INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

THE desirability of publishing a Town History having been in the minds of the older inhabitants for several years, and after the destruction of the Town Records by fire in 1862, the propriety, and even the necessity, of such a work becoming more apparent, in 1864 the North Brookfield Historical Society was formed, with Hon. Charles Adams, Jr., as Corresponding Secretary and Librarian. This organization resulted in the collection of considerable material for a Town History.

After the proclamation of President Grant, calling upon cities and towns to hold centennial celebrations on the Fourth of July, 1876, and advising that historical addresses be delivered on that day, and put into print for preservation, the people of North Brookfield, preparatory to such a celebration, raised, by numerous subscriptions, over five hundred dollars, and Rev. Christopher Cushing, D.D., a former clergyman of the town, delivered an historical address.

Soon after the celebration in 1876, Mr. Henry E. Waite, a native and former citizen of North Brookfield, began the publication in the "North Brookfield Journal," of a series of articles, containing personal memoirs, extracts from the records of Rev. Thomas Snell, D.D., of marriages and deaths from 1797 to 1852, copies of old wills, deeds, etc. These articles, as well as the address of Dr. Cushing, further awakened and deepened the interest in a Town History, and on May 5, 1879, the town appointed a Committee on Town History, consisting of, —

Hon. CHARLES ADAMS, Jr., Hon. FREEMAN WALKER, HIRAM KNIGHT, THEODORE C. BATES, CHARLES E. JENKS.

This Committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. Adams, prepared and sent to each family in town, blank schedules of questions relating to family, personal and local history, and especially to family genealogy; and correspondence was opened by Mr. Adams with many former citizens and others who might be expected to possess old documents and papers which would supply important information.

In 1882, after due inquiry and personal interviews, the Committee voted unanimously to employ Rev. J. H. Temple of Framingham to write the history. In 1884, the impossibility of writing a complete history of North Brookfield, without including early events which were located upon the territory of Brookfield and West Brookfield, so impressed itself upon the Committee and the Historian, that, by vote of the town, a formal invitation was extended to each of these towns to unite with us in the preparation and publication of a joint history of all the Brookfields. But such were the obstacles in the way of our sister towns, that they did not assume the undertaking with us; and it was decided to go on with the preparation of the History of North Brookfield, including therein much of the early history of the ancient town of Brookfield, which has been divided into the three now existing towns of Brookfield, North Brookfield, and West Brookfield.

During the progress of the work, the following changes have taken place in the membership of the History Committee. After Mr. Adams had substantially completed the preparation of the genealogical part of the work, which had been his specialty, he tendered his resignation, which, however, the town declined to accept. From April, 1882, Mr. Walker acted as chairman, until his decease in 1883; in April, 1884, Henry W. King was chosen a member in Mr. Walker's stead, and Theodore C. Bates was made chairman; and in April, 1885, Timothy M. Duncan and Nat H. Foster were added to the Committee.

Too much credit cannot be accorded to Mr. Adams for the immense amount of work done by him, and all without compensation. Nor should we fail to recognize the very valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Walker, both members of the original Committee, who have passed away during the progress of the work.

The Committee believe they secured the best man they could have found, in the Rev. J. H. Temple, who has written and edited the history; and we feel sure that his years of faithful labor will be duly appreciated.

Nor would we fail to call attention to and acknowledge the great assistance given to the Committee, from the beginning of their labors, by Mr. Henry E. Waite, who has done a great deal of work in a most thorough manner, refusing any compensation whatever for his most efficient services.

The whole work has now been completed, having proved an undertaking of no small magnitude, considered either as to the labor performed, or the amount of money so cheerfully granted by the town; and the result is herewith submitted to our own citizens, and the public generally, in the belief, on our part, that the work has been thoroughly and carefully done.

PREFACE.

THE old township of Brookfield, of which the territory now the town of North Brookfield was for more than a century a constituent part, was the earliest organized settlement in the neighborhood, and was by far the most important town in the county of Worcester, when the new county was incorporated in 1731, and so continued in valuation up to 1800, and in population up to 1810. The present threefold or fourfold division of territory then constituted a unit. The men who laid the first foundations wrought for the whole. The ancestors of the families now living in Warren and the three Brookfields shared in common the labors, and privations, and sufferings, and warfare of 100 years: and a true account of the old town is a true account of all the parts that composed it, up to the date of a formal division.

In accordance with this view of the matter, and to elucidate the real and relative value of earlier as well as later historical facts, and set them in their true order of sequence, all available materials have been gathered that in any way related to the original township, covering the period from the date of the earliest settlement up to the close of the Revolutionary War. North Brookfield separated from the old town ecclesiastically in 1750, and educationally in 1756. And during the war-struggle of 1775-1783, it took upon itself, with the tacit consent of the mother town, the burden of paying its military expenses and furnishing its quotas of soldiers for the army. And at that date the North Precinct became de facto, a town, except as to the assessment of general taxes and the maintaining of roads and bridges.

The work of the historian was thus marked out for him, both in its plan and limits, by the course of events to be recorded and explained; and he has followed what appeared to him to be a natural order of growth, and the only logical method.

The headings of successive chapters indicate with sufficient clearness, whether the contents relate to the town of Brookfield, or to the Second Precinct and North Brookfield.

The book is composed largely of original records and official documents, — many of them now first put in print. These papers have been carefully copied verbatim et literatim, from the volumes preserved in the Massachusetts State Archives, the Connecticut State Archives, the Registries of Hampshire, Worcester and Hampden counties, the Town, Parish and Church Records, and memoirs in possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society, the American Antiquarian Society, and the New England Historic Genealogical Society.

In company with Mr. Jenks, Mr. Adams, Mr. Waite, and Mr. Knight, the historian made a personal exploration of the entire tract embraced in the original township of eight miles square, with a view to determine important matters relating to topography, boundaries, mill-seats, and early land grants. In company with experts, he traversed this and the adjacent territory of 20 miles in extent, in order to fix upon the points occupied by Indian villages, and trace Indian trails and early English bridle-paths, referred to by Pynchon, Eliot and Gookin. The result was satisfactory, beyond his sanguine hopes, both in confirming the accuracy of those early writers, and in the discovery of numerous aboriginal "remains" of fort-sites, store towns and clusters of wigwams, — some of which are mentioned in the early histories, but have not before been identified, — and many of which were previously unknown to either history or tradition. All these gathered materials have been wrought into the book now offered to the public.

Several "missing links" in Indian and English history have been discovered, and put in their proper places. As a rule, events are arranged in chronological order, — except where the duplicate character of the narrative required an overlapping in the chapters.

The labor of the historian has been greatly increased, and results are rendered in a measure unsatisfactory, by the loss of the Records of the Committee and town clerk for the period covered by the First Settlement; the fragmentary state of the first book of Brookfield Records; and the total destruction by fire, Oct. 14, 1862, of North Brookfield Town Records.

The committee of publication have cordially seconded every proposed plan of investigation, and aided personally in the collection of facts. Mr. Henry E. Waite has generously given his time and labor in making full copies of the earliest Land Grants, covering the original township;

Town Records ; deeds and wills ; and other official documents. His aid, in many ways, has been invaluable.

No stone has been left unturned, that showed indications of a treasure hidden beneath.

Special attention is called to the elaborate "Plan of Early Land Grants" in North Brookfield, with full index and explanations, prepared by Charles E. Jenks, Esq., a member of the committee. It supplements Chapter IV., and is invaluable for historical reference, and as a guide in tracing real estate titles.

It is a coincidence of some interest, that this History is written in the Bi-centennial year of the town's life — the Permanent Settlement having been made in 1686.

CHAPTER I.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION.

TOPOGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE TERRITORY INCLUDED IN THE ORIGINAL BROOKFIELD GRANT.—OBJECTS OF SPECIAL INTEREST.—MILL-SEATS.—EARLY ROADS.—TRAINING-FIELD.—COMMON.—THE MILE-SQUARE, ETC.

THE territory that comprised the old town of Brookfield originally belonged to Hampshire County, and so remained till 1731, when it was transferred to the county of Worcester, then incorporated. It is situated twenty-five miles east of the Connecticut River, and eighteen miles west of Worcester.

As laid out and incorporated in 1673, it contained an area of six miles square, and was bounded on all sides by wilderness. As laid out by John Chandler in 1701, and re-surveyed by Timothy Dwight and confirmed by Act of the General Court, Dec. 3, 1719,¹ the township embraced an area of eight miles square, and was surrounded by unnamed and unsettled lands. The addition of one mile in width was made on each of the four sides; but, as laid out, the plot was not a perfect square, the east line only measuring exactly eight miles, i.e., 2,560 rods. The north line measured 2,450 rods; the south line, 2,520 rods; while the west line was 2,720 rods, i.e., 160 rods more than eight miles.

The bounds remained unaltered till 1717, when five hundred acres "equivalent land" was annexed to the south side, to compensate the town for Col. Pynchon's five hundred acres previously laid out on Coy's Hill. This forms the rectangular piece jutting into Sturbridge. Jan. 16, 1741-42, the south-westerly corner of the township, two miles and three-quarters wide at the south end, and a mile and a half wide at the north end, by five miles and three-quarters in length, was set off to form in part the town of Western, now Warren. In 1751 seven families with their farms were set off to New Braintree. In 1823 a strip of land at the north-west corner of the town, with the inhabitants, was annexed to Ware.

In 1793, Whitney, in his "History of Worcester County," says, "Brookfield is the third town in age, and the first as to its wealth and numbers, in the county, containing, when the census was taken [in 1791], 438 dwelling-houses and 3,100 inhabitants." Worcester then had 2,100 inhabitants.

Feb. 28, 1812, about one-third of the township, comprising the north-east corner, was set off and incorporated as the town of North Brookfield.

March 3, 1848, the westerly part of the remaining territory was incorporated into a distinct town by the name of West Brookfield.

These partitions left the south-easterly part of the old township, containing 16,194 acres, and including the village of East Brookfield, to wear the historic and time-honored name of Brookfield.

Contrary to the prevalent belief, the country, at the time of the settlement of Brookfield, was practically bare of the primeval forests. The annual burnings by the Indians destroyed the old growth, and kept the uplands free from a new growth of sprouts; so that only the wet swamps and protected places had heavy timber. Men on horseback went where they pleased, only shunning swamps and streams. From the top of Coy's Hill and other heights, cattle could be seen for a distance of three miles, and deer and wild turkeys a mile away.

The following topographical description, unless otherwise specified, applies to the original township of eight miles square:—

STREAMS AND MILL-SEATS. Quabaug River.—This distinguishing feature of the town is formed by the union of two streams: the westerly branch, called Five-mile River, rises in the east part of Oakham, and runs in a southerly course; the easterly branch, called Seven-mile River, rises in the south-west part of Rutland, crosses into Oakham, and runs through the west-central part of Spencer, nearly parallel with the other branch. These unite at East Brookfield Village, and then flow into the north-east corner of Quabaug Pond. A curious circumstance is, that the river approaches in a pretty direct line to the very bank of the pond; then turns at nearly a right angle, and runs parallel with the shore for twenty or thirty rods, leaving only a narrow ridge; then diverges so as to form a small island; then makes a slight circuit, and cuts a channel into the pond. A country road is laid over this narrow ridge for quite half a mile, exposed, of course, to an overflow during the spring and fall freshets. A row of large pines and swamp-oaks formerly grew along the shore, and partially protected the road-bed; but these are mostly dead from bruises by ice, and the ridge is gradually wasting away. The river emerges from the pond at its westerly end, and flows in a general north-westerly direction to a point near Wekabaug Pond, where it turns at a sharp angle, and takes a south-westerly course, and, passing through Warren Village and on the easterly and southerly sides of Palmer, unites with Ware River at the village of Three Rivers, where the stream takes the name of Chickopee River, and enters the Connecticut in the town of Chickopee. The current through the original Brookfield township is very sluggish, the fall not exceeding three feet in the distance of six miles. The average width of the stream is about six rods; and the adjacent meadows, which are near a half-mile wide, are raised but little above the water-level.

Before the putting-in of dams, this river abounded in shad and salmon. As late as 1736 an article in the town-warrant was, "To consider what may properly be done to make a way in the river, so that shad and alewives may go up to the ponds to cast their spawn." In 1761 the proprietors of the meadows on Quabaug River, in a petition to the General Court, say, "The waters are stopped in their natural course by certain Bars in the same, which so obstruct the flow that the low lands on the same are rendered unprofitable, and in danger of becoming a standing water, to the public damage," and ask that "Commissioners of Sewers" may be appointed "to effect the removal of the obstructions aforesaid." But nothing effectual resulted.

Fordways.—The fording-place earliest named in the records was where the old Springfield path crossed the river where is now the bridge at West Brookfield Village.

The fordway at Mason's Point became an important factor in agricultural pursuits after the re-settlement of the town, and a bridge was built here soon after 1715.

What was known as the "Crabtree ford" was at the small rapids, a half-mile below the mouth of Dean's Brook. This was the Indians' crossing-place on their west trail from Old Quabaug Fort to Wekabaug.

There was also a fording-place where Cutler's bridge now is in Warren.

These fordways, and the Indian paths leading to them, decided the course of the early highways.

The Boat.—In low water, people readily crossed over the fords on horseback; but, in high water, a boat was required. This was owned and controlled by the town. March 14, 1726, the town "Voted, That Ephraim Hayward (who then lived at Warren Village) do bring up the boat to the bridge at Mason's Point."

The mill-seats on Five-mile River in Brookfield are, —

1. The falls at the north-east corner of the town, where Thomas Ball from Framingham bought Jan. 4, 1753, sixty acres on the Spencer side, and built saw and grist mills, which his widow sold in 1761 to Isaac Johnson of Southborough; and the privilege has been called Johnson's

Pond after him. He died in 1769. The mills were kept in use for many years, but the pond is now a reservoir.

2. About a mile below, in 1782, Jonathan and Nicholas Jenks leased land and the water-privilege of Moses Ayres, and built a dam, and put in a forge, or iron-works. Daniel and Wheat Gilbert joined the enterprise, and built a second fireplace. Dec. 4, 1788, the Gilberts took one fire, and the Jenks the other, and divided the business of washing and smelting ore, etc. The works were carried on about twenty years, but were not profitable.

3. A short distance below, Thomas Bartlett erected saw and grist mills.

4. The next privilege was at the head of the present pond, where John Woolcott put in a saw-mill in 1718, and for which the town made him a special grant of forty acres of upland.

5. One-third of a mile below, Patterson & Hair set up a fulling-mill. "Dec. 5, 1720, granted to John Patterson and William Hair a stream for a fulling-mill, they setting up the trade of a fuller and dressing off cloth within eighteen months, the stream to be theirs so long as they maintain said trade, and no longer."

6. Roger Stevens put in a fulling-mill and grist-mill a short distance below Patterson & Hair's.

7. In later times, Jeduthan Stevens built a grist-mill at the East Brookfield privilege; and afterwards a company operated a blast-furnace and machine-shop. It is now occupied as a woolen and shoddy mill.

The only privilege on Seven-mile River in this town is where John Hamilton, jun., built a saw-mill as early as 1725; now occupied by George E. Forbes as a factory and wheel-shop.

The first mill-seat on Quabaug River is at Warren Village, known as the "Hayward privilege." George Hayward built saw and grist mills here about 1720 (now grist-mill and cotton-factory). Ephraim Hayward bought the privilege of his father George; and, having secured the land for some distance below, built a race-way, and in 1727 sold three-fourths of the power to Tilly Mirick, sen., of Brookfield, Samuel Copley and Asaph Leavitt of Suffield "for setting up iron-works." These works, known as the "Old Furnace," stood about thirty rods below the dam.

The second privilege in Warren was occupied early as a grist-mill, and distillery.

The affluents of Quabaug River, coming from the north, are: Moore's Brook, which has three distinct branches, the central one rising near North Brookfield Village. John Woolcott built a corn-mill on the east branch, which comes from Perry Pond, before 1717.

Hovey's Brook, called later Stone's Brook, runs north and west of Brookfield Village, crossing the old stage-road just west of the cemetery.

Coy's Brook rises in North Brookfield, and by a circuitous course, enters the river near West Brookfield Village. The meadows on this brook were an important factor in our early history. William Ayres built a saw-mill at the foot of Matchuk Meadow in 1762. Afterwards a fulling-mill was put in.

Sucker Brook, originally called Great Brook, rises in the east central part of New Braintree, runs through a corner of North Brookfield, then into New Braintree again, through Ditch Meadow, around the north end of Whortleberry Hill, and into Wekabaug Pond, from which it emerges through the outlet known as Lashaway. On the eastern branch of Sucker Brook, which branch was called in the earliest records Mill Brook, and after 1707 Old Mill Brook, was situated the first grist-mill in Brookfield, erected by John Pynchon about 1667.¹ This mill was burnt by the Indians in 1675, re-built by Mr. Pynchon at the re-settlement of the town, and continued in use till his death in 1705. The privilege has been utilized in modern times in a variety of ways. The old dam remains.

The first saw-mill in Brookfield was built on Sucker Brook in 1709, at what is known as Malt-Mill bridge, within the present limits of New Braintree. A company, consisting of Thomas Barns and eight others of the principal townsmen, received "a grant of 40 acres, to be divided amongst them, for their encouragement to build a saw-mill, and they have liberty to cut all sorts of timber for the use of the mill in any parts of the precinct." — The Committee's Records.

This privilege was last used for a malt-mill, but is now abandoned.

The privilege next above was the falls at Wait's Corner, which at one period became famous. The land hereabouts, including the falls, came into the hands of Nathan Barker of Andover, who sold Nov. 3, 1757, to Nathaniel Wait of Sutton, a clothier, who put in a fulling-mill, and later built a saw-mill. In 1790 Nathaniel Wait sold one-half the estate to Joseph Wait, clothier, who afterwards became sole owner. In 1815 the privilege was bought by the "North Brookfield Woolen Manufacturing Company" (Amos Bond, Elisha Hammond, et als.), who started the manufacture of fine broadcloths, cassimeres, etc. The property next passed into the hands of Wait, Prouty, & Co., who made frocking, cassimere, etc. Later the firm was Wait & Prouty. Since their day the power has been used as a spoke-mill and saw-mill.

The privilege above, towards New Braintree, was bought April 24, 1749, of William Ayres by Daniel Matthews, jun., of Southborough, a mill-wright, who put in a saw-mill. It appears to have been bought in 1759 by Jonathan Wait, clothier, of Sutton, who, either alone or in company with Daniel Matthews and Nathaniel Wait, put in a fulling-mill and corn-mill. Daniel Matthews, in 1794, purchased the entire property. In 1812 Elisha Matthews and Deacon James Woods built (or re-built) a dam near the New Braintree line, erected a factory, and began the manufacture of woolen goods. After several years the mill passed into the hands of Robert Lawton and Seth B. Manly, and then to Manly alone, and, while in his ownership, was burned.

Below the Malt-Mill bridge, on this brook, are the Pepper mills, first used as a blacksmith's forge and trip-hammer, and later as grist and saw mills; and still lower down were Tyler's and Gilbert's saw-mills in West Brookfield. (It is erroneously stated in "Beers' Atlas," that the mill on the Gilbert privilege was "the first saw-mill erected in Worcester County.")

Next below Lashaway, is the New Mill Brook, now known as Ellis's Brook. It rises among the Ragged hills, and forms in part the boundary between West Brookfield and Warren. In 1707 or 1708 John Hayward, jun., had a grant of land for a pond, and built a grist-mill where the old Hadley Path (which ran from the Philip Goss, now Charles H. Fairbanks', place over the top of Coy's Hill) crossed the brook. The remains of the dam may now be seen near the house of Sexton Douglass (see chap. iv., under date 1710). This privilege was abandoned, and a mill built by the brother of John Hayward at Warren Village, as already noted.

Above this Hayward privilege, a saw-mill was built by old Jacob Kent, who sold in 1845 to William R. Thomas. A short distance higher up, a saw-mill was put in by Sylvester Thomas.

Below this Hayward privilege, where the great road crosses the brook, Nathan B. Ellis from East Medway set up a clothier's shop as early as 1790. Whitney, writing in 1793, says, "Ellis and Company carry on the clothier's business in all its branches. About 5,000 yards of cloth are annually dressed at these works. These men have obtained the art of coloring scarlet, which competent judges pronounce equal to any which is imported; an art which few in this Commonwealth have attained unto."

Cheney's Brook comes from Coy's Hill, and enters the river near the old west bound of Brookfield.

The affluents of Quabaug River from the south are: Mason's Brook (sometimes called by the early settlers "Mason's Kil," from an obsolete word signifying stream), which enters the river to the south of Brookfield Centre. A grist-mill was built on this stream by Jabez Upham as early as 1748. In 1768 Joshua Upham established on this privilege "one of the first woolen factories ever attempted in this country."

A considerable brook enters the river, opposite the mouth of Hovey's Brook.

Salmon Brook enters the river near the dividing line between Brookfield and West Brookfield.

Dean's Brook — the Indian Naltaug — rises in Bare-Knoll range, and enters the river in the east part of Warren. It formed the west boundary of the Quabaug lands, bought of the Indian chief Shattoockquis in 1665. A grist-mill was put in on this brook many years ago.

Wigwam Brook enters the river at Warren Village. It is an important landmark in the early grants and deeds. Formerly there was a powder-mill where is now Knowles's pump-works, and below was an extensive tannery.

Other streams in town, named in the early land-grants, or later deeds, are: Tuffit's Brook, near the south-west corner of the old township, which enters Quabaug River in Brimfield; Rattlesnake Brook, which ran into Ware River; Potepaug Brook, which ran south, and empties into the Quinebaug. Dr. Elisha Rice built a mill near the town line, on this stream, before 1762. Crotchet Brook was a branch of Mason's Brook. Capt. John's Brook was a small stream which entered the head of Wekabaug Pond from the north-west. The Colonel's Brook was a west branch of Coy's, running near Rooke's brick-yard. Matchuk Brook was an upper east branch of Coy's. Millet's Brook was an east branch of Coy's, just north of Slate Hill. Equies Brook was a west branch of Moore's. Mohawk Brook, in North Brookfield, ran between the two Mohawk hills, and into Sucker Brook. Horse-Pond Brook was the outlet of Horse Pond into Five-mile River. John Hinds, jun., built a mill on this stream as early as 1738; sold to his son Seth, who sold to Joseph Bartlett, who sold March 3, 1761, to Rufus Putnam. The small stream that enters Five-mile River, next south of Horse-Pond Brook, is called in the early grants Wigwam Brook. Great Brook, named in early deeds, runs into Quabaug Pond from the south-east. Joseph Hamilton built a saw-mill on the only privilege here about 1747.

PONDS. — Quabaug Pond lies in the east part of Brookfield, and covers five hundred and forty acres. It was a conspicuous object and factor in the early annals of the place, as will appear in subsequent chapters. South Pond, a hundred and eighty acres of which lie in Brookfield, is connected with Quabaug by a canal. In times of freshet, the water sets southward; in mid-summer, northward. Cranberry Pond of ten acres lies north-west of South Pond. North Pond was a natural basin on Five-mile River, where Thomas Ball put in his mill. Horse Pond is in the northerly part of North Brookfield. Perry Pond is in the south part of North Brookfield. It was named from John Perry, who located near it in 1701. Wekabaug Pond of three hundred acres lies near West Brookfield Village, and is an object of great beauty. At one time, large quantities of iron-ore were gathered from its bottom and shores. It will be often referred to in the chapter on "Indian Occupation," as also will Quabaug Pond.

SPRINGS. — "There are several springs, whose waters are sufficiently impregnated with iron to be highly useful in some diseases. The chalybeate springs in the South Parish, east of Quabaug Pond, have been a resort of invalids; and many are said to have been relieved by the use of the water" (Foot's Discourse).

SWAMPS AND MEADOWS. — Great Swamp lies north of Quabaug Pond. Equies Swamp was near the old Josiah Beamon place in (now) Warren. Great Meadow was the name applied to the mow-lands lying on the north side of Quabaug River. Matchuk Meadow, or Great Matchuk, was on Coy's Brook above the Ayres saw-mill; Little Matchuk was below the said mill. Cattail Meadow and Slate Hill Meadow were lower down on the same brook. Millet's Meadow was on Millet's Brook. Ditch Meadow was on Sucker Brook, so called from a ditch which was dug to turn the water from Sucker into Old Mill Brook, to furnish a summer supply for Pynchon's grist-mill. Potebaug Meadow was on the east side of Potebaug Brook, in the south part of the town.

BEAVER DAM. — Two of these curious structures are named in the early records: one was at the inlet into Wekabaug Pond of the little brook coming from the east, and which flooded a considerable tract of swamp; the other beaver dam was near the outlet of Horse Pond.

PLAINS. — What was known as The Plain covered the large part of West Brookfield Village site. Most of the early settlers had a tillage-lot here. It was the great "Planting Field" of the Indians, and the "Great Field" of the English, and was surrounded by a "common fence," in the making and repair of which all the owners had a proportionate share. As near as can be ascertained, the fence enclosed not less than ninety acres.

Quabaug Plain included the cultivable land lying on the northerly shore of Quabaug Pond. Pine Plain was near the John Woolcott place. Indian Plain was on the old Samuel Edmands place. Slate Hill Plain lay in North Brookfield, north of Slate Hill. This was the proposed site of the new meeting-house in 1747.

HILLS. — Foster's Hill is the modern name for what was originally called "The Town Plot," where Sergt. John Ayres and his co-planters pitched in 1665.

The Rocky Hills lie to the east of Foster's.

Wigwam Hill, in West Brookfield, is north of Foster's, between the upper branch of Coy's and Old Mill brooks.

Whortleberry Hill, also in West Brookfield, is between Old Mill and Sucker brooks.

Coy's Hill is north of Warren Village, partly in Warren and partly in West Brookfield.

The Ragged Hills, Great and Little, are to the north and north-east of Coy's.

Puutaug Hill is between Coy's and the west Ragged Hills.

Indian Hill, in the south-west corner of the old township, is partly in Brimfield.

Perilous Hill is south of the river, and west of Dean's Brook.

Bare-Knoll range is south of the head of Dean's Brook.

Long Hill is south of the river, in West Brookfield, near the Warren line.

Ashquoash, named in the Indian deed, must have been south of Long Hill, at the southerly point of West Brookfield.

There were two Pine Hills, one near Cranberry Pond and the other near Ditch Meadow.

High Rock is the name applied to a hill situated east of South Pond.

Teneriffe Hill is north-east of Quabaug Pond.

Fort Hill was where the East Brookfield railroad-station now is. The corporation removed it for filling the meadows.

The hills in North Brookfield are Slate Hill, at the south-westerly corner of the town; Buck Hill, west of Matchuk; Hogg Hill, south of the Lower Village; Tower Hill, north of the meeting-houses; Grass Hill, next north of Tower (now called Bell Hill); the two Mohawk Hills, near the north line of the town; Ball Hill, in the east part of the town, west of Five-mile River; Walnut Hill, by the Walnut-Grove Cemetery; Gibbs Hill, near the south line of the town, named from Thomas Gibbs, who built in 1714 on its western slope.

Other places and objects of note in our early annals are Mason's Point, the hard land that reaches the river opposite the mouth of Mason's Brook, where the causeway is built; Plum Gutter, south of the river, near Perilous Hill; The Skulls, on Ware River; the Stone House, a ragged pile of shelving rocks, on the road from West Brookfield to Ware; Warding Rock, to the north-east of Gilbert's Fort site; Whitefield Rock, near the top of Foster's Hill, from which Mr. Whitefield preached in October, 1740.

The Horse Shades are named in a grant made to Joseph Perry in 1710; probably were a clump of trees beside the highway, where the traveller could rest his horse.

The Mile Square was a tract of six hundred and forty acres, laid out in a body to eight of the heirs of Sergt. John Ayres, in 1714, eighty acres to each. It lay about a mile and a quarter south of the river. The north-east bound was a white oak that stood in what is now the angle of the West Brookfield and Warren line. The old Crawford and Shepherd farms adjoined the tract. The white oak, and the tract itself are often referred to in the early deeds.

The 800 Acres. — A tract known as the "800-Acre Farm" is often referred to in the records, but the original grant has not been found. It lay on the westerly side of Coy's Hill, and extended to near the west line of the town. The following grants show how it was disposed of: "March 25, 1768, granted to James Nichols one-third of 800 acres on Coy's Hill and Pautauge; also to Joseph Gilbert one-third of the 800 acres; and to Ezra Hamilton one-third of said 800 acres, the whole in common" (Book of Land Grants, 173).

Capt. Kellogg's 200 Acres. — A plot of two hundred acres of land was laid out to Capt. Joseph Kellogg of Fort Dummer, by virtue of a grant made to him by the great and General Court at their session, November, 1727, on the top of Coy's Hill, where the line of the west side of Brookfield Township crosses the road leading from Hadley to Boston. Surveyed by T. Dwight. (The plan is in possession of Mrs. E. P. Cutter of Warren.)

The clay-pits are named in the early records. They were situated on Colonel's Brook, where is now Rooke's brick-yard. At first, the clay was used in laying up the stone chimneys and ovens: later, bricks were made and burnt as at present.

Training-field and Common. — Oct. 9, 1773, Solomon Banister deeds to Capt. Phineas Upham and others, committee of the town of Brookfield, a tract of five acres, bounded west on county road, north on Meeting-house Common, to be used and improved as a public training-field, always and at all times to be common and open, and not fenced or enclosed, nor used or improved for any private purpose, and never to be appropriated to any other use than that of a public common training-field, nor divided. A tasteful building, known as the Banister Public Library, has been erected on the south-easterly part of this field by Hon. William B. Banister, a collateral descendant of Solomon Banister, and presented to the town of Brookfield. "The Mall" lies directly north of the training-field.

The Common in West Brookfield. — "Nov. 7, 1791, David Hitchcock of Brookfield grants and quitclaims to the First Parish in Brookfield a certain tract of land in said parish containing three acres, more or less, to be held by said parish in its corporate capacity forever; provided said tract shall never be sold to any individual or individuals, but shall always remain open as a common for public use."

Same date, Dwight Foster quitclaimed all right and demand in three and a quarter acres of land, described as above.

The Merriam Library Building in West Brookfield, tasteful and well arranged for its uses, was erected, and given to the town, by Charles Merriam of Springfield, a native of West Brookfield.

AT the date of the opening of our narrative, 1647, the only English settlement in Western Massachusetts was at Springfield, where a plantation was begun in 1636. The nearest towns towards the Bay were Lancaster (1643), Concord (1635), Sudbury (1637). Except these isolated spots, the broad region now comprising Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin, Worcester, and most of Middlesex counties, was wilderness, inhabited by Indian tribes, and crossed by Indian trails and one or two English bridle-paths. The wet swamps were heavily wooded, and impenetrable: the dry uplands, having been burnt over by the fires set by the Indians in the late autumn of each year, were covered with a sparse growth of old timber, without underbrush; so that the first explorers could cross the country on horseback, wherever the way was not obstructed by miry swamps and large streams. Both the Indian trails and the early English paths followed the "divides," and crossed the streams at natural fordways.

When the English came to New England, they found the country parcelled out by different native tribes or clans, which claimed ownership of particular tracts of territory. These claimed domains varied greatly in extent and productive capacity, while they had certain characteristics in common. Every such tribal possession contained three essentials of savage life; viz., a hunting-ground, a good fishing-place, and arable land for cornfields. These, with oak, walnut, and chestnut groves (which were often carefully protected from their annual burnings), supplied the natives with summer and winter food. The foot of the falls in the larger rivers was esteemed a kind of common property; and friendly tribes collected at these places in great numbers in the spring, for shad and salmon fishing, and a good time generally. After gorging themselves during the "run" of these fish, the surplus catch was dried in the smoke, and stored in their barns for future use. Early summer was often a time of scarcity with the improvident natives; and small fish, clams, ground-nuts, greens, and berries were depended on for daily supplies. But the warm weather did not require stimulating food; and the corn and beans, planted and tended by the squaws, began to fill in August sufficiently for boiling into "succotash," and for roasting on the coals. Corn and nuts furnished the supply for the fall; and rabbits, coons, deer, and the larger game made up the winter stores. Cloth made of bark or wild hemp, and the skins of fur-bearing animals, furnished the summer and winter clothing.

THE RIVER INDIANS.—The tribes dwelling in the Connecticut river valley within the Massachusetts limits, at this date, were the Agawams, who held both sides of the river from Enfield to the Holyoke range of hills, and sold Springfield to William Pynchon; the Waranokes, who lived on the Westfield river; the Naunotuks (Nonotuks, Norwottucks), who held the lands on both sides of the river, from Mount Holyoke and Tom to Sugar Loaf, and sold at a later date to the Northampton and Hadley settlers; the Pacomptucks, who owned the valley lands on the east side as far up as the mouth of Miller's river, and on the west side still higher, together with the valley of Deerfield river; the Squakheags, who occupied the territory now included in Northfield, Vernon, and Hinsdale, and the Miller's river valley. These River tribes had each on its own territory all the essentials of food, clothing, shelter, and defence, and so in time of peace led an independent life. In time of war they usually made common cause of the quarrel, and united in a sort of confederacy, of which the Pacomptuck, the more warlike and energetic of the clans, was the acknowledged head and leader. Of their numbers, Mr. Fudd, in his "History of Hadley," says, "When most numerous, they may be reckoned at ten or eleven hundred. Their numbers were considerably reduced before they left this part of the country, and did not perhaps exceed eight hundred in 1675."

THE QUABAUGS.—Next east of the Agawams were the Quabaugs, who held the territory which now comprises the towns of Sturbridge, Brimfield, Warren, the three Brookfields, and New Braintree. At an early, as well as a later, date, they occupied lands still further up the Menamesick (Ware) river. But the north and south limits of the tribe are not well defined.

THE NIPNETS.—To the east of the Quabaugs lay the possessions of the Nipnets or Nipmucks. What was known as the "Nipmuck Country," as described by Gookin and other writers of the time, took in the southern central part of Worcester county, from near the present State line as far north as Worcester city. The word Nipnet signifies "the fresh-water country;" and the natives dwelling at the ponds in Dudley, Webster, Douglas, Sutton, Oxford, Auburn, etc., were known as fresh-pond Indians, to distinguish them from the River tribes of the Connecticut basin, and the shore Indians of the seacoast. At a later date, the Nipnets claimed and sold territory extending some miles southward of the Massachusetts line.

THE NASHAWAYS lived north of the Nipnets, with headquarters in Lancaster. They are sometimes called the Washakums, from a large settlement of the tribe near the ponds of that name in Sterling, and sometimes called the Wachusets, from their strongholds in the mountain of that name in Princeton.

It has been customary, with most writers, to class all these tribes under the general name of Nipnets. Mr. Gookin gives countenance to such a classification. They certainly were all "fresh water" Indians. And there is not wanting evidence, that they were more or less nearly allied, either by blood, or by marriage, or by both. When a chief, or a common warrior of one clan committed an offence against an outside clan or the English, he would fly to another of these allied clans, and find protection; and, when the great uprising of Indians against the whites took place in 1675, all these tribes promptly united in a common cause. And it is not unlikely that this latter fact may have been a leading reason for classing them under the common name of Nipnets. But Mr. Gookin, in his "Historical Collections," enumerates "the Pokomtakukes, the Squakheags, the Quabaugs, the Nipnets, and the Nashaway or Washakim Indians," in a connection to show that he understood each to have a distinct tribal status. And it is certain that they never acknowledged allegiance to one local, resident head chieftain, either in time of peace or war. Eliot and Pynchon, as well as Gookin, speak of these several tribes as independent in their possessions and jurisdiction. And the Massachusetts authorities uniformly treat with each of them, as occasion requires, without consulting with the others. When the Pacomptucks, in 1657, made war upon the Mohegans, the English Commissioners sent an official message directly to Deerfield, without stopping to get the sanction of any sagamore in the Nipmuck Country.

The Quabaugs come into history as one of these distinct tribes, small in numbers, somewhat isolated in position, and living in scattered villages. Evidently they are not an aggressive people: the facts rather imply that they have the reputation of being inoffensive, — perhaps conscious of their inability to resent and redress wrongs suffered from their more warlike neighbors. But if this was true in earlier times, then the children were unlike the fathers; for, in the war of 1675, our Indians were noted as daring fighters.

And the singular circumstance appears at the outset of their introduction to public notice, that, having suffered injury from other Indians, they appeal for help, not to any of the neighboring clans, but to the Wampanoags, a powerful tribe living in the eastern part of the State. And the still more suggestive fact will by and by appear, that Massasoit, the renowned Wampanoag chieftain, in his old age came hither, and was for a time ruling sachem at Quabaug.

This tribe is first named in our official records in the year 1647. And no legends or traditions have been discovered, to throw light on their origin or earlier migrations. We have to take them as we find them; and we shall be content to set forth in order the somewhat fragmentary history of their tribal life for the ensuing twenty-eight years, till the grand overthrow which followed the death of King Philip.

NAME OF THE PLACE AND TRIBE. — It was a common rule with the English settlers to designate a native tribe by the name which said tribe gave to their principal seat or residence. But to the grievous perplexity of historians, this name-word is often spelled by the early scribes in a great variety of ways. This was partly due to carelessness in catching the word as spoken by the natives; partly to ignorance of the peculiar force of Indian syllabic sounds; and partly to the fact, that specific affixes and terminations to the generic word were used by the natives to indicate the different villages of the cluster occupied by them.

In the Indian language, the name of a place was descriptive of the distinguishing feature, or production, or use, or tradition of the location. The Indian was a keen observer; he noted characteristic sounds of water or air; he detected characteristic colors of soils, or rocks, or prominent objects; he saw and heard and marked whatever constituted the individuality of places and things, and gave them names accordingly. A knowledge of the Indian name-words would be a knowledge of descriptive geography as the native saw his immediate domains, or as his hills and valleys and streams stood related to his individual or tribal life.

There is little doubt that the name of our place, as pronounced by the Indians, was Squapauke, or Squabaug. It is a compound word, which signifies "red water-place," or "red pond," — so called from the reddish, iron-stained gravel which forms the bottom and shores of the several ponds in the cluster near which the native villages were built, and to which collectively the general name was applied. Some of the early variations in the spelling of this name are: Squabauge, Squabage, Squawboge, Schobauge. But the English writers more often omitted the sibilant, and wrote Quabauke, Quabaug, Quabaugue, Quaboag, Quoboag. The apostle Eliot wrote it (1649) Quobagud. In some official papers, dated 1661, the name stands indiscriminately Quabaconk, Quabacutt, and Quabauke. Rev. John Russell of Hadley writes (1675) Quababaug.

When our tribe first appears in authentic records, it was not holding any one central cite, to which the name was applied; nor did it own allegiance to one head chieftain. It was divided into several detached clans, living in scattered villages, each under its own sachem. These villages appear to have been located with special regard to good fishing-places at the outlets of the ponds, and conveniency of large and easily tilled planting-fields. Perhaps one of them was chosen for its good planting-ground, and strong position for a defensive fort. At that date, our river was a favorite resort of shad and salmon, which ran up into the ponds for the purpose of depositing their spawn. When ascending, these fish were caught with scoop-nets and spears, or shot with arrows; and, when descending, were taken in rudely constructed wiers. These wiers were simply stone walls built from opposite sides of the river, pointing down stream, till they nearly met each other. At this narrow opening a large cage was placed, formed of twigs fastened to hoops by strips of young elm or other tough bark. When caught in this cage, the frightened fish were easily captured. Some of these fishways remained in the river till within the memory of men now living.

Before giving a description of the several villages occupied by the Quabaugs, it may help the reader to get a clear idea of the Indian geography of the place, and show the relation of our tribe to the tribes living on the east and west, if we trace, somewhat minutely, the principal Trails or Paths by which the natives crossed the country, and which were followed by the early white explorers and settlers.

Indian Trails.—The inland trail in Massachusetts, of which we have the earliest account, is what was known as the "Old Connecticut Path." It ran from Cambridge, up the northerly bank of Charles river to Waltham Centre, thence to the north end of Cochituate pond in Framingham, thence south-westerly through South Framingham, Hopkinton, Grafton, Dudley, Woodstock, Conn., and so on to Hartford. This trail first comes into notice on this wise. In the fall of 1630, Gov. Winthrop's colony fell short of provisions. The hillsides of Woodstock were famous for their bountiful crops of Indian corn; and the old chief of the Wabbaquassets, hearing that the English at the Bay were in great want, and would pay a good price for corn, filled large sacks from his full granaries, and, with his son and other Indians, carried the heavy burdens on their backs to Boston, "when there was but one cellar in the place, and that near the Common." Their route was the one already described. And this Indian trading-expedition brought this path to the knowledge of the whites, who made it their way of travel to the Connecticut valley. John Oldham followed this trail in 1633, "lodging at Indian towns all the way." The pioneer settlers of Wethersfield went this way. Rev. Messrs. Hooker and Stone with their large company went this way, June, 1636. The path had now become so well defined, that they drove their cattle, and carried much household goods. "Mrs. Hooker was borne through the wilderness upon a horse-litter" (Trumbull, I. 55).

A well-defined trail from Mount Hope and the Narraganset country, known as the Providence Path, struck the Old Connecticut Path in or near Woodstock. Another trail, known as the "Nipmuck Path," came from Norwich to the same point. From here, a branch trail struck off to the north-west through Southbridge into Sturbridge, where it parted, one track going westerly past the lead mines, to Springfield; the other keeping a north-westerly course, and crossing the Quinebaug river near Fiskdale, into Brimfield, through the Capt. Abraham Charles farm, the Deacon Tarbell farm to the southerly slope of Indian hill, over the southerly slope of Hubbard's hill, and passing just north of "Steerage Rock," to the bend in Quabaug river near the mouth of Elbow brook, and so on to "the Falls" in Connecticut river, now Holyoke city. This northerly branch continued to be a well-known Indian trail till the time of King Philip's war, and was the white man's bridle-path and cartway till after the settlement of Brimfield in 1701.

Another early through trail is named by Winthrop (Journal, II. 325), under date, 1648: "This year a new way was found out to Connecticut by Nashaway which avoided much of the hill way." This road left the Old Connecticut Path in the town of Weston, and ran through Sudbury Centre and Stow to Lancaster (Nashaway), thence through Princeton, the south part of Barre, the north part of New Braintree, to Wekabaug pond in West Brookfield; and thence, crossing Quabaug river near the Milk Condensing Factory, it went to the W. A. Patrick place, and so through the south central part of Warren, entering Brimfield just north of Hubbard's Hill, and struck the southern trail (before described), east of Steerage Rock, and so continued to Springfield. A branch of this path ran from Lancaster through Holden to Quabaug pond in East Brookfield. From Weston to Lancaster, this was an English highway; but westerly from Lancaster it evidently followed old Indian trails. This continued to be an important line of travel, till the "Bay Path" was laid out in 1673. The laying-out of this new path—which so quickly became an important factor in our local history—is thus recorded: "At a county court holden at Charlestown, Dec. 23, 1673, John Stone, Sen., of Sudbury, John Woods of Marlborough, and Thomas Eams of Framingham, . . . were appointed and impowered to lay out an highway for the use of the country leading from the house of John Livermore in Watertown, to a Horse Bridge (then being) near the house of Daniel Stone, Jun., and thence the nearest and best way to Marlborough, and thence to Quabaug." This new path left the Old Connecticut Path at "Happy Hollow" in Wayland, and ran through North Framingham, Mar; borough, Worcester to Brookfield, where it parted, one branch following the old trail through Warren to Springfield, and the other leading through Ware and Belchertown to Hadley.

Besides these long through paths, there were numerous cross-trails and by-ways, which served the various exigencies of savage society, and inter-tribal wants and wars. For these early trails held the same relation to the native villages, as our established lines of travel do to our towns. They will come into prominent notice, when we speak of the settlement of Brookfield, and narrate the course of the Indian war-parties, and the English messengers and troops in 1675-6; and they will often serve to explain hostile movements and strategy, otherwise difficult to be understood.

The Quabaug Villages. It will be seen that the principal dwelling-places of our tribe were either directly upon, or within easy reach of one or other of these old trails. And while no one of these villages had claims to be regarded as the social or commercial metropolis, it is evident that the original seat of the tribe, from which the name is derived, was at the "red-colored ponds" in Brookfield, now known as Wekabaug, Quabaug, and South ponds.

Wekabaug, in West Brookfield. This was the site of the largest of the Quabaug Indian villages. The native word Wekapauke means "at the end of the pond," and is descriptive of the place, not of the water; i.e., it was the name given by the Indians to their wigwam site "at the end of the pond." The giving this name to the pond itself, by the English, was a misapplication of terms, very common in our present nomenclature, and grew out of an easily explained misapprehension — though it would be very embarrassing, if we had exact knowledge of the fitness and force of the Indian name-words. From contemporary accounts, and the condition of things existing here eighty years ago, as described by the then residents, and from the signs not yet obliterated, it appears that the main cluster of Indian wigwams was built on the bluff or high plain at the southerly end of and adjoining the pond. This was a dry spot, and sheltered from the north winds by a fringe of hemlocks and pines of large growth. The location met all the essential conditions of a permanent residence, and a large community. The handy Lashaway was a good fishing-place; the adjacent plain was unsurpassed as planting ground; the neighboring hills and swamps were full of game. And at their departure, the natives left in the soil hereabouts, abundant evidences of their long occupancy, and household appointments. The piles of fire-stones¹ indicated the wigwam sites, and bothered the settler's plow. Great quantities of domestic utensils, such as stone kettles, drinking-cups, gouges, pestles, axes and awls have been turned up, many of which are still preserved. Two steatite kettles, in perfect preservation, were found on the westerly part of the plain, by Gilbert F. Lincoln, which are now in the Amherst College cabinet. A still larger one, of peculiar form, more recently exposed by the plow (and slightly broken) is in possession of B. P. Aiken, on whose premises it was found. Some personal ornaments, and a few winged stones, known as ceremonial stones or ensigns, have been found here — one especially fine, and about five inches in length, is in possession of W. A. Blair. These peculiar relics may be significant of high official rank, or may have had a connection with mystic ceremonies and games, of which the Indians were passionately fond.

A notable wigwam site, connected with this Wekabaug village, lay to the south-east, about three-fourths of a mile, and just across the river. It occupied a spot about thirty rods east of the house of G. F. Lincoln. A cool, living spring supplied water. Large heaps of "chips" indicate that this was the workshop for making arrow and spear points, knives, piercers, etc., abundance of which were found in the soil. Many steatite cups, pieces of clay pottery, a well-finished pipe, and other utensils and ornaments have from time to time been unearthed here, a large and valuable collection of which, together with relics gathered from the pond site, and other places, is now in possession of David F. Lincoln. There is a well-preserved tradition that a wigwam was standing on this spot, and was occupied by an Indian family, as late as 1745.

Tradition locates the burial-place of this clan on the bluff at the north-easterly end of the pond; and a number of skeletons were plowed up here by the early settlers. But the spot is too far removed from the main village site, to answer the Indian's idea of conveniency for burying his dead. Probably these interments were made to meet some exigency, as of a battle. And such a conclusion is in keeping with the fact that the position of this bluff, with its steep slopes, points it out as well suited for a strong defensive fort. And that it was so used, is indicated by the still visible remains of several "barns" on the terrace at its south-easterly foot. These Indian barns or granaries — often mentioned in our descriptions of native village sites — were circular excavations in the ground, used for storing provisions, such as corn, nuts, and dried fish. The smaller ones were three to five feet in diameter by an equal depth; the larger were ten to fifteen feet in diameter by five to ten feet deep. In digging, the sides were left slightly con-on which their fire was built, and thus they were constantly ready for use. From repeated heating and cooling, they acquired the reddish, honey-combed appearance which makes it easy to distinguish them.

verging, and when the soil was tenacious, were not likely to cave in; but in a sandy soil, it was common to line the sides with a coating of clay mortar, which was hardened by artificial heat, and is now often found unbroken. These barns were commonly set in the sloping sides of a knoll or bank, to secure dryness, and the better to shed rain. A considerable number were placed close together, in order that they might be protected from bears and other enemies by a picket. When filled, they were covered with poles and long grass, or brush and sods.

There are good reasons for believing that Wassamegin (Massasoit), the old sachem of the Wampanoags, came to Wekabaug village about the year 1657, and was the acknowledged ruler here till his death. The particulars of this advent will be given in its chronological order.

And circumstances clearly indicate that this was the residence and particular domain of Shattoockquis, the sachem who was in power and signed the deed to the English purchaser in 1665. That he remained here for the next ten years, is probable; and if so, he lived on friendly terms with his white neighbors, each race cultivating its own cornfields, and maintaining its own peculiar social and civil ideas and customs, without serious friction. It is also probable that he was one of the "old men" who had learned to respect his civilized friends, and was disposed to treat with Ephraim Curtis on his diplomatic mission to the Quabaugs in July, 1675; that he was overruled by the young braves, especially Mettawampe, his co-ruler, who had "challenged some interest" in the lands here, and perhaps was his successor; who certainly was the chosen leader of the hostile band that destroyed the town.

Quobagud, or Quobacutt. The other large and permanent Quabaug village within our present town limits, which became noted in our annals, was located in the east part of Brookfield, at the south-easterly end of Quabaug pond,¹ and east of the canal connecting this with South pond. The distinctive remains of Indian occupancy are still plainly visible. The top of the bluff where the main part of the wigwams stood is still a waste of drifting sand, bare of vegetation, except where some white-pines have lately taken root, and the briers and sedges are maintaining a precarious foothold.² Piles of fire-stones, showing the alternate action of fire and water, still indicate the spot in the centre of the wigwam, where the savages huddled for warmth in winter, and the squaws cooked the family meal. The spring for supplying water is in the ravine on the easterly side. The place of two large barns or granaries, used for storing provisions, can readily be identified. As far back as any one remembers, this vicinity abounded in Indian relics of various kinds. One or more skeletons have been unearthed; and careful search would doubtless discover the village burial-place. Parts of aukooks (steatite kettles), and specimens of baked clay pottery, and personal ornaments, point to the existence here of the higher refinements of savage society.

² The spots of drifting sand, which have remained a barren waste for two hundred years, are relied on as among the certain signs of permanent Indian village sites. The cause of the continued barrenness may have been, in part, the household fires. These were built as follows: a pit was dug, into which a bushel or two of small stones was put, on which the wood was placed. These stones becoming hot, would disseminate the heat through the surrounding earth for a considerable space, and thus burn out the life of the soil. Other causes, not well understood, may have contributed to the result.

From intimations in his own account, and a more definite reference in Gookin's History, there is little doubt that this village is the Quobagud, where the apostle Eliot came to preach in 1649; and where, through his other visits, or more likely through the labors of the Christian Indians of Natick, so much of the "good seed of the word" was sown, that Gookin could write in 1674: "Quobaug (the south-east part of Brookfield) is another Indian town which is coming on to receive the Gospel." Probably David, mentioned by Wheeler in his Narrative as one of the "chief sachems" here, ruled over this domain; and through Mr. Eliot's influence, had taken a Christian name, and exhibited so much of Christian principle and honor, in his intercourse with the white planters, as to win the confidence of Sergt. Ayres, — only to turn traitor at the eleventh hour.

To the north of the pond, in the fork of Seven-mile and Five-mile brooks, there was formerly a steep conical hill, called Fort hill. The top showed signs of having been artificially levelled, and surrounded by a rude breastwork. It probably was originally an Indian fort, and may have been utilized by the whites, for a like purpose, at a later period. The East Brookfield railroad-station and freight-yard now occupy much of the site, the earth having been removed for filling.

The "little meadow at the north end of the pond Quaboag, which meadow is called Podunk," named in the Indian deed, is not easily identified, nor does reliable tradition point it out. The name signifies "place of burning." And in other localities where the same designation is given, it is known that captives taken in war, were tortured to death by fire. Probably such was the origin of the name here. And the use of the word gives us intimation that this clan of Quabaugs, at some date earlier than 1665, had an encounter with an enemy clan, was successful, brought home captives which were tied to stakes in this meadow, the fagots collected, the circle of begrimed braves formed around the victims, the death-dance performed, and amidst the fiend-like yells of savage exultation, the torch applied. But as History is silent in the matter, it is best that Imagination should not attempt to draw the sad picture.

Ashquoach. This important Quabaug village, often named in the early records, was situated on Indian hill, north of Great (now Sherman's) pond in Brimfield, and a short distance from the old Brookfield (now Warren) line. It was directly upon the great Indian trail from Woodstock (the Wabbaquasset country) to the Great Falls at Holyoke; and but a little way south of the trail from Wekabaug to Springfield. Its location and abundant resources for food made it a favorite baiting-place for the native travellers, being a day's journey from Maanexit in Woodstock, and a like distance from Agawam, Chikuppe, and the Great Falls.

This Indian town comes into notice in 1648, and has a direct connection with our Brookfield history for the ensuing twenty-eight years. The sachem, first named, was Quacunquasit, who applied to the Massachusetts government for aid, as will appear in the letter of William Pynchon, to be hereafter inserted. Probably he is the same whose name is written Quaquequunset in 1661. The town was distinguished for its great cornfields, and its defensive fort; and was known in the records as Quabaug Old Fort, till the Indians removed to their "new seat" on Menameseek river in the summer of 1675. The planting-ground was at the north-easterly, westerly, and southerly shores of the pond, where are many acres exactly suited for tillage with the native stone or shell hoes. Mr. Pynchon's statement is: "Ashquoach lies somewhat southward of our way to Brookfield, and about 23 miles from Springfield; . . . the Indians have a great cornfield hard by on the southward side, and not far southward are more Indian cornfields."

Both written records and tradition concur in the representation that this was the stronghold of the tribe, and a permanent abiding-place. An examination of the ground shows that the fort must have been built on the highest point of the hill, where there is a rocky eminence, easily defended on all sides. The view in every direction was extensive, and a watchman could readily detect the approach of friend or foe. A spring of water—the essential adjunct of an Indian fort—comes out at the foot of the precipice. There is a good place for wigwams in the sheltered depressions of the south-easterly slope of the crown of the hill, and also lower down on a kind of shelf extending easterly from the spring for thirty or forty rods. Both this shelf and the depressions above appear to have remained nearly bare of any new growth of trees, till a comparatively recent period—a fact common to Indian wigwam sites.

The messengers and agents sent by the English authorities to the Quabaugs, often mention their stop at Quabaug Old Fort. And the place is memorable as the refuge of King Philip, Aug. 5, 1675, when on his flight from Pocasset, with a handful of followers. It was surmised that he intended to remain here to recruit; but finding that the warriors had gone, leaving behind only the squaws and old men, and that the English troops were astir at Springfield, he went the next day (Friday, Aug. 6 — wrongly given by most writers as Aug. 5) to the new Quabaug settlement, eighteen miles to the northward, on Menameseek river.

There was another Ashquoach, which is named in the Indian deed of 1665, as being on the line between the head of Naltaug brook and Quabaug pond. This description would place it at the extreme southern point of West Brookfield. Whitney, History of Western, says: "There have been some vestiges of the aboriginals discovered on an extensive hill in the easterly part of this town, which was taken from Brookfield. On ploughing the ground a few years since, large beds of clam-shells were discovered under the soil, which appeared to be placed at equal distances from each other; these, together with Indian utensils found there, prove that this was a place of their resort and dwelling." No additional account of this wigwam site has been found; nor has the writer been able to identify the spot where the remains were exhumed.

Quassuck. According to a letter written by William Pynchon in 1644, there was a small cluster of Indian wigwams and a cornfield in Sturbridge, a little way south of Quassuck pond (now called Lead-mine pond), close to the place where the ore was afterwards worked. The ruling sachem then was Namaswhat.

Putikookupog. A larger village of the Quabaugs was situated on the south bank of the Quinebaug river, near the present line between Sturbridge and Brimfield. The hill here, called Indian-field hill, and sometimes Janes's hill, had large planting-fields, and from the signs observed in later times, was evidently a permanent dwelling-place of the natives. Many relics, of various kinds, have been found here. From the location and other circumstances, it is natural to conclude that this was the residence of the sachems Wattoowekin and Nakin, who, in 1655, sold one thousand acres of their land, including this village site, to the apostle Eliot — a transaction to be given in detail in its proper place. In 1675, the ruling sachem here was Conkganasco (Konkewasco), who signed a treaty of peace June 24, and July 16 was found at Menameset, as one of the hostile leaders, so soon to fall upon the Brookfield settlers.

Another Quabaug village is thus described by Mrs. Eunice P. Cutter of Warren: "There was an Indian settlement at the eastern base of Colonel's mountain in the north-west part of Warren, near the town-farm house. It was in a sunny spot, sheltered by hills on the west, north-west and east. Two cool springs supplied never-failing water. Three trails led from the village — one to the Menameseek river for salmon (this was the English bridle-path to Hadley); one over Coy's hill to Wekabaug pond for bass and pickerel; and the third down Blackmar brook, and across Quabaug river, to intersect the old trail to Springfield. An Indian's lodge was standing here as late as 1746, at which date their burial-place was well defined. Stone utensils, arrow and spear points were then abundant in the soil."

Besides these clearly marked village sites, there are other places where single wigwams or small clusters were pitched, and occupied for a longer or shorter period. One such site was at "Indian plain," on the Edmands place, near Horse-pond brook. Appearances indicate that a large wigwam had stood here for a long time. There is a cool living spring in the swale hard by. When Samuel Edmands plowed this field for the first time, eighty years ago, his oxen sank into a deep bed of ashes on the north-easterly side of the lot.

A cluster of wigwams stood below the Hodges place, in the south-west corner of Brookfield, near the Sturbridge line.

The Rock House, in the north-west of West Brookfield, has a probable connection with our Indian history. It is a remarkable, craggy ledge of rock left by the old upheaval, with an overhanging roof, fifteen feet of the outer edge of which broke off, and now stands on end, leaving a covered space sufficient to shelter a hundred persons. There is a tradition that this place was used by the Indians as a winter resort and stronghold.

Removal to Menameset. In the latter part of June, or first of July (after June 25), 1675, the able-bodied warriors of these Quabaug clans suddenly left their ancestral towns, and concentrated at the "Menameseek country," on the old Nashaway trail, in the north part of New Braintree, and adjacent part of Barre. As is evident from the letter of William Pynchon, dated 1648, the Quabaugs then claimed the territory, and had a settlement on Ware (Menameseek¹) river. Their removal, then, was neither a relinquishment of old, nor an acquirement of new lands; but a change of base, in order to meet the necessities of the new alliance, offensive and defensive, which the tribe had made with the Nashaways and Nipnets. The purpose and results of this alliance will appear when we come to King Philip's war.

As appears from contemporary history, our tribe built three towns on the easterly bank of Ware river, to each of which, according to Indian etymology, the name Menameset was applied. Perhaps the three leading Quabaug clans built each its own village. Reliable tradition has preserved a knowledge of the site of the lower of these towns. It was on "an island," i.e., a plot of dry land surrounded by wet swamp, on the easterly side of Wenimisset brook in New Braintree, and contained four or five acres. The highest part of the island was about twenty rods from Ware river; the old turnpike road from Furnace village through Oakham, crosses it, leaving one-fourth on the northerly and three-fourths on the southerly side of said road. Mr. Fudd, the careful investigator, and reliable historian, visited the place and identified the island, in 1854. Ephraim Curtis, who came hither with a message from the governor in the middle of July, 1675, has left an interesting account of his visit, and description of the island. This was not, as some affirm, the Indian's "stronghold," but was the least defensible of the three towns; and the absence of characteristic "remains" indicates that its occupation was less permanent. It will come into notice again, when we give an account of the ambushment of Capt. Wheeler.

The two upper Menameset town sites have remained practically unknown to local historians — notwithstanding the fact that the exact statements of the two guides, George Memicho and James Quanapohit, which are preserved in the State Archives, furnish the necessary clues, and Mrs. Rowlandson's Narrative is quite specific in data for fixing the most northerly site. Guided by these historical memoranda, the writer has made careful and repeated explorations of the valley from Barre Plains to the Old Furnace, and has discovered two spots which correspond to the estimated distances from known points, given by the guides above named; which spots exactly meet the requirements of Indian village sites; and at both of which sufficient "remains" were found, to leave no doubt that they are the two long over-looked Quabaug town sites.¹

Going up stream from the mouth of Wenimisset brook, and distant about one mile, is what I call the second Menameset town.² The site is nearly opposite the White paper-mill. Extending from the Perez Cobb cemetery northerly, is a high plain containing about forty acres, the surface of which is some thirty-five feet above the river level. It is evident that in the olden time, a thick swamp enclosed this plain on the south, east, and north, while the river ran on the west. Back of the plain, and half-way down to the water level is a terrace, where a large village of wigwams could be set up, and where they would be effectually screened from observation by the fringe of hemlocks and pines growing on the edge of the bluff. Back of this terrace and next the river is a strip of low ground, partly sandy ridge and partly swamp. In this dry ridge can still be seen the remains of fifteen Indian "barns," showing this to have been an important store-town. The site, as a place of security and concealment, could hardly be excelled — the slight fall in the river here giving a ready fordway for escape, in case of surprisal.

King Philip came here from Quabaug Old Fort, with his small band of followers, Friday, Aug. 6 (not 5th), 1675, as George Memicho narrates.

The third of the Indian towns known as Menameset, was up the river a distance of about two miles, on the Capt. Woodbury farm, in Barre Plains. The stream here makes a sharp turn, so as to form a double ox-bow. Within the lower bend is enclosed eight or nine acres of land, comprising above two acres of good cornfield, at near the water level, and the rest a bluff or high plain, bordered on all sides by steep slopes, which could be easily defended. A depression (perhaps originally a broad ditch dug for security, and now partly filled by successive plowings, and washings by the rains) crosses the bluff, back of which is a couple of acres, well suited for wigwam sites. At the extreme point in the bend of the river is an elevation, now well wooded, where a strong stockade could have been erected. Towards the westerly foot of this elevation are the remains of six or eight Indian "barns." And at several points on the bluff, and in the cornfield, an abundance of fire-stones are found, which prove the former existence here of a large number of Indian wigwams, and a somewhat permanent residence.

This site corresponds in distance, both from Quabaug Old Fort, and Lancaster, with the official report of Quanapohit; and is capacious enough to accommodate the large numbers of natives specified in said report as then gathered at "Menemesseg." It also meets the requirements, as to distance from Lancaster and Bacquag, given in Mrs. Rowlandson's Narrative, as the place where she was held a captive, Feb. 12-28, 1676; is "about six miles off" from the small Indian town of Nichewaugh; and it would be the first of the Menameset towns to be reached by the band of whooping savages, as they returned with English scalps and plunder, from their assault on Medfield, Feb. 21, 1675-6.¹

History of the Quabaugs. The foregoing detailed description of their chief towns, will enable the reader to understand the frequent topographical references made in succeeding pages of this and the next chapter.

The facts now to be narrated, concerning the internal affairs of Quabaug, and the relation of the tribe to other Indian tribes, and to the Massachusetts authorities, will be mainly given in the official documents of the time. This method is chosen, because many of these papers have not been accessible to the public: because the more important ones now in print are defective translations, rather than accurate copies of 1647. — In 1647, three Indians who lived near Quabaug Old Fort, were murdered by a party of marauding Naunutuks, aided by one or two Maquas. The next spring, a murderous raid was made on an out-settlement of the Quabaugs, located on the Ware river, probably in the town of Barre, and five Indians killed, and their wigwams robbed. News of this massacre was brought to Quabaug by an Indian that escaped. And steps were immediately taken by Quacunquasit, to send an account of the affair to the Governor at Boston, and ask for aid to apprehend the murderers. In response, the Court of Assistants at its May session, "sent twenty men to Nashaway to enquire of the truth of the matter, and to apprehend the murderers if they could be found; but being fled to Narraganset, they returned, and informed us certainly of the persons murdered, and of the actors, etc." [Winthrop's Journal, II. 397.]

Failing in this attempt, the Quabaug sachem sent two of his trusty Indians to Cutshamakin, a distinguished Wampanoag, living at Dorchester Mills, and under-sachem to Massasoit. A message was also sent to the apostle Eliot, who had the confidence of Cutshamakin. The mission prospered; and the Indian messengers not only gained the ear of the Dorchester sachem and Mr. Eliot, but offered to undertake the apprehension of some of the Naunutuk murderers. These counsels prevailed with the Magistrates at Boston; and "we gave them commissions, and withal wrote to Mr. Pynchon to assist them, etc. (they living near Springfield)." [Winthrop's Journal.]

William Pynchon was an early friend and associate of Gov. Winthrop; was one of the founders of Roxbury, where he was a magistrate and treasurer. He was the father of Springfield, and was holding the office of Assistant; he was a man of affairs, whose opinions would naturally have a controlling influence with the Magistrates. His letter of reply to the Governor shows that he was well informed in the news of the day; was politic; was shrewd in the use of technicalities; and was bound to save Springfield from possible harm, even if little Quabaug was left unavenged. This letter, as printed in Savage's edition of Winthrop's Journal, contains numerous and misleading errors. The following copy, made by Henry E. Waite, is believed to be an exact transcript of the original in the State Archives.

SPRINGFIELD this 5 of the 5^m 1648.

Sir. I received a letter from you with ye hands of 4 magistrates more to it, to assist two Indians of Quabaug with men &c, for the apprehending of 3 murtherers at Naunutuk wch is about 15 miles from our Towne up ye River.

These Indians of Quabaug have dealt subtilly in getting Cutshamoquin to get Mr Eliot to be their medeator to you for yr helpe: The principall Argūt wch Mr Eliot doth use to move you is, that ye murdered are yr subjectes: & thereuppon ye warrant from the Court runns that ye said Indians may charge eather Indians or English to assist them to apprhend them at Naunotak, i. bec [because] ye murdered are yr subjects & 2ly bec the murtherers are wthin yr Jurisdiction.

But if thinges be well examined: I apprhend that neether the murdered are yr subjects nor yet ye murtherers wthin yr Jurisdiction.

I grant they are all wthin ye line of yr pattent, but yet you cannot say that therefore they are yr subjects nor yet within yr Jurisdiction vntill they have fully subjected themselves to yr government (wch I know they have not) & vntill you have bought their land: vntill this be done they must be esteemed as an Independant free people, & so they of Naunotak do all account themselves, & doubtless wch ever goes wth strength of men to disturb their peace at Naunotuk they will take it for no other than a hostile action: witness their deadly fewd¹ wch they have & do beare to ye Monaheganicks² ever since they took Sewoquasse³ from them the last yere: wch I doubt will be the ground of a further dangerous war:⁴ for I heare that Pacomtuk will psue the Quarrell & Joyne wth ye Indians of the duch River against ym, but the Naricanset must begin the war, and as I heare eather yesterday or this day is like to be ye day of fight between them & ye Naricanset: though thes River Indians will delay their tyme till the tyme that corne begins to be ripe: but now they are making of a very large & a strong forte.

But to returne to ye case of ye murdered: The first 3 that were murdered the last yere lived about 6 or 7 miles on this side Quabaug nerer us,⁵ & the murtherers of them are known as they affirm: & there are severall Smale Sachims of Quabaug, & in all neer places there are other smale Sachims no one Sachim doth Rule all: & one of these petti Sachims hath made friendship wth Cutshamoquin & that makes Cushamokin cale them his subjects, but I believe they will stick no longer to him than the sunn shines upon him.

The last 5 that were killed this Spring (wth one more that escaped) lived in ye midway between Quabaug & Nashaway, & yet not pperly belonging to eather place, but liveing as newters, & yet bec they were somewhat neere neighbors to both places, therefore both places do desyre yr help against the murtherers. The murtherers of these 5 are not known: but bec the

³ Sequasson.

⁴ This war, then brewing, was an alliance formed by the Narragansets, Pacomtucks, and Mohawks, who were to descend upon the Mohegans, and destroy the tribe, and take revenge on Uncas. As Uncas was in league with the English, they would become involved in the strife and its consequences. The day this letter was written was the one set for opening the campaign.

murderers of the first 3 are known therefore they suppose they are the same men: but the man that is escaped saith that if he can see their faces he doth know their faces though he knows not their names.

Mr Eliot also writ a letter to me to stir me up to assist ye said Indians that came from you: 1. he urgeth me wth a comānd of god to make inquisition for blood, & 2^{ly} wth a p^mise They shall heare & Feare Etc.: & hence he concludes that there is no feare of a war to p^{ro}ceed from this dealing.

If ye first positions can be made good, namely that ye murdered were y^r subjects & 2^{ly} that ye murderers were wthin y^r iurisdiction; then Mr Eliots exhortation to me had been seasonable, or else not.

But yet notwithstanding, I have not declined ye businesse, but have be- thought myself how to get it effected in the best manner: & therefore I advised ye Quabaug Indians to stay vntill Nippunsait returned from Sowowassas house, w^{ch} I expected wthin 2 dayes, but he came not till the 3^d day: then we had a private conference & I ordered my speech thus to him, that I had rec^d letters from you that whereas Chickwallop desyred Cutchamokin to appoint a meeting at Quabaug, it was y^r desyre that ye meeting might be at Boston, that you might understand the businesse as well as ye Indian Sachims, & that you would take it kindly if he would talk wth the Naunutuk Sachims to apprehend the 3 murderers, & that they would send some to [be] at ye meeting at Boston.

Thereuppon Quacunquasit, one of ye Sachims of Quabaug, & Nippunsait & others discoursed a long tyme how to effect this matter, & who to apprehend in the first place. But neether I nor my son for want of language could understand their discourse: but in conclusion they explained unto us what they had concluded on, namely, to take two of ye 4 that were at Naunutuk: but they thought it best not to medle wth Wottowon & Reskeshonege bec^{ca} they were of Pamshads kindred who is a maqua Sachim: but Nippunsait said he would tell him that they should live, hoping he would further them in the taking of the Rest: & all the Indians consented to this motion as ye most fesible & likly way to attain their ends in the Rest: the other two namely Wawhilam & his brother: Nippunsait hath undertaken by some wile or other to bringe them to my howse in a peacable way, & then he will leave y^m to me to apprehend them & so to send y^m to you: & this they thought might be effected about 10 or 12 dayes after this conclusion was made, w^{ch} was made 2 dayes before ye date of this letter.

& thus by these means they will ingage ye English as ye cheifest p^{ar}ties in their business.

But I must confess I look uppon this service in sending them to you as a difficult & troublesome service: for 1. I have no prison to keep them safe, & 2^{ly} it will occasion great resort of Indians to my house to see what I will do wth them, & 3^{ly} we shall want men: & I p^{er}ceive that the Indians are afraid to medle wth them unlesse they can mak the English the principall in the business.

If ye Lord should let loose the reynes to their malice, I mean to their friends & Abettors, it may be of ill Consequence to ye English that intermedle in their matters by a voluntary rather [than] by a necessary calinge, for they & their friends stand uppon their inocency, & in that respect they threaten to be avenged on such as lay any hands uppon them:

& our place is more obnoxious to their malice than the Bay by farr, especially the Naunutuk Indians are desperate Spirites, for they have their dependance on the Mowhoaks or maquas who are the Terror of all Indians.

my advise therefor is, that you will as much as may be take the matter from vs: wch may thus be effected: send 3 or 4 men to our plantation¹ wth all speed that may lie together here, eather at the ordinary, or at some other howse, till the said pties be brought to me: if they be not brought before they come: they may improve their tyme here by doing some work: & if there be not a sufficient number of Indians to goe with them to carry them safe: I may appoint more men that y^e businesse may not faile for want of a good guard.

let thes psons [that] march here [have] a charge to be private & silent in the business till they see it effected: you may send thes men away on the 2^d day: if the Indians should mak an escape & not be taken, yet the charge of 3 or 4 men in so weighty a business for the fairer carriage of it on, is not to be stood uppon: If they be taken before they come I will set a guard uppon them for 2 or 3 dayes in hope you will send them wth as much speed as may be: Indeed there should not be a dayes delay after they come to my howse; it will pvent the tumult of Indians, & pvent their waylaying: if thes two be once apprehended & put to death then they have determined the death of 6 more neer Quabaug: & only the former two to live.

thus have I as briefly as I can (though abruptly) related the substance of y^e matter. I intreat you that thes men may cale to my son davis² for a letter before they come away: they must be active men & leight of foote, for the better countenancing of the businesse: I shall ere long send you further intelligence about this Pacomtuk businesse wth y^e Monaheganicks. the Lord is able to divert their intentions: though it is to be suspected it is intended for y^e vtter ruine of y^e monaheganicks, & the English will I feare be imbroyled in the war:

Y^r assured loving brother in the Lord

And the Deputy Governor, Dudley, returned it, with this endorsement, written on the blank page: —

Upon readinge this l^re and conference wth M^r Elyott, I give my advise (wch you require) for a pawse in the busines before wee proceede any further in it.

² Capt. Wm. Davis of Boston, m. Margaret Pynchon.

1. For that the ground and warrant of our meddling in it is by this lre taken away: it being denyed that the murdered were our subjects, or the murderers wth hin our Jurisdic^on.
2. If the murderers should be apprehended and brought to us, the p^{ty} escapeing is for ought wee yet know all the witnes against them, hee affirminge hee knows their faces, w^{ch} yet is doubtfull, the murder beinge done in the night.
3. It is like in Mr Pinchons oppinion to draw a warr upon us, w^{ch} if (as hee saith) it be provoked by vs voluntarily, not necessarily, wee shall incurr blame at home and wth our confederate English, and want helpe from heaven in it, and comfort in prosecuting it.
4. The charge & difficulty w^{ch} the sendinge men out in hay and harvest tyme would be considered.
5. A pawse will advantage vs in hearinge what the narragansetts will doe upon Uucus whome wee must defend.
6. And if soe, it cannot be wissdome in vs to stirr upp other Indians against vs to ioyne wth the warr: [Narragansetts]

I have forgotten 2 other reasons while I was settinge downe theis.

I thinck a messenger would be dispatched to Mr Pinchon, to lett such Indians loose if any should be apprehended, w^{ch} I thinck will not be, they whoe have promised not beinge like to doe it, or if Mr Pinchon see cause to doe otherwise to leave it to him.

THO: DUDLEY.

The following note in Winthrop's Journal, gives the final upshot of the matter: "Whereupon the Gov^r wrote back personally to Mr. Pynchon, that then he should proceed no further, but send back the Indians, etc."

In addition to its historical relation to the Quabaugs, and other neighboring tribes, this letter gives us an insight into the Indian character, as exemplified when the English first came to the country, and before contact of races had modified natural traits. Perhaps the expressive word sanguinary best describes the native disposition. They were fond of war; were ready to make and break alliances; revengeful; given to theft and murder, when the strong could assault the weak; and artful to cover their tracks. Mr. Pynchon's reasoning also affords an insight into the views entertained by the first white comers as to the rights and privileges of the native dwellers. It was held that the Indian had ownership in the lands he occupied, till he voluntarily sold them; and he was free and independent till he formally submitted to the English authorities. This letter also confirms the opinion heretofore expressed in these pages, that the Quabaugs, Naunutuks, and other River tribes were regarded and treated as distinct sovereignties, rather than allied clans, except in cases where self-interest prompted an alliance.

And the fact is here brought out which shows how the apostle Eliot became thus early interested in Quabaug. We are thus prepared to understand the following letter written by him at Roxbury, Dec. 29, 1649.

. . . "There is another aged Sachem at Quobagud, three score miles Westward, and he doth greatly desire that I would come thither and teach them, and live there; and I made a journey thither this summer, and I went by Nashaway: but it so fell out that there were some stirs betwixt the Narranganset and Monahagan Indians, some murders committed, etc., which made our church doubtful at first of my going; which when the Nashaway Sachem [Sholan] heard, he commanded twenty armed men (after their manner) to be ready, and himself with these twenty men, besides sundry of our near Indians went along with me to guard me: but I took some English along with me also, so that hereby their good affection is manifested to me, and to the work I have in hand: Here also [at Quobagud] I found sundry hungry after instruction; but it pleased God to exercise us with such tedious rain and bad weather, that we were extreme wet, insomuch that I was not dry night nor day from the third day of the week unto the sixth, but so travelled, and at night pull off my boots, wring my stockings, and on with them again, and so continued: The rivers also were raised, so as that we were wet riding through: but that which added to my affliction was, my horse tired, so that I was forced to let my horse go empty, and ride on one of the men's horses which I took along with me. Yet God stepped in and helped: I considered that the word of God 2 Tim. 2: 3, "Endure hardship as a good soldier of Christ," with many other such like meditations. . . . And I thank the Lord, neither I nor my company took any hurt."¹

This was all the information, relative to his visit, called for by Mr. Eliot's then design in writing the letter. But to us, it is matter of deep, though unavailing regret, that he did not give the name of the "aged sachem" on whose invitation the visit was made. Circumstances, however, favor the conclusion that it was he who was known in our annals as David, the trusted friend of the Brookfield first settlers, who is mentioned in Wheeler's Narrative, as a "chief Sachem," and "great friend to the English."

That Mr. Eliot kept alive his interest in our Indian town, and found much to encourage him in his good work, is evident from Gookin's Account, written twenty-five years later [see ante, p. 39.] The intimate relations which subsisted between the Quabaugs and the Wampanoags, as hinted at in Pynchon's letter, and confirmed by subsequent events, render it certain that intercommunication with the Bay was not infrequent; Indian customs of hospitality sanctioned a week's stay of our sachem and his chief men at Natick, or Punkapaug, or Hassanameset, where the apostle's influence was then paramount; and the Gospel news, which spread through all these connected towns, became a quickener of thought, and a pervasive leaven.

Six years later, i. e., in 1655, Mr. Eliot must have made a special visit and exploration of the Quabaug territory, of which a record is preserved. In Ancient Plans, I., 285, is found a plot of John Eliot's 1000 Acres, endorsed: "Purchased by Rev. John Eliot, the 27th of Sept., 1655, of Wattalooewekin and Nakin, Indians—said 1000 Acres of land lies Southward of, and contiguous to the Township of Brookfield alias Quabaug, at a place called Pookookappog Ponds." The north-east corner bound was two perch from the north-west corner of Great Alum pond; the line ran thence 402 rods to a point north of Little Alum pond; thence S. 5° W. 400 rods; thence E. 27° S. 460 rods; thence northerly through Great Alum pond, 460 rods, to the first-mentioned bound. Eight hundred acres of this land lie in Sturbridge, and two hundred in Brimfield. Dec. 5, 1715, the title to this land was confirmed by the General Court to the heirs of Mr. Eliot.

Mr. Eliot's plan for evangelizing the Indians was a broad one, looking to the establishment of what were called "Praying towns" throughout the Massachusetts limits. The first and model town was built at Natick. Others were selected as fast as suitable men—white or Indian—could be found, to carry them on. For, like a common-sense Christian, as he was, he laid careful foundations, and "made haste slowly."

The facts in the case clearly show that he had in mind to establish a Praying town, either at Quobagud, or at the Indian settlement on his purchased land [see ante, p. 31]. The latter place was near the old southern trail; and it had much to recommend it for permanent habitation. It was of easy approach from Maanexit, and Wabbaquasset; and it had fine cornland, which was regarded as a better agent of civilization than hunting-ground and other sources of native food supplies.

That the Massachusetts authorities were cognizant of his interest in the Quabaugs, and approved his plan for bringing them under Christian instruction, appears from the action of the General Court in 1661, earnestly requesting Wassamegin, the ruling sachem, to send some of his young men, and some returned captives to the Christian towns, where they might learn "to know and love God" under the ministration of Mr. Eliot.

It was in furtherance of this plan that Mr. Eliot petitioned the General Court, in 1664, for a large grant of land, which should take in his purchase of 1655. The record is: "In answer to the petition of Mr. John Elljot in behalfe of the Indians of Putikookuppogg, the Court judgeth it meete to grant this petition: viz^t, a plantation to the Indians, not exceeding fower thousand acres, and that it prejudice nott Ipswich grant [at Brookfield], or any former grant, in the place desired nere Quo-boag, & for the ordering and setting thereof have appointed & empowered Mr. Samuel Smith, Mr. Elizur Holjoke, & Mr. William Holton, who may, vpon the place, determine the situation & ljmitts of the said Indian plantation, & so to state & order the same as maybe for the accomodation both of English & Indians, & that the said comittee shall give notice to all persons concerned to attend at the time of their meeting, if they see cause, provided the said Indians engage nor sell it wthout leave first obteyned from this Court." [Mass. Col. Rec. IV-2. p. 109.] The record of the laying-out of this 4,000 acre plantation has not been found. But the purpose of establishing Christian institutions at one of the Quabaug towns was not abandoned; and as appears from Mr. Gookin's statement (already quoted), the plan was near a successful issue, when King Philip's War broke out, and clouded so many fair prospects and dashed so many bright hopes!

The next document in our series is dated September, 1659; and is valuable as giving the name of a Quabaug sachem, not elsewhere found. "In answer to a petition of Robert Ashley of Springfield for satisfaction for a horse killed by a Nipanett Indian the last year: The Commissioners being informed by Mr. John Pynchon that the said Indian liveth at Quabage, under the sachem Annoackamor; doth think twenty pounds should be demanded of the said sachem, or the man that killed the horse to be delivered into the hands of the said Ashley to be by him disposed of as he sees cause. Mr. Pynchon is desired to take care that satisfaction be demanded, and the party secured if there be opportunity, which if he cannot attain, we desire the Mass. Government to effect the same as they shall see cause." [Acts of Com. of U. Col^s. II. 225.]

It is not known of which of our Indian towns Annoackamor was sachem.

We now come, in chronological order, to the grant of a part of the Quabaug territory, May 30, 1660, to the inhabitants of Ipswich. But the particulars of this transaction properly belong to the next chapter.

The next year, and before any whites came upon the ground, a war party of Mohegans, under Oneko, son of Uncas, with the knowledge and consent of his father, made an assault upon our Quabaugs (written Quabaconk), killing three, and carrying away six captives. The real motive for the assault is not apparent. The pretended motive was, to satisfy an old grudge against Onopequin, a native of Quabaug, but then living at Pacomptuck, some of whose men, as Uncas asserts, were then with the Quabaugs. If this was in fact true, Uncas had a plausible excuse. For in the spring of 1658, Onopequin had led a war party into the Mohegan country, and killed and taken several of Uncas' people — much after the fashion of this return raid of Oneko. But it is more likely that Uncas intended the expedition as a defiance to Wassamegin (Massasoit) and the English authorities, to whom he bore no love, and whose interest just then, as he well knew, would prevent them from resorting to severe measures against him. He was a shrewd, turbulent, imperious man, and a daring warrior, skilled in making and breaking combinations; generally favoring the English; but feared and distrusted by all parties. He seems to have gained his end, whatever it was, in this business; and got off with a severe scolding, and a solemn injunction "not to do so again."

"A DECLARATION OF THE DEALINGS OF UNCAS AND THE MOHEGAN INDIANS. TO CERTAIN INDIANS THE INHABITANTS OF QUABACONK. MAY 21, 1661.¹

About ten weeks since, Uncas's Son, accompanied with 70 Indians set upon the Indians at Quabaconk, and slew three persons, and carried away 6 prisoners, among which prisoners was one squa with her two children, whom when he had brought to the fort, Uncas dismissed the squa, on conditions that she would go home and bring him 25 lb. in peage, two guns and two blankets, for the release of herself and her children, which as yet she hath not done, being retained by the sagamore of Washakeim, on hopes that their league with the English will free them; at the said time he carried away also in stuffe and moneyes, to the value of 37 lb. And at such time as Uncas received notice of the displeasure of the English in the Massachusetts, by the worshipfull Mr. Winthrop, he insolently laughed them to scorn, and professed that he would still go on as he had begun and assay who dares to control him. Moreover, 4 days since there came home a prisoner that escaped; two yet remaining whom Uncas threatens, the one of them to kill, and the other to sell away as a slave; and still threatens to continue his war against them, notwithstanding any prohibition whatsoever, whose very threats are so terrible that our Indians dare not wander far from the towns about the Indians, for fear of surprise.

WASSAMEGIN, QUABACONK, ET ALS."

This paper was received by the General Court, and referred to a committee, viz., Humphrey Atherton, Joseph Hills, William Parkes. The committee reported June 1, as follows:

"We the committee, in the case respecting the Indians at Quabaconk, think meet

1st, That letters from this Court be sent unto Uncas; signifying how sensible we are of the Injuries by him done unto us, in the Outrages by him committed by his hostile invading our subjects the Indians at Quabaconk, who there live under Wassamagin their sagamore, by destroying and killing of some, by carrying away and keeping others captives, and by spoiling them of their goods to the value of 37^{lb.} as they complain; willing and requiring of him the said Uncas to yield and deliver up the said captives, and to make restitution for the goods by him so taken from our said subjects: And that for time to come, he forbear all hostilitie and unlawful violence towards the persons, lands and goods of our said subjects the Quabaconk aforesaid. Signifying also to the said Uncas that if Wassamagin or his subjects have done or shall do any Injury to him or his subjects, that on complaints to us and due proof thereof he shall be righted.

2d, That Uncas be given to understand and be assured from this Court that if he refuse or neglect to release or deliver up the foresaid captives, and also to make restitution for the goods taken from our said subjects, that we then are resolved, the Lord assisting, to right our foresaid Injuries upon him and his subjects for the same. And for all the charges whatsoever that shall arise in the prosecution thereof.

3d, That if the said Uncas shall put us to right ourselves by war upon him, that we shall then require satisfaction also for the lives of our subjects by him slain as aforesaid.

4th, That for the encouragement and safety of the said Wassamagin and his subjects there be by order of Maj. Willard, 3 or 4 armed men well accommodated in all respects, with a proportion of powder, bullets and match, sent from Lancaster to Quabaconk unto the said Wassamagin, there to stay a night or two, and to shoot off their muskets so often and in such wise as the Major shall direct, to terrify the enemies of Wassamagin, and so to return home again.

5th, That either the Major or the soldiers by his order advise Wassamagin and his subjects there, that the General Court, the Gov^r and dep. Gov^r and Magistrates shall take it as an assured token of their hearty love and fidelitie to the English, and of their thankful acknowledgment of all favors extended to them, if they would let the English have the bringing up of those captives now to be released, and of some of their sons also, by means whereof they may the better know and serve God, and be the more helpful to their own kinsfolk, friends and countrymen afterwards. And that Mr. Eliot be desired to second and forward the motion to Wassamagin and his subjects as often seasonable occasion shall be ministered.

6th, That either the Major General, or Maj. Willard, or the soldiers to be sent as aforesaid, in the name of this Court advise and require Wassamagin and his men to be very careful of injuring or in any ways provoking of Uncas or any of his men, as he will answer our displeasure therein, and incur due punishment for the same. And that if, notwithstanding his innocence that way, that Uncas shall invade or injure him as formerly, that he give notice thereof unto Maj. Willard, who upon manifest invasion and assault of the enemy, shall act and do according to law in case of Alarm, so far as to him seems necessary, and this shall be his sufficient warrant for the same.

Consented to by the Magistrates.

EDW. RAWSON, Sec^y."

The matter was taken in hand by the Commissioners of the United Colonies ; as appears from the following communication sent to Uncas, and his reply through Capt. John Mason.

“ Upon a complaint made to the Commers of the Massachusetts against Unkas, this following message was sent to him : — We have received information and complaint from the General Court of the Massachusetts of your hostile invading of Wasamequen and the Indians of Quabakutt, who are and long have been subjects to the English, killing some and carrying away others captives, spoiling their goods to the value of 33£. as they allege : and all this contrary to your covenant and promise to the Commers several times renewed ; not to make war on any of our tributaries without the allowance of the Commers ; we also understand that the General Court of the Mass^{ts}, whose subjects the said Indians are, have formally signified their offence unto you, Requiring the return of your captives, and satisfaction for the wrong you have done, to which you have not returned any answer, which seems to be an insolent and proud carriage of yours, we cannot but wonder at it, and must bear witness against it, and do hereby will and require you forthwith to return said captives with due satisfaction for other wrongs done them, or to make out sufficient grounds and Reasons for your invading the said Indians, the which you are to speedily to send to the Governor of Massa^{ts}, and if it appear they have done you any wrong, upon due proof we shall take care that they make you satisfaction : if you shall neglect to observe our order and injunctions herein contained, we must leave the Massachusetts to right themselves, as formerly they signified unto you : in which case we must own and if need be assist our confederates.

Signed. The Commissioners of the United Colonies.
Plymouth, Sept. 13, 1661.”

“ Since this order agreed and entered concerning Uncas, this following answer was given by Major Mason on behalf of Uncas : —

Whereas, There was a warrant sent from the Court of Boston, dated in May last, to Uncas, sachem of Mohegan, wherein it was declared upon the Complaint of Wesamequen a sachem subject to the Massachusetts, that the said Uncas had offered great violence to their subjects at Quabauke, killing some, and taking others captive : which warrant came to Uncas not above twenty days before these presents, who being summoned by Maj. John Mason in the full scope of the said warrant, wherein he was deeply charged if he did not return the captives and 33 pounds Damage, then the Massachusetts would recover it by force of arms, which to him was very grievous : professing he was altogether ignorant that they were subjects belonging to the Massachusetts ; and further said that they were none of Wesamequen’s men, but belonging to Onopequin, his deadly enemy, who was there born : one of the men then taken was his own Cousin, who had formerly fought against him in his own person ; and yet set him at liberty : and further said that all the captives were sent home : also that Wesamequen’s son and divers of his men had fought against him divers times : this he desired might be returned as his answer to the Commissioners.

N. B. Alexander alias Wamsutta, Sachem of Sowamsett, being now at Plymouth, he challenged Quabauke Indians to belong to him: and further said that he did war against Uncas this summer on that account.

Signed by JOHN MASON."

A special interest attaches to the above papers, because the events recorded happened in our territory at the time when the white settlers were just taking possession of their new homes in Brookfield; and we thus get an idea of the Indian life with which they came in contact. Nothing could better illustrate the daring courage of the Ipswich men and women who first pitched on Foster's hill, than this picture of their surroundings, with, on the one hand, savage vengeance and duplicity, and on the other, the timorous policy of our State authorities. It surely did not promise well for substantial help and support to an infant colony away in the wilderness, when the powerful Uncas could murder and despoil a peaceable tribe, and the English Governor, who claimed said tribe as his subjects, instead of demanding and enforcing redress, only devised a way to scare the haughty chieftain, by "stationing 3 or 4 men with fire-locks and plenty of ammunition" at Wekabaug, who should "stay there a night or two, and shoot off their muskets so often and in such wise as Major Willard should direct, and then return home again!"

And these papers have additional and great value, in that they clear up what has been a mystery in the life of Wassamegin (Massasoit), and at the same time disclose the reason why the Quabaugs so earnestly espoused the cause of his son Philip, and why that chieftain fled hither for aid and protection, immediately on his defeat at Pocasset in the summer of 1675.

Massasoit, it will be remembered, was the Wampanoag sachem first to visit the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1621, and then became and continued their firm friend. The treaty of peace and mutual defence, made between him and the whites, was carefully observed for above fifty years, and was an important factor in the prosperity of the colony. He was the father of Alexander, who married the distinguished Weetamoo, and was ever the friend of the English; and the father of Philip, who became their deadly enemy. In 1632, when he made war upon the Narragansetts, Massasoit changed his name to Ousamequin (often written Wassamegin), by which name he is afterwards known in history. His home-seat was in the present town of Bristol, R.I. But he lived at various points in Bristol and Plymouth counties, Mass. There is evidence that in 1643-4 he was living in the western central part of Worcester County. And we found that in 1648, Cutshamakin, one of his leading under-sachems, asserted the claims of his chieftain to jurisdiction over our Quabaug tribe. From 1649 to 1657, he appears on the records as selling lands in Bridgewater, Rehoboth, Hogg Island, and elsewhere. At the latter date, he disappears from the affairs of his old home. Mr. Drake [Bk. of the Inds. II. 28] suggests that he had then disposed of most of his lands, and given up the sachemship to his son Wamsutta (Alexander). Did he then take up his abode with the Quabaugs? The evidence in the case, as given in the papers under consideration, favors such a conclusion. From his high standing, and former relations, he would of course be acknowledged by our tribe as chief sagamore. And the only fair construction of the statements — which are official — contained in these papers, renders it certain that he was living here and was sagamore in May, 1661. The best authorities give the date of his death in 1661, or early in 1662. He probably died at Quabaug. His age could not have been less than 80.

The next important item in the annals of our tribe is the sale, Nov. 10, 1665, by the sachem Shattoockquis, to the English settlers, of a tract of land about six miles square, covering the original town of Brookfield. But the particulars of this transaction properly belong to the next chapter.

And this brings us to the end of the sole Indian occupation, and the beginning of the joint occupancy of the township by the red and white races.

And it is a singular fact that the history of our Indian tribe for the next ten years is substantially a blank. We know that the natives remained in their villages, and cultivated their cornfields as before. We get a glimpse, now and then, from the Court records, of a drunken brawl, or a minor crime committed by or upon them; of a leading Indian of Naunotuk perpetrating a theft at home, and fleeing for concealment to Quabaug. And we know, in a general way, that these ten years were years of peace between the Indians and the English in this neighborhood.

The condition of Quabaug, and its relations to the outside world, were greatly changed as compared with 1647. It was now on an established English bridle-path between the Bay and the Connecticut. The single horseman, or a cavalcade of riders and pack-horses was a common sight to our Indians. They had taken part in matters of diplomacy and traffic, and had seen the features of English social life and customs, and felt the power of civilization, by actual contact. English towns had been established above Springfield. Northampton was purchased of the Naunotuks in 1653, and settled the next year. Hadley was settled in 1659. Deerfield was purchased in 1667, and a settlement made in 1669; but the Dedham committees had been passing to and fro since 1665, and had added to the bustle of our quiet settlement.

Savage man instinctively holds civilized man in reverence, as a higher order of intelligence and power. The records of all original explorations and discoveries prove this. Suitable clothing is a moral force; good tools and weapons are a moral force; habits of industry are a moral force; ownership of a horse or ox is a moral force; a fixed home is a moral force: they indicate prescience and providence, and they imply dominion, as a consequent of intelligence, and thus directly, as well as by contrast, awaken awe in the untutored child of nature.

For this reason, and for another to be named presently, our natives welcomed the white settlers. They sold their lands in good faith, and as a rule were satisfied with the price received. It was understood — perhaps stipulated — by both parties that the Indians retained the right to hunt, fish, and plant corn; and the high sense of justice then prevalent among the better class of our Puritan fathers, led them to respect these aboriginal rights; and thus many of the possible frictions of the two races were prevented. The Indian men bartered their furs and venison, for guns and hatchets; and the women exchanged their baskets, brooms, and mats, for trinkets and kettles. The tidy housewife tolerated the dirty squaw in her kitchen, from womanly pity for her hard lot; and the farmer made friends with the dusky trapper who trampled his meadows, as a matter of policy, to save complaints about his roving cattle trespassing on the unfenced native cornfields — though it must be said, he could not always resist the temptation to sell the said trapper when very thirsty a mug of beer for two fathoms of wampum (equal to five shillings in money); and the thrifty trader would accept the offer of a good beaver-skin for four quarts of rum. But the public frowned upon such practices. The squaws sometimes hired the English to plow their cornfields, so that better crops were raised with less labor. And it was not uncommon for them to take English fields to plant on shares; allowing the owner one-half the crop, divided on the ground.

But both races held the other at arm's length. They had too little in common, to invite mutual sympathy, and cement mutual interest. Our people learned the Indian words in ordinary use sufficiently to carry on conversation about the daily wants of life, and simple matters of barter and labor. And the Indian caught enough of our words to comprehend the subject of talk, and make known his thoughts, when he chose to be communicative. The more formal transactions, like the sale of lands, were made through the medium of interpreters, who had in some way become skilled in the two languages. Some of these interpreters were Indians, educated by Mr. Eliot.

Seen from the distance — this picture has features which to one of romantic turn, are strange and pleasing. But there was little of romance, and much of hard reality in the life of those times. By both whites and red men, it was a struggle for food, and raiment, and a shelter; the former looking forward with hope to better times, and a competence and a comfortable home; the latter taking "no thought for the morrow."

But probably the more weighty motive with our Indians for desiring the coming among them of the English in 1662-5, was fear of Uncas and his Mohegans from Connecticut, and of the Mohawks from New York. The grounds of their fear of the Connecticut sachem have been sufficiently indicated by the papers already quoted in full. And the Indians would naturally reason that the Governor at Boston would interfere to protect his own colony, when he might hesitate and parley, in avenging the wrongs of a native subject tribe. And his observation had taught him that the white settlers always carried their fire-arms with them to a new plantation. But Uncas was less dreaded by our Indians than the Mohawks, a powerful and blood-thirsty tribe living on the river of that name in New York, who were at this date, the special enemies of the western Massachusetts Indians.¹ In 1664, these Mohawks came in force to the Connecticut valley, destroyed the native fort at Deerfield, and inflicted great injury upon the Pacomptucks, and neighboring tribes. This bloody raid extended as far eastward as the Nashaway and Merrimack valleys. And for several years, scouting parties of the victors made frequent descents upon the Indians in these parts, and kept them in constant alarm. The presence, and friendship, and guns of the English were looked upon as a safeguard and defence.

All these considerations tended to give the English favor with the natives, and worked together for the interests of our infant plantation. And a further potent reason to account for the ten years of peaceful co-occupation, was the fact that the old men of the tribe were still in authority. The memories of the Pequot war, and its lessons of white superiority, had not faded out; and their experiences and observation had shown that the English always got the upperhand in conflicts, and they had become cautious, even if not reverential. And when the war-cloud of 1675 appeared, these old men, with almost unanimity, counselled forbearance and submission. The peace-commission that visited the Quabaug clans in June, found the old chiefs inclined to resist the machinations of Philip. Ephraim Curtis, who came hither in July, was kindly received by the old counsellors. They knew the risk, and deprecated war. The old spirit within them was not dead; but the new contact had engendered caution; the new experiences had forecast the inevitable result. It was the young, hot blood that precipitated the conflict. The attack on Swanzy, June 24, was made by the young braves. It was they who killed the old sachem of the Naunutuks, because he parleyed with the English captains.

Sergt. Ayres and the Brookfield men had plausible grounds for their confidence in the fidelity of these old chiefs: their error was, in underestimating the influence of those who now first put on the war-paint.

THE history of the English plantation of Brookfield begins with the following grant of land by the General Court. Although exhaustive search has been made among the State Archives, and wherever else there was a probability of success, the original petition of the inhabitants of Ipswich has not been found.

“ AT A GREAT AND GENERAL COURT OF ELECTION HELD AT BOSTON THE 20TH OF MAY, 1660.

In Ans^r to the peti^cōn of severall the Inhabitants of Ipswich, this Court Judgeth it meete to Graunt the petitioners sixe miles square or so much land as shall be Contejn^d in such a Compasse in a place nere Quo-boag ponds, provided they have twenty familie^s there resident within 3 years, & that they have an able minister settled there within the sajd terme, such as this Court shall approve, and that they make due provision in some way or other for the future, either by setting apart of land, or what else shall be thōught meete for the Continuance of the ministry amongst them: And that If they shall faile in any of these particulars above mentioned, this Graunt of the Court to be voyd & of none effect.”

This grant is dated May 31, 1660.

From the scanty records extant, it is believed that John Warner, John Ayres, Wm. Prichard, and perhaps one other (who doubtless were of the petitioners) came to Quabaug in the summer of 1660, for the purpose of selecting the place for the new settlement. The first care of explorers, at that time, in locating a town site, was to find “conveniency of home-lots, meadow lots, and planting fields.” But the prime consideration was "conveniency of meadows." These were essential for his first year's support and income, as they were his reliance for feeding his horses and horned cattle through the long winter season, and the only outlay required, was the labor of cutting and curing and stacking the hay-crop. The annual burning of the dry grass and sprouts by the Indians, in the late autumn, kept these river and brook meadows clean; and thus they were found ready for the mower's scythe. The natural grasses grew thick and rank — as an early writer expresses it, "up to a man's face;" but when cut early they were very nutritious, and were depended on for hay and fall feed. The virgin soil of the uplands required no rotation of cultivated crops, and corn and rye were grown many years in succession, and the tame grasses were consequently neglected. For summer pasturage, the cattle were allowed to range the woods and "commons." They were sometimes put in charge of a herdsman, but oftener permitted to roam at will. As late as 1728, the Hadley farmers allowed their cattle to range many miles to the eastward; and what they called the "Brookfield pastures" were bounded easterly by Ware river.

The second care of the first planters was, conveniency of corn-land and rye-fields, what they termed "plain land." The custom then prevailed, to set apart the Great Field, i.e., a tract where all the proprietors could have each his proper proportion of tillage land, to be worked in common and enclosed by a common fence. Hence the broad plains and swells which were free from rocks were in demand. These conditions were exactly met by the tract which lay to the west and north-west of Coy's brook. And as the eminence now known as Foster's hill, was then free from woods, except possibly here and there a huge timber tree, and was sufficiently near and commanded a full view of the meadows and plain, and was every way an eligible spot for dwellings, it would seem that there could be no hesitancy where to locate the Town Plot.

If any preparation was made this year for marking off the home-lots, and erecting houses, the plan was most effectually frustrated by the Indian raid of the next spring, [see ante, p. 42.] and the tedious and unsatisfactory negotiations which were carried on by our English authorities with Uncas, and which lasted through the year. And the threatening state of Indian affairs, which continued for a considerable period, seem to have discouraged these intended planters, so that no further attempt at a settlement was made till the spring of 1665.

The grant, the previous year, to Mr. Eliot, of 4,000 acres adjoining the Ipswich grant, near Quabaug, for a new Indian plantation; and the movement of the Dedham men, early this year (1665) to secure the rich Deerfield meadows, stimulated John Warner and his associates to take possession of their granted Quabaug lands before it was too late. It is probable that Warner and his son Samuel, John Ayres, Thomas Parsons and Thomas Wilson came upon the ground, and put up at least two frames, and planted some corn — though Mr. Warner's family did not remove hither till fall.

Now that an actual settlement had been made, and possession taken, it became necessary to procure a title to the land from the native owners. [And the fact that a deed was not taken earlier is presumptive evidence that possession was not taken earlier.] As was customary in these parts, the pioneers employed one of the magistrates or traders living at Springfield, who had the acquaintance and confidence of the Indians, to bargain for and take a deed of the premises.

Here followeth the copy of the Deed for the Purchase of the lands at Quawbauge (now called Brookfeild) from the Indian called Shattoockquis, together wth Leiut. Shattoockquis an Indian above mentioned did own & acknowledge this to be his act & deed resigning up all his right title & intrest in the lands above mentioned unto Thomas Cooper his Associates & Assignes as above said, this Tenth day of November, 1665: .

Before mee JOHN PYNCHON Assistant: .

In relation to this deed, the first thing that strikes the reader is the indefiniteness of the bound lines. It is evident that the compass was not used in the survey. Indeed, the compass was first brought into use in laying out land grants in this region, by Lieut. Fisher of Dedham when he surveyed the Deerfield lands in 1665. They had a chain to measure distances, and some prominent object was selected as starting and turning point. The chief concern was to get the full quantity named in the grant.

The second noticeable point is, that the deed covered only lands which, from their position, would naturally belong to the Wekabaug chieftain. The Indian village site, before described, at the southerly end of Quabaug pond, with its fishing-places and planting-ground, was, by the terms carefully excluded, as was also the territory on the west belonging to the Indian hill settlement.

The third noticeable point is, the care taken to enumerate all the valuable meadow-lands within the six miles square. The meadows on both sides of the Quabaug river are specified; and the other smaller meadows and brooks "where meadow is," are named in their proper order, going westerly from the starting-point on the right hand side of the river, and easterly on the left bank. And this helps us to place the several localities indicated. Nacommuck was what was formerly known as Great brook, now called Moore's brook; Massequockummiss was Coy's brook; Lashaway retains the same name; Naltaug was Dean's brook in Warren; Masquabamisk was the valley of Mason's brook; and Nanantomqua was the meadow and low land lying south of the river and south-west of Quabaug pond. The "little hill Wullammanick" must have been the rounded hill northerly of East Brookfield village. This places Podunk meadow some distance to the west of the mouth of Five-mile brook.

The price paid for this land was three hundred fathom of wampum-pegge. This was the Indian money made from white sea-shells, wrought in the shape of beads, and strung like beads. There were 360 pieces in a fathom. The current value of this money in English shillings and pence varied; at the date under consideration, it was worth five shillings a fathom, which made the price paid for the land, 1,500 shillings, equal, according to the rule of reckoning of that day, to £75.¹

As appears in Lieut. Cooper's instrument of assignment, the purchase-money was paid by the petitioners who obtained the grant.

As already intimated, it is believed that John Warner was the father of Brookfield, and probably built the first house here. His son Samuel came with him in 1665. John Ayres was perhaps the "pushing man" of the enterprise, and came with the Warners. Thomas Parsons, then unmarried, and Thomas Wilson were here at about the same date. Richard Coy and Wm. Prichard, who became leading men, did not bring their families here till 1667. John Younglove came on in 1667. And these persons comprised the "6 or 7 families" named in the General Court's order of this latter date.

Re-grant of 1667. As the three years' limit, named in the original grant, had expired, and the political status of the settlement was somewhat uncertain, the above-named inhabitants sent a petition to the General Court, asking to be organized into a township, or for the appointment of a Committee with powers to manage the prudential affairs of the place, lay out lands, etc.

May 15, 1667, In ans^r to the petition of the inhabitants at Quabaug: This Court, having perused the grant which the Generall Court made anno 1660 to the first undertakers for that place, doe finde that, 1. By their non observance of the condition of their grant, the same is altogether voyd, & that now the ordering & disposing thereof is wholly in this Court's power.

2. Considering that there is already at Quabaug about sixe or seven families, & that the place may be capable of receiving many more, this Court will readily grant them the liberty of a touneship when they shall be in a ffit capacity.

3. In the meane time this Court appoints Capt. John Pinchon, John Aires, Wm Prichard, Richard Coy, & John Younglow, or any three of them, whereof Capt. Pinchon to be one of the three, who shall have power to admitt inhabitants, grant lands, & to order all the prudentiall affayres of the place in all respects, untill it shall appeare that the place shall be so farr settled with able men as this Court may judge meete to give them the full liberty of a touneship according to lawe.

4. Because the inhabitants of Ipswich made the first motion for that plantation, & some of them have binn at charges about it, although by their remisse prosecution they have now lost all their right, yet, such of them as shall setle there by midsummer come twelve moneth, they shall have an interest in the lands there in proportion with others; but if by that time they shall not be there settled, they shall then loose their lands, & all their charges which they have been at upon y^e place.

5. They are to take care for the getting & mayntayning of a godly minister among them, & that no evill persons, enemjes to the lawe of this commonweale in judgment or practise, be received as inhabitants.

6. For promoting of the aforesajd plantation, & encouragement thereof, this Court doeth now grant that plantation seven yeares freedom from all publick rates & taxes to the country, provided those inhabitants of Ipswich which intend to inhabit at Quabaug by midsummer come twelve month doe engage to give security to the above-sajd committee, within three moneths after the date hereof, that they will performe accordingly, that so others that would setle there may not be hindred."¹

Under the circumstances, this action of the Court was both just and generous. It evinced the purpose to overlook any past remissness, to give the Ipswich undertakers the chance to secure themselves for any expenditures heretofore made, to foster the infant plantation and give it an established footing, and keep out all "evill persons" and adventurers. The safe-guards were commensurate with the privileges.

