GRAMMATICAL INSTITUTES;

OR, THE

PRINCIPLES AND RULES

OF

ENGLISH GRAMMAR

ABRIDGED AND VERSIFIED,

FOR

THE USE OF SCHOOLS AND YOUNG PERSONS

BY R. TOBITT,

Master of the Grammar School, Castle Street, Holborn.

From Education, as the gen'ral cause,
The public character its colour draws;
Hence the prevailing manners take their cast,—
Extravagant or sober, loose or chaste.

TO

THE SOCIETY OF SCHOOLMASTERS

AND

PRIVATE TEACHERS.

GENTLEMEN,

As a member of your truly laudable Institution, I take the liberty of dedicating to you this little Work, which has been the result of considerable experience in the arduous yet delightful task of Teaching. As it is usual to expect that every author should say something relative to his own performance, the writer of this small manual most respectfully begs to submit to the Public the following observations. A slight view of the work will show, that it is not intended to supersede the use of a Prose English Grammar, but, as an Auxiliary, it is designed to simplify and illustrate the principles and rules of the language, in a style, or dress (for youth) not to be attained in any way, or by any method, equal to the alluring charms of rhyme or verse, which the author feels warranted in asserting will be readily committed to memory, and easily retained. An apology for this attempt, namely, to expedite the attainment of an acquisition, of such general utility and importance, can scarcely be deemed needful; let it then suffice, that the objects are, to elucidate the terms, not by a translation of the word merely, but by giving copious examples in which such words occur, whereby the sense, use, and meaning, are clearly made out, and with readiness understood.

The author is not disposed to censure other writers on the subject, but candidly owns that he has read, with pleasure and interest, by far the greater number of them; he has, however, taken the liberty to deviate from many of them, in some things, perhaps of little importance. In the selection of Examples given for elucidation, he is indebted to L. Murray, and Lennie's principles of English: he has also cited many sentiments from the Holy Scriptures, which appeared suitable to illustrate the subject. In the Rules usually following the definitions, little attempt has been made to give exercises for correction, but every rule has its correspondent examples correctly written, which are intended to be used as exercises in parsing, at the discretion of the teacher. When any thing appeared to justify a remark, either in the definitions, or in the rules of syntax, it will be found at the bottom of the page where it occurs. In these Institutes, an attempt has been made to familiarize and illustrate the distribution and properties of all the parts of speech,—cases of nouns, and pronouns, moods and tenses of verbs, &c. &c.—by correspondent examples under each definition and rule. In the above, as much brevity has been used as appeared to be consistent with perspicuity; and it is hoped that the examples will be found as intelligible as the same things written in prose.

It is also presumed, that no other work of the kind (as an Auxiliary) has an equal claim to the patronage of a liberal Public, on the ground of its peculiar construction, namely, the association of principles, precepts, duties, obligations, invitations, cautions, and encouragements, which are here interwoven, and which will appear to the mind of an ordinary reader to be happily incorporated in the work, and are well suited to render it peculiarly interesting to the youthful mind.

It may not be deemed incongruous to inform the Public, that the little Work now submitted to them has been proved to be of great utility, and its effects have far exceeded the expectations of the author. After all that has been, or can be said on the subject, much depends on the living voice: long experience has confirmed this fact, that to arrest the attention, fix the mind, and excite the emulation of children, is of considerable importance in the art of teaching. This method will interest the pupils, give them an opportunity of discovering, as well as estimating, their own powers of discrimination, and will make the study, which would otherwise be dry and uninteresting, both pleasant and profitable. Lastly, the author begs to observe, that this Epitome will accord with Murray, Grant, Blair, Louth, Lennie, or any other writer who may have been selected, and whose work may have been adopted by those teachers who may feel disposed to give this little Abridgment a fair trial. As an excitement to the study, he takes the liberty to conclude with the sentiment of an eminent and candid writer on language:—*All that regards the study of composition merits the higher attention, on this account, that it is intimately connected with the improvement of our intellectual powers, teaching us to think, as well as to speak, accurately.

* Blair.

The author has no pretensions to poetic powers; he has therefore declined to give any rules or examples in Prosody; but begs to refer his readers to those authors who have already written on this part of the subject with much skill, judgment, and ingenuity.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem. It is shown that the problem is equivalent to the problem of finding the minimum of a certain functional. This is done by means of the method of Lagrange multipliers.

The second part of the paper is devoted to the construction of the minimum. It is shown that the minimum is attained at a certain point. This is done
by means of the method of Lagrange multipliers.
The third part of the paper is devoted to the construction of the minimum. It is shown that the minimum is attained at a certain point. This is done
by means of the method of Lagrange multipliers.
The fourth part of the paper is devoted to the construction of the minimum. It is shown that the minimum is attained at a certain point. This is done
by means of the method of Lagrange multipliers.
The fifth part of the paper is devoted to the construction of the minimum. It is shown that the minimum is attained at a certain point. This is done by means of the method of Lagrange multipliers.

METHOD,

Or Plan of Teaching used by the Author,

And which he most respectfully submits to Teachers of English Grammar.

IF experience be consulted, it will be found that the most beneficial effects in teaching, result from a judicious arrangement of pupils (males or females) into classes : this being done, emulation is excited, and a laudable spirit of rivalry is soon seen to be the consequence. In the order of arrangement the author takes the liberty of suggesting his own plan, viz. The first day in every month is a day of examination ; the result of this trial enables him to assign to each pupil the class for which he is eligible. During the month, his advancement in his own class is of course proportionate to the number of merits, or rewards, which he is able to produce. When the first class are qualified to read the definitions of a noun, adjective, and pronoun, in their prose grammar, they may be required, or rather allowed, to read the same things in verse : this exercise will excite much interest, and it will be found that their understanding and judgment will be nearly equal to their voice or utterance. It must be owned, that where this is not done, the practice of teaching grammar is dry, irksome, and tedious, with little or no interest to the learner ; on the contrary, a number well selected, (from six to twelve) as may be deemed expedient to form a class, having their tender, docile minds animated, invigorated, and encouraged, exciting the most praiseworthy emulation, and the hope of such a reward as will not fail to sweeten labour, (if labour, indeed, it may be called,) they then feel a lively interest in what before they considered a toilsome drudgery. The first, and most important, object in teaching, is to arrest and secure attention, which this method will achieve ; and it will be found (almost without exception), that the pupil's endeavours to learn will then equal the most assiduous and diligent tutor's efforts to communicate instruction.

Such few lessons often repeated, will give the pupils a general idea of the objects to be attained, namely, the discriminating or discerning of a noun from an adjective, or indeed from almost any other part of speech, which is always done by questions, varied according to the nature of the lesson, and the supposed ability of the class. In this way the vowels, consonants, diphthongs, and triphthongs, as well as articles, are soon learned, and easily retained. A similar method is pursued by every progressive class throughout the school:—indeed, the more advanced pupils profit by this plan far more than the junior classes, and their eagerness to rival each other is truly astonishing. It is hoped that the few remarks at the bottom of the pages will considerably assist the learner, as well as lessen the labour of the tutor. The Scripture references are intended to exhibit the importance of the precepts here inculcated, as well as to afford an opportunity to the skilful preceptor of referring his pupils to the words of Divine inspiration, the authority of which ought to be decisive to every Christian teacher.

