White (since deceased), and Woolacott
Rabone v. Rabone and Davis
Hornblow v. Hornblow
Cowlishaw v. Cowlishaw and King
Knifton v. Knifton and Bailey
Beazley v. Beazley
Preedy v. Preedy
Medina (otherwise Prentice) v. Medina (N.)
Moser v. Moser (J.S.)
Morgan v. Morgan and Briscoe
Abbot v. Abbot
Greenwood v. Greenwood
Aptommas v. Aptommas
Pochet v. Pochet
Baghino v. Baghino and Primavesi
Joseph v. Joseph
Mills v. Mills, Smith, and Halligan
Smith v. Smith
Jackson v. Jackson
Smith v. Smith and Moss
Goucher v. Goucher
Smith v. Smith and Thompson
Hutchings v. Hutchings
Hopkins v. Hopkins and Leader
Gee v. Gee and Barnitt
Southam v. Southam
Bright v. Bright and Neate
Jefford v. Jefford
Honeycombe v. Honeycombe and Sawyer
Turpin v. Turpin and Smith (otherwise 'Jersey Bill')
Firth v. Firth
Martin v. Martin
Frisby v. Frisby
Cooper v. Cooper
Broom v. Broom
Wheater v. Wheater
Skeldon v. Skeldon and Spence
Swift v. Swift
Potier v. Potier
Munroe v. Munroe
McAven v. McAven
Ensor v. Ensor
Hunt v. Hunt
Coni v. Coni
Whittaker v. Whittaker
Taylor v. Taylor and Gardner
Rogers v Rogers and Langdown
Mason v. Mason
Mayhew v. Mayhew
Taylor v. Taylor
Aspden v. Aspden and Riding
Moorhouse v. Moorhouse and Hepworth
Palmer v. Palmer (J.S.)
Plum v. Plum
Shaw v. Shaw and Bullock
Griffith v. Griffith, Rhag, Patterson, and Graham
Hounsell v. Hounsell (J.S.)
Love v. Love
Sugden v. Sugden
Dagg v. Dagg and Sanderson
Scott-Lawrence v. Scott-Lawrence
Francis v. Francis
Bevington v. Bevington and Hobden
Gilbourne v. Gilbourne, Wilson, and Wright
Richmond v. Richmond
Dawson v. Dawson and Aylestubbs
Douglas v. Douglas
Bingley v. Bingley and Taylor (pauper cause)
Claybrook v. Claybrook & Russell
Crowley v. Crowley (pauper cause)
Noller v. Noller and Hawes
Shaw v. Shaw and Bullock

BEFORE THE COURT ITSELF—DEFENDED.

Purchase v. Purchase and Allsopp (cited)
Cripps v. Cripps and Boutellier
Larro v. Larro (J.S.)
Taplen v. Taplen and Cowen (Queen's Proctor intervening) (pauper cause)
Higgs v. Higgs and Clarke
Bailey v. Bailey and Mills
Bendall v. Bendall, Parker and Todd
Sneddon v. Sneddon
Wooder v. Wooder
Flateau v. Flateau
Potter v. Potter
Broad v. Broad
Storr v. Storr
Bramhall v. Bramhall and Dinely
Dobie v. Dobie
Treleaven v. Treleaven and Watling (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
De Vear v. De Vear (R.C.R.)
Vivian v. Vivian
Guttmann v. Guttmann
Johnson v. Johnson (J.S.)
Roberts v. Roberts
Taylor v. Taylor
Aarons v. Aarons and Wadmore
Jackson v. Jackson and Smith
Donkin v. Donkin, Atkinson, Salmon, and Lusby
Jackson v. Jackson (R.C.R.)
Taylor v. Taylor
Murdoch v. Murdoch (J.S.)
Ellis v. Ellis (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Forde v. Forde (J.S.)
Yorke v. Yorke, Isod, and Matthews
Webster v. Webster (J.S.)
Windsor v. Windsor and Olsen (otherwise Alston)
Sharpe v. Sharpe
Vale v. Vale (J.S.)
Jay v. Jay
Aires v. Aires (J.S.)
Brook v. Brook (otherwise Sheridan) (in camerâ) (N.)
Lawrence v. Lawrence (otherwise Ambery) (in camerâ) (N.)
Danby v. Danby
Hayward v. Hayward (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Atterton v. Atterton and Irving (pauper cause)
Orr-Ewing v. Orr-Ewing (J.S.)
Russell v. Russell (J.S.)
Hall v. Hall and Bagley
Speakman v. Speakman and Willet (Queen's Proctor showing cause)
Rais v. Rais and Back
Myzoule v. Myzoule
White and Dames v. The Attorney-General (Eddingtons and Fox cited) (L.D.A.)
Milner v. Milner (pauper cause)
Stay v. Stay
Johnson v. Johnson and Smith
Bruce v. Bruce and Younger
Redman v. Redman (J.S.)
Newell-Atkins v. Newell-Atkins
Bowers v. Bowers
Gray v. Gray and Gutteridge
Levi v. Levi (J.S.)
Sands v. Sands, Barton (cited as Barlow), Morissey, and Oliver
Chubb v. Chubb and Cugny
Breaks v. Breaks (J.S.)
Clack v. Clack
Bill v. Bill
Harrison v. Harrison (J.S.)
Ashton v. Ashton (J.S.)
Jones v. Jones and Cubberley (cited as Cuberley)
Levin v. Levin
Fairhurst v. Fairhurst and Johnston
Yarrow v. Yarrow
Tuplin v. Tuplin
Steinberg v. Steinberg & Ingham
Hopper v. Hopper

SUMMARY.

Causes before the Court itself—Undefended . . 119
" " Defended . . . 72
Total . . . 191

CAUSES standing over by consent or otherwise, or stayed by order; to be replaced in the List of Causes for Hearing on the Petitioner giving Ten Days' Notice in writing to the other parties for whom an appearance has been entered, and filing a Copy of such Notice in the Registry.

Coustas v. Coustas (J.S.)
Wood v. Wood and Brook (defended) (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Young (defended) (stayed)
Bates v. Bates and Baker (C.J.) (stay security)
Browse v. Browse (defended) (stay security)
Worsnop v. Worsnop and Roulstone (undefended) (stay security)
Dodson v. Dodson (undefended) (stayed)
Wilson v. Wilson, Rand, and Wardell (stay security) (C.J.)
Bagge v. Bagge (defended order)
Pereira v. Pereira (undefd. order)
Fearn, A. E. v. Fearn, G. (order) (R.C.R.)
Nicol, M. A. v. Nicol, A. (defended order) (J.S.)
Bevington v. Bevington and Jameson (undefended) (commission)
Clark v. Clark (defended order) (J.S.)
Tribe v. Tribe (C.J.) (order) (J.S.)
Titford v. Titford (defended) (stay security)
Payne v. Payne, Carter, and Fry (cited) (defended order)
Relph v. Relph (defended) (stay security)
Wood, H. v. Wood, John (defndd.) (stay security) (J.S.)
Holmes v. Holmes and Pearson (defended) (stay security)
McConachie v. McConachie and Beal (defended) (stay security)
Darvall v. Darvall, Scutter, and Curtis (defndd.) (stay security)
Arnott v. Arnott and Fox (defended) (stay security)
Bennett, D. v. Bennett, M. (defended) (stay security) (R.C.R.)
Richley v. Richley and Tate (defended) (stay security)
Piggott v. Piggott, Ball, and Kimber (defnd.) (stay security)
Amos v. Amos and Harding (defended) (stay security)
Nathan v. Nathan (defended) (stay security) (J.S.)
Prime v. Prime and Hewett (stay security) (C.J.)
Francis v. Francis and Alderman (defended) (stay security)
Williams v. Williams and Hinton (stay security) (O.J.)
Corti v. Corti and Bruce (defended) (stay security)
Cardle v. Cardle and Jaggs (stay security) (O.J.)

Hodson v. Hodson and Seager (defended) (stay security)
Burnside v. Burnside and Hardy (defended) (stay security)
Park v. Park and Ashworth (stay security) (C.J.)
Shemtob v. Shemtob and Vitali (stay security) (C.J.)
Gotliff v. Gotliff and Harrison (defended) (stay security)
Agar v. Agar (undefended) (stay commission)
Campbell v. Campbell (defended) (commission) (J.S.)
Kavanagh v. Kavanagh and Nesbitt (defended) (stay security)
Duncan v. Duncan (undefended) (stay security)
Bucknall v. Bucknall (defended) (order)
Wild v. Wild (defnd. order) (J.S.)
Clarke v. Clarke and Robinson (defended) (stay security)
Edwards v. Edwards and Edwards (stay security) (C.J.)
Hicks v. Hicks and Smith (defended) (stay security)
Uva v. Uva and Mooney (defended) (stay security)
Beer v. Beer, Bath, Thomas, and Cox
Beer v. Beer (stay secty.) (S.J.)
Scarratt v. Scarratt and Bullock (stayed) (S.J.)
Hurley v. Hurley and Menzies (stay security) (S.J.)

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING.—The quarterly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, April 7; Mr. Curtis in the chair. After the usual formal business had been transacted, the subject for discussion: 'That it is inadvisable to interfere with the present relationship between owners and occupiers of house property as to the incidence of local taxation,' was opened by Mr. Kinipple, for Mr. Bilney.—Mr. Rhys opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke in the affirmative: Messrs. Mawdesley, Reed, Pattinson, Bower, Parkes, Watkins, Bolton, and Thirlby; in the negative, none.—Mr. Watson replied for Mr. Kinipple.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was carried by a majority of eleven.—The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society on Tuesday, April 14, is: 'That the case of Barrow v. Isaacs, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 179; L. R. (1891) 1 Q. B. Div. 417, was wrongly decided.'

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7.

In re An Arbitration between J. Knight and Tabernacle Permanent Building Society and Arbitration and Building Societies Acts (appeal of J. Knight from order of Wills, J., and Williams, J., dated February 10, rescinding order for statement of special case; part heard March 2—present, Master of the Rolls and Bowen, L.J., and Fry, L.J.)—Cur. adv. vult.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8.

Smith, Hill & Co. v. Pyman, Bell & Co. (appeal of defendants from judgment of Charles, J., dated November 15, at trial without a jury at Leeds).—Allowed.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, APRIL 7.

In re D. H. Porrett, one, &c. and Animal Products Company (Lim.) (appeal of D. H. Porrett from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 3, affirming order of district registrar for delivery of solicitor's bill of fees and disbursement).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8.

Bonnard v. Perryman (appeal of defendant C. W. Perryman from order of North, J., dated March 3, restraining until trial publication and sale of Financial Observer for February 7).—Adjourned for argument before full Court.

In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. Crawford v. Royal Infirmary and other Charities. In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. Crawford v. Forshaw (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated January 11, 1890).—Cur. adv. vult.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, April 13.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Tuesday, April 14.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Wednesday, April 15.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Thursday, April 16.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

Friday, April 17.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Carrington.

Saturday, April 18.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Lavie.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.—The attention of the Board of Trade having been called by a provincial accountant to the prevailing practice amongst a certain class of bankruptcy petitioners of touting for appointments as trustee under the Bankruptcy Act, the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy has addressed the following letter to the accountant upon the subject: 'Sir,—With reference to the subject of solicitation for proxies referred to in your letter, I have consulted the Board of Trade, and am authorised by them to state that in the event of any case being brought to their knowledge in which the appointment of a trustee has been effected by means of proxies obtained by solicitation on the part of the person so elected, the Board of Trade, having regard to the provisions of rule 20 of schedule 1 of the Bankruptcy Act, will be prepared to object to such appointment under section 21 of the Bankruptcy Act.—I am, sir, your obedient servant, John Smith, Inspector-General in Bankruptcy.'

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

From April 13 to April 18.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	April 13	April 14	April 15	April 16	April 17	April 18
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Runcorn	—	—	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Salford	Salford	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	York	Thirsk	Helmsley	Knaresborough	Ripon
19	Judge Barber	—	Alfreton	Burton	Derby	—	—
22	Judge Harington	Stratford-on-Avon	Coventry	Warwick	Rugby	—	—
26	Judge Jordan	Longton	Burslem	Hanley	Hanley	Atherstone	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—
55	Judge Machonochie	—	Dorchester	Bridport	Weymouth	Blandford	—
58	Judge Edge	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	East Stonehouse	Tavistock

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Nicholas John Hannen, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Chief Justice of the Supreme Court for China and Japan and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghai. Mr. Hannen was called in 1866.

George Jamieson, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Assistant Judge of the Supreme Court for China and Japan and Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghai. Mr. Jamieson was called in 1880.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Robert Anderson Mowat, Esq., to be Her Majesty's Judge for Her Court in Japan. Mr. Mowat was called in 1871.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Francis William Maclean, Q.C., M.P., a Master in Lunacy, in place of Sir Alexander Miller, resigned. Mr. Maclean was called in 1868.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Mr. Hardinge F. Giffard to be his private secretary, in place of Mr. Herbert J. Hope. Mr. Giffard is the son of the late Mr. J. W. Giffard, judge of County Courts; he was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and was called in 1887.

Mr. Aubrey William Rake (of the firm of Howe & Rake), of 22 Chancery Lane, W.C., and 171 Norwood Road, Herne Hill, S.E., has been appointed Solicitor to the Society of Public Analysts. Mr. Rake, having obtained honorary distinction at his Final, was admitted in February, 1884, and is a Commissioner for Oaths.

Mr. E. J. Trustram, M.A., Oxon (of the firm of Messrs. Halses, Trustram & Co.), of 61 Cheapside, E.C., and 17 Old Burlington Street, W., has been appointed by Sir James Whitehead, Bart. (High Sheriff of the county of London), Returning Officer for the borough of Deptford. Mr. Richard Clarence Halse, the senior partner in the firm, is the Deputy of the Ward of Cheap; and Mr. Clarence Richard Halse, of the same firm, is the Returning Officer for the borough of St. Pancras.

Mr. William Carpenter (of the firm of W. Carpenter & Sons), of 5 Laurence Pountney Lane, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Carpenter was admitted in 1871.

Mr. Thomas Carpenter (of the firm of W. Carpenter & Sons), of 5 Laurence Pountney Lane, Cannon Street, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Carpenter was admitted in 1872.

Mr. James Hamilton Collins, of St. George's House, Eastcheap, E.C., has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Collins was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Daniel Cann (of the firm of Cann & Son), of 30 Gracechurch Street, E.C., and East Molesey, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cann was admitted in 1883.

Mr. A. Mozley Stark, of 62 Strand, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Stark was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Arthur Burges Crosby (of the firm of Crosby, Farmer & Crosby), of Stockton-on-Tees and Norton, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Crosby was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Thurnall (of the firm of W. Garrard & Thurnall), of Kettering, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Thurnall was admitted in 1881.

Mr. George Wintringham Cutts, of Goole, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Cutts was admitted in 1884.

Mr. F. W. Bayley, of Newcastle, Staffordshire, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Bayley was admitted in 1885.

Mr. George Edward Mellor, of Oldham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Mellor was admitted in 1884.

Mr. J. H. Kean, of Fleetwood, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Kean was admitted in 1885.

Commercial Failures.—According to Kemp's Mercantile Gazette, the number of failures in England and Wales gazetted during the week ending April 4 was forty-one. The number in the corresponding week of last year was eighty-three, showing a decrease of forty-two, being a net decrease in 1891, to date, of seventy-three.

Licensing Magistrates.—Mr. Maclure, M.P., has introduced a bill to remove the disabilities of railway and other shareholders in public companies to act at licensing sessions. At present section 60 of the Licensing Act of 1872 directs that no justice is to act at a licensing sessions or under any Intoxicating Liquors Licensing Acts who is, or is in partnership with, or holds a share in any company which is, a common brewer, distiller, maker of malt for sale, or retailer of malt, or of any intoxicating liquor in the licensing district or in the district adjoining to that in which he usually acts. The cases excepted from this general rule are those where the offence charged is that of being found drunk in any highway or other place, or on any licensed premises, or of being guilty while drunk of riotous or disorderly conduct, or of being drunk while in charge, on any highway or other public place, of any carriage, horse, cattle, or steam-engine, or of being drunk when in possession of loaded firearms. The bill proposes to repeal this section 60, so far as it relates to a railway or other shareholder, except so far as that he is not to vote or act as regards any station or other licensed premises in which the company in which he is a shareholder is interested. One noticeable point about the bill is that it appears to make the distinction between partners in a brewery and shareholders in one—of leaving the disability on the former while removing it from the latter.

HIS HONOUR JUDGE MORGAN HOWARD, County Court Judge for Cornwall, is lying seriously ill at Torquay.

THE Guardian understands that no appearance has been entered on behalf of the Bishop of Lincoln on the petition of appeal to the Privy Council by the promoters of the suit against his lordship.

THE Fire Inquests Bill, introduced by Mr. Brookfield on Wednesday, extends to the whole country the power now possessed by the City of London coroner to hold inquests in the case of fatalities from fires.

MR. HUNTER has drafted a bill to assimilate the divorce law of England to that which has been in force in Scotland since the time of the Reformation. He proposes to make desertion a ground for divorce, and to give the wife a title to apply for a divorce on the ground of adultery alone. The measure will be introduced in the course of a few days.

ABSENT JUDGES.—Neither Lord Justice Lopes, Mr. Justice Denman, nor Sir James Butt have resumed their duties at the present sittings. Mr. Justice Denman, we understand, will return to Court on Monday, and Lord Justice Lopes is expected back shortly; but in the case of Sir James Butt, who is indisposed, it is uncertain at present when his lordship will resume his seat.

SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.—The usual monthly meeting of the board of directors of this association was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, London, on Wednesday, the 8th inst., Mr. John Hunter in the chair. The other directors present were Messrs. H. Morten Cotton, R. R. Dees (Newcastle-on-Tyne), Geo. Burrow Gregory, Samuel Harris (Leicester), Edwin Hedger, J. H. Kays, Grinham Keen, R. Pennington, Henry Roscoe, Sidney Smith, R. W. Tweedie, Frederic T. Woolbert, and J. T. Scott (secretary). A sum of 325*l.* was distributed in grants of relief, and other general business was transacted.

STATUTORY RULES.—A good deal of the minor legislation on details and procedure is effected by the intrusting of the making of 'rules' to various public bodies. In many cases it is no easy matter to ascertain what these rules are, and opportunity is not always afforded to those most interested to offer suggestions about any proposed rules. Accordingly a bill has been introduced by Mr. H. H. Fowler and Sir Albert Rollit for improving the procedure for making these 'statutory rules.' It is here provided that, at least forty days before the making of any, copies shall be circulated amongst the 'public bodies' interested in their subject-matter, and shall also be published in the London Gazette. If during those forty days any representations or suggestions are made by a public body to the authority proposing to make the rules, they are to be taken into consideration before the rules are finally settled. Where, however, a rule-making authority certifies that the immediate operation of any rules is a matter of urgency, they may be made to come into operation at once as provisional rules, subject to being subsequently confirmed or withdrawn. It is further directed that all statutory rules are to be published, as soon as possible after their coming into operation, by the Queen's printers in the form of a supplement to the statutes of the year, or in some such other form as the Treasury may prescribe. The 'statutory rules' referred to in the bill are those made for the English Court of Judicature or any division, or for the County Courts, and also those made by the Lord Chancellor or any Secretary of State or other Government Department. Another definition is that 'public body' includes the benchers of each Inn of Court, the Incorporated Law Society, the Chambers of Commerce of London and of any county borough, the council of any county, and any other society or body of a representative public character.

HOUSE OF LORDS APPEALS.—The judicial business of the House of Lords will be resumed on Tuesday next, when the case of Barnardo v. Ford will, it is expected, be in the paper for hearing. The present list contains the names of thirty-six appeals, of which twenty-six are English and ten are Scotch appeals, there being none from Ireland this time.

POLICIES OF LIFE INSURANCE AND MARRIED WOMEN.—The Norwich Union Life Insurance Society have recently been instrumental in obtaining a judicial decision on a matter of some little interest to the insuring public. It has always been a question of much controversy amongst conveyancing counsel whether a woman married before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, could mortgage, sell, or assign a policy of life insurance to which she was beneficially entitled either on her own life or on that of another person, it being a matter of great doubt whether a policy of life insurance was a reversionary interest in personal estate within the meaning of the Act 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, commonly known as Vice-Chancellor Malin's Act. The result has hitherto been that women married before the year 1883 have been very much fettered in dealing with policies of life insurance, and the Norwich Union Life Office (having recently become the purchasers of a policy for 2,000*l.* on the life of a married woman, sold under order of the Court of Chancery in the action of Witherby v. Rackham) determined to get the point decided, and for that purpose took out a summons in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. The case was fully argued this week before Mr. Justice Chitty, when he decided that a policy of life insurance could be dealt with by a married woman, with the concurrence of her husband, by deed acknowledged before a commissioner, under the provisions of Vice-Chancellor Malin's Act. The following counsel appeared in the case: Mr. Farwell, Q.C., Mr. Byrne, Q.C., Mr. Martelli, and Mr. Swinfen Eady.—Eastern Daily Press.

BIRTHS.

On March 31, at Mirfield, Gleneldon Road, Streatham, the wife of W. J. Hill, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On March 31, at Katoomba, N.S.W., the wife of Arthur Whitehead, Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On April 2, at Whitburn, near Sunderland, Charles Francis Egerton Allen, Barrister-at-Law, Heywood Cottage, Tenby, to Elisabeth Georgina, daughter of the late William Wilcox, Esq., of Whitburn.

On April 2, at St. Peter's Church, Paddington, W., William Rigby, second son of C. H. Hawkins, Esq., of Maitlands, Colchester, to Ella Hastings, youngest daughter of the late Langford Lovell Hodge, Esq., of Antigua, West Indies, Barrister-at-Law.

On April 2, at St. John's Episcopal Church, Johnstone, Renfrewshire, Henry Barr, Solicitor, Glasgow, to Lucy Emily Laura, second daughter of the late W. J. Wainwright, Esq., General Manager Glasgow and South-Western Railway.

On April 7, at St. Stephen's, Westbourne Park, William Roffe Tindal-Atkinson, youngest son of the late Serjeant Tindal-Atkinson, Judge of County Courts, to Emily Marion, only daughter of Midgley Cockcroft, Esq., M.D., of Masham, Yorkshire.

On April 7, at the Parish Church, St. Mary's, Wimbledon, Ernest Edward Surridge, Esq., of Coggeshall, Essex, solicitor, second son of the late J. S. Surridge, Esq., of Coggeshall, Essex, to Edith Mary, third daughter of Lewis Powell, Esq., of Edenthorpe, Wimbledon Park, Surrey.

DEATHS.

On March 30, at 15 Old Cavendish Street, London, W., John Cemlyn Jones, Esq., Solicitor, of Bangor and Cardiff, aged 39 years.

On March 2, at Graaff-Reinet, South Africa, at the residence of her father, James Ayliff, Civil Commissioner, Annie Helena, wife of Macleod Bawtree Robinson, Additional Resident Magistrate, Kimberley.

On April 3, at Wenderholme, near Bolton, Sarah Emily, the dearly beloved wife of Robert Winder, of Bolton, Solicitor, in her 57th year.

	Per Annum £	s.	d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3	4	0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

PROGRESS in Court of Appeal No. 1 has hitherto been very slow since the commencement of the present sittings. Up to Wednesday last only four appeals in the final list had been disposed of. The list, at the beginning of the sittings, contained as many as sixty-one appeals, and the New Trial Paper, which is at present untouched, contains fifteen cases. There are also seven Admiralty appeals for hearing with assessors, as well as a constant supply of Interlocutory and Bankruptcy appeals. It seems evident, therefore, that, unless a considerable part of this business can be disposed of in the other branch of the Court, there must be a long list of arrears at Whitsuntide.

ALL the judges of the Queen's Bench Division were sitting on Wednesday last, and, for the first time of late, all the ten Courts assigned to that Division were occupied, there being three Divisional Courts and seven Courts for the trial of jury and non-jury actions. The Lord Chief Justice sat with Court of Appeal No. 1, and Mr. Justice Wright was at judges' chambers.

IN connection with the warrants issued for the arrest of two members of the House of Commons, who have apparently fled from justice, it may be stated that where a member is convicted of felony and sentenced to penal servitude or any term of imprisonment with hard labour or exceeding twelve months, he forfeits his seat by virtue of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, but that no such consequence follows a conviction for misdemeanour. The offence of flying from justice was in the case of a felony a separate offence, followed by forfeiture of goods, even although the offender should have been acquitted of the felony, until 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 5; 'for,' as Blackstone says, 'the very flight was held an offence carrying with it a strong presumption of guilt,' though 'in modern times it became unusual for the jury to find the fact of flight, forfeiture being looked upon since the vast increase of personal property of late years as too large a penalty for an offence to which a man is prompted by the natural love of liberty.' There is at least one precedent—that of James Sadleir—for expelling a member who has fled from justice, without any conviction or judgment of outlawry; but in that case (which occurred in 1857) a true bill had been found, the offence being fraud. See May's 'Parl. Pr.' 9th ed. p. 66, from which, also, it appears that in 1796 one Colonel Cawthorne was expelled for 'conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman;' also that 'expulsion is generally reserved for offences which render members unfit for a seat in Parliament, and which, if not so punished, would bring discredit on Parliament itself.' Modern opinion, however, would perhaps call for an immediate expulsion of a member proved to have fled from justice, on the ground that constituencies are entitled to have vacancies so caused filled up with as little delay as possible.