Some writers on Brookfield history have taken exception to what they regard as an obnoxious restriction and reproach on the character of these founders of the town, viz., the appointment of a Committee to admit inhabitants and manage affairs. But such was the custom of the time. Lancaster had such a Committee in 1657, Northfield in 1672. And it was a measure dictated by wise forethought. The policy of the Province was, to distribute its eligible lands so as to insure the planting of towns of sufficient capacity in numbers and pecuniary resources, to become self-supporting and productive centres; and to have from the outset an able and godly ministry of the Word. Numbers, character, and wealth were thus essential factors. And until a plantation should have these, and thus be qualified to be a township, it was wise to put its prudential affairs in the hands of a Committee of trustworthy and discreet men; otherwise the six or seven settlers might apportion the whole six miles square among themselves, and yet be without capacity for self-support and the support of religious ordinances and schools. The passion for land speculation, and personal aggrandizement was not unknown in 1667! It should be added, that in most cases, the ad interim Committee was composed wholly of non-residents; the Quabaug Committee had the advantage and special honor, that 4 of its 5 members were of its own inhabitants. As will appear, the powers of this Committee ceased, when the town was incorporated in 1673.

Allotment of Lands.— In the orderly settling of a new town, an early and important matter was the division of the lands among the planters. The fee was commonly vested in the inhabitants as a body; which body, either through a Committee, or by corporate action, made distribution to individual engagers and families. The statutes provided no general rule of apportionment; each town established its own rules of equity. Usually, both persons and property were considered in making divisions. The head of the family and the older sons, and sometimes the wife and all the children were taken into the account, in estimating the needs of a household and its ability to cultivate the lands. Quite often the "home-lots" were equal in size, or put in two or four classes, representing wholes, halves and quarters; and the "meadow lots," and the proportions in "planting fields" varied according to pecuniary means and ability of labor. In the settlement of Sudbury in 1637, the home-lots were nominally of equal size, viz., four acres, varied however, to conform to the lay of the land. These lots represented the common venture of the planters, and were not taxed for ordinary town charges. Meadow lands, which were the main source of income, constituted a person's "estate," on which the taxes were levied. They were apportioned "according to persons (polls) and property, and a man's ability to improve his land." Plain lands were set apart into common fields, on the same rule as meadows, each man cultivating his particular allotment, and maintaining his share of the general fence. Woodlands were held as public property, and the cutting of fire-wood and timber was regulated by the town. In Hadley, settled 1659, every planter had a home-lot of 8 acres. The meadows were distributed somewhat according to the sum which each planter subscribed to the common stock "to take up lands by." In practice, a list was made out, and a sum set against each settler's name (by his consent) which was taken to represent his estate put into the venture (not necessarily his actual estate), on which he was to be rated both in the allotment of lands, and in taxation. The highest sum was £200, the lowest £50. £200 drew 50½ acres of meadow; £50 drew 12½ acres.

But as the Brookfield settlers came from Essex county, it is likely that they would hold the views which prevailed in that vicinity. In Haverhill, where John Ayres lived for a time, the rule of division and apportionment was: "There shall be three hundred acres laid out for house-lots and no more; and he that was worth two hundred pounds should have twenty acres to his house-lot, and none to exceed that number; and so every one under that sum, to have acres proportionable for his house-lot, together with meadow, and Common, and planting-ground, proportionably."

The first Book of Records of the Committee for Quabaug appears to have been kept by Mr. Pynchon, who signs himself "Recorder." Naturally this book was given into the hands of the town clerk of Brookfield, at the incorporation of the town in 1673; and undoubtedly it perished in the conflagration of 1675. The means therefore, for determining the place and dimensions of the original Brookfield Town Plot, and the rule by which the lands were allotted to the settlers, consist of a few attested extracts from that first Record Book, copied in 1674 and found among Mr. Pynchon's papers; the deeds by which the original planters or their heirs transferred their titles; the site of the first meeting-house, which can be identified; and a few land-marks that time and cultivation have not obliterated.

A careful study of these several records and landmarks makes it certain that the Town Plot, i.e., the home-lots, was laid out so as to take in what is now known as Foster's hill, extending from Hovey's brook on the south-east to Coy's brook on the north-west, and bounded by the river meadow southerly, and reaching on the northerly side to the foot of the hill. The area of this Plot was nominally 500 acres.

It is believed that the home-lots originally contained 20 acres each, with a right to 20 acres of meadow and 8 or 10 acres of plain land. The minister, and men with grown-up sons, appear to have received double lots, or one and one-half lots.

The road through the Town Plot, then turned northerly at the Prichard place, running round instead of over the hill as at present.

It is matter of record that the meeting-house was located in the middle of the Plantation; and that it stood "about 20 rods" from Sergt. Ayres' tavern, which would place it a little to the west or north-west of D. H. Richardson's barn — "the slough," or wet run, then being "on the west side of the house."

The order in which the home-lots were laid out, is as follows — beginning at Coy's brook: 1. Richard Coy; 2. Thomas Parsons; 3. John Warner; 4. Samuel Kent; 5. Samuel Warner; 6. John Younglove; 7. Thomas Wilson [in Second Settlement, the Grosvenor, and later Rev. T. Cheney's lot]; 8. Thomas Millett; 9. Meeting-house lot — "half an acre;" 10. Sergt. John Ayres (now D. H. Richardson); 11. William Prichard (the Watson place); the broken land adjoining was reserved for "Common;" 12. James Travis; 13. Judah Trumble; 14. Daniel Hovey; 15. James Hovey; 16. Thomas Hovey. These three Hovey lots were located easterly of the little brook, and on the north side of the road, and contained 30 acres each; Thomas did not come to occupy, and the lot was granted to John Chadwick.

Besides "meadow" and "plain," each home-lot carried a right to 40 acres of "upland," — the precise application of which term is not easy to determine. All undivided lands were held in common, for fire-wood, lumber and pasturage.

The meadows, which were allotted and occupied in the First Settlement, were those on the river, on Coy's and Hovey's brooks, and on the Great brook that runs into Wekabaug pond, and particularly those on the eastern branch then called Mill brook.

The "Great Field," where all the families had their planting-ground, comprised the plain lands lying westerly from Coy's brook, extending towards the Indian planting-field. It covered the site of West Brookfield village as far west as the "Common." The same land was held for a like purpose in the Second Settlement.

Ministry Land. One full home-lot, with its due proportion of meadow and plain, and all accruing rights, was set apart for the use and improvement of the minister. As no one was installed in that office in the First Settlement, this lot was not taken up. Mr. Younglove, who officiated as the first preacher, received a grant as an inhabitant, and his heirs held the fee and sold the same after the town was re-settled. The same is true of Mr. Millett, the second preacher. The following scrap, preserved from the general destruction of ancient records, relates to the ministry lot: "At a meeting of the Committee for Brookfield July 2^d 1668, Present John Pynchon, John Ayres, Richard Coye, William Pritchard, then ordered and agreed that the land that is lying between John Younglov's and Samuel Warners' land be reserved for a ministry; there is six acres of meadow secured for it on the west side Coy's brook next the Pine plain."

Burial Place. — It was customary in the early days of New England, to bury the dead around the meeting-house. But there is no tradition or other evidence to connect the old Brookfield meeting-house lot with such uses. Indeed the land was wet, and unsuitable for such a purpose. As neither the records nor tradition pointed to the old cemetery by Wekabaug pond (then covered by Indian wigwams), nor to the cemetery at the South village, as the place of the first interments, the question, Where were the first burials made? promised to remain unanswered. To the observing habits and good memory of Mr. Thomas Knowlton, librarian at West Brookfield, belongs the credit of furnishing the probable answer to the question. Mr. K. states that in his boyhood he often noticed a smooth plot of ground, containing about one-quarter of an acre, where there were then plainly distinguishable eight or ten grave-mounds, having rude stones set to mark the head and foot. One of the larger head-stones contained a monogram; but time had rendered it practically illegible. The writer has visited the spot in company with Mr. K. and others. It lies about 100 rods northerly from the old meeting-house site. And although considerable changes have been made by building a wall across the graves, and utilizing the grave-stones in its construction, enough remains to verify Mr. K.'s early observations, and render it reasonable to conclude that here was the place of the earliest burials. The soil was favorable; the spot was in plain sight from the meeting-house; and the distance was not objectionable. The land is now owned by A. W. Smith and D. H. Richardson, and is occupied for pasturage. The Brookfields owe it to their good name, and filial instincts, to enclose and forever consecrate this spot to the memory of their pioneer dead! Near the burial place are some very ancient cellar holes. And there is evidence that in early times the road ran from the Ayres tavern to this spot, where it parted, one branch leading round the hill towards the west, the other striking more north towards the Owen place.

Corn Mill. — This was a necessity to a new plantation. A saw mill was a convenience, but not a necessity. For in its place, the first settlers built a saw-pit, viz., a platform and pit, set in a steep hillside, where two men, one above and the other below to operate the saw, would supply the few boards for inside casings, and the joists and small stuff for a frame; and the large timbers were hewn by hand; and the outside covering consisted of cleft-boards, i.e., boards split from oak and chestnut "bolts," and laid on as we lay clapboards. — The records state that Mr. Pyncheon had built a grist-mill at Quabaug, before 1674, probably as early as 1667. It stood on the east branch of the brook that enters the head of Wekabaug pond, which branch was then called "Mill brook." The site is about fifty rods from the point where the brooks unite. This mill was burnt by the Indians when the town was destroyed in 1675. Not finding sufficient water for summer use, a ditch was dug across the meadows above Whortleberry hill, with a view to turn the water from the west branch into this mill branch — hence the name “Ditch meadows.” For his labor and pains in the matter, Mr. P. received the following grants: “Granted to Mr. John Pynchon 7 acres of meadow upon the Mill brook about 40 rods off where the mill now stands, and all the meadow above the mill upon both sides the brook, and 3 acres along the brook to his mill, together with the stream.” And for this and other services and expenses, Mr. P. had granted to him at Quabaug “50 acres of upland, laid out and measured to him together on the westerly side of the Brooke which runs through Matchuck meddow; and 25 acres of meddow, laid out in two parcels, one at the small falls in the brook, 20 acres on both sides, at Matchuck, joining Samuel Kent’s meddow.” “Measured and returned by corp. Richard Coy, the measurer of land there.”

Thus the new plantation started on its hopeful, but as the event proved, short life.

As might have been foreseen, but probably was not fully weighed, the liberal allotments of “meadow lands” made to each of the first undertakers, consumed all the handy grass-bearing intervalles on the Quabaug river, Coy’s brook, Hovey’s brook and Great brook. And a desirable class of adventurers were not attracted by the small and scattered patches of meadow on the more distant streams which fell within the six miles grant. More land was craved for the sake of more “meadows;” and the people desired “the privileges of a town,” so that they could dispose of their territory in a way to promote what appeared to be their true interests. And it was in furtherance of this desire that they sent the following petition to the General Court:

“To the much honored Gen^l Court held at Boston the 12th of October, 1670 —

“This honored Court being pleased upon petition presented to them by some of the inhabitants of Ipswich for land to settle a plantation at Quo-boag; so far to favor their motion as to grant them a tract of land of six miles Square for that end, and farther since to encourage the poor inhabitants that are upon it: The humble petition therefore of the poor inhabitants of Quoboag to this honored Court is that according as they were pleased to intimate their readiness to grant us the liberty of a township (whereby meet inhabitants upon the place we should be capable of it) so they would be pleased at this time to do it, Our humble petition to this hon’d Ct. is farther that they would be pleased to enlarge our grant, if they see good — for that we may go six miles every way from the centre, The reason of this our request to the hon’d Ct. is because we find the meadow to lie very much scattered about the place in many small parcels far distant one from the other & therefore we fear that unless the hon'd Ct. grant us some considerable further enlargement we shall not be able to fetch within our bounds a sufficient quantity of meadow to accommodate families enough to make a comfortable society in a place so remote in the wilderness as ours is. We would further crave leave to acquaint the honored Ct that there is a great farm of land laid out very near our plantation for Peter Tuft as we do adjudge within a matter of three or four miles from the river which runs through our place to Springfield as we humbly conceive that it will fall within our bounds, If it should not we humbly crave that the hon'd Ct would grant that it may pay public charge with us; it being very difficult to carry on a place so remote from all other plantations in the woods as ours is; And this hon'd Court so far countenancing us as they have already doth persuade us by way of humble petition to present these things to this hon'd Court, submitting ourselves their good pleasure concerning us herein.

Wee whose names, are here under written have subscribed hereto in the behalf of the rest,

RICHARD COY

From QUOBOAG, October 9th 1670¹

No action of the General Court on this petition is found in the State Archives. Perhaps the largeness of the quantity of land asked for, contrasted with the fewness of the then inhabitants, may have been a reason for non-action. And it is fair to infer that the slowness of the people in settling a minister may have been another reason. And the two restrictive provisos in the Act of 1673 (soon to be quoted) suggest other reasons.

The "Peter Tufts farm," referred to in this petition, was a tract of 600 acres, originally granted, Apr. 29, 1668, to Capt. John Pierce, who sold the same June 4, 1669, to his brother-in-law Peter Tufts of Charlestown, said farm being "southwest about 5 or 6 miles from Quabaug, upon the road to Springfield" — in what is now the southwesterly part of Warren, and adjacent part of Brimfield.

The Town Incorporated. — The next paper in order, in our annals, is the petition of 1673, which led to the passage of an Act to incorporate the town, and which furnishes a list — probably complete — of the then settlers. "The files of the General Court had been repeatedly searched in vain for the petition, on which was based the legislative action of Oct. 1673; and the discouraging conclusion was arrived at that this most important link in the chain of the early history of the town was forever lost. But by the merest accident of time and place, the original petition " In ans^r to y^e peticōn of the Inhabitants of Quabaug The Court Judgeth it meet to grant their request i.e. the liberty & priviledge of a Township and that the name thereof be Brookefeild Provided they Divide not the whole land of the Township till they be forty or fivety families, in the meane tyme that their Dividings one to another exceed not two hundred acres apeece to any present Inhabitant. originale, E. R. Se."

Two months later, Lieut. Thomas Cooper of Springfield, who was named as grantee in the Indian deed of 1665 [see ante, p. 53], made assignment of the said deed to the inhabitants of the new Town as follows :

I Thomas Cooper above mentioned doe hereby relinquish & resigne up all my right & title in y^e lands within mentioned to be bought of Shattoock-quis, hereby declaring that my acting in y^e p^rmisses was only in the behalfe & for the use & behoofe of the Inhabitants of Quabaug (now called Brookefeild) & their successors :— The purchase of the above mentioned land being at their p^per cost & charge, who had obteyned a grant thereof from y^e Honnord Gen^{ll} Crte & are now allowed a Towne : I doe therefore hereby deliver up this Instrument or deed of sale to John John Warner, Richard Coy, & William Pritchard of Quabaug alias Brookefeild for the vse & as the propp^r right of the Inhabitants of Brookefeild :— The said Persons beinge betrusted by the Towne or present Inhabitants of Brookefeild for taking in & receiving this present Deed : Wherefore I doe hereby deliver it up to them hereby declaring it & the land therein mentioned to be sold to be & belong to the p^rsent Inhabitants of Brookefeild as they are a Township, and to particular p^rsons only according as they have or shall have grants of land confirmed to them : The whole Tract of land above mentioned, I doe fully & absolutely resigne up to the Inhabitants of Brookefeild aforesaid and to their successors & their heires for Ever, As witness my hand this 19th day of December : 1673.

THOMAS COOPER

December 19th 1673: Leivt Thomas Cooper above mentioned subscribed hereunto & acknowledged the resigning up this Deed & all his intrest in the premises to the Inhabitants of Brookefeild :

A brief notice of the heads of families of these, the original founders of Brookfield, should be given in this connection.

JOHN AYRES, SEN. He was of Haverhill, 1645; Ipswich, 1648; a petitioner for Quabaug, 1660, whither he removed with the first undertakers, and was a leading man in the new plantation. He was killed by the Indians Aug. 2, 1675. His first wife was Sarah, daughter of John Williams of Haverhill; second wife was Susanna, daughter of Mark Symonds of Ipswich, who with the younger children returned to I. after the destruction of Brookfield. Of the sons, John, Jr., and Samuel were signers of the petition for the township, and perhaps then had families. The other brothers, Thomas, Joseph, Mark, Nathaniel and Edward (and the heirs of John, Jr., and Samuel), received large grants in Brookfield, ostensibly in their father's (and grandfather's) right, after the Second Settlement. One of them, viz., Joseph, came to reside at B., and left large posterity.

RICHARD COY, SEN. In 1638, he, aged 13, and his brother Matthew, aged 15, came to Boston, perhaps with a sister Mary, who married John Lake. Was of Salisbury, 1650, and in 1658 he is found at Wenham with a wife Martha and sons Richard (a signer of the petition of 1673) and John, and had Jebuz, b. at W. June 16, 1660; and at Salisbury, Caleb, b. Aug. 16, 1666. He was in Brookfield 1667; a leading man; "Coy's brook" and "Coy's hill" perpetuate his name. He was killed by the Indians Aug. 2, 1675, and his widow "fled to Boston" with her children. In 1699, John Coy of Wenham, wife Elizabeth, sold to Thomas Barns, all his farm in Brookfield, together with the rights granted to his father "Richard Coy, Senior."

JOHN WARNER. He was born in England about 1616; came to New England with his father William, brother Daniel and sister Abigail in 1637, and settled at Ipswich. Mar. 10, 1655, he married Priscilla, daughter of Mark Symonds of I. He was probably an original petitioner for Quabaug, and among the first undertakers there. In August 1665, he sold his homestead in I. and took his family to Brookfield, whither he himself had gone in the spring. He held honorable position at B. After the destruction of the town, he took refuge at Hadley, where his son Mark had settled, and where he died May 17, 1692. Of his children (some of them by a first wife), 1. Samuel, b. 1640, came to Quabaug with his father, had a home-lot and other lands, and was an inhabitant till 1675. He married Oct. 21, 1662, at Ipswich, Mercy, daughter of Richard Swan. He was of Dunstable, N.H., 1685; had 8 children, 5 or 6 of which were born at B. 2. Mark, settled in Hadley. 3. John, probably settled in Springfield. 4. Nathaniel, signed the petition 1673, though only 18 years old, a weaver; was post-rider between Springfield and Boston, 1675-80; settled in Hadley. 5. Joseph, b.

1657. 6. Mehitable, b. 1658. 7. Daniel, b. 1661, d. Ipswich, 1688. 8. Eleazar, b. 1662, settled Hadley. 9. Priscilla, b. 1666.

WILLIAM PRICHARD. He was of Lynn 1645, and of Ipswich 1648, where he was taxed in 1667, in which year he removed to Quabaug. He was killed Aug. 2, 1675. His son Samuel (who signed the petition of 1673) was killed during the siege of B. by the Indians. His sons, John of Topsfield and Joseph of Amesbury, in 1690, sell to their brother William of Suffield, all their lands in Brookfield, with their rights in the estates of their father and brother Samuel. Previous to this, however, a part of the father's estate had been sold to Hezekiah Dickinson of Hadley, who perhaps lived in Brookfield long enough to erect the "frame of a house," which he sold in 1693, with 55 acres of land, to Stephen Jennings of Hatfield, whose son Joseph (the second representative of B. to the General Court) with wife Mary, sold the same with other parcels, in 1717, to Tilly Merrick of Springfield.

JOHN YOUNGLOVE. Perhaps he was son of Samuel of Ipswich. In the Memoir of Rev. Michael Wigglesworth by John Ward Dean, it is stated that Mr. W. being in poor health, was encouraged by John Younglove to visit the Bermudas with him. They sailed from Boston, Sept. 23, 1663, and were absent nearly a year. In 1667, he is in Quabaug, and the next January administered on the estate of his brother James of Q., who died without a family. He preached to the Quabaug people till 1674, probably with no great acceptance to them or himself. After the destruction of Q. he removed to Hadley, where he taught the grammar school for several years. In 1681, he is found as a preacher at Suffield. Probably he was never ordained, and when the Court advised him to cease preaching, it may derogate nothing from his moral worth, for as a correspondent says, "he may have had an unhappy temper, but it is not unlikely that the temper of the people was worse than his." He died in Suffield, June 3, 1690, leaving a wife Sarah and several children. The eldest son John was born in Brookfield, the others in Hadley and Suffield. In March 1703, his home-lot, and the principal part of his estate in Brookfield was sold to Rev. Joseph Smith, then minister at B.

SAMUEL KENT. Was from Gloucester, perhaps son of Thomas, who was in G. 1643. Settled in Brookfield after 1667. On the destruction of the town, he removed to Suffield, where he died Feb. 2, 1691. In 1686, he sold his home-lot and rights in B. to John Scott, Sen., of Suffield, whose sons Ebenezer and William, in 1703, sold the same to Thomas Barns of Brookfield. His wife was Frances; children, Sarah, b. 1657, Mary, b. 1658, Samuel, b. 1661, John, b. 1664. His brother Thomas Kent, says Savage, "was of Brookfield in 1671," and of Gloucester 1690.

THOMAS PARSONS. Was son of Thomas of Windsor, born Aug. 9, 1645; was in Brookfield 1665 or 6; married Dec. 24, 1668, Sarah Dare of Windsor, and had Sarah, b. 1669, Hannah, b. 1671, Thomas, b. 1674. His wife died June 14, 1674, and he removed to Suffield, where in 1699, with a wife Priscilla, they "being old and having no posterity," adopt Nathaniel Austin, who, in 1702, then of Suffield, with wife Abigail (daughter of Lieut. Thomas Hovey of Hadley), sold Thomas Barns and Samuel Owen of Brookfield all lands there formerly granted to Thomas Parsons.

THOMAS WILSON. Was son of Theophilus of Ipswich. He was living at I. 1657, when his daughter Mary was born; probably went to Brookfield with the first undertakers in 1665. He was known to the Indians as "Major Wilson"; was wounded during the siege of the town; returned to Ipswich. Felt says that he was "allowed £1., Oct. 7, 1675, for his losses by the Enemy at Quabaug." His daughter Hannah died at I. 1682.

JAMES TRAVIS. Was son of Henry of Newbury, where he was born Apr. 28, 1645. He married in Gloucester, Apr. 18, 1667, Mercy, daughter of John Pierce, and had Mercy, b. Feb. 8, 1668 (m. Benj. Whitney of Framingham), in which year he sold his house and land in Gloucester to Thomas Millett, Sen., and removed to Brookfield, where he had James (who settled in Framingham), and perhaps others. He returned to Essex Co., and died before 1717, when his heirs applied for a grant of land in B., "in their father's right," and received "60 acres near Brookfield Saw mill."

JAMES HOVEY. It appears that in 1668 or 9, three home-lots and their accompanying land-rights, were granted to Daniel Hovey of Ipswich, and his sons James and Thomas. The home-lots were located on the easterly side of the Town Plot, and N. of the road. Thomas "not coming to reside" at Brookfield, his lands were re-granted to John Chadwick of Watertown, who sold the same in 1687 to Peter King of Sudbury. Thomas settled in Hadley. Daniel, the father, came to B. in 1668, and settled; but before the town was destroyed he removed to Hadley, and subsequently back to Ipswich, where he died Apr. 1692. James settled on his grant in Brookfield, and raised a family. He was killed by the Indians Aug. 2, 1675, as appears from a list filed in the State Archives. His name is not mentioned in Capt. Wheeler's Narrative of the destruction of B.; and the probable inference is, that he was overtaken by the Indians near his own house, which was at a considerable distance from the Ayres place. His wid. Priscilla filed Inventory of his estate, Mar. 26, 1676. In 1703, his children, James of Malden, a weaver, Daniel of Ipswich, and Samuel Smith and wife Priscilla of Charlestown, sell their rights in Brookfield to Benoni Morse of Dedham, said estate adjoining land formerly granted his father Daniel Hovey and his brother Thomas.

JUDAH TRUMBULL. Was son of John, of Roxbury 1639, who married Ann, daughter of Richard Swan of Rowley, and sister of Mercy the wife of Samuel Warner of Brookfield. He was of Rowley; removed to Brookfield; and about 1676 to Suffield. By wife Mary he had John, b. Mar. 5, 1674; Ebenezer, b. Aug. 1, 1675, Joseph, b. 1677, Judah, b. 1679, who was killed by the Indians near Brookfield in July 1706, and others, and died in Suffield Apr. 1, 1692. His brother Joseph, who was of Suffield before 1675, was grandfather of the first Gov. Jonathan Trumbull of Connecticut.

THOMAS MILLETT. There is evidence that he succeeded Mr. Younglove as minister at Brookfield in 1674; though his name does not appear in any list of the inhabitants extant. He received a grant of a homelot of "20 acres, and 10 acres of meadow," which his son Nathaniel of Gloucester sold Feb. 21, 1710-1, to Lieut. Thomas Baker. "Millett's meadow," often named in later records, commemorates a part of this grant. He came to New England 1635, with wife Mary, and son Thomas, and settled in Dorchester, where he had other children. In 1655, he was in Gloucester, and a preacher, though perhaps not ordained. He was in G. in 1668; was with his wife living in Brookfield June 3, 1675, when he gave consent to the sale of land in Gloucester. He died early in 1676; his wife died at G. Sept. 27, 1682.

EDWARD SCOTT, who settled in Hadley, was a resident in Brookfield for a short time.

HEZĒKIAH DICKINSON lived awhile in Brookfield during the First Settlement, before his marriage; he afterwards bought the Prichard homelot and rights, which he sold Apr. 15, 1693, to Stephen Jennings, and returned to Hadley, his native place.

[The foregoing notices of the early settlers of Brookfield are compiled mainly from notes furnished by Henry E. Waite, Esq.]

Of the 17 men who signed the petition of 1673, five were killed by the Indians, either in the Ambush of Aug. 2, 1675, or the siege that followed; and the rest scattered to old or new homes, when the town was deserted. No one of them (except Joseph Ayres, then a youth) appears to have returned to Brookfield. The terrible experiences of that week of woe made impressions and inwrought associations which were indelible; and set their hearts against the place that could nevermore be home to them!

By the Act of Oct. 22, 1673, Brookfield was made in the full sense a Town, with authority to manage its own prudential affairs, through the agency of officers chosen in legal town meeting—restricted only as to the apportionment of lands. The area of the town, it should be remembered, at this date was the original six miles square. And considering the broken character of much of the land, and the fact that the best meadows had already been lotted out, the proviso "that their Dividings one to another exceed not 200 acres apiece to any present inhabitant," does not appear unreasonable. If, as there is evidence to believe, each head of a family had already received 120 acres of the most eligible land, the addition of 80 acres would certainly make a respectable farm.

Very little can be learned of the town's affairs, for the ensuing eighteen months. We know, incidentally, that Richard Coy was chosen town measurer, to survey and stake out land grants; and that he was juror in attendance upon the county Court in 1674 and the March term of '75. William Prichard was clerk of the writs, an officer allowed by the shire Court, "to grant summons and attachments in civil actions." All males between 16 and 60 years of age were enrolled in the militia, and required to do annual duty; but no town enrolling less than 64 men was entitled to have a captain. The Brookfield company could not claim a commissioned officer, and was in command of a sergeant. John Ayres was first sergt., Wm. Prichard second sergt., Richard Coy, corporal. Sergt. Ayres was licensed to keep an ordinary or inn, as appears from the county records.¹

As previously stated, a meeting-house was built, and religious worship maintained on the Sabbath, for at least a part of the time. Mr. Younglove conducted these services for a time — though he was not settled, and probably had not received ordination. He was succeeded by Mr. Thomas Millet.

Brookfield is taxed in the "Country Rate" for 1675, £5. 0. 6, and is credited with killing 10 wolves, £5. 0. 0.

The evidence goes to show that there was little growth in the population of the town by accessions from abroad, in the years 1674-5. A reason for this may have been that other new towns offered greater inducements to settlers, from their rich and abundant meadow lands, and better lines of travel towards Boston. The old trails leading to ¹ Extracts from the County Records. — Sept. 26, 1671. Goodman Ayres of Quawbaugie is licensed to keep an ordinary and sell wine and liquor for the ensuing year. The license was renewed in Sept. of the years 1672, 73, and 74.

Mar. 31, 1674. Jno. Ayres Sen. of Brookfield refuses to pay arrearage for the maintenance of Mr. Younglove, on account that he keeps the ordinary and has for time past, and should be free from it.

Mar. 30, 1675. Thomas Wilson of Brookfield was presented by the grand jury for cursing Samuel Warner of the same town. And the town of Brookfield was presented for defect in the bridge over the swamp at Richard Coy's, Sen.; and for want of a common pound.

Mar. 26, 1676. Inventory of estate of James Hovey: "Land at Brookfield, of little value by reason of the Indian Wars and desolation made in that town."

Sept. 26, 1682. The grand jury presented to the court for consideration, the county or country Road at Quabauge, at a muddy brook called Coy's brook, that travellers may pass in safety: Upon inquiry the Court finds a feasible way $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile N. of the mirey place. Same date, the jury presented David Morgan, Nicholas Rust and Thomas Gilbert for hunting at Quabauge on Sabbath with Toby y^e Indian of Mr. Sam'l Marshfield's.

Quabaug were circuitous and hilly. The new "Bay Path" via Worcester, was only opened through in 1674 [see ante, p. 25]. And the non-action of the Legislature upon the Brookfield petition of 1670, as well as the neglect, or inability of the inhabitants to procure the assignment of the deed of the granted and occupied territory to themselves, may indicate the existence of internal dissensions, or other causes, not now understood. And it is likely that the proximity of the Wekabaug Indian village proved a drawback as well as an eye-sore. The natives did not improve in character by intercourse with the whites. English beer and cider and rum induced drunkenness, and its train of evils; the possession of guns rendered hunting more sure of success than his bow and arrows and yank-ups and deer-pits; English beans in part took the place of corn for food supply, and required less labor; and the easing off of the necessity for protracted toil by improved means of cultivation, and the possibility of begging, induced habits of laziness and shiftlessness among the squaws. And continued contact was demoralizing to the English. The white boys—and some of the men—learned to trap and hunt, and imitated the shiftless ways of the Indians.

Signs of a Storm.—As narrated in the preceding chapter, the Indians and English co-occupied the Brookfield lands and lived in comparative harmony, till the spring of 1675. But now the premonitions of a rupture of peace began to be apparent. Mr. Fiske, in his Historical Sermon, says: "Our Indians grew somewhat shy of their English neighbors, and took offence at some damages they had sustained from their cattle." Nominally, the English were required to fence in the homelots, and meadows, and planting-fields; and they set apart and fenced an ox-pasture, and horse and sheep pastures; but hogs ran at large in the town streets, and cows and young stock ranged the Commons. The natives usually put a brush fence around their corn and bean fields; but it was poor protection against the roving cattle. Undoubtedly, causes of offence from this source, were not infrequent.

But the antagonism which now developed itself, had a deeper seat than defective fencing, and cattle trespasses.

Enough was said in the preceding chapter to indicate the close relationship which early subsisted between the Quabaugs, and the Wampanoags, who had been the subjects of Massasoit, and now were the immediate subjects of Philip. And the records of the time show that intercourse between the two tribes was constant, and that some tie, not now fully understood, bound them in a common interest. This social and political intimacy is the clew by which to trace the early enlistment of our Quabaugs in the impending struggle. And it also accounts for the important part which they played in the first campaign, as leaders and fighters ; and thus renders necessary a brief summary of the real causes of King Philip's war.

Undoubtedly the primary cause is to be sought in race jealousy and adverse social conditions. These are always operative, in a greater or less degree, when two hitherto separated peoples come in contact. And they are especially potent when the two races are imbued with opposing religious ideas and customs. And if perchance, the intruding people are superior in strength, and crowd the natives, and impose new customs, the innate jealousy is all the more intensified. This was exactly the case of the New England white settlers. The Plymouth and Massachusetts colonies brought hither the power of civilization, and new religious ideas, and having got possession of the lands and the strategic points of dominion, sought to force upon the Indians obedience to their laws — and thus precipitated the conflict between right and might.

In treating this question, the fact is not to be overlooked, that the Indian possessed in a large degree, a dominant and sanguinary disposition. Suspicious, malignant, blood-thirsty, rule was sweet, and war was a necessity to him ; it was his field of glory ; the scalps in his belt were the emblems of his greatness, and the tokens of renown for his children to boast of. And this was his country. The Indian was owner and sovereign here by right of inheritance, or conquest and possession. He did not invite the English adventurers. They were intruders. [For certain adventitious reasons, already considered, he received them not unwillingly.] And when he sold them the fee in his lands, neither party understood that the native relinquished the right to occupy his old villages, and plant his old fields, and hunt and fish in the woods and streams. Neither by deed nor by treaty did he intentionally consent to part with his personal freedom and political independence, and become subject to the white man's will or the white man's statutes ; he held fast to "the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." That he did not comprehend the full force of the written obligations which he signed, is probably true. The Englishman wrote the deeds and treaties, and understood their technical and legal meaning ; and in the end he chose to interpret the terms used in said documents to his own advantage. He chose to exercise the right of might, as owner and sovereign.

And the peculiar shape and intensity of this antagonism — how the white man used his might — was determined largely by the preconceived opinion he entertained of the red man. What that opinion was, is indicated by the term applied to him by King James in the Plymouth Charter of 1620: "The Savages and brutish People." And the average Pilgrim Father looked upon the Indians as "heathens," who were to be treated as the Amorites and Canaanites were treated by the children of Israel, either "destroyed," or "driven out," or made "to serve under tribute." Roger Williams, and the apostle Eliot, and the Mayhews, and Richard Bourne, and Daniel Gookin, and the promoters of the Society for Propagating the Gospel in New England, were honorable exceptions to this spirit, and notable examples of a true Christian philanthropy. But they did not represent the prevalent temper of the time; and were always in conflict with the military arm of the government. Roger Williams mentions, "a sinful opinion amongst many, that Christians have right to heathens' lands."

But the fact which shows in the clearest manner the estimate put upon the natives by the colonists, is that in the early war with the Pequots (1637), and the later war with Philip (1675), captives — warriors, women and children — even those who voluntarily surrendered — were either condemned to death, or sold into slavery !¹

Those early declarations by the Indian Sachems of fealty to his majesty the King of England, and of subjection to the laws of the Colony, were formal acts, which to the signers meant only "friendship and reciprocity." And Bradford and Brewster were guileless of deceit in the premises, for they meant only "friendship and reciprocity;" and Massasoit signed the compact of a free will; and during their several lives the covenant was neither violated nor much strained. But the opinion that this land was "the Lord's heritage," from which the "powowing heathen" was to be "driven out," was still the shaping force of political measures. The feeble Pilgrim of 1620-40 became the strong landlord and astute diplomat of 1660-75; and Philip the son succeeded Massasoit the father, and his young counsellors and braves had forgotten the lessons of the Pequot War; and both parties gave their own definition to the terms of "friendship" and the obligations of "reciprocity." And as the Indian became more sensible of his humiliation and restive under restraint and surveillance, the English drew the restraining cords the tighter, and made his humiliation the more galling. For some supposed, and some real violations of the written compact, which he signed under compulsion, Philip was summoned before the Plymouth Council, and required to make confession of guilt, pay fines, and deliver up his guns, which he had bought and paid for at English prices.

Mr. Bancroft in his History, has tersely and truly described the situation of things at this juncture. "Churches of 'praying Indians' were gathered; at Cambridge, an Indian became a bachelor of arts. Yet Christianity hardly spread beyond the Indians on Cape Cod, Martha's Vineyard, and Nantucket, and the seven feeble villages round Boston.

The Narragansets, hemmed in between Connecticut and Plymouth, restless and jealous, retained their old belief; and Philip of Pokanoket, at the head of 700 warriors, professed with pride the faith of his fathers.

“But he and the tribes that owned his influence were now shut in by the gathering plantations of the English, and were the first to forebode the danger of extermination. True, the inhabitants of New England had never, except in the territory of the Pequods, taken possession of a foot of land without first obtaining a title from the Indians. But the unlettered savage, who repented the alienation of vast tracts by affixing a shapeless mark to a bond, might deem the English tenure defeasible. Again, by repeated treaties, the red man had acknowledged the jurisdiction of the English, who claimed a guardianship over him, and really endeavored in their courts, with scrupulous justice, and even with favor, to protect him from fraud and to avenge his wrongs. But the wild inhabitants of the woods or the seashore could not understand the duty of allegiance to an unknown sovereign, or acknowledge the binding force of a political compact; crowded by hated neighbors, losing fields and hunting-grounds, and frequently summoned to Boston or Plymouth to reply to an accusation or to explain their purposes, they sighed for the forest freedom which was their immemorial birthright.”

The antagonism of race and religion was radical; and the conflict of right and might was inevitable. Either the Indian must yield and become the degraded vassal to the English conqueror; or he must vindicate his manhood, and establish his rights by war.

Human nature and Indian nature combined to force the issue.

And the time had come.

Philip as the successor of Massasoit, and acknowledged chief of the Eastern Massachusetts Indians, was regarded by the English as the man to be humbled: and Philip, as the successor of Massasoit, and acknowledged chief of the Wamponoags, esteemed himself as the man to lead the tribes to the conflict, and humble the pride of his imperious neighbors, the English.

His first forecast of the situation was a broad and correct one. He laid his plans artfully and his first steps were wise. He took means to arouse the war spirit among his own tribe, and enlist all the dependent clans, and conciliate his allies. The English had got possession of most of his guns, and this proved his vital weakness, as he had not the means to procure a new supply. Probably he enlisted about 400 or 500 warriors of his own. He then opened negotiations with the Narragansets, who were supposed — probably an over-estimate — to be able to raise 1,000 fighting men. For reasons of good policy, Roger Williams had early brought the Narragansets into a league of friendship with Massasoit, which old alliance now greatly favored the schemes of Philip. And there is no doubt that Philip's emissaries visited all the Nipnet clans, the Quabaugs, and the tribes on the Connecticut river, and received assurances of aid.

The plan, thus formed and partially matured, was a comprehensive and wise one. The want of guns for his men, and the diverse interests to be combined, forced a postponement; the betrayal of his secrets by Sassamon and Waban disconcerted and weakened him, while it provoked him to do a vast act of revenge; the impetuous zeal of his young braves in the premature attack on Swansey June 24th, exposed his plans, and gave the alarm; and the sudden appearance of Capt. Moseley with his troop and his dogs, only four days after the butchery at Swansey — all combined to nip in the bud what had great promise of abundant fruits. The unity of design on which the strength of the movement depended, had been frustrated by treachery; and the moral effect which should have attended a general simultaneous uprising of the tribes and clans, was lost.

The defeat of Philip's men by Moseley June 29th, the killing of two of his chief captains July 1st, forced him to act on the defensive; and the opportune coming of Oneko [who in 1661 had led the assault on Quabaug, as see ante, p. 42] and his Mohegans, and a strong war party of Naticks, who in a sharp encounter killed Nimrod, a great captain and chief counsellor of Philip, and fourteen more of his principal men, besides many common warriors — effectually checked his career, discouraged his own followers, alienated some of his trusted allies, and broke his power. The war of 1675-6 is known in history as King Philip's War; and so it was in its inception and plan. But from the day of his flight from Pocasset swamp, Philip was not the commander-in-chief, nor the leading spirit; nor is there evidence that he took part in any assault or battle. He abated nothing of haughtiness, and malice, and artful designs, and intrigue: but the wise in counsel and the leaders in battle, were the Quabaugs, the Nashaways and the Nipnets. "The fear of the colonists, indeed, made Philip the omnipresent arch-fiend who planned each cunning ambush, ordered each bloody massacre, and directed every incendiary torch; the foremost in every attack, the most daring of his race. But the evidence of history fails to sustain these assumptions." — Hon. Geo. Sheldon.

After receiving information through Waban of Natick of Philip's war-like intentions, the Massachusetts authorities sent June 13, 1675, an embassy to the Nipnets and Quabaugs, to discover their leanings and prevent an alliance with the Wampanoag sachem. These messengers visited the Indian towns of Hassanamesit, Manchage, Chabonokong-komun, Quantisset, Wabaquasset, Maanexit, Pakachooge, with the ruler of each of which a satisfactory treaty was made — they "ingaging themselves not to assist Philip, but to hold subjection to the English of Massachusetts." The messengers then proceeded to Quabaug, and obtained this "Subscription :

"The Ruler of Quabage being examined by us, where his men were ; he said that they were at home. Then we asked him whether there were none of them gone to help King Philip to fight against the English of Plymouth ; he said No ; and neither would he help him, for he has been false to him already, and therefore I will not help him : but I will still continue our subjection unto the English of the Massachusetts Colony ; neither will I suffer any of my men to go to help him ; and in confirmation of the same I do set my hand, 25. 4. 75.

This subscription doubtless indicated the real sentiments of the older sachems of the several tribes ; but the engagement was probably a matter of policy rather than of purpose, and was made in opposition to the intentions of the young warriors. And at least four of these Rulers, viz., Black James of Chabonokongkomun, Keehood of Wabaquasset, John of Pakachooge and Conkganasco of Quabaug were found among the enemy at Menameset, the middle of July. Nor is evidence wanting that an emissary of Philip had anticipated the English messengers, and that an alliance, offensive and defensive, had been formed with our tribes early in the spring.

But the Quabaugs had planted their cornfields, as usual ; and nothing had occurred in their villages to attract outside notice and excite suspicion of a hostile intent. By looking at the date of the last paper, it will be seen that the war was actually opened, by the assault of Philip's men on Swansey, the day before said date, viz., June 24. The news would reach Quabaug in two days ; and probably our young warriors immediately (but secretly) left the Indian hill, Wekabaug, and Quabaug pond settlements, and concentrated at the Menameset towns, leaving behind the old men, women and children, and thus masking their purposes from the Brookfield men, as well as from the spies sent from Boston two weeks later.

Not being quite satisfied, it would appear, with the pledges made by the Indian Rulers June 25 (though in ignorance of what had actually happened here), the Massachusetts Governor and Council sent Ephraim Curtis¹ of Sudbury, a brave and trusted guide and messenger, with instructions "to make a perfect discovery of the motions of the Nipmug or Western Indians." His "Return and Relation" is dated July 16, 1675. It has value as an accurate picture of the condition of things hereabouts, proving that the war spirit had pervaded all our interior tribes, and giving an insight into the purposes of the Quabaugs, and a prophecy of what was in store for the Brookfield settlers, and consequently is a material part of our history.

“ . . . In my journey my chief endeavor was to inquire after the motions of the Indians. The first information which I had was that my house at Quansigamug was robbed: The Indians to confirm it showed me some of the goods. And also some other goods which was none of mine; they told me it was very dangerous for me to go into the woods, for that Mattoonas which they said was the leader of them that robbed my house was in company with fifty of Philip’s complices ranging between Chabongonkamug and Quanteseck and Mendum and Warwick, and they might happen to meet me; and if I missed them yet it was dangerous to meet or see the other Nipmug Indians which were gathered together, for they would be ready to shoot me as soon as they saw me. With this news those three Natick Indians which were with me as volunteers, were discouraged, and told me that if I did not provide more company, they were not willing to go with me. Hearing this, I repaired to the constable at Marlboro and to the military officers and told them my business; and they pressed two men with horses and arms to go along with me. And so as we passed the forementioned place [Hassanameset] we could not find any Indians neither in tents nor fields; but after we passed Senecksik some miles into the woods westward we found an Indian path newly made; there being with me a volunteer Indian that come from the Indians out of the wilderness but two or three days before, and he told me he would find them out: so in our travel we followed this track many miles. And found many tents built wherein I suppose they might keep the rendezvous for a day or two. And so we found three places where they had pitched, but found no Indians.¹ And following still in pursuit of the track we came to the leadmines by Springfield old road [see ante, p. 25], where we saw new footing of Indians. And so looking out sharp, in about two miles riding we saw two Indians, which when we saw, I sent the Indian that went with me from Marlboro to speak with them: but so soon as they had discovered us, they ran away from us: but with fast riding and much calling two of our Indians stopped one of them, the other ran away. We asked this Indian where the other Indians were: he being surprised with fear could scarcely speak to us, but only told us that the Indians were but a little way from us: So I sent the Marlboro Indian before to tell them that the Governor of Massachusetts his messenger was coming with peaceable words; but when he came to them they would not believe him; he therefore came riding back and met us.

“These Indians have newly begun to settle themselves upon an Island containing about four acres of ground, being compassed round with a broad mirey swamp on the one side, and a muddy river with meadow on both sides of it on the other side, and but only one place that a horse could possibly pass, and there with a great deal of difficulty by reason of the mire and dirt. Before we came to the river there met us at least forty Indians at a little distance from the river, some with their guns in their hands ready cocked and primed. As we came near to the river most of them next to the river presented at us: all my acquaintance would not know me, although I saw near 20 of them together, and asked their welfare, knowing that many of them could speak good English. I spoke to many of them in the Governor's name which I called my Master the Great Sachem of the Massachusetts English, requiring them to own the fidelity and engagement to the English, telling them that I came not to fight with them or to hurt them, but as a messenger from the Governor to put them in mind of their engagement to the English. I think some of them did believe me, but the most of them would not. There was a very great uproar amongst them; some of them would have had me and my company presently killed, but many others, as I understood afterwards, were against it. I required their sachems to come over the river, but they refused, saying that I must come over to them. My company were something unwilling, for they thought themselves in very great danger where we were; then they said, what shall we be when we come over the river amongst all the vile rout. I told them we had better never have seen them than not to speak with their sachems; and if we ran from them in the time of this tumult, they would shoot after us, and kill some of us: So with much difficulty we got over the river and meadow to the Island where they stood to face us at our coming out of the mire: many Indians with their guns presented at us ready cocked and primed; so we rushed between them, and called for their sachem; they presently faced about and went to surround us, we rushed between them once or twice, and bid them stand in a body, and I would face them; but still the uproar continued with such noise that the air rang. I required them to lay down their arms, and they commanded us to put up our arms first and come off our horses, which I refused to do. Some of them which were inclinable to believe us or were our friends some laid down their arms, but the others continued the uproar for a while; and with much threatening and persuasion, at last the uproar ceased. Many of them said they would neither believe me nor my master, without he would send them two or three bushels of powder. At length I spoke with their sachems, which were five, and other grandees, which I think were about twelve more. Our Natick Indians seemed to be very industrious all this time to still the tumult and so persuade the Indians. And as soon as I came to speak with the sachems, we dismounted and put up our arms. I had a great deal of speech with them by an interpreter, being brought to their Court and sent out again three or four times. The names of the sachems are these—1. Muttaump, 2. Konkewasco, 3. Willymachen, 4. Upchattuck, 5. Keehood, 6. Noncatonsoo. Muttaump I perceive is chosen to be head over the other five, and was the chief speaker. Their company in numbers I judge to be near two hundred of men. They would fain have had me to stay all night: I asked the reason of some that could speak English; they said that they had some messengers at Connecticut and some southward, and that was the reason they would have me stay.

I asked them the reason of their rude behavior towards us. And they said they heard that the English had killed a man of theirs about Merrymak river, and that they had an intent to destroy them all. I left them well appeased when I came away. More might be added; but thus far this is a true relation.

JULY 16, 1675.¹

Of the Indian sachems above named, Muttaump was a Quabaug, the same whose name is written Mettawomppe in the Brookfield deed of 1665, and who without doubt was leader in the ambush of Capts. Hutchinson and Wheeler, and the siege of Brookfield, and was one of the shrewdest and bravest plotters and warriors of the war; Konkewasco was also a Quabaug sachem; Upchattuck was a Nashaway chieftain, commonly known as Sagamore Sam; Keehood and Noncatonsoo were Wabbaquassets.

This "Return and Relation" evidently surprised and alarmed the Governor and Council. They were unprepared to learn of the widespread disaffection among the natives, and especially of the strong combination already formed by the western clans. And the full significance of Curtis' Relation is seen when we recall the fact that two days before (July 14) and at the very time when he was in conference with the Indians at Menameset, a war party had surprised the town of Mendon, only 30 miles from Boston, and killed five men who were at work in the field.

Immediately the authorities despatched Curtis on a second visit to Brookfield and Menameset, with a message to the Indians and letters to Major Pynchon. He returned to Boston July 24 and made this Report:

"... I proceeded according to your order in my journey to the Indians, and going through Brookfield, I delivered your letters directed to Maj. Pynchon to the constable of Brookfield. From this went directly to the Indians, and found them at the same place where they were before. We sent one Indian before us to give an account of our coming: at which they made a great shout. When we came to the river we called to have the Sachems come over to us. The reply was made to us that if we had any business to them we must come over to them; and when we understood that they would not come to us we went to them. I first asked for the chief speaker Muttaump; they told us he was at present gone from them, but might be spoken withal, it may be the next day. We then required to see the Sachems that were there. And these appeared, Keehood, Willymachen, John Apeckgonas and Samuel sachem of Washakim, with whom we treated. We had pretty good quarter with them. There was no abuse offered to us. I read your Honor's letter deliberately to them. They seemed to accept of it very well. They promised that Keehood and one more of their principal men would come to the Massachusetts Bay within four or five days, and speak our Great Sachem. Many questions they asked of us to which we answered; but in the close of all we told them that if they were not satisfied, if Mutaump and Keehood, or some of their principal men would come to the Bay, our Great Sachem would use them kindly, and well fill their bellies, and answer all their questions. We asked them why they were so abusive the last time. They said that Black James the constable of Chabonagonkamug had told them that the English would kill them all without any exception, because they were not Praying Indians. — When we were come back about 12 miles, one of our Indians told us that there was one man there which had been with Philip, and was come there three days before us, and had brought English goods with him which they thought he had robbed the English of. We asked him why he had not told us of it while we were there. He said he did not know of it while we were come over the river, but we rather judge he concealed it through fear that we would make a disturbance for that man's sake. This is the substance of what I have to acquaint your Honors withal.

The sachems at Menameset promised to go to Boston "within four or five days," and speak with the Great Sachem of the English. But without waiting the expiration of this stipulated time, the Governor and Council met July 26, and passed an order "to send for Capt. Thomas Wheeler of Concord and 20 of his Troop to be here at Boston with the Governor and Council at 10 in the morning." And on his prompt arrival, the following commission was issued :

"BOSTON, July 27, 1675.

The Council beeing informed y^t the Narraganset Indians are come downe with about 100 Armed men into the Nipmuck Country, Do Order you Capt. Edward Hutchinson,² to take with you Capt. Thomas Wheeler³ & his party of horse with Ephraim Curtis for a guide and a sufficient interpreter, & forthwith to repair into those parts, and there labour to get a right understanding of the motions of the Narraganset Indians & of the Indians of Nipmuck: and for that end to demand of the leaders of y^e Narraganset Indians an acc't of y^e grounds of their marching into y^t country, & require to understand the orders of their Sachems. And also to demand an Account of the Nipmuck Indians why they have not sent downe their Sagamore according to their promise unto o^r messenger Ephraim Curtis —

² Capt. E. Hutchinson was the eldest son of William and Ann, and came to America in Sept. 1633. He owned a large farm in the Indian country, and had employed the natives to work on his lands, and consequently was personally known to many of them. He appears to have been popular with the Indians, was experienced in military matters, trusted by the colonial authorities, had been sent several times to treat with different tribes, and was but lately returned from negotiating a treaty with the Narragansets.

And further let y^m know y^t wee are informed that there are some among them y^t have actually joyned with our enemies in the murder & spoy^{le} made upon the English by Philip, And that Mattoonas & his Complices who have Robbed & murdered our people about Mendon are now among y^m. And y^t wee require them to deliver up to you or forthwith bring in to us those our enemies, otherwise wee must looke at them to bee no friends to us, but ayders and abettors — and unto all these things you shall require their expresse answer: & as soon as you have dispatched the affayre, you are to returne home & give us an acct., So desiring the Lord's presence with you & in prosecution of this affayre if you should meet with any Indians that stand in opposition to you or declare y^mselves to be yo^r enemies then you are ordered to ingage with them if you see reason for it & endeav^r to reduce y^m by force of Arms." ¹

The course and final result of this expedition, sent forth with a confidence approaching to boastfulness, is best told in the plain narrative of Capt. Wheeler, written in the fall of that year (1675) and published soon after.

CAPT. THOMAS WHEELER'S NARRATIVE.

A True Narrative Of the Lord's Providences in various dispensations towards Captain Edward Hutchinson of Boston and my self, and those that went with us into the Nipmuck Country, and also to Quabaug, alias Brookfield. The said Captain Hutchinson having a Commission from the Honoured Council of this Colony to Treat with several Sachems in those parts, in order to the publick peace and my self being also ordered by the said Council to accompany him with part of my Troop for Security from any danger that might be from the Indians: and to Assist him in the Transaction of matters committed to him.

The said Captain Hutchinson, and myself, with about twenty men or more marched from Cambridge to Sudbury, July 28, 1675; and from thence into the Nipmuck Country, and finding that the Indians had deserted their towns, and we having gone until we came within two miles of New Norwich, on July 31, (only we saw two Indians having an horse with them, whom we would have spoke with, but they fled from us and left their horse, which we took,) we then thought it not expedient to march any further that way, but set our march for Brookfield, whither we came on the Lord's day about noon. From thence the same day, (being August 1,) we understanding that the Indians were about ten miles north west from us, we sent out four men to acquaint the Indians that we were not come to harm them, but our business was only to deliver a Message from our Honored Governor and Council to them, and to receive their answer, we desiring to come to a Treaty of Peace with them, (though they had for several days fled from us,) they having before professed friendship, and promised fidelity to the English. When the messengers came to them they made an alarm, and gathered together about an hundred and fifty fighting men as near as they could judge. The young men amongst them were stout in their speeches, and surly in their carriage. But at length some of the chief Sachems promised to meet us on the next morning about 8 of the clock upon a plain within three miles of Brookfield, with which answer the messengers returned to us. Whereupon, though their speeches and carriage did much discourage divers of our company, yet we conceived that we had a clear call to go to meet them at the place whither they had promised to come. Accordingly we with our men accompanied with three of the principal inhabitants of that town marched to the plain appointed; but the treacherous heathen intending mischief, (if they could have opportunity,) came not to the said place, and so failed our hopes of speaking with them there. Whereupon the said Captain Hutchinson and myself, with the rest of our Company, considered what was best to be done, whether we should go any further towards them or return, divers of us apprehending much danger in case we did proceed, because the Indians kept not promise there with us. But the three men who belonged to Brockfield were so strongly persuaded of their freedom from any ill intentions towards us, (as upon other grounds, so especially because the greatest part of those Indians belonged to David, one of their chief Sachems, who was taken to be a great friend to the English :) that the said Captain Hutchinson who was principally intrusted with the matter of Treaty with them, was thereby encouraged to proceed and march forward towards a Swamp where the Indians then were. When we came near the said Swamp, the way was so very bad that we could march only in a single file, there being a very rocky hill on the right hand, and a thick swamp on the left, in which there were many of those cruel blood-thirsty heathen, who there way laid us, waiting an opportunity to cut us off; there being also much brush on the side of the said hill, where they lay in ambush to surprize us. When we had marched there about sixty or seventy rods, the said perfidious Indians sent out their shot upon us as a shower of hail, they being, (as was supposed,) about two hundred men or more. We seeing ourselves so beset, and not having room to fight, endeavored to fly for the safety of our lives. In which flight we were in no small danger to be all cut off, there being a very miry swamp before us, into which we could not enter with our horses to go forwards, and there being no safety in retreating the way we came, because many of their company, who lay behind the bushes, and had let us pass by them quietly; when others had shot, they came out, and stopt our way back, so that we were forced as we could to get up the steep and rocky hill; but the greater our danger was, the greater was God's mercy in the preservation of so many of us from sudden destruction. Myself being gone up part of the hill without any hurt, and perceiving some of my men to be fallen by the enemies' shot, I wheeled about upon the Indians, not calling on my men who were left to accompany me, which they in all probability would have done had they known of my return upon the enemy. They fired violently out of the swamp, and from behind the bushes on the hill side wounded me sorely, and shot my horse under me, so that he faltering and falling, I was forced to leave him, divers of the Indians being then but a few rods distant from me. My son Thomas Wheeler flying with the rest of the company missed me amongst them, and fearing that I was either slain or much endangered, returned towards the swamp again, though he had then received a dangerous wound in the reins, where he saw me in the danger aforesaid. Whereupon, he endeavored to rescue me, shewing himself therein a loving and dutiful son, he adventuring himself into great peril of his life to help me in that distress, there being many of the enemies about me, my son set me on his own horse, and so escaped a while on foot himself, until he caught an horse whose rider was slain, on which he mounted, and so through God's great mercy we both escaped. But in this attempt for my deliverance he received another dangerous wound by their shot in his left arm. There were then slain to our great grief eight men, viz. — Zechariah Phillips of Boston, Timothy Farlow, of Billericay, Edward Coleborn, of Chelmsford, Samuel Smedly, of Concord, Sydrach Hapgood, of Sudbury, Serjeant Eyres, Serjeant Prichard, and Corporal Coy, the inhabitants of Brookfield, aforesaid. It being the good pleasure of God, that they should all there fall by their hands, of whose good intentions they were so confident, and whom they so little mistrusted. There were also then five persons wounded, viz. — Captain Hutchinson, myself, and my son Thomas, as aforesaid, Corporal French, of Billericay, who having killed an Indian, was (as he was taking up his gun) shot, and part of one of his thumbs taken off, and also dangerously wounded through the body near the shoulder; the fifth was John Waldoe, of Chelmsford, who was not so dangerously wounded as the rest. They also then killed five of our horses, and wounded some more, which soon died after they came to Brookfield. Upon this sudden and unexpected blow given us, (wherein we desire to look higher than man the instrument,) we returned to the town as fast as the badness of the way, and the weakness of our wounded men would permit, we being then ten miles from it. All the while we were going, we durst not stay to stanch the bleeding of our wounded men, for fear the enemy should have surprized us again, which they attempted to do, and had in probability done, but that we perceiving which way they went, wheeled off to the other hand, and so by God's good providence towards us, they missed us, and we all came readily upon, and safely to the town, though none of us knew the way to it, those of the place being slain, as aforesaid, and we avoiding any thick woods and riding in open places to prevent danger by them. Being got to the town, we speedily betook ourselves to one of the largest and strongest houses therein, where we fortified ourselves in the best manner we could in such straits of time, and there resolved to keep garrison, though we were but few, and meanly fitted to make resistance against so furious enemies. The news of the Indians' treacherous dealing with us, and the loss of so many of our company thereōy, did so amaze the inhabitants of the town, that they being informed thereof by us, presently left their houses, divers of them carrying very little away with them, they being afraid of the Indians sudden coming upon them; and so came to the house we were entered into, very meanly provided of cloathing or furnished with provisions.

I perceiving myself to be disenabled for the discharge of the duties of my place by reason of the wound I had received, and apprehending that the enemy would soon come to spoil the town and assault us in the house, I appointed Simon Davis, of Concord, James Richardson, and John Fiske of

Chelmsford, to manage affairs for our safety with those few men whom God hath left us, and were fit for any service, and the inhabitants of the said town; who did well and commendably perform the duties of the trust committed to them with much courage and resolution through the assistance of our gracious God, who did not leave us in our low and distressed state, but did mercifully appear for us in our greatest need, as in the sequel will clearly be manifested. Within two hours after our coming to the said house, or less, the said Captain Hutchinson and myself posted away Ephraim Curtis, of Sudbury, and Henry Young, of Concord, to go to the Honored Council at Boston, to give them an account of the Lord's dealing with us, and our present condition. When they came to the further end of the town they saw the enemy rifling of houses which the inhabitants had forsaken. The post fired upon them, and immediately returned to us again, they discerning no safety in going forward and being desirous to inform us of the enemies' actings, that we might the more prepare for a sudden assault by them. Which indeed presently followed, for as soon as the said post was come back to us, the barbarous heathen pressed upon us in the house with great violence, sending in their shot amongst us like hail, through the walls, and shouting as if they would have swallowed us up alive; but our good God wrought wonderfully for us, so that there was but one man wounded within the house, viz. — the said Henry Young, who, looking out of the garret window that evening, was mortally wounded by a shot, of which wound he died within two days after. There was the same day another man slain, but not in the house; a son of Serjeant Pritchard's adventuring out of the house wherein we were, to his father's house not far from it, to fetch more goods out of it, was caught by these cruel enemies as they were coming towards us, who cut off his head, kicking it about like a foot-ball, and then putting it upon a pole, they set it up before the door of his father's house in our sight.

The night following the said blow, they did roar against us like so many wild bulls, sending in their shot amongst us till towards the moon rising, which was about three of the clock; at which time they attempted to fire our house by hay and other combustible matter which they brought to one corner of the house, and set it on fire. Whereupon some of our company were necessitated to expose themselves to very great danger to put it out. Simon Davis, one of the three appointed by myself as Captain, to supply my place by reason of my wounds, as aforesaid, he being of a lively spirit encouraged the soldiers within the house to fire upon the Indians; and also those that adventured out to put out the fire, (which began to rage and kindle upon the house side,) with these and the like words, that God is with us, and fights for us, and will deliver us out of the hands of these heathen; which expressions of his the Indians hearing, they shouted and scoffed, saying: now see how your God delivers you, or will deliver you, sending in many shots whilst our men were putting out the fire. But the Lord of Hosts wrought very graciously for us, in preserving our bodies both within and without the house from their shot, and our house from being consumed by fire, we had but two men wounded in that attempt of theirs, but we apprehended that we killed divers of our enemies. I being desirous to hasten intelligence to the Honored Council, of our present great distress, we being so remote from any succor, (it being between sixty and seventy miles from us to Boston, where the Council useth to sit,) and fearing our ammunition would not last long to withstand them, if they continued so to assault us, I spake to Ephraim Curtis to adventure forth again on that service, and to attempt it on foot, as the way wherein there was most hope of getting away undiscovered; he readily assented, and accordingly went out, but there were so many Indians every where thereabouts, that he could not pass, without apparent hazard of life, so he came back again, but towards morning the said Ephraim adventured forth the third time, and was fain to creep on his hands and knees for some space of ground, that he might not be discerned by the enemy, who waited to prevent our sending if they could have hindered it. But through God's mercy he escaped their hands, and got safely to Marlborough, though very much spent, and ready to faint by reason of want of sleep before he went from us, and his sore travel night and day in that hot season till he got thither, from whence he went to Boston; yet before the said Ephraim got to Marlborough, there was intelligence brought thither of the burning of some houses, and killing some cattle at Quabaug, by some who were going to Connecticut, but they seeing what was done at the end of the town, and hearing several guns shot off further within the town, they durst proceed no further, but, immediately returned to Marlborough, though they then knew not what had befallen Captain Hutchinson and myself, and company, nor of our being there, but that timely intelligence they gave before Ephraim Curtis his coming to Marlborough, occasioned the Honored Major Willard's turning his march towards Quabaug, for their relief who were in no small danger every hour of being destroyed; the said Major being, when he had that intelligence, upon his march another way, as he was ordered by the Honored Council, as is afterwards more fully expressed.

The next day being August 3d, they continued shooting and shouting, and proceeded in their former wickedness, blaspheming the name of the Lord, and reproaching us, his afflicted servants, scoffing at our prayers as they were sending in their shot upon all quarters of the house, and many of them went to the town's meeting house, (which was within twenty rods of the house in which we were) who mocked saying, come and pray, and sing psalms, and in contempt made an hideous noise somewhat resembling singing. But we, to our power, did endeavour our defence, sending our shot amongst them, the Lord giving us courage to resist them, and preserving us from the destruction they sought to bring upon us. On the evening following, we saw our enemies carrying several of their dead or wounded men on their backs, who proceeded that night to send in their shot, as they had done the night before, and also still shouted as if the day had been certainly theirs, and they should without fail, have prevailed against us, which they might have the more hopes of in regard that we discerned the coming of new companies to them to assist and strengthen them, and the unlikelihood of any coming to our help. They also used several stratagems to fire us, namely, by wild fire in cotton and linen rags with brimstone in them, which rags they tyed to the piles of their arrows, sharp for the purpose, and shot them to the roof of our house, after they had set them on fire, which would have much endangered the burning thereof, had we not used means by cutting holes through the roof, and otherwise, to beat the said arrows down, and God being pleased to prosper our endeavors therein. — They carried more combustible matter, as flax and hay, to the sides of the house, and set it on fire, and then flocked apace towards the door of the house, either to prevent our going forth to quench the fire, as we had done before, or to kill our men in their attempt to go forth, or else to break into the house by the door; whereupon we were forced to break down the wall of the house against the fire to put it out. They also shot a ball of wild fire into the garret of the house, which fell amongst a great heap of flax or tow therein, which one of our soldiers, through God's good Providence espied, and having water ready presently quenched it; and so we were preserved by the keeper of Israel, both our bodies from their shot, which they sent thick against us, and the house from being consumed to ashes, although we were but weak to defend ourselves, we being not above twenty and six men with those of that small town, who were able for any service, and our enemies, as I judged them about, (if not above) three hundred, I speak of the least, for many there present did guess them to be four or five hundred. It is the more to be observed, that so little hurt should be done by the enemies' shot, it commonly piercing the walls of the house, and flying amongst the people, and there being in the house fifty women and children besides the men before mentioned. But abroad in the yard, one Thomas Wilson of that town, being sent to fetch water for our help in further need, (that which we had being spent in putting out the fire,) was shot by the enemy in the upper jaw and in the neck, the anguish of which wound was such at the first that he cried out with a great noise, by reason whereof the Indians hearing him rejoiced, and triumphed at it; but his wound was healed in a short time, praised be God.

On Wednesday, August the 4th, the Indians fortified themselves at the meeting house, and the barn, belonging to our house, which they fortified both at the great doors, and at both ends, with posts, rails, boards, and hay, to save themselves from our shot. They also devised other stratagems, to fire our house, on the night following, namely, they took a cart, and filled it with flax, hay and candlewood, and other combustible matter, and set up planks, fastened to the cart, to save themselves from the danger of our shot. Another invention they had to make the more sure work in burning the house. They got many poles of a considerable length and bigness, and spliced them together at the ends one of another, and made a carriage of them about fourteen rods long, setting the poles in two rows, with peils laid cross over them at the front end, and dividing them said poles about three foot asunder, and in the said front of this their carriage they set a barrel, having made an hole through both heads, and put an axle-tree through them, to which they fastened the said poles, and under every joint of the poles where they were spliced, they set up a pair of truckle wheels to bear up the said carriages, and they loaded the front or fore-end thereof with matter fit for firing, as hay, and flax, and chips, &c. Two of these instruments they prepared, that they might convey fire to the house, with the more safety to themselves, they standing at such a distance from our shot, whilst they vibeled them to the house— great store of arrows they had also prepared to shoot fire upon the house that night; which we found after they were gone, they having left them there. But the Lord who is a present help in times of trouble, and is pleased to make his people's extremity his opportunity, did graciously prevent them of effecting what they hoped they should have done by the aforesaid devices, partly by sending a shower of rain in season, whereby the manner prepared being wet would not so easily take fire as it otherwise would have done, and partly by aid coming to our help. For our danger would have been very great that night, had not the only wise God (blessed forever) been pleased to send to us about an hour within night the worthy Major Willard with Captain Parker of Groton, and forty-six men more with five Indians to relieve us in the low estate into which we were brought; our eyes were unto him the holy one of Israel: in him we desired to place our trust, hoping that he would in the time of our great need appear for our deliverance, and confound all their plots by which they thought themselves most sure to prevail against us; and God who comforteth the afflicted: as he comforted the holy apostle Paul by the coming of TITUS to him, so he greatly comforted us his distressed servants both soldiers and town inhabitants, by the coming of the said Honored Major, and those with him. In whose so soon coming to us the good providence of God did marvellously appear: for the help that came to us by the Honored Councils' order (after the tidings they received by our post sent to them) came not to us till Saturday August 7, in the afternoon, nor sooner could it well come in regard of their distance from us, i.e. if we had not had help before that time, we see not how we could have held out, the number of the Indians so increasing, and they making so many assaults upon us, that our ammunition before that time would have been spent and ourselves disabled for any resistance, we being but few, and always fain to stand upon our defence: that we had little time for refreshment of ourselves either by food or sleep; the said Honored Major's coming to us so soon was thus occasioned: he had a commission from the Honored Council (of which himself was one) to look after some Indians to the west-ward of Lancaster and Groton (where he himself lived) and to secure them, and was upon his march towards them on the aforesaid Wednesday in the morning, August 4th, when tidings coming to Marlborough by those that returned thither as they were going to Connecticut, concerning what they saw at Brookfield as aforesaid, some of Marlborough knowing of the said Major's march from Lancaster that morning, presently sent a post to acquaint him with the information they had received: the Major was gone before the post came to Lancaster: but there was one speedily sent after him, who overtook him about five or six miles from the said town: he being acquainted, that it was feared, that Brookfield (a small town of about fifteen or sixteen families) was either destroyed or in great danger thereof, and conceiving it to require more speed to succour them (if they were not past help) than to proceed at present, as he before intended, and being also very desirous (if it were possible) so afford relief to them, (he being then not above thirty miles from them,) he immediately altered his course and marched with his company toward us: and came to us about an hour after it was dark as aforesaid; though he knew not then, either of our being there nor of what had befallen us at the Swamp and in the house those two days before.

The merciful providence of God also appeared in preventing the danger that the Honored Major and his company might have been in, when they came near us, for those beastly men, our enemies, skillful to destroy, endeavored to prevent any help from coming to our relief, and therefore sent down sentinels, (some nearer and some further off) the furthest about two miles from us, who if they saw any coming from the Bay they might give notice by an alarm. And there were about an hundred of them who for the most part kept at an house some little distance from us, by which if any help came from the said Bay, they must pass, and so they intended (as we conceive) having notice by their sentinels of their approach to way-lay them, and if they could, to cut them off before they came to the house where we kept.

But as we probably guess, they were so intent and busy in preparing their instruments (as abovesaid) for our destruction by fire, that they were not at the house where they used to keep for the purpose abovesaid, and that they heard not their sentinels when they shot: and so the Major's way was clear from danger till he came to our house. And that it was their purpose so to have fallen upon him, or any other coming to us at that house, is the more probable in that (as we have since had intelligence from some of the Indians themselves) there were a party of them at another place who let him pass by them without the least hurt or opposition, waiting for a blow to be given him at the said house, and then they themselves to fall upon them in the rear, as they intended to have done with us at the swamp, in case we had fled back as before expressed. The Major and company were no sooner come to the house, and understood (though at first they knew not they were English who were in the house, but thought that they might be Indians, and therefore were ready to have shot at us, till we discerning they were English by the Major's speaking, I caused the trumpet to be sounded) that the said Captain Hutchinson, myself, and company with the town's inhabitants were there, but the Indians also discerned that there were some come to our assistance, whereupon they spared not their shot, but poured it out on them: but through the Lord's goodness, though they stood not far asunder one from another, they killed not one man, wounded only two of his company; and killed the Major's son's horse; after that, we within the house perceived the Indians shooting so at them, we hastened the Major and all his company into the house as fast as we could, and their horses into a little yard before the house, where they wounded five other horses that night; after they were come into the house to us, the enemies continued their shooting some considerable time, so that we may well say, had not the Lord been on our side when those cruel heathens rose up against us, they had then swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us. But wherein they dealt proudly, the Lord was above them.

When they saw their divers designs unsuccessful, and their hopes therein disappointed, they then fired the house and barn (wherein they had before kept to lie in wait to surprise any coming to us) that by the light thereof they might the better direct their shot at us, but no hurt was done thereby, praised be the Lord. And not long after they burnt the meeting house wherein their fortifications were, as also the barn, which belonged to our house, and so perceiving more strength come to our assistance, they did, as we suppose, despair of effecting any more mischief against us. And therefore the greatest part of them, towards the breaking of the day, August the fifth, went away and left us, and we were quiet from any further molestations by them; and on the morning we went forth of the house without danger, and so daily afterwards, only one man was wounded about two days after, as he was out to look after horses, by some few of them skulking thereabouts. We cannot tell how many of them were killed, in all that time, but one that was afterwards taken, confessed that there were killed and wounded, about eighty men or more. Blessed be the Lord God of our salvation, who kept us from being all a prey to their teeth. But before they went away they burnt all the town except the house we kept in, and another that was not then finished. They also made great spoil of the cattle belonging to the inhabitants; and after our entrance into the house, and during the time of our confinement there, they either killed or drove away almost all the horses of our company.

We continued there, both well and wounded, towards a fortnight, and August the 10th Capt. Hutchinson and myself with the men there that had escaped without hurt, and also some of the wounded, came from them; my son Thomas and some other wounded men, came not from them, being not then able to endure travelling so far as from thence to the next town, till about a fortnight afterwards. We came to Marlborough on August the 14th, when Capt. Hutchinson being not recovered of his wounds before his coming from Brookfield, and over-tired with his long journey, by reason of his weakness, soon after grew worse, and more dangerously ill, and on the 19th day of the same month, died, and was there the next day after buried; — the Lord being pleased to deny him a return to his own habitation, and his relatives at Boston, though he was come the greatest part of his journey thitherward. The inhabitants of the town also, not long after, men, women, and children, removed safely with what they had left, to several places, either where they had lived before their planting or setting down there, or where they had relatives to receive and entertain them. The Honored Major Willard stayed at Brookfield some weeks after our coming away, there being several companies of soldiers sent up thither and to Hadley, and the towns thereabouts, which are about thirty miles from Brookfield, whither also the Major went for a time upon the service of the country in the present war, and from whence there being need of his presence for the ordering of matters concerning his own regiment, and the safety of the towns belonging to it, he through God's goodness and mercy returned in safety to his home and dear relatives at Groton.

Thus I have endeavored to set down and declare both what the Lord did against us in the loss of several persons' lives, and the wounding of others, some of which wounds were very painful in dressing, and long ere they were healed, besides many dangers we were in, and fears we were exercised with; and also what great things He was pleased to do for us, in frustrating their many attempts, and vouchsafing such a deliverance to us. The Lord avenge the blood that has been shed by these heathen who hate us without a cause, though he be most righteous in all that hath befallen us there, and all other parts of the country, he help us to humble ourselves before him, and with our whole hearts, to return to him, and also to improve all his mercies, which we still enjoy, that so his anger may cease towards us, and he may be pleased either to make our enemies at peace with us, or may destroy them before us. I tarried at Marlborough with Capt. Hutchinson until his death, and came here to Concord August 21 (though not then quite recovered of my wound) and so did others that went with me. But since I am reasonably well, though I have not the use of my hand and arm as before: my son Thomas, though in great hazard of his life for some time after his return to Concord, yet is now very well cured, and his strength well restored! Oh, that we could praise the Lord for his great goodness towards us, that he was pleased to spare so many of us, and add unto our days: he help us whose souls he hath delivered from death and eyes from tears, and feet from falling, to walk before him in the land of the living, till our great change come, and to sanctify his name in all his ways about us, that our afflictions and our mercies may guide us to live more to his glory all our days."

From contemporary documents we are able to add to this Narrative some particulars which have historical value, and which help to fill out the dark picture. 1. The three Brookfield men and the five soldiers who were slain in the ambushade, were left unburied. Mather, in his "Brief History" says: "The English were not in a capacity to look after their dead, but those dead bodies were left as meat to the Fowls of heaven, and their flesh unto the Beasts of the earth, and there was none to bury them." 2. A special interest attaches to the three Indians who were chosen as interpreters and guides to Capt. Hutchinson and Wheeler. One of these was George Memicho, a Christian Indian of Natick, and a man of some education, good general information and tried courage, who was true to the English, and was employed in important embassies; he was taken prisoner by Mettawamppe's men, and confined at one of the Menameset towns, but found means to escape, and, says Gookin, "came home afterwards and brought good intelligence." Having been a participant in the Fight in the narrow defile, and carried thence to the Indian stronghold on the Ware river, his testimony as to locations and distances is reliable, and helps materially to fix the place where the Ambush was laid. He was present when Philip came to Menameset, and gives authentic details as to his forlorn condition and feeble following. The other guides were two brothers, Joseph and Sampson, sons of old Robin Petuhanit, a faithful Christian Indian, deceased, who had been Ruler at Hassanamesit. In 1674, Sampson was teacher at Wabbaquasset, and Joseph was teacher at Chabonakongkomun. They had been under Mr. Eliot's instruction, were intimately acquainted with the Indian country and tribes ; and on this expedition "acquitted themselves courageously and faithfully," and by their care and skilful conduct guided Capt. Wheeler and the remnant of his company through a by-trail safely back to Brookfield. But for them, the whole Troop must, in all human probability, have been cut off. "But, notwithstanding all this and previous service they were, with others of our Christian Indians, through the harsh dealings of some English, in a manner constrained, for want of shelter, protection and encouragement, to fall off to the enemy, at Hassanamesit ; and one of them, viz. Sampson, was slain in fight by some scouts of our praying Indians, about Wachusett ; and the other, Joseph, taken prisoner in Plymouth Colony, and sold for a slave to some merchants at Boston, and sent to Jamaica ; but upon the importunity of Mr. Eliot, was brought back again, but not released. [Gookin's History.]

3. From the description given by Capt. Wheeler, it is evident that the house where he and his company and the inhabitants took refuge, was Sergt. Ayres' tavern. It stood near the spot where D. H. Richardson's dwelling house now stands. The well, which must have been close by the door, is now covered with a flat stone.¹ It was nearest the centre and was "the largest and strongest house" in the town. A hasty attempt was made to fortify the building by setting up logs and planks against the outside, and hanging feather beds before the windows on the inside. From the fact that "the enemies' shot pierced the walls and flew amongst the inmates," it would appear that the house had only the ordinary board covering and finish ; and the preservation of so many lives from the Indian bullets during the siege, can be accounted for only as Capt. Wheeler expresses it — "we were preserved by the Keeper of Israel." 4. The total number of persons confined in that house during the siege, as near as can be ascertained, was eighty-two. Capt. Wheeler says he had twenty-six able men, i.e., thirteen of his soldiers, and thirteen citizens ; and in addition there were six wounded men, and "fifty women and children." The plain story, as told by Capt. Wheeler, narrating the events of those three sultry August nights and days, conveys perhaps the best impression possible to be gained, of the anxiety, and sufferings and horrible forebodings of the crowded inmates of that beleaguered house ! Without, the smoking ruins of their homes, and the horde of yelling savages bent on their destruction, and cunning to devise the readiest means : within, a scanty supply of food — sleepless watching — hostile bullets constantly penetrating the walls — six severely wounded men and one of them dying, to be cared for — the stifling fumes of their own shots at the Indians — and in the confusion and straitened space, two wives giving birth each to twin infants¹ — all combined, form the grouping of a picture, startling in its reality, and exceeded in darkness of coloring by few events in the annals of our Indian warfare! 5. But relief came when they most needed it, and had no reason to look for it. The safe arrival of Maj. Willard and his Troop, at that critical juncture, considering all the circumstances as set forth in the Narrative, must be regarded as “providential.” In Rev. Mr. Fiske’s Historical Sermon, it is stated that “Maj. Willard’s conduct in altering his course and coming to the relief of Brookfield, being dictated by humanity and executed with bravery and success, has gained him the applause of people in general. But as it was beside his orders, he was censured by the Court, and cashiered.” This was a tradition, which is not confirmed by the facts. The Council’s letter of Aug. 24 (hereafter quoted) is proof of their confidence. And it is matter of record, that he was continued in command of the garrison at Brookfield till about Sept. 8; and Nov. 8, was granted by the Court £10 for this service. He certainly was continued in commission, and was in service through the winter, and as late as April 18. He died at Charlestown Apr. 24, 1676, while attending the Court of Assistants, of which he was a member. His age was 71. 6. All accounts agree that the Indian who planned and executed the ambuscade, and directed the siege of the town, was Muttaump or Mettawomppe (also written Mawtamps and Netaump) the Wekabaug sachem. He was ably seconded by One Eyed John, alias Apequinash, and Sagamore Sam, Nashaway sachems, Puckquahow the Wabbaquasset, and others, all of whom soon came into prominence as leaders in the war. Of the number of Indians composing the assailing party, it is not unlikely that Capt. Wheeler’s estimate is under rather than over the truth. Ephraim Curtis, whose judgment was reliable, put the numbers which he found gathered at Menameset on his first visit, “at near 200 of men.” Capt. Henchman, who reached Wabbaquasset Aug. 3, found not one Indian, and was told by a straggler whom he captured, that the Indians were all gone to Squabauge. Capt. Wheeler set the number of besiegers present Aug. 3, at 300, and the next day speaks of them as “increasing in number.” This is probable, as news of the success in Monday’s ambush was sent to the Nonotucks at Hadley, who “made eleven triumphant shouts, as their manner is when they have slain their enemies” — so writes Rev. Mr.

Stoddard, and adds — "many went to Quabaug," who could easily have reached them on Wednesday, thus swelling the army of assaulters to not less than 400.¹ 7. The following list of Capt. Wheeler's company of horse, engaged in this expedition, has been prepared by Rev. George M. Bodge of East Boston.

Of the Brookfield men, Sergt. John Ayres, Sergt. Wm. Prichard and Corp. Richard Coy were killed in the ambuscade; Wm. Prichard, Jr., was caught in his father's house by the savages at their first onset from the east, and killed; and James Hovey, who lived still further to the east, is named in an official List, as among the killed. The circumstances of his death are not known.

PLACE OF CAPT. WHEELER'S SURPRISE.

The historical data by which this bloody tragedy can be definitely located, are few, but they are sufficient to furnish the necessary clues.

The fixed points from which distances will be calculated are 1. The Brookfield town site, which is known; 2. Quabaug Old Fort, about the site of which there is no doubt; 3. Wenimisset. This last name has hitherto been applied to a single Indian town-site, on the easterly side of a brook of that name in New Braintree. The discovery [which is detailed at length, ante, pp. 33] by the author, of two other native town sites in the vicinity, each of which tallies with authenticated records, and to which severally, according to Indian usage, the term "Menameset" was applied by contemporary writers, serves both to upset some accepted conclusions, and to explain well attested facts, and to reconcile what had appeared to be geographical contradictions. Indeed, the two village sites now brought to light, supply missing links in the chain of historical certainties; and the discovery, while it circumscribes the range of our inquiry, gives the certain means of its solution. The distance of Wenimisset from Brookfield, as stated by Capt. Wheeler, who evidently got his information from Sergt. Ayres and his townsmen, was "about 10 miles." As matter of fact, the first Menameset town was by the then travelled path, about nine and a half miles from Brookfield meeting-house; and the second of the towns was about a mile further off.

The three witnesses whose testimony is to be relied on in this inquiry, are Capt. Wheeler, George Memicho, and James Quanapohit.

Capt. Wheeler says, that on his arrival at Brookfield August 1, learning that the Indians were at their rendezvous about 10 miles distant, "we sent out four men to acquaint them of our business, and receive their answer," "we desiring to come to a treaty of Peace with them." "The chief sachems promised to meet us on the next morning about 8 of the clock upon a plain within three miles of Brookfield." The next morning "accordingly we, with three of the principal inhabitants of that town marched to the plain appointed; but the treacherous heathen intending mischief [he states as a fact, what indeed was true, but what he only found out in the sequel] came not to the said place." Apprehending danger, some of the party advised to return to Brookfield; but the three townsmen were so fully "persuaded of their freedom from all ill intentions towards us," that "Capt. Hutchinson who was principally intrusted with the matter of Treaty with them, was thereby encouraged to proceed and march forward towards a Swamp where the Indians then were." Mark the plain wording of the Narrative. Not the Swamp, i.e. rendezvous, where they were yesterday, as found by the four messengers, but "a Swamp where they then were," "waiting an opportunity to cut us off" — as he so soon found out to his cost. In making the record, he is done with the report of his messengers about the treatment they received from the surly Indians, and the Sachems' promise of meeting them upon the plain where they were standing; has said all that he had to say about the earnest consultation between his superior officer and "the rest of the company" about the expediency of "going any further towards them or return;" and now comes to matters of his own experience, as they lay in his memory when he wrote his account. He proceeds — carrying out the same train of associated thought and experience — “when we came near the said Swamp [where the Indians then were] the way was so very bad that we could march only in a single file, there being a very rocky hill on the right hand, and a thick swamp on the left, in which there were many of those cruel blood-thirsty heathen, who there way laid us, waiting an opportunity to cut us off; there being also much brush on the side of the said hill, where they lay in ambush to surprise us. When we had marched there about sixty or seventy rods, the said perfidious Indians sent out their shot upon us as a shower of hail.” Having named fully other features of the place, and given a detailed account of the onset, and the attempt to retreat by the way in which they came, he says, “the Indians stopt our way back, and forced us as we could to get up the steep and rocky hill.” The enemy attempted to surprise them a second time; “and had in probability done it, but that we perceiving which way they went, wheeled off to the other hand,” i.e. to the eastward, as the Indians had closed in behind them; “and so they missed us, and we all came safely to the town, we being then ten miles from it.” He adds, “none of us knew the way, those of the town being slain; and we avoiding any thick woods, and riding in open places to prevent danger by the Indians.” Afterwards, viz. Aug. 20, Capt. Wheeler made out a certificate in which he states that the two Indian guides, Sampson and Joseph, “conducted our distressed company in the best way from the swamp unto the town.” Another account says: “by a way known to them,” i.e. the guides; which implies a by-trail, to be described hereafter.

This is the plain narrative of a man’s own experience. His description of the place of the ambush, and the circuitous route he travelled in getting back to the town, is sufficiently full and specific in those particulars which time and cultivation do not materially change, to enable a person of observing habits and familiar with Indian tactics, to identify the same with much certainty.

But before proceeding to trace those lines of identification, it is in order to introduce the other two witnesses, whose independent testimony may point out conclusively the place of this tragedy.

James Quanapohit, an intelligent and trustworthy Indian, was sent by the Massachusetts government on an important mission to Quabaug, in Jan. 1675-6. He followed the Old Connecticut Path from Hassanameset to Maanexit; thence he went to Quabaug Old Fort; and the next day was conducted to the enemies’ quarters at Menameset. He says: “We came to three Indian towns, the farthest not above three miles distant from the other; . . . the place is called Menemesseg, which is about 20 miles norward of Quabaug old fort.” As he came from the south, he passed the two, in order to reach “the farthest.” What he calls “20 miles” is shown by measuring the like distance between two known points as given by him in another part of his Relation. Applying this measure, the 20 miles carries us to the Indian village-site on the Woodbury farm in Barre Plains. [See ante, p. 34.] And as matter of fact, the native trail between the two points named, is found to measure about 20 miles. To make the site still more certain of identification, he further says that the place called Menemesseg was "about 30 miles from Lancaster" — which statement agrees with the actual distance.

Here, then, is an established fact. And a starting point is thus secured, by strictly historical and geographical methods, from which to determine the place of Capt. Wheeler's disaster of August 2. Let us apply the measuring scale. Quanapohit says that Menemesseg, the enemies' quarters to which he was conducted, "is about eight miles north from where Capt. Hutchinson and Capt. Wheeler was wounded and several men with them slain, as those Indians informed him." Measuring southward from the upper Indian village-site, on the Woodbury place, eight miles on the Indian trail, the scale touches a point in the Sucker brook valley, near the dividing line between New Braintree and Brookfield, and about five miles from the old Brookfield town-site.

George Memicho, who was with Capt. Wheeler in the fatal encounter and was taken captive, says that the place where he lay a prisoner, and where Philip came Aug. 6th, was "six miles from the swamp where they killed our men." As the "remains" attest, the "stronghold" and "store-town" of the Indians at this time, was the second of the Menemesets — where prisoners would naturally be kept, and where Philip with his broken band would naturally resort for safety and food. Measuring southward on the Indian trail aforesaid, the "six miles" touches the same point as the "eight miles" named by Quanapohit touched, viz. near the dividing line between New Braintree and Brookfield.

And no contemporary account has been found, to controvert this evidence.

In 1828, the Rev. Mr. Foot, pastor of the church in West Brookfield, gathered up the historical data and traditions which he found extant, relating to the old Quabaug Plantation. He had not read Wheeler's Narrative, and so was not influenced by its statements. Referring to the Indian Ambush, he says: "On the 2d of August . . . Capt. Hutchinson . . . with 20 horsemen, and some of the principal inhabitants advanced . . . from the north end of Wickaboag pond . . . up the valley towards the principal rendezvous of the Natives, and as they were passing between a steep hill on one side and a swamp on the other, they were assailed by the Indians. . . . Those who survived returned by a circuitous route to the town, because they were informed by friendly Indians in their company, that according to the custom of savage warfare, the path in which they had come would be found thickly lined by enemies ready to cut off those who escaped the fury of the onset." He does not fix upon the place of the "onset," but indicates two spots which "tolerably answer the description given by historians [not including Wheeler]; viz. "one near the line of Brookfield and New Braintree; the other nearly two miles north of this line." It should be added, that a third spot, about two miles still further up the valley, has been selected by some modern writers, as answering to Wheeler's account, and pointed out by tradition.

With all the historical data as above given, in hand or in mind, the author traversed the valley from Barre Plains to Wekabaug pond. He was ignorant of all the local marks and traditions, and so an unprejudiced observer. — Of the place on the easterly side of Wenimisset meadows, claimed by some as the scene of Capt. Wheeler's encounter (but not named by Mr. Foot), it is obvious to say, that in the absence of reliable historical evidence, we are left to the probabilities of the case, for the means of forming a judgment. The local tradition as to this place is at best quite indefinite and lacking in particulars, and is coupled with some fancies which are evidently of modern origin. And no narrow defile could be found in the vicinity, which answers to the description of the place of the ambush so fully given in Wheeler's Narrative. To be sure the "rocky hill" on the right is here; but the "very bad way" where "we could only march in a single file" is wanting. And the place is too near the native village-site. Indian strategy, in laying ambushes and making assaults, always provided for a safe line of retreat, in case of disaster, and for a wide chance to give sufficient notice to those in his wigwams to escape with their utensils and provisions.

Of the place named by Mr. Foot, as "two miles north of the New Braintree line," it is to be said, that the selection is probably made on the strength of the statement contained in Hubbard's Narrative, and copied into Gov. Hutchinson's History, viz. "Wheeler and Hutchinson, with their Party of Horse . . . ventured along further to find the Infidels in their chief Town, . . . but when they had rode 4 or 5 miles that Way, they fell into an Ambush." If this statement be taken to mean 4 or 5 miles from the tree near Wekabaug pond, the inference is correct. But no concurrent testimony has been found; and neither tradition, nor correspondence of geographical features supports such a conclusion. Indeed the "lay of the land" excludes the spot from the probabilities of identity.

Of the southerly place named by Mr. Foot, viz. the narrow defile near the New Braintree and Brookfield line, it is to be said — The historical evidence in its favor, as furnished by Quanapohit and Memicho, has already been quoted. Their testimony is given from knowledge; is clear ; they had no motive for deception ; and until clearer and weightier historical evidence is produced in favor of some other place, it must be reckoned conclusive. And if Hubbard's statement (above quoted) be taken to mean "four or five miles" from the Quabaug Plantation, where the march commenced, this ravine at the New Braintree line is the spot referred to. And a thorough examination of the locality here, finds a very complete agreement of existing conditions with all the details given in Capt. Wheeler's Narrative. The path under the steep hill, through a close defile, with brook and swamp on the left, is still here ; and it is plain to see that in its primitive state, the way must have been so narrow and bad that horses could only go in a single file : the hemmed-in valley is more than "60 or 70 rods" in length ; and when this distance of bad way is passed, there is "a very rocky hill" on the right hand ; in a word, nothing is wanting to complete the identity. And according to Indian strategy, no better place can be found where the "cruel blood-thirsty heathen" could waylay the cavalcade. They would be effectually concealed by the brush on the slope of the steep bluff, back of the Pepper homestead, and on the opposite hillside, and in the swamp, so that a raking fire from behind could be poured into the scattered troop, while both flanks would be fully exposed. If Capt. Wheeler's first thought was to retreat through the depression in which the Pepper house stands, as the narrative seems to imply, his line could be easily cut off by the hindmost of the savages. His only way of escape was to push forward, and strike up the hill, and so follow round "by a circuitous route" on the edge of the Ditch meadows. And this route is indicated by Capt. Wheeler. He says : "we wheeled off to the other hand," i.e. to the eastward, "avoiding any thick woods" [which were found in the swamps and wet valleys of Mill brook, and Coy's brook], and "riding in the open places." At some distance from the Ditch meadow, they would strike an Indian trail—"a way known to the Indian guides" [and described in the early records], which took them via North Brookfield centre to near South Brookfield village, where they would strike the old country road that led directly to the town and Sergt. Ayers' Inn. This would make a march of "ten miles" as estimated by Wheeler. And it is evident that he approached the town from the east ; as he says the savages, who followed in his track, were found "rifling of houses" at that end of the town by Curtis and Young, who had been posted away to Boston before their appearance on the hill. In the mean while, the Indians would be busy, in torturing—perhaps burning the wounded, and scalping and stripping the slain, and assorting and dividing the plunder, long enough to account for the three or four hours' time which elapsed after the retreat and till they were met by Curtis and Young. The ambush was a success ; they had achieved a complete victory ; had broken the power of the English troops ; had slain the three military leaders of the Plantation ; there was no need that they should hurry the pursuit. The town on the hill was at their mercy — or their malice !

Here then is the evidence in favor of this southern location as the place of Capt. Wheeler's memorable Surprise and Defeat. The Captain's own account of the event, and description of the place, and of his approach, and manœuvres and retreat ; the precise geographical information recorded by intelligent and credible guides ; and the exact correspondence of natural features with contemporary delineations, all combined, appear to put the identification beyond reasonable doubt.¹ But to this written evidence, we may add the confirmatory testimony of local tradition. This ravine and swamp and the adjacent hills have been in possession of the Pepper family for three generations. They found attached to the place, and have preserved, a distinct tradition, that this was the scene of Capt. Wheeler's Fight with the Indians. Unsupported tradition may have small value ; but where it has intrinsic probability, and is in agreement with well-attested facts, its weight is to be duly recognized. And it is scarcely conceivable, that the memories and associations of an event so vital in itself and in its consequences, could have become obliterated from the locality, or been very much distorted, when the elder Mr. Pepper purchased these estates.

And it should be added, as a fact of considerable significance, that the designation "Death Valley," is still remembered as the name given by the old people to this ravine.

This Surprise and Defeat of Hutchinson and Wheeler and the destruction of Brookfield, was most important in its direct and ultimate consequences. It was the hinge on which turned the then opening door of war. It was the bloody prelude to yet bloodier acts to follow in the immediate future. It was the first victory achieved by the Indians over an armed force of English troops ; and thus it broke the charm of the white man's invincibility which had spell-bound the red man ever since the destruction of the great Pequot fort in 1637. It was that great success, which raised the Indian in his own esteem to a level with his white antagonist ; which proved the superiority of his tactics ; and taken by itself, was the sure presage of the ultimate triumph of his cause. And it infused a mortal fear into the hearts of the English soldiers, and spread terror through the New England colonies.

And this daring and successful encounter brought to the front the hitherto peaceful interior tribes, and showed what, without the leadership of distinguished chiefs, the young men could do. It showed what was the strength of concerted counsel, and the force of concentrated action. The Quabaugs, Wabbaquassets, Nashaways and Nipnets demonstrated their right to become a power for redemption and revenge. Henceforth they were to take rank with the Mohegans and Narragansetts, in strategy and deeds of bloody valor.¹

And this success turned the scale with the River tribes. The Naunotuks and Pacomptucks appear to have been in doubt whether to remain neutral, or espouse the cause of Philip and join the combination for the extermination of the English. The news from Brookfield decided the doubt. When the scouts brought report of Wheeler's defeat, the Naunotuks "made eleven triumphing shouts;" and immediately a party of young braves set off for Quabaug. And thenceforth these River Indians were prominent in the sanguinary surprises and massacres of the settlers in the Connecticut valley.

King Philip at Quabaug. — After his escape from Pocasset swamp in the early morning of July 31, leaving 100 wigwams (indicating the large number of his adherents), he made a hurried march to Rehoboth and encamped. Here, about 10 o'clock in the morning of Aug. 1, he was attacked by Oneko and 50 Mohegans, and some Natick Indians, and in the sharp fight that ensued, Nimrod, his chief counsellor, and many of his bravest captains and men were killed. One author says: "Nimrod and 14 of his principal men were slain;" another says: "slew about 30 of them." Philip had left about a hundred of his women and children in the Pocasset swamp, who fell into the hands of the English; but he was still burdened by a large number of non-combatants; and provisions failing, and the surrounding country becoming alarmed, he was put to his wits' end. A considerable part of his followers were discouraged and left him, some going to the Narragansetts, and some seeking refuge near their old homes. Philip, with a remnant of his men and many women, took a westerly course, and soon struck the old Providence Trail, which took him to Wabbaquasset and Quabaug, where from the old time league of amity, as well as the new alliance, he counted on shelter and food and material aid. There is evidence that his coming was known beforehand, and that "the Sachems had sent men to Philip to conduct him up to Squabaug, with assurance that they would protect him."² He reached Quabaug Old Fort Thursday, Aug. 5, as appears from the following letter written by Maj. Pynchon Saturday, Aug. 7 :

" I have just now intelligence brought me by our Indians, that Philip with 40 of his men is now at a place called Ashquoack a little on this side of Quabaug, somewhat to the southward of our way thither, and not much, being but a little off the way: and I suppose not above 23 miles off this town; and thereabouts he resolves to settle, if he be not disturbed; because as is a place of food; y^e English of Quabaug their corn being hard by, and the Indians have another great Cornfield hard by on the southward side, and not far southward are more Indian Cornfields; he came two days ago to this place and there pitches. It is not far from Memenimisee which is a little to the northwest of Quabaug, where Philip's brother is, and Mattaloos with 200 soldiers and upwards. Our Indians judge that either Philip will go to them at Memenimisee, or that they will come to Philip at Asquoasch, which the Indians think is rather the more convenient place, and so they make 250 soldiers.

TO GOV. WINTHROP OF CONNECTICUT."

Undoubtedly Philip was informed by scouts of the raising the siege of Brookfield by Maj. Willard on Wednesday night, and of the concentration of the allies at the stronghold at Menameset, and deemed it prudent to join them there, which he did on Friday. "King Philip and about 40 men . . . joined the Nipmuck Indians in a swamp ten or twelve miles north of Brookfield on the 5th [6th] of August."¹

The Relation of George Memicho, before referred to, is here given more in full: "Upon Friday the 5th [6th] of this instant (August) Philip and his company came to us at this swamp, six miles from the swamp where they killed our men. Philip brought with him about forty men, but women and children many more, the number I cannot tell. Philip's men were about 30 of them armed with guns, the rest had bows and arrows. He observed there were about ten of Philip's men wounded. Philip was conducted to the swamp by two Indians, one of them Caleb of Tatumasket, beyond Mendon. The Indians told Philip at his first coming what they had done to the English at Quabaug; then he presented and gave to three sagamores, viz. John, alias Apequinash, Quansit, and Mawtamps, to each of them about a peck of unstrung wampum, which they accepted. Philip, as I understood, told Quabaug and Nipmuck Indians, that when he first came towards the Nipmuck country and left his own, he had in his company about 250 men, besides women and children, including the Squaw Sachem [Weetamoo] and her company, but now they had left him, and some of them were killed, and he was reduced to 40 men, besides women and children. I heard also that Philip said, if the English had charged upon him and his people at the swamp in his own country one or two days more they had been all taken, for their powder was almost spent : he also said, that if the English [under Capt. Henchman] had pursued him closely, as he travelled up to them, he must needs have been taken."¹

From this date Philip disappears from our neighborhood. The whole region lying north and west of Menameset was an Unknown Land to the English, where the whole force of natives was safe from pursuit, and in easy communication with the tribes in Worcester county, and the Connecticut valley ; and their scouts were on every hilltop in the daytime, and near every settlement and army post in the night.

To take up the dropped thread of our narrative : Capt. Wheeler states that on Monday afternoon, just after his Indian pursuers reached the town, some mounted travellers who were on the way to Connecticut via Brookfield, saw them burning some houses and killing some cattle at the east end of the town, and heard several guns shot off further within the town, and judging that the inhabitants were in peril and themselves in danger, immediately returned to Marlboro' and gave the intelligence before the foot messenger Curtis reached there, which was the cause of Maj. Willard's timely coming. Maj. Pynchon at Springfield got word of the ambush from some friendly Indians, on Tuesday, but no tidings from the town till Wednesday the 4th. He says :

"Aug. 4th, just now at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, Judah Trumble who went last night in the night to Quabaug is returned : he went within 40 rods of the houses, and discerned Coy's house and barn burnt and saw two houses more burnt ; saw one Indian with a gun, but no English ; at this dismal sight he returned, and his horse tiring came in on foot much spent . . . our people are much scattered . . . we earnestly request you to send what force you may judge needful either to relieve the English yet left, if any be alive at Quabaug, or to pursue these Indians. Speedy succor is necessary.

To the GOVERNOR OF CONN. COLONY."

The relief brought by Maj. Willard on Wednesday night has been already detailed. Ephraim Curtis hastened on from Marlboro' and reported to the Governor in Boston ; and Capt. Thomas Lathrop of Beverly, and Capt. Richard Beers of Watertown, each with a full company, were ordered to Brookfield, and reached there Saturday, Aug. 7. Capt. Thomas Watts of Hartford, with 40 dragoons and a company of 30 Indians, came to Springfield Aug. 6, and with Lieut. Thomas Cooper and his troop of 27 men and ten Springfield Indians, marched the next day to Brookfield ; so that by Saturday night, there were (not counting Wheeler's small force) not less than 300 well armed men in camp on

Foster's hill. On Sunday the 8th, this force marched northward to the Menameset country, but found no Indians. On Monday the 9th, Capt. Samuel Mosely with a full company reached Brookfield and reported to Maj. Willard. The Major, fearing that the hostiles had moved west towards the English settlements, decided to send a part of his forces to the River; and Lathrop and Beers immediately started for Hadley, and Watts for Springfield, leaving Willard and Mosely at Brookfield. The next day, Aug. 10, Capt. Wheeler, with the well men of his troop and some of the wounded, including Capt. Hutchinson, started for Marlboro', which he reached on the 14th, and where Capt. H. died on the 19th. Probably some of the houseless inhabitants went to Springfield on their way to Suffield with Capt. Watts; the Warners and Younglove to Hadley with Capt. Lathrop; and the Prichard and other eastern families towards the Bay with Capt. Wheeler. Captains Lathrop and Beers found all quiet on the River, and immediately returned to Brookfield; and Aug. 14 Maj. Willard organized another expedition to go in search of the Indians by a simultaneous movement to the north and west. The force comprised the men under Lathrop, Beers and Mosely. In a letter dated Aug. 16, Capt. Mosely gives these details:

"The day before I cajme from Quoahbaugh — I martched In company with Capt. Beeres and Capt. Laytrop To the Swamp wheare they left me,¹ & tooke their martch to Sprinkefilld [Hadley] — & asoone as they ware gone I tooke my martch Into the Woods about 8 mills beyond the Swamp where Capt. Huttchenson & the rest ware y^t ware Wounded & killed . . . we did find a p^rsell of Wigwams beyond the Swamp aboutt 20 — w^{ch} we burntt &c"

Capt. Mosely then retraced his steps to Brookfield, and the next day started for Lancaster and Dunstable. Captains Lathrop and Beers went to Hadley; but returned to Brookfield Aug. 21 or 22; and the next day marched back to Hadley. Maj. Pynchon writes from Springfield Aug. 22:

"Capt. John Allyn — Sr, In y^e night a post was sent me from Hadley that our forces are returned; Capt. Watts thither, and the Bay forces to Qva-baug. Nothing done but about 50 wigwams they found empty w^{ch} they have burnt. They write from Hadley they expect nothing but y^e enemy to insult & fall upon y^e remote Towns; that they are in great fears; . . . Suspect our Indians y^t went out to be feareful or false or both; say y^t y^e sheep at Squakeake are driven away since y^e soldiers were there: Suspect the enemy to be betweene Hadley and Squakheak, at Paquayag, about 10 miles from Great River" . . .

[Directed] "These for Mr. John Allyn at Hartford. Hast. Post Hast."

The following letter from the Massachusetts Council gives us an insight into Brookfield affairs at this date.

"Maj. WILLARD. Sir: We received two or three letters from you, wherein we understand that our forces cannot meet with the enemy. The Lord humble us under His afflictive hand. Touching the ordering and disposing the forces under your command, we cannot particularly direct you what to do, only in general we hope you will endeavour to your utmost to disrest the enemy. Also we think it incumbent upon you to employ your garrison to fortify your quarters at Quabaug what you may. And also we propose whether it be not advisable to send a ply of soldiers to the Nipmuck towns of Wabquassitt and Manexit where there is good store of corn possibly some Indians may be about those places to get food; and if you can engage any persons English or Indians by promise of reward to scout abroad to discover where the enemy lurkes and to bring you tidings before a great body march to them, and if they do march upon any discovery will it not be best to march in the night as secretly as you can, and when you come near the enemy, to leave an ambushment there, and by a retreat after a little charge to draw the enemy into the ambushment. And furthermore we advise if you send to the towns where the corn grows not to cut it up, but rather preserve it, for it being near ripe cutting up will not destroy it. And tho' at a distance, yet we conceive the scarcity among divers English is like to be such that necessity will put some to fetch it from thence.

We have inclosed a letter to Maj. Pynchon, which we desire you to peruse and seal, whereby you may perceive our apprehensions touching sending forces to secure those towns. But yet we advise (if you think fit) to ride up with a guard to Springfield, and give Maj. Pynchon a visit and encourage him and the people in those parts. Touching supply of those small particulars you send for, order is given to the Committee to send them. So committing you to the Lord, desiring his presence with you and guidance of you, with our love and respects to yourself and the rest of your officers we remain

Pray do your best endeavour to send the wounded men homeward as soon as is possible.

AUGUST 24, 1675."

All was quiet at Quabaug and Menameset. The lurking-place of the Indians was only known when their empty wigwams were found; yet as events proved, they kept within striking distance of the English plantations, and always were encountered by our captains at points the least suspected.¹ There was nothing of value left to tempt them to make another assault on our town; and the scene of conflict was transferred to the Connecticut valley, and was opened there at an unexpected moment.

As before noted, Capt^s Lathrop and Beers went to Hadley Aug. 23. The Indians were then gathered at a fort about midway between Northampton and Hatfield. As a precautionary measure, rather than from a belief in their hostile intentions, it was judged best to disarm the Indians then in the fort. And on the next day a parley was held, and a formal demand for the surrender of their arms was made. The Indians objected, and demanded time till the next morning for consideration, when a final answer would be given. Distrusting their sincerity, the officers determined to surround the fort, and secure their arms by force, if need be. "Whereupon Capt^s Lathrop and Beers, with whom the thing was left, at midnight sent over to our officers [at Northampton] to draw as nigh the fort as they could without being perceived, and they would do the like on Hatfield side, and so at break of day come upon them: but before they came, the Indians were fled, having killed an old sachem who was not willing to go with them. The captains resolved to follow them, and pursued a great pace after them, with about an hundred men. They intended to parley with the Indians; but on a sudden the Indians let fly about forty guns at them, and were soon answered by a volley from our men; about forty ran down into the swamp after them, poured in shot upon them, made them throw down much of their luggage, and after a while, our men, after the Indian manner, got behind trees and watched their opportunities to make shots at them. The fight continued about three hours; we lost six men upon the ground, though one was shot in the back by our own men; a seventh died of his wound coming home, and two died the next night, nine in all.¹ . . . After this fight we heard no more of the Indians till the first of September, when they shot down a garrison soldier at Pocomtuck, that was looking after his horse, and ran violently up into the town, many people having scarcely time enough to get into the garrisons. That day, they burnt most of their houses and barns, the garrisons not being strong enough to sally out upon them, but killed two of their men from the forts.

