REPORT.

STATE OF VERMONT,
ADJUTANT AND INSPECTOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE, }
BURLINGTON, FEBRUARY 27, A. D. 1892.

To His Excellency,

CARROLL S. PAGE,

Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

SIR :—The General Assembly of the State of Vermont by its Act, number 113, approved November 26, 1888, provided for a Revised Roster of Vermont Troops in the War of the Rebellion, with a list of native Vermonters who held commissions in the Union Regiments and organizations of other States, and an index of the hospital records now in the Adjutant and Inspector-General's office.

By direction of His Excellency, Governor William P. Dillingham, the undersigned commenced the revision of the Roster, and, having completed the same, begs leave to respectfully report the result of the work.

The endeavor has been to present a correct record of each soldier serving in Vermont organizations, the Regular Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Veteran Reserve Corps, and Hancock's First Corps, and of Vermonters serving as officers in the United States Colored Troops and organizations from other States.

The magnitude of the task thus undertaken, can hardly be estimated by the casual reader.

The basis of the work was the Roster prepared under the direction of Adjutant General Washburn during the war. This, though remarkably complete, contained many errors, some of which did serious injustice to the soldier.

So little could be added to the index of hospital records that it was not deemed advisable to compile a new one.

In the work of revision the following sources of information have been used :

First.—The enlistment contract, or pay-roll (where there was no contract).

Second.—The Vermont hospital records, and the reports of the hospital commissioners.

Third.—The bi-monthly muster-rolls, for promotions and other changes.

Fourth.—The muster-rolls, which account for every man in each company. It took over six months to go through these rolls.

Fifth.—About four thousand slips from the records of Confederate prisons, obtained from the War Department. As these did not give more than one-half the dates stating when the soldier was taken prisoner, etc., it was found necessary to go through the muster rolls a second time. This careful work removed the word "deserter" from many a soldier's record.

Sixth.—Record of transfers to the Veteran Reserve Corps, Regular Army, Navy, etc., comprising over twelve hundred names.

Seventh.—The lists of soldiers buried in the national cemeteries. The examination of these involved the scrutiny of between two and three thousand names.

Additional information was obtained from seventy-three volumes of the "Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies," to find the correct dates of battles and names of Generals commanding troops and other important data, and from the "Historical Roster of the United States Army," and files of the "Vermont Watchman," the "Green Mountain Freeman," and the "Burlington Free Press" of 1861-66.

The process of verification has involved going through the various lists, comprising over 35,000 names, some fifteen times.

While the sketches of the regimental organizations are quite complete, there are a few facts which must be of interest, and to which I believe we can refer with honest pride. Vermont was represented at the fall of Fort Sumter on the 15th of April, 1861, by Truman Seymour, Captain First Artillery, U. S. A. The first Vermonter to volunteer his services for the War of the Rebellion, was George Jerrison Stannard of St. Albans, Colonel Fourth Regiment of Militia; this occurred on the 15th of April, 1861. The first reconnoissance in force upon Virginia soil by the United State troops, was made by the First Vermont Regiment on the 23d of May, 1861. The first Vermont soldier to lose his life, was Private D. H. Whitney of the Bradford Company (D) First Regiment, who was killed by a rebel scout on the 22d of June, 1861, at Newport News, Va. The first empty sleeve from Vermont in the War of the Rebellion, was that of First Sergeant Urban A. Woodbury, Company H, Second Vermont Volunteers in action at Bull Run, Va., July 21, 1861.

The last shot of the Sixth Army Corps was fired by the Second Vermont Regiment, April 6, 1865, on the eastern fork of Sailor's Creek, Va. The last fighting of Vermont troops was done by the Seventh Regiment at Whistler, Alabama, April 13, 1865, and by the First Vermont Cavalry at Appomattox Court House, on the morning of Lee's surrender, April 9, 1865. The last Vermont soldier killed was Private George B. Dunn of Company M, First Vermont Cavalry, April 8, 1865; and the last wounded was First Lieutenant Willard Farrington of Company L, First Vermont Cavalry, early in the evening of April 8, 1865.

The First Vermont Brigade and the Tenth Regiment, serving with the Sixth Army Corps, were among the first troops to enter the city of Petersburg, Va., on the morning of its capture, April 3, 1865. On the same morning Richmond was captured, and the skirmish line, which was the first organized body of troops to enter the rebel capital, was commanded by Captain Abel E. Leavenworth, Ninth Vermont, assisted by Lieutenants Joel C. Baker and Burnham Cowdrey, with a detail of one hundred and twenty men from the same regiment.

Some time ago I communicated with the War Department, with a view of getting, as nearly as possible, the number of battle flags, cannon and prisoners, captured by Vermont troops during the war. I regret to say, however, that it was not possible for me to obtain this information, as there were no records kept of the captures by Vermont troops, except in a few instances.

One hundred and four (104) Vermonters served as officers in the United States Colored Troops, eighty-seven (87) of whom were promoted from the ranks. The different regiments thus represented are :

Second regiment,	1
Third regiment,	2
Fourth regiment,	3
Fifth regiment,	1
Sixth regiment,	6
Seventh regiment,	4
Eighth regiment,	43
Ninth regiment,	4
Tenth regiment,	22
Eleventh regiment,	4
Sixteenth regiment,	1
Second U. S. S. S.,	1
Citizens of Vermont,	12
Total,	104

Seventy-nine (79) commissioned officers serving with Vermont troops were brevetted for gallant and meritorious services in the field, viz :

First Vermont Cavalry,	18
Second regiment of Infantry,	5
Third regiment of Infantry,	2
Fourth regiment of Infantry,	4
Fifth regiment of Infantry,	5
Sixth regiment of Infantry,	4
Ninth regiment of Infantry,	2
Tenth regiment of Infantry,	9
Eleventh regiment of Infantry,	9
Seventeenth regiment of Infantry,	6
General Staff,	15
Total,	79

Twenty (20) Vermonters serving as officers in organizations from other states, were brevetted for gallant and meritorious services in the field.

Four Vermonters commissioned as officers in the Colored Troops were brevetted for gallant and meritorious services in the field.

Thirty-two (32) Vermonters serving in the Regular Army were brevetted for gallant and meritorious services in the field. Total brevetted one hundred and thirty-five (135).

The list of officers from Vermont who became General officers, comprises one Major-General, William F. Smith; three Brigadier and Brevet Major-Generals—Lewis A. Grant, twice wounded, George J. Stannard, four times wounded and lost right arm; William Wells, twice wounded; four Brigadier-Generals, John W. Phelps, Edwin H. Stoughton, Stephen Thomas, once wounded, James M. Warner, once wounded; six Colonels and Brevet Brigadier-Generals, Asa P. Blunt, George P. Foster, once wounded, William W. Henry, three times wounded, John R. Lewis, twice wounded and lost right arm, Edward H. Ripley, once wounded, Charles B. Stoughton, once wounded and lost right eye.

Of the fourteen (14) general officers, ten were wounded from one to four times each, two losing their right arms, and one an eye, making 72 per cent wounded.

Out of one hundred and twenty-four (124) field officers, representing all the regiments and staff, fifteen were killed or mortally wounded, thirty-eight were wounded, one six times, one four times, and six twice, making over 12 per cent killed and over 31 per cent wounded.

Field officers killed and wounded were as follows, viz :

SECOND REGIMENT.

Colonel Newton Stone, killed; Colonel John S. Tyler, mortally wounded; Colonel Amasa S. Tracy, twice wounded; Major Erastus G. Ballou, four times wounded.

THIRD REGIMENT.

Colonel Horace W. Floyd, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Samuel E. Pingree, twice wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel William H. Hubbard, wounded; Major Thomas F. Nelson, wounded; Major John F. Cook, wounded.

FIFTH REGIMENT.

Colonel Ronald A. Kennedy, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Charles P. Dudley, mortally wounded; Major Thomas Kavaney, wounded.

SIXTH REGIMENT.

Colonel Elisha L. Barney, wounded, afterwards mortally wounded; Colonel Sumner H. Lincoln, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Oscar A. Hale, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Frank G. Butterfield, wounded; Major Richard B. Crandall, killed; Major Carlos W. Dwinell, wounded, afterwards mortally wounded; Major Edwin R. Kinney, twice wounded.

SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Colonel George T. Roberts, mortally wounded.

EIGHTH REGIMENT.

Colonel John B. Mead, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Henry F. Dutton, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Alvin B. Franklin, three times wounded.

NINTH REGIMENT.

Major Charles Jarvis, mortally wounded; Major Joseph C. Brooks, twice wounded.

TENTH REGIMENT.

Lieutenant-Colonel Wyllys Lyman, three times wounded; Major Edwin Dillingham, killed; Major Lucius F. Hunt, wounded.

ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

Lieutenant-Colonel Reuben C. Benton, wounded, (Captain Fifth Regiment); Lieutenant-Colonel George E. Chamberlin, mortally wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel Darius J. Safford, wounded; Major Charles Buxton, killed; Major George D. Sowles, wounded.

FOURTEENTH REGIMENT.

Lieutenant-Colonel Charles W. Rose (Captain Fifth Regiment), wounded.

SEVENTEENTH REGIMENT.

Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Cummings, wounded, afterwards killed; Lieutenant-Colonel Henry A. Eaton, killed; Lieutenant-Colonel Lyman E. Knapp, twice wounded; Major William B. Reynolds, killed.

FIRST VERMONT CAVALRY.

Colonel Addison W. Preston, killed; Colonel Josiah Hall, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel John W. Bennett, wounded; Lieutenant-Colonel William G. Cummings, wounded; Major Andrew J. Grover, wounded; Major

Henry M. Paige, wounded; Major Charles A. Adams, twice wounded.

FIRST REGIMENT SHARPSHOOTERS.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Y. W. Ripley, wounded.

SECOND REGIMENT SHARPSHOOTERS.

Colonel Homer R. Stoughton, wounded.

GENERAL STAFF.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel George W. Hooker, wounded at South Mountain, Md., and five times wounded at Cold Harbor, Va.; Lieutenant-Colonel Merritt Barber, Assistant Adjutant-General "First Vermont Brigade," wounded at Monocacy, Md., and Fisher's Hill, Va.; Brevet Colonel Daniel D. Wheeler, Assistant Adjutant-General Twenty-fifth Army Corps United States Volunteers, wounded at Cold Harbor, Va.

Colonel William F. Fox, United States Volunteers, in his elaborate work entitled "Regimental Losses in the American Civil War," gives a list of eight "famous" brigades—made pre-eminent by their fighting qualities as shown by their losses in action. In this noble list the First Vermont Brigade stands first. "The greatest loss of life," says Colonel Fox, "in any one brigade during the war occurred in the Vermont Brigade, of the Second (Getty's) Division, of the Sixth Corps."

Of the Cavalry regiments in the Union armies, he mentions nine which lost from 119 to 174 men each, killed or mortally wounded in action. In this list, the First Vermont Cavalry stands fifth. It is admitted that it was second to none, however, in captures of guns, prisoners and battle flags.

From over two thousand regiments in the Union armies, Colonel Fox selects three hundred as the "fighting regiments" which lost from 134 to 224 men each, killed and died of wounds; of this number Vermont furnished nine, viz.: First Regiment Vermont Cavalry, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Tenth and Seventeenth Regiments of Infantry, and First Regiment Vermont Heavy Artillery, or Eleventh Regiment.

Companies E, Fifth Regiment, and F, First Regiment United States Sharpshooters, suffered the greatest loss in killed and wounded of any company organization from Vermont, the former losing 37 killed and mortally wounded, out of 191 men taken into the field, or almost 20 per cent—the latter losing 32 out of 177 total enlisted, or 18 per cent.

The greatest loss of officers killed or died of wounds in Vermont organizations was in the Seventeenth Regiment, which lost 14.

The Fifth Regiment at Savage's Station, and the Eighth Regiment at Cedar Creek, suffered the heaviest losses in killed, wounded and missing of any of the Vermont regiments, in any one action.

It is impossible to publish the deeds of valor of each soldier as it would take a list of at least three-fourths of our brave boys who, day after day, and month after month, for four long years, plodded steadily on with no wish but that of helping to save their country from destruction and ruin, and by their steadfastness and fighting qualities gave their officers the wonderful record which they now have, and from whose ranks over 687 were promoted.

I hope, however, that the day may come when the legislature of Vermont will order the compilation of a "Roll of Honor" in which may be given in detail the special acts of gallantry performed by her soldiers, as well as their sufferings in rebel prisons.

The consolidated statement shows that 1,832 Vermont soldiers were killed in action, and died of wounds, and 3,405 died of disease, in prison, and from accident. Total, 5,237.

Of the service and losses of the Vermont troops, Colonel Fox writes me: "It is a wonderful record and I do not remember its equal in military history. The loss of the German Army, Franco-Prussian War, killed and mortally wounded, was 3.1; Allied Army, the Crimean War, 3.2; Austrian Army, War of 1866, 2.6; Union Army, War of the Rebellion, 1861-66, 4.7. Pennsylvania sustained the greatest loss in killed of any State, its percentage being 7.1; Vermont comes next with a loss of 6.8. Pennsylvania leads because that State had a larger portion of its troops at the front, especially in the Army of the Potomac, where the fighting was most severe and prolonged."

Vermont, however, in proportion to the number of men furnished, gave to the Union more lives lost from all causes than any other Northern State.

The list of Vermonters who held commissions in the organizations of other States, was mainly obtained from Hon. George Grenville Benedict, State Military Historian. Every endeavor was made to add to this, and to this end articles requesting information were published in over fifty leading newspapers in the United States, to which some one hundred and fifty replies were received. I am sure that the list is not complete, but have done my best to make it so. So far as I am aware, no other State has attempted the preparation of a similar list.

At the close of the war there were about five hundred unassigned recruits, being men who were enlisted but never joined any command. As soon as it was known that the war was over, these men left without notice, and were recorded as deserters. In my judgment the general high standing of organizations composed of soldiers who stood by their colors through thick and thin, should not be thus lessened, and while the record cannot now be changed, it should be understood that of the total number of desertions a large proportion were of this class. For instance, in the Seventeenth Regiment, as explained in Lieutenant Lucia's report, there were 120 men assigned to the regiment who never joined, but were recorded as having deserted.

Through the channel of the War Department I find that about three hundred Vermonters who were recorded as deserters in the roster of 1864-65-66, died in rebel prisons, or on the battle field in the hands of the enemy, or have had the charges against their names removed. These corrections of the record of so many of our gallant men are alone worth all the work and expense of preparing this Roster.

I am under obligations for valuable data to the Hon. Redfield Proctor, Secretary of War, Hon. Lewis A. Grant, Assistant Secretary of War, and Major Fred C. Ainsworth, Surgeon United States Army, in charge of the Record and Pension Division of the War Department; to Colonel George G. Benedict, for continuous assistance in the preparation of this work; to Colonel William F. Fox, Albany, N. Y., for the interest he has taken, and also for permission to use data from his book, and to the officers who have prepared the sketches of different organizations.

I am also indebted to Hon. George W. Wing, Hon. Hiram A. Huse, and Colonel Joseph H. Goulding, for services rendered. I desire to acknowledge the valuable services of my comrade, Thomas L. Wood, (of the Tenth Vermont Regiment), who has had charge of the details of the work, and of his assistants, Mrs. James S. Peck and Truman C. Phinney. Miss Jennie A. Wood has also rendered efficient and laborious service.

I most truly appreciate the advice and kindly interest in my task shown by your Excellency, as well as by Governor William P. Dillingham, and believe that in this Roster, completed during your administration, you can present to the people of Vermont a work of which they may well be proud.

I submit it with the expression of a hope that this record of the services in arms of the Vermonters of 1861-66, may serve to teach future generations a lesson of patriotism, and to perpetuate the manly virtues which were so brilliantly illustrated in the great struggle for national unity.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

Theodore S. Peck

Adjutant-General.

ROSTER OF VERMONT VOLUNTEERS.
1861--1866.

THE FIRST REGIMENT.

(THREE MONTHS.)

BY EX-GOVERNOR ROSWELL FARNHAM.

Lieutenant First Regiment and Lieutenant-Colonel Twelfth Regiment.

THE First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry comprised militia companies from Bradford, Brandon, Burlington, Cavendish, Middlebury, Northfield, Rutland, St. Albans, Swanton and Woodstock. They were selected from the uniformed militia of the State, by Adjt.-Gen. H. H. Baxter, in conference with Brigadier-General Jackson of the state militia, and the field and line officers of the several regiments of the State, at Burlington, April 19, 1861. The designated companies began at once to enlist recruits, and to discharge such men as were unwilling or unable to leave home, and in a few days they were each filled to the requisite number of eighty-one officers and privates. On the 27th of April, the Adjutant-General issued an order designating the ten companies above named as the ones comprising the First Regiment, adding the words, "The foregoing companies will hold themselves in readiness to march to the place of rendezvous, to be hereafter designated, on twenty-four hours' notice." This was soon followed by an order directing the companies to report to the Adjutant-General at Rutland on the 2d day of May then next. They all arrived there on that day, or the day previous, and went into camp on the fair ground on the third. They had evidently come prepared for a campaign away from home, for they had more baggage than would have sufficed a corps two years later. The first night in camp was very cold, and the men just from warm homes suffered severely in their tents, and some of them contracted colds from which they did not recover for several weeks. But the sight of their new Colonel, performing his morning ablutions outside his tent in his shirt-sleeves, somewhat reconciled them to the temporary discomfort. The few days in camp at Rutland were occupied in learning the duties of camp, the mysteries of guard-mounting, dress parade, battalion drill and the meaning of the term, police duty.

