FOREWORD

In the dark days of 1915 to 1917, when so many of our officers were stationed on the Mexican border, facing the trying problems which daily arose, we had little to kill the long evenings but our "smokes" and our own conversation. Many of us were classmates or comrades of from twenty to thirty years service, who knew the army and its many vicissitudes and requirements, from every aspect. At least we thought we did. Subsequent accomplishment has shown us that we did not then take into account the fine spirit which our draft, or select, army was to develop.

It was our after-dinner habit to congregate in our adobe huts, or roughly thrown together club room, and invariably our thoughts turned to the conflict then going on in Europe. It seemed to us that we must inevitably be drawn into it or sacrifice our very honor as a nation, and the discouraging questions "Where can we find the necessary army?" "How can an army of adequate strength be trained and equipped out of raw material in double quick time, with so few officers and non-coms available?" closed every powwow, and sent us heavy-hearted to bed.

Be it remembered that our entire regular army, at that time, consisted of 4,800 officers and 87,000 men, with 123,000 in the National Guard. To be sure, Mr. Bryan had assured us that at the call to arms a million men would spring up over night. A fact we never doubted, knowing the patriotism of our Americans. A million men would rise—but to arms? Were the arms in readiness? Would we dare send our fine Americans forth—an untrained mob—to cope with the trained forces of a scientifically military nation? To us who had given our entire time to the training of men, it seemed an herculean task. We all know how our forebodings were answered.

The blow fell, and how it was met has become a matter of history. I need not dwell upon the fine quality of patriotism which sent men forth eager to offer their lives, and gave women the courage to remain at home and work, if necessity demanded, or follow the men into the thick of the conflict, in order to sustain and comfort them.

It was my good fortune to be made chief instructor of one of the first Student Officers' Training Camps. For three months we toiled indefatigably, instructors and candidates alike, and at the close of that camp my vision cleared. The high type of the majority of the men we had to deal with was an inspiration, a spur to bring forth a man's best efforts. It has been well said that, "When in May, 1917, 40,000 of the finest young men of the country reported at the Officers' Training Camps, the future of our army was secure." I saw the close of the camp approach with deep regret. On August 15, 1917, I was informed that a commission as brigadier in our new national army had fallen to my lot, and that I was ordered to report to Major General Thomas H. Barry, who would organize and train the Eighty-sixth Division at Camp Grant. Illinois being my native state, it was with deep gratification and forward-looking purpose that I ventured forth to continue the work of training.

Well do I remember the 25th of August, 1917, when the regular officers assigned by the War Department to organize the division reported to General Barry. They were men who either had served their country long and faithfully in many lands or had recently come into the army after having demonstrated that they had the character, education, force and qualities of leadership to meet the test of battle. It was not wealth, chance, nor political or social position, but only their own demonstrated capacity, which gave them the posts they held.

The camp was teeming with activity; a mass of unfinished buildings, lumber piles, ditches and dusty roads in a series of ripening corn fields. General Barry worked rapidly and efficiently, and by August 28, when the one thousand officers, recent graduates from the Fort Sheridan Training Camp, who were to train the men, arrived, barracks and messing arrangements for them had been completed.

They were not long in doubt. The atmosphere of the place created by those one thousand fine leaders soon inspired them. The men vied with one another in the arduous training. Camp Grant knew no eight-hour law. Often, after retreat or later, were heard the commands of some acknowledged leader who had his little squad of eager volunteers repeating the drill of the day.

On Saturday afternoon, the one day of the week allowed for recreation, it was not unusual to meet groups hiking through the country, bent upon developing their powers of endurance. I will not go into details of the long period of training, which lasted for over a year, a training necessary for self mastery, for the development of obedience, courage, leadership, loyalty and all requisites of the successful soldier. In many of our embryo soldiers these qualities were dormant in a greater or less degree. Repeatedly was our division torn to pieces, in order to furnish men for less fortunate organizations. Officers and men alike faced the discouraging situation with great pluck. It was the burning desire of every one there to get to the front. To look on at the fortunate ones and continue to put one's best into the monotonous training, the drudgery without the inspiration of adventure, required a particular kind of courage. All realized the necessity for this and gave loyally to the cause all that they had and all that they were.

I think, however, I should speak of the awakened intelligence and loyalty of many foreigners in the division—self-styled "Hell Hounds," for instance, from Little Italy in Chicago, who, in the bitter cold of that unusually cold winter in northern Illinois, refused to quit their sentry posts. I recall, also, those practice marches in the deep snow; the range practice, when, with the thermometer eighteen degrees below zero, all-day practice was carried on; the fine physical training, especially the boxing contests under the leadership of "Dynamite Jack." Later in the spring came the long, hard march of the artillery to its camp at Sparta and the marches to Byron on Dr. Woodcock's farm where the doctor practiced the men in the Black Hawk's war cry.

The records of the War Department show that no division went to the port of embarkation better equipped and better disciplined than the Eighty-sixth. That during the long wait on Long Island, from August 22 to September 9, there should have been only two desertions from those who arrived with the division, is truly remarkable. Unfortunately the Eighty-sixth reached France too late to be equipped to go into action as a whole. Yet, under other divisional standards, a large part of the officers and men got into the final fighting in the Meuse-Argonne. Although an unhappy fate played us havoc in this final test, nothing can kill the fine spirit that was developed to meet that test.

I received a letter from one of the early colonels of the Eighty-sixth Division, a colonel who, on subsequent promotion, commanded not only a brigade, but a division as well, saying, "I have often wondered, if in your experience with several divisions, you have found any as good as the Eighty-sixth?" I can truthfully say I do not believe there was another division of our great army which comprised a finer, more upstanding lot of men than the Eighty-sixth. Is it to be wondered at, when one considers the historical Black Hawk country from which they came, and further, the fact that their lessons in warfare were imbibed in a camp taking its name from the greatest soldier our state ever produced?

In closing I desire to pay tribute to the many men and women who gave so generously of their time and talents in order to inspire and amuse us, especially to Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, who brought his court to us at Camp Grant in the spring evenings of 1918. There gathered many of our fine men not certain of their citizenship, who received their oaths of allegiance like a benediction. It is my earnest hope that those of us who have been spared to return, may ever remember that we were 100 per cent American and continue to give our best in order to perpetuate the traditions and ideals of our Black Hawks.

So may we best honor our heroic dead and those who will carry the marks of their self sacrifice through life.

MAJOR GENERAL.

WE SHALL NEVER FORGET!

The Eighty-sixth Division

BY JOHN G. LITTLE, JR.

(Lieutenant, 342nd Infantry)

SEVENTY-SEVEN months of service, at home and abroad, built for the Eighty-sixth Division, composed of men from northern Illinois, from Wisconsin and from Minnesota, a war record that was a credit to its commanders and its country—a record which may be cherished with pride by every Black Hawk.

Through the Eighty-sixth were trained a total of 115,000 men for service in the line.

Black Hawks were in the ranks of every combat division on the front and participated practically in every battle fought by American troops.

“You contributed directly on the battlefield to the success of the American Expeditionary Forces and justified your pride in the Eighty-sixth Division,” wrote General John J. Pershing, praising the Black Hawks for their “splendid discipline and morale.”

Although the division was lauded by Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, as “invincible in war,” and commended by Governor Lowden of Illinois as “a superb organization,” yet the number of Black Hawks who fell on the field of battle was far greater than the rifle strength of an entire division. That those brave men could not have fought throughout with their original organization, in which they received their army education, is the one regret of the Eighty-sixth Division.

The history of the division may be said to date from July 18, 1917,

ULYSSES S. GRANT
For whom Camp Grant was named.

when War Department general orders named Camp Grant in honor of the commander-in-chief of the Union forces in the Civil War. The site selected for the training of the division was a tract of 3,000 acres of fertile land lying between the Rock and Kishwaukee Rivers, five miles south of Rockford, Illinois.

The plan of the camp was laid out by Edward H. Bennett, a Chicago architect. On June 18 he was asked by the War Department to submit plans. The next day he drove over the site with difficulty in a motor car and that night sent his preliminary sketch to Washington.

Soon thousands of workmen were busy under the direction of Major D. H. Sawyer, construction quartermaster, and the great cantonment began to rise on what had been parched fields of grain. Camp Grant now was a roar of clanging hammers and creaking cranes, and the long streets were full of straining teams as the great army of workmen, choking through incessant clouds of dust, rushed toward completion the new city for men only, which was to comprise 1,400 buildings, 25 miles of sewer, 22 miles of water pipes, 6 miles of gas mains and 12 miles of hard roads. The first load of lumber was dumped at the reservation on June 25. A railroad switch was run in next day. Within a month 1,000 carloads of material had been delivered.

The camp was situated on a 35-foot plateau, with plenty of natural fall and a substratum of sand and gravel, making the possibilities of complete sanitation all that could be asked. The barrack buildings were along two main axes, the chief of which ran northwest and southeast, quartering the points of the compass for better sunlight and air, as well as accommodating the lay of the ground. The minor axis ran due north and south.

On the banks of the Rock River, in the center of camp, division headquarters were situated. Also in the center of the camp was the civic center, consisting of the big Y. M. C. A. and K. C. Auditoriums, the Christian Science Welfare House, the library erected by the American Library Association, the big Redpath amusement tent, which later gave way to the Liberty Theater, the Jewish Welfare Hut, the camp store, the post-office and the telephone and telegraph office.

Two battalions of the First Infantry, Illinois National Guard, under the command of Major Abel Davis, guarded the government reservation, at first camping on the wooded banks of the Rock River, and as work on the cantonment progressed, moving into the new barracks. The guardsmen remained at the camp until the middle of September, when they proceeded to Camp Logan, Texas, where they became a part of the Thirty-third Division, Major Davis attaining the rank of colonel and commanding the 132d Infantry, the old Second Illinois.

The organization of the Eighty-sixth Division was directed by the War Department on August 3 to comprise the following units:

before being permanently assigned to organizations within the Eighty-sixth Division. Surplus officers were attached to the depot brigade, which also served to take care of men physically unfit for combatant branches of the service and to hold specialists pending their assignment to special services.

On August 23 Major General Thomas H. Barry, who had been in command of the Central Department, with headquarters at Chicago, was directed to take command of the division, and on August 27 he issued his first general orders, making his staff, brigade, regimental and other assignments.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL ROGER FITCH
Division Chief of Staff.

Germany, coming to the United States when eleven years of age. Colonel Reichman was exonerated by the military affairs committee of the Senate, but the accusation hung over the officer's head throughout the training of the Eighty-sixth Division at Camp Grant, and it was not until October, 1918, with the division in France, that the shadow was lifted and Colonel Reichman was sent back to Camp Grant as a brigadier general to take command of the 161st Depot Brigade.

During the week of the organization of the division staff and field the newly commissioned officers of the Reserve Corps and the National Army arrived, mostly from Fort Sheridan, where on August 15 they had completed a three months' course of the most rigid military training in the history of the armies of the world.

The assignment of the Fort Sheridan officers to their commands in the Eighty-sixth Division was made by the companies which had obtained at the officers' training camp, in the following numerical order:

- Companies 1 and 2—to the 341st Infantry.
- Companies 3 and 4—to the 342nd Infantry.
- Companies 5 and 6—to the 343rd Infantry.
- Companies 7 and 8—to the 344th Infantry.
- Company 9—to the 331st Machine Gun Battalion.
- First Battery—to the 331st Field Artillery.
- Second Battery—to the 332nd Field Artillery.
- Third Battery—to the 333rd Field Artillery.

- Colonel B. H. Dorcy—332nd Machine Gun Battalion.
- Colonel C. S. Smith—331st Engineers.
- Colonel S. B. Arnold—Division Trains.
- Lieutenant Colonel C. DeGrasse Catlin—341st Infantry.
- Lieutenant Colonel A. C. Gillem—333rd Machine Gun Battalion.
- Lieutenant Colonel E. L. Gruber—332nd Field Artillery.
- Major A. F. Dannemiller—331st Machine Gun Battalion.

Colonel Arnold was also assigned as acting commanding officer of the 311th Trench Mortar Battery.

The 171st Infantry Brigade originally had been assigned to Colonel Carl Reichman, whose appointment as a brigadier general, however, was challenged in the United States Senate because of his alleged pro-German utterances. He was born in

The quartermaster officers were assigned to two provisional companies, and statistical, ordnance and signal officers to others pending their permanent assignment or attachment. Thus not only was confusion avoided to a great extent in the matter of reporting for duty, but also officers who had been associated at the training camp were kept together.

All of the reserve officers arrived by August 29, those left without berths being attached to the depot brigade.

Next day all the new officers were assembled at division headquarters, and were welcomed by General Barry in his never-to-be-forgotten "friendly hand on the shoulder" address, in which he pointed out to them the responsibility that had been imposed upon them, and urged them not to be dictatorial in their training of the men who soon would come to them for their first military schooling, but to treat the poor boy with the same kindness and consideration as the young man from the gold coast.

From the alacrity and enthusiasm with which the junior officers plunged into the great task before them, it was to be seen at once that the Eighty-sixth was to be a division worthy of all American army traditions. To the barracks, left cluttered up by the workmen, broom and water and scrub brush were applied in a manner that would have filled with glee the hearts of the recruits who came later could they have witnessed the operation. Drill fields were laid out; the necessary extra lumber was procured by any possible means; and clothing, cots and bedding were drawn in preparation for the "first 5 per cent" of the National Army men.

Late in the afternoon of September 5 they came, the first consignment of 350 men. Their train pulled into the Camp Grant station at 5:35 o'clock, ten minutes ahead of time, and they tumbled out singing and yelling. It must be admitted that the predominant words of the singing were:

Hail, hail, the gang's all here;
What the hell do we care now!

HERE THEY COME!

Great clouds of dust swept across the six unlovely square miles of Camp Grant. Gathering rain clouds hastened the dusk. But there was no gloom in the hearts of the future soldiers.

A prospective trudge of a mile and a half through the dust to barracks brought no whimper. But Lieutenant Colonel Fitch, who had witnessed the detrainment from the back of his prancing chestnut mare, gave the first sample of the consideration that was to be the camp policy by shortening the distance to a few blocks, giving orders that the men be put back on the train and sent in over the siding. Again the train started, pulling up near the barracks at a point which henceforth became the "getting off place."

"When do we eat?" became the cry now, and old military heads nodded in approval, for that was the everlasting thought of the doughboy and the redleg. After being assigned to barracks, the men were lined up for mess at once, and the first supper of short ribs of beef, browned potatoes, stewed corn, pickles, bread, syrup, prunes and coffee was a pleasant surprise to many.

After mess the selected men received their blankets and bed-sacks, were shown how to fill the sacks with straw, and were assigned to their springy iron cots on the second floors of the big buildings. When taps sounded at 11 o'clock most of them were ready to turn in and they learned for the first time what it means literally to "hit the hay."

Unhappily for some among the 350 who had never before been so far from home, the storm that had been threatening all evening broke full force about midnight, the claps of thunder, wind howling round the corners of the wooden buildings, and rain pattering loudly upon the tarred roofs accentuating the natural strangeness and homesickness accompanying the first night with new bunkies and in unaccustomed surroundings, but the selects took it bravely.

A TYPE

With reveille, at 5:45 o'clock, they rolled from under their snug army blankets — albeit with some kinks in the back from the first night in the straw — laughed at the terrific downpour that had sluiced the cantonment during the night, and began to change the outward forms that distinguish the civilian from the soldier.

Immediately after morning “chow” of cereal, bacon, bread and coffee the change began taking place. Golf caps, derbies, slouches and straws disappeared and in their places came the smart sombrero of the American soldier. Silk shirts and cotton, collars and ties, went into the discard. Feet not always properly clad found an opportunity to spread themselves in the Munson last, which every man swore—at first—was too large. Hikes later proved that the army knew.

As the first 350 were getting acquainted with the miracle of army blouses and breeches, which fit in spots only at first, the second detachment of selected men began to arrive, many reaching camp by motor bus from the railroad stations in Rockford. The new arrivals were cheered by the “veterans” of a day, who seemed to strut a bit in their new uniforms for the benefit of their new comrades—which was the proper thing to do.

But even ahead of these first two detachments of the first quota of National Army men apportioned to Camp Grant had come two zealously patriotic youths who could not wait to be called. They beat the draft. First came J. Bradley Smollen, motion picture scenario writer, closely upon whose heels followed Tom A. Martin, Chicago sporting writer. For days this pair of eager patriots walked about the camp, misfits in the midst of a sea of officers. They themselves had not yet achieved the standing even of privates.

Also ahead of the first quota came Spearman Lewis, publicity expert of Chicago, at whose suggestion General Barry instituted a press headquarters for the purpose of accommodating newspaper correspondents, disseminating news of the camp to "folks back home," and informing the selected men bound for Camp Grant of the conditions they might expect upon entering the army life and how to prepare for them. The writer of this division history was put in charge of the press headquarters, assisted by Lieutenants Lloyd E. Thrush of the Quartermaster Corps, Eugene Morgan of the 341st Infantry, Charles Flanagan and Orion Mather of the 342nd Infantry, and Oldham Paisley of the 343rd Infantry.

AND STILL THEY CAME

The farmhouse just north of General Barry's residence was selected as the home of this army "Fourth Estate"; tables, typewriters, files and miscellaneous what-nots that smack of newspaperdom were installed; and soon the two-story frame building resembled more a modern newspaper office than a farmhouse. Mimeograph machines were provided, which turned out "copy" for several hundred newspapers in the wide area from which men were drawn for Camp Grant. As the increments of selected men arrived, newspaper men among their number were drafted for press headquarters until a corps of workers was collecting and grinding out the news of the camp.

There was no "lid" on legitimate news at Camp Grant. General Barry insisted that the game be played "wide open." No censorship was established except that which the correspondent imposed upon himself. The newspaper men were placed on their honor and were trusted to do nothing calculated to "give aid or comfort to the enemy." Press headquarters were credited by General Barry with having done much toward the building up of the splendid morale that ever marked the Eighty-sixth Division.