The next day [Sept. 2] the Indians set upon several men that were gone out of the fort at Squakheag; they slew eight of our men, but made no attempt upon the fort.

The next day [Sept. 3] this onset being unknown, Capt. Beers set forth [from Hadley] with about thirty-six men and some carts [with the intention] to fetch off the garrison at Squakheag; and coming the next morning [Sept. 4] within three miles of the place, were set upon by a great number of Indians from the side of a swamp, where was a hot dispute for some time. Our men having lost their Captain [Beers, who was killed about three quarters of a mile southeast from the swamp] and some others, resolved at last to fly, and going to take horse [the troop horses had been left two miles to the rear] lost several men more, I think about twelve; the most that escaped got to Hadley that evening; next morning another came in, and at night another that had been taken by the Indians, and loosed from his bonds by a Natick Indian; he tells that the Indians were all drunk that night [on the rum found in one of the carts], that they mourned much for the loss of a great captain, that the English had killed twenty-five of their men. Six days after, another soldier came in, who had been lost ever since the fight, and was almost famished, and so lost his understanding that he knew not what day the fight was on. [In all, 21 were killed, and 17 saved.]

On the 5th of September [Sunday] Maj. Treat set forth [from Hadley] for Squakheag with above an hundred men; next day coming nigh Squakheag, his men were much daunted to see the heads of Capt. Beers' soldiers upon poles by the wayside. . . . Coming to the fort, he concluded forthwith to bring off the garrison; so they came away the same night, leaving the cattle there, and the dead bodies unburied, since which, seventeen of their cattle came a great part of the way themselves, and have since been fetched into Hadley." Stoddard's Letter, Sept. 15, 1675.

Maj. Willard continued in command of the garrison at Brookfield (with a visit or two at Springfield and Hadley to attend councils of war) till the 7th or 8th of September, when he returned to his duties in Middlesex county. The following letter from Maj. Pynchon to Gov. Levett, graphically describes the situation, at this date :

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 8, 1675.

. . . "You cannot be enough sensible how these Indians here do rage, and if forces be not out to give check, it is to be feared they will quickly be busy in firing all our towns, and we shall not be like to hold it without a strong garrison.

The Lord effectually humble us, the little success of our forces speak we are not yet truly humbled: and that our forces and Connecticut forces return again in such a manner as if they were afraid when the Indians were there, and yet do nothing. What shall we say — Is the Lord about to ruin us and to leave us to be destroyed? It is matter of lamentation some of our people speak of breaking up, and will be gone, and discouragements enough are on all. The Lord turn us to himself. You will have all matters by Maj. Willard, with whom I had laboring to have come, but yet I am obstructed of all hands, and yet am fit for nothing. I run a venture in sending this after Maj. Willard, fear it is hazardous, and doubt all passage their way will be stopped.

¹ When Maj. Willard came to the relief of Brookfield, the cattle which had been frightened away by the yells and firing of the Indians, fell into his rear and followed his troopers to the town. In this and later Indian wars, the people were always alarmed, when the cattle ran furiously out of the woods towards the villages.

P. S. Altho' I may not for the breaking up the garrison at Quabaug, yet it being done, and all the corn destroyed there, whether the settling it again will countervail the charge, may be considered."

Probably all the wounded soldiers and the remainder of the inhabitants (except the Ayres family whose house was standing and appears to have been fortified) went down towards the Bay with Maj. Willard; and it is evident from his letter that Maj. Pynchon understood that the garrison at Brookfield was to be broken up.

The condition of affairs was gloomy enough to discourage the stoutest hearts; the Indians were always on the alert, and had things their own way; and Pynchon's forebodings were soon to be realized. Sept. 18, Capt. Lathrop with 80 young men, most of them "the very flower of the county of Essex," in convoying some grain from Deerfield to Hatfield, was set upon by 500 Indians at Bloody Brook, and himself and 63 of his company and attendants slain. The ambush was laid in the same manner as the Surprise of Capt. Wheeler, and probably was planned by the same sachems. Sept. 26, Maj. Pynchon's farm-house and barns on the west side of the river, with all the hay and grain, were set on fire by Indians and consumed. Oct. 5, Springfield was burnt. To quote from Pynchon's letter of Oct. 8: "On the 4th, our soldiers which were at Springfield I had called off, leaving none to secure the town, because the Commissioners' order was so strict, [and they marched to Hadley]. That night a post was sent to us that 500 Indians were about Springfield intending to destroy it the 5th. With about 200 of our soldiers I marched down to Springfield, where we found all in flames, about 30 dwelling houses burnt down and 24 or 25 barns, my corn mill, saw mill and other buildings. Generally men's hay and corn are burnt, and many men whose houses stand had their goods burnt in other houses which they had carried them to. Lieut. Thomas Cooper and two more are slain, and four persons wounded. As soon as said forces appeared the Indians all drew off, so that we saw none of them. We sent out scouts that night and the next day, but discovered none." Oct. 19, Hatfield was assaulted; "The Indians hoping no less than to do the like mischief to them, they had newly done to Springfield." They killed two or three scouts belonging to the town, and six of Capt. Mosely's men. But after burning a few barns and some other buildings, they were driven off.

If the purpose of deserting Brookfield had been entertained, the threatening state of affairs, and the importance of the place as an outpost, and shelter for passing troops and travellers, induced a re-consideration; and soon after Maj. Willard left, a small company under Capt. Jonathan Poole of Reading was sent up to re-establish the garrison.

Very little can be learned of the situation of things here, or of Capt. Poole's movements. The following papers, found in the State Archives, are presented, verbatim et literatim.

Marlborough Octob the 2st 1675."

Capt. Poole and his company, then reduced to 35 men, left Brookfield and marched to headquarters at Hadley Oct. 10 or 11. In the post-script to a letter received at Boston Oct. 14, Capt. Appleton says: "I communicated thoughts with Maj. Pynchon about the garrison placing at Brookfield. And although we judge it would be some relief and comfort to our messengers going post, yet considering the great charge which must necessarily be expended upon it; and that they have no winter provisions there for the keeping of horses, without much use of which we see not how they can subsist; we have not seen cause to order any garrison thither, nor (for aught that appears) shall do; except we have some special direction from yourself for it." And in the answer of the Council, dated Oct. 15, they say: "We are satisfied in your deserting Quabaugue."

It appears that the garrison had been supplied in part with beef which belonged to the Brookfield settlers. The following entry is found in the Colony Records: "Oct. 13, 1675. In answer to the petition of Samuel Warner & Thomas Parsons, the Court judgeth it meete to allow Samuel Warner eight pounds for two oxen, & four pounds for other cattle, in all twelve pounds, & Thomas Parsons to be allowed for his cattle, to be paid by the County Treasurer." Another entry is found under date June 1, 1677: "In answer to the petition of Susanna Ayres, late of Quoboag, widow, alias Brookfield, humbly desiring the favour of this Court that what she expended on & the souldiers had of her for the country's use, as five pounds ten shillings in swyne, by Capt. Poole's order, as also seventeen shillings & seven pence Ephraim Curtis had for himself & company & horses, on the country's account, with what Major Willard had, which will appear by the account, she may be paid & satisfied for—the Court grants her request."

An order of the Council dated Nov. 16, authorized Capt. Appleton to return with the main body of his troops to the Bay. They add a post-script: "If you should come home by Quabaugue, we hear there are there about the house many swine and some cattle, which if you can order some of your men to drive home, it would be a relief to poor people that are concerned therein and are fain to live on others' charity."

Capt. A. placed garrisons in the surviving towns as follows: at Springfield, 39 men, Westfield, 29, Northampton, 26, Hadley, 30 (under Capt. Poole), Hatfield, 36, and marched homeward about Nov. 24.

The campaign had cost the colony very dearly in men and means. Three frontier towns were destroyed. Of citizens and soldiers, not less than 140 were killed or mortally wounded. The following List is compiled from the most authentic data now accessible:

At Brookfield	12	At Bloody Brook	64
" Whately	9	" Springfield	5
" Deerfield	2	" Northampton	6
" Squakheag }	8	" Hatfield	10
" Beers' Plain }	21	" Westfield	3

A source of perplexity and weakness to the English in the campaigns of this fall, was the division of counsels between the Captains commanding in the field, and the Commissioners at headquarters. The Commissioners, especially those of Connecticut, held and ordered that the troops should be used mainly in scouring the woods and seeking the enemy in their hiding-places, and thus "destroying them," rather than protecting the inhabitants of the towns by garrisons. But the Captains learned by experience that the savages could never be discovered in their lurking-places, and that they and their men were the ones likely to be "destroyed" by an Indian ambush. Maj. Pynchon writes: "Oct. 4 I had called off all our soldiers which were at Springfield, leaving none to secure the town, because the Commissioners' order was so strict;" and adds in a postscript: "To speak my thoughts — all these towns ought to be garrisoned, as I have formerly hinted. To go out after the Indians in the swamps and thickets is to hazard all our men, unless we know where they keep; which is altogether unknown to us." Capt. Appleton writes Oct. 12, on accepting the chief command, that he agrees with Maj. Pynchon in regard to present methods, and asks that the Commissioners revise that part of their instructions which strictly prohibits fixing soldiers in garrisons. Oct. 17, he writes again: "On the 13th and 14th we used all diligence to make discovery of the enemy by Scouts, but by reason of the distance of the way from hence [Hadley] to Squakeage, & the timorousness of the Scouts, it turned to little account; thereupon I found it very difficult to know what to do. Our orders were to leave no men in garrison, but keep all for a field army, which was to expose the Towns to manifest hazard. To sit still and do nothing is to tire ours and spoil our soldiers, and to ruin the country by the insupportable burden and charge. All things layed together, I thought it best to go forth after the enemy with our present forces."

And this last letter reveals another source of weakness, viz. "the timorousness of our scouts." Secretary Rawson wrote Sept. 30: "Capt. Wayt marched from Marlboro yesterday; we intended 120 men by him, but we understand there is not so many gone. Some escape away from the press, and others hide away after they are impresst. Some have been punished for it, and others shall. The slaughter in your parts has much damped men's spirits for war." Maj. Pynchon wrote the same day: "We are endeavouring to discover the enemy, daily send out scouts, but little is effected. We sometimes discover a few Indians & sometimes fires, but not the body of them, and have no Indian friends here (altho we have sent to Hartford for some) to help us. . . . Our English are somewhat awk and fearful in scouting out and expressing, but we do the best we can. We find the Indians have their scouts out. Two days ago two Englishmen at Northampton having gone out in the morning to cut wood, and but a little from the house, were both shot down dead, having two bullets apiece shot into each of their bodies. The Indians cut off their scalps, took their arms, and were off in a trice: though the English run thither presently, on the report of the guns, but could see nothing but the footing of two Indians. Last night our scouts who went out in the night to discover at Pocomtuck, about midnight being within 4 miles of Pocomtuck met 2 Indian scouts coming down this way to the towns, but it being dark they were both one upon another within 2 or 3 rods, before either discovered the other, which made both parties run, & nothing else done."

But the chief cause of the miscarriage of this campaign was the fact that our English Captains learned nothing of caution by repeated disaster, and walked heedlessly into the enemy's traps. The ambushment of Capt. Hutchinson and Wheeler is well named a "a Surprise," and it ought to have been a Lesson. But Aug. 25, Capt. Lathrop and Beers pursued the savages, who had just out-witted them, "at a great pace," and without any precautions; and their first intimation of danger was when the Indians "let fly about forty guns at them" from a swamp by the roadside. Ten days after this, Capt. Beers, forgetful of, or scorning the lesson taught him at Wequamps, marched with 36 men to the relief of Northfield, with neither vanguard nor flankers thrown out, directly into an ambushade of 130 Indians commanded by Sagamore Sam. The same thing was repeated Sept. 18, at Bloody brook. "Capt. Lathrop and his men moved along the narrow Pocomtuck path through the primeval woods — brave, fearless, foolish. The soldiers crossed the brook and halted, while the teams should slowly drag their heavy loads through the mire; 'many of them,' says Mather, 'having been so foolish and secure as to put their arms in the carts and step aside to gather grapes, which proved dear and deadly grapes to them.'" — Hon. George Sheldon. Captains Lathrop, and Beers, and Mosely were brave; but scornful of their foe. They could not get over the cherished idea that the Indian was an inferior being, and unworthy of the notice of a true soldier, and worthy only to be stamped out. His successful strategy did not undermine the prejudice; and English temerity and blamable imprudence cost a fearful and needless sacrifice of life.

THE INDIANS' WINTER QUARTERS. — About the time when Capt. Appleton left the Connecticut valley, the Indians went into winter quarters. A considerable number went to Wabbaquasset, where was great store of corn and safe hiding-places; and later they joined the Narragansetts. The River Indians gathered at Coasset, which was a piece of pine woods on the west bank of the Connecticut a little above the South Vernon railroad station (then in the town of Northfield, Mass., now in Vernon, Vt.). Philip and his band were here with them for a short time; but he soon moved off towards Albany with his own warriors, and a considerable part of the Pacomptucks, under command of Sancumachu their chief sachem. Probably the old men and some of the women and children of Philip's party and of the Pacomptucks, staid at Coasset. Food was plenty. The cattle and hogs captured at Squakheag and at Deerfield lasted for a while. The corn and wheat taken at the same places lasted longer. And it is an attested historical fact that deer and other game were unusually abundant, and owing to the depth of snow, were easily caught. The Quabaugs and Nashaways took up winter quarters at Menameset.

Winter set in early and with uncommon severity. Travel was next to impossible, except on rackets; and both whites and Indians kept in close quarters till the latter part of January, when a sudden thaw cleared off the snow.

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GARRISON AT QUABAUG.

Early in November, the Commissioners of the United Colonies had obtained what they deemed sufficient evidence that the Narragansetts were in league with Philip and the hostile Massachusetts tribes, and resolved to destroy them before they should form a union of forces. To this end, an army of 1,000 men was raised — 527 in Massachusetts, 158 in Plymouth, and 315 in Connecticut — and put under command of Gen. Josiah Winslow of Plymouth. After a march of great hardships, from deep snow and intense cold, the English reached the Narragansett fort on Sunday, December 19. The assault was bravely and skillfully made; and the defence was no less brave and stout. The fort, which was a palisade, and enclosed about 6 acres of ground, was burnt, with all the wigwams that could be crowded within this large space. Many Indian warriors, with hundreds of old men, women and children, perished by sword and fire. Eighty of the English were slain or died of their wounds, and 130 others were wounded. The larger part of the Narragansetts, viz. those that adhered to Canonchet and Pessacus (who was a brother of Miantonomoh) and Quinnapin (who had married Weetamoo a sister-in-law of Philip) retreated to the northward, and joined the Quabaugs at Menameset, in the latter part of January, where we shall shortly find them.

The authorities at Boston were in ignorance of the places of rendezvous, as well as the intentions and temper of the inland tribes, at this date. To gain the necessary information, Maj. Gookin was instructed to employ some friendly Indian spies, who should traverse the Nipmuck country, and go as far as Quabaug. He employed Job Kattenanit and James Quanapohit, two Christian Indians who had been educated by the apostle Eliot. Their reward was to be five pounds apiece. Fortunately for history, the official Reports of these spies are preserved, the brief Relation of Quanapohit in our State Archives, and his full Report in the Connecticut Archives. The latter gives a succinct account of the Indian's side of the causes and course of the war, as well as of the condition and doings and plans of the Quabaugs, Nashaways, and their allies. It is invaluable as furnishing details not found elsewhere; as supplying data for fixing important localities; and as explaining the motives and motions of both English and Indians. Its direct connection with our local annals, as well as its more general importance, justify its insertion here ; and though lengthy, it is given without abridgement.

JAMES QUANAPOHITS RELATION.

The examination & relation of James Quannapaquait, allias James Ruṁny-Marsh beeing one of the chtian Indians belonging to Natick ; taken the 24th day of Janry 1675⁷⁶, on wch day hee returned from his jorny, [for this man and another called Job of Magungoog, a chtian man also] were sent forth by order of the councill of Massachusetts vpon the last of December, [as spyes], to discover the enemyes quarters & motions & his state & condition, & to gaine what intelegence they could ; for wch end they had particuler instruction. Though when first they were moved to goe this iorny, they saw it would bee a hazardous undertaking, & that they should runne the hazard of y^r lives in it, yet they were willing to venture upon these & like considerations, (1, that they might declare y^r readines to serve the English. 2ly on of y^m namly Job had 3 children [even all hee had] y^t were carried away wth the Hassaṁameshe indians & as hee conceived were with the enemy, & he was willing to know y^r state as wel as y^e condition of y^e praying indians of Hassameske & Magunkoog y^t were hee thought in the power of y^e enemy. 3d They hoped to sugest somthing in order to y^e enimies submission to the English & making peace if they found y^e enemy in a temper fit for it & if y^t could bee effected then they hoped the poore chtian Indians at y^e Deere Island & in other places possibly might bee restored to y^r places againe, & bee freed from much suffering they are now in by this warre, & therby the jelosyes that the English have now of y^m might bee removed, these & other reasons induced y^m to runne this adventure for wch also if they returned in safty they had a promise of a reward.

They doubted the indian enemy would mistrust y^m for spyes, & y^t they would move y^m fight for them against y^e English, vnto wch doubts they were advised to tell y^e Indian enemy a laṁentable story [& y^t agreeable to truth] if y^r deepe sufferings by the English ; that Job was imprisoned severall daies [as hee was] where hee suffered much, though hee had served the English faithfully as an interp^rter & in actull armes being wth y^e Mohegins at y^e fight neare Secunke wth Philip, the beginning of August last, but imprisonment & suspitions y^e English had of him was part of his reward for y^t service to the English & as for the other James he & his brother went out wth Capt Prentis wth their horses & armes at the first going out against Philipp in June & had done faithfull service for the English as his captains had testified by y^r certificate & contined in y^r service many weekes & was in sev^rll fights & y^t his bro: Thomas had kild on of Philip cheefe men & brought in his head to the Govⁿor of Boston, & had also in the service by acedent lost the use of his left hand & y^t both James and his brother Thomas had since in November last [beeing called to it] was out wth Capt Syll in the Nipmuck contry & [as his captaine had certified] had performed faithfull service ; & was instrumentall to recov^r an English captive Peter Bents servant from y^e enimey, & his brother savd y^e lives of two English men at a wigwam at Pakachooge viz^t Mr Mackarty servant a sirgion to Capt Henchman & one Goodwin a soldier of Charlestowne, as they both could & would testify yet after all these services both they & their wives & children & all y^r country men y^t lived at Naticke were mistrusted by the English & thereupon [at a few houres warning] brought away from their place & fort & houses at Naticke & car'ed downe in boats to Deare Iland, leaving & loosing much of y^r substance, catle, swine, horse & corne, & at the Iland were exposed to great sufferings haveing litle wood for fuell, a bleak place & poore wigwams such as yey could make a shift to make y^mselves wth a few matts, & here at y^e iland had very litle provision, many of y^m, & divers other sorrowes & troubles y^ey were exposed too, & were about 350 soules men women & children; & that now haveing an oppertuny to get of y^e iland they came to see how things were wth the indians in the woods; & if they p^rfd them to fight wth & for y^m they were advised to manifest al readines & forwardnes & not shew any aversnes. Things being thus p^rpared these 2 spyes were sent away without armes excepting hatchetts & wth a litle parcht meale for provision, & they tooke y^r jorny from Cambridge the 30th of December, & from Naticke they set forth the 31th of December being Friday early in the morning. That day they past through the woods directly to Hassomesed where they lodged y^t night, on Saturday morn, being the first of Janury they past ov^r Nipmuck river & lodged at Manchage y^t night. On the 2 Janury they went forward to Maanexit w^{ch} is about 10 miles & there they met wth seaven Indians of the enemy: some of y^m had armes; haveing confere wth these indians they were conducted by those indians next day to Quabaage old fort where they met severall other Indians of y^r company's; & by them the next day were conducted to the enemies quarters w^{ch} is about twenty miles norward of Quabaage old fort at a place called Menemesseg,¹ w^{ch} is about 8 miles north where Capt Hutchison & Capt Wherler was wounded & sevel men wth them slayn (in the begining of August last) as these indians informed them; At this place among these Indians they found all the chtian Indians belonging to Hassanmiske & Magunhooge w^{ch} are about forty men & about 80 women & children; these praying indians were carried away by the enemy some went willingly, others of y^m unwillingly as they told him for befor they went away they were in a great strait, for if they came to the English they knew they shold bee sent to Deere Iland, as others were, & their corne beeing at such a distance about 40 miles from Boston it could not bee caried to susteyne y^r lives & so they should bee in danger to famish & others feard they should bee sent away to Barbados, or other places & to stay at Hassanamesho yese indians or enemies would not pmit y^m, but said they must have y^e corne, but promised yem if they would goe wth them they should not die but bee p^rserved; these beeing in this condition most of y^m thought it best to goe wth them though they feared death every way: only Tukuppawillin [y^e minster, hee lamented much & his aged father the decon & som others & would faine have come back to y^e English after they were gon as farr as Manchage but the enimy mockt him, for crying & drew him . . . the rest y^t were unwilling along wth yem: These things o^r spyes vnderstood from the p[raying] indians here. The enimys y^t hee was among & live at the afforsaid places are in . . . small townes about 20 wigwams at a place & they are all within 3 miles com[pass], and do consist of about 300 fighting men besides duple as many women & children . . . they have no fort, but wigwams only, some covred wth barks & som wth mats. The Indians y^t are heere are the Nipmuk indians, the Quabaag indians, the Paca-[choog] indians, the Weshakum & Nashaway indians. The cheefe sagomeres & captains are Mawtaamp, John with one eye & Sam [of Weshukum or Nashaway] Sagamore John [having on legg biger yⁿ the other] of Pakachooage. Here also is Matoonus & his sonns. Of the Hassanamesho & chtian Indians, hee saw here Capt Tom allias Wattasakomponin & his son Nehimiah [they say y^t the enimy have solic[it]ed V^m to take armes & fight against the English but they told James they would not fight against the English, the will rather die. Here hee also saw Tukuppawillin y^r pastor & his aged father y^r decon, whome he saith mourne greatly & daily read y^e bible w^{ch} is y^r greatst comfort. Also he ther saw James Printer brother to y^e minister, & Joseph & Sa . . . two brethern [sons to Robin of Hassameshe decesed] hee also saw Pumhamun & Jacob of Magunkoog wth divers others y^t hee could have mentioned but those are the principal.

Some of the Indians [o^r enimies] mistrusted that these two men were spies especially Matoonus & his sonnes & some others: these solicited James to borrow his hatchet & his knife [when he saw they needed none] which made him cautious of himselfe & suspitious of y^r evill intentioⁿ to him, but James [at the second towne] he came too met wth John with one eye, of Weshakum [a stout captaine among y^m] this man knew James & said thou hast been with mee in the warr wth the Mauhaks & I know thou art a valiant man & therefore none shall wrong thee nor kill the here, but they shall first kill me. Therefore abide at my wigwam & I will protect thee, So this man entertained him kindly, & protected him. Job his companion stayd at Pumhams wigwame wher his 3 children were kept: hee and Job aboard wth these indians severall daies & sometimes went forth to hunt deere not farr of & returnd againe. hee laubored to gaine what information hee could of their affayres, & was informed by Capt John [wth one eye] his host & others said things, viz^t. that Philip was quartered this winter within halfe a dayes iorny . . . fort Albany [The same thing is certified by a letter from Maior Andros Govnor of New York sent Mr Leet deputy Govnor of Connecticut dated 5th of Jannury (75) w^{ch} letter beeing sent to Govnor Wiuthrop by Mr Leet was read in o^r Councill on Thursday last 23 instant. This also may tend to confirme the truth of James his intelegence, as wel as divers other passages both before & aftermentioned] moreover they informed o^r spy that the Hadly Northampton & Spinkfeld Indians had y^r winter quarters between y^m & Philip & som quartered at Squakeake. They told him also that a cheefe captaine named — of Hadley & Norhampton indians who was a valiant man had been a cheefe captaine in the Mawhak warre had attempted to kill Philip & intended to do it; aleaging that Philip had begun a warr with the English that had brought great trouble upon them. Hee saith that these Indians told him that it was som of their number y^t were in the Nipmuck country, to get the corn & y^t the English came upon y^m in the wigwam at Hassunnamesuke & there the killd two Englishmen, & that they had got & caried away all the corne at Pakuahooage & in the Nipmuck country, vnto their quarters, vpon w^{ch} they had lived this winter & upon beefe & porke they had kild about Quaboage, & venison [of w^{ch} there is great store in those parts & by reason of y^e deep snow y^r beeing [mid thigh deep] it is easy to kill deare without gunns, hee saith that ere long, when y^r beefe & porke & deere is spent & gon, that they wilbe in want of corne, but they intend then to com downe vpon the English townes, of Lancaster Marlborow Groaton, & particulely they intend first to cut of Lancaster bridge & then say they there can no releef com to y^m from Boston nor the people cannot escape & their they hope to have corne enough. Hee saith they have store of armes, & have a gunsmith among y^m a lame man that is a good workman & keeps y^r gunns wel fixt They have some armes among y^m that the tooke in the 2 fights when Capt Beeaes & Capt Lothrop was slayne. As for am̄nition they have some but not great store y^t hee saw: Capt John wth one eye shewed him a small kettle full of powder about halfe a peck & 2 hornes full besides. hee asked them where they got y^r am̄nition, hee answered som wee had from the English were kild, & som from fort Albany, but (said hee) y^e Dutch will not sell us powder but wee give or bever & wompon to the Mawhakes & they buy it & let us have it of y^m, they told him y^t they had sent to y^e Wompeages & Mawquas to ayd them in the spring, that the Wampeages promised them helpe, but the Maquaws said they were not willing to fight wth English, but they would fight with the Mohegins & Pequets that were bretheren to the English. Further hee saith that they told him that the Frenchman y^t was at Boston this sumer [viz^t Mons^r Normanville] was with Phillip & his company as hee went back at y^r quarter about Pokomtuck, after hee returnd from Boston. And y^t in their sight hee burned certene papers that hee said were letters from Boston to y^e French saying what shall I doe with these papers any longer, Hee said to the Indians I would not have you burne the English mill, nor the meeting houses, nor the best houses for wee [ie the French] intend to bee with you in the spring before planting time & I will bring three hundred of yo^r countrymen y^t are hunters & have bene three yeares at the French. And wee will bring armes & am̄nition enough, for wee intend to helpe you against the English & posses our selves of Keneckitic river & other English plantations, and our King [ie y^e French King] will send shippes to stopp supplies from com̄ing by sea [from their King] to Boston.

Hee saith that they told him that the Pennakooge indians were quartered about the head of Keneticut river, & had not at all ingageed in any fight with the English, & would not, their sagamors Wannalancet & others restrayned the young men (who had an opptunity to have destroyd many of Capt Moselys men when hee was at Pennakooge last sumer but their sagamores would not suffer them to shoot a gunne.

Further hee saith that hee understood by the cheefe men & old men

y^t they were inclinable to have peace againe with the English, but the young men [who are their principal soldiers] say we wil have no peace wee are all or most of vs alive yet & the English have kild very few of us last summer why shall wee have peace to bee made slaves, & either be kild or sent away to sea to Barbadoes &c. Let us live as long as wee can & die like men, & not live to bee enslaved. Hee saith there is an English man a young man amongst them alive named Robert Pepper, who being woounded in the legg in the fight when Capt Beares was kild hid himselfe in the crotch of a great tree y^t lay on the ground; where an Indian called Sam Sagamore of Nash-away, found him alive & tooke him prisoner & hee became his master hee lay lame severll weekes but beeing well vsed by his master & means vsed hee is now wel recov^red, hee saith y^t once since hee was wel his master [carring him abroad with him] left him at Squakeake neare where hee was taken prisoner his M^r wishing him to goe to the English [whether y^r was a cart way led] but Robert Pepper told James hee was afraid his master did it but to try his fidelity to him to intrap him, & y^t if hee should have gon away towards y^e English they would have intercepted him & so his life had beene in danger, so hee went after his master & enquired after him & at last found him out, hee saith Rob Peper would bee glad to escape home and hopes hee shall meet with an opportunity, when the Indians march nearer the English. James said [his master told him hee would send him home when hee had convenient opportunity. Also hee was informed that there are two more English men prisoners with Philip & Hadly Indians, one is of Boston servant to a shipcarpenter Grenhough, the other hee remembers not his name.

Hee saith, that before hee & Job came among those indians they told y^m the Narragants had sent in on or 2 English scalpes, but these indians would not receive them, but shot at y^r messenger & said they were English mens friends all last summer & would not credit y^r first messengers, after yer came other messengers from Narragansetts & brought more heads [hee saw twelve scalpes of English hand upon trees] y^t then these Indians beeleved y^e Narragansset & receved the scalps & paid y^m [as y^r maner is], & now they beeleved that the Narragansitts & English are at warre, of w^{ch} they are glad. The Narragansetts told these indians that the English had had fight with them, & killed about forty fighting men & on Sachem & about 300 old men women & children were kild & burnt in the wigwams most of w^{ch} were destroyd, they told him y^t as the Narragansetts said that the Mohegins & Pequitts Indians killed & woounded of y^m, as many as the English had kild. Being questioned by Mr Danforth whether hee could learne whether the Narragansetts had ayded & assisted Philip & his company in the summer against the English, hee answered y^t hee vnderstood by those indians y^t they had not, but lookt on y^m as freinds to the English all along til now & their enemies. Hee saith y^t hee was informed that the Nargansetts said y^t an English man one Joshua Tift was among them when they had y^r fight at the English & y^t hee did y^m good service & kild & woounded 5 or 6 English in y^t fight & y^t before they wold trust him hee had kild a miller an English man at Narragansit, & brought his scalpe to them. Also hee said y^t the Naragansits told these indians y^t one William that lives in those parts brought them some powder & offered them all his cattle for provisions desiring only y^t his life might bee spared & his children & grandchildren. These Narragansits solicited these indians to send them some helpe [. . . they knew them to be stout soldiers], they promised to send with them 20 men to goe wth them to see how things were, & they determined to begin y^r jorney laast Saturday [ie 22th January] and they also resolved to take Job with them to Narraganset indians; and vpon the same day Mawtaamp the sagomor said hee would goe with another company up to Phillip, to informe him & those Indians of the breach betwene the English & Narragansitts & hee said that James [our spy] should goe along wth him to Phillip to acquaint him of the state of affayres among the English & praying indians. James s^d to Mataamp I am willing to goe to Philip but not at this present because Philip knowes that I fought against him on the English side at Mount Hope & other places, & hee will not beleeve y^t I am really turned to his p^{ty}, vnles I first do some exploit & kill some English men & carry y^r heads to him. Let me have oportuty to doe something of this nature before I goe to Philip, this answer of James seemed to satisfy the sagamore Mawtaamp. But James doubting notwithstanding, that hee might change his mind and take him with him when hee went, hee was resolved to endeavor an escape before y^e time they intended the iorny, especially considering what Tachupawillin told him in secret y^t Philip had given order to his men that if they mett wth these John Hunter, James Speen, this James & Thomas Quannupaquit [brethern & Andrew Pitamee & Peter Ephraim they bring them to him or put y^m to death]. Accordingly James moved Job [his companion] to contrive a way for an escape. Job conceled his purpose, and vpon Wensday the 19th of this instant they 2 early in the morne went out as if they would goe a hunting for deare, as they had don at other times & returnd againe [James having gotten about a pint of nokake of Symon Squa on of y^e praying indians] they beeing in y^e woods hunted for deere & killd 4 deare & as they traveld to & fro they percevd that by som footing of indians that some did watch their motions, so towards night y^e being neare a pond they drew the deare ad y^e pond & tooke vp y^r quarters in thicke swampe & their made a fire & dresd some of y^e venison, but no other indians came to y^m; so about 3 oclock before day, James said to Job now let vs escape away if wee can. But Job said I am not willing to goe now, because my children are here I will stay longer if God please hee can p^{serve} my life if not I am willing to die I will therfore goe backe againe to y^e indians & goe along with the company to y^e Naragansitt & if I returne I will vse what policy I can to get away my children, if I live about . . . weekes hence I will com back & I will come to Naticke & therfore if you can take 4 or 5 indians to meet me there, I shall if I live by y^t time get more intelligence of affayres. Then James s^d to him I must now goe away for I am not like to have a better optunity, & if they should carry mee to Philip I shall die, but I am sorry for you Job, least when I am gon they kill you for my sake, but you may tel y^m I runne away from you & was affrayd to goe to Philip before I had don som exploit. So they parted—& James our spy came homeward travilling through the woods night & day vntill he came to Naticke to James Spene wigwam who lives their to looke to som aged & sick folkes y^t were not in capacity to be brought downe to Deare Iland & on Lord's day came to Serjant Williams at y^e village & by him was conducted to & so to Boston before the Councel the same day w^{ch} was the 24th day of this instnt Janury 1675 where his examination & relation was written by 2 scribes: & though this may a litle differ from others in some pticulers yet for substance it is the same.

Moreover hee said y^t hee heard y^t the Narragansit were marched vpp into the woods toward Quantesisit & yy were in company & the first compy of above 200 ammong y^m were several woounded werre come before y^e Narragansit come vp to these Indians:—beeing omitted before is put in heare."

It is proper to say that the statement of facts in this Relation is fully corroborated by other records; and the disclosure of future plans, as the intended raids on Lancaster and other towns, was verified by the events. And it is proper to add, that the authorities of Boston were not influenced to take the necessary precautions for defence, and the towns named fell a prey to the vengeance of the savages.

The necessity of a depot of supplies, and shelter for troops and posts, between Marlborough and the Connecticut river, becoming apparent, and as a point from which to strike the Menameset camps, the Commissioners of the United Colonies issued an order Feb. 8, 1675-6, for raising 600 men to forthwith rendezvous at Quabaug; and Connecticut was requested to engage the Pequots and Mohegans to join in the service. A large part of the soldiers were to be either dragoons, or troopers well fitted with long firearms; and there was to be one man for every ten horses to take care of them. The first date set was the 20th, afterwards changed to the 29th.

Two days after the issuing of this order, viz. Feb. 10, (the date named by Job in his Report) the town of Lancaster was surprised by a war party sent out from the camp north of Brookfield, most of the buildings burnt, and about fifty of the inhabitants killed or carried away captive. Among the latter was Mrs. Rowlandson and her three children, who were taken to Menameset. Her "Narrative," published soon after her release, supplies important information, which is quoted in these pages.

Feb. 21, (the day that the Indians from Menameset assaulted and nearly destroyed Medfield) the Council at Boston ordered that carpenters' tools for six men, nayles of all sorts with hooks and hinges for doors and locks and of such sort as the chief carpenter shall appoint, be sent up to build a quarter at Quoboag. And four days later, the Committee was ordered to procure either John Brewer of Sudbury or John Coolidge of Watertown, to go up with the army and build a house or houses for lodging and shelter of provisions. At the meeting on the 21st, the Mass. Council voted to raise 100 foot and 72 troopers to fill up their quota of the proposed army. And John Curtis and six friendly Indians from Deer Island were engaged to serve as guides.

An expeditionary force was organized and sent up under command of Maj. Thomas Savage of Boston, consisting of a company of Horse under Capt. John Whipple, and three Foot companies under Capts. Wm. Turner, Samuel Mosely and Benj. Gillam. They reached Quabaug Mar. 2, and were joined there by Maj. Treat with three or four companies from Connecticut.

March 3, leaving Capt. Turner to garrison Quabaug, Maj. Savage with this formidable body of men marched to Menameset, but found no Indians.

It will be remembered that in the middle of January, Quanapohit had found about 1,000 Indians gathered at Menameset, of whom 300 were fighting men. To these had been added 400 or 500 warriors, and double that number of non-combatants from Narragansett, as well as squads and stragglers from other tribes. All accounts agree that there were in camp here the last week in February, not less than 2,000 Indians. The cattle, swine and corn taken at Brookfield in the fall, with venison, and the spoils from Lancaster had made food abundant, and life easy; and the deep snows had rendered their position secure from attack. But the Indians had not been ignorant of the later English movements. Marlborough was the midway headquarters and rallying-point of troops, destined for more western service. It was easy for their scouts to skulk there, and watch all the preparations, and as easy to divine the intended purpose; and a day's run carried the news to Mat-taump and the allies.

Acting on such information, the great body of Indians left Menameset simultaneously with the concentration of English troops at Marlborough, viz. on Feb. 27, and pushed on northward, heading for Paquayag. They reached Miller's river¹ Mar. 3, the same day on which the English forces started to look for them at Menameset. Their scouts had reported the starting of the troops from Quabaug, and though well on their way, the alarm was great, and the last day's march of the savages was a "rush." But by a stratagem the English were thrown off the scent; and the whole great body got safely over the river, and out of harm's way.

This manœuvre of the Indians, by which the English plan was frustrated, deserves a detailed notice in this connection; and fortunately Mrs. Rowlandson, who was with the Indians, in her Narrative supplies the materials. When Maj. Savage left Quabaug on the 3d, the savages were encamped in a swamp about 17 miles from Menameset, and 8 miles southward of Paquayag. The crowd was unwieldy; "there were many hundreds, old and young, some sick and some lame, many had papposes at their backs, the greatest number (at this time with us) were squaws, and they travelled with all they had, bag and baggage : . . . they went as if they had gone for their lives for some considerable way ; and then they made a stop, and chose out some of their stoutest men, and sent them back to hold the English army in play whilst the rest escaped ; and then like Jehu they marched on furiously, with their old and young : Some carried their old decipied mothers, some carried one and some another. Four of them carried a great Indian upon a bier ; but going through a thick wood with him, they were hindered, and could make no haste ; whereupon they took him upon their backs, and carried him one at a time, till they came to Bacquag River. Upon a Friday a little after noon we came to this river : . . . They quickly fell to cutting dry trees, to make rafts to carry them over the river, and soon my turn came to go over. By the advantage of some brush which they laid upon the raft to sit on, I did not wet my feet (which many of themselves at the other end were mid leg deep) : . . . A certain number of us got over the river that night ; but it was the night after the Sabbath before all the company was got over." Where, all this while, were our English dragoons? Mrs. R. says that some of the stoutest Indians were sent back "to hold the English army in play." This covering party, in conjunction with the scouts left near Menameset, kept Maj. Savage at bay, or on false scents for two whole days, so that he did not reach Paquayag till sometime in the forenoon of Monday, Mar. 6. As they came up to the river, they saw on the other side the smoke of the wigwams, which the retreating Indians had set fire to ; but they did not cross. Our authoress writes : "this river put a stop to them. God did not give them courage or activity to go over after us." It should be said, that the river was swollen by the spring freshet, and crossing by horse must have been difficult and hazardous. The Massachusetts Council were deeply chagrined at the signal failure of this expedition. In a letter to Maj. Savage at Hadley, dated March 31, they say : "Leaving Capt. Turner in Capt. Poole's place, with the rest of the army we expressly command you to draw homeward, and endeavor in your return to visit the enemy about Pachquake (Paquayag), and be careful not to be deceived by their lapwing stratagems, by drawing you off from your nest to follow some men."

The Indians, relieved from pursuit, went leisurely to Squakheak, which they reached the next day, Mar. 7.

Maj. Savage returned to Quabaug, and thence marched to Hadley, which was again made the headquarters of the army. Capt. Turner had left a guard of 11 men (out of his company of 89) under Sergt. William Ingraham, to garrison Quabaug, and gone to Hadley, and thence to Northampton.

The following papers, found in the State Archives, supply about all that is known of the garrison here, for the ensuing months.

"Accord to warrant from Authority, I have taken into my hand 83 bushels and half of Indian Corn, which were by the Indians of this town set up in barns. Out of which parcell of corn by the Hon^d Major General's warrant, Capt. Whipple had 11 bushels & a peck for the use of his Company, Capt. Gookin had 9 bushels more of it, Capt. Oakes had 4 bush. 3 pecks. Also in fulfillment of a warrant from Maj. Willard requiring me to furnish them with Corn for their horses, Quartermaster Wade had for the use of his Company 3 bushels and a half. I paid one penny half pence a bushel for threshing out this Corn, which amounted to 3 bush. and a peck. The Indians sent from Quabaug had half a bushel. The remainder of this Corn I have secured in the Magazine at Marlboro'.

COMISSARY BRADGEN

AND LOVING FFRIEND. Sir the occasion of my presant wrighting to you is this, upon serious Thoughts wrighting what we heard by the last posts from our Army, that our Army was disposed to garrison the towns they were in & the neighboring towns & being Resolved, not to follow the Enemy, till further help be sent them, & we know that cannot be very spedy, therefore the enemy being so Numerous & not ffollowed by our forces they will have opportunity Enough to scatter or to Remove their body & we may Expect their Coming this way & to fall on us who are but few, & So distant from being Relieved by any that we Can expect nothing but to be Cut off, and in order to our preservation, as to the use of means, I have now sent you a post for Ammunition, Especially Bullets, and some powder & some flints, for we are badly man d as this bearer Can Informe you & worse for Ammunition, therefore as you Love our Lives & welfare I request & require you to Assist this bearer with Conveniensys as Above s d & a fresh horse & Som Guard with said Ammunition forthwith to be sent us, or Else if we be set upon by Any Considerable force of the Enemy, before we have A recruit we shall not be Abel to maintaine our Garreson. I have writen by the post to the Counsell; but you know are farr distant & not so sensibel of our Condition as I wish they were, & I know not when I shall have any supply from them & Considering our presant eminent danger makes me Chus make my Aplication to you for reliefe. Which if we be not presantly relieved as Above, I shall not keepe the souldiers here, for they are discouraged for the reason Above Expressed therefore pray faile not In the Least herein but with all presant Expedition to send away to us. and if you can to spare us alsoe a file of men, for this bearer will Informe of how it wth us (I meane a file of men till we Can send to the Counsell) not else at presant to troubel you, not questioning your diligence to Acomplish our desires already mentioned Soe Leaving you with our selves to ye protection of ye Almighty God whoe Alone is abel to preserve us, desiring your prayers for us, I remain Yours to Comand

"Hon^d Sirs From the hand of a single man that came post I having received this day a letter from Mr. Ingre^m the com^{dr} of the Garrison at Quo-boag judged it my duty to inform your Worships as soon as I could of the deplorable estate of that Garrison the Report of which you have in his letter here inclosed. Adding my most humble request that their jeopardous condition may be speedily taken into your serious consideration. Yourselves well Know of what sad consequences 'tis like to be if that Garrison should be over come by the enemy. The force in this place is barely enough to secure the Country's store, and the several fortifications, therefore we cannot supply them with men; and here is likewise a scarcity of able horses for posts; and whereas Mr. Ingram formerly sent to me for wastcoats & drawers for the supply of the Army & themselves at Quaboag, & for some hose, I have not to supply them: he also wrote for flints, and of them we have but few. I refer those matters to your prudence, and subscribe myself

"AT A COUNCIL HELD AT BOSTON 21. 1. 1675-6.

It is ordered that Capt. Syll give forth his order to the several constables of Charlestown, Cambridge, Watertown, Sudbury and Marlborough forthwith to send in to him the horses and men that were under his command formerly, or in default thereof to impress so many, for the carriage of ammunition and provision from Marlborough to Brookfield; and Maj. Willard is ordered forthwith to appoint said Capt. Syll twenty troopers & dragoons of Essex & Norfolk men to guard the said provisions to the place appointed, and after the delivery of the said provisions and ammunition at the garrison there, the said Syll is ordered to return home, & dismiss the said horses and men, and return the troopers and dragoons to Maj. Willard, and attend his further order

It is also ordered that Capt. Syll cause the troopers at Cambridge and Charlestown to make so many 4 gallon runletts to put powder in as may suffice to carry 200 lbs. of powder from Marlborough to Brookfield for the Country's service."

COUNCIL'S ORDER TO CAPT. THOMAS PRENTIS.

"You are hereby ordered and required to impress 7 sufficient Troopers armed with carbines or long arms to be furnished with ammunition, provisions for horse and men for eight days — for guarding, out of the Troop, and send them fitted and furnished unto Cambridge the 24th inst. at 10 o'clk A.M., then and there to march under the command of Capt. Nathaniel Graves for guarding the carriages from Marlboro to Brookfield. You are also ordered to impress 6 Troopers in Marlboro; and Capt. Davis is also to impress 6 Troopers, all to march from Marlboro with the rest. Dated March 22, 1675-6."

" AT A COUNCIL HELD AT BOSTON 22 MAR. 1675-6.

Ordered, that Capt. Nathaniel Graves of Charlestown shall be the commander of the garrison at Brookfield, and all inferior officers and soldiers are required to be obedient to him :

Also the said Capt. Graves is ordered to take the command of twenty Troopers, and thirty horses, and fifteen men besides with the carriage [pack] horses to be loaded with provisions and ammunition, to be conveyed to the garrison at Brookfield : and after the carriages [pack-loads] are lodged there, he then send back the Troopers and carriage-horses, dismissing them to their several homes : And that Wm Ingram now Commander of the Garrison at Brookfield is dismissed after Capt. Graves comes there, who is to return with the Troopers and carriages.* It is further ordered that Maj. Savage order ten soldiers more to strengthen the Garrison at Brookfield as soon as he can conveniently : And the said Capt. Graves is ordered with all convenient despatch to march up to Brookfield with the said carriages.

Extract of a letter from the Council to Maj. Savage, dated April 1, 1676 : " We have lately sent Capt. Graves of Charlestown with about 50 men and 30 horses laden with provisions & ammunition to Quabaug, ordering him to take the charge of the garrison for the present, and to return the horses & men with Sergt. Ingram, so that we will be sufficiently recruited with ammunition at the fort at Quabaug."

The following letter from Capt. Graves gives us a somewhat graphic picture of garrison-life at Quabaug, at this date. Punctuation marks are to be inserted in their proper places.

28th APARELL 1676."

May 5, "The Court judgeth it meet that the garrison at Quoboag be continued there, and that they have suitable provision sent to them, and to that end have treated with Lieut. Wm Clarke [of Northampton] for a supply to be made from those towns upon the river, which will be more easily effected than to be sent from hence; and do therefore order and impower the said Lieut. Clarke with all possible speed to procure the same; and Capt. Turner is ordered to appoint a sufficient guard for the provisions above said to Quoboag. . . .

"The garrison of Quopaug being out of provisions, and the supply ordered from Hadley not being likely to be with them for their present relief, it is ordered, that forthwith provisions for one week be speedied up to them.

"There being a present necessity to send up some provisions to Quoboag for the relief of the garrison, and also a person to command instead of Mr. Graves, it is hereby ordered, that Sarjant Ephraim Savage do march up with the provisions now sent, and take the command of the said garrison, and that the infirm or sick men there be dismissed, provided thirty soldiers be kept there. And for the conveyance of the said provisions, it is ordered, that the captain of Sudbury do send up a sufficient guard for the said provisions to Marlborow, and is hereby empowered to press sufficient horses to carry the same to Quoboag, and that Lieut. Jacob do, from Marlborow, send up a good guard with the said provisions to Quoboag."

These orders of the Court appear not to have been promptly executed, for a reason which will appear shortly: and another similar order is passed, viz. "The Court, considering the want of provisions for the garrisons at Marlborow and Quoboag, who are in distress, together with the wants & sickness in the army, do order, that all the sick or necessitous persons in the army be licensed to repair to their own homes for ten days, and that forty or fifty of the ablest be retained and quartered in Sudbury & Concord, & be employed to guard up provisions to Quoboag, Marlborow & other magazines, which are with all expedition to be sent up."

John Hull, in a petition to the General Court, stated that Sergt. Savage was in feeble health, and asked that he be discharged from that duty at Quabaug. And May 12, is the record: "The Deputys judge meet to grant this petition, and have nominated. and appointed Thomas Walker the brickmaker to be Commander of the Garrison at Quaboage in his stead, desiring the consent of our Hon^d Magists hereto."

Probably, for some reason, the Magistrates did not consent; and Sergt. Savage, with a commission as lieutenant, went to Brookfield, where he remained with a small force till the 20th of June, and perhaps later. But after June 12, at which date the hostile Indians appear to have disbanded and scattered in various directions, the garrison was maintained chiefly as a relief station for posts, and companies marching homewards.

We get an occasional glimpse of the movements of the Indians in this neighborhood, at this date. In a letter from Capt. Benjamin Newbury, dated Westfield, May 24, 1676, he says: "I find the people very desirous for motion against the enemy, and according to best intelligence cannot but judge it may be for great advantage to be doing as soon as may be: They seem to be secure by what returns the scouts make, and doubtly are not yet numerous: It's credibly affirmed there is a considerable party at Quaboag, nigh 300 by the intelligence that is come from thence last night. So that we are apt to think if Maj. Talcott would please to come this way, with his forces he might do good service both here and there."¹

Maj. Talcott did please to go that way; and this is his account of his march:—

"NORTHAMPTON, June 8, 1676, 10 o'clock at night. In pursuance of your orders, I past from Norwich to Wabaquesset, at which place suppose was about 40 acres of Corn, and a fort, but none of the enemy to be found upon the best of our search. From thence made Chanagongum in the Nipnap Country on the 5th of June, and took 52 of the enemy of which 19 slain and one shot and made an escape, followed by his blood but lost him; and on the 6th instant made towards Squaboag and gained it on the 7th day at 12 of the clock, and on the 7th instant gave liberty for some of our Indians to hunt in the afternoon, one party of which came to our rendezvous in the evening, and informed us of a party of the Indian enemy were pitching for that night about 3 miles from our quarters; and not knowing what strength might be there, sent out about 120 English and Indians at midnight, with orders to gain the sight of their fires as soon as might be, and to lie close until day break and then fall upon them; which accordingly they did; but there was but two of the enemy, which they assaulted and took, who were loaden with as much fish as they could carry, and each of them a gun, their horns full of powder, which were taken;— And think the Account of Arms before was five that was taken — of men slain 12, and one or two saved, — We sent 27 women and children to Norwich under conduct of some of those we call honest Indians, and the others are come to Hadley with the army, and by the last that was slain we receive intelligence that there is 500 fighting men at pa cumticut. This eight instant we made Hadley with about 200 Indians and about 250 English soldiers; but the Bay forces are not come. I past away from Squabaug a letter to the chief commander of the Bay forces intended for conjunction with us in these parts, . . .

To Dep. Gov. Treat at Hartford."¹

These letters, and others that might be quoted, serve to show that the Indians hereabouts were not now aggressive; that the squaws and old men were watching the growing corn, and subsisting on fish; and the warriors were here only in transit. Capt. Henchman, in a letter to the Mass. Council, dated June 30, says: "Our scouts brought intelligence that all the Indians were in a continual motion, some towards Narraganset, others towards Watchuset, shifting gradually, and taking up each others' Quarters, and lay not above a Night in a Place."

CLOSING ACCOUNT OF THE QUABAUG INDIANS. — A brief summary of events connected with the ending of King Philip's War, and the dispersion of the native tribe that once held peaceful possession of our soil, will close this chapter on the First Settlement of Brookfield.

As stated on p. 119, the great company of Quabaugs, Nashaways, Narragansetts, and their allies, having successfully foiled Maj. Savage in the woods above Menameset, crossed Miller's river in safety, and reached Northfield March 7.

As stated on p. 110, Philip and his Wampanoags had moved off towards the Mohawk country, at the close of the fall campaign of 1675, and pitched their winter quarters at a place about 40 miles northward of Albany. When the Narragansetts under Canonchet joined the Quabaugs at Menameset in January, Muttaump went to Philip's retreat to carry the good news of the great accession, and urge his return to the Connecticut valley. He complied and reached the west side of the river at Northfield, soon after the middle of February, and was joined by the great company that had retired from Menameset, March 9.

This gathering of Indian tribes and clans at Northfield at this date, was a notable event. The chief of the once renowned Wampanoags, and the chief of the not less renowned Narragansetts, met and united their forces and fortunes. All the personal adherents of Philip and his kinsman Quinnapin were here; and Canonchet, son of Miantonomoh and hereditary sachem of the Narragansetts, was attended by the flower of that once terrible clan. His uncle Pessacus, now just past the prime of life, was his chief counsellor. In addition to these, Sancumachu, a Nonotuck sachem, and now the acknowledged leader of the Pacompucks and Agawams, was here with a considerable part of the united tribes. Muttamp, now in the zenith of his success and glory, and his Quabaugs were here. A part of the Nashaways, the Nipnets, some from Natick and Marlborough, and stragglers from other clans were here. And these, with the Squakheags (the home tribe), made up an immense multitude. From reliable data, it is believed that from the 9th to the 25th of March, there were not less than 2,500 Indians, including women and children, at the Squakheag village-sites about the mouth of the Ashuelot river and on the opposite side of the Connecticut.

It was a critical time with the savage horde. The chiefs had to determine two important matters, viz., the plan of the season's campaign; and how to make secure and provide subsistence for the non-combatants, who largely outnumbered the warriors. The first care was to get a supply of food for the present necessity. By a raid on Northampton and Hatfield, March 14-16, they captured a number of horses, sheep, and other plunder, which furnished a temporary supply. But there was great scarcity of provisions. "Many times in the morning," writes Mrs. Rowlandson, who was with them, "the generality of them would eat up all they had. Their chief and commonest food was ground-nuts; they ate also nuts and acorns, hartychocks, lily roots, ground beans, and other weeds and roots that I know not." Occasionally the hunters would bring in a bear, or a deer, or a beaver, when they would have a feast. Mrs. Rowlandson says: "A squaw gave me a spoonful of meal, I put it in my pocket to keep it safe, yet somebody stole it, but put five Indian corns in the room of it: which corns were the greatest provision I had in my travels for one day." "One day Philip invited me to dinner: I went, and he gave me a pancake, about as big as two fingers; it was made of parched wheat, beaten, and fried in bear's grease; but I thought I never tasted pleasanter meat in my life."

By a bargain made with the Dutch from Fort Albany, Philip and the confederates were supplied with a sufficiency of ammunition, which allayed one cause of anxiety. And at a council of chiefs it was decided to hold the Connecticut valley north of the mouth of Miller's river, as a common rendezvous, and abiding-place of non-combatants. They could contrive to eke out a living till the fishing-season came; after which they had no reason to fear a scarcity of provisions till the last of summer. To insure the autumn and winter supplies, Canonchet, who appears to have been the master-spirit among the chiefs, both in the War and Commissary departments, proposed that all the old fields, formerly occupied by the Indians, and recently taken from the English, should be planted with corn. (This of course was to be the work of the squaws.) But there was none of last year's crop left here for seed. Canonchet said there was plenty of seed-corn stored in the barns in the Narragansett country: but no one of his followers would volunteer to run the venture of fetching it. The chieftain himself decided to go for it; and the small number of 30 braves offered to accompany him. He reached his old home safely; collected the corn in bags and baskets; and despatched his escort with it to Squakheag. Himself lingered on the banks of the Pawtucket; and on April 2, while in camp with 6 or 7 of his men, he was surprised and captured by a scouting party of English and Indians, under Capts. Avery and Denison and Oneko. He was taken to Stonington, where he was promptly executed by Oneko, and his head sent to Hartford.

The seed-corn was carried safely to Squakheag; and as we shall presently see, that place, and Pacomptuck, and Paquayag, and Quabaug, were fully supplied; and in this respect anxiety for the summer's campaign was allayed. But the master-spirit was no more among them. Philip's name was no longer a talisman; and his counsels no longer inspired confidence; and his presence had no magnetism; and his own tribal adherents were insignificant in numbers. The death of Canonchet was the death-blow to the cause. Personal rivalry, and distracting counsels prevailed. Proposals of an armistice were discussed. The Pacomptucks deserted, and went home to Deerfield; and gave out intimations that they were ready to purchase a peace with the price of King Philip's head. Philip himself prudently departed April 10, and with Quinapin and a part of the Narragansetts, moved towards safer quarters in the strongholds of Wachusett. Pessacus was left in command of the allied forces, which comprised the bulk of the Narragansetts, the Squakheags, some of the Quabaugs, and a motley crew, large enough in numbers, but unwieldy and weak for active field service. There were several pretty strong forts, for defence; and the commander could send out foraging parties and scouts; he could prepare for planting the corn-fields, and guard, and negotiate for the ransom of the English prisoners, a large number of whom were still in the hands of the Indians. — Letters, and official papers, describing the situation of affairs in the camp at this date, are extant; but do not come within the plan of our History.

About the first of May, when the fishing-season commenced, the Indians at Northfield separated into convenient parties for work. The Squakheags remained at home, for salmon fishing and planting; a small party went to Paquayag for the same purposes; and the great crowd repaired to the Pasquompscut falls near the mouth of Miller's river, for fishing. The Pacomptucks had already gone to their old home, to prepare for seeding their rich fields. Corn-planting began May 9th or 10th, and lasted about 2 weeks. By May 22, about 100 acres had been put in at Deerfield, and probably a like proportion at the other towns.

A letter written by Rev. Mr. Russell of Hadley, dated May 15, gives a clear view of the situation at this time: "This morning about sunrise came into Hatfield one Thomas Reede a soldier who was taken captive when Deacon Goodman was slain (at Hockanum, about the first of April). He relates that they are now planting at Deerfield and have been so these three or four days or more — saith further that they dwell at the Falls on both sides the river — are a considerable number, yet most of them old men and women. He cannot judge that there are on both sides the river (at the Falls) above 60 or 70 fighting men. They are secure and scornful; boasting of great things they have done, and will do. There is Thomas Eameses daughter and her child (a younger sister) hardly used; one or two belonging to Medfield, and I think two children belonging to Lancaster. The night before last they came down to Hatfield upper meadow, and have driven away many horses and cattle, to the number of fourscore and upwards as they judge. Many of these this man saw in Deerfield meadow, and found the bars put up to keep them in. This being the state of things, we think the Lord calls us to make some trial what may be done against them suddenly, without further delay; and therefore the concurring resolution of men here seems to be to go out against them to-morrow night so as to be with them, the Lord assisting, before break of day." This purpose of the Hadley people was carried out three days later.

There were special reasons why the Indians felt secure just at this time. Most of the Massachusetts troops under Maj. Savage, and the Connecticut troops under Maj. Treat had been withdrawn, and returned home. Only about 160 men, under command of Capt. William Turner, now garrisoned the Hampshire towns. Besides, negotiations for the redemption of captives were pending between the Connecticut authorities and the Indian chiefs; and it was presumable that no hostilities would be commenced against the Indians till this matter was arranged. And on the night of the 18th, the party at the Falls had gorged themselves "with new milk and roast beef, having lately driven away from Hatfield many of their milch cows, as an English woman confessed that was made to milk them."

At this fortunate juncture — Thursday evening May 18 — Capt. Turner and Capt. Samuel Holyoke, with 160 mounted men, one-half inhabitants and one-half soldiers, started for the Indian fishing-camp at the Falls. They reached the place about daybreak. "They found the Indians secure, yea all asleep without having any scouts abroad ; so that our soldiers came and put their guns into their wigwams, before the Indians were aware of them, and made a great and notable slaughter." [Mather's Brief History.] About 180 Indians, old and young, perished that morning.

But this apparent victory, ended in a disastrous defeat of our troops. Just as our men started for their horses, which were left a half-mile in the rear, the report was started — no one knew how — that Philip with 1,000 Indians was approaching ; and "a panic terror fell upon many of them, and they hastened homewards in a confused route." Capt. Turner and 37 of his men were slain — all but one after they left the Falls.

The Indians remained in their fishing and planting camps ; they assaulted Hatfield May 30, and Hadley June 12 ; but no attempt was made to dislodge them, by the English forces, till June 16, when Maj. Talcott and Capt. Henchman marched up as far as the Falls ; but "they found no Indians."

As before stated, Philip, with his Wampanoags and part of the Narragansetts, left the Connecticut valley April 10, and marched towards Wachusett, where he arrived about the 17th ; and where he was joined by the Nashaways under Sagamore Sam, and that clan of the Quabaugs that were under the immediate orders of Muttaump, and a large body of Nipnets. About this date [negotiations were begun earlier], the Massachusetts Council made overtures to this band for the redemption of Mrs. Rowlandson and the other Lancaster captives. Sam and Muttaump and the Nipnets favored the plan — either for the sake of the large price expected, or because they foresaw the hopelessness of their cause, and preferred peace to destruction.¹ But Philip saw that such a bargain was a confession of weakness, and sternly opposed entertaining the proposal and parting with any of the captives ; though with his usual cunning he proposed a truce of a month or more, and gave plausible reasons for the same. The contention in the camp, between the advocates of peace and the favorers of war, was so sharp, and Capt. Henchman's bold raid of May 30, coming so near the Wachusett stronghold, that Philip and the Narragansetts departed for their old homes on the coast. They left Wachusett the first week in June, and marched leisurely to the south. Philip made for his old headquarters in the neighborhood of Pokanoket. His return was discovered; and after July 11, he was continually followed and harassed by war parties of English and Indians. On the morning of Aug. 12, he was surprised in a swamp near his ancient seat, and shot by an Indian named Alderman.

Meanwhile, the Quabaugs, Nashaways and Nipnets, whatever the motive may have been, had continued their efforts to bring about peace.

From incidental statements contained in official documents, it appears that after the death of Canonchet, the Quabaugs divided into two parties: one party under Cognowasco? remaining with Pessacus [and were in the sanguinary fight at Turner's falls May 19, where "some of them were slain"], and the other party under Muttamp going to the Wachusett fastnesses. The first of May, the sachems at Wachusett, including Philip, sent a letter to the Governor and Council at Boston, asking for a cessation of hostilities and permission to plant corn in their old fields at Quabaug, Mendon, etc., and "promising not to do hurt to English towns, if they are not hindered in their planting." Although the Council did not accede to their overture, yet some of the squaws of our tribe returned and planted a considerable field at Quabaug Old Fort, and probably another field at one of the other village sites. Rev. James Fitch, in a letter dated May 29, says: "The sum of our intelligence is that [brought] by the Indians from Wabaquassog . . . it's the general report of all that the chief place of their women and children is at Watchoosuck, not far from Quabaug; that they have planted at Quabaug, and at Nipsachook nigh Coweset; that Philip's men and the Narragansetts are generally come into those above mentioned places, only Pessacus one of the chief of the Narragansett sachems did abide up at Pocomp-tuck with some few of his men."

To strengthen his position as peace-maker, about the middle of May Sagamore Sam went to the Connecticut valley to endeavor to arrange with Pessacus for an exchange or ransom of English captives then in his hands; but the tragic affair at Turner's Falls frustrated his plan; and he returned to Wachusett only to find that Capt. Henschman had raided his camp May 30, and killed or captured 36 of his people, including his own wife and children, and Muttamp's wife.¹ He sent the following letter:

"My Lord Mr. Leveret at Boston, Mr. Waban, Mr. Eliot, Mr. Gookin, and Council, hear yea. I went to Connecticut about the Captives, that I might bring them into your hands, and when we were almost there the English had destroyed those Indians. When I heard it I returned back again: then when I came home, we were also destroyed: After we were destroyed

then Philip and Quanipun went away into their own Country againe: and I knew they were much afraid, because of our offer to joyn with the English, and therefore they went back into their own Country, and I know they will make no warre: therefore because when some English men came to us Philip and Quanipun sent to kill them: but I said if any kill them, I'll kill them

The sending this letter was certainly a politic move. And negotiations for the exchange of captives continued on both sides. Some of the English prisoners escaped—probably with the connivance of the sachems. But results were not definite and satisfactory to either party. And as a last resort, the chiefs united in subscribing a letter, which, Mr. S. G. Drake remarks, "surpasseth any thing, in supplication, that we have, from the poor Indians."

"July 6th, 1676. Mr. John Leveret, my Lord, Mr. Waban, and all the chief men our Brethren Praying to God: We beseech you all to help us: my wife she is but one, but there be more Prisoners, which we pray you keep well: Mattamuck [Muttaump] his wife, we entreat you for her, and not onely that man, but it is the Request of two Sachems, Sam Sachem of Weshakum, and [John] the Pakashoag Sachem.

"And that further you will consider about the making Peace: We have spoken to the People of Nashobah (viz. Tom Dubler and Peter) that we would agree with you, and make a Covenant of Peace with you. We have been destroyed by your Souldiers, but still we Remember it now to sit still: Do you consider it again: We do earnestly entreat you, that it may be so by Jesus Christ. "To all Englishmen and Indians, all of you hear Mr. Waban, Mr. Eliot."

Another letter of similar tenor, signed by Pumkamun and Ponnakpukun or Jacob Muttamakooog, was sent to the Governor and Council, about the same time. The answer of the Council was: "That treacherous persons who began the war and those that have been barbarously bloody, must not expect to have their lives spared, but others that have been drawn into the war, and acted only as souldiers, submitting to be without arms to live quietly & peaceably for the future shall have their lives spared."

The course of events for a month after July 6, is not easy to be traced. Some time in August, the sachems and clans that had been quartered about Wachusett, were induced by what they understood to be a promise of amnesty, through the mediation of Peter Jethro, to go to Pennacook, and from there to Cochecho (Dover, N.H.). The first of September, the Pennacooks and about 200 of the Quabaugs, Nashaways and their allies, were gathered at the house of Maj. Waldron, with whom the truce had been made, and whom they considered their friend and father. By a stratagem, which was approved by military men, but sharply condemned by every philanthropist, the whole body of Indians were suddenly surrounded by English soldiers, seized, and disarmed. The Pennacooks were dismissed. The others were made prisoners, and sent to Boston. "Seven or eight of the chiefs were condemned and hanged; the rest were sold into slavery in foreign parts." In Sewall's Diary is the entry: "1676, Sept. 26. Tuesday, Sagamore Sam & Daniel Goble is drawn in a cart upon bed cloaths to execution. . . . One-eyed John, Maliompe [Muttaump] Sagamore of Quapaug, General at Lancaster and Jethro (the father) walk to the gallows.

The rest of the Quabaugs—probably Conkganasco's clan—appear to have joined the company of savages that retreated to the westward. Maj. Pynchon, in a letter dated Aug. 15, 1676, says: "On Saturday, Aug. 12, a great parcell of near 200 Indians were discovered within 3 or 4 miles of Westfield. . . . They went over the Great River on rafts at the foot of the great Falls between us and Hadley Aug. 11. . . . Their trail comes from the Nipmuck country." Maj. Talcott came in opportunely; and with 60 soldiers and as many Indians followed the trail, having learned from an old Indian whom he captured that there were "between 50 and 60 fighting men, and 100 women, besides children" in the enemy's ranks. He overtook them at Housatonick river, and in the fight slew 40, of whom 25 were warriors, and took 15 captives; some others were also taken near the road, who informed that "the enemy's design was to go over Hudson's river to a place called Paquaige, where it's said there is a fort, and complices ready to receive and shelter them; and there they intend refreshment and recruits." Among the captives taken was "the treacherous sachem of Quabaug," says one historian; but he was liberated, and lived to get his revenge in 1693.

"CAPT. HUNTING:—Upon sight hereof you are ordered with those English and Indians under your command, to march into the Wachusett Country, making diligent search for the enemy whom you are by all means to destroy, as also all the corn you can find there: And from thence you shall march to Quabaug doing the like there, using all caution and circumspection for your own security and prevention of surprisals; and having accomplished this service with the blessing of God, you are then to return, taking such way home as may be most probable to lead to any further service, if your intelligence and the providence of God so guide. And for your further strengthening, the garrison now at Marlboro are ordered to accompany you and to be under your command. Dated in Boston 11th of August 1676.

EDW. RAWSON Secy."¹

Under date of Aug. 15, 1676, Maj. Pynchon writes: "Then also [Aug. 12] Maj. Talcott's army came in (who has, they say, cut down all the Indian corn about Quabaug, &c."

CHAPTER IV.

SECOND SETTLEMENT, 1686-1718. BROOKFIELD UNDER PRUDENTIAL COMMITTEES, AND THEIR ADMINISTRATION.

THE ORIGINAL PLANTERS DID NOT RETURN.—NAMES OF ALL SETTLERS AND GRANTEES DOWN TO 1718, WITH ANNALS, PERSONAL AND GENERAL, OF INDIAN RAIDS, CIVIL AND ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS, ETC.

AFTER the desertion of the place in the summer of 1676, Brookfield lay waste for ten years. Such of the first planters as survived, and the families of those that were slain by the Indians, left their wrecked homesteads, and found dwelling-places elsewhere, many with friends in the eastern towns where they had formerly resided, others in Hadley and Suffield. And the demands of these new homes, and the dark and bloody associations of their forced abandonment, prevented any attempt to return and re-claim their homesteads. And the Quabaug Lands, under the circumstances, had no marketable value. The only thing to do was to wait the turn of events.

“AT A GENERAL COURT HELD AT BOSTON MAY 28 1679—

“For the greater comfort and safety of all people who are intended to resettle the villages deserted in the late war, or the planting any new Plantation within this jurisdiction

“It is Ordered and Enacted by this Court and the Authority thereof, That no deserted town or new Plantation shall be inhabited until the people first make application unto the Governour and Council, or to the County Court within whose jurisdiction such Plantation is. And the Council or County Court are hereby ordered and impowered to appoint an able and discreet Committee [at the charge of the people intending to plant], which Committee are ordered and impowered to view and consider the place or places to be settled, and give directions and orders in writing under their hands, in what form, way and manner such town shall be settled or erected, Wherein they are required to have a principal respect to nearness and conveniency of habitation for security against enemies, and more comfort for Church Communion & enjoyment of God's Worship, and education of children in Schools and civility, with other good ends.

"And all such planters are hereby enjoined to attend and put in practice such orders and directions as shall be given by such Committee, upon the penalty of one hundred pounds fine to the Country to be inflicted upon them by order of the Council or County Court, for their neglect or refusal to attend this Order.

Passed, and Consented to

JUNE 9, 1679."

The effect of this order of the General Court, and the utter discouragement of the broken-up colonists, appear in the fact that, of the original undertakers, only one family, viz. that of John Ayres, returned to Brookfield as permanent inhabitants. And they did not hold and occupy the old homestead on Foster's hill. The other grantees or their heirs, either sold their allotments and rights, or abandoned them altogether.

As will be seen, the re-settled Plantation, while retaining the old name, claimed no town rights under its old charter. Indeed this charter was virtually revoked by the Act of 1679. The place was put in charge of and continued under the care of Prudential Committees, appointed by the General Court, for the period of thirty years.

The official Book or Books of Records of these early Committees are lost. And the sources of authentic information relative to this period, earlier than 1713, are: some scattered papers, and attested copies of original Land Grants; the deeds, and wills, and Court records in the Registries at Springfield and Northampton; letters, petitions and reports, and orders of the Governor and Council, preserved in the State Archives. These documents speak for themselves; most of them have never been published; and as the best and only true picture, now possible to be obtained, of the men and measures of the date under consideration, careful abstracts or full copies of these official papers will be inserted in their chronological order.

1686.—This is the earliest date named in the records, showing that the re-settlement of Brookfield was actually begun. The first comers were mostly young men, looking for a place to start in life; or those who had been soldiers in King Philip's War, and who saw the lands while they were stationed here in garrison, or in the marches and counter-marches of their respective companies. They came largely from Marlborough, from Essex county, and from Suffield, Springfield, and Hadley, whither the earlier grantees had retired. And thus coming from different quarters, these second planters lacked the social ties and accord of purpose which characterized the Ipswich colony. And, as will appear, this lack of social unity proved a source of weakness for many years, and greatly hindered the growth of the town.

The following Petition, found in the State Archives, is without date ; but the internal evidence, and coincident facts indicate that it was presented to the General Court at the spring session of 1686.

“ TO THE HON^{BL} SIMON BRADSTREET, GOVERNOR, &c.

The humble Petition & Request of James Ford of Brookfield.

Whereas there was a Township formerly granted by the Hon^{bl} General Court, at a place called by the Indians Quabaog, & by the English Brookfield, which was settled, but by the Incursions & Outrages of the Indians was depopulated and layd waste, & hath been so for many years: the Ancient Inhabitants wholly deserting the same, and it being a place very commodeous for scittuation in the Road to Springfield, &c. and may be beneficial and profitable as well to the Country as to particular persons: and whereas some are already seated and others would be willing to settle the said place againe were there some encouragement from the Hon^l Council, and some to guide & order the prudential Affaires for such a Plantation.

Yo^r Petitioner humbly requests your Hon^{rs} would be pleased to appoint and impower some prudent and able persons as a Committee to admit Inhabitants, and order the Affaires of the place, in forming y^e Towne, granting Lotts, & directing & ordering all matters of a prudential Nature till such time the Place be settled, and a competent number of Inhabitants & persons of discretion to order the affaires thereof, and yo^r Petitioner as in duty bound shall ever pray &c.

JAMES FORD

Mr. Younglove, Godd^m [Edward] Scott, Hezekiah Dickinson, and Tho. Hovey of Hadley, formerly Inhabitants, if the Hon^d Council see cause to allow of y^m wth some others now residing there, to be a Committee, or whoever else.”¹

The petitioner, James Ford, was a soldier in the war of 1675-6: perhaps he is the man who was stationed at Marlborough, holding a position of some responsibility at the garrison, June 12, 1676.² He appears to have made only a temporary residence in Brookfield, as he was in Hadley 1691. The names suggested to the Court as Committee were Hadley men, former grantees and present land-holders of Brookfield. Mr. Younglove was one of the Committee, in the First Settlement; and probably the reason for suggesting those names was that the First Committee was mostly composed of townsmen. [Of course, Ford himself expected to be named as one of said Committee.] The other persons referred to, as “already seated” in Brookfield, appear to have been, John Woolcott, Jr., and perhaps his brother Joseph, who located on the well-known "Woolcott Place ;" Samuel Smith, Jr., who took land east of the Woolcotts ; Joseph Mason, who pitched west of the Woolcotts, on the south side of the old Country road, his land running south to the river meadow ; John Lawrence (a brother-in-law of Smith), who built still further to the west, but "not far from Joseph Woolcott's" (to quote his own words) ; and John Clements. Part of these men were undoubtedly "squatters," whose families were staying elsewhere, waiting a confirmation of land titles.

The action of the Council in the case, is found in Council Records, Vol. II. p. 85. "November 9, 1686, Maj. John Pinchon, Joseph Hawley, Capt. Samuel Glover, Mr. Samuel Marshfield, Mr. Samuel Ely, & Mr. John Hitchcock all of Springfield are appointed a Committee for settling the Town of Quabaug, & the Petition of the said Town is granted, and the aforementioned Gentlemen are to receive the claimes of the old Inhabitants, grant Lotts to others, & give necessary orders for the more orderly settlement of the said Towne."

This action of the Council settles the question, that inhabitants were living at Brookfield in the year 1686, and in sufficient numbers to warrant the appointment of a Committee of distinguished gentlemen, with full powers to order the settlement of the place. And, as will appear, this Committee entered upon its duties, appointed one of its number as Measurer, and actually made grants of Lands early the next spring.

1687. — In addition to the names given in last year's list (all of whom probably received Grants and located the same — though Ford disappears from the list of inhabitants in 1691, and Clements in '93¹), the following settlers appear to have come on and taken up grants in 1687 : John Woolcott, Sen. (from Newbury), Daniel Price (from Watertown), and John Killum,² who located near each other, and near Lawrence and Mason. Perhaps Hezekiah Dickinson built the frame of a house on the Prichard home-lot, which he had purchased. The following minute, taken from the Committee's Record Book, throws important light on the situation : "May 27, 1687, granted to Mr. Woolcott 40 acres upland, bounded E. by Smith's land ; N. by Smith's and Common land, and W. by his son John's land."

"A true copy taken out of Mr. Sam'l Marshfield's Measuring Book, March 2, 1710 ; ordered to be recorded by the Committee.

Attest JOSEPH HAWLEY Regr "

This record shows that the Committee had previously made grants, and the same had been located, to — Smith, and John Woolcott, Jr. ;

¹ Probably he was the John Clements of Haverhill, who m. 1688, Elizabeth —, and settled later in Lynn.

² Oct. 6, 1688. George Colton of Springfield bought a gray horse of John Kilum of Brookfield, for a yoke of steers. Killum, or Kilham, was born in Wenham.

and the inference is a fair one, that grants had been made and located to the other settlers. And thus the fact is accounted for, that a considerable cluster of houses was standing in the Woolcott neighborhood, from the outset of the Re-settlement. And the obvious reason for choosing this location was, that the claims of old Inhabitants to the home-lots on Foster's hill and the adjacent plains and meadows, had not yet been adjusted.

1688. — The new comers this year appear to have been : Samuel Owen, from Springfield, who located in the fork of the roads east of Warding Rock ; Daniel Tosh [McIntosh], who built north of the old Tho. Gilbert place ; Matthew and Isaac Tomblin, and perhaps Josiah Beamon.

This year was memorable for the opening of the struggle known as King William's War ; and for the advent in these parts of the usurper Sir Edmund Andros, and his formal assumption in this county of the civil and military power.

Several of the frontier towns, destroyed in King Philip's War, had been re-settled. Deerfield was re-occupied in 1682-3 ; Northfield was rebuilt in 1684-5. They had but few inhabitants as yet, and were but poorly fortified, and thus offered a strong temptation to the French authorities of Canada, who instigated the Indians to harass these exposed English plantations. The distractions of the New England colonies, attending the arbitrary measures of Gov. Andros, greatly encouraged the governor of Canada. It was even suspected that a secret understanding between them existed. If so, the premature commencement of hostilities, the discoveries made by our sharp-witted scouts, and the opportune deposition of Andros frustrated the plot, and postponed the more active operations of the war. War came however, with all the horrors of French and Indian atrocities, and lasted till 1698.

About the 24th of July, a party of eleven Indians, who had formerly belonged to Penacook, Pacomptuck and Quabaug, came down the Connecticut river, stopping for a night in Deerfield.¹ July 27, five peaceable Indians dwelling at Spectacle Pond near Springfield, were found murdered ; but no trace could be found of the murderers. The next day a party of savages was discovered in camp, by Micah Mudge of Northfield, about a mile from that village. They were fully armed, surly and vengeful, but kept their own counsels, only saying "they were going to Penecook, and that some lately came from there."

Aug. 16. Six persons, three men, two women and a girl, were murdered by Indians, at the upper end of Northfield town street. One of the men was John Clary (father of the John Clary who was killed at Brookfield in 1709), and the girl was his daughter Sarah aged 15.

The news of these murders greatly alarmed the Brookfield settlers.

They were few in numbers, and living somewhat scattered, and had as yet built no garrison house for their protection. And two of the eleven Indians, seen near Northfield, had been recognized as Quabaugs, viz. Cungowasco (now called Wawanwejtuck) and Wahacoet. Would they make their next assault on the whites who occupied their ancestral lands?

I quote from Pynchon's Diary and Account Book :

"Aug. 17, 1688. Being ye same day yt tidings came to me which was yt Northfield was invaded, I sent Post to Quabaug, viz. Tho. Powell — which is 2 days & Horse.

Aug. 17. I sent away Lieut. Tho. Colton with 16 soldiers from Springfield to Northfield, to surprise & take ye Indians & pursue y^m etc. who were upon ye service 6 days — which is 96 days 96 Horses

The Lieut. is besides himself & Horse 6 " 6 "

Aug. 19. I sent 6 men to Quabaug, ye people there being about to remove, ordering and requiring their continuance, only I sent to fetch off such women as desired to come away. The men sent were Tho. Powell, Eben. Graves, John Stiles, James Petty, Joseph Petty & Tho. Gilbert, who were in ye service 2 days apiece & horses which is 12 days 12 Horses

I sent 2 lbs. Powder & 6 lbs. Bullets to Quabaug.

Aug. 30. Hezekia Dickinson Post from Brookfield, with Capt. Nicholson's second letter: one day coming & one day back, & ye extremity of ye wet made it a day more, so he is to be allowed for his horse & himself

which is 3 days 3 Horses

Sept. 4. To entertaining a Post, and to quartering of two soldiers sent from Quabaug for provisions, themselves and horses

Sept. 5. I sent to Quabaug 5 bushels of Indian corn according to Capt. Nicholson's order, for supply of the garrison there, which Mr. Woolcott there placed, sent to me for.

Sent two firelock guns to Quabaug to supply such as had none, according to Capt. Nicholson's order. The men [above named and many others] and horses were sent out from Springfield . . .

Sept. 11. Joseph Marks was ordered to Northfield for 1 week, & took 4 firelock guns.

Sept. 20. Samuel Phelps & William Randal coming this evening from the Bay, & informing me yt ye Inhabitants of Quabaug were in some danger, & they being weak and few could not send on purpose, but by these travellers, desiring them to acquaint me with their wants, and 3 Indians were seen there last night skulking and running into a swamp, as before yt the same day, they discovered many tracks of Indians; and desiring some assistance of men &c

Sept. 21. I accordingly sent to their relief, & to scout out, & to make fortification there, these men, viz. Henry Gilbert to command, John Hitchcock, James Warriner, Tho. Gilbert, Eben. Parsons, Sam^l. Parsons. These returned the 27th of Sept., so were in service 7 days apiece

Also to one bushel of meal, and pease half a bushel, and 20 lbs. of pork."

The "fortification" referred to above, was what is known as Gilbert's Fort, so called because Dea. Henry Gilbert took a house-lot and built and lived adjoining it on the west. It stood on the old centre school-house lot in West Brookfield, at the intersection of North Main and Maple streets. It appears to have been a fort of considerable size, with barracks for soldiers and for families who should be driven in for safety, the whole surrounded by a strong stockade.

Gov. Andros, who was in New York Oct. 1, "had advices that men were raised in Boston without his orders, and sent to Casco Bay to assist the Christians there against the Indians who had committed some disorders thereabouts," and determined to go overland to Boston. He left New York about Oct. 8; spent a brief time in Hartford with Col. John Allyn and the other "principal officers and magistrates" of Connecticut; held a consultation with Col. Pyncheon (then acting under a commission from Andros) at Springfield, and reached Hadley the 14th. He sent a message to Wm. Clarke of Northampton, chairman of the Committee for Northfield, requiring said Committee to appear before him, and "to give an account by what power they have acted in order to the re-settlement of that town."

The next day he went to Brookfield. The only record of his doings here, so far as is known, is the following letter:

SQUABAGUE, Oct. 16, 1688

LT. COL. JOHN ALLYN

at Hartford Sir, I have this night received advice from Boston that the 11th instant one man was found killed by Indians to the eastward at Cape Porpus, and several others missing who are feared to be lost, the Indians being still out, but do not yet know their number, or of others joined with them. But could not direct this information to yourself, together with the enclosed to Capt. Nicholson, & Maj-Gen^l. Winthrop, which desire you to forward by Express, of which presume the bearer a fit person for one, & remain

From Brookfield, Andros went to Worcester and Marlborough, and reached Boston "about noon of the Wednesday before Oct. 29." John West, in a letter to Col. John Allyn of Hartford, refers to the Governor's letter from Squabauge, and adds: "the 3 horses that came to Boston from Hartford must be allowed for 13 days at 1s. per day — the guides and their horses being already paid for."

[The revolution which drove King James from the throne, and placed William and Mary there, began in Nov. 1688. The king abdicated Dec. 11, and William and Mary accepted the crown Feb. 13, following. April 18, 1689, the people of Boston seized Andros, and restored the old governor, Simon Bradstreet.]

After the restoration, a committee of the General Court reported, that the expenses of the garrison at Brookfield, during Sir Ed. Andros' administration [remaining unsettled] were £4. 2. 6.

1689. — No record is found of any new comers at Brookfield this year. The fort, built the last September, afforded some protection; but in the disturbed state of affairs the inducement to "break ground" there was small.

Hostilities raged on the Eastern frontiers; mainly the work of the French and their Indian allies of Canada. It was deemed an important object to retain the goodwill of the Five Nations, especially the Maquas. And in August, this year, three agents from Massachusetts and one from Connecticut, with Maj. Pynchon at the head, were sent to Albany, to make presents to the Maquas and to the River Indians or Scagkooks living in the neighborhood. The deputation left Westfield Aug. 27, escorted by ten troopers, and were absent over four weeks. There was the customary palaver; and our agents gave the Indians 500 lbs. of powder, 1,000 lbs. of lead, 150 yds. of duffel, 500 guilders in wampum, 90 shirts, and 40 lbs. of tobacco, besides presents privately made to the sachems, and a public entertainment of beef, pork, bread and beer to the warriors. The expenses of the deputation in all amounted to £327. But the promised alliance with the English proved "a broken reed to depend upon."

The white settlers at Albany in turn became alarmed, and sent to New England for help. Connecticut gathered about 66 men, and 24 were drafted from Hampshire county, and the company, under command of Capt. Jona. Bull, marched from Westfield Nov. 18. On reaching Albany they found a deadly feud raging among the white inhabitants, and that the people at Schenectady had neglected even the ordinary means of defence. Part of Capt. Bull's men were stationed at S.; and on the night of Feb. 8, 1690, the place was assaulted by a large body of French and Indians, and about 62 were barbarously murdered, and 28 made prisoners. Five of Capt. B.'s men were killed, and five taken. Among the latter were Joseph Marks and Samuel Beamon. Marks, who on his return settled in Brookfield, was carried to Canada, where he was held in captivity for more than a year. After his return to Mass. he received from the Province treasury £5.

1690. — John Woolcott, Sen., died this year. Anxiety and alarm prevailed in our frontier towns; and about the first of July the re-settled plantation of Northfield was again given up, and the people came down the river, and were scattered among the stronger towns.

Early in the year, the plan was conceived of reducing Canada to the subjection of the crown of England. Massachusetts raised and equipped over 2,000 troops for the expedition, which was to be conducted partly by ships by way of the St. Lawrence, and partly by an overland march. Owing to the inefficiency of the commanding officers (and other causes), the land force did not go farther than Lake Champlain, and the naval force did not reach Quebec till October; and the troops becoming discouraged, and many of them sick, the enterprise was abandoned. The Province was much impoverished by the necessary expenditures, and the people disheartened by the failure.

1691. — Henry and Thomas Gilbert were inhabitants of Brookfield this year, and Thomas Barns came on in the summer, as appears from the following record, “copied out of Samuel Marshfield’s measuring Book by Col. Pynchon; as follows: Aug. 27, 1691, measured to Tho^s Barns 40 acres upland, N. of the old road, W. of Matthew Tomlings &c.” The Gilberts came from Springfield. Thomas located east of Samuel Owen; Henry built on the south side of the highway and near the fort. Barns came from Marlborough, and pitched on the north side of the highway, nearly opposite to Henry Gilbert.

“May 20, 1691. In answer to the Petition of the Inhabitants of Squabaug alias Brookfield, Col. John Pynchon, Mr. Joseph Hawley, Sam^l Marshfield, John Hitchcock and Samuel Ely, formerly appointed a Committee for regulating the settlement of the Plantation of Squabaug alias Brookfield, are continued, and impowered to that service, taking effectual care so to direct and order the said settlement with that compactness and near situation of the dwellings that they may all be drawn into a line of a garrison, and made capable of defence against the Indian and French enemy.”¹

This action of the General Court was made apparently necessary by the overthrow of Government, under Andros, and the annulment of the old charter; and the order of continuance and renewal of powers, gave official sanction to past as well as future acts of the Committee.

The direction for placing the houses of the settlers in such nearness and compactness that the whole might be surrounded with a stockade, was not carried out. Gilbert’s fort was convenient for refuge to the families that were clustered around Owen’s tavern; but the Woolcott village was left unprotected, and fell a prey to the Indians, as will soon appear.

“May 23, 1691. Mr. Joseph Hawley of Northampton is appointed and impowered to joine persons in marriage in Brookfield.”

“Sept. 29, 1691. Brookfield constable sworn. The new names in the foregoing list of inhabitants, are Joseph Marks, who had formerly lived in Springfield, and was just returned from captivity in Canada ; Ebenezer Smith, who probably had taken his brother Samuel's grant ; and Ichabod Smith, who had purchased Nov. 11, 1691, the John Warner home-lot and rights. The Smiths were from Hadley.

Joseph Marks now returned from Canada.

Joseph Woolcott fined £5, for contempt of authority &c.

Later in the year, Mr. Woolcott was released from the fine for speeches against authority, on account that his house and most of his moveable goods were destroyed by fire.

1693. — The order of the General Court of last year, authorizing the taxing of all the granted lands in the township, led to some transfers of ownership. Apr. 15, 1693, Hezekiah Dickinson and wife Abigail, now returned to Hadley, sell to Stephen Jennings of Hatfield, for £27. 5. 0. the old Prichard home-lot with a frame upon it, and numerous lots of upland and meadow, amounting in all to 104 acres. Probably Jennings did not immediately come to reside.

The Indian Assault on the Woolcott Family. In the summer of this year a stunning blow fell upon the unprotected inhabitants of Brookfield. A skulking band of about 40 savages came down from the North, and after lying in ambush for a week, watching the movements of the people and the situation of their dwellings, suddenly surprised the families of Woolcott, Mason and Lawrence; killed Thomas Lawrence, Joseph Mason and his son, the wife and two little children of Joseph Woolcott, and carried away Daniel Lawrence, and the wife and infant child of Joseph Mason. The infant was killed the first night out.

The particulars of this murderous raid; and the pursuit, and rescue of the captives, are best told by Maj. Pynchon, in letters preserved in the State Archives.

"SPRINGFIELD, July 29, 1693.

On the evening of the 27th inst., John Lawrence from Brookfield came to me with tidings of Mischief done there. The account he gave me was that about noon the 27th of July, Joseph Woolcott came from his own house (which was 3 or 4 miles) to the garrison house, with one of his children in his arms, crying Arm! Arm! and said he doubted his wife and other children were killed by the Indians, he seeing 2 or 3 Indians after her, so snatched up that child and come away himself being shot after and pursued, only turned into a swamp and hid from them. Upon which relation of his, this said John Lawrence being then at Owen's house by the garrison, resolved to go and see how matters were at his own house towards and not far from Woolcott's: and in the way before he came at his own home, found his brother killed and scalped, and two Indians walking towards him, whereupon he returned presently to the garrison; and staying there about half an hour, hasted to Springfield, telling me that in that time none came into the garrison besides Joseph Woolcott, and that all there made but 5 men, who were in extreme hazard, if I sent not men to them presently: In the night, not an hour after John Lawrence, or thereabouts, came in here, a traveller, one Cooke, who was going to the Bay, saying that about noon on July 27th, he was at the garrison house at Quabaug, went thence onward towards the Bay, not knowing or hearing any thing, he being gone out thence just before Woolcott came in; and when he came as far as Woolcott's house, within 20 rods of it, he saw many Indians, the yardful, stood still awhile, and seeing no English with them mistrusted them, counted them to be at least 40 or 50, and so turned about his horse to go back, when presently the bullets flew about him as thick as hail, so he hastened to the garrison where he stayed but a little while and came to Springfield, telling me the garrison was in great hazard, being but 6 men, and no ways able to hold it against so many. Whereupon I forthwith ordered 20 men out of Springfield, 10 out of Westfield the next town all troopers: Sent post immediately to Hadley &c. for as many more there, ordering their march to Quabaug and there join ours &c. Ours (I being up all the night) were got ready by morning with 8 that came from Westfield about sun rising. These 28, all well mounted and well fixed went together yesterday to Brookfield, Capt. Colton their leader and for them also from the upper towns; whom I now this day understand attended to my order, rallying up to the number of 30: but could not be ready so soon, and were after those from Springfield.

I feared (according to the intelligence I had) we were too weak, if they met not to join. But now this day towards evening, a messenger sent to me from Brookfield gives me this account: That those I sent from Springfield arrived there yesterday about 2 of the clock in the afternoon; finding the garrison well and not touched, presently were upon the discovery, and finding no Indians, improved besides some scouting, themselves that afternoon in burying the dead. They found Thomas Lawrence dead, Joseph Mason and his eldest son, Joseph Woolcott's wife and two children, six in all, which they buried: 3 or 4 persons not found, whether killed or carried away, know not. When Capt. Colton had performed this service yesterday being the same day he went from Springfield, returning to the garrison about sundown: the soldiers from Hadley, Northampton &c. came in: Just upon which a man that adventured out of the garrison upon the hills, spies 6 Indians as he said; came back and acquainted therewith; presently Capt. Colton sent out to discover, found the man to have spoken truth, perfectly discerning their tracks in the long grass which they could very well follow: But it growing dusky and too dark to proceed, returned, and intended this morning to take the tracks and pursue the enemy, who went northward, probably are Canada Indians, and that party which in the Frenchman's examination (sent from Albany) were mentioned, viz., 30 ready to come towards these parts under a chief Indian called La Plato, with 10 more to follow them, and I suppose have been about Deerfield, but finding soldiers &c. durst not attempt there.

This morning the rain prevented Capt. Colton's march after the enemy, early as he intended. But the man (who is come to me) tells me that it clearing up, he was getting ready and fitting to pursue them. I pray God they may overtake the enemy and have a good success against them.

The people at Quabaug have sent to me by this man for advice whether to draw off or stay there. Drawing off will be ruinous to what they have; staying may be hazardous and ruinous to their persons. They would draw off, or stay, according to order. Drawing off will be a publick Damage as in other respects so in respect of the road and for travellers. Continuing there will call for some men to keep their fortification, it may be about 6 or 8 may be sufficient. I request your Excellency's advice and order; what you appoint shall be exactly attended. I understand the inhabitants are willing to be ordered one way or other, and till your Excellency's pleasure is known, I intend only to appoint Capt. Colton to leave 6 or 8 men, and so return on Monday after he shall have finished his pursuit of the Indians, which I hope this day or tomorrow will be over, and probably you may hear of the issue or success of their pursuing the enemy by the messenger that I shall order to bring this letter to your Excellency before I can write again. . . .

JOHN PYNCHON

TO SIR WM PHIPPS, Governor."

Extract from the Council Records. "July 31, 1693. A letter was this day received from Maj. Pynchon of Springfield, giving an account of a late Outrage and murder committed by some Indians upon divers of the Inhabitants of Quabaug als. Brookfield, to the number of 8 or 9 men women and children being found murdered and wanting. And that he had ordered about 50 of the Militia of his Regiment out in pursuit of them, praying direction concerning the rest of the inhabitants there — Advised, that 8 or 10 soldiers be posted in garrison there, for their better security, and that they be allowed three shillings per week a man for their billeting."

Maj. Pynchon's Second Letter. "SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 1, 1693.
Excellent Sir

Last night Capt. Colton from Brookfield with the soldiers I had put under his command, came well Home . . . I gave in my last to your Excellency, an account of the attack on Quabaug by some Pagans, and my sending Capt. Colton in pursuit . . . I shall begin now with the account of his expedition from Brookfield als. Quabaug, which will lead to whom were the assailants. On Saturday July 29, Capt. C. began his march out of Quabaug, about 10 in the morning, with 42 men well resolved, having left 16 at the Garrison there because he knew not certainly that the Indians were drawn off. To make sure work went to Woolcott's house whereabouts the enemy kept their Rendezvous; found their tracks to go through Woolcott's lot, followed the same, and finding it very plain and the way good at first setting out. Cheerfully improved it, soon came to the place where the enemy took up their lodging first, after they had done the mischief at Quabaug, viz. on Thursday night last, which was about ten miles northerly from Woolcott's house, where they killed Mason's child which they had took away, the mother as also young Lawrence about 18 years of age being then captives with them, where after a very small halt, our men on the chase came nextly to the Place the enemy as they suppose dined the next day their second day from Quabaug; there they killed a mare of Henry Gilberts which they had taken to carry their loads, and there also they had broken the Drum taken from Lawrence's house. Our soldiers still pursuing came to a Great Pond about 30 miles or more off Quabaug, where they found the enemy lodged that second night. Here they found a horse of Masons killed, and fresh tokens of them, their fire not out &c., which incouraged our soldiers much, though the way now most hideous, sometimes swampy, then stony and horribly brushy, scarce passable for Horses, yet went about 6 or 7 miles further that Saturday, all together, with their Horses. But finding they could make no riddance in such way with horses whom also for want of shoes began to be lame. Being set for the design, they left all their horses and men that could not foot it; 19 men Capt. Colton dismissed or shortened his number so many, ordering them to bring the horses after. The Capt. with the 23 most likely men pursuing the enemy on foot, lightening themselves of their coats and without victuals, hastened away that if possible they might come upon the Indians before (or discover them in the) Night. But Night came before any Indian could be seen or overtaken, and the Capt. having gone 7 or 8 miles very briskly in bad way after he had left his Horses, was forced to take up lodging, not knowing how far off their Horses might be, that could scarce be got along in that extreme bad way (though the Horses came up within two miles of the foot that Saturday night, which was the third night that the enemy had been gone from Quabaug)

In the morning, being Lord's Day, July 30th, the brisk Captain having men resolutely bent, persuading themselves they were near the enemy and knowing their horses would make a lumber, though he wanted his men, resolved not to stay, but sets out early, and very privately goes on in that dismal way, by the time he had gone about a mile and a half, came upon the enemy in a most hideous thick woody place, where till within 3 or 4 rods of them they discovered them not till they heard them laughing. Presently the Capt. made signs to his few men to come up and compass them about, who did accordingly, about 10 of his men only just at his heels, the Place obscure, the enemy hardly to be seen having also cut down bushes to shelter themselves, yet made shot upon them, as many of our men as had advantage. The rest of our men also readily coming up gave them volley also, just as the Indians riss up being at breakfast, about sun a quarter of an hour high. Our men could not all make shot at once, those that at first had not opportunity did it at the Indians beginning to budge away, none of our men failing. And the Indians not knowing or discerning them till the bullets were in some of their bodies, and others of them alarmed by the volleys our men gave, ran away, not having opportunity to fire on our men. The Captain says the enemy fired but one gun, tho' some of our soldiers say another was fired, and that the Indian quivered so that he could not hold his gun steady; However they all ran away that had life to do it, presently at an instant, and in such a hideous thicket that our men could not see or find an Indian more: Our men killed 4 of them certain outright, which the Captain saw and is sure of others and most of the soldiers say there were 6 killed outright, with one that being wounded one of our men ran up to and dispatched with his hatchet. Many of them were sorely wounded, and no doubt ran into holes to die, for our men say the brush in many places was bloody which it is was hardly possible to go in or make discovery; and Capt. Colton says he saw blood on the ground as well as bushes. The Indians ran away so suddenly being surprised, that they left their powder and ball, some judge all, not having taken it into their hands that morning, tho' some of them snatched up their guns. Also the—, our men got from them and burnt them. Our men brought away 9 guns, 20 hatchets, 4 cutlashes, 16 or 18 horns of powder, besides two bark's full neatly covered, about 1 pound or 2 pounds in a bark. Our men have regained our two captives the enemy carried away, Mason's wife, and young Lawrence, and so returned bringing them back in safety: Leaving plunder which they made unserviceable, not being able to bring it off. Upon their return they met their horses come up within 2 miles of them. But it was not possible to go to the place with them, and so returned no more thither."

"The Relation of the woman, Mason's wife (for the young man was tired amazed and dull) who is a trusty and intelligent woman, is, That these Indians that were at Quabaug were only 26 of them: four more of their company at first, went off from them, say they belonged to Canada, were from Pemaquid: Designed to fall upon Nashaway, but that two of their scouts whom they sent thither, brought them word they were there watchful and in careful posture, whether they were there or no some of them questioned, they fell out about it, could not agree whither to go, were strangers, and somewhat at a loss. At last upon a high Hill climbing to the top of a tree they discovered a house (which if so must have been Lawrence's), so bent their way to Quabaug. Lay about the Place six days, and at last did the Mischief, would not go near the Fortification; told Thomas Lawrence If he would tell them truly what men were in it, they would spare his life. He told them six. Then presently they knockt him down and scalped him: She says her husband having no weapon beat them off with his hand only a great while, till they cut his hand, and they were very cowardly afraid to meddle with her; that if she had any weapon she thinks she might have made her escape: Many things she had of them, one of them speaking good English, — as that an Indian called Capt. John was a Rogue to them, & they wisht they could come at him to cut him in pieces, &c. They told her that the Canāda Indians had been at Deerfield about two months since, and done Mischief there,¹ when they see the English there go against their own Indians, and the English suspected their Indians, and had imprisoned two of them, though the Mischief done there was by Indians that come from Canada, who presently returned after they had done the Mischief at Deerfield and were all got safe home to Canada. They inquired of her what was become of the Indians in prison; she answered them she knew not (for indeed that day they were in prison).²

They told her they would keep the lad, young Lawrence, to carry their burdens to their canoe, and then would kill him, for they should go 5 or 6 days on water, and over a great lake like a sea: The last night which she was with them they told her they were within a day and a half or two days' journey of their canoe; and now they cared not if 200 English came after them in that place, it was such a place that they should there kill them all that came to them. — And indeed it was a dangerous place for our men. If God's providence had not ordered it that the Indians saw them not till the English that went silently were upon them, and fired first, to their amazement in being so surprised that they run from their arms and ammunition. 'Tis God, and not our 20 men that hath done it. To Him be all the Praise, who orders things well for us, remembering mercy in the midst of judgment.

I am too tedious, pardon the same, and accept of my real desire to be serviceable in rendering the best account. The woman being left at Quabaug; the soldiers' horses being lame they could not bring her off; I have all from others, not having spoken with her myself: I suppose the constable himself (for want of a ready hand) will be the messenger:

he may give account of some particulars that I have missed. I direct him to speak with the woman, and acquaint you if any thing more:— The people at Brookfield desire a garrison, or to be fetched off. I waite your pleasure.

For his services in this expedition, “Capt. Thomas Colton, his officers and soldiers therein employed, as a reward of their good services were granted as follows: The forty men that pursued the enemy, the sum of £40 and the plunder recovered from the enemy, to be equally shared amongst them, over and above their stated pay. And in addition, £10 was granted as a gratuity to Capt. Colton.”

No more daring exploit against the Indian enemy was performed during this war. With no trusty guides, and no personal knowledge of the country; following the trail made by the treacherous foe, through swamps and among rocks and tangled underbrush; and when his horses gave out, stripping off coats, knapsacks and rations, and pressing forward where his men could only go in single file; and opening fire, with only ten of his men come up, upon (as he supposed) fifty well-armed savages—is an example of stern courage and heroism, worthy of everlasting remembrance. It is to be regretted that the names of his gallant band of soldiers are not on record.

And it would much gratify historical curiosity, if the “most hideous thick woody place” where the Indians were surprised by Capt. Colton, and the captives rescued, could be identified. From his description of the country, it is evident that the route of the retreating savages lay via. Menámeset, through Hardwick, Dana, New Salem, etc., towards the place where their canoe was left on the Connecticut river, above Northfield. This was the line of an old trail; and some hints by contemporary writers indicate the belief that this was the route. Capt. Partridge, writing Aug. 1, speaks of Capt. Whiting and Capt. Wells being sent out the day before, with 30 men, “intending fully to search those Eastern woods of Northfield, and will if they light of those villians did the Mischief at Brookfield, give them a second brush.” Probably the place of rescue was in the present town of New Salem.

The following Extract from the Council Records, is in place here: “Aug. 1, 1693. Upon Consideration of the late outrage committed by some Indians upon divers of the Inhabitants of Quabaug, and application from some of the principal Inhabitants of Mendon that the Friend Indians of the neighboring Plantations may be concentrated within certain Limits, and be put under the oversight of some of the English, as well for their own security, as that the Enemy may better be known.

Advised and Ordered

That the Indians of Hassanamesit be forthwith drawn in within the Town of Mendon ; and the Indians of the Plantation of Tohkokomoowadchunt be forthwith drawn into the Town of Woodstock ; and be under the inspection and oversight of the Military Commission Officers and Selectmen of the said Towns, taking suitable care for the preservation of their Corn, and that none of the said Indians do presume to pass out of the limits assigned them, without the knowledge of those appointed to take the oversight of them, and having one Englishman at least to accompany them."

It appears that eight soldiers were assigned to keep garrison at Brookfield, according to the advice of the Council.

It was the general plan adopted by the authorities of the Colony, for the safety of the Frontier Towns at this crisis, to collect all the resident families into a compact neighborhood, so that all the dwellings could be enclosed in a stockade. This plan was suggested in the Court's instructions to the Committee, dated May 20, 1691 ; but was not carried into effect. It is believed that the surviving families located near the Woolcotts' were brought to the garrison, on which all depended for protection, and perhaps lodgement at night. Probably two sentries were stationed on "Warding Rock" for day-watching, and the remaining soldiers were employed in scouting and guarding the men in the harvest-fields, and for night-watches. Autumn was coming on ; and Indian raids were not much apprehended after the fall of the leaves, till the deep snows fell, so that they could come on rackets. Then there was another period of comparative immunity, from the breaking up of winter, till the leaves put forth in June.

The garrison was maintained here, year by year, varying in number from 6 to 10 men, according to circumstances, and the activity of the Indian enemy. Daniel Tosh [McIntosh] died this year.

1694. — Only scanty records are found of the condition and doings of the Brookfield settlers, for this year ; and it is not likely that any new comers were added to their small number. The garrison soldiers were billeted on the families ; and while they afforded protection to field work, and safety to the homes, they drew largely on the scanty supply of provisions.

Thomas Gilbert of Brookfield, John Hitchcock, James Warriner and Samuel Parsons of Springfield were allowed from the State treasury, "for services at Quabaug, 10 shillings each."

The only clew we have as to the nature of these "services," is the fact that some time during the year, Samuel Owen and John Lawrence (whose brother Thomas was killed the last summer, as already related) went into the woods in search of a man who was missing, when they were set upon by a lurking band of Indians, and Lawrence was killed,¹ but Owen escaped. — Such were the perils and discouragements under which the families here held their homes!

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 13, 1695.

“. . . We know Indians are lurking about, and are satisfied that some number of them are waiting to get some booty, for besides some seen at Northampton, as also at Hadley, there have been some about Springfield: twice, one hath been seen. But upon any appearance, we range all the woods about, besides that, our daily scouting out 4 men aday on horses by Towns . . . for these Towns are daily infested by the enemy; so it is not prudent to emty our towns of men . . . by so many at Deerfield and Brookfield. . . .

JOHN PYNCHON.

TO HON. WM. STOUGHTON, Lieut. Gov^r.”

1696. — “Dec^r. 16. Ordered, for defence of our Hampshire frontier towns against the French and Indians next summer — That from the first of June to the first of November [the period when the trees are in full leaf]. 25 men be detached to keep garrison at Deerfield, and 10 men at the garrison at Brookfield.”

Stephen Jennings, from Hatfield, settled on the Prichard home-lot this year.

1697. — “Paid Col. John Pynchon for several soldiers that served at Brookfield, from April 12, 1697, to December 4, and for billeting said soldiers — £118. 0. 0.²

1698. — The Peace of Ryswick was signed Sept. 11, 1697, and was proclaimed in Boston Dec^r 10. But it was not formally proclaimed in Quebec, till Sept. 22, 1698; and in the mean time the French and Indians continued active hostilities against our Frontiers.

A garrison of 6 men was maintained at Brookfield, from June 30 to Sept. 30, and billeted upon the families.

Asking for a Minister. This year we find several new names among the Brookfield settlers, which added strength to the Plantation; and while their condition is “low in the world,” yet they evince a determination to lay firmly the foundations of social order and prosperity. The following Petition has important historical and moral significance, both as to the prevalent sentiment of Brookfield men, and the understood policy of the Government to secure religious ordinances to all inhabitants.