Col. John Wolcott Phelps, late a captain in the regular army, had been put in command of the First Regiment by Governor Fairbanks. He was not only a trained soldier, but a man of most humane sympathies. The affection he so frequently expressed for the men of this regiment, they soon realized to be perfectly sincere, and after two months service under him, there was not a man of them who would not have risked his own life to save that of Colonel Phelps.

Lieut.-Col. Peter T. Washburn, of Woodstock, an efficient and successful lawyer at home, was a faithful officer, and when the command of the post at Newport News devolved upon Colonel Phelps, Lieutenant Colonel Washburn proved to be an excellent commander of the regiment. Maj. Harry N. Worthen, of Chelsea, had just been admitted to the Orange County bar and had received such military training as Norwich University afforded, and by this appointment in the First Regiment was given one of the best opportunities in the State for a young man to make his mark.

While some of the officers were men of mature years, the rank and file were made up of young men in the very bloom of youth and early manhood, full to overflowing of the patriotic and self-sacrificing spirit that makes heroes. The average age was twenty-four years.

The regiment was mustered into the United States service on the 8th day of May, by Lieutenant Colonel Rains of the Regular Army, and under orders from General Scott took its departure the next morning for Fortress Monroe, Virginia. Its route during the hours of daylight was almost a continuous line of cheering, flag-waving and cannonading. At Troy the Vermonters were received in a royal manner and were addressed by General Wool of the regular army. The march from the railroad depot in New York city down Broadway, was an event never to be forgotten by those who took part in it. The sidewalks were lined with citizens while the regiment, in column of company front, swept the street from curbstone to curbstone. The tall and sombre Colonel, the evergreen sprigs that every man wore, and the magnificent physique of these giants of the hills, struck the hearts of the loyal New Yorkers and the cheer that commenced at the railroad station rolled down Broadway with one continuous roar to City Hall Park, where the men went into camp.

The regiment left New York at five o'clock p. m., May 11th, on board the steamer "Alabama" and landed at Fortress Monroe on the 13th, the delay being occasioned by the fact that the rebels had extinguished the lights at the entrance of Chesapeake Bay.

The men at first encamped in their tents outside the main fort, but within the water battery. The change from the chilly winds of the mountains to the delightful breezes of this arm of the sea was most grateful. Lieut.-Col. Justin Dimick was in command of the fortress at this time, and the arrival of the Vermont Regiment relieved him of a good deal of anxiety. In a few days some arrangements were made with the proprietors of the Hygeia Hotel, and the regiment was quartered in that immense caravansary. This was satisfactory to everybody but Colonel Phelps. To the men it seemed a little more like civilization to be under a roof, but the Colonel expressed the fear that the health of the men would suffer from the extreme coolness of so large a building, after drilling in the hot sun. For a time dress parade was held every night within the walls of the fortress, and the regiment furnished men to aid in mounting the guns that were lying within the fortifications and putting the fortress in a better condition for defense.

While here, Benjamin Underwood of the Bradford company, died of measles, or as Surgeon Sanborn reported it in a medical periodical, of nostalgia or home-sickness following measles from which he had begun to recover. This was the first death among the Vermont troops and caused a feeling of sadness throughout the regiment which was deepened by the impressive funeral ceremonies. His remains still lie in the little cemetery on the shores of Chesapeake Bay, where his comrades discharged the last volleys over his grave.

About the hour of dress parade, on the 19th of

May, there was great excitement among the troops at the fortress, occasioned by the first actual fighting that the Vermonters had seen. This was the attack of the steamer "Monticello" upon the rebel battery at Sewell's Point, directly across Hampton Roads from Fortress Monroe and about two miles distant. The sound of the firing first attracted attention, and the smoke of every discharge could be distinctly seen. Adjutant Stevens became so interested that he neglected his duty at dress parade. The reports of the Confederate officers published in the "Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies" represent this to be quite an engagement. Captain Peyton H. Colquitt, who was in command at the battery, says that it lasted an hour and a half, and that "The enemy fired with great accuracy, several balls passing through the embrasures of the fort, one striking a thirty-two pounder within the battery, and one shell bursting in the fort. From three to five shots from our battery took effect, we think; others struck around the steamer." In fact, nobody was hurt on either side, and the commander of the "Monticello" does not seem to have made a report.

On the 23d of May, the day after Gen. B. F. Butler assumed command at Fortress Monroe, by his direction, the first movement of Vermont troops upon rebel soil was made. Col. Phelps, himself on foot as well as the other officers, marched the regiment into the town of Hampton, Va., making the first reconnoissance upon Virginia soil by United States troops, the movement to Arlington Heights and upon Alexandria being made the next day. The marching of troops along the highway towards Hampton set the whole country about there in a ferment, and caused great excitement among the citizens and soldiers of the moss-grown village. The one hundred and thirty rebel soldiers stationed there were prudently withdrawn out of sight. Maj. J. B. Cary, of the Virginia artillery, in his report says that he had nearly perfected his arrangements for defense by making preparations for the destruction of Hampton Bridge among others. But Colonel Phelps' movement was too quick for him. The Major's report further states that he aided in extinguishing the fire which was set upon the bridge, but that does not seem to be the fact.

The men of the First Vermont set out with alacrity upon this their first movement that had anything like the semblance of war about it, (the Lieutenant-Colonel and Major and several of the men leaving sick beds), and marched the six miles that intervened between the fortress and the Virginia village in the highest spirits and apparently ready for any emergency. As the regiment approached the bridge, marching in column of platoons, Lieutenant Cutshaw of the Virginia forces rode up to Colonel Phelps on a white horse and demanded whither he was going and for what purpose. Colonel Phelps replied that he was making a reconnoissance into Hampton and that if his troops were not molested, no harm would be done the town or its inhabitants. Thereupon the Lieutenant turned and rode back to the bridge at a gallop. Immediately a dense cloud of smoke arose from near the end of the bridge which the troops were approaching. The fire could not have been set until after Lieutenant Cutshaw and his horse had passed the point at which it was set. Upon perceiving this, Colonel Phelps at once gave the command "Double quick, march," to the platoon in front, and led the way, limping as he ran. Captain Clark with the Swanton company followed close upon his heels, and before the rest of the regiment had overtaken them they had torn up the burning planks and thrust them into the river, thus extinguishing the flames. Immediately a few planks were laid across the opening and the troops crossed at single file and formed by fours and marched into Hampton without molestation. The few soldiers of the enemy that were posted about the town did not make their appearance, and after conversing with some of the citizens, whom he had known years before when stationed at Fortress Monroe, Colonel Phelps led his regiment back to its quarters.

Two days after this reconnoissance the regiment moved from the Hygeia Hotel across the causeway and bridge to the mainland and took up its quarters in tents. Two New York regiments were encamped near by, and in the night-time the Vermont troops were turned out for the first time by the long roll on account of false alarms in the other regiments. The main point of interest among the men seemed to be to ascertain whether all their comrades, and especially their officers were in the line. The examination was quite satisfactory, for all were there.

The following day, Sunday, May 26, the regiment was ordered to be ready to march at five o'clock the next morning with two days rations of bread and pork. To one of the company officers inquiring the destination, Colonel Phelps replied, that we were going where we were ordered if we could get there. Monday morning the men embarked on board the steamers "Cataline" and "Monticello," and moved up Hampton Roads to a point on the east side of the James river known as Newport News, the battery at Sewell's Point sending a few ineffectual shots after them. There they disembarked, and together with the Fourth Massachusetts and Seventh New York, (state militia, not the famous city Seventh), proceeded to fortify the position. The expedition was evidently sent out with the expectation of encountering the enemy, but none appeared. The lines of the proposed fortifications were drawn through luxuriant wheat and corn fields by officers of the United States Engineer Corps, and work commenced the next day after landing. The works when completed, consisted of an earth parapet seven feet high and a ditch of the same depth, extending about 1,800 feet in a semi-circle from the river to the river again and inclosing the three camps of the regiments named. Each regiment constructed the embankment in its front, and the portion that fell to the lot of the Vermont troops, who were encamped in the center of the line, was soon completed and much in advance of that of the other regiments. Guns were mounted upon the bastion and an angle of the parapet on the land side, while one of the heavy Columbiads—rifled—pointed towards the river. Two other regiments, one of which was Hawkins' Zouaves, soon joined the command, and with the "Harriet Lane" in the river, everybody felt quite secure from attack. From the time of landing at Newport News until the battle of Big Bethel, the men worked upon the fortifications, had battalion drill, dress parade and guard mount that seemed to mean something for they were now facing the enemy's country. Parties were sent out for wood and timber to finish the parapet. And in this connection it will be interesting to compare a printed report of one of our friends, the enemy, with the fact.

In a report made to Col. J. B. Magruder, commanding division at Yorktown, June 12, Capt. W. H. Werth, Chatham Grays, Virginia Cavalry, says :

"Sir: I beg leave to make the following report of a reconnoissance made by me of the enemy's position at Newport News on Friday, 7th of June, 1861." He then enumerates the officers and men that he took with him, and says he saw eight men whom he tried to intercept, but that they reached camp and raised an alarm in the Massachusetts regiment, which was camped outside the works, and not more than one hundred and sixty yards from where he stood. He also saw a party of wood choppers. He then goes on to say, "I at once saw that I must do quickly whatever I intended doing, so I reined my horse back, and walked him out into the clearing in plain view of the whole party (of wood choppers) and not more than twenty paces from them, picked out the commissioned officer, and shot him dead in his tracks. The whole party then yelled, 'Look out, look out for the d——d Virginia horsemen ; they are down on us,' &c., and at once threw down everything they had, and commenced a retreat at a double quick. I put spurs to my horse and rode into them at full speed, (giving at the same time a loud walla-walla war-whoop), and then delivered my second shot which brought another man (a private) dead to the ground. (I shot the first one through the heart and the last one under the right shoulder blade.)"

"My horse by this time became totally unmanageable, and my third fire missed its aim, but killed a sorrel mule. I fired only these three shots. The party consisted of twenty-seven privates of infantry, two privates of artillery, one commissioned officer and one non-commissioned officer of infantry—in all, thirty-one. * * * * The party of thirty-one had their arms stacked against a tree, whilst four of them were on guard with their muskets."

A letter written from the Vermont regiment makes the following statement in regard to what is undoubtedly the same occurrence. The letter was written Sunday, June 9, and where it says, "last Thursday" should without doubt say, "last Friday," for the 7th of June would be on Friday, unless Captain Werth, whose report was made on the 12th, is mistaken in his dates. The letter says: "Last Thursday we had an alarm and the troops were kept under arms an hour or more. It turned out that four horsemen were seen down in the woods and that one of them fired at a Massachusetts man but hit the mule in his cart. The men, (Massachusetts men), only two of them, took to their heels and got into camp in safety. Since then no chopping parties have been allowed to go out without a guard. The next day Captain Andross took out most of his company to act as a guard. He was out half of the day but met with no adventure."

The event of the three months' campaign was the battle of Big Bethel.

Sunday, June 9, Colonel Phelps received orders from General Butler, in compliance with which he detailed the Woodstock, Bradford, Northfield, Burlington and Rutland companies of the Vermont regiment, to march at twelve o'clock midnight, together with five companies of the Massachusetts Fourth regiment and three companies of the New York Seventh, all under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Washburn, to act in concert with a force from Fortress Monroe, in the capture of an outpost of the enemy at a place called Little Bethel, a rustic church said to be six miles from Camp Butler at Newport News. Soon after twelve the column started, taking with it a brass twelve pounder drawn by mules, and a six pounder drawn by hand by the Germans of the New York regiment. This night movement was altogether in opposition to the expressed opinion of Colonel Phelps, who predicted disaster.

The plan, which seemed well enough conceived, was to surround and capture the small force at Little Bethel, but the very misfortune that Colonel Phelps feared might befall these raw troops moving in the night time, did happen, and the Germans posted at a fork in the roads in the rear of the main column, a few miles out from Newport News, fired into Colonel Townsend's regiment advancing from Hampton. This blunder should have ended the expedition, for if there were any troops at Little Bethel they had fled, or, what is more probable, had already been withdrawn when the movement was begun. But Brigadier-General Pierce, of Massachusetts, who was in command of all the forces, understanding that his instructions required him to move upon Big Bethel, gave the order to advance. Upon hearing the firing in their rear the five Vermont companies, by order of Lieutenant-Colonel Washburn, had fallen back to the place where the three German companies had been stationed, and formed in line of battle in their front, expecting to hear from the enemy, but there was no enemy there. Soon Duryea's Zouaves came running back, and after awhile Townsend's regiment was brought up and the line of march taken for Big Bethel. The unfortunate conflict of friendly troops occurred before sunrise and while it was still dark or so foggy that objects were not distinctly seen. The line was formed at Big Bethel, a little after nine o'clock in the forenoon. The Vermont and Massachusetts troops were near the center with the Zouaves, and two pieces of artillery and two howitzers on the right and Townsend's regiment on the left. Two of the Vermont companies—the Rutland and the Burlington—were detached and moved further to the left to cover the flank of Townsend's regiment and to act as skirmishers. The battle begun with the artillery, which, upon the Union side, was stationed in the road in front of the rebel battery of four guns, across the creek. In the meantime the Zouaves pushed forward towards the bridge, doing little harm to the enemy by their firing. When the artillery, which was manned by regulars under command of Lieutenant Greble, had nearly expended its ammunition, an order came to Lieutenant-Colonel Washburn to attempt to outflank the enemy on their left. He at once gave the command to march by the right flank, and the three companies of his regiment then with him, and the five Massachusetts companies filed in the rear of the artillery, and after making a long detour to the right through the woods, came out into open land, crossed the marsh and creek that were before them and formed in line parallel to an out-work on the flank of the rebel battery, but with a low ridge between. The men immediately charged up the acclivity by order of their commander and commenced a rapid fire of musketry. Captain Andross was the first man upon the embankment. The fire was returned to some extent and several men were killed and wounded at this point, but soon the fire of the rebels nearly ceased, and suggestions were made of an advance, but just then a bugle in the rear, across the creek, sounded the retreat, and Lieutenant-Colonel Washburn withdrew his men by the same route that they went in, across the creek and marsh. The enemy brought their artillery to bear upon the retreating forces and for a time made it lively for them. When the Vermont troops, who were with Washburn, came upon the road near where they had held their first position, they found everything in full retreat in front of them; even the two companies that had been detached upon the left, were in advance, thinking that the Lieutenant-Colonel was still farther down the road. The march back to Newport News was hot, dusty and tedious, but soon after sun-set, weary and footsore, the tired men filed slowly into camp, if not with much glory, yet with a good deal of experience and with the consciousness that the Vermonters had done their duty. From this time forward the history of the regiment was uneventful. On the 22d of June, Priv. D. H. Whitney of the Woodstock company, was killed by bushwhackers.

On the 4th of August the regiment embarked upon the two steamers, "Ben de Ford" and the "S. R. Spaulding," and sailed directly to New Haven, where it took the cars for Brattleboro, arriving there late at night on the 7th. The men were paid off by Maj. Thomas H. Halsey on the 15th and 16th, and left for home that afternoon and the next day. Their term of three months service had stretched out to four months, wanting four days. To realize the quality of the men who made up the regiment, we have but to remember that two hundred and fifty of its members held commissions later in the war, and of the seven hundred and fifty-three of the rank and file, over six hundred re-enlisted for three years. So say General Washburn and State Historian Benedict.

A three months campaign of raw troops would hardly seem to warrant so much space, but it must be remembered that this was the beginning of a great war, and after almost fifty years of peace within our borders, for during the Mexican War no hostile foot stood upon our soil. These men stepped out from the peaceful walks of life, into the duties of soldiers and here received a training that had its influence upon all of the Vermont regiments during the war.

SECOND REGIMENT.

---

BY COL. AMASA S. TRACY.

THE Second Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry was organized at Burlington, and was mustered into the United States service by Lieutenant-Colonel Rains, U. S. A., June 20, 1861, it being the first three years' regiment raised in Vermont. It was composed of ten companies, selected from about sixty which offered their services for this organization. June 24, it left Burlington for Washington, where it arrived on the 26th. While in New York, on its way to the front, it was presented with a stand of State colors. On arriving at Washington, it went into camp on Capitol Hill, where it remained until July 10. On that day it moved into Virginia, over Long Bridge, and marched through Alexandria to Bush Hill, about five miles, in the direction of Fairfax Court House. At Bush Hill it was, with the Third, Fourth and Fifth Maine, formed into a brigade under command of Col. O. O. Howard of the Third Maine. The brigade of Colonel (now Major-General) Howard was assigned to the Division of General Heintzleman. On the 16th, the regiment, with the rest of the Union Army under General McDowell, commenced its march to Centerville, and on Sunday, July 21, took part in the battle of Bull Run. After the defeat of the Union Army, the regiment returned to its old camp at Bush Hill. The loss of the regiment in this fight was as follows: Two men killed, one officer and 34 enlisted men wounded, and one officer and 30 men missing, making a total loss of 68 men.

General Howard always spoke in the highest terms of praise of the Second.