R. T.

Castle Street, Jan. 21, 1825.

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the smell of fresh air. It was a relief after being stuck in traffic for hours.
 The sun was shining brightly, and the birds were chirping happily.
 I took a deep breath and felt a sense of peace wash over me.
 The world seemed so much better
 when I was finally free to go.
 I walked towards the park, and the children's laughter filled the air.
 The grass was green and soft under my feet. I sat down on a bench and watched the world go by.
 The clouds were white and fluffy,
 and the sky was a clear blue.
 I felt like I was in a different world, a world where everything was perfect. I closed my eyes and let the sun warm my face.
 The world was so beautiful, and
 I was so lucky to be here.
 I took another deep breath and felt a sense of joy fill my heart.
 The world was so much better
 when I was finally free to go.

THE END

INTRODUCTION.

PROPRIETY of speech, and writing too,
Depends on rules both accurate and true.
These rules to simplify, and make them chime,
Shall be my object, now I write in rhyme.
To smooth the road to science is my plan,
And make the path as pleasant as I can ;
To check the progress of misguided youth,
And stimulate with zeal a love to truth.
All docile pupils gladly will rehearse
This English Grammar now abridg'd in verse ;
And some adults amusement here may find,
To give a relish to a pensive mind.
Utility throughout shall be my aim :
This bear in mind, advantage you may gain.

The Argument and Design.

NOTHING can politeness more discredit,
 Than vulgar speech, which has no real merit.
 The habits we acquire in early days,
 Will form our minds for censure, or for praise.
 To train * up children well to speak aright,
 Requires much care, yet gives as much delight :
 Of solecism, then, we must beware,
 And fitness urge, with most judicious care :
 Whatever faulty speech we yet retain,
 We must reject, that juster we may gain :
 The voice and manner too, should not be ill,
 Both being improv'd by practice and by skill.
 These reasons then, whatever they may seem,
 Shall urge my muse to prosecute my theme.

* Prov. xxii. v. 6.

The parts of English Grammar are but four,
 And each of them we here must well explore ;
 Deriv'd from Latin roots, to make them plain,—
 We'll trace their meaning, and their import gain.

ORTHOGRAPHY.*

ORTHOGRAPHY, the first we notice here,
 Most useful is, as straightly will appear.
 'Twill teach you rightly how you ought to spell,
 And range your letters truly, just, and well.
 The powers of letters too you will discern,
 Which those who study Grammar, well must learn.

* Orthography is here inserted in compliance with custom, and for the sake of order, and not from a conviction of its utility. The author is of opinion, that the art of Spelling (generally) should precede the study of Grammar.

The VOWELS.

The Vowels you must learn to comprehend,
 With other letters justly how to blend.
 By all grammarians this has well been said,
 No sound can be express'd without their aid :
 Thus a, e, i, and o, as well as u,
 Require no aid, to give each sound its due :
 The w and y are quite contiguous,
 And, though complex, are surely not ambiguous.
 Beginning words, or syllables, you know,
 They're Consonants, as here we plainly show ;
 When not beginning syllables or words,
 You'll call them Vowels—this with truth accords.

CONSONANTS.

The Consonants in number are nineteen ;
 All which imperfect sounds, it will be seen,
 The aid of Vowels always justly claim,
 To form their sounds distinctly ; this is plain.

Thus, b alone, a sound we cannot call,—

But, join'd with o and l, produces boll;

So d, and k, would still remain quite mute,—

But, join'd with e, and a, seem well to suit.

DIPHTHONGS.

A Diphthong, is two Vowels join'd in sound,

As o, and u, pronounc'd in ounce and pound;

* A proper diphthong then, 'tis plain and clear,

Is, when both vowels you may truly hear.

* When diphthongs are improper, you may note,

Then one is silent, such as a, in boat.

The Triphthong also, has three vowels join'd,

As e, a, u, in beauty, you will find.

EXAMPLES.

* Thus, mischief will delight all silly boys,
Who spend their time in folly, sloth, and noise.

* As peas and beans are reckon'd wholesome food,
So tea with cream, we say, is very good.

ETYMOLOGY.

THE second part of Grammar clearly shows
 The source from which the language freely flows :
 The roots of words, as well as use and kind,
 By Etymology we justly find :
 The quality of words we thus discern,
 And all their various derivations learn.

Nine parts of speech to Grammar are assign'd,
 The names of which describe their sort and kind :
 These terms, though Latin, yet they plainly show,
 How English verse from Foreign roots may grow.
 The Article, which first we notice here,
 Claims well this place, as justly does appear :
 The Noun is second, this you will allow ;
 The Adjective is third, I here avow ;
 The Pronoun fourth succeeds, you must admit ;
 The Verb comes fifth, and this is just and fit.

The Adverb is the sixth,—'tis right it should ;

The Preposition, seventh is understood ;

Conjunction, eighth in order now we show ;

The Interjection is the last, you know.

ARTICLES.

The Articles, in number are but two,—

The A or An, and The, which we shall show :

The A or An, indefinite we call,

Because 'tis us'd defining not at all.

The second Article most clearly shows

The limits of the noun, in verse or prose ;

It well defines, and shows to what extent

Its application to the noun is meant.

We write the a, when follow'd by the u,

When thus protracted, such as y, o, u ;

REMARKS.—A is used before such words as, a few, a great many, as a few plums, a great many pears.

The is used before adverbs in the comparative degree, as, The more you study grammar, the better you will like it.

Without an Article when nouns appear,
 To limit their extension, 'twill be clear
 They're always taken in their full extent,—
 As man is mortal,—all mankind is meant.
 A consonant requires an a before,
 With few exceptions,—one or two, not more.
 The silent h, is one we notice here,
 That justly claims the an, 'tis very clear :
 This rule, perhaps, admits of one exception,
 And this is such to which I've no objection ;
 This then must be decisive in all cases,
 The h requires an in all such places
 Where'er the accent falls on words like these,— Historical, heroic, if you please.
 Then write the an, to make it quite complete,
 As, “ an heroic action scorns defeat.”
 The word historical requires the same,
 And must have an, not a, 'tis clear and plain.

Before the vowels we must use the an ;

Remember this, for I am sure you can.

Thus, when we say, an elm, an oak, an our,

We mean, some elm, some oak, and nothing more.

The w and y, claim this exception,—

A week, a year, as well as such a one ;

A unit then of numbers is the least ;

A universal cause can not decrease,—

A euphony delights the mind and ear ;

Its charms are great, 'tis evident and clear.

These little words are vaguely us'd, you know,—

They limit not the noun, but plainly show,

That any one is meant not well defin'd ;

This plain direction you must bear in mind.