“The Petition of the Inhabitants of Brookfield to the Hon^d General Court assembled at Boston Nov^r 1698 Humbly Sheweth

² Mass. State Archives, CXXII. 113.

Firstly, That we seeme to be called of God, to continue our habitation in this place: We are low in the world, and it would be a breaking thing to our estates to remove to any other plantation; And the Land here is very capable of entertaining a considerable body of people: tho' Inhabitants have been slow to come to us by reason of y^e War, yet the land is very Incouraging, capable to afford a comfortable subsistence to many families.

2. That it is an Intolerable burden, to continue as we have done with out the preaching of the Word; God doth require his people to attend not only family worship but His publick worship: it is the ordinance of God that on the Sabbath Day there should be an holy convocation; and that his Word be preached by those that are able & faithful, and our necessitys put us upon it earnestly to desire it: both we and our Children need the Instructions, rebukes and encouragements of the Word: the darkness and deadness of our own hearts, together with the many snares that are in the world are an experimental conviction to us that we need al those helps & advantages that God hath sanctified for our good.

3. That we are not able at present to maintain the Worship of God: We are but twelve ffamilys: And are not of estate sufficient to give sutable encouragement to a Minister: We are willing to do to the outside of our ability; but tho' we do as much as can be expected from us, it will not amount to such a summ as a Minister may reasonably require for his labour.

4. That if this Hon^d Court would please to pity us, And grant us some help for a few years, for the maintenance of a godly able Minister, besides the advantage that it may be to these few familys that are here, it would be a means to draw many other Inhabitants to us, whereby we shal be so far assisted that we may of ourselves be able to uphold the Worship of God, and not be burdensome to others.

Under these considerations we humbly beg that this Hon^d Court would exercise compassion to us, & assigne some reliefe to us out of the Publick Treasury, which we shal look upon not onely a testimony of your zeal for the Worship of God, but alsoe of your tender compassion to the souls of those whom God hath made you ffathers of: And your Petitioners shal ever pray &c.

As will soon appear, the employment of a minister was delayed, and preaching was not established till 1701. The new comers this year were: Samuel Davis, who bought the Joseph Mason estate; Thomas Parsons, perhaps of Windsor, who had been living in Enfield; Abijah Bartlett; John Clary, whose father was killed by Indians at Northfield Aug. 16, 1688; James and John Pettee, from Springfield, whose mother had married Samuel Owen — they were much in the wars; Thomas Rich, who had a grant of a home-lot "at the east end of the Old Plantation;" died 1702: his widow Mary married Joseph Jennings; the children wrote the name La Rich. William Barns, a brother of Thomas, remained here a short time, and removed to Conn. Benj. Thomas of Springfield, bought one-half of the Younglove house-lot.

Extract from Council Records. — "Whereas the General Assembly at their session Nov. 15, 1698, passed a Resolve, that there be paid out of the publick Treasury, the sum of £20, towards the support of an orthodox minister at Brookfield, for the space of one year — Advised and consented, that His Excellency issue forth his warrant to pay unto John Pynchon and Samuel Partridge Esq^{rs}, of a Committee for managing affairs at Brookfield aforesaid, the said sum of £20, to be by them employed for the use aforesaid. June 10, 1700."

But the employment of a minister was still further delayed.

The new comers this year were Benjamin Bartlett, Jehoida Bartlett, sons of Benjamin and Deborah of Windsor, and Samuel Wheeler.

1701. — TO THE HON.^{ble} Wm STOUGHTON, etc.

The humble petition of the Committee and Inhabitants of Brookfield Sheweth

Whereas by the Providence of God, by allowance from the General Court and our own necessities and inclinations, we have and are now settled at Brookfield, and altho' we are now but few in number, yet here is accommodations for a considerable Township; being new in our beginnings, and through the difficulties and hazzards of the times, people tho' otherwise well inclined to come & settle here, yet have been slow in motion this way, by reason whereof we labour under many difficulties at present — Therefore move to this Court that they would be pleased to grant us some allowances for our encouragement & help, as followeth:

First, that we may in some measure be in a capacity to obtain the benefit of an Orthodox ministry of God's Word (which we are in necessity of) That this Court would grant us such allowances towards the maintenance of such an one a year or two or three, which together with what we might do amongst ourselves might encourage a minister to settle amongst us, which would tend much to advantage both as to Ecclesiastical and Civil affairs.

Second, With reference to publick Charges amongst us, That this Court would order that all men that make good a claim of a proprietie within the bounds of our place might be ingaged to bear their part in due proportion of all charges arising, and when notified of their Rate or proportion, be obliged to pay on the place from time to time, or quit their lands, etc.

Third, That this Court do settle and state the bounds of our Township, the centre to be the place where the first Meeting-house stood, and to extend six miles East, West, North and South, viz. twelve miles square, extending from said centre as aforesaid.

These things we apprehend might be a means to promote the welfare of our place, so as in time we might be beneficial to the publick interest of the Province, and the granting of which will oblige your poor suppliants, as in duty bound for your Honours ever to pray

BROOKFIELD, May 26, 1701.

Read in Council, June 11, 1701

And Resolved, That the Committee for regulating the plantation of Brookfield take order that there be an exact Platt made by a sworn Surveyor, of 8 miles square, with a description of certain lines for boundaries, and the quality of the land, to be laid before this Court at their next session, that so the Court may then further consider of ascertaining the Grant for the said Plantation.

I. ADDINGTON Secy

NEHEMIAH JEWETT Speaker."

The survey and laying out of the Township, eight miles square, was performed by John Chandler. This Plot was mislaid or lost; and in 1719 another survey and Plot, following the old lines, was made by Timothy Dwight, and the boundaries of the town established by the General Court.

A Minister employed. From an incidental statement in the Records, it appears that the Committee drew £20 from the Province treasury, and engaged Rev. George Phillips to preach, for the term of one year. So that the date, June 1701, may be regarded as the commencement of the stated ministry of the Word in Brookfield, after the Second Settlement.

Mr. Phillips, born June 3, 1664, was son of Rev. Samuel Phillips of Rowley, and grandson of Rev. George Phillips, the first minister of Watertown; was graduated at Harvard University in 1686; preached awhile at Jamaica, L.I.; probably preached in Brookfield only one year; was ordained pastor of the church in Brookhaven, L.I., in the late autumn of 1702, where he remained in the ministry till his death in 1739.

The engaging a minister to establish religious ordinances, and the prospective enlargement of the area of the town by which valuable lands would be opened to settlement, added to the quiet that had prevailed on the frontiers for the last two years, held out the prospect of prosperity and permanence ; and a considerable number of new men came on this year, and bought old rights, and received land grants. John Perry of Watertown located near the Woolcotts ; Joseph Banister of Marlborough bought and built on the South side of the old country road near Edward Walker ; Tho^s Bettys (b. Wenham) located near John Perry ; Edward Kellogg of Hadley built where Ebenezer How afterwards lived ; Robert Emmons and John Hamilton became residents. Several others received grants, but forfeited them by staying or moving away.

1702. — The peace which followed the Treaty of Ryswick was of short duration. England declared war against France, May 4, 1702. The news, which reached Boston June 11, was known in Canada at an earlier date ; and the French Governor lost no time in stirring up the smothered Indian hatred of the English, and preparing for raids on our frontiers. And for the next ten years, the Hampshire county settlements were doomed to suffer all the atrocities of savage warfare ! This war was known in history as Queen Anne's War.

It appears that a small garrison (probably consisting of town's people) had been maintained at Brookfield, during the interval of active hostilities. A considerable number of Indians (former residents and their friends) had returned, and built wigwams, and were hanging round the plantation. The show of preparation for defence, would have its moral influence on the savages ; and would assure the doubts of prospecting whites. Probably with the retirement of Mr. Phillips, a request was made to the Governor for continued aid in supporting a minister. And June 27, 1702, the General Court passed the following Act :

“ Whereas the Plantation of Brookfield, lying on the Great Road betwixt this her Majesty's Province and the Colony of Connecticut, being a usual and necessary stage for Travellers and Posts passing betwixt the two Governments, is anew beginning to be settled, and yet unable to support itself without receiving some Assistance from the Government being a Garrisoned place —

Resolved that the sum of £20 be allowed and paid out of the Publick Treasury of this Province towards the support of a Chaplain to that Garrison for the present year.

Consented to

J. DUDLEY.”

It will be noticed that the grant is made for “ the support of a Chaplain to the Garrison.” What was the reason for this designation ?

Under this authority, Rev. Joseph Smith was appointed Chaplain, and served nine months, for which he was paid £15. He continued in office till Oct. 1705, receiving annually £20 from the Province Treasury. He was son of Lieut. Philip Smith of Hadley, b. in 1674, graduated at Harvard University, 1695, taught school in Hadley and Springfield, where he married Esther Parsons. Mar. 8, 1702-3, he bought of John Younglove of Suffield, "a tract lying near the middle of the Town Plot [in Brookfield] in the place where the first of the Town-plot was placed before the destroying of it by the Indians, the said land being granted to my hon^d father Mr. John Younglove, deceased — this piece being one-half of it, and all my right." Mr. Smith was ordained pastor of the Church in Cohanzy, N.J., May 10, 1709, and became pastor of the Second Church in Middletown, Ct., Jan. 15, 1715. In 1716, he sold his estate in Brookfield to Capt. Thomas Baker.

June 26, a Petition was sent to the Governor from the Deerfield settlers, asking "for help and relief in our present distress occasioned by a prospect of war."

The result was as follows :

"IN THE COUNCIL JULY 2^D 1702

Upon a representation made by the inhabitants of Deerfield in the County of Hampshire, the most westerly frontier of the Province, that a considerable part of the Line of Fortification about their Plantation is decayed and fallen down, praying for some assistance in rebuilding and setting up the same, for that they are apprehensive of some evil designs forming by the Indians, an unwonted intercourse of Indians from other Plantations being observed :

Advised, That his Excellency do write to John Pynchon Esq., Col. of the Regiment of militia in that County, directing him forthwith to send his Lieut. Col. to Deerfield aforesaid, to view the Palisado about that town, and to stay there some short time, to put the Inhabitants upon the present repair of the said fortifications in all places where it is defective, and to cover them with a scout of ten men by turns out of the next towns whilst they are about the said work, and to assure them of all necessary support ; and to take the like order as to Brookfield, saving the scout."

There is no reason to doubt that Col. Pynchon fulfilled his orders "as to Brookfield ;" and that the old Gilbert fort was repaired and strengthened.

The following important letter was found in the State Archives, Vol. LXX. p. 576.

¹ This palisade, made of small logs set firmly in the ground, and pinned to a railing near the top, was built in May, 1693; the whole measure or compass of the enclosed fort was 202 rods, and cost 5 shillings per rod.

JOHN PYNCHON TO SAMUEL PARTRIDGE.

"SPRINGFIELD Oct. 6, 1702.

. . . That my Farm at Coy's hill may now be settled, wherein Capt. Hawley with yourself will contrive that it may be issued and settled to me. I earnestly request that these things for me may not be neglected or delayed, for I am growing old, and am not well now.¹

"From Brookfield they have sent to me, to give them an order for Mr. Smith their minister's due from the Country. I told them the secretary must give out the order of Court, and I will write to you to get it, that the Treasurer may pay it, which I pray you take care about. Also their constable, John Woolcott, sends to me for direction what he shall do with goods that he distrains for Mr. Smith's Rate, because there is nobody under oath there, which may easily be rectified and supplied when you are there: Wherefore I desire you to appoint meet persons for appraisers, and give them their oaths."

New comers. Besides the Rev. Mr. Smith, there settled in B. this year, Henry Taylor, probably from Boston, who received 40 acres Upland and 20 a. meadow, and built on the south side of the road, west of the Woolcott's; Edward Walker, from Charlestown, who bought 20 a., "one half of Henry Taylor's homestead;" became a leading citizen, and received grants in all of 456 acres. He brought with him a family of grown sons and daughters, who m. and settled in B. He was a soldier in the Narragansett Fight, Dec. 19, 1675, and in 1735, he was an applicant for one of the Narragansett township grants. John Green also received a 60 acre grant this year, and later 95 a. [See forward under 1708.]

1703. — A letter, of great historical value, has been discovered in the State Archives, Vol. LXX. p. 618.

"BROOKFIELD, Jan. 4, 1702-3.

Sir. We having a few rambling Indians frequenting our place whose words & carriage is such as gives reason to suspect them to be evil minded men and disposed to mischief, as my bounden duty is — So I presume to acquaint your Excellency with some of their sayings, hoping your Excellency's gracious acceptance and favorable construction: Their names the one is Joseph Ninnequabon, who was the man the last year that received a wampum belt of our Enemies, and presented it to the Moheggs to ingage them in a war against us, for which the Authority imprisoned said Ninnequabon many weeks, the then plott being discovered by our Moheeken friends, that storm went over. Now he is this day chalenging considerable lands in our Township, and profering them to sale: The other Indian is called Caleb, he also makes claim of Lands, threatening that if we again mow their meadows, they will burn our hay; and if we make improvement of their land, they will make war, and the next summer we shall see Indian Town built upon Coys hill, and also there will be war next year; the above mentioned hill is in our Township: It is said that Ninnequabon was bred & born at New Roxbury [Woodstock, Ct.] which was the place of his predecessor's residence, and Caleb is a Narragansett; therefore we see not how they can challenge Land in this place: The abovesaid Caleb, I the subscriber being at work in my field, he took the advantage of a knoll of ground to come upon me unseen, and then with a fell countenance terrible to look at drew forth a pistol which he had secretly hid and snapt at me to my amazing, but went his way doing me no further harm. There is another Indian whose name is Moaumaug, who told Mr. Buroe a french gentleman, that he had been at Canada this last summer, and the french had given him a gun, a coat and a hatchet, to ingage him against the English. There are other Indians, companions to the above named, as Collosion & Sollomon and Nappalanus and black James and Succomugg. These Indians are designed to draw off norward to be out of your Excellency's reach; for they are informed that your Excellency desires to settle them, which they declare aganst. If your Excellency be pleased to send to the inhabitants of this place, you may be better informed. I have not made known this to my neighbors, lest through indiscretion some of them acquaint the Indians with it. So craving your Excellency's pardon for troubling you thus far

JOHN PERRY."

This letter is valuable as giving us authentic information of the presence of Indians among the Brookfield settlers at this date; of their hostile disposition and intentions; of their claim of ownership in their old fields and meadows; and of the intrigues of the French authorities of Canada.

In relation to the claim of Ninnequabon, the following extract from the General Court Records has interest: "July 8, 1703. Ordered, that the late Committee for directing the settlement and affairs of the Plantation of Quaboag alias Brookfield, be and hereby are continued. And Maj. John Pynchon is hereby added to the said Committee, in the room of his father John Pynchon, Esq., deceased; Saml Partridge, Esq., to be chairman of the said Committee. And the said Committee are hereby impowered and directed to hear the matter in difference betwixt Ninequabin Indian and the Inhabitants of sd Brookfield, referring to his claim of Lands, and to endeavour to compromise and adjust the same; and to purchase his Right in behalf of the Province."

The following entry in the Province Treasury account, probably has reference to this business: "Paid Thomas How of Marlborough for Travel and expenses in a journey to Quaboag, and charges upon several Indians by him brought down by direction of his Excellency, to prevent a Quarrel arising between them and the English, referring to a claim of land . . . £2. 10. 0."

From entries in the same Treasury account, it appears that a considerable garrison began a new term of service here the first of March; but no names are given, and no casualties reported.

To give a true picture of the alarm which pervaded our frontier settlements at this date, and the ways adopted and suggested for meeting the emergency, some extracts from letters written in October of this year, are here inserted. Rev. John Williams of Deerfield writes: "We have been driven from our houses & home-lots into the fort (there are but 10 house-lots in the fort), some a mile, some 2 miles, whereby we have suffered much loss; we have in the alarms been several times wholly taken off from any business, the whole town kept in, our children of 12 & 13 years and under we have been afraid to improve in the fields for fear of the enemy. We have been crowded together in houses, to the preventing of indoor affairs being carried on to any advantage, & must be constrained to expend at least £50 to make any comfortable provision of housing, if we stay together in cold weather. . . . I would humbly beg our people may be considered in having something allowed them in making the Fortification: we have mended it, it is in vain to mend, & must make it all new, & fetch timber for 206 rods, 3 or 4 miles, if we get oak:" . . .

Rev. Solomon Stoddard of Northampton writes: "The first proposal I make to your Excellency is, that our people may be put in a way to hunt Indians with dogs — Other methods that have been taken are found by experience to be chargeable, hazzardous and insufficient: But if dogs were trained up to hunt Indians as they do bears, we should quickly be sensible of a great advantage thereby. The dogs would be an extreme terror to the Indians; they [are] not much afraid of us; they know they can take us — & leave us; if they can but get out of gun-shot, they count themselves in no great danger, how ever so many pursue them, they are neither afraid of being discovered or pursued. But these dogs would be such a terror to them, that after a little experience, it would prevent their coming, & men would live more safely in their houses, and work more safely in the fields and woods. In case the Indians should come near the Town, the dogs would readily take their track & lead us to them: Sometimes we see the track of one or two Indians, but cant follow it; the dogs would discover it, and lead our men directly to their enemies . . . our men might follow with more safety . . . they would follow their dogs with an undaunted spirit, not fearing a surprise . . . the dogs would do a great deal of execution upon the enemy, & catch many an Indian that would be too light of foot for us.

"If the Indians were as other people are, and did manage their war fairly, after the manner of other nations, it might be looked upon as inhuman to pursue them in such a manner. But they are to be looked upon as murderers . . . they dont appear openly in the field to bid us battle, & they use those cruelly that fall into their hands ; they act like wolves, & are to be dealt withal as wolves."

Hatfield voted to fortify three houses on the Hill and six in the town ; to rebuild the palisade, and to build stairs into the turret of the meeting-house, so that a ward or day-watchman might be stationed in the turret.

It is believed that the tower on "Warding Rock" was built at this time, to serve as a look-out for a ward, or day-watchman, whose eye could sweep the entire plain, where the great corn-field was.

Massachusetts offered a bounty of £10 for Indian scalps, brought in by soldiers who were receiving wages and subsistence ; and £20 to others. After March, 1704, scouts and rangers, who went out at their own expense, were paid £100 for every Indian scalp brought in.

The following letter will fill out the picture of this year.

OCT. 27, 1703.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY JOSEPH DUDLEY.

Brookfield also is in great necessity of some allowance to their Minister (who saith he cannot stay there except he have some allowance otherwise than the people can pay). Especially now they are under such hazzards of an enemy to come upon them, and being but a small people. Moreover, if said Minister go from the people and garrison there, I look they will and must break up ; and the making that post destitute will not only animate the enemy, but shut the road for Travellers, especially to travel with such safety as now they do. This I humbly present to consideration, and subscribe

SAM^{LL} PARTRIDGE."

The General Court allowed the customary sum of £20.

The new comers in 1703, were Joseph Rice (prob. son of Samuel and his 3d wife Sarah (White) Hosmer, b. at Concord May 16, 1678, m. at Boston, June 25, 1701, Mary Townsend), tailor, who had a grant of 40 a. upland and 20 a. meadow, and afterwards removed to Springfield ; Ebenezer Hayward, from Concord, son of Joseph, who built near the Joseph Mason place ; John Hayward, Jr., from Concord, who later built a grist mill on the new Mill brook. [Forward 1710.]

1704.—This year opened gloomily for our frontier towns. On the morning of Feb. 29, the town of Deerfield was assaulted by a force of 200 French and 140 Indians, under De Rouville, and 17 houses burnt ; 40 inhabitants and 9 soldiers killed ; 5 soldiers and 106 inhabitants carried off, of whom 20 were killed or died on the way, 60 were redeemed, and the rest remained in captivity or disappeared.

As this affair paralyzed temporarily our Hampshire county settlements, and was the predominant factor of Brookfield history for that year, a succinct account of the tragedy is here given.

On information received from Col. Schuyler of Albany, that the enemy designed a descent on Deerfield, the authorities had posted a guard of 20 soldiers there. The snow was three feet deep, and badly drifted; and the presence of so many soldiers lulled the people into a sense of security, which proved their destruction. The French and Indian army, 340 strong, came down on snow-shoes; and leaving their sleds and packs with a small guard at the mouth of West river in Brattleboro', pushed on, and reached the bluffs overlooking Deerfield North Meadow, early in the night of Feb. 28, where they halted and bivouacked. When midnight came, De Rouville sent out scouts, who reported that the watch was patrolling the street. About two hours before day, the French commander had word that all was still. The watchman had gone to sleep! An immediate assault was ordered. The snow had drifted up against the stockade, and climbing the drifts the Indians leaped over the palisades and were inside the fort, before any alarm was given. The stockade enclosed 12 or 15 houses, filled with sleeping families. And now commenced the slaughter of men, women and children. "The enemy immediately set upon breaking open doors & windows, took the watch & others captive, and had their men appointed to lead them away [to their bivouac]; others improved [the time] in rifling houses of provisions, money, clothing, drink, & packing up & sending away; the greatest part standing to their arms, firing houses, & killing all they could that made any resistance; also killing cattle, hogs, sheep, and sacking & wasting all that came before them."

The house of John Sheldon (known as the Old Indian House) for a time resisted the efforts to break it down; but the Indians got in, and most of the family were taken. John, Jr., lately married, with his wife jumped from the chamber window; she sprained her ankle, and could not escape; but urged her husband to fly to Hatfield for aid. This he did, binding strips of woolen blanket about his naked feet as he ran.¹ ["The light of the burning buildings at Deerfield, gave notice to the towns below, some time before we had news from the distressed people" — Hatfield Petition.] The carnage continued till sun about an hour and a half high, when help came in the shape of 30 well armed men from Hatfield and Hadley, who "rushed in upon the enemy and made shot upon them, at which they quitted their assailing of houses and the Fort," and drew off to the halting place, which was about a mile from the town, where the captives and plunder were collected.

The numbers of the killed and captivated have been already given.

Of the 111 captives, 40 were not over 12 years of age, and twelve were under 5. The sufferings and horrors of the retreat march of 300 miles, to Canada, are graphically depicted in "The Redeemed Captive," a book published by Rev. John Williams, one of the captives, after his return.

Nine of the houses within the stockade were unburnt; two brick-lined houses outside, and about a dozen or fifteen others at the south part of the town, escaped destruction. "The women and children at home are come off to Northampton, Hadley & Hatfield, also the wounded men & one wounded woman are in Hatfield under Dr. Hastings cure."

But for the positive orders of Col. Partridge, enforced by a large company of soldiers, impressed for the service from the other towns, Deerfield would have been deserted.

As soon as the snows melted, and the rivers opened, the French Governor sent another force consisting of about 20 Canadians and 50 Indians, to harass our frontiers. They surprised and killed John Allen and his wife at "the Bars" in Deerfield, May 11. Two days later, "Pascomock Fort [at the northeast end of Mt. Tom in Northampton] was taken by the French & Indians, being about 72. They took and captivated y^e whole Garrison, being about 37 persons. The English pursuing them caused them to knock all the Captives on the head, save 5 or 6. Three, they carried to Canada with them, the others escaped, and about 7 of those knocked on the head Recovered, y^e Rest died. Capt. John Taylor was killed in the fight, and Sam^l Bartlet wounded." Co. Recorder's Book.

Another larger army of French and Indians was sent out by Gov. Vaudreuil, "to lay desolate all the places on the Connecticut River," to quote his own words. But through the vigilance of Col. Partridge and the military authorities at Hartford, the Canadian was checkmated. All our towns were well garrisoned, and English scouts were constantly on the alert. But Indian spies and skulking parties were hovering about the settlements, waylaying all the principal roads, and picking off here and there a traveller or an imprudent soldier.

Thomas Bettys, a Brookfield man, was killed, on the old Hadley road, in Belchertown, July 29. He had been sent by Col. Partridge post to Boston, and was returning with important despatches from the Governor. The despatches were taken and carried to Canada, and made the basis of a report from Gov. Vaudreuil to the War Office in France.¹

Sam^l Barnard of Hadley says, that whereas my horse was taken on her Majesty's service to go Post to Boston with one Thomas Bettecs, who coming homewards on the road was killed and my horse; and I have had paid me forty shillings out of the Publick Treasury . . . I paid seven pounds for him, besides the damage I sustained for want of the horse . . . asks further remuneration." June 15, 1705, the Court granted the Petitioner forty shillings, in addition to the 40 shillings already paid.

About this time, a considerable part of the enemy moved off towards the east, and July 31, they "besett the town of Lancaster in several places, and did much spoil."

During the entire summer, the county was full of troops, largely from Connecticut. All the Hampshire towns were called on for their full quotas, which were employed in scouting, and marching to threatened points, and doing garrison duty at home. The consequence was, the towns were cleared of old provisions; and the out-lying planting-fields were left unplowed and untilled. And when harvest-time came, the harvests were wanting.

The condition of things at Brookfield is graphically [and phonetically] set forth in the following Petition :

TO HIS EXCELANCY, etc.

From minutes made on the paper, and from records of a later date, it is inferred that a considerable number of the petitioners were taken into the pay of the Province, and employed as standing guard or garrison soldiers, and in work about the Fort and garrisons. The large amounts drawn from the Treasury by Cols. Partridge and Porter show that more men were in the service here than would be required for simple garrison duty. From the Council Records it appears that "Muster Rolls" were returned to the Governor, covering this and succeeding years; and it is matter of deep regret that these Rolls cannot now be found. Doubtless they contained full statistics of names, dates and services.

"July 24, 1704. Ordered, that the Treasurer pay the sum of £56. 0. 5 to Lt. Col. Partridge, for subsisting the garrison at Brookfield from Mar. 1, 1703 to June 10, 1704, the Acct. having been approved."

"July 12, 1704. A Muster Roll of the soldiers posted at Brookfield was presented, for wages due for service from Dec. 4, 1703, to June 21, 1704, amounting to £166. 9. 8½d. Passed, and that sum ordered to be paid to Samuel Porter on behalf of the officers and soldiers above named."

"A Muster Roll of soldiers posted at Brookfield, for wages for service, and subsistence, from June 22, to Oct. 18, 1704, for Posts and other incidental charges, amounting to £271. 9. 1 — Ordered to be paid to Lt. Col. Sam^l Partridge." [Council Records.] Col. P.'s acct. for wages and subsistence of soldiers at Brookfield and Springfield, from Oct. 20 to Jan. 31 was £426. 15. 10.

Rev. Mr. Fiske, in his "Historical Sermon" delivered in 1775, speaks of "fortified houses," and "garrisons" in Brookfield; and connects them with the events of Queen Anne's War. And as the houses themselves or their remains must have been in existence in his day (as Gilbert's Fort certainly was to a much later day), and men were then living whose memory reached back 70 years, we have no reason to question the facts so stated. He indicates quite clearly (taken in connection with the testimony of deeds on record) the location of two of these fortified houses; one was on Foster's hill, near the old Ayres tavern stand, called "Jennings' garrison;" and another was located on the old Country road, between the present South Brookfield village and the Woolcott place, and known as the "Banister garrison." They are referred to shortly after this date; and there is a probability that they were built or put in good repair in the winter of 1704 or spring of 1705. There is an acct. "for wages paid sundry persons at Brookfield," of this date, amounting to about £100.

These bullet-proof houses were dwellings, and constructed as follows: the frame, i.e., the sills, posts, girths and plates were of heavy hewn timbers. Instead of studs in the lower story, logs split in half were set upright, face and back alternately, so as to match by overlapping the edges. [Sometimes planks were used.] The space under the windows was filled in with bricks or planks. The lathing was nailed to the logs on the inside, and the boarding in like manner on the outside. The doors were of planks; and the windows had inside shutters.

Rev. Mr. Foot, in his "Historical Discourse" delivered in 1828, names two other garrisons, viz. "Marks' garrison" and "Goss' garrison." He says: "Marks' garrison stood near the south west end of Wickaboag pond, on a knoll below the junction of the waters of the pond with the Quaboag river. It is related that one day Mrs. Marks being left alone, discovered hostile Indians in the neighborhood of the garrison waiting for a favorable opportunity to attack the settlement. She immediately put on her husband's wig, hat, great coat, and taking his gun, went to the top of the fortification, and marched backwards and forwards vociferating like a vigilant sentinel, all's well! all's well! This led the Indians to believe that they could not take the place by surprise, and fearing the result of an open, or protracted assault, they retreated without doing any injury."

"Goss' garrison stood west of Wickaboag pond, near the residence of Isaac Gleason," now (1886) the Charles H. Fairbanks place. This fort (or more probably fortified house) was built by Philip Goss, who was from Lancaster, and came to Brookfield in the fall of 1704. He received a grant of 60 acres, and pitched on this elevated spot on the "old Hadley Path."

Joel A. Jennings, Esq., gathered traditions and facts from his grandmother, Mrs. Zillah Jennings, which seem to warrant the conclusion that the house of Edw. Walker, Jr., which stood on the south side of the river, west of Mason's brook (N. of the house of Wm. B. Hastings) was "fortified." As Walker's grant here bears date Oct. 23, 1713, the house must have been built after the close of Queen Anne's War.

And as danger from the Indians was still imminent, it is likely that at least one house in each exposed district was plank-lined, and bullet-proof.

The pay of field soldiers at this date was 6 shillings per week; those in garrisons usually received but 5 shillings. The money allowance for food, varied from 3 shillings to 4s. 8d. per week. The rations allowed to garrison soldiers were: "1 lb. of bread a man a day, allowing one-eighth for breakage; two pieces pork each containing 2 lbs., to six men per day, and sometimes two pieces of beef, instead of pork, each containing 4 lbs. to six men per day; 3 pints of peas for six men per day; 2 quarts of beer to a man per day." Marching soldiers had a little more food allowed.

1705. — Taught a lesson by the easy descent of the French and Indians upon Deerfield, on snow-shoes, and the impossibility of following the retreating band, for want of such shoes, the General Court ordered that 500 pairs of snow-shoes and as many moccasins be provided for use on the frontiers, one-fourth of the number for Hampshire county. The shoes were to be provided by individuals or towns, and the Province allowed 5 shillings per pair (to be deducted from the person's poll tax) — though the actual cost was more. "In April, 1712, Col. Partridge sent the names of 463 soldiers in this county, who had provided themselves with snow-shoes and moccasins, and each was allowed 7 shillings."

No enemy appeared on our borders this year; though the garrisons were manned, and scouting was constantly kept up.

Rev. William Grosvenor. Rev. Mr. Smith left Brookfield this fall; and Mr. Grosvenor was secured to take his place. "Oct. 24, 1705. The Committee for Brookfield and Inhabitants, Humbly propose to this Court, that whereas they have procured Mr. Grosvenor for to be a Minister to preach the Word to them — The people being unable fully to maintain a minister, we earnestly entreat consideration & allowance towards the support of said Minister in preaching the Word of God there. Mr. Grosvenor proposes that if the Publique allow 30l. he will accept of the people to pay the rest to make up a suteable allowance, and this for one whole year, and so for as long as it's judged meete he abide in said service.

SAM^{LL} PARTRIDGE } for the Comtee
JOHN HITCHCOCK } &
 } Inhabts."

The House of Representatives voted to grant the sum of £20. The Council concurred, with the proviso: "that said minister be approved by the Governor and Council." The House disagreed, and the proviso was stricken out, and £20 granted.

The annual grant of £20 was continued, and Mr. Grosvenor remained in office till Aug. 25, 1708. He received a grant of a Home-lot and the accompanying rights of plain and meadow. He was son of John Grosvenor of Roxbury, where he was born Jan. 8, 1673, graduated at Harvard University 1693. After leaving Brookfield, his history has not been traced.

Ephraim Sawyer received a grant of 60 acres, home-lot and meadow, which he forfeited.

1706. — Alarms were frequent this year, just enough to keep the people well on their guard; but no general appearance of the enemy. The scattered garrison houses gave renewed confidence, as well as comparative safety. Probably the farmers, carrying their arms, and keeping a watch, pursued their accustomed labors in the field; and the "Address" shows a more cheerful and hopeful spirit. Not less than 18 men were in service here as soldiers (part of them citizens) during the summer and fall.

Only one casualty is known to have occurred in this town. "Mary McIntosh, widow of Daniel, was fired upon and killed as she was milking her cows." This happened Aug. 2. Judah Trumble was killed at or near the same date; and the entry in the Co. Recorder's Book, seems to imply that they were shot at the same time and place. He belonged to Suffield.

"The Humble Address of the Inhabitants and Soldiers of Brookfield

Showeth our grateful acknowledgements to your Honours, in that you did so consider our low condition, in so much as your Honrs did the year past grant a considerable suply of Moneys towards the maintaining a Minister to preach the Gospel to us in this place. We now humbly begg the gracious continuance of your Honrs goodness and bounty to us for the insuing year, els we shall starve & pine away for want of that spiritual food with the which throw your Honours liberality we were the last year so plentifully fed with.

*Inhabitants.*¹

Several of the above marked Inhabitants, were doing duty as garrison soldiers; and several of the Soldiers were then or soon after became Inhabitants.

"Nov. 11, 1706. The Council have allowed soldiers [for the winter months] as follows: To Deerfield, 30; to Brookfield, 10; to Northampton, Hadley, Hatfield and Westfield, each town 5, in all sixty.

"Ordered, that the soldiers that shall be allowed for service in the respective towns be improved as scouts, and posted most convenient for that end [in private houses, or garrisons], to discover daily, if they find any [signs of] approach of the enemy; and that by his Excellency's order they may attend the same under, by and from such commissioned officer in each respective town as his Excellency shall appoint; and that upon any approach of the enemy, if these be drawn off by his Excellency's order, that the towns secure themselves [at the expense of the Province] till supply come" [State Archives, LXXI. 265.]

1707. — This was a year of quiet and general prosperity on our Hampshire county frontiers.

The new comer at Brookfield this year was John Grosvenor, brother of the minister, who bought June 11, 1707, the home-lot and lands, formerly belonging to John Ayres deceased.

1708. — This year our authorities adopted the enemy's tactics, and sent ranging parties to the North, in search of Indians. In February, Capt. Benj. Wright led a scout of picked men as far as Cowasset (Newbury, Vt.), where was the resort of an Indian clan. They went on snowshoes; but no Indians were found.

Strolling bands of savages would suddenly appear at different and unexpected points in our county, showing that they were always on the alert; and about a dozen persons were killed or captured.

Brookfield was again to be the scene of bloodshed. I quote from Rev. Mr. Fiske's Historical Discourse: "Oct. 13, early in the morning, John Woolcott, a lad about 12 or 14 years old was riding in search of the cows, when the Indians fired at him, killed his horse under him and took him prisoner. The people at Jennings' garrison hearing the firing, and concluding the people at another garrison [Banister's] were beset, six men set out for their assistance, but were waylaid by the Indians. The English saw not their danger till they saw there was no escaping it. And therefore, knowing that an Indian could not look an Englishman in the face and take a right aim, they stood their ground, presented their pieces wherever they saw an Indian without discharging them, excepting Abijah Bartlet, who turned to flee and was shot dead. The Indians kept firing at the rest, and wounded three of them, Joseph Jennings in two places; one ball grazed the top of his head, by which he was struck blind for a moment; another ball passed through his shoulder, wounding his collar-bone; yet by neither did he fall, nor was mortally wounded. Benjamin Jennings was wounded in the leg, and John Green in the wrist. They were preserved at last by the following stratagem. A large dog hearing the firing came to our men ; one of them, to encourage his brethren and intimidate the Indians, called out, "Capt. Williams is come to our assistance, for here is his dog." The Indians, seeing the dog, and knowing Williams to be a famous warrior, immediately fled, and our men escaped. John Woolcott, the lad above mentioned, was carried to Canada, where he remained six or seven years, during which time, by conversing wholly with Indians, he not only entirely lost his native language, but became so naturalized to the savages, as to be unwilling for a while to return to his native country. [He did return to Brookfield, married, and settled.] Some years afterwards, viz. in March, 1728, in a time of peace, he and another man having been on a hunting expedition, and coming down Connecticut river with a freight of skins and fur, they were hailed by some Indians ; but not being willing to go to them, they steered [their canoe] for the other shore. The Indians landed at a little distance from them ; several shots were exchanged, at length Woolcott was killed."

How Joseph Jennings and his man Benjamin Jennings fared, is told in the following petition and answer :

"The Petition of Joseph Jennings of Brookfield, sheweth — That whereas he, living in Brookfield in Oct. 1708, and the enemy made an assault there, and y^r pet^r with his hired servant went as volunteers to the help of our neighbors, together with several others in company ; and in our march we were attacked by the enemy, and myself grievously wounded in the back, and my man in the leg, by which wounds we endured much pain and smart ; and lost my own time and man's nine weeks ; being six weeks under the chirurgeon — prays compensation."

The Council orders paid to Joseph Jennings, the sum of £6. 10, "for his smart, and the loss of his and his man's time, being both wounded in her Majesty's service ; and 30 shillings to his man Benjamin Jennings for his smart."

John Green sent a similar petition to the General Court, asking a gratuity and an annual pension, on the ground of "the total loss of his right hand."

The Court ordered the sum of £5 smart money, with £5 pension for the year past, and £5 per annum for five years next coming, if he shall live so long." July 27, 1716, the General Court voted "to John Green of Brookfield the sum of 40 shillings at present, and the sum of £5 per annum from this time during his natural life."

In May, 1741, Mr. Green sent the following Petition

TO HIS EXCELLENCY JONA. BELCHER, ETC.

"Sheweth, That in his youth he was able bodied & effective, and according to his ability was serviceable and faithful in his Majesty's service against the common enemy, by means whereof he underwent many and great hardships, was sorely wounded and crippled, and has never since been able to labor but with pain & difficulty; and having been much overbourn and reduced by the loss of his house & all his goods, but especially in the loss of two of his children in the flames: That the General Court, about 28 years ago, upon view of his wounds, was pleased to commiserate his circumstances and grant him a yearly pension of five pounds, which has been a considerable relief to him, and which he ever desires to acknowledge with thankfulness: But your petitioner being now aged and crippled, and under low circumstances in the world, and not having shared in the common Bounties of the Great & General Court in the many free grants of Lands by them made, and the five pounds now yearly paid him being in no measure equal to what he received from year to year next after his grant made, and as your petitioner humbly apprehends not equal to the true intent of his grant: Begs the further pity and compassion of y^r Excell^y & Honours.

JOHN GREEN."

The General Court Ordered, "That there be an addition of ten pounds per annum added to the five pounds already granted to the petitioner, till the further order of this Court."

Rev. Wm. Grosvenor finished his labors as minister in Brookfield, Aug. 25; and Oct. 20, Sam^l Partridge, for the Committee, sent this petition to the General Court: "Brookfield being now destitute of a minister, and poorly capacitated to maintain one, & yet its absolutely necessary that they have the word of God preached to them and to the forces settled there from time to time; accordingly they have improved me to look out for one, which if we can obtain, — That this Court would consider their condition, and allow (as formerly) £20 out of the publique Treasurie towards the support & encouragement of some able minister, if he be obtained as aforesaid, and so preach with them one whole year."

"Resolved, etc. £20, for the year current, to begin from the time of a minister going there, if he continue a year, and in proportion for the time he continues there — which minister shall be approved by the ministers of the three next neighboring towns."

It is not known who preached here from May 25, 1708, to May 1, 1711, when Rev. John James commenced his labors.

1709. — The English Government ordered our colonies to raise forces and fit out vessels, to unite with those of England, and attack Canada by sea and land. Massachusetts levied 900 men, and engaged several vessels, and waited from May to October; but the English fleet did not arrive, and the enterprise failed. It however kept the French forces in Canada. And the Indians contented themselves by waylaying the roads, and outskirts of the towns, and picking off incautious travellers and hunters. Three or four persons were killed and as many taken captive in Hampshire county.

"Aug. 8, Robert Granger and John Clary were passing along the road in Brookfield; and being fired upon by the savages, Granger was killed on the spot: Clary attempted to escape, but had not fled far before he also was shot down." Fiske's Discourse. Clary was an inhabitant of B.; Granger was of Suffield, son of Launcelot and Joanna Granger, and brother of the wife of Joseph Woolcott.

1710. — There is evidence from the records, that this year opened with brightened prospects and large plans, to the Brookfield settlers — to be darkened by sore disappointments before its close.

"At a meeting of the Committee in Quabaug Mar. 7th 1710, they then considered the several titles of every particular persons of what they then stood possessed; and altho' several of their Grants were lost; yet receiving good satisfaction of their title thereunto; they ordered all the foregoing parcels of land to be recorded; to be to them and their heirs forever."

The List (nearly complete) of the grantees referred to, is found by consulting the preceding pages, beginning with 1686, and adding those termed New Comers, in each succeeding year.

Since the winter of 1704-5, a considerable number of the inhabitants had been kept in the employ of the Province, as "standing guards," or garrison soldiers; and other young men who were stationed here as soldiers, had resolved to become inhabitants. To insure this result, and to hold out inducements to the sons of the first planters to remain, the Committee, at the meeting held Mar. 8, 1710, granted to Sergt. John White, 42 acres of upland and 20 of meadow, "provided he live in the place four years after he is wholly disbanded, and pay rates." Granted to Lieut. Samuel Williams, 50 acres of upland and 25 of meadow, "provided he settle on it and live in Brookfield four years." Stephen Jennings, Jr., received a similar grant. Joshua Barrus (Barrows) received 70 acres. The following received grants of 40 acres of upland and 20 of meadow, on the terms above-named: Edw. Walker, Jr., Jona. Jennings, Joseph Perry, William Old, John Hinds (from Lancaster), John and Samuel Gilbert (provided they live there 4 years after they come of age), Henry Peters and Joseph Kellogg, Edward Kellogg's son. Samuel Barns received 80 acres "at Mattchuck;" Tho^s. Gilbert, 20 acres; John Woolcott, 22 acres.

Saw mill. At the same meeting the Committee "granted to Thomas Barns, Thomas Gilbert, Philip Goss, Joseph Banister, Joseph Jennings, John White, Henry Gilbert, John Hayward and Stephen Jennings, liberty to build a saw mill in Brookfield, in such a place as they and a good workman shall judge best; and they have liberty to cut all sorts of timber for the use of the mill in any parts of the precinct, except upon persons' propriety, and they are to have 40 acres of land for their encouragement, to be divided among them."

The saw mill was built on Sucker brook, where is now the Malt mill bridge — the privilege being wholly disused in modern times. It appears from the records that this was the first saw mill erected on Brookfield territory.

The most distressing disaster on our frontiers this year, happened at Brookfield.

July 22, "six men, viz. Ebenezer Hayward, John White, Stephen Jennings, Benjamin Jennings, John Grosvenor and Joseph Kellogg were making hay in the meadows, when the Indians, who had been watching an opportunity to surprise them, sprang suddenly upon them, despatched five of them, and took the other (John White) prisoner. White, spying a small company of our people at some distance, jumped from the Indian that held him and ran to join his friends; but the Indian fired after him and wounded him in the thigh, by which he fell; but soon recovering and running again, he was again fired at and received his death wound." — Fiske's Discourse.

"Though there were several Indian Wars afterwards, in which other towns were visited by the enemy, and distressed more or less, and Brookfield was often alarmed and put in fear, yet our town was not invaded, nor was any person in it either killed, wounded or captivated." — Fiske.

The adage that "misfortunes never come single," was verified by our people this year. The following petition, copied from the State Archives, Vol. CXIII., page 582, speaks for itself:

"BROOKFIELD, Oct. 23, 1710.

"The humbel petitian of yo^r poor Distresed people Heear caleth aloud for pity & help Therefore we Adres the Gieneral Court that They would consider us and set us in sum way or other where By we may have a subsistence so long as you shall se case to continue us heere. We did not com heear with out order neiter are we wiling To goe away witout order There Fore wee Are wiling to leave our selves with you to Doe for and with us as you think Best You Knowe our Dificultyes as to the Common Enemye and Besides that our Mill Dam is Broaken so y^t we have neither Bread nor meal But what we Fetch 30 miles which is intolerable to Bear either for Hors or man which puteth us upon indeavering to rebuilding of it which is imposibel For us to Doe without your pity & Helpe winter is so neear y^t we must intreat you to Doe sumthing as soon as may be no more but are your pooar Destresed Begars Henry Gilbert, Phillip Goss, Joseph Banister, Samwell owen, Thomas Barns in Behalf of the reste of the inhabitance"

“Nov. 8. In General Court, Voted, that the sum of £10 be allowed and paid out of the Publick Treasury towards mending the Mill Dam in said Town: and that such of the inhabitants as are by the enemy driven from their houses and livings be admitted into the service as soldiers, that are capable thereof and his Excellency shall please to entertain.

“Voted, that no more of the inhabitants in the Frontiers be kept in the pay as standing guards, than are necessary for guides, except in the town of Brookfield, who are under extraordinary discouragements.”

Grist Mill. The records are somewhat confused in relation to the site of the first grist mill set up in Brookfield after the Re-Settlement. A careful collation of facts renders it probable that Col. Pynchon re-built his corn mill on the old Mill brook, above Wekabaug pond, and maintained the same till his death. But this was private property over which the town had no control; and the water failed in the dry season. About 1706, the town, with the sanction of the Committee, made a grant to John Hayward, Jr. [see ante, p. 164] of 40 acres of upland, in the west part of the town, and 15 acres of meadow; also 70 acres joining the first lot, and 24 acres of meadow, “for his encouragement to build a grist mill in Brookfield, and on condition that he maintain the same in such repair as the town may be supplied at all times with grinding from said mill, for the term of 25 years.”

Mr. Hayward built the grist mill on the new “Mill brook,” which is the present dividing line between West Brookfield and Warren on the north side of the river. It was the dam of this mill which was “Broaken,” and was the subject of the “humbel petisian” before quoted.¹ The mill stood near the present — 1886 — house of Sexton Douglas.

Besides the giving way of the first dam, this corn mill was the subject of much contention and many disappointments to the people and town authorities. In 1713, “John Hayward, Jr., falling short of his first contract with the town referring to the corn mill,” is allowed larger grants; “and if said Hayward have occasion to move said mill, he can take a stream anywhere in the town, free from former grants, and the town to sequester it; and all the men in town of 16 years and upwards, shall give said Hayward one day’s work.” May 19, 1714, John Hayward “having built a corn mill at Brookfield, and not being able to carry on business, therefore transfers it and all his lands and mill rights to his kinsman Ebenezer Prescott of Lancaster,” and returned to Concord. Prescott sold the property to George Hayward of Concord, an older brother of John, Jr. In 1719, George Hayward and his son Ephraim sold (or mortgaged) the mill and accrued rights to John Ashley of Westfield, who released the same back to the Haywards in 1723. About this date (perhaps in 1720) this mill was given up, and the Haywards, father and son, bought lands and received rights of pondage, and built grist and saw mills on Quabaug river, at the upper privilege near Warren Centre. George, the father, died in the winter of 1726; and Ephraim carried on the mills in his own name.¹

1711. — A garrison was maintained at Brookfield from May 1, to Oct. 31, i.e., during the time when the trees were in leaf.

New Minister. Rev. John James commenced his labors in the ministry in Brookfield May 1, and received the usual allowance of £20, from the Province Treasury. He continued to preach here till May 1, 1714, when he probably removed to Wethersfield, Ct., where he died Aug. 10, 1729. President Stiles says he came from England. Mr. H. E. Waite suggests that he may have been son of Rev. Thomas James, then of Charlestown, baptized Jan. 9, 1633. This would make his age at death 96. He was a preacher at Haddam, Ct., 1683; removed to Derby, 1693; was dismissed at his own request 1706. It is said of him that "he was devoted to books; was not a popular speaker, although a faithful, efficient man, undertaking more than he could possibly do." In the Boston Athenæum is a mutilated broadside, containing several poetical effusions "On the Death of the very learned Pious and Excelling Gershom Bulkley Esq. M.D.," with the name "Johannis Jamesius Londonsensis, Brookfield Decemb. 7, 1713" attached. See Sibley's list of Harvard Graduates. He probably left no descendants.

1712. — In a letter dated Hatfield Aug. 4, 1712, Sam^l Partridge says: "On Wednesday, July 30, came to me a messenger informing me of a young man taken by a party of the enemy at Springfield; and same day at night a messenger from our Eastern scouts gave news of the discovery of a party of 8 or 9 Indians seen, and they made shot at them, but the enemy soon ran out of reach towards Brookfield. We immediately sent a Post to Brookfield to inform them, who immediately sent out to all their workfolk abroad, and in their way see 6 or 8 Indians: Alarmed the said workers and disappointed the enemy, who were about secretly to waylay them, but run for it: By all this it plainly appears the enemy are on every hand of us laying wait for to accomplish their bloody designs. The same night a Post from Albany came with a letter. The letter doth not speak of it, but the messengers say the Governor of Canada looks for a speedy peace, but will do as much spoil as he can before it comes. . . ."

Queen Anne's proclamation for a suspension of arms, was published in Boston, Oct. 27, 1712. The peace of Utrecht was signed Mar. 30, 1713.

The war expenses of Massachusetts from May, 1703, to May, 1713, were not less than 285,000 pounds. The military expenses in Hampshire county averaged between 2,500 and 3,000 pounds per year. And during the war 105 persons were slain in the county, or in excursions from it. Not less than 125 were taken captive, many of whom were slain or died on the way to Canada, and others after their arrival there. About two-thirds of the captives were redeemed and returned home; the rest adopted Indian or French habits, and intermarried with their captors, or were induced to enter the Catholic religious orders.

1713.— Wars and rumors of war now ceased; and Brookfield put on the garb and airs of peace.

A New Committee. “At a great and General Court, held June 6, 1713, The Committee for Brookfield, by the death of Joseph Hawley, Esq., and Lieut. John Hitchcock, being much weakened, I humbly propose that the sd Committee being now only Col. Pynchon, Dea. Pomroy and myself (and Dea. Pomroy being much incapacitated by age & infirmity) that there be an addition to sd Committee of Samuel Porter, Esq., Mr. Ebenezer Pomroy and Mr. Luke Hitchcock: also for a clerk Mr. Joseph Hawley. Signed Sam^l Partridge.

Read, and the persons accepted: And the Committee to be established accordingly. The Committee to present an Account of their proceedings, and of the circumstances of the Plantation, and its capacity to be constituted a Township to this Court at their session in the fall of this year.”

“At a meeting of the Committee for Brookfield, Sept. 4, 1713, the Committee then agreed, that all grants of land hereafter made should be upon the conditions following, vizt. 1. That they shall work upon the land granted within six months from the grant in order to a settlement; 2. That they shall come and live upon it within a year from the grant; 3. That they shall live upon it three years commencing from the grant; 4. That in case the grantees fail in any of the particulars or articles abovesaid, then the grants to accrue to the town again.

“The Committee then appointed Capt. Pomroy to be surveyor, and ordered that he should have two pence per acre for laying out, to be paid by the owners of the land for whom he should lay out.”

“Granted to new comers, viz. Jeremiah How, George Hayward, from Concord, brother of John, Lieut. Thomas Baker, from Northampton, Jabez Olmstead (in a valley between the two Mohawk hills and partly upon them), and Josiah Bemis, 60 acres each; also to sons of old settlers, Ebenezer Gilbert, Samuel Davis, Jr., Hopestill Hinds, 60 acres each; to Joseph Perry, 8 acres; to the first settled minister, 60 acres, formerly Mr. Grosvenor's; also sequestered 60 acres for Ministry, and 60 acres for School." There was also granted this year (or previously) 60 acres to Samuel King of Sudbury, Joseph Marber and Nicholas Nichols of Andover, Peter Shanaoway, James Negro, Preserved Smith, Robert Old, [he lived on the Springfield road within the present bounds of Brimfield].

The Committee also made grants this year, of 60 acres each, to the sons of Sergt. John Ayres, viz. Thomas Ayres, Joseph Ayres, Edward Ayres, Mark Ayres and Nathaniel Ayres; and "if they prove their Father's right of undivided lands, these grants to be accounted part."

The Ayres' Grants. A curious piece of Brookfield history is connected with the claims of and grants to the heirs of Sergt. John Ayres, who was killed by the Indians in 1675. In 1693, John Ayres of Boston, shipwright, son of John Ayres late of Squabauge, deceased, and wife Mary, sold to Wm. Rooker of Hadley, for £20, "his share in land at Brookfield, laid out to his father." In 1703, a settlement in probate, was made of the estate in Brookfield, of John Ayres, Sen., deceased. The inventory showed 50 acres in the home-lot and 6 acres of meadow at rear of it; 12 a. on the river, 8 a. called Manings meadow, 6 a. on Coy's brook, 6 a. on new road, 18 a. on the plain, a lot south of the river, and rights undivided. Some time after this, the remaining children petitioned the General Court to have the old grants renewed and relocated, or equivalent grants made, so that they "might have and enjoy what belonged to them in Right of their father." After various delays, the Committee made the grants of 60 acres each to the sons above named. But none of them came to occupy the lands. Sept. 17, 1714, these brothers received grants of 72 acres each. At the same time many of the grandchildren received each a grant of 80 acres, on condition of occupancy within a year. All the grantees, sons and grandsons, failed to comply with the condition, except John, the son of Samuel, and John the son of Joseph, who became residents in 1714 or 15. Consequently the grants to the others were declared forfeited. In 1717, the sons, viz. Thomas, Joseph, Mark, Edward and Nathaniel petitioned the General Court "to confirm to them the lands which the Committee have laid out to them and their children, containing by estimation no more than 1,500 or 1,600 acres — Altho' they have heard their father and many others say that he had 2,000 Acres of land in Brookfield." The Court granted the petition; and a year later, i.e. Nov. 7, 1718, made an explanatory and final order, "That in confirming the several grants of land made to the children and posterity of John Ayres formerly of Brookfield, deceased, by Col. Partridge and others a Committee for said Brookfield, to the several and respective grantees, as named in said grants, their heirs and assigns, it is the intention of the Court that said grants should be in full of all claims and demands whatsoever even from their paternal Right. And that those and those only who have or shall bring forward a Settlement on their respective lots within the space of 3 years next coming from the 25th day of May 1718, shall be entitled to after Divisions in the said town." Consented to S. SHUTE.

THE AYRES FAMILY. Children of Sergt. John :

- i. JOHN, w. Mary; a shipwright of Boston; sold (as above) his share in his father's estate, which cut off his own and his children's claim in the new grants in Brookfield; he was living in 1705.

These grants, made 1714, and confirmed 1718, footed up 2,800 acres, and held good to the grantee's heirs and assigns; consequently were not forfeited by non-residence, like other grants made by the Committee. The discrepancy between the statement of the Ayres brothers, that the grants amounted to no more than 1,600 acres, and the fact that they actually footed up 2,800 acres, is reconcilable on the ground that a part of the grants were made subsequent to 1717.

1714. — The General Court at its session June 22, 1714, "Ordered, that Samuel Partridge, Esq., and the present Committee for Brookfield, be directed and empowered to make inquiry, and cause a Register to be made of the Lots, Rights and Properties of land, within the said Plantation, granted to the first and ancient settlers and others, particularly a grant made to Mr. Phillips sometime minister of the said place, and make report to this Court." This order was complied with, so far as making out a Register of the early Land Grants to those men who (or their heirs) were then resident in the town. And it is from this Register, still extant, that the lists of names and properties, given in the preceding pages of this chapter, are made out.

A considerable colony from Sudbury and Marlborough came to Brookfield this year.

Dea. Amos Rice, from Marl., had a grant of 60 acres, on which he settled. In all he received 314 acres.

His brother Obadiah came to B. in 1719, married Esther Mirick, raised a family of 11 children, and late in life removed to Quabin (Greenwich). Of his sisters, Martha m. Elisha Rice, and Esther m. Jona. Jennings, both of B.

Azariah Rice, a cousin of Amos, had a grant of 60 acres in 1714, and settled in B., as did his sisters, Lydia, who m. Cyprian Rice, and Priscilla, who m. Josiah Partridge.

Elisha Rice, from Marl. had a grant of 60 acres in 1714, settled in B., received in all 275 acres, and became a leading man in town affairs. His w. Martha d. Oct. 3, 1785, in her 90th year: he d. Mar. 10, 1789, in his 99th year, "retaining his mental faculties until a day or two before his death."

Cyprian Rice, a brother of Elisha, had a grant of 60 acres in 1714, and in all 107 acres.

Pelatah Rice, another brother, had a grant of 81 acres; lived here a short time, removed to Westboro', and thence to Northboro'.

Peter Rice, another brother, had a grant in 1721 of 100 acres, m. Dinah Woolcott; lived in Western (Warren). For full records of these families, see Ward's Rice Family.

Daniel and Elisha How, sons of Samuel of Sudbury, received each a grant of 60 acres, but did not come to reside. Daniel settled in Framingham, and afterwards in Westmoreland, N.H., and he and his son Daniel became the heroes of the French and Indian wars.

Thomas Gibbs, from Sudbury, (son of John and w. Anna Gleason) had a grant of 60 acres in 1714, on which he settled; received in all 298 acres.

Isaac Shaddock (Shattuck), from Watertown, son of Dr. Philip and w. Rebecca, had a grant of 60 acres, but did not come to reside. He settled in Westboro'.

Nathaniel Wood or Woods, had a grant of 60 acres.

John Parsons had a grant, Sept. 17, 1714, of 80 acres upland, near the Woolcott place, on which he settled.

This year Ebenezer Prescott, from Lancaster, bought John Hayward's mill privilege, and all accrued rights.

Capt. Thomas Baker. There also came to Brookfield this year, a man who, from inherent force of character, became a social and political leader, and for the next 12 years, divided the honors of office and power with Thomas Gilbert, Thomas Barns, Philip Goss, Joseph Banister, Joseph Brabrook, Dea. Joseph Jennings, Tilly Mirick, John Woolcott, Edward Walker, and Elisha Rice. I refer to Capt. Thomas Baker. He is first identified with Brookfield history in 1710-11, Feb. 21st of which year, he (then of Northampton) bought the Millet homestead on Foster's hill. Sept. 4, 1713, he received a grant of 60 acres; Oct. 22, 1713, of 80 acres; Dec. 11, 1714, of "the land formerly Mr. Grosvenor's;" and subsequently of other lots, amounting in all to 1,069 acres. He also held other estates by purchase. A brief sketch of his eventful life is in place here.

Thomas Baker was son of Timothy and Sarah (Hollister) Atherton Baker, and grandson of Edward of Lynn and Northampton; he was born at Northampton May 14, 1682, and grew up amid the stirring scenes of King William's war. His mother was the widow of Rev. Hope Atherton of Hatfield, chaplain to Capt. Turner's force in the famous battle at Turner's Falls, May 19, 1676, whose tragic experiences on the retreat, and sad death in consequence, must have been the theme of household story in the Baker family, and made an indelible impression on the boy's mind. At 21, we find him a soldier at Deerfield, when that Plantation was assaulted and devastated by the French and Indians. What happened to him here, and in the immediate future, is best told in his own words, copied from the General Court Records, Vol. 10, p. 250: "A petition of Thomas Baker of Brookfield, setting forth that he being a soldier under the command of Capt. Jonathan Wells, was taken prisoner at Deerfield by the French and Indians Feb. 29, 1703-4: That he lost his arms and a good suit of clothes, and was carried to Canada : That the summer following the Chevalier Boncour went from Canada with a great army, designing to spoil and destroy some of the towns on the Connecticut river—which the petitioner understanding, in order to serve his country by giving seasonable intelligence of said intended expedition, made his escape from Mont Real to the utmost hazard of his life, and was unfortunately taken, and preparation was made by the salvages to burn him alive ; but he happily got out of their hands, and ran to the house of one Lebair, who ransomed him by advancing £5, which the petitioner promised to repay him. After which the petitioner was by order of the Governor of Canada put into irons, and made a close prisoner for 4 months. After which the petitioner being made a prisoner at large escaped a third time, and then got safe to his own country.”¹

The word “safe” in the last line, needs qualifying. Their long march through the wilderness of woods and streams was one of great danger, and fearful suffering. As they started without provisions, and without fire-arms, they were obliged to subsist on roots, nuts and bark, and such small animals as they could kill with stones and sticks. Once they were on the point of giving up, when one of them gave utterance to a prayer that God would in some way send them succor ; and immediately a large bird, such as they had not before seen, fell, or alighted close to their path. It was secured, torn in pieces, and eaten without cooking.

Young Baker soon rose to the rank of lieutenant, and was employed by the authorities in ranging and scouting.

As before noted, he was in Brookfield in 1711, when he purchased the Millet homestead, which was afterwards confirmed to him by special grant.

The last of March, 1712, Lieut. Baker, with a ranging party of 32 men, started from Northampton, went up the Connecticut as far as Cowas (Newbury, Vt.), where they struck off to the east till they came to the Pemigewasset. Near where the west branch (since known as Baker's river) unites with the main stream, they surprised an Indian camp, killed Wattanummon, a chief [of the Pequawkets], and as they believed one or two more, and routed the rest. None of the English were killed. The Indians had gathered a large stock of beaver skins ; and Baker and his men loaded themselves with as much as they could carry, and burnt the remainder. The party then went down the Merrimack to Dunstable, and thence to Boston, where they applied to the General Court for pay and bounty. They could show but one scalp ; yet the Court, in view of the brave adventure, granted a bounty of £30, i. e. pay for three scalps, and £10 to the Lieut., and wages for all from Mar. 24 to May 16.

A large number of captives, taken at various times, from 1689 to 1712, still remained in the hands of the French in Canada: and in the fall of 1713, a Commission was sent by Gov. Dudley, to endeavor to redeem them. The Commissioners were Col. John Stoddard of Northampton and Rev. John Williams of Deerfield. They took with them Capt. Thomas Baker as escort and adviser, Martin Kellogg, interpreter, and two attendants, viz. Eleazar Warner (afterwards of Brookfield) and Jona. Smith. The party started from Northampton Nov. 13, 1713; went by way of Westfield and Kinderhook to Albany, where they were detained till Jan. 22. They reached Montreal Feb. 9, and Quebec on the 16th. The Commissioners set about their business with hopefulness and energy, under assurances from Gov. Vaudreuil, of his favor and aid. But they soon found that his professions were only diplomatic; and the Jesuits put obstacles in the way of negotiations, which frustrated their plans. When they complained of this to the Governor, he replied that he "could as easily change the course of the river, as prevent the priests' endeavors." April 4, Capt. Baker was sent off to Boston, via Albany, to Gov. Dudley, for instructions. He returned to Quebec, July 23. After 6 months of vexatious negotiation, the Commissioners embarked, Aug. 24, on a vessel sent from Boston, with only 26 captives, leaving behind four times that number. Some of these were taken in childhood and had grown up with their captors, and no persuasion could induce them to give up the free wild life of the wilderness; others had intermarried with Indians or French, and formed new and strong ties; others were frightened by the stories told by the priests of Protestant intolerance and apostasy.¹

It was during this visit to Canada that Capt. Baker made the acquaintance of Madame Le Beau, who afterwards became his wife.

She was the daughter of Richard Otis and wife Grizel Warren, of Dover, N.H.; was born Mar. 1689, and named Margaret. Her father and sister Hannah were killed by the Indians in the attack on Dover June 28, 1689, and her mother and herself were carried to Canada. Her mother subsequently married a Frenchman named Robitail, and lived and died at Montreal. Margaret was taken in charge by Catholic priests, baptized by the name of Christiné, and was educated in their faith. About the age of 16, she married a Frenchman by the name of Le Beau (Lé-bue on Brookfield records). Her husband died leaving by her three children. When Col. Stoddard was in Canada, on his errand of redemption of captives, she decided to return with him. Her mother and her confessor opposed this; and it was only on condition that she should give up her property, and leave her children behind, that her departure was permitted.

"Dec. 9, 1714. Then granted to Margett Otis, alias Le bue, one that was a Prisoner att Canada and Lately come from thence, forty acres of upland In Brookfield and twenty acres of meadow : Provided she returns not again to live att Canada, but tarrys in this Province or territory, and marrys to Capt. Thomas Baker, and also upon the same condition as other Grants : — Col. Partrigg, John Pynchon Esq., Eben^r Pumry, Committee for Brookfield."

That she accepted both offers, appears from the following record : "May 20, 1715, Granted unto Mrs. Margett Baker m̄ unto Mr. Thomas Baker, 40 acres, N. on new Country road, S. on old Country road, E. on Bettis, W. on Sam Owen, Jr., it being the tract formerly granted to Mr. Smith the Minister, and after him to Mr. Grosvenor."

Mrs. Baker embraced the Protestant faith, and as there was no church in Brookfield, she united with the church in Northampton, then under the pastoral care of Rev. Solomon Stoddard, where her eldest child was baptized and recorded. In most of the deeds of Brookfield lands she is called Margaret ; but in one dated Dec. 10, 1728, the record is "Thomas Baker and wife Christian, both of Brookfield."

Apr. 17, 1716, Capt. Baker, in the employ of the Province started with a ranging party for the north, and was absent five weeks. Probably he went as far as Canada, with a view to obtain information about captives and the purposes of the French authorities.

In 1719, Capt. Baker was chosen [the first] representative to the General Court from Brookfield.

In 1722, Capt. Baker was again sent on a trip to Canada. His wife went with him. In a petition she says : "Your petitioner did undertake the hazzard and fatigue of a Journey to Canada againe in hopes by the interest of friends to get her children — but all in vaine"¹ The expenses of the Journey were allowed by the Mass. Council.

In the spring of 1727, Capt. Baker was accused of Blasphemy, and put under £200 bonds by the magistrates. The case grew out of a controversy with Dea. Joseph Jennings. In a petition to Gov. Dummer, Baker avers that "however the evidences might strain and misconstrue his words, yet in conscience he really had no design to reproach the Deity," and asks that he may be "discharged from his recognizance, or admitted to a trial." The Court "ordered that the Petitioner's recognizance be discharged, and the writ of Scire Facias issued be declared null and void — provided he appear at the next Court of Assize at Springfield and abide his trial." In Sept., the case was tried. The charge against him was thus worded : "There being a discourse of God's having, in his Providence, put in Joseph Jennings, Esq., of Brookfield, a Justice of the Peace, Capt. Baker used the following words — 'If I had been with the Almighty, I would have taught him better.'” Verdict of the jury—Not Guilty.

In 1728, Capt. B. sold Samuel Brown of Salem 600 acres, lying towards the north-west corner of Brookfield; and before the end of 1731 he had disposed of his remaining estates in B. to Josiah Sheldon of Suffolk, a speculator in real estate, who failed before the day of payment came, and Baker was thus reduced to poverty. He removed first to Mendon, where in 1732, his wife was admitted to the church by letter. Before Sept., 1734, he took up his abode in Dover, N.H. In a petition, dated May 2, 1735, Mrs. Christine Baker says: “The General Assembly of Massachusetts took your petitioner’s case into their consideration, and made her a present of 500 acres of land in the Province of Me., and put it under the care and trust of Col. Wm Pepperell, Esq., for the use of your petitioner.” In the same petition, she asks the General Assembly of New Hampshire to pass a private Act to enable her to keep a House of Entertainment in Dover; which Act was passed May 8, 1735; and she opened and kept said House for many years.¹

The family tradition is, that Capt. Baker fell into a lethargy, and died at the house of a cousin (Sumner) in Roxbury, before 1753. His wife died Feb. 23, 1773. Their children were:

- i. Christian (Christiné), b. June 5, 1716, m. Capt. Dudley Watson, of Dover.
- ii. Eunice, m. Dr. Cheney Smith, of Dover.
- iii. Lucy, m. Joshua Stackpole, of Rollinsford.
- iv. Charles, m. (1) Love —, (2) Sarah (Carr) Roberts.
- v. Mary, b. Feb. 16, 1726, m. Capt. Benj. Bean, of Epping.
- vi. Otis Archelaus Sharrington, m. (1) Lydia Wentworth, (2) Tamsen (Chesley) Twombly.
- vii. Alexander Douglas, d. unmarried, in Dover.

This year (1714) Rev. Mr. James closed his ministry, May 1, and in the summer Rev. Daniel Elmer was employed to preach. From the terms named in the grant of a home-lot to him, it was evidently expected that he would become a settled pastor in B.; but he remained only half a year, and was paid £10 out of the Province treasury. Mr. Elmer was born at East Windsor, Conn.; graduated Yale College, 1713. After leaving Brookfield, he preached at Westborough several years, and, when the church was gathered there in 1724, received a call from the people; but difficulties arose, and though he built upon a farm that was sequestered to the first settled minister, yet by the advice of an ecclesiastical council, he desisted from preaching, and removed with his family to Springfield. He was ordained at Fairfield, N.J., about 1729. His first wife was Margaret, sister of Rev. Jona. Parsons of Newburyport ; his second wife was — Webster : by both he had twelve children.

1715. — The new comers this year, were Samuel Bush, from Marlborough, who had grant of a 60 acre home-lot, and later of 120 acres ; Joseph Brabrook, from Lancaster, whose home-lot of 60 acres was granted on condition that "he build and inhabit within 3 years." He bought, Mar. 14, 1716, for £40, "the living of John Lawrence of Brookfield, deceased, 60 acres, bounded S. by highway, and on the S.W. corner a little brook," and settled that year ; received in addition 224 acres, 40 of which (granted 1720) was "near the burying-ground, it being an ancient right, and bounded east on a brook, and south on the road." John Shepherd, then "a servant to Lieut. Philip Goss," had a grant of 60 acres, "when his time is out," and later of 170 a. John Prichard, Nathaniel Boyenton, Job Harris, John Lath and Peter Hubbard received 60-acre grants, but forfeited them.

Taxation. "In General Court, July 26, 1715. Upon reading a petition of Thomas Baker, Philip Goss, and Joseph Banister, in behalf of the Inhabitants of Brookfield, showing that by reason of the desertion of the place by the first grantees, and by the sale of many Grants since made, good part of the lands are fallen into the hands of strangers, who neither improve nor sell to those who would settle themselves amongst them, which greatly obstructs their growth and hurts their publick affairs, especially rendering them incapable of settling and supporting the Ministry amongst them. — Praying that for some few years next succeeding, and until they shall be more capable of enduring a charge, all lands, belonging to Non-residents as well as others, though not under improvement, may be made liable to be taxed in all town assessments, and that the Committee may receive directions therein ; Ordered, that for seven years next coming, all town assessments in Brookfield be raised on polls, as the law directs, and on the real estate of the non-resident as well as the resident proprietors, exclusive of personal estates ; which the Committee for settling the said town are hereby directed and fully impowered to levy and collect accordingly so long as they shall be continued by this Court : And to take care the town be settled in the most regular, compact and defensible manner that can be."

Great Field. Nov. 22, 1715. "The Committee, with the consent of the inhabitants, ordered, that the Great Field upon the Plain should be sufficiently fenced, and at no time laid open, for the preservation of the corn [wheat] sown at the fall, and so in the spring, and all the year from time to time, until further order : provided always, that there be a pair of bars or gate made at each end of said Field, for such as have occasion to go through said Field in the private highway, with teams, taking down the bars, and carefully putting them up again, or shutting said gates as they pass through, and no droves of cattle or hogs or horse to be allowed to go through said Field, on penalty of paying whatsoever damage they do, and five shillings a time they offend as aforesaid in any of the particulars above mentioned, to be to the use of the proprietors." This Field took in about 90 acres, and covered what is now West Brookfield village.

MEETING-HOUSE. — Since the Re-Settlement, up to this date, there had been no house dedicated to public worship. And there are no records to indicate where preaching services were held. The fact that the minister pro tempore was designated as "Chaplain to the Garrison" leads to the inference that Sabbath services were held at Gilbert's Fort till 1713.

Sept. 17, 1714. "The Committee unanimously agree that the Inhabitants build a Meeting-house wherein to attend the worship of God, which shall be set up and erected in said place where formerly the Meeting-house was built near old John Ayres' House Lott, lying near about the centre of the Town: And the Committee have and do by these presents order that the Constable, together with Edward Walker, Sen., and Joseph Banister take an exact list of the rateable estates both real and personal, within the precincts of Brookfield, and cause a rate to be made, for the payment of their minister and other charges."

Nov. 22, 1715. "The inhabitants of Brookfield agreed, by the consent of the Committee, to build a Meeting-house wherein to carry on the worship of God; in the form and manner as followeth: viz., 45 feet in length and 35 feet in width, and to put in Galery pieces so that they may build galleries when they shall have occasion; and to carry on the building the said house as far as they can conveniently with their labour; and what shall be required in money for the carrying said work, to be raised by a Town rate; and if any person or persons refuse to labour, having suitable warning by the committee hereafter named, shall pay their proportion in money. The inhabitants likewise agree to get the timber this winter. The committee chosen to oversee and take care for the carrying on of said work are Thomas Barns, Henry Gilbert, Lieut. Philip Goss, Ens. Thomas Gilbert, Joseph Banister, Edward Walker, Joseph Jennings, John Woolcott, Wm Old. Then ordered that a rate of 150 pounds be made towards building the meeting-house."

The work proceeded slowly; the house was raised and covered in during the next year; so that at a meeting Jan. 4, 1717, the Committee ordered a rate of 30 pounds to be made to pay for "Glass and Nails for their Meeting-house, and 8 pounds for window cases." It appears to have been so far completed that the ordination services were held in it Oct. 16; but the following vote indicates that the seating arrangements were imperfect: "At a meeting of the inhabitants of Brookfield Dec.

23, 1717, being legally warned, by order of the Committee, then voted, that all round upon the Bastings ? of the Meeting-house shall be built up with pews."

Horse-sheds. Our fathers did not consider a meeting-house as finished, till a shelter for their horses had been provided. "Oct. 12, 1716, voted, that from the Ayres land to the Meeting-house the highway be laid out ten rods in breadth; and one acre & half of land be laid out round about the Meeting-house to make shelters for to sett horses under, horse-block, and other necessary uses."

A SETTLED MINISTER. — Nov. 22, 1715. "The inhabitants of Brookfield agreed with Mr. Thomas Cheney to carry on the work of the Ministry in said place for 26 pounds for half a year, and to have the use of the Ministry house and lot, and land belonging or appropriated for the Ministry in said place; and so in proportion for a longer time; and in case he stay, and continue in the work of the ministry, to pay him at the end of every half year."

"Also voted, to clear, fence and break up two acres for an orchard for the Minister, and likewise to finish clearing and fencing a pasture which is already begun for the Minister."

Mar. 28, 1716. "The Committee for Brookfield did this day grant to Mr. Thomas Cheney, now Minister in said place, the land lying between Mr. Wilson's and Mr. Younglove's land, and the 20 acres of meadow belonging to said lot; and also 8 or 10 acres on the plain; and also 100 acres, to be taken up free from former grants where he shall chuse — always provided Mr. Cheney become a settled Minister in said place."

April 5, 1716. "At a meeting of the inhabitants of Brookfield, voted, that Edward Walker, Sen., Joseph Banister and Elisha Rice do further discourse Mr. Cheney as to his proposal in order to a settlement in said place to carry on the work of the Ministry. Having considered Mr. Cheney's proposals, the inhabitants voted, 1. to give Mr. Cheney for his Salary 52 pounds yearly for three years, and to rise 40 shillings a year untill it comes to 70 pounds, and there to stay. 2. Voted, that Mr. Cheney have all the land that the Committee proposed to give him. 3. Voted, to build him a house and barn, according to the dementions that he has given, Mr. Cheney providing glass, nails and iron. 4. Voted, to break up and fence and fitt to sow 8 acres of land, 4 acres upon the Hill; two acres to be planted out with orcharding this year; and 4 acres to be broken up on the plain this year; the other two acres to be done within four years. 5. Voted, to get Mr. Cheney 25 cords of wood yearly his lifetime. 6. Voted, to give Mr. Cheney each man one day's work yearly, for six years. His house and barn to be built in four years — always provided Mr. Cheney be our ordained Minister." "Approved by the Committee, May 16, 1716 — Provided Mr. Cheney be their settled minister three years."

Mr. Cheney's Proposals. "Gentlemen: as to the Dementions of the House and Barn you propose to build for me, In case I should settle amongst you, it is my mind and desire with respect to my House, that the length may be 42 foott, the width 20 foott; as to the stud, 14 foott stud. And as to the Barn, that it may be 30 foott long, and 20 foott wide with a lentow on one side. As to the glass, nails and iron, I will provide and procure myself so far as is necessary to said House and Barn. This from your Servant, Thomas Cheney."

Oct. 12, 1716. "Sold to Mr. Thomas Cheney our present Minister, the Town's house, and about six acres of land it stands on, for which he is to set off and allow unto the inhabitants 30 pounds of the first Rates that are due to him or will be due."

As definite arrangements appeared to them to be unreasonably delayed, the Committee prepared a warrant and sent an order June 28, 1717, to Brookfield, for a meeting of the inhabitants. The meeting was held July 16, Thomas Gilbert moderator. "Voted, that said meeting is legal to prosecute the ends of said warrant received from said Committee for said Town.

Voted, that the Reverend Mr. Thomas Cheney shall be ordained minister for the Town.

Voted, The third Wednesday in October next is appointed and set apart for Mr. Cheney's ordination.

Voted, that Mr. Tilly Mirick and Joseph Banister acquaint Mr. Cheney with the Town's mind, and as to the day agreed upon for his ordination.

[The committee promptly reported that Mr. Cheney consents thereto.]

Voted, that Tilly Mirick, Joseph Banister, Thomas Barns, Thomas Parsons, do take care that suitable provision be made for such Elders and Messengers as may be called to assist in our ordination.

Voted, that the Town celebrate and set apart a day of Fasting and Prayer to implore God's presence with us in this solemn and weighty matter — which day is left to Mr. Cheney to appoint. Full and Clear votes.

Test, THOMAS GILBERT, moderator.

July 28, 1717. We the subscribers, having given order for said meeting, do well approve of the votes aforesaid, And rejoyce in their unanimity in so good a work, and hope to have further ocation to rejoyce in their good settlement.

Oct. 16, 1717, a Church was organized, and Mr. Cheney was constituted its pastor. The Sermon preached on the occasion was printed, and is entitled, "The duty of GOSPEL MINISTERS to preserve a PEOPLE from CORRUPTION, set forth in a sermon, preached at Brookfield, October 16, 1717, being the day wherein the Church was gathered, and Mr. THOMAS CHENEY was ordained Pastor. By SOLOMON STODDARD, A.M. and Pastor of Northampton."

CHURCH COVENANT. — "You do now in the presence of the great and holy GOD, the elect Angels, and this assembly of witnesses, enter into a solemn and perpetual covenant, never to be forgotten, never to be broken.

You sincerely and cordially give up yourself to that GOD whose name alone is JEHOVAH; taking GOD the Father to be your GOD and Father, GOD the Son to be your only Saviour and Redeemer, GOD the Holy Ghost to be your Sanctifier and Comforter.

You submit yourself to Christ, and accept him as the Prophet, Priest, and King of your soul, the Great Head of the Church, and the only Mediator of the covenant of grace: promising that by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, you will keep the covenant of the Lord inviolably; that you will cleave to the Lord Jesus Christ by faith and Gospel obedience; and will endeavor to reform your life as to all known sin, whether open or secret — will live in the conscientious discharge of all duty towards GOD and man — walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly; that you will endeavor that the inward temper of your mind be conformed to GOD's will and word; and that you will follow the excellent example which Christ has set you for the rule of your life.

You also give up yourself to this Church in the Lord; and freely covenant and bind yourself to walk as a regular member of Christ's Church; to obey them that have rule over you in the Lord; to read GOD's word, and to live in the practice of social and secret prayer, and in diligent attendance on the word preached, and ordinances administered: — relying on the grace and all-sufficiency of Christ, which are sufficient for you — you promise to walk according to what you now know, or shall know to be your duty.

Do you sincerely and cordially consent to the covenant now proposed?

We then receive you as a sincere disciple of Christ, and a member of the same church with ourselves, — promising, so long as GOD shall continue you among us, to watch over you with meekness and brotherly love: — and may the Lord add to the numbers and graces of his church, and finally bring us all to join the general Assembly and Church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven. Amen."

MINISTRY LANDS. — March 8, 1716-17, "The Committee taking into consideration a former grant in the ancient Manuscripts of Brookfield, of some land sequestered for the Ministry — now find that there is about thirty acres of land between the land formerly Younglove's and Millett's ; which land we the Committee do now sequester for the Ministry in said place, with the meadow adjacent lying at the end of said thirty acres.

“At the same time, sequestered 80 acres of land upon the north side of the River, and as many on the south side the said River, for the Ministry.” The 80 acres, north of the River, was laid out, and bounded “South on Joseph Banister, King's, Hovey's and Joseph Brabrook's, East on John White, dec^{d.}, and Sam^l Owen, Jr., North on Capt. Thomas Baker, West on the great Rocky hill to the foot of the hill.”

1716. — The new comers this year, were David Wedge, perhaps from Sudbury ; Benjamin Knowlton, from Springfield, who had a grant of 60 acres ; Joseph Knowlton, from Springfield, who bought out Joseph Rice ; William Biggerton, who had a grant of a 30 acre home-lot, and later of 210 acres ; John Morse ; Thomas Bartlett, who had a grant of 60 acres.

1717. — The new comers this year were : Arthur Tucker, (Tooker) a turner, who was of Lancaster 1690, received a grant of 60 acres, and later in all of 245 acres ; Tilly Mirick, from Springfield, tanner, bought the Prichard place of Jos. Jennings ; James Aiken had a grant of 80 acres north of the Jabez Olmstead place ; John Hitchcock of Springfield had a grant of 30 acres, but did not come to reside till later ; Jonathan Davis, shoemaker, had a grant of 60 acres on condition that he set up his trade ; Josiah, Jr., John and Simon Beamin had grants, and settled.

Wood Feeding. “The Committee, taking into consideration the necessity of sequestering some land in Brookfield for Wood Feeding, &c., Therefore have sequestered a piece for the use aforesaid, which land is bounded as followeth, viz. : Westerly upon the old Country Road, southerly upon Joseph Brabrook's land, easterly upon the Ministry and School land, northerly upon Benjamin Knowlton, Joseph Knowlton and Arthur Tucker's land ; being a Rocky Piece of land — the aforesaid is to be a perpetual Common for the use aforesaid, forever.”

CHAPTER V.

BROOKFIELD RECORDS, 1718-1786.

SECOND INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN. — MEETING-HOUSE. — MINISTER. — SCHOOL. — BURVING GROUNDS. — FATHER RALLE'S WAR. — OLD FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR. — LAST FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR. — THE REVOLUTION — SHAY'S REBELLION. — THE SPOONER MURDER. — FIRST CELEBRATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

THE last chapter brought our narrative down to the date when Brookfield had built a meeting-house and settled a minister — a preparation then regarded as essential to the prosperity and permanence of a town. The present chapter opens with the commencement of the formal steps needful to a legal organization which should give the inhabitants all township rights and privileges.

“To his Excellency, Samuel Shute, Esq., and the Hon^{bl} Council and House of Representatives, convened in General Court the 28th of May, 1718 —

We undersigned, the Committee for Brookfield, after many Disappointments by warr and otherwise which for a long time the people have laboured under, by the good providence of God are now so increased that they are now near fifty families on the place, have near finished a very convenient meeting-house, have settled a church and ordained an orthodox & learned Minister — We humbly propose that they be made a Township, to order all the affairs of a Township, according to the directions of the Law by themselves, & said Committee released, — which we submit to the Court's determination. And for your Excellency and Honors shall ever pray.

SAM^L PARTRIDGE { Committee
LUKE HITCHCOCK { Brookfield.

“In the House of Representatives, Nov. 12, 1718, Read, and Ordered, That the prayers of this Petition be granted: and that the Inhabitants of the Town of Brookfield be invested with all the powers, privileges and authorities to direct, order and manage all the affairs of the said Township that other Towns are or ought to be invested with; And that the Committee be dismissed from their care of them, with the thanks of this Court for their good & faithful service. The said Town to lye to the County of Hampshire.

In Council, Read and Concurred.

Consented to

First Town Meeting. "A meeting duly warned," was convened Dec. 15, 1718, and Left. Philip Goss was chosen moderator for said day, and Thomas Gilbert town clerk and Treasurer. The work of the day not being finished, the meeting was adjourned to the next Monday, when Capt. Thomas Baker was chosen moderator; Thomas Barns, Left. Philip Goss, Elisha Rice, Samuel Barns and Thomas Gilbert, assessors; Tilly Mirick, Joseph Brabrook, Thomas Parsons, committee to examine town debts; Ens. Joseph Jennings and Joseph Banister, measurers, they to have 3s. 6d. per day for their service; Elisha Rice, Thomas Gibbs, and Jonathan Jennings, committee to take care & see that the Grants made by the former Committee do pay equal proportion to the Rate committed to constable Walker to collect for the meeting-house, &c. Voted, that Thomas Gilbert now chosen town clerk, do receive of the former clerk the Town Book and all other writings belonging to the Town of Brookfield. Voted, that Samuel Owen, John Perry and Daniel Price be freed from paying rates for their heads. Voted, that Tilly Mirick, Henry Gilbert, Edward Walker, and Ens. Joseph Jennings, do take care about the grist-mill that the Town may be supplied with meal according to the bargain made with John Hayward."

LANDS GRANTED. — Among the earliest acts of the new town, [and the haste of the action clearly evinced the wisdom of the General Court in keeping the people so long under the restraint of a cool-headed Committee] was the confirmation of previous grants, and the apportionment among the then inhabitants of the valuable lands not already taken up.

"At a legal town meeting of the inhabitants of Brookfield on January ye 5th 1719-20, Voted, that the Town are of the opinion that the power is wholly in the Town to make Grants of Land."

"At a legal town meeting May 31, 1720, Then voted, that the land be laid out by a committee, which committee is to lay out said lands to sute every man's interest as near as may be; and in case said committee cant sute every man in quality, may and are hereby impowered to make it up in quantity. The committee are, Left. Philip Goss, Dea. Joseph Jennings, Samuel Barns, Thomas Gibbs and Left. Thomas Gilbert." Subsequently there were added to the committee, John Woolcott, Robert Emmons and Hopestill Hinds, for the east part of the town, and Thomas Parsons, for the west part, and William Old, Elisha Rice, Jona. Jennings and Amos Rice, for the south side of the river.

This committee acted promptly and efficiently; and between the date of its appointment and the next March, had made and recorded grants amounting in all to 12,883 acres. This included grants to the old Committee: To Col. Sam^l Partridge, Sam^l Porter, Esq., Capt. John Pynchon, Luke Hitchcock, Esq., Henry Dwight, Esq., each 60 acres, and to Maj. John Stoddard, 40 acres. The Committee had previously, with the consent of the inhabitants, granted to themselves as follows: Col. Partridge, 100 acres, Esq. Porter, 60 acres, Capt. Pynchon, 80 acres, Esq. Hitchcock, 140 acres, Esq. Dwight, 40 acres, Maj. Stoddard, 100 acres.

Some of the larger grants were: Joseph Ayres, 250 acres, Joseph Banister, 140 a., Capt. Tho. Baker, 350 a., Tho. Barns, 380 a., Jos. Bra-brook, 170 a., Rev. Tho. Cheney, 172 a., Dea. Henry Gilbert, 259 a., Tho. Gilbert, 346 a., Left. Philip Goss, 246 a., John Hamilton, 340 a., George Hayward, 167 a., Eben^r How, 164 a., Dea. Jos. Jennings, 343 a., Tho. La Rich, 210 a., Tilly Mirick, 390 a., Elisha Rice, 161 a., Edw. Walker, Sen., 202 a., John Woolcott, 187 a., Josiah Wood, 165 a.

MINISTER and MEETING-HOUSE.—In addition to Ministry Lands, 160 acres, and the 172 acres to Mr. Cheney as an inhabitant, the town voted £146, to build a house for Mr. C.; and when he decided to remain in the Town's house, opposite the Ayres tavern stand, voted to dig and stone a well for him there, and give him the improvement of the Ministry home-lot.

At a town meeting, legally warned, and held Jan. 5th 1718-9, Voted, Tilly Mirick moderator. Voted, to make a Rate of 250 pounds for paying the Minister, and other town charges, & the overplus to be laid out in finishing the meeting-house.

The meeting-house was not finished for several years; but prompt action was taken to assign the pew ground to men whose taxable estates entitled them to such distinction.

At a town meeting Jan. 5, 1719, Voted, that Capt. Thomas Baker have a pew in the meeting-house, on right hand of the South door, he paying 3 pounds; he has already paid 3 pounds in money. Voted, that Thomas Gilbert have a pew at the right of the East door, he paying 2 pounds; each pew to be eight feet square. At subsequent meetings, pew room was granted to Left. Philip Goss, John Woolcott, Joseph Banister, John Hamilton, Joseph Ayres, Dea. Henry Gilbert, Edw. Walker, Sen., Tilly Mirick, Dea. Joseph Jennings, Thomas Barns, Samuel Barns, Hopedill Hinds. Voted, to build a Ministry pew on the right hand of the pulpit. Voted, to build a pew on the left hand of the pulpit, to be for the Deacons' wives, and said wives to sit in the pew during their natural lives. Voted, that he that hath a pew granted in the meeting-house, do pay in to the town treasurer 40s., or else forfeit their pews. Voted, to build up the seats in the body of the meetinghouse with strong plain seats. Voted, Joseph Jennings, Jr., Daniel Bowker, Comfort Barns and Daniel Walker, liberty to build a pew upon the back-side of the front gallery, provided they build the same upon their own cost, and move the windows against their seats to the plate; and when any one or all of them shall be brought forward, or seated elsewhere, then to sell their right in the aforesaid pew to those that appear to buy it.

Seating the Meeting-house. The committee, viz. Elisha Rice, Samuel Barns, Jos. Brabrook, Thomas Gilbert and Samuel Wheeler, were instructed "to have regard to age, where it is honorable, and to estate; taking the list that Mr. Cheney's Rate was made by as a rule; having also regard to men's servicefulness in the town. Voted, To seat seven or eight in a seat in the body of the house below, and in the front gallery; and fourteen in a seat in the side gallery. Voted, that the fore seat in the front gallery shall be equal in dignity with the third seat in the body; and the fore seat in the side gallery shall be equal with the fourth seat in the body of the house."

"Voted, that the selectmen do take care and get a man to sweep the meeting-house, as cheap as they can." In 1733, the town voted, "that the women that set in the front gallery in the meeting-house, be seated in some other convenient place in said house, the pews only excepted."

SCHOOL.—The new town made early provision for the education of the children. "At a legal meeting held Jan. 5, 1719–20, then granted for a School, 40 acres, on the north side of the river." The town had in 1717 sequestered two other "School Lots" of 80 acres each, making 200 acres in all. These school lands were leased by the selectmen to such inhabitants as would pay the highest rent for their use, and this income was applied by the selectmen (without an express vote of the town) to the payment of teachers' wages.

In most of our towns, at their beginning, and till the meeting-house was finished, and the minister ordained, and the leading highways laid out, no public school was established and supported by a tax. There were usually some men and some women, with sufficient education to teach the rudiments of reading, spelling and arithmetic, who would receive scholars at their homes, and charge 2d. to 6d. per week for instruction. The unfinished room was used by the Dames in summer, and the capacious kitchen, well warmed, was used by the Masters in winter.

Sometimes the town would agree to pay a fixed sum to the teacher, in part for his services, and he would charge a part to the scholars; and in such case the records make mention of a school. But when teachers' wages came wholly from the rent of school lands and private tuition, no such record is found. The first mention of a school in the Brookfield records is under date, Dec. 12, 1726, when "the town voted to give Left. Eleazar Warner the sum of money that the selectmen agreed with him for keeping the school." The wording of this vote implies that a public school had already been established, by authority of the selectmen, and the town now assumed the responsibility for the teacher's wages.

The following votes give an outline of the town's action respecting schools. "Jan. 23, 1728, voted, that a school shall be kept at four several places in town, the town to be divided into four parts by a committee consisting of Wm Old, Eph^m Hayward, Wm Ayres, Sam^l Barns and John Hinds. Voted to agree with a school master for but half a year at first, and to be left with the selectmen to agree with a man as cheap as they can; and to appoint a place where the children shall meet in order to be schooled. Voted to raise £20, to pay said schoolmaster, or some of it, as the selectmen agree with him."

Dec. 1728, the town "voted to build one school house in the most convenient place to suite the most inhabitants. Voted, to set it in the most convenient place between Tucker's old place and the new country road where it comes across Coy's brook. The following persons entered dissent against the site of the school house: Eph^m Hayward, Philip Goss, Jr., Jonathan Jennings, Timothy Brown, Jos. Davis, Peter Rice, Tho. Rich, Cyprian Rice, Edw. Ayres, Jos. Walker." The vote was afterwards reconsidered; and the school house was not built till 1733. It stood close by the line between W. and N. Brookfield, near Coy's brook, a short distance west of where the road from Foster's hill joins the new country road. This was the geographical centre of the town.

The usual annual grant for the school was £20.

May 15, 1732. Voted, that the selectmen be desired and directed and impowered to hier and Improve fouer wimen to keep scholl: in the most convenient places to accomodate the most Children for fower months from the time they begin to keep sd scholl. Granted for the support of the school for the future £50.

1733. Voted, that any number of men that are minded to build a school house may set it up in the highway or common land near the middle of the town. Voted, that any number of men have the same privilege in any other part, of the town.

Moving school. Nov. 23, 1739, voted to have two school masters for four months in the winter season: To be moved into the several parts of the town. Voted £100 for the support of the school.

1741. Granted Jacob Wood's wife 3 pounds for her keeping school in the year 1740.

1744. Granted for support of the school 150 pounds old tenor.

Grammar School. 1746. The town granted 150 pounds, old tenor, for the support of the grammar school, and instructed the selectmen to see that a place was stated for keeping said school; and voted that School Dames be employed in the summer season.

1748. "Voted, that where there is 15 or 20 children can conveniently come to one school in any part of the town, they shall be allowed a School Dame, at the charge of the town, they procuring sd Dame."

1749. Granted for the support of schools 300 pounds, old tenor.

1750. Granted £40 lawful money for support of schools.

1754. A reading and writing school was kept at Abraham Adams' house for a short time, by Alex^r Stuart.

1756. "Voted, that the school be kept in the several Precincts in this town, each Precinct to have its equal proportion, and to be stated by the inhabitants of each Precinct in their own respective Precinct."

1760. "Voted, that the interest of the money due the town for the sale of Common Land called "The Rocks," and other lands sold last year, be appropriated for the support of a Free School, for the benefit of the Inhabitants of said town, as the selectmen shall order, for this year, and until the town shall further direct in the affair."

ITEMS OF INTEREST. — 1719. Capt. Thomas Baker was sent representative to the General Court; and in 1723 the town raised money to pay him for his services.

Philip Robitail, a half brother of Capt. Baker's wife, appears to have been in Brookfield this year, and worked on the Captain's farm. Other new comers were, Ebenezer How, blacksmith, from Marlborough; Alexander Stewart, tailor, from M.; Obadiah Rice, also from M., bought the Bettis' place; Samuel King, alias Rice, from Sudbury; Jonas Houghton, and Thomas Tucker, from Lancaster, bought the Arthur Tucker place; Capt. Thomas Perley and Stephen Peabody from Boxford bought a large tract of land near the Brimfield line, of Tilly Mirick.

1720. Voted, not to send a representative this year.

A wolf's head was brought to the constable by Benj. Walker, and another by Hopestill Hinds.

The settlers this year were, Jacob Abbott, carpenter, from Andover; Richard Burk, Sen., and his sons Richard and Jonathan, carpenters, from Stow, perhaps later from Northampton; John Patterson; Wm Hair; Josiah Wood; Obadiah Wright; Jacob Wood.

1721. Capt. Thomas Baker, Tilly Mirick and Left. Thomas Gilbert were appointed Trustees, to take up the £50. province bills granted to our town by the Great and General Court. Voted, to let out the £50, upon interest, no man to have over £10.

1722. Voted, that all hogs may go at large, being yoked and ringed as the law directs.

1726. Voted, that all persons that are freeholders, and are of age to act for themselves, shall or may be voters in the town meeting.

FATHER RALLE'S WAR. — This sanguinary conflict with the Indians, was instigated by the French authorities in Canada, Father Ralle, a Jesuit living at Norridgewock, Me., being the chief instrument, and hence the name. It was opened in 1722, and continued four years. The principal field of operations was in the Province of Maine and New Hampshire; but our Massachusetts frontiers became directly involved, and several of our Hampshire towns suffered greatly. Brookfield suffered most from alarms, and interruption of farming pursuits, and expenses of maintaining a garrison, and watching, warding and scouting. The town records are silent on all matters relating to this, and the succeeding French and Indian wars; and our only means of information are the State Archives.

The lists of field and garrison soldiers, soon to be given, comprise men who then were, or afterwards became citizens of Brookfield.

1722. The Council Records, under date July 9, 1722, note: Advised, that his Excellency give orders for 50 men to be raised to be employed as scouts on the Western Frontiers, viz. 20 men to be drawn out of Col. Partridge's regiment, their scout to be between Brookfield and Northfield; 15 men out of Col. Buckminster's regiment, their scout to be from Lancaster to Brookfield via Rutland.

In Col. Samuel Partridge's Co., in service Aug. 18 to Nov. 26, were Thomas Baker, acting as sergt., Eleazar Warner, corporal, Paul De Land, private. In Maj. John Chandler's Co., same date, were Jona. Burk, John Hamilton, Experience Rich, John Rich, Benj. Walker, Daniel Walker, Joseph Walker, Jacob Wood. In Capt. Samuel Barnard's Co., same date, were Benj., John and Joseph Wait, then of Northampton.

1723. May 14. Col. Partridge writes to Gov. Dummer: "The River is pretty well secured by the forts and men at Northfield and Deerfield; yet Sunderland, Hatfield, Hadley, Northampton, Westfield and Brookfield and Rutland are too much exposed to invasion from the east and west. . . . These towns can't stand the strain upon them to watch and ward, scout and fort, without pay, while their spring work is pressing to be done. They can't get a living." . . . [There was a quarrel of long standing between the Governor and the House of Representatives, which checkmated all legislation necessary for making appropriations and raising money to garrison these exposed towns.]

Aug. 14. The Indians made a descent on Rutland, killed the minister, Rev. Jos. Willard, and two lads, Joseph and Samuel Stevens, and carried away two other Stevens boys. Nathaniel Gilbert and a party of men from Brookfield went to the relief of Rutland; and Col. Partridge was ordered to engage men to scout in the exposed towns, viz. 5 men from Brookfield, and 4 from each of the other frontier towns, to be kept in regular and constant duty. These men were placed in command of Lieut. Samuel Wright of Rutland, with Eleazar Warner of Brookfield as sergeant. Of the men in service Jan. 8, 1724, there were Ammiel Weeks and Wm. Thompson of Sudbury, Nathaniel Harwood of Concord, Benj. Bartlet, Jona. Burk, John Hamilton, Jos. Walker, and John Woolcott, Jr., of Brookfield. In the spring, Sergt. Warner with 9 men were stationed in garrison at Brookfield, and remained from Apr. 13 to Nov. 20. A Daily Journal of duty done at Brookfield was kept by Sergt. Warner, and is preserved in the State Archives. A few extracts will be given, which will furnish a picture of the times. The 9 men were, Corp. John Hamilton, Benj. Bartlett, Jona. Burk, Daniel Colton (of Spg.) Eph^m Hayward, Ebenezer Metcalf (of Wrentham), Wm Virgin (of Concord, later of Brookfield), Joseph Walker, Josiah Wood.

Mar. 4. went to Brookfield to fetch provisions. Mar. 18-19. guarded the people fencing their meadows. Apr. 1. guarded the people at the corn mill. Apr. 26. guarded the people to plow. May 4-13. guarded the people to plant. 10. scouted, discovered Indian tracks by Ware River. 28. Indians came about the garrisons; 29. scouted the swamps in pursuit of the Indians; 31. watched without the garrisons, and ranged the swamps with dogs. July 10. guarded 23 men at work in the meadows making hay.

Rev. Mr. Cheney's Letter. Brookfield May 25, 1725.

May it please yr Honour: I would by these humbly entreat yr Honour would think of our Poor afflicted Town, and that you would please to grant our Town some garrison soldiers. I would beg yr Honour not to be Troubled that I take upon me to request this favour of you to my people, for their interest and welfare in a great measure is mine; and if they can't have some help, by reason of the danger of the enemy they will not be able to improve their lands, and so not be able to live themselves nor to pay me my sallary; and several of my people desired that I would write a line to your Honour in their behalf. This Sir with hearty thanks for the care your Honour hath taken of us, and with hearty wishes of all prosperity upon yr person, Family and Government — is from yr dutiful and ob d t Servant

THOMAS CHENEY.

In response, ten men were ordered to Brookfield, from the upper County. They had been with Capt. Samuel Willard from June 10; were given in charge of Lieut. Eleazar Warner, and remained in Brookfield till Nov. 28. Their names are as follows: Corp. Wm. Old, Eben^r Ayres, Daniel Bowker, Daniel Colton, Joseph Davis, Thomas Gibbs, Samuel Gilbert, Nathaniel Gilbert, Josiah Wood. Other Brookfield men, in service July 26, to Nov. 18, were, Hopestill Hinds, Tilly Mirick, Joseph Ayres, Joseph Jennings, Jr., Samuel Davis, Joseph Marks, Edw. Walker, William Virgin, Richard Burk, Jona. Burk, Samuel Walker, John Davis. Joseph Perry was in Capt. Jos. Kellogg's Co. May 19, to July 5. John Woolcott, Jr., was in Capt. Timothy Dwight's Co. June 1, to Nov. 30. [He was the boy taken by the Indians Oct. 13, 1708; and was killed by the Indians, on the Connecticut river, Apr. 17, 1728.]

Capt. Samuel Wight in a letter of Oct. 16, 1725, says: "Our scout of 7 men is too little to range from Watchusett hills, on the back side of Ware River, and so to the back side of Brookfield. . . . The Indians lye on the back side and hunt about 12 miles from the towns; we hear their guns, but are not strong enough to track and follow them."

A treaty of peace was signed at Boston, Dec. 15, 1725, and ratified at Falmouth, Aug. 5, 1726.

Maj. Chandler's Letter. Woodstock, Mar. 8, 1727-8.

Sir: On Tuesday last, at 3 P. M., Moh-gun-neat a Norwich Indian, with Mo-as-quin-ne and Chausham, two Pequods, came to my house and gave me the following Relation, viz: 'That two Maqua men and a squaw with an infant of about 6 months old, came into a house somewhere on the road between Springfield and Brookfield [not far from the house of Robert Old] the beginning of last week, who having affronted the woman of the house (the only person then at home) by hanging their kettle over her fire and turning away her kettle. Either the men of the house or some other men coming in, fell foul upon one of the Maqua men, and with a great stick has very much wounded his shoulder and back: And the child very narrowly escaped with its life, having been grazed on the belly with a stick of wood, thrown at the squaw, the sharp end whereof carried away part of the child's clothing. He also destroyed and ruined the Maqua's kettle. That the Maqua is full of resentment and has vowed revenge on the man with his hatchet in May next (unless satisfaction be made him), at which time he proposes to return with 30 of his countrymen, who will, if he shall be seized, fall upon the English. The Indians, my informers, (who have been with the Maquas since the violence done them) were sober, and seemed very much concerned lest a war should ensue with the Maquas. They also say, the Maquas were urgent with them to go with them at their drawing off. But altho' they declined it, yet they expressed great dissatisfaction at the treatment the Maquas met with. I thought it my duty to transmit this account to y^r Honor, who best know what method will be proper to take.

Capt. Joseph Kellogg was in command of Fort Dummer, above Northfield, from 1726 to 1740. Jos. Perry and Eph^m Kellogg of Brookfield, enlisted in Capt. Kellogg's Co., May 12, 1735, and continued in the service till May 1740.

THE OLD FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR, 1744-1749. — War was declared by France against England, Mar. 15, 1744; and on the 29th, England declared war against France in return. This contest between the powers over the water, meant for New England a war with the Indians, with a repetition of all the atrocities and distress of former struggles with the savages.

Brookfield was no longer a frontier town. Leicester, Sturbridge, Brimfield, Western and Hardwick had been planted on her borders, and served as sentinels and guards. And settlements had been pushed up the Connecticut valley towards Canada, as far as Walpole and Charlestown, where the brunt of first assaults must be borne. The part which our people took in this war was chiefly to furnish officers for field expeditions, and soldiers to defend the distant frontier forts.

The declaration of war took the Provinces by surprise, and in a measure unprepared. Defensive forts were hastily constructed in most of the towns; and a continuous line of fortifications was built from Groton as far west as Adams. Fire-arms were put in repair; and the old men "fought their battles o'er again", to arouse the spirit and courage of the young.

At the March meeting, 1745, Brookfield voted, "To choose a committee to require and receive the former Town Stock of Ammunition; and to make a tax on polls and estates of 110 pounds, old tenor, to provide a new Stock of Ammunition."

Some of the old garrisons, particularly Gilbert's fort, must have been still in serviceable condition. And at least one new fort was built within our limits. This was "The old French Fort," which stood on the top of Coy's hill. Mrs. Eunice P. Cutter of Warren, who was born near by, has often heard her father and the old people describe the fort, the foundations of which had not wholly disappeared in her childhood. It was located on what is still known as "Rich land," north of the Powers' place. Probably it was what was termed a mount, i.e. a heavily timbered building, 18 or 20 feet square, and two stories high, with a look-out at the top surrounded by a balustrade and covered with a roof. These structures sometimes formed one corner of a stockade. The one in question appears to have been a part of, or adjacent to Rich's tavern, a noted hostelry on this height of land on the old Hadley road.

Col. Joseph Dwight of Brookfield took an important and honorable part in this war. He was commander of the Ninth Mass. regiment, in the memorable expedition against Louisburg in 1745, the success of which was the distinguishing feature of this war. He was commissioned Brigadier General by Gov. Shirley, Feb. 10, 1745; and in the active operations of the siege had command of the artillery, who, in order to bring their fire upon an undefended part of the town, were forced to draw their cannon by hand across a morass, where oxen and horses could not be used. The siege lasted 49 days; and the fort capitulated June 17. Gen. Dwight received special commendation from Sir Wm Pepperell; and June 20, was appointed judge of a Court of Admiralty.

Capt. Jabez Olmstead took part in this expedition. He commanded the 10th Co. in Col. Samuel Willard's 4th Mass. regiment. James Fry was 1st Lieut.; and John Bell 2d Lieut. Edmund Bemis of Spencer was also a Lieut. in this Expedition. Bell and Bemis were armorers, and were allowed wages as such from Apr. 17, to June 17. Bell was allowed 7 pounds 6 shillings and 6 pence, old tenor, "on account of his sickness after his first return from Louisbourg." The French had spiked their guns before surrendering, thus making them unserviceable; but Bemis built a wood fire around the breech, which so dilated the metal, that the spike was readily driven in, without injury. His ingenuity was rewarded by a handsome premium.

Jonathan Clary of Brookfield enlisted in Capt. Olmstead's Co. as drummer. Feb. 15, and died at Cape Breton June 7.

Benj. Gilbert was commissioned Feb. 7, 1744, ensign in Capt. John Dodge's Co., Exp. against Cape Breton.

Eleazar Heywood of B. went in the same expedition, and died at Cape Breton early in 1746. [Mass. Archives, XVIII. 301.]

Edward Smith of B. enlisted for this expedition. "Capt. Wm Old impressed Seth Banister's gun, worth 7 pounds, for the use of the above named E. S., who never returned — and the Commissary is ordered to deliver s^d Banister a gun out of the Province store."