August 12, the regiment was detached from Howard's brigade and ordered to Chain Bridge, some ten miles above Georgetown on the Potomac, and went into camp at the east end of the bridge, being brigaded with the Third Vermont, the Sixth Maine and the Thirty-third New York regiments. September 3, it was moved across the bridge into Virginia once more, and about a mile from the bridge went into camp, (Camp Advance). Here the regiment, together with the Third Vermont and Sixth Maine, built Forts Marcy and Ethan Allen. During the winter of 1861-2, the regiment did picket duty along the Leesburgh turnpike, varied occasionally with a little skirmishing with the enemy. During the month of September, the Fourth and Fifth Vermont regiments had arrived, and the famous "Old Vermont Brigade" was formed. The Brigade had moved about three miles farther out in the direction of Lewinsville, where the Sixth Vermont was added to it, the whole being under command of Gen. W. F. (Baldy) Smith. Soon after the formation of the Brigade, General Smith was assigned the command of the Division of which the Vermont Brigade was a part, it being the Second Brigade, Smith's Division. Gen. W. T. H. Brooks took command, and from this time until the close of the war this regiment was identified with the Brigade in all the battles in which the latter took part. It was a regiment in which all the officers in the Division and Corps had confidence. In a fight it would obey orders if within the limits of the possible so to do.

March 10, 1862, the regiment moved from Camp Griffin, where it had remained during the winter doing picket duty and drilling, and took up the line of march to Centerville. On the arrival of the army at that place, only "quaker guns" frowned upon us, and a change of base was decided upon and the army moved to Alexandria. The regiment went into camp on the same grounds it had occupied while under General Howard, before the battle of Bull Run, but only for a few days. March 23, together with the other regiments of the Brigade, it took transports at Alexandria for Fortress Monroe. On the 24th, they landed near the Fortress and moved out to Newport News on the James River.

April 2, 1862, the regiment moved with the army up the peninsula, taking part in the fights at Young's Mills, Lee's Mills and Williamsburg, beside some skirmishing with the enemy. April 13, it reached White House Landing, where the famous Sixth Corps was formed, and the Vermont Brigade was assigned to the Second Division as the Second Brigade, and retained that place during the remaining three years of the war. Leaving White House Landing May 19, the regiment reached the Chickahominy River about the 22d. June 5, with the rest of the Sixth Corps, it crossed the Chickahominy and went into camp on Golding's Farm until the 25th. On the evening of that day, after the fighting was over, the army commenced its retreat, and the Second did its share of the fighting during the Seven Days' fight. Again a change of base was decided upon, and August 22 the regiment took transports at Fortress Monroe and steamed up the Potomac to Alexandria.

For reasons best known to the higher officers, the Sixth Corps, at the Second Battle of Bull Run, did not reach the enemy till the evening of the last day of the fighting, and was soon ordered back to Chantilly. General McClellan had previously been relieved by General Pope, Pope had been defeated and Lee's army was in Maryland. Now Pope was succeeded by McClellan, and then came the campaign in Maryland and the fights at Crampton Pass and Antietam. At Crampton Pass the Second Regiment charged the heights to the left of the road, and carried its colors to and over the crest, brushing away the rebel line as though it had been a cobweb. It was on the skirmish line at the battle of Antietam, when Lee's army withdrew from that bloody field. It fought at the first battle of Fredericksburg under Burnside, deploying as skirmishers under a furious storm of shot and shell. It repulsed the charge of a rebel brigade and held the ground all day, being withdrawn after dark. It fought in May, 1863, at the second battle of Fredericksburg under General Hooker, and carried the heights to the South of Fredericksburg in a manner that won the enthusiastic praise of those who saw the charge from the heights on the North side of the river. The next day it fought at Bank's Ford, and with the balance of the Corps for a time fought the great body of General Lee's whole army and held it in check until the Union Army had crossed the river. Colonel Whiting and Lieutenant-Colonel Joyce had resigned, and the regiment, in this fight, was commanded by Col. James H. Walbridge, who had been promoted from Major, Capt. Newton Stone being promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Capt. John S. Tyler to be Major.

On the 14th of August, 1863, the regiment went to New York, as it was expected there would be rioting in that city, remaining there until September 13, when it, with the other regiments of the Brigade, rejoined the Sixth Corps. During the winter of 1863-64 it took part in several reconnoissances with very little fighting. April 1, 1864, Colonel Walbridge resigned, and Lieutenant-Colonel Stone was promoted to be Colonel, Major Tyler to be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Capt. A. S. Tracy to be Major. May 4, the regiment, with the army, crossed the Rapidan, and on the 5th, the first day of the terrible Wilderness fight, both Colonel Stone and Lieutenant-Colonel Tyler fell, one dead, and the other mortally wounded. The regiment was with the army in all of Grant's campaign. It sustained almost irreparable loss by the death of Colonels Stone and Tyler, but the Second was one of those regiments that could fight with or without officers. Five captains and five lieutenants were either killed or wounded, and one, Lieutenant Carroll, captured. It fought at Spottsylvania at the "Bloody Angle," and at Cold Harbor. June 17, Maj. A. S. Tracy was promoted to be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Enoch E. Johnson to be Major. It had its share of fighting and skirmishing during the month of June, in front of Petersburg. July 10, it proceeded with the Sixth Corps to Washington to defend that city against the rebel army under Maj.-Gen. Jubal A. Early. It formed a part of General Sheridan's army of the Shenandoah Valley and fought at Charlestown, Va., Winchester and Fisher's Hill. At Cedar Creek, October 19, the Second, with the other regiments of the Vermont Brigade, fought until all the other organizations of the army had been driven back, and fell back in good order and formed the nucleus for the rest of the army to rally around. It took part on that day in the final charge that crushed Early's army.

In December, the Sixth Corps was withdrawn from the Valley and again joined General Grant's army in front of Petersburg. March 25, it partici pated in the charge on the enemy's entrenched picket line, which was captured. It was with the Brigade in leading the charge that broke the enemy's lines at Petersburg. With the army, it followed Lee's retreating forces, was at the battle of Sailor's Creek, and on the evening of April 6, while skirmishing with the rebel rear guard, fired the last shot of the Sixth Corps at the enemy. Lieutenant-Colonel Tracy was promoted to be Colonel, Major Johnson to be Lieutenant-Colonel and Capt. E. J. Ballou to be Major, to date from April 2, 1865.

June 8, the regiment took part in the Review by the President. July 15, it was mustered out of the United States service, and proceeded to Burlington, Vt., where it was discharged, July 25, 1865, having served four years, one month, five days. The total enrollment of the regiment was 1,858. Of these, 224 were killed or died of wounds, 175 by disease, accidents and in prison, making the total number of deaths from all causes 399. This number only includes those who died while in the service, while many more died soon after their discharge on account of wounds or disease contracted while in the service. Only 23 regiments out of a total of over 2,000 lost more men killed than the Second, and in the battle of the Wilderness, May 5 and 6, its loss was the heaviest of any regiment engaged, being 348 out of an effective force of 700 men, and in one week its loss was 56 per cent of its effective force. No regiment stands higher as a fighting regiment than the Second Vermont Volunteer Infantry.

THIRD REGIMENT.

BY EX-GOVERNOR SAMUEL E. PINGREE, LIEUTENANT-COLONEL.

THE history of the Third Regiment, Vermont Volunteer Infantry, is so completely interwoven with the history of the First Vermont Brigade—the long and honorable service of each of the five regiments of that brigade being the common fame of all—that the story of one is the substantial counterpart to the story of all the others. There was scarcely a fight in the whole service in which all were not under fire where any were, and no man could say that the glory which shed such an army-wide lustre on our arms and gave the great name to the valor of the Vermont troops was not the equal property of each of those five regiments, and the Eleventh which joined later.

The losses from disease in camp, and the casualties of the campaign and battle were substantially the same. All owed largely (and each equally) to those rugged masters of the details of the soldiers' education and guidance, Generals Smith and Brooks, for the disciplinary preparation for their brilliant achievements. They camped, they marched, they fought upon and over the same fields as one body, and under the same leaders. Their history, in most that makes up the fame of either, is the common inheritance of those regiments alike. After a lapse of nearly thirty years, it is difficult for even one "who went, and saw, and conquered" with them, to write a brief sketch of either without being lost in the broader and deeper achievements of all as the proper unit to write about, to tie to, and to let fond recollections rally around.

In April, 1861, the "shot of Sumter" was heard, hurling defiance to the people of the North. Within thirty days after, the young men of eastern Vermont, from Springfield to Coventry, were enlisting under their chosen leaders, and invoking the State authorities to give them a place "in the right forms of war." The work went bravely on, and June 7, 1861, company F of Hartford, was the first to arrive in camp at St. Johnsbury from abroad, finding the St. Johnsbury company "at home" and ready to receive them. Company A from Springfield joined the next day, and others followed. The school of the soldier, squad and company were soon organized, and the theoretical learning of the militia veterans and the cadets from Norwich were improved, and in a few weeks guard mounting and dress parades were indulged in. Arms and uniforms were distributed in due time. The former, the Enfield rifle, was discarded for the Springfield rifle musket before the end of the first year's service, and the gray uniform, a Vermont manufacture, gave way the next spring to the inferior fabric, although standard dress, of the army blue.

The life in "Camp Baxter" was unmarked by important events. Men and officers labored together to fit themselves for the calling to which they had been voluntarily committed. Submissive to the slow developments of the laws and regulations of camp life, charity for the little learning each had of the new duties, and a spirit to study and comprehend the new vocation they had assumed, characterized the members of the regiment, and their labors were fruitful of good results.

July 22, 1861, news of a progressing battle at the front was in the air, and in two days after the regiment was on its way to Washington. The hospitable and patriotic people of St. Johnsbury bade them God speed, and acclaims of joy greeted them as the 882 officers and men passed through the cities and large towns on their way thither.

Presented with a beautiful banneret at Hartford, Conn., by the sons of Vermont of that city, and joined there by Col. W. F. Smith, it marched on board the "Elm City" at New Haven, partook of the hospitalities of the good people of Philadelphia the night of the 25th, arrived in Washington the next morning, and on the 27th marched up the Potomac, laid out and occupied "Camp Lyon" for the protection of Chain Bridge (which was built of wood) and the waterworks and reservoir supplying the Capital, six miles below. Here Colonel Smith assumed command of the regiment, and introduced systematic methods of camp life with the drill, parade, picket duty and reconnoissance into Virginia, then held by the enemy stationed at Falls Church and Vienna, within a few hours march of our camp.

The Sixth Maine, Mott's Battery and a company of cavalry constituted the Union troops at this important point for a season, but later the Thirty-third New York, and the Second Vermont joined us, and other commands were soon posted above and below our camp. Changes came in field and line by resignation and promotion. The first review of note was held here by President Lincoln, attended by several of his cabinet, together with Generals McClellan, Scott and others of rank and quality, who complimented the troops on their soldierly bearing, receiving their applause in return.

On the dark night of Sept. 3, 1861, the regiment, with the rest of the command, moved silently across the Potomac into Virginia, and named and occupied "Camp Advance" and built Fort Ethan Allen. The trial and death sentence of young Scott for sleeping at his sentry post near the old camp, the impressive parade for his military execution and his pardon by the President as he was standing to receive the fatal volley, the first baptism of the regiment by fire at the Lewinsville skirmish, Sept. 11, in which two men were killed and others wounded, the heavy details from day to day for fatigue duty upon the defensive works in rear of our camp, with the picketing at the front and the daily drills, made up the variety of the service for the summer.

Early in October, the Fourth and Fifth regiments arrived, and all soon advanced some four miles into the enemies country and occupied "Camp Griffin." The acclimation period was most severe and serious at this camp, and it was not till well nigh winter that the sick list began to shrink and the bulk of the regiment was on duty again, and in January but one in ten were on the sick roll. A few officers organized a school of study of the tactics and regulations, and some of the men did the same. The skirmish drill by the bugle calls and the bayonet drill became in order, and these days of preparation were most profitable to all.

The camps were abandoned March 10, 1862, and the regiment moved via Flint Hill to Alexandria, arriving there after a march in the most cold and drenching rain storm it ever experienced. A fortnight later it sailed down the Potomac and Chesapeake to Fortress Monroe, arriving near Newport News on the 25th, and in the same week marched forward to the strongly fortified lines of the enemy on the slopes of the Warwick. Here the regiment furnished the first of its many details for the building of the corduroy roads through the vast morasses of the Peninsula. But the army, stretching from the head of the Chesapeake across the Peninsula to the James, was here confronted by the outer line of the defenses of Richmond, manned by brave and defiant Confederate soldiers, commanded by a general of large experience in the Mexican War. To break this line at a given point and open the way for the Union army to make a lodgement on the right bank of the Warwick and turn the position of the enemy, two companies of this regiment were selected to lead in the desperate assault, supported by two others of the same regiment. This was the substantial opening of the great Peninsula campaign against Richmond under General McClellan. The attack was a success to the fullest extent of the orders given the storming column; the enemy's lines were broken and their forces scattered by less than two hundred men, and, with a division of troops predisposed and thrown across after it, the permanent lodgement of our forces on the west side of the stream was made possible. Once there to stay, the enemy's line of defense was turned, and the advance of our army on Richmond would be no longer delayed at Yorktown. No re-enforcements came, and after holding the position forty minutes, the four companies were recalled through the stream, having lost nearly half their number in killed and wounded. Providence had, apparently, intended that no great results should come of such small beginnings, and so the army remained here till the enemy evacuated Yorktown the May following.

The regiment was active in sustaining General Hancock in his masterly maneuver and battle at Williamsburgh. In the month of road and bridge building, fatigue and picket duty, and in the seven days of fighting before Richmond, the regiment was always in hard service, and at Savage's Station, June 29, suffered severe loss in battle. In the Maryland campaign of 1862, which followed, it bore its share of the glory of the fight at Burkettsville, South Mountain, Antietam and, the following December, at Fredericksburg. In the first year and a half of its service its field officers had thrice changed, and the captains of the line had changed once or more in each company, and subaltern officers with proportionate frequency.

The allotment of limited space compels but brief reference to the memorable "mud march" under the right-hearted Burnside, the gallant rush and pursuit up the sides of Marye's Heights, the part so well borne in the valiant fight at Bank's Ford, where the Seventh Louisiana laid down their arms in its front, and its commanding officer tendered his sword to Seaver, who declined to take it from an officer who had shown such daring courage on that bloody field, the second Maryland march and campaign, culminating in the great victory to the Union army at Gettysburg, the rugged defence of the skirmish line at Funkstown in face of line of battle attacks, in which the entire regiment was engaged at the front or as active supports. Nor will space be permitted to recount the New York campaign for the preservation of loyalty and order there and in Jersey City against treasonable and riotous minorities in sympathy with the rebels of the South.

On the march to Brandy Station, Va., the regiment was disposed for its share in the brilliant evening battle of Rappahannock Station, of November 7, but the success of the storming force robbed it of a share in this bloody fight, where the Sixth Maine won enviable fame for such of its members as survived. Then came the happy winter in the captured camps of the enemy at Brandy Station, diverted only by the abortive demonstration on Mine Run, succeeded May 4, 1864, by the march towards the Wilderness, to which field the Third regiment headed the column and on which it lost one in three of its rank and file. At Spottsylvania, May 10, in Upton's charge, and on the 12th at the "Salient," the regiment was in the hottest of the battles, and on the 21st it was sent out alone to restore the lines where the enemy had broken through, endangering the forward movement south of Spottsylvania, capturing prisoners and re-establishing the lines. At Cold Harbor, June 3, the regiment bore the brunt of the battle in the front line, losing again nearly one-third of its effective force in killed and wounded, so that the losses by the casualties of battle had now taken from the rank every other man in the regiment inside of thirty days.

The march to Petersburg was the next move of the command. The skirmish line of the Sixth Corps in the advance on Reams's Station, on the Weldon railroad, June 29, was composed wholly of the Third Regiment, and the enemy retreated before their gallant fire. It was now transferred, by rapid transports up the Potomac as a part of the Sixth Corps, to join in repelling the bold attack of Early on Washington in front of Fort Stevens, July 12, 1864, and to pursue and drive that audacious Confederate back into Virginia at Poolesville. The 104 of the old regiment who had not re-enlisted, bade adieu to their re-enlisted comrades, and to the pursuits of war, returned to Vermont and were mustered out of service July 27, 1864.

One hundred and seventy-nine had re-enlisted for the rest of the war, and these with recruits were consolidated into a battalion and continued with the brigade, taking part in the battle at Charlestown, Va., August 21, and at Winchester, September 19, where the losses of the battalion were severe. At Fisher's Hill and at Cedar Creek the command also bore a conspicuous part, and suffered serious losses. This campaign over, by the defeat and rout of Early, the command returned to Petersburg and went into winter quarters on the "squirrel road," to picket duty, work on fortifications, holding them against assaults, and joining in counter demonstrations against the enemy.

April 2, the battalion was in the great assault which resulted in rattling the Confederacy to pieces and the surrender of its armies. This was the last of its fighting. After the Grand Review by Governor Smith and President Johnson, the command turned its direction towards its beloved State, and was paid off and scattered, each man to his own home, from the Marine Hospital, of Burlington, June 19, 1865. Some of the feeble few who still live, meet annually, but count the survivors by numbers smaller and yet smaller as year by year goes by.