RAIDS on gaming-houses are, it seems, becoming very common just now, and, in connection with the police watching of certain Buckinghamshire public-houses, Mr. Matthews has stated in the House of Commons that in London the practice of the police authorities was to give warning before taking action, but that this was not the case in the country. The Licensing Act, 1872, s. 17, which imposes a penalty on a licensed person who 'suffers any gaming to be carried on in his premises,' and directs that a conviction for this offence 'shall, unless the convicting magistrate otherwise direct, be recorded on the license of the person convicted,' is, of course, silent as to any previous warning. The current of the decisions (see Bosley v. Davies, 45 Law J. Rep. M. C. 27; Redgate v. Haynes, 45 Law J. Rep. M. C. 65; and Bond v. Evans, 57 Law J. Rep

M. C. 105) is strong against the liability of licensed persons for their servants in this matter. Only in Somerset v. Hart, 53 Law J. Rep. M. C. 77, where the potman, not proved to be in charge, saw some gambling and did nothing to prevent it, and the master was in another part of the building and knew nothing about it, has a 'licensed person' succeeded in persuading the High Court that he ought not to be convicted.

IN Regina v. The Bank of England the Court has refused to grant a mandamus to the Bank to permit a 'next-of-kin agent' to inspect the register of unclaimed stock for the purposes of his business, which is carried on by means of printing the names in a list and charging a guinea for information given to each applicant becoming possessed of such list, and so becoming enabled to found a claim to unclaimed stock, if he should have been forestalled by the rightful claimant thereto. Section 51 of the National Debt Act, 1870, directs that 'all stock, no dividend whereon is claimed for ten years,' shall be transferred in the books of the bank to the National Debt Commissioners; and section 52 that, 'immediately after such transfer the name in which the stock stood immediately before the transfer, the residence and description of the parties, the amount transferred, and the date of transfer, shall be entered in a list to be kept for the purpose by the bank, which list shall be open for inspection at the usual hours of transfer.' The Court said that open for inspection here does not mean open to public inspection, but open to inspection only to a bonâ fide claimant, or some person acting for a bonâ fide claimant, but intimated also that, even if this had not been the true construction of the statute, they would not be disposed to exercise the discretion, which they undoubtedly possess, in favour of the applicant. The correctness of this judgment is, perhaps, open to some doubt, but, as the Budget is now fast coming on, we will, instead of discussing a dry point of law, hasten to suggest to Mr. Goschen a means of enriching the public which no person could disapprove of. Section 55 of the Act goes on to provide for the retransfer of unclaimed stock to any person showing title, so far as we are able to discover, after any lapse of time, the claimant being able to recover dividends as well as capital, though not 'invested accumulations' (see In re Ashmead, 42 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 314). Why should not a period of limitation, say twenty years, be imposed, after which the whole of the unclaimed stock should vest in the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being, for the benefit of the public, and during the currency of which a handsome duty, rising by annual increments, as they say at the Treasury, should be payable by successful claimants on retransfer? Per contrà, we would have the list at the Bank of England thrown open to public inspection in the widest sense of the term. Mr. Stanley Leighton would take care to see to that.

THE Attorney-General for Ireland, in answer to Mr. T. W. Russell, has stated in the House of Commons that Sharp v. Wakefield cannot be held to be an authority in Ireland without an express decision of the House of Lords to that effect, inasmuch as the Irish Acts differ so much from the English Acts that Sharp v. Wakefield would be primâ facie distinguishable from any Irish case which might happen to be in conflict with it. A short statement of the leading points in the controversy will be found in the LAW JOURNAL for June 28, 1890, where an attempt is made to point out the ratio decidendi of Reg. v. The Recorder of Dublin, I. R. 11 C. L. 412, which is directly in conflict with Sharp v. Wakefield.

A POINT of considerable importance upon the construction of the Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49) arose in the case of In re An Arbitration between J. R. Williams and Stepney (noted this week). The question was whether the provision in schedule 1 to the Act, giving arbitrators a discretionary power over the costs of the reference and award, could be deemed to apply to a submission made before the Act came into operation, and which conferred no power upon the arbitrators to award costs. A dispute had arisen between the parties after the Act came into force, and was referred to three arbitrators, who made an award giving costs to the successful party. It was contended that they were entitled to award costs by reason of section 2, which provides that 'a submission, unless a contrary intention is expressed therein, shall be deemed to include the provisions set forth in schedule 1,' and reliance was also placed upon section 25, which enacts that the Act 'shall apply to any arbitration commenced after the commencement of this Act under any agreement or order made before the commencement of this Act.' The Court, however, were of opinion that the latter provision did not apply to a submission, but only to an arbitration held under a submission, and that section 2 only applied to future submissions. They, therefore, held that the arbitrators had no power to award costs. The decision is the more important as the schedule contains a number of other provisions 'to be implied in submissions,' and it would seem that none of these can now be held to apply to a submission made before January 1, 1890, the date on which the Act came into operation.

UNDER the International Convention for the protection of industrial property and section 103 of the Patents Acts, 1883–88, an applicant for a patent in any one of the contracting States may, at any time within seven months from the date of his first foreign application, apply for a patent in this country; the English patent when granted is ante-dated to the date of the first foreign application and is consequently not defeated, as it otherwise would have been, by prior publication or user in the protected interval. An important point in the construction of these provisions was decided by Romer, J., in The British Tanning Company v. Groth (1891, 8 P. O. R. 113). W. & B. took out a patent in France on December 14, 1886. Within seven months thereafter—viz. on July 5, 1887—they obtained a patent for the same subject-matter in England. But the English patent was not ante-dated as contemplated by the Convention and the statute. The question arose whether W. & B.'s English patent was liable to be defeated by publication prior to July 5, 1887. Romer, J., held—and, if we may say so with respect, rightly held—that it was. A foreign patentee, in his lordship's opinion, has a double right under the Acts, 1883–88. He may take out an ordinary patent for the full period of fourteen years, or he may apply for a limited grant under the Convention and section 103. The date of the patent must be held conclusive as to the course that he intended to adopt.

In Hampshire v. Wickens, 47 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 243, the late Master of the Rolls held that a covenant in a lease that the lessee would not assign without the consent of the lessor was not 'usual.' In Bishop v. Taylor (Harris, third party) a deputy County Court judge had decided that a purchaser of a lease could not refuse to complete the purchase on the ground of the lease containing a covenant 'that the lessee would not assign without the consent of the lessor, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld,' and held that the deposit was forfeited by reason of the purchaser so refusing to complete. But a Divisional Court (Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Grantham) has recently reversed this judgment, being of opinion that Hampshire v. Wickens was applicable and binding. The case is a very important one, as, whether 'usual' in the legal sense or not, the covenant in the qualified form is a very common one—so common, indeed, that Mr. Bolton, in his Conveyancing Act Amendment Bill, proposes to make it universal by reading it into all leases. Upon authority we have no doubt that this judgment is correct. In Hampshire v. Wickens the covenant was qualified, though the words were a little different, being that the consent was 'not to be withheld to a respectable and responsible tenant,' so that Hampshire v. Wickens is virtually undistinguishable. In point of natural justice, however, the insertion of the qualification ought to disable a purchaser of, or person contracting for, a lease from throwing up his bargain upon discovering that the lease contains the covenant against assignment; for the qualification has the practical effect (see Treloar v. Bigge, 43 Law J. Rep. Exch. 95, and other cases cited in Woodfall, 14th edit. p. 678) of drawing out of the covenant all the sting which it would otherwise possess. But, of course, the term 'usual covenants' should never be used in contracts for leases, and as even the term 'proper' is no more efficacious (see Eadie v. Addison, 52 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 80), the only safe procedure for a vendor or intending lessor to adopt is to settle the form of the covenant against alienation by express words in the contract.

It will be remembered that in the case of Ex parte Lickorish, 59 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 500; L. R. 25 Q. B. Div. 176, the Court of Appeal, approving Sclater v. Cottam, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 630, held that a solicitor-mortgagee could not charge his mortgagor with profit costs for non-contentious business incurred in relation to the mortgage debt and security. We pointed out at the time in an article in these columns (Law Journal, 1890, p. 414) that the principle of this decision must logically be applicable to every kind of business, whether contentious or non-contentious, though there was some authority the other way in Price v. M'Beth, 33 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 460, where Vice-Chancellor Stuart allowed profit costs of a redemption action to a solicitor-mortgagee acting in person. In the case of Stone v. Lickorish (26 Notes of Cases, 1891, p. 18) the precise point came for decision before Mr. Justice Stirling, which he decided in accordance with our anticipation, allowing only costs out of pocket to a solicitor-mortgagee in a similar case. In Price v. M'Beth Vice-Chancellor Stuart appears to have decided the point on the mere ground that the redemption decree had gone in the usual form directing the taxing-master to tax the mortgagee's costs, and that the objection to the allowance of profit costs ought to have been taken at the hearing and could not be raised on taxation. A similar view, though it was not necessary for his decision, seems to have been entertained by Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the case of In re Donaldson, 54 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 151; L. R. 27 Chanc. Div. 544, as to a like objection being taken after a common order under the Solicitors Act, 1843, to tax the bill of a solicitor-trustee. The case of Stone v. Lickorish, before Mr. Justice Stirling, was on all-fours with Price v. M'Beth in this respect, but the learned judge, who specially inquired as to the practice, not only found that Vice-Chancellor Stuart's view was opposed to the regular practice in the taxing-master's office, which was to entertain such an objection though not taken at the hearing, but also held that it was inconsistent with Lord Cottenham's actual decision in Cradock v. Piper, 19 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 107; 1 M. & G. 107. Mr. Justice Stirling's decision upon the point of practice seems clearly right. His decision on the point of law seems equally clearly in accordance with the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal, and as matters stand—that is, unless and until some case is carried to the House of Lords—there appears to be no possible further doubt as to the position of a solicitor-mortgagee in the matter.

The Lord Chancellor has just introduced a Law of Evidence Consolidation Bill (see ante, p. 220) in the House of Lords, which will probably have been read a second time before these lines meet the eye of the reader. It may be hoped that the bill will not leave that House without having incorporated therein a provision for allowing all persons accused of crime to give evidence. A bill of Lord Bramwell's to this effect, first introduced in 1884, has four times passed the House of Lords, and a similar bill was introduced from 1884 to 1888 by successive law officers of the Crown. In 1884 this bill passed through the Standing Committee on Law, and in 1888, when it was fully debated on a second reading, it met with the warmly expressed approval of Sir Charles Russell, Mr. Finlay, and other distinguished lawyers too numerous to mention, but failed to pass on account of the opposition of the Irish members, Sir Henry James and Sir Charles Russell joining with those members in urging that, in view of that opposition, Ireland ought to be excluded from the operation of the bill. Upon consideration of the statute-book as it now stands, we think that the exclusion of Ireland from the bill has very much to be said for it. There are no less than forty-four Evidence Acts which apply to Scotland only, and no less than thirty Evidence Acts which apply to Ireland only. Neither Lord Denman's Act of 1843, by which the evidence of interested witnesses, not being actual parties, was admitted, nor Lord Brougham's Act of 1851, by which the evidence of actual parties was admitted, applies to Scotland, the Scotch law of the subject being governed by two separate and later Acts. Similarly, when the advantage of the rules, which Lord Bramwell's bill and the Government bills sought to introduce, has been proved, as no doubt it will be, by English experience, it will be applied to Ireland at the solicitation of Irish members themselves, to whom the question must have been familiar longer even than to English or Scotch members; for, curiously enough, it was two Irish members, Mr. Scully and Mr. McMahon, who very many years ago introduced a bill for admitting the evidence of all accused persons.

FEW persons can have much frequented the Courts of late years without noticing the great increase of 'parties in person,' to the no small interruption of ordinary business. Cannot some remedy be found? We think it can, in the revision of the rules (see Rules of Supreme Court, Order XVI., rules 22-31), which relate to proceedings by and against paupers. Under these rules a person swearing that he is not worth 25*l.* (raised from 5*l.* by the rules of 1883) is entitled to the gratuitous services of solicitor and counsel. Might not the right of parties to appear in person be very greatly curtailed, and the right of paupers to gratuitous services of solicitors be considerably extended, by an amendment of procedure to the effect that the maximum amount of a 'pauper's' property should be considerably raised, and that, although the pauper should continue to enjoy the services of solicitor and counsel gratuitously, such services should be paid for by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, say, out of the Suitors' Fee Fund? It may be mentioned that the 'Acte to admytt such persons as are poore to sue in formâ pauperis' (2 Hen. VII. c. 12) is repealed by the Statute Law Revision and Civil Procedure Act, 1883, so that the Rules of Committee have, subject to section 5 (b) of that Act, which would prevent them only from curtailing the rights of paupers, complete power in the matter.

WE have read with much regret, but little surprise a statement in the Globe that it is not intended to appeal to the House of Lords in Ex parte Jackson, the Clitheroe (so-called) 'abduction' case. The fact is that Bell-Cox's Case, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 89, though distinguishable from Ex parte Jackson on more points than one (see ante, p. 189), wears, when it comes to be very carefully considered, an appearance very discouraging to Mr. Jackson on the main point—that when once a discharge has been obtained on habeas corpus, the order for discharge is final and subject to no review. Considering that from this very Bell-Cox's Case it may (we do not say must) be deduced that the Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction in the matter; considering that the Lord Chancellor's original jurisdiction ir the matter may (we do not say must) be technically bad on account of the presence of the judges of the Court of Appeal on the bench; considering that at any rate on the point of law involved there is only the opinion of three judges to two against Mr. Jackson; considering that these three judges have set Lord Mansfield at naught, and overruled a judgment of Mr. Justice Coleridge only just fifty years old; considering, finally, that of the few lawyers who think the judgment of the Court of Appeal right there is not a single man of them who does not regret the mode and manner of its deliverance, —truly Jackson's Case is one to which the history of judicial decisions furnishes no parallel, or furnishes a parallel in Cooke v. Crawford alone.

THE ECONOMY OF JUDICIAL POWER.

IN an article published in last week's number of this journal upon the question of the necessity for the appointment of an additional judge a temporary remedy was suggested for the occasional congestion in the business of the Law Courts.

To effect a more substantial and, at the same time, a more fruitful reform in this direction it would be necessary to go deeper than this, and to revert to one of the leading principles which influenced the great law reformers of 1850–1873 in framing their scheme for the creation of 'the Supreme Court of Judicature.'

It will be remembered that, by the Judicature Act of 1873 'the Supreme Court of Judicature' was to consist of two great divisions—the 'Court of Appeal' and the 'High Court of Justice.' To the former was to be transferred the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, and nearly the whole of that exercised by the Judicial Committee. So that the 'Supreme Court of Judicature' would itself have included all the tribunals in the country. There would have been no Courts outside it. The Court of Appeal was to consist of a large number of the most eminent judges. The Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and the chiefs of the Divisional Courts were to be ex-officio members; it was to have the power of sitting in division, and its judgments were to be final. Provision was also made for enabling this great Court, in cases of especial difficulty and importance, to combine any or all of its divisions, and to sit, so to speak, as a Court of Appeal 'in banc.' Lord Selborne, in introducing the bill into the House of Lords, said: 'If you have a good Court, with sufficient judicial power to command the confidence of the country, it is better there should not be a double appeal. . . . You never can escape by going through any number of Courts of Appeal from the risk of difference of opinion in each and every one of them, and from doubts arising as to whether the last Court decided better than those before it. What you want is to make as good a Court as possible, and to give it all the power and authority you can' ('Hansard's Parliamentary Debates,' 214). It must be remembered, as the same noble lord pointed out with great force in 1875 ('Hansard's Parliamentary Debates,' 223), that this scheme actually became the law of the land; that it passed with the approval and hearty sympathy of Lord Cairns and without opposition by Lord Redesdale; that it was based upon the recommendation of one of the strongest legal committees of the House of Lords which ever sat; that it had been two years before the legal public for the express purpose of inviting criticism, and that bench and bar were unanimous in its favour.

It is unnecessary to follow in great detail the history of the final repeal of this portion of the Act of 1873. In 1874 Lord Beaconsfield came into power, with Lord Cairns as Chancellor. A movement had been set on foot in which Sir William Charley took a conspicuous part, and a committee was formed to protest against the abolition of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords. When, therefore, the Judicature Bill of 1875 was presented in that House by the Lord Chancellor (Cairns), Lord Redesdale led the attack on those sections of the Act of 1873 (the operation of which, it will be remembered, had been postponed until November, 1875) which provided for the transfer of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords to one final Court of Appeal; and although Lord Selborne, supported by Lord Hatherley, pointed out with great force that these provisions had been deliberately sanctioned by the House of Lords itself, after long debate and ample consideration, and that they had become law, the result was that the operation of the obnoxious sections was suspended, and the sections themselves finally repealed by the Appellate Jurisdiction Act of 1876.

The arguments in favour of retaining the appellate jurisdiction of the Lords did not turn upon the question of the advisability of allowing a double appeal. They were directed chiefly to consideration of the authority, the high standing, and the constitutional importance of that Court.

The scheme of 1873 differed considerably from that which Lord Westbury had in his mind in 1856, when he stated, in giving his evidence before the Select Committee, that he wished the House of Lords to be the great appellate tribunal for the whole empire. The scheme of 1873 only touched English appeals. Irish, Scotch, and colonial were still to have the right, which they jealously guarded, of laying their petition of appeal at the foot of the throne.

The Act of 1873 took away the privilege from the English portion of the community, and referred its appellants to a Court whose members for the most part were of inferior rank. It was a scheme for 'levelling down' rather than 'levelling up.' And it could not well be otherwise, for the idea of creating life peers, under the title of 'Lords of Appeal,' had not at that time received serious consideration. That innovation, so strenuously resisted, is now an established constitutional principle, and the result is that the law reformers of to-day have an opportunity before them which those of 1873 had not. Lord Westbury could not have realised his design of making the House of Lords into one great appellate tribunal for the empire without creating a considerable number of hereditary Lords of Appeal; and Lord Selborne was obliged to resort to 'levelling down' his Court of Appeal for the same reason. Practically it was impossible at that time to turn fourteen judges into peers who must have been hereditary, and no other course than that followed was then open.

Upon the question of double or single appeals there does not appear to have been any difference of opinion between Liberal or Conservative lawyers. It was the destruction of that ancient and dignified Constitutional Court—the House of Lords—that led to the formation of Sir W. Charley's committee, to Lord Redesdale's opposition, and to the suspensory sections of the Judicature Act, 1875. If the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords could have been preserved consistently with the principle of single appeals, it seems that everyone would have been well satisfied. At that time this course was impossible, but the success of the experiment of the creation of 'Lords of Appeal' has enabled this generation of lawyers to solve the difficulty.

If, then, the five Lords Justices of Appeal were created 'Lords of Appeal in Ordinary,' we should have one great Court of final appeal in which all the judges would be peers of Parliament, and in which provision would be made for the interchangeability of duties, so that every judge of this great Court would be also a judge of the High Court, and would be at liberty, when appeal business was disposed of, to assist his brethren in the Chancery and Queen's Bench Divisions of the High Court of Justice.

This great Court of final appeal would sit in divisions: one division would sit exactly as the House of Lords now sits at Westminster, would take English, Scotch, and Irish appeals; another would sit as and where the Judicial Committee sits, and take its work; other divisions would sit in the Royal Courts of Justice, and do exactly the same work as the Court of Appeal now does.

If any case was of peculiar difficulty or importance, any number of the members of this Court might be convoked to hear it, and a litigant who should be dissatisfied with the finality of the judgment of such a Court would be singularly hard to please. There is nothing novel in the suggestion. It is merely a reversion to the great and simple scheme approved by all the greatest lawyers of the day, and which, as we have seen, became law—of one 'Supreme Court of Judicature' complete in itself, consisting of two branches only, the High Court and the Court of Appeal. The economy in time and in money would be very considerable.

Consider how much of both would have been saved in the Vagliano Case if the fourteen appellate judges who tried that case had sat together as one final appellate Court in March, 1889, instead of sitting in two divisions, of six and eight judges respectively, with an interval of two years between their judgments (March, 1889, to March, 1891).

Thomas Snow.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE (No. 2) BILL.

We have before us the Public Trustee (No. 2) Bill ('prepared and brought in by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Jackson, and the Attorney-General'), which beyond doubt is intended by the Government to pass this session. We have also before us an article in the Solicitors' Journal, entitled 'Lord Halsbury's State Socialism,' in which the bill is described as 'a Socialistic measure having for its object the substitution of a public office and a Government monopoly for services which have hitherto been rendered by individuals,' and is in the course of being attacked as being wholly uncalled for and radically vicious. We have read the arguments brought forward in support of these propositions as far as they have gone, 'neither,' as Lord Bacon says, 'to believe or contradict, but to weigh and consider' them, with a full appreciation of the growing evils of bureaucracy, and also with the full consciousness that, if the bill passes and is fully worked, a large number of our readers will have to put up with a considerable loss of the income which they now derive from the management of trust estates. We think that the great increase of trouble and correspondence which the complications of modern life have involved will render it daily more difficult for testators and settlors to obtain private trustees for nothing, and that a public trustee is infinitely to be preferred to a trustee company. One remedy, and one only, might be a sufficient alternative to a Public Trustee Bill, and might even render it unnecessary, and that is a measure enabling persons acting in a fiduciary position to be remunerated. But such a measure is not before the country, whereas the Public Trustee Bill is one of the leading measures of a powerful Government, and is backed by the same Chancellor of the Exchequer whose name is associated with the greatest financial measure of the century, and who 'sees money in it' for the benefit of the public. This being so, we consider it as reasonably probable that the bill will pass, and will proceed at once to give as accurate an account of its provisions as we can, accompanied by such criticisms in point of detail as the bill itself (which is unhappily destitute of a memorandum pointing out its scope and object) has suggested to us. It is a short bill, and our observations upon it will not be long.

The first and second clauses, omitting immaterial facts, run thus:—

> The public trustee may act either alone or jointly, with any person or body of persons, and shall have the same powers, duties, and liabilities, and be entitled to the same rights and immunities, and be subject in like manner to the control and orders of the High Court, as a private trustee acting in the same capacity.
>
> The public trustee may by that name be appointed to be trustee of any will or marriage, or other family settlement, and may be so appointed whether the will or settlement was made or came into operation before or after the passing of this Act, and either as an original or as a new trustee, in the same cases and in the same manner, and by the same persons or Court, as if he were a private trustee, with this addition, that though the trustees originally appointed were two or more, the public trustee may be appointed sole trustee.

Those interested in the subject will do well to read the above extract from the bill some four times over, so as to impress upon their own minds these four points: (1) The bill is up to this point wholly permissive; (2) the bill is retrospective; (3) the public trustee may have a private trustee to act with him; and (4) the public trustee may be appointed sole trustee. In point of form we think the wording of the clauses defective, on the ground that these four all-important points ought to have been put by the draftsman into four separate paragraphs.

Clause 3 goes so far as to authorise the public trustee to act not only as trustee under a will (which has already been done by clause 2), but as simple executor and administrator; the clause, however, will require a 'general order' to be made before it can be put into operation. We do not think that the public trustee ought in any case to be allowed to act as administrator.

Then comes clause 4, which is, we think, objectionable on the ground of being purely compulsory. This clause provides that where an administration action is in progress, 'and by reason of the small value of the estate it appears to the Court that the estate could be more economically administered by the public trustee than by the Court, the Court may order that the estate shall be administered by the public trustee.' This clause should be struck out altogether. Of course any estate can be administered more economically in one sense by a bureaucracy. But at whose expense? At the expense of the public in a great measure.

Clause 5 is the most interesting which we have found in any bill for a long time. It first provides that 'where the trust property held by the public trustee is of such a nature as to involve, irrespectively of the terms of the trust, the payment of any rent, call, or debt, or the discharge of any other liability, the public trustee shall not be liable therefor except so far as the trust property is available to meet the same.' Here is an opportunity for the trustees and the executors of this country, for the solicitors who represent those trustees, and for the law societies who represent those solicitors. The Glasgow bank has shown in the case of calls, and every lease may any day show in the case of covenants other than the covenant for rent, that the liability of fiduciaries is personal to an extent utterly unjust. Mr. Goschen has been well advised enough to guard against it on behalf of the forthcoming public trustee. Let the law societies compel Mr. Goschen to guard private trustees also against it by a very slight verbal amendment of clause 5, and the Public Trustee Bill may be the means of saving many an honest man from undeserved ruin.

Another part of clause 5 very properly provides that the Consolidated Fund shall be liable to make good any liability arising out of any fraud or negligence on the part of the public trustee or his officers, &c.; and clause 6 provides that 'the Treasury, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, shall appoint a fit person to the office of public trustee during pleasure.' This will not quite do. There should be (1) a fixed qualification for the office, (2) a fixed salary, and (3) compulsory retirement after the age of seventy with a pension.

Clause 9 provides for an appeal from the public trustee to the High Court, and the 10th allows him both to decline and with the leave of the Court retire from a trust, while the 11th allows trustors to restrict his powers by special provisions in a trust. The 12th is of very great practical importance. It runs thus:—

> Where a testator, &c. [why not say trustor?] directs the employment of any solicitor or bank, or where either the co-trustee of the public trustee or the persons appearing to the public trustee to be for the time being entitled to the income of the trust . . . require the employment of any particular solicitor or bank, that solicitor or bank shall be employed as the solicitor or bank to the trust, unless removed for good cause by the High Court upon the application of the public trustee or of any person appearing to the Court to be interested in the trust.
>
> Where it appears to the public trustee that any solicitor or bank has been ordinarily employed in matters connected with any trust or with the family matters of persons concerned in the trust, he may, on the application or with assent of any of such persons as appear to him to be principally interested in the income of the trust for the time being, employ such solicitor or bank as the solicitor or bank to the trust.