The following spirited letter explains itself, and throws important light on the general situation.

"BROOKFIELD, July 16, 1748.

Sir: We have constant accounts of the enemy their lying upon our borders in great numbers, killing and captivating our people; and we suffer ourselves to be a prey to them, and through cowardice or covetousness, or I know not what bad spirit in officers and men, we can't so much as bury the slain. It appears to me high time for the Government to exert its Power and give more effectual directions to officers posted on our frontiers; and if need be to raise half the militia of the Province: But I beg we may have 1000 men to drive the woods, and pursue the enemy even to Crown Point — If it be worth while, to send parties into the enemy's country, and give at the rate of £1000 per scalp — Why when they are so numerous on our borders, should we lie intirely still and do nothing — Can't some troops of horse be sent, and may not commissions be given to such as will enlist a number of Volunteers, and by one way or other so many men raised as will a little discourage our enemy — I doubt not I can find many who would undertake (even without pay) for the Honour of the Country, and do good service

I wish to hear that something may be done Excuse my hasty letter Yr Honour's most obt and humble Serv^t

JOSEPH DWIGHT."

The time was very dark. Col. Stoddard, the efficient commander of the Hampshire county forces, had died June 19. The soldiers from Connecticut refused to obey the orders of Maj. Williams. Sergt. Taylor was waylaid above Northfield, July 14, by 106 French and Indians, and two of his party killed, and eleven made prisoners. The garrisons and people at Northfield and Fort Dummer were weakened by sickness.

Gen. Dwight's letter had some result. Orders were issued July 18, to raise a strong and sufficient guard out of the militia for the succor of the exposed garrisons. Dwight himself raised 100 men, and was out from Aug. 11, to Aug. 22. Capt. Thomas Buckminster, with 48 Brookfield men went up to Fort Dummer, and staid from Aug. 6 till Aug. 20. The Roll is as follows: Capt. T. B., Lt. Joseph Allen, Ens. Noah Ashley, Sergt^s Benj. Ruggles, Eph^m Hayward, clerk Gershom Makepeace, Corp^s. Edw. Walker, Simeon Dwight, John Wait, centinels, Jesse Converse, Andrew Cowee, Obadiah Cooley, John Bell, Joseph Banister, Uriah Bush, John Blair, Thomas Banister, Peter Blackmar, Samuel Bascom, Elijah Bartlett, Jude Converse, Gideon Cooley, Thomas Gilbert, William Dady, Samuel Hinckley, John Hamilton, Moses Hascall, Hopedill Hinds, Nehemiah Hinds, Jacob Hinds, Samuel Galloon, Dudley Jordan, Solomon Keyes, Jr., Richard Marks, Silas Newton, Phinehas Powers, Thomas Rich, Solomon Rich, Nathan Smith, Wm Shepherd, John Steward, Simeon Wright, Phinehas Warner, Henry White, Isaac White, Joseph Warner, James Patterson.

The treaty of peace was signed at Aix la Chapelle, Oct. 7, 1748, but was not proclaimed in Boston till May 10th of the next year.

THE LAST FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR, 1754-1763. — The treaty of Aix la Chapelle proved to be little more than a truce. The Indians continued their depredations till June, 1749, and re-commenced hostilities in May, 1754. Assured that there could be no permanent peace to her American colonies so long as the French power was dominant on the northern frontiers, Great Britain determined to effect the conquest of Canada.

The gates to the French possessions on the St. Lawrence, were, first, by way of the River St. Lawrence; second, by way of Crown Point and Lake Champlain; third, by way of Lake Ontario. The reduction of Canada then involved the taking of Louisbourg, which was restored to France by the late treaty; the capture of Crown Point, and the capture of Fort Niagara and its outpost, Fort Du Quesne.

The English government called on the Provinces to furnish their full quotas of men to these great expeditions, which were placed under command of British officers; and the intermediate frontiers were left in the main to look out for themselves. The earlier disasters of this war were largely due to the incompetence and arrogance of these British commanders.

This general statement seems necessary in order to explain the different and widely-scattered expeditions in which our militia were called upon to take part.

1754, June 21. Gov. Shirley issued orders to the commanders of regiments, to make a thorough inspection of the state of the militia and report to head-quarters. The several towns were also required to supply themselves with the full stock of ammunition required by law.

Martin How and Arthur Tucker of Brookfield enlisted June 26, and Levi Hamilton, Nov. 9, in Capt. John Wright's Co., expedition to the Eastern Frontiers. In the same expedition, in Capt. Jos. Wilson's Co., Apr. to Nov., were John Tute and Wm Hair of B. In the same expedition, in Capt. Eleazar Melvin's Concord Co., were Rich. Burk (then of Ware River), Wm Brabrook, Caleb Dodge, Ephraim Hayward, Levi and Seth Hamilton, Joseph and Thomas Waite and Corp. Nathaniel Woolcott, out from May to Nov. David Hinckley, John Tute, and Jona. Waite were at Coleraine, Aug. '54 to Mar. '55.

1755. Four military expeditions were planned in the spring of this year: one against the French in Nova Scotia; a second against Fort Du Quesne; a third against Crown Point; and a fourth against Niagara.

Brookfield furnished her full quota for the Crown Point expedition. Capt. Jeduthan Baldwin was in command of a company; Wm Dorothy was out, Mar. 27 to Sept. 8; Corp. Jos. Waite, Wm Brabrook and John Tute were in Capt. Is. Williams' Co.; Comfort Barns was in Capt. Luke Hitchcock's Springfield Co., Apr. 11 to Oct. 1; Corp. Thomas Barns, Jos. Gilbert, John Green, Thomas Stevens, and Eleazar Warner enlisted in Capt. Sam. Robinson's Hardwick Co.; Sergt. Jos. Hamilton, Abraham Adams, Nathan Hamilton, John McClure, Phineas Slayton, Solomon Rood, and Jacob Wood were in Capt. Andrew Dalrymple's Petersham Co., Aug. 9 to Dec. 27; Peter Harwood was ensign in Capt. Ephm Doolittle's Co., Aug. to Dec.; Wm Blackmor was in Capt. Benj. Johnson's Woburn Co., Sept. 8 to Jan. 3, '56. The following men enlisted in Sept., under Col. John Murray: Jona. Abbott, Obed Abbott (of Bedford), Daniel Ainsworth, Joseph Barr, Adoniram Bartlett, Daniel Bemon, Samuel Bliss, Thomas Cheney, Henry Chadwick, James Clark, Robert Clark, Josiah Cutler, Robert Cutler, Samuel Dorothy, Josiah Farrell, Eben^r Foster, Jr., Wm Galloway, David Getchell, Nathan Gould, Jason Hinds, Ephm Hayward, Abraham How, Jr., Amos Marsh, Joshua Morris, Joseph Old, Wm Ranger, Isaac Rice, John Rice, Daniel Walker. Dr. Benj. Gott was surgeon's mate on the staff of Col. Josiah Brown, Sept. 9 to Dec. 15, and remained at Fort William Henry with Col. Bagley till Mar. 31, '56. In a petition, Dr. Gott says: "I was at Fort William Henry last winter and know that Capt. Jeduthan Baldwin dealt out from his private stores, Rum, brandy, sugar, coffee, tea, wine, etc., to the sick in the Hospital, the Commissary being destitute : After the army was disbanded in Nov., your petitioner volunteered to stay and garrison the fort, and did so under Col. Glazier after Col. Kingsbury left in Jan., and staid till May." Comfort Brabrook enlisted in Capt. Whitcomb's Co., and died at Sheffield on his return. Nathan Thompson was in Col. Titcomb's regiment ; was sent out in the detachment under Col. Ephraim Williams to intercept the French under Dieskau, Sept. 8 ; was wounded by 3 shots, two of which broke his left arm in two places, the third went through his lungs, by which he was rendered helpless ; granted a pension of £4, for 3 years. Samuel Barns, Uriah Gilbert and Joseph Walker enlisted in Capt. Daniel Brewer's Co. ; were all sick ; Gilbert died.

1756. The plan of the campaign this year embraced the reduction of the forts at Crown Point, and Niagara. Massachusetts raised an army of near 7,000 men ; but through the incapacity of Gen. Abercrombie, the British commander, "the summer passed in fruitless labor."

Capt. Jabez Upham, by direction of the town, bought in Boston 200 wt. of Powder, to recruit the town stock, at the cost of £17. 13. 4 lawful money. The whole stock was 300 lbs. Powder, 600 lbs. lead bullets, 900 flints.

Brookfield sent into the service this year : Ens. Joseph Waite, Sergt. Thomas Riggs, Breed Batcheller, Jedediah Deland, Jona. Dodge, Walter Dorothy, John Goldsbury, Abraham Hair, Wm Ranger, John Tute and John Woolcott, in Capt. John Burk's Falltown Co., Feb. 18 to Dec. 17 ; Gideon Abbott, in Capt. James Reed's Co., Feb. to Dec. ; Lieut. Eph. Hayward, Ens. Joseph Hamilton, drummer Tho. Weeks, Wm Ayres, Jr., Edward Ayres, Eliphalet Hamilton, Abraham and John Adams, Ebenr Davis, Jona. Dodge, Solo. Flagg, Nathan Hamilton, Abner Old, Jos. Rutland, Daniel Walker, Benj., Jacob and Joseph Wood, in Capt. Edmund Bemis' Spencer Co., Feb. to Dec. ; Corlis Hinds, Jedediah How. Arthur Tucker, Simeon, Levi and Sylvanus Walker, Joseph Witt and Josiah Wood in Capt. Solo. Keyes' Co., Mar. to Dec. ; Sergt. Jona. Gilbert (died Dec. 9), Corp. Oliver Woolcott, Corp. Silas Walker, Joel Abbott, Onesiphorus Ayres, Samuel Barns, Stephen Blackmor, Simeon Brooks, John Davis, Oliver Evens, David Gilbert, Joseph Gilbert, Ebenezer Hayward, Caleb How, Joseph Hatfield, Philip Reed, Henry White, John Williams, Ezekiel Woodbury, Obadiah Wright, in Capt. Daniel Brewer's Concord Co., July 10 to Dec. 31 ; Daniel Gilbert, Philip Goss, John Green, and Samuel Hair enlisted in Col. Thatcher's regiment in July ; Corp. Ephm Brown, aged 21, enlisted at Deerfield in Capt. Colton's Co. July 26. Col. Joseph Dwight's regiment took part in the Crown Point expedition. Capt. Bemis' and Capt. Burk's companies, (above named) were under his command. The following Descriptive Roll has value :

Reuben Walker	"	John Smith	"

John Walker was in Capt. Moseley's Co. at Lake George, and died at Sheffield on his return.

1757. This was a year of disasters to the English and American forces, and was remembered and spoken of by our fathers for three generations, as the year of "The Great Alarm about the taking of Fort William Henry."

The expedition planned against Crown Point and Ticonderoga was popular; many of the last year's men re-enlisted, and new men were readily secured. But by order of Lord Loudon, then commanding in the Provinces, the bulk of the army was drawn off in an expedition against Louisbourg, which proved a failure. Only about 7,000 men — 4,000 under Gen. Webb at Fort Edward, 3,000 under Col. Munroe at Fort William Henry — were left for the defence of the north-western frontiers.

Gen. Montcalm, with an army of 11,000 French and Indians concentrated at Ticonderoga, and Aug. 3, invested Fort William Henry. Col. Munroe had an effective force of only 2,372 men; but gallantly held the great army at bay for six days, and surrendered Aug. 9. By the terms of capitulation, Col. M. and his troops were allowed to march out with the honors of war, retaining their arms and baggage. But the Indians attached to Montcalm's army, without hindrance from the French officers, plundered the most valuable stores, and murdered in cold blood about 300 officers and men.

The alarm of the peril of our troops reached this town before the surrender; and our companies began the march for relief, Aug. 9. Finding themselves too late, our men returned in a short time.

The Brookfield soldiers in service this year were: Peter Harwood, Joseph Perry and Amos Tute, under Maj. Is. Williams, Jan. to Nov.; John Gilson, under Lieut. Joseph Blake; Jabez Ayres, Samuel Barns, John Goss, Eliphalet Hamilton, Caleb How, Asa Lamson, and Wm Virgin aged 60, (then of Chelmsford); Breed Batcheller, Josiah Banister, Jedediah Deland, Samuel Gould, Reuben Hamilton, and David Palmer; Christopher Banister, in Capt. Learned's Co.; and those that turned out on the "Alarm" were: Jonathan Pellet, then of Sheffield; Joseph Barns, David, Jr., Jedediah and Solomon Gilbert, Eliakim Spooner and James Thompson, in Capt. Eleazar Warner's New Brain-tree Co.

1758. The plan for the campaign this year included the investment of Louisbourg, and expeditions against Ticonderoga and Fort Du Quesne. The first and last were successful; that against Ticonderoga was a disastrous failure.

The Brookfield men in the service this year were: Gideon Abbott, Capt. Jacob Abbott, Joel Abbott, Jacob Ainsworth, Jabez Ayres, Asa Bacon, Capt. Jeduthan Baldwin, Josiah Baldwin, Daniel Ball, Thomas Ball, Breed Batcheller, Wm Batcheller, Nathan Barns, Tho. Brown, Samuel Chapman, Ebenezer Davis, Jedediah Deland, Jona. Dodge, Josiah Dodge, Charles Dorothy, David Getchell, Tho. Gilbert, 3d., Abraham Hair, Amos Hamilton, Jr., Elisha Hamilton, Benj. Harwood, Peter Harwood, Zachariah Harwood, Wm. Henderson, Elijah How, Samuel Joslin, Asa Lamson, Andrew Kimball, Tho. McClure, Abner Old, David Palmer, Wm Parkman, David Patrick, Thomas Rainger, Wm Rainger, Abner Rice, Asahel Rogers, Wm Tuffs, Gideon Walker, Jacob Walker, Isaac Walker, Silas Walker, Samuel White, Daniel Wyman.

In the House of Representatives, Apr. 28, 1758, "Ordered, that the selectmen of Leicester be allowed to remove from said town to the town of Brookfield, Jaques Morris, with eleven of his family, being French Neutrals (so called) placed in L. in 1756, by order of the General Court; and the selectmen of Brookfield are hereby required to provide for said French people."

1759. The taking of Louisbourg, in July of last year, gave the English control of the eastern gate to Canada. The only strongholds held by the French outside of Montreal and Québec, were Niagara, Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Niagara was taken July 24, Ticonderoga was invested July 22, and after a siege taken; when Crown Point was abandoned by the French commander.

In the mean time, Gen. Wolfe was prosecuting a most important enterprise, viz. the reduction of Canada. Sept. 13, he achieved his memorable victory on the heights of Abraham, which insured the fall of Quebec.

Capt. Jeduthan Baldwin was in the service, Mar. to Dec.

In Capt. Wm Paige's Hardwick Co., Crown Point expedition, were men from Brookfield: Sergts. Silas Walker, Gideon Walker, Caleb Dodge, Corporals Joel Abbott, Wm Rainger, Rufus Putnam, Drummer Breed Batcheller, and privates Gideon Abbott, Jacob Ainsworth, Asa Bacon, Nathan Barns, Wm Batcheller, Zeph. Batcheller, Thomas Brown, Samuel Chapman, Robert Clafin, Jr., Jedediah Deland, Daniel Deland, Jona. Dodge, Josiah Dodge, Charles Dorothy, Joseph Gibbs, Thomas Gilbert 3d., Amos Hamilton, Nathan Hamilton, Wm Henderson, Elisha How, Asa Lamson, Tho. McClure, Abner Old, David Patrick, Tho. Rainger, Asahel Rogers, Roger Stevens, William Tuffs, Isaac Walker, Jacob Walker, Sam^l White.

Muster Roll of Capt. Sylvanus Walker's Brookfield Co., out fr. May 15 to Dec. 27: Capt. S. W., Lt. Eliphalet Hamilton, Ens. Daniel Walker, Sergts. Tho. Riggs, Reuben Old, Christ. Banister, Corps. Obed Abbott, David Gilbert, James McClure, Privates Ebenezer Davis, Abner Gilbert, Nathan Goodale, Erastus Hamilton, Job Lane (servt. to Rev. E. Forbes), Cyrus Rich, Moses Rich, Daniel Rolfe, David Slayton, Gad Smith, Reuben Stevens, Arthur Tucker, Benj. Walker, Jr., Oliver Walker, Zebulon Walker, Henry Wisdom, Isaac Wood.

Jacob Ball and Peter Bowen were in the Cr. Pt. Expedition.

Rev. Eli Forbes served as chaplain to the First Battalion, Gen. T. Ruggles' regiment, Crown Point expedition, Mar. to Dec. In a petition he says: "In 1759, I was chaplain in the army, and undertook to perform duty to two of Gen. Ruggles' battalions: soon after I joined the army at Fort Edward, the battalions were separated to a distance of several miles, but I faithfully administered to both: they united at Lake George, and then were regularly observed morning and evening prayers, attendance on the sick and criminals, and preaching on the Sabbath. After the army passed the Lake, the battalions were often stationed 3, 10, 15 miles apart, yet I never failed of praying and preaching with each, visited the sick in the hospitals and the criminals at the Provost guards; I sometimes travelled on foot 15 miles to reach all the hospitals. Towards the close of the campaign, Rev. John Brainard and myself had 400 invalids committed to our charge, and were ordered to march with them to Albany; and humanity obliged us to advance our own money, and perform all kind offices for the relief of these poor distressed men, who otherwise must have suffered greatly, there being no suitable hospital stores available."

Francis Stone, Sen., was in the army under Gen. Wolfe, and was killed.

1760. Gen. Amherst concentrated the army in three divisions before Montreal, Sept. 6, and on the 8th, the Province of Canada and its dependencies were surrendered to the British crown.

The Muster Roll of Capt. Daniel McFarland of Worcester contains the following Brookfield names : Sergt. Jona. Dodge, Corp. Eben^r Hayward, Charles Dorothy, Abraham Gilbert, Nathan Hamilton, Cornelius Hinds, Steph. Jennings, Abner Old, Samuel Robinson, Daniel Rolfe, Jona. Streeter, Samuel Streeter, Josiah White, Jacob Wood. The company was out Feb. to Dec.

In the Muster koll of Capt. William Paige of Hardwick, Mar. to Dec., Brookfield is credited with Lt. Daniel Walker, Sergts. Zeph. Batcheller, Obadiah Wright, and Eben^r Davis, and privates Nathan Abbott, Jona. Barns, Nathan Barns, Wm Batcheller, Comfort Gilbert, Ezekiel Gilbert, John Goodale, Nathan Goodale, Solo. A treaty of peace was signed at Paris, Feb. 10, 1763.

For the sake of clearness, it seemed best to give a full account of the struggle for supremacy in New England between France and England, in a single section, though this method has in a measure broken the thread of our narrative. The question of supremacy was settled in England's favor, by the treaty of Paris. We now return to matters of direct domestic concern.

SECOND MEETING-HOUSE.—The question of building a new meeting-house began to be agitated in 1746. The setting off of the southwest corner of the town to Western, had left the remaining portion in a very irregular shape, and carried the geographical centre to Slate hill plain. This point however was not the centre of population; was an inconvenient place to be reached from the south, and would add a mile's travel to the families living in the extreme northwest district. The real gain in distance of travel and advantage of location would accrue to the north-easterly inhabitants. These northeasters were united in the plan; the southern and western men were united in opposing it, but were divided in opinion as to the proper location of a meeting-house.

Rev. Mr. Cheney. At this juncture, the Rev. Mr. Cheney, pastor of the Church, was disabled by sickness, and died Dec. 11, 1747. Thomas Cheney, son of William and Rebecca (Newell) Cheney, was born in Roxbury Jan. 29, 1688-9; graduated at Harvard University 1711; married (1) Dorothy Hawley, daughter of Hon. Joseph of Northampton; (2) May 22, 1746, Mary Cotton, daughter of Rev. John. He was ordained Oct. 16, 1717, and consequently was pastor thirty years. "He is described as an acceptable preacher, and as sustaining the character of a good man, and faithful pastor."

The death of Mr. Cheney loosened some ties which had bound the people to the old Centre, and its surroundings, and gave the opportunity for the northeastern inhabitants to renew their efforts for a new location of the meeting-house.

An article was inserted in the March warrant, 1748,

"To hear and act upon a Petition of a number of y^e Inhabitants of s^d Town living in the Northeasterly part of s^d Town requesting that the town find a Centre as the Town now lies, and build a meeting-house there, or as near as the ground will admit, otherwise to set them off as a distinct Precinct agreeable to their Petition —

"At a Town meeting March 14, the Question was put, if the Town will build a Meeting-house in the Centre of the town as it now lies : passed in the Negative : If the Town would set off the petitioners with a quarter part of the Township as it lay before Western was set off, or a third part as it now lies : and it passed in the Negative."

This refusal of the town, led to the sending of a Petition to the General Court, asking for the incorporation of a new Precinct in the North-easterly quarter ; and to the erection of the frame of a new meeting-house there. And after a series of moves and counter-moves, the new or Second Precinct was incorporated Mar. 29, 1750. [The history of this Precinct belongs to the next Chapter.]

In the mean time, and before the formation of the Second Precinct, steps had been taken to settle a new minister. Oct. 17, 1748, "The town voted, that Thursday come fourteen night be set apart for fasting and prayer to God for his direction with respect to settling a Gospel minister amongst us in this place."

In Town meeting Nov. 28, 1748, "Voted, To concur with the church in their choice of Mr. Elisha Harding to be their Minister. At an adjournment, Dec. 22, Voted to give Mr. Harding for his encouragement to settle in the Gospel Ministry in s^d Town the sum of one thousand pounds old tenor currency : 2d, To give the s^d Mr. Harding for his yearly salary and support during the time of his continuance in the Ministry afores^d the sum of five hundred pounds old tenor, accounting the same as tho' it be paid in Indian Corn at 20s. pr. bush., Rye at 30s. per bush., Wheat at 40s. pr. bush., and said 500 pounds to be diminished or increased yearly in proportion to the prices of these commodities as they shall yearly rise or fall, and be bought or sold in s^d Town — Provided he release to the Town all right to the Ministry Lands : or in case he inclines to have the improvement thereof, he have the liberty thereof, allowing and paying as much as any other person would give therefor. Voted, Joseph Dwight, Esq., Left. Elisha Rice, Dea. John Gilbert, Amos Rice and Capt. Thomas Buckminster a committee to acquaint Mr. Harding of the vote aforesaid. At an adjournment, voted to Mr. Harding free liberty to cut and get his wood on the Common Land of said Town known by the name of The Rocks, s^d Mr. Harding not to make waste of s^d wood, especially of the young wood. Voted, That Mr. Harding have the use and improvement of the 20 acres of Ministry Land between Capt. Buckminster's and Mr. Simeon Dwight's free from rent for two years, and then he is to allow the Town 20 pounds old tenor yearly for the same."

Mr. Harding was ordained Sept. 13, 1749. The sermon, entitled "A Monitor for Gospel Ministers," was preached by Rev. Nathan Bucknam of Medway, from Col. iv. 17, and was published.

The organization of the Second Precinct gave occasion to open afresh in the old Parish the question of a new meeting-house; and to test the relative strength of the southern and western sections of the Township.

“At a meeting of the First Parish in Brookfield Nov. 20, 1753, a petition of Obadiah Wright and others was read, praying that a Meeting-house may be built on the hight of land near Seth Banister’s house, on the south side of the Country road, near to Ebenezer Hayward’s land, and after debate the Parish voted to build a meeting-house on said spot.”

“At a meeting of the First Parish in Brookfield, Jan. 31, 1754, Voted, Dr. Jabez Upham, Capt. Thomas Buckminster, Elisha Rice, Nathan Hamilton and Jacob Abbott a committee to agree with Seth Banister about the land to set a meeting-house on, where the Parish voted to build one.

Voted, to raise one hundred pounds to carry on said building.

Voted, to build a meeting house 55 feet long and 45 feet wide, and 23 feet in heighth.

Voted, that the aforesaid committee provide stuff for said house.

Voted, that the 100 pounds be taxed in the next assessment, and that the said house be framed and raised as soon as the season will permit.”

Before the last-named meeting was held, i.e. on Dec. 4, 1753, Jedediah Foster, the Gilberts, Abner Brown, John Goss, and others living in the west part, in all 43 voters, had presented a petition asking that the First Parish be equally divided so as to form two Parishes, equal as to quantity and quality of lands and number of inhabitants. The petitioners allege, “that the distance from the northwest corner to the southeast corner of the Parish is 13 miles; that both extremes are under actual improvement by permanent settlers; that there is a sufficiency of land and inhabitants for two Parishes; and that said petitioners, living in the westerly part of the town are greatly aggrieved by the vote of the Parish, passed by a small majority, to build a new house about two miles from the present one, in a southeasterly direction, which will add so much to our disadvantages of attending public worship.”

To this Petition, the ruling majority made answer: “As to the southeasterly part of the Parish, it is well settled with men that pay a considerable tax, and are like to pay a larger: as for the northwest part, there is but six families in the three miles between Western and Brookfield north line, and all of them are at the very west end of the town, and all of them are set off to Ware River parish — the remainder of the three miles is land so broken that there never can be many settlers, and these few will be better accommodated other ways than they can be in Brookfield: when the line is established between the First and Second (North) Parishes, we shall be but about 115 families, and about 20 of them not able to pay any considerable tax: . . . We are exceedingly broken with water: the First Parish is cut apart with Quabogge River, about 7 or 8 miles, and the south and east inhabitants divided by large Ponds, that they cannot get together any where so convenient as the place where we have agreed to build a House; the south people are obliged to pass over Quabogge River west of a large Pond by a bridge and Causie about four score rod long to get to the meeting-house spot where we have agreed to build, and the east part cross Quabogge River at the north end of the above said Pond to get to meeting with the travel of about 7 and a half miles to the old meeting and 5 and a half to the new meeting-house; and considering the difficulty of getting together, the smallness of our inhabitants, the extraordinary charge of building and maintaining bridges, we cannot divide, and shall think ourselves greatly injured and wronged if the prayer of those people should be granted. They are but 41, and one of them, viz. Joshua Dodge, belongs to the Second Parish; one more, viz. Job Lane, has sold his inheritance, and the purchaser saith he shall look upon his farm £200 less valuable if the Parish is divided. . . . If the Petitioners will leave their names with the Town Clerk, in order to make a Parish, we are willing they should be set into a Distinct Parish. But otherwise we think their petition unreasonable. We pay our minister annually £66. 13. 4, of which sum they pay £15. 10. 9."

To fix the matter beyond recall, the majority through their committee, proceeded to set up the frame of the new meeting-house on Seth Banister's hill, in the present South Village. The house was raised April 15th and 16th 1754.

Mr. Foster, the Gilberts and others, appealed to the General Court, which ordered a stay of proceedings, and sent out a committee to view the place and circumstances, and report facts and recommendations.

A paper, handed to said Committee, reads as follows: "When you have taken an impartial view of our situation, and inability to maintain two ministers, we make no doubt but you will return to the General Court that it is best for us to be but one Parish: But however, if otherwise, we cannot but think that you will return the names of the Petitioners only for a Parish, and exempt us whose names are hereunder written which live at the west end of said Parish, for we will Not joyn with them if by any means we can avoid it, for we are utterly against a division: . . . If we are drove to joyn them, it will be the greatest oppression we think. that any in New England ever suffered of that nature: Signed, Joshua Nichols, John Graton, John Hill, Peter Hill, Isaac Kindrick, Jeremiah Woodbury, John Hill, Jr., Jona. Abbott, Elijah Bartlett, Ebenezer Bartlett, Jacob Abbott, Thomas Rich, Joshua Dodge, Caleb Dodge."

"At a legal meeting of the First Parish, Wednesday July 10, 1754, Voted, after a long debate, to proceed and enclose and finish the new meeting-house set up near Seth Banister's." At an adjournment in Sept.,

“voted, to continue preaching in the old meeting-house, one Sabbath and no longer. Voted, to pull down the old meeting-house to help cover and finish the new one. Voted, that the committee for building shall have the ordering of pulling down the old house, and apply it to the finishing the new. Voted, that all persons that have pews of their own in the old meeting-house shall have liberty to take care of their pews any time within 8 days from this day. Voted, that the new meeting-house shall be the place of publick worship. Voted, that Rev. Elisha Harding shall carry on Preaching in the new meeting-house on the 15th day of this instant September, being Sabbath Day, and so on from Sabbath to Sabbath.”

Oct. 16, 1754. At a legal meeting, the First Parish voted, “to levy the sum of £64 upon the polls and estates of the inhabitants of said Parish, to pay Rev. Mr. Harding his salary this present year.”

The next day, viz. Oct. 17, Jedediah Foster, the Gilberts and others, prepared a remonstrance, and petition to the General Court, against the action of the Parish, asking exemption from taxation to pay for the new meeting-house, and allowance of their proportion or interest in the old house, and for the incorporation of a new Parish. Exemption from taxation to meet existing grants was not allowed; but Nov. 8, 1754, the Parish was divided, and the Third or South Parish incorporated, leaving the West part to retain the name and powers of the First Parish.

This brought up the question, of which Parish was Rev. Mr. Harding the minister? The General Court decided that the estates of the old First Parish were holden for the payment of his salary and all charges up to the date of division, but did not determine his pastoral status. “In consequence of the commotion and troubles incident to this division of the Parish, Mr. Harding, at his own request, was dismissed May 8, 1755, having sustained the pastoral office not quite six years. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1745. He is described as a gentleman of great benevolence; a man of singular probity and solid learning; one who from a child had known the Holy Scriptures, and made them much the matter of his study. His public ministrations were serious and adapted to edify and benefit his hearers.”

Brookfield was now divided into three distinct Parishes. In the Second or North Parish, a meeting-house was raised in 1749, but not immediately finished. In the Third or South Parish, the meeting-house was raised in Apr. 1754, and finished with materials taken from the old house on Foster's hill. It stood on the Common, east of the Unitarian Church. In the First or West Parish, a meeting-house was built in 1755. It was placed “at the turning of the country road near the northeast corner of a plow-field belonging to John Barns, being on the Plain in said First Precinct,” and near the site of the present First Parish meeting-house.

Ministry Land. In addition to special (and liberal) grants made to the early ministers, which they held in fee, the town sequestered certain lands, the improvement or income of which was to accrue to the ministerial support in perpetuum.

How these lands were managed will appear from the following records : "Nov. 14, 1730, Voted, Mr. Joseph Dwight, Elisha Rice and Left. Thomas Gilbert be a committee, to let out for the term of 15 years, upon such terms as they can agree with any good man, obliging him to manure and cultivate so much thereof as they shall think beneficial, the Ministry Lot between Capt. Thomas Baker and Mr. Joseph Dwight s their Home-Lots."

The division of the town into distinct parishes necessarily involved the division of the sequestered lands. These lands, as surveyed by Wm Chandler, [see Plans, entered in the old Town Book] comprised a lot in the form of a parallelogram, lying south of the river near Richard Vorce's, containing 164 acres; the "ministry meadow," containing 4 acres 66 rods, lying on the westerly side of Coy's brook, adjoining Col. Dwight's land; the "ministry lot" of 125 acres which included the South Burying Ground, bounded on the northerly side by the old country road, and south by Quabaug river; and the "ministry home-lot" on Foster's hill.

A committee was appointed by the town, consisting of Jedediah Foster and Thomas Gilbert of the First Precinct, Obadiah Rice and Nathaniel Woolcott of the Second Precinct, Jabez Upham, Cyprian Rice and John Rich of the Third Precinct, with full powers, to make an equitable division of the sequestered lands.

The above named committee agreed Oct. 13, 1758, that "the First Precinct should have the eastwardly half of the Ministry Lot adjoining the Burying Place (excluding the said Burying Place), and 124 acres in the Lot on the south side of the River, to begin upon the southwardly end of said Lott running through the same in the width and extending southwardly the width of said Lot until it makes the said 124 acres."

"The Second Precinct shall have the 22 acre Lot adjoining to Capt. Thomas Buckminster's land, and the Ministry Meadow on Coy's brook adjoining Capt. Dwight's farm, and 20 acres of the aforesaid Lot on the South side of the River at the northwardly end the width of said Lott :

"The Third Precinct shall have the westwardly half of the Lott adjoining the Burying Place, and 20 acres in the Lot on the South side of the River adjoining southwardly on the Second Precinct's Twenty acres."

These lands were eventually sold by the several parishes, and the money invested as a Fund, the interest of which went towards the support of the minister.

THE REVOLUTION. — In the struggle that resulted in the separation of the American Colonies from the mother country, the record of Brookfield is an honorable one.

At a town meeting held May 17, 1773, a committee was appointed, consisting of Joseph Gilbert, Benjamin Adams, Benjamin Babbet, Samuel Hinckley and Joshua Dodge, which reported as follows :

“To the Committee of Correspondence for the Town of Boston — Gentlemen: The town of Brookfield having taken the letter of the Town of Boston of Nov. 20, 1772, into consideration, together with the state of the infringements and violations of the rights of the people of America and of this Province in particular, which have from time to time been made by the Court and Parliament of Great Britain — We fully agree with you in sentiment relating to them, and that it is the indispensable duty of every lover of his country and the happy constitution which was once the Glory of this Country, to exert himself in every loyal and constitutional way to ward off the impending evil.

“This town will be ever ready to assist, and in every legal and proper way maintain those rights and liberties for our children, which with so much labor, blood and treasure were purchased by our ancestors, whose memory is and ought to be esteemed by us; and we hope, notwithstanding the attempts of the enemies of our constitution to deprive us of those rights, yet by a steady, firm and constant exertion we shall not finally be deprived of them.

“This town will not fail of joining with other towns in this Province in every constitutional way to obtain redress, and as the Province is hitherto favored with a General Assembly, we trust that they under God may be led to such measures as may procure us relief.

“We take this opportunity to thank the Town of Boston for their Great Care and Vigilance in the common cause, and look upon ourselves embarked in the same bottom, mutually interested in the same event. Let us look to God for his Blessing and Protection, and “stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.”

Read twice, and ordered to be recorded in the Town Book, and a copy transmitted to the Committee of Correspondence of Boston.

The Tax on Tea. A committee, viz. Jedediah Foster, Jeduthan Baldwin, Joseph Gilbert, Benjamin Rice and Phinehas Upham, report, Dec. 7, 1773: “We think it our indispensable duty, in the most public manner to let the world know our utter abhorrence of the last and most detestable scheme, in the introduction of Tea from Great Britain, to be peddled out amongst us, by which means we were to be made to swallow a poison more fatal in its effects to the national and political Rights and Privileges of the People of this country, than ratsbane would be to the natural body —

Therefore, Resolved, that we will not by any way or means, knowingly encourage or promote the sale or consumption of any Tea whatever, subject to a duty payable in America, but all persons whoever they may be, who shall be concerned in a transaction so dangerous, shall be held by us in the utmost contempt, and be deemed enemies to the well being of this country."

1775. — Jan. 9. The town provided for another company of Minute Men, who subscribed the following covenant: "We the subscribers, soldiers inlisted from the several Militia companies within this town, and organized into a company called the Minute Company, do solemnly covenant that we will as soon as possible be provided and equipt with an effective fire-arm, cartouch box (or bullet pouch), 30 rounds of powder and bullets, and knapsack: That we will exert our best abilities to acquire the art military: That we will yield a ready obedience to the commands of our officers, and hold ourselves in readiness to march upon the earliest notice from our Commanding officers, and hazard our lives in resisting any armed force that shall attempt by force to put in execution the late revenue Acts — should any attempt be made between this time and the first of July next.

"Voted, that the men that shall enlist have liberty to choose their own captain and lieutenants.

"Voted, that Col. Phinehas Upham, Capt. Joseph Gilbert and Capt. Joseph Packard be a committee to enlist the men." [Names not found.]

"Voted, that the ministers be desired to notify contributions for the Boston sufferers, and David Hitchcock for First Precinct, Jeduthan Baldwin for Second Precinct and Seth Banister, Jr. for 3d Precinct were chosen to receive the same and transport them to Boston."

LEXINGTON ALARM. — The news of the British advance on Lexington and Concord, appears to have reached Brookfield on the afternoon of April 19; and the three companies of Minute Men started immediately for the scene of conflict. The Muster Rolls are given entire.

At the earnest solicitation of the Committee of Safety, a large number of the Minute Men consented to remain in Service till new and more permanent companies could be organized. The Provincial Congress met April 22. and on the 23d. it was resolved to call on Massachusetts to furnish 13,500 men for Eight Months service.

Apr. 24. the Committee of Safety tendered a commission as colonel to David Brewer of Palmer,¹ and ordered that nine sets of "beating papers" be given him, to be distributed to trusty officers each of whom was expected to enlist a company of 56 able-bodied men. One set was handed to Lieut. John Packard of Brookfield, who proceeded to enlist soldiers from the Minute Companies then on the ground. Beating papers, with the tender of a colonelcy were given to Ebenezer Learned of Oxford, who handed one set to Lieut. Peter Harwood of this town.

¹ He was a native of Framingham, who had lived in Brookfield, where he married May 8, 1763, Elizabeth Smith.

This regiment — Col. Ebenezer Learned, Lt. Col. Danforth Keyes, Adgt. Seth Banister — went into camp at Roxbury May 19, and commissions were issued to the Field and Company officers, May 23. Capt. Harwood's Co. mustered 71 men.

The Committee of Safety reported June 15, that "Col. David Brewer had raised nine companies, amounting, including officers to 465 men, who are now posted at Roxbury, Dorchester and Watertown." This regiment was commissioned June 17. "Field and Staff officers in the Ninth Continental Regiment: David Brewer, Palmer, Colonel; Rufus Putman, Brookfield, Lt. Col.; Nathaniel Danielson, Brimfield, Major; Amos Adams, Roxbury, Chaplain (died Oct. 4), Thomas Weeks, Greenwich, Adjutant; Ebenezer Washburn, Hardwick, Qr. Master; Estes How, Belchertown, Surgeon; James Bradish, No. 5, Assis't. Surgeon; John Trotter, clerk."

The following List of Brookfield men, in the Eight Months Service, is gathered from the Rolls in the State Archives. In Col. Learned's Regiment:

Capt. Peter Harwood, Lieut. Asa Danforth, Ensⁿ Benjⁿ Pollard, Serg^{ts} George Townsend, Wm. Watson, Isaac Barron, Daniel Barns: — Corp^s Charles Rice, John Denton, Reuben Gilbert, and John Dodge: — Drummers, Sam^l. Mash, Benj. In Col. B. R. Woodbridge's Regt., Capt. John Cows' Co., Corp. Moses Woods, Oliver Hinds, John Sabin, Phinehas Slayton, Nathan Whitney, Joseph Olmstead.

In Col. Jona. Ward's Regt., Capt. Seth Washburn's Co., Elisha Livermore.

In Capt. Isaac Bolster's Co., Elihu Blake, Samuel Bunn, Eben^r Miller, Jonas Newton, Eli Wood, James Wood, John Wood, Joseph Wood, Thomas Wood.

The battle of Bunker Hill, June 17, was fought by these Eight Months men. But no returns have been found, to indicate the names of the Brookfield soldiers who took part in that action.

The town Committee of Inspection were: Col. Jedediah Foster, David Hitchcock. John Phipps, for First Precinct; Daniel Gilbert, Thomas Moore, John Lyscom, for Second Precinct; Josiah Hobbs, Ephraim Walker, Ithamar Wright, 3d Precinct.

Dec. 1, 1775. 5,000 men of the Militia were ordered out, to defend the fortifications at Cambridge and Roxbury. The quota of Brookfield was 45. The Roll has not been found.

1776. — Brookfield men in Capt. Wm Todd's Co., Col. Crafts' Regt. of Artillery, Feb. 1, to May 8, 1776: Sergts. David Watson and Charles Bruce, Corp. Wm Smith, Joshua Barns, Barnabas Brigham, Antipas Bruce, Hosea Edson, Eben^r Field, John Hersey, Daniel Matthews, Abel Johnson, David Leland, Jonathan Sever, Abner White.

In the Fourth Worcester Regt. of Militia, Joseph Gilbert of Brookfield was chosen Colonel Feb. 16, 1776, in place of Col. Jona. Warner deceased ; and Apr. 10, James Converse was chosen Colonel in place of Col. Gilbert. Jona. King was commissioned captain of the First Co. in said Regt., Nathan Hamilton 1st Lieut., Daniel Pollard 2d Lieut. May 31 ; Joseph Cutler, captain and Isaac Wood 1st Lieut. of the Third Co. ; Tilly Rice, captain, Joseph Pickard 1st Lieut. and Abijah Cutler 2d Lieut. of the Fourth Co. ; John Lyscom, captain, William Ayres 1st Lieut. and John Ranger 2d Lieut. of the Ninth Co. ; Cyrus Rich, captain, Isaac Gleason 1st Lieut. and Abner Tyler 2d Lieut. of the Eleventh Co. ; Francis Stone, captain, Samuel Warner 1st Lieut. and Josiah Willard 2d Lieut. of the Twelfth Co. Most of these were Brookfield men.

Capt. Jeduthan Baldwin assisted in planning the defensive works around Boston the last year ; and Mar. 16, this year, was commissioned Assist. Engineer, with rank of Capt., and ordered to N.Y. ; was placed in the Continental army, with rank of Lieut.-Col., Apr. 26. ; and in the fall was made Engineer, with the rank of colonel, and served at Ticonderoga.

Lt. Col. Rufus Putnam had been employed as engineer in constructing the defences in Roxbury, and secured the approbation of Washington, who recommended him to the Congress as more competent than any of the French gentlemen, to whom appointments had been given. He was appointed chief engineer, and in the spring superintended all the defences of New York, and in August was raised to the rank of colonel.

At a town meeting held in Brookfield, May 22, 1776, The question was put, in the words of a Resolve of the General Court, "Whether this Town would support the Honorable Congress in the measure, if they for our liberty should see fit to declare the colonies Independent of Great Britain?"—And it passed in the Affirmative, almost unanimously. Thus, our Declaration of Independence anticipated the national Declaration, by more than a month !

Committee of Correspondence, Inspection and Safety : Tho. Moore, Ens. John Wait, Lt. Tilly Rice, Lt. David Hitchcock, Jabez Crosby, Ithamar Wright, John Hamilton.

In Capt. Nathan Hamilton's Co., Col. Sam^l Brewer's Regt. at Ticonderoga Mills, June 1, '76 to Feb. 1, '77, the Brookfield men were : Capt. N. H., Lieut. John Bowker, Corp^s Joseph Olmstead, Thomas Kimball, Wm Gilbert, Drum^r Prince Haskell, Privates, Barnabas Potter, Zadock Gilbert, Edward Allen, Philip Allen, Abner Gilbert, Samuel Barns, Solo. Wilder, Sam^l McClure, Jona. Moore, John Burk, John Saben, Nathan Davis, Ammiel Weeks, Seth Dean, Benj. Foster, John Patterson, Wm Cunningham, Stephen Chandler, Ebenezer Wright, Francis Pellet, Ithamar Bowker, Wm Raiment, Edmund Stone, Amos Hale, Ephraim Wheeler, Jesse Wheeler, John Green, Eph^m Richmond, Ezekiel Bowker, John Bowen, Seth Twitchell, Ichabod Warner, Uri Babbitt, Daniel How.

June 24, 1776, an order was issued from head-quarters, establishing a company of Matrosses in the Town of Brookfield, in Col. James Converse's Regiment. The officers were as follows: John Banister, captain, James Hathaway, first lieut., Gideon Walker, second lieut.

Nov. 14, 1776. The town voted to grant the sum of £60, to be levied upon the Inhabitants, for a bounty upon 100 fire-arms with bayonet affixed, provided they are wholly manufactured in this town within one year, and sold to the Inhabitants of this town, and in such case the selectmen are to draw an order upon the town treasurer. The bounty was not claimed, and Oct. 6, '77, the above named £60 was ordered "to be applied to pay town debts."

In the autumn of this year Washington's army, then on the North River, came near being broken up by expiration of the short-term enlistments. And at his earnest solicitation, the Continental Congress provided for the formation of a regular army by the enlistment of men to serve during the war. A bounty of £20 was to be paid at the time of muster; and quotas of public land were promised, as follows: To a colonel, 500 acres; to a major, 400 acres; to a captain, 300 acres; to a lieutenant, 200 acres; to an ensign, 150 acres; and 100 acres to non-commissioned officers and privates. Subsequently these terms were modified so as to admit of enlistments for three years, or during the war; but the three years men were not entitled to any grant of land.

Of the eighty-eight battalions ordered to be raised, Massachusetts was required to furnish fifteen.

List of Brookfield men that enlisted in 1777, For the War; Thomas Briggs, Abner Cutler, Cornelius Gilbert, Robert Hall, Reuben Hamilton, Barzillai Hayward, Daniel Keyes, Jona. Lampson, John Lydlea, Alexander Oliver, Elijah Pollock, Jeduthan Wait, William Wait, Nehemiah Ward, Joshua Winter.

List of Brookfield men that enlisted in 1777, For Three Years; William Adams, Jason Allen, Joel Babbitt, Samuel Babbitt, Daniel Barns, Solo. Bartlett, Joseph Bartlett, Jarib Bacon, Moses Bedunah, John Bowker, Samuel Bunn, Elijah Calley, Charles Casey, Hezekiah Cutting, Antipas Dodge, Thomas Dodge, John Eveleth, Elisha Foster, Benj. Gilbert, Henry Gilbert, Jedediah Gilbert, Joel Gilbert, Thomas Gilbert, John Hayward, Benj. Hill, James Hill, Joseph Hamilton, John Holden, John Hopkins, Joseph Green, Zachariah Green, Elijah Harrington, John Hubbard, Samuel Lancaster, Isaac Lackey, Abner Lazell, Benj. Lynde, Joseph Marble, Jonas Newton, Joseph Newell, Abner Old, Jonathan

Owen, Joseph Olmstead, Jesse Parker, Ephraim Potter, Robena, negro Lemuel Ross, John Smith, Asahel Stearns, Gad Smith, Gershom Whitney, Gershom Whitney, Jr., Hezekiah Whitney, Israel Whitney, Eleazar Whitney, Elias Witt, Jonathan Witt, Lemuel Ward, John Warren, Caleb Willis, Jona. Willis, Eli Wood, Joseph Wood, Thomas Wood, Timothy Woolcott.

A considerable number of these men were from other towns, and were hired by our citizens. They were sent to the front and distributed to different regiments and brigades, mostly on the North River.

The raising of so many Three Years men temporarily relieved the pressure of calls.

This year is memorable for The Bennington Alarm, following the surrender of Ticonderoga to Gen. Burgoyne, July 5; and for the battles of Stillwater, and Saratoga, and the surrender of Burgoyne, Oct. 17.

The following Brookfield men from Capt. Ebenezer Newell's Co., enlisted into the Continental service this year: Ebenezer Bacon, Benj. G. Ball, Joseph Ball, Phinehas Bowman, Thomas Hall alias Boyd, John Burk, Thomas Cole, Jacob H. Deland, Abraham Hair, Philip Haskell, John Herrick, Josiah Hincer, Amos Leonard, Thomas Madden, Joseph Owen, Mirick Rice, Robert Richmond, Jr., William White.

Capt. Daniel Gilbert commanded a Co. from Brookfield and Western, in service at Bennington and Half Moon, July 13, to Sept. 2. Brookfield men: Serg^{ts} Wm Hincer, Nich. McClure, John Gilbert; privates, Philip Allen, John Ayres, Joshua Barns, Wm Barns, Benj. Batcheller, Josiah Blanchard, David Clark, Reuben Dodge, Jude Foster, Zadock Gilbert, Peter Hill, Silas How, Asa Humphrey, Daniel Newell, Comfort Old, Abner Perry, Amos Rice, Elisha Rice, Jason Rice, Joseph Richardson, James Ross, Phinehas Stevens, Wm Stone, Joshua Tyler, John Waite, Thomas Wedge, James Wood, John Wright.

In August, 16 men went from Brookfield on an expedition to Providence, R.I. Names not found.

Col. Rufus Putnam was in command of the 5th Mass. Regiment, and took an important part in the campaign this year. He was with Gen. Gates, and distinguished himself at the battle of Stillwater, and the series of movements which followed.

A Pay Abstract of a Company of Volunteers under the command of Capt. Asa Danforth who marched from Brookfield Sept 23, 1777, — to join the army under the command of Gen^l Gates, and took part in the Battle of Saratoga, Oct. 7.

Friday, Oct. 31. One division of Burgoyne's surrendered army, under escort of Gen. James Brickett, on the march to Cambridge, halted for the night in Brookfield.

Nov. The town appointed a Committee of nine, with instructions “to provide for the families of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers that are now in the Continental Army.” A similar vote was passed in 1778, and 1779.

1778. — This year, Col. Rufus Putnam superintended the construction of the fortifications at West Point. After the surprise at Stony Point, he was appointed to the command of a regiment in Wayne's brigade, and served to the end of the campaign.

Capt. Peter Harwood, who had followed the fortunes of the war thus far, was promoted to the rank of major in the Continental army, in Col. Thomas Nixon's regiment, Sept. 29.

Capt. Daniel Gilbert, Capt. Ebenezer Newell, and Capt. Asa Danforth, with their companies continued in the service; but their pay-rolls have not been found.

Feb. 3, an Order was passed by the General Court, requiring each town to return a List of the male inhabitants from 16 years old and upwards, liable to do military duty; and also a list of the men then engaged in the Continental Service. The return from Brookfield was: No. of male inhabitants liable to do military duty, 656 whites, and 9 negro slaves; one-seventh part of which is 95: No. of men in the service, 95; No. wanting to fill our quota, 0.

Each of the three Precincts in Brookfield appears to have assumed the labor and expense of furnishing its proper quota of soldiers, in answer to the calls this year.

In Feb., 14 men went on an expedition to R.I.

Apr. 20. The General Court ordered levies of 1,300 men to fortify North River; 200 men for Rhode Island; and 2,000 men for 9 months service in the army, to rendezvous at Fishkill. The Second Precinct voted to raise the men called for; and paid bounties as follows: For Capt. Daniel Gilbert's Co., now in the field, 3 Continental soldiers viz. Barnabas Potter, Wm Barns, Nathan Barns, to whom we gave £100 per man, and the use of a blanket. To the Militia men, viz. Thomas Bacon and Jona. Wyman, £70 each, and a blanket, and to be exempt from the Rate for paying the same. For Capt. Eben^r Newell's Co. now in the field, 4 men, viz. Wm Gill, John Gill, David Chamberlain and Jude Stevens, Continentals, £100 each, and a blanket. To the Militia men, viz. Robert Graham and John Sabins, £70 each, and a blanket, and exemption from this Rate.

Voted, to raise £988. 8, to defray the expense of hiring the Continental and Militia men lately enlisted.

At the same time the West Parish raised for Capt. Asa Danforth's Co., 9 mos. service at Fishkill, Wm Beals, Wm Clapp, Joshua Dodge, Jr., Samuel Gilbert and James Ross.

The Third Precinct raised for the same service, Silas Newton, Wm Peso, Daniel Wait, Jason Rice and Levi Rice.

May 25. At a town meeting called to consider the proposed Form of Government, twenty voted aye, and eighty-four no.

Capt. Francis Stone was in command of a New Braintree Co. in the Continental service this year.

John Wait was agent for receiving clothing for the Continental soldiers, in August, and sent a supply to the army at Valley Forge.

In Sept., 29 men were sent to Fishkill and Peekskill; kind of service unknown.

In June, committees were raised in the several Precincts "To adjust the Average of service done in the War to date, and the charges that have arisen since the 15 battalions were raised."

No Report is preserved in the State Archives, of the results of this inquiry and adjustment, except in the case of the Third Precinct, where Jona. King, chairman, reported June 30: "We find that the whole service is equal to $5\frac{1}{2}$ months to each single poll in said Precinct. We reckon 3 months service at Roxbury and R.I. only equal to 2 months at the Northward and Westward; and also in the Guards in said town only equal to one-third at the Northward, Westward and Southward. We also allow £10 paid at the time of raising the Continental men to be equal to one year's service." In the total of 193 men in this Precinct, liable to do military duty, only 26 have no credit for service or money. Among the larger credits are the following: Abram Adams, Jr. $11\frac{2}{3}$ mos., Amos Adams, 16 mos., Jesse Adams, $17\frac{3}{4}$ mos., Tilly Brigham, $13\frac{1}{4}$ mos., Elisha Brigham, $12\frac{1}{2}$ mos., Solo. THE SPOONER MURDER. — The dark episode of the year in Brookfield, was this unnatural murder, which startled the whole community, and became noted in the criminal annals of the state.

The Spooner house stood on the north side of the old stage road, a half-mile east of Brookfield meeting-house, near where the road to North Brookfield centre strikes off.

The family of Joshua Spooner consisted of himself, his wife Bathsheba [Ruggles, dau. of Gen. Timothy, of Hardwick] aged 32, three children, one son and two daughters, one male and two female servants. There had also been for some time, three men, either transient or constant inmates of the house, viz. Ezra Ross, a youth of 18, an ex-soldier in the American army, from Ipswich, and James Buchanan and William Brooks, formerly British soldiers of Burgoyne's army.

The evidence, and the confessions of the prisoners showed that the murder was planned and instigated by Mrs. Spooner.

On the evening of March 1, 1778, Mr. S., returning from Cooley's tavern, not far distant, about 9 o'clock, when near his own door, was struck down by Brooks, Buchanan and Ross being present, and his body taken up by the three and thrown into the well. After the deed was done, the three men went into the house, where Mrs. S. distributed among them her husband's clothing and a considerable sum of money, as the reward of their work.

The case was tried at the April term of the court in Worcester. The judges were, C. J. William Cushing, Jedediah Foster, Nath^l P. Sargent, David Sewall and James Sullivan, associate justices. Rob^t. T. Paine was state's attorney; Levi Lincoln was assigned as counsel for the prisoners. The fact of killing was admitted; and the effort of defendants' counsel was to bring out the degree of responsibility of the parties accused. In regard to Mrs. Spooner, Mr. Lincoln's main point was, that she was a person of unsound, or distracted mind — as proved by the history of the case itself, which he rehearsed in detail. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as to each of the prisoners; and they were sentenced to be executed on Thursday, June 4. By the efforts of Rev. Thaddeus Maccarty of Worcester, the Council granted a respite of one month, largely on the ground that "the unhappy woman declares she is several months advanced in her pregnancy." A jury, consisting of two men midwives and 12 matrons was summoned, who after examination, reported that "the prisoner was not quick with child" (tho' it was proved after death, that her statement was true). The execution took place at Worcester, July 2. "Just before they reached the gallows, one of the most terrific thunderstorms that had occurred within the memory of any one living, came up, and darkened the heavens, and all together conspired to produce a scene of most dreadful horror in the minds of the throng of 5,000 people assembled to witness the spectacle."

1779. — Jan. 14. The selectmen of Brookfield furnished clothing for the army, 95 shirts, at 235 pounds, 16 shill.; 95 prs. shoes, at 256. 10; 95 prs. stockings, at 156. 15.

Pay Roll of a squad of Volunteers enlisted from Capt. Nathan Hamilton's Co. in Third Precinct of Brookfield, to guard Magazine stores at B. in charge of Samuel Webb, and conduct them to Providence — Jan. 1, to Feb. 12: Lieut. Joseph Olmstead, Serg^t. Jesse Abbott, Corp^s. Solo. Banister, Jonas Newton, Josiah Hamilton, Privates, Nahum Davis, Simeon Wright, Wm Old, Daniel Upham, Silas Bridges, Benj. Forbush, Oliver Walker, Nathan Rice, Joel Jennings, Gershom Jennings, Erastus Hamilton, Joseph Hamilton, Nathaniel Hamilton, Thomas Hincer, Simon Rice. The selectmen were allowed 48 pounds for the mileage of the above men, 96 miles at 6d. per mile.

The "Magazine" referred to was probably the Powder House, a brick structure 10 feet in diameter, built in 1770, which stood near the town pound.¹

Feb. 16. Mr. John Wait was allowed 611 pounds, 12s. 6d. for clothing procured and sent to the army.

Aug. 12. Under the requisition for teams to transport stores, John Wait is credited with 125 pounds, 4 shill. for 85 miles; Rufus Hamilton, £142. 18. 6, for 97 miles; Adoniram Walker, £122. 5, for 85 miles; Asa Gilbert, £124. 10. for 83 miles.

A petition of Maj. Peter Harwood, dated Boston, Aug. 10, 1779, states: "I have served as an officer in the army ever since the war began; the two first years was a captain; Jan. 10, 1777, was appointed major in General J. Nixon's brigade; when the Hon^{bl} Congress resolved that the staff of the army should be of the Line, I was recommended by Maj. Gen. Lincoln, Brig. Generals Nixon and Patterson to the Committee of Congress which sett last August at White Plains for the purpose of settling rank in the army, that I might have my rank in the Line; and I was accordingly commissioned Sept. 29, 1778, and assigned the place of 10th Major in the Mass. Line, Light Infantry, Gen. Nixon's brigade;" and asks for pay and allowance. £300 was granted him. He continued in service till Oct. 16, 1780, when he resigned, and received an honorable discharge.

In obedience to the Great and General Court's orders of October 9, 1779, we have paid out of the Town Treasury the sum of seven hundred and eighty pounds as a State bounty to 26 men who belonged to Brookfield, enlisted and marched for Clavarack for 3 months, i.e. thirty pounds each.

ilton, Simon Rice, Wm Hamilton, Jude Adams, Judith Stevens, Isaiah Bowen. Benj. Jennings, Jr., Samuel Walker, Ezra Tucker, Jonas Biglow, Richardson Dunham, Thomas Tucker, Nathan Moore, John Gilbert 2d., William Peso, Elijah Barns, Thaddeus Dodge, Joseph Brown, John Pollard, Andrew Banister, fifer.

These men were attached to Capt. Joseph Richardson's Co. in Col. Samuel Denny's Reg., Mass. Bay Militia, in the U. S. Service. Capt. J. R. was of Brookfield, as were also Lieut. Joseph Thurston, Israel Aiken, Isaac Abbott, Oliver Gilbert, Noah Hatch, Thomas Lampson, Asa Partridge, already in the field.

In Dec., the following Brookfield men were in Capt. Thomas Fish's Co., R.I. Service at Tiverton: Sergt. Ephraim Cutter, Benj. Bragg, Anthony Cutter, Abner Rice, Isaac Sever, Obadiah Wait, Eben^r Witt.

Dec. 21. The selectmen are allowed transportation for the above named companies, and also for 31 men to Boston, and 9 men to Dorchester. And same date, on a requisition for clothing, Brookfield is credited with 12 blankets, 95 shirts, 96 prs. shoes, 94 prs. stockings. [Worcester received credit for only 62 shirts, etc.]

[Robert Young, a laborer, resident in Brookfield, was convicted by the Superior Court of Worcester county, at the October term, of the crime of Felony and Rape, committed in B., and was executed at Worcester Nov. 11, 1779.]

1780. — June 12. An order was issued for raising men for six months service in the Continental army. And at a meeting of the Second Precinct, June 20, "Voted, the sum of £252 be assessed on the polls and estates of this Precinct, for the purpose of hiring 15 soldiers into the Continental Service for six months — the aforesaid sum to be paid in Beef at 24 shill. per cwt. — Rye at 4 shill. per bush. — Indian Corn at 2 shill. 8 pence per bush., or in paper currency equivalent thereto.

Voted, that the collector shall receive continental money on the assessment lately granted, at the rate of 72 for 1.

Voted, to authorize the Precinct Treasurer to give security for such sums as shall remain due to the soldiers aforesaid; and that Lt. Thomas Hale, Lt. Joseph Bush, Benj. Adams, Jr. and Lt. Wm Ayres be a committee to assist the treasurer in giving security as aforesaid."

The other Precincts passed similar votes; and the following men were enlisted and sent to the North River, out from June 30, to Jan. 1, '81; Jona. Willis, Abner Witt, Wm Kimball, Joseph Ranger, Asa Gilbert, Josiah Cutler, Wm Peso, John Pollard, Thomas Dodge, Jr., Caleb Willis, Bueanos Ayres, Solo. Jan. 8. On requisition, the selectmen procured for the use of the army; 12 horses, and were allowed £11824. 18 old currency, equal to £295. 12. 5 new currency.

Col. Rufus Putnam was in command of the 5th Mass. Regt., Jona. Stone. pay-master. Officers of the 3d company: Capt. Nathan Goodale, Lieut. Zibeon Hooker, Ens. Benj. Gilbert.

Capt. Seth Banister commanded a Co. in the 4th Mass. Regt., Col. Wm Shepard, stationed at West Point.

The privates in the above companies were largely of the last Three Years men.

Feb. 5. Brookfield sent to the army, 33 blankets, 67 shirts, 67 prs. shoes, 67 prs. hose; cost 10411 pounds.

At a meeting of the Second Precinct July 19, “a bounty of £9 was offered to each man that shall engage to serve in R.I. for 5 mos., and £3 per mo. to those who shall serve at the Westward for 3 mos.; and £90 hard money was granted, to be assessed upon the polls and estates within this Precinct, for the purpose of hiring the soldiers now to be procured.”

Oct. 31. Brookfield filled a requisition for 31 blankets, 62 shirts, 62 prs. of shoes and 62 prs. of hose, and 15,450 lbs of beef.

1782. — Feb. 22. Brookfield supplied to the army, 31 blankets, 62 shirts, 62 prs. shoes, 62 prs. hose.

Mar. 6. The Second Precinct voted, "That the Militia officers, and the committee be authorized to raise soldiers for the service, when called for by authority, and the Precinct will support said committee in their trust."

1783. — The treaty of peace was signed Sept. 30 ; and the army was disbanded Nov. 3.

1784. — The first celebration of Independence in Brookfield was held July 4, 1784. The following account of the affair was given by Eben: F. Newell, then 9 years old, who was present : "The celebration was held on West Brookfield plain. An Ox, neatly dressed, and perfectly roasted, with hoofs and horns on, was sliced, and the pieces laid on tables, with piles of bread, and plenty of rum and water. The people passed in order between the tables, each taking bread and beef in their hands, and helping themselves to the rum and water. Scipio Witt, a colored man, who had served in the army, bored holes in 13 large chestnut logs, loaded and primed them, and so fixed the slow matches that a regular salute of 13 reports was heard by the people on the plain, who were taken completely by surprise. We children were greatly pleased to hear the noise, and see the fragments of broken logs fly up in wild confusion."

SHAYS' REBELLION. — This outbreak of popular feeling, which grew out of the oppressive taxes, the heavy individual and town debts, and other burdens and enactments incident to the War, has a peculiar interest to Brookfield, because Daniel Shays, who played an important part in it, was for a time a resident, and in 1772 married Abigail Gilbert of B. Our records furnish little information of value. It is known that the cause had many sympathizers and some active supporters in the town. It is well understood that Capt. Francis Stone really furnished the brains of the movement ; and however sharply he was condemned by the patriots of his day, the cooler judgment of the next generation seems to have given him credit for acting conscientiously. It is certain that he never repented his course. His brother Jonathan was active in putting down the insurrection.

At a town meeting in Brookfield Dec. 26, 1786, a Report was adopted and forwarded to the governor, praying for an Act of Indemnity in favor of the Insurgents. Jan. 20, '87, a Protest, signed by 96 of the inhabitants, was sent to the State House.

Capt. John Potter's Brookfield Co. was called out on two several occasions, to suppress the tumult.

A Co. of Infantry from the South Parish was called for, and attached to Col. Crafts' Reg^t. of Cavalry ; and a large Co. of Volunteers, from the town at large, under the command of Col. Jeduthan Baldwin, as captain, Col. Seth Banister and Maj. Nathan Goodale, as lieutenants, was with Gen. Lincoln's force, Jan. and Feb. 1787.

CHAPTER VI.

MOVEMENT FOR A NEW PRECINCT.—NAMES OF MOVERS.—ACT OF INCORPORATION.—MEETING-HOUSES.—MINISTERS.—SCHOOLS.—THE TOWN INCORPORATED.—EC-CLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS.—EDUCATION.—INDUSTRIES.—PROFESSIONAL MEN.—WAR OF THE REBELLION.—SAVINGS BANK.—RAILROAD.—STATISTICS.—MEMO-RIALS OF REV. DR. SNELL, HON. CHARLES ADAMS, JR., HON. FREEMAN WALKER, ETC.

AS stated in the preceding chapter, the first movement for the formation of a Second Precinct in Brookfield was made in the spring of 1748. It was originally an alternative proposition, either that the town should build a new meeting-house in the territorial centre, or that the northeasterly inhabitants should be set off into a separate parish. Both propositions were negated at a town meeting, Mar. 14, 1748.

Oct. 17, 1748. A petition, signed by John Watson, Wm Ayres, Josiah Converse, Ebenr Witt, John Woolcott, Paul Deland, Noah Barns, Benj. Adams, Joseph Stone and others, in all 66 tax payers, was presented to the town, asking that a new meeting-house may be built "in the most convenient place on or near the road between Mr. John Green's and the bridge at the west end of Slate hill plain, or on the highland near the road nearly opposite to where the new road and Slate hill part." At a meeting held Oct. 24, "the Question being put, whether the town would build a meeting-house anywhere on Green's Plain (so called), or on the high land between the pole bridge and Coy's brook—And it passed in the Negative."

Nov. 8, 1748. A petition signed by Ebenr Witt and 34 of the former petitioners, asking that "the North East section, comprising one-third of the township, might be erected into a separate Precinct," was presented to the town. And at a meeting held Nov. 28, the town voted, "That the petitioners and such others of the Inhabitants of the Northeasterly Part of the Town who shall signify their Desire under their hands to the clerk of said Town therefor, within three months from this day, provided their possessions do not exceed a Third Part of the said Town for quality & quantity of land, be set off a distinct & separate Parish." Immediately, 29 other tax payers handed in their names to the town clerk, making 63 in all.

Dec. 5, 1748. this paper was handed to Thomas Gilbert, Esq. Town Clerk of Brookfield: "These are to inform you, that we the subscribers within mentioned, have agreed to go off as a distinct Precinct, and have agreed to build a Meeting-House upon the road Northeast from Mr. Jabez Ayres', between the brook and Mr. Daniel Potter's, and we desire you to enter our names upon the Town Book, according to the vote of the Town:

During the winter, timber was collected and prepared for a meeting-house frame; and in April a petition was sent to the General Court, reciting the facts above stated, and asking for an act of Incorporation as a distinct Precinct with Parish privileges. Apr. 18, 1749, the Legislature ordered the petitioners to serve the usual order of notice upon the town; and May 17, the town appointed Josiah Converse, Esq., Joseph Dwight, Esq., Capt. Thomas Buckminster, Capt. Wm Old and Thomas Gilbert, Esq. a committee "to make answer in behalf of the town." This committee opposed the project, and it was defeated.

The next winter another petition was sent to the General Court, reciting:

That your Petitioners under our unhappy and remote situation from the place of Publick Worship in said town, Having often petitioned the town for relief, either by building a Meeting-house at or near the Centre of the town as it now lies, or to set us off as a Distinct Parish, as per our former Petitions may appear: but being often denied our request, which we tho't most reasonable: The Town at last made a grant to the Inhabitants of the said part of the town, that they with such as would joyn with them — they entering their names or sending them to the Town Clerk in writing within the space of three months from the date of the grant, should be set off as a Distinct Parish — Provided they and their possessions did not exceed one-third part of said town for quantity and quality, as per the vote or grant of the town may appear: Upon which vote or grant, we agreed to build a handsome frame for the Publick Worship of God; and in April last we preferred a Petition to this Hon^d Court, so agreeable (as we tho't) to the Town's vote that none would oppose it; But to our surprise we found such opposition from the Town and some of our Petitioners as caused us to desist the Proceeding: And being willing to do any thing reasonable to satisfie our disafented brethren, we covenanted and agreed for their satisfaction to be at the cost of a Committee of uninterested worthy Gentlemen,¹ mutually chosen, who have been upon the spot and heard the pleas, and viewed the proposed Parish, and have returned their judgment that the house stands just and reasonable to accommodate them as well as ourselves, as per their return and the covenants we entered into may appear —

Therefore your Petitioners pray that this Hon^d Court will incorporate us who have returned our names to the Town Clerk, agreeable to the vote of the Town, into a Distinct Parish, and invest us with Parish privileges: Granting also a liberty of others joyning with us (not to exceed one-third part of the Town as above said) for the space of two years or eighteen months, or as this Hon^d Court shall think meet: And your Petitioners further pray that one-third part of the Lands in said Town Sequestered to Ministry & Schools use, or the Incomes thereof may be set over and secured to us: And also that the Town of Brookfield abate or reimburse to your petitioners and such as joyn with them their proportion of a tax lately assessed on our polls and estates for the settlement and ordination charges of the Rev. Mr. Elisha Harding, and the repairs of the old Meeting-house, amounting in the whole to about twelve hundred pounds old tenor currency more or less — And y^r Petitr^s as in duty bound shall ever pray. Signed by

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MAR. 28, 1750.

Read, and Ordered, that the prayer of the Petition be so far granted, as that the Petitioners with their families and estates, together with such persons and their estates who shall within three months from this time signifie that desire therefor under their hands to the Clerk of the Town of Brookfield, be and they hereby are set off a Distinct Parish, and are endowed with all the Privileges, and subjected to all the Duties which the other Inhabitants of Parishes are by the Laws of this Province endowed with or subjected to — Provided their possessions do not exceed one-third part of the said Town of Brookfield for quantity and quality.

	JOHN BARNS	WILLIAM AYRES, attorney
		to the heirs of Matthew Leeds, dec ^d

These are to Desire you to enter the Lands that were my father Benjamin Woods dec^d lying in the Northeasterly part of Brookfield as belonging to the Second Parish in s^d town agreeable to the order of the General Court.

BENJAMIN WOODS.

By a subsequent Act, passed Nov. 8, 1754, the bounds of the Second Precinct were established as follows: "All the lands in s^d town lying northward of a line beginning at the northeast corner of George Harrington's land upon Spencer line, and running westward by the said George's lands to Five-Mile river bridge at the Country road; from thence westerly on the most southwardly parts or lines of the lands of Thomas Slayton, Capt. Nathaniel Woolcott, Thomas Moore, Eben^r Jennings, Obadiah Rice, Wm Parks, Josiah Converse, Francis Dodge,

Paul Deland, the heirs of John Green dec^d, Stephen Green and Joseph Ranger; and from said Ranger's southwest corner to the southwest corner of William Ayres' meadow on Coy's brook (so called) near the place where the old School House stood; and from there northward on the most eastward parts or lines of the lands of John Tuff and Josiah Gilbert, and on the most westward parts or lines of the land of Jeremiah Woodbury and John Hill to Abner Tyler's land; and from thence on the most eastward parts or lines of the lands of Jacob Abbott and Joshua Dodge and Joshua Dodge, Jr. to the centre line of said town; and from thence all the lands eastward of that part of said centre line which is northward of the place where the above described line meets with the said centre line to New Braintree District.

Second Parish Organized. In accordance with a warrant issued by John Chandler, Jr., Esq., "At a meeting held at the house of Mr. Jabez Ayres, Monday, May 21, 1750, Chose Capt. Wm Ayres, moderator; Capt. Wm Ayres, Precinct clerk; Capt. Wm Ayres, Capt. Eben^r Witt, Samuel Gould, Noah Barns and Benj. Adams, Precinct committee, to order the prudential affairs thereof, warn meetings, etc.; Thomas Bartlett, Precinct treasurer; Joseph Stone, collector; Wm Ayres, Samuel Gould, Wm Witt, Jason Bigelow and Moses Ayres, assessors. At a meeting held Sept. 21, 1750, it was voted, That Capt. Wm Ayres represent the Precinct upon any exigencies whatever, either seen or unseen."

Meeting-House. As before stated, a frame of a meeting-house was raised April 5, 1749. At a parish meeting Sept. 21, 1750, Capt. Eben^r Witt, Samuel Gould and Benj. Gilbert were appointed a committee "to secure a title of Capt. Wm Ayres of the land whereon the meeting-house stands, with conveniency about the same, in the name and for the use of the Precinct." It was found that in all, the sum of £60. 12. 10 had been expended for "services done towards the meeting-house frame and other charges," which was allowed and paid.

The process of "finishing the meeting-house," was a slow one. In addition to 40 pounds granted at the first parish meeting, 53 pounds 6 shill. 8 d. was granted in 1751; in 1754, a committee was ordered "to procure materials for clapboarding the backside of the house, laying the gallery floors, building the gallery stairs and the front seats around the galleries — and render an account;" in 1756, 30 pounds was raised for finishing the meeting-house, and the committee was directed "to color the clapboards of the same, and procure boards, lath, lime, slit work and all materials for finishing the same, except the seats in the gallery." In 1757, 25 pounds more was raised; and in 1764, the parish voted, "to take the shingles off the roof of the meeting-house, and to repair the same."

Minister. As soon as a house of Publick Worship had been provided for, steps were taken to secure a minister. At the second precinct meeting, held Sept. 21, 1750, it was voted, "That the sum of £13. 6. 8. be raised and assessed upon the polls and estates of the Precinct, to supply the Precinct with preaching, so far as it will go: and that Capt. Eben^r Witt, Samuel Gould and Lieut. Benj. Gilbert supply the Precinct with preaching." Mar. 4, 1751, £40 was raised, and Capt. Wm Ayres, Thomas Hale, Benj. Adams, Samuel Gould and Benj. Gilbert were appointed a committee to procure preaching the year ensuing." Sept. 23, the committee was instructed to hire Mr. Darby, Mr. Taft, Mr. Welch and Mr. Forbush, to preach four Sabbaths each, on probation.

Jan. 14, 1752, the precinct voted to apply to three neighboring ministers for their advice in giving a call to Mr. Eli Forbush to settle with them in the work of the Gospel Ministry. The advice was as follows: "These therefore may certify, that Mr. Eli Forbush (who has for some time been preaching with them), so far as our acquaintance has been with him, together with his general good character, and his approbation by an Association of worthy ministers: We cannot but esteem of him as a gentleman well qualified for the work of the Gospel Ministry; and apprehend the people of this Parish to be in the way of their duty to proceed in giving him an Invitation to settle with them in the work of the Ministry

JOSHUA EATON

ELISHA HARDING."

Mr. Forbush received a unanimous call to settle in the precinct; with the offer of £53. 6. 8 lawful money, as a yearly salary; and the sum of £120 lawful money, as a settlement—to be paid, one-half within one year, and the other half within two years of his acceptance. It was also voted to give him £4 additional, to supply him with wood; and a further addition to his salary of £3. 6. 8, to commence in 1757, and a further sum of £3. 6. 8, to be added in '58, so that from and after 1758 his yearly salary shall be £64. At Mr. F.'s desire, the terms were altered, so that the Parish should deliver to him yearly 30 cords of wood, and that from and after 1767, his salary should be £66. 13. 4 per annum.

The call was accepted; and the Parish (no church having been organized) sent Letters Missive to the Churches invited to compose the ordaining council; and Mr. Forbush was ordained June 3, 1752.

Organization of the Church. After the arrangements for the settlement of a pastor had been made, but before the ordination, viz. May 28, 1752, a church was organized, under the title of The Second Church of Christ in Brookfield. Forty-eight persons, 26 males and 22 females, signed the Covenant : Eli Forbush, John Watson, Jabez Ayres, Ebenezer Witt, Noah Barns, John Cutler, Benj. Adams, Abram How, Ammiel Weeks, Ichabod How, Abner Tyler, Thomas Hale, Uriah Gilbert, Joseph Stone, Moses Ayres, Charles Adams, Moses Barns, Jason Biglow, Nathan Stevens, Thomas Taylor, Ephraim Cutler, Daniel Newell, Jonathan Gilbert, Aaron Barns, Isaac Cutler, John Witt : Esther Watson, Mary Tucker, Martha How, Sarah Stone, Abigail Cutler, Rebecca Witt, Mary Witt, Abigail Gilbert, Hannah Barns, Rebecca Ayres, Esther Gilbert, Elizabeth Gilbert, Miriam Newell, Sarah Ayres, Rebecca Adams, Persis Adams, Naomi Taylor, Annah Barns, Phebe How, Mary Hale, Mary Stevens, Hannah Bartlett.

The following extract from the Church Records, shows that this church, from the first, claimed the right of the laity to vote on all questions pertaining to its own polity and work. The practice had obtained in many of the Congregational churches of Massachusetts, to determine all matters by "silent vote"; i.e., no question could be brought before the church without the pastor's consent; and he, as moderator, put the motion in a form which required only a silent assent — no one contradicting, because no show of hands was called for either for or against.

Jan. 30, 1753. At a meeting of the Second Church in Brookfield, 1. The Question being asked whether any thing short of a hand vote should be looked upon as valid in said church — it passed in the negative.

2. It being asked what method should be agreed upon for admitting members into full communion, the following was consented to and voted unanimously — That the candidate for admission should apply himself to the Pastor and communicate his desire, upon which the said Pastor is to examine into his knowledge of God; and the Christian religion; his present acquaintance with it; the Nature and Design of the Gospel Ordinances. And upon the Pastor's receiving satisfactory answers to any Question that may be asked under these heads above mentioned, he shall propound the desires of the said candidate to the church publickly: — On the third Sabbath, the said Pastor, upon receiving no objections to the contrary, shall recommend the person propounded to the charity of the church; and for their further satisfaction, the said Pastor shall read to the church a Relation containing some general articles of Faith, and his experimental acquaintance with Religion, drawn up by the Candidate's own hand, or by the Pastor at his desire and consent, and agreeable to what he past when under examination; and that no person according to our present apprehension, should be admitted to what is called full membership without such Relation.

3. The Question being asked, who should serve the Lord's Table during the time that the church should be without Deacons, 'twas voted that brother Noah Barns and Benj. Adams, be the persons — who also consented to said vote.

Voted, that during the time that the church is without Deacons, Benj. Adams read, and Jason Biglow tune the Psalm in publick.

Attest, LEVI FORBUSH, moderator.

Dec. 26, 1753. John Cutler was chosen first Deacon, and Jason Biglow the second.

Building Pews, and Seating the Meeting-house. After the meeting-house had been covered in and a floor laid, a committee, viz. Eben^r Witt, Dea. Jason Biglow, Thomas Hale, Dea. Samuel Gould and Nathaniel Woolcott, was appointed, to mark out and value the pew spots, and notify the tax payers, who, from their age and amount of taxable estate were entitled to the privilege, to make choice of their several pew spots, and give security for building their respective pews. The valuation of pew spots varied from £5, to £1. 6. 8, according to location. And it was voted that the several persons who accept said pews, shall build the same at their own cost, and ceil the side of the house against the same up to the foot of the windows, and case the windows against their respective pews, and give security to the Treasurer for the sums they are set at, within ten days, as aforesaid, payable within twelve months from this day. Twenty-two pews were laid out, around the walls of the house. The Minister's pew was on the right of the pulpit. The others were taken, in the order of their value, beginning with the highest, by Eben^r Witt, Josiah Converse, Esq., Obadiah Rice, Nath^l Woolcott, Wm Ayres, Esq., Noah Barns, John Watson, John Hinds, Benj. Adams, Moses Ayres, wid. Sarah Lane, Samuel Gould, Abraham How, Jason Biglow, Abner Tyler, Corlis Hinds, John Witt, Thomas Bartlett, Jabez Ayres, Ammiel Weeks, Benj. Gilbert.

The floor of the house inside the pews, was laid out into twelve seats, six on each side of the broad aisle, the left hand row for women and the right hand for men, each seat to hold seven persons. These were plain benches with backs. The deacon's seat was directly in front of the pulpit. The pew owners occupied each his own pew: all others were assigned their respective places by a committee. The first "seating the meeting-house" took place in 1757; and the committee was instructed to assign each one his place, according to age, station in life, and what he paid for real and personal estate on the last two years tax lists. Voted, that the seating continue but three years.

Ministerial Fund. In 1761, a committee was appointed, to sell the Ministry Lands belonging to the Second Precinct, and invest the proceeds, upon interest for the Precinct's use, benefit and behoof. The amount of the Fund so raised was £83. 7. 4. 2. The income appears to have been used in part payment of the minister's salary.

SCHOOLS. — In 1756, the town voted that the proportion of School money raised in each of the three Precincts should be expended within said Precinct, according to its pleasure.

Under this vote, the Second Precinct assumed the right to levy a tax on its own inhabitants for the support of its own schools. Nov. 18, 1757, Voted, that a committee be chosen to provide a place to keep the school at next winter in said Precinct. Mar. 8, 1759, Voted, that the Precinct will build and finish a School House, about 25 rods from the meeting-house, on the east side of the country road and northerly of the road to Daniel Potter's, where said roads part, and complete the same by the last of October next — said house to be 25 ft. long, 20 ft. wide, and 7 ft. stud; and that Joseph Stone, Thomas Ball and Samuel Hinckley be a committee to complete the same, with brick for the chimney, at the Precinct's cost.

Voted, that there be granted to be raised and assessed on the polls and estates in said Precinct the sum of £25 to defray the charge and cost of building the school house.

What happened in consequence of this last vote, is told in the following Petition to the General Court, dated April 1760: "This Petition Shews — That the town of Brookfield never did nor could agree to build any one or more school house or houses in said Town,¹ by which the good laws for schooling have been too much evaded, and the people too much deprived of their natural privileges: But at a meeting of the inhabitants in Oct. 1756, they voted that each Precinct should have the town schools kept in their respective Precincts their equal proportion, and the places to be stated by the inhabitants of each of these respective Precincts —

The inhabitants of the Second Precinct, encouraged by said vote, in March 1759, unanimously agreed to a place near their meeting-house and to build a school house, which was finished, and a school has been and is now kept in said house to the great satisfaction and advantage of the Precinct, who in Nov. last granted a sum of £25, to be assessed on their polls and estates, which was done, and committed to Win Ayres, 2d., constable, to collect, to defray the cost of the house, &c. But pains have been taken to prevent the collection of the said tax, as not being in the power of a Precinct to grant money for any use but to build meeting-houses and support ministers —

Wherefore we pray that the constable may be empowered to collect said tax; and further that said Second Precinct may be empowered to grant and collect such sums of money for the future, to be applied to the schooling of their children in the remoter parts of said Precinct, as said Precinct shall agree to."

Apr. 22. On this petition the General Court ordered, "that the constable to whom the above named assessment was committed be and hereby is fully authorized and impowered to collect the tax mentioned."

School Districts. In 1765, the people living in the outskirts were formed into societies or districts, as they severally could agree, each to have the benefit of its respective part of the school money; but "any such remote tax-payer whose son inclines to learn the Tongues other than the English, may have liberty at the Middle school, they having a Grammar School Master." [This is the earliest mention of a Grammar School. It is again referred to in 1798, and also in 1809, and appears to have been maintained constantly, except during some years of the Revolution.] As early as 1770, school houses began to be built in the out districts. In 1771, the Precinct raised its school money by taxation of its own people, the amount this year being 24 pounds. In 1781, the school money granted was 24 pounds hard money; in 1791, 35 pounds; in 1792, 45 pounds; in 1798, 50 pounds; in 1810, $400, (the two last named amounts appear to have been town grants).

In 1791, the Precinct was divided into seven School Districts. The several school houses were then located as follows: the Centre, near the meeting-house; the North West, by Samuel Cheever's; the North, by Theophilus Potter's; the North East, by Nathan Moore's; the East, by Daniel Forbes'; the South East, at the corner near Thomas Hathaway's; the South West, near Wm Ayres, 2d.

School Committee. In 1792, the Precinct chose a committee of seven, "to provide and take care of the several Schools in the Precinct," viz. Benj. Adams, Isaac Church, Nathan Bartlett, Abijah Cutler, Jesse Cutter, Samuel Cheever, and Rufus Hamilton. In 1795, the school committee were: Dea. Benj. Adams, Roger Bruce, John Edmands, Josiah Witt, Thomas Kendrick, Nathaniel Dodge, Jr., Silas Stevens and Isaac Moore. This practice continued till 1805, when the Precinct voted, "To relinquish the right of choosing School Committee men, and leave it to each district to appoint its own." But in 1809, the practice was resumed, and Thompson Rawson, Humphrey Gilbert, Paul Haskell, Luke Potter, Josiah Bush, Kerley Howe and Silas Haskell were chosen school committee, "to furnish the schools in the several districts in said Precinct with teachers, and apply for the money."

LOTTERY SPECULATION. — At a Precinct meeting Mar. 7, 1791, it was voted, "That the treasurer be directed to sell the Old Continental Money now in his hands, amounting to 2,148 dollars, for specie, and that Lt.

Wm Ayres and Capt. John Waite assist him in the disposal thereof; and they are directed to lay out the proceeds of the same in tickets in the Mass. monthly State Lottery, for the benefit of the Precinct." The Committee was further instructed, "to continue in the Lottery the number of tickets that the said Old Money shall purchase, provided the first drawing shall produce to the Precinct a sum sufficient for the purpose; and the overplus, if any, shall from time to time, be deposited in the Precinct treasury."

REV. ELI FORBUSH. — As before stated, Mr. F. was ordained pastor of the Second Precinct church June 3, 1752.

He entered Harvard University in 1744, at the age of 18. At the end of his first year he left college, and enlisted in the Provincial army, in the then opening French and Indian war. Through the influence of friends, he received a discharge, returned to Cambridge, and graduated, 1751; and was settled in North Brookfield the next year. His taste for military life induced him to go as chaplain in the Army, in which rank he served from Mar. 31, to Nov. 15, 1759. [See ante, p. 217.] After his return from this campaign, he uniformly wrote his name Forbes. In 1762, he was requested by the Commissioners in Boston to undertake a mission to the Oneida Indians; and though his people were averse, he left home the first of June, with Asaph Rice, (afterwards minister in Westminster), and Elisha Gunn of Montague, as interpreter. He reached Onoquagie, on the Susquehanna river June 21, where was an Indian settlement of 300 people. His labors were successful, and he gathered a church, and started a school for children, and another for adults. He left the work in the care of Mr. Rice, and returned in September, bringing with him four Indian children, whom he educated, and sent back to their tribe.

The notices in the Precinct records lead to the belief that his pastorate was a successful one. There was some dissatisfaction growing out of his absences as chaplain, and missionary; but nothing occurred to threaten a rupture of the pastoral relation, or to alienate his people, till the opening of the Revolution. Mr. Forbes was naturally conservative, and did not enter into this struggle with the fiery zeal of the more ardent patriots; and some of his hearers went so far as to call him a Tory — then a term of great reproach, and on one occasion to offer him a personal indignity, i.e. to throw stones at his "chair" as he was riding in the highway. He at once asked for a dismissal; and, against the express wishes of his church, insisted on it. The case was referred to a mutual council; and after two days deliberation, and without stating "any grounds of the pastor's uneasiness," the Council advised a dissolution of the pastoral relation, and he was dismissed Mar. 1, 1775. That the accusation of toryism was groundless, is evident from his immediate settlement in a parish distinguished for its outspoken fidelity to the American cause.

Dr. Snell, in his Historical Discourse, says: "Dr. Forbes was a popular preacher, apt, and sometimes striking in his remarks, rather than clear in his perceptions, forcible and convincing in his reasonings. His Sermons appeared better from the desk, than from the press, which is evidence that he more excelled as a pleasant speaker, than as a profound Divine and able reasoner. He held a very respectable rank among the clergymen of this vicinity. He possessed the talent of readily giving good and familiar instruction to children, and winning the affections of most people."

Mr. Forbes was installed over the First Church in Gloucester, June 5, 1776; and died in the pastorate there Dec. 15, 1804. He received the degree of S.T.D. from his alma mater the year of his death.

REV. JOSEPH APPLETON.—After the dismissal of Mr. Forbes, Rev. Mr. Fisher was employed as a candidate for a few months; and Mr. Laban Wheaton for a few weeks. Mr. Joseph Appleton of Ipswich preached as candidate 5 months. And at a Precinct meeting May 23, 1776, a call was given him to settle in the ministry; with the offer of £133. 16. 8 as a "settlement"; and an annual salary of £70 for the first two years, and £80 per annum thereafter. The Church chose a council, and appointed the time for the ordination, in which the Precinct concurred, and Mr. A. was ordained Oct. 3, 1776. The council was entertained at the home of Mrs. Hannah Gilbert, at the cost of £10. 12. 10, and the same was assessed upon the polls and estates of the Precinct.

So great was the depreciation of Province bills, that in Oct. 1779, the Precinct granted "for our pastor's support until Oct. 1780, in addition to his stated salary the sum of two thousand four hundred and twenty pounds, as the currency now is."

Oct. 1781. The Precinct "voted, that the time of Intermission on the Sabbath, from the 1st of Dec. to the 1st of May, be one hour, and the rest of the year 1½ hours; and that the moderator wait on the Rev. Pastor, and inform him of the foregoing vote."

Mr. Appleton graduated at Brown University in 1772, and died in the pastorate, after a short sickness, July 25, 1795, aged 44. Dr. Snell, in his Historical Discourse, says: "Mr. A. is represented to have been a very different man and preacher from Dr. Forbes. To most he was less acceptable as a preacher, and still more quiet, meek and unassuming in spirit, and more steadfast in the doctrines of grace, which he constantly set forth with plainness. He is said to have been ardent in spirit, and animated in delivery. He loved his Saviour and his people, and preached the one to save the other. Pacific in spirit, and lowly in mind, he desired and strove for peace; and would make great sacrifices, rather than contend. Though less distinguished as a student and a speaker, yet I am persuaded that he ought to be held in higher estimation as a man of God, than many who have been more celebrated as pulpit orators."

REV. THOMAS SNELL. — Among the candidates, employed after the death of Mr. Appleton, were Mr. John Fiske, who preached for several months, and received a call to settle; Mr. Nathaniel H. Fletcher, afterwards of Kennebunk, who received two calls, both of which he declined; Rev. Z. S. Moore, afterwards president of Amherst college; and Rev. Charles Briggs, who settled in Rochester.

Mr. Thomas Snell preached his first sermon in North Brookfield, on the last Sabbath in October, 1797; and after 4 or 5 months' probation, was called to settle in the ministry, by a vote of 87 to 15.

The annual salary offered was $400; and the terms of settlement proposed were: "That if two thirds of the legal voters of the society should at any time be dissatisfied with the said Mr. Thomas Snell with respect to his Ministry or otherwise, and should signify their disaffection and the reasons of it to him in writing; and if such matters of grievance cannot be removed, and an amicable compromise take place within the term of one year after such notice be given; and if at the end of the year two thirds of said Society, at a legal meeting called for that purpose, vote that the said Mr. Thomas Snell be dismissed, he shall consider himself as discharged from his ministerial relation to said society; and from that time shall relinquish any further demands for services performed among them.

2. That the said Mr. Thomas Snell shall have liberty to leave the Precinct and Society, when he shall see fit, by giving one year's notice for a compromise as above."

This "new departure" from the custom of settling ministers for life, is understood to have been suggested by Mr. Snell.

The call was accepted; and the Precinct voted to concur with the church in the choice of a council, and the day for the ordination. A committee, viz. Lt. Thomas Bond, Lt. Wm Ayres, Thompson Rawson, Ens. Robert Cutler, Lt. Jason Bigelow, Eli Howe, Jabez Ayres, Lt. Joseph Bush and Wheat Gilbert, was chosen, "To superintend and conduct the council with propriety on the above said day"; and it was agreed to pay Wheat Gilbert $27.75, to provide for the council.

Mr. Snell was ordained June 27, 1798.

In his Historical Discourse, Dr. Snell says: "At the time of my ordination, the church in the North Parish of Brookfield consisted of 80 members, most of them in the decline of life. No small portion of these 80 soon passed away, and the male members were reduced to a very small number. Twenty-five only acted in the matter of inviting me to become their pastor, and two of those expressed a desire to hear further. Considering the small number embraced in the church, and the declining age of many, some gentlemen in the vicinity expressed a concern lest the church should become extinct; and one individual advised me to introduce what was then called the half-way Covenant, i.e., that baptized parents of good morals, though without any pretensions to experimental piety, might unite with the church, and have their children baptized, and be excused from coming to the Lord's Supper, because, unqualified in their own estimation to attend upon such a solemn ordinance, not considering that one ordinance is as sacred as the other. But this plan was never adopted by the Church."

A full account of Dr. Snell and his long pastorate belongs properly to a subsequent page of our annals.

SMALL POX. — This town seems not to have shared in the prevalent prejudice against inoculation as a guard against virulent small pox. Probably it was due to the fact that two of our leading men, viz. Hon. Jedediah Foster and Wm Ranger, went to Esopus, N.Y., entered a hospital there, were inoculated, had the disease, and returned in health. Sept. 30, 1776, the town voted to establish a small pox hospital at the old Silas Walker house, to be in charge of Dr. Wm Thomas and Dr. Jacob Kittridge. A hospital was also established at the Joseph Cutler house. In 1777, John Watson's house was taken for the same purpose. In 1782, hospitals were established in each of the three precincts. In 1797, the town voted to open one or more hospitals, from Oct. 1, to May 1, next year. And the house of Thomas Ranger was taken for patients who should wish to be inoculated. This hospital was under the care of Dr. Francis Foxcroft of Brookfield and Dr. Daniel Baird of the West village. Patients came from the neighboring towns, and even as far as Worcester. Over 200 in all, of different ages, were treated; and not a death occurred. On sunny days the convalescents used to go to the cave and ledges on Slate hill, to get fresh air, play cards, etc.

PICTURE OF OLD TIMES. — Dea. Freeman Walker says: "The contrast between the common articles of diet, 100 years ago, and now, is very striking. Tea was used in families only on Sundays, and special occasions. And flesh meat constituted a much smaller portion of the food of the people. Old Mrs. Hill (the mother of Kittridge Hill) has told me that owing to the scarcity of winter feed, the farmers kept but few cattle; that they were a staple article, almost a legal tender for debts, and the use of their flesh was a luxury not generally enjoyed. She said that meat was usually cooked by boiling, as it was considered a great waste to either broil or roast it, as so much of the juice was lost. When boiled, the liquor was always used in the shape of bean porridge or broth, which were the common articles of daily food. She said that she once attended a party at Esq. Hale's father's, and they had hashed meat for supper, which was considered a great treat.

"Old Mr. Pickard used to go to Boston once a year and get a barrel of rum, which he brought up chained to the axle of his ox-cart wheels. This would last him and his neighbors a year.

"The use of fine flour bread is another thing which has come about in comparatively recent times. Since my recollection, the purchase of 7 lbs. of flour was more thought of in the family, than is a barrel now. I have heard Col. Nye say that in the family where he was brought up, and lived ten years, there was not a particle of fine flour used at the table where he ate."

The following anecdote was told by Mr. Amasa Walker, as characteristic of the close of the century. Capt. John Potter of the Lower Village, was the watchmaker, and a leading man in public affairs. His sign intimated, watchmaking and "Mathematical Instruments." But in truth he was a universal genius, to whom everybody went for all delicate and difficult mechanical makings and mendings.

Not far from his shop was the village tavern. The hostess was a smart, sociable lady, well posted in her vocation, but not versed in technical terms of uncommon use. One day in the absence of her husband, a stranger called, and ordered dinner; and while it was in preparation, made many inquiries of the landlady about the town, its trades, etc. Among other things he asked, "Who is your clergyman?" It was a new word to her; and hesitating a moment, she answered, "Capt. Potter."

When the husband came home at evening, she said to him—"a gentleman took dinner here to-day, and asked a great many questions about the place; and among others, who the clergyman was; and I told him, Capt. Potter; for as I did not know what he meant, and as Capt. Potter did every thing, I thought he must be the clergyman, if we had any."

THE TOWN OF NORTH BROOKFIELD. — The first move towards obtaining town privileges was made in 1810. An article was inserted in the Parish warrant, May 13, 1810, To consider whether the Parish will vote to be set off as a Separate Town from the other Parishes, with all the privileges of a Town. On the question, Will the inhabitants send a petition to the Legislature, for the purpose of being separated from the other precincts and be incorporated into a Township by the name of North Brookfield? 82 voted Aye, and 10 voted Nay. Daniel Gilbert, Esq. Lieut. Jason Biglow, Luke Potter, Capt. Aaron Forbes and Dr. Jacob Kittridge were appointed a committee to draft a petition, which was as follows: "To the Hon^{bl} Senate and House of Representatives —

The Inhabitants of the Second Precinct in Brookfield humbly pray that they may be set off from the other Precincts in said Town, and be incorporated into a Township by the name of North Brookfield; and that the Territorial limits of such Incorporation may be the same as those whereby the said Precinct is now designated.

“And the said Inhabitants would beg leave further to state, that from the extensive limits of said Town, it being separated into three distinct precincts, together with the necessary mode of transacting the business of the same, by annual rotation in each Precinct, they not only find the distance of travel burdensome, but, in considering the transacting of their parochial concerns a two-fold labor and expense; That the offices of said Town are of necessity distant from the Centre, and that from the number of its Inhabitants, and the multiplicity of the business of the said Town, the term of one day insufficient for transacting the same.”

Voted, Capt. Aaron Forbes an agent to present said petition to the Legislature.

Dec. 31, 1810. Voted, Lieut. Jason Biglow an agent to support the petition now in the General Court.

Voted, Daniel Gilbert, Esq., Luke Potter, Capt. Abel Harwood, Capt. Wm Ayres and Moses Bond be a committee to associate with their agent. Capt. Forbes was paid $7, for his services at Boston, and Lieut. Biglow $13.85.

The application failed; and April 15, 1811, another petition was sent to the Legislature, in charge of Daniel Gilbert, Esq., as agent for the Precinct. This new petition stated the bounds of the proposed town, as they were defined in the Act establishing the Second Precinct [see ante, p. 250] as far as to the northeast corner of Joshua Dodge, Jr's land; and adds—“Thence westwardly on the most southwardly lines of lands now owned by Samuel Waite and Daniel Waite, and Calvin and Francis Stone to the said Calvin and Francis' southwest corner; Thence northwardly on the most westwardly lines of said Calvin and Francis Stone's land, to the line dividing the Town of New Braintree from the Town of Brookfield—the lands of said Calvin and Francis Stone and part of Whitney hill (so called) having been set to the said town of Brookfield from New Braintree, more than twenty years ago, in consideration of territory taken from said Second Parish and annexed to the town of New Braintree, and has since been considered a portion of the Second Parish, and been assessed as part of the same.” The bounds were then continued on the lines of New Braintree, Oakham and Spencer to George Harrington's northeast corner. “And further, your petitioners beg leave to state, that they are tenants in common with the two other Parishes, in a certain Burying Ground, lying in the Third Parish, and that as there are many families in said Second Precinct whose deceased connections are deposited there, your Petitioners humbly pray, they may be permitted to retain the same interest therein which they now possess.

Act of Incorporation.

SECT. 1. Be it enacted etc. That all that part of the town of Brookfield which has been heretofore called and known by the name of the Second or North Parish (excepting that part of said territory now lying south of the post-road leading from Worcester through Spencer to Springfield), together with the inhabitants thereon, be, and the same is hereby incorporated into a separate town by the name of NORTH BROOKFIELD. And the said town of North Brookfield is hereby vested with all the powers and privileges, and shall also be subject to all the duties to which other corporate towns are entitled and subjected by the constitution and laws of this Commonwealth.

SECT. 2. Be it further enacted, That the inhabitants of the said town of North Brookfield shall be entitled to hold such proportion of all the personal property now belonging to and owned in common by the inhabitants of the town of Brookfield, as the property of the said inhabitants of North Brookfield bears to the property of all the inhabitants of the town of Brookfield, according to the last valuation thereof.

SECT. 3. Be it further enacted, That the inhabitants of the said town of North Brookfield shall be holden to pay all arrears of taxes due from them, together with their proportion (to be ascertained as aforesaid) of all the debts now due and owing from the said town of Brookfield, or which may be hereafter found due and owing by reason of any contract or other matter and thing heretofore entered into, or now existing.

SECT. 4. Be it further enacted, That the said town of North Brookfield shall be holden to support their proportion of the present poor of the town of Brookfield, which proportion shall be ascertained by the present valuation of the town; and all persons who may hereafter become chargeable, as paupers, to the town of Brookfield and North Brookfield, shall be considered as belonging to that town, on the territory of which they had their settlement at the time of passing this act, and shall in future be chargeable to that town only.

SECT. 5. Be it further enacted, That the said town of North Brookfield shall be holden to pay their proportion of all state, town and county taxes assessed on the inhabitants of the said town of Brookfield, until a new valuation shall be made of the said Towns. Provided, That the said town of North Brookfield shall be holden, until the further order of the Legislature to pay to the town of Brookfield such proportion of any of the expenses of maintaining the bridges and causeways over the rivers in the town of Brookfield, as a committee of the Court of Sessions for the county of Worcester shall determine ; and said Court of Sessions are hereby authorized, on application of either of the inhabitants of Brookfield or North Brookfield, from time to time, to appoint a committee for the above purpose, whose report, made to and accepted by said court, shall be binding on the said towns.

SECT. 6. Be it further enacted, That any Justice of the Peace for the county of Worcester, upon application therefor, is hereby authorized to issue his warrant, directed to any freeholder in the said town of North Brookfield, requiring him to notify and warn the inhabitants thereof to meet at such time and place as shall be appointed in said warrant, for the choice of such officers as towns are by law required to choose at their annual town meetings. [Passed Feb. 28, 1812.]

Feb. 20, 1818, the Legislature passed an Act, to provide for the repeal of the fifth section of the above Act, as follows :

Be it enacted, that Austin Flint of Leicester, Nathaniel Jones of Barre, and Joseph Cummings of Ware, are hereby appointed a committee to hear and consider the claim of Brookfield on the one part, and of North Brookfield on the other ; and finally to determine whether the town of North Brookfield ought in future, to pay any part of the expenses of maintaining the bridges and causeways in the town of Brookfield . . .

SECT. 2. Be it further enacted, That from and after the time the report of said committee, shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, the said fifth Section of said Act incorporating the town of North Brookfield, shall be repealed ; and the duties and liabilities of said North Brookfield, resulting from the said section, shall altogether cease . . .

At this point the historian begins to realize the irreparable loss consequent upon the destruction of the North Brookfield Town Records by fire. The labor of gathering materials for the fifty years covered by those Records has been difficult and discouraging, and in many respects results are unsatisfactory ; and the history of those years must necessarily be fragmentary and topical. What has been attempted is, to present fully the leading and essential facts and movements that have contributed to build up the town's industries, and give character to its inhabitants. Fortunately, a few persons were living when this work was commenced, whose memories covered the period in question. The Historical Discourses of Dr. Snell contain much important matter ; some papers prepared by Messrs. Freeman and Amasa Walker are accessible ; a large amount of historical material has been collected and saved by Mr. Henry E. Waite ; and the results of Mr. Charles Adams, Jr.'s five years of earnest labor in searching family records, and drawing forth family reminiscences ; all these, and the constant aid of members of the committee of publication, have been at the writer's disposal ; and to these sources is due whatever of completeness marks the remaining pages of the book.

It will help the reader to appreciate the progress of the town, if we can draw a true picture of the place as it was when the present century opened. Dr. Snell says: "At the time of my settlement (1798). the scenery was rural beyond almost any other town in the region, the population everywhere very sparse, and not five — if there was one — well-finished and neatly painted house in town — and but three or four dwelling houses within about half a mile of our meeting-house, which of all others was the place of the greatest retirement, except on the Sabbath. The spot, while far from central, furnished no eligible sites for building; and there being no mercantile business in town, but upon a very small scale, and but one mechanic [Capt. John Potter] within nearly a mile, the house of worship had around it through all the week, a remarkable stillness; disturbed only by the coming and going of the sickly, the palsied, those afflicted with swellings, disjointed bones, broken limbs, and the diseased of every sort, who resorted for relief, like the multitude around Bethesda, and with much the same confidence of a cure, to your far-famed surgeon, Dr. Jacob Kittridge, whose decease in 1813 was so much lamented. The age and infirmities and consequent coldness of your former house of worship, without any means of warming it in severe weather, together with the distance of dwelling houses (except two or three), rendered the condition of the people on a cold Sabbath every thing but tolerable; and the labors of the minister wholly useless, unless to afflict his hearers with a long discourse for not providing a warmer house. When almost every one was anxiously looking for the close of service that he might thaw out from his morning's freeze, and that desire was to be read in the countenance without danger of mistake, you may well imagine that the feelings of the speaker could not be of the most pleasant sort, especially when he had spent half the week, day and night, in preparing his discourse. I wonder that so many people then attended public worship in severe weather, making their way for miles to God's house, without any means of warming, till the noon intermission. And now I as much wonder that so many absent themselves from the sanctuary, as I then did that so many attended.

"Every individual who went to meeting, with the exception of some half dozen, must be either a pedestrian or a horseman. For those who did not walk, there was but one mode of conveyance, and that the saddle and pillion. A wagon was a thing unknown; and as for chaises, there were but three or four in town,¹ and scarcely an umbrella for protection from rain. People of both sexes were obliged to take the storm as it was sent; and thought it no great task to walk in clusters two or three miles to the sanctuary.

“The inhabitants were all husbandmen — even the few mechanics who wrought at their trades merely to supply town customers, were farmers upon a larger or smaller scale. There was not more than a single mechanic whose ware was purchased abroad ; while we were wholly dependent upon other places for most kinds of mechanical business, no less than for merchandise. . . . The population of the Precinct was then about 1,100, nor did it essentially vary for nearly 30 years.”

At that date, Wait's Corner, in the northwest part, and the forge and mills on Five-mile river, were the main business centres of the place.

The clothier's shops, at these points, have been described in Chapter I. ; as has Capt. Potter's mechanical laboratory at the Lower Village, in a preceding page of this chapter.

The stores — referred to by Dr. Snell — were Joseph Thurston's, who lived at the Harvey Belcher place, and kept a barrel of new rum, ditto of sugar, a chest of tea, a few nutmegs and notions ; Samuel Hinckley's, west of Buxton's hill, who kept molasses, which he bought by the hogs-head. West India rum, and logwood, indigo and madder, some English calicoes, and an assortment of spices ; and William Fiske's, near the meeting-house, who promised to rival Hinckley's, but died in 1800.

The taverns were Wait's, near Woolcott's Corner ; Thomas Ball's, at the Lower Village ; and Capt. Harwood's, on the hill near the Amasa Walker place.

The village blacksmith was Dea. Walter Walker, at the Amasa Walker place ; John Hinds, in the east part ; Wyman Bartlett, near the Walnut Grove cemetery ; and Chellis Keep in the west part. The Jenkses did blacksmithing at their forge, and their two trip hammers gave them special facility for doing heavy work.

Joseph Parks, the nail maker, lived in the southeast part.

Thomas Barns was the gunsmith.

Salmon Dean had a tannery in Spunky Hollow ; Francis Stone had another at Wait's Corner ; David Thompson and Daniel Wetherbee had a tan-yard opposite the E. Hill place.

Elijah and Daniel Richardson were the wheelwrights ; and Paul Haskell did such work when he had leisure. He depended on farming for a living ; and the Richardsons were forced to seek a more remunerative calling among the rich virgin soils of Vermont. Their work here was mainly the making of ox-cart wheels, axles and tongues, as the carpenters or the farmers themselves could get out the cart-body, and the ox-sleds. Such a vehicle as a pleasure wagon — and that without springs — was a rare luxury, as late as 1812.

The carpenters were Bela Stoddard, Josiah Parker, Nathan Carruth and Joseph Poland ; but every thriving man could hew, and mortise, and lay shingles.