It is the highest compliment that could be paid to this regiment, to say, that it was the peer of any of its fellows of the Old Brigade, and the truth of its historic service commends the justice of thus much praise.

NOTE.—William Scott, of Co. K., was the "Sleeping Sentinel" who, while the regiment was at Chain Bridge, was sentenced to be shot, and whom President Lincoln visited, and, upon investigation of the facts, pardoned. Chittenden in his "Recollections of President Lincoln" (page 280) states that Scott when dying of wounds received in battle said to his comrades: "If any of you ever have the chance, I wish you would tell President Lincoln that I have never forgotten the kind words he said to me at the Chain Bridge, that I have tried to be a good soldier and true to the flag—that I should have paid my whole debt to him if I had lived; and that now, when I know that I am dying, I think of his kind face and thank him again, because he gave me the chance to fall like a soldier in battle, and not like a coward by the hands of my comrades."

FOURTH REGIMENT.

---

BY LIEUTENANT-COLONEL STEPHEN M. PINGREE.

THE Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, was raised chiefly in late August and early September, 1861, simultaneously with the Fifth regiment. The Fourth, to the extent of nearly nine of its ten companies, was raised on the east side of the mountains, while the Fifth, in fully as great a proportion, was being recruited on the west side.

Company A of the Fourth was fully raised in, and very near to Bennington county. Windsor county furnished a larger number than any other for the Fourth, being company C, most of E. a considerable part of K, and a fraction of B—the larger part of B being from Orange county; D was largely from Orleans county, with a fraction from the north-westerly part of Windham county; F was from Windham county, largely along the Connecticut River in Brattleboro, Rockingham and between; G and H were chiefly from Washington and Caledonia counties; I was largely from Windham county, though partly from the north-easterly part of the State, while K—except as above stated, and a small fraction from Windham—was from Washington county and the north-westerly part of Orange county.

Its original aggregate, as a regiment, was 1,048, of whom it is believed less than forty deserted, some of whom returned. The most numerous desertions were from companies C and K. The smallest losses, "killed and died of wounds," (battle losses) were in B, E, F, I and K, and of these, ten in B was the least. Four companies—A, C, D and G—each lost over twice that number. Twelve officers and one hundred fifty enlisted men died in battle; one officer and two hundred seventy-nine enlisted men died of disease and as prisoners, sixty of whom died in Confederate prisons.

In the battle of the Wilderness, Va., in May, 1864, seven officers were killed and eleven wounded, one of whom died of his wounds, and out of less than five hundred fifty enlisted men in that battle, forty-one were killed outright. Two hundred twenty-three were wounded, forty-three mortally, and four were missing; so that, in this battle, the actual death loss was eighty-four, the largest suffered by any Vermont regiment in one battle, and a loss seldom equalled by any infantry regiment in a single engagement during the war. Its total losses by death were in excess of those of any other infantry regiment from the State. The first Colonel, Edwin H. Stoughton, was but 23 years of age. He was the youngest officer to take a regiment from Vermont, and is believed to have been the youngest from New England. His brother, Charles B., (Second Col.) was made Colonel at 21.

The regiment was mustered in at Brattleboro, September 20, 1861, started for Washington next day, and in five days joined the other Vermont troops then in Virginia, at Camp Advance, and was soon followed by the Fifth and Sixth, which, with the Second and Third who had "gone before," made up the "Old Vermont Brigade," which remained unbroken, save by casualties, and was present at the surrender of Lee. Like other Vermont organizations the Fourth was fortunate both in its officers and its men. It was also extremely fortunate to form part of a brigade, organized and commanded by that gallant and unexcelled soldier, Gen. W. T.

H. Brooks; to form a part of a division, led by the brave and soldierly Wm. F. Smith—"Baldy"—and of a corps—Old Sixth—which, under the command of Franklin, and later, of the incomparable Sedgwick, became the pride and idol of the volunteer service. "Over all this waved the Greek Cross" never humbled and never dishonored.

To have been esteemed worthy, for nearly four years of war, to share the companionship in arms of our fellow regiments from Vermont, and to have borne in their opinion a deserving part of the great work of the Old Brigade, ought to be, and is, accepted as a sure passport that the Fourth regiment was all it need to have been, or claims to be. Her history is everywhere a part of the history of a brigade famed throughout our Nation, and whose losses in battle, killed and mortally wounded, exceed those of any other brigade in the Union armies, east or west.

FOURTH REGIMENT.

(THREE YEARS.)

Mustered into the service of the United States, September 21, 1861. Original members, not veterans, mustered out of service September 30, 1864. First, Second and Third Companies of Sharp Shooters transferred to Fourth Regiment, February 25, 1865, but their names do not appear in this organization, their record having been completed in their original companies. Veterans, recruits, and men transferred from the Sharp Shooters consolidated into eight companies February 25, 1865. Recruits for one year and recruits whose term of service would expire previous to October 1, 1865, mustered out of service June 19, 1865. Remainder of regiment mustered out of service July 13, 1865.

FIFTH REGIMENT.

---

BY HON. LEWIS A. GRANT, (Assistant Secretary of War), BRIGADIER and BREVET MAJOR-GENERAL U. S. VOLS.

JOHN R. LEWIS, COLONEL FIFTH REGIMENT and BREVET BRIGADIER-GENERAL U. S. VOLS. ;

THE Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, was composed of companies organized at the following towns, the men composing them being enlisted from these and adjoining towns: company A. St. Albans; B, Middlebury; C, Swanton; D, Hyde Park; E, Manchester; F, Cornwall; G, Rutland; H, Brandon; I, detachments from Burlington, Poultney and Tinmouth; K, Richmond.

The regiment was mustered into the United States service for three years at St. Albans, Vt., Sept. 16, 1861, and in a few days went to Washington and camped on Meridian Hill, then crossed Chain Bridge into Virginia and joined other Vermont regiments at Camp Advance, when the Old Vermont Brigade was organized.

The regiment spent most of the fall and winter of 1861-62 at Camp Griffin, near Langley, Va., going to Fortress Monroe in the spring of 1862 and taking part in the Peninsula Campaign. At Savage's Station, June 29, 1862, it suffered the greatest loss, in killed and wounded, of any Vermont regiment in any one engagement. In this battle, with not over four hundred muskets, it lost 188 officers and men in half an hour—company E losing 44 men killed and wounded out of fifty-nine, 25 of whom were killed or mortally wounded. It was here that five Cummings brothers, and one cousin, of company E, were all killed or wounded, only one of the six recovering from his wounds. Returning in August, the regiment marched out across Cub Run, near the second Bull Run battle field. It then joined in the Maryland Campaign. Returning to Virginia, it encamped during the winter of 1862-63 near Fredericksburg, taking part in the campaign near that place in 1863, and in the Gettysburg campaign. From Gettysburg it went into Virginia, and thence to New York at the time of the draft riot. Returning to the Army of the Potomac it took part in the fall campaign in Virginia. It encamped during the winter of 1863-64 near Brandy Station, where it re-enlisted, Dec. 15, 1863, being the first regiment to re-enlist and go home on a veteran furlough. In 1864 it took an active part in the terrible campaign from the Rapidan to Petersburg, and reached the line in front of Petersburg June 17. It went into this campaign with about five hundred muskets, and in one month lost 349 men in killed, wounded and missing, including two field officers, six captains and five lieutenants.

In July the regiment returned and assisted in driving Early from Washington, following him into the valley and becoming a part of the Army of the Shenandoah.

Sept. 15, 1864, the term of the original members of the regiment who had not re-enlisted expired, and they were mustered out at Clifton, Va., leaving present for duty with the regiment one assistant surgeon, a quartermaster, three first lieutenants and about three hundred men. This fragment of a regiment participated in Sheridan's campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, from Winchester to Mount Crawford and return. Dec. 9 the regiment left the valley and returned to Petersburg, going into winter quarters, Dec. 13, near the Squirrel Level Road, in the line south of Petersburg. It led the Sixth Corps in its assault upon the enemy's works at Petersburg, April 2, 1865, and was the first regiment in the corps to plant its flag upon the enemy's works. It took part in the pursuit and capture of Lee's army, and after his surrender it marched to Danville, Va., to aid in preventing the escape of Johnston's army. It then went to Munson's Hill, near Washington, where it was mustered out of the service of the United States, June 29, 1865, and returned to Vermont to be finally discharged. At its muster-out but 24 officers and 288 men were borne upon its rolls — an aggregate of 312 out of a total enrollment of 1,618 during its entire term of service.

For ten months of its last year of service the highest rank of any of its officers present for duty was that of captain; for more than three months of this period none of the officers of the regiment present with it were above the rank of first lieutenant, and every officer that returned with the regiment went out as a private in the ranks.

During its four years of service the regiment sustained the following losses: killed and died of wounds received in action, 11 officers, 202 men, a total of 213, or 13.8 per cent of its total enrollment. Its total of killed and wounded in battle during the war was 685. The deaths from disease and accident, in rebel prisons and from other causes, were 1 officer, 124 men. The total number of known deaths from all causes was 338. The Fifth was one of the forty-five infantry regiments, out of all the regiments of the Union armies, that lost over 200 men, killed or mortally wounded in battle during the War of the Rebellion. It bore an honorable and active part in the battles of Lee's Mills, Williamsburg, Golding's Farm, Savage's Station, White Oak Swamp, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Dec., '62; Fredericksburg, May, '63; Fredericksburg, June, '63; Salem Heights, Gettysburg, Funkstown, Rappahannock Station, The Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Bloody Angle, Anderson's Farm, Jericho Ford, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, June, '64; Fort Stevens, Charlestown, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Petersburg, March 25, 1865; Petersburg, April 2, 1865; Sailor's Creek, and other skirmishes and reconnoissances.

SIXTH REGIMENT.

---

BY HON. FRANK G. BUTTERFIELD, (Chief of the Special Examination Division, Bureau of Pensions, Washington, D. C.), LIEUTENANT-COLONEL SIXTH REGIMENT.

SEPTEMBER 16, 1861, in response to an urgent request from the Secretary of War, Gov. Erastus Fairbanks issued orders for raising and organizing the Sixth Vermont Regiment. In less than two weeks the regiment was raised and ordered to rendezvous at Montpelier. The several companies were recruited and commanded as follows: A, Addison county, Capt. George Parker, Jr.; B, Caledonia, Windsor and Orange counties, Capt. A. B. Hutchinson; C, Windsor county, Capt. J. C. Spaulding; D, Orleans county, Capt. Oscar A. Hale; E, Caledonia and Windsor counties, Capt. Edwin W. Barker; F, Rutland, Washington and Chittenden counties, Capt. E. F. Reynolds; G, Washington county, Capt. Wm. H. H. Hall; H, Washington county, Capt. D. B. Davenport; I, Chittenden county, Capt. Wesley Hazelton; K, Franklin county, Capt. Elisha L. Barney.

October 15 the regiment was mustered into the United States service for three years with the following field and staff: Colonel, Nathan Lord, Jr.; Lieutenant-Colonel, Asa P. Blunt; Major, Oscar S. Tuttle; Adjutant, Richard B. Crandall; Quartermaster, John W. Clark; Surgeon, R. C. M. Woodward; Assistant Surgeon, Charles M. Chandler; Chaplain, Edward P. Stone.

On Saturday, October 19, only thirty-three days after the Governor's call for volunteers, the regiment was en route to the front. Reaching Washington on the 22d, the regiment two days later marched to Camp Griffin near Lewinsville, Va., where it joined the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Vermont regiments, thus completing the Vermont Brigade. Henceforth its history was merged in, and became identical with that of the old Vermont Brigade.

During the winter the regiment suffered remarkably from sickness. There were 278 cases of typhoid fever, 330 of measles, 90 of diphtheria and 180 of mumps. The mortality was great, amounting to more than 50 deaths.

In the original organization of the Army of the Potomac, the Vermont Brigade, of which the Sixth formed a part, was assigned to Gen. William F. Smith's division of the Fourth Army Corps, under the command of General Keyes.

March 10, 1862, the regiment broke camp and entered upon its first field work, the Peninsula campaign. Embarking at Alexandria on the 23d, it landed at Fortress Monroe on the 24th, and on the 4th of April commenced its march up the Peninsula, arriving in front of the enemy on Warwick Creek on the next day. On the 6th the regiment was for the first time under fire in support of a battery, during a demonstration made by the division upon the Confederate works. It was, however, subjected to no loss, and it was not until the 16th of April, at Lee's Mills, that it received its "baptism of fire." On that day the right wing crossed Warwick Creek, through water up to the waist, under a severe and galling fire, and attacked the enemy's works. At the moment of success it was decided to abandon the attack and they were ordered to retire. The loss of the regiment in this battle was 23 killed and mortally wounded, and 57 wounded, the bulk of the loss being from the right wing. Thereafter the regiment remained in sight of the enemy, doing picket duty, during the remainder of the month of April, with no incident worthy of note, except that on the 29th it made a reconnoissance resulting in a slight skirmish. Lieut. A. M. Nevins of company G was mortally wounded, and a man in company K wounded.

On the night of the 3d of May the enemy abandoned their line across the Peninsula, and on the morning of the 4th the regiment crossed Warwick Creek and occupied the entrenchments which they had assaulted so gallantly on the 16th of April. When the enemy moved out of these works they left behind them evidence of an utter disregard of the rules of civilized warfare. There were found scores of loaded shells buried in the ground near the surface, to each of which was attached a fuse surmounted by a percussion cap just at the surface. These were thus planted for the purpose of killing our men when they stepped upon the percussion cap and exploded the shell. Several explosions took place, killing a few and maiming others, upon which a search was made and the remaining shells unearthed. This is no camp rumor, but an absolute truth, for the writer saw scores of these shells dug up and carried away.

Leaving Lee's Mills on the same day, the regiment moved up the Peninsula, and on the 5th of May they were again in battle at Williamsburg. The regiment marched on the 9th toward New Kent Court House, arriving there on the 11th; on the 12th to Cumberland Landing, on the Pamunkey River, and on the next day to White House Landing, where they remained four days. On the 16th day of May, 1862, the Sixth Provisional Corps was organized, to which Smith's Division was assigned, and the Vermont Brigade, to which the Sixth belonged, became the Second Brigade, Second Division, Sixth Army Corps, which designation it retained until the close of the war. It marched on the 19th by way of Tunstall's Station to near New Bridge on the Chickahominy, ten miles from Richmond; on the 22d to near Gaines's Mill, about eight miles from Richmond; and on the 24th it moved forward a mile, and camped on the farm of Dr. Gaines. During the second day of the battle of Fair Oaks, (June 1), the corps marched to cross the Chickahominy at New Bridge to re-enforce the troops engaged, but were met at the pontoon bridge by countermanding orders. The brigade returned to camp and the Sixth regiment was left to guard the bridge.

June 5 the brigade crossed the river four miles below at Grape Vine Bridge and occupied a position near Golding's house, remaining there until June 28. On the evening of the 27th the Sixth was engaged in a severe skirmish at Golding's Farm, in which it lost one killed, six wounded and missing. For its part in this skirmish, it, together with the Fourth Vermont, was mentioned in General Hancock's report of the affair. On the 28th the Vermont Brigade was withdrawn from its position and marched out of camp under a furious cannonade from the rebel batteries. On the next day, Sunday, the regiment marched to Savage's Station, where a battle was fought in the afternoon, lasting well into the night. In this fight the regiment lost 21 killed and mortally wounded, and 54 wounded and missing. The regiment left the field at 10 o'clock, and with the balance of the command marched to the rear and crossed the White Oak Swamp at daylight on the morning of the 30th. On this day was fought the battle of White Oak Swamp.

The Sixth Army Corps held the right of the line at Malvern Hill, but was not engaged. After the battle it marched to Harrison's Landing, where it remained more than a month. On the Peninsula the regiment was constantly in the front, participating in nearly all the battles and skirmishes of the campaign. Added to the severe losses in battle were the many cases of sickness and death from fever and malaria, caused by the swamps of the Chickahominy, so that when the regiment arrived on the James River its ranks were sadly depleted. August 16 the regiment marched with the Sixth Army Corps en route to Fortress Monroe. On the 22d it embarked on transports from Fortress Monroe to Alexandria, arriving Sunday, August 24, and remaining there until August 29. The brigade was within sound of the firing at Second Bull Run, but was not engaged. The regiment participated in the Maryland campaign, being often under fire, and was engaged in the brilliant combat of Crampton's Gap and the bloody battle of Antietam.

September 26, the regiment went into camp at Hagerstown, Md., and enjoyed a month's fairly earned rest. Recrossing the Potomac November 2, it bore an honorable part at Fredericksburg. December 18, Colonel Lord, who had hitherto commanded the regiment, resigned on account of ill-health and Lieutenant-Colonel Tuttle was promoted to the colonelcy. The regiment wintered at White Oak Church, a few miles from Fredericksburg.

In March, 1863, Colonel Tuttle resigned by reason of serious illness, and Lieutenant-Colonel Barney was made colonel. Colonel Barney commanded the regiment thereafter until he fell mortally wounded in the battle of the Wilderness in May, 1864.