The remaining clauses are either comparatively immaterial or will require rules for their working, so we will now take leave of the bill.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

HOUSE of Commons.

Third readings:—

The Middlesex Registry Bill.

The Charities Recovery Bill.

The Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration) Bill was considered as amended, the Law Agents (Scotland) Bill passed through committee, and the Purchase of Land and Congested Districts (Ireland) Bill and the Hares Bill are in committee.

Second readings:—

The Statutory Rules Procedure Bill.

The Registration of Certain Writs (Scotland) Bill.

The Herring Branding (Northumberland) Bill.

The Local Registration of Title (Ireland) Bill.

The Boy Messengers Bill.

Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill.

New bills:—

To Encourage the Industry of Gathering and Manufacturing Sea-ware in the Crofting Counties of Scotland.

For the Preservation of Public Footpaths.

To Amend the Law relating to Sheriffs' Courts in Glasgow.

To amend the Law of Divorce in England.

To Enable Women to Act as Poor-law Guardians in Ireland.

To Amend the Salmon Fisheries (Ireland) Acts.

Bill withdrawn:—

The Inflammable Liquids Bill.

Reviews.

A HANDBOOK FOR JURYMEN.

The Juryman's Handbook. By Spencer L. Holland, Barrister-at-Law. London: Effingham Wilson & Co. 1891.

This little work is intended for the guidance of persons liable to be summoned as jurymen in any Courts in the United Kingdom. Incidentally, however, it was necessary to deal with a number of particular branches of law connected more or less intimately with the positions of jurymen. The work may be recommended as a useful handbook of the law on the points with which it professes to deal. In the introductory chapter we have a picture (perhaps a little overdrawn) of the condition to which country jurymen are reduced under the pressure of ignorance and awe. The rest of the work is divided into twenty-seven articles, going through all the appropriate subdivisions of the work, from the 'description of jurymen' to 'a jury of matrons.'

CLERKE ON THE SETTLED LAND ACTS.

The Law and Practice under the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890. With the Statutes and the Rules and Forms issued under the Settled Land Act, 1882. By Aubrey St. John Clerke, B.A., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London: Sweet & Maxwell (Lim.). 1891.

It is now more than eight years since the Settled Land Act of 1882 came into operation, and during that time a very considerable number of important cases have been decided on its provisions. The principal Act has also been amended by four subsequent statutes passed in the years 1884, 1887, 1889, and 1890, which have introduced a good many minor changes, but comparatively few of them can be described as of first-rate importance or in any way affecting the principles of the Act of 1882. The general effect of the Act of 1890 is summed up in the work before us as follows: 'The Act of 1890, among other enactments, authorises the creation of easements on an exchange or partition of the settled land, enables the tenant-for-life to grant short leases without communicating with the trustees of the settlement, replaces section 15 of the Act of 1882 by a more intelligible restriction on the alienation of the principal mansion-house, and confers power on the tenant-for-life of raising money by mortgage for the discharge of incumbrances. The most important amendments, however, introduced by the last-mentioned Act are contained in the two sections relating to trustees, one of which materially extends the definition of "the trustees of the settlement," while the other applies to the appointment, discharge, and retirement of such trustees all the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.' There can be no doubt that the Settled Land Acts have exercised a very great effect. The change, indeed, was judicially described by Mr. Justice Pearson as revolutionary. The Act has, as Mr. Clerke expresses it, been welcomed and utilised by large numbers of distressed or encumbered landowners, and it has also produced considerable changes in conveyancing. Under these circumstances a good edition of all the Settled Land Acts, with decided cases well brought down to date, was a manifest desideratum. The present work may be safely recommended as supplying what is needed. It is executed throughout with great care, and, so far as we have been able to discover, no case has been omitted. A valuable feature is the introductory chapter, giving a summary of the changes introduced by the Acts and Rules.

WOOLF ON WINDING-UP.

The Winding up of Companies by the Court, containing the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, and the Cases thereon; the sections of Part IV. and other Parts of the Companies Act, 1862, relating to Winding-up by the Court; the Companies (Winding-up) Rules and Forms, 1890 and 1891; Section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875; the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888; the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, and the Orders of the Lord Chancellor and Board of Trade. With Explanatory Notes and References to the Cases and Practice in Bankruptcy. By Sidney Woolf, Esq., of the Middle Temple, one of Her Majesty's Counsel, assisted by Richard Ringwood, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

The work, the author tells us, is not intended to compete with the recognised standard works which deal generally with the law of companies. Its aim is to be a useful supplement to them, and in this respect it will, we think, be found serviceable. The few cases that have been decided since the Act came into operation have been noted up, but the book would have been most convenient and useful if the effect of the decisions had been shortly given. There is a useful note to section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, which, while substantially reproducing the provisions of section 165 of the Companies Act (now repealed), extends its effect in three ways: (1) by giving the Court power over 'any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company,' though he may never have been an officer of it; (2) by including the official receiver among the persons who may apply; and (3) by enabling the Court to compel restoration. The various decisions on section 165 of the Companies Act are here well summarised.

Correspondence.

SHARP v. WAKEFIELD AND ITS RESULTS.

SIR,—Your correspondent 'Amicus Cauponum' is, I think, a little too much in love with his friends. 'Justices sit to grant licenses, not to suppress public-houses,' I admit, but the Licensing Act, 1872, was, as its preamble shows, and as Mr. Justice Mellor pointed out in Regina v. Mann, 45 Law J. Rep. M. C. 35, passed 'for the better prevention of drunkenness,' and I contend that, where a public-house is so situated as to be more conducive to drunkenness than not (as where it might lie on the exact line of labourers returning from their work), it would be a proper exercise of magisterial discretion to suppress it.

Regina v. Silvester, 31 Law J. Rep. M. C. 93, is a case which ought to be set aside by Act of Parliament. It was there held that justices might not act on a general resolution to refuse renewals to licensees not promising to relinquish the sale of spirits. These and other conditions of renewal might, with the greatest advantage, be imposed by justices. HOSTIS EBRIORUM.

Temple: April 13.

Unreported Cases.

COUNTY COURTS.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—DAMAGES.

AT the Marylebone County Court, on March 26, his Honour Judge Stonor delivered the following judgment in the case of May v. Bartle: In the present case I find the following facts: The plaintiff is a hammerman and works in factories, and is not accustomed to work upon ladders or to their use. In consequence of the absence of another workman he was ordered by Mr. James Bartle, one of the defendants, to work upon a roof, the erection or reparation of which the latter was personally superintending. The plaintiff found a ladder erected at the spot, which he ascended and descended twice. On the last occasion he followed a fellow-workman down the ladder, but far apart, when the ladder broke into three pieces, and the plaintiff fell to the ground and broke his arm in two places and was otherwise injured. The ladder had previously been broken and spliced, and was unsafe to the knowledge of the defendant James Bartle, who had on two previous occasions prohibited its use. The plaintiff, on the other hand, knew that it was spliced, but did not know or think that it was unsafe. There is a conflict of evidence as to the precise position of the ladder—viz. whether it rested on the top or second purlin, or cross-beam, or bar of the roof, and whether, consequently, it was standing at a smaller or larger angle; and on the whole I find, with some doubt, that the ladder was resting on the top purlin at an angle of more than 45 degrees, but still at a less angle than what is usual for the erection of ladders. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the position of the ladder was dangerous, and, further, that two men descending the ladder at the same time, although far apart, in the position in which it stood, was also dangerous. According to the evidence, however, of two witnesses, one of whom was called for the defendants, it appeared that if the ladder (which was produced in Court) had been sound, it could have borne two and even more men at the same time with safety in the position in which it was placed, and one of the witnesses for the defendants added, and even if it were in an horizontal position. Upon the whole, I find that the ladder was not in a dangerous, although somewhat unusual, position, and that, if sound, it could in that position have safely borne the two men at the same time. Independently of these findings, as I have found that the plaintiff was not accustomed to ladders, and although he noticed the splice, did not think that there was any danger, and did this work by the order and under the superintendence of Mr. James Bartle, who knew of the defect in the ladder and had prohibited its use on two previous occasions, and ought to have prevented its use on the present occasion, I think that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. With regard to the damages, I have given them much consideration. The plaintiff is fifty-six years old, and might fairly expect to continue the kind of work on which he was employed for a period of seven or eight years longer. His wages have been 24*s.*, which it has been agreed should be taken as the measure of damages under the Act, and the limit of damages will be, of course, three years' wages—say, 187*l.* He is entitled, in the first place, to compensation for the loss of wages for upwards of eight months to the day of the hearing—say, 38*l.*; but some deduction should be made therefrom. I think that he might have undertaken and obtained some employment during a portion of the time, and he does not appear to have tried for it, and I therefore reduce the amount to 30*l.* In the second place, he is entitled to compensation for the diminution of his wage-earning capability for the next seven or eight years, taking into account the possibility of his not getting regular work, and this I estimate at one-fourth of his past earnings of 24*s.* a week, being therefore 6*s.* a week—say, 15*l.* a year—amounting for seven years only to 105*l.* And, lastly, he is entitled to compensation for his suffering, which I shall assess at 15*l.*, making a total of 150*l.*—Counsel: Salter; Robbins.

ACTION FOR COSTS.

At the Birmingham County Court, on April 14, the case of Phillips v. Neville was heard by his Honour Judge Chalmers. The action was brought by J. W. Phillips, solicitor, against Edward Neville, of Ilkeston, Derbyshire, to recover 16*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* on a bill of costs for conveyancing. The only dispute was as to the amount charged not being in accordance with the scale allowed by the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. Plaintiff had sent in a detailed bill to the defendant, and the defendant objected to it because notice had not been given of the intention to charge in detail.—Mr. Pritchett, for the plaintiff, said that the scale charges would have been much more than Mr. Phillips sued for.—His Honour: The defendant objects that you have not charged him enough.—Mr. Pritchett said the requirements as to notice only applied where the solicitor wished to preserve his right to charge more than the scale charges. The amount of the bill was considerably less than was allowed by the scale.—Mr. Registrar Parry said the amount by the scale would be about 40*l.*—His Honour: Well, it is the first time I have known a man complain of being charged too little. You can amend the bill.—Mr. Rollason said there was no power to amend the bill under this action.—His Honour: All I can do is to strike it out then, and suggest that a bill according to the scale charge should be sent in. I should think the best way would be to proceed under Order XIV.—Mr. Rollason: It so happens that when they have delivered one bill they cannot increase it. However, I think Mr. Phillips and I will arrange the matter.—Mr. Phillips (indignantly): I shan't arrange anything with you.—Mr. Rollason: Very well. The case was struck out without costs.—Mr. Pritchett: We will send in another bill and claim in the alternative on two bills, and I think we shall be right.—Mr. Pritchett (instructed by Mr. Phillips) appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Rollason for the defendant.

THE NEW JUDGE.

The Queen has approved of the appointment of Mr. Richard Henn Collins, Q.C., of the Northern Circuit, as a judge of the Queen's Bench Division, in succession to Mr. Justice Stephen, who recently retired. Mr. Collins, who is the third son of Mr. Stephen Collins, Q.C., of Dublin, was born in 1842, and was for some years at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the highest honours in classics and moral science. He left Dublin before taking his degree, for Downing College, Cambridge, where he was bracketed fourth in classical tripos. He was elected a fellow of Downing in 1865, and was made an honorary fellow of that college on the expiration of his fellowship. He was called to the bar of the Middle Temple in November, 1867, was created a Q.C. in 1883, and was elected a bencher of his Inn in the following year. Both as a junior and a Queen's Counsel, Mr. Collins has been in the enjoyment of a large and lucrative practice for a long time past. A few years ago Mr. Collins ceased to attend circuit except with the inducement of a special fee. The last two noteworthy cases in which Mr. Collins appeared lately were the important licensing appeal of Sharp v. Wakefield, in the House of Lords, and the Clitheroe abduction case, in which he was leading counsel for Mr. Jackson in the Court of Appeal. Mr. Collins is well known as a sound and painstaking lawyer, and his elevation to the bench will be a popular one with both branches of the legal profession. He has been a member of the Bar Committee for some years past, and is joint-author of 'Smith's Leading Cases.' The learned gentleman was sworn on Saturday, April 11, before the Lord Chancellor in his lordship's private room at the House of Lords, and took his seat in Court on Tuesday, April 15.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE (No. 2) BILL.

1. Office of Public Trustee.—(1) There shall be established the office of public trustee. (2) The public trustee shall be a corporation sole under that name, with perpetual succession and an official seal, and may sue and be sued under the above name like any other corporation sole. (3) Subject to the provisions of this Act, and to the rules made thereunder, the public trustee may act either alone or jointly with any person or body of persons in any capacity to which he may be appointed in pursuance of this Act, and shall have the same powers, duties, and liabilities, and be entitled to the same rights and immunities, and be subject in like manner to the control and orders of the High Court, as a private trustee acting in the same capacity.

2. Appointment of Public Trustee to be Trustee, Executor, &c.—(1) The public trustee may be appointed to be trustee of any will, or marriage or other family settlement, or to perform any trust or duty belonging to a class which he is authorised by a general order under this Act to accept, and may be so appointed, whether the will or settlement, or the instrument creating the trust or duty, was made or came into operation before or after the passing of this Act, and either as an original or as a new trustee, in the same cases, and in the same manner, and by the same persons or Court, as if he were a private trustee, with this addition, that though the trustees originally appointed were two or more, the public trustee may be appointed sole trustee. (2) A general order for the purpose of this section may be made by the Lord Chancellor with the concurrence of the Treasury, but the draft of any order proposed so to be made shall be laid on the table of each House of Parliament not less than thirty days on which that House has sat before the order is made, and if the draft is disapproved of by a resolution of either House, the order shall not be made.

[3. Power as to granting probate.]

[4. Administration of small assets.]

5. Liability of Public Trustee and of Consolidated Fund.—(1) Where the trust property held by the public trustee is of such a nature as to involve, irrespectively of the terms of the trust, the payment of any rent, call, or debt, or the discharge of any other liability, the public trustee shall not be liable therefor, except so far as the trust property is available to meet the same. (2) The Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom shall be liable to make good any liability arising out of any fraud or negligence on the part of the public trustee, or his officers, and also to make good any liability arising out of any such other act or default of the public trustee, or his officers, as may be specified in rules under this Act, and all sums payable in pursuance of this section out of the Consolidated Fund shall be charged on and issued out of that fund or the growing produce thereof. (3) The draft of any rule made for the purposes of this section shall be laid before the House of Commons for not less than thirty days on which that House has sat, and if the draft be disapproved of by a resolution of that House, the rule shall not be made.

[6. Appointment of 'fit person' as public trustee with officers, &c.]

[7. Fees charged by public trustees to be such as fixed by Treasury and Lord Chancellor.]

[8. Holding and transfer of property.]

9. Appeal to the High Court.—(1) A person aggrieved by any act or omission of the public trustee in relation to any trust, may apply to the High Court, and the Court may make such order in the matter as the Court thinks just. (2) Subject to Rules of Court, an application under this section shall be made to a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court in chambers.

10. Refusal of Trust by Public Trustee.—(1) The public trustee may decline, either absolutely or except on prescribed conditions, to accept any trust. (2) The public trustee may, with the sanction of the Court, retire from a trust.

11. Restriction of Powers of Public Trustee.—If a testator or a settlor or other creator of any trust directs that any specified power or discretion shall be vested solely in the co-trustee, or shall not be vested in the public trustee, the public trustee shall not exercise such power or discretion, but shall, if need be, concur in all acts necessary to carry out the exercise of such power or discretion by the co-trustee, unless it appears to him that the matter in which he is requested to concur is a breach of trust, and the public trustee, whether he does or does not so concur, shall not be responsible, nor shall the Consolidated Fund be liable, for any such concurrence or non-concurrence on his part.

12. Employment of Solicitors and Banks.—(1) Where a testator, settlor, or other creator of any trustee directs or authorises the employment of any particular solicitor or bank, or where either the co-trustees of the public trustee or the persons appearing to the public trustee to be for the time being entitled to the income of the trust, or if they are infants, their guardians, require the employment of any particular solicitor or bank, that solicitor or bank shall be employed as the solicitor or bank to the trust, unless removed for good cause by the High Court upon the application of the public trustee or of any person appearing to the Court to be interested in the trust. (2) Where it appears to the public trustee that any solicitor or bank has been ordinarily employed in matters connected with any trust or with the family matters of persons concerned in the trust, he may, on the application or with assent of any of such persons as appear to him to be principally interested in the income of the trust for the time being, employ such solicitor or bank as the solicitor or bank to the trust. (3) Where a solicitor or bank is employed in pursuance of this section the Consolidated Fund shall not be liable to meet any liability arising from any default of such solicitor or bank, and the public trustee shall not be deemed to have notice of any matter merely by reason of such solicitor or bank having had notice thereof.

[13. Rules as to transfers, accounts, and branch offices, to be made by Lord Chancellor and Treasury.]

[14. Application of Act to Palatine Courts.]

[15. Mode of action of public trustee and Treasury.]

16. Definitions.—In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'trust' includes an executorship or administratorship, and any other capacity in which the public trustee acts in pursuance of this Act; and the expression 'trustee' shall be construed accordingly; and the expression 'trust property' shall include all property in the possession or under the control, wholly or partly, of the public trustee by virtue of any trust.

17. Short Title.—This Act may be cited as the Public Trustee Act, 1891.

THE HEREFORDSHIRE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

THE annual general meeting of the above society was held at the Law Institution, Hereford, on Friday, March 20, when there were present: Mr. F. Bodenham (president), Mr. A. Temple (vice-president), Messrs. W. M. Ackerman, H. C. Beddoe, W. Boycott, G. Davies, P. W. L. Earle, W. J. Humfrys, F. R. James, J. G. James, T. Llanwarne, M. J. G. Scobie, J. F. Symonds, E. L. Wallis, C. D. Andrews, H. V. Smith, F. S. Collins, G. H. Page, and J. R. Symonds (hon. sec.).

The minutes of the last general meeting were read, confirmed, and signed.

Justices' Clerks.

A letter, dated March 10, was received from the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, stating that the council fully concurred in the views expressed by this society as to these appointments being confined to solicitors, and it was resolved that a copy of the resolution of this society, passed November 10, in favour of legislation limiting such appointments to solicitors, should be sent to the Justices Clerks' Society.

Public Trustee Bill.

It was resolved, on the motion of Mr. J. Gwynne James, seconded by Mr. H. C. Beddoe, that, having regard to the position assumed by the Government as indicated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the deputation, it is not desirable to oppose the bill as a whole, but that it is essential that it shall be carefully considered and such clauses introduced as may be necessary to make it useful and workable, and particularly that provision should be made to prevent the compulsory principle being introduced.

The following is extracted from the report of the committee for the past year, which was received and adopted:—

'The Library.

'A valuable collection of Queen's Bench Reports (about 100 volumes) has been presented by the standing joint committee, from the Shire Hall Library, upon condition that the society's library shall be available for the use of the magistrates and county council, and for the judges and barristers at assizes, quarter sessions, and County Courts. The committee, in accepting the books, gladly acceded to these conditions.

'In addition to the standard Law Reports the committee have resolved to take in the "Times Law Reports" (with the addition of the six volumes already issued) and the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS. To complete the series of the latter the volumes between the years 1855 and 1885 are wanted. Any member having any of these volumes will confer a great benefit on the institution by presenting same.

'Conditions of Sale.

'The attention of the committee having been directed to the case of Re Willett & Argenti, 60 L. T. Rep. 735, which decided that the cost of the production of deeds in the possession of a mortgagee must be borne by a purchaser, by virtue of subsection 6 of section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, they have resolved to add a condition to the common forms providing that such costs shall not fall on the purchaser. They have also communicated with the Incorporated Law Society, United Kingdom, and have received a reply to the effect that the council agree with the committee as to the hardship of the present state of the law and would gladly avail themselves of any opportunity of getting the subject reconsidered in Parliament.

'Justices' Clerks.

'A special general meeting, called by requisition, was held on November 10, to consider the appointment by the Ross bench of magistrates of a clerk not a member of the profession.

'It appearing, however, that the gentleman appointed was duly qualified under the Justices' Clerks Act, 1877, the meeting passed a resolution directing the attention of the principal Law Society to the advisability of an alteration in the law to the effect that such appointment should be confined to solicitors alone. The committee feel that no personal objection could be raised to the gentleman appointed; in fact they are conscious of his fitness in many ways for the post he now fills.

'County Courts Act, 1888, s. 72.

'The committee have expressed approval of the resolution passed at the annual general meeting of the principal Law Society on July 11 in favour of the repeal of so much of this section as prohibits the solicitor of a suitor from retaining another solicitor to appear as advocate.

'Unauthorised Persons.

'The committee have had before them two cases of deeds being prepared and charged for by persons not solicitors, but in neither case could action be taken, as in both instances the six months—within which proceedings must be taken under section 60 of the Stamp Act, 1870—had expired. It is hoped that members will immediately report any such case coming under their notice.

'The Incorporated Law Society, U.K.

'The committee have been in communication with the principal society on various important subjects during the year, and can testify to the thorough and able manner in which the interests of the profession are watched by the council.

'The annual provincial meeting at Nottingham was attended by some members of this society, who greatly appreciated the hospitality and entertainment provided by the Nottingham Law Society.

'Land Transfer.

'The committee congratulate the society and profession at large upon the fact that no Land Transfer Bill has been introduced this session, a result which they feel to be mainly due to the successful opposition to the previous measures got up by the law societies throughout the country.

'Costs of Leases.

'In their report on April 23, 1888, the following resolution of the committee was given, and it is reprinted as inquiries have been made on the subject: "That this committee considers that, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, it is the universally recognised practice in this part of the country for the costs of the lessor's solicitor to be divided equally between lessor and lessee, and that the lessee pays his own solicitor in addition, if he employs one."'

LAW AND PROFESSIONAL NOTES.

By T. F. UTTLEY, Solicitor, Manchester, Author of 'Hints on Stephen's Commentaries,' 'Hints on Criminal Law,' &c.

DEPOSITIONS v. DYING DECLARATIONS.

AN interesting point was lately argued at Oldham when a man was charged before the magistrates with murdering his sweetheart. According to the text-books, depositions taken before a magistrate may be (a) given in evidence if the party making them is dead, ill, insane, or kept away by the prisoner; (b) given in contradiction of evidence if deponent is examined as a witness at the trial itself. Further, on a charge of homicide the dying declaration of the party slain with respect to the cause of his death, and if made under a sense of approaching dissolution, is admissible as evidence (although given without oath, without cross-examination, and in the absence of the party accused). A declaration made by the declarant as to the cause of his death, or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death, is deemed to be relevant only in trials for murder or manslaughter of the declarant, and only when the declarant is shown to the satisfaction of the judge to have been in actual danger of death, and to have given up all hope of recovery at the time when the declaration was made. Three things must combine: (1) There must be no hope whatever of recovery in the mind of the declarant; he must entertain a settled hopeless expectation of death. (2) It must be shown that the deceased at the time he made the statement was under the impression that death was impending, and not merely that he had received an injury from which death must ensue, but that, as the popular phrase goes, he then believed he was 'at the point of death.' (3) There must be an expectation of impending and almost immediate death from causes then operating. In the Oldham case, the deputy-magistrate's clerk proved taking the depositions of the deceased in the presence of a doctor. He added that the deceased took hold of his (witness's) throat and drew her other hand across it to demonstrate the prisoner's action to her. Prisoner asked her whether the quarrel was about marriage and not about a youth. She was exhausted, and witness told him that the question was not material. Prisoner said, 'It's all right except that.' On cross-examination by the prisoner's advocate he stated: 'She said nothing about her recovery, and nothing was said to her about her recovery. She did not say whether she expected to recover. When the prisoner asked his question she was too exhausted to answer. Prisoner's advocate thereupon objected to the depositions, and said they were inadmissible, inasmuch as no evidence had been given that at the time the depositions were taken the deceased knew she was in a dangerous condition and not likely to recover. On the contrary, the doctor told her to keep her spirits up, leading her to believe that she had a good chance of recovery. He submitted that that could not be admitted as a dying declaration; it was a deposition. The chief constable was prepared to take a dying declaration; but the deceased was not in a fit state to be told of her condition. Prisoner's advocate, however, contended she did not know she was in this extreme condition, and that being so, argued, on the point of law, there were many cases showing that these depositions were not admissible. As the prisoner was committed to the assizes, it will be interesting to know how this point, if it crops up, will be settled.

RIOT OR UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY?