Before a singular noun we use the a,

But plural nouns sometimes require the.

Take this example now, and this alone,—

A field is one,—The fields are not my own.

NOUNS.

ALL Nouns, are either persons, things, or places ;
 They varied are by number, gender, cases.
 A Noun is also understood to mean
 Such things as may be either felt or seen.
 These Nouns (though varied), may be well attain'd,
 As gender, number, case, shall be explain'd.
 By proper Nouns are meant, all proper names,
 As London, Baltic, Chatham, Ann, or James :
 The Common Nouns, I wish you here to note,
 Are chiefly things, as table, ship, or boat :
Slates, ink, and paper, pencil, rule, and pen,
 Are common Nouns, as well as boys and men.
Collective Nouns are such, 'tis well allow'd,
 As flock, or drove, a multitude, or crowd :
 The Abstract Nouns must follow in their place,
 As temperance, prudence, hope, love, joy, and grace.

The Participial, or the Verbal Noun,
 Derives its name from verbs, as shall be shown ;
 Thus, Reading will conduce to information,
 And Writing well deserves our commendation.

ON NUMBER.

The Numbers of the nouns are simply two ;
 The Singular means one, as boot, or shoe :
 The Plural more than one distinctly shows,
 As girls and boys require good boots, or shoes.
 The general way to pluralize the nouns,
 Is adding s, thus pound is render'd pounds ;
 Nouns in s, sh, ch, x, or o,
 All form their plurals by e s, you know.
 The nouns in y we now must pluralize,
 And show that sky is plural made by skies;

REMARKS.—When ch sounds hard like k, the plural is formed by adding s only, as monarch, monarchs.

When two vowels appear in the last syllable, no change takes place in the plural, as attorneys, journeys.

Omitting y, and writing i, e, s,

The Plural forms, and this you must confess.

The Singular nouns in f, or in f e,

To write them Plural, you may plainly see,

You change the f, and likewise the f e,

And v e s insert, for this must be :

Thus Singular leaf is Plural made by leaves,

And sheaf, when pluraliz'd, is render'd sheaves :

So loaf is singular—this a child well knows,

When Plural made, is always written loaves.

ON GENDER.

Four Genders, here we show, to nouns belong ;

First, Masculine, as father, brother, son ;

REMARKS.—Nouns in f, generally have their plurals in s, as muffs.

Next Feminine, as sister, duck, or hen ;

Then Neuter, such as paper, ink, or pen :

The Common gender will no sex define,

As parent, children, eagles, sheep, or swine.

CASES OF NOUNS.

The Nominative must the subject be,

Or agent to the verb, as you may see ;

Possessive, shows or indicates possession,

As, “ Lucy’s fan is new, without a question :”

The Objective, too, by one plain rule is shown,—

’Tis always govern’d, this you’ll freely own :

The Active Verb must govern, this is plain—

As, “ He who learns his grammar, good will gain :”

The Participle also this will do,

As, “ Writing grammar, aids you to construe.”

This case too will admit a Preposition,
 Which much assists in English composition ;
 Thus, “ Thomas should with ardour persevere,
 For want of zeal will leave him in the rear.”

Examples on Proper Nouns.

Though London is a city large and fair,
 Yet Brighton is esteem'd for purer air :
 The Baltic Sea due east of Denmark lies,—
 The River Thames near Gloucester has its rise :
 While modest Mary shuns delusive ways,
Eliza perseveres to merit praise.

Examples on Common Nouns.

Those pupils who their studies best attend,
 Are such as tutors always most commend :
 All teachers, qualified well to teach,
 Should well apply the sense and use to each ;
 Their patience and their skill they must combine,
 Or good results will tutors seldom find.
 The fields, the trees, the plants, and every flow'r,
 Proclaim aloud to man th' Almighty pow'r.

Examples on Abstract Nouns.

Economy is good in every station,—
Frugality ensures our commendation :
 Real charity* a lovely aspect wears,
It hopeth all things, truly all things bears.
 † The wisdom that descendeth from above,
 Is pure and gentle, harmless as the dove.
 True courage well becomes our situation,
Its best attendant is our moderation.

Examples on Collective Nouns.

The multitude pursue their own chief good ;
 How few there are, whose passions are subdued !
 The fleet was sailing past the Kentish shore,
 'Twill be in sight while passing round the Nore.
 A herd of cattle, grazing in the morn,
Affords a sight as pleasant as the corn.
 A flock of sheep, all quietly at rest,
Reminds us, that a social life is best.
 Some people busy are, yet little do,
 The proper method they will not pursue.

* 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5. † James, iii. 17, 18.

ADJECTIVES,

AND EXAMPLES.

AN Adjective is also well defin'd,

As qualifying that to which 'tis join'd ;

The three degrees of which, you here may see,

Will raise or drop it, as the case may be.

The Positive, indeed, is no degree,

But simply states the subject so to be :

Comparative the quality will raise,

As " Growing better always merits praise ;"

REMARKS.—Some Adjectives are compared regularly, as wise, wiser, wisest ; others irregularly, as good, better, best ; some by the adverbs, as prudent, more prudent, most prudent ; others admit of no comparison, as chief, universal, perfect, extreme.

Dissyllables ending with e final, are often compared by er and est, as polite, politer, politest ; ample, ampler, amplest.

If a vowel precede y, it is not changed into i, as gay, gayer, gayest.

Nouns are often used as adjectives, as a gold ring, a silver cup.

Superlative the highest state of all ;

The lowest likewise this degree we call.

A kind and courteous friend will not disguise,

A kinder and more courteous you may prize ;

The kindest and most courteous claims my choice,

With such a friend I cannot but rejoice.

*'Tis good to listen to the voice of truth,

†'Tis better much to bear the yoke in youth ;

'Tis best of all, our passions to subdue,

‡To think on what is lovclly, just, and true.

§A wise and prudent pupil shuns deceit,

A wiser and more prudent is discreet ;

|| The wisest and most prudent knows the art

(Of self-controul) by which he rules his heart.

* Prov. i. 20.

† Lam. iii. 27.

‡ Philip. iv. 8.

§ Prov. viii. 12.

|| Prov. xvi. 32.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS.

THE persons of the Pronouns are but three,
 As I and Thou, and either He or She :
 The Plural number also has the same,
 Thus We and You, as well as They, we name.
 The Pronouns will the want of nouns supply ;
 Instead of names, we say He, She, or I.
 Thus all the Pronouns claim a proper place,
 In person, number, gender, and in case.

THE NEUTER PRONOUN.

The Neuter Pronoun It we here must name,
 For order's sake—it surely has a claim ;
 It varies not, except in this one case,—
Possessive has an s, in every place.

CASES OF PRONOUNS.

Singular Number.

The Nominatives are, I, thou, he, she ;
 Possessive, mine, thine, his, and hers, you see ;
 Objective, me, thee, him, as well as her,—
 With it, the Neuter,—this you may infer.