Dea. Benj. Adams and Ezra Batcheller, Sen. were the principal coopers.

The cobblers of that day, were Ezra Richmond, who had a small shop in the east part of the town; Malachi Tower, who lived in the old Dempsey house; Thomas Tucker and Abiel Deap. They had a bench in their kitchens; but used to go round to the farmers' houses in the fall with their kit, and stay a week or so, mending and making the family supply of shoes.

Tom Humphrey made and peddled peeled brooms; but the father or grandfather usually did this work of a winter's evening.

Wm Hubbard, a wounded English soldier, was the tailor; and Abigail Wright the tailoress; but the woman did as much cutting and fitting as the man; and in a majority of cases, both tailoring and dress-making were done by the housewife or a maiden sister, at home.

Spinning and weaving — for every family owned a great and little wheel, and the loom was still a common appendage to the unfinished garret — were "household arts," as also was wool-dyeing. The dye-pot kept its place in the chimney corner till the century was well opened; and the madder tub was displaced only when Dea. Ellis of the West Precinct introduced his new method of coloring scarlet. Lamb's wool cloth, skilfully fulled, and dressed, and colored, made a red riding-hood that set off to good advantage a plump face and side curls, and the girls knew it, and so did their mothers.

Joseph Thurston had a small potash house in his garden; and every farmer annually set up a leach-tub, for extracting lye for soap making. Samuel Stevens and Elisha Drake had a small pottery, where they made brown earthen ware. Justus Stevens was the sieve maker.

The four principal cider mills, were Cyrus Ayres' in the east part, William Ayres, 2d's in the west part, Samuel Cheevers' near Capt. Nye's, and Jonathan Wetherbee's, where the Big Shop now is.

The only brick house in all the Brookfields, in 1798, was one built by Maj. Peter Harwood, soon after the Revolution. It stood $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of No. Brookfield village; is now owned by Charles S. Knight.

Eleazer Bradshaw, the hatter, was the prim bachelor of those times, who always wore a Quaker hat of his own manufacture, and was once sent as representative to the General Court. He sold groceries in a small way; was honest; kept his own counsel; and died worth $40,000.

1812. — The first town meeting was held on Tuesday, Mar. 10, 1812. Daniel Gilbert, Esq., was chosen moderator, and Moses Bond, town clerk.

In June of this year, war was declared by the United States against Great Britain. Public sentiment was divided in relation to the reasons for, and the righteousness of the step. But, without regard to politics, the Brookfield Light Infantry Co., when ordered out by Lt. Col. Salem Town, promptly responded, and marched to the defence of Boston. They were in camp at the "Rope Walk," South Boston, Sept. 8, to Oct. 30, 1814.

Company Roll: Lewis Abbott, captain; Nathaniel Lynde, lieutenant; Daniel Drake, ensign; Wm Hastings, Bensley Davis, Pliny Upham, Jona. Moore, sergeants; Seth B. Otis, Benj. Adams, Cheney Rice, Foster Newton, corporals; Nathan Doane, Parker Johnson, Samuel Stevens, Samuel Spooner, musicians; privates, Wm Barrett, Rufus Barrows, Sylvanus Brigham, Cheney Dewing, Ephraim Dewing, Dexter Forbes, Reuben Gilbert, Nathaniel Harwood, Daniel Matthews, Cheney Olds, George Olds, Jonathan Olds, Solomon F. Olds, Edmund Potter, Henry Seyers, Lewis Smith, Joel Upham, Otis Waite, Geo. Wilder, Leonard Winslow.

INDUSTRIES. — In Chapter I. were enumerated and described all those industries which depended on water-power for their successful prosecution. In this chapter will be described only those which depend on mechanical skill, and are driven by hand-power, horse-power or steam-power; and the list will be chiefly confined to such as can properly be classed as public enterprises. And as will appear, these several enterprises are all in a single line of business.

The seed which has developed into the great tree of North Brookfield's prosperity, was planted in 1810, by Oliver Ward, who came from Grafton, where the business of shoe-making had already been established. "Previous to the shoe business," says Dr. Snell in his Historical Discourse of 1850, "the people of this town with a very few exceptions, were farmers, and were making next to no progress in any thing profitable, or calculated to elevate their character and promote the cause of morality or civilization. They had no productive employment, and did but little else through the winter months, but to get their fuel, [sit by the kitchen fire,] drink their cider, and tend their cattle. There were many poor families — poor houses — and poorly furnished. The mechanics were few, and did business upon a very narrow scale. With one or two exceptions only, all their customers were their neighbors. The introduction of the shoe business and its successful prosecution, which furnished profitable employment to almost all classes of people, in a few years put a new face upon things, bringing ready money into the hands of the diligent and laborious poor, made them comfortable livers, and freed from debt, and put spare money into their pockets. The extension of this business soon began to increase our population — buildings were repaired — children handsomely clothed — new habitations began to rise and multiply, till this flourishing village with a busy population stands before you, as the result of diligence and reformation from some of our old and impoverishing habits. Instead of sending the products of the farm to a distant market, it is with scarcely an exception, more than consumed among ourselves. Most of the people seem to have money enough to purchase any and every thing they wish, and even many things they would do better without — and defray expenses that never ought to be incurred — which serve to waste precious time, and impoverish and corrupt the mind, rather than increase rational enjoyment and intellectual edification.

“We are greatly indebted for our temporal prosperity to gentlemen who have so steadily and honorably for many years, gone forward in this manufacturing enterprise. If they have found it for their gain, we are to rejoice in it. Who goes a warfare at his own charges? The ox that treads out the corn is not to be muzzled. Who would subject himself to all this care, and labor, and risk, and vexation, for nothing? While they are promoting the prosperity of others, it would be painful to think that they must lose all themselves. Their past influence in support of order and correct habits, and religious institutions, and benevolent operations, and good principles, ought not to be forgotten.”

OLIVER WARD. — As already intimated, to Oliver Ward belongs the honor of starting the manufacture of sale shoes in North Brookfield; and his was the earliest establishment of the kind west of Worcester. Mr. Adams says of him: “Mr. Ward learned the tanner’s trade of Clark Brown of Grafton; came from Grafton to North Brookfield a little before 1810, and for a short time carried on the tanning business in Spunky Hollow. He started a shoe manufactory here in 1810, depending mainly on the Southern market for sales of his goods. At first, only sewed work was done. But after a short time, pegged work was introduced. Mr. Ward made his own pegs. Maple logs were sawed into sections of the proper length, which were then split with a long thin knife into splints, the points cut with a stiff knife, and then the splint divided into pegs. The next improvement was to cut the points of the pegs in the blocks with a knife and mallet before splitting; and the next was to cut the points with a toothed gouge driven like a carpenter’s plane; and the next to do the whole by machinery.

“The business increased gradually, so that in the year 1832 it had grown from “the day of small things,” to an annual production of 65,000 pairs, of the cash value of $52,000. Tyler Batcheller, who had learned the trade in Grafton, worked as journeyman for Mr. Ward 8 years, living in his family. Ezra Batcheller learned the trade of shoemaking at Mr. Ward’s, and lived in his family 6 years. Others who served an apprenticeship with Mr. W., and afterwards went into business for themselves in this town, were, Gideon B. Dewing, Samuel S. Edmands, Solomon M. Edmands, William Johnson, Hiram Ward, Charles Duncan, Daniel Whitney, Jr., Edmund Smith, Charles Newcomb; and Harvey Belcher, Otis Waite, John F., Jeremiah and Cheney Dewing, Otis Daniels, Amphion Gates, Henry and Rice Johnson, Joseph W. and Moses Thompson, Ezra Green, Tilly P., and Wm A. Snow, Nymphas Whiting, Dexter, and Elisha P. Perry, Wm H. Ayres, Dennis Ward, Harrison Harwood, Charles Adams, Marcus Hitchcock, John Haven, Levi Hamilton, and others, learned the trade, and made it the means of a livelihood.

“Mr. Ward’s business was largely extended; and when the ‘hard times’ of 1837 came on, he was obliged to yield to the pressure, with all the other firms in town. His health soon gave way, and he did not resume business. He died in 1839, leaving an honorable reputation for integrity and faithfulness in every relation in life, and unassuming manners that won the regards of all. His large family were well educated, both at home and at school. His wife was a lady of distinguished domestic qualities, as well as devoted piety.”

T. AND E. BATCHELLER.—The following account of this firm, and the men who were associated in its management, was prepared by Mr. Charles Adams, Jr., and was the last literary work of his life. It is printed, without alteration, from his manuscript.

Of all the men who have been citizens of this town since its incorporation, no one, probably, has done so much to promote its material growth and prosperity as Deacon Tyler Batcheller; and a history of the town, without a brief sketch, at least, of his active and useful career, would lack an essential element. He may truly be called the founder of the now large and flourishing central village of North Brookfield. He was born, as will be seen in the genealogical record, Dec. 20, 1793, in the town of Sutton, where he lived with his father till April 1802, when the family removed to this town, which, however, was then the North parish, or “Second Precinct in Brookfield”; his father purchasing of Solomon & Edmund Matthews by Deed Aug. 19, 1801, and for many years occupying the farm ever since known as the “Batcheller place”, now, (1885) owned by J. Winslow Bryant. At an early age, probably in his 15th year, he went to Grafton and learned the trade of shoe-making of Mr. Nathan Johnson. At the close of his apprenticeship there he returned to North Brookfield, and was employed in the establishment of Mr. Oliver Ward who, in 1810, had commenced in this town the manufacture of “sale shoes”, the first and only manufactory of the kind in the State, west of Grafton. In the family of Mr. Ward he found a pleasant and congenial home for about eight years.

In 1819 he commenced business on his own account, at the “Wetherbee house”, so called, which stood on the spot now occupied by the house of Mrs. Erastus Hill. Having married, the same year, he resided there with his family ; the back part of the house serving as his manufactory. At first his entire business consisted only in what shoes he could make with his own hands ; soon, however, taking into his service one or two apprentices, and his brother Ezra, who had already learned the trade of Mr. Ward. The first shoes he made were chiefly of a low priced quality, specially adapted to the Southern trade. These he packed in empty flour-barrels and consigned to Mr. Enoch Train, who in those days ran a line of sailing packets between Boston and Havana. On these small consignments a large per cent. of profit was realized. In 1821, he purchased the "Skerry house" and farm in the centre of what is now the main village of the town, expecting to enter into possession the first of the following April ; but in February 1822 his dwelling and shop at the Wetherbee place were totally destroyed by fire, and he at once removed his family to his new purchase, the "Skerry House", where he resumed and continued his business in an out building on the premises, until 1824. In that year, having previously taken into his service several additional employes, he built a small two story shop, which is now a part of the immense structure known far and wide, as the "Big Shop", into which, January 1, 1825, he removed his business, and at the same date took into partnership his brother Ezra, continuing the same business, though somewhat enlarged, under the firm of T. & E. Batcheller. — From this time forward to the end of his life, the two brothers were associated as partners through all the changes in their business ; and in giving a history of it, their names cannot be dissociated. Tyler, the senior, attended to the purchase of stock and to all other business abroad ; while Ezra was the efficient and popular Superintendent, almost always at home, and at his post, giving direction to all matters pertaining to the manufactory. — Harmonious in all their business relations, and interests, as well as in all measures devised for the public weal, the act of one was the act of both ; and in most matters their names were usually coupled, and they were familiarly spoken of as "the Deacon and Ezra".

They now added to their business the manufacture of "Batcheller's Retail Brogan", an article adapted to the New England trade, and kept for sale in all the stores in this and many of the neighboring towns ; their main business, however, being the manufacture of goods for the Southern and Western States. The firm of T. & E. Batcheller continued, with a constantly increasing business until January 1, 1830, when, by the admission of Freeman Walker, it was changed to "T. & E. Batcheller & Walker". The business having largely increased, the factory was now enlarged to three times its original size. In 1831, they introduced the manufacture of Russet Brogans, specially for the trade of the Southern States — the first that were made in Massachusetts. They soon became a leading article in the shoe trade and continued to be so for many years. Mr. Walker retired from the firm in 1834, and the firm resumed its former style of "T. & E. Batcheller". At this time the business had increased from its small beginnings to what was then considered very large; but the manufacture for an entire year then was probably no more than the product of a single week in the "big shop" at the present time. Nothing that could properly be called machinery had been introduced to prepare the stock for bottoming, none of which was done in the factory, but was put out and done by workmen in their small shops in this, and most of the towns in the vicinity—in some instances the stock was carried to a distance of twenty to thirty miles.

The firm of T. & E. Batcheller continued until June 10, 1852, when Charles Adams Jr., Alfred H. Batcheller, William C. King and Hervey J. Batcheller were admitted to the firm, and its style changed to T. & E. Batcheller & Co.; meanwhile a store had been established in Boston for the transaction of their business, and Tyler Batcheller, had found it necessary, for greater convenience, to remove his residence to Boston the latter part of 1848. — Mr. Adams retired from the firm January 1, 1860, the firm name remaining the same, and Hervey J. Batcheller retired soon after. The business had then increased, from the day of small things, — to nearly a million and a half of dollars annually. In April 1861, the Southern rebellion broke out, paralyzing for a while, almost the whole business of the country. This firm suffered with the rest, and their business being very largely with the Southern States, their losses were proportionally large. A suspension was inevitable, and they were temporarily under the general financial cloud. But an arrangement, highly honorable to them, was soon made, and in a few months they were enabled to pay, and did pay every dollar of their indebtedness, principal and interest. But Tyler Batcheller, the founder and for years the sole proprietor and manager of the business, and the efficient senior partner of the firm from its beginning, did not live to see that fortunate consummation. — The disappointment and anxiety caused by the apparent loss of a large fortune—the accumulations of a half century of successful business—the inability to meet present pecuniary liabilities; the future darkened by the civil war in which the nation was then involved, the termination and result of which could not be anticipated by any human foresight;—in the midst of this accumulation of adverse and discouraging circumstances, and probably to some extent in consequence of them, his health failed, and his constitution, never robust, and which had begun to feel the effects of advancing years, seemed entirely to give way, and after a brief confinement to his house and bed, and without any clearly defined disease he died, October 8, 1862, nearly sixty-nine years of age, — apparently of mere exhaustion of the vital powers, accelerated, probably, by mental care and anxiety. Thus ended a life distinguished for industry, energy, perseverance, integrity and usefulness. If his life had been spared but a few months longer he might have seen the cloud, which overhung their business at the time of his death, dispelled, all the pecuniary liabilities of the firm paid in full, an ample competency for himself and family retrieved from the wreck of the old business, and a most favorable prospect for a future business, which, although he did not live to see it, was more than realized by the surviving partners, of whom his brother Ezra was thenceforward to the end of his life the able and efficient senior partner. Mr. King retired from the firm in 1865.

In the early years of Tyler Batcheller there were no special indications of the prominent positions he was destined to fill in the community, and in the business world. In boyhood he was noted for his mild and peaceful disposition; never zealously mingling with his contemporaries in their noisy and boisterous sports; then and always modest and unassuming in his deportment; improving to the best of his ability the very limited advantages afforded in those days for schooling. A very few weeks in the district school each winter being the extent of his school education — a defect which was ever a source of regret to him.

He was very early inured to habits of industry and economy, which he retained through life. The following incident exemplifies both traits. The first three years of his service with Mr. Ward were the last three years of his minority, and his stipulated wages went to his father; over and above which, during that time he earned and saved five hundred dollars — a large amount for those days — the interest on which, as he told the writer, was his self-restricted annual allowance for clothing for several years — until he went into business on his own account.

He united with what is now the First Congregational church in North Brookfield, June 8, 1817. In the spring of 1818, in connection with Joseph A. (afterward Deacon) Moore, he organized and superintended the first Sabbath School in town, and for sixteen years he was a member of the supervising committee of the same. —

September 15, 1820 he was elected a deacon, when he was twenty seven years of age, and continued in that office twenty eight years — until he removed his residence to Boston.

He was married April 6, 1819, to Miss Nancy Jenks, daughter of Mr. Nicholas Jenks, one of the early residents of the town. She was a most estimable lady and helpmeet, the mother of all his children. Her early and lamented death in 1828, was a great loss to the whole community. She was born August 1796, and died Oct. 5, 1828, leaving four small children — three daughters and a son. He married for his second wife, Oct. 8, 1829, Miss Abigail Jones Lane, daughter of Capt. Samuel Lane, a very worthy young lady who had been an inmate of his family four years, and had the care of all his children, to whom she was now called to be a second mother; the oldest was only seven years old at the death of their mother. She lived to see the daughters all married, and survived her husband six years. She was born at Bedford, Mass. August 1, 1810. and died at Boston, March 10, 1877.

The "Skerry farm" which he purchased in 1821, covered a large portion of what is now the central village—the whole of the northeast quarter and part of the southeast, on no part of which was there any building except the old Skerry house in which he lived until 1836, when it was demolished and a new house built on its site, and which was his home until he removed to Boston in 1848. It is now occupied as a part of the "Big Shop", and is the southwesterly portion of it.—About 1825 the land on the streets by which the farm was bounded, began to be wanted for building lots. In disposing of them Mr. Batcheller, with a view to the development and growth of the village, rather than to his individual interest, adopted the liberal policy of selling them at only about their value for agricultural purposes, to men of good character who would probably become permanent citizens, and to workmen whose services were wanted in, or near his manufactory. The first sale was to his brother and partner Ezra Batcheller, where Frank A. Smith now lives: and in a few years those streets were lined by neat residences owned and occupied by a very desirable class of citizens. When "Grove Street" was opened through his land, and real estate had largely increased in value, he was asked by several individuals at the same time to set a price on building-lots, he declined, giving as a reason that several of his interested friends had intimated to him that at the prices at which he had been parting with building lots, he was doing less than justice to himself and perhaps to them. He accordingly proposed to leave the price to be made by two disinterested men mutually agreed upon, and that he would abide by their decision. The proposition was accepted, and carried into effect.

In 1848 it became necessary, for the convenience of the extensive business of the firm, that he should remove to Boston, which he did in December of that year, and as was said at his funeral, "he carried his religion with him". He attended meeting regularly at Park Street church, and November 2, 1850 he and his wife united with that church, then under the pastoral care of Rev. A. L. Stone, now of San Francisco, Cal.—September 17, 1857, he was elected a Deacon of that church, and to the close of life remained an active and devoted officer. He was also for several years a member of the Prudential Committee of that Society.—

Mr. Batcheller was an original member of the Boston Board of Trade: was chosen a member of its Committee of Arbitration, and served on other important committees.

In removing his legal residence to Boston Mr. Batcheller did not forget the town of North Brookfield, where he had passed nearly half a century of his life, — nor the Church and Society there with which he had been connected more than thirty years, as was shewn by his frequent visits and acts of liberality and beneficence.

Ezra Batcheller, the junior member of the original firm, if less prominent before the public, was, equally with his brother, an efficient and essential factor in the growth and prosperity of the manufacturing establishment. And to his business tact and energy is largely due the prompt extrication of the concern from their temporary embarrassment in 1861. He was a large-hearted, public spirited man, of earnest piety; and his memory is fragrant of good deeds and an honorable and useful life.

The present firm name is E. and A. H. Batcheller and Company; and this is the only Boot and Shoe Manufactory now in operation in North Brookfield. In 1875, as appears from the Census Report, they gave employment to 927 males and 150 females, and manufactured goods of the value of $1,817,000. Their facilities for business have been considerably increased since that date.

HIRAM WARD. He was second cousin of Oliver Ward, and learned the trade of shoemaking in his shop, and started in business for himself about 1830. He lived in the centre village nearly opposite the hotel. With a thorough knowledge of the trade, he combined good judgment, and Yankee push; and his business rapidly increased, and he prospered, till 1837, when he went down in the general crash. He settled with his creditors at 62½ cents on the dollar. After this he left town and located in Philadelphia, where his wife, a most estimable woman, of great energy and tact, opened a millinery establishment. This enterprise proved successful, and they accumulated a large estate. In after years, Mr. Ward came to North Brookfield, and paid the balance of his old creditors' accounts in full — an example of integrity and honor, too rare in our day.

JOHNSON and EDSON started a boot manufactory in the centre village, soon after Hiram Ward, and were equally prospered; but went down with the rest in 1837.

DEWING and EDMANDS began the shoe business, at the old Edmands place, in 1835, where they remained doing a safe and successful trade till 1852. The firm of Edmands and Duncan took the business that year, having built a large shop on Summer street. Later the firm was Edmands, Duncan and Hurlburt. The partnership was dissolved about 1875.

According to the Census of 1837, the total value of boots (24,170 pairs) and shoes (559,900 pairs) manufactured in North Brookfield the previous year, was $470,316. The population of the town then was 1,509.

Other firms who have started in business since 1837, and manufactured boots and shoes in this town, for a longer or shorter term, and with greater or less success, have been: C. & D. Whiting, Whiting & Haskell, Whiting, Lowe & Co., Bond & Jenks, H. B. & J. N. Jenks, Woodis & Crawford, Jenks & Miller, Gulliver & Jenks, Gulliver, Duncan & Howe, Gulliver & Stone, P. K. Howe, Fullman, Livermore & Montague, Olmstead & R. Walker, A. & E. D. Batcheller. The last named firm started in 1860, in a shop which is now the Railroad station, where they continued in business till 1875.

CURRYING.—In 1855, North Brookfield made return of one currying shop, employing 4 hands; value of leather curried, $28,467.04. "The business is job-work."

LASTS.—The statistics of 1855, give: Lasts manufactured, 28,766; value, $6,000.

BOXES.—In 1875, the Census Returns credit North Brookfield with wooden boxes manufactured of the value of $30,000.

POCKET BOOKS.—About 1840, several persons engaged in the manufacture of pocket books in a small way; near that date the business went into the hands of Henry H. Sparks, who carried it on till 1876. In 1855, the published returns were: Number of pocket books made, 27,000; value, $10,000; males employed, 2; females, 18. In 1875, the value of goods manufactured was reported at $15,000. In some intervening years, it was much greater.

SCHOOLS.—No change of consequence was made in the school system, when the Precinct became a Town. The eight school districts remained practically unaltered, except that the Centre was divided into two districts; and prudential committees, with full powers, were chosen in each, till 1869, when by vote of the town, the district system was abolished, and the whole care of the schools was put into the hands of the school committee. The several houses, which had been built at the expense of the districts, were appraised; and the sum, $10,000, was raised by tax, and each tax payer credited in his bill with his proportionate share.

The amount raised by taxation, for the support of Schools, in different (though not consecutive) years, has been as follows: 1810, $400; 1823, $800; 1839, $1,000; the number of children in town this year, from 4 to 16, was 376; number in actual attendance, 470; school committee, Rev. Thomas Snell, Bonum Nye, Freeman Walker; 1848, $1,200; number of children, 4-16, 437; 1855, $1,500; number of children, 4-16, 449; 1861, $2,000; number of children, 5-15, 523; 1868, $4,700; number of children, 5-15, 346; 1875, $7,000; number of children, 5-15, 761; 1885, $8,000; number of children, 5-15, 800; number of schools, 19; 1886, $9,000.

NORTH BROOKFIELD VILLAGE, EAST OF MAIN STREET.

W. H. RAY, ENGRAVER.

The high school was opened Aug. 19, 1857, under the care of O. W. Whitaker, a graduate of Middlebury College. The average number of scholars the first year, was 45. Average membership in 1885, 65.

SABBATH SCHOOL. — Dr. Snell says: "In 1817, the pastor commenced a new exercise on the Sabbath, the instruction of youth upon moral and religious subjects, after the close of public worship. This was done by question and answer. The attendance was from 10 to 20. The next year, at the solicitation of a few pious females, Dea. Tyler Batcheller and Dea. J. A. Moore organized a Sabbath School, which continued through the warm season. This was repeated each summer till 1821, when at a meeting May 25, the church appointed Bonum Nye, Hervey Belcher and Walter Walker to assist and encourage the two deacons. Since then the church has annually appointed a superintendent, with four assistants.

NEW MEETING-HOUSE. — The old house at the Lower Village was occupied till the close of 1823, — 74 years from the date of raising the frame. The new house at the Centre was built that season, and dedicated Jan. 1, 1824. The site and building cost $6,000. "The slips were prized by the builder so as to cover the whole expense, and in the course of a few hours were about all sold at auction — none for less than the appraisal, and the rest for so much more that the amount of choice money was about $700."

The house was re-modelled in 1842; was lengthened by the addition of 20 feet, and beautified in 1853, and re-dedicated Jan. 18, 1854. It was again re-modelled in 1874. The clock on the tower was presented to the Parish by Dea. Tyler Batcheller in 1856.

The Chapel was built in 1854, and raised to a second story in 1860, with a view to provide a pastor's study, and accommodate the Appleton Library.

REV. DR. SNELL. — On a previous page [p. 259] was given an account of the call and ordination of Mr. Snell, and his description of the condition of his church and people. The following sketch of his life and labors is prepared from statements written by himself, and facts collected by Mr. Charles Adams, Jr.

Thomas Snell was a native of Cummington, born Nov. 21, 1774; graduated at Dartmouth College, 1795; taught an academy in Haverhill, N.H., one year; studied Theology with Rev. Dr. Charles Backus of Somers, Ct.; was licensed by Tolland Association Oct. 3, 1797; ordained at North Brookfield, June 27, 1798, and continued sole pastor of the church till Sept. 17, 1851, more than 53 years, and senior pastor till his death May 4, 1862, — his whole ministry covering a period of 64 years. His salary was originally $400 a year; was raised to $500 in 1838; and after the settlement of a colleague was reduced to $300.

From the first, he appears to have secured the confidence and respect of his church, which remained undiminished till the close of his long pastorate and life.

His relations to his parish, according to his own account, were of a checkered character. A few opposed his settlement, at the outset, because of the large salary (?). A great commotion was raised, (to quote his own expressions) "by the exposure made of Intemperance; its extent and abominations, and effects, and its alarming demands upon men's purses, which ought to be paid over, if anywhere, to the cause of benevolence." This sermon was preached Jan. 5, 1812, long before the Temperance Reformation had begun its benign work—or even the seeds of that healing tree were planted. In his conclusion, he challenged his people "to curtail the use of ardent spirits so far as to save a proper sum to bestow upon the cause of Foreign Missions, whose claims he had set forth upon the last preceding Sabbath. And now, how much? Here is the subscription:—I think I can save three dollars, and pledge that amount to the cause. How much can you give, Dea. Adams? And you, Dea. Walker? And you, Esq. Hale? and so on through the congregation. The sum then pledged was $40. And this was the first money given to Foreign Missions in this Town." ". . . In 1827 several individuals agreed to use no ardent spirits, even in the most laborious seasons of the year, while engaged in their farming pursuits. This led to the formation of a Temperance Society in 1828, upon the principle of entire abstinence from the use of distilled liquors."

In all these movements, Dr. Snell was a leader.

When he was settled, and for many years afterwards, the only public religious services expected from the minister were the two sermons on the Sabbath, and a preparatory lecture once in two months. He says: "prayer meetings, religious conferences, meetings for serious and personal conversation, stated lectures for general instruction, meetings for humane and charitable objects, a third service on the Sabbath, and even seasons of special revival of religion were all unknown in this town at the time of my ordination." In Sept. 1815, without public notice, a prayer meeting was held at the house of the pastor, attended by his family and two young men. It occurred on a Friday evening; and from that time to the present a meeting has been held weekly on Friday evening.

Dr. Snell was very early interested in the subject of Domestic Missions. He says: "In 1807 this church agreed to raise $10 for Domestic Missions. This was the first effort in religious charity made in this place. And it was a great effort: we could scarcely accomplish it. Ten dollars does not speak of our poverty, so much as the narrowness of our conceptions." Then came the subscription of $40 for Foreign Missions in 1812, already referred to. The next was $43, raised by the ladies in 1815, for several objects of religious charity.

Dr. Snell attended the meeting of the Massachusetts General Association in 1810, when the American Board was organized; and perhaps this was his favorite charity during his life, though he did not become a member of the corporation till 1838. In 1824, the Ladies' and Gentlemen's Associations, auxiliary to the A.B.C.F.M., were formed. Their joint contribution that year was $71, and a box of clothing. . . . In all these charities, Dr. S. was the efficient leader and generous patron.

At the time of his settlement it was made by law "the duty of all resident ministers of the Gospel" to have a sort of supervision of all the schools in town, and to see that all children of suitable age attended school. Probably no minister in the State performed this service with greater punctuality and faithfulness than Dr. Snell. When the law was enacted which provided that towns should annually choose a "School Committee," to examine teachers, and exercise a general supervision of the schools, he was elected, and was rechosen a member of the committee every year (with a single exception) till 1850, — a nearly continuous service of more than half a century. He was an early advocate for the establishment of a College at Amherst, and one of its most efficient founders and patrons. He was a member of the Board of Overseers of its Charity Funds from its organization in 1822, for thirty-three years, fifteen years serving as its secretary; and during the whole term of his membership he was absent from but one meeting.

The College conferred upon him in 1828 the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Of the multitude of Sermons and addresses delivered during his long pastorate, only 24 were published, including 2 or 3 pamphlets.

They have all been collected and bound in one volume which is owned by the Appleton Library. Among them are an Oration at Brookfield, Independence day, 1813; a sermon before the General Association, June, 1814; a sermon before the Governor, Council and Legislature, 1817, and several Historical Sermons and Discourses. The most valuable of these are "A Sermon delivered on the last Sabbath in June, 1838, containing a Brief History of the Town," pp. 55; "A Discourse containing an Historical Sketch of the Town of North Brookfield," delivered May 28, 1850; and "A Discourse containing an Historical Sketch of the First Congregational Church in North Brookfield," delivered May, 1852, pp. 56.

Dr. Snell officiated as Secretary of the General Association of Massachusetts, 25 years. Rev. Emerson Davis, his successor, says of him: "My recollections of him as a preacher are very pleasant. I knew him better as the much respected Secretary of the General Association, which office he held from 1824 to 1850. It was mainly by his efforts that the statistics of the churches were gathered, which were first published in 1828; and if you consider the difficulty of beginning such a work, and the progress he made previous to 1850, you will see he is entitled to much credit.

He was systematic, punctual and honest; an eminently wise man, a safe counsellor, and a faithful friend; an agreeable companion; full of good sense and good humor." —

No minister probably ever lived in this part of the State who was more extensively known, or more generally enjoyed the confidence of the people, and especially of the churches than Dr. Snell; or whose services were more frequently brought into requisition in the settlement and dismissal of Pastors, and the adjustment of clerical and parochial difficulties.

During his ministry he was a member of more than a 140 ecclesiastical councils.

Theologically, Dr. Snell was Calvinistic in his views. "He was not, strictly speaking, a theologian, and yet without discriminating between high, low, or moderate Calvinism, we may truly say, he was a Calvinist." This was said in the funeral sermon by Rev. Dr. Cushing, his colleague, who certainly was a theologian; and he adds: "on the subject of theology, the position of the lamented Pastor of this Church may be expressed in three words, He was Orthodox. He held the great doctrines of the Christian system with great tenacity. Still he could not properly be said to belong to any school. His real position was characteristically expressed by himself at a meeting of the Brookfield Association, when he said to a brother: 'The apostle Paul did not trouble his head about "Old School" or "New School," and they shall not trouble mine.' He had not those metaphysical traits of mind that would interest him in philosophical speculations. The Bible he made his study; and his delight was simply in Biblical forms of doctrine. What are known among Evangelical Christians as the distinctive doctrines of grace, were his almost constant theme." This is illustrated by a quotation from the closing part of his 40th Anniversary Sermon: "I have endeavored, though with much imperfection and weakness, to preach to you the gospel of the grace of God; both its doctrines and duties; its warnings and encouragements; its promises and threatenings.

"I have presented to your minds the humbling doctrine of man's state of apostasy from God, and of his guilty helplessness; the ample provisions of Divine Grace through a crucified and arisen Savior; the perfections and decrees of God, according to which he does all his works of creation, providence and redemption; the moral agency and accountability of men; the duty of immediate repentance, and the sinner's aversion to it; regeneration by the Spirit of God through the instrumentality of divine truth; justification by faith in Christ; the resurrection of the dead, and future judgment, and eternal retribution.

"These things I have taught, publicly and from house to house, testifying repentance toward God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ.

"But I feel that I have done these things in a very poor and imperfect manner, that calls for the forbearance of man, and the mercy of God."

During the early years of his ministry, in addition to his ordinary ministerial duties, he was accustomed to receive under his instruction young men who contemplated a college course, or who desired a higher education than was at that day afforded by the schools in town.

In a word, Dr. Snell was a man of warm heart, clear head, positive convictions and the courage to utter them; and withal, guided by large common sense and practical wisdom. During his whole pastorate, he was a power for good in the social, educational, and commercial, as well as the religious interests of the town.

REV. CHRISTOPHER CUSHING, D.D. — He was the fourth in the line of pastors of the First Church, and was installed as colleague with Dr. Snell Sept. 17, 1851; was sole pastor after Dr. S's death, and was relieved of the duties of the office May 1, 1867, that he might enter upon the secretaryship of the American Congregational Union; was dismissed Sept. 17, 1868. He was born at South Scituate May 3, 1820; graduated at Yale College 1844, and at Andover Theol. Sem. 1847; ordained over the Edwards Church, Boston, Feb. 21, 1849; dismissed Apr. 23, 1851, and installed at North Brookfield, as above. He was Secretary of the A. C. U. till 1877; and from 1867 to 1878, he edited and published, in company with others or alone, the Congregational Quarterly.

He received the honorary degree of D.D. from Amherst College in 1871. Died at Cambridge Oct. 23, 1881.

REV. GABRIEL H. DE BEVOISE began to supply the pulpit statedly Jan. 1, 1868; was installed Sept. 17, 1868; dismissed 1880. He was born at Brooklyn, N.Y. Jan. 7, 1831; fitted for college at Phillips Academy; graduated at Andover Theol. Sem. 1864; was ordained at Walpole, N.H. July 26, 1865, dismissed 1868. After leaving North Brookfield, he was installed at Leominster, May, 1881.

REV. SEDGWICK P. WILDER, the present pastor, was born at Newfane, Vt., May 28, 1847; graduated at Beloit College 1871; Yale Theol. Sem. 1875; ordained May 28, 1875, preached at Faith Chapel, Springfield, and at Brandon, Vt.; installed at North Brookfield June 24, 1880.

BAPTIST SOCIETY. — The Baptist Society and Church, though located at East Brookfield, should be noticed in this History, because its originators were largely North Brookfield people. As early as 1748, traveling ministers of the Baptist denomination began to hold meetings in the eastern part of the town. But they had no stated services here, as appears from the following: "This may certify the assessors of Brookfield that David Hinckley of Brookfield doth usually attend the public worship of God on the Lord's day at the Baptist Society in Sturbridge, and we believe him to be conscientiously of that persuasion.

STURBRIDGE May 30, 1751.

"On the 14th of Nov. 1786, a compact was entered into by eleven persons, for the purpose of maintaining a religious interest. This is regarded as the commencement of the Baptist Society in Brookfield. The places of worship at the time were mostly dwelling houses; sometimes barns; and the Society was variously supplied." In 1795, a commodious meeting-house was erected, and afterwards well finished.

May 15, 1797, a "Petition of a number of the Inhabitants of Brookfield and Spencer, setting forth, that for many years your Petitioners have attended on the instructions of Teachers of the Baptist Denomination, and have contributed for their support; and now we are well accommodated with a meeting-house, and a supply of Preaching annually; and therefore we pray your Honors to incorporate us together with our Polls and Estates into a Distinct and separate Religious Society, with all the Privileges Powers and immunities, which Parishes are entitled to by Law in this Commonwealth."

Other signers were: Josiah Goodell, Oliver Jenks, Nathaniel Dodge, Jeduthan Stevens, John Pierce, Shadrack Pierce, Jr., Daniel Jenks, Joshua Moor, John Wilcott, Jr., Thomas Moore, Jr., Eber Pierce, Shadrack Pierce, Ezekiel Baxter, Elisha Doane, Phinehas Slayton, Jacob Stevens, Justus Stevens, Roger Stevens, Jr., Roger Stevens, Elias Staples, Nicholas McCluer, Silas Stevens, Ezra Bennet, Levi Chillson, Isaac Slayton, Reuben Converse, Reuben Harrington, Stevens Hatch, Nathan Percis, Luke Converse, Elisha Drake, Samuel Kingsbury, Eli Wood, John Stevenson, Clarke Hill, David Jenckes, Joseph Bennett, Reynolds Bennett, John Bennett, Thomas Jencks.

The Petition was granted, and the Society incorporated June 17, 1800; and its first meeting held Oct. 29th. Mr. Nathaniel Price was preacher for about two years. Rev. Laban Thurber succeeded him; was ordained in 1801, and closed his labors in 1805. "From 1805 to 1815 the pulpit was supplied but a small part of the time. Those were years of darkness to the Society; very small was the number that could be convened, when an appointment was made for a messenger of the truth" — says an Official Report. "In 1815, Rev. John Chase (then a licentiate) was engaged to supply the pulpit a part of the time. He continued his labors till 1818 with much success; fifty-five persons were baptized." June 9, 1818, a Council was convened, and thirty-seven believers were constituted and recognized as the Baptist Church in Brookfield. The day following, June 10, Brother Chase was ordained its Pastor." He continued in the pastorate till his death, July 28, 1833.

List of pastors: Rev. John Chase, 15 years; Rev. Benj. Manning, ordained Jan. 1, 1834, dismissed 1835; Rev. Winthrop Morse, Nov. 1835, to 1839; Rev. J. H. Rickett, June 1839 to Oct. 1840; Rev. Job B. Boomer, June 1841, 4 years; Rev. E. C. Messenger, 1845, 2 years; Rev. Joseph Hodges, Jr., 1847, 5 years; Rev. S. W. Marston, 1852, 1½ years; Rev. David Taylor, 1854, 6 mos.; Rev. Addison Brown, 1856, 21 mos.; Rev. J. H. Tilton, 1859, 4½ years; Rev. E. W. Pray, 1864, 20 mos.; Rev. Philander Perry, 1867, 2½ years; Rev. L. C. Stevens, 1870, 8 years; Rev. Andrew Dunn, 1878, 3 years.

A new meeting-house was built, and dedicated March 4, 1840: cost $3,500. During the pastorate of Rev. L. C. Stevens, the house was repainted, and much improved, and a parsonage built — both of which buildings are entirely free from debt.

Among those that have entered the ministry from this church, are Rev. Otis Converse, Rev. Abel Harwood, who died in Virginia Mar. 26, 1836; and Rev. Levi B. Hathaway, who died while pastor at Rockport, Aug. 1, 1843. And in this connection should be named Rev. Hervey Jenks, who, though not a member of this church, was born and reared under its shadow. Hervey was son of Nicholas Jenks, was born in 1787; was hopefully converted while teaching a grammar school in Rehoboth in 1810; graduated at Brown University 1810, having united with the First Baptist Church in Providence the previous June. As a student, he ranked high in his class; maintained an unsullied character, and enjoyed the confidence of officers and members, and bid fair to become eminent in the literary world. He was approbated as a preacher by the Providence Church June 11, 1811, and received ordination by the same body a year later. He supplied half a year at West Stockbridge, Mass., and was settled in Hudson, N.Y. in 1813, where he died June 1814 — thus early closing what promised to be a brilliant and successful career of usefulness.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. — No record has been found of preaching by this denomination in North Brookfield before 1829, when Erastus Otis was appointed by the Conference to the Brookfield circuit. About this date Nathaniel Smith, formerly a Free-will Baptist, gathered a Class at his own house. His Exhorter's license bears date May 1830. F. W.

Sizer and George Sutherland were appointed to this circuit in 1830, and sustained preaching during the summer at the old Congregational meeting-house at 5 o'clock on Sunday afternoons. Rev. Samuel Davis had charge of the circuit in 1832, assisted by Jotham Haven, S. W. Coggeshall and Eben^r F. Newell. A new meeting-house was built this year at the Lower Village, and was dedicated Jan. 30, 1833, Dr. Wilbur Fisk president of Wesleyan University preaching the sermon. The trustees of the church were Nathaniel Smith, Elias Bartlett, Wm Bartlett, Hervey Wellington and Eben^r Stevens. Mr. Davis resided in this town.

"In 1834, North Brookfield was made a station, with Henry Mayo preacher in charge. Serious financial troubles came upon the people that year. They had depended on the sale of pews; but hopes and plans in some way failed, and in March 1835, a suit of attachment was issued against the trustees by Messrs. Joshua and Wm Prouty of Spencer, for the sum of $1,200." Miss F. A. Holmes' History. This suit was not settled till 1840, though preaching was maintained for most of the time. The membership in 1835, was 23.

The society led a checkered life for the next 25 years, sometimes meeting in the town hall (which was burned during their occupancy), sometimes in the Grove Schoolhouse, and sometimes in the chapel of the First Church, till the erection of the present church edifice, which was dedicated Mar. 13, 1861. The original cost was $4,000, Dea. Tyler Batcheller making a generous donation, and others of the Congregational churches following his example.

The coming on of the Civil War, and the stagnation of business nearly swamped the enterprise, and almost starved out the preacher. "These were days of heroism; and we cannot refrain from saying, All honor to the noble men whose deeds [of self-denial for religion's sake, and of valor in the tented field] made them heroes!" At the close of 1862, the liabilities of the society were $1,400. "During the next Conference year, the debt was liquidated by the restless energy of pastor E. S. Chase. There followed a decade of continued prosperity, at the close of which the salary figures ($1,000) stood the highest of any time in the history of the church, and, save once in the long past, the membership (81) was never so large as at that time." Number of members 1885, 58.

List of Preachers after North Brookfield became a Permanent Station: James Shepard, 1841-2; C. W. Ainsworth, 1843-4; Frederick Stewart, 1845; Albert A. Cook, 1846; Geo. W. Weeks and E. F. Newell, 1847; John Goodwin, 1848; Geo. Bowler, 1849-50; John Goodwin, 1851; P. Wallingford, 1852-3; M. Leffingwell, 1854; W. J. Pomfret, 1855-7; J. W. Coolidge, 1858-9; Daniel Atkins, 1860-1; N. F. Stevens, 1862; E. S. Chase, 1863; Edwin S. Snow, 1864-5;

Geo. Hewes, 1866-7; Gilbert R. Bent, 1868-9; L. P. Causey, 1870; Samuel A. Fuller, 1871; W. A. Cheney, 1872-3; E. H. Leeseman, 1873; Reuben W. Harlow, 1874; Geo. E. Chapman, 1875-6; J. M. Avann, 1877-9; John W. Fulton, 1880-1; J. S. Barrows, 1882-3; E. R. Watson, 1883; Porter R. Strattan, 1884-5.

UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—The following account of this Church and Society, was prepared by Dea. Freeman Walker (by request):

"The records of the Union Congregational Society date its formation, Oct. 29, 1853, on petition of Amasa Walker, Wm Duncan, J. H. Hill, Charles Duncan, T. M. Duncan, Hervey Belcher, Benj. Cummings, Jr., J. H. Field and Lathrop Dorman; and that the first meeting was called by warrant issued by Freeman Walker, justice of the peace, at which meeting the usual officers were chosen, and bye-laws adopted.

On the 2d day of May 1854, the Society voted to extend an invitation to Rev. Levi F. Waldo to become their minister, with a salary of $800. Mr. Waldo was a graduate of the Union Theol. Seminary, and had been pastor of a church in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. He made but little use of manuscripts, and was a very acceptable preacher. A church was organized June 7, 1854, and Mr. W. was installed as pastor, He was dismissed, at his own request, June 13, 1856.

The Society remained without a minister till June 3, 1857, when Rev. Wm H. Beecher was installed, and remained in that office till May 14, 1861, when he was dismissed by a mutual council called for that purpose. Mr. B. was the eldest son of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, D.D., and a man of good natural talents, an able off-hand speaker, and had the natural qualifications for a preacher which is hereditary in that remarkable family.

The Society voted Mar. 24, 1862, to engage Rev. J. E. Tower to supply their desk for one year. He was a man of great promise; had just graduated from Andover Theol. Sem. (A.C. 1858), and great hopes were entertained that he would become permanently attached to the Society. He continued his services till the following August, when he took a vacation. During his absence he was taken suddenly ill, and died at Groton, Aug. 18, 1862, aged 28.

The Society voted Dec. 23, 1862, to invite Rev. Luther Keene (A. C. 1859) to become their minister, which was accepted by him, and he was ordained and installed. At a meeting of the Society April 29, 1867, Mr. K. asked a dismission, which was granted, much to the regret of a great majority of his parishioners.

Dec. 2, 1867, the Society engaged the services of the Rev John Dodge to supply their desk for one year, on a salary of $1,400. He remained for about three years and a half, when he left, and was subsequently settled in New Braintree.

Mar. 10, 1873, the services of Rev. Charles E. Coolidge (And. Theol. Sem. 1870) who had been settled over the First Church in Holyoke, were engaged to supply the desk for one year; and on the 1st of April it was voted to invite him to settle over the Society; which he accepted, and arrangements were made for his installation. In the mean time a proposal was made by the First Congregational Society for a union of the two societies; but after a protracted negotiation, satisfactory terms of union could not be agreed upon, and the effort was abandoned. During the pendency of this negotiation, Mr. Coolidge withdrew his acceptance of the call, and left, after preaching about a year and a half—although the Society voted, 19 to 3, to renew the call.

The Society was variously supplied till May 3, 1876, when they voted to extend an invitation to Rev. George H. Wilson to settle over them in the ministry; and he was ordained Sept. 6, 1876. Mr. Wilson was a graduate of Bangor Theol. Seminary, and was very acceptable as a preacher. The loss of his wife soon after his marriage and settlement, was a severe trial, and probably had an influence in his seeking a dismissal from his charge, which, at his own request, was effected June 1, 1878.

The Society voted Mar. 3, 1879, to invite Rev. John W. Hird to become its minister, and he was installed Mar. 28, 1879, and still continues in office, to the general acceptance of his people. He was born in England, graduated at Yale College 1871, and at Andover Theol. Sem. 1874. It will become the duty of some future historian, to describe the man, his talents, and the results of his ministry.

The Meeting-house of this Society was built by an Association upon the joint stock principle; the shares being placed at $50 each, of which 177 were taken. The stockholders organized Oct. 1, 1853, by choosing Freeman Walker to preside as moderator, Thomas H. Tucker, treasurer, Hiram Knight, clerk. The location for the meeting-house was purchased of Cha^s P. Adams for $2,000. The house having been completed, the entire property and franchise was transferred by deed Feb. 17, 1855, to the Union Congregational Society. The pews were appraised for an amount sufficient to cover the entire cost of the house; and the Society sold the choice of the same at auction. The results of the sale were:

Pews taken at the appraisal, $10,385
Choice money	$12,000
Cost of house	10,650 "

NORTH BROOKFIELD POST-OFFICE. — In earlier times, letters and newspapers were put in charge of post-riders, who made a weekly journey to and from Worcester. Later, all mail matter came to Brookfield by stage, whence it was distributed in various ways over the town. In 1826, a post-office was established in North Brookfield, on the condition that it should be no expense to the government. Jonathan Cary was the first Post Master, and transported the mail to Brookfield and return, once a week, for the income, which then amounted to $50 or $60 a year. About 1830, when the shoe business was largely increased, a tri-weekly mail was established, which was changed to a daily service about 1843. The income of the office in 1850 was $900. In 1854, a mail was sent and received twice each day. Mr. Cary resigned in 1843, and was succeeded by John Hill, who was succeeded in 1849 by William Adams. His successor as Post Master was Kittridge Hill, who held the place till 1861, when Rev. W. H. Beecher was appointed. When Grant's administration came in power, Mr. Beecher was succeeded by William L. Poland, and he by his wife Harriet A. Poland, who held it till March 1886, when George C. Lincoln was appointed.

PROFESSIONAL MEN IN NORTH BROOKFIELD. — Lawyers. Daniel Gilbert, D. C. 1796, d. 1851; Joseph Felton, J. H. Hills, J. E. Greene, Y. C. 1853; R. E. Beecher, in practice four or five years; L. E. Barnes, A. C.; Henry W. King, (firm of Rice and King, Worcester.)

Wright; Cheney Potter, d. in No. Bkf'd.; Moses Porter; Thomas Jones; Joshua Porter, 1834 to his death in 1874; Warren Tyler, 1843 to the present time; Wilbur F. Witter; Thomas J. Garrigan; O. J. Travers; Samuel H. Colburn; Julius Gast; M. A. Warriner.

THE NORTH BROOKFIELD SAVINGS BANK was incorporated in 1854. The presidents of the institution have been, Amasa Walker, Charles Adams, Jr. (two terms) S. S. Edmands (two terms). Treasurers, Hiram Knight, ten years; Bonum Nye, 1864 to the present time. Amount of deposits, June, 1886, $506,500.79. Assets, same date, $524,368.12.

THE APPLETON LIBRARY. — Mar. 16, 1859, the Hon. William Appleton of Boston, son of Rev. Joseph Appleton, second pastor of the Church in North Brookfield, wrote to Rev. Dr. Snell, proposing to donate to the First Church and Parish the sum of $5,000, and a considerable number of valuable books, to lay the foundation of a Parish Library, which should be held and maintained "for the use of the ministers of the said church forever."

At a legal meeting held April 11, 1859, the Parish voted to accept the gift on the terms proposed, and that the name of said library should be The Appleton Library. Voted, that the care and management of the library should be vested in a Board of Trustees, to be composed of the minister or ministers of the Church for the time being, and four others to be elected by the Parish. The original Board was Rev. T. Snell, D.D., Rev. C. Cushing, Charles Adams, Jr., Dr. Joshua Porter, Bonum Nye and Gideon B. Dewing.

The Parish raised by subscription the sum of $1,246, and added a story to the chapel, thus providing a convenient room for the Library.

$3,000 of the donation was expended in the purchase of books; and the balance, $2,000, was permanently invested, the annual income to be expended in preserving and caring for the Library.

The pastor is librarian; and books are loaned to the pastors of the several churches in North Brookfield, without regard to denomination.

Number of volumes in 1886, 4,550.

THE NORTH BROOKFIELD FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY. — At an adjournment of the annual March meeting, held May 17, 1879, the town voted, "To accept certain sums of money donated to it by the past and present members of the North Brookfield high school and their friends, for the purpose of establishing a Free Public Library and Reading Room."

This fund was made up by subscriptions as follows, viz: the scholars and citizens, $500, of which Wm H. Montague contributed one hundred dollars; and in addition, T. C. Bates gave $500, and Alfred H. Batcheller of Boston, $1,000, making in all $2,000, with which the Trustees, (appointed by the town) established and started the enterprise. Rooms were fitted up in the Walker Block, and "on Thanksgiving eve, November 26, 1879, was formally opened the first Free Public Library and Reading Room, ever established in North Brookfield, for the free use of every person in the town."

Total number of books in the Library Mar. 1, 1886, 3,417.

Number of books taken out in 1885	20,182.
Number of visitors to Reading Room in 1885	17,213.
Number of daily newspapers taken	10.
Number of weekly " "	33.
Number of monthly magazines	13.

The town makes an annual grant of $1,000, for the current expenses of the Library and Reading Room, and the purchase of new books.

Trustees for 1885: Theo. C. Bates, Wm H. Montague, James Miller, T. M. Duncan, Patrick J. Downey, N. H. Foster, L. S. Thurston, W. J. Thompson.

THE NORTH BROOKFIELD RAILROAD COMPANY was organized Jan. 14, 1875, and the following Board of Directors chosen: Alden Batcheller, Theo. C. Bates, Bonum Nye, Wm H. Montague, Freeman Walker, John Hill, Liberty Stone, T. M. Duncan and S. S. Edmands. The capital stock was $100,000, $10,000 of which was subscribed by individuals, and the balance of $90,000 taken by the town. This town subscription was borrowed of the Commonwealth, on condition that it should be paid in annual installments of $9,000.

The contract for building the road was awarded to George W. Cram of Norwalk, Ct., who commenced work July 20, and finished the contract, so that regular trains were running Jan. 1, 1876. The road was leased to the Boston and Albany Railroad Company, which was to supply rolling stock, and operate the same for ten years from Jan. 1, 1876. The lease has been renewed for a term of fifty years from Jan. 1, 1886.

The town has paid all its notes at maturity, and is now the absolute owner of $90,000 of the stock of the company.

In their Eleventh Annual Report, the directors say :

“Your Directors beg leave to submit the following as their Annual Report for the year ending with December 31st, 1885. During the year 14,076 tons of freight have been received at North Brookfield, 4,998 tons of freight forwarded from North Brookfield, making 19,074 tons transported over the North Brookfield Railroad, and 44,823 passengers have been carried over it during the present year. The amount received from the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. as the proportion of the gross receipts, as per terms of the old lease, due the North Brookfield Railroad Co. in 1885, has been $2,432.01. The Directors have declared a dividend in 1885 of two (2) per cent. on the Capital Stock, which left a cash balance on hand of $463.45, as shown by the Annual Report of the Company's Treasurer, herewith submitted.

The Official Reports of the Auditor of the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. made to the Directors of the North Brookfield Railroad Co. disclose the following interesting facts concerning the volume of freight and number of passengers transported over the North Brookfield Railroad during its ten years of operation.

Total income of the North Brookfield Railroad Co. from the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. under first lease for ten (10) years, from January 1st, 1876, to January 1st, 1886, inclusive :

1877	2,860.69
1878	2,383.93
1879	2,333.84
1880	2,285.05
1881	2,563.76
1882	2,480.31
1883	2,493.95
1884	2,120.52
1885	2,432.01
Total	$24,443.74

The total number of passengers carried over the North Brookfield Railroad during the ten years it has been in operation has been 451,099, and no one has ever been killed or injured.

The total number of tons of freight transported over the road during this period has been 147,336.

The following significant statement shows what it would have cost the people of North Brookfield to have done the same volume of business by the former methods, namely stages and teams, and what has been saved to them during these ten years by the construction of a railroad.

The regular stage coach fare between North Brookfield and the Boston and Albany Railroad Station at East Brookfield was thirty (30) cents, and the transportation of 451,099 passengers at this rate would have cost $135,329.70.

The amount actually received by the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. for the passenger service over the N. B. R.R. has been $58,326.78, which includes the amount paid by the United States government for the transportation of mails, and the amount received from the American Express Co. for carrying express matter over the road, in all about $8,000, all of which has always been included in the passenger train service, thus leaving the actual amount paid the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. for the actual transportation of passengers over the road, $50,326.78, whereas it would have cost by stages $135,329.70, or a saving of $85,002.92, by the North Brookfield Railroad in its passenger service alone in the ten (10) years.

The cost of transporting 147,336 tons of freight between the station of the Boston and Albany Railroad at East Brookfield and North Brookfield, by teams, (horses or oxen,) at the price charged at the time the North Brookfield Railroad was opened, which was the same price that had been paid for many years prior to that time, namely, seven (7) cents per hundred (100) pounds, would have been $206,270.40, whereas the amount actually paid to the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. for this service, has been $59,078.75, thus showing $147,191.65, or about one dollar per ton, saved on the transportation of freight alone during the ten years.

Adding the amounts thus saved on freight and passengers, to the income from the railroad, namely :

Saved on transportation of freight	$147,191.65
Saved on transportation of passengers	85,002.92
Income from rental of road	24,443.74
Income from rental of Depot Hall	1,000.00

We have the aggregate sum of $259,638.31

This sum represents the income and savings to our people by means of our railroad over the former methods of conducting the business during the ten years it has been in operation, and is two and one-half times the entire cost of the Railroad.

The new lease of the North Brookfield Railroad to the Boston and Albany Railroad Co. took effect January 1st, 1886, and is for the continuous term of fifty years from that date, at a fixed annual rental of $3,000 per year.

Heretofore the income of this Company has been based on the receipts of the Railroad for each year's business ; hereafter beginning with January 1st, 1886, the income of this Company becomes a fixed and assured sum, equivalent to three (3) per cent. per annum on the Capital Stock. There will be no more formulating of tables showing the varying earnings of our road, no more fluctuation of income, but one uniform, assured sum of $3,000 each year for fifty years. By the terms of the new lease the entire North Brookfield Railroad, from the station of the Boston and Albany Railroad at East Brookfield, to the end of the track in front of the Boot and Shoe Factory of Messrs. E. & A. H. Batcheller & Co. in North Brookfield, becomes unqualifiedly leased to the Boston and Albany Railroad Co., which was not the case under the former lease, which has just expired.

The absolute removal of all doubts and liabilities on this point, and the consequent benefits to this Company, cannot be over-estimated, and your Directors congratulate you on the assured increased annual rental, for so long a term — fifty years, — and still further on the assured removal of all liabilities or responsibilities to this Company on account of the location of the North Brookfield Railroad. Especially do we congratulate the town of North Brookfield, as the largest and principal Stockholder, on its ownership of so valuable property, from which, for many years, a large income is annually assured, signifying a low rate of taxation and resultant prosperity to its people.

THE REBELLION OF 1861-1865.

The following record of the action of the citizens and town of North Brookfield, and lists of names of volunteers and enlisted men who served in the late Civil War, and are credited to us, has been compiled by a committee appointed by the town, consisting of T. M. Duncan, J. S. Cooke, D. W. Knight, C. H. Bartlett, E. J. Russell, N. H. Foster and A. H. Foster.

Action of the Citizens of North Brookfield, previous to the first legal town meeting in 1861.

On the 15th of Apr. 1861, President Lincoln issued his proclamation calling for 75,000 volunteers, and commanding the rebels to return to peace within twenty days.

On the 17th, in quick and cheerful response to the President's call, the gallant old Sixth Regiment of Mass. State troops left Boston on their way to Washington to offer their services for the defence of the capital. On the 19th they reached Baltimore, where they were attacked by a rebel mob, and two of their number were murdered while marching on their route through the streets of that city, and seven others were more or less wounded; when our soldiers turned upon their assailants, and eleven of the rioters forfeited their lives by their cowardly assault, and many others were wounded. A few moments only were required to flash this startling news through all the loyal States.

The whole people were electrified, and at once began to realize that war with all its dreadful realities was upon us.

The peaceful industries of life were to a great extent laid aside, and all began to prepare for the terrible issue. Only a few moments after the occurrence of this brutal assault, the news was received by our telegraph operator, Mr. George C. Lincoln, whose office was then at his store in the old town house. The news spread like wild-fire. The despatch was at once sent to the counting room of Messrs. T. & E. Batcheller & Co., where, upon its being read, Mr. Ezra Batcheller said excitedly, "Something must be done immediately;" and at his suggestion, after a few words of consultation among those who happened to be present, it was decided that a public meeting should be held in the town hall on that same evening (Apr. 19th) to see what could be done to meet the emergency.

Accordingly, large sheets of paper were taken from the Batcheller's packing room and quickly converted into flaming placards, and posted in several places in the village where they would not fail to attract immediate attention. The words upon them were nearly as follows :

"War! War!! War!!!

Our Massachusetts Soldiers have been murdered in the streets of Baltimore, while marching on their way to Washington to protect the capital of our country.

All our citizens are requested to meet at the town hall this evening to see what can be done."

As this notice met the eyes of eager crowds who gathered around it, a mingled expression of indignation, anxiety and sorrow was depicted upon every countenance.

Evening came. Our hall was filled with interested and anxious citizens. The meeting was called to order by Mr. W. S. Phelps, who was chosen chairman, and it was addressed by J. E. Green, Esq., Hon. Freeman Walker and others, who alluded to the barbarous massacre which had that day occurred in Baltimore, and stated the object of the meeting to be "To see if North Brookfield will respond to the call of the President, by raising a company of volunteers to offer their services to the government."

Some of the older and more conservative of our citizens who had heard from their fathers' lips something of the privations and sacrifices, hardships and dangers of Revolutionary days, and thus knew something of what is involved in the terrible fact of war—ominously shook their heads, saying it cannot be done;—others in the full strength of early manhood, with warmer blood coursing through their veins, and still retaining all the ardor, impulse and enthusiasm of youth, said "Yes, ours is a glorious country, this is our native land. Ours is the freest and best government upon which the sun ever shone. Traitors' hands are seeking to throttle and destroy it; to us who have ever shared its bounties and enjoyed its protection, in this time of its rarest need and greatest danger, it calls for help, and should we refuse the aid which it implores? Shall the sons of Revolutionary sires see the old flag which was so heroically borne through seven long years of fire and blood by their fathers, and which has ever since waved in undisputed triumph,—shall we see this glorious old flag torn down by treacherous hands and trampled in the dust by traitors' feet! No! Never! We are ready, we are willing, we are anxious to go to the rescue, and if need be will seal our devotion with our lives."

It was then stated that an enrollment list had been prepared, and it was voted that it should then and there be opened for signatures; Joseph C. Fretts and Charles Perry were the first to enroll their names, and several others soon came forward and signed the roll amidst the most enthusiastic applause. This was the starting point of Co. F. of the old 15th regiment M. V.

After much excited and interesting discussion, and the adoption of strong and decided resolutions expressive of the willingness and determination of all our fellow citizens to do whatever our duty and the emergency might demand, the meeting at a late hour adjourned till the next evening (Apr. 20th) at 7½ o'clock. At the close of the meeting it was decided by those who had thus far been influential in arousing the people, that the town hall should be put in military trim, and accordingly all the red, white and blue material in the town was brought into requisition; not a single piece of bunting could at this time be bought in Boston or New York, while all the principal streets in both those cities were so profusely decorated as to be almost covered with it.

Saturday evening (Apr. 20th) came, and with it such a meeting as North Brookfield had never seen before. The town hall was filled to its utmost capacity. Not only were our own citizens there en masse but many also came from the adjoining towns. The band from Brookfield came over and volunteered their valuable services, and the fine and inspiring martial music which they discoursed added much to the interest and enthusiasm of the meeting.

The hall had been beautifully decorated, and the military aspect of the place and the stirring appeals of the fathers of the town to the patriotism of the young men, urging them to give their services to the country, were such as resulted in the enrollment of several more on that evening who were afterwards connected with Co. F. in the fifteenth regiment.

Before the close of the meeting it was voted that the Selectmen be instructed to issue their warrant for a legal town-meeting to be holden at the earliest practicable day. The meeting then adjourned.

It being now late on Saturday evening, a warrant could not be drawn and posted till Monday morning; the warrant for the first legal town meeting to act upon matters pertaining to the war was dated and posted Monday, Apr. 22, 1861, and the meeting was held on the earliest day on which a legal meeting could be convened, viz. Monday Apr. 29th.

After the close of the meeting Saturday evening, Apr. 20th, many of our citizens, including quite a number of ladies, rode to West Brookfield to see the military companies as they passed through on their way to the seat of war, and it was past one o'clock in the night before they reached home. During Sunday Apr. 21st, a large number of batteries with their horses and all the paraphernalia of war passed over the railroad, going on to the front, and our churches were very thinly attended on that day, for a train of cars a quarter of a mile in length laden with men in their new and gay uniforms, horses with their showy trappings, and cannon bright as gold glistening in the sun, was at that time a sight more unique and interesting to young and old than the inside of a church; consequently few turned their steps to the latter, while multitudes flocked to the railroad depot to see the former.

Action of the Town. 1861. The first legal town meeting to act upon matters connected with the war was held on the 29th of April, at which it was voted that each volunteer who shall serve in the company now being raised in the town, until mustered into the military service, shall receive one dollar a day while engaged in drilling, and when mustered in shall be supplied with a substantial uniform and a good revolver, and while engaged in active service his family shall receive eight dollars a month. The Treasurer was authorized to borrow three thousand dollars to carry these votes into effect. Freeman Walker, John Hill, and Augustus Smith were appointed to procure uniforms and revolvers. At an adjourned meeting this committee declined serving, (the War Department having forbidden the soldiers to carry revolvers into the service,) and Charles Adams, Jr., J. F. Hebard, and A. Woolworth were appointed in their places. This committee was instructed "to procure the uniforms forthwith." June 3d, Voted, to pay State Aid to the families of volunteers, in accordance with the Act passed by the Legislature. July 31, Voted, that the town hereby instruct their committee to go on and furnish revolvers according to a vote already passed.

1862. March 3, Voted, to pay State Aid to families of volunteers to the amount that "the State promises to refund." July 3, Voted, to pay a bounty of one hundred dollars to each volunteer who shall enlist for three years and be credited to the quota of the town "before the 1st of August next." Aug. 22, the time was extended until the quota of the town was filled. A bounty of one hundred dollars was authorized to be paid to any inhabitant of the town who shall enlist in the nine months' service. Oct. —, Voted, to pay the same bounty to commissioned officers.

1863. Dec. 8, James Miller, Charles Adams, Jr., and T. M. Duncan were chosen to aid the Selectmen in recruiting.

1864. April 5, The bounty to each volunteer enlisting for three years and credited to the quota of the town was fixed at one hundred and twenty-five dollars. June 26, Voted, that a bounty of one hundred and twenty-five dollars be paid "for one-year men, two hundred and twenty-five dollars for two-years men, and three hundred and twenty dollars for three-years men." There was no substantial change from this system during the remainder of the war. North Brookfield furnished 247 men for the war, which was a surplus of 12 over and above all demands. Twelve were commissioned officers. The whole amount of money appropriated and expended by the town on account of the war, exclusive of State Aid, was $16,939.08. The amount of money paid by the town for State Aid to soldiers' families during the war, and repaid by the Commonwealth, was as follows: In 1861, $734; in 1862, $3,884.22; in 1863, $5,046.16; in 1864, $5,222.09; in 1865, $3,000. Total amount, $17,886.47. The ladies of North Brookfield did their full share of good works for the soldiers during the war.

NOTE. The ladies of North Brookfield thoroughly organized, labored during all the years of the war, each doing work adapted to age and condition, such as knitting stockings and mittens (with one glove finger) making up blue flannel undershirts, flannel under-belts, and pin and needle cases; preparing lint and bandages, dried fruit and delicacies, for the sick in hospitals, etc. The time of all women, old, middle-aged and young, which could be spared from household duties, was devoted to work for the soldiers. Many of the ladies who were most prominent in these good works have passed away, and their names and works are still held in grateful memory by those who shared with fallen comrades the hardships and dangers of camp and field.

Soldiers' Military and Personal Records. In preparing this list the Adjutant General's Reports have been thoroughly searched, and all names credited to North Brookfield noted; but in many cases it was found that errors had been made in crediting men. Quite a number of men credited to us were found to have belonged to Brookfield, West Brookfield, and elsewhere. A considerable number of those whose history we have given were known by us to have served to the credit of other towns and States; and it is probable that some of our own men, whose records ought to have been published, have been put beyond our ken by being credited to other towns or cities, and neither the name or regiment being known to us, it has been impossible to find them.

THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

The Soldiers' Monument, which stands upon the grounds of the First Congregational Society, was contracted for with Martin Milmore, of Boston, erected in 1869, and publicly dedicated Jan. 19, 1870. Hon. Charles Adams, Jr., chairman of the Committee, presented the monument to the town, and Dr. Warren Tyler, chairman of the Selectmen, accepted the same in the town's behalf. The Oration was delivered by Gen. Francis A. Walker, and followed by Addresses by His Excellency Gov. William Claflin, and Gen. Charles Devens.

The statue is of a private soldier at parade rest, with downcast face, suggestive of the whole mournful story connected with the fall of the brave ones whose names are cut on the tablets beneath. The statue is of granite, seven feet high, and stands on a plinth eight feet high. It cost $5,500. The town contributed $3,000, the Grand Army of the Republic $500, and private citizens $2,000. On the north side is the following inscription :

ERECTED
TOWN OF NORTH BROOKFIELD, IN HONOR OF HER
SOLDIERS WHO LOST THEIR LIVES IN DEFENCE OF THE COUNTRY AGAINST THE REBELLION,
1861-65.

The back of the block presents only a plain surface, while the remaining sides are inscribed with the names of the dead in the following order :

REGIMENTAL HISTORIES.

FIFTEENTH REGIMENT.

This Regiment was organized and recruited in Worcester County, and mustered into the U.S. Service, July 12, 1861, under command of Col. Charles Devens. It was at Camp Scott, in Worcester, while recruiting and drilling. Left for Washington, D.C., August 8, 1861. Its first battle was at Ball's Bluff, on the right bank of the Potomac, about thirty-three miles northwest of Washington, October 21, 1861, with Col. E. D. Baker in command of the Union forces, and proved a disastrous defeat, with a reported loss, in killed, drowned, and wounded, of more than 1,000, while the whole force engaged was only about 1,900 men. Col. Baker displayed great courage and bravery, and was killed about 5 P.M. Col. Devens was promoted to Brigadier General of Volunteers, April 15, 1862, and left the Regiment to take command of a Brigade, when at Yorktown. He was succeeded by Col. (then Lieut. Col.) George H. Ward, of Worcester, who having lost a leg at Ball's Bluff, went home and was absent from October 21, 1861, till February 5, 1863, when he again joined the Regiment, Lieut. Col. John W. Kimball of Worcester in the mean time commanding. The 15th was in the Battles on the Peninsula, and in the bloody Battle of Antietam, Md., about six miles above Harper's Ferry, September 17, 1862; one of the great conflicts of the war, and attended with great losses on both sides, resulting in a victory for the Union forces, but our losses in that engagement were so great that we contemplate it with more of sadness than joy. Our loss, as officially reported, was 12,469 men, and among them fell three of our own brave boys, Charles Perry, Henry R. Bliss, and Joseph Fretts. This Regiment was also in the great Battle of Fredericksburg, Va., about sixty miles south of Washington, December 13, 1862. Here the Union forces fought bravely and desperately, but at great disadvantage, the Rebel forces being in a protected position, and having fortifications and breastworks which almost wholly shielded them, while our men were in open field, receiving the murderous fire of the enemy. Our losses in this battle were appalling, and officially reported as more than 12,000 men, who were sacrificed to little purpose, resulting in no advantage to the Union Army. Here fell David S. Moulton, one of our own heroic boys, but not of this regiment.

Soon after this battle — about December 20, the Regiment went into winter quarters, near Falmouth, Va., opposite Fredericksburg, on the same ground it occupied previous to the battle. The campaign of the 15th Regiment in 1863, was begun at the battle of Chancellorsville a few miles west of Fredericksburg, May 1 and 2. Gen. Joseph Hooker now commanded the Army of the Potomac, which numbered about 132,000 men, and this was his first great battle after assuming command, in January previous. Gen. Lee commanded the Rebel forces, and the battle was waged with great courage and determination on both sides, and after terrible fighting and great slaughter for two days, Gen. Hooker retired and re-crossed with his whole force to the north bank of the Rappahannock. The Union losses were reported at 18,000 men, and the Rebel loss at 13,000. In this battle the 15th bore an honorable part. Its next great battle was at Gettysburg, Pa., about eight miles north of the Maryland line, on the 1st, 2d, and 3d of July, 1863. When this battle began, July 1, the 15th was at Uniontown, Md., twenty miles south of Gettysburg, but hearing heavy cannonading on the north, started immediately and marched 17 miles and bivouacked at night behind a barricade of rails three miles south of Gettysburg. On Thursday morning, July 2, started one hour before daylight for the battle-field and got into position about sunrise behind Cemetery Ridge, where a large part of the 2d Corps, to which the 15th belonged, was massed. At the close of the fighting of the first day the Confederates had gained some slight advantage, which evidently encouraged them; but darkness, nevertheless, found the Union forces established, as they believed, in an impregnable position, and they hopefully awaited the morrow. During the night heavy re-enforcements arrived, the 3d Corps under Sickles, the 12th under Slocum, the 2d Corps under Hancock, and others, by which the Union forces were greatly strengthened and encouraged. July 2d there was skirmishing in the forenoon, but the great battle of the day began about noon, and from that time fighting was incessant until the darkness closed the fearful conflict for the day. The battle was still undecided, the Federal forces holding the better position on the field, with hope and courage unabated. It was decided by Gen. Meade and his associates before they slept, that if Lee gained a victory on this field he should win it by an aggressive movement with but few points in his favor. The morning of July 3d brought the renewal of the struggle, which continued on different parts of the field until about 11 o'clock A.M., at which time the Confederates had lost all the advantage they had gained during the first two days of the fight, but the great conflict of the day and the decisive battle did not really begin until about 1 P.M., when the Confederates opened fire with 150 pieces of artillery, which were responded to by 80 pieces from the Union lines, and for about two hours the air was full of flying shot and shell, and the carnage was frightful to behold. Lee then, evidently supposing that the courage and hope of Meade's army must be weakened, threw about 18,000 of the bravest of his veterans upon the Union left centre, hoping to force back his foe and win the day. But in this he signally failed. The assault was bravely and grandly repulsed and the Confederates were driven back. Upon this movement Lee had staked his chances, and had lost. The great Battle of Gettysburg had been fought, and a splendid victory won, which really decided the success and final triumph of the Union arms in the War of the Rebellion. The old Fifteenth may well be proud of the part it bore in that terrible struggle, and there are many brave and noble men of our town who will remember that battle and will tell with pride and pleasure to their children, and children's children, how they helped to win the day on that bloody field. The Union losses in the three days are reported at 16,500 killed and wounded, and 6,600 missing, mostly taken prisoners on the first day. The Rebel losses were reported at 18,000 killed and wounded, and 13,600 missing, mostly prisoners in the hands of the Union Army. Gen. Lee entered Pennsylvania with at least 100,000 men, of whom about 83,000 were in this battle. The Union forces on the field were reported at 85,000, of whom not over 70,000 were in action. Gen. Hooker resigned command of the Army of the Potomac, June 27, and Gen. Meade assumed it June 28, only three days before the opening of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The next important battle in which the 15th was engaged, was fought October 14, 1863, at Bristow Station, on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, about four miles from Manassas Junction, and about thirty-five miles southwest from Washington. The Confederates under Gen. A. P. Hill made the attack, which was handsomely repulsed by the Federal forces under Gen. G. K. Warren, who captured a large number of prisoners and several pieces of artillery. The losses of the enemy were severe, while the Union loss was only one officer and two men killed, nine men wounded, and two missing. This Regiment was in the Battle at Robertson's Tavern, November 27, and other unimportant engagements, before closing the campaign. The Regiment went into winter quarters near Stevensburg, Va., December 7, 1863. This place is about ten miles east of Culpepper, sixty-five or seventy miles southwest from Washington, and six or eight miles north of the Rapidan River. In March, 1864, Gen. Grant, then in command of all the Union Armies, made his headquarters with Gen. Meade, who was still in command of the Army of the Potomac, and determined "to fight it out" with that Army and "on that line." Gen. Meade's army, in which was the 15th Regiment, broke camp near midnight, May 3, 1864, and moved south to the Rapidan, which was successfully crossed with little opposition, and the whole army, before sunset on the fourth, was in the rough and woody section south of the Rapidan, familiarly known as the Wilderness, while the Confederate army under Gen. Lee was facing it, only a little distance south. On the fifth, the Fifth Army Corps of Gen. Meade's Army met the advance of Lee's Army, and a fierce encounter ensued between some 25,000 men, opening this bloody campaign. The evening of the fifth found the opposing armies face to face, with a momentous conflict impending on the morrow. At dawn of day, May 6, the battle was renewed all along the lines, and continued with unabated fierceness and great loss of life, until darkness closed the day, with no apparent advantage gained by either army, and each holding substantially the same position as on the night before. On the seventh, both armies were behind intrenched lines, and each too much exhausted to renew the fight. Gen. Meade, with the advice of Gen. Grant, determined to move to the left, and, if possible, to secure a flank movement on the right of Lee's Army, but Gen. Lee anticipated and prevented it. The engagements known as the Spottsylvania battles followed, from May 8 to May 21, and were sanguinary conflicts attended with great losses. Here fell three of our own men, George L. Sherman, Louis D. Winslow, and William Bates, whose names are inscribed on our Soldiers' Monument, and whose noble deeds, and heroic death, will ever be remembered and honored. The Battles of North Anna River were fought May 23, 24, 28, 29, and 30, and were severe and bloody engagements, resulting in the success of the Union forces. On May 31, Gen. Sheridan, with a Federal force, occupied Cold Harbor, driving the Confederates from the place; but while in these battles the Union army was victorious, they were attended with fearful losses, and our hearts are saddened at the thought of the thousands of brave and heroic men who sacrificed their lives, and of other thousands who were maimed and crippled for life, in those terrible conflicts. Gen. Meade reported his losses in the 26 days in the Wilderness, from May 5 to May 31, at 41,398 men (of whom 33,948 were killed and wounded), not including the loss in Burnside's corps, which did not join Gen. Meade's command until May 24th.

Although the advance forces of Grant's Army under Gen. Sheridan had on May 31 driven the Confederates from Cold Harbor and occupied the place, Lee was determined to retake it. He strongly intrenched his army for that purpose, and on June 3 was fought the memorable battle of Cold Harbor, one of the bloodiest and most desperately contested battles of the war, and although the fight continued only about half an hour, Gen. Grant's loss was officially reported at not less than 7,000 men. No victory was won by either army, but each stubbornly holding its ground, they remained confronting each other until June 12, when Gen. Grant, having decided on another plan, by a rapid movement crossed the Chickahominy and James rivers, below City Point, and on June 15th and 16th made formidable assaults on Petersburg, 23 miles south of Richmond, which were repulsed with a loss to the Union forces, as reported by Gen. Grant, of 10,268 men. He then decided to invest the city, and the siege began June 19, 1864, and was continued until April 3, 1865, when, after a week's bombardment by Grant's army, Gen. Lee evacuated the city, and his surrender at Appomattox, only six days after, terminated the war.

The 15th Regiment when it entered the service numbered more than 1,000 strong, and recruits had joined it from time to time while in the field, so that, in all, it embraced 1,428 men, but its losses in killed, wounded, sick and prisoners, in the severe campaigns of 1861-3, had so depleted it that a field return on May 1, 1864, gives the entire strength of the Regiment, officers and men, at only about three hundred. On June 1, after the Battles of the Wilderness, it had lost in killed and wounded one-half its numbers, and on the 22d of June, when it confronted the enemy on the Jerusalem plank road before Petersburg, it had dwindled to 5 officers and about 70 men. At this time and place, a break or gap in the line of battle allowed the enemy to throw a force on the flank and in the rear of the second division of the second corps, in which was the little remnant of the Fifteenth, and the first intimation of the position of affairs was a demand for surrender. Taken by surprise and overwhelmed by numbers, there was no alternative, and the Union boys were marched off prisoners. In the number were 4 officers of the 15th, and 65 men. One officer and 5 or 6 men escaped; afterwards the officer was wounded. The 5 men, with a few convalescents who arrived from hospital, were placed for a few days in another command, until officers of the Regiment, who had been wounded in the campaign, arrived from hospital; when, on July 12, 1864, the little remnant of the Fifteenth was ordered to proceed to the city of Worcester, to be mustered out of service, its term of 3 years having expired. One company not mustered in till August 5, 1861, was left in the field, and some had also re-enlisted for another term of three years; these were transferred to the 20th Regiment Mass. Vols., but the rest of the Regiment, including all who had been on detached service, and the sick and wounded from the hospitals who were able to travel, joyfully obeying the order, started for Worcester and "home, sweet home." The Regiment entered Worcester, officers and men, the well and strong, the sick and feeble, the wounded and crippled, numbering, all told, only about 150 men, their whole appearance in sad and marked contrast with the grand old Fifteenth Regiment, with its full companies and ranks of healthy, robust, hopeful men, which marched out from Worcester August 8, 1861. But the splendid reception and hearty welcome which these brave men received will never be forgotten by them. His Excellency Gov. Andrew, His Honor Mayor Lincoln of Worcester, and the city authorities of Boston were present, and welcomed them home, thanking them in eloquent words, in behalf of the State and country, for all the sacrifices they had made, and the heroic service they had rendered, and alluding with greatest respect and tearful sympathy to their fallen comrades, who, in giving their service in defence of the Union and the flag, had sacrificed their lives upon their country's altar. Both city and State were represented in the military escort and procession. The buildings gayly decorated, the stars and stripes waving in the breeze, the crowded streets, the loud huzzas and welcoming shouts of the multitude, all gave proof of the distinguished honor bestowed upon these noble men by a grateful people.

TWENTIETH REGIMENT.

The 20th Regiment was recruited at Camp Massasoit, Readville, Mass., and was organized under command of Col. William Raymond Lee, of Roxbury. Mustered into the service of the United States, August 28, 1861, and left the State September 4, 1861, to join the Army of the Potomac. This Regiment had a most honorable record, and did much heavy marching and fighting, sustaining great losses in some of the most severe conflicts of the war. It was in many battles with the Fifteenth, and its courage and bravery were not surpassed even by that gallant fighting Regiment, and it deserves equal praise, gratitude and honor. It was in the closing battles of the war at Petersburg and around Richmond, pushing the enemy in the immediate vicinity of Appomattox at Lee's surrender, April 9, 1865. On its return home, it passed in review before Gens. Meade and Halleck, in Richmond, and before the President at Washington. The Regiment consisted of only 17 officers and 380 enlisted men, when mustered out at Readville, Mass., July 20, 1865. It was in the following battles, viz. : Ball's Bluff, Yorktown, West Point, Fair Oaks, Peach Orchard, Savage Station, Glendale, Malvern Hill, Chantilly, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Bristow Station, Mine Run, Wilderness, Po River, Spottsylvania, Tolopotomy, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Strawberry Plains, Deep Bottom, Ream's Station, Boydtown Road, Vaughan Road and Farmville.

TWENTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

This regiment was recruited by Col. Thomas G. Stevenson, of Boston, at Camp Meigs, Readville. It was mustered into the service of the United States December 6, 1861, and left the State December 9, 1861, for Annapolis, Md., where it was encamped till January 6, 1862. It then embarked on board transports as a part of Burnside's Expedition. The efficient and distinguished service of this Regiment cannot be better expressed than by the words of His Excellency Gov. Bullock, in his address of welcome, on its return home, January 27, 1866 :

“The limitations of this occasion will not permit me to recall to those who are in attendance to witness the closing scene, your long and eminent services. Since you left the State more than four years ago, the eyes of our citizens have followed you:—with Burnside to Roanoke Island, Newbern, Kinston and Goldsboro, in North Carolina; into South Carolina to the assault on Fort Wagner and the siege of Charleston; to Florida, and back to South Carolina; to the Army of the James, engaged at Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, Deep Bottom, and in the battles of the siege of Richmond; and retained among the last, to crown the triumphs of the field with peaceful guarantees. I welcome you home. But all have not returned. Eight officers of the line and 210 enlisted men have fallen in battle, and by the casualties of war. The soldier's bed has been made for them, but their names shall be treasured in the official rolls, and in the heart of the State, and they themselves shall live in immortal fame.”

After complimenting the Regiment for its patriotism, its discipline, and the re-enlistment of 420 of its men, and a brief eulogy upon its dead Brig. Gen. Stevenson, the Governor said: “It only remains that I should now transfer your colors to the great companionship in which they shall henceforth be preserved, and that in behalf of a grateful people I should greet and honor your return.” After the reception of the colors, the Regiment marched to Faneuil Hall and partook of a collation provided by the city of Boston. Speeches were made by His Honor Mayor Lincoln, Gen. Gordon, Gen. B. F. Edmands, Rev. Mr. Gaylord, and many others prominent in military and civic circles. The men then separated to return to their homes, to engage once more in the peaceful avocations of life.

TWENTY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

The Twenty-Fifth Regiment, under command of Col. Edwin Upton of Fitchburg, was recruited in Worcester County, and went into Camp Lincoln on the Agricultural Grounds, in Worcester, September 26, 1861, although the full number of men had not then been recruited. On the 7th of October, and daily thereafter, till the duty was performed, the Regiment was mustered into the service of the United States, by companies. By order of His Excellency John A. Andrew, the Regiment left Worcester, October 31, and proceeded to Annapolis, Md., where they reported for service to Gen. A. E. Burnside. The Regiment went into Camp Hicks, at that place, and remained there, drilling and perfecting itself in the school of the soldier, until January 6, 1862, when it embarked and sailed with the fleet composing Burnside's North Carolina Expedition, and was engaged in all the principal battles in that part of the army, viz: Roanoke, Newbern, Kinston, Whitehall, Goldsboro', Port Walthal Junction, Arrowfield Church, Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, and other battles before Richmond; Wise's Forks and many less important battles and skirmishes. No truer or braver men honored our State in the grand army for the defence of the Union, than composed this Regiment. Col. Upton resigned October 28, 1862, in consequence of disability, and the Regiment was subsequently commanded successively by Col. Josiah Pickett of Worcester and Col. James Tucker of Boston. Of this Regiment no higher commendation can be given than to say that during their whole service, in camp, in hospital, on the long and tiresome march, and in the heat and smoke of battle, its record was at all times and everywhere worthy of the brave and noble men who composed it. Those men whose term of service had expired were mustered out October 20, 1864. The remainder, composed of re-enlisted men and recruits with unexpired terms, were consolidated into a battalion of four companies, which was mustered out July 13, 1865. The Adjutant General's Reports from 1862-5, give a full record of their efficient services, from which is quoted as follows: "This closes the record of the Twenty-Fifth Regiment Massachusetts Infantry Veteran Volunteers; a Regiment that has always and everywhere sustained the high character with which it left the State, and has vindicated the honor of Massachusetts. Its colors have never been yielded to the enemy."

THIRTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

This Regiment, in which North Brookfield was represented by thirteen men, seems to have been raised in Worcester County, but its members represented all parts of the State. It was under command of Col. George D. Wells of Boston, was mustered into the service of the United States August 13, 1862, and left the State August 15, 1862. During 1862, and until July 7, 1863, the Regiment was stationed near Washington and Alexandria, doing garrison, guard and escort duty, as ordered from time to time. It gained in Washington a high reputation for the neatness, quiet, and tasteful arrangement of its quarters, the elegance of its muskets, its soldierly bearing and discipline, its proficiency in drill, and the excellence of its band. Its dress parades were especially admired, and drew large crowds of spectators, and were very highly complimented by the press. July 9, 1863, the Regiment was ordered to Harper's Ferry, then in possession of the Rebels. Col. Wells moved his command the same day to Maryland Heights, near Harper's Ferry, and there encamped. He was at the same time assigned to the command of the Second Brigade in the division of Gen. Nagle. July 14, 1863, Col. Wells crossed the Potomac in boats, and took possession of Harper's Ferry, the enemy retiring on the "double quick." Col. Wells advanced, the Regiment occupied the town, and encamped on Camp Hill. The artillery of Col. Wells' Brigade from Maryland Heights, shelled the enemy during the passage of the river. Although engaged in no important battle during the campaign of 1863, it performed long and fatiguing marches and re-marches, skirmishing, and driving the enemy from place to place, and doing efficient and valuable service until the close of the year, when it was again in camp at Harper's Ferry. In February, 1864, commenced the Shenandoah Valley Campaign of that eventful year, and on May 14 and 15 the Thirty-fourth was in its first great fight—the Battle of Newmarket, and, although they fought like tigers, they were overcome by the overwhelming odds of the enemy. They went in with about 500 men, and, in the fight of 30 minutes, lost 1 officer and 27 men killed, 8 officers and 166 men wounded, and 2 officers and 16 men taken prisoners; total loss 220—nearly one-half of the whole number. In the Adjutant General's Report of the fight it is said that the Regiment could only be stopped when commanded to retreat, by Col. Wells laying hold of the color bearer and holding him by main force. June 9 they were engaged in the Battle of Piedmont, where they charged upon the enemy, who were behind rail breastworks, and drove them, capturing more than 1,000 prisoners, but the loss of the Regiment was very heavy. Space forbids a full account of the splendid service rendered by this Regiment, the sanguinary conflicts in which it was engaged, and its faithful devotion and heroic conduct till final victory crowned the Union Arms. Col. Wells was mortally wounded in battle near Cedar Creek, Va., October 13, 1864. He fell into the hands of the enemy, and was taken to Strasburg, Va., where he died the same evening. He was as brave and gallant an officer as ever went from this State, and greatly beloved by all the officers and men of his command. When he was wounded an officer was sent to assist him from his horse, but he would not be carried to the rear, saying, "Gentlemen, it is of no use; save yourselves." After his death, Lieut. Col. William S. Lincoln, of Worcester, was promoted to Colonel of the Regiment. The more important battles in which the Regiment was engaged were Newmarket, Piedmont, Lynchburg, Snicker's Gap, Martinsburg, Halltown, Berryville, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. They were also engaged with and closely pressing the enemy near Appomattox, on the morning of April 9, 1865, when, at 9 o'clock, they were ordered to cease firing, and in the afternoon the joyful news came that Lee had surrendered. From this time the Regiment performed such service as circumstances required, until June 16, 1865, when such original members as were present with the command were mustered out of the service, at the capital of the late Rebel Government; those whose terms of service did not expire until after October 1, following, being transferred to the 24th Mass. Infantry, then Provost Guard of the city of Richmond, under command of Col. George B. Macomber, of Oakham, Mass., and Lieut. Jerre Horton. The Regiment broke camp at early dawn the next day, June 17, and took up their march for home. They went by boat, via Baltimore, to Philadelphia, where they received a joyous welcome and a bountiful breakfast, Sunday morning, June 19. On the evening of that day they arrived at New York, where they received a hearty welcome and were feasted on strawberries by the military agent of that State; Col. Frank E. Howe, our own faithful and devoted State Agent, being absent, but on his return he was indefatigable in his attentions. Under his escort, in the fading beauty of the next day's sun, through gayly decorated streets, thronged with welcoming citizens, and roar of artillery, the Thirty-fourth Massachusetts commenced the last stage of its homeward route. Reaching Readville the next day, the public property was turned over to the proper authorities, and, on July 6, having completed within 25 days their period of enlistment, the men received their pay and final discharge. At the Battle of Cedar Creek, when in the early dawn of the morning, under cover of a dense fog, the Rebel Army had passed undiscovered around our left, and came thundering down upon the flank and rear of the Union forces, the Thirty-fourth alone of all the Army of West Virginia, preserved its formation entire. A brother officer of a sister State, but of a different arm of the service, says of this Regiment: "It was always first to advance, and last to retreat, maintaining its organization unbroken under all circumstances." Col. Lincoln, on returning the white flag of the State, said: "I return it with the proud satisfaction that no act of ours has stained its purity. It is endeared to us by the memory of our common trials and privations, of our mutual services and dangers; and is made sacred to our hearts by the blood of the gallant men who have breathed out their spirits beneath its folds."

THIRTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

North Brookfield was represented in this Regiment by fourteen men. It was recruited in Worcester County, organized at Worcester in Camp Wool, and mustered into the service of the United States August 30, 1862. September 2, their friends in Worcester having procured a beautiful national flag, the same was presented to the Regiment by Hon. P. Emory Aldrich, Mayor, in eloquent and appropriate words. The Regiment left the State the same day to join the Army of the Potomac. Its history is an eventful and honorable one. It seems to have suffered quite as much from its long and weary marches and short rations as in the field. In November, 1862, while at Carter's Road, Va., their supply train having been cut off, two ears of corn and a small piece of fresh meat daily were all the rations received for about a week. It was at the Battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, but was held in reserve on the bank of the river, and lost only two men, wounded by shell. In February, 1863, it went to Newport News, and passed six weeks in drill and camp duty; when it proceeded by boat and rail to Lexington, Ky., where it arrived March 29. Here it encamped one week, and then by special order from Gen. Burnside, went to Cincinnati, Ohio, to guard the polls at the city election, which passing off quietly, the services of the Regiment were not required. It next went into Camp "Dick Robinson," thirty miles south of Lexington, where it arrived April 9. In the latter part of May, the Regiment, with other forces, was ordered to march in pursuit of Morgan's guerrillas; they captured twenty-five prisoners, and returned without loss. June 1, Col. Bowman was promoted to the command of a brigade, consisting of the Thirty-Sixth and three other regiments. After some successful fighting with the guerrillas, by which some more were captured, the brigade went by rail and boat to Milldale, ten miles in rear of Vicksburg, where it took up a position to prevent the rebel Gen. Joe Johnston from raising the siege. Vicksburg falling July 4, the brigade pursued Johnston in his retreat, doing him much damage; but these skirmishes and the return march were badly managed, and resulted in the loss of several men of the Thirty-Sixth. Without rations, under a Mississippi sun, they were marched till some dropped dead in the ranks, and large numbers fell out exhausted. They returned to their old camp at Milldale, which they reached about July 25, and nearly half the division went into hospital. July 27, Col. Bowman was discharged, and, on the 30th, Col. Norton was also relieved. On the 31st, Arthur A. Goodell of Worcester was promoted from Major to Lieutenant Colonel, and took command of the Regiment. August 5, the Regiment embarked on the Hiawatha, for Cairo, Ill.; here they took cars for Cincinnati, where they arrived August 12, crossed the Ohio River to Covington, Ky., and went into barracks. The Mississippi campaign was a severe one for the Thirty-Sixth; causing a loss of full fifty of its men by death, and nearly 100 more by discharge. August 17, the Regiment left Covington, going by rail to Nicholasville, Ky., and thence marched thirty-five miles to Crab Orchard; many being left sick at various points in Kentucky. September 10, the remnant of the first division left Crab Orchard for East Tennessee. The Thirty-sixth at this time numbered only 198 guns, out of nearly 800 enlisted men. September 22, the Regiment arrived at Morristown, Tenn., having marched 140 miles. It was next detailed as guard for a wagon train going to Gen. Burnside's Army, then operating in the vicinity of Bristol, Tenn.; but after marching ten miles, the train was ordered back, and the Regiment went into camp at Knoxville. After being there only six days, they were ordered to march to meet the Rebels advancing from Virginia, under Gen. Jones; they fought and defeated them October 10, at Blue Springs. The Thirty-sixth lost in this battle three officers and three men wounded, one man fatally. Lieut. Col. Goodell was severely wounded by a piece of shell. The enemy was pursued twenty miles, and many prisoners were taken. The Regiment then returned to Knoxville. It next marched south, thirty miles, to Loudon, Tenn., where the Rebels were threatening our position; remained there five days, but did not meet them. October 29, the Regiment went into camp at Lenoir's, and the men were notified that they would winter there, and the next fortnight was spent in constructing winter quarters. When these were nearly completed, on November 14, orders were received to move, as Longstreet was reported to be approaching. The teams of this brigade were away, and as no others could be obtained, nearly all the regimental baggage was abandoned and destroyed. After the discharge of Col. Bowman, the Thirty-Sixth was attached to Col. Morrison's brigade, consisting of this and three other Regiments, the Forty-Fifth Pennsylvania, the Eighth Michigan, and the Seventy-Ninth New York. This brigade was sent out on the Kinston road to prevent the advance of the enemy, and did most efficient and valuable service. Here, November 16, 1863, was fought the Battle of Campbell's Station, sixteen miles southwest from Knoxville. The Regiment lost in this battle, one officer and three enlisted men killed, three officers and fourteen men wounded, and three men missing. After repulsing the Rebels the brigade returned to Knoxville, and was assigned a position among the forces stationed there for the defence of the city against Gen. Longstreet's army. November 29, Longstreet's forces made a fierce attack on the defences of the city, determined to capture it; but after suffering terrible loss, and a complete defeat, he was compelled to retire, and the shouts of victory rang through the Union forces. The Regiment remained in Tennessee till the close of 1863, marching, as ordered, from time to time, and from place to place, performing faithfully and bravely every duty, and bearing patiently their privations and hardships; suffering much from cold, hunger, want of clothing, insufficient sleep, and other causes. In January, 1864, the Regiment was encamped at Strawberry Plains, Tenn., where they were in great destitution, and continued to suffer from cold and hunger; their rations at this time being only about one spoonful of flour per day, and what corn could be picked up from under the feet of the mules and horses. The Regiment continued in Tennessee till March 21, when it commenced its march over the Cumberland Mountains, to Nicholasville, Ky., a distance of 198 miles, where it arrived April 1. On April 2, it took cars for Annapolis, Md., reached there April 6, and went into camp. Here provisions were plenty, new clothing was drawn, everything was comfortable, neat and clean, and the boys were joyous in the expectation of being allowed a rest of several weeks, after the hardships they had endured through the winter; but they were permitted to remain only a few days, being ordered to break camp, and take up their march south; they went to Alexandria, thence to Fairfax Court House, thence to Bristow, thence to Catlett's Station, from thence to Bealton, halting a day or two at each of these places, and on May 5, 1864, crossed the Rapidan, and on the 6th the Regiment was engaged in the Battle of the Wilderness, where it charged the enemy three times and sustained a heavy loss. It was also engaged May 7 and 8 without loss; on the 8th and 9th marched to Chancellorsville, about nine miles east from the Wilderness, and on the 15th marched southerly fifteen miles to Spottsylvania Court House, where on May 12, it was engaged in the terrible battle at that place, in which the Regiment suffered severely; Capt. Bailey and First Lieut. Daniels being killed, Capt. Morse badly wounded, twenty enlisted men killed, and fifty-six wounded. Here on this day fell one of our own brave boys, Louis D. Winslow. The Regiment remained near this place till May 21, when it crossed the Po and North Anna Rivers and was almost daily engaged skirmishing with the enemy. June 3, the Regiment was engaged in the battle at Cold Harbor; its loss in this battle being two officers wounded, (Capt. Burke and Lieut. Passage,) eight enlisted men killed, thirty-seven wounded. After this battle the Regiment remained in this vicinity and was engaged in occasional skirmishes till June 12, when it commenced its march to the James River, which it reached near Harrison's Landing on the night of the 14th; remained in camp there during the 15th, and on the night of the 15th, and day of the 16th, was on the march to Petersburg; arrived there on the evening of the 16th, and at daybreak on the 17th charged the Rebel works, completely surprising the enemy, capturing 4 cannon, 600 prisoners, over 1,500 muskets and equipments, and a large amount of ammunition. In this charge Capt. Holmes was mortally wounded; of enlisted men three were killed, and fifteen wounded. The next day the brigade in which was the Thirty-sixth supported the First Division, and this Regiment lost one officer killed, Capt. Buffum, enlisted men killed, one; wounded, seven. The Regiment remained in the rifle-pits before Petersburg from June 18 to August 19. July 30 the Rebel fort was blown up and an assault made; but the Thirty-Sixth remained in the rifle-pits; where its loss from June 18 to August 19, was enlisted men killed, 5; wounded, 14. August 19 the Regiment marched 5 miles to Weldon Railroad, and remained in camp there, doing picket duty till September 27, when it broke camp and marched to the vicinity of Petersburg, and from thence to Poplar Spring Church, Va., where it took part in the charge on the Rebel works, at Pegram Farm, September 30. The first line of works was taken, but in attempting to carry the second line the Union forces were repulsed with considerable loss, and among the killed was one of our own heroic men, Lyman H. Gilbert. The Regiment remained in line through the day of October 1, expecting an attack from the enemy, but none being made, it moved forward about a quarter of a mile, and established a new line near the Boisseau house at Pegram Farm, losing in this movement six enlisted men, wounded. It remained in Pegram Farm Camp, excepting little movements for the purpose of deceiving the enemy, till November 29, 1864, when the Regiment was ordered to march and occupy Fort Rice, in front of Petersburg; here it remained till April, 1865, doing picket duty, and watching the movements of the enemy. On April 3, the Rebels having during the previous night evacuated their lines around Petersburg, our troops, including the Thirty-Sixth, were early in motion, and, passing through Petersburg, followed them twelve miles. On the 4th, 5th, and 6th, the march was continued after the retreating army of Gen. Lee, reaching Nottaway Court House, forty-five miles from Petersburg, on the 6th. Here the Regiment was detailed to guard a supply train to army headquarters. After marching two days and nights without sleep, and stopping only twice, just long enough to make coffee, they arrived at Rice's Station on the South Side Railroad, on the morning of the 8th; here the Regiment was relieved, and went into camp. April 9, it marched to Farmville, ten miles in advance, on South Side Railroad, relieved the guards and took charge of prisoners. Lee having surrendered April 9, on the evening of April 26 the Regiment embarked at City Point on steamer Vidette, and at daylight the next morning sailed for Alexandria, Va., where it arrived on the 28th, and went into camp. Here it remained until mustered out at 6 o'clock A.M., June 8. It left Alexandria the same afternoon with orders to proceed to Readville, Mass. It arrived there on the evening of June 10, and pitched its tents for the last time. Although the Regiment when it left the State numbered 1,040 strong, and several hundreds from time to time had been added to it while in the field, it had been so reduced by death, wounds, sickness and other causes, that during its last campaign it averaged only about 300 men present for duty. When mustered out, 233 men, present and absent, whose term of service did not expire till October 1, 1865, were transferred to the Fifty-Sixth Regiment, Mass. Vols.; of these 203 were re-enlisted veterans from the Twenty-First Regiment.

During its service the Regiment took part in the following engagements: Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, Jackson, Blue Springs, Campbell's Station, Siege of Knoxville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Poplar Spring Church, Hatcher's Run, and many other less important fights and skirmishes. Probably no regiment which left our State had a more varied and trying experience than the Thirty-Sixth, although the Fifteenth, and perhaps some others, suffered more severely in battle. It was filled with brave and gallant men, ever ready to follow the flag wherever duty called, and, if need be, sacrifice themselves in its defence; and our State and country will regard with gratitude and respect those who survived the perils of the war and were permitted to return, and will ever honor and cherish the memory of their fallen comrades, the heroic men who died that their country might live. On Tuesday, June 13, the entire Regiment visited Worcester, and the little band of bronzed and hardy veterans presented a strange contrast to that Regiment which nearly three years before, with full ranks, marched the same streets on their journey to the front. The city was gayly decorated, and flags were flying in all directions. A bountiful collation was provided by the city, and His Honor Mayor Ball addressed the veterans in eloquent words of welcome and congratulation. The same flag which had been presented to the Regiment on the day it left the city, now soiled and rent, and its staff shattered, was carried at the head of the column and is now preserved in the State House in Boston, with the flags of the Massachusetts Regiments. It is a matter of pride to the Regiment that in all its arduous service, and on many hard-fought fields, it never lost a color or a flag. The reception and ovation was all that could be desired, and will ever be remembered with pride and pleasure by those who participated in it. On Monday, the 19th of June, 1865, the Regiment assembled as a body for the last time at Readville, and received its pay and final discharge.

FORTY-SECOND REGIMENT.

A brief history of the 42d Regiment nine months' Mass. Vols. will not only be interesting to the relatives and friends of North Brookfield soldiers in this Regiment, but it is due to the men who served in it; that those who, in after years, shall read this record, may know why there is no account of any battles in which the men in it, who went from this town, were engaged.

The Regiment was recruited at Camp Meigs, Readville, Mass., and the men who composed it went chiefly from Boston and its immediate vicinity. It was commanded by Col. Isaac S. Burrill, of Roxbury. As there was likely to be too much delay in filling it from that vicinity, Col. Burrill obtained an order for the transfer of three companies from the 51st Regiment, then recruiting at Camp Scott, Worcester, to his regiment; and Cos. E, F, and K, were thus transferred.

The Regiment left Camp Meigs, Nov. 21, 1862, went to New York, was ordered to Camp N. P. Banks, at Union Race Course, East New York, and, on the evening of the 22d, marched out there, a distance of nine miles, arriving at 9 o'clock, on a cold, stormy night; no provision had been made for it, and it bivouacked in the streets, sheds, and wherever the men could find a place; went into camp next day, and remained there until Dec. 2d, when it broke camp, and marched to Brooklyn. Thence it embarked on four transport steamers, the Saxon, Quincy, Shetucket and Charles Osgood. The Quincy sailed from New York on the night of Dec. 4, 1862, and the others the next morning, all in Gen. Banks's expedition, with sealed orders,—not to be opened until out at sea,—to report at Ship Island, Pascagoula Bay, about seventy-five miles east of New Orleans. The Saxon proved to be the only seaworthy transport of the four. Three companies, D, G, and I, with Col. Burrill, and Adj. Davis, Quartermaster Burrill, Surgeon Cummings and Chaplain Sanger of his staff, were on this boat, arriving at Ship Island on the 14th, and at New Orleans on the 16th, and the same day proceeded to Carrollton on the Mississippi, 12 miles above New Orleans, and occupied Camp Mansfield under command of Col. Burrill. On the 19th he received orders to immediately re-embark on the Saxon and proceed with the detachment under his command to Galveston, Texas; there to land and take post; and was advised that the rest of his command would be ordered to follow him, on their arrival at New Orleans. The Saxon arrived at Galveston on the 24th. Commander Renshaw of the blockading fleet off Galveston, and the commanders of all the gun-boats then in the harbor, who met and consulted with Col. Burrill on his arrival there, unanimously advised him to land at once, and take up quarters in a building on Kuhun's wharf, assuring him that he could safely do so, and that the gun-boats were perfectly able to repel any attack that might be made upon him. On the morning of the 25th, a landing was made in accordance with the above plan, and the stars and stripes were thrown to the breeze and greeted with hearty cheers by the troops. Barricades were erected, both at the building and at the approaches to the wharf, reconnoissances were made, a large picket force established, and every possible precaution taken for the safety of this little force of about 250 men. About three o'clock on the morning of January 1, 1863, the pickets were driven in by the artillery of the enemy, who were advancing in force. Col. Burrill instantly formed his men behind his barricades on the wharf, and at the same time signalled to the gun-boats that the enemy was upon him. The enemy opened fire with artillery, which was responded to by our gun-boats. Two or three attempts were made to charge on, and capture our position before daylight, but each attempt was repulsed by Col. Burrill's little force, whose fire was so effective as to drive the enemy from some of his guns. Soon after daylight, four rebel gun-boats and a ram were seen making for our fleet, and they captured the Harriet Lane, after a short, but fierce and determined engagement; at eight o'clock a flag of truce was raised by the enemy on the Harriet Lane and on shore; this was responded to by our fleet, and finally by Col. Burrill on the wharf. Col. Burrill at once despatched Adj. Davis to the fleet to learn the cause of the truce, and also to get the gun-boats to come to the wharf and take off his command, as the enemy was seen to have overwhelming odds against him. The rebel force was under command of Gen. Magruder, who sent an officer demanding a surrender. Col. Burrill asked for an hour's delay before answering the demand; this was refused, and he was assured that he would be attacked by the entire force of the enemy of 5,000 men and 31 pieces of artillery. Feeling that it would be folly to delay, and needlessly sacrifice his men, Col. Burrill decided to capitulate. On offering his sword to the officer, he was desired to keep it, in respect to the brave and able defence he had made with his little force against one so overwhelming; and in respect to their courage and bravery, Gen. Magruder ordered that all private property, of the privates as well as officers, should be respected. The prisoners taken were Col. Burrill, Surgeon Cummings, Chaplain Sanger, all the officers of companies D, G and I, and 244 enlisted men, also Lieut. B. P. Stowell of Co. K. Col. Burrill's loss in killed and wounded was slight, while the loss of the enemy in killed and wounded, (by their own account,) was between three and four hundred. Adjutant Davis, from the deck of the gun-boat on which he was standing, saw Col. Burrill and his command marched off, prisoners of war; he therefore remained on board, and immediately sailed with the fleet to New Orleans, and reported to Maj. Gen. Banks the result of the unfortunate expedition. The prisoners were sent to Houston, Texas, January 2d, and on the 22d the enlisted men were paroled and returned to New Orleans, but were never exchanged. They remained in parole camp at Camp Farr till the expiration of their service, and returned home with the rest of the Regiment; but the officers (excepting Chaplain Sanger) were all kept more than a year after the return of the Regiment. In consequence of the foregoing facts the 42d Regiment was practically broken up, and was never permitted to perform service under its regimental officers.