Upon the writer's return to his regiment, Lieutenant Thrush was placed in command at press headquarters, to be succeeded later by Lieutenant Flanagan, who remained at that post until the division entrained for a port of embarkation. Lieutenant Morgan was promoted to a captaincy.

By September 10 there were 2,000 selected men at Camp Grant. On that date these pioneers of the Eighty-sixth Division were assembled just north of division headquarters in a great semi-circle about a rise in the ground on which a little clump of fir trees stood, and General Barry went before them with a direct man-to-man appeal before they had got fairly started in the grim work of war. The appearance of the division commander was somewhat of an upset of old army traditions. Rank and caste were wiped out as he stood before them in the morning sunlight and reached for the hearts of these gallant sons of Illinois and Wisconsin who had set their determined faces already toward the front in France.

"As we live together, work together, fight together and—some of us—die together, why shouldn't we be friends and comrades?" said the general after he had read President Wilson's message to the soldiers of the National Army. "And what greater ties can possibly bind men together than living, working, fighting and dying together in the greatest and best cause in the world's history and for the freedom and equality of mankind the world over?"

"You young men are inspired by the same pure and patriotic motives that inspire your officers, the majority of whom have recently started just as you are about to start, and most of you will come just as fast and get your opportunity to advance just as quickly as they did. Most of you are making greater sacrifices than your officers, are entitled to the best there is in us, and you'll get it. We shall play no favorites in this camp.

"So let us all get together, stay together and pull together for the cause we have joined hands to defend."

And here was created the famous spirit of the Eighty-sixth Division.

Following General Barry's address, the first 2,000 began the grind and routine of army life in earnest. For the first week they followed the following daily schedule:

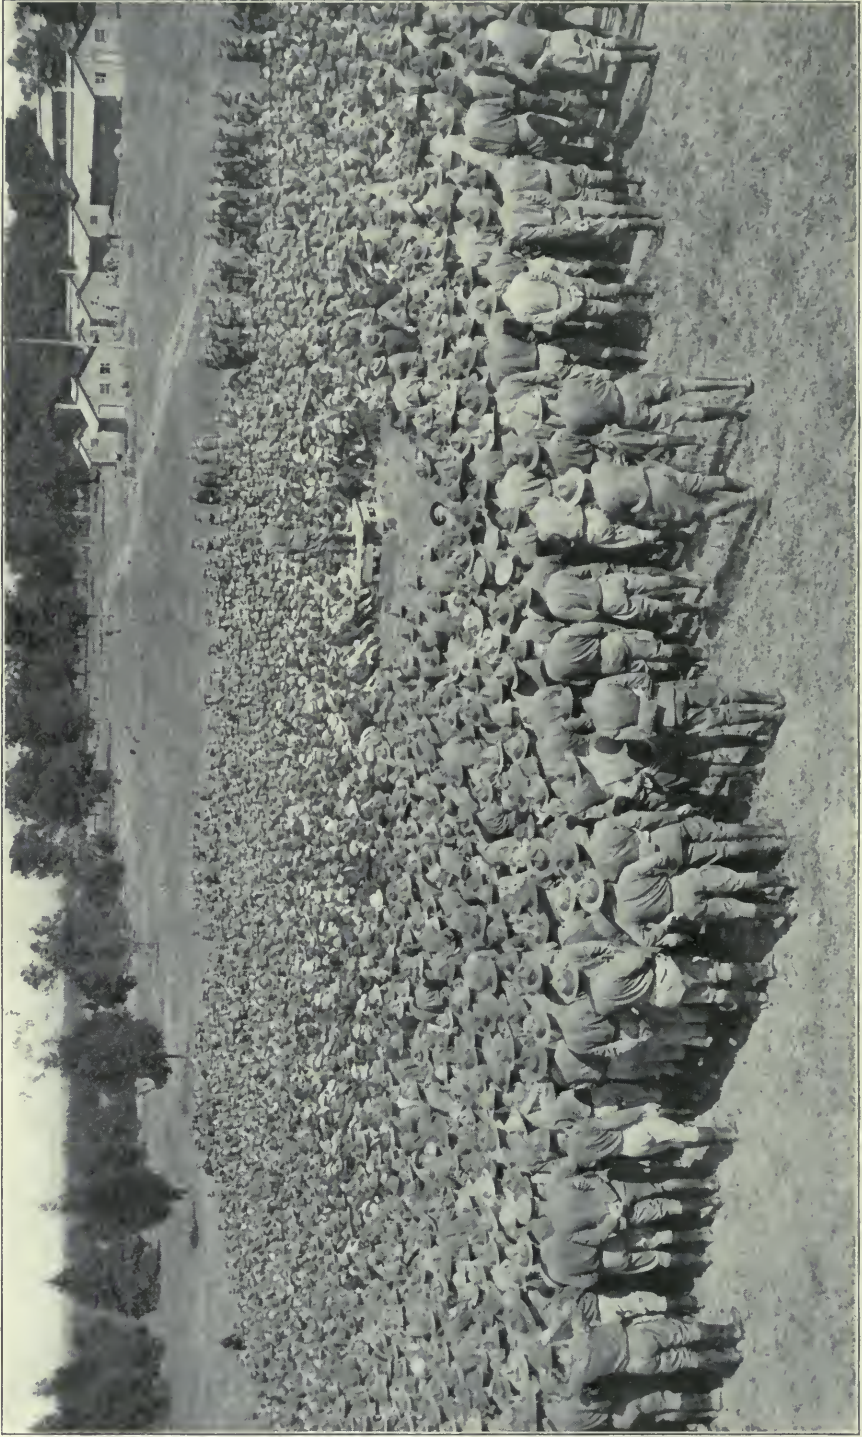

5:45 A. M.—Reveille, first call.	1:05—Drill, first call.
5:55—Reveille.	1:15—Assembly.
6:00—Assembly.	1:15-1:45—Setting up exercises.
6:00-6:10—Setting up exercises.	1:45-2:30—Care of uniform and equipment.
6:30—Mess call (breakfast).	2:30-3:00—School of the soldier.
7:10-7:30—Fatigue.	3:00-3:45—Personal hygiene and care of the feet.
7:30-8:00—School for the soldier.	3:45-4:15—Obligations and rights of the soldier.
8:00-8:30—School of the squad.	4:15—Recall.
8:30-9:30—Interior guard duty.	4:25—Guard Mounting, first call.
9:30-10:00—Setting up exercises.	4:35—Assembly.
10:00-10:30—Military courtesy and discipline.	5:00—Mess (supper).
10:30-11:30—Issuing of clothing and equipment.	5:30—Retreat, first call.
11:30—Recall from drill and fatigue.	5:40—Assembly.
11:40—Sick call.	9:00—Tattoo.
11:45—First sergeants' call.	10:45—Call to quarters.
12:00—Noon—Mess (dinner).	11:00—Taps.
1:00 P. M.—Fatigue.

The aptitude of the men in mastering the drill work was little short of amazing. Promotion had been promised them as rapidly as their ability and the progress of their military training warranted, officers' training schools in camp already were in contemplation, and during even the first weeks of training their instructors could see future lieutenants and captains—even majors—sprouting before their eyes. "Noncoms" of the Regular Army who had been assigned to the division to assist in the instruction of the selected men were made to look to their laurels.

First announcement of the acting corporals and sergeants in the various companies added impetus to the training. The temporary non-commissioned officers realized that they would have to keep on their toes if they expected to retain their grades when permanent appointments were made. Those whose names did not appear on the first lists redoubled their efforts, determined to be on the next.

With the coming of the first National Army men came the job of policing the territory adjacent to Camp Grant. Rockford was "dry"—at least supposedly so—but in other nearby towns liquor was to be had. To prevent excursions to these towns, to stamp out "bootlegging" as far as possible, and otherwise to preserve order, Captain (later Major) Albert L. Denman, who before attending the Fort Sheridan training camp had founded and headed Chicago's famous mounted police, was put in command of the division's military police, cooperating with the civil authorities. Captain Denman immediately began a round-up of all former Chicago policemen among the selected men for his force, which may have had something to do with the splendid conditions that prevailed in the Camp Grant area.

A notable example of the spirit that already inspired the men of the National Army was given with the first of the physical examinations, when every regimental infirmary was a busy scene. At the same time that the examination as to the physical fitness of the men was held, a typhoid inoculation also was given; long lines stood in single file before the surgeons to get their first "shot in the arm," to be followed a week later by para-typhoid inoculations.

No one who witnessed those first physical examinations could help marveling at the revolution of thought that they disclosed. Men who had struggled to gain exemption and remain out of the National Army now fought to remain in it. Not a few shed tears when turned back to civilian life. A strapping athlete of twenty-four years who fell short on the eye test begged the examining surgeon to overlook his defect; another who was a slacker at heart a few weeks before, seeking exemption by professing to have tuberculosis, admitted to the examiners that he had lied, and he fairly danced with joy when he was pronounced O. K.; a one-eyed man who had slipped by the exemption board in Chicago offered to whip any two-eyed or three-eyed man either; thus it went in hundreds of instances throughout the camp.

For several days thereafter aching arms were the rule, but there was apparent a general air of relief that the examinations were passed.

As the men now became more accustomed to the new life into which they had entered, the army discipline gradually was tightened up. This extended to the officers, as well, with the abolishing by General Barry of the swagger stick, the nobby short overcoat and all other details of uniform and equipment not provided for in uniform regulations.

But the drawing of sharper military lines for both officers and men did not mean that it was to be "all work and no play" at Camp Grant. In addition to motion pictures and other entertainment furnished through the Y. M. C. A. and the vaudeville performances and minstrel shows arranged for in the different regiments, a part of the daily drill schedule was set aside for games such as "duck on the rock" and "three deep," and all kinds of sports were encouraged. This encouragement of manly sports and cheering recreation helped both the fighting spirit and the working spirit of the men.

Coach Lewis Omer of Northwestern University was made cantonment athletic director, working in coöperation with Captain (later Major) Orville J. Taylor, divisional athletic officer. Danny Goodman was transferred from the First Infantry, Illinois National Guard, before that organization went to Texas, and took charge of the camp boxing instruction, to be succeeded by Charley White, Chicago's fast aspirant for the lightweight championship, and later by Fred Dyer. Through the efforts of Goodman, White and Dyer and under the direction of Lieutenant (later Captain) John E. Eddy, many a clever boxer was produced by the Eighty-sixth Division, some of whom won high honors in competitions between camps and in the A. E. F. bouts.

AN INTERESTING GROUP

The central figures are Anton Cermak and Charley White. The officers are Lieutenants Spencer (left) and Eddy (right).

One of the first noted visitors at Camp Grant was the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who late in September, after a motor trip of inspection accompanied by General Barry, the brigade commanders, Lieutenant Colonel Fitch—who had served in the Rough Riders under the Colonel—and an honor escort, delivered an address to the men of the division.

Colonel Roosevelt complimented Major Sawyer upon the splendid construction work accomplished at Camp Grant, which was the first of the National Army cantonments to reach completion, and General Barry upon the esprit de corps already manifest and the fact that of all the camps the number of objectors "conscientious" and otherwise, was lowest in the Eighty-sixth Division. It should be mentioned here that of the number of conscientious objectors brought to Camp Grant as prisoners after they had refused to obey the official call of their boards, practically all ceased objecting and expressed a desire to accept the War Department's offer to enter the National Army without further protest. Charges were dropped against those who reached this decision, and very many of them later made exceedingly creditable records.

Upon cabled instructions from General Pershing that "strict methods used at West Point in training new cadets in the elementary principles (discipline and military courtesy) should be applied rigorously and completely to the forces we are organizing," the military belt of Camp Grant was tightened up another couple of holes, non-commissioned officers' schools were opened in every company, attendance being compulsory, and the selected man set his jaw and plugged night and day without complaint—at least without a very audible one.

New increments now were coming into camp in an almost steady stream. Each was met by the veterans with cheers and welcoming cries of: "You'll like it!" And most of them learned to do so.

Putting the "square peg" and "round peg" men in their properly fitting openings was already in progress at division headquarters. To meet the problem the War Department had established its personnel division. Captain Lawrence H. Whiting, former Chicago football star, was assigned as personnel officer at Camp Grant, and under his direction were prepared the thousands of personnel cards bearing the life history of every man in the division. With this record of the soldier's experience and training, it became possible to put the majority of the men where they could be of the most service. The system in the Eighty-sixth Division was perfected by Captain (later Major) Robert K. Fast, who remained as division personnel adjutant until the end of the war.

With the issuing of the new Enfield rifles began the training of the division in the art of modern warfare. Up to this time there had been the school of the soldier and of the squad, the facings and the manual of arms with the old Krag, platoon and company drill, and hikes. Now the division school of arms was opened under command of Colonel Guy Palmer and Lieutenant Colonel Harris Pendleton, Jr. First the commissioned officers and later the non-commissioned attended classes in bombing, musketry, automatic rifle, trench mortar, fortifications and other specialties. Company, battalion, regimental and even brigade commanders, as well as lieutenants, sergeants and corporals, now went to school again, to learn things never before taught the American soldier, such as camouflage, close combat weapons, mines, deep gallery shelters and other cover against shell fire, construction of listening posts, perception of subterranean sound, Véry pistols and signal rockets, communication with airplanes, wiring, observation and sniping, and countless other subjects incident to the new methods of fighting.

A division gas school was instituted under Captain (later Major) John S. Sweeney, a Chicago physician. Company officers, both commissioned and non-commissioned, after attending the gas school, as well as the school of arms, in turn gave the courses in which they had been instructed to the men of their commands. So thorough was the gas course arranged by Major Sweeney that out of the hundreds of officers attending his class only one failed to pass the required tests—and he was a colonel.

In the middle of October began the work upon an actual system of trenches. In detachments the men of the division were marched to a rolling stubble field lying across Meridian Highway just east of the cantonment. Soon fresh-turned earth ran snakily across the landscape for half a mile. Generally the line followed the military crest of a low ridge. Behind it and higher, the second and third-line supporting trenches were built and con-direction of Captain Robert Payen and the other officers of the Allied military mission. From Samuelson Road to Cleveland, Meridian Highway to Miller, the lines were occupied and evacuated, barraged, stormed, counter-attacked, until the sandy parapets and firing steps caved in under the strain. Already the men were eager to get into real action and the cry became: "Let's Go!"

But fate had set for the Eighty-sixth a tragic destiny. Hardly had the division begun to take really promising form than inroads were cut into its ranks for replacements to be sent to regular army and National Guard divisions scheduled for early embarkation overseas. Most of the officers and men were "rarin' to go," but they wanted to go with the Eighty-sixth. Instead, time after time the division was depleted, new increments of men arrived and were trained, only to be taken away to sail for France with other units.

The first draft upon the Eighty-sixth was for almost 5,400 men to be sent to Camp Logan, to fill up the Thirty-third Division, composed of former Illinois National Guard regiments. These replacements were drawn from the following units:

341st Infantry.....	650	333rd Machine Gun Battalion.	190
342nd Infantry	1,100	331st Field Artillery.....	90
332nd Machine Gun Battalion.	190	332nd Field Artillery.....	430

ned by communicating trenches until before long there lay a labyrinth which was the replica of the trenches in which already the first of the American troops were fighting in France and Flanders—where the Eighty-sixth hoped soon to be.

For days and days the work continued. Barbed wire entanglements were stretched over the length and breadth of the system. When completed, the firing trenches, communications and approaches were named after streets of Chicago and other cities from which men had been sent to Camp Grant, and the dugouts and strong points for well known hotels and resorts.

Over this trench system was fought battle after battle, was staged maneuver after maneuver, under the

The first 500 of these men were marched over to the railroad spur on October 22nd and started toward Camp Logan.

"Good luck!" shouted those left behind. "You'll be the first to get over. Give 'em hell!"

And everyone knows what the Thirty-third did in France.

The remainder of the increment followed shortly.

This portentous cut into the ranks of the division, the first of a series, came as a distinct shock, but it was by no means a discouragement. The men of Camp Grant realized that if the war was to be won America must win it, and they had made up their minds that the Eighty-sixth Division was going to play an important part in that victory. So it was not surprising that they entered enthusiastically into the Second Liberty Loan drive. In this campaign Camp Grant led all the cantonments of the country, winning the praise of both the War and Treasury Departments, by subscribing more than $2,000,000. This brought the following telegram to General Barry from Secretary Baker:

"Wonderful support accorded the Liberty Loan by the men of your command elicits growing commendations from the Treasury Department and the executive committee of the Seventh Federal Reserve District. Camp Grant leads all other camps in volume of subscription."

After exciting competitions among companies, battalions, regiments and brigades, the drive was wound up with a great Liberty Day celebration on October 24, when General Barry ordered all work suspended except guard and fatigue duty, and the day was given over to football and basketball games, track events and a card of twenty-seven boxing bouts arranged by Captain Eddy and Coach Omer, who had been commissioned a captain.

The government war risk insurance was introduced at Camp Grant by Colonel Charles R. Howland of the 343d Infantry, who had represented the Eighty-sixth Division at the Washington conference of army and navy men to study the law. Upon his return to camp, Colonel Howland first insured General Barry, Colonel Heistand and Lieutenant Colonel Fitch for $10,000 each—the maximum amount of insurance issued—then all the other officers; company insurance officers were designated and they explained the act and offered the insurance to their men, with the result that soon practically every member of the division was insured for from $5,000 to $10,000.

Late in October it was announced that those men who had “put everything they had” into their work were to have their first opportunity to win their commissions in a third officers’ training school, to be opened at camp with Lieutenant Colonel Edwin A. Hickman as its commanding officer. Three hundred selected men were to be admitted to the school upon the recommendation of their commanding officers, together with 163 men from the universities of Chicago, Illinois and Wisconsin, the Western Military Academy and Shattuck School. After the school had got well under way Colonel Palmer, who had been conducting the school of arms, replaced Lieutenant Colonel Hickman as commandant.