During the trial of a trades-union official at Cardiff, for riot and intimidation, the prisoner's counsel took objection to the prosecuting counsel detaling what was said by those in the crowd. If he was proceeding upon a case of riot he was entitled to call evidence as to what was said by the crowd, but if he was proceeding upon an indictment for unlawful assembly what was said by other persons was not evidence. This was undoubtedly an indictment for riot. He was very much surprised, when he saw the indictment, to find that it was one not for unlawful assembly, but for riot, and as the defendant was not committed for riot, he (the learned counsel) might as well take his objection here as at any other time. After some further argument on this point, as to whether the indictment was one of riot or of unlawful assembling, and hearing further evidence, the recorder decided that the charge must be one of unlawful assembly, and a verdict of 'Guilty' being returned, the recorder, in passing sentence, said that it was fortunate for the defendant that he had not been found guilty of riot, and that he had only been convicted of unlawful assembly. The jury had found that he went to a large number of places and there terrorised the people for the purpose of inducing them by threats not to work. Such a state of things could not be permitted. He would teach the defendant, and others in a similar position, that during strikes and labour disputes they could not be allowed to carry out their objects, whether legitimate or otherwise, by force and against the law. The sentence was imprisonment for six weeks, without hard labour. The prisoner, for some reason, wanted hard labour, but, of course, did not get it, as an unlawful assembly is punishable only with fine and imprisonment without hard labour; but, had the charge been a riot, then fine and imprisonment would have followed, with perhaps hard labour in addition. In Noy's 'Maxims' there is a quaintly put rule that 'In one thing, all things following shall be included, in granting, demanding, or prohibiting,' and, therefore, par exemple, in case of riots, assemblies, &c., if several persons meet to do an unlawful act, and separate without doing it, they are to be punished. The moral of the rioting incident is, according to a labour paper, that neither workmen nor their representatives should act towards others in a manner which would be resented if done to themselves.

SCOTCH DIVORCE LAW.

A correspondent in a Manchester newspaper, over the initials 'S. S. C.,' has very kindly given the general public some practical hints as to the Scotch method of getting a divorce. The Pall Mall Gazette had previously drawn attention to the subject, but 'S. S. C.'s' letter supplements the information, and his clear and concise description of the modus operandi is decidedly good. It is well known that a husband cannot get a divorce à mensâ et thoro on the ground of desertion alone in England. In Scotland it is different. The case referred to by the Pall Mall Gazette's correspohdent is the leading case (Carswell v. Carswell) upon the point, and was decided in the House of Lords. The great point decided there was that the domicile of the husband was the domicile of the wife. Now the modus operandi for a man to get a divorce from his wife on the ground of desertion is as follows: He must go to Scotland—Glasgow is the best place if a trader; if retired, Edinburgh. He must take a house, paying rent and taxes for at least nine months. If a trader, he must take an office also; get his name put up, get it in the directory and on the register. It is not absolutely necessary he should remain in Scotland the whole nine months. He can visit other places.

He must not say he came for his health, but to live there. The amount of rent and taxes to be paid does not matter. The extract from your register and your landlord or rent-notes and taxes are proof of the domicile. Having got these, you write to the wife asking her to come and live with you, as you are residing in Scotland and intend to do so, and offering to send her money to come. She refuses; then, after nine months, you petition the Court for a divorce on the ground of desertion. This is, of course, on the supposition that she has deserted for four years or upwards. She must have deserted you four years before you take up your residence in Scotland. Now as to the case of Carswell v. Carswell and the remarks of the judge who tried it, which were as follows: 'If I could think the pursuer was making a mere pretence in having adopted Scotland as his home, that he had come here merely as a visitor in order to invoke the Scotch law against his wife, and that, having achieved that end, he intended to return to the country which, ex hypothesi, had never ceased to be his home, I should not entertain his action for a moment.' Yet immediately decree is pronounced the pursuers leave Scotland in nine cases out of ten. They always do in the cases I have had under notice. The advantage of the Scotch divorce is: (1) Immediately the decree is pronounced it is absolute. You can be married again immediately the decree is drawn up, which is the next day. (2) Desertion is a ground for divorce à mensâ et thoro. (3) It is much cheaper than an English decree. (4) It is easy of proof. The disadvantages are: (1) If the wife in reply to the husband's letter wrote saying she would come and live with him then his case is gone—that is, if she does come. (2) The wife can appear on the trial and defend the case without ever giving any notice of her intention to defend. You have thus to prepare for every point. The above summary of divorce in Scotland is law, and a divorce thus obtained holds good throughout the world.

MR. SALA AND THE CLITHEROE CASE.

The dreary discussion as to the mutual relations of husband and wife arising from the curious decision of the Court of Appeal in the Jackson Case still drags its slow length along, and seems in one of its aspects to have drifted into an anecdotical history of wife-beating in England, with incidental reference to the thrashing of daughters and servants. 'An Irish Barrister,' writing to a daily contemporary, quotes an old case of 'a clergyman who corrected his housemaid in the manner of a schoolboy, and although he wrote a pamphlet in defence of his action the decision was adverse.' So far as I can recollect no decision was ever arrived at in this very curious case. The clergyman in question was a shining light of the Presbyterian ministry named Zachary Croften, and the housemaid was one Mary Cadman. His chief defence to the charge was that his mother in chastising a servant 'with a wand' had accidentally poked the poor girl's eye out, and that he had resolved not to incur any such risk. The case occurred during the Commonwealth or the early days of the Restoration, and gave rise to a furious controversy between Anglicans and Presbyterians. Some Cavalier scribe absolutely wrote a comedy on the scandal, called 'The Presbyterian Lash; or, Nocktroff's Maid Whipt.' Nocktroff being meant for the Rev. Croften, against whom an action for battery was brought by the girl's parents. By some extraordinary means the case got into Chancery, and I have been unable to discover that it ever came out again.' Thus writes Mr. George Augustus Sala in the Manchester Evening News, and then proceeds to find some hints to ladies on the matter. Ye married ladies of England, bless you all! Here is an echo of the past which is worth copying into your commonplace books if you take the naturally feminine view of the 'Clitheroe abduction case.' I find it in Sir George Trevelyan's 'Early History of Charles James Fox,' and it relates to that typically bad husband, Jack Wilkes. 'In despair he turned once more upon the wife whom he had robbed and sued out a writ of habeas corpus to terrify her, by the threat of exerting his conjugal rights, into a surrender of the pittance which was all that his rapacity had left her. But the Court of King's Bench, having heard the story, extended its protection to the outraged woman, and forbade Wilkes to molest her at his peril in a decree whose legal phraseology only slightly veils the indignation which had been roused in Lord Mansfield by the heartlessness and ingratitude of the husband.'

WHAT A LICENSE IS.

The chairman of the Salford Hundred Quarter Sessions (Mr. W. H. Higgins, Q.C.), after congratulating the grand jury on the lightness of their labours, referred to the case of Sharp v. Wakefield. He pointed out that the argument in it rested on the principle of whether the magistrates in granting a license had the right to exercise their discretion as to the requirements of the neighbourhood in which the house was placed, as beyond the character of the house itself, the chairman said that it had now been laid down as the law of this country that magistrates sitting in petty session had the right to use such a discretion. It was a mistake to suppose that there was such a thing as a 'renewal' of a license; indeed the word 'renewal' seemed to have crept only into one Act of Parliament in connection with licensing. The fact was that a license was a bit of a paper which licensed its holder to sell between a certain day named on it and another certain day also named. When the latter day was reached, the license ceased to be a license, and became merely a useless piece of paper, so that there would be no question of renewal. If the person to whom it had been granted wanted a new license, he must ask the magistrates for an entirely new license and not for a renewal. It was under those circumstances that the House of Lords had laid it down that in granting a new license the magistrates could use their discretion. So far as he was aware, the using of that discretion had always been the rule with regard to that Court, and one that had invariably been followed. But in coming to a decision on the grant of a license it was also clear that the magistrates' discretion must be fully and properly exercised, and it was undoubted that it was the duty of the quarter sessions, in reviewing any decision of the magistrates with regard to licenses, to see whether the discretion had been properly exercised. That was also a principle which had been acted on there, and, therefore, so far as the Court was concerned, it had hitherto acted, as it would also continue to act, on the conditions of the law as now laid down by the highest Court in the land.

THE COSTS OF A PROSECUTION.

When well-to-do prisoners come up for sentence for petty offences they are too often let off by payment of a fine or imprisonment, and no mention is made of payment of costs. The recorder of the C. Easter Quarter Sessions has, however, set a good example in this respect, and informed a prisoner, much to his surprise, that he will be expected to pay the costs of his prosecution. It appeared that an agent had pleaded guilty to stealing articles from hotels and shops, and also set up a plea of kleptomania. Considering the expense the man had already entailed on the ratepayers, the recorder adopted an unusual course, for he sentenced the man for the first theft to three months' imprisonment, and on the second charge he was to be kept in prison until the costs of the present prosecution were paid.

THE INDIAN JURIST.

THE Indian Jurist, published at Madras, is as well edited a law journal as can be found anywhere. It is a shining illustration of the capacity of our British cousins to adapt themselves to circumstances, and, like the Romans of old, to erect a civilisation in strange lands and out of the most uncouth material. There, away out in British India, they have built up a body of law superior in many respects, because untrammelled by ancient precedents, to that enjoyed by the Englishman on his native shore. They have their own legal literature and their own law reports, which latter, by the way, would be quite a curiosity to many of our readers. Think of having to report a case under the title of Sadashir Rayaji v. Maruti Vithal, or Easwara Doss v. Pungavanachari, or Faki Abdulla and another v. Babaji Gungaji, and having to state as a part of the syllabus that the case of Rao Karan Singh v. Raja Bakar Ali Khan and Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi are explained. The case we have before us as we write is one involving a question under the Hindu Statute of Limitations, and we are informed that it is an appeal from an order of remand made by Rao Bahadur G. A. Mankur, 'First-class subordinate Judge of Thana, A. P.' That the appellant's counsel was Shantaram Narayan, who cited the case of Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, and that Manekshah Jehangershah argued for the respondent, and cited to the Court the case of Rao Karan Singh v. Raja Bakar Ali Khan, whereupon Telang, J., delivered the decision of the Court, in which he expresses the opinion that the case of Rao Karan Singh v. Raja Bakar Ali Khan, relied upon by the learned counsel, Shantaram Narayan, should be read in connection with Gopaul Chunder v. Nilmoney Mitter and Moro Desai v. Ramachandra Desai, as well as that of Nawab Mahomed Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh. Thank heaven, we live in a land where plain Doe v. Roe and Smith v. Jones is enough to satisfy the Court. We are not yearning to practise law in Madras, even though so excellent a law journal as the Indian Jurist be published there.—Washington Law Reporter.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.

APRIL 6.—Mr. Moyle in the chair. Mr. Voules moved: 'That the decision of Mr. Justice Day in De Souza v. Cobden was wrong.' Mr. Strickland opposed. The motion was, after discussion, put and lost.

April 13.—Mr. De Montmorency moved: 'That in the opinion of this house a reform of the poor laws and a system of State pensions will go far to solve the social problem.' Mr. Sinclair Cox opposed. Mr. Alfred Thomas, M.P., gave an interesting address dealing with the Poor Law System, and referring to the bill which had been introduced into the House to amend the poor laws. The other speakers were Messrs. Maitland, F. B. Moyle, H. W. Marcus, C. Herbert Smith, B. Hawkins, and J. L. V. S. Williams. The motion was put and lost.

A TRAGEDY AVERTED.—An amusing incident occurred in the Lord Mayor's Court on April 15, where the recorder was sitting trying cases. A jury had heard a case, and, being unable to agree, retired to deliberate. After a while a note from the jury was handed to the recorder, who, after perusing it, said: 'I must prevent a tragedy; send for the jury.' Upon returning into Court the jury were discharged without giving a verdict, as they were still unable to agree. It was afterwards stated that the note to the judge ran: 'Ten of us are agreed; but the other two decline to agree while they have breath in their bodies.'

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

COSTS.

AN appeal goes from the County Court to the Court of Appeal, whose decision is for the original defendants, with costs. The costs are taxed, and the solicitor to the successful defendants, in his bill of costs against his clients as between 'solicitor and client,' seeks to obtain what has been taxed off from his 'party and party' costs, saying that the amounts taxed off from the 'party and party' costs constitute 'solicitor and client' costs. Is this statement correct? and, if not, what would be the best course to pursue, as the solicitor received the money to carry on his case and now gives his client credit for same?

JUSTITIA.

OBITUARY.

MR. J. MORGAN HOWARD, Q.C., judge of the Cornish County Court Circuit and Recorder of Guildford, died at Torquay, aged fifty-five. Deceased was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1858, became a Q.C. in 1874, and travelled on the South-Eastern Circuit. He was Chief Commissioner of the Norwich Royal Commission in 1875, and among other societies to which he belonged he was one of the council of the British Archæological Association. In 1875 he was appointed Recorder of Guildford. He three times unsuccessfully contested Lambeth in the Conservative interest, but was returned for the Dulwich Division in 1886 unopposed. Mr. Howard resigned his seat on his appointment as County Court judge for Cornwall in succession to the late Judge Beer. Since his appointment he had been in very bad health, and was frequently obliged to entrust his duties to a deputy.

MR. ALFRED CARRINGTON, solicitor, who died on the 17th ult. at Chester, was born at Lincoln in 1845. He was educated at a college near Sheffield, and was articled to Messrs. Newall & Priestley, of Barton-on-Humber. He was admitted in Michaelmas, 1866, and on coming to Chester he acted for eight or nine years as assistant at the Friars with the preceding and present firm of Messrs. Birch, Cullimore & Douglas, and afterwards joined the firm of Messrs. Barker & Hignett on the death of the old members in 1878. The business was then carried on by Mr. Horace Hignett and Mr. Carrington until the death of the former, and consequently by Mr. Carrington himself, under the name of Barker, Hignett & Carrington, up to 1885. Mr. H. Y. Barker, a grandson of the late Mr. Richard Barker, the senior member of the old firm, was then taken into partnership, and the style of the firm was changed to Carrington & Barker, and has been carried on as such down to the present time. He was elected president of the Chester and North Wales Incorporated Law Society in 1885-86, and when the Incorporated Law Society of England met at Liverpool, and visited Chester in that year, he entertained the visitors at the Town Hall. He took a great interest in the parent society, and induced many country members of the profession to join it. He was clerk to the Wirral turnpike trust down to its dissolution; also clerk to the Hawarden embankment trustees. Mr. Carrington was unmarried.

LINCOLN'S INN.—Mr. Henry Burton Buckley, Q.C., has been elected a bencher of the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM APRIL 20 TO APRIL 25.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	April 20	April 21	April 22	April 23	April 24	April 25
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Altrincham	Northwich	Warrington	Birkenhead	—
8	Judge Heywood	—	Manchester	Manchester	Salford	Salford	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Barnard Castle	Stockton-on-Tees	Darlington	Richmond	Guisborough	Northallerton
19	Judge Barber	—	Ashbourne	Wirksworth	Bakewell	New Mills	—
22	Judge Harington	—	—	—	—	Bromyard	—
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Woolwich	Lambeth	Greenwich	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Weston-supr-Mare	Wells	Axbridge	—	—	—
55	Judge Macbonochie	Poole	Christchurch	Bournemouth	Wimborne	—	—
58	Judge Edge	Churston	Okehampton	—	—	—	—

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., FRY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 9.

Bonnard v. Perryman (appeal of defendant C. W. Perryman from order of North, J., dated March 3, restraining until trial publication and sale of Financial Observer for February 7).—Part heard.

FRIDAY, APRIL 10.

Bonnard v. Perryman.—Cur. adv. vult.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

In re H. E. Wallis, ex parte Board of Trade (appeal of Board of Trade and the trustee from order of Mr. Registrar Brougham, dated February 2, refusing discharge).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11.

Condy v. Blaiberg (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of nonsuit of Charles, J., dated November 26, at trial with common jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

MONDAY, APRIL 13.

A. Levasseur and another (Liquidators of La Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux) v. Mason & Barry (Lim.) (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Day, J., dated November 27, at trial of issue without a jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS and FRY, L.J.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14.

Regina v. Justices of Lancaster (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of J. O'Brien from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 29, affirming refusal of licensing justices to renew license).—Regina v. Justices of Lancaster (Q. B. Crown Side) (appeal of J. O'Brien from order of Pollock, B., and Charles, J., dated January 29, discharging nisi for mandamus to licensing justices to rehear appeal).—Allowed.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15.

A. Levasseur and another (Liquidators of La Société Industrielle et Commerciale des Métaux) v. Mason and Barry (Lim.).—Dismissed.

De Souza v. Cobden (appeal of defendant from judgment of Day, J., dated November 24, at trial without jury in Middlesex).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 9.

No sitting.

FRIDAY, APRIL 10.

Tucker v. Kaye and others (appeal of plaintiff from judgment of Romer, J., dated January 29).—Part heard.

SATURDAY, APRIL 11.

Tucker v. Kaye and others.—Dismissed.

Redman v. Rymer (appeal of defendants W. Rymer and T. Rymer from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated February 15, 1889 — perfected February 25, 1889).—Allowed.

MONDAY, APRIL 13.

Angus v. Clifford (appeal of defendants from judgment of Romer, J., dated December 2, 1890).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, APRIL 14.

Angus v. Clifford.—Cur. adv. vult.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15.

Catherine O'Shea, Wife of W. O'Shea v. C. P. Wood and another (appeal of defendants from orders of Jeune, J., dated respectively March 3 and 17, refusing production of documents scheduled to affidavit).—Allowed in part.

Mary D. Wood (petitioner) v. Percy A. N. St. L. Wood (respondent) (appeal of petitioner from order of Jeune, J., dated March 24, varying registrar's report as to permanent maintenance).—Cur. adv. vult.

Cutbill and others v. Shropshire Railway Company and others (appeal of plaintiffs from order of Stirling, J., dated March 17, refusing to restrain prosecution of bills in Parliament).—Abandoned.

In re H. Woolcombe, deceased; Woolcombe v. Woolcombe (construction) (appeal of plaintiff from order of Chitty, J., dated December 11, 1890).—Part heard.

REGISTRATION OF TEACHERS.—Giving evidence, on April 14, before the committee of the House of Commons, of which Sir W. Hart Dyke is chairman, the Rev. G. C. Bell, head-master of Marlborough College, supported Sir Richard Temple's bill for the registration and organisation of teachers, though he desired to see it amended in some details. He would like to see registration made compulsory, though not penal; that was to say, he did not desire that teachers who neglected to register should be precluded from recovering fees, believing, as he did, that the desirability of being registered would soon make itself apparent to the teachers in other ways. In his opinion Scotland and Ireland should, at first, at any rate, be excluded from the operation of the Act.

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING. — The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, April 14; Mr. Crawford in the chair. The subject for discussion ('That the case of Barrow v. Isaacs, L. R. (1891) 1 Q. B. Div. 417, was wrongly decided') was opened by Mr. Douglas, followed by Mr. Herbert Walton.—Mr. Lathbury opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke: In the affirmative, Messrs. Watson, Pattinson, and Watkins; in the negative, Messrs. Arnold, Greene, Thirlby and Stevens.—Mr. Douglas replied.—The chairman, having summed up, put the motion to the meeting, when it was lost by a majority of three.—The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society on Tuesday, April 21, is: 'That our fiscal policy ought to be changed, so as to give greater advantages to our colonies than to other countries.'

CAUSE LIST.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Easter Sittings, 1891.

LONDON.

COMMON JURY ACTIONS.

Actions beyond No. 2468 in this List will not be taken before Monday, April 27.

The following numbers will be in the List for Trial on Tuesday, April 21: Nos. 1309 to 1868, both inclusive.

1309 Mullens and another v. Hearn
1333 Richardson v. Advertising and Addressing Co. (Lim.)
1615 Darvall v. Heywood
1741 Lovell v. Tomlin
1817 King v. Croft
1818 Russell v. Sulis
1828 International Agency, &c. Trust Co. (Lim.) v. Ross
1832 Hemings v. Fortescue
1863 Simpson v. Taunton
1868 Waites and Wife v. North London Steam Tram Co.
1889 Strousberg v. Lee
1899 Hood v. Brown & Co.
1911 City of London Brewery Co. v. Willshear
1913 Von Limburg v. Ketchaw Pahang Corporation (Lim.)
1924 Schott v. Barr, Moering & Co.
1973 Hartmont v. Eisler
1975 Courtenay v. McLorns
1977 Ramsey v. Benbow
2040 Dawson v. Kempf
2092 Transvaal Oil Engine. Co. (Lim.) v. Scott & Co.
2103 Hambleton v. Rogers and another
2105 Simmons v. Musket Iron Works
2126 Smith v. Goddard & Sons
2161 Davis and another v. Haimsohn
2229 Langford v. Groom
2231 Wadeson v. Ghirelli
2252 Oheston v. Witt
2273 Pickford & Co. v. Leitrim and others
2310 Gardner v. Abohbot
2311 Same v. Same
2365 Mayor, &c. of London v. Bell
2369 Leader v. Tod Heatly
2375 Prosser v. Evans
2398 Simpson v. Dentriez
2406 Bartlett v. Oram
2414 Lewis v. Lewis
2422 Newell v. Donald Currie & Co.
2437 Smith and another v. Birch
2439 Griffiths v. Wilson
2461 Darley v. Palmer
2468 Beale v. Repton
2469 Bridcut v. Duncan & Sons
2478 Camuset v. Pol & Co. and another
2490 Pound v. Davis and another
2503 Hough v. White
2514 Francis v. Downing & Sons
2532 Pamphilion v. Bussey
2537 Bassett v. Lee Smith
2542 Hill v. Morris
2551 Subit & Son v. Sanitary and Domestic Engineering Co.
2556 Smith v. Fire Insurance Association (Lim.)
2586 Knudsen, Bros. & Co. v. Brown
2605 Sapsworth v. Hilbuth

LEGAL VACANCIES. — By the death of Mr. Morgan Howard, Q.C., the County Court judgeship of Cornwall and the recordership of Guildford both become vacant. The first is in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and the other is in the hands of the Home Secretary.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, April 20.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Tuesday, April 21.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Wednesday, April 22.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Thursday, April 23.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

Friday, April 24.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Pugh.

Saturday, April 25.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Leach. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Beal.

THE SPRING ASSIZES.—The ensuing spring assizes will necessitate the absence of three judges only from town during the present sittings, as assizes will be held at Manchester and Liverpool on the Northern and at Leeds on the North-Eastern Circuits alone. At Manchester and Liverpool both civil and criminal business will be taken, but at Leeds prisoners only will be tried. Mr. Justice Grantham and Mr. Justice Wright will go to Manchester and Liverpool, and Mr. Justice Day will attend at Leeds. The commission-days have been fixed as follows: Manchester, Saturday, April 25; Liverpool, Saturday, May 2; Leeds, Saturday, May 2.

INNER TEMPLE.—His Honour Judge Bristowe (the treasurer of the Inner Temple) and the masters of the bench entertained at dinner on April 15, being the Grand Day of Easter Term, the following guests: Lord Coleridge (treasurer of the Middle Temple), Lord Hannen, Colonel the Hon. Charles Eliot (equerry to Prince Christian), Sir John Mowbray, Lord Justice Fry, Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth, Mr. Justice Day, General Sir P. Radcliffe, Colonel Sir N. Kingscote, Sir Joseph Hooker, Sir A. Woods, Dr. Butler (master of Trinity College, Cambridge), Mr. Lidderdale (governor of the Bank of England), Professor Max Müller, Mr. Christie (the Astronomer-Royal), Mr. Napier Higgins (treasurer of Lincoln's Inn), Mr. Beetham (treasurer of Gray's Inn), the Rev. Canon Ainger (reader at the Temple Church), and Mr. H. W. Lawrence (the sub-treasurer). The benchers present were his Royal Highness Prince Christian, K.G., Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., Mr. Bulwer, Q.C., Mr. Mackeson, Q.C., Sir James Stephen, Sir Patrick Colquhoun, Q.C., Mr. Robinson, Q.C., Judge Holl, Mr. Justice Charles, Mr. Buszard, Q.C., Mr. Bompas, Q.C., Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C., Mr. Potter, Q.C., Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, Mr. Addison, Q.C., Mr. Jelf, Q.C., Mr. Crossley, Q.C., Mr. Graham, Mr. Chandos Leigh, Q.C., Mr. Myburgh, Q.C., Mr. Horace Smith, Mr. Cooper Willis, Q.C., Mr. Colt, Q.C., Mr. Bosanquet, Q.C., and Mr. Channell, Q.C.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

MR. PHILIP JOHN RUTLAND, of 69 Chancery Lane, W.C., and High Wycombe, has been appointed Deputy in London for J. R. Phillips, Esq., the high sheriff for the town and county of Haverfordwest. Mr. Rutland was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Frank Winterton (of the firm of Freer, Blunt, Rowlatt & Winterton), of Leicester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Winterton was admitted in 1883.

Mr. John Charles Hudson (of the firm of Charles Heywood, Son & Hudson), of Manchester, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hudson was admitted in 1885.

Mr. Robert Jowett Whitwell, of Kendal, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Whitwell was admitted in 1882.

LINCOLN'S INN.—The Treasurer of Lincoln's Inn (Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C.) entertained at dinner, on April 14, being the Grand Day in Easter Term, the United States Minister, Earl Fortescue, Lord Cottesloe, Lord Alcester, Lord Justice Lindley, the Right Hon. John Blair Balfour, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Justice North, Sir Charles Pearson, M.P. (Solicitor-General for Scotland), Mr. Edward Maunde Thompson (principal librarian British Museum), Mr. Walter Vaughan Morgan (treasurer of Christ's Hospital), Mr. J. C. Robertson, and Mr. John Hollams. The benchers present on the occasion were Mr. Osborne Morgan, Q.C., M.P., Lord Justice Fry, Mr. Justice Mathew, Mr. Justice Chitty, Sir Robert Stuart, Q.C., Mr. Pember, Q.C., Mr. Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Sir Horace Davey, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Justice Kekewich, Mr. Horton Smith, Q.C., Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., M.P. (Attorney-General), Mr. Gibbs, Q.C., C.B., Lord Macnaghten, Mr. Forbes, Q.C., Mr. W. W. Karslake, Q.C., Mr. Rigby, Q.C., Mr. Everitt, Q.C., Mr. Cecil Henry Russell, Mr. Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Giffard, Q.C., Mr. Justice Stirling, Mr. Ingle Joyce, Mr. Lockwood, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Douglas Walker, Q.C., Mr. Bush, Q.C., Mr. Cutler, Q.C., Mr. Leonard Courtney, M.P., Lord Morris, and Mr. H. Burton Buckley, Q.C., with the Rev. Dr. Wace (preacher).