In the Chancellorsville campaign of 1863, the regiment did gallant service at Marye's Heights, and especially at Bank's Ford, where, in a gallant charge, it drove back the enemy and captured 250 prisoners. It again crossed the Rappahannock June 6, and was sharply engaged with the enemy, holding its ground three hours against a greatly superior force. It participated in the Pennsylvania campaign, and at Gettysburg, with the brigade, held the extreme left of the line. When the battle of Gettysburg opened on July 1, the regiment, with the Sixth Army Corps, was at Manchester, Md., thirty-five miles from the battlefield. At dusk orders came to move, but it was about 10 o'clock at night before the column started for Gettysburg. It was on this occasion that General Sedgwick issued his famous order, "Put the Vermonters ahead and keep the column well closed up," and before the sun went down on the afternoon of the 2d, the column deployed into line of battle at Gettysburg.

July 10 it suffered severely in the battle of Funks-town, Md., one of the most brilliant engagements of the war. Here the brigade relieved Buford's cavalry which it found skirmishing with the enemy. The Sixth and Fifth first went on to the skirmish line, but, the enemy attacking in force, the entire brigade was deployed as skirmishers, covering a front of more than two miles. During the day it was attacked three times by heavy lines of battle, but each time repulsed the enemy. Notwithstanding there were probably 50,000 Union troops within thirty minutes' march of the line, the Vermont skirmish line held its position against solid lines of battle all day long without help, a feat unparalleled in modern history. Soon after the Sixth, with the rest of the Brigade, was sent to New York City on account of the draft riots; thence to Kingston, N. Y., returning to Virginia September 16. It served the remainder of the year with "Meade and Lee's express line, between Alexandria and Culpepper," participated in the engagement at Rappahannock Station November 7; was in the Mine Run campaign supporting the Third Corps at Locust Grove, and went into winter quarters at Brandy Station.

During the Wilderness campaign of 1864, the Sixth fought desperately and suffered enormously. Of 441 men going into battle, there were 69 killed and 127 wounded, a total of 196—almost one-half. On the 5th of May Col. Barney was mortally wounded, and the command devolved on Lieut.-Col. Oscar A. Hale, who commanded the regiment until he was severely wounded in August. On the 10th, at Spottsylvania, it charged with Upton's forlorn hope. Twelve regiments were selected from the Sixth Army Corps to pierce the enemy's line. Of these twelve, three were taken from the Vermont Brigade, the Second, Fifth, and Sixth. The Third and Fourth were on the skirmish line, and when the time came, joined in the charge. Col. Emery Upton, 121st New York, had the command. The twelve regiments formed in three lines and charged bayonet. They took the enemy's works, held these for some hours, but finally through some misapprehension were not supported, and ordered to retire. It was one of the most famous charges of the war. It made Colonel Upton a Brigadier-General, and reflected the highest honor upon every soldier engaged.

On the 12th the regiment fought at the Bloody Angle. All day long nothing separated the men from the rebels but a heavy breastwork, perhaps six feet thick. The musketry was so severe that in front of the Brigade oak trees of more than a foot in diameter were cut down by rifle balls. On the 15th the regiment, which had been reduced to about 250 men, was re-enforced by 150 men who had been on detached service for a year at Brattleboro. At Cold Harbor it was constantly engaged for twelve days, and on the 7th of June Maj. Richard B. Crandall was mortally wounded. The regiment crossed the James river on the 16th of June with the Brigade. It was constantly fighting and entrenching until the 9th of July, when it moved rapidly with the Sixth Corps to Washington to drive Early away. Thence it went with Sheridan to the Shenandoah Valley, and at Opequan, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek, did its full share of the glorious work in the valley.

August 21 at Charlestown, West Virginia, in a sharp engagement it suffered more severely than any other regiment of the Brigade. Lieutenant-Colonel Hale, Capt. B. D. Fabyan, and Capt. F. G. Butterfield were severely, and Major Dwinell mortally wounded, and the regiment lost 10 killed and mortally wounded, 29 wounded, and one missing. For the remainder of the three years' term the regiment was commanded by Capt. M. Warner Davis. October 16 it was ordered to Vermont to be mustered out, leaving at the front those who had re-enlisted, forming a battalion of about 320 men. Capt. F. G. Butterfield, Co. I, was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and Adj. Sumner H. Lincoln was made major.

At Cedar Creek, October 19, Capt. E. R. Kinney commanded the regiment until wounded, when the command devolved upon Capt. William J. Sperry. Lieutenant-Colonel Butterfield, being still disabled by his wounds, resigned his commission early in December, and Major Lincoln was promoted to lieutenant-colonel and colonel, and held the command through the rest of the war. Captain Sperry was made lieutenant-colonel, and Captain Kinney major. December 13 the Sixth rejoined the army at Petersburg, and participated in that series of brilliant victories which culminated in the surrender at Appomattox. The battalion was mustered out July 8, 1865, at Burlington, Vt. It was one of 45 out of 2,000 regiments which lost 200 men or over in battle, and one of the famous 300 fighting regiments of the Civil War.

The Light Brigade at Balaklava lost 36.7 per cent; the Sixth in the Wilderness lost nearly 45 per cent, and held the field. The reputation for gallantry won at Lee's Mills, its first battle, was retained through all its long period of service. Thereafter its members fought often, shoulder to shoulder, with comrades in the brigade, and with them gained the proud distinction of being among the first of all the troops of the Union Army in those qualities which make up the ideal soldier. They were constant and true, they kept untarnished the honor of their native State, and when they folded their banners and came back to Vermont, quietly and without an effort became again respectable citizens, and honest toilers in the arts of peace.

The officers of the regiment who were killed or mortally wounded were Col. E. L. Barney, Majors R. B. Crandall and C. W. Dwinell; Captains R. A. Bird, E. F. Reynolds, Luther Ainsworth, and G. C. Randall; First Lieutenants A. A. Crane, A. M. Nevins, G. C. Babcock, and J. G. Macomber; Second Lieutenant C. F. Bailey. Those who died of disease were Capt. D. B. Davenport, Lieut. G. H. Phelps, and Asst.-Surgeon C. A. Chapin.

FIRST REGIMENT CAVALRY.

BY WILLIAM L. GREENLEAF, FIRST LIEUTENANT FIRST VERMONT CAVALRY.

OF the two hundred fifty-eight regiments of cavalry in the service of the United States during the War of the Rebellion, but few, if any, performed more arduous service, or took part in more engagements than did the First Vermont; which, during three years at the front, participated in seventy-five battles and skirmishes—a brief account of which would far exceed the limits of this sketch—and achieved a reputation as one of the best fighting regiments in the army, standing fifth in the list of cavalry organizations suffering the greatest loss in killed and mortally wounded.

The regiment was recruited by Lemuel B. Platt, who had been specially commissioned by the Secretary of War for that purpose, and was the first full regiment of cavalry raised in New England. The several companies were enlisted as follows:—A, Chittenden county; B, Franklin county; C, Washington county; D, Orange and Caledonia counties; E, Windsor county; F, Windham county; G, Bennington county; H, Rutland county; I, Lamoille and Orleans counties; K, Addison county. In forty-two days from the time Colonel Platt received his authority the regiment was in camp at Burlington uniformed and mounted. The organization was then completed by the appointment of the following Field and Staff officers:

Colonel—Lemuel B. Platt.
Lieutenant-Colonel—George B. Kellogg.
Majors—William D. Collins and John D. Bartlett.
Adjutant—Edgar Pitkin.
Quartermaster—Archibald S. Dewey.
Surgeon—George S. Gale.
Assistant Surgeon—P. O'Meara Edson.
Chaplain—John H. Woodward.

The following company officers were elected by the several companies and commissioned by the Governor:

Company A—Captain, Frank A. Platt; First Lieutenant, Joel B. Erhardt; Second Lieutenant, Ellis B. Edwards.

Company B—Captain, George P. Conger; First Lieutenant, William M. Beeman; Second Lieutenant, Jed P. Clark.

Company C—Captain, William Wells; First Lieutenant, H. M. Paige; Second Lieutenant, Eli Holden.

Company D—Captain, Addison W. Preston; First Lieutenant, John W. Bennett; Second Lieutenant, William G. Cummings.

Company E.—Captain, S. P. Rundlett; First Lieutenant, Andrew J. Grover; Second Lieutenant, John C. Holmes.

Company F—Captain, Josiah Hall; First Lieutenant, Robert Scofield, Jr.; Second Lieutenant, Nathaniel E. Haywood.

Company G—Captain, James A. Sheldon; First Lieutenant, George H. Bean; Second Lieutenant, D. M. Blackmer.

Company H—Captain, S. G. Perkins; First Lieutenant, F. T. Huntoon; Second Lieutenant, Charles A. Adams.

Company I—Captain, E. B. Sawyer; First Lieutenant, H. C. Flint; Second Lieutenant, Josiah Grout, Jr.

Company K—Captain, Franklin Moore; First Lieutenant, John S. Ward; Second Lieutenant, John Williamson.

The regiment was mustered into the service of the United States November 19, 1861, and started for Washington on the 14th of the next month, requiring for the journey 153 cars, made up into a train of five sections. After passing through the experiences common to all new regiments, besides losing one Colonel by resignation and another by death, it met the enemy for the first time April 16, 1862, in the valley of the Shenandoah. In this engagement it charged through the little village of Mount Jackson and drove Ashby's cavalry for more than a mile to the North Fork of the Shenandoah, where the enemy set fire to the bridge hoping to cut off further pursuit. Finding the stream unfordable, part of the regiment dashed over the burning bridge after the flying Confederates, while the remainder brought water from the river in their feed-bags and extinguished the flames. The loss on this occasion was slight, but the regiment displayed in its maiden effort, that dashing valor and fertility of resource so essential to its success as a cavalry organization, and for which it was afterward noted on fields of greater magnitude.

On the 23d of May the regiment was joined by its new colonel, Charles H. Tompkins of the Regular Army, who had already achieved a reputation as a dashing cavalry officer, and under his leadership, in the retreat down the valley under Banks, the regiment had its full share of fighting, meeting the enemy at McGaheysville, Middletown and Winchester. In the campaign under Pope, which culminated in the second battle of Bull Run, the First Vermont was constantly on the move, and was engaged at Luray Court House, Culpeper Court House, Orange Court House, Kelley's Ford, Waterloo Bridge and Bull Run. At the close of this campaign the regiment, much reduced in numbers by its arduous service, was assigned to duty in the defences of Washington. Its headquarters were established near Alexandria, and detachments were stationed at Annandale, Lewinsville, Dranesville and other points. In September Colonel Tompkins resigned and was succeeded by Edward B. Sawyer, making the fourth colonel within one year. The regiment had lost during its six months of active service 319 men by death or discharge, but this loss was made good by the addition of company L, which had been recruited by Capt. H. Chester Parsons in Franklin and Chittenden counties, and company M, recruited by Capt. John W. Woodward, principally in Chittenden county. These, with the addition of 200 recruits distributed among the ten original companies, raised the aggregate of the regiment to 1,034.

During the winter, portions of the regiment were frequently engaged with Mosby and other guerrilla leaders. These affairs were comparatively bloodless, but the one of April 1, 1863, when Captain Flint with a detachment of the regiment undertook the capture of Mosby near Broad Run and met with a serious repulse, in which Captain Flint, Lieut. C. A. Woodbury and seven men were killed or mortally wounded, 22 wounded, and 82 men and 95 horses captured, was a serious blow to the regiment. This misfortune was in a measure retrieved on May 30th, when Mosby, who had captured a supply train of ten cars near Catlett's Station, was attacked by Lieutenant-Colonel Preston with about 125 of the Vermont Cavalry and pursued to Greenwich, where he attempted to make a stand, but was completely routed by a charge led by Lieutenant Hazelton of company H, and his one piece of artillery captured. The loss of the regiment on this occasion was but one man killed and 7 wounded, and was its last encounter with this famous partisan leader.

Early in June, 1863, the scattered detachments of the regiment assembled at Fairfax Court House, preparatory to joining the Army of the Potomac then on the march to Gettysburg. On the 28th of June it was attached to the Cavalry Corps of that army and was afterward associated with it until the close of the war. During the campaign of 1863 the regiment bore a conspicuous part in the brilliant operations which first brought the cavalry into notice as a valuable arm of the service, and won for itself fresh laurels on the field of Gettysburg where, under the lead of the gallant Farnsworth, it penetrated within the enemy's lines for nearly a mile, encountering the fire of five regiments of infantry and two batteries, leaving its leader on the field, the only general officer killed within the lines of the enemy. It also participated in the cavalry engagements at Hanover, Hunters-town, Hagerstown, Boonsborough, Falling Waters, Buckland Mills and many skirmishes of lesser account.

During the ensuing winter the regiment was stationed at Stevensburg engaged in picketing the line of the Rapidan. It formed a part of Kilpatrick's force in his famous raid on Richmond, and was selected to make an attempt to enter the city and release the prisoners confined in Libby Prison and on Belle Isle. A portion of the regiment was with the ill-fated Dahlgren when he made the dash within the fortifications around the city which cost him his life.

In the reorganization of the Cavalry Corps previous to the opening of the Wilderness campaign, the regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade of the Third Division, and Colonel Sawyer having resigned, Lieut.-Col. Addison W. Preston was commissioned as his successor. The regiment crossed the Rapidan at Germanna Ford at daylight on the morning of May 4, and moved forward to Parker's Store. Early on the morning of May 5, the Second Brigade, with the First Vermont Cavalry in front, proceeded to Craig's Meeting House, where, at about eight o'clock, the advance squadron encountered Rosser's brigade of Hampton's cavalry, and the engagement which followed was the opening fight of the battle of the Wilderness. In this action the Union forces were largely outnumbered and the regiment suffered a heavy loss in killed and prisoners.

The regiment was with Sheridan in his expedition to Richmond, in May, 1864, and participated in the engagements at Yellow Tavern and Meadow Bridge which resulted in the death of General Stuart, the famous cavalry leader of the Confederates, and the total rout of his forces. Returning to the Army of the Potomac, it took part in the cavalry engagements at Hanover Court House, Ashland, Hawes's Shop, Bottom's Bridge, White Oak Swamp, Riddle's Shop and Malvern Hill. In the action at Hawes's Shop the regiment met with a severe loss in the death of the gallant Preston, whom General Custer declared to be "the best cavalry colonel in the Army of the Potomac."

The army having crossed the James River, was followed by the cavalry, and the First Vermont with the Third Division and that of General Kautz, was sent to destroy the Weldon, South Side and other railroads leading south and west from the rebel capital. The expedition, numbering about 5,000 men, started from Prince George Court House at one o'clock on the morning of June 22, striking the Weldon road at Reams's Station, where the buildings and a portion of the track were destroyed. During the following seven days the regiment was constantly engaged in tearing up railroads and skirmishing with the enemy. At Nottoway Court House, Roanoke Station, Stony Creek and Reams's Station these skirmishes were quite severe and the regiment, bearing its part in all of them, suffered considerable loss in killed and wounded. At Stony Creek the brigade to which the regiment belonged, was attacked by Hampton's division of cavalry and cut off from the rest of the division. After severe fighting it managed to cut its way through and joined the other brigade at Reams's Station. The whole force then made its way back to the Union lines with the loss of its artillery and wounded. This expedition was the most severe in which the regiment had as yet been engaged; and, reduced in numbers by the hard service of the last sixty days, it went into camp near Light House Point on the James, where it remained some three weeks recruiting its men and horses for harder experiences yet to come.

On the 8th of August the Third Cavalry Division, including the First Vermont now under Col. William Wells who had succeeded to the command after the death of Colonel Preston, embarked for Washington on its way to join General Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, arriving at Winchester on the 17th. General Sheridan was at this time retiring down the Valley, and the regiment participated in the engagements which occurred at Winchester, Summit Point, Charlestown and Kearneysville, crossing the Potomac with the rear guard at Harper's Ferry on the night of the 25th. On the following day Early began falling back up the Valley followed by the Union cavalry, and during the following week the First Vermont took part in several reconnoissances and was in slight skirmishes near Berryville and Paris. In the battle of the Opequan, September 19th, the regiment bore an active part and was in close pursuit of the retreating enemy when darkness put an end to the engagement. On the 21st, the regiment led the advance in the movement having for its object the clearing out of the rebel cavalry in the Luray Valley. The First New Hampshire, fighting dismounted, had driven the enemy across the river, but was unable to effect a crossing. The First Vermont was then brought up and charged across the stream driving the enemy from his position. The division having in the meantime crossed along the pike to the right, the regiment joined the main column and followed the enemy to Front Royal, a distance of two miles. Here the regiment was again detached and sent to Gooney Manor, four miles above Front Royal, where it found the enemy's rear guard in a strong position on a hill south of Gooney Run. After skirmishing until after ten o'clock at night the regiment was relieved and joined the brigade. The next morning it was again actively engaged near Milford, but finding the position too strong to be carried, our cavalry retired to Buck's Ford. On the 26th, Colonel Wells was assigned to the command of the brigade and turned the command of the regiment over to Lieut.-Col. John W. Bennett.

During the first week in October the regiment was in camp near Mount Crawford. On the 7th, as rear guard of the cavalry column, it had a severe engagement with the enemy near Columbia Furnace. General Sheridan was disgusted with these constant attacks on his rear and ordered his cavalry out the next morning with instructions to either whip the enemy or get whipped themselves. The result of this order was the splendid victory at Tom's Brook, in which the First Vermont acquitted itself with much credit, capturing two pieces of artillery, a large number of prisoners, and pursuing the flying enemy for more than ten miles.

