WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 9, 1863.
FOR GOVERNOR.
J. B. DAWSON.

By the arrival of the brig Charles Joseph, captain Conger, we are furnished with Havre dates of the 19th, and by the ship Mary, captain McAuley, with Liverpool dates up to the 20th of April. They offer no further development of the state of European affairs, such particulars as are least interesting are inserted in our sheet. Statements of both the Havre and Liverpool markets will be found under the commercial head.

Louis Philippe's government, which abroad, is a government of compromise, is at home a government of despotism. The character of Lafayette's "last republic" has been a long and bitter struggle in the late prosecution of the editor of the Tribune, in consequence of his fearless exposition of the corruption of power, and unflinching advocacy of the rights of the people. Arraigned before the chamber of deputies, he was able, but vainly, to defend himself; the influence of the press over the course of the trial. After the first balloting, he was voted guilty of sedition, voting, tending to disorganize the government—imprisoned in a penitentiary of 10,000 francs and condemned to three years' imprisonment. This is certainly a severe dealing; but such severity cannot be averted against the freedom of the press. The republicans of France are not to be daunted by prosecutions; they have already passed through the ordeal of private battles in the violation of the principles of constitutional liberty; they will stand the trial of a public trial, and again put in evidence of their country's dear liberty.

The contest between freedom and despotism cannot be doubtful, the will of the European people is a strong, unbroken, and unyielding, and it is only through the iron bars of their dungeons "they will warble the song of liberty."

They offer no further development of the state of European affairs, such particulars as are least interesting are inserted in our sheet. Statements of both the Havre and Liverpool markets will be found under the commercial head.

The tranquility of the town of Frankfurt is completely re-established. The country remains in a state of quietude. On the evening of the 25th April, a fire broke out in the town, but it was extinguished by the fire department. ST. LOUIS, Friday, April 10. We are told that the influenza (in almost every family at the west of the town) has spread through the whole of the city. In one commercial concern, it has been ascertained that there are 23 in bed, and another at Charing Cross, 40 persons; nearly the whole of the household at Devonshire and Northumberland houses; 94 in England clerks; also so many of the performers of the principal theatres, that they cannot be counted. The disease, though severe, is of short duration, and in no instance has proved fatal.

ST. LOUIS, Friday, April 10. The people here have been much frightened at the low rates that have occurred. We have seen at great pains to ascertain the whole number of deaths from the disease, and its appearance this season since the first of the year. It has been ascertained that there are at least two-thirds of whom were transient persons. Within the same time there may have been, perhaps, the same number of cases, making in all twenty-four, and number questionable. We have heard of no new cases for several days. The disease, we believe, has been less violent this season; and it is probable that it will be less so at times, the disease has invariably yielded to medicine.

ST. LOUIS, Friday, April 10. A fearful accident—On Friday last, about three miles west of this place, and a few hundred yards east of D. Lewis's farm, it overtook Mr. Gilliam, a well-known and respectable citizen of St. Louis, who was driving a quick gait, the driver halloped to the old man, who was hard of hearing and did not notice his danger until the horses were almost upon him. On seeing his danger, his horse started, and he was thrown from the seat, and fell on his side, and was killed. The driver, who was a young man, was also thrown from the seat, and was killed. The accident was caused by the driver's horse starting, and the driver falling on his side, and was killed.