THE RULE OF THE ROAD AT SEA.—A Parliamentary paper is just published containing the report of the committee appointed by the President of the Board of Trade in July last year to consider the alterations in the regulations for preventing collisions at sea recommended at the Washington International Maritime Conference. The members of the committee were Sir H. G. Calcraft, Sir Charles Hall, Q.C., M.P., Rear-Admiral N. Bowden-Smith, Rear-Admiral Sir R. H. M. Molyneux, Sir Digby Murray, Rear-Admiral Sir G. S. Nares, Mr. T. Sutherland, M.P., Mr. W. Watson, Captain C. G. Weller, and Captain W. J. L. Wharton, R.N. Mr. Garnham Roper acted as secretary. The report suggests alterations in four articles. In Article 7 a paragraph has been added dealing with the case of rowing-boats. In Article 15 a vessel not under command is added to those which shall give sound signals. Article 21 provided that where one of two vessels was to keep out of the way the other should keep her course and speed; to this the report adds, 'unless, in consequence of thick weather or other causes, she finds herself so close that collision cannot be avoided by the action of the giving-way vessel alone, when she also shall take such action as will best aid to avert collision.' Article 31 deals with distress signals, and the report suggests that, besides a gun, some other explosive signal may be used. Some other trifling alterations are suggested. The report was submitted by the Board of Trade to the Admiralty, who concurred in the alterations, which will be submitted to the various foreign Governments.

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—The City Press announces that the rector of Allhallows, London Wall, has just made a most interesting discovery. At the bottom of an old chest in the vestry he has found a register of churchwardens' accounts, dating back to the reign of Henry VI. He intends forwarding the register to the British Museum for it to be reported upon by the experts there. If the register turns out to be genuine—and at present there is no suspicion that it is not—the discovery will undoubtedly prove a valuable as well as a most interesting one.

LAW SITTINGS IN THE CITY.—A short time ago the Lord Chancellor wrote to the City Corporation offering to send down two Queen's Bench judges to hold sittings in the City for two or three weeks in each term, when the actions in which City merchants were concerned could be tried. The Corporation gladly accepted the offer, and since then preparations have been made for providing suitable accommodation. The sittings had been appointed and the jury about to be summoned, when it was pointed out that without an Act of Parliament the object in view could not be carried out. Consequently some time will have to elapse before the judges will be able to sit in the City, but in order that no unnecessary delay should ensue the Corporation are about to promote a bill in Parliament giving the necessary jurisdiction.

BIRTHS.

On April 11, at Noël Glen, Bournemouth, the wife of Guy Heaton, of Bournemouth, Solicitor, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

On April 7, at St. John's Church, Mansfield, Notts, Edmund Sharp, late Crown Solicitor, Hong Kong, and of Upper Sydenham, to Lizzie Moffat, daughter of Thomas Godfrey, of Mansfield, Surgeon.

On April 8, at Lyndhurst, Kelvinside, Glasgow, George Monro Miller, of Oliva, Putney Heath, London, Solicitor, to Jessie Miller, second daughter of George Miller, esq.

On April 8, at the Evangelical Free Church, Felixstowe, Matthew Whiting, of 190 Lavender Hill, Wandsworth, to Annie Sinclair Birkett, daughter of the late Benjamin Birkett, Solicitor, of Ipswich and Felixstowe.

On April 8, at Christ Church, Yokohama, Japan, Edward Charles Hannen, second son of Benjamin Hannen, of 4 Pembridge Place, London, and Ouseleys, Wargrave-on-Thames, to Mary Fanny, youngest daughter of Nicholas John Hannen, Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Shanghai.

On April 9, at the Parish Church, Hawkhurst, Kent, John Callaway, of Cranbrook, Kent, Solicitor, to Mabel Lucy, daughter of William Cotterill, Esq., of Tongswood, Hawkhurst.

On April 14, at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Woodlands, Isleworth, Frederic Brooke, fourth surviving son of Zachary Brooke, late of Lincoln's Inn Fields, Solicitor, to Emma, youngest daughter of the late Rev. John Medows Theobald, formerly of Henley Hall, Suffolk.

DEATHS.

On Jan. 11, at Avoca, Victoria, N.S.W., Leonard Worsley, Barrister-at-Law, third son of the late Charles Cornwall Seymour Worsley, of Newport, I.W., and nephew of the late General Sir Henry Worsley, K.C.B.

In the massacre at Manipur, Frank St. Clair Grimwood, I.C.S., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, Deputy Commissioner Assam, and the Resident at Manipur, second son of Jeffrey Grimwood Grimwood, of 29 Ennismore Gardens, S.W., aged 37.

On April 6, at St. Peter's Lodge, Bedford, Caroline Marion, widow of Thomas Wesley Turnley, late of Bedford, Solicitor, and daughter of the Rev. Thomas Hornsby, formerly Vicar of Ravensthorpe, in her 85th year.

On April 8, at Westholme, Streatham Common, S.W., George Ernest Jeffery, LL.B., Barrister-at-Law, eldest son of George A. Jeffery, M.D., of Eastbourne and Carter's Corner, Hailsham, Sussex, aged 38.

On April 10, at Chelston Dene, Torquay, J. Morgan Howard, Judge of the County Courts of Cornwall, Recorder of Guildford, and sometime M.P. for Dulwich.

On April 10, of fever, at Zanzibar, shortly after his arrival, E. D. Vesey, Barrister-at-Law, aged 29, the beloved son of Edward Vesey, of the Paymaster-General's Office, Whitehall.

	Per Annum. £	s.	d.
The Law Journal Reports and Statutes	3	4	0
The Law Journal Newspaper, Notes of Cases, &c.:—
If taken without the Law Journal Reports, 6d. a Number, or post free	1	6	0
If taken with the Law Journal Reports	1	0	0

Supplied upon application to The Publisher, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0	4	0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0	0	6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3	3	0
A Page	6	0	0

Public Companies' Announcements, 8s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
Advertisements Received up to Noon on Thursdays.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

In Bonnard v. Perryman the Court of Appeal, in a Court of six judges strong, has held that the High Court has jurisdiction, under subsection 8 of section 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, to grant an injunction to restrain the publication of a libel at or before the trial of an action. The particular appeal, which was from an interlocutory injunction granted by Mr. Justice North, was allowed, dissentiente Lord Justice Kay, but the whole Court was unanimous in the opinion that the jurisdiction to grant the injunction existed. This jurisdiction, it was explained by the Court, has existed since the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, and although not in fact exercised till 1878—i.e. after the Judicature Act—was not, as has been thought by many, first called into existence by that Act. The unanswerable reasons for the judgment of the Court in Bonnard v. Perryman will be found given, with exhaustive fulness, in the judgment of Lord Justice Cotton in The Liverpool Household Stores Association v. Smith, 57 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 85; L. R. 37 Chanc. Div. 170, from which Bonnard v. Perryman was practically, though, of course, not technically, an appeal. Whether it is wise for the Court of Appeal to expend its full strength in reviewing the decisions of either of its divisions may perhaps be doubted. Be the numerical strength of the Court what it may, there is, of course, an appeal to the House of Lords in all cases—except habeas corpus.

Mr. Vaughan's order for the destruction of the Rabelais pictures, which was made under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83 (Lord Campbell's Act), has now been reversed on appeal to quarter sessions under section 4 of the Act, but on condition that the pictures, which are the property of French owners, be forthwith transmitted to France, and no longer exhibited in this country. There is, of course, no express power under the Act to impose any such condition, nor are we aware of any means of enforcing it if it should not be complied with. But complied with, no doubt, it will be, and both the reversal of Mr. Vaughan's order and the requirement of the condition with which that reversal has been accompanied appear to us to be eminently sensible and just. A statement of the law of the subject, with suggestions of the practical difficulties which might have arisen in enforcing it in the case of the Rabelais pictures, will be found in the Law Journal for November 22, 1890.

Both the members of Parliament for the arrest of whom warrants had been issued are stated to be in bad health. One of them, with commendable courage, has returned to England, at the risk, so it has been said, of his life, for the purpose of meeting the charge against him. In reference to the other, the precedent set in Sadleir's Case will, no doubt, be followed, and not only will some length of time be allowed to elapse, but strict proof will be required that he is flying from justice before his expulsion can be determined upon.

All interested in law reform should peruse the exhaustive and careful article on 'The Judicial System,' which appears in the current number of the Edinburgh Review. The writer advocates the trial of commercial cases in the city of London—for the resumption of which the Government have recently introduced a bill—the establishment of provincial centres, such as Liverpool, Manchester, and Birmingham, 'where there should be two or three sittings every year, always beginning on the same day, and having a maximum length allotted to them; the discontinuance of certain towns near London, 'such as Aylesbury, Hertford, and Reading,' as assize towns; the abolition of the system under which a judge sits in chambers to hear appeals on points of practice; and an increase of the judicial and official strength of the Chancery Division. 'The work of this division,' says the writer of the article, 'is in a large sense administrative, and the working-out of executorships and trusts, and the winding-up of companies are business that must necessarily grow with an enlarging population and an ever-increasing commerce.' We agree generally in the substance and spirit of the article, which, however, does not so much contain new proposals as succinctly group together old ones. One quite novel proposal, however, there is. 'Costs between party and party,' it is said, 'are somewhat strictly taxed, and solicitors are apt to spend too large sums in carrying on litigation. It may, therefore, be fairly a question whether a solicitor should be allowed to recover from his client any sums over and above the taxed costs; that is to say, when the bill of the solicitor of the victorious party has been taxed, the client should be liable for no sums whatever unless he has specially authorised their expenditure.' We hope the arguments of the reviewer in favour of the change, which however have not convinced us, will be carefully read.

'NOTWITHSTANDING anything in the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1865, or any Order in Council thereunder contained (sic), sittings may be held in the City of London by judges of the High Court under commissions issued for the trial of issues or inquiries in cases at nisi prius.' So it is proposed to enact, by the Government City of London Causes Bill, which will, no doubt, become law before the close of the session, having now passed its second reading. The history of the matter is curious. It was enacted by section 20 of the Act of 1865 that 'Her Majesty, by Order in Council from time to time,' at the request of the City Council, 'may direct that all or any issues or inquiries in cases at nisi prius which would otherwise be tried and executed within the county of the city of London shall for ever hereafter, or for a time to be specified in such Order, be tried and executed at the Courts authorised to be erected by this Act.' By section 30 of the Judicature Act, 1873, it was enacted that 'sittings for trial by jury of causes and questions or issues of fact should be held in Middlesex and London, and such sittings should, so far as is reasonably practicable, and subject to vacations, be held continuously throughout the year. In 1882 the Royal Courts of Justice, which were the Courts authorised by the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1865, were duly finished, and on May 22, 1883, an Order in Council was made (see LAW JOURNAL for June 2, 1883) which, after reciting that a petition had been presented to Her Majesty in Council 'that the power of the removal of the place of trial and executions of issues and inquiries under the said Act' of 1865 should be carried into effect, concluded, 'with a happy confidence,' as we then observed, 'in the durability of legal institutions,' as follows: 'Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice aforesaid, is pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that from and after the date of these presents all issues or inquiries in cases at Nisi Prius which would otherwise be tried and executed within the county and city of London shall for ever hereafter be tried and executed at the said Royal Courts of Justice.'

THE Consolidating Evidence Bill, to which we referred last week, is now being considered by the Standing Committee of the House of Lords. It is to be hoped that that committee will greatly improve it. There are no less than seventy-five enactments in the schedule of enactments to be repealed. Of these, the first, 5 Eliz. c. 9, 'An Act for the Punyshment of suche persones as shall procure or comit wyllfull Perjurye,' is to be only partially repealed, although the sections which it is not proposed to repeal, and which visit perjury with a 20*l.* fine only and six months' imprisonment—to be followed by the pillory, to which the offender is to have 'bothe his eares nayled'—have long been rendered obsolete by 2 Geo. II. c. 25, which, as amended by the Penal Servitude Act, imposes the punishment of penal servitude, and by 1 Vict. c. 23, which abolished the pillory in general terms. No doubt the reason for this is that to deal with these enactments would be to amend the criminal law, which would be, to some extent, outside the purpose of the bill. But, considering the present references in modern statutes to the penalties of perjury (see, e.g., the Oaths Act, 1888), and considering also the small compass within which those penalties are contained, it would surely be worth while, in consolidating so much of the law of evidence, to repeal and re-enact so much of 5 Eliz. c. 9, and 2 Geo. II. c. 25, as it is considered desirable to preserve.

THE bill 'to provide for the enfranchisement of leasehold places of public worship,' which passed a second reading in the House of Commons on Wednesday last by a majority of more than 100, is backed by Mr. Evans, Mr. Halley Stewart, Mr. James Rowlands, Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Bryn Roberts, Mr. Waddy, and Mr. Randell. Its short effect, if it should ultimately become law, would be to enable 'the trustees of a religious body' to acquire the fee simple of or freehold or other reversion expectant (sic) upon the determination of any lease or term under or for which a place of religious worship is held by or for such religious body;' by compulsory purchase at a price to be fixed by the County Courts, through which the purchase-money, to be paid into Court by the trustees, is to be distributed amongst the various parties entitled thereto. As Mr. Secretary Matthews pointed out, the bill is full of imperfections in point of form, first and foremost amongst these being the omission of any definition of the term 'religious body,' but if the House of Lords should see its way to adopting the principle of the bill, these imperfections could, without much difficulty, be removed. A religious body, for instance, might conveniently be defined as a body possessed of a place of religious worship, duly certified as such to the Registrar-General, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, the Act 'to amend the law concerning the certifying and registering of places of religious worship,' and the machinery of the Lands Clauses Acts might advantageously be substituted for that of the County Courts in reference to compulsory purchase. Perhaps the bill might with advantage be referred to a select committee, empowered at the same time to consider the bill of Mr. Powell, Mr. Talbot, Mr. Tomlinson, and Mr. Addison 'to repeal the provisions of the Church Building Acts (see 58 Geo. III. c. 45, ss. 40–43; 59 Geo. III. c. 134, s. 37; 3 Geo. IV. c. 72, ss. 8 and 32; and 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 38), relating to the compulsory purchase of sites for churches and burial-grounds,' with the ultimate view of giving all religious bodies of sufficient numbers, in proportion to the population of any parish, equal powers of acquiring a limited acreage of land within the parish for the purpose of religious worship.

Regina v. Lancaster Justices, decided last week, is a case of very great importance upon the construction of sections 8 and 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, the effect of which sections is that the renewal of a beer license which was in force in 1869 cannot be refused except on one of four specified grounds, of which the first and most frequently applicable, is the ground 'that the applicant has failed to produce satisfactory evidence of good character.' In the Lancaster Case the licensing justices refused a renewal to one of the applicants, who had been convicted of Sunday trading, on the ground of failure to produce such satisfactory evidence. The applicant appealed to Quarter Sessions, and called several independent witnesses, who gave him a good character. 'The Court found that he was of good character and was so regarded by his neighbours, but Mr. Higgin, the chairman, in delivering judgment dismissing the appeal, said that the justices of Manchester had the care of a dense population, and the question was whether they were right in refusing the renewal, and not whether the Quarter Sessions would themselves have granted it.' A rule for a mandamus to the justices, on the ground that they had not heard and determined the matter, was discharged by a Divisional Court, but the Court of Appeal has reversed this judgment, and granted a mandamus to Quarter Sessions 'to hear and determine,' on the ground that that Court acted, not on the character of the applicant, which they had admitted to be good, but on the question whether he was a proper sort of person to keep a bearhouse in Manchester. Seldom was the wisdom of Lord Mansfield's advice to an inferior Court not to give a reason for its judgment, 'for the judgment would probably be right, but the reasons would be wrong,' better exemplified. If there is one thing certain in licensing law, it is that the number of existing beerhouses has nothing to do with the consideration of the question whether the renewal of the license of a pre-1869 beerhouse ought to be refused or not.

The maxim that timber estates are excepted from the general law relating to timber may sound rather like a paradox to the uninitiated, as they might naturally suppose that an estate which is called 'a timber estate' would, par excellence, be an estate to which the timber rules apply. Timber estates were defined by the late Master of the Rolls in Honywood v. Honywood (43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 652; L. R. 18 Eq. 306), as 'estates which are cultivated merely for the produce of saleable timber, and where the timber is cut periodically.' As soon as the meaning of the phrase is thus understood, the distinction between a timber estate and an ordinary estate with timber on it becomes inevitable. In the former case the produce of the estate is simply to be found in the timber periodically cut; in the latter the timber is an accidental part of the estate, and therefore, as between a tenant-for-life and the remainderman, belongs in bulk to the latter. Mr. Justice Chitty, in Dashwood v. Magniac (60 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 210), has followed Sir G. Jessel's decision, and permitted a tenant-for-life to enjoy the produce of her thinning of beech woods, which since 1798 had been periodically cut and sold for profit mainly for the purpose of making chairs, which is the great industry in the part of the country where this estate is situate.

Section 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, was soon discovered to have thrown no small impediment in the way of the conveyance of settled land in cases where the settlement itself gave a power to trustees exercisable without the consent of any other person, the effect of subsection 2 of section 56 being to make the consent of the tenant-for-life, or if there were several persons so entitled, then of all of them, necessary to the exercise of the power. The Settled Land Act, 1884, s. 6, subs. 2, partially removed this impediment by providing that where two or more persons together constitute the tenant-for-life, the consent of one only of those persons shall be enough. That the necessity for the consent of a single tenant-for-life or person having the powers of a tenant-for-life may create difficulty enough appears from the case of In re Atherton, reported in our Notes of Cases this week, at p. 64. The trustees there had a power of leasing without any other person's consent under the testator's will, and the testator's heir-at-law, who was a person of unsound mind not so found, had become entitled to the rents—a trust for accumulation having expired—during the remainder of his life as undisposed of. The trustees came to the Court to ascertain whether they could exercise the power without the consent of the heir-at-law, and Mr. Justice Kekewich, considering that the heir-at-law was beneficially entitled to the real estate as tenant-for-life under the settlement, held that his consent was necessary. There seems no doubt that the heir-at-law was tenant-for-life under the settlement by virtue of section 2, subsections 2 and 5, and, this being so, the view of the learned judge was unquestionably correct and in accordance with the construction of section 56, subsection 2, which has been universally adopted (see In re The Duke of Newcastle's Estates, 52 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 645; L. R. 24 Chanc. Div. 129, 139). The only way out of the difficulty in such a case seems to be that indicated by section 62; that is, to make the tenant-for-life a lunatic by inquisition; and then, by section 62, the committee of his estate can consent on his behalf.

A question of some difficulty as to costs arose in the case of Wilson and others v. Statham (noted this week). The action was brought in the High Court to recover a sum of 51*l.* upon a contract. Upon a summons under Order XIV., rule 1, the plaintiff obtained judgment for 12*l.*, leave being given to the defendant to defend as to the balance. The action was afterwards remitted for trial to the Manchester County Court, where the plaintiff recovered a further sum of 24*l.* The registrar taxed the plaintiff's costs upon scale B in the County Court scale, but allowed him costs upon the High Court scale down to the time of the action being remitted, relying upon the terms of section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888. The County Court judge refused to review the taxation, but upon appeal the Divisional Court held that the taxation was wrong and that the plaintiff was only entitled to costs upon the County Court scale, and ought not to have been allowed any costs upon the High Court scale. The Court were of opinion that the case came within section 116 of the County Courts Act, 1888, which provides that, 'with respect to any action brought in the High Court which could have been commenced in the County Court,' if in an action of contract, the plaintiff shall recover a sum of 20*l.* or upwards, but less than 50*l.*, he shall only be entitled to County Court costs. For the plaintiff it was contended that the section had no application, inasmuch as an action for 51*l.* cannot be 'commenced in the County Court,' but Mr. Justice Day disposed of the argument by observing that the Legislature could not have intended to enable a plaintiff, by claiming too much, to establish a right to higher costs.

In the course of the same case the Court sent for Master Wilberforce, and, after conferring with him, Mr. Justice Day stated that, under section 116, where the action remained in the High Court, and the plaintiff recovered less than 20*l.* within twenty-one days, under Order XIV., the practice among the masters, having regard to the proviso to that section, was to allow County Court costs only, but that as Order XIV. has no application to the County Courts, the masters allow the plaintiff the costs of the somewhat analogous County Court proceeding by default summons. Mr. Justice Day added that such being the practice where the action remained in the High Court, it followed that where, as in the case under consideration, it was remitted to a County Court, the plaintiff was still less entitled upon taxation to the costs of proceedings under Order XIV.

There seems, after all, a chance of the Jackson Case going to the House of Lords. Mr. Jackson's solicitors have written to the Standard that an appeal would be proceeded with if the necessary expenses are provided, Mr. Jackson's own means not being such as to justify the step. The importance of the matter to the public is so great that we sincerely trust the appeal will not be allowed to lapse for want of pecuniary assistance. Additional interest in this remarkable case has now been caused by the statements of the Lord Chancellor and Lord Esher in Parliament, and Mrs. Jackson's published justification of the course she has pursued.

The perennial 'block' in the High Court of Justice was the subject of some questions in the House of Commons last week. The Attorney-General did not attempt to deny the existence of heavy arrears both in the Chancery and the Queen's Bench Divisions, but beyond stating that the suggested appointment of a new judge was receiving the attention of the Government he had no comfort to offer to the patient (or impatient) victims of 'the law's delay.' Mr. Atherley Jones, it is stated, intends to press for a royal commission to inquire into the practicability of cheapening the administration of the law. Cheaper law will, however, be no boon unless the judicial engines are at the same time made to work more quickly and in a less spasmodic fashion.

Mr. Milvain's Slander of Women Bill has passed a second reading, and is practically sure to become law before the close of the session, as it passed a second reading last year without any opposition. It is very short, simply providing that words spoken and published which impute unchastity or adultery to any woman or girl shall not require special damage to render them actionable, thus reversing the law as laid down by Holt, C.J., in Ogden v. Turner, 2 Salk. 696 (on the ground that this is a spiritual defamation, punishable in a spiritual Court), and denounced as unsatisfactory and barbarous by Lord Campbell and Lord Brougham respectively in Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. C. at pp. 593, 594 (see also per Cockburn, C.J., and Crompton, J., and Blackburn, J., in Roberts v. Roberts, 33 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 249). In Scotland, it appears, and also throughout the United States (see 'Odgers on Libel and Slander,' 2nd ed. p. 88), the law is already what the bill would make it here, while 'even to charge a woman with being drunk is actionable in Massachusetts' (Odgers, ibid. citing Brown v. Nickerson, 1 Gray, 1). That our present English law has been so long the subject of unfavourable comment from the bench without amendment is very remarkable.

INJUNCTIONS IN RESTRAINT OF LIBEL.—BONNARD v. PERRYMAN.

One recent decision of the Court of Appeal—Mrs. Jackson's Case—aroused a storm of adverse criticism in leading articles and letters addressed to the newspapers. But the question argued a few days ago before the full Court of Appeal, on which judgment was given on Tuesday, is of at least equal importance and interest. In Bonnard v. Perryman it was not so much the law which was involved as the principles of its application. All the judges admit that the Chancery Division has jurisdiction to grant an interlocutory injunction in restraint of a libel, and in that respect the judgment of Mr. Justice North was affirmed. It is a pity, however, that the language of the judgment read by the Lord Chief Justice is not more precise in its terms with respect to the jurisdiction to restrain by injunction the publication of a libel. 'Prior to the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, neither Courts of law nor Courts of equity could issue injunctions in such a case as this: not Courts of equity, because cases of libel could not come before them; not Courts of law, because prior to 1854 they could not issue injunctions at all.' One would gather from this that the power of the Court of Chancery to grant injunctions was limited to cases which came before it, whereas, in fact, a large portion of the instances of its exercise were cases in which a plaintiff was enjoined from proceeding in a common law Court. Lord Langdale's reason for refusing, in Clark v. Freeman, 17 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 142; 11 Beav. 118, to restrain by injunction the publication of a libel was: 'If I were to interfere as is now asked, I should be reviving the criminal jurisdiction of the Star Chamber.' And Lord Eldon, in Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Sw. 413–426, citing Lord Hardwicke, based the equitable jurisdiction by way of injunction on the ground of property.