On the morning of that memorable 19th of October, when "Sheridan rode from Winchester twenty miles away," Colonel Wells' brigade was guarding the fords across Cedar Creek on the extreme right of the army. At the first sound of the firing on the left, Lieut.-Colonel Bennett was ordered to move out with his regiment, select a position covering the camp and feel the enemy. The Rebel cavalry was found to be in force, and arrangements were made to resist its advance in case one should be attempted. About nine o'clock the bulk of the cavalry was ordered to the extreme left to assist the infantry, Colonel Wells with his brigade being left to guard the right and prevent the enemy from turning that flank. Orders were soon received to retire slowly and keep in line with the infantry. After falling back about a mile, a halt was ordered and the cavalry held its position, skirmishing briskly for several hours. General Custer then returned to the right with the First Brigade and a battery and ordered a charge in which the enemy was driven back, and the regiment regained its former position.

In the final advance of our army, leaving the First Brigade to watch the enemy on the right, General Custer took the First Vermont and Fifth New York rapidly across the field to strike the left and rear of Early's infantry which was then trying to hold its position along the north bank of Cedar Creek, but, unable to resist the last furious charge of the Union infantry, the enemy broke and fled. The infantry halted in their old camps, but the cavalry kept on. The First Vermont led the way across the creek at a difficult ford west of the pike, the leading squadron under Captain Watson advancing to a stone wall about a quarter of a mile beyond, where it was brought to a halt by a volley from the enemy's infantry. Waiting until the remainder of the regiment came up, Colonel Wells ordered a charge. In a moment the regiment was over the wall and driving the enemy before it with great slaughter. Pushing on, more than a mile from any support, the Vermonters still in the lead, the two regiments struck the valley pike along which the enemy was retreating. Night was fast settling over that field, both lost and won, but weariness and hunger were forgotten by the men at sight of the rich harvest before them, and they pushed on with renewed energy to gather in the spoils of the great and unparalleled victory. Reaching a point half a mile beyond Strasburg they found the road blockaded for miles with guns and wagons, and ambulances filled with wounded. Whole batteries were captured, with guns, men and horses intact. Captured cannon were sent to the rear in charge of small squads, and wagons and ambulances by the score were ordered back in charge of their rebel drivers. The pursuit was kept up until nearly midnight when the regiment, satiated with victory, returned to the north bank of Cedar Creek, having captured 161 prisoners, among whom were one general, one colonel and one lieutenant-colonel, 3 battle flags, 23 pieces of artillery, 14 caissons, 17 army wagons, 6 spring wagons and ambulances, 83 sets artillery harnesses, 75 sets wagon harnesses, 98 horses and 69 mules. Eight medals were awarded to the army of the Shenandoah for colors captured in this battle, of which members of the First Vermont received three.

The term of enlistment of the original members of the regiment having nearly expired, on October 22 twelve officers and two hundred and seventy men were sent home to be mustered out, some four hundred re-enlisted men and recruits remaining under the command of Maj. William G. Cummings. During the next sixty days the regiment was employed in outpost duty and scouting, keeping itself in fighting trim meanwhile, by taking part in the engagement at Middle Road, Middletown, Lacey Springs and Waynesboro. At the close of active operations it went into camp near Winchester.

On the 27th of February, 1865, the cavalry in the Valley started to join the Armies of the Potomac and the James in the operations around Petersburg. After 21 days of marching, the long column of nearly 10,000 mounted men crossed the Appomattox and went into camp near Hancock Station on the military railroad, having made a longer march within the limits of the Confederacy than Sherman's famous march "from Atlanta to the sea." To any other commander than Sheridan, such a march would have been deemed impossible. The rain fell incessantly, and the roads led through streams, swamps, mud and obstacles that would have been insurmountable had not the whole command been stimulated with the belief that they were on their way to lend a helping hand in the final struggle of the war.

On the morning of April 1st the regiment moved to the front with the Division and during the afternoon was actively engaged in the battle of Five Forks, where it captured a large number of prisoners. The following day it had a slight skirmish with the enemy's cavalry at Scott's Corners. On the 3d it had the advance of the cavalry, and struck the enemy behind breastworks of considerable strength, behind a deep muddy creek. A part of the regiment was dismounted, and crossing the creek at some distance from the road, came down on the flank and rear of the works which were immediately abandoned by the enemy. The remainder of the regiment having crossed the stream, the enemy was followed up and found in force on the summit of a hill near Namozine Church. The regiment was formed in column of battalions and charged the enemy driving it back upon its reserves. The First Vermont and Eighth New York then charged together, scattering the enemy in every direction, capturing their only piece of artillery and many prisoners, and continuing the pursuit for eight miles. General Sheridan calls this engagement the battle of Winticomack Creek, and gave General Wells the credit for its successful management,

On the 4th the regiment crossed Deep Creek and proceeded to Jeter's Station on the Richmond and Danville railroad, which was reached the next morning after a tedious all-night march. In the operations of the 6th, the First Vermont was sent to the extreme right of the line and followed the retreating enemy all day. During the evening of the 8th the regiment arrived at Appomattox Station where the enemy's reserve artillery and ammunition trains were found. A portion of Colonel Wells' brigade was at once dismounted and sent through the woods to take the enemy on the flank, while the First Vermont charged them in front. The batteries opened a brisk fire but were soon defeated with the loss of thirty guns and a large wagon train. Eighteen of the guns were taken by Wells' brigade, of which number the First Vermont captured eight. Among the captured guns were those of the famous Washington Artillery of New Orleans, which had long boasted of never having lost a gun.

On the morning of the memorable 9th of April, the regiment had the advance of the Second Brigade, which moved rapidly forward, forcing back the enemy's skirmish line. Moving to the right to uncover the Fifth Corps it passed along nearly the entire front of the enemy's line under the fire of two batteries, and came upon the rebel flank and rear in full view of the supply trains. Lieut.-Colonel Hall was ordered to charge the train with the First Vermont, and the first battalion had broken into a gallop when word was received that General Lee had sent in a flag of truce, offering to surrender his army, but before the regiment could be halted it had captured the last line between it and the train, which in a few minutes more would have been added to its long list of captures.

Sabers were returned never to be drawn again in the fury of battle, and the surrender having been completed, the regiment went into camp near the scene of its last charge. On the following day the regiment started for Petersburg where it arrived on the 19th. On the 24th it was ordered to North Carolina to join General Sherman, but when near South Boston learned that Johnston had surrendered, and immediately returned to Petersburg, where it remained until the 10th of May, when it started for Washington, there participating in the Grand Review on the 23d. June 9th it left Washington for Vermont and on the 13th arrived at Burlington, where the men whose term of service would expire previous to October 1st were immediately mustered out. The remainder were consolidated into six companies and stationed at St. Albans, Vt., and at different points in Northern New York, until mustered out August 9, 1865.

During its three years of active service in the presence of the enemy, the regiment captured in open field three battle flags, thirty-seven pieces of artillery, and more prisoners than it had men—a record which, it is believed, was not excelled by any regiment in the Union service.

SEVENTH REGIMENT.

---

BY WILLIAM C. HOLBROOK, COLONEL SEVENTH REGIMENT.

THE Seventh Regiment, numbering 943 officers and men, was mustered into the service of the United States at Rutland, Vt., February 12, 1862, under the command of Col. George T. Roberts. The act under which the regiment was formed authorized the Governor to "recruit, organize, arm and equip, an additional regiment" * * * "to serve in the army of the United States." By a previous act, the Governor had been authorized to recruit, etc., a regiment to be attached to a New England division then being raised by Gen. B. F. Butler, under the authority of the Secretary of War, to operate against the City of New Orleans, which regiment was "to be armed and equipped at the expense of the United States." Under this latter act, the Eighth regiment was formed. It was clearly the intention of the legislature, by the act under which the Seventh was formed, as it was the avowed purpose of the State officials, that the Seventh should not form a part of General Butler's division. It was the unanimous wish of the officers and men that the regiment might be sent to the Army of the Potomac, and they were greatly disappointed and disgusted when they learned that they had been designated by the War Department, for service under General Butler.

On the 10th of March, 1862, the Seventh left Rutland for New York City, where it embarked on two old-fashioned sailing ships, ill adapted for the transportation of troops, with sealed orders to proceed to sea. Upon opening the orders, it was learned that the destination of the regiment was Ship Island, Miss. The voyage occupied upwards of three weeks, and was very uncomfortable and trying, owing to the heavy March gales which prevailed throughout the passage. On the fall of New Orleans, a portion of the Seventh for a short time, occupied Fort Pike, one of the important outlying fortifications of the city, commanding the entrance to Lake Pontchartrain.

The balance of the regiment shortly thereafter proceeded to Carrolton, an environ of New Orleans; thence, in a few days, it proceeded to Baton Rouge, where it reported to Brig.-Gen. Thomas Williams. On the 19th of June, 1862, eight companies of the Seventh, with three other regiments and a light battery, comprising altogether about 3,500 men, embarked on transports to take part in a foolhardy expedition against Vicksburg, conceived by General Butler. Although supported by Admiral Farragut's entire squadron of war ships, the expedition was a failure. After besieging the place for twenty-eight days, and after the loss, unnecessarily, of many valuable lives, principally from exposure and sickness, the command returned to Baton Rouge. Disease and death had so decimated the ranks of the Seventh, that of the 800 men with which it started on this ill-starred campaign, it had less than 100 for duty on its return to Baton Rouge. On the 5th of August, 1862, the regiment took a conspicuous and highly meritorious part in the battle which occurred at that place on that day. In addition to other losses, it had the great misfortune to lose its beloved and heroic Colonel, George T. Roberts, who died two days later from wounds received while gallantly discharging his duties at the most critical stage of the action. Later, the regiment performed duty in and around the City of New Orleans. At this time, owing to the hardships endured on the Vicksburg campaign, the mortality in the regiment reached its highest percentage. In November following, the regiment was ordered to Pensacola, Florida. Here the record of its first year's service closed with the sad loss of over 300 by death, and upwards of 100 discharged for disability, most of whom left the service with constitutions permanently shattered.

The regiment remained in Florida until August 10, 1864, when, in consequence of the re-enlistment of all but 58 of the remaining members thereof, it became entitled to a veteran furlough in Vermont, of thirty days. While in Florida, the Seventh rendered important service as artillerists in holding the important fortifications erected for the protection of Pensacola Harbor, then the headquarters of Farragut's West Gulf Squadron, where vast naval stores and appliances had been accumulated for the use of his fleet, and which afforded a standing bait for the enemy. Besides this, the regiment performed heavy outpost and scouting duties, both as mounted and dismounted infantry. It passed through two seasons of yellow fever, one of which was of a very malignant type. Several severe combats were had with the enemy, in all of which the members of the Seventh acquitted themselves with marked credit, as was attested in general orders by the General commanding the District.

Upon the expiration of its veteran furlough in Vermont, the regiment was ordered back to New Orleans, where it was stationed until February, 1865, when it was ordered to Mobile Point, to take part in the siege of Mobile. The Seventh was attached to the Thirteenth Corps, commanded by Gen. Gordon Granger. This Corps, with the Sixteenth and Steele's Division, and a Cavalry force, comprised the army of General Canby in his attack upon Mobile. Had the war lasted, this army would have been called upon for very important service, akin to that performed by General Sherman in his operations in Alabama and Georgia. The Seventh took a prominent part in the siege of Spanish Fort, which was the main and strongest outlying fortification in the approach to Mobile on its eastern side. The siege lasted 13 continuous days. The regiment held important and dangerous positions, and was highly commended for its efficiency and courage. Several of its officers and men were specially mentioned for gallantry, performing, as they did, some of the red letter achievements of the siege. The regiment participated in all the subsequent operations and skirmishes of the campaign in and around Mobile, and received, among other notices, very favorable mention for its part in an affair at Whistler, which resulted, after a sharp fight, in saving from destruction the repair and machine shops of the Mobile and Ohio railway at that point. On the surrender of Gen. Richard Taylor's army, the Seventh was ordered to Clarksville, and subsequently to Brownsville, Texas, where it composed a part of the "Army of Observation," on the Rio Grande, maintained by our Government, under Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, to observe and wait the development of the operations of Maximilian and his French allies, then in Mexico.

On the 14th of March, 1866, the regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States at Brownsville, Texas, but proceeded in a body to Brattleboro, Vt., where it was formally disbanded April 6, 1866.

The Seventh, although serving in the main alone, or with detached organizations, or in detached parts, was at different times connected with the Thirteenth and Nineteenth Army Corps. The regiment served longer, lost more men from disease, and more of its members re-enlisted "for the war" than was the case with any other single Vermont organization.

The following is a list of the sieges and battles in which the regiment, as a body, was mentioned by General Sheridan in general orders, as having borne a "meritorious part," and which were ordered inscribed upon its colors: Siege of Vicksburg, Miss.; Baton Rouge, La.; Gonzales Station, Fla.; Siege of Spanish Fort, Ala., and Whistler, Ala.

The following is a list of the skirmishes and combats, not inscribed upon its colors, in which detached portions of the regiment bore honorable part, and, in most of which, members thereof were killed or wounded: Pearlinton, Miss., June 28, 1862; Grand Gulf, Miss., July 7, 1862; Attack on Mortar Boats, Vicksburg, Miss., July 8, 1862; Attack on Transport Cars, Warrington, Miss., July 22, 1862; Oakfield, Fla., Feb. 17, 1863; Donaldsonville, La., June 27-28, 1863; Jackson's Bridge, Fla., Jan. 25, 1864; Point Washington, Fla., Feb. 1, 1864; Nix's Clearing, Fla., April 2, 1864; Marianna, Fla., Sept. 27, 1864; Fish River, Ala., March 22, 1865, and Blakely, Ala., April 9, 1865.

EIGHTH REGIMENT.

---

BY S. E. HOWARD, CAPTAIN EIGHTH REGIMENT.

IN April, 1861, Governor Fairbanks called a special session of the Legislature to consider what part Vermont should take in the conflict already begun, and the committee having in charge the various bills for raising troops, etc., had under consideration a bill providing for raising half a million dollars, when Judge Thomas, the last member of the committee to speak, in an impassioned speech, urged that the bill be amended to read ONE MILLION DOLLARS, adding: "Until this rebellion shall have been put down, I have no friends to reward and no enemies to punish, and I trust that the whole strength and power of Vermont, both of men and of money, will be put into the field to sustain the government."

Judge Thomas was, during the greater part of its service, the colonel of the Eighth regiment, and the spirit which moved him in the legislative committee to lead in the apprehension of the national danger and in provision for it, was the same spirit that inspired him, and through him his regiment, in its active and successful career.

Judge Thomas's commission as colonel was dated November 12, 1861, and his appointments to recruiting officers were given November 18 and 19, and the last company reported in camp January 22, 1862.

The regiment was raised, armed and equipped under direct authority of the U. S. government, through General Butler, as a part of his New England division, authorized by the Secretary of War, September 16, 1861, for special service. The regiment was in mid-winter quarters at Camp Holbrook, christened for Governor Holbrook, at Brattleboro, until the 4th of March. The winter was one of unusual severity; the snow was deep, mercury frequently went below zero, the men were housed in cheap sectional houses, and much sickness and discomfort ensued. The First Battery had been recruited for the same service as the Eighth regiment, and reported to Colonel Thomas at Camp Holbrook, and on the 4th of March the regiment and battery left for New York, and on the 9th of March left New York on the ships "Wallace" and "James Hovey," with sealed orders, which, on being opened at sea, directed the troops to report to General Phelps at Ship Island, in the Gulf of Mexico, which, after a rough passage, was reached on the 5th of April.

Here the regiment remained, drilling and getting in condition for service, until Farragut had taken Forts Jackson and St. Philip, guarding New Orleans, and had captured the city, when the regiment again went aboard the "James Hovey" and sailed for New Orleans, reaching there May 12, and going into quarters in the Mechanics' Institute building. The people of the city were in a state of ugliness and vindictiveness hardly to be expressed. Men and women seemed to be filled with the spirit of the Evil One, but the stern hand of General Butler had a very salutary effect, and after the hanging of Mumford, and General Order No. 28, matters assumed a more reasonable shape. The regiment did much police and provost duty, large detachments being detailed for this purpose. On the last day of May, 1862, the regiment was sent to Algiers, opposite New Orleans, and Colonel Thomas was placed in command of the district of La Fourche; pickets were thrown out as far as La Fourche Crossing, and by means of a volunteer force of railroad men from the regiment, the Opelousas railroad was opened to that point.

Engaged in guarding this road, company H was stationed at Bayou Des Allemands, and on the 22d of June a detachment of thirty men were sent up the road to Raceland Station, where it was reported the track was being torn up. The detachment proceeded cautiously, being pushed in a passenger car with engine in the rear and having skirmishers in front, but owing to an almost impassable swamp, the skirmishers had all been forced to take to the road-bed, and while in this condition the party was ambushed by a large party, and a volley fired on them at the distance of only a few paces, killing five and wounding nine men, among the latter Lieuts. A. B. Franklin and W. H. H. Holton, in a few moments. The engineer had dropped on the floor of his cab at the first volley, and as soon as the fire slackened, succeeded in reversing his engine. Meantime our men had returned the fire with spirit, and the Confederates suffered a loss of six killed and many wounded. The skirmishers who had not been killed ran for the car and succeeded in getting on board. Meanwhile the enemy attempted to destroy the track below the train, but were foiled by the prompt action of our men, who rushed to the engine and fired from there, and the party escaped, leaving three dead on the field. This was the first blood shed in the regiment. On the 23d of July Lieut. Truman P. Kellogg died of disease at Algiers; on the 22d of July Lieut. Gilman S. Rand died, and on the 20th Lieut. Darius G. Child died at the same place.