Plural Number.

The Plural Pronouns, now we justly say,
 Are, in the Nominatives, we, you, they ;
 Possessive, we assert, are ours, yours, theirs ;
 Objective, us, you, them, your book declares.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS,

AND EXAMPLES.

Of Simple Relatives we reckon three,
 Which all relate to words, and must agree.

The first of these we always reckon who,
 The second which, the last is that, you know.

The antecedent, or the leading noun,
 Is that to which all Relatives belong :

As who relates to persons, here we show,

So which, t' inferior animals,* you know ;

And things inanimate, both small and great,

Require which, not who, we clearly state :

†He, who preserves and keeps us day and night,

Eternal is, in wisdom, power, and might.

‡The barren tree, which cumber'd long the ground,

For want of fruit, was suddenly cut down.

Such silly girls who love to chat and play,

Deserve no care, their time is thrown away.

Now, we assert, the bird, which sweetly sings,

Could never fly, without the use of wings ;

*REMARKS — Who is sometimes applied to animals, when they are represented as speaking, as in fabulous writings, &c.

† Psalm cxxi. 7.

‡ Luke, xiii. 7.

The faithful dog, which knows his master's call,

Deserves the crumbs which from the table fall :

So beasts and fishes, which we reckon good,

Yield much support to man, as wholesome food.

The other Simple Relative, we show,

Is often us'd instead of which or who :

*Thus, weeks and days, that we have pass'd in vain,

Afford no pleasure, but increase our pain.

The youth that lives to reason nobly acts,—

He flies from folly, and all vice rejects.

The docile pupil, that by prudence lives,

Has more content, than folly ever gives.

The compound relative is always known,

Including both the relative and noun :

Thus, this is what I wanted long ago,

The very thing that you could not bestow.

A LIST OF THE POSSESSIVE ADJECTIVE PRONOUNS.

Possessive Pronouns indicate possession,

They follow thus in regular succession,—

My, thy, his, her, our, your, their, its, and own,

Are of this class, and well they may be known.

POSSESSIVE PRONOUNS,

AND EXAMPLES.

My ardent wishes are, that all may learn,

May your endeavours equal my concern !

Thou shouldst thy reasoning powers much respect,

No prudent means of knowledge e'er neglect ;

While John and Henry learn their tasks to say,

The thoughtless Thomas spends his time in play.

Though Thomas is a playful, lively boy,

Yet he prefers his duty to a toy ;

And Frances learns her task without delay,

While lazy Mary spends her time in play.

Our time we must improve, or feel its loss,

This well improv'd will recompense us most.

*You should your tutor's maxims learn to prize,

Then will your studies make you truly wise.

Demonstrative are such (we will suppose)

As this or that, and either these or those :

Thus, this is truth, and must at length prevail,

†That all who seek aright shall never fail.

These simple rules will add to your delight,

And teach you morals, while you learn to write.

Those pupils who their studies will neglect,

Have no just claim to credit or respect.

* Prov. xii. 1.

† Psalm cxix. 2.

The second sort Distributive we name,
 And these are such, which I must now explain :
 They oft denote a number to express :
 *As, every prudent Christian grows in grace:
 †And each good effort made with good design,
 Will bring a blessing, either yours or mine.
 ‡Now, either you must work or cease to eat,
 For this injunction you cannot defeat.

INDEFINITE ADJECTIVE PRONOUNS.

This kind of words we cannot well define,
 They balk our metre, and elude our rhyme ;
 They do, perhaps, a name and place demand ;
 Among the rest in order here they stand :
Such, any, other, some, one, none, both, whole,
 And (if I well remember) these are all.

* 2 Pet. iii. 18.

† Prov. x. 4.

‡ 2 Thess. iii. 10.

VERBS.

A VERB, a most important part, is one,
 Denoting action, present, past, or done ;
 Some action doing, or existence shown,
 Some passion understood, express'd, or known.
 The subject of the Verb, you well must know,
 Will much assist you how the Verb to show.

ACTIVE VERBS.

The Active Verb will govern, as you see :
 Thus, Study grammar, if you wise would be ;
Perform your duties, let not sloth prevail ;
 Success is certain, Truth can never fail.

PASSIVE VERBS.

The Passive Verb is us'd to represent

The suffering of an action, or event :

Thus, Prudent Amy justly is respected,

While thoughtless Jennet feels herself neglected.

NEUTER VERBS.

All Neuter Verbs express a simple state,

Intransitive they're call'd at any rate :

They oft denote an action, when confin'd

To him who acts, as, Clement walks behind ;

And, Bella dances with a graceful mien,

With vulgar girls she never would be seen :

While active Edward, quite a sprightly boy,

Delights in music as his greatest joy ;

But drowsy Daniel sleeps the night away,

He nothing does, worth doing, all the day.

HELPING VERBS.

Auxiliaries are us'd in conjugation,—

In compound tenses is their situation ;

They follow thus, in regular rotation :

Present, Do, have, shall, will, may, can, am, must*—

Past, did, had, should, would, might, could, and was just.

ON CONJUGATING VERBS.

To conjugate a Verb in verse or measure,

I've neither inclination, skill, or leisure :

For this defect we must refer to those

Who give Examples not in verse, but prose :

Of these good writers we could mention many,

As Murray, Louth, and Grant, Ash, Blair, and Lennie.

* REMARKS.—Be, do, have, and will, are often principal verbs.

The last of these has much improved the art,
 And rendered easy almost every part ;
 The eighth edition has some good corrections,
 With very few (if any) imperfections.
 His definitions have no vague expression,
 They're plain and clear almost to demonstration.
 His just remarks and timely observation
 Will much assist in speech or conversation :
 In short, his little book has much real merit,*
 'Tis cheap, and good—perhaps you will prefer it.

*REMARKS.—This eulogy is not intended to disparage the work of any other writer on the subject ; but to show, that in the opinion of the author, the book in question is justly entitled to all that is said of it. It has an extensive circulation, and may be had of any respectable bookseller in the United Kingdom.

ON MOODS.

Of Moods, or Modes of Verbs, we reckon five,
 Which well to comprehend you must contrive :
 As speech is varied by the aid of mood,
These terms, we say, must well be understood.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

Indicative declares some real facts,
 As, She is wise, who folly counteracts.
 This mood is also known by any question,
 As, Will you not be still, and learn your lesson ?
 *Thou shalt not take the name of God in vain,
 For all who do are justly called profane :
 Thou wilt not profit much without design,
 By rule and order thou the gain wilt find.

* Exod. xx. 7.

The * proud and vain real pleasures seldom find,

True pleasure only is with meekness join'd.

A grateful heart is rightly deem'd a treasure,

'Tis justly priz'd, and yields an inward pleasure :

† Afflictions of this life are overpaid,

If well improv'd—this truly may be said.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

Imperative is us'd when we intreat,

Command or countermand, exhort, permit.

EXAMPLES.

