DEDICATION

Dedicated to those women patriots who are helping win the war, not with blare of trumpets, or in the light of publicity, but in their own homes, where by careful planning, and with much sacrifice of time and strength, they are giving their families varied and nourishing food, and at the same time are conserving the precious foodstuffs for our soldiers and allies "over there." If this book proves a help to such women, the author has accomplished her purpose.

THE POTATO: ITS STORY AND IMPORTANCE

The Book of Potato Cookery

CHAPTER I

THE POTATO: ITS STORY AND IMPORTANCE

There is no plant grown (excepting wheat) so important as the potato in the dietary of the nations at war. The potato so far surpasses all other tubers and roots in importance that its composition and nutritive value have been carefully studied both in this country and in Europe. It is a native of the elevated tropical valleys of Chile, Peru, and Mexico; and was carried to Spain from Peru early in the sixteenth century, introduced into Virginia from Florida by Spanish explorers, and into Great Britain from Virginia by Sir John Hawkins in 1565. Since that time it has become a staple article of food throughout all Europe and the Americas, so commonly and universally used that it is to be found on the tables of rich and poor alike.

The potato is noteworthy for its extraordinary productiveness, far exceeding that of almost any other food product grown, an equal amount of ground yielding approximately thirty times greater weight of potatoes than of wheat. It is grown in all parts of the United States, but most abundantly in the North Atlantic and North Central States. New York, Maine, Michigan, and Wisconsin are the greatest potato states, each producing annually more than twenty million bushels.

FOOD VALUE

The bulk of the carbohydrates which the potato stores for future use is in the form of starch which, of course, is insoluble in cold water, and small quantities of dextrine sugar, etc., which are soluble. In young tubers there is a larger proportion of sugar and less starch than when they become mature. When it begins to sprout part of the starch is converted by a ferment into soluble glucose. Fat appears in such small amounts that it need not be taken into account. The protein bodies are rather scant. The most important mineral matters found in potatoes are potash and phosphoric acid compounds. As ordinarily purchased 4.5 pounds of raw potatoes and 1 pound of uncooked rice contain equal weights of each class of nutrients and have about the same nutritive value.

The Book of Potato Cookery

In the ordinary American dietary, potatoes represent 3.9 per cent of the total cost of food, and furnish 5.3 per cent of the total calories, 4.2 per cent of the total protein, and 8.7 per cent of the total phosphorous and iron compounds. As phosphorous and iron compounds are of as much importance in the dietary as protein and fuel foods, it is evident that a generous supply of nutrients is obtained for a small percentage of money expended for potatoes.

Although the percentage of ash constituents in foods is small, the part they play in constructing tissue and in keeping the body in good working order is not a small one.

Phosphorous is essential in building tissue and in stimulating growth; iron is necessary in the making of red blood cells and other tissues. Calcium is needed in building bones and teeth. Vegetables furnish iron in larger proportions than do most animal foods. In the mineral content of potatoes are moderate amounts of the necessary compounds of phosphorous and calcium, a relatively high percentage of iron and a very high percentage of the base yielding potassium.

It is estimated that there are enough basic compounds in one medium-sized potato to neutralize the acids of two average slices of roast beef. If rice should be substituted in such a meal for potatoes, while the rice would supply the necessary starch, it would not serve to counteract the acids produced by the meat but would rather increase them.

Vitamine is the name given to a property or constituent of food which is essential to life — and potatoes possess this property. In the refining process wheat loses this vitamine property or constituent; therefore the potato is especially beneficial in a dietary in which white bread is used.

MARKS OF THE GOOD POTATO

In point of flavor the early varieties and young potatoes generally are preferable to more mature ones. They usually have smoother skins than older ones. They are not as mealy and they do not keep as well. Late in the season well-developed tubers are safer. Very large ones are not desirable because it is harder to cook them evenly. Smooth, regularly shaped potatoes with comparatively few eyes are more economical than irregular ones which cannot be pared without much waste. Tubers old enough to sprout begin to develop an acrid taste. Watery potatoes are always undesirable because they become soggy in cooking. A good, mealy potato should feel firm when pressed in the hand. If cut it should separate crisply under the knife and be of even density throughout. When potatoes are old and wrinkled they are much improved by cutting off the ends or by paring and soaking in cold water for several hours.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE PREPARATION AND COOKING OF POTATOES

The proper preparation of potatoes should never be considered of secondary importance, even if regarded from a purely hygienic standpoint only. The first essential to be observed in order to achieve the best results is scrupulous cleanliness. Special care should be given potatoes when cooked in their "jackets." They should be thoroughly scrubbed with a small brush and then rinsed.