COLONEL GUY G. PALMER

Commander of the Division School of Arms; later commandant of the Third Officers’ Training School.

Intelligence schools also were established, at which both officers and enlisted men were instructed in the German language, patrolling and the multitude of other duties of the intelligence section.

Nor were these the only schools. The first week in November saw the introduction of a course entirely new to the American army—singing! The officers of the division first were assembled in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium and introduced to Arthur Nevin, who had been appointed camp singing director. Thereafter singing school became a weekly event for men and officers in every regiment.

The duties of the modern day officers had become indeed complex. They had enlisted to fight, said one, and here they had qualified in about everything except that. They had taught English to men of all nationalities, studied drawing and higher mathematics, sold bonds, written insurance, and attended singing school, and he was of the opinion that it was high time they had a chance to be soldiers. But both officers and men accepted their lot, whatever it was, philosophically.

THE "Y" HUT

First actual firing with the new Enfield rifles was begun November 12, when the 341st Infantry—the "Wisconsin Eagles," so named for the regiment's mascot, a bald eagle presented by citizens of Milwaukee—marched to the rifle range on the Kishwaukee River three miles from camp. The other infantry regiments followed in turn. Particular attention now was paid to work on the range, with the result that, considering the fact that some of the men never before had held a rifle, remarkable accuracy was attained by the division as a whole. The construction of the rifle range with from 100 to 1,000 yards filing points, was one of the creditable achievements of the 311th Engineers, cooperating with the Thirty-fifth Engineers.

There had been hikes, of course, since the arrival of the first 5 per cent, but now the really long marches began, the men cooking their own noon meal and returning to camp for supper. Many found these long marches very strenuous at first, but they rapidly became hardened.

On November 26 General Barry, with Lieutenant Colonel Fitch and Major R. C. Richardson, slipped quietly out of camp, and several days later it became not allowed in any way to interfere with the work. In the teeth of biting winds that froze ears, noses, fingers and toes, and in the face of cutting snow and sleet, the men were kept at their rigid training, although for weeks the mercury remained below zero, at one time reaching 27 degrees below. The long hikes continued through the snow, and the work on the rifle range went on in spite of the cold until after Christmas, when at one time, the snow being drifted at places to the very roofs of the barracks and it being practically impossible to travel about the cantonment except on snowshoes or skis, outdoor training was brought to a halt, but only for a day or two.

Much suffering was relieved by the Red Cross and various women's organizations of Illinois and Wisconsin, who, in response to the needs of the situation, gave to the boys thousands of knitted helmets, sweaters, wristlets and socks.

Just before Christmas the commissioned personnel of the division was augmented by the addition of more than 400 officers from the second camps, principally from Fort Sheridan, led by Major Albert A. Sprague II of Chicago, the ranking officer. Major Sprague was attached first to the intelligence generally known that the division commander and his chief assistants had gone to France for a course of instruction and study on the Western front. Brigadier General Kennon took command of the division, Major Lull acting as chief of staff.

The winter of 1917-18 was a most severe one at Camp Grant, blizzard after blizzard sweeping down upon the cantonment, but it was section and later assigned to the 341st Infantry, where he remained until the division was broken up after the armistice was signed. The destiny of the Eighty-sixth Division after the prescribed sixteen weeks of training became a question that began to perplex both officers and men late in January, when the end of the training period arrived. Rumors were flying thick and fast. Camp Grant was to be abandoned, said some, or the Eighty-sixth was to become a replacement division; one report was that the division was to be merged with another.

Division headquarters' answer to these rumors was "Carry on!"

That order was followed to the letter, and there was no further let-up in the training. If, indeed, there was any change, it was that the work was carried on with even greater vim and vigor than before.

Much of the excellence in the development of the division during the hard winter was due to the instructors from the armies of the Allies. France and Great Britain had sent to the United States some of their ablest officers who had seen service on the Western front, and the aid they rendered was of the first importance. Assisting them were both British and French noncommissioned officers, who were assigned to various subjects in about the same ratio as their superiors. A significant contribution to the training program, the service they rendered was out of all proportion to their numbers. Records are not available to show all of the officers and noncommissioned officers of the Allies who, at various times, assisted in the training of the Eighty-sixth Division, but the following are particularly remembered by both officers and men for their splendid work:

FROM THE FRENCH ARMY

Captain Robert Payen, Croix de Guerre, ranking member of the French mission, who particularized in tactics and the automatic rifle. Captain Payen had fought through the battle of the Marne in 1914 and was mentioned twice in dispatches.

Captain Georges LeDu, Croix de Guerre, a graduate of the artillery school at Fontainebleau, mentioned three times in dispatches.

Lieutenant Gaston Bordonneau, Medaille Militaire, Croix de Guerre (two palms and two stars), bombing expert.

Lieutenant Leon Druart, Croix de Guerre, who specialized in liaison. He was a veteran of the Moroccan campaign and had fought along the Western front from Ypres to Verdun.

A GROUP OF ALLIED OFFICERS

Who assisted in the training of the Eighty-sixth Division.

Assisting the French officers were Sergeants Hergue, Parmentier, Vincent and Jutelet.

FROM THE BRITISH ARMY

Major Reginald J. Mackay, ranking member of the British mission, expert in strategy and tactical maneuvers.

Major L. C. Benns, machine gun specialist.

Captain Sidney B. Minch of the Connaught Rangers, one of the ablest exponents of bayonet fighting in the British—or any other—army. Although a victim of German poison gas, from which he at times suffered extremely, his Irish humor and his remarkable energy were ever an inspiration to all members of the division with whom he was associated.

Captain Walter A. S. Cotton, of the London Regiment, instructor in bombing and explosives.

Lieutenant Wilfred H. Parker, instructor in intelligence service.

The British officers were aided by Sergeants Major W. P. Spenser and W. Barratt and Sergeants Bull and Breadhead.

Of the officers of the Allies only Captains Payen, Minch and Cotton and Lieutenant Parker accompanied the division to France.

For the division maneuvers in the spring members of the senior officers' mission of the Allies arrived as supervisors and critics. Among these were Major C. E. Eckenfelder, commandant of the mission; Majors H. de Beurieux and A. M. Rostand and Captain Bion of France, and Major Makin of England. Lieutenant Colonel R. V. K. Applin of the British army gave several instructive and interesting talks to the Eighty-sixth officers. The camp also was visited by General Trotter of the British army.

Notwithstanding the miserable weather and the consequent almost perpetually menacing conditions underfoot, Camp Grant had been maintained as one of the healthiest cantonments in the United States. In the first five months of training more than 46,000 men had lived in the military city, and its health record far eclipsed that of any civilian American community. Its death ratio was less than 1 in 2,000. There had been numerous quarantines, naturally, but these all were short-lived and not of a particularly serious nature. A threatening spread of spinal meningitis, which already had ravaged some camps, was prevented by quick action by the medical officers.

As brave a showing as possible with a skeleton division, only about half the personnel of which was composed of private soldiers, was made for General Barry upon his return from France in February. For the first time entire brigades were reviewed, following which Brigadier Generals Martin and Kennon, together with the commanding officers of all regiments and separate organizations in Camp Grant, were called into conference with the division commander, who reviewed the result of his observations at the front. This marked the beginning of the final intensive training for the Eighty-sixth Division. All now had rosy visions of early action to spur them on to redoubled efforts.

Even floods, caused by the melting snows, practically engulfing the cantonment, making rivers of company streets, lakes of drill grounds, failed to dampen the spirit of the men. The swollen Kishwaukee River, raging high under its burden of broken ice, swept the rifle range, causing extensive damage, bridges and targets being carried away by the waters.

There came more indications that the division was to be filled up and sent overseas. Serial numbers were issued to the men and stamped on aluminum identification discs. Night training was started, with signal rockets adding realism to the work.

Mobility exercises were ordered by regiments, including the packing of barrack bags by every man, collection and loading of every piece of regimental, battalion, company and personal property, equipment and records, a whirlwind clean-up of quarters to remove the last trace of dust and debris, packing and lashing of wagon trains and motor trucks, and regimental formation for review.

There was, however, one disquieting phase of the training. Apparently the trench work had been abandoned and the division again took up open warfare training, which gave rise to new rumors that the Eighty-sixth was to remain as a training unit and might not get overseas after all. The motive behind this alteration of the training schedule is explained in the following extract from the final report of General Pershing, as published by the War Department:

"Recommendations were cabled to Washington (late in 1917) emphasizing the importance of target practice and musketry training, and recommending that instruction in open warfare be made the mission of troops in the United States, while the training in trench warfare so far as necessary be conducted in France. Succeeding divisions, whether serving temporarily with the British or French, were trained as thus indicated. The assistance of the French units was limited to demonstrations, and, in the beginning, French instructors taught the use of French arms and assisted in the preparation of elementary trench warfare problems."

Assuming that divisions would arrive with their basic training completed in the United States, one month was allotted for the instruction of small units from battalions down, a second month of experience in quiet sectors by battalions, and a third month for field practice in open warfare tactics by division, including artillery. Many divisions, unfortunately, did not receive the requisite amount of systematic training before leaving the States, and complete preparation of such units for battle was thus often seriously delayed.

Throughout the winter new increments of recruits continued to arrive weekly at Camp Grant, but the drain upon the camp for men to fill up other divisions preparing to sail was apparently unceasing. Close upon the heels of the 5,400 sent to Camp Logan in November, followed 2,000 to Camp Pike at Little Rock, Arkansas, for the Eighty-seventh division. In the course of the winter several detachments of 1,000 to 5,000 men each were sent to Atlantic ports for immediate embarkation for France. These men were called in special War Department orders stipulating the needs of the A. E. F. for men experienced in certain branches, as, for instance, motor mechanics, chauffeurs, horsemen, telephone and telegraph operators, carpenters, dock workers and field hospital men.

In February and March approximately 4,000 men were transferred to Camp Greene at Charlotte, North Carolina, and assigned to the Fourth Division, which sailed for France early in May. In March, also, began the second big shipment of troops to Camp Logan—8,000 men. These filled up the Thirty-third Division, which sailed in May, but left the Eighty-sixth Division worse than a skeleton. These blows were directed by no means at the enlisted personnel alone. Under them began to fall officers, high and low, who were shifted to other commands.

ALL SET TO SMASH THE KAISER

Then the long arm reached to the very top of the division's list, and on March 20, 1918, General Barry issued the following general order, his last as commander of the Eighty-sixth:

"In obedience to Paragraph 166, Special Orders No. 61, War Department, Washington, D. C., March 14, 1918, I hereby relinquish command of Camp Grant and the Eighty-sixth Division, National Army.

"I congratulate all connected with the Eighty-sixth Division at Camp Grant on the great progress made and efficiency attained in all administrations, notwithstanding trying conditions of terrain and weather, and the disorganizing effect of the transfer of thousands of enlisted men and officers from organization units under War Department orders, which were met with true soldierly spirit.

"I take leave of you all with sincere regret, and wish for you every good luck and success wherever you go.

"THOMAS H. BARRY,
"Major General, U. S. Army."

In a farewell speech to his officers General Barry predicted a splendid record for the division. Silence reigned in the big "Y" auditorium as the general finished his brief talk, put on his cap, raised his right hand to the visor and said:

"Officers of the Eighty-sixth Division—I salute you!"

AIRING OUT AT SIXTEEN BELOW

As one man the entire audience leaped to its feet in a smart salute. The general, tears rolling down his cheeks, strode out a side door. That was the last seen of General Barry by the officers at Camp Grant. He left quietly, practically alone.

The War Department's decision that he was not physically fit for service in France was the bitterest disappointment of General Barry's career, a crushing blow from which the grizzled veteran never recovered. He returned to Chicago to take command again of the Central Department, but he was a changed man; the heart of the "Old Bear" was broken. After the departure of the Eighty-sixth for France General Barry was put in command of the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governors Island. In June, 1919, the Distinguished Service Medal was awarded to him by Secretary Baker. Four months later he was automatically retired from the service by reason of his age, having reached his sixty-fourth birthday. Early on the morning of December 30, after an illness of three weeks at the Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C., the taps of eternity blew for General Barry.

Thomas H. Barry was born of poor parents in the Irish quarter of New York, October 13, 1855. When he finished the common schools, Robert B. Roosevelt, an uncle of Theodore Roosevelt, appointed him a cadet at West Point. He was graduated in 1877 and detailed to the famous Seventh Cavalry—Custer's regiment. He won his first promotion fighting Indians, passed through the grades of major, lieutenant colonel and colonel, and in the Philippines was made a brigadier general for gallantry in action. He commanded the Military Academy at West Point in 1910 and was moved to Chicago in 1916 to command the Central Department, which post he left the following year to take command of the Eighty-sixth Division and Camp Grant.

Upon General Barry's departure from Camp Grant, Brigadier General Kennon again took the reins of the Eighty-sixth Division without ceremony.

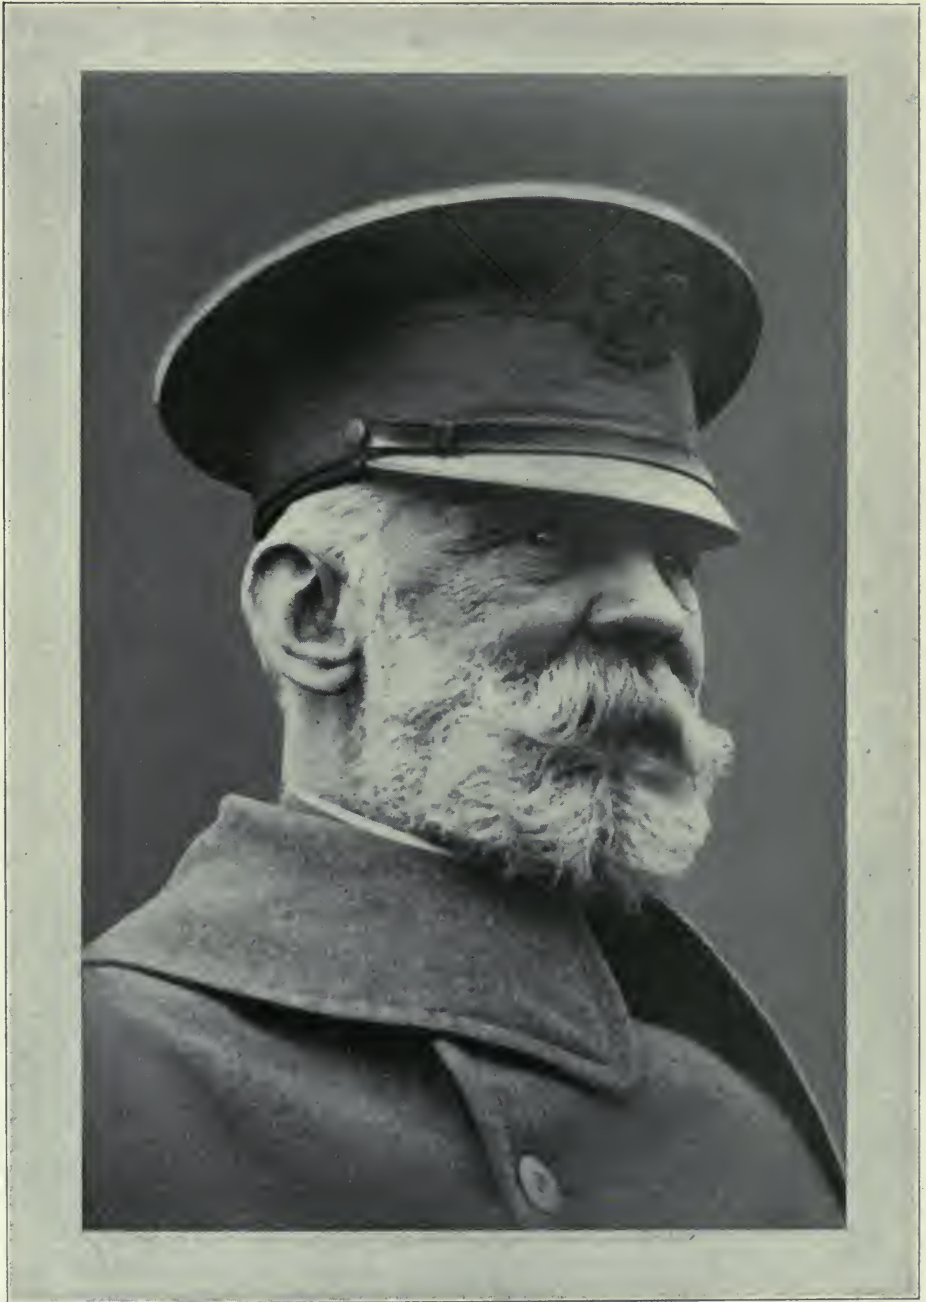

AT THE THIRD OFFICERS' TRAINING CAMP

CHAMPION BOXERS OF THE 172ND BRIGADE

These were the fighters of the 344th Infantry, whose colonel, Benjamin T. Simmons, is receiving from General Martin a silver trophy.

BRIGADIER GENERAL LYMAN W. V. KENNON

Commanding the 171st Infantry Brigade, temporarily commanding the Eighty-sixth Division.

On April 12 Brigadier General Martin, leader of the 172nd Brigade, received his promotion to the rank of major general, and on May 1 took command of the division, General Kennon returning to the 171st Brigade, which he had been commanding before he took control of the division. His stay there also was brief, for upon examination, he, like General Barry, was found physically unfit for overseas service, and late in May he was relieved of command of his brigade. Dropping to his Regular Army rank, of colonel, he was then ordered to Camp Greene, to command the cantonment. There Colonel Kennon was taken ill, and on September 9—the day his old brigade and division sailed for Europe—the “blond giant” breathed his last.