Owing to the miserable condition of the transports the remainder of the Regiment did not all arrive in New Orleans until Jan. 14, 1863, forty-one days after leaving New York, and two weeks after Col. Burrill and his command, who went on the Saxon, had been captured. The remaining companies, under Lieut. Col. J. Stedman, were attached to the Second Brigade, under command of Col. Farr, of the 26th Mass.

Vols. Most of the officers were put on detached service in New Orleans, and elsewhere, and the different companies assigned to various guard and provost duties, as the service from time to time demanded. Some companies were in several battles, and several men were killed, and quite a large number wounded, but Co. F, in which were all the North Brookfield men, was never engaged in any battle, but they were always ready and willing to perform faithfully every duty to which they were assigned, and the Adjutant General in his report of 1863, makes honorable mention of services rendered by officers and men, and to this report reference may be had for a full history of the Forty-Second Regiment.

FOURTH REGIMENT CAVALRY.

North Brookfield was represented in this Regiment by thirteen men. The Regiment was composed of the Independent Battalion, formerly Third Battalion, First Regiment of Cavalry, Mass. Vols, and two new Battalions recruited in Massachusetts. At the time of the organization of the Regiment the First Battalion under command of Major Stevens of Cambridge, was stationed in South Carolina. The Second Battalion, under command of Major Keith of Boston, left the State for Hilton Head, S.C., March 20, 1864, and the Third Battalion, under command of Major Cabot of Brookline, also sailed for Hilton Head, April 23, 1864. Lieut. Col. A. A. Rand of Boston was in command of the Regiment. It consisted of twelve squadrons, each one hundred strong, and was fully recruited and organized about March 1, 1864. The Regiment was soon ordered to report at Fortress Monroe to Major General Butler, commanding the Department of Virginia and North Carolina. The different Battalions of the Regiment were ordered from time to time to various places in Virginia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Florida, doing efficient and valuable service during the campaign of 1864. It was engaged at Gainesville, Florida, Drury's Bluff, and at several of the engagements in front of Petersburg and Richmond. At the opening of 1865, the Regiment was divided as follows: Two companies were stationed at Jacksonville, Florida; two at Deveaux Neck, S.C.; two at the headquarters of the Twenty-Fourth Army Corps; two at the headquarters of the Twenty-Fifth Army Corps before Richmond; one at Williamsburg, Va., and one at Harrison's Landing, Va. The headquarters of the Regiment, with two companies, were at Vienna, Va., attached to the headquarters of the Army of the James. Parts of the Regiment were engaged with the enemy at Picolata Road, Florida, February 4, also at Manning, Dingley's Mills, Swift Creek, Camden, Waterbury, and Deep Creek, S.C., on the 8th, 9th, 18th, 19th and 20th of April. When the Army of the James moved from its winter quarters, March 28, 1865, companies F and K remained attached to the Twenty-Fourth Army Corps and took part in the engagements of that Corps while in pursuit of the Rebel Army of Northern Virginia. Companies E and H remained with the Twenty-Fifth Army Corps before Richmond, and were the first troops to enter the city, April 3. The guidons of these companies were the first Union colors carried into Richmond, and raised by Union troops; they floated from the Capital building until a large flag supplied their place. That part of this Regiment attached at this time to the headquarters of the Army of the James (companies I, L, and M), commanded by Col. Francis Washburn of Lancaster, Mass., marched with them to Burkesville, some seventy miles southwest of Richmond, at the crossing of the Richmond, Danville and South Side Railroad, where they arrived on the night of April 5. Early the next morning, in accordance with orders received the previous night, Col. Washburn, with two Regiments of Infantry and a part of his own force of Cavalry, started to destroy High Bridge, eighteen miles distant, and of great importance to the retreating Rebel army. The bridge was reached about noon of the 6th, but a short time before they arrived there, Brevet Brig. Gen. Theodore Reed arrived, with orders to hold, and not destroy, the bridge. He took command. It was soon found that the enemy was there in strong force, with cavalry and artillery, and had thrown a large body of troops between him and the Army of the James. Thus cut off, the only alternative for Gen. Reed was to charge, and if possible cut through the enemy. Two desperate charges were made, but in vain. Of the twelve officers engaged at this time, three were killed, and five severely wounded, and the little band was hemmed in and overpowered by two divisions of Cavalry—Rosser's and Fitz Hugh Lee's—the advance of Gen. Lee's Army. In this battle Gen. Reed was killed, and Col. Washburn mortally wounded. The latter died only a few days after, at the house of his brother, J. D. Washburn, in Worcester. Col. Washburn was one of the most fearless men that ever fought on the battle-field; he was here fighting with an odds of eight men to one against him, in a hand to hand fight; he might have escaped with his cavalry but refused to leave the infantry as long as there was the slightest chance of rescuing them; accordingly he made a third charge, and while crossing sabres with a Rebel officer whom he had nearly disarmed, he was shot in the head by another, and after he had fallen received a terrible sabre cut upon the skull, which finished his work. He was two days a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, and notwithstanding they extolled his gallant bravery, they did nothing for his wounds and robbed him of his horse, his sword and his money. In regard to this heroic man, Hon. E. B. Washburn of Illinois, a very remote relative, while on a visit to the scene after the battle, wrote as follows: "I have seen Col. Washburn of the Fourth Mass. Cavalry at the hospital at Point of Rocks. I cannot refrain from testifying to his unsurpassed gallantry and prowess in the action in which he was wounded, which challenged the admiration of both armies. Gen. Grant and Gen. Ord both bore testimony to his daring courage, and expressed to me the greatest anxiety for his speedy recovery. Your State may well be proud of such a noble son." Lieut. Gen. Grant, as soon as the intelligence of his death was received, paused amid his vast labors, and wrote with his own hand a letter to the family of the deceased, expressing his sympathy in their loss, and admiration for his gallant and heroic conduct. Sad indeed it seems that this brave man should be stricken down and not permitted to join in the shouts of victory and final triumph which rang through the land only three short days after he fell; but he lived to hear the joyful news before going to his reward, and he and thousands of others with spirits as brave and true, who have sacrificed their lives upon their country's altar, will know they did not die in vain. Although the battle at High Bridge resulted in so great a loss in officers and men to the Union forces, the desperate fighting there inflicted great damage upon the Rebel forces and secured important results to our army. A Rebel Colonel, Inspector General on Lee's staff, said to Gen. Ord, after the surrender, "The cutting off of Lee's army at Appomattox Court House was probably owing to the sharpness of that fight; so fierce were the charges of Col. Washburn and his men, and so determined their fighting, that Gen. Lee received the impression that they must be supported by a large part of the army, and that his retreat was cut off." Acting under this impression, he halted his army, and gave what the Inspector General calls "stampeding orders." By the delay of Gen. Lee's retreating army in this fight, Gen. Sheridan and Gen. Ord were enabled to come up with their forces and cut off the retreat directly south, and consequently Lee was obliged to make a detour by way of Appomattox Court House. Confederate General Rosser concurs in this opinion, and states that the importance of that fight has never been appreciated. That Lieut. Gen. Grant and Gen. Ord appreciated its importance and confirmed the principal facts stated above, is shown by Lieut. Gen. Grant's Report of the Armies of the United States, an extract from which is given, in connection with the history of this Regiment, in Adjutant General Schouler's Report of 1865, page 660. Soon after the surrender of Lee the detachments were assembled at Richmond, Va., and the Regiment performed various guard and courier duty, until November 14, when it was mustered out of the service. It received its final discharge at Galloupe's Island, Boston Harbor, November 26, 1865.

Chas. Adams Esq.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. CHARLES ADAMS, JR., A.M. — A MEMORIAL.

[As Mr. Adams was one of the original movers for a History of North Brookfield, was a member of the first committee of publication chosen by the town, and had performed a most important part of the work before his death, it is fitting that a brief obituary of him should be given in this connection. J. H. TEMPLE.]

According to his own prepared Family Record, Mr. Adams is descended from Henry¹, who came from England and settled in Braintree; the line running through Edward² of Medfield, John³ of Medfield, Abraham⁴ of Brookfield, Jesse⁵ of Brookfield, Charles, M.D.⁶ of Antrim, N.H., and Oakham, Mass.

Charles, Jr.⁷ was born at Antrim, in the part then known as Woodbury Village, now South Antrim, Jan. 31, 1810, and died at North Brookfield, Apr. 19, 1886. In addition to the advantages of the common schools, he attended a select school in Brookfield under Rev. John Bisbee, and studied eight months with Rev. Josiah Clark of Rutland. This completed his school education. He served an apprenticeship of five years in a country store at Petersham, and was employed as clerk for a single year by J. B. Fairbanks of Ware. He came to North Brookfield in 1832, and entered the employment of the Messrs. Batcheller, shoe manufacturers, as bookkeeper and accountant, which position he held for twenty years. In 1852, he became a member of the firm, and so continued till 1860, when he retired, with a competence.

Mr. Adams was much in public life — having held by election, most of more responsible town offices: was representative to the General Court for the years 1850, '51, '52 and '62; state senator 1865, '66, '77 and '78; member of the executive council 1867, '68, '69 and '70; treasurer and receiver-general of the Commonwealth 1871, '72, '73, '74 and '75. He was also honored with special trusts; was commissioner of the Norwich and Worcester railroad Sinking Fund; and for many years president of the North Brookfield savings bank. Perhaps it is enough to say, that in all these offices and trusts, he fully met the expectation of his constituents, for industry, ability, foresight, good judgment and integrity.

In manners, Mr. Adams had the dignity, without the preciseness, of a gentleman of the old school of official station. What was lacking in courtliness, was more than made up by self-poise, and an unaffected cordiality that won esteem, while it did not lessen respect. Always collected, and maintaining a proper self-respect, he yet was at home equally in the kitchen of the farmers and the parlors of the educated. He saw a true manhood in whomsoever it existed, and yielded it due homage; he detected and did not conceal his contempt for mere pretence and outside show.

Though he often lamented his early disadvantages of schooling, yet he was, in the best sense, an educated man — not “self-made” as the popular phrase is, which implies the creating of one’s surroundings and means. Rather, he subjected those surroundings to his will, and made them the means to develop and furnish his mind; and thus was educated and trained. He utilized whatever advantages were within his reach, whether at home, or at school, behind the counter, or in the counting-room; first as a subordinate, and after as partner, owner, and director. He was a learner, always, and everywhere; seizing the opportunities, which both old and young so often throw away, to gain knowledge of men, and methods, and principles, and business, as well as books. And this early training, and the formation of habits of observation and inquiry and research, and this steady application to the work and duty of the hour, laid the foundation of the self-reliance, and power of concentrated effort, which fitted him for the higher duties and responsibilities of business life and official position. He succeeded, because he had paid the full price of success.

Nor was his lack of school privileges apparent. He was well read in general and local history, as well as in political economy, the industrial sciences and finance. His memory was retentive, and was well stored with available knowledge. He was a good talker; and though commonly very practical in conversation, he yet possessed a mobile fancy, and a vein of humor slightly imbued with satire, that, combined, and incited by refined instincts, and pure thoughts and associations, made him a desirable acquisition to any social circle.

In the quiet life of a busy manufacturer, and even in the reponsible station of a State official, there is little of incident, and few turns of affairs, to attract special notice, and give interest to a biographical sketch. The startling situations, and conflicts, and triumphs, which attach to military and professional life, and make the reputation and renown of men of those classes, and furnish the emphatic points in their biographies, are either wanting in legislative, and judicial, and mercantile experience; or they are of strictly personal and temporary concern. They may have touched matters of success, or popularity, vital in their day; but that day was a brief one ; and results affected mainly the parties immediately interested.

While a member of the legislature, and the executive council, Mr. Adams gave his attention largely to matters of banking and finance, and questions growing out of the State's connection with the Troy and Greenfield, and the Boston, Hartford and Erie railroads, and other corporations. He was chairman, or a member of the appropriate committees. To these committees is intrusted the shaping of the financial policy of the Commonwealth. And as several of his terms of service followed close upon the ending of the late Civil War, his sound views and practical good sense made his influence at that juncture of especial consequence. The reports from his pen are distinguished by a broad grasp, and able reasoning, and safe conclusions.

Mr. Adams did not claim to be a popular speaker, and attempted nothing in the line of oratory. He wrote out his intended remarks ; and as he was a good reader, he made a favorable impression whenever he chose to appear before the public. He had himself and his theme well in hand ; his points were clearly put ; his evident mastery of his subject enlisted the hearer's attention, while his unaffected earnestness made a deep impression, if it did not carry conviction.

His style of writing was largely influenced by his leading pursuits. It was direct, unadorned, and what in Addisonian times would have been called didactic. He used Anglo-Saxon words and idioms ; and the guiding thread of logic was always apparent in his sentences and consecutive sections. Having Scotch blood in his veins, it was only natural that he should have a love for Scottish history and literature. He became particularly fond of the poetry of Gray and Burns, and the poetry and romance of Sir Walter Scott. And the chance he had of going abroad in 1871, to complete the sale of State bonds in London, and which opportunity he embraced for extended travel in Scotland as well as on the Continent, intensified the early passion, and gave direction to his study and reflection in later years, after his retirement from office.

In a paper which he wrote in 1873, on "The Life and Times of Robert Burns," he tells us how he was first led into this attractive field. "In the year 1827, when I was in my seventeenth year, in a trade with another young man, to make the bargain even, I received a copy of 'Burns' Poems' in two small red-morocco bound volumes, without at the time knowing or caring who Robert Burns was. On opening the books I was delighted to find in them several songs which I had often heard sung by my mother — a descendant from clan McAllister — who was a fine singer — of course the finest I had then heard, and you will pardon me if I say the finest I have ever heard to this day (in my estimation). Some of her favorites, which I found in these volumes, were 'Bonnie Doon,' 'John Anderson my Jo,' 'Auld Lang Syne,' 'Highland Mary,' 'The Lea-Rig,' etc. And the reading of these songs in their peculiar dialect, naturally led my thoughts beyond the songs themselves and the singer, and awakened an interest in the author and his life and home; and thus insensibly I became an ardent admirer of Burns and Scotland."—He then relates his visit to the Land of Burns in 1871, and gives expression to the thoughts inspired by the sight of the places and associations amid which the poet lived and wrote.

This paper, filling sixty-three closely written pages of manuscript, reveals a trait of character which was prominent in all his life, viz., a tender and appreciative regard for his mother; and it furnishes a fair sample of his literary style. It is characterized by vivid descriptions of natural scenery and peasant life. He groups the hamlet, and its occupants and home-surroundings in a spirited picture, charming by its lights and shades, its mingling of the real and ideal, and all enveloped in the fitful sunshine and mists of the Ayr and Ayrshire.—This paper, and a Diary kept by him, and since written out in full, take rank above many modern published essays and books of travel.

Mr. Adams prepared and delivered an Address at the semi-centennial of the Oakham Sabbath School, May, 1868; an Address at the centennial of Antrim, N.H., June 27, 1877, in response to the toast—"Scotch character: still marked by grit and grace"; an Address delivered on Washington's birthday, 1874; and read a paper on North Brookfield family history before the N.E. Historic-Genealogical Society, Feb. 1884; and had partly completed a Sketch of the Life of Thomas Gray. But his principal literary work was a compilation of Family Biographies, comprising the leading Brookfield settlers, and filling ten large quarto volumes. These manuscript volumes contain historical matter, personal anecdotes and adventures, and family memorials, of great value to genealogists, and are a monument of the author's patient research and discriminating judgment. A summary of these Records constitutes the Second Part of this Book.

Both by nature and self-culture, Mr. Adams was a conservative man. But his was a conservatism that is an element of strength, and not of weakness; which was a consequent of deliberation and forecast, and not of timidity. He built on well laid foundations, and not on the sand. He made no more "haste" than "good speed." The meteor may out-dazzle the evening star; but Jupiter remains king of the nightly heavens.

And this habit of mind fitted him for his work in the State Treasurer-ship, and his other financial trusts. A wise conservatism always begets confidence, and when joined with a clear head and habits of investigation, is the common antecedent of permanent success.—This trait appeared as a factor in his daily life ; in his friendships ; in his views on education ; on political and moral reforms ; and on questions of theology and religion. He learned the Assembly's Shorter Catechism from his mother ; and was accustomed to recommend it as a safe manual of Scripture doctrines to be taught to children. He was for fifteen years a member of Dr. Snell's Bible-class. And he united with the Presbyterian Church, because of its steadfast adherence to the old standards of faith and practice.

Mr. Adams was tender and strong in his social friendships, and his heart and purse were open to the calls of the needy and suffering. He bestowed his charities freely, but unostentatiously, on those who had a claim on his generosity and kindness. Many a widow and orphan will miss his timely help, and cherish and bless his memory.

He received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Dartmouth College in 1878.

HON. FREEMAN WALKER.

Mr. Walker was an original member of the committee of publication of the Town History, and has died since the work was begun. The following autobiography was found among the papers left by Mr. Adams.

[Hon. Freeman Walker died July 13, 1883. A few days before his death he placed in my hands the following autobiographical sketch to be used in the town history, or such parts of it as the historian should see fit. It is inserted here in full. Charles Adams, Jr.]

Freeman Walker, youngest son of Dea. Walter Walker, was born Dec. 12, 1803.

Educational advantages, the public schools only, except one term at the Monson Academy in the fall of 1822. The winter following kept school in what was then the town of Western (now Warren) in the Coy's Hill district.

In May 1823 went into the store of Newell & Taintor, West Brookfield, as clerk.

In Aug. of that year at the request of my brother Amasa, who had gone to Methuen, as agent of the Methuen Manufacturing Company, and with the assent of Newell & Taintor, I went to that town to take charge of a store connected with the Company. Here I remained three years, and then by his request, followed my brother to Boston, as his clerk, in whose employ I remained till Jan. 1, 1830.

In the mean time I acted as accountant, keeping his books by double entry, and as principal salesman, as well as purchaser and as agent for the sale and purchase of merchandise, visiting from time to time all the cities between Boston and Richmond, Va. Spent some months for him in Alexandria, D.C., closing up a bankrupt shoe business in which he was interested as a creditor; afterwards spent some months for him in Baltimore, where I remained till invited to connect myself with the firm of T. & E. Batcheller, which I did Jan. 1, 1830, under the firm of T. & E. Batcheller & Walker, where I remained till 1834.

In the mean time the business had very much increased, and assumed an organization which with great improvements has continued to the present.

On the 3^d of June 1830 I married Mary Bond, dau. of Amos Bond of this town.

After leaving the concern of Batcheller, I remained one year out of business, not being in good health, which had been one cause of my leaving business with them, as it was much against their wishes at the time. In 1835 I commenced the shoe business alone, and used the lower story of the old [first] town-house for that purpose, the basement of the building being then used as a district school, and the upper story as a high school.

In 1836 I built a shoe factory in addition to the carriage shop of S. G. Reed which I had bought for that purpose. There I continued business till 1838, and with Martin Bellows and others, was connected with the shoe business till 1842. In the mean time I had been appointed agent of the creditors of Woolson & Cutter of Louisville, Ky., where I spent some months in attempting to settle the claims of the said creditors against the concern, but without satisfactory success. It was during these years that I became connected with town affairs, and acted as Moderator, Selectman, Overseer of the Poor, and as Representative to the General Court in the years 1840 & 1841 and represented the County in Senate in the years 1852 & 1853; and of the 8th (?) district in the year 1861, making 3 terms in the Senate; acted as chairman of the committee on Manufactures two years, and on other important committees. Had the pleasure of sustaining Gov. Andrew in his efforts to equip and forward men to the Army, which in some instances he did before legal authority had been obtained for that purpose.

The session of 1861 was the last of my connection with legislation. Served three years on the Board of Agriculture as delegate from the Worcester West Agricultural Society. Have been connected with the affairs of the town since 1834. Acted on building committees in the erection of all [three of the] town-houses, and Grove School-house; building the new road to East Brookfield; was director during the location and construction of our Railroad and with which in that capacity I have been connected with this road to the present time. To go back in my business history, I would say that in connection with my brother Amasa, we bought the water privilege in East Brookfield and its appurtenances in the year 1845, and proceeded to improve the same. First, by building a furnace and then a brick factory 75 x 40 feet, and then a large store & saw mill; put in new wheels and stones into the grist-mill, built an addition to accommodate the plaster business, &c.

In 1848 built the reservoir dam at what is known as Brooks Pond, thereby adding greatly to the water-power at East Brookfield, and thus laying the foundation of all the business and improvements that exist on the premises at the present day.

These investments were not money-making concerns to the proprietors, but were essential to the growth and prosperity of East Brookfield. I had connexion at different times with some of the business carried on upon these premises, but always yielded my connection with them when they were wanted by other parties. For instance in the machine shop and the manufacture of hay-cutters, which I took from a nominal existence, and in one year put it upon a respectable basis, and made $3,000, and at the request of my associate in business turned the concern over to him, after which he failed to make it a profitable concern. I did the same with the furnace business: took it on my hands when it had an unprofitable contract for castings, which I fulfilled to the entire satisfaction of the parties; made favorable contracts for iron, and passed the concern over to the other party in interest, at their request, but not ultimately to their advantage.

In all my business relations, which include connection with at least 15 different individuals, no one of them could say that they were ever losers by business connection with me.

In society matters, I was one of those who left the First Congregational Society for the formation of the Union Congregational Society. This I did from an honest belief that the best interests of religion would be advanced by such a movement and not from any personal feeling of hostility to the then acting pastor of that society, although at the time of his settlement he was not a man of my choice, and never was appreciated by me as a pastor or preacher. I mention this fact to correct any impression that may have existed at the time, that a personal feeling against the minister, or any member of the church or society, had any influence in causing me to leave that society. And when the circumstances of the town and of the new society had so changed as in the opinion of many to make it expedient to unite the societies, it found in me an advocate for such a union, on terms of equality, mutual concession and self respect. Whether such a union would have been for the best good of the cause for which religious societies are formed, is perhaps an unsettled question, even at the present time.

My political life, though of no particular interest to any but myself, is briefly told. I cast my first vote for Governor of Massachusetts for Levi Lincoln in 1824, as a National Republican. When the Anti-masonic party was formed, I sympathized with the opposition then made to that institution [Masonry], and acted with that party till its object was supposed to have been accomplished in the enactment by our Legislature of a law forbidding the administration of extra-judicial oaths. I then united with the Whig party, in which I voted till the formation of the Free Soil party, and followed its fortunes till it was merged into the Republican Party of the present day. It was as a member of the Whig party that I represented the town in 1840 & 1841; and as a Republican three times in the Senate. I built the house where I now reside in 1835.

Finally I would say that frequent business changes may account for the fact that a business life of more than fifty years, has produced limited pecuniary results.

HON. AMASA WALKER.

AMASA WALKER, the oldest son of Walter Walker, was born in Woodstock, Conn., May 4, 1799. His parents, Walter Walker and Priscilla Carpenter, had been married on the 3rd of April, 1798, and at the time of his birth were living in the village, then known as Muddy Brook, now as East Woodstock. Here they remained until the following spring, when they bought the estate in the North Parish of Brookfield, in Massachusetts, on which their son, Amasa, subsequently lived and died.

Owing to family circumstances, however, their young son was left with his Grandfather Carpenter, in Woodstock, for an entire year after the removal of his parents to Brookfield.

Amasa Walker was a very feeble and delicate child, and lack of physical stamina was manifest throughout all his youthful days, depriving him of the enjoyment of most of the athletic sports practised by his companions. The fact, however, had its compensation in the impulse given to study and reflection, and, perhaps, in a higher capacity of intellectual enjoyment.

On his father's estate in North Brookfield, Amasa Walker was reared, attending the Centre District School, near the old meeting-house; and in the intervals of study, working upon his father's farm, or sticking card-teeth for the card manufacturers of Leicester. Naturally a good and even brilliant scholar, the child and youth took the utmost advantage of the limited opportunities offered by the village school of those days, and acquired that thorough training in English which, in later days, without the advantage of a college education, enabled him to discuss the most abstruse questions of political science clearly, effectively and agreeably, and to address Senates and Universities with acceptance. Among his principal competitors in school was Ebenezer Strong Snell, afterwards

Amasa Walker

Professor Snell of Amherst College. Among the teachers of his early youth, Mr. Walker placed highest, Mr. Harry Brigham (1811), as the most stimulating and helpful of schoolmasters. In the intervals between the public schools, the boy used to recite to the Rev. Dr. Snell, having among his fellow pupils, William Cullen Bryant and Elijah Meade.

In 1814, young Amasa became clerk in Colonel Henshaw's store. Probably no clerk was ever more diligent and faithful or had a higher sense of the importance of his work. The qualities which afterwards secured his success in business on his own account, were fully exhibited in his early youth, and commanded the complete confidence and respect of his employer.

During the winter of 1815 to '16, the young man was laid up as a result of a physical injury, and in the spring of 1816 went to live with Dr. Crossfield, who had opened a store in South Brookfield, just across the river. In June of that year the store was burned, and the young man became clerk to Captain Moses Bond, then trading on the old green, North Brookfield, afterwards known as the Lower Village.

In 1817, Amasa Walker began to fit for Amherst College and was placed under the tuition of the Rev. Dr. Snell. His zeal in study soon outran his strength and his health completely broke down, compelling the abandonment of the college project. For three months during the winter of 1817 to 1818, he taught school in District No. 6, and then went again to live with Captain Bond. For two years following, in spite of great feebleness and occasional entire prostration, he taught school in various districts of North Brookfield or worked upon the farm at home.

In October 1820 he, in company with Allen Newell, bought the store and stock of Major Holt in West Brookfield. The partnership continued successfully until February 1823, when Mr. Walker sold out his interest to Mr. Taintor. In writing of this, later in life, Mr. Walker said, "I put in $136, and my father let me have about $650: in all, about $800. I took out in cash, $3,550. Probably no young man had ever cleared so much in so short a time, in trade, at that period, in that part of the country. It was a day of very small things." After withdrawing from the partnership, Mr. Walker became agent of the Methuen Manufacturing Company, and acted in that capacity for two years, still suffering much in health. In 1825, he entered into business in Boston with Charles G. Carleton, under the title of Carleton & Walker, and on the 6th of July, 1826, married his partner's sister Emeline, daughter of Deacon Jonathan Carleton of Boston. Mrs. Walker died July 24, 1828, leaving one child who died in infancy. In 1829, Mr. Walker went into business for himself, where his energy, ambition and high standard of duty and honor, enabled him speedily to achieve a large success; yet, notwithstanding the urgent demands of his business and his always delicate health, often threatening complete prostration, he took a prominent part in a great variety of political, social and intellectual efforts.

In 1829, he helped to organize the Boston Lyceum and was its first secretary. This was the earliest institution of the kind in Massachusetts, and it required great efforts to rouse public interest and secure the active co-operation of those on whom the success depended. In the same year, he entered actively into the movement against Masonry, which culminated in the nomination of William Wirt for the presidency, in 1832. In the latter year he became president of the Boston Lyceum and a director of the Franklin Bank. In 1833, he delivered the Fourth of July oration before the Young Men's Society of Boston; this address was published. In 1834, June 23rd, he married Miss Hannah Ambrose of Concord, New Hampshire, by whom he had three children, all of whom survived him. In this year he wrote a series of articles in the Daily Advertiser, calling attention to the necessity of a railroad to connect Boston with Albany and the West beyond. These articles were signed South Market Street, and gave rise to a public meeting which resulted in securing the stock of the Western Railroad. In 1833, he was appointed one of the directors of the Western Railroad, serving in that capacity four years, either on behalf of the stockholders or of the state.

From the beginning of the anti-slavery movement, inaugurated by Mr. Garrison, Mr. Walker had joined actively in that effort, speaking and writing freely; he never, however, acceded to the opinions of that great agitator and his eloquent associates adverse to the union of the states. Mr. Walker insisted upon the constitutional methods, within the Union, and subject to the laws of the land.

In 1839, he became president of the Boston Temperance Society, the first total abstinence association in that city. Mr. Walker's published writings on the subject of total abstinence extend back to 1826.

In 1840, owing to increasing bodily infirmities which seemed likely to cause speedy dissolution, Mr. Walker retired permanently from business. The scale of his mercantile transactions had been very extensive, and he had done more to open the trade of Boston with the South and Southwest than any other merchant of his generation; but the large profits of his business had been, of course, greatly impaired by the almost total wreck of trade and industry in 1837 and 1839, so that Mr. Walker retired with only a moderate competence, sufficient, however, for all his needs. Not even ill health could diminish his interest in public affairs, and he took an exceedingly active part in the Harrison Campaign, strenuously advocating the establishment of the Sub-Treasury system as it at present exists. For this he was subjected to a degree of obloquy which it would be difficult to conceive; but the results of forty years' financial experience have completely demonstrated the sagacity and soundness of his views. The winter of 1840 to 1841, Mr. Walker spent in Florida on account of his health. In 1842, he went to Oberlin, Ohio, on account of his great interest in the organization of a college in that town, to which he had contributed of his means, and remained there ten months, giving lectures in political economy, a subject to which his mind had been increasingly drawn by the financial experiences of 1837 and 1839. In May 1843, he finally took up his residence at North Brookfield, on his father's estate, but went almost immediately to England as a delegate to the First International Peace Congress, of which he became one of the vice-presidents. Mr. Walker's active interest in efforts to promote the cause of international peace, through the creation of a public opinion which should constrain statesmen and diplomatists to use all efforts peacefully to adjust their difficulties, and, in the failure of direct negotiation between the parties concerned, through international congresses having power to arbitrate and settle disputes, had begun in 1832.

In 1844, Mr. Walker resided mainly in North Brookfield but delivered a course of lectures at Oberlin College and attended peace conventions in various parts of the country, visiting the West in company with his wife. In 1846, he built large additions to his father's house, which had been erected in 1810. In this year he delivered the annual address before the Normal Institute at Bridgewater. During 1847, his attention was largely given to the peace cause.

In 1848, his long cherished anti-slavery convictions led to his taking an active part in the formation of the Free Soil party. He was a member of the National Convention at Buffalo, which placed Van Buren in nomination for the presidency. In the fall of that year he was elected to a seat in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and resigned his professorship at Oberlin. He took his seat, January, 1849, and became the Free Soil and Democratic candidate for Speaker of the House. In the summer of this year he attended the International Peace Congress in Paris, becoming one of its vice-presidents. In the fall of the same year he was elected to the State Senate of Massachusetts. Taking his seat in January, 1850, he brought forward his plan for a sealed ballot law, which was enacted the following year; and carried a bill providing that Webster's Dictionary should be introduced into the common schools of the state.

In 1851, he was elected Secretary of State, for Massachusetts, by the united Free Soil and Democratic vote. During the year he delivered several public addresses. In 1852, he was re-elected Secretary of State, and became, ex officio, Secretary of the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture. In this year he received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Middlebury College. In 1853, Mr. Walker was elected a member of the Convention for revising the Constitution of Massachusetts, and became the chairman of the committee on suffrage. He was also in this year appointed one of the examiners of political economy in Harvard University, which office he held for seven years.

In 1854, he took a prominent part in the organization of the North Brookfield Savings Bank, of which he was the first president. He was this year appointed lecturer on political economy in Amherst College, where he delivered an extended course of lectures. In 1856, he was president of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of North Brookfield.

The year 1857 was one of great import to the life of Mr. Walker. Early in that year he began the publication, in Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, of a series of articles on political economy. The series had already progressed so far as to give Mr. Walker's views on money, which were very decidedly of the so-called Hard-Money order, when the financial panic of 1857 commenced. Almost by chance Mr. Walker attended, early in October, a large meeting of the merchants of Boston, intended to fortify the banks of that city in their determination to maintain specie payments. At this meeting Mr. Walker took the ground strongly that the banks could not possibly maintain specie payments for more than two weeks, and that it was desirable that they should at once suspend, instead of causing the failure of the best merchants of the city, as they must inevitably do by refusing discounts in a vain attempt to save their own so-called honor. This speech created a great sensation at the time, and gave rise to a heated discussion in the public press; but the suspension, within twelve days, of every bank in Boston, after causing the failure of great numbers of the best mercantile houses, some of them worth millions of dollars, gave so striking a confirmation to Mr. Walker's views as to bring him into prominence as an authority on finance, and to cause him to be invited to write and lecture far beyond the limits of his time and strength. This episode may properly be considered the turning point in Mr. Walker's intellectual career. From this time until the day of his death the subject of the Currency remained the most absorbing of all which had previously engrossed his mind, and his interest increased with the passage of time.

Late in 1857, Mr. Walker published a pamphlet on the nature and uses of money, to which he added a "History of the Wickaboag Bank," a work which had a large circulation. In July of 1859, Mr. Walker visited Europe in company with Dr. Warren Tyler of North Brookfield; and in the fall of that year he was elected to the Massachusetts House of Representatives, where, in conjunction with Honorable Samuel Hooper, of the Senate, he took an important part in the revision of the laws relating to banking and the issue of paper money. At the presidential election of 1860 Mr. Walker was chosen a member of the Electoral College of Massachusetts, of which he became secretary, casting his vote for Abraham Lincoln.

The outbreak, 1859-60, of the disease among neat-cattle known as Pleuro-Pneumonia, led to an enactment by the Legislature of Massachusetts, at a special session, of a law for its extirpation, and a commission was appointed by the governor for this purpose, of which Mr. Walker was made chairman. The commission performed its work so vigorously and thoroughly as to secure the complete extirpation of this pest.

Beginning in 1859, Mr. Walker continued for several years to deliver an annual course of lectures on political economy in Amherst College. In the fall of 1862, he was elected a Representative in Congress, for the unexpired term of Dr. Bailey. During the session, 1862-3, Mr. Walker made several speeches on finance, and moved the issue of Compound Interest Notes, in a bill which became a law. In 1866, Mr. Walker published his main work in economics, entitled The Science of Wealth. This work passed, in the following years, through not less than eight American editions, was translated into Italian by Professor Cognetti, of Turin, and received the highest attention and the warmest commendation from the economists of America and Europe. Subsequently, a student's edition of this work was issued and extensively used. In 1867, Mr. Walker received the degree of Doctor of Laws, from Amherst College. During that, and the years following, until his death, he continued to write extensively in the magazines, especially in Lippincott's Magazine of Philadelphia, and in the weekly and daily papers. His leisure gave him frequent opportunities for travel, and he spent not a little of each year in visits to Boston, New Haven or Washington, or in trips to Florida or California.

Always a singularly cheerful and sanguine man, in spite of great delicacy of health and frequent attacks of pain and sickness, the last years of his life were his happiest years. He continued his physical and intellectual activity unimpaired up to the very instant when, on the 29th of October, 1875, without a word or a sigh, and without the slightest premonition of approaching dissolution, he ceased to breathe. Had the end been foreseen it would have been most welcome, for he had in July lost his wife, his companion through more than forty years. His father, Walter Walker, had, in like manner closely followed his mother to the grave. Mr. Walker was in figure, very slender and erect, and was very quick and graceful in his movements, producing the effect of being much taller than he really was. His features were remarkably regular and clear cut, and his whole appearance at once engaging and commanding. His voice was of unusual richness and power; and in public speaking he had a singular faculty of holding closely the attention of his audience, however large or however unfriendly. He made little use of rhetorical ornament or of the ordinary, so-called, graces of speech, but spoke with a fullness of knowledge, clearness of expression and earnestness of purpose, seldom surpassed. He was very fond of company; and his delight was in the communication of his ideas and sentiments, or in learning the purposes, feelings and wishes of the young.

Wherever he travelled, he easily and quickly made acquaintances, and immediately seized the occasion either to acquire or to impart information.

Next to discussions relating to finance and currency, his keenest enjoyment was in reminiscences relating to his early life; he delighted to talk of his old schoolmates, his old school teachers, of the early magnates of North Brookfield and of his own initial experiences in business. He was very fond of giving advice; and it must be said, his advice was generally very good, for no man ever understood better the secret of success in life, either in business or in the learned professions.

In politics, Mr. Walker's history was as follows: he was brought up among Federalists; became a Jackson Democrat, on the issues of paper money, banking and the sub-treasury; joined the Liberty party in 1844; helped to found the Free Soil party in 1848; and the Republican party in 1856.

In religion Mr. Walker was brought up an Orthodox Congregationalist: early joined that church and became a deacon in the Union Church of North Brookfield, which he aided and contributed much to found. His theological views, however, were never strict, but corresponded more to the general theology of the present time than to that of fifty or sixty years ago.

In charities, and in contributions to enterprises of public interest, he was liberal and even lavish.

MAJOR NATHAN GOODALE.

[From "Lives of the Early Settlers of Ohio," by S. P. Hildreth, M.D.]

MAJOR NATHAN GOODALE was the youngest (posthumous) son of Solomon and Anna Goodale, and was born in North Brookfield, Nov. 11, 1744. The father died in the spring of 1744. Three children had died in infancy, leaving four, viz., John, aged nine, Anna, aged four, Solomon, aged two, and Nathan to be cared for by the widow. She married, in 1745, Samuel Ware of North Brookfield, and had Samuel, born 1746, Jonathan, born 1747, Timothy, born 1748, when the family moved to Rutland, where Nathan passed his early years, to the time of manhood, working on a farm, and learning the trade of a brick-mason; thus laying the foundation for that vigorous, muscular frame, which enabled him to undergo the fatigues and exposures of a military life, at a time when the army afforded few facilities for the comfort of the soldier. No other set of men could have borne up under the trials of want, famine, and a lack of all the common necessities of life, for several years in succession, as did the American soldiers, but such as had been inured like the Spartans, in childhood, to bear suffering with patience. His education was rather above that of the common schools of that day, for we find him, at an early period of the war, employed by Gen. Putnam as an assistant engineer.

At a suitable age he married Elizabeth Phelps of Rutland, on the 11th of September, 1765. About the year 1770 he moved his family to Brookfield, where he purchased a farm two miles from the centre of the town. His three oldest children were born in Rutland, as we learn from the town records.

From this time to the rupture with the mother country, in 1775, he continued to labor on his farm, and to work at his trade of brick-laying; but as nearly all the houses of that day were made of wood, his mechanical work was chiefly confined to chimneys. For some time previous to the first hostilities, he had, with thousands of his countrymen, been preparing for the day of strife, which every thinking man foresaw must soon arrive, by practising military exercises, and collecting arms and ammunition. Many of these volunteer companies were aptly called, by the New-Englanders, who are never at a loss for a phrase to express exactly their meaning, "Minute Men." They were, indeed, minute men, and when the first notes of alarm echoed from hill to hill, all over the country, at the bloodshed at Lexington, they were ready, at a moment's warning, to pour their thousands on thousands into the vicinity of Boston, the stronghold of the British, which nothing but the lack of battering cannon and ammunition hindered them immediately from storming. Mr. Goodale here first saw the actual movements of military life, and immediately entered into the service of his country, as a lieutenant. It being uncertain how long he might remain in the army, the homestead of his early manhood was sold, and his family resided, during the war, in rented premises. With what spirit and enterprise he entered into the service, and how well his activity and talents were adapted to the trying exigencies of a partisan officer, the most difficult of all military duties, will be best shown by a letter from Gen. Rufus Putnam to Gen. Washington, near the close of the war.

"Massachusetts Huts, June 9th, 1783.

Sir: I do myself the honor to enclose a letter I received a few days since from Capt. Goodale, of the Fifth Massachusetts Regiment. I confess I feel a conviction of neglect of duty in respect to this gentleman; that I have not, till this moment, taken any measures to bring his services to public view, has been owing to the confidence I had, that Gen. Gates would have done it, as the most extraordinary of them were performed under his own orders, and as he gave repeated assurances that they should not be forgotten. I am sorry that Gen. Gates is now out of camp, for were he not, I should appeal to him on the subject, but as I am sure so worthy a character, and such important services, ought not to be buried in oblivion, or pass unrewarded, I beg your excellency's patience a few moments, while I give a short detail of them. Capt. Goodale was among the first who embarked in the common cause in 1775. He served that year as a lieutenant in the same regiment with me. I had long before known him to be a man of spirit, and his probity and attention to service soon gained him the character of a worthy officer. In 1776, he entered again as a lieutenant, but served with me the most of the year as an assistant engineer, and the public are much indebted to him for the dispatch and propriety with which several of the works about New York were executed. In the dark month of November, 1776, Mr. Goodale entered the service as a captain in the regiment under my command, and was in the field early the next spring; but, although he always discovered a thirst for enterprise, yet fortune never gave his genius fair play till August, 1777. It is well known into what a panic the country, and even the northern army, were thrown on the taking of Ticonderoga. When Gen. Gates took command in that quarter, our army lay at Van Shaick's Island; and Mr. Burgoyne, with his black wings and painted legions, lay at Saratoga. The woods were so infested with savages, that for some time none of the scouts who were sent out for the purpose of obtaining prisoners or intelligence of the enemy's situation, succeeded in either. Gen. Gates being vexed at continual disappointments, desired an officer to procure him a man that would undertake, at all hazards, to perform this service. Capt. Goodale being spoken to, voluntarily undertook the business under the following orders from Gen. Gates. 'Sir: You are to choose out a serjeant and six privates, and proceed with them to the enemy's camp, unless you lose your life or are captured, and not return until you obtain a full knowledge of their situation.'

Capt. Goodale, in his report of this scout, says it was not performed without great fatigue, as the party was much harassed by the Indians, which occasioned their being in the woods three days without provisions. However, he succeeded beyond expectation; first throwing himself between their out-guards and their camp, where he concealed his party until he examined their situation very fully, and then brought off six prisoners, which he took within their guards, and returned to Gen. Gates without any loss. This success induced Gen. Gates to continue him on that kind of service. A full detail of all the art and address which he discovered during the remainder of that campaign, would make my letter quite too long. It may be enough to observe that before the capture of the British army, one hundred and twenty-one prisoners fell into his hands. But as Capt. Goodale is no less brave and determined in the open field, where opposed to regular troops, than he is artful as a partisan of the woods, I beg your patience while I recite one instance of this kind. A day or two after Mr. Burgoyne retreated to Saratoga, in a foggy morning, Nixon's brigade was ordered to cross the creek which separated the two armies. Capt. Goodale, with forty volunteers, went over before the advance guard. He soon fell in with a British guard of about the same number. The ground was an open plain, but the fog prevented their discovering each other till they were within a few yards, when both parties made ready nearly at the same time. Capt. Goodale, in this position reserving his fire, advanced immediately upon the enemy, who waited with a design to draw it from him; but he had the address to intimidate them in such a manner, by threatening immediate death to any one that should fire, that not more than two or three obeyed the order of their own officer, when he gave the word. The event was, that the officer and thirty-four of the guard were made prisoners. These, sir, are the services which Capt. Goodale and his friends conceive have merited more attention than has been paid to them; and, at least, merit a majority as much as Maj. Summers' unsuccessful command of a boat a few months on Lake Champlain. But if the tables are reversed, and the ill luck of a brave man should be the only recommendation to promotion, Capt. Goodale, I believe, has as great pretensions as most men, for he is the unfortunate officer who commanded about forty white men, and being joined by about the same number of Indians, fought more than one thousand of the enemy below Valentine's hill in 1778, until near two-thirds were killed, himself and most of the rest made prisoners. But I mention this not so much to show his bravery, for he takes no merit from that action, but always lamented the necessity he was under from the orders he received, to do what he did. In writing to me on the subject, he says: 'At this time a number of brave men were sacrificed to bad orders; but, as they were not my orders, I hope the candid will not censure me.' Having stated these facts, I beg leave to request your excellency will lay them before Congress, &c. He goes on to say, Gen. Washington forwarded my letter to the secretary of war; but as about this time Congress came to a resolution to raise the rank of all officers one grade who had not been promoted since their entrance into service, the 1st of January, 1777, Maj. Goodale received promotion with the rest, and thus never had that justice done him which he so highly merited."

Thus far Gen. Putnam testifies to the valuable services of this brave and noble-minded man. Had Gen. Gates, as in duty bound, given notice to Congress of the heroic exploits of Capt. Goodale, in collecting information of the movements of Burgoyne, so essential to the welfare of the American army, he would no doubt have received the promotion so justly his due. But Gates was a selfish, proud man, who cared little for the interest of others, provided his own personal wishes were accomplished.

From another hand a more detailed account is given of the action at Valentine's hill. It seems that the commander of the troops to which he was attached, had ordered him to keep possession of a certain pass, important to the Americans, at all hazards, without any discretionary power as to contingencies. His command consisted, as above stated, of about forty light-infantry and a number of Indians, who stood the attack of a large body of the enemy and a company of cavalry, until there were only seventeen men left alive out of the forty. Near the close of the combat, the officer who led the charge rushed upon him with his sword. Capt. Goodale, with a loaded musket which he had probably picked up from one of his fallen men, shot the Briton dead from his horse as he approached. In a moment, another of the enemy, seeing the fall of his leader, sprung at him in desperation, with full purpose to revenge his death. The musket being discharged, the only resource was to parry the descending blow, aimed at his head, in the best manner he could, with the empty piece. It fell obliquely, being turned a little from its course by the musket, and instead of splitting the skull of its intended victim, glanced on the bone, peeling up a portion of the scalp several inches in length. The stunning effects of the blow felled him to the earth, but directly recovering, he rose to his feet. In the meantime, the cavalry man, who had leaned forward in the saddle further than prudent to give a certain death-stroke, lost his balance when the heavy sword glanced from the skull, and fell to the earth. The bayonet of Capt. Goodale instantly pinned him to the ground, and left him dead by the side of his leader. Thus two of the enemy fell by his hand in a space of time less than a minute. Seeing all prospect of further resistance useless, he retreated with the balance of his men to an open woodland, near the scene of action, and secreted himself under a pile of brush. An Indian had hidden under another heap, where they might have remained in safety until dark and then escaped; but the savage having an opportunity to shoot one of the enemy who approached their hiding-place; he could not resist the chance of adding another scalp to his trophies, and shot him. The report of the shot revealed their hiding-place, and being discovered, were made prisoners. How long he remained in durance does not appear from the imperfect memorials left of his military life. It is probable he was shut up in the old Jersey prison-ship at New York, as his children have a tradition that he was poisoned, from the fact of a long sickness he suffered after his return home. But it is more probable that the poison was that of human malaria, received in that pest-house of British cruelty, which killed more Americans than all those who fell in battle during the whole war, being estimated at twelve or fourteen thousand. It is one of the foulest stains on the English nation, that ever disgraced their character.

During the war he received one other wound in the leg, from a musket or grape shot. Could all his adventures be collected they would make one of the most interesting of biographies; but time, and a fire which destroyed his papers at Belpre some years after his death, have put this matter to rest, and these scanty gleanings are all that are left of his military life.

At the close of the war he entered into mercantile business, in company with Col. Cushing, a brother officer. Not succeeding in this to his expectations, he sold out, and bought a farm on Coy's hill, in the north part of the town of Brookfield. In the pursuits of agriculture he was as much at home as in military matters, having a natural taste for cultivation, and engaged in this primitive employment with his characteristic ardor and perseverance, at a time when improvements of all kinds were at a low ebb; the country during the war having retrograded, amidst the trials of that eventful period. Mr. Goodale was remarkable for his industry, and thorough, neat manner in which he conducted all the operations of the farm. The forecast and wisdom of the man may be seen before setting out on his journey to Ohio, in the course he pursued in preparing for it. Knowing that a superior breed of neat-cattle is all-important to the farmer, and more especially to one beginning in a new country, instead of taking a team of oxen, or horses, as other men did, to haul their wagons, he, after deciding on joining the new colony, selected three of the best cows and one of the finest bulls to be found in that vicinity, and trained them to work together in a team. With this novel working power, he drew on the wagon, with a part of his family and household goods, to Marietta, performing the journey with as much ease, and in as short a time, as the best of oxen. He had also the profit of their milk for the use of the family along the road. The stock from this breed of cattle has been spread through the country, and is held in high estimation at this day, for their perfect forms, gentle dispositions, and great abundance of rich milk; constituting them, on all accounts, the best dairy stock ever introduced to the country. They are known as the "Goodale breed," still retaining many of their original characteristics.

Maj. Goodale arrived at the mouth of the Muskingum on the 2d of July, 1788, in company with several other families from Massachusetts, descending the Ohio, from Wheeling, in a flatboat. In August he was appointed, by Gov. St. Clair, who soon organized the militia, captain of a company of light-infantry, selected from amongst the most active men of the colony. This company held regular musters, until the commencement of the war, when each man was confined to the defence of his own garrison, in the settlement where he lived. His experience in military affairs rendered him a very able and efficient officer, familiar with all the details of actual service.

In April, 1789, he moved his family to Belpre, being a leading associate of the colony. During the short period he was permitted to live in that place, he was considered to be one of the most industrious, persevering, and thoroughly educated farmers in the country; clearing his land in the most rapid manner, fencing and cultivating it in the best style. In the famine of 1790 his family suffered, with the rest of their neighbors, for wholesome bread-stuff. When the war broke out in 1791, he was one of the most active and resolute men in planning and erecting the fortified village called Farmers' Castle, in which they all resided during the first two years of the war. In making the arrangements for the defence and military government of the garrison, he was the leading man; and the command was, by unanimous consent, given to him, as the most experienced in warlike matters. In the winter of 1793 the place had become too strait for the numerous families congregated within its walls, and it was decided to erect two additional stockades; one a mile and a half below, on Maj. Goodale's farm, and one on Capt. Jonathan Stone's land, just below the mouth of the Little Kenawha, called the "Upper Settlement."

He had been but a week in his new garrison, when the colony met with the most serious loss it had yet sustained from their Indian enemies, in the captivity and death of Maj. Goodale. On the first day of March, 1793, he was at work in a clearing on his farm, distant about forty or fifty rods from the garrison, hauling rail timber with a yoke of oxen. It lay back of the first bottom, on the edge of the plain, in open view of the station. An Irishman, named John Magee, was at work, grubbing or digging out the roots of the bushes and small trees, on the slope of the plain, as it descends on to the bottom, but out of sight of Maj. Goodale. The Indians made so little noise in their assault, that John did not hear them. The first notice of this disaster, was the view of the oxen seen from the garrison, standing quietly in the field, with no one near them. After an hour or more they were observed to be still in the same place, when suspicion arose that some disaster had happened to Mr. Goodale. John was still busy at his work, unconscious of any alarm, when one of the men sent up from the garrison, passed him to inquire what was the matter. In the edge of the woods there was a thin layer of snow, on which the messenger discovered several moccasin tracks. It was now apparent that Indians had been there, and taken him prisoner, as no blood was seen on the ground. A small party followed the trail some distance, but soon lost it. The following day a larger body of men, with some of the rangers, were sent in pursuit, but returned without making any discovery. The Ohio river at this time, with many of the smaller streams, was at nearly full banks, and less danger was apprehended on that account; it was also rather early in the season for Indians to approach the settlements. The uncertainty of his condition left room for the imagination to fancy every thing horrible in his fate; more terrible to bear, than the actual knowledge of his death.

Great was the distress of Mrs. Goodale and the children, overwhelmed with this unexpected calamity. His loss threw a deep gloom over the whole community, as no man was so highly valued amongst them, neither was there any one whose council and influence were equally prized by the settlement. He was, in fact, the life and soul of this isolated community, and left a vacancy that none of his companions could fill. One of the early colonists thus speaks of him: "His memory was for many years fresh and green in the hearts of his contemporary pioneers, now all passed away, and is still cherished with respect and affection by their descendants." (Judge Barker's notes.) So greatly depressed were the inhabitants at his loss, that they awoke with new feelings in regard to their dangerous position on the outer verge of civilization. While he was living amongst them a certain degree of safety was felt, that vanished at his loss.

On the 14th of March they forwarded a petition to Gen. Washington, whom they regarded with parental veneration, a copy of which has been preserved, setting forth their exposed situation and losses by the Indians. It is stated that six of their number have been killed, besides the recent loss of Maj. Goodale; that one-third of their cattle, and produce of their lands, had been destroyed by the Indians, and they were fearful of a total breaking up of the settlement, unless the government afforded them a larger number of men for protection, their usual United States guard being only a corporal and four privates, detailed from the post at Marietta. The number of the settlers at the three stations were fifty-two men, and one hundred and forty-nine women and children.

At the treaty of Greenville, in 1795, when the captives were given up by the Indians, some intelligence was obtained of nearly all the persons taken prisoners from this part of the territory, but none of the fate of Maj. Goodale. A deep mystery seemed to hang over his destiny, never to be revealed. At length, about the year 1799, Col. Forrest Meeker, since a citizen of Delaware County, Ohio, and well acquainted with the family of Maj. Goodale, and the circumstances of this event, when at Detroit, fell in company with three Indians, who related to him the particulars of their taking a man prisoner at Belpre, in the spring of 1793. Their description of his person left no doubt on the mind of Col. Meeker, of its being Maj. Goodale. They stated that a party of eight Indians were watching the settlement for mischief; and as they lay concealed on the side of the hill back of the plain, they heard a man driving, or talking to his oxen, as they expressed it. After carefully examining his movements, they saw him leave his work and go down to the garrison, in the middle of the day. Knowing that he would return soon, they secreted themselves in the edge of the woods, and while he was occupied with his work, sprang out and seized upon him, before he was aware of their presence, or could make any defence, threatening him with death if he made a noise or resisted. After securing him with thongs, they commenced a hasty retreat, intending to take him to Detroit and get a large ransom for him. Somewhere on the Miami, or at Sandusky, he fell sick and could not travel, and that he finally died of this sickness. A Mrs. Whitaker, the wife of an Indian trader at Lower Sandusky, has since related the same fact. She says the Indians left him at her house, where he died of a disease like the pleurisy, without having received any very ill usage from his captors, other than the means necessary to prevent his escape. This is probably a correct account of his fate; and although his death was a melancholy one, amongst strangers, in captivity, and far away from the sympathy and care of his friends, yet it is a relief to know that he did not perish at the stake, nor by the tomahawk of the savages.

GEN. RUFUS PUTNAM.

[Compiled in part from "Lives of the First Settlers of Ohio," by S. P. Hildreth, M.D.]

RUFUS PUTNAM was the youngest son of Dea. Elisha and Susannah (Fuller) Putnam, and was born in Sutton, Mass., Apr. 9, 1738. His father died when Rufus was seven years old, and he was sent to live with his maternal grandfather in Danvers, where he remained until Sept., 1747, in which year his mother married Capt. John Saddler of Upton, and the boy made his home with his step-father till 1753. He had few advantages of schooling, and no school books of his own. But by respectfully serving the travellers who stopped at Mr. Saddler's tavern, and tending their horses, he occasionally received gratuities of a few pence, which he laid by until he could purchase some powder and shot: with this ammunition and an old shot gun, he killed partridges, or pheasants, and sold from time to time until the proceeds bought him a spelling book and an arithmetic. With these two invaluable articles, the foundation of all, even the most profound learning, he soon made considerable progress in the rudiments of education, without any teacher but his own patient ingenuity. In the same way he learned to write, and make figures in a legible manner, progressing in a short time to the rule of three, guided only by the directions laid down in the book. How delightful must have been his sensations when he could put his own thoughts into tangible sentences on paper, and understand the rules of calculation, so important in all the concerns of life !

In March, 1754, when nearly sixteen years old, he was bound as an apprentice to the mill-wright trade, under his brother-in-law, Daniel Matthews, of Brookfield. He was a man who had nearly the same opinion of the inutility of learning, as Mr. Saddler, and entirely neglected to send his apprentice to school. He, however, was more favorable in one respect, as he did not refuse him the use of candles for light, when pursuing his studies in the long winter evenings. His attention was chiefly directed to the acquisition of arithmetic, geography and history ; while orthography, etymology, and the rules of grammar were neglected. Having no books in these branches, and no one to teach him, his attention was chiefly directed to that which would be more immediately useful in the common affairs of life. In penmanship he had no aid from those nice copper-plate engravings, published in after years, nor any one to guide him in the art of neat hand-writing, so that those two important branches, spelling correctly, and writing handsomely, did not receive that attention they otherwise would have done, and left him during all his future life to regret his deficiencies in these respects. Could he have looked into futurity, or had the least intimation of the public stations of trust and honor which he was destined by Providence to fill in manhood, he would doubtless have been better prepared for their arduous duties. The greatest wonder of all is, that with the discouragements and privations which environed him, he had the fortitude and perseverance to overcome these obstacles, and acquire so much really useful learning as he did. Ninety-nine boys in a hundred would never have made the attempt, but have lived and died in ignorance.

During this portion of his life, from sixteen to nineteen years, he was busily occupied under Daniel Matthews, in acquiring the practical art of the mill-wright, and in working on his farm. It required some knowledge of geometry, to form perfect circles, divide them into numerous equal portions, and lay out the exact angles necessary in the frame-work of the mill ; thus gradually enlarging his knowledge of mathematics, for which he had naturally an ardent attachment, and a mind well fitted to comprehend. During this time his physical frame grew full as rapidly as his mind, so that when he was eighteen years old, he possessed the brawny limbs, the muscular power, and the full stature of a man six feet high. In all athletic exercises, he was renowned for his great strength and activity ; and thus eminently fitted for the fatigues and privations of the military life he was destined so early to enter.

The war between Great Britain and France, in which the colonies were much more deeply interested than the mother country, commenced in the year 1754, when he entered on his apprenticeship. The accounts of the several battles, the defeat of Gen. Braddock, and the exploits of his martial relative, Capt. Israel Putnam, no doubt filled his youthful mind with ardor, and led him while yet only in his nineteenth year to enlist as a private soldier, in the company of Capt. Ebenezer Learned, consisting of one hundred men, many of whom must have been his acquaintances or associates. The term of service was a little short of a year, commencing the 15th of March, 1757, and ending the 2d day of February, 1758. By the 30th of April the detachment was ready for marching, and that day left Brookfield, on their route for Kinderhook, on the Hudson river, about eighteen miles below Albany, which place they reached on the 6th of May.

In this and his subsequent campaign, he turned the art of writing, which he had with so much difficulty acquired, to a useful purpose, by keeping a regular journal of the events which took place ; and without this precaution would have been lost or forgotten. He remarks that Capt. Learned prayed regularly, night and morning, with his men, and on the Sabbath read a sermon in addition — a proof of the general prevalence of piety amongst the New England people, and which if more common in this day, would suppress much of the profanity and wickedness so universal amongst the soldiery of modern times. On the 18th of May, they left Kinderhook, and marched the same day to Greenbush, opposite the town of Albany.

On the 21st of May, the company moved to Scaghticoke, a Dutch settlement on the banks of the Hoosack river, three miles from the Hudson. It was deserted by the inhabitants on account of the Indians, and now lies in the north-westerly corner of Rensselaer county.

On the 9th of June, the detachment joined Col. Fry's regiment, at Stillwater, a spot subsequently famous for the battle at Bemis' Heights, which turned the tide of Burgoyne's success, and finally led to his surrender. On the 11th they marched to Saratoga, a place still more celebrated in military history, for the conquest of his army, thirty years after this time, in which Mr. Putnam acted a conspicuous part.

On the 14th of this month, Fry's regiment, composed of seventeen companies of provincials, decamped, and on the following day reached Fort Edward. This celebrated military post, so often noticed in the events of the old French war, was built two years before this time, and was now in the pride of its strength. It stood on the east or left bank of the Hudson river, about fifty-two miles above Albany, and was constructed by a body of colonial troops under Gen. Lyman, and named after Edward, Duke of York, the eldest son of King George the Second, of England. It is thus described in Mr. Putnam's journal: "The river washed one side of its walls. The form was somewhat irregular; having two bastions and two half bastions. The walls were high and thick, composed of hewed timber—a broad rampart, with casements, or bomb-proof—a deep ditch with a draw-bridge—a covered way, glacis, &c." In an after note, he says, "I have been particular in this description, because in 1777, there was by no means so great an appearance of there having been a fortification here as we find in the ancient works at Marietta and other parts of the Ohio country." It stood at the head of the carrying place, between the Hudson and Lake George, and also Wood creek, a tributary of Lake Champlain. The village of Fort Edward stands near the site of the old fort, and serves to perpetuate its name. The tragical fate of Miss McCrea happened in this vicinity in 1777. White Hall, at the head of the Lake, the port from which steamboats now run to St. John, in Canada, was, in the Revolutionary war, called Skenesborough; and was named after Maj. Skene, presently noticed by Mr. Putnam in his journal.

Being determined to see as much as possible of the adventures and hardships of a military life, he joined the corps of Rangers, as a volunteer, and on the 8th of July, marched on a scout under Lieut. Collins, with twenty-two men, to reconnoitre South Bay, the southerly extremity of Lake Champlain, distant about twenty-five miles from Fort Edward. On the 9th, having approached, as they thought, near the bay, the main party was halted, and three men, of whom Mr. Putnam was one, sent forward to learn its situation. Supposing it would occupy but a few hours, they left their blankets and provisions with the men that remained in camp. It proved to be much further than they had anticipated, and after fulfilling their orders, it was nearly night when they got back to the encampment. Much to their vexation and disappointment, they found that the lieutenant and his men, had left the ground, carrying with them their blankets and provisions. It seems that the leader had taken alarm at their long absence, supposing them either killed or captured by the Indians, and had hastily retreated in confusion. The deserted Rangers fired their guns, to give notice of their return, but no answering signal was heard. Two nights were thus spent in the woods, exposed, without their blankets, to the annoyance of gnats and mosquitoes, which swarmed in vast numbers over this humid region. The dress of the Rangers was similar to that of the Indians, leaving their thighs bare, and exposed to their attacks. They reached Fort Edward on the 11th, having been forty-eight hours without food, thus realizing a little foretaste of a ranger's life. Lieut. Collins did not get in until the following day, and confessed that he heard their signal guns, but supposed them fired by the Indians. He, however, by various excuses, pacified Mr. Putnam and his comrades; yet he remarks on the transaction, "It was extremely unsoldierlike to leave us in the woods in the manner he did. If our long absence gave cause of alarm, he ought to have withdrawn but a short distance, placed himself in ambush, and posted two men under cover to watch for our return, or give notice of the approach of the enemy.

On the 23d of July, about eight o'clock in the morning, a large party of Indians fired on the Carpenters' or Mechanics' Guard, within half a mile of the fort, and killed thirteen men, with one missing. This was the first view he had of Indian butchery; and says, "It was not very agreeable to the feelings of a young soldier, and I think there are few who can look on such scenes with indifference." In the afternoon, two hundred and fifty men, under Capt. Israel Putnam, were sent out in pursuit. They followed the trail until sunset, when the main body was halted, and three men, of whom Mr. Putnam was one, sent forward a mile or more, with orders to secrete themselves near the trail until after dark, watching closely for any scout that might be sent back, "for," said the captain of the Rangers, "if they do not embark to-night in their boats, they will send a party back to see if they are pursued." They went as ordered, but made no discovery. He remarks, "It was a maxim I treasured up in my mind, as applicable, especially in the woods, whether you are pursuing, or are pursued by the enemy," and was the beginning of his military knowledge.

On the 8th of October, the campaign being closed for that year, the provincials, who composed the corps of Rangers, were discharged. He, however, continued to do camp duty some days longer, and then attached himself to a company of artisans, who were employed, until the 10th of November, in completing the defences of Fort Edward. On that day, the remnant of Col. Frye's regiment, himself, and the larger portion of his men, having been captured at Fort William Henry, marched down to the Half-moon, a post twelve miles above Albany. His providentially joining the Rangers, no doubt, saved him from participating in this slaughter and captivity.

On the 18th of November, three hundred and sixty men of the detachment were drafted into four companies, and ordered to different posts for winter quarters. This was a vexatious disappointment, as the Provincials expected to be discharged at the close of the campaign, although, according to their enlistment, they were to serve until the 2d day of February, 1758.

Capt. Learned's company, to which Mr. Putnam belonged, was ordered up to Stillwater, on the east side of the Hudson; while he and several other mechanics were detained and employed in completing the king's works at the Half-moon, until the 29th of December.

The first of January, 1758, was celebrated by the men in great festivity, with an earnest looking forward to Candlemas, or 2d of February, as the period of their release from servitude.

From the movements of the commander of the stockaded garrison, Capt. Skene, afterwards major, and proprietor of Skenesborough, they began to suspect he intended to retain them in service beyond the time of their enlistment. The Provincials were quartered in huts by themselves, a short distance from the post, which was guarded by a company of British regulars. Having decided on making a push for home, as soon as they considered themselves fairly at liberty, previous arrangements were made for the journey, by preparing snow-shoes for each man, as there was no possibility of marching through the woods, where the snow was three or four feet deep, without this ingeniously contrived Indian apparatus, which had been adopted by the New Englanders from them. Capt. Learned, who had just returned from a furlough to Massachusetts, when made acquainted with the design of his men, approved of their plan, and said he would lead them, unless he could procure their regular discharge. Mr. Putnam observes on this transaction, that he thought well of the captain at the time, but had since learned, that for an officer to desert his post is unpardonable.

On the 2d of February, Capt. Skene ordered the Provincials into the fort, and read a letter from Gen. Abercrombie, directing him to persuade the Massachusetts men under his command, to tarry a few days, until he could hear from that government, and know their intentions in regard to them. To this they replied, that he is a good soldier who serves his full time, and that the province had no further concern with them; neither would they remain any longer. Capt. Skene threatened them with death if they departed without a regular discharge, and ordered them back to their barracks. He, however, took no forcible measures to detain them, nor did he search their huts for the snow-shoes, which they took the precaution to secrete under the snow. Their huts were sheltered by a high bank, out of sight of the fort, which screened their movements from observation.

Firm to their purpose, about three o'clock in the morning of the 3d of February, they marched off as silently as possible, seventy in number, under the command of Capt. Learned and Lieut. Walker; leaving Lieut. Brown, and a few invalids, who did not choose to join them. After leaving their barracks, they had a level piece of intervale, bordering on the Hudson, about half a mile wide to cross, exposed to the artillery of the fort, had they been discovered by the sentinels, which was the reason of their departure by night. They did not fear any opposition from the men in the garrison in the open field, as they outnumbered them. As to provisions for the march, they had provided as well as they could, by saving a portion of their daily rations for a week or two previous, and had hoarded up in this way, two or three days' allowance. The distance to Hoosack fort, as it was called, a small stockaded garrison belonging to Massachusetts, was thirty miles, and was allotted for two days' march. The snow in the woods was deeper than they expected, and made the travelling laborious for the leading men of the file, while those who followed after had a pretty firm path. The second day of the march was in a snow storm; nevertheless, they bore manfully on, directing their course for Hoosack river, which was to be their guide to the fort; but during the snow storm they became bewildered, and falling on a westerly branch, instead of the main stream, it led them far out of their course, and at night they encamped without reaching their desired haven. Two turkeys were killed during the day, which aided their scanty stock of food. On the third day's march, they decamped very early, confident of reaching the fort before noon, but mid-day passed by, and the night arrived without the sight of it. One turkey was killed, and the camp formed with heavy hearts; which was done by kindling fires against a fallen tree, and lying down on the snow with their blankets, in the open air. Their provision was now nearly spent, and they were led, reluctantly, to believe, that they were actually lost in the woods. Several of the men, from the extreme severity of the weather, had frozen their feet; and one had lost a snow shoe by breaking through the ice.

On the fourth day the march was continued up the stream until noon, when they concluded to alter their course. This branch of the Hoosack, it seems, led up into the New Hampshire grants, afterward Vermont, where the town of Bennington was subsequently built. The direction of the march, by the advice of Capt. Learned, was now about south-east, over a hilly broken region, and the sun went down as they reached the top of a high mountain, which appeared to be the water shed, or dividing ridge between the streams which fell into the Hudson and Connecticut rivers. The weather was excessively cold, and the snow five feet deep. On the morning of the fifth day, after a very uncomfortable night, thirty of the men, Mr. Putnam being one of them, breakfasted on a small turkey, without salt or bread. After travelling about five miles they fell on a small branch, running south-east, down which they followed until several tributaries had enlarged it, by night, to a considerable river. All this day they had no food but the buds of the beech trees, and a few bush cranberries. At night they encamped, weary and faint, but not disheartened. The sixth day's march was continued along the course of the river discovered the day before, which none of them knew the name of, in a broken, hilly region, not very favorable to the point of compass they wished to follow. The weather was cold and stormy, while the men were so feeble and lame from frozen feet, that only a few were able to lead the trail, and break the path in the snow. By marching on the frozen river, the lame men found a smooth path, or it is probable some of them would have perished. At night they encamped by tens in a mess. As it happened they had with them one dog, and only one. He was large and fat. At night it was concluded to kill him for supper. This was done, and his body divided into seven portions, or one part to every ten men, the entrails falling to the butcher as his fee; and as he belonged to Mr. Putnam's mess, they made their supper on the fat. On the morning of the seventh day, his men breakfasted on one of the feet, and a hind leg cut off at the gambrel joint, which being pounded and roasted in the embers, so as to separate the bones of the foot, made quite a palatable viand to a hungry stomach. That day the party confined their march to the river, and about noon came to a spot where some trees had been recently cut for some shingles. This was the first sign of inhabitants they had seen, and it revived their drooping spirits. At sunset one of the men noticed a small stream putting in on the left bank, which he recognized as Pelham brook, and that Hawks' fort, on Deerfield river, was not more than three miles distant. This latter river is a branch of the Connecticut.

Their leader now ordered two men to go forward to the fort, and make provision for the arrival of the party in the morning, which was a wise measure, and directed the most active men to make fires for the more feeble and lame ones, as they came up, which happily they all did by dark. That night Putnam's mess supped on the thigh bone of the dog, made into soup, with a small bit of pork and a little ginger, which made a very palatable dish. With respect to the flesh of a dog, he observes, "since the experience of that day, I have believed it to be very good meat, and could eat it at any time without disgust." This goes to confirm the experience of Lewis and Clark's men in their journey over the Rocky mountains, who lived on it for weeks, and preferred it to any other meat.

On the eighth day's march, which was the 10th of February, early in the forenoon, they met some men from the fort, coming to their relief with slices of bread and meat, to appease their appetites and enable them to reach the post, where they were received with great kindness. Many of the men were badly frozen, and nearly exhausted with hunger. As a proof of the vigor of his frame, Mr. Putnam carried the pack of a sick man in addition to his own, and was always one of the leaders in breaking the path; although he felt the cravings of hunger, yet never failed in vigor or activity. One cause of this he attributes to the use of a little honey, which one of his mess had in a bottle, about a pound weight.

Into this honey bottle, each man dipped the end of a rod and put to his mouth, and not like Jonathan into a honey comb.

On the 15th of February, he arrived at his former home, very thankful for his preservation amidst so many dangers. Capt. Learned was much censured for his conduct, and was not again commissioned during the war.

After passing the remainder of the winter at home, and forgetting the sufferings of the last campaign, he again enlisted in the provincial service, for another tour of duty, in Capt. Joseph Whitcomb's company, and Col. Ruggles' regiment. The war, thus far, had been a continued scene of disasters, and disgrace to the crown; one army after another had been defeated or captured, and the French were in a fair way of overrunning the British possessions in America; and although the number of inhabitants in the Canadas was not more than one quarter as great as that of the colonies, yet their military commanders were much more able and energetic than the British, and carried conquest and victory wherever they turned their arms.

The regiment to which he was attached, rendezvoused at Northampton, in Massachusetts, and marched for Albany on the 3d of June. On the 6th, they passed Pontoosac fort, a small post on the Hoosack river, then within the boundaries of Massachusetts. This was the station that Capt. Learned expected to reach on the second day after his unmilitary and disastrous desertion of his post at Stillwater, on the 2d of February. On the 8th, the regiment arrived at Greenbush, opposite to Albany. "From Northampton street to this place was through a wilderness, with but one house in the whole distance, except the little fort above mentioned." This was in the year 1758; since that time vast changes have taken place in this region, and the railroad, in a few hours, would transport the whole regiment over the distance which occupied five days of steady marching.

On the 12th of June, he was detached with about eighty other artisans from the regiment, under Lieut. Pool, and ordered on to the head of Lake George to erect works, in advance of the army. On the 5th of July, the troops being assembled, embarked in batteaux, amounting to seventeen thousand men, under the command of Gen. Abercrombie, Lord Howe, the second in command, Gen. Gage, the third, and Col. Bradstreet, quarter-master-general. The commander-in-chief was an old man, and entirely unfit for the post, as was proved by the result of the campaign. The army had but little respect for his abilities; while on the contrary, Lord Howe was their idol, and in him they placed their utmost confidence. He was remarkably easy and affable in his manners, mixing familiarly with the mechanics and common soldiers, inquiring into their condition and wants, displaying a real interest in their welfare, very different from those generally in high authority. This won the regard of the troops, and they would undergo any sacrifice at his bidding. Gen. Gage never acquired much reputation as a commander, and the furious Bradstreet was hated by all the army. The batteaux moved down the lake until evening, when the troops landed at Sabbathday Point for refreshment, and then rowed all night. On the 6th they disembarked at the northern extremity of Lake George, in two divisions, one on each side of the outlet. On the approach of the division on the right bank, a detachment of the enemy stationed there, retired without firing a gun. That division of the army on the left bank, was under the command of Lord Howe, and on its advance was met by a skirmishing party of the French, who, very unfortunately for the British, killed Lord Howe in the early part of the engagement. His death struck a damp on the spirits of the whole army, and no doubt had an influence in causing the defeat which followed. Mr. Putnam was left in charge of the boats, but soon volunteered his service in the attack on the works, and joined his regiment, which was posted with Col. Lyman's of Connecticut, on the west of the mills, and was busily employed in erecting a breastwork. The attack on the fort of Ticonderoga, began at twelve o'clock, and was continued without intermission for several hours, without making any impression. At length the ammunition of the regular troops was exhausted, and a call was made on the Provincials to forward them a supply. Mr. Putnam again volunteered in this service. When they approached the scene of action, they found that the attacked troops had been effectually repulsed in their attempt to storm the enemy's lines, but did not consider it a total defeat, as it finally proved to be. Col. Ruggles' regiment remained in their breastwork until midnight unmolested, and then retreated to the shore of the lake, where they had landed on the 6th. On the morning of the 9th, Ruggles found his regiment in the rear of the army, which had retreated in the night, leaving them with the Rangers of the other regiment of Provincials near the French lines. In the forenoon of that day, all the troops embarked and returned to the south end of the lake, closing Gen. Abercrombie's expedition, which commenced with such high hopes, under a cloud of disgrace, and a loss of fifteen hundred men, in killed and wounded. Ticonderoga fort was protected on three of its sides by water, and on the other for some distance in front extended a morass; the remainder was fortified with a breast-work, eight feet high, and planted with artillery. In addition to which the ground for one hundred yards in front, was covered with abatis. After reconnoitering the works, the engineer sent on this important duty, was so stupid as to report to the commander that they might be carried by musketry. The difficulty of advancing artillery over the morass and broken ground in front, led to the adopting of this fatal advice, and the defeat of the army. The post was defended by about four thousand men, and although their actual assailants amounted to twelve or fifteen thousand, and the attack lasted for more than four hours, yet they could make no impression on the garrison. The loss must have been greater than actually estimated, as twenty-five hundred stands of arms were picked up by the French. Mr. Putnam remarks that "when he subsequently became acquainted with the strength of the works and the mode of attack, he considered it the most injudicious and wanton sacrifice of men. that ever came within his knowledge or reading."

Nothing further of an offensive nature was attempted in that quarter, by Abercrombie, this season. A fort was commenced on the ground occupied by the fortified camp of the Provincials, in 1757, during the siege and capture of Fort William Henry, which was called Fort George, and stood half a mile east of that unfortunate garrison. On the 22d of July, the regiment to which he belonged was ordered to Fort Edward, and the men employed in repairing the roads from that post to Albany, until the 29th of October, when they were discharged.

On the 9th of November, he arrived at Sutton, his native place, where he passed the winter. On this campaign, in after life, he has these remarks: "Thus I was carried through a second campaign, enjoying uninterrupted health, the friendship of my officers, and never charged with a fault. But, alas! in my journal, I cannot find any acknowledgment to my divine Benefactor and Preserver, nor do I recollect that I had any serious reflections on the subject." This is in accordance with the natural heart, but when it becomes touched with the influences of the Holy Spirit, it is ready and willing to acknowledge its obligations to its rightful Lord and Benefactor.

On the 2d of April, 1759, he decided on again entering the military service, and enlisted into Capt. John Sibley's company, as a substitute for Moses Leland, who had been drafted into the army, but did not wish to serve. For this enlistment he received fourteen pounds, thirteen shillings. Massachusetts currency, or forty-five dollars, fifty cents. The original receipt yet remains in the Leland family. He was finally transferred to Capt. William Page's company, of Hardwick, in the battalion of Lieut. Col. Ingersol, in Col. Ruggles' regiment; and was now advanced to the post of orderly sergeant; marching with the army by the old route. to the south end of Lake George.

On the 21st of July, they embarked in batteaux under the command of Gen. Amherst, "a sagacious, humane and experienced commander." Mr. Putnam notices his kindness and attention to the welfare of the common soldiers, as highly commendable. On the 22d, they landed at the outlet of the lake, in nearly the same numbers, as of last year, without meeting with any opposition. The following day they took possession of the breastworks, where they were so signally repulsed the year before, with little opposition, and thinks the loss of so many lives in the previous attack, attributable to the rashness of Col. Bradstreet. On the 24th, they began to open their trenches for a regular siege and bombardment of Fort Ticonderoga. This was a regular, strongly built, stone fort, erected by the French in 1756, and capable of resisting any common attack. The French had kept up a regular discharge of artillery, since the 23d, while their enemies were erecting their works for the batteries. That night, before any serious attack had been made, the garrison silently evacuated the fort, and embarked on the lake for Crown Point, a strong post, ten or twelve miles lower down on the west side of Lake Champlain. About three o'clock in the morning of the 27th the fort blew up, with a tremendous explosion. The French did not make any resistance at Crown Point, but proceeded on down the lake to Montreal. The cause of their sudden desertion of these strong posts, was the news of Gen. Wolfe's approach to Quebec, so that no aid could be sent them from below; and rather than be captured they abandoned their positions.

Thus terminated the third campaign, in which Mr. Putnam had been engaged, with the total demolition of the French power on the lakes George and Champlain, leading to their final expulsion from North America. This was a glorious conquest for the British arms, in which the Provincials shared largely; but the greater good to them was the check it gave to the incursions of the savages, who for more than a century had invaded their frontier, assisted and encouraged with supplies of arms and ammunition from the French, plundering, murdering, and carrying into captivity their exposed inhabitants, from Maine to Pennsylvania.

As the army was about to leave Ticonderoga in pursuit, greatly to his disappointment and vexation, he was ordered by the brigadier-general to remain and superintend the building of a saw-mill at the lower falls on the outlet of Lake George, where it debouches into a bay of Lake Champlain. After the mills were completed, he obtained a pass to go to Crown Point, where his regiment then lay. When he arrived there, instead of going into the lines, he was ordered by Maj. Skene, the superintendent of the works then building for the enlargement of the garrison, to labor as a carpenter on the block-houses, promising him the full wages for such work. After a few days, he was ordered back to oversee the operations of the saw-mills, and retained until the 1st of December, some months after the discharge of his regiment. The engineer of the army, whose name is not given, when he was finally discharged, would not allow him the dollar a day as had been promised by Col. Robinson, the quartermaster-general, but turned him off with fifteen pence, the pay of a private soldier; putting, no doubt, the extra pay justly due him into his own pocket.

On the 1st, in company with Col. Miller, Capt. Tate, and others, eleven in number, he embarked on Lake George, to go up to the southerly end, in two batteaux. Expecting to reach Fort George the next day, they took but little provision; but, the wind failing them, they passed the night four miles north of Sabbath-day Point, a noted headland. On the 2d, the wind arose to a perfect storm, with intense cold, so that they were confined to the shore, and could not move at all. On the 3d, their provisions were expended. The wind and cold continued, and their situation was becoming alarming; but, in rambling along the shore, one of the men found an old provision-bag, with about a dozen pounds of salted pork, which, with some damaged flour, brought by Col. Miller to feed two horses he had on board, made into dumplings, served well for that day. The fourth day was calm, and they again embarked; but, one of the boats being leaky, the ice formed so thick and heavy in it, that it was abandoned, and the whole party entered the single boat. This additional burthen loaded her down within two or three inches of the top of her sides, and the least agitation of the water would have filled her. But, providentially, it remained calm all day, and they reached the fort at sunset without any accident. From thence he returned to Brookfield, in Massachusetts, on the 16th of December.

Putnam took an active part in the campaign of 1760, first as recruiting officer in Col. Ruggles' regiment, and later as ensign in Col. Willard's regiment. June 2, he set out for the army, and joined his company at Ticonderoga, then under command of Capt. Thomas Beman. The company was stationed through the summer at the landing at the outlet of Lake George. Nov. 9 his company was discharged, and the next day began their march through the wilderness by way of Otter creek to Number Four (Charlestown, N.H.) on the Connecticut river, which they reached Nov. 25; and he arrived home Dec. 1.

Mar. 3, 1761, Mr. Putnam bought "the mill privilege, mill, and tools" on Horse-pond brook in North Brookfield, of Joseph Bartlett, where he resided and carried on the mill, and for a time the farm connected with it (except when away on military service or civil engineering) till 1781, in May of which year he bought the confiscated estate of Daniel Murray of Rutland, whither he removed, and where he made his home till his removal to Ohio in Dec. 1787.

Mr. Putnam had a natural taste for mathematics, especially geometry; and, under the direction of Col. Timothy Dwight of Northampton, became an accomplished land-surveyor. He was a practical, matter-of-fact man in whatever he undertook. First a millwright, then a soldier, next a land-surveyor, and finally an engineer; the principles and practice of all these branches he acquired from a limited number of books and with little instruction, mainly by close study and logical reasoning. As a soldier, he submitted to discipline, and laid up the best military maxims, and observed the working of different plans, and thus acquired the confidence and skill which stood him so well when placed in responsible offices of command.

In April 1761, Mr. Putnam was married to Elizabeth Ayres, daughter of William Ayres, a prominent citizen of North Brookfield. She died in November following, leaving an infant, which survived but a few months. In January 1765, he married Persis Rice, daughter of Zebulon Rice of Westboro, by whom he had a numerous family of children. [See Genealogical Register, PUTNAM.]

In the winter of 1772, Mr. Putnam was induced to go with a party of "Military Adventurers" to Florida, with a view of selecting and locating certain grants of lands, promised by the King and Council of England to the colonial officers and soldiers who had served in the late war against France. The chief agent in promoting the scheme was Gen. Phineas Lyman of Connecticut. The party was absent about eight months. They first landed at Pensacola; then sailed to the mouth of the Mississippi, which they entered Mar. 22, 1773. They explored the delta and its several outlets; passed up the river to New Orleans; thence up past Baton Rouge; past Natchez, and as far as Vicksburg. Putnam made surveys and observations of the country of which he kept a Journal, that has great scientific and historical value.

The Revolutionary storm, which had been gathering for several years, burst upon the colonies, the second year after his return from this expedition. Ever active to the service of his native country, he joined the army in the capacity of a lieutenant-colonel, in the regiment of Col. David Brewer. His regiment was stationed at Roxbury, in Gen. Thomas' division of the army, soon after the affair at Lexington.

In a short time after the battle of Bunker hill, the general and field officers of the Roxbury division, met in council on the best course to pursue, in their present defenceless situation, exposed at any time to the attack of the enemy without any better protection than a board fence. It was decided that lines should be thrown up for the defence of the town. When this was determined, the difficulty arose where to find a man capable of directing the works in a military manner. Engineers were rare amongst a people who had never carried on a war but under the direction of mother Britain, who filled such posts with her own sons. At length it was mentioned to the general by some of Col. Putnam's friends, that in the late war against Canada, he had seen some service in this line; but on being solicited by the commander to undertake the work, he frankly told him that he had never read a word on that branch of science, and all his knowledge was acquired by working under British engineers. The general would take no denial, and Col. Putnam reluctantly set about tracing out lines in front of Roxbury, toward Boston, and various places in the vicinity, especially at Sewel's Point. It so happened that he was occupied at the latter post, when Gen. Washington and Gen. Lee first came over to examine the situation of the troops, and state of the defences on that side of Charles river. The plan of the works met the entire approbation of Gen. Washington, and Lee spoke in high terms of that on Sewel's Point, when compared with those at Cambridge, which animated and encouraged him to persevere in his efforts. All the defences at Roxbury, Dorchester and Brookline, were of his construction, and especially the fort on Cobble Hill.

In the course of this campaign, at the request of Gen. Washington, he surveyed and delineated a map of the courses, distances, and relative situation of the enemy's works in Boston and Charlestown, with the American defences in Cambridge, Roxbury, etc., which must have been of great importance to him in arranging his plans for an attack on the former place. In December, he accompanied Gen. Lee to Providence and Newport, R.I., and at the latter place planned a battery that commanded the harbor; also, a work on an elevation at Howland's ferry, which secured the communication of the island with the main land. In the new organization of the army, made in the fall of 1775, he was appointed a lieutenant-colonel in the Twenty-second Regiment, commanded by Col. Samuel Wyllis. He, however, did not actually join that regiment, but was continued in the engineer department.

In the winter of 1776, Gen. Washington was deeply engaged in planning an attack on the British army in Boston, by crossing the troops on the ice, or else to draw them out from their stronghold, by erecting works on Dorchester neck, that would not only annoy the town, but destroy their shipping in the harbor. In constructing the latter work, Col. Putnam, with his usual modesty, and constant reliance on an overruling Power, in directing the affairs of man, thus speaks: "As soon as the ice was thought to be sufficiently strong for the army to pass over, a council of general officers was convened on the subject. What their particular opinions were I never knew, but the brigadiers were directed to consult their field officers, and they to feel the temper of the captains and subalterns. While this was doing I was invited to dine at headquarters; and while at dinner, Gen. Washington invited me to tarry after the company had departed. When we were alone he entered into a free conversation on the subject of storming the city of Boston. That it was much better to draw the enemy out to Dorchester, than to attack him in Boston, no one doubted; for if we could maintain ourselves on that neck of land, our command of the town and harbor would be such as would probably compel them to leave the place. But the cold weather, which had made a bridge of ice for our passage into Boston, had also frozen the earth to a great depth, especially in the open country, like the hills on Dorchester neck, so that it was impossible to make a lodgement there in the usual way (that is, by excavating the earth.) However, the general directed me to consider the matter, and if I could think of any way by which it could be done, to make a report to him immediately."

He then describes the events which he calls providential, and may evidently be referred to Him who created, as well as rules the destiny of man, but which thoughtless and blind mortals attribute to the freaks of chance. "I left headquarters in company with another gentleman, and on the way came by those of Gen. Heath. I had no thought of calling until I came against his door when I said, let us call on Gen. Heath, to which the gentleman agreed. I had no other motive than to pay my respects to the general. While there I cast my eye on a book which lay on the table, lettered on the back Muller's Field Engineer. Immediately I requested the general to lend it to me. He denied me. I repeated my request. He again refused, saying, he never lent his books. I then told him that he must recollect, that he was one, who at Roxbury, in a manner compelled me to undertake a business on which, at the time, I confessed I had never read a word, and that he must let me have the book. After a few more excuses on his part, and pressing on mine, I obtained the loan of it." He arrived at his quarters about dark, but was so much engaged in receiving reports of the progress of the works until a late hour, that he did not examine Muller until morning. On looking over the contents of the book, he came to the word "chandelier." This was a new phrase to him, but on turning to the page where the article was described, and reading it carefully over, he was soon ready to report a plan for making a lodgement on Dorchester heights. In a few minutes after he had decided on the feasibility of the plan, Col. Gridly, who had planned the works at Cambridge, and Col. Knox of the artillery, who had been directed to consult with Col. Putnam on this difficult subject, entered his room and acquiesced in his plan. The report was approved by Gen. Washington, and preparations immediately made to carry it into operation. The chandeliers were made of stout timbers, ten feet long, into which were framed posts, five feet high and five feet apart, placed on the ground in parallel lines, and the open spaces fitted in with bundles of facines, strongly picketed together; thus forming a movable parapet of wood, instead of earth, as heretofore done. The men were immediately set to work in the adjacent apple orchard and woodlands, cutting and bundling up the facines, and carrying them with the chandeliers on to the ground selected for the work on the night of the 4th of March, and on the morning of the 5th, the British troops were astonished to see a formidable battery, erected by their industrious Yankee foes in one night, where the evening before no appearance of such a defence was to be seen. The ground was so deeply frozen that the intrenching tools made no more impression on it than on a solid rock, and their old mode of excavating trenches, and throwing up parapets of earth, was utterly at a nonplus.

The providential visit of Col. Putnam at Gen. Heath's quarters, was both the remote and immediate cause of the sudden withdrawal of the British troops from Boston. On the first sight of this barrier, mounted with artillery and frowning defiance, Gen. Howe decided on landing troops and carrying it by storm, and there would have probably been another Bunker hill adventure or something worse. The ice broke way soon after, and his boats being dispersed by a gale of wind, when the troops had embarked, he gave up the design, and sent word to Gen. Washington that he would leave the town with his army unharmed, if he would not molest the shipping while the men and stores were removing. The evacuation of the place, and the relief of the inhabitants from British thralldom and abuse, being all that Washington sought, the terms were complied with, and this desirable object accomplished without bloodshed.

On the last day of March, 1776, he was ordered by Gen. Washington to proceed to New York, by way of Providence, Rhode Island, to aid Gov. Cook with his advice and assistance, in constructing works for the defence of that town. While on this tour of duty, he again visited Newport, and made additional defences there. On the 6th of April he had an interview with Washington, at Providence, who felt a deep interest in his welfare, not only for his successful efforts on Dorchester heights, but also for the integrity, uprightness, and straightforward patriotism of the man; and not only during the war, but during his whole life, treated him with marked respect and friendship. He reached New York about the 20th of April, and was immediately authorized as chief engineer, to lay out and oversee the works of defence during that campaign at New York, Long Island, and their dependencies, with Fort Washington, Fort Lee, Kingsbridge, &c., the larger portion of which appears in the plan of New York island, attached to Marshall's Life of Washington. This was a service of great fatigue, as it occupied all his time from daylight in the morning until night, and sometimes all night.

On the 10th of July, Gen. Washington, in a letter to Congress, notices the services of Col. Putnam: "Gen. Mercer is now in the Jerseys, for the purpose of receiving and ordering the militia coming for the flying camp, and I have sent over our chief engineer to view the ground in the neighborhood of Amboy, and to lay out some necessary works for the encampment, and such as may be proper at the different passes in Bergen Neck and other places."

In August, Congress appointed him engineer, which was announced by Gen. Washington to him, as follows :

Col. Putnam.

Sir : I have the pleasure to inform you that Congress have appointed you an engineer, with the rank of colonel, and pay of sixty dollars a month. I beg of you to hasten the sinking of vessels and other obstructions in the river at Fort Washington, as fast as possible. Advise Gen. Putnam constantly of the kind of vessels you want and other things, that no delay that can possibly be avoided may happen. I am sir, your assured friend and servant

G. Washington.

P.S. Congress have just sent two French gentlemen here as engineers. Will either of them be of use at Fort Washington or Kingsbridge ? ”

On the 8th of September, 1776, a council of general officers had determined on holding possession of the city of New York. On the 12th, by order of Gen. Washington, Col. Putnam went out with Gen. Mifflin to reconnoitre between Kingsbridge and Morrisania, and on their return Washington met them near Harlem heights, where they made their report. This led to a council of general officers, in which it was decided to abandon the city, and this measure was based on their report, being the means of saving the army from total destruction.

Col. Putnam remarks that his appointment by Congress as engineer, was wholly unexpected. That his first attempts in that department arose from pure necessity, in place of a better man, and that his continuance in that service was more out of respect to Gen. Washington, than a sense of his own qualifications. After his arrival at New York he had greatly improved his knowledge, by the study of writers on that subject ; and his daily practice in that profound art for more than a year, had now made him a much more skilful engineer, yet his natural modesty had never led him once to think of being appointed to the first post in a corps of engineers. His observations on the deficiencies and difficulties which attended that department, led him, in September, to draw up a plan for a distinct engineering corps, which was presented to Gen. Washington, and by him laid before Congress, with the following letter, of November 5 :

“ I have taken the liberty to transmit a plan for establishing a corps of engineers, artificers, &c., sketched out by Col. Putnam, and which is proposed for the consideration of Congress. How far they may incline to adopt it, or whether they may choose to proceed on such an extensive scale, they will be pleased to determine. However, I conceive it a matter well worthy of their consideration, being convinced from experience, and from reasons suggested by Col. Putnam, who has acted with great diligence and reputation in the business, that some establishment of the sort is highly necessary, and will be productive of the most beneficial consequences.”

On the 19th of October the enemy landed their army on Pells point, and some skirmishing took place between a part of Glover's brigade and the advance of the British troops, near East Chester. The following morning Gen. Washington directed Col. Putnam to reconnoitre their position. For this purpose he left Kingsbridge, in company with Col. Reid, the adjutant-general, and a foot-guard of twenty men. From the heights of East Chester they saw a small body of the enemy near the church, but could learn nothing from the inhabitants, as the houses were all deserted. Col. Reid now left him to attend to other duties, and Col. Putnam requested him to take back the guard, as he thought he could better succeed in reconnoitring by himself. He then disguised his appearance as an officer, and set out for White Plains, a place he had never visited, nor did he know the road which led to that place. Directly a highway turned off to the right, which he followed a short distance, and came to a house, where a woman informed him that the road he was now on led to New Rochelle; that the enemy were there, and had posted a guard at a house then in sight. He now turned his course, and proceeded toward White Plains, approaching within three or four miles of the place, when he discovered a house a little ahead with men about it. Before advancing, he carefully examined their appearance with his spy-glass, and ascertained that they were not British soldiers. He then advanced and entered the house, which was a tavern; calling for some oats for his horse, and sitting quietly down, listened to their conversation. He soon discovered that they were Whigs, and ascertained the following valuable facts, viz., that the main army of the British were lying near New Rochelle, distant from White Plains about nine miles, with good roads and an open level country between, and that at the latter place was a large quantity of American stores under the guard of about three hundred militia. That a detachment of the enemy was posted at Mamaronec, only six miles from the Plains, while on the other side was the Hudson river, in which lay five or six of the enemy's armed vessels at a distance of only five miles, so that the main depot of provisions for the American army, which Gen. Washington had ordered here as a place of safety, was enclosed on three sides by his adversaries. Col. Putnam saw at a glance their hazardous position, and hastened back with his all important discoveries. The road from Ward's tavern where he then was, led across the Braux, and was the most direct route for his return, but it passed so near the positions occupied by the enemy that it required great watchfulness to avoid detection. As he approached the highland west of the little river Braux, he saw it was already occupied by armed men, but on applying his spy-glass, ascertained they were American troops, and on his arrival found it to be Lord Stirling's division, who had taken a position there since he passed in the morning. He announced his discoveries to the general, refreshed himself and horse, and set out for headquarters, ten miles distant, by the mouth of the Saw-mill river, a road he had never travelled before, leading through a noted Tory settlement. It was now dark, but he dare not inquire the way, lest he should be arrested. An overruling Providence guided his steps, and he arrived in safety at Gen. Washington's quarters, near Kingsbridge, about nine o'clock. He found him alone, and ready to receive his report, with a sketch of the country, which he hastily made, showing the relative positions of the different British detachments, and the stores at White Plains. This, like the clew of the labyrinth, at once led him to see the difficulties and dangers of his position, and the path by which he could be extricated. Gen. Washington complained very feelingly of the gentlemen of New York, from whom he had never been able to obtain a plan of the country: that it was by their advice he had ordered the stores to White Plains, as a place of safety. This was a serious difficulty under which he labored through the first years of the war, the lack of correct topographical descriptions of the country in which he was acting, often leading him into the toils of the enemy, when he thought he was escaping or out of danger. Such a man as Putnam was then an invaluable treasure; who was fearless, but cautious in scanning the positions of the foe, and could delineate on paper, what he had seen with his eyes, making his descriptions both intelligent and practical. Washington immediately sent a messenger for Gen. Greene and Gen. George Clinton, since Vice-President of the United States. When the latter entered, Putnam's sketch and report were laid before him, and the question asked as to the correctness of the topographical sketch. He confirmed its accuracy. In a short time he was charged with a letter to Lord Stirling, and orders to proceed immediately to his camp, which he reached by the same route, about two o'clock in the morning. Before daylight his division was in motion, in full march for White Plains, where they arrived about nine o'clock on the morning of the 21st of October, "and thus was the American army saved by an interposition of Providence, from a probable total destruction."

It was as late as the 29th, before the enemy advanced in front of the American lines at White Plains. About 10 o'clock A.M., Col. Putnam had arrived on Chatterton hill, intending to throw up some defences, just as they came in sight. As soon as they discovered the Americans, they opened a severe cannonade, but without much effect. Gen. McDougal now arrived with his brigade, and seeing the enemy crossing the Braux below in large bodies, placed his men in an advantageous position behind the stone walls and fences to receive them. They were twice repulsed with great loss; but by bringing up fresh detachments, they so greatly outnumbered the Americans as to turn their right flank, and cause them to retreat. Our loss was great, but it was afterward ascertained that the British loss was much greater; they receiving the same pay as at Bunker hill. After the battle of the 29th, Col. Putnam was employed in examining the topography of the country in the rear of White Plains, toward North Castle, Croton river, etc., with a view to military operations, when, on the 5th of November, he received the following letter from Gen. Washington :

“ Head Quarters, White Plains, Nov. 5, 1776.

Sir : You are directed to repair to Wright’s mills, and lay out any work there you conceive to be necessary, in case it is not already done. From thence you are to proceed toward Croton bridge, and post the two regiments of militia in the most advantageous manner, so as to obstruct the enemy’s passage to that quarter. You are also to give what directions you think proper to those regiments, respecting the breaking up the roads leading from the North river eastward. After this you are to go up to Peekskill, and direct Lasher’s detachment to break up the roads there; you are likewise to lay out what works will be advisable there, and order them to be set about.

Given under my hand,

Geo. Washington.

To Col. Putnam, engineer.”

On the 11th of November, Gen. Washington visited Peekskill, and Col. Putnam accompanied him to Fort Washington. On the following day he crossed the North river, instructing him to ascertain the topography of the country, with the roads and passes through the Highlands, which report he soon after made. A copy of this report is among his papers, and gives a minute description of the different passes; pointing out such as would need protection, with a skeleton map, containing valuable information for the defence of the passes in the Highlands of the Hudson, a point so important in the contest with Great Britain. On the 8th of December, he addressed a letter to the commander-in-chief, informing him that he had accepted the command of a regiment in the Massachusetts line, of the continental army, with his reasons for so doing, assuring him at the same time of his attachment and readiness to execute any service he should be ordered on. The following is an extract from his answer :

“ Bucks County, near Cayell’s Ferry, Dec. 17, 1776.

Dear Sir : Your letter of the 8th, from Peekskill, came duly to hand.

Your acceptance of a regiment, to be raised on continental establishment, by the state of Massachusetts bay, is quite agreeable to me, and I sincerely wish you success in recruiting, and much honor in commanding it.

Your professions of attachment are extremely gratifying to, dear sir, your most obedient servant,

Geo. Washington."

In a letter to Congress, of December 20th, he thus speaks of Col. Putnam: "I have also to mention, that for want of some establishment in the department of engineers, agreeable to the plan laid before Congress in October last, Col. Putnam, who was at the head of it, has quitted, and taken a regiment in the state of Massachusetts. I know of no other man tolerably well qualified for the conducting of that business. None of the French gentlemen whom I have seen with appointments in that way, appear to know any thing of the matter. There is one in Philadelphia who I am told is clever, but him I have not seen."

After closing his accounts as engineer, in January, 1777, he returned to Massachusetts to recruit and fill up his regiment. In this he was quite successful. As early as May, three companies were filled, and marched from Worcester to Peekskill; and in June were ordered up the North river to Fort Ann. On the 3d of July, Col. Putnam followed with the rest of the regiment, and joined his brigade, at a point four miles above Fort Edward. This gave him an opportunity to examine the condition of the old fort, which he had so often visited and worked on in the former war. He found that in the last seventeen years, it had greatly decayed, and was quite untenable as a work of defence; nevertheless it was shortly after occupied by the troops of Gen. Burgoyne for a few days, probably the last time the British flag will ever float near its walls.

The campaign of 1777, was big with events deeply interesting to the United States. Burgoyne with a large army had invaded New York from the north, pursuing the old route so often traversed in former years by the hostile bands of France and Great Britain. The hordes of savages which accompanied his army made the resemblance still more striking. A numerous body of men and shipping, under Clinton, assailed the same state on the south, by the way of the North river, intending to unite the invading armies at Albany, and thus divide the eastern from the middle and southern states. Ticonderoga, considered the key to the northern portion of the Union, had fallen into the hands of the enemy; but the lives and the liberty of the army which occupied it, were saved from the hands of the conqueror, by the good sense of Gens. St. Clair and Schuyler, who thought it useless to defend an untenable post, and thus served as a nucleus, around which to rally the militia and continen-tals, who hastened from all parts to arrest the progress of the enemy. New England was electrified at the threatened danger, and poured forth the thousands of her hardy yeomanry from her granite hills, to meet the coming storm.

Col. Putnam, with his brave Massachusetts men, again traversed the grounds he had so often visited in the "old French war;" familiar with every part from Fort Edward to Stillwater, while few if any of his officers or men had seen this part of the country before. Although he was busily engaged in all the military operations of September, in the contests with Burgoyne, his regiment being the earliest on the ground, yet he has left no record of these events, except to correct some misstatements made by the historians of that period, in relation to the storming the works of the German reserve, on the 7th of October, and a few other matters. In front of those works was an open field, bounded by a wood, at the distance of one hundred and twenty yards. In the skirt of this wood Col. Putnam was posted with the fifth and sixth regiments of the Massachusetts line, under his command. Both the right and left of their works were covered by a thin, open wood, and the rear by a thick wood. The moment that orders were given to storm, he moved rapidly across the open field, amidst a murderous fire of grape and musketry, and entered the works in front, at the same moment that Learned's brigade, in which Jackson's regiment was stationed, entered on the left and rear. Col. Putnam immediately formed his two regiments, and moved out of the works, which were not enclosed in the rear, and advanced into the woods, toward the enemy's enclosed redoubts, on the right flank of their main encampment. Gen. Learned, as soon as he had secured and sent off the plunder taken in the German camp, withdrew all the other troops, without notifying Col. Putnam of his design, leaving him unprotected in the occupancy of the wood. Here he remained until toward morning, when he was re-inforced with three regiments from the right wing of the army, under Gen. Glover.

The historian Marshall's account, varies materially from this. He says, "Jackson's regiment of Massachusetts, led by Lieut.-Col. Brooks, turned the right of the encampment, and stormed the works." In this account no mention is made of Brig. Learned, who stormed at the same time with the other corps of the brigade, as well as Jackson's; nor of the two regiments under Col. Putnam, who stormed in front, under much greater exposure than Jackson. Again, Marshall says, "Brooks maintained the ground he had gained;" which is entirely contrary to the truth; for, except the two regiments commanded by Col. Putnam, the troops which entered the works were in great disorder, so far as fell under his observation; nor did he see any of them formed in order for action, before he moved out with the fifth and sixth regiments, as above stated.

At page 288, of the 3d volume, is a note from the historian Gordon, who says that, "On the morning of the 11th of October, a report was spread in the American camp, and believed by the officers, that the main body of Burgoyne's army had marched away in the night for Fort Edward, leaving only a rear-guard in the camp, which was to march as soon as possible, leaving only their heavy baggage. On this, it was decided to advance, and attack the camp in half an hour; and the officers repaired to their respective commands. Gen. Nixon's being the oldest brigade, crossed the creek first. Unknown to the Americans, Burgoyne had formed a line behind a parcel of brushwood, to support the park of artillery, where the attack was to be made. Gen. Glover was on the point of following Nixon; just as he entered the water, he saw a British soldier making across, whom he called and examined." The soldier was a deserter, and communicated the important fact, that the whole British army was in their encampment. Nixon was immediately stopped, and the intelligence conveyed to Gen. Gates, who countermanded the order for the assault, and called back the troops, not without sustaining some loss from the British artillery.

Col. Putnam's account of this affair is as follows: "Nixon's brigade was put in motion, and marched in close column to the creek, just as the fog broke away, when the whole park of British artillery opened upon us, at not more than five hundred yards distance. Finding we were halted, I rode forward to the head of the brigade, to inquire why we stood there in that exposed situation. But Nixon was not to be found, and Col. Greaton, who commanded the leading regiment, said he had no orders. I then advised the crossing the creek, and covering the troops under the bank, which was done. I then, at the request of Col. Stephens, advanced with my regiment across the plain, and posted them under cover of the bank of an old stockade fort, while Stephens advanced with two field-pieces, to annoy the British, who were attempting to take away some baggage wagons standing about midway between us and the British battery. We remained in this situation about an hour, when I had orders to retreat, and found Nixon near the church, and after some debate, obtained leave to send a party and cut away the British boats, which lay above the mouth of the creek. Capt. Morse, Goodale, and Gates, with seventy or eighty volunteers, started on this service, and effected it without any loss." This plain statement puts the affair in a different position, and shows that but for the promptness and bravery of Putnam in this unexpected dilemma, the loss of Americans must have been much greater. The bold act of cutting loose Burgoyne's store-boats, in the face of his army, was of his suggesting, and accomplished chiefly through the fearless activity of Capt. Goodale, who was noted for daring exploits.

Kosciusko, the philanthropic and brave Polander, who volunteered his services in the cause of American freedom, was placed at the head of the engineering corps in Gates' army, and often consulted Col. Putnam in planning the works of defence and offence, so necessary in the operations of hostile armies. He remained in the northern department until the surrender of Burgoyne, which took place a few days after the last adventure, on the 16th of October; thus closing the career of this haughty Briton who fancied he could march his invincibles from Ticonderoga to Albany, in defiance of all the efforts of "the rebels," the common name for the Americans, and there unite his triumphant columns with those of Sir Henry Clinton. This was the most glorious event that had yet attended the arms of the United States, and infused new life into the desponding portion of the community. They learned, by actual experience, that British regulars were not invincible, while their enemies were taught to respect a foe they had heretofore despised. After the cessation of hostilities in this quarter, Nixon's brigade, to which Col. Putnam belonged, went into winter quarters at Albany.

In January, 1778, he received a message from Gov. Clinton and Gen. Israel Putnam, requesting him to repair to West Point, and superintend the fortifications proposed to be erected at this American Gibraltar. He declined the offer, unless his regiment was allowed to go with him, except at the express orders of Gen. Washington. A French engineer had been sent by Congress, to plan and execute the works proposed to be erected; but his views were not approved by Gov. Clinton and the general officers, as suited to what they deemed necessary, and hence arose the confusion and delay, noticed in Gen. Washington's letter to Congress, of the 13th of March, 1778.

In February he succeeded Col. Greaton in the command of the troops in the northern department, who went home on furlough. It seems that Congress, without consulting the commander-in-chief, had matured a plan for a winter campaign into Canada, which was now left in a manner defenceless. The chief duty of Col. Putnam was to forward provisions and military stores to Coos, on the Onion river, by which route the army of invasion was to pass, as early as the 20th of February. The sound mind of the Colonel at once perceived the fallacy and impossibility of the project. The country was covered with a deep snow, and the soldiers, as usual, only half clothed, and entirely unprepared for a winter campaign. This was always a serious difficulty during the whole war; our armies were never decently clad, and the poverty of the country was seen in their tattered garments and shoeless feet. When men were required by Col. Hazelet, the quartermaster-general, to open a road, he had the firmness to refuse him, on account of the inclemency of the weather, and the destitute condition of his men.