On the 4th of September, another detachment of sixty men under Captain Clark, guarding a railroad train, was ambushed at Boutte Station by Confederate Colonel McWaters, with a force of 1,500 strong, and badly cut to pieces, losing fifteen killed and fatally hurt and twenty wounded, but the train escaped.

The force which attacked this train now turned to Bayou Des Allemands station, which was held by a detachment under Captain Hall, and demanded its surrender, and Captain Hall, apprised of the enemy's strength, surrendered with Lieutenant Sargent, Co. E., Lieutenants Green and Mead, Co. G., and 137 men.

Among our men surrendered here were seven Germans who enlisted from New Orleans, and, being recognized, they were tried by a hasty Court Martial, condemned to death and shot on the pretext that they were deserters from the rebel army, which was entirely untrue, and a more dastardly murder was never committed.

On the 24th of October General Weitzel began an expedition for the capture of the whole La Fourche district by landing at Donaldsonville and going down the La Fourche, and the Eighth regiment, having been assigned to his brigade, began on the 26th of October the opening of the Opelousas railroad to Brashear City, which was accomplished on the 8th of December, having put in order 80 miles of road, built two bridges covering 1,150 feet, rebuilt four miles of track, captured seven cannon, and opened complete railroad and telegraph communication between Algiers and Berwick Bay.

The regiment remained in camp at Brashear City until the 8th of January, 1863, when it moved to Camp Stevens at Thibodeaux, but returned in two days to engage in the expedition against the gunboat "John L. Cotton," which was located in the Bayou Teche, being a strong boat with a heavy armament and partially iron-clad.

The force left Brashear City under command of General Weitzel January 13th, and skirmished somewhat on that evening. On the 14th, sixty picked men from the Eighth Vermont were sent under command of Captain Dutton to pick off the gunners of the "Cotton," and the regiment crossed to the east side of the Bayou for the purpose of driving out a force of sharp shooters from rifle pits which were doing serious damage to our gunboats which had now engaged the "Cotton." The sixty men under Dutton were proceeding up the Bayou on a gunboat when they were hailed by one of our boats in action and begged to send a messenger to Colonel Thomas to hurry and take the rifle pits as one of our boats, the "Calhoun," was aground, the gunners driven from the guns, her commander, Commodore Buchanan killed, and the boat in imminent danger of capture. The messenger was sent with all speed and the regiment rushed forward at double quick, Captain McFarland with Co. A as skirmishers being thrown out on the right flank and Captain Dutton, with his picked sixty men being in advance on the left, but such was the swiftness of the charge that neither party was more than a moment in advance of the regiment, which swept into and over the rifle pits, killing seven of the enemy, wounding twenty-seven and capturing fifty-seven prisoners and more than two hundred stand of arms, and the "Calhoun" was saved.

Night came on and the position of the regiment was one of peril, as it occupied alone the left bank of the stream. In this dilemma, Colonel Thomas ordered built a line of camp fires nearly two miles in length on the right extension of our line, leading the enemy to think we had been strongly re-enforced, and at about eleven o'clock they fired the "Cotton" and she drifted down the Teche, a pillar of fire, and sank. The expedition returned to Brashear City, the regiment not having met any loss, but having performed without question the most signal service done by any organization in the expedition. On the 20th of March Captain John S. Clark died of disease at New Orleans. On the 12th of April, the Nineteenth Corps under General Banks, moved against the enemy at Bisland on Bayou Teche. The Eighth Vermont led the column and had a sharp engagement on the evening of that day, and on the 13th it was resumed and raged all day.

Early on the 14th, the troops were moved on the enemy's works only to find that they, having been flanked by General Grover at Irish Bend, had hastily retreated in the night. The losses in this engagement were slight, being one man killed and ten wounded. The enemy retreated rapidly with our force following and with an occasional skirmish. We halted on the 20th for a few days' rest at Opelousas, where, on May 4, Capt. S. G. P. Craig of Co. G, died of disease. On the 5th, the march was resumed and Alexandria reached on the 7th. May 11th, the regiment moved with Weitzel's Brigade to attack a force reported to be thirty-five miles beyond Alexandria, but the enemy retreated so rapidly that our troops could not overtake him and the Brigade returned to Alexandria. On the 17th, the regiment marched, reaching Simsport the 24th, where it embarked on steamers, passing through the Atchafalaya and Red Rivers, and landing at Bayou Sara May 25, and immediately moved for Port Hudson. On the 27th came the grand assault on Port Hudson. On this day Colonel Thomas commanded Weitzel's Brigade, of which the Eighth Vermont was a part. In the original formation this Brigade held the third line of battle, but so fierce was the resistance and so great the obstacles in the thick forest, that before the outer works could be carried the two front lines were thrown into confusion and Thomas was ordered to charge with his Brigade, which was done with a rush, the enemy driven inside his main fortifications, and the Brigade had advanced within seventy-five yards, when, being badly enfladed, they were obliged to fall back to the cover of a ravine, where they continued to hold the front line, having done most distinguished service. The regiment lost in this battle twelve killed and seventy-six wounded, including among the latter Colonel Thomas, Capt. H. E. Foster and Lieut. James Welch.

Then followed life in trenches with its horrors. On the night of the 10th of June there was a fruitless reconnoissance in which there were some casualties to the regiment. On the 14th came the second great assault, which resulted disastrously. The Eighth Vermont led the assaulting column on this occasion, being in command of Lieut.-Colonel Dillingham, Colonel Thomas being very sick, and it accomplished prodigies of valor, reaching the enemy's breastworks, but the ground over which it passed was strewn with its dead and wounded, and it was obliged to fall back. Its losses in this fruitless affair were twenty-one killed and seventy-five wounded, of whom seven afterwards died of their wounds. Among the killed were Lieut. Stephen F. Spaulding of Co. B, and among the wounded were Capt. Edward Hall and Lieut. A. J. Sargent of Co. E, Lieut. John M. Pike of Co. G and Lieut. John Bisbee of Co. B.

Two days later, General Banks called for a volunteer storming party of one thousand men to lead another assault as a forlorn hope, but there was little enthusiasm and the number was never obtained, though several members of the regiment volunteered, among them Capt. John L. Barstow. On the 9th of July, Port Hudson surrendered, and the regiment was at once ordered to Donaldsonville, reaching there on the 10th, where there was a sharp fight the next day, and immediately afterward marched to Thibodeaux, and went into camp for the first time since April 9.

On August 15, a detail consisting of Captain Leach, Lieuts. Geo. N. Carpenter, and A. K. Cooper and six non-commissioned officers were sent to Vermont on recruiting service. On the 1st of September, the regiment moved to Algiers and went by sea on the Sabine Pass expedition, which was not successful, the troops returning to Algiers on the 11th. The regiment then went again over the ground covered on the Port Hudson campaign, and camped at Carrion Crow Bayou, but fell back to New Iberia on the 16th. A detail consisting of Lieut. S. E. Howard and a sergeant from each company of the regiment was sent to Vermont on recruiting service about this time.

January 5, 1864, three hundred twenty-one of the regiment made a second claim of being patriots by re-enlisting for three years more of service. Camp was moved to Franklin, January 6, and remained there two months. A furlough of thirty days having been granted those who re-enlisted, by order of the War Department, on the 7th of April, the regiment embarked in steamer "Constitution" for New York, and reached Montpelier on the 16th. The recruits and the portion of the regiment that did not re-enlist remained in camp at Algiers under command of Major Barstow, but afterward moved to Thibodeaux where they had active service. On the 6th of June, Major Barstow sailed for New York with the non-veteran portion of the regiment, and they were mustered out of service at Brattleboro, June 22, 1864.

On the 3d of June the veteran portion of the regiment, returning from their furlough, reached New Orleans and were placed in camp at Morganzia Bend, from which place the regiment went on several scouts, but without important results. July 2d the regiment went by transports to Algiers, and on the 5th embarked on the steamer "St. Mary" for Fortress Monroe, and from there it was ordered with all speed to Washington to resist Early's attempt upon the city. Joining the Army of the Shenandoah, the regiment, during July and August, made a series of marches and maneuvers, oftentimes forced and severe.

August 10, General Sheridan took command, and on September 19, was fought Winchester or Opequon. Reaching this field at the critical moment when Grover's division was being driven back after its successful advance, the first duty of the regiment was to help stem the tide and check the enemy, and when this was successfully done, the Eighth Vermont and Twelfth Connecticut were ordered to advance and take position immediately in front and quite near the enemy's center, which was on a wooded crest and very strong both by nature and armament. This was done successfully and the position held with considerable loss until afternoon, when Sheridan advanced the Eighth Corps on the right and the Sixth Corps on the left. Colonel Thomas, seeing the movements but receiving no orders, took the responsibility, and with his two regiments, charged the enemy's center and strong position, carrying everything before him, throwing the enemy into confusion and silencing a battery posted in rear of his line. It was a most gallant charge and entirely successful. A monument now marks the spot and tells the story. When Sheridan's dispatch was published saying that Early had been sent "whirling up the valley," the Eighth Vermont and Twelfth Connecticut felt that they had borne no small part in producing the result. The losses of the regiment were seven killed and thirty wounded, among the latter being Lieut.-Colonel Dutton, Capt. George O. Ford, Lieuts. Wheaton Livingston, Nathaniel Robie and Perry Porter, Jr.

On September 22, the regiment was again in battle at Fisher's Hill, where, through the strategy of Sheridan, we won a great but almost bloodless victory, six of our men being wounded, including Lieutenant Edward Gould, and in the night chase which followed near Woodstock, the regiment had a sharp fight in which it lost some men wounded, and captured 250 prisoners with the Major commanding them.

After Fisher's Hill, the army followed Early to Harrisonburg and then returned to Cedar Creek, where it lay in camp when the fateful attack was made on our left in the early morning of October 19, 1864, the last great battle the regiment was to see.

When the attack was made in the early dawn on our left, the reserve brigade under Colonel Thomas crossed the pike, and took position to cover the great but unavoidable rout of the Eighth Corps, and check three divisions of the enemy that had surprised and defeated our left. Our line was not fairly formed in the fringe of timber before we were in most desperate fighting. It was so dark the enemy could hardly be seen, but the timber was ablaze with the flash of his muskets, the air full of bullets, and above all rose the din of his victorious yells. The Eighth Vermont held the left of the brigade and was much more exposed than any other troops. Charge after charge of the enemy was repulsed. The colors of the regiment were taken away from us three times and as often re-taken, and they now grace the Capitol in Montpelier. There were hand to hand conflicts, "bayonets dripped blood and skulls were broken by clubbed muskets," but the little band held on until, almost exterminated, it fell back, still showing its teeth and still fighting. During the day the brigade lost more than one third of its fighting men, the greater part of them on this "horrible hill of sacrifice," and on this spot the Eighth Vermont has a granite boulder from the Green Mountain Hills, with this inscription: "The 8th Vermont Volunteers, Col. Stephen Thomas commanding the brigade, advanced across this field on the morning of Oct. 19, 1864, engaged the enemy near and beyond this point, and before sunrise lost in killed and wounded one hundred and ten men, out of one hundred and forty-eight engaged, and thirteen out of sixteen commissioned officers. Whole number of men engaged one hundred and sixty-four." Lieut. A. K. Cooper was killed here and Capt. Edward Hall and Lieut. N. C. Cheney fatally wounded, and the wounded who recovered were Maj. J. B. Mead, Capts. A. B. Franklin, Wm. H. Smith, Geo. O. Ford, S. E. Howard, Adjt. S. W. Shattuck, Lieuts. A. J. Sargent, Jas. Welch, Martin L. Bruce, and Wm. H. Spencer. Lieut. F. R. Carpenter was wounded and captured on the picket line. Lieuts. Lewis Child and Henry W. Newton, both on staff duty, had their horses shot under them and were injured by the fall.

The regiment, what there was left of it, bore an honorable part in the remainder of the day's fight, charging a battery which barely escaped capture by being hastily withdrawn.

On the 12th of November, the regiment was engaged in a sharp skirmish at Newtown. On the 20th of December it went into winter camp at Summit Point, where there was some skirmishing with Mosby's men.

April 15, 1865, the regiment was ordered to Washington and was posted about the City to prevent the escape of the assassin of President Lincoln. Again returning to Summit Point it remained only a few days and was again ordered to Washington, where it remained till the grand review, and was then ordered home and mustered out of service June 28, 1865.

Some of the skirmishes in which the Eighth Vermont were engaged are as follows: Near La Fourche, La., June, 1862; Parish St. Charles, La., Aug. 28, 1862; near Franklin, La., at New Iberia, La., and Vermillionville, La., in April, 1863; at Carrion Crow Bayou, La., and New Iberia, La., in Nov., 1863; near Cedar Creek, Va., and at Berryville, Va., in August 1864; New Market, Va., and Harrisonburg, Va., in September, 1864; Mount Jackson, Va., and Summit Point, Va., in November, 1864, and many others.

The history of the regiment is one of which every member is proud. Its flag bears the story of many bloody fields, its record is always honorable, and its fame will endure in the hearts of its countrymen.

NINTH REGIMENT.

---

BY HON. JOEL C. BAKER, FIRST LIEUTENANT NINTH REGIMENT.

---

THE various disasters to the Union Arms in the Shenandoah Valley during the early months of our civil war enabled the volunteers from Vermont to make history, as well as to show the vigor and skill with which the sons of the Green Mountains could prepare for and meet an emergency. In the spring of 1862, recruiting ceased in this State, because it was understood that the regiments already at the front were the full proportion of Vermont to end the war. General Banks was advancing up the valley, and, with the examples of Milroy and Patterson before his eyes, it was confidently expected that this expedition would close to the army at Richmond the store house nearest it, and, at the same time, press at the back door of the rebel capital, while McClellan and his magnificent army of the Potomac thundered in at the front gate. Early in May, Stonewall Jackson made a rush down the valley, and the army of Banks was flying over the track his predecessors had taken towards Harper's Ferry and the Potomac. May 21, 1862, Governor Holbrook received a telegraphic order from the War Department, to raise at once another regiment of infantry, followed four days later by a dispatch requiring the immediate forwarding to Washington of the entire volunteer and militia force in the State. Orders were at once issued for the immediate enlistment of the Ninth regiment of infantry, in the shortest possible time, at recruiting offices in twelve different counties of the State. Lieut.-Col. George J. Stannard of the Second was called home to assist in the work, and was commissioned as Colonel of the new regiment, and in six weeks from the receipt of the first telegraphic order the Ninth regiment was fully organized and in camp at Brattleboro. The regiment was mustered into the service of the United States July 9, 1862, for three years, with 920 officers and men.

The situation was critical, and in six days after the regiment was mustered, July 15, it started for Washington under telegraphic orders, being the first regiment organized under the President's summons for help to protect the National Capital. The short time required to recruit and organize the regiment, with the superior order of men in its ranks, attracted great attention on the route from the Green Mountains to Philadelphia, and admiring crowds gathered around it and lined the streets and housetops on its march from Madison Square to the Battery in New York City. The officers were dined at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and the men were well fed, and left the city amidst salutes, and cheers, and ovations, and as they halted before going upon the ferry boat to cross North river, Mr. Horace Greeley addressed them in a patriotic speech from the wheel house of the boat. The trip from Jersey City to Baltimore was uneventful, but at the latter city treason was rampant, and the streets were filled with a rough, scowling mass of men, who, by look and speech, indicated their resentment and desire for mischief. The regiment, under orders from its gallant Colonel, loaded its muskets and marched through the city, willing to take its first baptism of fire and blood there and then. The attack on the Sixth Massachusetts on that ground had produced its effect, and this regiment was prepared and ready for any attack that rebel enterprise should invoke. No assault was made, and Washington was reached in the night. Three days were spent there accustoming the well fed sons of Vermont to the worst fare which they were required to live upon during their entire service.

Sunday, July 19, Colonel Stannard with his regiment marched about fifteen miles to Cloud's Mills, and became a part of the division of General Sturgis. On the 24th, the regiment started for the Shenandoah, and the second day afterwards was at Winchester, and went into camp north of the city, and formed a part of a detached brigade then, or soon after, commanded by Brig.-Gen. Julius White, a vigorous, aggressive and capable officer, who was ordered to intrench and hold this place against the same force that less than three months before had routed the splendid army of Banks. General White went to work, and during the month of August, built, by details from his brigade, a bastioned fort, and armed the same with heavy guns. Under this service the men soon became drilled to hard service, and the frequent fights with bushwhackers at night, and the skirmishing often, and sometimes daily, with small bodies of irregular rebels who infested the region, developed the men rapidly into veteran soldiers, serviceable for any emergency. Major Stowell was made chief of scouts, and several of the more adventurous of the commissioned officers of the regiment took tours of rapid riding with the scouts and with the cavalry, and in that way gained considerable experience in riding, fighting and running, as well as digging in the trenches.