Lyman W. V. Kennon was born at Providence, Rhode Island, in 1858. Graduating from West Point in 1881, he saw thirty-eight years of service in the United States Army. It carried him into Central America, Mexico, Cuba, the Philippines, Hawaii and several European countries. In the Philippines he constructed the Benguet road. For his conduct at the battle of San Juan he was commended for bravery. He became a captain in 1897, a colonel in 1912, and a brigadier-general in the National Army when the United States entered the World War.

Major General Charles H. Martin's assignment as Camp Grant's new chief was recognized as a sure sign of real action during every minute of the training period. Under this dynamic leader there could be nothing else. The period he made an exclamation point, with a clenched fistful of asterisks thrown in!

General Martin was particularly worthy and well qualified to command the Eighty-sixth Division. An Illinoisan by birth—he was born at Albion, October 1, 1863—he previously had proved himself a commander of keen perception and forethought, a rigid disciplinarian with a warm heart beating under the stern exterior, a born leader. Graduated from West Point in 1887, he had served on the frontier, in the Philippines, and in the Boxer campaign, then, after two years on the General Staff at Washington, had accepted command of the Third Infantry, Oregon National Guard. In 1915 he went to the Mexican border, where he served until the United States' declaration of a state of war with Germany, soon after which he was selected by General

GENERAL MARTIN AT CAMP GRANT

A FRIENDLY CHAT

General Martin in conversation with General Andrews and Lieutenant Colonel Pendleton.

Pershing to command the reserve officers' training camp at Leon Springs, Texas. When the camp was closed he was made a brigadier general in the National Army and assigned to Camp Grant.

Upon taking over the Eighty-sixth in May, 1918, General Martin instituted his "thick-skinned-hard-as-nails" system of training. To his staff and field officers, who welcomed him to the command of the division, he announced that the "open door" policy would mark his entire regime.

"There will be DISCIPLINE in this division," he declared, "but it will be the discipline built on perfect trust and understanding."

That was Martin. He left no room for a misunderstanding. He wanted "pep," he said; his orders were orders, and "pep" he got. "Pep" became the slogan of the division. In the first place, there was no getting around it. General Martin did not believe in directing his division from division headquarters alone. He was here, there and everywhere about the camp. No lieutenant drilling his platoon or corporal instructing his squad could risk being off his guard for a moment. The sergeant of the guard at every regimental guardhouse had to keep his eye peeled constantly, for when the general appeared—and often it was quite sudden, the division commander racing his horse or his car around the corner—the guard had to be turned out, rain or shine, holidays included, and turned out in a hurry.

Staff and field officers left their swivel chairs and took to the saddle with the general, who followed to the letter the Pershing instructions relative to training in open warfare. Weather meant nothing in the life of the Eighty-sixth Division, even the higher officers riding for hours every day, through pouring rain as well as sunshine. Soon the division had covered itself with mud as well as glory, and the French and British officers aiding in the instructions, expressing astonishment at the rapid strides made, declared the organization ready for France.

It was soon after General Martin took command that the division received the name it so proudly bore through the remainder of the war, the name of Black Hawk, which still lives as a monument in that great organization born of the war—the American Legion.

And on June 28 the men of the division learned their battle cry, the blood-curdling war cry of old Chief Black Hawk that had struck terror to the hearts of early settlers in Illinois years before. Returning from the rifle range, the four infantry regiments, under command of Brigadier General Lincoln C. Andrews, then leader of the 172nd Brigade, were gathered in a ring about a great stone promontory, where stood that venerable plainsman beloved of every member of the division—Dr. A. J. (“Old Doc”) Woodcock. After a brief talk by General Andrews “Old Doc” let loose the Indian war whoop in all its fury—

“Kia-kiak! Kia-kiak!”

For a moment there was silence. Then, led by Captain Theodore Feeker of the 342nd Infantry at a sign from General Martin, who had accompanied Dr. Woodcock to the scene, the soldiers burst forth in the cry, roaring Kia-kiak!” and again and again until the hills reverberated.

“OLD DOC” WOODCOCK

After an astonishing exhibition of Wild West shooting with an old frontier cap and ball pistol, and breaking the meanest horse at the remount station — pronouncing the brute a kitten—“Old Doc” called it a day and returned to the sometime quiet seclusion of his wooded estate, Camp Riverside, at Byron, which was ever open to the Black Hawk regiments as a camping ground.

Training in the 161st Artillery Brigade kept pace with the work in the infantry brigades and other organizations in spite of lack of equipment and the necessity of leaving Camp Grant in order to get practical range firing. With wooden horses and fencepost-barreled guns, the artillery-men entered upon their labors with the same enthusiasm and determination as if their mounts and equipment were “jake.” Not until November did the gunners get their first horses—such as they were—but every day was crowded with pretty nearly twenty-four hours’ worth of intense work, drill and study, and the brigade was made an efficient, snappy machine.

GUN CREW OF BATTERY B, 333RD FIELD ARTILLERY

Like the other organizations, the artillery brigade lost numerous consignments of men, who were sent to engineer and signal battalions or other artillery brigades, until in December there were barely enough men left to carry on the usual routine duties. With the arrival of new increments, most of the time was utilized in schools for both officers and enlisted men. The schooling of the gunners now was conducted under the supervision of Lieutenant LeDu, French artillery expert assigned to the division.

In January the first guns arrived—six 3-inch field pieces. These were apportioned two to each regiment, although the 333rd was to have been equipped with heavier guns, the French 155 mm. Schneider howitzers. Then, in February, came two 4.7s, the French middle-heavy piece, for that regiment.

The artillery brigade was now all primed to commence firing. All it lacked was a place to shoot. An effort to establish an artillery range at Camp Grant failed on account of insufficient space in the reservation. One range—of 5,000 yards—had been tentatively laid out, but this plan eventually was abandoned as entirely inadequate. Arrangements then were made for the completion of the brigade’s training on the government reservation at Camp Robinson, Sparta, Wisconsin.

Early on the morning May 14 Colonel Philip R. Ward led the artillery brigade, headed by a detachment of the 311th Engineers, along the old Black Hawk trail on the first day’s march of the 225-mile hike to Sparta.

Some were on caissons and mounts, others on foot. It was a formidable looking outfit, close to 3,000 strong, the column being more than a mile long.

After a hike of fifteen days under heavy packs and with full field equipment, passing through the towns of Leyden, Roscoe, Beloit, Janesville, Evansville, Brooklyn, Madison, Token Creek, Poynette, Portage, Kilbourn, Mauston and Hustler, the brigade reached Sparta on May 28, "sore but satisfied." During the long hike the artillerymen encountered several severe rainstorms, one, a real cyclone, at Poynette, leveling the camp. The last day's march covered seventeen miles of miserably muddy roads with rain falling steadily.

At Sparta the training took on a new hue, under conditions much more auspicious than at Camp Grant. Here an ideal range gave the long sought opportunity for the needed target practice, and here the brigade remained until ordered to Hoboken for embarkation overseas with the division.

With General Martin in command the opinion of the camp generally was that a stop would be put to the gutting of the division for replacements to other camps. This change of policy, however, did not come at once. In April 4,500 men were sent to Camp Funston, Kansas, for the Tenth Division; fifty Regular Army officers were transferred as military instructors to various schools and colleges throughout the country; thirty-four engineer non-commissioned officers were sent to Camp Laurel, Maryland, as instructors, nine officers to Camp Meigs, Washington, D. C., for instruction in personnel, classification and insurance, eleven non-commissioned officers to Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Jacksonville, Florida, for instruction in quartermaster school, and forty-nine artillery officers to Camp Jackson, Columbia, South Carolina, for the Eighty-first Division. In May 128 graduates of the third officers' training school of the field artillery branch went to Camp Jackson, ninety-six officers of the Depot Brigade to eastern camps (some of whom later rejoined the division before it sailed) and fifty enlisted men to the engineer officers' training school at Camp Lee, Petersburg, Virginia. At Camp Custer, Battle Creek, Michigan, the Eighty-fifth Division was preparing to go overseas, so in June 2,500 men were sent there. Also in June 1,081 men were transferred to camp Joseph E. Johnston, and ninety men to attend the artillery officers' school at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky.

BAYONET PRACTICE

In addition to the above, approximately 50,000 men were sent to Atlantic ports for immediate embarkation. These men were sent in detachments in response to General Pershing's call for trained workers in various lines mentioned previously. In all about 87,000 men were transferred from Camp Grant between November, 1917, and June, 1918. That staggering figure, however, includes approximately 9,000 negro troops formed into the 365th and 366th Infantry Regiments and a machine gun battalion of the Ninety-second Division.

DUMMY CANNON FOR THE ARTILLERY

Late in June it was announced that the Eighty-sixth Division was to be filled up to war strength by the transfer of 10,000 men from the Depot Brigade and the arrival of 15,000 recruits from Illinois and Minnesota. This news brought rejoicing to Camp Grant, from division headquarters to the lowliest private. As the new men of Lieutenant Colonel Harry A. Eaton. Later Lieutenant Colonel Willis P. Coleman, inventor of an ingenious and effective "hold and squeeze" device for teaching the recruit to shoot (an instrument adopted by the War Department for general use in the army), became commandant of the school. The student-officers were speeded through the course, and received their commissions just in time to be assigned to various units before the division left camp.

Early in June more realism was added to the maneuvers, becoming weekly more extensive. Operating under a hurricane of bullets from the newly arrived Browning machine guns and automatic rifles, and with trench mortar shells and rifle grenades bursting in a barrage directly ahead of them, the men of the division withstood their "baptism of fire" in a thrilling battle up the wooded slopes across the river from the rifle range.

The final maneuver of this war series wound up in the fording of the Kishwaukee River, the entire division wading or swimming across the stream to the delight of a large group of spectators, including Governor and Mrs. Lowden and a number of Chicago society women, who watched from a bridge.

The Eighty-sixth Division received its first German prisoners on June 11, when 100 tars from captured ships were brought to camp and installed in a barbed wire stockade built especially for their housing on the banks of the Rock River. The prisoners arrived under guard from Fort McPherson, Georgia, and were the center of interest in their natty white uniforms. The Germans were put to work at once building the giant-boxing arena conceived came into the division a sweeping physical and efficiency examination was launched by General Martin to weed out of the organization all physical and mental misfits. These were transferred to a development battalion. On July 22 the filling up of the division was accomplished.

Varied activities marked the closing months of the division's stay at Camp Grant. On May 30, Memorial Day, some 45,000 men, mostly from the Depot Brigade, participated in the unveiling of the Eagle Monument, the gift to the camp of a Rockford citizen. The fact that the monument was constructed of wood and plaster made the ceremony none the less impressive.

by Spearman Lewis, originator of press headquarters. This arena, constructed in a natural amphitheater beside the Rock River, had a seating capacity of more than 10,000.

On June 12 the division lost one of its most popular officers when Colonel Simmons, who had commanded the 344th Infantry since the opening of camp, was transferred to the General Staff in Washington. He was succeeded as commanding officer of the 344th by Lieutenant Colonel (later Colonel) Henry A. Hanigan.

The carnival was witnessed by more than 100,000 visitors and a sum of about $18,000 was realized, above expenses, which was turned over to General Martin for the division athletic fund. Following a speech by Secretary Baker of the War Department, Camp Grant boxers won each of the seven bouts on the fight program, technically knocking out six

Canadians and forcing the last one to quit outright. The card was as follows:

The Camp Grant baseball team was defeated by Camp Dodge to the tune of 5 to 1 while a dust storm swept the diamond. Other events of the carnival were a broncho busting exhibition, a mule relay race and a pack race.

Ten days later France's national holiday, Bastille Day, was observed in a more military manner. The entire Black Hawk Division, minus the artillery brigade at Sparta, moved in column of brigades across Samuelson Field past Governor Lowden, General Martin and members of the French military mission, who stood beneath the tricolor and the Stars and Stripes, planted side by side upon the heights overlooking the field.

The weather was ideal for the celebration. Bright sunshine broke through the clouds shortly after 8 a. m., just as the governor and General Martin drove on the field, and shone upon the thousands of infantrymen, machine gunners and members of hospital corps and transport trains massed rank on rank across the flatlands to the low hills almost two miles away.

At a signal the massed band of 240 pieces crashed into a lively march of mingled French and American music, and the division passed in review, unit by unit, with the precision and smoothness of clockwork. Brigadier General Andrews led the review at the head of Chicago's "melting pot" brigade. He was followed by Colonel Palmer at the head of the 171st Brigade, composed of men from Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota. After them came the machine gun battalions, the hospital units and the trains.

After the review the division was marched in column to the Lewis arena, where Governor Lowden made his memorable "Men of Illinois, I envy you" address, followed by speeches from Captain Payen for France and others and the playing of the French and American national anthems.

On July 16 Brigadier General Francis Le Jeune Parker arrived to take command of the 171st Infantry Brigade, and officers fresh from the trenches, mostly from the Rainbow Division, came to supervise the final training. Orders to go were eagerly awaited.

Then, on August 8, the long looked for word arrived in the following confidential memorandum from the Adjutant General to General Martin, sent in broken code:

THE 343RD INFANTRY ABOUT TO ENTRAIN

“Commanding General, Eighty-sixth Division, Camp Grant, Illinois:

“Send all units of your division now at Camp Grant to port of embarkation, Hoboken, New Jersey, after arranging time of arrival and other details directly with commander of port. Units will probably be called upon to entrain about August 20. Do not entrain troops until commander of port is ready to receive them. Have inspection made to determine that organizations are supplied with clothing, equipment and medical supplies, reporting shortages, if any, to commander of port. Leave enemy aliens behind. Animals pertaining to above organizations will be turned over to commanding officer, auxiliary remount depot, Camp Grant. No detachment will be left to care for animals.”

McCain.”

It was impossible to keep secret news of the arrival of the order. It spread through the camp like wildfire and was received generally with gratification, although a tenseness immediately was noticeable throughout the division, for hundreds of Black Hawk “buddies” already had fallen where the rest now were to go. The majority of the officers received the word with mingled exultation and relief; at last they were reaching the end of the gauntlet of reverses through which they had run unflinching for a year.

EN ROUTE

A trainload of Black Hawks on the way from Camp Grant to Camp Greene.

Entrainment of the division was begun August 13 for Camp Mills, Long Island, followed by an advance school detachment.

Entrainment of the division was begun August 18 at the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad siding in the quartermaster area, units being moved by sections, each train accommodating two companies or approximately the equivalent. It was a week before the last organization had left Camp Grant. Tourist sleepers were employed mostly, with a sprinkling of regular Pullmans and now and then an observation car thrown in. Baggage cars accompanied each section, and meals were cooked and served aboard during the two days' trip to the Atlantic coast, which, compared with those to come later on the other side, was indeed a luxurious journey.

Division headquarters and the majority of the units of the division proceeded to Camp Mills; the 171st Infantry Brigade went to Camp Upton. The artillery, which entrained at Sparta, was assigned to Camp Mills.

The men suffered considerable discomfort at Camp Mills from the heat and the famous Long Island mosquitoes. Most of the organizations at that camp were sheltered in squad tents, a number of which were blown away in a rainstorm, and the sanitation there also was not the best. At Camp

But the division did not declare a holiday to rejoice. The men who had not completed the rifle course were rushed through, and from the target range came a continual roar from daybreak to dark. The 400 students at the fourth training school were rushed to graduation, received their commissions as second lieutenants, and were assigned to companies. General Martin ordered a final inspection and examination of every enlisted man and officer of the division.

Now it was work day and night; for many there was little sleep, particularly company officers, top sergeants and company clerks. There were countless records to be completed, accounts to be settled, equipment to be drawn, questions to be answered, and in many orderly rooms the lights burned night after night till dawn.

Then Camp Grant was closed to visitors and the movement toward France was begun.

The advance party of officers and enlisted men selected to precede the division, headed by Lieutenant Colonel Lull, Major Harry S. Gradle, M. R. C., and Captain A. C. H. Snyder, Q. M. C., and consisting of a billeting party and two debarkation and en-

Upton the 341st and 342nd Infantry regiments were comfortably housed in wooden barracks.

Upon arrival at the eastern camps the "la tri neru mors"—most contagious of the division's ailments—again set in. All kinds of reports flew back and forth. The division was to remain there to send other organizations to France; it was to go back to Camp Grant, a mistake having been made by the embarkation authorities; it was to go to Siberia; it was—in fact, there seemed little any division could possibly do that rumor did not have the Eighty-sixth destined to do. The Black Hawks, however, had their fling with rumoritis at Grant, and now took all news of future developments with a grain of salt.

The excellence of the Eighty-sixth Division when it sailed is attested by the following report of the port inspector, a copy of which was forwarded to General Martin with the compliments of the commanding general of the port:

2. Each one of the organizations named above was ready for its inspection at the time designated. Every officer on duty in the inspector's office who has inspected an organization of the Eighty-sixth Division has commented upon the excellent discipline of the command and the thorough preparation made by it for inspection of its clothing and equipment.

3. The excellent showing made by all of the organizations of the Eighty-sixth Division thus far inspected at Camp Mills is such that I believe you will desire this special report of it, and I feel that special report is due the division.

J. T. NANCE,

Lieutenant Colonel, I. G. D., Assistant to Port Inspector.

The 171st Infantry Brigade Headquarters, the 341st and 342nd Infantry regiments and the 332nd Machine Gun Battalion, at Camp Upton, received similar praise from the port inspector.

SOMETHING THEY NEVER DID AT HOME

Further commendation of the division was given later in the following memorandum from Major General David C. Shanks, who was in command of the Port of Embarkation at Hoboken:

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

During the long period that I was in command of the Port of Embarkation, Hoboken, N. J., many divisions of troops and many separate organizations passed through the port and through the Embarkation Camps enroute to service overseas.