‡ Remember your Creator now in youth,

Believe his word, revere his sacred truth :

Correct your errors, govern well your tongue,

Disdain deceit, abhor whate'er is wroug.

* Psalm, cxix. 21. Isaiah, xxix. 19. † 2 Cor. iv. 17.

‡ Eccl. xii. 1. 2 Chron. xx. 20. James, i. 26. Psalm, v. 6.
Heb. xi. 6.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.—EXAMPLES CONTINUED.

Give diligence in all your best pursuits,
 Have* no contentions, but avoid disputes
 †Let no ambition prompt your docile mind,
 ‡Maintain strict friendship, never be unkind :
Pursue with ardour what you undertake,
Quit such companions as the truth forsake.
 §Be ever kind and courteous, this is right—
 *Twill yield you peace, and give you much delight.
 ||Redeem your mis-spent time by active life,
Shun devious paths, and such as lead to strife.
Despise not any state, however poor,
Boast not of health, you cannot health secure.

POTENTIAL MOOD, AND EXAMPLES.

Potential, means the having power or will,

As, If you would improve, you should be still :

It also represents an obligation,

As, You should ne'er forget the application.

* 2 Tim. ii. 23. † Esther, iii. 6. ‡ Prov xviii. 2. 4. ix. 6.

§ Rom. xii. 10. Eph. v. 16. 2 Tim. ii. 16. James, ii. 6.

|| Prov. xxvii. 1.

It sometimes means that liberty is shown,
 Thus, You may walk, or ride, or stay at home :
 *You should your parents honour and obey,—
 This just injunction you must not delay.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

Subjunctive shows, or represents condition,
 It also may imply a supposition ;
 Thus, If you persevere, you'll gain applause,
 But shame and grief will follow sloth and noise.
 Were they but good, they then would happy be,
 May this result then follow you and me !

INFINITIVE MOOD.

Infinitive is us'd in general terms,
 Without regard to person, time, or forms ;
 Except indeed the sign by which 'tis known,
 Is mostly To, as plainly may be shown.

* Exod. xx. 12.

TENSE.

The Tenses of the Verbs you should be taught,
 Regard the time, the action, or the thought ;
 Thus, present tense, I love Penelope,—
 The past, Penelope was lov'd by me.
 The present we must seize, or feel the loss,—
 The past we can't recal, whate'er the cost.
 The perfect tense denotes what is completed,
 As, Rhoda has her lessons just repeated ;
 And Harriet well deserves to be commended,
 As she has done her task, her work is ended.
Pluperfect shows an action past before,
 Some other act, to which we then refer :
 Thus, Active John had learn'd his task before
 The idle James had read his lesson o'er ;
 And Catharine likewise had her work quite done,
 Before Eliza had her own begun.

FUTURE TENSE, WITH EXAMPLES.

The Future tense denotes the time to come,
 As, We shall ne'er neglect our tasks at home.
 The signs are simply two, as shall and will,—
 As, I will teach you how to cut your quill ;
 Eugene will his duties well observe,
 Nor from just precepts will he ever swerve.

FUTURE PERFECT TENSE.

The Future Perfect represents an act
 To be perform'd, before some other fact ;
 As, I shall have my task completely done,
 Before my brother will have his begun.

ADVERBS,

AND EXAMPLES.

THE Adverbs are such words as, 'twill be seen,
 Being join'd to Verbs, they show you what they mean :
 They sometimes qualify, as oft compare,
 And show you how, and when, if here, or there.
 Abridgment, surely, was their first design—
 Thus, “ Kindly act,” means, “ Actions should be kind.”
 The Adverbs seem to shorten, and define,—
 They much assist in prose, as well as rhyme ;
 Thus, Ann distinctly speaks in all she says,
 She writes correctly, and is sure of praise :
 You all well know that Caleb soon will rise,
 And rightly claim the first and highest prize ;
 But lazy Leonard always is behind,
 He scarcely ever is to good inclin'd.

*How sweetly Emma sings ! her charming voice
 Delights our ears above all trifling joys ;
 And Sarah (though she's young) behaves as well
 As thoughtless Julia, much an older girl.
 This proverb we may cite, and also keep,
 That those who have enough, may soundly sleep.
 *The wicked Cain his brother basely slew,
 Through envy rais'd to spite and malice too.*

LIST OF ADVERBS.

*So, no, not, nay, yea, yes, too, well, up, how,
 After, indeed, far, then, to and fro, now,
 More, still, here, most, little, less, least, and thence,
 Thus, since, while, whilst, once, first, scarcely, quite,
 whence,*

* Gen. iv. 8.

Exceedingly, already, perhaps, thrice,
Again, ago, rather, why, often, twice ;
Haply, forth, always, hither, and whither,
Doubtless, enough, sometimes, almost, thither ;
Peradventure, together, forward, and backward,
Asunder, apart, upward, and downward ;
Indeed, very, ill, when, where, much, alone,
Seldom, there, ever, daily, forth, and soon ;
*Once, never, in fine, completes all this part,
 Now learn them all well—repeat them by heart.

* REMARKS.—More is sometimes used as an adverb, as, She is more afraid than ever ; and sometimes as an adjective, as, He has more wealth than wisdom.

PREPOSITIONS.

THIS part of speech th' objective case will show,
 And much assist you grammar to construe :
 These little parts are of the first importance,
 In ranging words in just and right accordance :
 They govern nouns and pronouns—this you see,—
 As, Lydia came from home just after three ;
 And Rhoda was with good advice inclin'd
 To keep from such as were not just and kind :
 *Withhold not good from them who merit claim,
 But always wisely speak, and act the same.
 We sail'd from Leith to London in two days,
Without the use of sails, of oars, or breeze :
 The power of steam these wants did well supply,
By this alone we might such aids defy.

* Prov. iii. 27.

True friendship should prevail among good boys,
 This would increase their zeal amid their joys.

LIST OF PREPOSITIONS.

About, above, according, to, along,
Against, amid, amidst, amongst, among,
Before, behind, below, beneath, around,
Concerning, by, except, excepting, down,
After, across, athwart, betwixt, between,
Besides, beside, beyond, of, for, and in ;
Regarding, during, from, into, and out,
Respecting, near, to, touching, till, throughout ;
Instead of, nigh, on, up, towards, and over ;
 We add within, without, upon, and under,
At, underneath, and through—I'll say no more,
 Since all I've said, perhaps you've learn'd before.

CONJUNCTIONS.

CONJUNCTIONS now we'll try to represent,
 To join both words and phrases, they are meant :
Because, also, if, since, that, then, and therefore,
 As well as both, and, for, we now add wherefore.

DISJUNCTIVES.

DISJUNCTIVES also here must have a place,
 They follow thus, and are a motley race :
Although, except, as well as, but, and other,
Nor, notwithstanding, or, than, through, and whether,
So, neither, yet, provided, and unless,
 Completes the list as far as I can guess.

INTERJECTIONS.