The real question involved is rather of general public interest than of legal and professional import. It is really which of two conflicting political or ethical principles shall prevail in cases of this kind. Lord Justice Kay, who had the courage of his opinions and dissented from his five legal brethren, did well to give prominence to the facts of the case and the character of the libels. The defendant, it appears, has been in the habit of making accusations 'in some of the strongest language of his well-furnished vocabulary.' The plaintiff was termed, in an article which the defendant intends to repeat, 'a city thief,' 'a vulture;' was charged with 'swindles and nefarious practices.' 'There is no phase of the criminal law,' it is said, 'that has not been scoffed at by him.' Fraud, conspiracy, burglary, felony are stated to have been used to aid the plaintiff's schemes to despoil and hoodwink the public. There is no proof, or even evidence, beyond affidavits of belief by the defendant, of the truth of any of these charges. The English doctrine that a man is presumed to be innocent until he is shown to be guilty has surely a wider application than the actual precincts of a criminal Court. If these accusations are true, proceedings ought to be taken of a different character from journalistic attacks. If untrue—and they must be taken to be untrue until proved—an atrocious wrong is done to the plaintiff, who, by the institution of a libel action, has taken the only means open to him of vindicating his character. According to the judgment of the Appeal Court, an innocent man may be assailed in the foulest terms and tortured by the repetition of atrocious calumnies, it may be for months, until his action for libel is actually heard. If it was for the public advantage that the man should be denounced, the thing was already done. The man has, once for all, been indicted at the bar of public opinion. What end is served by a repetition of the charges? Who is damnified by the grant of an interlocutory injunction? In ordinary cases of injunction, as, for example, in stopping building operations, the object of an interlocutory application is to keep things in statu quo, and the plaintiff gives an undertaking in damages which are usually measurable with some degree of precision. It is difficult to see what the damages could be in this case. There are, in the judgment of the majority of the Court, many remarks which John Austin would have called 'fustian.' 'The right of free speech is one which it is for the public interest that individuals should possess.' This reminds one of a remark made by a Liberal voter with respect to the candidature of a noble lord who was standing for one of the Eastern counties. He believed, he said, in free trade; but not in free trade in other people's wives. Free speech is an excellent thing; but when the subject is the character of one's neighbour, the law is rightly a protectionist. Then, say the judges, individuals 'should exercise' this right 'without impediment, so long as no wrongful act is done.' Is it good morals to allow acts to be done which may prove to have been atrocious, and to have inflicted cruel and undeserved suffering? We cannot imagine that any moralist would approve such a course. Then to justify this extraordinary judgment some very loose language is cited of the Master of the Rolls in Coulson v. Coulson, to the effect that the jurisdiction is of 'a delicate nature,' and 'ought only to be exercised in the clearest cases,' when, if the jury did not find the language to be libellous, the Court would set aside the verdict as unreasonable. This is to misunderstand the very nature of an interlocutory application. No such conclusion could be arrived at unless the Court had before it all the materials necessary to enable it to arrive at a final decision of the case; and in interlocutory applications the Court rarely, if ever, has such materials presented to it. Freedom of speech with regard to matters of public interest is one thing; it is quite another when personal character is at stake. We have too much of it, as the judges themselves have frequently said, in our society journals. Some think we have too many rhetorical platitudes in the utterances of our judges.

RELIEF FOR MISTAKE.

IF hard cases make bad law, the judges must have been tempted to enunciate bad law in the case of Barrow v. Isaacs, 60 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 179; L. R. (1891), 1 Q. B. 417, for it would be difficult to conceive a much harder case of the kind. The lessees and their solicitors forgot to obtain the consent of the lessor to an underlease, though there was in the superior lease a covenant that the lessees should not underlet without the lessor's consent, and the power of re-entry was reserved to the lessor in the event of the lessees not well and truly observing and performing their covenants. There was the not uncommon proviso attached to the covenant that the consent of the lessor should not be arbitrarily withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible person. It was admitted that the underlessees were respectable and responsible persons, and therefore the lessor could not have arbitrarily withheld his consent. Lord Justice Kay pointed out that it did not follow that, because the intending underlessees were unobjectionable in themselves, the lessor was bound to permit an underlease to be granted to them. His lordship suggested that the refusal could not be considered arbitrary if the trade which the underlessees wished to carry on would be injurious to the lessor, or if they wished to use the premises in a manner which would altogether change their character.

The Master of the Rolls assumed, for the purposes of his judgment, that no reasonable man would have refused his consent in this case, and that, if he had refused, his refusal would be considered arbitrary, and, therefore, invalid. In spite of this, a unanimous judgment of the Court of Appeal has upheld the lessor's right of re-entry. There cannot be any serious question that the decision is right, though it might have been more chivalrous on the lessor's part if he had not been quite so exact in enforcing his legal rights. The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 14 (6), especially provides that the restrictions on and relief against forfeiture of leases therein mentioned shall 'not extend to a covenant or condition against the assigning, under-letting, parting with the possession, or disposing of the land leased.' We are, therefore, driven back upon the general rules under which the Courts will give relief. Before the Judicature Acts, it was the Courts of equity mainly which gave relief where the strict legal rules pressed too hardly on persons, but there was a limit to their power, and they interfered only in cases of accident, mistake, or fraud. It was in one sense by an accident that the lessees and their solicitor did not apply for the necessary consent, as it was certainly not of malice prepense or set purpose, but accident, as a ground of relief, was used in a narrower sense. In Snell's 'Principles of Equity' (7th edit. p. 432) it is thus defined: 'By the term "accident" is intended, in equity, not any inevitable casualty or act of Providence, or vis major—i.e. irresistible force—but any unforeseen event, misfortune, loss, act, or omission which is not the result of negligence or misconduct in the party.' The last part of this definition quite puts the lessees in question out of Court, as it was clearly negligent on their part or on the part of their solicitor not to have inspected the original lease. There was clearly no fraud in the matter, and the lessees were therefore driven to contend that they could obtain relief on the ground of mistake. In turning again to Snell, we find (p. 443) that 'mistake, as recognised and relievable against in a Court of equity, may be defined, in contradistinction from accident, as some unintentional act or omission arising from ignorance or surprise, and sometimes from imposition or misplaced confidence; but in the latter case it is not distinguishable from fraud.' In Judge Story's 'Commentaries on Equity Jurisdiction' (12th edit. vol. i. p. 102), it is said that mistake 'is sometimes the result of accident in its large sense, but as contradistinguished from it, it is some unintentional act, or omission, or error, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence.' The lessees were in effect attempting, in Barrow v. Isaacs, to add to this conception, so as to include forgetfulness. They were in no error as to the need for the lessor's consent, but they forgot that they had applied for it in another transaction, and that there were words in the superior lease rendering it necessary. The Master of the Rolls said: 'Taking the word in its ordinary sense, is mere forgetfulness "mistake"? Can you say "I forgot" is the same as "I was mistaken"? If a man merely forgets, it is plain he is not in the condition of a man who assumes that one state of things exists, whereas some other state of things in fact exists.' It is worthy of notice that Lord Justice Kay neither affirmed nor denied that the Court had jurisdiction to relieve in such a case, but was of opinion that it was not a proper case to give relief, if they had the power to do so, considering what a lax practice among lessees such an exercise of judicial discretion might introduce. It may seem very hard that a person should lose the whole of a valuable lease owing to his neglect to obtain a consent of which he was sure; but then he was perfectly at liberty not to enter into a covenant with the lessor which entailed such terrible consequences; and if the time of the Courts is to be taken up in relieving persons from the consequences of covenants into which they have entered with their eyes open the judicial staff will certainly have to be increased.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS.

In the House of Lords the following is the record of work during the past week:—

Bills read a third time and passed:—
Oyster and Mussel Fishery (Loch Severn) Order Confirmation Bill.
Electoral Disabilities Removal Bill.
The Middlesex Registry Bill.

Bills passed through Committee:—
Evidence Bill.
Trustee Bill.
Army Schools Bill.
Public Bodies (Provisional Orders) Bill.
Sale of Goods Bill.

Second readings:—
Marriage Acts Amendment Bill.
Merchandise Marks Bill.
Charities Recovery Bill.

In the House of Commons.

Third readings:—
London Sky Signs Bill.
Herring Branding (Northumberland) Bill.
Taxes (Regulation of Remuneration) Bill.
Registration of Writs (Scotland) Bill.
Law Agents (Scotland) Bill.
Drainage and Improvement of Land (Ireland) Bill.

Second readings:—
Commissioners for Oaths Amendment Bill.
Trusts Amendment (Scotland) Bill.
Ancient Monuments Protection Act (1882) Amendment Bill.
London City (Trial of Causes) Bill.
Places of Worship Enfranchisement Bill.

New bills:—
To Exempt Members of Fire Brigades from Service on Juries.
To Regulate Crofters' Common Grazings.
To Amend the Law Relating to Leaseholds in Ireland.
To Amend the Law Relating to the Tenure of Houses in Ireland.

The False Marking Prevention (No. 2) Bill was thrown out.

Reviews.

THE ELEMENTS OF MERCANTILE LAW.

The Elements of Mercantile Law. By Thomas Edward Scrutton, Barrister-at-Law. London: Wm. Clowes & Son (Lim.). 1891.

This little volume is composed of a course of lectures which the author delivered as lecturer in common law to the Incorporated Law Society. It consists of seven chapters, in which the author, after giving a sketch of the history and growth of the law merchant, considers the mercantile law affecting negotiable instruments, charterparties, and bills of lading, the Factors Act, with notes on the contract of sale, and, finally, the policy of marine insurance. The appendix contains forms of charterparty, bill of lading, and marine policy. A good specimen of the work will be found in the third chapter, where the statutory definition of a bill of exchange is considered and analysed, the reason assigned by the author being that the ingenuity of people who draw bills appears never to be exhausted in finding out how unlike the ordinary form they can get a document, and yet have it called a bill of exchange. The book throughout is carefully and pleasantly written, and will be found useful as a sketch of the law merchant. The cases referred to are not numerous, but a table of cases prefixed to the work would have been an improvement.

PALMER'S COMPANY PRECEDENTS.

Company Precedents for Use in Relation to Companies subject to the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890. With Copious Notes and an Appendix containing the Acts and Rules. Fifth Edition. By Francis Beaufort Palmer, assisted by Charles Macnaghten, Barristers-at-Law. London: Stevens & Sons (Lim.).

The reputation of this book is universal. No company lawyer can afford to be without it, and the appearance of the fifth edition, bringing the work down to date, was eagerly looked for and as warmly welcomed. The extent and importance of the recent company legislation has rendered the task of editing this new edition peculiarly onerous; but it is almost needless to say that the task has been faithfully performed. There can be no question that Mr. Palmer's work has had a very decided influence upon the constitution of no inconsiderable portion of the thousands of companies which have been incorporated since the first edition appeared in 1877. The original plan has been adhered to in this edition, the subject being divided into heads which are arranged in logical sequence, from 'Promoters' to 'Winding-up,' while under each head the forms are prefaced by introductory notes. In the appendix are given the whole of the Acts and rules. One of the most important features of a book of this size and character is the index. We have tested Mr. Palmer's, and have found it completely reliable. The book has grown to nearly 1,200 pages, and we are unable to say how it could have been reduced without detracting from its value. The price is 36*s*.

Correspondence.

THE PUBLIC TRUSTEE BILL.

Sir,—To what extent will the public trustee act on his own responsibility? Will he run to the Court for directions at every turn? Assuming that in a case of doubt he exercises discretion, acting as he thinks for the best, but wrongly; will the Court upset his act? Lastly, will the offices of the public trustee be closed for ten weeks' Long Vacation?

These are points on which practising solicitors would like to know the intentions of the Government.

R. B. Lowndes.

2 Church Street, Cheltenham: April 20.

COURT ROLLS.

Sir,—I should feel much obliged if any of your readers can tell me of any book which contains examples of the entries usually made in the court rolls of a manor on the holding of a Court, either in English or Latin. I am engaged in reading the rolls of a manor in the times of Edward III. and Henry VI., and any book such as I have described would help me very much by giving me a lead, as it were. Also do you know of any book containing examples of old deeds—feoffments, releases, &c.—of the time of Edward I. to Henry VIII.?

T. K.

Unreported Cases.

BANKRUPTCY CASE.

At the Liverpool Bankruptcy Court on March 13 the case of In re Davies came before his Honour Judge Collier. Mr. Charles Collins, solicitor, applied for the judge's directions in regard to the costs in the bankruptcy of Davies. It appeared that the assets were originally estimated at under 300*l*., and the costs were consequently taxed on the lower scale. It was subsequently found that the assets exceeded 300*l*., and an application was made to the registrar to give costs on the higher scale. The question was referred by the registrar to his Honour Judge Shand, who decided that there was no power to increase, although there was express power to reduce. The trustee had communicated with the Board of Trade on the subject, and had received a reply to the effect that the taxing-master in the High Court, under similar circumstances, would increase the costs, and, if the Bankruptcy Court in Liverpool decided to follow that practice, the additional payment would, of course, be allowed. Mr. Collins suggested that his Honour should give it as his opinion that the practice in the High Court should be adopted.—The Judge: Yes, I will do that.

SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

INTERNATIONAL LAW—PREROGATIVE OF CROWN—ACT OF STATE—PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY OF AGENT OF CROWN.

In the case of James Baird and another v. Sir Baldwin Walker, Bart., the following judgment was on March 18, 1891, delivered by Mr. Justice Sir Robert Pinsent: The statement of claim in this action charges the defendant with having, in June last, wrongfully entered the plaintiffs' messuage and premises, situate at Fishel's River, in Bay St. George, and with taking and retaining possession of the plaintiffs' lobster factory and of a large quantity of gear, materials, and implements appertaining to the same, and with having prevented the plaintiffs from carrying on the business of catching and preserving lobsters; and the plaintiffs claim 5,000 dols. damages, and they pray for an injunction. The defendant, amongst other matters, pleads in effect that he was captain of one of Her Majesty's ships employed during the last season on the Newfoundland fisheries, and was senior officer on the station; that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, by command of Her Majesty, committed to him 'the care and charge of putting in force and giving effect to an agreement embodied in a modus vivendi for the lobster fishery in Newfoundland during the said season, which as an act and matter of State and public policy had been by Her Majesty entered into with the Government of the Republic of France.' That the said agreement provided, amongst other things, 'that on the coast of Newfoundland, where the French enjoy rights of fishing, conferred by the treaties, no lobster factories which were not in operation on July 1, 1889, should be permitted unless by the joint consent of the commanders of the British and French naval stations.' The plea then proceeds to allege that the said lobster factory of the plaintiffs was in operation in contravention of the terms of that agreement, and that after notice to the plaintiffs, which they disregarded, he (the defendant) 'in his public political capacity, and in the exercise of the powers and authorities, and in the performance of the duties of the care and charge so as aforesaid committed to him,' entered and took possession, &c., but that the alleged trespasses 'were acts and matters of State, done and performed under the provisions of the said modus vivendi.' And the defendant sets out that all he had done was with a full knowledge of the circumstances, approved and confirmed by Her Majesty, and he concludes his plea in these words: 'And the defendant therefore submits that the matters set forth in his answer to the said statement of claim, and on which he rests his right to enter into and take possession of the said messuage and premises, and to take possession of the said gear, material, and implements, were acts and matters of State arising out of the political relations between Her Majesty the Queen and the Government of the Republic of France; that they involve the construction of treaties and of the said modus vivendi and other acts of State, and are matters which cannot be inquired into by this honourable Court.' It is admitted that if this plea can be sustained as a matter of fact, and if it be good in law, there will be an end to this action. It is assumed that the plaintiffs are British subjects, and it is hardly necessary to add that for the purposes of the present discussion the right of property in the plaintiffs in the lands and chattels the subject of the alleged trespasses, and the acts of trespass themselves, must be taken as admitted. The reply of the plaintiffs to this plea or statement of defence, besides raising issues upon questions of fact, with which we have at present no concern, avers that 'the alleged contravention of said agreement or modus vivendi afforded no justification in law for the action of the defendant;' 'that the said action of the defendant was not an act of State and public policy;' 'that the alleged authority from Her Majesty, and subsequent confirmation by her, afford no justification for the action of the defendant,' and do not relieve the defendant from liability for his said acts. No question has, on either side, been raised in the course of the argument with regard to the terms and construction of any treaty or treaties, or of any statutes in relation to them; in fact, no reference has been made to them beyond the general allegation in the pleadings. The pleadings, if any adjudication upon such points were called for, are wanting in such necessary and specific references, averments of circumstances and of connection, as would enable the Court, in the absence of proof, to pass judgment upon them (Pulido v. Musgrave, 5 App. Cas. 103). However, no such adjudication is now sought. What we are at this time asked to determine is a question in limine, by the finding of which in favour of the defendant the case of the plaintiffs would be out of Court. The argument has been conducted with much care and ability. A vast deal of learned industry has been expended by counsel on both sides in dealing with the proposition involved in it. They cited a large number of authorities, foreign as well as domestic, and quoted from Parliamentary debates and other sources of information, to sustain their respective positions. To many of these authorities it will be unnecessary to refer, and I shall confine myself to those which appear to me to be more particularly relevant to this inquiry. For the plaintiffs it is contended that no such thing is known to the law or to the constitution as an act of State by which in time of peace the Crown can convey authority to a public officer or any other person, to commit any act in violation or disturbance of the person or property of the subject, so as to exclude the subject from resort to the Queen's Courts of law for redress and compensation for injuries committed under colour of the authority of such act of State. This position is contested by the other side, and it is contended that the mere fact of such an agreement having been made as that here alleged to have been entered into between the Government of Great Britain and that of the Republic of France is in itself sufficient evidence of such public necessity as will justify the sacrifice of the right of private property to the public weal, and particularly where it is alleged that such sacrifice is required in relation to pre-existing treaties; in other words, that the agreement in this case termed the modus vivendi is equivalent to a treaty, to the terms of which rights of private property may be subordinated. It is not averred in the pleadings that the object of the agreement was to avert hostilities between the contracting States, and we have no historic ground for the assumption that war was imminent. There is no question that the modus vivendi was entered into and that the acts of the defendant were committed at a time of actual peace, which still continues. The term 'modus vivendi' in itself supposes an actual state of tranquillity, and a desire on the part of the high contracting parties to secure its continuance. The question, then, for us is this: Is there sufficient before us to enable the Court to uphold this agreement with the right claimed by the defendant of putting it in execution with legal impunity? A good deal has been said upon the meaning of the expression 'act of State.' In the broad sense of the term many lawful acts of the executive Government, and many instances of the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown might be designated 'acts of State;' but there is a narrower sense, and that in which the term is more technically, if not exclusively employed, which relates to acts done or adopted by the ruling powers of independent States in their political and sovereign capacity, particularly 'an act injurious to the person or to the property of some person who is not at the time of that act a subject of Her Majesty, which act is done by any representative of Her Majesty's authority, civil or military, and is either previously sanctioned or subsequently ratified by Her Majesty' (Stephen's 'History of the Criminal Law'). With regard to such acts, the general principle of law is that 'the transactions of independent States between each other are governed by other laws than those which Municipal Courts administer; such Courts have neither the means of deciding what is right nor the power of enforcing any decision which they may make' (Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee, 13 Moo. P. C. 75). That was the case of a seizure made by the British Government, acting as a sovereign power through its delegate, the East India Company, of the property of a native independent sovereign. 'Of the propriety or justice of that act,' said the Privy Council, 'neither the Court below nor the Judicial Committee have the means of forming, or the right of expressing, if they had formed any opinion. It may have been just or unjust, politic or impolitic, beneficial or injurious, taken as a whole, to those whose interests are affected. These are considerations into which their lordships cannot enter. It is sufficient to say that, even if a wrong had been done, it is a wrong for which no municipal Court of justice can afford a remedy.' The contention of the plaintiffs, citing this amongst other cases, is that, where the municipal law can be put in force, there can be no ouster of the jurisdiction of the Courts; and it is argued by their counsel that the doctrine, as we find it laid down in Stephen's 'History of the Criminal Law,' is sound and irrefutable. That learned author, after referring to the case above cited, proceeds: 'In order to avoid misconception it is necessary to observe that the doctrine as to acts of State can apply only to acts which affect foreigners, and which are done by the orders or with the ratification of the sovereign. As between the sovereign and his subjects there can be no such thing as an act of State. Courts of law are established for the express purpose of limiting public authority in its conduct towards individuals. If one British subject puts another to death or destroys his property by the express command of the king, that command is no protection to the person who executes it, unless it is in itself lawful, and it is the duty of the proper Courts of justice to determine whether it is lawful or not. On this ground the Courts were prepared to examine into the legality of the acts done under Governor Eyre's authority in the suppression of the insurrection in Jamaica. The acts affected British subjects only. But, as between British subjects and foreigners, the orders of the Crown justify what they command so far as British Courts of justice are concerned. In regard to civil rights this, as I have shown, has been established by express and solemn decisions. Again, it is said, "That no man's property can legally be taken from him or invaded by the direct act or command of the sovereign, without the consent of the subject, given expressly or implicitly through Parliament, is jus indigenæ, an old home-born right, declared to be law by divers statutes of the realm."' Much other of the text-learning relating to the prerogative of the Crown has been discussed in the course of this argument, and the necessity of 'preserving the property of the subject from the inundation of the prerogative;' but, while for obvious and all-sufficient reasons of convenience and security, the personal inviolability of the sovereign is insured by the constitution, it is plain and not open to question that the prerogative itself is the creature of the constitution and is defined and limited by law, beyond the boundaries of which it cannot pass without subjecting the advisers and servants of the Crown to answer in Courts of justice to other subjects aggrieved by the unlawful exercise of the sovereign will. The point for decision here is: Was the act within the lawful power of the Crown? Was the authority under which the defendant justifies within the province of the prerogative? The powers of the Crown to cede British territory to a foreign state by treaty of peace, following upon the termination of war, seems to be unimpeachable, and has not been questioned at the bar; but it is said that this modus vivendi is not of that nature, that it does not partake of the character of a treaty, and that, if it does, no power resides in the British sovereign of entering into a compact with a foreign state in time of peace for a cession of territory, or à fortiori for alienating the property of a subject or of imposing upon him conditions of tenure in derogation of his ordinary rights, while he remains a subject of the Queen inhabiting British territory. Upon the question of the prerogative right of territorial cession in time of peace, it was held by the High Court of Bombay in the year 1876, in the case of Damodhar Gordhan v. Deoram Kanji, that it was beyond the power of the British Crown, without the concurrence of the Imperial Parliament, to make any cession of territory within the jurisdiction of any of the British Courts in India in time of peace to a foreign Power. Lord Selborne, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council on appeal, observed that their lordships of the Judicial Committee, 'having arrived at the conclusion that the present appeal ought to fail without reference to that question, they think it sufficient to state that they entertain such grave doubts (to say no more) of the soundness of the general and abstract doctrine laid down by the High Court of Bombay, as to be unable to advise Her Majesty to rest her decision on that ground.' There are manifestly some cases, as where the grant of money is involved, in which the assent of Parliament to any treaty is practically essential. There are others involving the cession of territory in the time of peace which require the moral support of the nation as being acts of prudence and necessity, and free from the suspicion of fraud, collusion, or criminal weakness; but nevertheless, as in the acquisition of territory, so ex converso, in its cession the treaty-making power is in the Crown of Great Britain. Upon the argument of the case last cited, it was suggested that, if cessions in time of peace were legal, the Crown might cede any portion of territory, say Dover or the Isle of Wight, to a foreign Power; to which it was most aptly answered by Stephen, Q.C.: 'The possible extreme abuse of a power is no argument against its existence; you get beyond the tacit terms of a principle when you assume its capricious application.' So much for the principles of international as distinguished from constitutional and municipal law. With regard to the form of the instrument, it appears to me to be a matter of indifference so long as the terms are clear and sufficiently expressed; and that its construction would be determined simply by the principles which govern other contracts. It has been suggested that the exercise of the prerogative in possessions enjoying responsible (or constitutional) government is of a more limited character than it would be in the mother-country, but where the objects of its application correspond, there can be no doubt, in my opinion, that the sovereign authority in the colonies is the same as it is in Great Britain, where in truth 'responsible government' is more amply and absolutely enjoyed than it is in the colonies themselves. 'There can be no doubt the Queen's prerogative is as extensive, valid and effectual in New South Wales as in this county of Middlesex,' observed Vice-Chancellor Bacon (In re Bateman's Trusts, 42 Law J. Rep. 554). For the defendant it is, as I have said, contended that the fact of a modus vivendi having been concluded is sufficient without reference to the specific treaties or any provisions of the treaties upon which it is said to be founded, that the modus was in itself a treaty, and that the sovereign possesses absolute power to enter into an international agreement of this kind so as to bind the entire community and every individual subject's right; that Parliamentary impeachment is the only mode in which its propriety can be called in question, and that, if the defendant had failed to fulfil the duty cast upon him by the State, the nation would have been held responsible by the other contracting Power for this want of action; that as the terms upon which peace is made are in the absolute discretion of the sovereign, so the right to enter into an agreement to maintain peace and prevent war is equally so. Counsel for the defendant, after citing several text authorities upon international law, and referring to many decided cases, say that they rely particularly for the position they assume upon Buron v. Denman, 2 Exch. 157; Conway v. Gray, 10 East, T. R. 536; and Rustomjee v. Reginam, 2 Q. B. Div. 74. The first named of these cases was one in which the plaintiff (a Spaniard) sought to recover from the defendant, a British naval commander, damages for taking possession of a barracoon belonging to the plaintiff, and carrying away and liberating his slaves. The defendant had instructions to suppress the slave trade, but the authority of which, without further instructions, he would have been possessed under the terms of the treaty with Spain would have extended only to the stopping of ships on the high seas. The action of the defendant was, however, confirmed and ratified by the English Government, and it was held that this subsequent ratification was equal to a prior command, and that the defendant was not amenable in a British Court of justice at the suit of the plaintiff, because the act of the defendant, whether originally authorised or afterwards ratified, was 'an act of State.' In the second of the cases cited (Conway v. Gray), in which the plaintiff, although a British subject, sued under a policy of insurance for the benefit of a foreigner, it was held that a foreigner insuring in England a ship or goods is not entitled to abandon upon an embargo laid on the property in the ports of his own country, as his assent is virtually implied to every act of his own Government; in other words, that a foreigner could not recover from a British subject in an English Court damages arising out of an act of the plaintiff's own Government. In this case Lord Ellenborough, C.J., in the course of his judgment, referring with approval to Tonteng v. Hubbard, 3 B. & P. 291, says: 'The Court was of opinion that, if that had not been the case of a Swede against a British subject, the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover, but as the embargo was produced by the acts of the Swedish Government, it was in effect the plaintiff's own act that the vessel was detained.' I cannot see how either of these cases makes for the defendant against the principle that there can be no 'act of State,' so as to supersede or exclude the operation of the municipal law in the case of subjects of the same State. But for the defendant still another case was cited, which, it was maintained, distinctly (if for the first time) introduced a different rule. This was the case of Rustomjee v. Reginam, which was a proceeding by petition of right in which it was sought to make the Crown responsible as an agent or trustee for the suppliant as one of a class in respect of money paid, under a treaty of peace between the Queen of England and the Emperor of China towards the discharge of debts due to British subjects from certain Chinese merchants, and it was held that the act of the Crown in rejecting the claim of the plaintiff was not a subject of inquiry in a British Court. Lord Coleridge, in delivering the judgment of the Court, said: 'The making of peace and the making of war, as they are the undoubted, so they are, perhaps, the highest, acts of the prerogative of the Crown. The terms on which peace is made are in the absolute discretion of the sovereign. The Queen might or might not, as she thought fit, have made peace at all; she might or not, as she thought fit, have insisted on this money being paid her. She acted throughout the making of the treaty and in relation to each and every of its stipulations in her sovereign character, and by her own inherent authority; and, as in making the treaty, so in performing the treaty, she is beyond the control of municipal law, and her acts are not to be examined in her own Courts. It is a treaty between herself as sovereign and the Emperor of China as sovereign, and though he might complain of the infraction, if infraction there were, of its provisions her subjects cannot. It seems clear to us that in all that relates to the making and performance of a treaty with another sovereign the Crown is not, and cannot be, an agent for any subject whatever.' In citing this case in support of the defendant's position his counsel mainly rely upon the passage, 'As in making the treaty, so in performing the treaty, she (the Queen) is beyond the control of municipal law, and her acts are not to be examined in her own Courts.' This language has never been quoted by jurists, nor cited by judges as possessing the meaning contended for on behalf of the defendant. The case is one in which the Queen herself was sued, and the ruling upon this point amounts simply to this, that the sovereign is not liable to be called to account by her subject for the manner of fulfilling the terms of a treaty in a matter which is only capable of being called in question by the other high contracting party. In the action now under consideration the sovereign is not the defendant; the question is one, not of the mode of fulfilling a treaty, but it relates to that which is in its very nature a temporary expedient during the existence of which the fulfilment of a treaty or treaties is suspended, something done in the meantime for the convenience of the Queen's Government, and the cause of complaint is one arising within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Courts, in which both the parties to the action are her subjects. I have no doubt that, where the terms of a treaty are such that the property of the subject within the territory of his State is affected by them, any contests between subjects of the Crown as to their lawful or unlawful execution is cognisable by the municipal Courts, and that 'the meaning of treaties and of all measures for their execution is to be ascertained by the same rules of construction and course of reasoning which we apply to the interpretation of private contracts.' This is not one of those cases to which the maxim 'Inter arma silent leges' applies. There may be, I admit, a territorial cession of public property in time of peace, although such is not the case here—the territory is British and its internal administration remains untouched; but, even in the case of transfer of territory from one State to another, the status of the inhabitants with regard to their real property would, I imagine, remain as before in the absence of stipulations to the contrary. It is possible to understand the existence of treaties the provisions of which might in certain events and under certain conditions be actively employed to control or qualify rights of property, but which in other events and under other conditions would leave those rights to their ordinary operation; but this would be a matter of construction, and such treaties would have to be administered as occasion might require according to their legal interpretation and the legal means of enforcing their provisions. No mere subsequent agreement in the nature of a modus vivendi in time of peace could, without Parliamentary sanction, modify such rights of property as between subject and subject to a greater extent than that for which the antecedent treaty or a prior statute-made provision. In this action of Baird v. Walker, no such case is presented to us for adjudication. We are not invited at present to decide upon the construction of treaties or the lawful means for their enforcement; we are only asked by the defendant to say that the alleged authority of the Crown contains in itself a sufficient defence to force the plaintiff out of Court. Under the pleadings and all the circumstances, so far as it is open to the Court now to notice them, we must hold that the defence is not a sufficient answer to the claim. It may not be generally known, and I would here note, that this is not the first instance in which a project in the nature of a modus vivendi has been proposed with regard to the joint occupation of part of the coast by French and English fishermen. In December, 1763, a project of an agreement was in view, proposed by the French ambassador, for the avoidance of disturbance and dispute between the English and French in carrying on the concurrent fishery. It was referred to the Crown law officers of the day, who were asked whether the Crown could legally enter into it, and would have power to enforce such regulations so far as they related to the subjects of Great Britain; and those eminent authorities answered that the project contained many things contrary to the Act of William III., as well in respect of the king's subjects as to the mode of determining controversies arising there, and that the Crown had no power to enter into or enforce such regulations (Reeve, p. 120; Chalmer's 'Colonial Opinions,' 545). At this point I cannot do better than adopt the following passages from Brown's 'Constitutional Law': 'As for the most petty and inconsiderable trespass committed by his fellow-subject, so for the invasion of property by his sovereign does our law give to a suppliant, fully, freely, and efficiently, redress. One exception, and one only, to this rule occurs; and that is, where the sovereign has himself personally done an act which injures or prejudices another, for the King of England can theoretically do no wrong. Our law thus recognises his supremacy—it has omitted to frame any mode of redress for that which it deems to be impossible; and yet the law, whilst holding the sovereign personally irresponsible for his acts, will virtually limit this irresponsibility by visiting strictly upon the ministers or agents of the Crown the consequences flowing from obedience to its command. The rule respondeat superior being here inapplicable, a remedy may be had against the agent, and so the suitor shall not retire from the King's Court without having justice done him.' And again: 'The civil irresponsibility of the supreme power for tortious acts could not be theoretically maintained with any show of justice if its agents were not personally responsible for them. In such cases the Government is morally bound to indemnify its agent, and it is hard on such agent where his obligations are not satisfied; but the right to compensation in the party injured is paramount to this consideration, that is to say, special circumstances may render even a public servant personally responsible for acts bonâ fide done by him on behalf of the public, which in contemplation of law injuriously affect another.' In Feather v. Reginam, 6 B. & S. 296, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, in delivering a judgment upon a petition of right, said: 'Let it not, however, be supposed that a subject sustaining a legal wrong at the hands of a minister of the Crown is without a remedy. As the sovereign cannot authorise wrong to be done, the authority of the Crown would afford no defence to an action brought for an illegal act committed by an officer of the Crown. The learned counsel for the suppliant rested part of his argument on the ground that there could be no remedy by action against an officer of State for an injury done by the authority of the Crown, but he altogether failed to make good that position. The case of Buron v. Denman, which he cited in support of it, only shows that where an act injurious to a foreigner, and which might otherwise afford a ground of action, is done by a British subject, and the act is adopted by the Government of this country, it becomes the act of the State, and the private right of action becomes merged in the international question which arises between our own Government and that of the foreigner. The decision leaves the question as to the right of action between subject and subject wholly untouched. On the other hand, the case of the general warrants, Money v. Leach, and the cases of Sutton v. Johnstone, in error, and Sutherland v. Murray there cited, are direct authorities that an action will lie for a tortious act, notwithstanding it may have had the sanction of the highest authority in the State. But in our opinion no authority is needed to establish that a servant of the Crown is responsible in law for a tortious act done to a fellow-subject, though done by the authority of the Crown, a position which appears to us to rest on principles which are too well settled to admit of question, and which are alike essential to uphold the dignity of the Crown on the one hand, and the rights and liberties of the subject on the other.' To sum up in short terms, for general information, our conclusion upon the issue before us, the Court holds: That in an action of this description, to which the parties are British subjects, for a trespass committed within British territory, in time of peace, it is no sufficient answer to say, in exclusion of the jurisdiction of the municipal Courts, that the trespass was an 'act of State' committed under the authority of an agreement or modus vivendi with a foreign power. That in such a case, as between the Queen's subjects, the questions of the validity, interpretation and effect of all instruments and evidences of title and authority rest in the first place with the Courts of competent jurisdiction within which the cause of action arises. That, therefore, the decision upon the present issue, which is confined to these points, is found in favour of the plaintiffs in this action, with leave to the defendant (should it be desired) to amend upon payment of costs. At the bar we had the voluntary statement of the Attorney-General (who appeared with Mr. Kent, Q.C.), on the part of the defendant, to uphold the 'legal and constitutional rights of the Crown,' that, with regard to those who had suffered loss, there could not be the remotest doubt but that inquiry would be made and that compensation would follow. It is to be hoped, therefore, that it will be found unnecessary to prolong the litigation in the present case.—Sir J. S. Winter, Q.C., and Mr. Greene, Q.C., for the plaintiffs; Mr. Kent, Q.C., and the Attorney-General (Sir W. V. Whiteway, Q.C.) for the defendant.