Many of these organizations showed careful training, instruction and a high state of discipline.

The Eighty-sixth Division made an especially fine showing in all of the elements which go to show discipline and excellent training.

The record made by this division in camp at Camp Mills was unusual and was the cause of much favorable comment from officers who had occasion to observe the division.

I do not know of any organization passing through the port which made a better showing than the Eighty-sixth Division.

The Commanding General of the Eighty-sixth Division was Major General C. H. Martin and the Chief of Staff was Colonel Roger S. Fitch.

This memorandum is prepared without request or suggestion, either direct or indirect.

Major General, U. S. A.

First of the Atlantic transports put to sea with the Eighty-sixth Division was the Agapenor, sailing September 8 with regimental headquarters, the Second Battalion and Headquarters and Supply Companies of the 343rd Infantry. The greater part of the remainder of the division, with the exception of the artillery, sailed the next day. Immediately after breakfast—the troops had gone aboard the evening before—the camouflaged fleet passed, ship by ship, down the Hudson River into New York harbor and past the Statue of Liberty, then they took up the convoy formation and dropped anchor. Below “sub” chasers were darting about everywhere, while airplanes circled overhead.

At 10:15 a. m. the convoy lifted anchor and put to sea, a cruiser and a navy “blimp” leading the procession, with “sub” chasers covering the flanks. As the convoy steamed out of the three-mile limit, it was joined by an American battleship, which brought up the rear, accompanying the transports half way across.

The Black Hawk fleet consisted of the following vessels, in addition to the warcraft:

Empress of Asia—Division Headquarters, Headquarters Troop, 331st Machine Gun Battalion, 311th Engineers, 311th Engineer Train.

Minnekahda—171st Infantry Brigade Headquarters, 342nd Infantry.

Megantic—172nd Infantry Brigade Headquarters and the following organizations of the 344th Infantry: Headquarters Company, Supply Company, Machine Gun Company and Third Battalion.

in some vessels bunks had been built, while in others hammocks were swung over the mess tables. Into these holds the men were packed so densely that, there being little ventilation to begin with, it became at times difficult to breathe. The peculiar smell of those holds is a thing that probably will not soon pass from the memory of the American soldier. It is a smell in a class by itself; there is no other smell anywhere else exactly like it.

Most of the vessels being freighters, the officers' quarters were usually make-shift affairs hastily constructed and in some instances almost as cramped as the men's, although the ventilation usually was better. In each troop section, however, one officer was constantly on duty. As the trip progressed and many of the officers became victims of mal de mer, it was necessary for some of those who were immune to pass more of their time in the hold, while many of the men were permitted to sleep on deck when the weather permitted.

On account of the danger of submarine attack the convoy traveled without lights. Even smoking on deck was prohibited after sundown. Mess, such as it was (for those who could eat), band concerts and boxing bouts on deck, setting up exercises and daily fire and submarine drills, together with watching for porpoises, flying fish, whales and U-boats were the principal means of combating monotony.

Aboard one or two of the transports were Red Cross nurses, and these ships were the envy of the fleet. The vessels daily changed their positions in the convoy, so that the boys on most of the less fortunate ships caught aggravating glances of dancing on deck and heard now and then feminine laughter rippling across the water—or imagined they did.

Through the early morning haze on September 20 was spied

As records go, the voyage across of the major portion of the Eighty-sixth Division may be chronicled as "uneventful," although to thousands of Black Hawks it was the event of a lifetime, an event never to be forgotten. Most of these men had never before seen the ocean, much less sailed it.

All of the ships in the convoy were British. The troop quarters were in the hold, where the dim green outline of the Irish coast on the right. Then, as the day lightened, the rugged shorts of Scotland to the left could be discerned.

The American battleship had dropped from sight several days back, and as the convoy entered the North or St. Patrick's Channel it was joined by British warcraft—only about twenty-four hours late. At the entrance to the Firth of Clyde the transports separated, several turning northward up the Clyde toward the picturesque Scottish port of Glasgow, while the greater number continued southward past the Isle of Man and into the Irish Sea, where darkness again overtook them. Dawn found them at anchor in the River Mersey awaiting the tide to be drawn to the great docks of Liverpool. On the right lay the sleeping towns of New Brighton, Egermont, Seacombe and Birkenhead, with their green parks and white walks, while over the port bow rose the spire of the cathedral above the Liverpool warehouses.

General Martin, Colonel Fitch and Captains Eddy, Egbert, Spencer and Gordon McCormick, the general's personal aides, were the first to go ashore. They immediately took train for London, for conferences with Major General John Biddle, commander-in-chief of the American forces in England.

Upon landing, headquarters troop proceeded direct to Southampton, thence across the English Channel to prepare the division area in the south of France.

The remainder of the troops marched five or six miles through a drenching rain to Knotty Ash, where they received their first introduction to the English "rest camp." Slushing through mud ankle deep and worse, the men made their way to what once were tents but now were misshapen, leaky contraptions through which the rain trickled unpleasantly. Into these the men were packed, about two squads to each tent. After depositing their packs and rifles, they were lined up, shovels and wheelbarrows were issued to them, and they were put to work making passable the streets through which they had waded.

The next day, Sunday, the sun peeped from behind the clouds for a while and the infantrymen were marched to a Rugby field nearby, where, after a talk by a British colonel, greeting cards from King George were presented to them. As one man remarked: "We also had a message to send to George about his ships and grub and rest camps, but no one could be found to deliver it."

From Knotty Ash the infantry entrained in from two to five days for Romsey, to which point the organizations landed at Glasgow had moved. Other outfits were quartered at Winall Downs, in Winchester. A hike over ten miles of meandering English roads, through picturesque landscapes and past quaint old inns, terminated in the rest camp at Southampton, to which port some organizations of the Eighty-sixth had sailed direct.

In England the Eighty-sixth suffered a vicious body blow dealt by the Spanish "flu," which at that time was beginning to cause havoc in the States as well as on the other side. Many Black Hawks never left soil of England.

of the units of the division landing at Havre. From the Grand Quai, up the steep winding thoroughfares of La Côte, covered with gardens and the villas of the wealthy residents, the Black Hawks hiked to another English rest camp, where the mud and the tents were worse even than at Knotty Ash or Winall Downs. The artillery and the trains, as well as several other organizations of the division, first touched France at the fortified port of Cherbourg. Here a hike was made to another camp at Toulville, similar to the one at Havre.

"Hommes 40—chevaux 8." Only those who have come into intimate relations with this equipment can know the real significance of that phrase labeling the absurd French box-cars in which American troops traveled the length and breadth of France. These toy cars—about a third the size of the American box-cars—were, as the sign assured one, calculated to accommodate forty men or eight horses each. Fortunately, few Black Hawks were required to travel in these vehicles packed to capacity, but still it often was necessary to sleep in relays for lack of space.

The journey from Havre and Cherbourg was made in long trains of these cars, each drawn by a tiny make-believe engine with its comical peanut-stand whistle. But even the discomfort of the conveyances did not prevent enjoyment of this first long journey through the foreign land the Americans had come to fight for. Through meadowy marshland, along winding valleys, past the quaintest of villages and the oddest of towns, with their centuries-old churches of white and their queer little stations, the Black Hawk trains rolled along, stopping at a town now and then long enough for a bit of exercise, a cup of warm coffee, or the replenishing of the water supply. During these brief stops the Black Hawk made his first acquaintance with Jacques Bonhomme and the Vin twins, Blanc and Rouge.

Presently the wine country was reached, the trains passing through

The 341st Infantry was divided between La Gorge-sur-Gironde, St. Gervais and Prignac; the 342nd Infantry scattered over an area embracing the towns of Lugon, Cubzac-les-Ponts, St. Romain and Cadillac; the 343rd Infantry was at St. Loubes; the 344th Infantry at Ambares and St. Louis Montferrand. The 332nd Machine Gun Battalion was stationed at Asques, the 333rd at St. Eulalie. At Yvrac and Montussan the 311th Engineers and the 311th Engineer Train were situated for a while, later moving to the camp at Bassens. The 311th Train Headquarters and Military Police and the 311th Sanitary Train were quartered at St. André de Cubzac, division headquarters; and the 311th Ammunition Train at Le Courneau.

Upon arrival in France the 161st Artillery Brigade went direct to Camp Hunt at Le Courneau. The 311th Trench Mortar Battery, of this brigade, was the only Black Hawk organization—with the exception of the 311th Mobile Ordnance Repair Shop, which went from Cherbourg to Is-sur-Tille, Côte d'Or—that did not join the division in France. After such journeys, ranging in duration from two to almost four days, the Eighty-sixth Division, unit by unit, reached its destination in the gorgeous "Garden of Bacchus," the wine-growing district of Médoc in the department of Gironde.

Division headquarters were established in the town of St. André de Cubzac, situated on the Dordogne not far from its confluence with the Garonne. Here were billeted the headquarters troop and the 331st Machine Gun Battalion, with Captain Leander J. McCormick of the 343rd Infantry as town major.

tar battery spent all of its time at Vitrey and Chauvirey-le-Chatel, in the department of Haute Saone.

Until the Bordeaux country was reached the Black Hawks had wondered what hidden meaning was contained in the expression "Sunny France," for the France they had seen had been far from that. Now they knew it was not all irony, after all. The climate here was ideal, the people most hospitable. The majority of the billets were quite comfortable, albeit most of them were in stables and barns. The men were kept hard at work during the day, but there was plenty of diversion. General Headquarters could keep them here as long as it wished. And here most of the division remained until a few days before the armistice—that is, nominally remained.

STREET SCENE IN CAMP HUNT, AT LE COURNEAU

The greater part of the officers, from the colonels down, as well as many of the non-commissioned officers, were sent to "finishing schools" at Langres, Clamecy and elsewhere, and shortly afterward a majority of the enlisted men were taken away as replacement troops and sent to other divisions in the line.

From the infantry regiments, about October 8 were transferred 9,000 men. They went principally to the First, Second, Thirty-second and Eighty-ninth Divisions, although many joined various other organizations. Twelve hundred men were sent from the machine gun battalions on October 20. The wrath of the division was aroused at these transfers, seemingly so senseless. The reason, however, is given in the following from the final report of General Pershing:

"Under the original organization project there were to be two divisions in each corps of six divisions which were to be used as reservoirs of replacements. One-half of the artillery and other auxiliaries of these two divisions were to be utilized as corps and army troops. They were to supply the first demands for replacements from their original strength, after which a minimum of 3,000 men per month for each army corps in France was to be forwarded to them from the United States. It was estimated that this would give a sufficient reservoir of personnel to maintain the fighting strength of combat units, provided the sick and wounded were promptly returned to their own units upon recovery.

"The Thirty-second and Forty-first Divisions were the first to be designated as replacement and depot divisions of the First Army Corps, but the situation soon became such that the Thirty-second Division had to be employed as a combat division. For the same reason all succeeding divisions had to be trained for combat, until June 27, when the need for replacements made it necessary to designate the Eighty-third as a depot division.

"By the middle of August we faced a serious shortage of replacements. Divisions had arrived in France below strength, and each division diverted from replacements to combat duty increased the number of divisions to be supplied and at the same time decreased the supply.

"On August 16 the War Department was cabled, as follows:

"Attention is especially invited to the very great shortage in arrivals of replacements heretofore requested. Situation with reference to replacements is now very acute. Until sufficient replacements are available in France to keep our proven divisions at full strength, replacements should by all means be sent in preference to new divisions."

"At this time it became necessary to transfer 2,000 men from each of three combat divisions (the Seventh, Thirty-sixth and Eighty-first) to the First Army, in preparation for the St. Mihiel offensive. By the time the Meuse-Argonne offensive was initiated the replacement situation had become still more acute. The infantry and machine units of the Eighty-fourth and Eighty-sixth Divisions, then in the vicinity of Bordeaux, were utilized as replacements, leaving only a cadre of two officers and twenty-five men for each company. To provide immediate replacements during the progress of the battles new replacement organizations were formed in the zone of operations; at first as battalions and later as regional replacement depots.

"On October 3, a cable was sent the War Department, reading as follows:

"Over 50,000 of the replacements requested for the months of July, August and September have not yet arrived. Due to extreme seriousness of the replacement situation, it is necessary to utilize personnel of the Eighty-fourth and Eighty-sixth Divisions for replacement purposes. Combat divisions are short over 80,000 men. Vitally important that all replacements due, including 55,000 requested for October, be shipped early in October. If necessary some divisions in the United States should be stripped of trained men and such men shipped as replacements at once."

PANORAMA OF MALICORNE

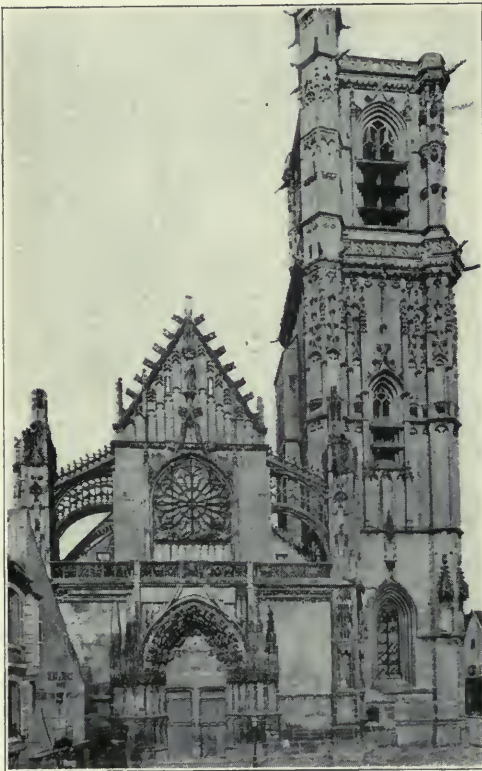

"Altogether seven divisions had to be skeletonized, leaving only one man per company and one officer per regiment to care for the records. As a further measure to meet the situation the authorized strength of divisions was reduced in October by 4,000 men, thus lowering the strength of each infantry company to approximately 174. The thirty combat divisions in France at that time needed 103,513 infantry and machine gun replacements, and only 66,490 were available."

While this, of course, will not by any means heal the wound suffered by the Eighty-sixth Division as a result of the heart breaking transfer, the above statement of the commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces will explain the necessity for taking the measure, which for a long time was not quite clear.

The promptness with which this demand was met by the division is attested by the following telegram sent by General Headquarters to Major General Martin on October 13:

"The following telegram received from Commanding General, S. O. S.:

"With reference to replacements recently forwarded on urgent priority established by G. H. Q., information has been received that this movement has been completed and that the First Army is highly delighted with the promptness with which the movement was executed and the efficient manner in which it is handled in every respect. Twenty-eight thousand replacements were actually forwarded on record time in response to urgent call for twenty-five thousand. The commanding general is highly pleased with this accomplishment and wishes you to know that he appreciates the prompt and efficient response which was made to the call of the First Army for reinforcements. Please convey the commanding general's appreciation to everyone under your command who is entitled to share in the thanks of our fighting forces. I desire to add my congratulations."

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARTIN AT CLAMECY

Between the dates of the transfer of the infantrymen and the transfer of the machine gunners, General Martin was directed to report for temporary duty to Lieutenant General Hunter Liggett, commanding the First Army. Shortly afterward General Martin served with Major General Charles P. Summerall of the Fifth Corps in the Meuse-Argonne, where he remained until the armistice.

Officers of the Eighty-sixth Division at the Third Corps school received a shock late in October when they discovered that trains of wounded passing through Clamecy contained many Black Hawk soldiers. A number of captains and lieutenants met disabled men from their own commands, most of whom had been gassed, and from these casualties received the first definite information concerning the reduction of the division to a skeleton.

The school details of officers and non-commissioned officers returned to St. André de Cubzac just in time to receive the tidings that the Eighty-sixth at last was to get its chance at the front. Moving out at dawn on November 8, the division was to go to Le Mans. What then was to have been the fate of the division there are no available official records to reveal, but the accepted opinion was that there it was to be filled up again to war strength.

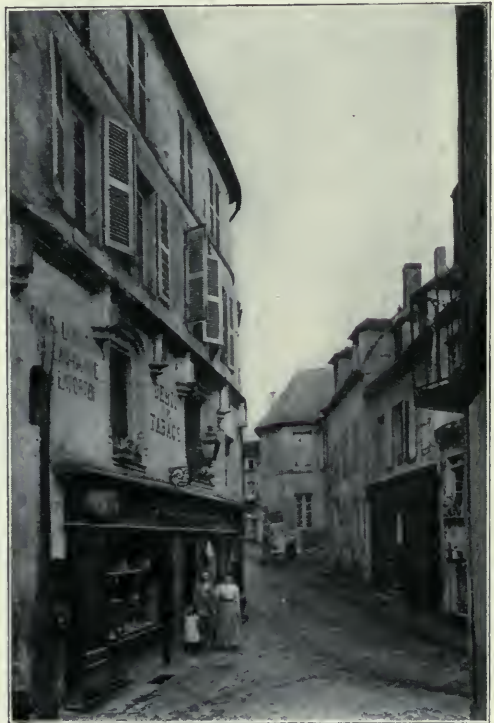

As a matter of fact, the writer was informed months later by an officer on Marshal Foch's staff that from Le Mans, the Eighty-sixth was to have proceeded to the Lorraine front; on November 14, in company with five other American divisions and thirty French divisions, the Black Hawks were to have participated in what the supreme war council had planned as the Allies' mightiest endeavor of the war—the capture of Metz, the rolling back of the German army, the invasion of Germany, the final crushing blow!

That was the "dope."

But to the Black Hawks on November 11 came the news of the signing of the armistice, the event which immediately began to be celebrated by the world generally—with the exception of the Black Hawks. For them the curtain had been rung down just as they were about to enter the big show. And, it may be said, they had paid scalper prices for their tickets.