AN Interjection is a word (suppose)

That some emotion of the speaker shows,—

As, Oh! that all my pupils truth would learn,—

Alas! I fear that few have real concern!

Ah! whither are my hopes of joys now gone!

Lo! now behold! and see them from me torn.

Away! ye giddy tempters of the mind,

Begone! for ever, like the passing wind.

Hail! matchless grace, that sav'd from sin and woe.

O, strange! to tell, that rebels this should know.

*Thou faithful servant, hear the words—well done!

The vict'ry's gain'd—the prize is all thy own.

†O Peace! thou most desir'd, thou welcome guest!

Depriv'd of thee, how many live unblest'd!

* Mat. xxv. 21.

† Psalm cxxii. 7.

SYNTAX. *

To treat of Syntax is of much importance,
 In ranging words in just and right accordance ;
 Indeed, you now must make a just selection,
 Of all such words as form a good connection :
 A simple sentence, here you must observe,
 Has but one subject, and one finite verb :
 This subject and the verb must well agree,
 As, Life is short for you as well as me.
 A compound sentence, now we indicate,
Two subjects has, as here we now relate ;

* REMARKS. — Syntax principally consists of two parts, concord and government. Concord is the agreement which one word has with another, in gender, number, case, or person. Government is that power which one part of speech has over another, in determining its mood, tense, or case. Finite verbs are those to which number and person appertain ; the infinitive mood has no respect to number or person.

As, Time is short, but life is shorter still,—

Eternity succeeds to good or ill.

The subject is the thing we speak about,

The attribute affirms, denies, or not.

The object is effected by the verb,

Which terminates the noun, we here observe :

Make verbs agree with each, or you will err,

The truth of which you clearly may infer.

RULE I. WITH EXAMPLES.

A verb must with its subject well agree,

In number and in person, this you'll see :

Thus, I love study much, because I know,

The more I study, wiser I shall grow.

Thou shouldst thy teacher's precepts well observe,

From their injunctions thou shouldst never swerve :

All evil habits thou shouldst quite forsake,

Nor shalt thou e'er with foes much friendship make.

Variety of objects, you must know,

Delights and charms the eye, where'er we go.

The number* of our days is mark'd on high,

Our hearts to wisdom then we should apply.

He lives to reason, that most nobly acts,

She lives to fancy, who this rule neglects.

He loves and honours† both his parents well,

She cultivates the truth, and will excel :

We were delighted much to hear them read,

In voice and manner too they seem'd agreed.

‡Sure nothing more delights and pleases some,

Than vain pursuits, and flattery's base perfume.

You really merit what you justly claim,

Then persevere, and you'll be free from blame.

* Psalm xc. xii.

† Matt. xv. 4.

‡ Prov. i. 22.

RULE II. WITH EXAMPLES ON NOUNS.

Verbs Active govern well the objective case,
 Then learn your tasks, do not incur disgrace;
 Forsake* all vicious habits now in youth,
 †Indulge no malice, cherish nought but truth.
 Yea, value much your present precious time,
Pursue with ardour ev'ry good design.

EXAMPLES ON NOUNS AND PRONOUNS.

He lov'd her much, and she lov'd him as well,
 In love and friendship few could them excel:
 I will respect him, though he may me chide,
 His good intentions I have often tried.
Esteem them much, who strive to do you good,
 Your minds require instruction for their food.
 An early application of this rule
 Will well repay your labour while at school.

* Prov. ix. 6.

† Eph. iv. 31.

'Tis virtue which exalts the noble mind,
 But vice degrades it to the lowest kind :
 Real prudence calms and regulates the heart,
 'Twill rule the temper, and true joys impart.
 Your fancies to your reason learn to bend,
 *Be kind and friendly, if you'd have a friend ;
 †True knowledge gives to solitude an ease,
 If well applied, 'twill form our minds to please ;
 So gentleness best suits our whole address,
 With pleasure then we may our lives retrace.
 ‡Discretion is the safest path for youth,
 Then be discreet, regard the voice of truth.

* Prov. xviii. 24.

† Prov. xxiv. 14.

‡ Prov. i. 4.

RULE III. WITH EXAMPLES.

The Prepositions show the true relation

Nouns bear to nouns, when in their proper station :

Between the pronouns also this they'll do,

As, He was kind to her, though not to you.

Great friendship yet subsists between us both,

To forfeit such true friendship I am loth.

Now flattery none can hurt, but those to whom

The fulsome bane is pleasant as perfume.

RULE IV. AND EXAMPLES.

When singular nouns appear with and between,

You'll pluralize the verb, thus 'twill be seen,

The verbs and pronouns, if they bear relation,

Must plural be in such a situation :

Thus John and George read well, with graceful ease,

But James and Henry take no pains to please :

While Ann and Charlotte write with steady motion,
Matilda and Sophia lose promotion.

The young, the proud, the thoughtless, and the gay,
 Should not presume, they soon must all decay.

Health, credit, reputation, raiment, food,

Are justly priz'd by all whose lives are good.

When singular nouns you find disjoin'd by or,
 The verb, and pronoun too, you may infer,
 Must singular be, as we shall clearly show,
 As James or John is first, you all well know.
 If nor between two nouns should chance to be,
 Then use the singular verb, as here you see:
 Now neither precept, maxim, law, nor rule,
 Is equal to example, while at school.

* REMARKS.—Or and nor are the only conjunctions applicable to this rule.

With is sometimes used for and, as, The side A, with the sides B and C, compose the triangle.

RULE V. WITH EXAMPLES.

Conjunctions couple words with one another,

And join such phrases as should come together :

Thus, You and I must go to town to-day,

But John and James may stay at home and play.

Conjunctions well connect the tense and mood,

Thus, Seek the peace of all, and do them good :

They also will unite or join the cases,

When nouns and pronouns follow in their places ;

James reads and writes with elegance and ease,

But John and Henry seldom strive to please :

Though* anger glances oft into the mind,

It resteth not in bosoms good and kind :

* REMARKS.—Conjunctions sometimes connect different moods and tenses, but, in these instances, the nominative should be repeated, as, He may return, but he will not continue.

If Charles the subject rightly understand,
And well attend, success he may command ;
 But if, indeed, he will not persevere,
 He must expect to follow in the rear.
If Edward promise, then he'll not deceive,
 His word is sacred,—you may him believe.
 Both I and thou have cause our faults to own,
 Though he and she their faults have never known.
 Our season of improvement is but short ;
 'Twill quickly pass, improved well or not.

RULE VI. WITH EXAMPLES.

One verb, sometimes, another governs well,

As, Strive to learn, then you will much excel :

* REMARKS.—To, the sign of the infinitive, is not used after bid, dare, need, make, see, hear, feel, perceive, let, observe, behold, and have.

The infinitive is often independent of the rest of the sentence, as, To confess the truth, I was in fault.

No evil ever do, but practise truth ;

Reflect, that virtue best adorns our youth :

Remember to assist, without distrust,—

Relieve with prudence, then you will be just.