About the first of September, it was known that Jackson was approaching, and only two things could be done—one was to follow the example of all before us and retreat precipitately, and the other to stay and be taken by old Stonewall. The example of other great men who had been in our place was taken, and a night march was made to Harper's Ferry, to be there, by treachery or incompetency, surrendered into the hands of the rebels. While in the valley various detachments of the Ninth were engaged in various skirmishes, some of them making much noise and little bloodshed. The story of the surrender of Harper's Ferry has been too often told in history and is too long to receive more than a passing notice. It was humiliating to the country, but to the Ninth regiment and its commanding officer it never brought a blush of shame, and the government marked its approval of his command by promoting Stannard to a Brigadier a few months later. General White compliments the officers and men of the regiment as being distinguished for gallantry in the affair. The night before the surrender, in the absence of Colonel Miles, General White, with the Ninth Vermont and two other small battalions, and a section of Rigby's battery met an assault of a full division of Confederate troops, commanded by Gen. A. P. Hill, and repulsed them.

Harper's Ferry was followed by six months in Chicago. The regiment went there as paroled prisoners, were exchanged Jan. 10, 1863, and remained as guard of the confederate prisoners captured at Murfreesboro and Arkansas Post until about the 1st of April. It then went in detachments with the prisoners in Camp Douglas to City Point, Va., and turned the prisoners over to the Confederate Commissary of Prisoners. At Chicago, small-pox, and restlessness at the situation, for a while kept the men grumbling and uneasy, and several officers resigned and have since won fame and wealth in civil life in the west, while a considerable number of enlisted men went into the regular army and other organizations about to go into active service at the front.

In April, 1863, the Confederate General Longstreet besieged the village and fortifications of Suffolk, Va., and laid it under close siege until he was recalled by General Lee, to march north to take part in the invasion of Pennsylvania and the battle of Gettysburg. The Nansemond was navigable to Suffolk with gunboats, and General Peck with his twenty thousand troops was greatly aided by the gunboats that came up the river. The skirmishing was almost constant for several weeks, and there was seldom an hour when the rattle of musketry and the roar of artillery was not heard in all parts of the besieged camps, and the Ninth regiment had its full share of the hard work, and detachments of it did brilliant service in encounters with the enemy, especially in the capture of Battery Huger, at Hill's Point, the reconnoissance on the Edenton Road, and the pursuit to the Blackwater. In June, after Longstreet raised his siege, the Ninth, with the balance of Wistar's brigade, went to Yorktown, and when General Keyes was sent to march into Richmond, while Lee and his army were away on the Gettysburg campaign, the Ninth Vermont, Nineteenth Wisconsin and a New York Battery occupied West Point. The affair failed for want of vigor. It was one of those needless failures that, prior to 1864, marked the course of the Union Army in Virginia. How Sheridan, or Custer, or Kilpatrick, or Stannard would have swept into Richmond had they had the opportunity of leading the troops at White House Landing and West Point, while Lee and the Army of Northern Virginia were pressing on towards the high water mark at Gettysburg. Perhaps, however, the times were not ripe for three such victories as Vicksburg, Gettysburg and Richmond, all at one time.

After the failure of the attempt to capture Richmond in the absence of its defenders, Wistar's brigade lay at Yorktown from July to October, languishing with all kinds of miasmatic diseases and writing home dismal letters, in which historical allusions were grotesquely mingled with lonesome descriptions of the country and people, and discouragements about the health of the regiment, and of the whole prospect of the Union cause. Upon one or two occasions the monotony of ague, fevers and sickness was broken by a swift march of a few miles into the surrounding country, and those who were able to go came back invigorated and improved in health and spirits. July 25, one of these expeditions brought the troops into slight contact with bushwhackers, but generally the surrounding country was only peopled by superannuated whites and negroes, of but little account to themselves, and no substantial support to their friends in the rebel army.

In the latter part of October, through the personal efforts of Senator Solomon Foot and Gov. J. Gregory Smith, an order was procured from the Secretary of War to remove the regiment to a healthier location. The regiment, on the 24th of October, in company with part of the Ninety-ninth New York, put to sea, and after a tempestuous passage arrived at Morehead City, North Carolina, and were directed to take possession of Newport Barracks, ten miles up the railroad from Morehead City towards New Berne. This proved to be a healthy location; the men began to improve immediately and the sick were taken from the various hospitals where they had been left, to the new camp, and for several months the light duty of guarding the railroad from Morehead to Croatan was performed by the regiment, with no Confederate force except detached posts of from twenty-five to sixty men nearer than thirty miles, although the country was filled with roving bands of bushwhackers in small squads of four to ten men. The health of the regiment improved fast, and on the 12th day of November, eighteen officers and two hundred sixty-four men were reported for duty.

December 1, 1863, Maj. Charles Jarvis, a gallant and enthusiastic officer, and the idol of his command, was shot and killed a few miles outside our picket lines by a small squad of rebel soldiers returning to the army from a furlough. The beginning of 1864 found the regiment at Newport Barracks numbering but one short of five hundred officers and men, of whom one short of three hundred were present for duty. January 27, the regiment, with about an equal number of cavalry, made a forced march of thirty miles in the night, and captured the entire garrison at Young's Cross Roads, without firing a gun. The force captured consisted of one officer and twenty-seven cavalymen, with their horses, arms and equipments. The same day there arrived in camp three hundred and fifty recruits from Vermont, increasing the aggregate to 844. The recruits had but just been assigned to the companies and got their names upon the rolls, when General Pickett made an advance on New Berne, with six brigades of infantry and a full proportion of field artillery and cavalry. Pickett sent one of his brigades, commanded by General Martin, consisting of three regiments of infantry, a battalion of cavalry and three field-pieces, to capture the Ninth Vermont at Newport Barracks. About nine o'clock on the morning of February 2, Martin struck the outpost at Gales Creek, held by Company H, and drove it in. At 11 o'clock the Confederates appeared before Bogue Sound Block House held by company B, and commenced firing with infantry and artillery. The defenders, consisting of 62 men, half of whom had first received arms as soldiers that morning, returned the fire and continued to hold their ground until nearly surrounded, when, by order of the commanding officer, the company fell back upon the run and succeeded in reaching Morehead City. As soon as the outlying companies, H and B, were disposed of the rebels continued their march towards the camp at Newport. The regiment had been thrown forward about two miles and opened fire upon the rebel column when it appeared. The fight became general and lasted until dark, the Ninth being pressed back by mere force of numbers, and fighting like heroes, the new men lacking somewhat in drill and experience, but making it up in bravery and marksmanship. At night the Yankee boys had been crowded back to the Newport river, and, to prevent annihilation or capture, passed over the railroad and highway bridges and set them on fire, and made a night march to Beaufort unmolested and unpursued. The casualties were three killed, fourteen badly wounded, and forty-seven captured. The rebel loss was three officers and fifteen men killed, and thirty wounded. Pretty good shooting for raw recruits.

Work became more active from this time forward; both parties kept upon the alert. The Ninth Vermont and the Twenty-first Connecticut advanced to Newport Barracks on the 5th, and Martin's forces fell back before them and retreated to Wilmington, without further serious fighting. Outposts were re-established at Gales Creek, and a company stationed at Kennedy's Mills. The position at Newport was strengthened and was not again attacked.

March, 16, 1864, the regiment met with a severe loss in the death of Maj. Amasa Bartlett, from brain fever. Major Bartlett was one of the most promising young officers who went from Vermont to the war. He was popular alike with all, and his death was a loss which was deeply felt throughout the entire command.

In April, word was received that the Confederate Commissary Department had a detail fishing on Bogue Banks. A detail of twenty men made the party a visit, and captured the entire party with 500 pounds of sea-trout, the fishing utensils and three boats. Two days later fifty men of the Ninth made a dash into Swansboro and captured a rebel Lieutenant and seventeen men of the Seventh North Carolina Cavalry, with their horses and arms, and a field-piece, destroyed a quantity of contraband goods, and returned with their prisoners and spoils, without losing a man. Capt. S. H. Kelley commanded both these details.

In May, the Ninth accompanied an expedition to Jacksonville, the county seat of Onslow County, on the New River, and one company of the regiment was alone in that rebellious village for several hours, but was withdrawn a very short time before an overwhelming force of rebels crossed into town. This expedition was a march of eighty miles in four days, several skirmishes, and operated to cause the rebel forces to concentrate on the road to Wilmington. During the balance of the summer to September 1st, the regiment was broken up and stationed at outposts around New Berne. September 15, 1864, being the second anniversary of the surrender at Harper's Ferry, the regiment arrived in front of Petersburg, and on Friday, the 16th was assigned to Second Brigade, Second Division, Eighteenth Army Corps, Army of the James, Maj.-Gen. E. O. C. Ord commanding, and its history was part of the history of that gallant Corps until it was broken up. Two days after its arrival on the Bermuda Front, the regiment received another detachment of recruits, increasing its numbers to 1,129.

September 17, 1864, Lieut. E. W. Jewett, company A, with Sergt. Charles F. Branch, company C, with one hundred picked men, were sent as a support to an isolated, exposed earth-work on the Bermuda Front, known as Redoubt Dutton. This point was sometimes called Butler's Slaughter-pen, and it was near where Heckman's Brigade was badly cut up a few days before. The redoubt was named for Col. A. H. Dutton, Twenty-first Connecticut Vols., a brave and accomplished officer who was killed near the spot, and was equipped with siege howitzers, mostly 24 pounders. The location was peculiarly exposed, and was one of the most important positions on that front. It was very heavily built and armed, and stood on a bluff facing southward, and was flanked by a deep ravine upon the east and west. From the redoubt northward the ground sloped gently to a heavy line of Confederate earthworks about two hundred yards distant. Behind this earth-work were planted nine batteries fully manned. The Union lines were built somewhat in the form of a letter S, and held the Tenth and Eighteenth Army Corps, with twenty-two batteries so arranged as to enfilade nearly every portion of the enemy's line. Our picket line was tortuous and extended over the front, and required a heavy force daily. The detail from the Ninth lived in gopher holes on the east side of the bluff, but spent more than half of their time for more than six weeks, in the rifle pits under the muzzles of the guns of the redoubt.

On Saturday, September 24th, a shotted salute of 100 guns was fired at sunset in honor of Sheridan's victory in the valley; again on the 30th, another was fired. The music of shot and shell from two hundred cannon playing over the heads of the Vermont support was terrific. This salute brought on a determined attack from the enemy, and the brunt of the assault fell upon Redoubt Dutton. It was admitted that the steady, well-directed fire of the Vermont line disarranged and broke two well organized lines of battle at less than one hundred and fifty yards. On Thursday, October 20, Cedar Creek was celebrated by one hundred guns shotted with shell, bearing on the enemy's lines.

On November 11, the line was weakened to re-enforce our troops on the railroad farther south, and at about nine o'clock a furious assault was made by the Confederates on our line of pickets, forcing them back. Some militia from Pennsylvania, enlisted for one hundred days, broke and sought shelter within the main line, leaving Lieutenant Jewett and his Vermonters alone to defend the redoubt from assault, and also do picket duty for the night. They held their ground, saved the redoubt and received the hearty congratulations of the artillery officers under their protection. The guns thundered all night. Lieutenant Jewett resigned November 24th, and left the detachment under command of Sergeant Branch. This young non-commissioned officer kept his command well in hand and handled it, in its exposed position, with the skill of a veteran officer, and showed the ability which afterwards was given further development in command of a company. November 29, General Graham relieved this detail and they rejoined the regiment at Chapin's Farm after seven weeks of arduous service under almost continuous and heavy fire which showed the stuff of which Vermont soldiers were made.

September 29, the Ninth participated in the battle of Chapin's Farm, on the north side of the James. Stannard's division carried Fort Harrison, and the Ninth Vermont alone was ordered to carry Battery Morris and the line of works of which it was a part. It made the charge, carried the works and drove its rebel defenders to the rear in confusion. The regiment was pushed forward for an assault upon Fort Gilmer, but it was not ordered to charge that strong-hold, and was recalled at night to join in the necessary work of putting in order the works taken, so they could be held against counter assaults which came the next day under the eye of General Lee himself, but were futile. On the 27th of October, the regiment took part in the battle of Fair Oaks, known as Fair Oaks 3d, and after the Federal repulse on that field, the Ninth Vermont was hastily recalled to form part of the provisional division sent to New York, under General Butler, to protect that city from anticipated riots during the presidential election. One company came to Troy, N. Y., upon the same errand.

Upon its return from New York, the regiment, as part of the Third Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, was called on heavily for details, and engaged in the winter watch of the Rebel Capital, always on the alert to take advantage of any delinquency of the foe. At brigade and division inspections held during the winter, the Ninth Vermont was pronounced, in General Orders from Division Headquarters, to be the best regiment in the division.

As the time drew near for the collapse of the giant rebellion, both sides prepared for the struggle. All the Twenty-fourth Corps except the Third Division, went south of the James to assist the Army of the Potomac, and this division, commanded by the gallant Devens, with two divisions of colored troops of the Twenty-fifth Corps with Weitzel at their head, lay watching, ready to spring at the first sign of weakening. The thunders of battle around Petersburg were distinctly heard, and at last the long waited for signal came, and on the morning of the 3d of April, 1865, before the dawn, the garrison withdrew and as soon as there was any light, the picket line advanced over and beyond the fortifications. This line, composed of men from the Ninth Vermont and their comrades of the Twelfth New Hampshire, rallied upon the road and went forward at a run, outstripping the colored troops and passing through the blazing streets of Richmond, amidst lines of a shouting and praying race, hailing the blue coated visitors as representatives of the power that brought them freedom and salvation, and only halted at the Confederate White House, the home of President Jefferson Davis. That public functionary was not at home, but was a fugitive from the wrath to come. For two weeks after the surrender of Richmond, the Ninth Vermont regiment was part of its provost guard, and its colonel, Bvt. Brig.-Gen. Edward H. Ripley, had command of the troops in the city for a much longer time. A few days more and Lee surrendered, followed by Johnston and the other Rebel Armies. The work was over, and on the 13th of June came the muster out of the original members, the journey home and disbanding. About 400 of the recruits remained in the service until December when they were mustered out, and the Ninth Vermont Volunteers became a thing of the past.

By virtue of General Orders, the regimental colors bore the names of the following battles in which the regiment was conspicuous and had a meritorious part: Harper's Ferry, Newport Barracks, Chapin's Farm, Fair Oaks, and Fall of Richmond.

The following skirmishes and battles of lesser dignity were not inscribed upon its colors, but in which either the entire regiment or parts of it, bore an honorable part, and in which its blood was shed for the cause of the country:

Winchester, Va., Aug., 1862; Siege of Suffolk, Va., April to July, 1863; Nansemond, Va., April to July, 1863; Edenton Road, Va., April to July, 1863; Blackwater, Va., April to July, 1863; Gloucester Court House, Va., July 25, 1863; Young's Cross Roads, N. C., January 27, 1864; Bogue Sound, N. C., February 2, 1864; Gales Creek, N. C., February 2, 1864; Swansboro, N. C., April 29, 1864; Jacksonville, N. C., May 9, 1864; Reboubt Dutton, (Bermuda Front) Va., Sept. 24-30, 1864; Redoubt Dutton, (Bermuda Front) Va., Nov. 11, 1864.

Perhaps the fact that this regiment is the only one from the State that lost its colors at the hands of the enemy should be referred to. At the time of the betrayal and surrender at Harper's Ferry, Colonel Stannard refused to surrender for a time, but when he succumbed to the orders of his superior officer and was about to march his regiment upon the heights to stack arms, the officers of the regiment cut its national colors into pieces, and parceled it out among themselves, and kept it out of the hands of the enemy. The intention was to so dispose of both flags, but in the excitement and necessary haste, the State flag was not entirely distributed and the larger part of it fell into the hands of the rebels. It was sent to Richmond as a trophy, and came back to the State through the War Department. The Ninth Vermont does not feel any disgrace at the loss of the flag because it was in no fault. When it marched into Richmond at the head of the column and captured the rebel archives, the flag was re-taken by the same command from which it was taken, and its colors occupy as proud a place in the State Capitol as any, though not carried over as many bloody fields as the colors of the regiments of the old Vermont Brigade. At Harper's Ferry, the Ninth regiment did not surrender for over two hours after the other troops, for the reason that Colonel Stannard entertained the hope that he could fight his way out in some direction and reach the Army of the Potomac, which was known to be near us. When he saw the white flag raised he marched his regiment out of its place in the battle line on Bolivar Heights and down to the lower road leading into Harper's Ferry. En route, he called for fifty volunteers, who formed rapidly at the head of the regiment and started to lead the column in the direction of the Union troops on the other side of Harper's Ferry. Moving down the road he encountered the head of a rebel division which had crossed the Shenandoah River from Loudon Heights. This put an end to his endeavor to get away, as this column out-numbered his forces ten to one. The men then lay sullenly by the roadside waiting for something to turn up, until ordered by authority that could not be disobeyed, to march to Bolivar Heights and stack arms alongside the other Union troops. Marching up the rocky road, the entire command moved silently and in tears, and as they passed Stonewall Jackson, who stood by the roadside, he noticed the appearance of the men and said, "Don't feel bad men, don't feel bad, God's will must be done." Col. Dudley K. Andross, who had a special grievance, made reply to this: "Very well, General Jackson, but there will be a change in God's will within 48 hours," and that change was manifested at the battle of Antietam within the time predicted.