Baking and steaming are generally thought to be the best ways of cooking potatoes; the latter method has the advantage of the economy of fuel, as a potato baked in a slow oven is inferior to one properly boiled. The method by which they are cooked should be considered not only for its effect on the nutrition, but upon the pocketbook.

When potatoes are pared before cooking, the loss is estimated at about twenty per cent, as the larger proportion of the protein and mineral matter is in the outer layer, and the skin tends to hold back the protein, mineral salts and starch. If the skin is removed before cooking the waste of total substance is about twice as much as when cooked in their skins. It is wasteful to pare potatoes long before cooking as they must be covered with cold water in order to keep them from turning dark. Potatoes pared and soaked three or four hours lose about three times as much of their mineral matter and seven times as much of their protein as those that are pared and put on to cook immediately. Therefore the conclusion is that it is better not to pare potatoes before cooking, and to put them on to cook in boiling water so as to retain all their nutritive value. As potatoes are not always perfect, the housewife must use discretion as to the advisability of removing part, or all of the skin before cooking.

For frying in deep fat, or for salads, a potato high in protein and low in starch content is desirable; but for baking, mashing, and such purposes, a mealy potato is preferable.

POTATOES: BOILED, MASHED, BAKED, FRIED, ETC.

CHAPTER II

POTATOES: BOILED, MASHED, BAKED, FRIED, ETC.

Boiled Potatoes

Select potatoes as nearly the same size as possible. If they are to be cooked in their skins scrub them and cut a narrow band of skin from each potato. If they are to be pared, remove as little as possible of the skin with a sharp knife and with the point of the knife remove the eyes and any imperfections. Cover with boiling water. Boil for fifteen minutes and add one tablespoon salt for every dozen potatoes. When they can be easily pierced with a fork they are done, which will be from twenty to thirty-five minutes according to size. Drain off every drop of water. If not to be served immediately cover with a clean cloth, but never with a tight cover.

Mashed Potatoes

When boiled potatoes are drained, remove skins, mash with wire potato masher until free from lumps. Add tablespoon butter for every four potatoes and enough hot milk to moisten. No definite amount of milk can be given as potatoes vary as to the amount they will absorb. Beat light and serve piled lightly in a hot dish.

Baked Potatoes

Select potatoes of even size with smooth surface. Scrub clean. Put into a hot oven and bake until soft, about forty to forty-five minutes. Test to see if they are soft by squeezing in a clean holder. If the skin breaks easily and they feel soft to the hand they are done. Each skin should be broken to allow the steam to escape. They should be served at once.

Potato Sauté

Wash, pare, and cut four potatoes in quarter-inch slices. Let stand in cold water one-half hour. Drain. Put two tablespoons of oil in frying pan. When hot put in potatoes. Cover closely. Set where they will cook slowly, and cook fifteen to twenty minutes. Stir occasionally.

French Fried Potatoes

Wash and pare the potatoes. If small cut them in eighths lengthwise; or if large cut in half crosswise, then cut in pieces a quarter of an inch lengthwise. Soak for one hour in cold water. Drain and wipe dry. Fry a few at a time in hot fat until brown. Drain on soft paper and sprinkle with salt.

Hashed Brown Potatoes

Two cups cold boiled or baked potatoes chopped fine. Season with salt and pepper. Put two tablespoons fat in a frying pan. When hot add the potato and press down carefully into the bottom of the pan. Cook slowly (if using gas stove put asbestos mat under the pan) until potatoes are brown on the bottom. Roll over carefully and turn on to a hot platter. Garnish with water cress and rings of pimento.

CHAPTER IV

SWEET POTATOES

Considering both composition and digestibility it may be said that the nutritive value of sweet potatoes is much the same as that of white potatoes, and that they are well fitted to occupy the same place in the diet, and furnish a palatable substitute for white potatoes. In the North they usually cost more than white potatoes. In the South they are quite as cheap or cheaper than white potatoes.

Boil and mash the potatoes. Add the butter, sugar, corn syrup, and nutmeg. Beat the eggs light and add them with the milk. Sift the soda, baking powder, and barley flour together.