Even now that unkind fate which seemed to have followed the division from its very inception was not through with the Eighty-sixth. For the next day, November 12, the division was broken up. General Martin arrived at Le Mans on the 13th just in time to view the remains. The disappointed Black Hawk commander was sent to Nancy to take command of the Ninety-second (colored) division. Upon the return to the states of that organization General Martin was assigned to the command of the Ninetieth Division in the Army of Occupation, which division he brought home in June, 1919.

The Eighty-sixth Division

cadre, comprising the skeletonized division headquarters, infantry regiments and machine gun battalions, with approximately one officer to a regiment and one man to a company—in all consisting of seventeen officers and one hundred and twenty-four men—sailed from Bordeaux on the steamship Siboney (December 25), Wilhelmina (January 6, 1919), and Zeelandia (January 16), arriving in the United States on January 3, 19 and 29, respectively.

With the exception of the 311th Engineers and the 311th Engineer and Supply Trains, which remained in the vicinity of Bordeaux, practically all the remaining Black Hawk units returned to the United States as organizations soon after the breaking up of the Eighty-sixth Division.

The arrivals home from overseas were as follows:

Black Hawk units received a rousing welcome home, a tribute as genuine and whole-hearted as if the armistice had not halted the Eighty-sixth just as it was preparing to show its mettle on the field of battle.

For the men from the wreck of the four infantry regiments, however, it was a different story. They, with a few of their officers—three to a company, each company comprising the enlisted personnel of two former companies in the Eighty-sixth—were retained as a part of the American embarkation center at Le Mans.

Of this embarkation center, General Pershing, in his final report, from which quotation has previously been made, has this to say:

“To maintain a suitable reservoir of men for Brest and St. Nazaire, an 311th Ammunition Train—Zeelandia, January 29.

331st Field Artillery—Duca d'Aosta, February 5.

332nd Field Artillery—Antigone, February 15.

The last three Black Hawk outfits to return were the 311th Engineers and the 311th Engineer Trains, which arrived on June 27, and the 311th Supply Train, which landed on July 2.

Upon their arrival in Chicago on their way back to Camp Grant to be mustered out, each of the embarkation center was organized around Le Mans, which eventually accommodated 230,000 men. Here the troops and their records were prepared for the return voyage and immediate demobilization. As the troops arrived at the base ports, the embarkation service was charged with feeding, reclothing and equipping the hundreds of thousands who passed through, which required the maintenance of a form of hotel service on a scale not hitherto attempted."

This was "the most unkindest cut of all." After months of gruelling training in which they had striven with might and main, meeting triumph and disaster with the same gritted-teeth determination, until they were met with praise wherever they might go—at Upton and Mills, at Liverpool, at Havre, at Bordeaux—even hiding their disappointment that they were not permitted to fire one of the 623,541,085 bullets or any of the 3,500,800 shells the Americans had sent over to the foe, now they had come to this: they to be part of "a form of hotel service." But someone had to do it, so they made the best of it.

The men of the 341st and 342nd Infantry Regiments were formed into the Third Provisional Regiment under command of Lieutenant Colonel Coleman and Major Sprague of the 341st, while those of the 343rd and 344th became the Fourth Provisional Regiment under Colonel Hannigan and Lieutenant Colonel Augustus Van Wormer of the 344th.

Both of the newly consolidated outfits left Le Mans the evening of November 13 for station at Montfort and Pont de Gennes, about eighteen miles distant. Through inky blackness the Third Provisional hiked several miles farther, to La Roche and La Brielle, where they remained for about two weeks. The Fourth Provisional tarried a while at Montfort and Pont de Gennes, then was ordered to the Belgian camp and thence back to the outskirts of Le Mans, where it took up its duties at that famous rendezvous of casuals, the forwarding camp—more familiarly known to those that have been there as the “Mud Hole,” the “Mad House,” and other possibly more appropriate (if less polite) names.

The Third Provisional, leaving La Brielle and La Roche, proceeded to Parigne l'Eveque and vicinity and later, just before Christmas, to a group of towns in the historic and beautiful valley of the Sarthe, through which meanders the poplar-fringed river of that name, a country once the scene of the conquests of Caesar, the conflicts of Coeur de Lion and the heroic struggle of Jeanne d'Arc. Regimental headquarters were established at La Suze, where stands the ruin of what legend says is the castle of Bluebeard. In February the regiment was assembled at La Suze and entrained again for Le Mans, where it took over the classification camp.

The Third and Fourth remained at the classification and forwarding camps, respectively, until the embarkation of troops for home had progressed sufficiently for the reduction of the American Embarkation center, when wholesale transfers were made, some men going to organizations sailing for the States, some to special posts in the A. E. F., and others to various educational institutions, such as the A. E. F. University at Beaune and French and British universities, provisions for entrance into which had been made for American enlisted men and officers.

Of the original officers chosen by Colonel Coleman for the Third Provisional Regiment most of those of the former 341st Infantry were transferred to the Forty-ninth Infantry when Colonel Palmer, their former commanding officer, took command of that organization preparing to return home. Major Sprague was placed in charge of the Motor Transport Corps at Le Mans for a brief period, after which he sailed. In January, the following Black Hawk officers remained with the Third Provisional:

Majors Edwin W. Allen and Arthur C. Marriott.

Captains Myron S. Stevens, Frank E. Rohde, Earl L. Lyons, Charles K. Hall, Merwin L. Prindle and T. C. Stirtz.

First Lieutenants Herbert V. Juul, William G. Scholl, Frank A. Gerould, Jack Little, Courtney D.

Freeman, Edward C. O. Beatty, Raymond McDonald, Walter E. Tracy, Clement C. Young, George Peck, Kellogg Logsdon, Edward S. Marples, Robert A. Moss, Robert T. Peters, John A. Steinecker, James H. Ticknor, T. A. Warner, Harry W. Wellington and Paul A. Williams.

Second Lieutenants Leonard W. Beadle, A. O. Hurja, George W. Martin, George A. Schmidt, Wallace Thompson, D. L. Vail and Paul W. Weber.

Major Allen later went to Paris for special duty with the Peace Commission and became a member of the United States Liquidation Commission.

In the Fourth Provisional Regiment at this time were:

Majors John H. Smale and William King, Jr.

Captains A. J. Powelson, Joel M. Bolby, Carl V. Burger, John Diller, Gordon K. Gould, Robert A. P. Holderby, Alanson Follansbee, John J. Ver Haar, Richard E. Melcher, Benjamin C. English, Kenneth H. Smith and Dovenmuehle.

First Lieutenants Warren A. Johns, Howard A. Brundage, Daniel L. Hallowell, Herbert W. Read, Maurice R. Preston, Gailord W. Greer, George C. Reid, Siegfried Maurer, Melville Griffiths, Walter Cole, Elliott S. Miller, Joseph P. Tompkins, Warren C. Giles and Watson.

Second Lieutenants Arthur J. Werneke, William S. Walker, George R. Birhman and Frank J. Malloy.

During the demobilization period the American embarkation center was one of the most important "sectors" in France, for this area formed the great clearing house for most of the home-going troops. They must needs filter through the sieve before they hit the high seas. Here they were organized, their units filled up, they were equipped and "decootieized."

MAJOR EDWIN W. ALLEN

This hanging on, working on, sending thousands of others off along that gorgeous homeward way was a hard and seemingly thankless job, and the worst enemy of the doughboy, the dread spectre of homesickness, began gnawing at the Black Hawks' hearts. They had been all over England and France; they had traversed the green where the first Derby was run; they had garnered grapes in the Bordeaux district, walked through the former palaces of kings, stood on Caesar's walls, swaggered in their hob-nailed boots (some of them) down the chestnut-lined Champs Elysees, hiked along white roads over which conquering hordes of centuries ago had marched; they had billeted in the homes of peasant and prince, drilled and guard-mounted to the delight of the wooden-shoed gentry of a hundred hamlets, "parlez-vous" countless alluring (and other) mademoiselles, laughed and sung and bantered and kicked about their chow, seen their "buddies" leave them never to return, been drafted when the war was over for "a form of hotel service," and now they wanted to go home.

But it was not by any means all work and no play even now. Some fifty men or so were sent on leave from each regiment every month, with all expenses paid, to the leave area at St. Malo. Other leaves were granted to Paris, Nice, Marseilles, Bordeaux, almost any French city of the soldier's choice, he paying his own expenses. Then there were all sorts of athletics—football, baseball, basketball, boxing, track—for participation in which time was taken from military duties as well as from hours ordinarily devoted to recreation.

PANORAMA OF LE MANS

Fiercely contested games were played between battalion teams and with other regiments. It was the Black Hawk baseball team that, managed by Captain Lyons, formerly of the 342nd Infantry, won the championship in the Inter-Allied Games at Paris.

However, during their performance of "a form of hotel service" in the Le Mans embarkation area, an aspersion has been cast upon the Black Hawks by a certain commanding officer returning to the States. At least it was so reported. This was the statement that he had brought back all the Black Hawks except the A. W. O. L.'s and G. O.-45's. One of the Black Hawks plodding along at his tiresome job in France received a clipping from a newspaper containing that officer's remarks, with the inscription in a feminine hand penned along the margin: "Which of these are you?"

To correct this false impression, a check-up as complete as possible

GAME BETWEEN FOURTH PROVISIONAL REGIMENT AND AVIATION TEAM, AT TOURS

was made of the Black Hawks in France in February. The remaining infantrymen and machine gunners were stationed about Le Mans, the 311th Engineers and Engineer Train and 311th Supply Train near Bordeaux. Practically all other units of the division had returned.

Many officers of the old Eighty-sixth at that time were holding down high posts throughout the A. E. F., which made it "pretty soft" for many a Black Hawk on leave.

General Martin himself, as has been stated, was in command of the Nineteenth Division in the Army of Occupation. Colonel Charles E. Stodter of the 342nd Infantry was inspector of animals for the Third Army in Germany and Colonel Fitch was G-3 (assistant chief of staff in charge of operations) of the Second Army. Colonel Howland was commanding a regiment of the Rainbow Division. Lieutenant Colonel Swift was attached to G-2, General Headquarters (assistant chief of staff in charge of the intelligence service) and had direction of embarkation. In Paris Major Taylor was assistant provost marshal, one of the most important posts in the French capital.

Also in Paris were Major (later Lieutenant Colonel) Owsley Brown, assistant to the judge-advocate; Major Allen, with the Peace Commission; Captain W. I. Shuman, on the revaluation board, and Captain Paxton Hibben, on special duty. Attached to the adjutant-general's office in Paris were Captain Hugh G. McCulloch and Lieutenant Hugh D. Adair. Adair had been shell-shocked in the Argonne drive. Major George A. Davis was in charge of recreation and education in the Eighty-ninth Division. Captain Fecker was billeting officer at Coblenz.

In Bordeaux, a Black Hawk could find any number of friends. Major Denman reigned supreme as assistant provost marshal, winning high praise for the efficient manner in which, as American chief of police, he solved the city's almost hopeless traffic problems and made the seaport most dangerous pickings for A.W.O.L.'s.

BEAUCOUP FRANCS

Major Marriott turns over to Lieutenant Little several (!) thousand francs which had been wagered on the game.

Major Fast held one of the hardest jobs in the A. E. F., as personnel adjutant of the Bordeaux embarkation camp. Assisting him were Captain Roy G. Woodruff of the 311th Ammunition Train and Captain Grover C. Coil, while Major William L. Elkins, also of the ammunition train, was commanding officer of casualties at the camp. Lieutenant Ray E. McMechan had the distinction of having under him at various times officers ranking as high as colonels. He was in command of the casual officers' company.

Major Gradle was assistant to the base surgeon at Bordeaux, and Captain William Kenny, former commanding officer of headquarters troop, was on special (and other) duty.

The following lieutenants were in command of guard companies at the Bordeaux embarkation camp:

THE ENTRANCE TO LE MANS

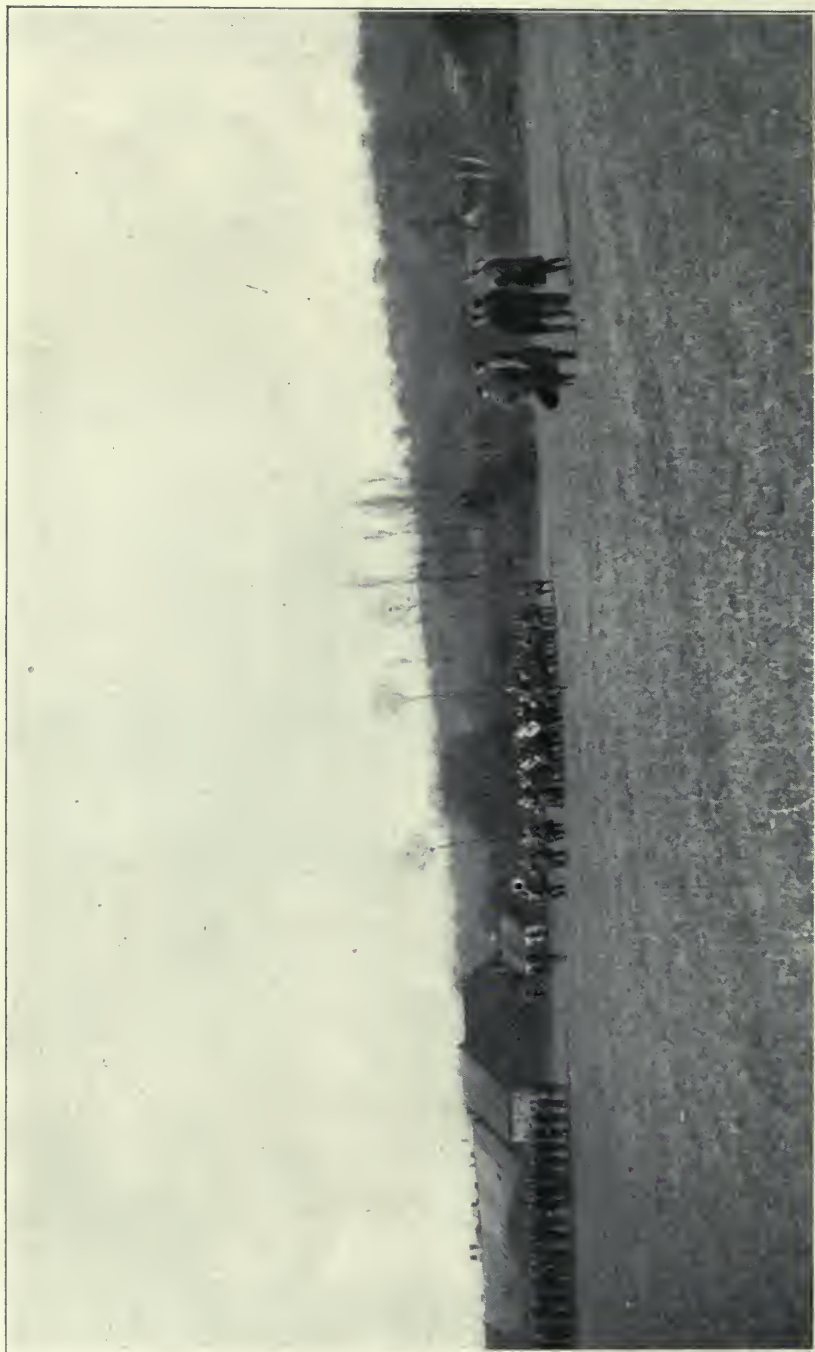

From the 342nd Infantry—Clarence W. ("Wild Bill") Dawson, Allen C. Brophy, Robert G. Copenhaver, Louis T. Sweet, Ernest T. Alcorn and Charles B. Crow.

From the 343rd Infantry—Richard B. Courts.

From the 344th Infantry—R. H. Birkby.

Other officers and men were scattered over the greater part of Europe. After the return of General Martin from France, Major General James W. McAndrew, General Pershing's chief of staff, crossed the continent to Seattle, Washington, to decorate with the Distinguished Service Medal the commander of the Eighty-sixth Division.

Thus is recorded the history of the Black Hawk, as brave as Achilles, as determined as Jason, as faithful as Hesperus, its bubble pricked by the pen that signed the armistice, but as proud a division as ever served in the American Expeditionary Forces.

FLUFFS OF DOWN THAT HELPED TO LINE THE EIGHTY-SIXTH DIVISION'S NEST

Authorship of or responsibility for the following sidelights on the History of the Eighty-sixth Division is neither claimed nor admitted by the writer of the preceding record of the division's activities. These are only little flights of fact and fancy that may recall to some Black Hawks those successively mad, glad and sad days passed in the army.

Captain William Quayle Setliffe, supply officer of the 343rd Infantry and later secretary of the Eighty-sixth Division Association, showed the earmarks of a supply officer at the very outset of his career at Camp Grant.

Although he is a nephew and godson of Bishop William Quayle, Bill early qualified as an adept at appropriating things ad lib. It was Bill who made a log foundation for the giant Christmas tree at camp, which in itself was considered somewhat of an achievement, but that was only a starter. Soon afterward he managed to make away with an entire house. He found the house one morning idle behind his quarters. He had men and rollers in a jiffy, and the next thing Colonel Howland knew he had a garage. The house belonged to the Quartermaster Corps. Some Q. M. officers saw it rolling away and remonstrated. Then it was that Bill proved his genius to the Q. M.'s.

He borrowed a heavy truck to make the work easier.

Camp Grant had the distinction of having assigned to it the first woman in the United States to be honored with the full status of an officer. This was First Lieutenant Isabelle Gray, Medical Reserve Corps, who for fifteen years had been a practicing physician in St. Louis.

One of the Black Hawk Division's best friends and staunchest champions was Federal Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis of Chicago, whose aviator son, Major Reed Landis, was one of America's foremost "aces." Judge Landis was a frequent visitor to camp and delivered a number of fiery talks to the men of the division, most remembered among which—by many—was that "Damn the hyphen" oration of August 1, 1918, after which the judge naturalized 800 foreign-born soldiers and shook the hand of each one.