CALLS TO THE BAR.

THE following gentlemen have been called to the bar during the present Easter Term:—

By the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn.

Benjamin Plunkett Lentaigne, B.A., Dublin.
Frederick William Moore.
The Hon. George Charles Colville, B.A., Cambridge.
Donald Fortescue Wilbraham, Trinity College, Oxford.
Sirdar Gurcharn Singh, University of Cambridge and Punjab University, Lahore College.
Philip Spencer O'Bryen Taylor, B.A., Oxford.
Mohamad Ahmad, Downing College, Cambridge.
Frederick Broadbridge, University of London.

By the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple.

Oldham Whittaker, LL.B., Cambridge, holder of a first-class studentship awarded Hilary Term, 1889.
Thomas Lowndes Bullock, B.A., Oxford.
Charles Peter Caspersz, London.
Harry Lawson Webster Lawson, M.P., M.A., Oxford.
John Ryan, M.A., LL.M., Cambridge, D.Sc., London.
Robert Moritz Meyer, B.A., Cambridge.
Percy Bagnall Evans, B.A., Oxford.
Charles Churchill Branch, B.A., Oxford.
Thomas Greig, B.A., Cambridge.
Walter Samuel Glynn, B.A., Cambridge.
Charles Sansome Preston, B.A., Oxford.
Vivian Morten.
Henry Staveley Hill, Oxford.
Thomas Dalton Lawrance, M.A., Oxford.
Edward Acton, B.A., Oxford (holder of a scholarship in common law, awarded July, 1890).
John William Aizlewood, LL.B., London.
Ernest Hamilton Sharp, B.A., Oxford.
Francis Herrick Birch, B.A., Cambridge.
William Cunliffe Pickersgill Jay, B.A., LL.B., Cambridge.
Francis Pelham Whitbread, Cambridge.
Henry Percy Hussey, B.A., Oxford.
Paul Connolly.
Charles Leete Attenborough.
Roger Charnock Richards.

By the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple.

Lovegrove Griffin Hubert Mayer.
Reginald Ker Kays.
Herbert Sandford Thorne, B.A., Oxford.
Thomas James Chesshyre Tomlin, B.A., Oxford.
Felix Emile André Ange Galdemar, University of London.
Henry Arthur Hannen, B.A., Cambridge.
Jean Edmond Rouillard.
John Wyatt Peters.
William Loftus Thompson.
Herbert Guy Snowden, B.A., Oxford, first-class Middle Temple international law scholar, 1889.
Percy Edward Baldwin, first-class scholar Middle Temple real and personal property, 1889 and 1891.
William Herbert Evans.
Percy Mackenzie Skinner.
Pestanji Jamasji Padshah, M.A, Bombay University (Fellow Elphinstone College, Cobden Club medallist, first Middle Temple equity scholar, June, 1889, prizeman in common law, 1890, 1891, professor Gujerat College).
Philip Le Maistre.
Tennant Macfarlane.
Fatch Chand (first arts Calcutta University, fourth common law prizeman, 1890, 1891).
Shiavex Rustomji Master, F.B.A., Elphinstone College, Bombay University.
George Francis Pires (Hunter prizeman, Arnott and M'Lenan medallist, Grant Medical College, Bombay, L.R.C.P. (London), M.R.C.S. (England)).
Frederick Edwin Bushell.

By the Honourable Society of Gray's Inn.

Sasi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, Punjab, India (member of the University of Edinburgh, the only son of Ras Govinda Sarbadhicary, Chief of Caste of Bengal, India.

UNITED LAW SOCIETY.—The usual weekly meeting of this society was held in the Inner Temple Lecture Hall, Mr. C. W. Williams in the chair. Mr. Moyle moved: 'That in view of the recent disclosures as to the nature of the trust deed of the Salvation Army, General Booth's scheme is unworthy of any further support.' Mr. J. R. Atkin opposed. The debate was continued by Messrs. E. F. Spence, J. L. V. S. Williams, Arthur Gilbert, Davis (visitor), G. D. Elliman, G. Washington Fox, D. T. Tudor, H. W. Marcus, L. W. Browne, and C. H. A. Maistre. The opener replied, and the motion was put to the house and was carried by one vote. On Monday next the debate is on the subject of the legality of strike combinations.

CALENDAR OF THE COUNTY COURTS.

FROM APRIL 27 TO MAY 2.

No. of Circuit	His Honour	April 27	April 28	April 29	April 30	May 1	May 2
7	Judge Ffoulkes	—	Birkenhead	—	Warrington	Leigh	—
8	Judge Heywood	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	Manchester	—
14	Judge Greenhow	Leeds	Wakefield	Leeds	Leeds	Leeds	—
15	Judge Turner	Middlesbrough	Stockton-on-Tees	—	—	—	—
19	Judge Barber	—	Ilkeston	Derby	Burton	—	—
26	Judge Jordan	—	—	—	—	Tunstall	Cheadle
47	Judge Powell	—	Lambeth	Greenwich	Lambeth	Lambeth	—
54	Judge Metcalfe	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	Bristol	—

CLAIMANTS WANTED.

MR. SIDNEY H. PRESTON, of 1 Great College Street, Westminster, writes as follows:—

In the olden time the London Gazette was the chief medium used by solicitors and others for conveying to next-of-kin, heirs, or relations the news of a 'windfall' or for seeking information as to missing relations. Now, however, the 'agony' columns of the leading dailies constantly contain particulars of this description. During the past few months an unusual number of these announcements have been made; and I therefore venture to send you an index of the names of the deceased, with the hope that some of your readers who do not con 'agony' column notices may thus come in for unexpected assets. The following are the more important cases:—

Rose Archer (or Mendham), Elizabeth Bailey (Kent), Baldock Family, Samuel Bingham (living in 1821), Emma H. Brookhouse, John Brenan (late of the Liverpool Police), Sir Alexander Caldwell, G.C.B. (died 1839), Catherine B. Chappell, Henry S. Church (Australia), William Clark (Kent), Mary Cole, Robert Copely, John Donegan (Cork), Eliza Mary Duggan, Jane Farncombe, Alexander Forbes, Elizabeth J. Fry, Susannah E. Galpine, Charlotte E. Garrod, George Glover (Suffolk), Eduard Griffiths-Boteler, Samuel Hadfield, William Harrington, Margaret Hartliffe, John Hickman (died 1860), Elizabeth C. Keene, William King (son of John), William N. Knight, Duncan M'Intyre, Frederick M'Namara, Elias Manning (gamekeeper), Anne Manser, Joseph A. C. Morrison, Peters Family (6,000*l.*), Richard Pickin (horsebreaker), Charles Rankin, Francis Robinson, Mary Ann Russell, Mary Sandall, Elizabeth Skelton (Wakefield, 1857), Sedgwick Family (3,000*l.*), Elizabeth Ann Stone, Mary Jane Turnage, Euphemia Tibbets, John J. Waddington (India), Agnes Warn, Alexander K. Wauchop, George and Gerald Webster, Eliza Wilson (Middlesex), George and John Wood, and Eliza Wright (Middlesex).

LAW STUDENTS SOCIETIES.

DEBATING. — The ordinary weekly meeting of this society was held at the Law Institution, Chancery Lane, on Tuesday, April 21, Mr. Douglas in the chair.—The subject for discussion, 'That our fiscal policy ought to be changed so as to give greater advantages to our colonies than to other countries,' was opened by Mr. Wheeler.—Mr. T. W. Williams opposed.—The debate having been declared open, the following gentlemen spoke in the affirmative: Messrs. Archer-White and Stewart-Smith; in the negative, none.—Mr. Watkins replied for Mr. Wheeler.—On the motion being put to the meeting, it was carried by a majority of two.—The subject for discussion at the next meeting of the society, on Tuesday, April 28, is, 'That this society disapproves of the Public Trustee Bill.'

LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of this association on Monday, the 20th inst., a debate was held on the following subject for discussion: 'Ought the decision in Regina v. Jackson to be reversed on appeal?'—Mr. Barnes opened in the affirmative, which was also supported by Messrs. Martin, Bagshaw, Todd, and Finch.—Mr. M'Master opened in the negative, which was also supported by Messrs. Inman, Wilson, Sedgwick, Glover, Wainwright, and Watkins.—The question was decided in the negative by a majority of two.

NOTICES FOR THE WEEK.

ROTA OF REGISTRARS.

MONDAY, April 27.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Tuesday, April 28.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Wednesday, April 29.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Thursday, April 30.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

Friday, May 1.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Clowes. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Carrington. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Farmer. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Pemberton. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Beal. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Leach.

Saturday, May 2.—Court of Appeal No. 2: Mr. Jackson. Mr. Justice Chitty: Mr. Lavie. Mr. Justice North: Mr. Rolt. Mr. Justice Stirling: Mr. Ward. Mr. Justice Kekewich: Mr. Pugh. Mr. Justice Romer: Mr. Godfrey.

MR. JUSTICE BUTT.—It is stated to be doubtful whether Mr. Justice Butt will resume his seat in Court during the present sittings. The learned judge is undergoing medical treatment and is progressing favourably.

Court of Appeal Register.

APPEAL COURT I.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, and FRY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 16.

De Sousa v. Cobden (appeal of defendant from judgment of Day, J., dated November 24, at trial without jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Murray v. Warren (appeal of defendant Warren in person from judgment of Day, J., dated December 2, with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

FRIDAY, APRIL 17.

In re L. J. Twyne, ex parte the Debtor (appeal of debtor from receiving order, dated March 12, made by Mr. Registrar Linklater on petition of Jukes Coulson).—Stand over.

Tynedale Steamship Company (Lim.) v. Newcastle-on-Tyne Home Trade Insurance Association (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Day, J., dated November 20, at trial without a jury in Middlesex).—Cur. adv. vult.

SATURDAY, APRIL 18.

No sitting.

MONDAY, APRIL 20.

Hellewell and another v. Rawstorn (appeal of defendant from judgment of Lawrance, J., dated March 3, at trial of interpleader issue at Manchester).—Allowed.

Unwin, petitioner v. M'Mullen, respondent (appeal of petitioner from order of Cave, J., and Grantham, J., dated March 19, declaring petitioner duly elected town councillor).—Dismissed.

Barlow v. Forbes (appeal of defendants from order of Mathew, J., and Day, J., dated April 9, setting aside order for commission to Manila).—Dismissed.

Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., FRY, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21.

Bonnard v. Perryman (appeal of defendant C. W. Perryman from order of North, J., dated March 3, restraining until trial publication and sale of Financial Observer for February 7; cur. adv. vult. April 10).—Allowed.

Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, FRY, L.J., and LOPES L.J.

Worswick v. A. C. W. Hobman & Co. (application of plaintiff for new trial on appeal from nonsuit directed by Stephen, J., dated February 10, at trial with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Wilkinson v. Offord (application of plaintiff for new trial of appeal from verdict and judgment dated February 4 at trial before Stephen, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Daye v. Krauss (application of defendant for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated February 12 at trial before Mathew, J., and a special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22.

Smith v. North Metropolitan Tramways Company (application of plaintiff for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment dated February 17 at trial before Cave, J., with a special jury in Middlesex).—Allowed.

Stookings v. Lambeth Waterworks Company (application of defendants for judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated February 25, at trial before Cave, J., with special jury in Middlesex).—Dismissed.

Crichton, trading, &c. v. Saunders (application of defendant from judgment or new trial on appeal from verdict and judgment, dated February 24, at trial before Pollock, B., with a jury at Norwich).—Part heard.

APPEAL COURT II.

Before LINDLEY, L.J., BOWEN, L.J., and KAY, L.J.

THURSDAY, APRIL 16.

In re H. Woolcombe, deceased; Woolcombe v. Woolcombe (construction) (appeal of plaintiff from order of Chitty, J., dated December 11, 1890).—Varied.

FRIDAY, APRIL 17.

Walthamstow Local Board v. Staines (appeal of defendants H. Staines and others from judgment of Chitty, J., dated July 16, 1890).—Dismissed.

SATURDAY, APRIL 18.

In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. Crawford v. Royal Infirmary and other Charities. In re J. K. Mainwaring, dec. Crawford v. Forshaw (appeal of plaintiffs from judgment of Kekewich, J., dated January 11, 1890; heard April 8).—Allowed.

Angus v. Clifford (appeal of defendants from judgment of Romer, J., dated December 2, 1890; heard April 14).—Allowed.

M. P. Reeves (otherwise Stonehill, spinster) v. E. Pennington (application of defendant to enter verdict for appellant or for new trial on appeal from verdict of special jury in favour of codicil at trial before Jeune, J., on February 7).—Part heard.

MONDAY, APRIL 20.

M. P. Reeves (otherwise Stonehill, spinster) v. E. Pennington.—Compromised.

In re Lacon, dec. Lacon v. Lacon (appeal of defendant E. De M. Lacon from judgment of Romer, J., dated February 2, 1891).—Part heard.

TUESDAY, APRIL 21.

In re Lacon, dec. Lacon v. Lacon.—Allowed.

In re Aurum Company and Companies Act, ex parte S. M. Sulzbach & Co. (appeal of S. M. Sulzbach & Co. from order of Stirling, J., dated January 21, 1891, refusing to rectify register of members).—Allowed.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22.

Mary D. Wood (petitioner) v. Percy A. N. St. L. Wood (respondent) (appeal of petitioner from order of Jeune, J., dated February 27, varying registrar's report as to permanent maintenance; heard April 15).—Allowed.

Salomons v. Knight (appeal of plaintiff from order of North, J., dated March 6, refusing to restrain publication of alleged libellous circulars).—Dismissed.

In re W. Cheesman, one, &c. (application of W. L. Vernon) (appeal of W. Cheesman from order of Kekewich, J., dated February 16, for taxation).—Dismissed.

Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company (Lim.) v. Eichbaum (appeal of defendants from order of North, J., dated April 13, refusing delivery of particulars of beneficial title alleged in claim).—Dismissed.

Catherine O'Shea, Wife of W. O'Shea v. C. P. Wood and another and A. C. Steele and others intervening (appeal of A. C. Steele from orders of Jeune, J., dated April 7, for further affidavit of documents relating to intervener's banking accounts).—Dismissed, no one appearing for appellant.

HONOURS AND APPOINTMENTS.

THE Queen has been pleased to confer the dignity of a baronetcy of the United Kingdom upon Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, K.C.S.I.

Mr. T. C. Granger, who has been appointed County Court Judge, is the son of the late Mr. Granger, M.P., who represented Durham in Parliament from 1841 till his death in 1852. Mr. T. C. Granger was called to the bar in 1874, practises on the North-Eastern Circuit, and is a revising barrister. He married, in 1886, a daughter of Mr. James Payn, the novelist.

Mr. J. H. Balfour Browne, Q.C., of the Parliamentary bar, has been elected a Bencher of the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple, in succession to the late Sir Francis Roxburgh.

Mr. Oliver J. Williams, LL.B. (Lond.), solicitor, of Swansea and Llanelly, has been appointed District Registrar of the High Court and County Court Registrar of Cheltenham. Mr. Williams was admitted in 1884.

Mr. William Hodgkinson, of Acocks Green and Birmingham, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Hodgkinson was admitted in 1884.

Mr. Richard Gray, of Bangor, has been appointed a Commissioner for Oaths. Mr. Gray was admitted in 1884.

THE JUDICATURE ACTS.—Mr. Atherley-Jones will take an early opportunity to move that an address be presented to Her Majesty praying that she may be pleased to appoint a royal commission for the purpose of inquiring how far the Judicature Acts have contributed to the more speedy, efficient, and economical administration of justice, and in what respects an amendment thereof is desirable.