RULE VII. WITH EXAMPLES.

Whene'er two nouns together chance to come,

Implying different things, as, Helen's home,

The first you see denotes possessive case,—

Thus, Wisdom's precepts best become our race.

Should several nouns together sometimes come,

The last is made possessive, this is shown :

*Thus, Peter, John, and Andrew's occupation,

Was fishermen, till call'd to their new station.

* Mark i. 16.

RULE VIII. WITH EXAMPLES.

Collective nouns, when singular, we show,
 Require the verbs the same, and pronouns too ;
 Thus, When the nation justly does complain,
 The rulers should its privilege maintain.

When plural nouns collective meet your eye,
 You pluralize the verbs,—as, Armies fly.

The pronouns likewise then must plural be,
 For verbs and pronouns always should agree :
 The multitude pursue their own chief good,
 How few there are whose passions are subdued !
 The wicked often flee when none pursue,
 *The righteous you will find are firm and true.

* Prov. xxviii. 1.

RULE IX.

The verb To Be, you may be always sure,
 Is follow'd by the case that comes before.
 Whene'er this verb To Be, is not express'd,
 Yet understood as clearly as the rest,
 The case the same must be ; this rule throughout,
 Which you will understand, I have no doubt.

RULE X. WITH EXAMPLES.

Conjunctions, (when contingency is implied,)
 With future time connected too beside,
 Require subjunctive mood in such a case ;
 If otherwise, the indicative we place :

If riches he acquire, I now declare,
 His mind they will corrupt, and prove a snare.

*Despise not any state, however mean,
Lest in that state perhaps you may be seen ;
If he but be discreet, he will succeed,
 Success depends on this, 'tis well agreed.

RULE XI.—ON CONJUNCTIONS.

Now some of these with others correspond,
 That is, they claim with others to belong :
 This to explain in verse will not well chime,
 It balks my metre, and illudes my rhyme :
 Consult this Rule in prose, you there will find
 Which of these little words you ought to join.

* 1. Tim. vi. 8.

Mat. xvii. 10.

REMARKS.—Lest and that, annexed to a command, require the subjunctive mood, as, Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty, Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob, either good or bad.—Gen. xxxi. 24.

RULE XII. WITH EXAMPLES.

When participles like to nouns appear,
 They then require an article, 'tis clear :
 This article must stand before the noun,
 *And of must follow, thus it will be found,
The learning of a language merits fame,
 Then persevere, and you'll be free from blame.

RULE XIII. WITH EXAMPLES.

Past participles follow the verb To be,
 As proof of which, examples here you see :
 The path of virtue, and the path of truth,
 They both have chosen, as their guide in youth.

* REMARKS.—The present participle, with a possessive before it, sometimes admits of of after it, and sometimes not, as, Their observing of the rules prevented errors. By his studying the Scriptures,† he became wise.

† 1 Tim. iii. 15.

His vices have much weaken'd all his frame,
 His health is broken, and his mind's the same.*

RULE XIV. WITH EXAMPLES.

Pronouns with nouns must always well agree,
 In person, gender, number, as you see:
 Thus, James is here, he came an hour ago,
 And Jane is gone, she was oblig'd to go.
 †No person can in life be always sure,
 What unseen evils he may yet endure.
 ‡As every tree is known by its own fruit,
 So men to things should make their tempers suit.

* REMARKS.—The past participle must not be used instead of the past tense. It is improper to say, He begun, for he began, he run for he ran.

† Ecc. ix. 1.

‡ Luke vi. 44.

RULE XV. WITH EXAMPLES.

The relative, observe, must well agree,

In number, gender, person, this you'll see :

The word to which the relative applies,

Must suited be, this no one e'er denies :

*Thus, Those who wisdom seek, are sure to find ;

To seek her then, I hope you'll be inclin'd.

†That man is truly blest, who fears the Lord,

‡His end is peace, he meets his just reward.

RULE XVI. WITH EXAMPLES.

Whene'er the relative assumes a place,

Preceded by two antecedents, thus,

The verb then with the last should well agree,

As, Thou art he that was to follow me :

I am the man that gives you good advice,
 And thou the girl that loves whate'er is nice :
You all are pupils who possess good parts,
 Being well improv'd, you'll master many arts :
Thou art a friend that has relieved me,
 How can I then ungrateful be to thee !
That is a vice which I detest and hate,
 And this a virtue which I venerate.

RULE XVII. WITH EXAMPLES.

When singular nouns, or nominatives, appear
 To be of different persons, this is clear,
 Being separated thus, by or or nor,
 The verb must well agree, or you will err :
 The person next the verb the subject is,
 As either thou or I am sure of this.

REMARKS.—The above examples are elliptical, and the elipsis being supplied, the verbs will agree with each noun, thus, I am in fault, or Thou art in fault, &c. &c.

Now either I or thou art much deceiv'd,
 Then own the fact, and thou wilt be believ'd.
 Now he or I am sure of this week's prize,
 'Twill be awarded where the merit lies.

RULE XVIII.

A singular and a plural noun, when seen
 With or, or nor, just coming in between,
 Require a plural verb for you to write;
 Then learn this rule, repeat it with delight.

EXAMPLES.

*The snare of riches, or the cares of life,
 Have pierc'd them through with sorrow and with strife.

*REMARKS.—The plural nominative should be placed next the verb. When the verb to be stands between a singular and a plural nominative, it agrees with the one which is most naturally the subject of it, as, “†The wages of sin is death.”

† 1 Tim. vi. 10.

Romans, vi. 23.

RULE XIX. WITH EXAMPLES.

A noun and pronoun, too, you must not use,

As agents to one verb (this I refuse :)

Thus many words they darken much our speech ;

Omitting they, correctly then we teach.

*The king he is our sovereign, this we own

Is incorrect,—the noun should stand alone :

The pronoun he, indeed, you must reject,

And this omitted, makes the sense correct.

†Man, at his best estate, will soon decay,

His life 's a dream, 'twill quickly pass away.

* REMARKS.—In some cases, where the noun is highly emphatical, the repetition of it in the pronoun is not only allowable, but even elegant, as, The Lord, he is the God.—1 Kings, xviii. 39 ; Deut, xxxi. 6.

† Job, xxxviii. 2.

Psalm, xxxix. 5.

RULE XX. WITH EXAMPLES.

The mood we call infinitive, you know,
 We sometimes use as nominative, to show
 The subject of the verb may either be
 One word alone, or sev'ral, as you see :
 The subject may consist of many words,
 And two examples here this rule affords.

To be like minded with the just and pure,*
Is what I covet most, you may be sure :
His being idle, and dishonest too,
Was that which caus'd his utter overthrow.

* REMARKS.—The infinitive is equal to a noun, thus, To learn, is pleasant, &c. The infinitive is sometimes used as a participle, as, To advise, advising, &c.