Perhaps the most rapid promotion from the ranks in the American army was achieved by seven Black Hawks, who, three weeks after they had left for Camp Lee at Petersburg, Virginia, to attend the officers training school for engineers, returned to Camp Grant as second lieutenants. They were:

C. L. Ballou, 311th Supply Train.

Carl L. Boeder, Company D, 311th Engineers.

V. D. Cyliowski, Company D, 311th Engineers.

Samuel Etskokin, 343rd Infantry.

C. L. Moyer, Company G, 341st Infantry.

Fred C. Norlin, Company D, 311th Engineers.

Daniel O'Connell, 311th Supply Train.

All were assigned to the units they had left on entering the school.

Another rapid promotion was that of Roy G. Swindell, who, from sergeant major at division headquarters, rose to a captaincy.

The negro recruits of the 183rd Infantry Brigade were a source of unending entertainment while quartered at Grant. The insurance officers found one man who insisted upon taking the full $10,000 worth of war risk insurance, although all the other men in his company had contented themselves with smaller amounts. Finally they got the answer out of him—but only after he had signed up for the limit.

LAUGHING GAS

"When we gits ovah theah in thim battles," he explained, "they's gonna take of these heah cheap two-thousan'-dollah niggus an' stick 'em up yondah in th' f'unt lines whe' they'll git shot full o' holes jes lak a wiss cheese. But us ten-thousan'-dollah niggus—oh, boss—they'll keep us back whe' we won't stan' sma't chance o' gittin' hu't."

Captain Ben English, Company K, 343rd Infantry, couldn't make a Ghetto squad understand how to turn their toes out at an angle of 45 degrees.

"Turn your feet out 45 per cent," he ordered.

Action was unanimous.

Brigadier General Lyman W. V. Kennon, the beloved "blond giant" of the 171st Infantry Brigade, was not given to making sudden demotions among his commissioned personnel, but as for Mrs. Kennon—

About a half-hundred Chicago clubwomen were the guests of the brigade commander's wife at Camp Grant. Luncheon a l'armée was served them in the mess hall of Headquarters Company, 341st Infantry. As they were daintily—as daintily as possible—balancing the red hot aluminum coffee cups and trying to prevent the "mixture" in the so-called plates from reaching the floor or their gowns, one said to Mrs. Kennon:

"Do the boys really have such good food all the time?"

Mrs. Kennon turned to the company's dapper captain, W. Earl Bell.

"How about that, corporal?" she said.

Earl blushed as the K. P.'s snickered disrespectfully.

About fifty religious beliefs were represented at Camp Grant. The following classification is the result of a survey among the enlisted men in December, 1917, and January, 1918:

Probably the most popular "war song" of the Black Hawks, not even excepting "K-k-k-katy," "We Don't Want the Bacon" and "On Wisconsin," was that lilting parody written by Bart Macomber, former Illini football star, when he was a member of the Third Company at Fort Sheridan, the officers from which went into the 342nd Infantry. The words are:

When all our boys get over into France
 We're going to make the Kaiser do a dance;
 We're going to make him yell, and yell like hell,
 For the good old U. S. A. (Yes, yell like hell).
 Fight, fight, fight for every yard;

Then we'll roll those Germans in the sod, Yes, by God!
 Roll, roll, roll!

The song became so popular at Camp Grant, in fact, that it came near breaking up more than one of the famous "singing lessons" at the "Y" auditorium.

For obvious reasons names are not mentioned in the following incident:

A certain brigadier general of the division was noted for his strict orders and his rigid enforcement of the same. But a certain major of infantry was equally well known for his fearless independence.

One of the general's standing orders was to the effect that upon his approach on the drill field or elsewhere each officer he met was to stop his work, stand at attention, salute, give his name, rank and organization, and account for his activities at that particular moment.

Riding his bicycle onto the drill field one fine day, the major observed the general, dismounted, saluted and said:

"Good morning, general. Nice day, sir."

The general stared at him a moment, then said, biting off each word with a snap:

"Major— can— it— be— that— you— do— not— know— what— my— orders— stipulate— as— the— procedure— to— be— taken— by— an— officer— whom— I— meet!"

The major looked the general full in the eyes. Then, saluting smartly, he hopped on his bicycle, saying as he rode off:

"Sir, Major——, —— Infantry, getting on his bicycle and riding away."

A number of Black Hawks still have confidence in the luck pieces from "Old Doc" Woodcock—those old Roman or early Christian coins gathered by the pioneer's father when he was consul in Aquitania. The first of these went to General Martin, General Andrews and Colonel Howland. Then the division's godfather came to Chicago to see his boys at their first reunion après la guerre, and renewed old friendships and made some new ones. To these friends he also sent some of the rare coins for luck.

ADOPTED BLACK HAWKS

Field glasses were in great demand on the White Star liner Canopic, on which most of the 341st Infantry made its way to France. The reason was the presence of several score of pretty nurses on the Empress of Asia, another of the convoy.

Sergeant Adolph Larson, of Company A, was gazing longingly across the water, bemoaning the lack of feminine company.

"I'd be a target for a submarine right now," he said, "if I thought I'd get picked up by the Empress of Asia."

One of the English cooks on the Canopic greatly enjoyed playing on the superstitions of some of the 341st doughboys aboard. Of course he seized upon the fact that there were 1,300 passengers. Then he announced glumly that the death of one of the sailors presaged an ill-fated voyage. He took advantage of every phenomenon of the sun and moon to concoct a story of coming bad luck. Then one day he discovered that there were three chaplains on the ship.

"The bloody craft will go down for sure," he declared. "'Tis no end of an ill omen."

The blighter really seemed disappointed when the Canopic arrived safely at Liverpool.

If there was any anti-British propaganda loose in the 342nd Infantry, the members of the crew of the Minnekahda certainly did little to combat it. For the first few days of the trip over one of these was particularly obnoxious in his belittling of the American effort.

"Say, buddy, I'd put the soft pedal on that line of chatter," said a sergeant one day when the Britisher went a little too far. "Don't you know we're coming over to help you?"

"'Elp us, me eye," sneered the sailor. "Ye're comin' to get the glory, ye blighters."

What followed happened so suddenly that few present could tell who was responsible—and nobody ever did. The Englishman, however, was in the ship's hospital the rest of the trip. And there was no more criticism of the Yanks.

"Well, sergeant, how do you like England?" asked a lieutenant of D Company, 342nd Infantry, of Sergeant Henry Cohn.

"Hm-m," soliloquized the sergeant, "when I call anybody anything, I'd like to call him something besides a bloody blighter."

At the English rest camp—beg pardon—at Havre, there was some misunderstanding with the "Tommies," two of whom, in an altercation with a Black Hawk, suddenly pitched into the lone doughboy, who managed, however, to hold his own quite well. A husky, six-foot-three Australian sat atop a fence nearby and grinned. Two other English soldiers approached and soon joined their comrades in the melee. This was too much for the Aussie, who jumped down from the fence and lit in, with the result that soon four "Tommies" apologized, and the Aussie and the doughboy walked off, their arms about each other's shoulders. Half an hour later the Black Hawk might have been seen emerging from the Australian's hut, making his way unsteadily toward his company's camp. The Black Hawks have loved the Australians ever since.

Few of their many friends would suspect Major John S. Sweeney, or Major Albert A. Sprague II. of being sprinters. But the majors have a record of a two-mile jaunt in but little more than the record time.

It happened on their first trip through France, on the way from Havre to St. André de Cubzac, and they didn't know then of the utter unreliability of French train schedules or of the absolute irresponsibility of French railroad officials. So, when their train stopped at a fair-sized town and they were advised that it would be at least two hours before the journey would be resumed, they took advantage of the excellent opportunity. Captain Fred S. Scobie and several other officers of the 341st accompanied them to get a bit of lunch. When they returned in about three-quarters of an hour there was no train in sight.

Oh, the plans had been changed, the station master remarked nonchalantly and started to walk away. Sweeney grabbed him. What were they to do? Where could they find the train? The red cap, tugging his waxed moustache in annoyance, said the train was two miles down the track taking on water. And why not? No taxis were near. They had to make that train.

In a remarkably few minutes, the squad of sweating, panting, bedraggled officers reported to Colonel Palmer, in command of the train.

"How did you get here?" asked the colonel.

"Ran," puffed Sprague and Sweeney in unison.

"That's good," smiled Colonel Palmer. "We'll be pulling out in two hours."

It was just before the armistice, in the American bar of the Grand Hotel in Paris. Four lieutenants of the 342nd Infantry were rushing out after a farewell cocktail, when they bumped into Lieutenant Colonel—let us omit his name; he is still in the Army—who had recently been transferred to a division at the front.

GETTING ACCLIMATED

"Greetings," said the Lieutenant Colonel, who recognized one of the lieutenants as an old friend. "Let's have a drink for old times' sake."

"Can't," canted the lieutenant. "Gotta catch the 8 o'clock train for Bordeaux. Barely got time."

"Why Bordeaux?" inquired the colonel. "The Eighty-sixth has gone to Le Mans. Left this morning. Beat it down to Le Mans, and you'll get there ahead of them."

Arriving at Le Mans about midnight, the four lieutenants were informed by the R. T. O. that the division wasn't due for three or four days. There was no train out that night. Next morning they started again for Bordeaux, reporting a day late to their commanding officer, Lieutenant Colonel Holderness, who had succeeded Colonel Stodter.

They never snitched on the lieutenant colonel who gave them the "bum steer," but one of them, months later, got even.

Which accounts in a measure for the possession of the complete roster of the division.

Sergeant Richard A. ("Dickey") Dale, flaxen-haired Adonis of the supply company of the 343rd Infantry, was a victim of close shaves.

The first of these close shaves came at Camp Grant before the Division left for Hoboken, when Dickey was compelled to seek the barber's chair and be shorn of his glorious tresses. The entire company gathered around to witness the operation, and the very roughest teamsters in the company—heartless old things—gathered up the curls from the floor and divvied 'em up, one vulgar fellow remarking that his wife could have a nifty switch made out of his portion.

After the armistice, however, Dickey let them grow again as luxuriantly as they pleased, to the delight of the demoiselles. Then it was that a "buddie," Corporal Jim Nelback, received an invitation for the pair of them to beaucoup party in Paree, at the home of an American woman. There was no time to bother with passes; there was so much red tape to them. And to go A. W. O. L. was to run the gauntlet of millions of M. P.'s. True, their C. O., Lieutenant George W. Catts, was such a decent sort of a chap they hated to take advantage of him. But this promised to be the chance of a lifetime. Then a brilliant idea hit Nelback. They would disguise themselves as "Frogs," as both of them could speak a smattering of French, such as "Donny mwa un biftek," and "Avey voo de tray bun conyak?" and "ma cheree" and "Ah, wee." So from the friendly natives of Montfort-Pont de Genes they procured trousers, camps and long overcoats, purchased white collars and shirts, and in the pine woods on the outskirts of the twin towns they internationalized themselves. Another "buddie" took their uniforms back to camp, and the pair beat it for Le Mans to catch the Paris Express at 3:30 p. m.

Heart-failure almost overcame them whenever they passed an American soldier. At Le Mans, Dickey was elected to buy the tickets as Jim's French was not quite so polished—he insisted on saying "voos" for "voo." So Dale stood in line with French and American officers, soldiers and civilians, his knees shaking and his rosy cheeks paled. Heart action almost stopped when an American officer approached him and asked in French for direction to the buffet. Luckily the sergeant was able to answer.

"Deux billets pour Paris," said Dickey bravely to the ticket chopper.

"Quarante sept francs," said the woman. Forty-seven francs: Dickey had forgotten that when he was a soldier he rode for about a quarter fare. And they had only about thirty francs between them. Easing away, the adventurers hurried through the streets of Le Mans till they met a motorcycle driver they knew. And the motorcyclist so admired their nerve that, after recovering from his astonishment, he peeled off a hundred-franc note.

At the station again they found the ticket window closed by a sign reading "COMPLET." No more tickets were to be sold, although there stood the Paris train waiting. Had they had on their uniforms, there was a way—through the old round house—but the French guard couldn't be bluffed by a Frenchie as he could by a doughboy. The Paris party was off. Not only that, but how would they get back to Montfort? Half their company would be going back on the trains. There was no other way out. They must walk.

It was a disappointed pair of "non-coms" that slipped into their tents that night and, cussing softly but none the less emphatically, changed back into their O D.'s.

The silver moon floats serenely in the star-sprinkled purple dome, dropping a shimmering trail of diamonds across the dark waters of the Durdogne. Buck, inspired, chatters on:

Enfield racked away. Nothing to do till tomorrow. Buck, the husky machine gunner, rambles aimlessly along between the walls of towering poplars lining the broad winding white road near St. André de Cubzac, his nature and disposition peculiarly attuned to romance and adventure.

He rubs his eyes and puts a hand in the pocket full of francs. Is it an apparition? Far down the road through the twilight trips the essence of Romance, a veritable dream of loveliness. They draw nearer together. Buck summons all his nerve and smiles. Lordy! She has a dimple and her eyes twinkle as she rolls 'em askance.

Is he there? Well, here's Buck's line of chatter:

That was all bunk about there being no bathtubs in France. No doubt when you wrote that home you were of the opinion that you were truthfully portraying the facts, but in fairness to the French that erroneous belief must be corrected. There were bathtubs in France. In fact every town of any size boasted a tub. Strict search and due inquiry revealed this truth.

Such was the case even at Le Briel, where was esconced the 341st Infantry portion of the Third Provisional Regiment for a time after the armistice began. Either Lieutenant Walter N. Sutherland of the Headquarters Company or his interpreter, Private (first class) Francis Prugger, can tell you that. But for a while there were grave doubts.

Finally Walter, being of more or less cleanly habits, could stand it no longer.

"Prugger," he said. "You're the parlez vouser extraordinary of this outfit, and it's up to you to get Captain Bell and me a bath tub. Now, you allez and don't revenez till you get one."

Prugger canvassed the town of some 1,500 souls, finally winding up at the combination schoolroom and mayor's office.

"But, my dear friend," expostulated the mayor in astonishment, "it is WINTER!"

After much coaxing and petting, however, Prugger prevailed upon the worthy gentleman to drag the town tub out of the attic. After the dust and cobwebs had been removed Bell and Sutherland—and Prugger and the rest of the company—splashed once more in luxury.

That Headquarters Company of the 341st Infantry boasted lots of wits.

Twice the regiment had marched from St. Gervais to St. Andre to catch that train which was to take them to Le Mans. Twice the train had failed to show up. And twice they had returned to their billets. Each of those was a ten-mile hike with full packs plus.

For the third time they were forming for the march. First Sergeant William Brackett looked at his travel-weary feet and said:

"If Sarah Bernhardt made as many farewell trips as we're making, no wonder she has a wooden leg."

Feathers in the Black Hawk's Wings

TRIBUTES OF LEADERS TO EIGHTY-SIXTH DIVISION

Upon the organization of the Eighty-sixth Division Association to bring together once more and keep together as far as possible all former members of the Black Hawk Division, came tributes from various sources. Some of these follow:

AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF

August 24, 1919.

To the Soldiers of the Eighty-sixth Division:

You arrived in France at the crucial moment of the Allied offensive which was destined to overthrow the German armies. Our First Army was then engaged in the greatest battle in American history, and its exhausted divisions required new life to enable them to deliver the final blow against the enemy. Under these conditions, your division disembarked at the base ports, and, lacking the necessary animals and equipment to permit of its immediate employment, was skeletonized and its personnel rushed to the front. In a minimum of time you found yourselves in the ranks of practically every combat division then on the front; you participated in every important assault which marked the final battle of the war. The same splendid discipline and morale which marked your division upon its arrival in France, marked you as individuals in fighting with your new comrades of the veteran divisions of the American Expeditionary Forces.

I can fully appreciate your personal regret over not being able to enter the battle as a member of the organization in which you had worked so hard to prepare to do your part, but by your service as individuals you contributed directly on the battlefield to the success of the American Expeditionary Forces and justified your pride in the Eighty-sixth Division.

JOHN J. PERSHING,
General.

WAR DEPARTMENT

Washington, August 11, 1919.

To the Soldiers of the Eighty-sixth Division:

The spirit which made the Eighty-sixth and its fellow divisions invincible in the war is none the less necessary in this time of peace that has come through their military achievements. I am glad to learn that the "Black Hawk" is to assist in keeping alive the spirit which gave a personality and an individuality to your organization, both in its training at Camp Grant and its service overseas. I trust and believe that its record in peace will be none the less praiseworthy than its showing in war.

Faithfully yours,
NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF

Washington, August 6, 1919.

Dear Mr. Setliffe:

I have received your letter informing me of the organization of the Eighty-sixth Division Association, and am glad to know that the men who have rendered the country such splendid service, both at home and abroad, have formed an association with the idea of keeping alive the memories of this service.

The men who are returning home from France are returning with a broader vision of public affairs and with a fuller appreciation of what the American form of government means to our citizens. They will put into the solution of the civic problems now confronting the nation the same steadfastness of purpose, resolution and determination which marked their efforts in France. That page in American history, which is second to none among the many glorious pages of American achievement, is merely the starting point of future achievement, not so spectacular, but of equal value to the country.

My best wishes to the Eighty-sixth Division Association.

Very cordially yours,

P. C. MARCH,

General, Chief of Staff.

Mr. W. Q. Setliffe,

Sec. Eighty-sixth Division Association.

The following is from the commanding general of the Thirty-third Division to which were sent thousands of soldiers from the Black Hawks ranks:

Camp Grant, Ill., August 6, 1919.