THE LATE SIR THOMAS GABRIEL.—The will of Alderman Sir Thomas Gabriel, late of Edgcombe Hall, Wimbledon Park, who died on February 23 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Dame Mary Dutton Gabriel (the widow), Mr. Thomas Gabriel (the nephew), Mr. John Fenwick Fenwick, and Mr. Lumley Smith, Q.C., the executors, the value of the personal estate amounting to upwards of 371,000*l.* The testator bequeaths 2,000*l.* and all his household furniture, plate, pictures, books, horses, carriages, and effects to his wife; 5,500*l.* per annum to his wife for life; 10,000*l.* upon trust for his daughter, Hester Caroline Gabriel; 250*l.* to each of his sons-in-law and executors, Mr. Fenwick and Mr. Lumley Smith; annuities of 100*l.* each to his brother, Mr. James Wild Gabriel, and his sister, Miss Martha Wild Gabriel; and two or three other legacies. His leasehold houses at Queen Anne's Gate he leaves to his wife for life, and Holland Wharf, Blackfriars, to his grandson, Thomas Gabriel Lumley Smith, for life, and then to his children or issue as he shall appoint. As to the residue of his real and personal estate, he leaves one-third upon trust for his daughter, Mrs. Mary Pearson Fenwick, her husband, and children; one-third (subject to annuities to his son-in-law, Mr. Lumley Smith), upon trust in equal shares for his grandchildren, Thomas Gabriel, Sibyl Gabriel, and Alice Gabriel Lumley Smith, the children of his deceased daughter, Mrs. Lumley Smith, and the remaining one-third upon trust for his daughter, Miss Hester Caroline Gabriel.—City Press.

THE Temple show of the Royal Horticultural Society will be opened by Princess Christian at 1 o'clock on Thursday, May 28.

OPEN SPACES ABOUT HOUSES.—In the debate on the second reading of the London Public Health Bills, Mr. Stuart urged that the London County Council should possess the same power of making bye-laws as to open spaces about houses as was enjoyed by every urban authority in England and Wales, and referred to a recent article in the Lancet in which this necessity was pointed out. The bills now before Parliament do not contain these provisions, but this circumstance is to be explained by the fact that, whereas urban authorities generally possess these powers under a section of the Public Health Act of 1875, which authorises them to make bye-laws for new streets and buildings, the London building provisions are not incorporated in the Public Health Bills. The evident interest Mr. Ritchie takes in municipal government, and the zeal he has shown in consolidating and amending the Housing of the Working Classes and the Public Health Acts, create the hope that it is his intention to consolidate and amend the Building and Metropolis Local Management Acts. There would then be ample opportunity for incorporating the provisions as to open space to which Mr. Stuart referred. For our own part we think it matter of little importance whether London is to be dealt with in this respect by bye-laws or by statute. The question is really whether Parliament or the London County Council would be prepared to make the most adequate provision. The council at the present time is so fully alive to the necessity of air-space within the metropolis that there is no doubt the subject would be dealt with liberally. Whether the next council will be equally appreciative of this health necessity in London can only be seen after the next election in January. On this point we are quite prepared to trust Mr. Ritchie, who has in his own department at Whitehall all the experience which would enable him to frame an admirable measure if he intended the details to be settled by Parliament. If our hopes are well founded, we may at no distant time see London in one way or the other given all necessary opportunity for preventing the crowding of houses, and for bringing to an end the preparation of areas for improvement schemes, to which the London County Council has now to resort, at enormous cost to the ratepayers.—Lancet.

BIRTHS.

On April 14, at Eversley, St. Augustine's Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham, the wife of Jesse Herbert, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On April 17, at Berkhamstead, Herts, the wife of John Toovey, Solicitor, of a son.

On April 18, at 16 Queensborough Terrace, Hyde Park, W., the wife of Lawrence Jackson, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On April 18, at 76 Burnt Ash Road, Lee, the wife of William Tyndall Barnard, jun., Barrister-at-Law, of a son.

On April 19, at 1 Radnor Place, Hyde Park, the wife of Arthur Turnour Murray, Barrister-at-Law, of a daughter.

On April 20, at 12 Chepstow Place, Pembridge Square, W., the wife of T. W. Rossiter, of Ely Place, E.C., Solicitor, of a daughter.

On April 20, at Langley House, Dorking, the wife of William J. Hodges, Solicitor, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On April 16, at St. Mary's, Stoke Newington, Dugald William Barrett Tayler, Solicitor, to Marion, youngest daughter of Thomas Carpenter, of Cambridge.

On April 18, at the Cathedral, Colombo, Ceylon, L. B. Clarence, Esq., Barrister-at-Law, of Coaxdon, Axminster, a Judge of the Ceylon Supreme Court, to Elizabeth, daughter of the late J. S. Whittem, Esq., of The Moat House, Walsgrave, Coventry.

On April 21, at St. John's, Blackheath, Reginald Cooper, second son of E. Cooper Willis, Q.C., to Grace Forbes, youngest daughter of Major-General Elliett Ashburner, Bombay Army, Retired List, and of 18 St. John's Park, Blackheath.

	Per Annum. £ s. d.
THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS AND STATUTES	3 4 0
THE LAW JOURNAL NEWSPAPER, NOTES OF CASES, &c.:—
If taken without the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, 6d. a Number, or post free	1 6 0
If taken with the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS	1 0 0

Supplied upon application to THE PUBLISHER, 5 Quality Court, Chancery Lane, W.C.

SCALE FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£ s. d.
Four Lines, or 40 Words, in Column	0 4 0
Every Line additional, or 10 Words	0 0 6
A Column, or Half a Page across	3 3 0
A Page	6 0 0

Public Companies' Announcements, 3s. per inch in Column, or 7l. 4s. per Page.
Auction Sales, 7d. per Line.
ADVERTISEMENTS RECEIVED UP TO NOON ON THURSDAYS.

CONTENTS.

The Law Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1891.

'OBITER DICTA.'

COURT OF APPEAL No. I. has again dealt very summarily with the New Trial Paper. One week has sufficed to enable the judges of that Court to dispose of the list, which contained fifteen entries, the last five applications being dealt with on Friday and Saturday last and all being refused. The list, however, only contained cases entered up to March 26 last; and as a large number of Courts have been sitting for the trial of actions during the past three weeks, there have, no doubt, been many cases entered since that date.

MR. JUSTICE GRANTHAM and Mr. Justice Wright left London on Saturday last to open the Manchester Assizes, and will proceed to Liverpool for the same purpose to-day. Mr. Justice Day will open the commission at Leeds on the North-Eastern Circuit. The assizes at both Liverpool and Leeds are likely to last for some time, so that the judges of the Queen's Bench Division available for practically the rest of the present sittings will be thus reduced to twelve.

MR. ROWLANDS'S Leasehold Enfranchisement Bill was rejected on Wednesday afternoon by a narrow majority —168 voting for and 181 against the second reading. Mr. Haldane moved and Mr. Munro Ferguson seconded an amendment of a more revolutionary character than the bill itself. The amendment embodied the late Mr. J. S. Mill's theory of unearned increment in the value of land, and sought to secure such increment for the benefit of the community. This doctrine of what the seconder of the amendment called 'the municipalisation of land,' or, as Mr. Matthews called them, those 'Georgian' views, did not find much favour with the House, and the amendment only found thirty-nine supporters, whilst 314 voted against it. The bill was supported on the Opposition benches by Mr. W. A. M'Arthur (who seconded Mr. Rowlands), Mr. Lawson, and Sir H. Davey, and by two Conservatives, Mr. Bartley and Mr. Hughes. No member save Mr. Haldane and Mr. Munro Ferguson spoke in favour of the amendment.

IN connection with the approaching Government bill for providing free education, it may be useful to direct attention to the existing enactments of the Education Acts under which a certain amount of free education is already provided. By section 17 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), it is enacted that 'every child attending a school provided by any school board shall pay such weekly fee as may be prescribed by the school board, with the consent of the Education Department; but the school board may from time to time, for a renewable period not exceeding six months, remit the whole or any part of such fee in the case of any child when they are of opinion that the parent of such child is unable from poverty to pay the same;' and by section 74, subsection 3, of the same Act, 'every school board may from time to time, with the approval of the Education Department, make bye-laws for providing (inter alia) for the remission or payment (sic) of the whole or any part of the fees of any child where the parent satisfies the school board that he is unable from poverty to pay the same.' Section 10 of the Elementary Education Act, 1876, repealing section 25 of the Act of 1870 (by which school boards were enabled to pay the fees of children at 'voluntary schools'), enacts that 'the parent, not being a pauper, of any child who is unable by reason of poverty to pay the ordinary fee for such child at any public "elementary school" (which term, by section 3 of the Act of 1870, means a school at which elementary education is the principal part of the education there given, and does not include any school at which the ordinary payments from each scholar exceed 9*d.* a week) may apply to the guardians' having jurisdiction in his parish, 'and it shall be the duty of such guardians, if satisfied of such liability, to pay the said fee, not exceeding 3*d.* a week, or such part thereof as he is, in the opinion of the guardians, so unable to pay.' Finally, by section 26 of the Act of 1870, any school board may, on satisfying the Education Department that 'on the ground of the poverty of the inhabitants of any place in their district it is expedient for the interests of education to provide a school at which no fees shall be required,' provide such school, 'and admit scholars to such school without requiring any fee;' but we believe this enactment has been little, if at all, put into practice.

MR. GOSCHEN, in his Budget speech, mentioned the death duties and the stamp duties as being subjects too extensive and complicated for him to grapple with just now, but pretty plainly intimated an intention of dealing with them at the first convenient opportunity. We are very strongly of opinion that a consolidation of the two sets of statutes under which these two sets of duties are imposed should precede any substantial amendment of them. The death duties are imposed by a series of complicated Acts beginning with 36 Geo. III. c. 52, passed nearly a hundred years ago, under which the legacy duty is calculated, and ending with part 2 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889 (52 Vict. c. 7), which imposes an additional 1 per cent. duty on personal property passing by will or intestacy, where the value exceeds 10,000*l*. The stamp duties do not depend on statutes so venerable or so numerous, for Lord Sherbrooke's Consolidating Act of 1870 was accompanied in the same year by an Inland Revenue Acts Repeal Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 99), which swept away huge masses of complicated and perplexing legislation on the subject. But since 1870 hardly a year has passed without some amendment of the consolidating statute being placed amongst the varied enactments of the annual Customs and Inland Revenue Act, ten of which now contain enactments relating to stamps, while the subject is still further complicated by the death duties themselves being now treated as stamp duties in the statute-book. Let Mr. Goschen, if he really means business, by way of amendment in the no distant future, proceed to the all-important work of consolidation without any delay.

De Souza v. Cobden (Notes of Cases, p. 61) is merely a corollary of Beresford-Hope v. Lady Sandhurst, 58 Law J. Rep. Q. B. 719, in which the Court of Appeal had held on petition that a woman was incapable of being elected to the office of county councillor, having regard to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and especially to section 63 thereof, from which women derive their qualification as voters. Miss Cobden, having sat and voted notwithstanding this decision, was sued for penalties under section 41 of the Act of 1882, by which, 'if any person acts in a corporate office without having made the declaration by the Act required, or without being qualified at the time of making the declaration, or after ceasing to be qualified, or after becoming disqualified, he shall for each such offence be liable to a fine not exceeding 50*l*. recoverable by action.' Mr. Justice Day had given judgment for the plaintiff for five penalties of 25*l*. each (see LAW JOURNAL for November 29, 1890, at p. 701). The Court of Appeal has now affirmed this judgment in substance, but reduced the penalties to 10*s*. in each case. The judgment is indisputably correct in substance, and the power to vary the amount of the fine appears to be fairly deducible from rule 4 of Order LVIII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, by which the Court of Appeal may 'make any order which ought to have been made by the High Court or a judge thereof.' If, however, a jury had awarded the full penalty, Miss Cobden might perhaps have had some difficulty in getting it reduced (see LAW JOURNAL for March 22, 1890).

THE question whether women ought to be qualified for the office of county councillor or not is one which we will not presume to discuss in these columns, but it is important from the legal point of view to call attention to two points. In the first place, if women are to become qualified to sit on county councils, à fortiori ought they to become qualified to sit on town councils, for it is on the municipal borough franchise that the county council franchise is based. The most cursory reference to the Local Government Act, 1888, and its frequent incorporation by reference of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1888, will show this. In the second place, it is a very serious matter to make measures of this kind retrospective, so as to extinguish liabilities to penalties incurred before the passing of such measures. No doubt in many cases, where vexatious actions have been brought by common informers for penalties (see, for instance, the Larceny (Advertisements) Act, 1870) an Act has been passed to restrict such actions in one way or another, providing, for instance, that all actions brought before the passing of the Act shall be stayed, but even in these cases it is usual to provide that the proceedings be stayed on payment by the defendant of the plaintiff's costs out of pocket, and there is a wide difference between actions brought against persons who have offended in pure ignorance of the law, and actions brought against persons who have offended in spite of their perfect knowledge of it, with the object of getting the law altered. The question whether penalties already incurred should be extinguished is a very difficult one, and should be determined not so much with reference to a particular case in which the cause of the defendants may be highly popular in some quarters, but on general grounds. The penal or 'popular' action is still retained in scores of cases as a weapon for use on behalf of the public, and any weakening of one of these weapons must inevitably tend to weaken them all.

WE have before us the 'Tithe Rent-charge Recovery Rules, 1891,' made by the Lord Chancellor 'after consultation with the Rule Committee of County Court Judges' under section 3 of the Tithe Act, 1891, which direct that 'in framing such rules regard shall be had to make the procedure as simple and inexpensive as possible.' There are fifty-eight rules and thirty-four forms. The matters dealt with are the procedure for the recovery of tithe by the appointment of a receiver (see s. 2 of the Act); the remission of tithe where it exceeds in amount two-thirds of the value of the land out of which it issues (see s. 8); the certificate of the County Court where the occupier's liability notice (see s. 2, subs. 6) has not been served; and the procedure for recovery of rates from the tithe-owner (see s. 6). There are also nearly a score of pure practice rules, amongst which may be noticed rule 42, that costs 'subject to the provisions of the Act' (see s. 2, subs. 8, and s. 5, subs. 2) are to be in the discretion of the Court, and rule 55, that non-compliance with any of the rules is 'not to render any proceedings void, unless the Court shall so direct.' Rules 36–38 are of the most pressing importance at the present time. It will be remembered by those who have studied the Act, that in the very numerous cases in which tenants are bound by contract made before the passing of the Act—i.e. before March 26—to pay the tithe, landlords are bound to serve notices on the tithe-owners to that effect on pain of forfeiting their rights to recover the tithe from the tenants under s. 2, subs. 2 of the Act, unless they succeed in obtaining from the County Court certificates that 'there was good and sufficient cause for failure to give the notice, and that the occupier was not prejudiced thereby.' Rules 36–38 deal with this all-important matter by providing that 'where an owner has failed to serve an occupier's liability notice,' and wishes to obtain the required certificate, he must send an application to the registrar 'according to the form in the Appendix'—which Appendix, so far as we have been able to discover, contains no form of 'occupier's liability notice'—and a copy of such application to the occupier. The registrar is then to send notice to the occupier of a day for hearing the application, and 'all costs of any such application shall be paid by the owner of land making the same, unless the Court is of opinion that the opposition to the application is frivolous and vexatious.' The Rules can be had at Eyre & Spottiswoode's for 2½*d.*

THE Court of five judges, which has been sitting last week to hear Gibson (appellant) v. Lawson (respondent) and two other cases arising out of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, is constituted under section 4 of the Judicature Act, 1884. By that enactment 'a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice may at any time be constituted of more than two judges if the president of the said division, with the concurrence of not less than two other judges thereof, shall be of opinion that it is expedient so to constitute the same.' Prior to that Act, in Saunders v. Richardson, 50 Law J. Rep. M. C. 137, and Winyard v. Toogood, 52 Law J. Rep. M. C. 25, Divisional Courts of five judges had sat to hear cases on the construction of the Education Acts, under the authority of section 17 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, by which the concurrence of all the judges (then only five in number) of the division or a majority of them was necessary for authorising a Divisional Court of more than two. Since the Act of 1884 a Divisional Court of five judges has, we believe, sat but once only—namely, in Regina v. Dudley and others, 54 Law J. Rep. M. C. 32, the case in which, on a motion for judgment on a special verdict, the Court found the prisoners guilty of murder and sentenced them to death—which sentence was afterwards commuted to six months' imprisonment.

IF, in speculating for 'differences,' a man sells on the Stock Exchange shares which he has not got, and on being compelled to deliver them has to buy them at an exorbitant price, he cannot sue any persons who, by false representations to any particular person or to the public generally, as to the value of the shares, may have unnaturally forced the price up. Such appears to be the result of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Salaman v. Warner and others, in which the plaintiff was a broker who claimed more than 7,000*l.* damages against the defendants, who were the promoters, stock-brokers, and financiers of Warner's Safe Cure Company, 'for fraudulently rigging the market,' and thereby causing him to lose that sum in fulfilling his contracts to deliver shares. The High Court held that no specific fraud had been committed which affected the legal rights of the plaintiff. 'The fraud, if any,' observed Mr. Justice Day, in delivering judgment, 'which was practised on the committee of the Stock Exchange is not one which the plaintiff can connect with the original transaction out of which his losses occurred.' 'The plaintiff,' said the Master of the Rolls, 'claimed a right of action because, as he said, the defendants had not told someone else, who was in no way connected with the plaintiff, the truth. There is no such right as this by the law of England.' Upon the authorities there is no doubt of the correctness of these views, Bedford v. Bagshawe, 4 H. & N. 538, so far as it points the other way, having been overruled in Peek v. Gurney, 43 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 19. The Court of Appeal has further and expressly laid down that no civil action can be maintained for a conspiracy unless the conspirators conspire to do something against the rights of the plaintiff, and effect their purpose and commit a breach of those rights, the Master of the Rolls stating that the fact of a conspiracy does not increase a right of action in the least—a statement which should be compared with the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber in Gregory v. The Duke of Brunswick, 16 Law J. Rep. C. P. 35, in which a declaration for conspiracy to hoot an actor off the stage was held good.

THE final report of the Royal Commission on Market Rights and Tolls affords some very interesting reading on the history and origin of markets in Great Britain and Ireland, on the modern legislation which has dealt with the question, and on markets in foreign countries. A market is defined as 'an authorised public concourse of buyers and sellers of commodities meeting at a place more or less strictly limited or defined, at an appointed time.' 'A fair,' they say, 'has been defined as a larger market.' Thus in Comyn's Digest it is said: 'Every fair is a market—not e contrà . . . therefore when any statute speaks of a fair, a market should also be comprehended.' The commissioners' view is that the difference consists in the fairs being less frequently held, extending over a longer continuous period, and being of a more miscellaneous character. Is not the difference rather that the fair is of a less local character, so that it is both naturally larger than an ordinary market and tends to last longer? The Great Book Fair at Leipzig is, we believe, for the whole of Germany at least, and is confined to one commodity. There are also geese fairs at Nottingham and, if we mistake not, other fairs specially for a particular class of goods. There is also another element, absent from markets, but sometimes the principal factor in fairs, and that is festivity. In some parts of the country what were invariably called fairs are or were held on Whit Mondays and Tuesdays, indicating the origin of the word from 'feria,' the proper ecclesiastical term for a saint's-day, at which there was nothing in he nature of a market. These fairs were devoted to merry-go-rounds, penny theatres, and other like amusements, and to the exhibition of every species of human deformity and affliction.

THE origin of the custom of market overt is traced to the ninth century, when Notker of St. Gall declared that purchases made at annual fairs should always be valid. In England a market was the subject of a royal grant, and until a comparatively recent period the ordinary means of establishing a market was by obtaining a grant from the Crown. Between 1199 and 1483 more than 2,800 such grants were made. A complete list of those recorded in the Patent Rolls since 1700 is given in the appendix. They extend to 1846, and are for the most part in favour of individuals, among whom, in the 6 Geo. IV., it is interesting to observe the name of Henry John Viscount Palmerston, though there are a few grants to corporations and parishes. The Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, was the first step in this country to attach a municipal character to markets. As, however, its title indicates, it was rather a common form to be incorporated in special Acts than a piece of substantive legislation. The Local Government Act, 1858, really marks the new era by giving to local authorities conditional powers to establish markets. After a brief review of Ireland the commissioners give a short account of foreign systems. Continental countries appear to have been distinctly ahead of us in this respect. In France the privilege of establishing 'halles' or markets, formerly appertaining to the 'seigneurs justiciers' was established in 1790 without compensation. Now markets are held under the authority of the prefects, and new ones established at the instance of the commune interested. In Belgium, market rights are vested by prescription in the communal councils. The commissioners sum up generally by saying that in France, Belgium, Germany, and Austria market rights are privileges possessed by municipalities with certain powers, controlled by the State, to originate new markets; and that vested rights of individuals are not allowed to obstruct the public interest. In the United States, as might be expected, market monopoly or privilege is unknown.

THE Custody of Children Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 3), which received the royal assent just before Easter, no doubt owes its origin to Dr. Barnardo's case. It contains six sections. By section 1 the Court has express power to refuse a writ to a parent for the production of a child if the Court be of opinion that the parent has deserted the child, or 'has otherwise so conducted himself' that his right to the custody of the child ought not to be enforced. By section 2 the Court may order a parent, on application for a writ, to repay the costs of bringing up a child to any 'person,' which term, by section 5, includes 'school or institution.' By section 3, where a parent has allowed his child to be brought up by another person at that person's expense 'for such a length of time and under such circumstances as to satisfy the Court that the parent was unmindful of his parental duties,' the Court 'shall not make an order for the delivery of the child to the parent unless the parent has satisfied the Court that, having regard to the welfare of the child, he is a fit person to have the custody of the child.' By section 4 the Court may order that a child, though not delivered to the parent, is to be brought up 'in the religion in which the parent has a legal right to require that the child should be brought up;' but it is added that 'nothing in the Act shall affect the power of the Court to consult the wishes of the child in considering what order ought to be made, or diminish the right which any child now possesses to the exercise of his own free choice.'

THE point raised in the case of The London County Council v. Candler & Sons upon the construction of the proviso attached to section 13 of the Metropolis Management and Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1882, is of some practical importance. The section prohibits the erection in the metropolis of temporary wooden structures without a license in writing from the County Council, as successors of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the proviso exempts from the operation of the section wooden structures of a temporary character 'erected by a builder for use' during the repair of any building. In the case in question, a firm of builders engaged in carrying out alterations and repairs to a public-house erected in front of it a temporary wooden structure for the proprietor to carry on business in during the alterations. The County Council, whose sanction had not been obtained, charged the builder with a breach of the section, and the builder endeavoured to shield himself under the proviso. The structure was clearly 'erected by a builder for use during the repairs,' and so within the just meaning of the words used, but, on the other hand, it was so clearly within the mischief against which the Act was directed, that the Court was reluctant to construe the section in the manner suggested. Such a building would clearly be exceedingly likely to get on fire, and very inflammable and dangerous to the public if it did so; and if a temporary wooden public-house may be used pending alterations and repairs, why might not a temporary wooden theatre? Moreover, it is very probable that the proviso was inserted in consequence of the case of Fielding v. The Rhyl Commissioners, L. R. 3 C. P. Div. 272, in which it was argued that a workmen's shed was a new building within the meaning of a local bye-law. In the result the Court interpreted the section in accordance with this more restricted view; and the proviso, therefore, will in future only apply to structures erected by a builder for his use—such as an office for the inspection of plans and the payment of wages or a shed for the shelter of the workmen and the storage of their tools.

ARE we to have a change in what the Courts have generally recognised as the 'mercantile rate' of interest, that is, interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum? The appreciation of first-class securities, which has been going on for some years past, has not been without its influence on this question, which has been pointedly referred to in two recent cases. In one of them (Wainwright's Case, 59 Law J. Rep. Chanc. 281), Mr. Justice Kay allowed interest at 4*l.* per cent. only on deposits directed to be repaid to a shareholder on the rescission of his contract to take shares, remarking that it was 'very hard to say now that 5 per cent. was the mercantile rate of interest when from real bonâ fide security you cannot get more than 3 per cent. In the later case of The London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company v. The South-Eastern Railway Company (26 Notes of Cases, p. 64), in settling accounts between the two companies the official referee allowed interest at 5 per cent. on balances which ought to have been paid by the defendant company to the plaintiff company, and Mr. Justice Kekewich refused to alter the rate to 4 per cent. The observations of the learned judge, however, though he disclaimed any intention of fully considering the subject, tell in the same direction as those of Mr. Justice Kay. 'Since the statute (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, s. 28),' observed Mr. Justice Kekewich, 'I believe that it has always been the habit of judges directing juries to tell them they may give 5 per cent.—that what is called in the statute "the current rate of interest" may be 5 per cent.—and that that view 'has prevailed until now, as a rule, notwithstanding that it is extremely difficult for prudent persons to get so much as even 3 or 4 per cent. on investments, and notwithstanding that persons engaged in trade do not gain those large returns which were formerly frequent. The question,' he thought, 'deserves more consideration than it has hitherto received; . . . but any change must be made with some consensus of opinion, and the alteration must emanate from a higher authority than myself.'

'LAW JOURNAL REPORTS' FOR MAY.

THE May number of the LAW JOURNAL REPORTS contains an instalment of the Statutes of the Realm—viz. three Irish Acts (Seed Potatoes and Railways), the Custody of Children Act, Consolidated Fund (No. 1), Army Annual, and Technical Instruction Acts. In the Reports there will be found eighteen cases in the Chancery Division, of which four are appeal cases (pp. 241–312); twenty-four cases in the Queen's Bench Division, including eighteen appeal cases (pp. 209–280); one Scotch appeal in the House of Lords and two cases in the Privy Council (pp. 1–16).