RULE XXI. WITH EXAMPLES:

Comparatives, if double, here you'll note,
 Are quite improper, this you here are taught :
 Superlatives, we say, are just the same,
 They both require examples to explain ;
 Thus, Mine's a better book than his or hers,
 But Ann has got the best, which she prefers.
 The voice we hear most sweetest in the grove,
 You must correct, or I shall not approve.
 Omit the adverb most, then you'll be right,
 These charming notes, perhaps, may you delight.
 That John (you say) a worser scholar is,
 Than George or James, no one, I think, believes.

REMARKS.—Higher than the Highest, as well as chiefest, have the authority of the sacred writings, but that circumstance does not warrant this mode of expression.—See Ecc. v. 8—Cant. v. 10.—Mark x. 44.—2 Cor. xi. 5.

This adjective you see we can't admit,
 But chang'd to worse, will make it just and fit.

RULE XXII. WITH EXAMPLES.

Two negatives together never use,
 For this the sense will often much confuse.

EXAMPLES.

I cannot by no means you this allow,
 Requires correction, I will show you how ;
 Omit the not, the sense is then complete,
 And thus to write, you know, is just and meet :
 I cannot this allow, by any means,
 Is quite correct, if nothing intervenes.
 Two negatives you never must connect,
 A sentence thus, can never be correct,—
 Then covet neither riches nor renown,
 But be content with that which is your own.

REMARKS.—When one of the negatives (such as dis, in, un, im, &c.) is joined to another word, the two negatives form a pleasing variety of expression, as, His language, though simple, is not inelegant,—that is, it is elegant.

RULE XXIII. WITH EXAMPLES.

The place of adverbs, now you here must note,
Will exercise your skill, as well as thought.

In general then, they occupy this place,

They follow verbs, almost in every case.

Between auxiliaries and other verbs,

They best appear, as useful little words ;

Thus, She behaved well, was much esteem'd,

She truly was the lovely girl she seem'd.

He found her well employ'd, and tranquil too,

This happy state I doubtless wish for you.

To place the adverbs rightly, 'twill be found,

Requires good taste, as well as sense and sound.

Before the adjectives they often come,

As, He is more attentive much than some.

He made a very sensible discourse,

With prudent zeal did he the truth enforce.

*To study closely, you will sometimes find

A weariness of flesh, as well as mind.

'Tis like the rose, indeed, 'tis very sweet ;

With caution seize it, lest a thorn you meet.

*Vice always creeps by slow degrees, be sure,

And twines around us, while we seem secure.

* Ecc. xii. 12.

† Prov. xvii. 14.

REMARKS.—In placing the adverbs, the easy flow and perspicuity of the phrase ought to be chiefly regarded.

RULE XXIV. WITH EXAMPLES.

The adjectives must always keep their place,
 And not be us'd as adverbs. More or less,
 These parts of speech, like all the rest we show,
 Claim well their place, and this you ought to know.
 This rule, indeed, you must not violate,
 In prose or verse, this fault is very great :
 Take this example then, the first I show
 As incorrect, which you will surely know :

*A little wine, to one is recommended,
 For often weakness, which his state attended.
 This adverb often you must change indeed,
 An adjective will suit, 'tis well agreed :
 Correctly then we say, and this is shown :
 Thus, often should be frequent, you must own.
 The adverbs also have a proper claim,
 Allow them then their use, as well as name :

* 1 Tim. v. 23.

The adjectives and verbs they qualify,

And this their office is, you can't deny :

Agreeably to promise ever act,

Conformably to truth your ways correct.

RULE XXV. WITH EXAMPLES.

Comparative degree and pronoun other,

Require than to follow, you'll discover ;

And as must follow such we here now show,—

Take these examples as they stand below :

He gained nothing farther by his speech,

Than empty plaudits, sought by some who teach.

Such men as act with fraud, or with deceit,

Avoid with care, and shun where'er you meet.

REMARKS.—Adverbs qualify adjectives and verbs, adjectives qualify nouns.

RULE XXVI. WITH EXAMPLES.

The pronouns after as or after than,
 You'll make agree with verbs, I'm sure you can :
 Thus He, I own, is wiser much than I,
 And she is happier, this I can't deny.
 They write as well as she, I must allow,
 But she is more polite than he or thou.
 They're greater gainers far than you or I,
 Yet still they're not content, I know not why.

REMARKS.—The word containing the answer to the question, must be in the case with the word which asks it, as, Who do men say that I am?—Mat. xvi. 13.—Mark viii. 27.—Luke ix. 18.—Mark viii. 29.—Luke ix. 20.

The above translations are incorrect, as whom should be who, in every place.

RULE XXVII. WITH EXAMPLES.

The pronouns call'd distributive, remember,
 Agree with nouns and verbs, in singular number :
 Thus, Every man is bound by rules of reason,
His duties to fulfil in every season.
Each of his brothers came in his own turn,
 And ev'ry one was well dispos'd to learn.
 Now either you or I am much in fault,
 Consider well, for thus you really ought.

REMARKS.—Each relates to two or more objects, and signifies both, or every one of any number taken singly. Every relates to more than two objects, and signifies each one of them all taken individually. Either signifies the one or the other, but not both.

The words are improperly translated in our version of the Scriptures.—See 2 Sam. xxi. 20.—1 Cor. xx. 6.—Rev. xxii. 2.

RULE XXVIII. WITH EXAMPLES.

Whene'er two persons, or two things indeed,
 Appear in contrast, 'tis by all agreed,
 The reference first to that is justly made,
 The last to this, as truly may be said.

EXAMPLES.

*Thus vice and virtue are as much oppos'd
 Unto each other, (this experience shows),
 As darkness is to light, or cold to heat,—
 While that degrades us, this is good and meet.
 †So wealth and need are truly both temptations,
That tends to excite our pride, this our vexations.
 ‡Religion gives a man a heav'nly birth,
 'Tis irreligion binds him down to earth.
 §This will debase a man beneath a brute,
That dignifies him much, without dispute.

*Prov. xiv. 34. †Prov. xxx. 8. ‡Prov. xii. 26 §Psalm xcii. 6.

RULE XXIX. WITH EXAMPLES.

Observe, this rule requires that you indite

The order and the time correctly, quite ;

Relation being made to verbs and words,

Neglecting this, Divines have sometimes err'd :

*I have compassion on the multitude,

Because they have attended me for good :

†And he sat up, that had before been dead,

Is quite correct, whatever may be said.

RULE XXX.

A regular, dependent, choice selection,

Should be preserv'd throughout your whole connexion :

A strict regard to this will gain you merit,

These rules apply'd will best secure your credit.

* Mat. xv. 32.

† Luke vii. 15.

REMARKS.—The above translations are deviations from this rule ; they should be carefully noticed by the teachers of English Grammar.

PROSODY.*

Bÿ Prosody we're taught to well rehearse
The emphasis and cadence known in verse ;
The pauses too, and tones, as well as measure,
To understand aright, will yield a pleasure.