Mr. Wm. Q. Setliffe, Secretary,
Eighty-sixth Division Association,
Chicago, Illinois,

My dear Mr. Setliffe:

In reply to your favor of August 4, advising me of the formation of the Eighty-sixth Division Association, I take the opportunity to extend my hearty greetings to the members of the association, and especially to those brave men of the Eighty-sixth, who later served under my command in the Thirty-third Division in France. In the Thirty-third we had approximately 4,000 men from the Eighty-sixth, good soldiers all, courageous, patriotic, and imbued with the one determination to put the enemy out of business in the shortest space of time. In this, their aims and objects were similar to those of the other gallant men of the Thirty-third Division.

Your association should be able to accomplish much good for our country and for the individual members of your organization, and I predict for it a long, honorable and successful career.

The fact that it was my good fortune to command these gallant men from Illinois, will always be one of the most pleasant episodes of my career, and one which will ever have a green spot in my memory.

It is to be hoped that we may escape another war such as that through which we have just passed, but if it be our fate to again take up the sword in combat we should be prepared to meet it with every promise of ultimate success. To do less would be to forsake every tradition of honor and justice among the peoples of the world, and subject us not only to humiliating and disastrous defeat, but render us an object of ridicule throughout the family of nations.

The people of the United States should accept the lessons learned in the World war, the chief of which was that of unpreparedness. The policy advocated by the government in the reorganization and expansion of the military establishment should be heartily supported and fostered by every loyal citizen. We, as a democratic people, do not require a great standing army, but it is a vital necessity that we maintain a large organized citizen soldiery, capable of supplying all possible needs during the first year of a possible war. This force should be thoroughly equipped, officered, disciplined and instructed, approaching as near as possible to the standard maintained by the regular army.

If such a course is adopted by the people, it is my opinion that we as a nation will be in position to meet with confidence any other nation or combination of nations that may be brought against us, assuming, of course, that our naval establishment keeps pace with the army.

In your work, you can do much to bring about this result, and I have every confidence that the red-blooded men of the 86th Division Association will be ever among the staunchest defenders of the honor of our country, both in time of peace as well as in war.

Very truly,
GEO. BELL, JR.,
Major-General, U. S. A.

From Governor Lowden the division received many words of praise. The following letter was received by General Martin after the division had reached France:

STATE OF ILLINOIS
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

Springfield, Sept. 10, 1918.

Dear General:

I am just in receipt of your letter of September 6. I quite understand the situation. I have read the inspector's report and congratulate you heartily upon the condition of the Black Hawk Division.

I think you know, and I hope your command may know, that I shall follow this division across the seas and to the battle fronts with the greatest interest. I have seen enough of this division to know that it will bring new honor and glory to the three states from which it is principally recruited.

Good luck to you, your officers and men!

Always sincerely yours,
FRANK O. LOWDEN.

General C. H. Martin,
Headquarters 86th Division, U. S. Army,
Camp Mills, Long Island, New York.

The following letter from the governor was received after the organization of the Eighty-sixth Association.

STATE OF ILLINOIS

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR

Springfield, August 13, 1919.

My dear Mr. Setliffe:

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 4. I am delighted to learn that the Black Hawk Division has formed an association to keep alive the memories of their great service to their country during the war. I had the honor several times to visit your division and conceived the very highest regards for its officers and men. It was a superb organization, and I am sure that its perpetuation means further service, though perhaps in a different manner, to our country. For we have great problems of peace to solve which the members of your association can help to solve rightly.

With all good wishes, believe me

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK O. LOWDEN.

Mr. William Q. Setliffe,
Secretary, Eighty-sixth Division Association.

Upon the formation of the association the following message was received from the division's overseas commander:

August 10, 1919.

Comrades of the Eighty-sixth Division:

It affords me the greatest pleasure again to address you; to send a word of greeting and comradeship to the strong, upstanding fellows who served in our division and who are now happily banding themselves together to preserve the priceless memories and traditions of that splendid service. In these trying times let us hope that the great lessons in obedience, fortitude, loyalty and patriotism, taught in the National Army, may continue to abide with us. May the spirit of service and unselfishness, which so highly distinguished the Eighty-sixth Division, inspire us all to the full performance of our duty always. God bless you one and all.

Cordially and sincerely,

C. H. MARTIN.

THE 332ND FIELD ARTILLERY HOMEWARD BOUND
On the docks at Pavillac, ready to board the U. S. S. Antigone.

While from the East came the following from that beloved leader from whom we shall never hear again:

HEADQUARTERS EASTERN DEPARTMENT

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL

Governors Island, N. Y., August 16, 1919.

Captain W. Q. Setliffe,
Eighty-sixth Division Association.

Dear Captain Setliffe:

I have your letter of July 29th and the enclosures therewith, informing me that the Eighty-sixth Division Association has been organized and asking me to accept the honorary presidency of the association.

As the organizer and first commander of the Eighty-sixth Division, no one had more confidence in it or has better knowledge of and entertains greater pride in its wonderful spirit and efficiency. The record as made at Camp Grant, the record as made en route to the other side as evidenced by the report of inspectors while at Camp Mills awaiting embarkation, copies of said reports enclosed herewith, and what we all know it could and would have done had it been kept together on the other side and fought as a unit, cause me pleasure in the belief that the spirit of that division will be perpetuated for all time by the association just formed.

The purposes of the association as set forth in your circular are lofty and sufficient. They quicken my hope and strengthen my prayer for its fullest success.

Under Major Albert Sprague and the other good fellows whose names I note as officers, the association is in good hands and cannot fail to succeed.

Nothing can better set forth the purposes of the association than the second paragraph of your letter to me, which follows:

"We recognize today in this division a spirit that is more than discipline, more than a morale, more than esprit de corps; it is an overhanging spirit, realized not only among ourselves, but by casual visitors who came to us and speak of it with great appreciation. While this spirit invokes our just pride in our achievements, our just pride in the harmonious workings of line and staff, it is not a spirit of boastfulness. It is perhaps best described as a spirit of unselfishness, one to help our neighbors, a touch of that human kindness which makes all the world akin. It is an intangible but not the less masterful power, that spirit of the Eighty-sixth Division, and it is the hope that the Eighty-sixth Division Association will foster and keep alive the pleasant memories through the years we have before us."

Stay with that spirit and there need be no fear of the result.

I will, of course, be highly honored by, and will accept, the honorary presidency of the association.

I sincerely hope that every officer and enlisted man who ever belonged to the Eighty-sixth Division and who was honorably separated therefrom may become a member of the association.

With warm personal regards to you all and with the hope that God's blessings may constantly and forever attend you all,

Faithfully yours,

T. H. BARRY,
Major-General, U. S. A.

THE 332ND ARRIVING AT NEWPORT NEWS, FEBRUARY 15, 1919

OFFICERS OF THE 333RD FIELD ARTILLERY
On board the Siboney, on its arrival in the United States.

From the Chicago newspaper comment on the division is taken the following editorial from the Chicago Evening American:

LAST OF THE BLACK HAWKS, LOST LEGION OF A. E. F., ARE HOME

The last of the Black Hawks—the lost legion of the A. E. F.—at last are coming home.

Four hundred and fifty of the finest fighting men that ever shouldered an Enfield—members of the former 343rd, and 344th Infantry regiments of the old Eighty-sixth Division—have arrived at Camp Grant, and the rest of the fighting men of the fighting division that never fought are on their way.

The home-coming of these men was an inglorious one. Their trains slipped through Chicago in the middle of the night.

There were no brass bands, no cheering thousands to greet them.

But they are no less heroes than many of their more fortunate brothers who were given the chance—the chance the Black Hawks were willing to give their lives to get—to go over the top and do their part by force of arms to bring glorious victory to history's most glorious cause.

There probably was no division in the American army more fit than the Black Hawks when they sailed last September.

The commanding officer of the port of debarkation at Liverpool told Major General Charles H. Martin that he had never seen a cleaner cut lot of men than this division.

The Eighty-sixth was designated as one of the six American divisions which, with thirty French divisions were to smash through Bavaria and ROLL THE GERMANS BACK TO BERLIN.

They were to share in the glory of the greatest victory of all time.

But Fate had set for them a tragic destiny.

Arriving at Le Mans—ONLY ONE DAY FROM THE FRONT—on the afternoon of the 11th of November, they received the news of the signing of the armistice—the news that thrilled all the world except the Black Hawks.

Next day the division was broken up. The artillery came home and with it the records of the Eighty-sixth in the hands of the adjutants of the four infantry regiments—the 341st, 342nd, 343rd, and 344th—and the first sergeant of each company.

Thus the division lost even its name and the remaining doughboys were formed into provisional regiments and scattered about the embarkation center over a radius of some thirty kilometers.

Said The Chicago Herald and Examiner, upon the arrival of the news on November 24, 1918, that the division had been broken up:

“Chicago always will maintain that the best division General Pershing had under him was sent home without ever firing a gun—the Eighty-sixth, the famous Black Hawk, made up of men from northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. Everybody who ever saw the division—and this included Allied officers as well as West Pointers—agreed that no better trained body of men was ever got together.

BLACK HAWK POST, NO. 107, AMERICAN LEGION

BY JOSEPH BURKE, COMMANDER

When the organization of the American Legion was undertaken it was only natural that those who had been in the Eighty-sixth Division should think of forming a post to be composed largely of men who had been in that division. So Black Hawk Post No. 107 came into existence. As demobilization proceeded the men had begun to come in contact with one another in civil life. Of course the usual topic of conversation was concerning the whereabouts of "buddies." This led to the calling of a meeting by Joseph Burke, formerly a lieutenant in Company K, 344th Infantry. The meeting was followed by several more in the summer of 1919. Finally it was decided to seek a charter in the legion, and the name Black Hawk was decided on by unanimous vote. There were fifteen signatures on the application for the charter, which was sent to legion headquarters in Chicago in August. Mr. Burke was chosen temporary chairman, and Fred Haller temporary secretary.

While the charter application was pending recruiting for members continued. At this early period the legion was not well known among the men, and the securing of members was not an easy matter. During the formative period William L. Allison, a major in the 344th Infantry, gave great help by his encouragement. In the meantime the Eighty-sixth Division Association had been formed. William Q. Setliffe, its secretary, became interested in the post, and did splendid work in securing members. At first state convention, held in October, at Peoria, Mr. Setliffe and William T. Thompson represented Black Hawk Post as delegates.

Finally the time came when there were enough members to launch the post officially, and a call was issued for an election of officers. At the first meeting, held in the Oxford Building, Chicago, on November 6, 1919, the following were elected:

Commander—Joseph Burke.

Vice-Commander—Leonard Rosin.

Adjutant—William Q. Setliffe.

Chairman of Publicity Committee—Jack Little.

Thereafter meetings were held on the first and third Thursdays of each month at 8:00 p. m. in Room 1121, County Building, Chicago. Additional officers were elected on January 18, 1920, as follows:

Sergeant-at-arms—Edward H. Johnson.

Executive Committee—Jack Little, Emory A. Champlin, Charles L. Collette, Charles C. Le Forge, John H. Smale, Waldo M. Allen and John D. Reaton.

Chairman of Americanization Committee—R. F. Kelker.

Medical Officer—Dr. John S. Sweeney.

Insurance Officer—Irvin O. Vanderburg.

Vocational Officer—John H. Smale.

At this meeting also the adjutant, William Q. Setliffe, resigned, because of being required to remain out of town a good deal of the time as an organizer for the legion. It was decided to hold an election at the following meeting. In the interim Richard Dale acted as adjutant, and at the meeting of February 5th Emory A. Champlin was elected to the position. Headquarters of the post were moved to Room 410, Chamber of Commerce Building. It was at that time that Frank Bernier Post No. 353 decided to affiliate.

Black Hawk Post so far has upheld the traditions of the splendid division for which it is named. It is expected to be one of the largest posts in the legion. All former service men are welcome to join, but a particular invitation has been extended to those who were at any time during the war at Camp Grant. The post is doing much to aid the men. A case in point is the effort being made to bring the releases and restorations to good standing of Corporal Anton Nicholas, formerly of the 342nd Infantry, who is now serving a twenty-year sentence at Ft. Leavenworth, which the Black Hawk post believes, after a thorough investigation, should not have been imposed. The post is also striving to obtain the passage through Congress of the bill backed by the national officers of the legion to give each former service man $50 for each month's service as additional pay.

Black Hawk Post stands for everything that is good in American life. Its desire is to serve the republic and in so doing to serve those who held pay the Republic.

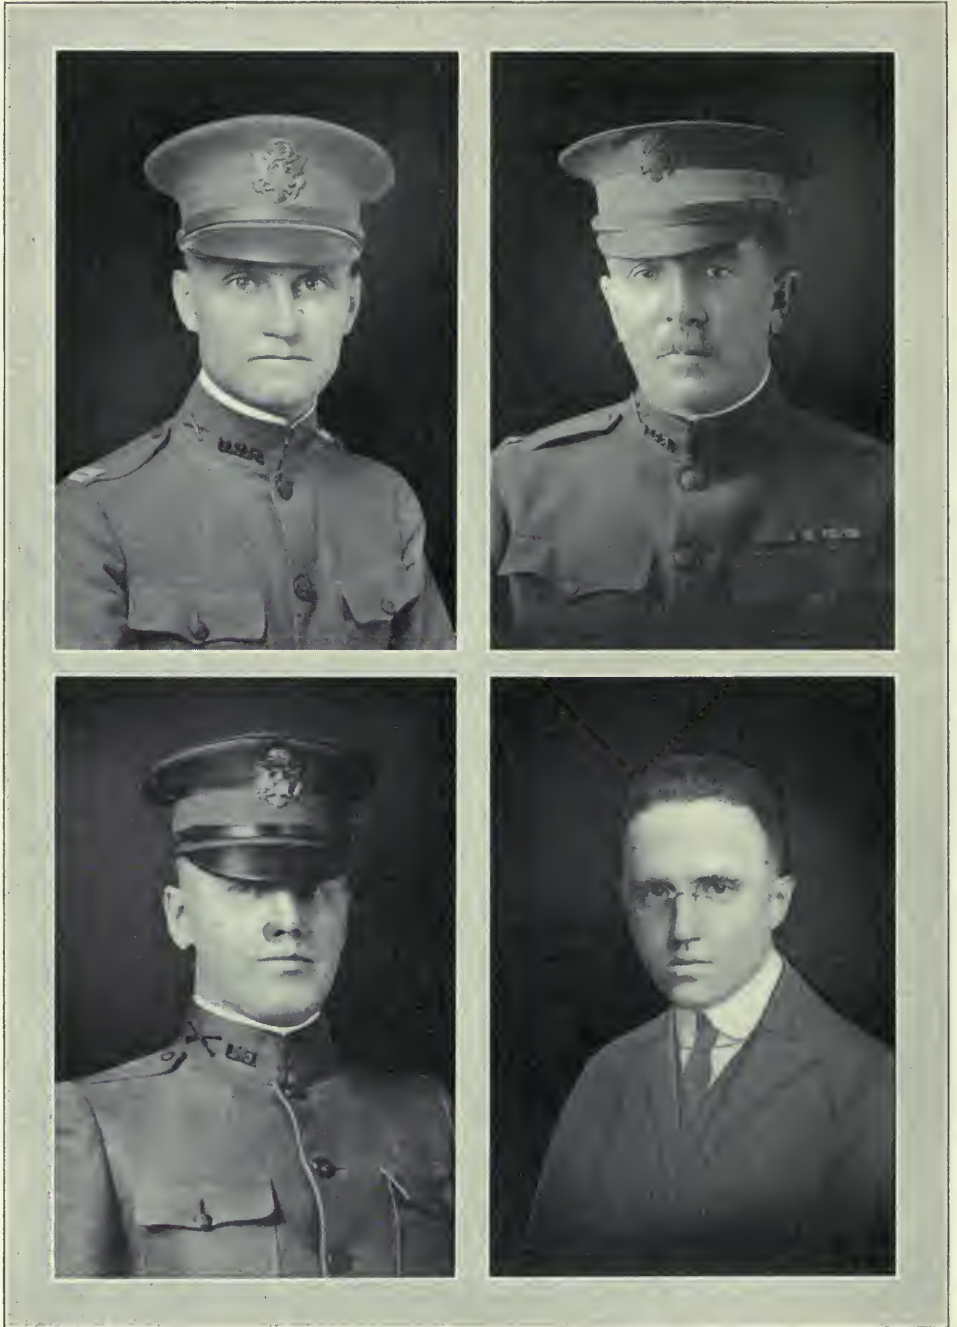

AT MONFORT-LE-RETROU

The Roster of the Eighty-sixth Division

The problem of preparing a roster of the Eighty-sixth Division was perhaps the most difficult one which the author of this book had to face. So many thousand men served with the division at one time or another—so many thousand men felt that they belonged to the Eighty-sixth Division—yet the permanent records of the War Department were in such form that it was impossible to include in the rosters the name of every man who served with the division. It was therefore decided that the best plan was to use as rosters the sailing or passenger lists of the various units. For surely if the division ever existed as a unit, it was at the time of sailing for France. No disrespect is intended to the men who left the Eighty-sixth for other organizations. Their names are inscribed on the rolls of the Thirty-third Division, Eighty-ninth Division, and the other units with which they fought. The men who sailed as members of the Eighty-sixth have only envy for those who reached France in time to take part in the actual fighting.

No attempt has been made to rearrange these passenger lists. They appear here exactly as they were copied from the official files of the War Department. For this reason officers and men who went overseas in the advance billeting and embarkation units are listed under those units rather than with the regiments to which they belonged.

In order to save space, certain abbreviations and omissions were necessary. Unless otherwise stated, all men listed were privates; first class privates have the numeral (1) in parentheses after their names. Similarly, first class sergeants have the numeral after their names. All ranks of officers are indicated by abbreviations, e.g., maj.gen. for major general, col. for colonel, capt. for captain, etc. When no state is given in the address following any name, Illinois should be understood.