About this time, the 10th or 12th of February, the Marquis Lafayette, who was to command the army of invasion, arrived at Albany, with the Baron de Kalb. After a careful inspection of the troops, he confirmed the views of Col. Putnam, and the expedition was abandoned; and fortunate for the country was it that they did so, for this was not a war of offence, but of defence; and whenever the Americans left their own soil, disaster and defeat followed their steps; but so long as they confined their operations to justice and to right, the God of armies and of justice was on their side.

In March following, he was ordered with his regiment down to West Point, where his valuable services were required to lay out and superintend the construction of fortifications at that important place, and Gen. McDougal, who had been appointed to the command, arrived about the same time. Of all the foreign engineers who had been sought out and employed, not one had yet been found, with the sound judgment and practical skill of this untaught American. The strong mind and calm, considerate reflection of Putnam took in at once the commanding points of the positions to be fortified, and his practical skill soon accomplished what his genius had projected. He found the foreign engineers' main fort laid out on an extreme point next the river, and commanded by the adjacent high grounds. It was abandoned for this purpose, and a simple battery placed there to annoy the enemy's shipping, should they attempt to turn the point and force the boom placed a little higher up. As a defence against an attack by land, a chain of forts and redoubts was laid out on the high ground, bordering the plain, which forms the point that gives name to the place. The principal fort was built by Putnam's own regiment, and named by Gen. McDougal, "Fort Putnam." It stands on an elevated rocky eminence, which commands both the plain and point. This rock slopes gradually on to the plain, on one side, while to the assailants it presents a mural front of fifty feet perpendicular. It was subsequently strengthened with additional works and made a very formidable place. These defences occupied him until June, when he joined the division of the army under Gen. Gates at Peekskill, and on the 24th of July united with the grand army under Gen. Washington, at White Plains. By his orders he reconnoitred the country about Fredericksburg, Quaker hill, etc., making plans and sketches for the use of the commander. On the 16th of September, the main army was broken into divisions and posted at different places. The division to which he was attached under Gen. Gates, marched to Danbury, Connecticut. While here he was directed by Gen. McDougal to examine the roads and passes from New Milford, leading eastward, which service he accomplished, and made his report to him. Soon after this he received the following letter from Gen. Washington :

“Head Quarters, Oct. 9th, 1778.

Sir: I have perused your report of this day to Gen. McDougal. You will continue your examination of the different roads, &c., reconnoiter the most convenient halting places on each; allowing the interval of one day's march from one to the other, and make report of the whole to me, that I may be enabled to regulate the different routes. The road toward Litchfield offers, from your account of it, to be worth attention, and Col. Hall should be directed to proceed on it accordingly.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

G. Washington.

Col. Putnam.”

In answer to this letter he made a lengthy and very particular report, exhibiting his tact and sound judgment in such services, for which he was naturally constituted.

Previous to making the final arrangements for winter quarters, he made a tour of reconnoissance with Gen. Greene, in the vicinity of the Hudson river. Late in December Nixon's brigade took up their winter station in the Highlands, on the road from Peekskill to Fishkill. Nixon left the brigade on furlough, and it was placed under Col. Putnam for the winter. Early in February the brigade was ordered to leave their quarters. Col. Putnam's regiment was directed to march to Croton river, and build a bridge across that stream, which was completed about the last of March, and was all extra service, for which no additional pay was given.

At this time he had a furlough to visit his family, where he had not been since December, 1777. This was an inconvenience under which the most useful officers labored; they could not be spared from the service, while the less valuable procured leave of absence more readily. The families of many of the New England officers, high in command, were in poor circumstances, and required all the industry and foresight of their calculating wives to keep their families in comfortable circumstances during their absence. Mrs. Putnam and the children, the oldest not more than twelve or fourteen years, lived on a small farm of fifty acres of rather sterile land; while so poor and uncertain was the pay of the soldier, and in 1779, so depreciated in value, that had it not been for the assiduous application of the needle by this patriotic woman, her children would sometimes have been very poorly supplied with food. It was common in those days, which tried the souls of women as well as of men, for females in some of the best families, to make garments gratuitously for the soldiers sent from their vicinity, while many of them made also for their neighbors less skilled in the art, for which they received produce or continental paper in exchange. Mrs. Putnam was one of this class; and let it be remembered to her honor and praise, that she labored diligently with her hands, both at the distaff and needle, like the virtuous woman of old, for the support of her household, while he who should have been their provider was absent, devoting his time to the cause of freedom, and fighting the battles of his country. Many interesting anecdotes are yet remembered and related by the family, of the frugality and industry practised during this cruel war, for their support.

Toward the last of June, Col. Putnam returned to camp, and in a few days received the following order from Gen. Heath :

“ Highlands, Danforth’s House, June 29, 1779.

Sir : I am very desirous, if possible, to obtain the exact situation of the enemy on Verplank’s Point, and of the vessels in the river. As you are well acquainted with the ground on both sides of the river, I would request that you would, to-morrow, reconnoiter the enemy with due precaution, and make such remarks as you may think proper. You will take a part, or the whole of your own light infantry company as a guard. Your knowledge of the country, and abilities, render particular instructions unnecessary.

Yours, &c.,

Wm. Heath.

Col. Putnam.”

To execute this order, he had to march through the mountains about twenty miles, by an unfrequented route, and to prevent discovery, conceal his men in the woods. This duty was successfully performed ; but the report is mislaid. Soon after his return, he received the following note from his excellency, the commander-in-chief :

“ Col. Putnam has permission to take as many men as he chooses, of his own regiment, or any other, for special service, and to pass all guards.

G. Washington.

July 9, 1779.”

The “special service” here intended, was to reconnoitre the posts on Verplank’s and Stony Points, previous to the meditated assault on those places. For this purpose, Col. Putnam left Constitution island, opposite to West Point, in the afternoon of the 10th, with fifty men, and landed at Continental village about sunset. Soon after dark, he proceeded, by a back road, to a point near the scene of his intended observations, and concealed his men, as before, in the woods. In a short time it began to rain, and continued all the next day, a part of which time they lay in a barn. On the 12th it was fair, but their ammunition was all wet, and he retired a little distance, to a deserted house, built a fire, and dried their powder, which occupied nearly all day, leaving the party, had they been attacked, entirely defenceless. That evening he approached nearer the works, concealed his men, and commenced reconnoitring their condition. With one or two soldiers, who were familiar with the location, he continued his labor until near morning, creeping on his hands and knees, to avoid detection by the sentries, when very near the works. He ascertained the time of night by the aid of fire-flies, which are abundant at that season, and whose phosphorescent light enabled him to distinguish the hours on his watch. By the approach of early dawn, he had completed his observations, and returned undiscovered to camp, on the 13th. The following day, a full and very intelligent report of the service was made to Gen. Washington; a copy of which is now among his manuscripts, and no doubt contributed greatly to the success of the attack on Stony Point, which immediately followed. In relation to the statement made by Marshall, that "two brigades under the command of Gen. McDougal, had been ordered to approach the enemy on the east side of the river, &c.,"—he doubts whether such an order was ever given, for the reason, that McDougal commanded the post of West Point, and would not be allowed to leave so important a station. He further says, that when he waited on Gen. Washington, to make his report of the reconnoissance on the 14th, he told him that he had relinquished the plan of an actual attack on Verplank's, simultaneously with that on Stony Point, but intended only to make a feint; and for that purpose had ordered Nixon's brigade to march, that day, to Continental village. He then instructed Col. Putnam to take as many men from the brigade as he thought proper, and make arrangements to be on the ground, ready to fire on the enemy at Verplank's, the moment he discovered that Wayne had begun his attack on Stony Point. At the same time, he told him that no one was aware of the intended attack, but those who were intrusted with its execution, and that but one of his own family was in the secret. From some error in the orders, Nixon's brigade did not march as expected; but on the evening of the 15th, Col. Putnam left Continental village, with Lieut. Col. Smith, and a detachment of men, for Verplank's, and made the feigned attack, by firing on the outer block-house and the guard stationed at the creek, which alarmed the garrison of Fort Fayette for their own safety, and prevented their turning their guns on the Americans in their attack on Stony Point. This was all that was intended to be done on that night. On the morning of the 16th, he remained in full view of the enemy until eight or nine o'clock, and then returned to Continental village. In the course of that day, Nixon's and Patterson's brigades arrived at the village, but without field pieces, artillery men, axes, or tools. About ten o'clock at night, Gen. Howe arrived, and took the command. He called on Col. Putnam for information, who told him of the need of artillery, etc., to attack the block-house in advance of the main works, and that they could not cross the creek without rebuilding the bridge, which had been destroyed. On the 17th, two twelve pounders arrived; but before any attack was made, the approach of a numerous body of the enemy, for the relief of the post, caused the Americans to retreat, and Fort Fayette remained in the hands of the British. Stony Point was also abandoned in a short time, and fell into their possession; so that no advantage was gained, but the capture of six hundred prisoners, and the glory of the victory. It infused fresh spirits into the country, and convinced their enemies that no danger was too great, or achievement too difficult for them to overcome.

In a short time after these events, Col. Putnam was appointed to the command of a regiment of light infantry, in the brigade of Gen. Wayne, composed of four regiments. This body of men was the élite of the army, and the officers selected by the advice of Gen. Wayne, composing as efficient a corps as the world ever saw. He continued in service this year, until the army had generally gone into winter quarters, and did not reach the station in the Highlands, where his regiment was cantoned, until January, 1780; marching through the ice and snow from near Newark, in New Jersey, being a very tedious and fatiguing journey. During 1779, he was ordered on extra service, to erect a battery on the ground of old Fort Montgomery, for the annoyance of the enemy's ships on the Hudson; and again, in December, by order of Gen. Wayne, he reconnoitred the position of a British fleet at South Amboy, accompanied by eight dragoons, to learn the time of their sailing. This was promptly performed amidst the cold and inclemency of December weather, and he returned to camp by the way of New Brunswick. A number of letters from Gen. Wayne are on his file.

The latter part of the winter 1780, he had leave of absence to visit his family, and returned to camp in April.

During the campaign of 1780, no great battle was fought in the northern department. The events along the North river were mostly skirmishes.

In September, the foul treason of Arnold took place, by which the enemy thought to obtain possession of this important post, in a more easy way than by hard fighting, but not half so honorable. A kind Providence, which overlooked and directed the American affairs, caused this wicked plan to be discovered in time to prevent its execution; and the country was thus saved from threatened ruin. Soon after this affair, Col. Putnam had leave of absence, and returned to camp early in December. On the 6th of July, 1781, the French army, which had been sent to aid us, formed a junction with the Americans near Dobb's Ferry, preparatory to marching for Virginia.

On the 21st of July, Col. Putnam was ordered by Gen. Heath to take the command of a detachment of three hundred light infantry, Col. Sheldon's legionary corps, with two companies of the New York levies, and one piece of light artillery, with which to cover that part of the country. On this duty he was continued until the last of October, and thus did not witness the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown. While here employed, he received the following letter from Gen. Waterbury, of Connecticut :

“ Horse Neck, September 13, 1781.

Sir : After my compliments, I would inform you that I have received orders from his excellency, Gov. Trumbull, to build some places of security for my troops to winter in, and, at the same time, to ask the favor of your assistance, in counseling with me where to build, etc.”

This service he performed as requested. In November, he joined his regiment at West Point, and on the 14th of that month, received the following order from Gen. McDougal :

“ Sir : Gen. McDougal requests you to repair to Stony and Verplank's Points, and examine minutely into their state in every respect. The sentry boxes at those advanced works should be destroyed ; every building within cannon range of either of those posts, and any cover that would afford a lodgement for the enemy, must be taken down, and removed before you leave the ground. You will please to have the garrisons paraded, and note every person, and the regiments they belong to, unfit for this service, &c.”

This duty was faithfully performed, and was about the last of his military labors ; as after this period, hostilities, in a manner, closed between the two nations, in the northern states.

“ Head Quarters, Newburg, Dec. 2, 1782.

Sir : I am informed you have had thoughts of retiring from service, upon the arrangement which is to take place on the 1st of January. But as there will be no opening for it, unless your reasons should be very urgent indeed ; and as there are some prospects which may perhaps make your continuing more eligible than was expected, I have thought proper to mention the circumstances, in expectation they might have some influence in inducing you to remain in the army. Col. Shepherd having retired and Brig. Gen. Patterson being appointed to the command of the first brigade, you will of consequence be the second colonel in the line and have the command of a brigade, while the troops continue brigaded as at present. Besides I consider it expedient you should be acquainted, that the question is yet before Congress, whether there shall be two brigadiers appointed in the Massachusetts line. Should you continue you will be a candidate for this promotion. The secretary of war is of opinion the promotion will soon take place — whether it will or not, I am not able to determine, and, therefore, I would not flatter you too much with expectations, which it is not in my power to gratify — but if upon a view of these circumstances and prospects, the state of your affairs will permit you to continue in the present arrangement, (which must be completed immediately,) it will be very agreeable to

Sir, your most obedient servant,

G. Washington.

Col. Putnam.”

On the receipt of this letter, and one from Gen. Potter, he repaired immediately to camp ; but being determined not to remain in a situation approaching disgrace, as some of his senior officers had done, when Congress neglected to promote them to actual vacancies, on his arrival he wrote a very interesting letter to Gen. Washington, explaining all his views and thanking him for the interest he took in his welfare, but is too lengthy for insertion here. On the 8th of January following, he was commissioned as a brigadier-general in the army of the United States, and then left without any excuse to leave the service until the declaration of peace, which happily took place on the 9th of April, 1783.

In June the Massachusetts line was reduced to two regiments, of which Gen. Patterson or the oldest officer took the command, and the officers and soldiers retired on furlough, and were finally discharged in November.

During his continuance in the army, he shared largely in the confidence of Gen. Washington, who continued his friendship during his political life, appointing him to various posts of honor and profit.

After his discharge from the army, Gen. Putnam joined his family in Rutland, where they then lived, and resumed the occupations of farming and surveying.

In April, 1784, he addressed a letter to Gen. Washington, on the subject of the projected settlement to be made by the officers and soldiers of the Army, in the Ohio country — a subject which seems to have entered deeply into his heart, and occupied a prominent place in his attention ; and though the project was not then carried out, yet, all things considered, he may well be regarded as the projector and father of the settlements north-west of the Ohio river.

In August, 1784, he was employed by the state of Massachusetts to survey a tract of land, bordering on Passamaquoddy bay, and returned home in November.

It was in this year that Leicester Academy was incorporated. Gen.

Putnam made a donation of £100 to its Fund; and was appointed a member of its first board of Trustees.

In 1785, he was appointed by the Legislature one of a committee to make sale of the eastern lands held by the commonwealth, and also superintendent of the surveys to be made that year.

He was also appointed in June, same year, by Congress, one of the surveyors of the national lands, lying north-west of the Ohio river. At his request Gen. Tupper was appointed in his stead. And the report of those surveys was the moving occasion for the organization, through the influence of these two men, of "The Ohio Company."

In January, 1787, he volunteered to assist Gen. Lincoln in suppressing the Shays' rebellion. In April he was appointed by Gov. Bowdoin, a justice of the peace; and in May was chosen by the town of Rutland representative, and attended the spring and autumn sessions of that year.

In November, 1789, he was appointed superintendent of the affairs of "The Ohio Company." The first division of pioneer settlers left Danvers, under Maj. Haffeld White, December 1. The second division left Hartford, Ct., the first of January following, under Col. Sproat. Gen. Putnam went by way of New York city, on business for the company, and joined the division Jan. 24, at Swatarra creek, Pa. On that night there fell a deep snow, which blocked up the roads, so that the party could get their wagons no further than Cooper's Tavern, now Strawsburg, at the foot of the Tuscarawas mountain, on the 29th of January. The snow in the mountains was about three feet deep. They therefore abandoned their wagons, built four stout sledges, to which they harnessed their horses in single file, preceded by men on foot who broke a track for the teams, and thus after two weeks of exhausting labor, they overcame the mountain ranges, reaching Simrel's ferry on the Youghiogheny, February 14, where they found the party under Major White, who had arrived January 23.

By the first of April, having completed their boats and taken in their stores of provisions, they embarked on the western waters for the mouth of the Muskingum, which they reached April 7, and landed at the upper point, where they pitched their camp among the forest trees. The next day, Col. Sproat and John Matthews began the survey of the eight-acre lots, and in a few days after, the city lots and streets, of the town of Marietta.

From his arrival at Marietta, till the day of his death, Gen. Putnam was a leading spirit in all moral, religious, educational and military affairs of the colony, the Territory, and the State of Ohio. And thus the boy, cradled in adversity, became the man, whose home for twenty-seven years of his early manhood was in North Brookfield; and whose life illustrated the vital power of New England principles and institutions, in moulding character and giving impulses and a guide to conduct; and in the end received the meed of honor and renown to which a well spent life gives title. He died May 4, 1824, in the 87th year of his age.

In person, Gen. Putnam was nearly six feet in height, stout, and commanding; features strongly marked, with a calm, resolute expression of countenance, indicative of firmness and decision. His manner was abrupt and prompt, yet not hasty, and withal conciliatory, especially during the latter years of his life. His memory was retentive; and with his long and varied experience, he had at command a rich store of facts relative to the men and events of the two generations covered by his public career.

JOHN WAITE AND HIS SONS.

[From "Records of the Waite Family," compiled by Henry E. Waite.]

AMONG the planters of Watertown, Mass., in 1637, was RICHARD WAITE, who received several grants of land there, and his homestead lot of six acres can now be pointed out. Of his three sons, John, Thomas and Joseph, the descendants of the former removed to Framingham, Mass., Joseph removed to Marlboro, Mass., and Thomas remained in Watertown, where he appears to have acquired considerable property. His sons were John, Richard, Thomas, and Joseph: the two first died young men in the early Indian wars; Thomas removed to Lyme, Conn., and was the ancestor of Henry M. Waite, late Chief Justice of Connecticut, whose son, Morrison R. Waite, is the present Chief Justice of the United States; also of Marvin Waite, a distinguished lawyer of the Revolutionary period, and his son John Turner Waite, late Representative to Congress from Connecticut.

Joseph removed from Watertown to the adjoining town of Sudbury, and had one son, JOHN, who, with his family, removed to Brookfield in 1746 and settled near Wickaboag pond, on the line between West Brookfield and Warren. He soon after removed to a large mansion on "Foster's hill," on the great "post road" from Boston to Albany, and opened the house as an inn, which soon became very popular and the favorite resort of travellers, and also of the soldiers and scouts on their way from Eastern Massachusetts to the Western frontiers during the French war. In fact, the house and its proprietor became so widely known that, although travellers were accommodated there for more than fifty years after any person of the name ceased their connection with the house, the name of the "Old Waite tavern" always clung to it. In 1825 the building was purchased by the late Alanson Hamilton, Esq., who occupied it as a private residence for many years, and in 1857 it was taken down, and the residence of Mr. Horace F. Watson now stands on its site. JOHN WAITE, the proprietor of the old tavern, had seven sons, viz.: John, born 1730; Joseph, born 1732; Thomas, 1735; Benjamin, 1737; Richard, 1745; Jeduthan, 1754, and William, 1756, who doubtless, during their earlier years, listened with wonder and admiration to the vivid descriptions, by the scouts and soldiers, of Indian barbarities, daring deeds and hair-breadth escapes, and who were thus early imbued with a desire to imitate the heroism of those-so graphically described. However this may have been, these seven brothers have left a rare record as a family for their bravery, patriotism and self-sacrifice.

JOHN, the eldest, in August, 1748, at eighteen years of age, was corporal in Captain Thomas Buckminster's company located at Fort Dummer, and during the French war was in Rogers's corps of Rangers, actively engaged in reducing the fortresses of the French on Lake Champlain and fighting their red allies, then prowling through the wilderness territory of Vermont. In 1761, he administered on his father's estate, and succeeded the latter as landlord of the old tavern for about twelve years, during which time he held various offices—was surveyor, constable, and on several committees. In 1773, his father-in-law, Captain Nathaniel Wolcott, died, who in his will says: "I appoint my trusty and faithful friend and son-in-law, John Waite, to be my sole executor," etc. He purchased of his wife's brothers and sisters their interest in the Wolcott homestead, where he resided for nearly thirty years. The property was afterwards in possession of Jonathan Parks, and the house is still standing near "Wolcott's Mills," on the road from East to North Brookfield. Upon receiving news of the battle of Lexington, Waite, like many others, left his plough in the furrow, and collecting such of his neighbors as would volunteer, hastened to the scene of action, where he served as captain during the remainder of the year. In 1776 he was on the town Committee of Correspondence; in 1777 on committee to consider petition relative to calling in the State's money. In July of this year, he was a volunteer in Captain Daniel Gilbert's company in Colonel Job Cushing's regiment, and served with the rank, but not the command of captain, and on the 5th of August was transferred to "Herrick's Rangers" and participated in the battle of Bennington. He also volunteered, 2d Sept., under Captain Asa Danforth, and was in the second battle of Saratoga when Burgoyne's army were defeated and surrendered to General Gates. In 1778, he was a member of the Committee of Safety, and on the town committee to instruct their representatives; in 1779 he was sole representative of the town in the Convention at Concord; in 1782, on committee to draw up instructions to their representatives to have duties on certain articles repealed; and he was moderator of the Town Meetings from 1778 to 1788, and on numerous other committees. He was one of the six largest tax-payers of Brookfield, his annual tax amounting to £106 11s. ; but having advanced several thousand dollars for the army, he was re-imbursed with continental money, which was of little value ; and having purchased large tracts of land in Vermont under the New Hampshire titles, and not living there to defend his possessions by force — as the settlers were obliged to do — against parties who claimed and took possession of his lands by virtue of a New York title, which was pretended to subvert that of New Hampshire, he became reduced financially, and selling his estates in Brookfield, he removed to a small farm in West Brookfield, where he died about 1815, leaving grandchildren, who are still living in North and East Brookfield and in Ashfield, Mass.

His son Nathaniel, at sixteen years of age, was quartermaster's-sergeant in the American army at Providence, R.I., in 1777, and served until the close of the war. In 1782, Nathaniel married Mercy, daughter of Jonathan Jenks of Providence, and grand-daughter of Rev. Samuel Winsor, whose father, another Rev. Samuel Winsor, married Mercy, daughter of Roger Williams of Rhode Island. The children of Nathaniel and Mercy Waite, born in North Brookfield, were : Sally, who died unmarried in 1861, aged 76 years ; Mercy, who died unmarried in 1877, aged 85 years ; and Otis, a soldier in the war of 1812, died in 1869, aged 80 years.

JOSEPH WAITE, the second of the seven brothers, entered the provincial army in May, 1754, at the age of twenty-one years, under Capt. Eleazer Melvin, for the defence of the Eastern frontiers. The following December he was corporal in Lieut. John Burk's company of Rangers in the Crown Point expedition stationed at Falltown in the line of forts commanded by Colonel Israel Williams until the fall of 1755, when this company were in camp at Lake George in Colonel Seth Pomeroy's regiment, and in December returned to Falltown, where they remained until February, 1756, when Waite was appointed ensign and John Burk captain in Colonel Joseph Dwight's regiment, with headquarters at Forts Edward and William Henry, the rest of the year. Among his associates were Robert Rogers, Israel Putnam and John Stark. In January, 1757, he was transferred to the corps of Rangers commanded by Rogers, whose instructions from the Commander-in-Chief were to enlist none in the corps but such as were "accustomed to travelling and scouting, and in whose courage and fidelity the most implicit confidence could be placed." In April, the Rangers were ordered to New York, and on the 20th of June they sailed for Halifax, where the English army made preparations to attack Louisburg ; but the arrival of a French fleet arrested their progress, and in July the Rangers returned to the Western frontiers. Rogers's Journal, published in London in 1765, is, perhaps, the only account of the expeditions and services of this corps of men, which, during the long and bloody wars of Great Britain and France for the mastery in America, constituted the right arm of the British forces. The disasters of the unfortunate Braddock, and his total defeat on the Monongahela, convinced the British generals of their utter inability to operate in America without the aid of a strong corps of Rangers composed of the natives of the country, whose knowledge of Indian warfare would enable them to prevent a similar surprise and overthrow. A commission was accordingly issued to Rogers to enlist and discipline the corps. The Rangers were raised in New England, were regularly paid by the Crown, and officered by the most hardy, intelligent and enterprising partisans of that day, many of whom were afterwards distinguished in the Revolutionary war. They were picked men, of extraordinary bodily powers, combined with mental energies the most acute, and were trained in a discipline of their own. Their services were attended by difficulties and hardships and beset with dangers, in which men of ordinary stamina would never think of engaging. Their chief theatre of action was the mountainous region of Lake George, between the hostile forts of Ticonderoga and Edward, which was the scene of ceaseless ambuscades, surprises and fierce conflicts, and at this day, on the field of many a forgotten fight, are dug up rusty tomahawks, corroded bullets and human bones, to attest the struggles of the past. In summer, the Rangers passed down the lake in whale-boats or canoes, or threaded the trackless depths of the forest with undeviating foot, guiding their course by the stars, the wind, the streams or the trees: reading the signs of the forest as the scholar reads the printed page. In winter they journeyed through the swamps on snowshoes, skated along the frozen surface of the lake and bivouacked at night among the snow-drifts, with no other food than the game they had killed on the march. They intercepted French messengers, encountered scouting parties of French and Indians, and carried off prisoners from under the very walls of Ticonderoga. As marksmen none surpassed them, and with a sensitiveness to sound approximating to that of instinct, they could detect the sly approach of the foe, or could mark, with an accuracy, almost beyond belief, the place of his concealment. They were an equal match for the resolute Indian, whose birthright was an habituation to daring deeds and wasting fatigue. They were, in fact, the most formidable body of men ever employed as partisans in the wars of this country, and in every regular engagement proved themselves not inferior to British troops. Their hardships and adventures, their marches and counter-marches, their frequent skirmishes and mid-winter battles, had made them famous throughout America; and though it was the fashion of the day to sneer at the efforts of provincial troops, the name of "Rogers's Rangers" was never mentioned but with honor. The description and character of the Scout in Cooper's tale of "The Last of the Mohicans," is not inapplicable to one of them. In March, 1758, Rogers was sent from Fort Edward with 180 men, including Ensign Joseph Waite, to reconnoitre in the neighborhood of Ticonderoga. A deserter from the army having informed the enemy of this scout, the Rangers were attacked on the 13th by six hundred Indians and one hundred French, who killed fifty of them at the first fire; but the remainder fought with such "intrepidity and bravery," as to oblige the enemy, nearly seven to one in number, to retreat, until, after a constant firing for one hour and a half, during which one hundred and eight of the Rangers were killed, the balance were so hard pushed by overwhelming numbers of Indians, that they were obliged to break and save themselves the best way they could. One company of nineteen men, being surrounded by three hundred Indians, under the strongest assurances of good treatment, capitulated, when most of them were "inhumanly tied to trees and hewn to pieces in a barbarous and shocking manner." The snow was four feet deep, and Rogers, with some of his men, eluded pursuit, until they came to the summit of a mountain four hundred feet high, one-half of the height of one side being a smooth, steep rock, terminating in Lake George. Descending to the top of the rock, they slipped off their snow-shoes, and, without moving them, turned themselves about and put them on again; and retreating along the brow of the precipice and down a ravine, appeared upon the frozen lake below. The Indians soon coming to the spot, and seeing the tracks all apparently approaching the rock, concluded they had cast themselves down the precipice; but when they saw the bold Rangers making their way across the ice, they believed they had slid down the steep face of the rock; and, considering them under the special protection of the Great Spirit, gave over the chase. The rock is still shown to travellers as "Rogers's Slide."

On the 5th of July the Rangers formed the advanced guard of General Abercrombie's army of sixteen thousand men in the march against Ticonderoga, and beginning the attack upon the outer breastwork, were followed by the regulars and the provincial regiments, who, after toiling with repeated attacks for four hours under a galling fire, being greatly embarrassed by trees felled by the enemy with the branches outward, were ordered to retreat, the Rangers bringing up the rear, in the dusk of the evening. In this engagement the English lost 1,944 men in killed and wounded. Among the former was Lord Howe, the idol of the army, whose adventurous spirit led him, on more than one occasion, to accompany the Rangers on their scouting expeditions. On the 8th of August, Rogers and Putnam, with 530 men, met about the same number of the enemy under the French partisan Molang, and in the terrible encounter that followed, thirty-three of the Rangers were killed and taken prisoners — among the latter was Major Putnam — while 249 of the enemy were killed on the spot. On the 3d of March, 1759, the Rangers marched through the deep snow towards Ticonderoga; on the 7th, travelling over fifty miles on snow-shoes and engaging in two skirmishes. The cold became so intense, that two-thirds of the detachment were frost-bitten, and some of them were frozen so badly, that the rest were obliged to carry them on their backs. On the 21st of July, General Amherst, with the army, embarked on the lake to attack Ticonderoga and Crown Point. The Rangers were the advance-guard, as usual, and were continually ordered by General Amherst from one place to another to reconnoitre and begin the attack. The 11th of August the enemy evacuated their forts and retreated towards Canada.

On the 13th of September General Amherst, at Crown Point, detached Rogers, with two hundred Rangers selected for their bravery and experience, to chastise the St. Francis Indians at their headquarters near Three Rivers in Canada, who, for half a century, had perpetrated their barbarities upon the settlers on the frontiers — their hatred of the English being fostered by the French, who offered bounties for prisoners and scalps. This famous expedition of the Rangers was one of those strikingly perilous incidents of border warfare — a small body of men marching four hundred miles into an enemy's country — that forcibly illustrates the adage that "truth is stranger than fiction." On the morning of the 13th, the Rangers, including Joseph Waite, started out with the utmost secrecy as to their destination, passing down the lake undiscovered by the enemy, who were cruising about in great numbers. The tenth day out they landed with their force reduced to one hundred and forty-two men, by the accidental discharge of a keg of gunpowder, which disabled several, who were taken back to Crown Point. Leaving two men with the boats containing provisions for their return, they struck boldly into the wilderness. On the second day they were overtaken by the guard left in charge of the boats with the disheartening intelligence that a party of about four hundred of the enemy had discovered their boats, and half the number were pursuing them, which, being in the enemy's country, afforded little hope of escape. Their retreat by the boats having been cut off, they determined to outmarch their pursuers, destroy the village and attempt retreat by the way of Charlestown, N.H.; and Rogers accordingly despatched a messenger to General Amherst to have provisions at Coos, on the Connecticut river, about sixty miles above Charlestown, then the most northern English settlement, in case they ever lived to get there. For nine days they marched through wet, sunken bogs, the water most of the way a foot deep, encamping at night on hammocks made of boughs to keep them from the water. On the evening of the twenty-second day from Crown Point, they came in sight of the principal village of the tribe. Reconnoitring the place, they found the Indians engaged in a high frolic or dance, which was continued until 3 o'clock in the morning. Near the break of day, a general assault was made — so sudden, that the Indians had no time to rally or escape. The orders of General Amherst were, to “take revenge on the dastardly scoundrels for their barbarities and infamous cruelties.” As the morning light increased, the fierce wrath of the Rangers was inflamed to the highest degree when they saw English scalps of both sexes, to the number of six hundred, suspended on poles and dangling in the air. Under this new force and irritation of their feelings and passions, they put forth their utmost exertions to avenge the blood of their friends and relatives, by utterly destroying the village and all they could find of its inhabitants. The village contained about three hundred Indians. Twenty women and children were taken prisoners, fifteen of whom were released, and over two hundred warriors were killed. The loss of the Rangers was one killed and seven wounded. At seven o'clock in the morning the affair was finished, which carried consternation and alarm into the heart of Canada and convinced the Indians that the “retaliation of vengeance” was upon them. After refreshing themselves for an hour, the Rangers immediately commenced their retreat, with such provisions as they could easily transport, and with the addition of five English captives they had retaken. Their pursuers pressing them in the rear and killing several of their number, they formed an ambuscade upon their own track in the dusk of the evening and fell upon the enemy when least expected, thus putting an end to further pursuit. For ten days the detachment kept together, marching over steep, rocky mountains and through wet, dirty swamps, till they had passed the eastern side of Lake Memphremagog, when their sufferings began to be severe — not only from the excessive fatigues they had endured, but from hunger. Their provisions failing, they were divided into small parties the better to obtain game, and were to meet at Coos. It is hardly possible to describe their consternation, upon arriving at Coos, to find that the party intrusted with provisions had been at the place; but seeing nothing of the Rangers, and hearing guns fired, were frightened and hastily departed a few hours before their arrival. Discovering the fires of their retreating comrades, and that no provisions had been left, they were so disheartened that several of them died before the next day. Rogers gave up the command and told his men to take care of themselves. Ground and beech nuts were the only sustenance to be procured in the dreary forests, and to such extremities were they reduced, that they boiled their powder-horns, ball-pouches and other leathern accoutrements. Several perished in the woods of despair, hunger and exhaustion, and the total loss in this retreat amounted to forty-nine men. The skeletons of some of these unfortunate Rangers were found years afterwards.

Joseph Waite, leading one of these companies in their retreat, came upon the northern branch or the principal river of what is now Bradford, Vt., and in a famishing state they followed down this river in search of game. Just as they entered the present site of Bradford, Waite and one or two others proposed to go in advance of the rest and see if they could find something to satisfy their hunger. After travelling two or three miles, they shot a deer, and when they had satisfied their appetites, they hung the rest of the savory meat upon a tree for the relief of their suffering companions in the rear; and that they might know who killed the deer, and for what purpose the meat was there suspended, Waite cut his name in the bark of the tree on which the meat hung. When the rear came up and found the rich supply of food in readiness for them, they expressed their gratitude to Waite by giving his name to the stream they were then upon, which is still called Waite's River. After almost incredible hardships, they reached Charlestown, and refreshing themselves, marched to Crown Point, where they arrived Dec. 1st, 1759, and joined the army quartered there for the winter under General Amherst, who recognized the services of Joseph Waite by honoring him with a captain's commission. The Governor of Canada having capitulated, General Amherst, at Montreal, on the 12th Sept., 1760, instructed "Major Rogers, commanding His Majesty's Independent corps of Rangers," with "Captain Waite's and Captain Hazen's companies" under his command, to ascend the lakes and take possession of Detroit and other western outposts included in the capitulation.

The country through which they were to pass was in possession of powerful savage tribes, then in their full strength, and whose intimate connection with the French afforded them every inducement to hate the English and attempt their destruction. They left Montreal on the 13th, two hundred men in fifteen whaleboats. Stemming the surges of La Chine and the Cedars, they gained Lake Ontario, skirted its northern shore amid rough and boisterous weather, and crossing its western extremity, reached Fort Niagara on the 1st October. Carrying their boats over the portage, they launched them above the cataract, and slowly pursued their voyage. Four hundred Indian warriors were in ambush near Detroit, waiting to attack the Rangers, but were influenced by the renowned chieftain, Pontiac, to abandon their design. In December, Detroit and the surrounding forts were taken possession of and the garrisons were marched to Philadelphia.

The Rangers returned to New York in March, 1761, where they were disbanded. The war being ended, and the colonies no longer fearing the incursions of French and Indians upon the frontier towns, the spirit of emigration from the older settlements revived and surpassed all before witnessed. The continued passing of the Massachusetts troops over the highlands of Vermont and down the Connecticut river valleys during the war, caused the value of the lands to become generally known. Joseph Waite received several grants, and also made purchases of large tracts of these lands, and was active in inducing settlers to locate on them, personally conducting some emigrations from Massachusetts by way of Springfield and up the Connecticut river.

In Springfield is still standing a monument erected by him in 1763 as a guide to travellers, which is described and illustrated in 'Frank Leslie's Illustrated Paper,' Jan. 2, 1875. It is of red sandstone, about six feet high, two feet broad and one foot thick, and on it are masonic emblems, the Latin motto, "Virtus est sua merces," and another, now illegible, though the first word, "Pulsanti" is still clear. Beneath is this inscription, "'Boston Road.' This stone is erected by Joseph Waite, Esq., of Brookfield. For the benefit of Travelers. A.D. 1763."

The Masonic fraternity of Springfield have appointed a committee to take measures for the preservation of this venerable land-mark.

Captain Waite held several important town offices in Brookfield, where he was highly respected for his indomitable energy and uprightness of character. In 1762 he married a sister of Colonel Nathan Stone of Shrewsbury, Mass., who, with his father Zedekiah and brothers David and Samuel, were prominent in the French war. In 1767 they were all living in Windsor, Vt., which had been chartered to them the previous year, and where, by their exertions and enterprise, they increased the wealth and prosperity of the place, and rendered it. at an early period, one of the most flourishing and popular villages in the "New Hampshire Grants," as Vermont was then called.

About 1768, the settlers of Vermont were placed in a peculiarly aggravating situation. They had derived the titles to their lands from the royal governor of New Hampshire. A claim to this territory, however, was soon set up by the government of New York, and certain statesmen of the latter province corruptly combining with influential land speculators, procured, by their intrigues at the British court, a decree establishing Connecticut river as the boundary line between the two belligerent provinces, and thus throwing the whole disputed territory within the jurisdiction of New York. But when, by one of the most bold and singular perversions of law and justice to be found on record, the tribunals of New York decided this decree to have a retrospective operation, so as to involve the titles of the lands as well as the jurisdiction of the territory, the voice of the indignant settlers unitedly rose in loud and determined remonstrances; for this decision, of itself a legal paradox, destroying the right of property already granted by the Crown — the same source of power by which it was now proposed a new right should be established — subjected them to the exasperating alternative of either relinquishing their farms which they had once honestly purchased and paid for, with all the improvements that had cost them so much labor and privation, or of purchasing and paying for them again on such terms as those who claimed to be their new masters might choose to exact. After vainly exhausting every argument in petition and remonstrance to the governor and his council, and as vainly attempting to defend a few of the first suits brought for the possession of their farms before this obsequious tribunal, they paid no further attention to the summonses to quit which now poured thickly upon them; but they soon found their settlements invaded by their cornorant foes, attended by sheriffs, each with a large armed posse for a forcible ejection of the inhabitants, and surveyors with their assistants for laying-out and locating the territory. Having thus found that peaceable measures were wholly unavailing, the now-aroused and determined settlers unanimously resolved on resistance, and immediately placed themselves in an attitude to carry their resolution into effect.

This controversy called into existence an effective military organization, known by the name of the Green Mountain Boys; and although the shedding of blood was generally avoided by them in repelling these intruders upon their soil, yet punishment of some kind was sure, on the commission of every offence, to be promptly administered. The most common mode consisted in the application of the beech rod or beech seal, in allusion to the emblem of the great seal of New Hampshire. In this spirited manner was the contest commenced and continued by the settlers; and although armed forces were several times sent into the Grants to aid the authorities in ejecting the inhabitants, and although all the leaders of the latter were indicted and outlawed as felons by the courts of New York, and proclamation after proclamation issued by the governor of that province, offering large rewards for the delivery of those marked for the punishment of death, and teeming with denunciations against all those who should offer further resistance, yet so united were the people, and so determined the character of their opposition, that their baffled antagonists were never able to accomplish but the most insignificant results for their years of labor in endeavoring to obtain a foothold in the territory of Vermont. Most of the inhabitants of Windsor adhered to the jurisdiction of New Hampshire, denying the authority of the courts established by New York, and were ever ready to resist the execution of writs issuing there from. In May, 1770, Daniel Whipple, the High Sheriff of the county, under a New York commission, in order to retake Joseph and Benjamin Waite and Nathan and Samuel Stone of Windsor, who having been arrested by him a short time previously on a precept from the court, had been rescued by a number of armed men, collected a posse of a dozen or fifteen persons and with them repaired to the house of Joseph Waite in order to arrest him, but were met by a party led by the latter, and were overpowered and retained as prisoners several hours. On the 5th of June, Colonel Stone, Joseph Waite and others, appeared at the court in Chester and denied the authority of New York to establish the county of Cumberland.

Most graphic descriptions of actual characters and incidents connected with the early settlement of Vermont, are given in the entertaining, historical tales, entitled "The Green Mountain Boys" and "The Rangers," by Hon. Daniel P. Thompson. The Green Mountain Boys were formed into a regiment as early as 1771. Their colonel and leader was Ethan Allen. Among the captains were Seth Warner, Remember Baker, Robert Cochrane and Joseph Waite. The latter removed from Windsor about 1773 and settled in the adjoining town of Claremont, N.H. He was with Ethan Allen in the memorable capture of Ticonderoga, in May 1775, and served in Canada during part of the following campaign. He was a member of the House of Representatives of New Hampshire in December 1775 and January 1776, and was on several committees of the House. In the latter month, the Continental Congress resolved: "That to make up the battalions voted for the defence of Canada, one battalion be immediately raised in New Hampshire, one in Connecticut and one in New York." In accordance with this resolve, the General Assembly of New Hampshire voted "to raise one regiment of soldiers forthwith, to consist of eight companies; and that Joseph Waite, Esq., be colonel of said regiment." But Colonel Timothy Bedel, a senior officer, having just returned from Canada, this regiment was placed under his command, with Joseph Waite as Lieut.-Colonel. General Arnold ordered Colonel Bedel, with a portion of the regiment, to Cedar Rapids, above Montreal, in April, where they were besieged by the enemy; and on the 15th of May, in the absence of Colonel Bedel, they were ingloriously surrendered by the officer left in command. Colonel Waite, with the balance of the regiment, participated in the unsuccessful attack upon Three Rivers, which was followed by other reverses, and by the disastrous retreat of the entire army under Generals Sullivan and Arnold in June, decimated by death and worn-out by sickness and disease.

On their arrival at Crown Point on the 3d of July, two thousand eight hundred out of five thousand two hundred were taken to the hospitals. Col. Waite, at his own request, was immediately ordered by General Sullivan to Onion River with two hundred men to guard the frontiers until Colonel Seth Warner arrived there with his Green Mountain Boys, when Colonel Waite joined the army at Ticonderoga. In September, his command moved down Lake Champlain and landed on Rangers' Island, off Isle la Motte, as the advance guard of Arnold's fleet. In a severe skirmish a few days before the naval battle of "Valcour," Colonel Waite was wounded in the head by a splinter from a gun carriage and died on his way home in Clarendon, Vt., where a monument still stands, on which is the following inscription: "To perpetuate the memory of Lieut-Colonel Joseph Waite, an officer in the American Revolutionary War, who died on his return from an expedition into Canada, September 28th, 1776; this stone is erected in testimony of respect by his brethren in arms." On the monument is a figure of an officer in full uniform with a raised sword, and beneath it this inscription: "Our common country claims our aid. Living or dying I will defend her."

His character as a private citizen was unblemished, and he was ever held in respect as a courageous and heroic soldier. He has a grandson now living in Chicago, Ill.

Of THOMAS WAITE, the third of the brothers, but little is known. In May, 1754, he entered the army in the same company with his brother Joseph, and doubtless continued through the "seven years war." He also removed to Windsor, Vt. Was a patriot in the Revolution; among the Rangers in the battle of Bennington, and was killed in battle the following year.

BENJAMIN WAITE, the fourth of the brothers, at eighteen years of age enlisted in the French war in 1755, as a private in one of the provincial regiments. Though still a boy he was tall and large for his age, and as he was known to be a keen and successful hunter he was transferred to Rogers' Corps of Rangers, where his hardihood, skill and daring soon caused him to be included among those selected for the most hazardous undertakings of that famous corps. In 1756 he was captured by the French, taken to Quebec and sent with other prisoners to France, where, before landing, they were re-taken by an English man-of-war and carried to England, from whence they soon returned to America, and Waite enlisted again under Major Rogers, in the same company with his brother Joseph, and distinguished himself in many desperate encounters with the enemy. In 1757 he was taken prisoner by a scouting party of Indians and carried to their village of St. Francis, in Canada, where he was compelled, with two other prisoners, to undergo the ceremony of "running the gauntlet," which was to pass through two lines of the young warriors of the tribe, armed with clubs, and when highly exasperated, with deadly weapons, to strike the prisoners as they passed. The captive was frequently killed before he reached the council-house, at which the two lines of Indians terminated. Waite's companions were severely whipped as they passed through the lines, but he, more athletic and adroit and better comprehending the Indian character, snatched a gun from the nearest Indian and laid about him to the right and left, scattering the Indians before him, and escaped with hardly a blow, greatly to the delight of the old men of the tribe, who sat at some distance witnessing the scene and enjoying the confusion of their young warriors. As he arrived at the end of the race a French woman appeared at the door of a house near by, and beckoning with her hand said: "Venez ici, Anglais, venez ici" (come here, Englishman, come here). He placed himself under her protection and was well treated during his captivity, which lasted about three months, when he managed to escape with his companions, and arrived at the English lines in a starving condition. He was with General Amherst in 1758, at the capture of Louisburg, and had command of troops crossing the St. Lawrence River in bateaux, under fire of the enemy. Some of the men faltered and lay down in the boat to screen themselves from the leaden hail falling thick and fast. He abruptly told them they could follow his example and stand up and work or take the river and "paddle their own canoe." They chose the former and behaved gallantly. He was with Rogers in the celebrated expedition against the St. Francis Indians in September, 1759, that broke the power of the tribe, and was among those sent to Detroit in September, 1760, from whence he was detached with Lieutenant Butler and twenty men to bring in the French garrisons of the forts in Illinois, which difficult service he performed successfully in a winter's march through the storms and gathering ice of the lakes and streams. In describing this march, he said the men would become so benumbed with cold and disheartened that they would beg of him to shoot them, but instead of doing so he would make them angry and willing to resume their march by switching them, and arriving at streams that were fordable he considered it a light task to shoulder a couple of the "little fellows" and carry them across. Before he was twenty-four years of age he had been engaged in over forty battles and skirmishes, and although his clothes were several times perforated by musket balls, yet he never received a serious wound. In 1767 he married a daughter of Captain Thomas Gilbert of Brookfield and removed with his brother Joseph to Windsor, Vt. In 1769 he was employed by Benjamin Whiting of Newburg, one of the Deputy-Surveyors-General of New York, to arrest depredators upon the "King's timber." In 1770, and afterwards, he identified himself decidedly and conspicuously with the Green Mountain Boys in their opposition to New York. He was the sole delegate from Windsor in the Whig Convention of the county of Cumberland, assembled at Westminster, 7th February, 1775, when he was chosen one of the Standing Committee "to keep the county well informed as to the doings of the friends of liberty in the different colonies." In May, 1775, he joined the expedition under Ethan Allen and Seth Warner for the capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Although an avowed opponent of New York in the pending controversy about jurisdiction and land titles, yet, as there was no legally organized government in the "Grants," he united, in June, 1775, with Major William Williams and Major Joab Hoisington, in a letter to the New York authorities, which is characteristic both of their patriotism and stern Puritanic religious principles. In it they urged the raising of a regiment of "good, active, enterprising soldiers," in order "to keep under proper subjection, regulars, Roman Catholics and the savages at the northward," and to defend their own rights and privileges "against ministerial tyranny and oppression." August 14th of the same year he signed a list of the officers of the upper regiment of militia in Cumberland county, chosen by their respective companies, as Benjamin Waite, Major; but the New York Provincial Congress refused to confirm the nomination on account of his opposition to their authority over the New Hampshire Grants. On the 10th of October, 1776, he was commissioned captain of one of the ranging companies established under Major Hoisington to protect the northern frontiers and guard the Crown Point road between Connecticut river and Canada, with headquarters at Newbury, Vt.

Upon the death of Major Hoisington early in the following year, he succeeded to the command of the battalion. He was a member of the conventions assembled at Westminster and Windsor that gave the name of Vermont to the New Hampshire Grants, declared the State independent, and formed the State Constitution. While the latter convention was in session, July 6th, 1777, the alarming news was brought to them that Ticonderoga, the supposed impregnable barrier of frontier defence, had fallen, and the scattered American troops were flying in every direction before a formidable British army that was sweeping, unopposed, along the western border of the State, attended by a horde of merciless savages. Major Waite immediately joined his command and they opposed the progress of the enemy by incessant attacks upon their flanks, felling trees across their pathway and destroying bridges.

When the new Vermont Council, with no money in the treasury, voted to raise a regiment of State Rangers and arm and equip them from the proceeds of the confiscation and sale of Tory estates, this battalion, with their leader, left the service of the New York province and enlisted in a body under Lieut.-Colonel Samuel Herrick, and on the 16th of August "led the attack on the rear of Baum's right," in the battle of Bennington, where by their "quick and deadly fire," they "piled the ground with the British slain," and driving the Indians in terror from the field, charged with the other troops up to the cannon's mouth, and mounting the earthworks with irresistible force, swept everything before them. On Sept. 3, Waite was commissioned major by the Vermont Council, and on the 24th of the same month he was sent, with Colonel Brown and five hundred men, to the landing at Lake George, more than forty miles in the rear of the British army, to cut off the enemy's communication with Canada.

Colonel Brown's troops gained command of the lake by capturing two hundred bateaux, an armed sloop and several gun-boats, while Major Waite with his men, including Captain Ebenezer Allen's company, surprised and took possession of Mounts Defiance and Hope — both parties capturing 293 prisoners and releasing American prisoners from confinement. What was left of the grand expedition under Burgoyne, that had in great power and splendor ascended Lake Champlain, were ordered to abandon their posts, and Ticonderoga was evacuated.

Major Waite's command pursued the retreating garrison, overtook them at Gilliland's creek, and captured their rear-guard, with horses and baggage. The quickness and secrecy with which these Rangers moved from place to place, their sudden and mysterious attacks, and the deadly execution of their rifles, unnerved the British troops whenever they were supposed to be near, and caused them to be known, in English prints, as "White Indians." This incessant and harassing warfare drew forth from the despairing Burgoyne his best apology for his final defeat and surrender, viz: "The Hampshire Grants — a country unpeopled and almost unknown in the last war — now abounds in the most active and the most rebellious race of men on the Continent, and hangs like a gathering storm on my left."

The Vermont Council, in a letter to Colonel Herrick, November 21st, 1777, dismissing his regiment from further service, expressed much pleasure at the "spirited conduct of Major Wait and Captain Allen in their late expedition," who were also highly complimented by General Gates.

The surrender of Burgoyne terminated the campaign in the northern department, and Vermont was not the scene of any important military movement during the remainder of the war.

On the 10th of February, 1778, Major Waite was authorized by the Council of Safety to co-operate with Colonel Herrick in raising three hundred men for an intended expedition into Canada, under General Lafayette, and of this force he was appointed major; but the project was given up for want of the necessary number of men from other parts of the country. On 23rd October, 1776, the General Assembly of Vermont resolved that North and South Hero, in Grand Isle county, should be chartered unto Ethan Allen, Samuel Herrick, Benjamin Waite, Jonas Fay and their associates, for the sum of 10,000 pounds. The Heros were so named, because it was meant to have no other grantees than such as were brave and felt warmly disposed toward the revolution; and on the 27th of the same month, the Legislature granted to Governor Thomas Chittenden, Benjamin Waite, Samuel Herrick, Ebenezer Allen, and their associates, the "Isle of Motte."

Major Waite was appointed High Sheriff of Windsor County, October 23d, 1779, which office he held for seven years, with the exception of a brief period, when he resigned the office for other service. In 1781, having been appointed colonel, he built a fort in Corinth, Vt., at which a constant garrison was maintained, and from which scouts traversed the country to the northward.

He was one of seven elected a Board of War, 1778-84. On Oct. 22, 1783, he headed a military force to assist the civil authority in suppressing an insurrection in the county of Windham, and on January 19th, 1780, his regiment of State troops marched against the "Yorkers" disturbers of the peace.

As high sheriff, and also colonel of the third regiment of Vermont militia, he was called upon, on the 16th of November, 1786, during the "Shays' rebellion," to aid the civil authority against an armed mob who demanded certain legislation, and with forty men left Windsor for the encampment of the insurgents, where, after a march of five miles, they arrived between three and four o'clock in the morning, and finding over fifty insurgents assembled under arms, the militia, after a short but "very resolute" attack, captured twenty-seven of them. So expeditiously was the service performed, that the culprits were lodged in Windsor jail before sunrise.

Several of the sheriff's party were wounded, among them Stephen Jacobs, the State's attorney, and Colonel Waite himself was badly wounded in the head. He used to lament over this affair, saying it was too bad to go through an eight years' war without receiving a scratch, and then to be nearly killed in the discharge of his duty by some of his old fellow-soldiers.

On March 1st, 1787, he was chosen brigadier-general of the third brigade of Vermont militia, which office he resigned August 24th, 1788; but his resignation was not accepted, and he was appointed Major-General, the highest military title that could be conferred.

The record of his military achievements is far from complete. He was looked upon by the Vermonters as a man of great energy, firmness, intrepidity and perseverance in the accomplishment of his plans, and a perfectly fearless enemy of every species of injustice and oppression. He transfused into each soldier enough of his own untiring activity to more than double their ordinary military value.

He was nearly six feet in height, well-proportioned, of remarkable bodily strength, and his whole appearance was dignified and commanding.

At the beginning of the revolution, he converted his property into gold, and loaned the government $4,000, which was repaid in Continental money, so nearly worthless that at one time he gave $1,200 of it to a pedler for half a pound of tea and a quarter pound of indigo.

The township of Waitsfield, near Montpelier, was chartered to Benjamin Waite, Roger Enos and others, February 25th, 1782, and General Waite removed from Windsor and was the first settler there in 1789. He was the first representative chosen in 1795, and was re-elected until 1802. He was truly the father of the town, which became the last and best fruits of his life in the intelligence, piety and thrift of its people, and where he was held in the greatest respect.

He was one of those worthy fathers of Vermont whose sterling virtues, wisdom and indomitable courage carved out and shaped the destiny of that State amid scenes of convulsion at home and abroad. He died in Waitsfield, June 28th, 1822, aged 86 years, leaving numerous descendants.

RICHARD WAITE, the fifth of the brothers, at seventeen years of age, enlisted in the provincial army in March, 1762, in Captain Thomas Cowden's company, with the consent of his guardian, the Hon. Jedediah Foster. In December, 1770, he married Susanna Allen and removed to Windsor, Vt., where he was one of the founders of the first church in 1778, was chosen Deacon in 1781, and was a man of much influence, his name appearing in nearly every page of the records. Like his brothers Joseph and Benjamin, he was an active "Green Mountain Boy." He was with his brother Benjamin during the Revolution, and was captain of a company of Rangers in Herrick's famous regiment in the battle of Bennington. After the war he passed the remainder of his life in Windsor, where he enjoyed the confidence and respect of his fellow-citizens, both in the civil and military capacity, and died in March, 1823. His grandchildren are now living in Windsor and in New York State.

JEDUTHAN and WILLIAM WAITE, the youngest of the seven brothers, upon the "Lexington alarm," in April, 1775, marched to Roxbury, near Boston, under Captain Peter Harwood, where they were in camp in Colonel Ebenezer Learned's regiment during the rest of the year. The tradition is, that they were in the battle of Bunker Hill. The following years they were both in Captain Toogood's and Captain Heywood's companies, in Colonel Thomas Nixon's Worcester County regiment, encamped about New York City, and were in the numerous battles and skirmishes from Harlem Heights to Saratoga.

In February, 1780, William was transferred to Colonel Jeduthan Baldwin's regiment of artificers; and in September, 1781, Jeduthan was transferred to the "Light Infantry," where they served until 1785. It has been stated that William's left arm was taken off by a cannon-ball in one of the battles; but two of Jeduthan's sons, now living, say that it was blown off in firing salutes at a 4th of July celebration.

They removed from Brookfield about 1790, to Waitsfield, Vt., where Jeduthan died about 1830, leaving a large family; and William died in 1843, unmarried.

Thus this family of patriot farmers did what they considered to be their duty in their day and generation; and of such Daniel Webster says: "Nobler records of patriotism exist nowhere. Nowhere can there be found higher proofs of a spirit that was ready to hazard all, to pledge all, to sacrifice all, in the cause of their country, than in the New England towns."

LAND GRANTS.

THE foregoing Map is compiled from the old Brookfield "Town Book of Records of Lands," with some help from various local maps, and a careful exploration of the ground, for the purpose of identifying such natural objects as are unchangeable. In addition, all the original deeds and later transfers, now on record in the Hampden and Worcester County Registries, have been examined, and are relied on for the settlement of many doubtful and disputed points.

The earliest recorded grants of these lots date in 1687; and the grants continued from time to time till 1720-21, when most of the remaining lands were apportioned to the inhabitants. [See ante, pp. 136-9, 197-8.] But the description of these granted lots is very imperfect, the bounds usually running from one marked tree or heap of stones to another, without magnetic bearings, and often without distances. The first actual survey, with use of compass, appears to have been made about 1767, by Rufus Putnam; and his minutes have aided materially in determining the lengths of lines and quantity of angles; and the deeds based on these surveys often give more or less in detail former ownerships. Some small grants of a few acres each, do not appear on the Plan, as they were made to or bought by adjacent owners. The meadows on the brooks were among the earliest grants, and often in small quantities, and little attempt has been made to mark such boundaries.

The roads are seen to be very numerous and very crooked. The rule followed appears to have been, to give every settler who would build a house "a way to get to mill and meeting."

The working out of the problem has been difficult and perplexing and expensive; but the result herewith presented, claims to be in the main accurate as to most of the grants, and a near approximation to accuracy in the remainder.

As will be seen, the earliest grants in Brookfield township, made at the Re-Settlement of the place in 1686, lie within the limits of North Brookfield.

INDEX AND EXPLANATIONS OF THE MAP. — For the sake of convenience of reference, the numbering of lots begins at the upper left-hand corner, and follows the method of the printed page, instead of beginning with the earliest grants and following a chronological order. The latter system might perhaps be more logical; but it would complicate the arrangement, without a corresponding advantage.

NO. 1. — SAMUEL OWEN.

Granted 1721; owned 1758 by James Wood.

NO. 2. — WILLIAM AYRES.

Granted 1756.

NO. 3. — HEIRS OF MATTHEW SCALES.

This, and part of No. 14, granted 1748; sold 1749 to William Ayres.

NO. 4. — WILLIAM AYRES.

Granted 1748. See No. 5.

NO. 5. — JOSEPH JENNINGS.

Granted 1722; sold, with No. 4, 1749, to Daniel Matthews, jr., who first built and lived here.

NO. 6. — SAMUEL OWEN.

Granted 1721; sold 1722 to Ebenezer Marsh.

NOS. 7 AND 15. — THOMAS RICH.

Granted 1721; sold to Samuel Ware, who probably built the first house; sold 1746 to Jedediah How.

NO. 8. — WILLIAM AYRES.

Sold to Joseph Ayres.

NO. 9. — JOSEPH AYERS.

Granted 1720 and 1721; a hundred acres of the west part sold to his grandson Benjamin Kimball, who built a house; the remainder sold 1739 to his son William Ayers, who sold, 1762, sixty-five acres to Rufus Putnam, Putnam having already built a house there which stood till 1885.

NO. 10. — TILLEY MIRICK.

Granted 1721; sold 1729 to Henry Lee, who sold same year to Col. Thomas Fitch of Boston, who at his death owned this and Nos. 17, 37, 46 and 57; Col. Fitch's will, probated 1736, makes sons-in-law James Allen and Andrew Oliver, executors. Most of these lots came to William Brattle of Cambridge, by whom they were sold to settlers. They are frequently referred to as "Mr. Allen's land," "Oliver land," "Madame Brattle's land," and "William Brattle's land."

NO. 11. — THOMAS BARNS.

Granted 1721, together with most of No. 19. Parts of these lots were sold 1749 to Nathan Barker; he sold 1759 to Nathaniel Wait, who built the first mills here. In 1766, twelve acres were sold to Francis Stone; and in 1769 Stone had a grant of twenty-three acres marked S.

NO. 12. — JABEZ OLMSTEAD.

NO. 13. — JOSEPH PRICHARD.

Granted 1719 to J. P., son of William Prichard, deceased; sold 1746 to Thomas Hale, who built a house, afterward occupied by him and his descendants.

NO. 14. — See No. 3.

NO. 15. — THOMAS RICH.

Two hundred acres granted 1721; conveyed 1724 for £60 to Samuel Barnard; by him to Samuel Ware; by him 1747 for £712 old tenor, to Jedediah How. Stephen Rice bought Oct. 22, 1765, eighty-six acres with house and barn for £300; sold Feb. 13, 1773, for £346 to Nathan Carruth of Westboro, house wright. See No. 7.

NO. 16. JOSEPH AYRES.

NO. 17. — See No. 10.

NO. 18. — JOHN AYRES.

Granted 1721.

NO. 19. — See No. 11.

NO. 20. — WILLIAM AYRES AND OTHERS.

Granted 1746; this and eight acres granted to John Hamilton, are sold 1748 to Benjamin Batcheller, who is living here 1749; sold 1766 to Samuel Hall of Grafton; sold 1770 to Francis Kidder of Sutton; sold 1773 to Job Simmons, and conveyed by him 1784 to Jonathan Nye, and from him to Ebenezer Nye, and by him to Bonum Nye.

NO. 21. — ARTHUR TUCKER'S CHILDREN.

Granted 1742 to Thomas Tucker, who probably built before 1750. Part of the lot was granted 1757 to Ichabod How, in 1767 to Silas How, in 1754 to Benjamin Adams, and to Thomas Tucker in 1754, 1757, and 1768.

NO. 22. — JAMES AIKENS.

Granted 1717, 1720 and 1721. The north part was sold 1742 to David Kendall, and he sold 1746 with house marked II to Nathan Stevens of Andover, and he to Samuel Hoar. The house marked I, where Aikens probably lived in 1717, and the remainder of the grant was sold 1730 to Gershom Keyes; sold to Thomas Cushing of Boston; sold 1764 to John Witt, who sold 1765 fifty-two acres to Samuel Haskell of Middleboro.

NO. 23 — THOMAS BARNS.

Granted at various dates from 1701 to 1721. On the death of Thomas Barns 1734, Noah Barns took the south part on which he then lived; sold 1737, a hundred and seven acres to Jason Bigelow of Marlboro, who built house II, and the farm is continued in the Bigelow family to the present (1886). John Barns took the part next north, and sold 1778 the west part to Solomon Barns, and 1774 the east part to Jesse Barns. Jabez Olmstead took the part next north, a hundred and forty-one acres, which he sold 1735 to Joseph How, who conveyed 1747 to Joseph Stone, who sold, same year, fifty acres to Peter Lampson of Ipswich, on which Lampson built house III. Stone retained the remainder on which was house IV at Grass hill. The balance of the Thomas Barns grant was taken by Eleazar Warner.

NO. 24. — NOAH BARNS.

Granted 1717 to 1721; sold 1741, fifty-four acres at south end to Thomas Gilbert; sold 1758, twenty-one acres with house to Samuel Hodgman, at Grass hill; sold 1765, twelve acres to Charles Wetherbee.

NO. 25. — ROBERT EMMONS.

Granted 1715 to 1720; sold to Gershom Keyes, and by him 1733 to Anthony Cavelly, distiller of Boston; he sold 1742 to Samuel Wells, he in 1747 to Jacob Caldwell, who sold 1750, fifty-five acres of the south part to Elisha Hastings, and the remainder to Theophilus Potter of Marlboro in 1756. Hastings sold the fifty-five acres in 1753 to Reuben Hamilton for £45.

No. 26. — JOHN HINDS.

Granted 1721; sold 1745 to Seth Hinds, he in 1751 to Joseph Bartlett, who sold Mar. 3, 1761, to Rufus Putnam, millwright, a saw-mill then being on the place, and conveyed the remainder of the farm in 1767 to Zebulon Rice, who sold 1775 to Rufus Putnam.

No. 27. — SETH HINDS.

No. 28. — JACOB CALDWELL.

Granted 1749.

No. 29. — JOHN HAMILTON.

Granted 1738; sold 1739 to Isaac Ball, who sold 1748 lot with house and barn to Ebenezer How; heirs sold 1755 to John Bacon.

No. 30. — JOHN PATTERSON AND WILLIAM HAIR.

Granted 1721; sold 1729 to Samuel Barnard; sold 1734 lot with house I to Samuel Owen; he sold 1739, thirty acres of the east part to his son Samuel, who sold the same in 1744 to Edward Wright, who sold 1747 to William Wright, who had house II. Samuel Owen, Jr., sold the remainder of the lot in 1740 to Jacob Ball of Framingham, who sold next year to his brother Thomas Ball, and the same was sold 1768 to John Bruce of Framingham, then to Charles Bruce, then to Nathan Moore, then to Joseph A. Moore.

Granted 1721; this with No. 90 sold 1744 to Richard Beers, and in 1750 to James Smith.

No. 76.—JOHN PYNCHON, SEN.

“Pynchon’s Farm” is named in the earliest notices of Quabaug, and was granted near the beginning of the First Settlement of the place. A description of the lot is attested as follows: “A True Copy, extracted from the Records for Quabogue, and taken out of that Book where the Grants and Records of Quabogue alias Brookfield lands are entered while said Book was in Mr. Pynchon’s Custody as recorder thereof. This done this 5th day of November, 1674—John Pynchon, Recorder.” The “Farm” comprised 50 acres of upland. The Grant appears to be conveyed in 1742 to Joseph Dwight, and by him sold in 1744 to Elisha Dwight, and called in the deed “Pynchon’s Matchuk Farm.” Elisha Dwight sold 1757 to Daniel Gilbert.

No. 77.—MATCHUK MEADOWS.

The larger part of these meadows were granted—mostly in small lots—to the first settlers, before 1673. The southerly part of this lot came into possession of Joseph Ayres, who built the house before 1720. His gifts and purchases embraced most of the land in town lying south-west of his house. He and his son William, and great-grandson William, held this estate till the death of the latter in 1835.

No. 78.—JOSEPH AYRES.

Granted 1720.

No. 79.—JOHN AYRES (son of Joseph).

Granted 1714 to 1719. This place has always been in possession of the Ayres family, direct descendants of John; and is the only farm in town that has had such continuous ownership in a family.

No. 80.—SAMUEL KING alias RICE.

Granted 1721. Surveyed by John Haynes, and a plan of the same entered on the record, and is the only instance of such record of North Brookfield lands.

No. 81.—JONATHAN NUTTING.

No. 82.—EDWARD AYRES.

Granted 1717; sold 1719 to Benjamin Bartlett; conveyed 1737, together with No. 83, to Joseph Bartlett, in 1750 to John Cutler, in 1752 to Job Lane, and by the executors of Lane in 1758 to Jonas Brewer; now the town farm.

No. 83.—BENJAMIN BARTLETT.

Granted 1720. See No. 82.

NO. 84. — OBADIAH RICE.

NO. 85. — HOPESTILL HINDS.

Granted 1713 and 1720; conveyed 1746 to John Worcester of Boxford; and same year to Deacon Samuel Gould of Boxford; sold 1767 to Nathan Gould; in 1770 by N. G. to Asa Waters of Sutton; in 1772 to Benjamin Babbitt of Middleboro; conveyed to Capt. Caleb Clark in 1777; to John Waite in 1784; to Nathaniel Waite (a hundred acres of it) in 1787, which Waite sells May 14, 1798 for $2,000 to Uriah W. Johnson of Woodstock, Ct.

NO. 86. — EDWARD WALKER.

Granted 1718 to 1721. The east part was conveyed to Levi Walker, the middle to Simeon Walker, and seventy acres of the North-west part to Ebenezer Smith, who conveyed 1762 to Silas How, and he 1764 to Ebenezer Bartlett, who sold sixty acres 1765 to Solomon Goodale, who sold thirty acres of the north side 1767 to Jonathan Bond.

NO. 87. — JOHN PATTERSON AND WILLIAM HAIR.

Granted 1720. This grant seems to have been occupied solely by Hair, on which he settled; the fulling-mill referred to in Chapter I. was near by on Five-mile river. The house II. erected by him was the one tenanted by the step-father of the famous Madame Jumel, when she was in her girlhood. See in Genealogical Register, JUMEL.

NO. 88. — JEREMIAH HOW.

Granted 1721; sold 1747 to Ichabod How.

NO. 89. — HEIRS OF THOMAS BETTIS.

Granted 1721; sold same year to Obadiah Rice.

NO. 90. — JOHN CLARY.

Granted 1701; sold to Ebenezer How. See No. 75.

NO. 91. — THOMAS BETTIS.

Granted 1701; sold 1721 to Obadiah Rice.

NO. 92. — ABRAHAM AYRES.

Granted 1714. Within this grant were fifteen acres of meadow belonging to Sergt. John Ayres, deceased, John Younglove, deceased, and John Warner, deceased. The lot was conveyed 1727 to Gershom Keyes, to Samuel Porter same year, and to William Ayres in 1731. The first schoolhouse in old Brookfield was located in the south-west part of this grant. [See ante, p. 200.]

No. 93. — JOSHUA BARRUS.

Granted 1714; sold 1724 to Joseph Ayres.

No. 94. — JOHN GREEN.

Granted 1702; and he settled on the lot soon after. [See ante, pp. 172-4.]

No. 95. — ROBERT EMMONS.

Granted 1702; sold 1732 to Nathaniel Reed, who sold 1736 to Job Hinckley, "with a house kept as an Inn."

No. 96. — JOSHUA BARRUS AND HENRY DWIGHT.

Granted 1713 and 1718; sold to Ebenezer How of Marlboro, blacksmith, and to Obadiah Rice in 1719, and in 1733 to Hugh Cunningham.

No. 97. — JOHN PARSONS.

Granted 1714; sold to Obadiah Rice, and the west part to Mirick Rice, then in 1772 to James Drake, in 1785 to Abraham Walker, in 1790 to James Smith, then to Jude Ayres, and in 1816 to John Deland.

No. 98. — JOSEPH PERRY AND OTHERS.

Twenty acres of north-east part granted 1710 to Joseph Perry, then known as Smith's meadow, being "about a mile north-east the horse shades." The west part may have been conveyed to Hopestill Hinds.

No. 99. — JONAS HAMILTON.

Granted 1720; sold to John Hamilton, and 1729 to Roger Stevens.

No. 100. — MEADOW LOTS.

Granted to John Woolcott, jr., and others.

No. 101. — JOHN WOOLCOTT, JR.

Granted 1721, being "near the old bridge." This appears to be the lot granted Woolcott "on condition that he doth erect and build a saw mill," which he soon after set up at north-west corner of the lot.

No. 102. — ARTHUR TUCKER AND THOMAS AYRES.

The east part was granted 1714 to Thomas Ayres, and sold 1722 to Jacob Abbott; the west part was granted 1718 to Arthur Tucker.

No. 103. — JOHN HINDS.

Granted 1710; sold 1715 to Thomas Baker; part granted to Baker 1713, sold 1726 to John Green, and thirty acres of north-east part sold to Paul Deland.

NO. 104. — SAMUEL OWEN.

Granted 1710; sold 1720 "with a house" to Thomas Gibbs, who sold 1747 to Francis Dodge of Beverly.

NO. 105. — EDWARD KELLOGG.

Granted 1701; conveyed 1719, together with Nos. 96 and 106, to Ebenezer How; and in 1735 to Josiah Converse of Leicester.

NO. 106. — JOHN CLARY.

Granted 1701, with three acres of meadow at "Tower hill" (the first time that name appears on the records, said meadow being at south-west corner of No. 51); sold 1719 to Ebenezer How, and same year to Obadiah Rice of Marlboro.

NO. 107. — STEPHEN JENNINGS.

The south part granted 1701, and sold to Eli Forbes; the north part granted to Obadiah Rice.

NO. 108. — NATHANIEL WOOLCOTT.

NO. 109. — JOHN WOOLCOTT, JR.

Granted 1687; a grist mill was built on the lot before 1717, and the house now, 1886, standing was built as early as 1723; conveyed 1725, with the new house, to Nathaniel Woolcott "to have the same after my decease and not before." Nathaniel conveys the same by will, probated 1771, to son-in-law John Waite; who conveys 1800 to Nathaniel Waite, and next year John and Nathaniel quit-claim to Aaron Forbes, who conveys 1808 to Jonathan Parks.

NO. 110. — JOHN PERRY.

Granted 1701, and built upon the same year. This lot was conveyed to John Hamilton, and by him, together with No. 111, was sold 1729 to Roger Stevens, in 1734 to Thomas Stevens, in 1743 to Jacob Stevens, and same year to Job Hinckley, who by will gave it to his son David; sold 1754 to John Hamilton, 1760 to Obadiah Deland, 1771 to Samuel Hinckley, who sold to Silas Haskell, and by him to Francis Hair.

NO. 111. — JOSEPH PERRY.

Granted 1721. See No. 110.

NO. 112. — BENJAMIN BABBITT.

Granted 1770.

NO. 113. — SAMUEL OWEN.

Harrington came to reside here.

ADDENDA BY THE COMMITTEE.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.—ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH IN NORTH BROOKFIELD.

At the writing of the notice of this church (ante, p. 286) the facts at hand were so meagre that it seems proper that something more definite should now be said in regard to it. Services were held for the first time by the Catholics in North Brookfield (who then numbered about fifty) in June, 1851; and soon after this town became a mission of Webster, and Father Leveque from there attended to its interests, and afterwards Father Mignault and Rev. James Quan of the same place. About the year 1860 the town became a mission of Ware, and was under the supervision of Rev. P. Healy, who was succeeded by Rev. William Moran of the same town.

In 1862 the site of the present church was purchased by Rev. P. Healy; and in October, 1866, the erection of the present church was commenced, under the direction of Rev. William Moran. It was completed in July, 1867, and a resident pastor, Rev. Edward Turpin, was appointed to take charge of the parish; he died here only one year after his appointment, and was buried at Fitchburg. He was succeeded by Rev. Henry M. Smyth, who, after three years' service, also died, and was buried here. He was succeeded by Rev. Michael Walsh, who continued in the pastorate thirteen years and six months; but his health was very poor during the last year or more of this time, so he was able to perform but little pastoral service. He died while on a visit to his brother in Natick in May, 1885; he was brought to this town for burial, and a very large concourse of people, not only of his own parish, but of the citizens generally, attended his funeral, filling his church to its utmost capacity. The bishop and a very large number of the clergy were present, and took part in the service. He was buried in a vault in front of the church. Another appointment was immediately made, and the present incumbent, Rev. James P. Tuite, was transferred from Clinton, and took charge of the parish. He soon purchased the "G. B. Dewing place" for a parsonage, and occupied it in less than two months after his appointment. The society is in a prosperous and flourishing condition, owning a church, parsonage with fifteen acres of land, and a cemetery of four acres, free from all encumbrance. The society has a membership of twenty-two hundred, and a sabbath school of four hundred and fifty pupils.

METHODIST-EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

ADDITIONAL to and explanatory of what has been said of meeting-houses (see pp. 251, 277, and 284), there is evidence that the first meeting-house (see p. 249) was vacated by the parish when it began to occupy its new house, built in 1823, and dedicated Jan. 1, 1824; but the old house was left standing until about 1832, and during a part of this time it was occupied by the Methodists, who evidently became the owners of the land on which it stood, and after its removal built their first house upon the same spot. The old house was sold at auction to one Southworth, who used the two side porches in the construction of a dwelling-house on the east side of North Main Street, nearly opposite to the residence of the late Hon. Freeman Walker; and the main house was taken down. The Methodists occupied their new house at the Lower Village until 1846, when, in order to be more central, they held their meetings in the Town Hall in the Upper Village, and other places (see p. 284). In 1853 they moved their meeting-house from the Lower to the Upper Village, locating it on Spring Street; but before it had been fully repaired it was destroyed by fire, Feb. 24, 1854; and the Methodist-Episcopal Church and Society was without a meeting-house of their own till the one on Grove Street, now occupied by them, was built in 1860.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

IN addition to what is said (ante, p. 277) about the remodelling of the meeting-house of the First Congregational Society in 1874, the following particulars are given: The pews were appraised for $4,672, and removed to open the way for a different manner of seating. One of Hook & Co.'s organs was put in, costing $3,000. The amount expended upon the house, including the two items above named, was about $17,000. The horse-sheds upon parish land were bought in by the society, and put into good repair; and thus all individual ownerships were extinguished. The money to meet all the expenses was raised by subscription. After the re-dedication of the house, Oct. 15, 1874, the money for parish expenses was obtained from annual rentals of the seats, until 1885; since which time the seats are made free, and the money raised by subscription.

In 1886 the society, in order to meet a long-felt want, voted to erect a connecting building between the meeting-house and chapel, 55 feet long and 22 feet wide, containing a kitchen and two large, commodious parlors and two dressing-rooms.

The entire cost of this new building and its inside furnishings was about $2,000, the money for which was obtained by subscription, through the efforts of the ladies.

TOWN HOUSES.

THE first Town House (so called) was erected in 1833 by fifty-three different shareholders, on land which appears to have been deeded by Daniel Gilbert, Esq., to the town and the parish for such a purpose (the same being now a part of the site of the Union Congregational meeting-house). These citizens organized Oct. 4, 1832, under the name of the "North Brookfield Town House Company;" Tyler Batcheller President, Jonathan Cary Vice-President, Thomas Jones Secretary, and Joseph Doane Treasurer, after sixty-six shares (probably at ten dollars each) seem to have been subscribed for.

The building was occupied by the town, the parish, and by School District No. 2 as tenants, under certain conditions, until Nov. 2, 1836, when forty-five shares, at seven dollars and a half each, were transferred to said School District No. 2, and the company disbanded. The district continued in ownership and occupancy; renting privileges to the town and to the parish, and renting the Hall for various purposes while the building stood.

In this Hall occurred some of the most stirring speeches and debates upon American Slavery by Garrison, Phillips, Abby Kelley, John M. Fiske, and others from out of town, and by Rev. Dr. Snell, the Walkers, Deacon Moore, and others in town, that ever resounded from the walls of any edifice in this place. Here the voices of Jonathan Walker, L. Moody, William Johnson, Dr. Thomas Lafon, and others, were raised against slavery; and of Elihu Burritt, Amasa Walker, and others, in favor of the cessation of international wars. Here also the tall, slim, youthful, and studious Charles Sumner made his first appearance in the town, in his lecture upon "The Value of Time," opening with these quoted words, "I have lost a day."

DESTRUCTION OF THE BUILDING.

In the early winter of 1846, while a Sunday evening meeting was being held in the Hall by the Methodists, the preacher from his place in the desk noticed near the remote south-east corner, over a lamp, a hole burned through the plastering, and notified the congregation, which immediately broke up; and it was found that the attic and roof were well on fire, and, as there was no means of suppressing the fire, the whole structure was soon in ruins.

By deed dated March 5, 1847, the town bought of George H. Lowe, for two thousand dollars, the "Old White Store," and the land therewith.

The store building was sold to Edmund Smith for about three hundred and fifty dollars, and removed, at an expense to the town of sixty-six dollars, to Mr. Smith's land on the corner of Main and Maple Streets, and used as a part of his shoe manufactory; and now (in 1887) is occupied by the Knights of Labor organization as a store and hall, it having been recently very nicely fitted up for them by the present owners, Messrs. E. & A. H. Batcheller & Co.

The town, by their building committee, Freeman Walker, William Adams, Pliny Nye, Bonum Nye, Charles Duncan, Timothy P. Clark, and Chauncy Edmands, soon after the purchase of the land, erected a new building, probably about fifty by seventy-five feet on the ground, costing a little over nine thousand dollars. The basement story was occupied as a stove and tinware shop, meat-market, etc.; the ground story on the Main Street as a store or stores; and the rear or west end was finished off as the "Lower Town Hall," and used for small meetings, schools, etc., until the partition was removed, and the room added to the rear end of the stores. The Town Hall and ante-rooms occupied all of the next story above, and the upper or attic story was used as a pocket-book manufactory, and for other purposes.

About six o'clock P.M., Oct. 14, 1862, a fire was accidentally started in the north store occupied by Hiram Knight (the other, or south store, being occupied by George C. Lincoln), and the whole structure with nearly all its contents, including the Town Records, the books of the North Brookfield Savings Bank (Mr. Knight being then Town Clerk and Treasurer of the Savings Bank), and various records pertaining to School District No. 2, etc., was soon reduced to ashes. Two shoe manufactories, two barns, and a part of the hotel were involved in the conflagration. Total losses about forty thousand dollars.

In 1863, the town by its committee, Charles Adams, jr., Freeman Walker, Gideon B. Dewing, Erastus Hill, and Dexter Stoddard erected its present Town House building at a cost of twenty thousand dollars.

In the basement are a market, a stove-store, and the town "Lock-up;" in the ground story on Main Street there are three stores, and a good-sized room for town officers and town books; in the story next above is a spacious Town Hall and several ante-rooms; and the upper story is devoted to an assessors' room, and for storage purposes. Ever since the building was erected the yearly rents received for the use of stores and the Hall have amounted to considerable more than a fair rate of interest on the entire investment.

SCHOOLHOUSES.

IN addition to what is said in relation to schools on pp. 255 and 256, the parish records show that the first schoolhouse built at the expense of the parish was the one built in 1759, located about twenty-five rods north of the meeting-house (see ante, 255), and on the spot now occu-ped by the Potter house, — Daniel Potter's house at that time being located further east, on the higher ground. The location of this house was changed to near where the present house stands, just north of the old meeting-house site. It was there burnt in 1816. A new one was erected, and made long enough for two schoolrooms, continuing to be used by District No. 1 till 1871, when it was sold to William Fullam and removed to the foot of Kittridge hill; and the fine two-story schoolhouse now standing on nearly the same location was erected by the town at a cost of nearly $6,000. The town also built a new schoolhouse in No. 8 the same year, costing $1,860.

In 1847, the year after the destruction of the so-called Town House, the inhabitants of School District No. 2 purchased the Grove lot of Daniel Gilbert, Esq., for $1,000, and erected a schoolhouse thereon 42 X 64 feet, — a one-story building, 14 feet posts, containing two spacious rooms, and costing about $2,500. About four years later the house was raised, adding two more schoolrooms under the same roof.

About twenty-five years ago District No. 3 built a new house, and the other districts repaired or reconstructed their schoolhouses from time to time.

The first high-school house (a frame building) was built by the town in 1856, on land purchased of Dea. Tyler Batcheller, on Grove street, costing $8,000 or more. The lower story was used as a schoolroom, and the upper was finished off as a hall.

Somewhere about 1867 the hall was taken for a high-school room, and the lower story was rented to School District No. 2 for a schoolroom until 1869. This building was burnt May 14, 1878, the fire starting (probably) from the furnace in the basement, which was also occupied as an engine-house for the fire-engines and other apparatus of a kindred nature, and these were also mostly destroyed.

During the same year the present brick high-school house was erected by the town at a cost of $15,000 or more; and also the brick engine-house near the District No. 2 Grove schoolhouse, so called.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

AFTER the arrangement in 1765 (see School Districts, ante, p. 256), the number of schoolhouses in the parish had increased to five; in 1871 to six; and sometime afterward another was added.

“At a legal meeting of the Inhabitants of the Second Precinct in Brookfield on the 30th day of March, A.D. 1791, Voted Lieut. William Ayres Moderator. Voted to appoint a committee of nine men to take up the matter respecting schooling; to consider the circumstances of all parts of the Precinct, and report to the Precinct the number of Districts that in their opinion will be most convenient, and to propose to the Precinct the division of the Districts. Voted that Lieut. William Ayres, Capt. Daniel Gilbert, Thomas Hale Esq., Capt. Jonas Brigham, Lieut. Jonas Newell, Daniel Forbes Esq., Capt. John Waite, Lieut. Isaac Church, and Mr. Rufus Hamilton be the committee."

Said committee reported Apr. 13, 1791, recommending the division of the Precinct into six Districts. It was voted to accept and adopt the report, and the meeting was dismissed.

But so much dissatisfaction was found to exist, that a new meeting was called, and held Aug. 29, 1791, and a new committee of seven men was chosen, consisting of Benjamin Adams, Thomas Hale, Esq., Lieut. Jonas Newell, Mr. Jonas Bigelow, Daniel Forbes, Esq., Lieut. Isaac Church, and Lieut. Rufus Hamilton, to take up the matter at large respecting schooling, and report to the Precinct the number of Districts that in their opinion will be most convenient; and to propose the limits of the same, endeavoring to make them as nearly equal as the nature of things will admit; and that they report to the Precinct the particular spots or places where, in their opinion, the several schoolhouses ought to stand.

Sept. 26, 1791, the committee reported; but their report was debated and not accepted. Oct. 4, the same committee submitted their report, with alterations, which was accepted. They recommended that the schoolhouses by the meeting-house and by Samuel Cheever's, and the one by Theophilus Potter's, and by Nathan Moore's, and the one near Daniel Forbes', and the one near the house of William Ayres, 2d, should stand in the places where they now are, unless removed by an agreement of the District. They also recommended that the Southeast District should re-unite and remove their schoolhouse to the corner of the road near Mr. Thomas Hathaway's (now Loren G. Sherman's), which removal seems not to have ever taken place. The seven Districts were to consist of the following inhabitants; viz., —

CENTRE DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICTS NOS. 1 AND 2).

William Ayres, Onesiphorus Ayres, Benjamin Adams, Buenos Ayres, Jabez Ayres, Jonas Ayres, Lucy Baldwin, Thomas Bond, Abner Bartlett, Jonas Brewer, Thomas Ball, Susannah Bartlett, Wyman Bartlett, Samuel Bemis, Hugh Cunningham, Solomon Dewing, Hannah Gilbert, Wheat Gilbert, Reuben Gilbert, Rufus Hardy, Benjamin Hickox, Israel Hamilton, Dudley Jordan, Jacob Kittridge, Charles Knowlton, John Potter, Jonathan Pickard, Samuel Pickard, Thompson Rawson, Benjamin Gilbert, James Smith, Solomon Barnes.

NORTHWEST DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICT NO. 4).

William Dane, William Dane, jr., Joseph Dane, Ephraim Cutter, Elijah Cutter, Thomas Barnes, Abiel Chase, Abijah Potter, Francis Stone, John Stevens, 2d, Nathaniel Waite, Joseph Waite, Ebenezer Nye, Thomas Hale, Thomas Hale, jr., Nathan Barns, Ezra Tucker, Josiah Cary, Samuel Cheever, Samuel Haskell, Jonas Brigham, Jason Bigelow, John Lamson, Paul Haskell, John Rainger, Joshua Rainger, Samuel Hoar, Jasiel Kendrick, Thomas Kendrick, Silas Howe, Perley Hale.

NORTH DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICT NO. 5).

NORTHEAST DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICT NO. 6).

SOUTHEAST DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICT NO. 8).

Ezekiel Stevens, Jeduthan Stevens, Roger Stevens, Silas Stevens, Jude Stevens, Samuel Hair, Daniel Ball, Lemuel Adams, Thomas Hathaway, Enos Hathaway, Timothy Skinner, John Wolcott, John Wolcott, jr., John Waite, Joseph Waite, Nathaniel Waite, Lemuel Waite, John Waite, jr., Thomas Moore, Isaac Moore, Joshua Moore, Jonathan Richardson, John Jennings, Thomas Moore, jr., Elisha Harrington, Isaac Church.

SOUTHWEST DISTRICT (LATER, DISTRICT NO. 3).

Moses Ayres, Moses Ayres, jr., Jude Ayres, Increase Ayres, Samuel Hinkley, Moses Barnes, James Converse, William Ayres, 2d, Nathaniel Dodge, Philip Deland, Jedediah Deland, Merrick Rice, Cheney Rice, Perez Samson, William Barnes, Joseph Rainger, Timothy Green, Thomas Ayres, Nathaniel Dodge, jr., Daniel Gilbert, Humphrey Gilbert, Rufus Hamilton, Peter Hill, Thomas Hill, Peter Hill, jr., John Tyler, Gideon Tyler, Jonathan Barnes, Frederick Barnes, Francis Barnes, Elkanah Babbit.

The Precinct ratified the doings of the committee; and with the exception of the division of the Centre District into No. 1 and No. 2, in 1833, district lines remained substantially the same until 1869, when the district system, as such, was abolished by the town, under legislative authority, all the school-district property passing into the ownership of the town, the property having been appraised by a committee, as follows, to wit: District No. 1, \$400; No. 2, \$6,800; No. 3, \$542; No. 4, \$591; No. 5, \$336; No. 6, \$620; No. 7, \$407; No. 8, \$225; total, \$9,921; to pay which sum a tax was assessed upon the whole town, with overlays of \$89.49, making a total tax of \$10,010.49; on each poll \$1.90; on each dollar $5\frac{6}{10}$ mills; and from this tax there was remitted to each tax-payer his proportion of the appraised value of the school property in the district to which he belonged.

In District No. 1 there were eighty-two polls, and the property taxpayers were Alvin Allen, Sophia E. Ayres, William J. Babbitt, Elias Bartlett, Joseph P. Benoit, Louis Bobbou, Patrick Burns, William W. Clark, James P. Coolidge, John DeLand, Cheney Dewing, Jeremiah Dewing, John B. Dewing, John B. Dewing (guardian), Fanny M. Earle, Frank Girard, Tryphosa Graves, William C. Griffin, James A. Hall, George T. Hill, Warner Hill, Francis W. Hill, Lorenzo Holmes, William L. Holmes, Lucinda Holmes, Jesse B. Ives, Hurlbert H. HIGH SCHOOL.

As stated in the text, on page 277, a public high school was established in town in 1857. "For several years before this date," says Mr. T. C. Bates in an address delivered at the re-union of past and present members, Dec. 2, 1878, "there had been in the town, occasionally, what were called select schools. These were of a higher grade than our common schools, and were maintained by those who patronized them, a certain sum being paid per term by the scholars to the teacher, who received no money from the town. Some of these were very superior schools, and productive of great good. Many of those present to-night, will remember the excellent school of Rev. William Miller; and although this was prior to the establishment of our high school, it is doubtful if any person who has ever taught in our town, with perhaps a single exception, was more popular with both scholars and parents than Mr. Miller. The single exception to which I refer, is Mr. O. W. Whitaker, the first principal of our high school. Without doubt it was from the great interest which these select schools inspired among our people generally, that our high school was first established and sustained at the expense of the town by taxation, in the same manner all our public schools were maintained. There was evident need for such a school here, not occasionally a term during the fall or spring, but continuously, from year to year. Many of our people who were very desirous of giving their children a better education than they could obtain in our common schools, did not have the means with which to carry out their wishes; and to such an extent was this sentiment pervading the town, that it did not require much of an effort to secure a vote to establish such an institution here in permanent form, to be maintained at the expense of the people as a whole by general taxation. Accordingly, a high-school house was built in 1856-7, at a cost of $9,225.

"There were men, of course, who criticised the investment, and seriously questioned the advisability; some from one motive, and some from another. Some tax payers had no children to be educated, and opposed the appropriations from year to year by the town. Others lived far from the centre village, and deemed it improbable that they would ever get sufficient advantages to justify their cheerfully submitting to taxation for educating the children of others. But as a whole, the people of North Brookfield have been very liberal in their appropriations for this purpose, having expended since the school was first started the sum of $20,711 to maintain it, not including the cost the present year of $2,000, which, added to the first cost of the building, makes a total of $29,936. The cost of the new building, to take the place of the one destroyed by fire, will be about $7,000 in excess of the amount received for insurance on the old one. Thus it will be seen that there has been up to the present time, an outlay by the town of about $40,000 to establish and maintain for twenty years our high school.

- 1857-60. Mr. O. W. Whitaker, ten terms.
- 1861. Mr. Francis Burt, one term.
- 1862. No school this year.
- 1863. Mr. Leonard Morrison, one term.
- 1864. Mr. Henry E. Storrs, one term.
- 1865-6. Rev. B. P. Snow, seven terms.
- 1867. Mr. C. F. Spoor, one term.
- 1867. Mr. C. E. Dunshea, one term.
- 1867-8. Mr. E. H. Barlow, four terms.
- 1869-72. Miss F. A. Caldwell, eleven terms.
- 1872-3. Mr. A. H. Jewell, two terms.
- 1873-4. Mr. A. H. Mann, three terms.
- 1874. Mr. A. H. Weaver, one term.
- 1875-7. Mr. C. M. Clay, ten terms.
- 1878. Mr. D. N. Putney, one term.

“In this time there have been fourteen principals and eight assistants, and about seven hundred different scholars. And what is the visible result? One of our number has attained to eminence as a lawyer, and is the present city solicitor of Worcester — I refer to F. T. Blackmer, Esq.; another is sure to make his mark in the same line — I refer to Henry W. King, now in the Law school at Cambridge; we have sent forth three physicians, viz., Drs. George Spooner, Will. Hebard and Eben Perkins; three are clergymen, viz. Rev. Edwin Babcock, Charles Huntington and Robert Clark; two are bankers, E. W. Skerry in Iowa, and Alfred Burrill in Boston; one, Alonzo Stoddard, is a singer of national reputation. Many young lady graduates have already acquired praiseworthy renown as teachers in our public schools. And every part of our United States is to-day receiving benefits from the former students of this school.

“Who can ever estimate the great advantages of this institution thus far in our community, socially and morally, as well as in an educational point of view? No one. Its benefits have been manifold, and its cost is most amply repaid to our people, in ways that may not be easily demonstrated in detail — but are none the less real.”

The school committee in their Report for 1878 say: “The high school building was burnt May 14, and a new brick house has been erected on its site. It has double the seating capacity of the old one. . . . Through the liberality of T. C. Bates, Esq., an excellent bell was placed in the tower, soon after its completion. Principal C. M. Clay closed the fourth year of his service, and was succeeded by Mr. D. N. Putney, who resigned at the close of the first term, and the committee have engaged Mr. R. B. Clarke.”

1879. — The town made a special appropriation of $500, for the purchase of apparatus for the high school. “The school is well supplied in the department of Physics, and has an excellent cabinet case in which to keep the apparatus.” Teachers this year: Mr. R. B. Clarke, Miss Emily Edson.

1880. — The town appropriated the sum of $1,200, to finish and furnish two rooms in the high-school building; and at a special meeting “voted, to elevate the L in the rear, in order to give an exit on that side from all the rooms” — which was done at a cost of $355.

Teachers, Mr. R. B. Clarke, Miss Emily Edson, H. L. Briggs, Clara Coleman, music teacher; salaries paid in all $1,857.

1881. — The school committee in their annual Report say: “High School — In addition to a preparatory course for college, a course of English studies has been prescribed, in order that pupils not wishing to pursue a college course may have the privilege of receiving the benefit of a three-years English course in the High School, without being compelled to study Latin and Greek, or leave the school. A class of the ninth grade is still in the school, so that the aggregate number of pupils is fifty-two. Without this class, and the English department, the school would contain only twenty-six members.”

Teachers: first term, Mr. R. B. Clarke, Miss Helen L. R. Briggs; second and third terms, Mr. George H. Cummings, Miss Mary E. Kimball.

1882. — “The course of study in the High School has been revised and completed. The General Course has been much changed and enlarged. Instead of the three years course, a full course of four years has been substituted. It seemed manifestly unjust that those who do not care to pursue the study of Latin and Greek through the whole course, should be cut off from the benefits of equal training, along their chosen line, with those who preferred the Classical Course. And, on the other hand, it was equally unjust, and also detrimental to the interests and to the reputation of our schools, that those who had taken but a partial course of three years should receive the same graduating honors, and a certificate of like attainments as those who had done the work and received the discipline of a full course. The natural limit of time for recitation forbids as wide a divergence in the two courses as we could wish; and as far as possible they are made to harmonize during the two first years. After the first half of the second year, Latin is dropped from the General Course, and higher English branches take its place.

With the present possibilities of lower grade instruction, it is impossible to fit students properly for college in the four years of High School study. It seemed best, therefore, to add a year of post-graduate study for such as would like to pursue a college course."

Teachers, Mr. George H. Cummings, Miss Mary E. Kimball. Whole number of pupils enrolled, 52.

1883. — Teachers, Mr. Herbert W. Kittridge, Miss Edith J. Ayres.

1884. — The school year opened with Mr. Kittridge and Miss Ayres in charge of the high school. Mr. K. resigned in the middle of the winter term, much to the regret of the committee and parents. The committee in their report say: "For the good work done, and the noble influences exerted here, great honor and praise are due to Mr. Kittridge, and to his equally able and faithful assistant Miss Edith J. Ayres." Mr. Charles O. Thurston was appointed to fill the place of Mr. K. Number of pupils enrolled, 66.

1885. — Miss Ayres continued her services through the year. Mr. Thurston resigned at the close of the spring term, and Mr. George H. Rockwood was appointed principal, and remained till the close of the year. The number of weeks in the school year, 40; number of scholars enrolled, 60; average attendance, 57. Amount of salaries paid the two teachers, $1,729.

DEWING & EDMANDS.

REFERRING to ante, p. 275, we will give a somewhat fuller and more accurate statement in regard to the business of this firm and their successors, than the facts then at hand enabled us to do. Their business was next in amount and importance to that of the Messrs. Batcheller. The firm consisted of G. B. Dewing and S. S. Edmands; they commenced business in 1835 at the old Edmands place in the east part of the town, but continued there only a few months, when they removed to the village, and occupied a shop north of the old hotel on the corner where the "Knights of Labor" store now is (1887); and after being there two years, they moved into the large three-story shop which they had built on the lot just south of the old hotel, where the "Walker Block" now stands. Here they very much increased their business, making only russet brogans and coarse, thick boots, designed especially for the Southern trade. In 1837, to increase and facilitate their trade, they established a boot-and-shoe house in Mobile, Ala., where they had a large trade with the planters along the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers, furnishing boots and shoes for their slaves, many of whom had feet of enormous size; and their measures, marked "Tom," "Pete," "Sam," "Joe," etc., were sent on here, and the shoes made and sent on, with each measure inside the shoes with the name. Some of these shoes were made on a last, size 18. Mr. Edmands remembers one pair of shoes of this size, said to be for a slave on a Mississippi plantation, who was formerly an African chief. Mr. Dewing usually spent his winters in Mobile. The firm continued in successful business till 1850, when, having decided to retire, they sold their shop and the good-will of their trade to S. M. EDMANDS & CO., who succeeded to their business Oct. 1, 1850. This company consisted of S. M. Edmands, T. M. Duncan, and L. E. Waite; but Mr. Waite, having become interested in business at the West, decided to go there, and consequently withdrew from the firm in the spring of 1851. This company manufactured russet brogans (slave-shoes) exclusively, and the great bulk of their goods were sold direct to customers in New Orleans and Mobile, and the balance to jobbing-houses in New York engaged in the Southern trade; but experience proved that the per cent of losses was much greater on goods sold at New York than those sold direct South. In 1851 the firm sold only forty thousand dollars' worth of goods; but their trade rapidly increased from year to year, and, feeling the need of more room, they built in 1856 a much larger and more commodious shop nearly opposite Capt. Bonum Nye's on Summer Street, to which they removed in the latter part of 1856; and on Aug. 1 of this year Charles Duncan became a partner in the firm, in which he continued till near the close of 1860, when he sold his interest to the other members of the company, and retired. In 1859 the sales of the company amounted to a hundred and ninety-four thousand dollars; but soon after the presidential election in the fall of 1860, which resulted in the election of Lincoln, the South became enraged, and secession very soon began. State after State seceded, and all business relations with the slave States were at once terminated; and if any of the merchants there were disposed to pay their Northern creditors, they were strictly prohibited from doing so; and thus the enormous amounts due to Northern merchants and manufacturers became entirely unavailable so long as the rebellion existed; and the long and terrible war so impoverished the whole South that all Northern claims were thus almost entirely wiped out. Previous to the war, manufacturers sold nearly all their goods on a credit of six or eight months, and at the breaking-out of the Rebellion this company had claims amounting to upwards of ninety thousand dollars against good customers in New Orleans, Mobile, and one or two other smaller Southern cities, in full settlement of which they received less than twelve thousand dollars after the close of the war; but the firm paid all their indebtedness, and continued their business with a greatly reduced capital, making mostly, after the war, boots for the New York and Western markets. Mr. E. H. Hurlbut, who had been in the employ of the company ever since it commenced business in 1850, was admitted as a partner Jan. 1, 1866, and the firm name was changed to EDMANDS, DUNCAN, & HURLBUT; and the company thus continued with very satisfactory success till Dec. 9, 1871, when their shop and all its contents was destroyed by fire, and the company was dissolved early in 1872.

E. & A. H. BATCHELLER & CO.

ADDITIONAL to what is said (ante, p. 275) in relation to the business of Messrs. E. & A. H. Batcheller & Co., the History Committee are permitted to give the following: In 1886 the number of persons employed was thirteen hundred, and the amount of sales of manufactured goods for that year about three millions of dollars.

The factory proper has recently been enlarged, so that in January, 1887, it contained about three acres of flooring.

They also own and occupy the box factory and last and crimping form factory on Walnut Street, the building on Grove Street known as the "Jenks Shop," and the "Skating Rink" (120 by 60 feet on the ground) on Summer Street; and they also hire for storage purposes the large four-story shop of Edmands & Co. on the same street.

For upwards of a quarter of a century this has been the largest boot and shoe manufacturing concern in the United States; and it maintains that position to-day, both as to the quantity and value of boots and shoes annually produced.

INTRODUCTORY.

Extracts from a Report made by Mr. Adams to the Committee on Town History :

“ The work of collecting the genealogical records, which was intrusted to me, has been constantly pursued now for more than three years and a half. The progress during the last year has been less rapid than in other previous years ; but in reality much more has been accomplished, than in any other year ; not in the number of family schedules filled out, but in matters of history connected with them, and with those before obtained, all of which is essential to the work in hand. These matters of genealogy, and of history incidental to them, in which I have been deeply interested, are now in as satisfactory condition to me as they ever can be. There is much that is unattainable now, and would continue to be so, even if additional years should be devoted to the work.

I hope, however, before the schedules leave my custody, that I may be authorized to get them bound in a suitable manner — they have all been carefully copied — and when bound, that the two sets may be deposited in different places, in order to avoid casualties by fire.

To some it may seem unnecessary to bind these schedules, inasmuch as the printed History may be supposed to embrace all that is valuable in them : but it will not ; many things are recorded in them, to publish which would swell the volume beyond any reasonable size. There are many things of strictly personal and local interest, but which would not be of interest to the general reader. And much contained in them may be greatly condensed without detracting from its historic value.

NORTH BROOKFIELD, March 8, 1883.

In accordance with the suggestion in the above Report, the town voted to bind the schedules, as arranged in alphabetical order : and they make ten bulky quarto volumes, one set of which is deposited in the town clerk's office, where they may be consulted for the purposes of family history.

The plan of this Register is simple. A heavy-faced numeral attached to a family name indicates that the person is the head of a line; and his children and descendants, if they are to appear as fathers of families, have each his consecutive number, by which he can be traced, either forward or backward in the line. If no figure follows a child's name, his branch is not farther traced.

The abbreviations used are such as are commonly understood, or have an obvious local signification.

B. Elijah, oldest son of Obadiah 7, b. in Cohasset, Mass., Apr. 25, 1796, m. in Boston, Mass., Aug. 2, 1818, Sarah Fletcher, who was b. May 3, 1799, in Boston, Mass., and is still living in North Brookfield. She was the youngest child of Jonathan and Lucretia Fletcher. Jonathan Fletcher, b. in Acton, Mass., Jan. 21, 1758, m. May 20, 1782, Lucretia Emerson, who was b. in Acton, Mass., Aug. 4, 1764. He d. in Boston, Jan. 5, 1807. She d. in Thomaston, Me., July 7, 1800. They had four children, viz., Frances, b. in Acton, Mass., Feb. 20, 1784, d. Sept. 18, 1824, in Claiborne, Ala.; Susan, b. in Boston, Mass., Feb. 27, 1789, d. Jonathan Fletcher was a fifer boy in the Acton company of minute men at the battle of Concord, Apr. 19, 1775, led by Capt. Isaac Davis, and was afterwards commissioned as lieutenant and then to captain of a company raised in Fitchburg and Acton and adjoining towns. He was in command of his company at the surrender of Burgoyne's army. He was a warm friend of Gen. Knox, and after the war went to Thomaston, Me., with Gen. Knox, and lived near him for many years. Elijah Bates was a furniture manufacturer in Boston, and came from there to North Brookfield with his family to engage in same business here in 1820. He was the first of this name in the town, and first occupied the new house then being built by Capt. Moses Bond, nearly opposite the Dr. Potter place, afterwards known as the Luther Holmes place, until he purchased in 1824 of Cheney Dane the place where he ever afterwards lived. The old house was occupied by him for some years, until he moved it to the opposite side of the street and west some fifty rods, where it now stands. A new house was erected by him on the site of the one removed, and this new one was destroyed by fire in 1844; but another, an exact duplicate of the one destroyed, was erected on the same site the same year, and the same has ever since remained in the family, and is now owned by the youngest son, Theodore. Mr. Bates was for many years, in addition to the manufacture of furniture, engaged extensively in the manufacture of boxes or cases for the boot and shoe manufacturers of North Brookfield and the adjoining towns. He was a successful business man; and although he was unfortunate in meeting several heavy losses by fires, no man ever lost a dollar by him. He took a deep interest in the old Liberty party and the Anti-Slavery agitation; and when the war of the Rebellion came, he encouraged his sons to offer their services for the Union cause, and one of them was among the first, if not the very first person, to enlist from North Brookfield. He was a public spirited citizen, and held many of the offices and positions of honor and trust in the town. Had fourteen children, all b. in North Brookfield except the oldest, Susan Frances, b. BRADSHAW [Genealogy of Eleazer from History of Medford, by Rev. Charles Brooks].

1. John, son of Humphrey and Patience of Cambridge, b. June 24, 1655, was one of the earliest recorded taxpayers; d. Mar. 19, 1745, aged nearly 90; m. Mary Johnson, who d. Apr. 1758, aged 90 [the names, b. and m. of their twelve children, also five families of forty-two grandchildren, are given in Vol. 1, by Hon. C. Adams, jr., but are omitted here until the twelfth child, Simon, father of Eleazer, is reached].

2. Simon, twelfth child of John 1, b. Oct. 3, 1709, m. Jan. 6, 1736, Mary Johnson, b. May 15, 1712, d. July 26, 1764. His will proved Oct. 10, 1769. Children, (Medford), Simon, b. Mar. 1, 1739 3; Isaac, b. Sept. 26, 1740, d. Dec. 1741; Isaac, b. Dec. 10, 1743, d. Feb. 14, 1746; Eleazer, b. Feb. 11, 1746 4; Mary, b. Sept. 24, 1747, m. John Coombs of Newburyport; inherited one-half of her brother Eleazer's estate. [Children, Philip, John, Lydia and Mary. Son Philip had children, John, Mary and Elizabeth].

3. Simon, son of Simon 2, b. Mar. 1, 1739, m. July 12, 1770, Hannah Johnson, and d. Apr. 1790; she d. Aug. 8, 1800. Children (Medford), Simon, b. July 6, 1778, m. Tamar Blood; no issue; Abigail Edes, b. 1783, m. Feb. 7, 1803, Henry Morgan of Boston, and d. Petersham, May 12, 1814.

4. Eleazer, son of Simon 2, b. Feb. 11, 1746; a hatter; d. Brookfield, July 19, 1810, unm. Came to this town probably in 1791-2; lived in a one-story gambrel roofed house, about a mile and a quarter east of the present village. After his decease the place was owned and occupied by Lieut. Joseph Bush, and subsequently by various parties until 1833, when Jonas Harwood bought it, demolished the old house and built the one now standing and lived there until 1868, when he sold it to John Hoone. The old shop occupied by Mr. Bradshaw for making hats and for the grocery trade, on a limited scale, still stands in the rear of Mr. Hoone's house. Among the owners after Lieut. Bush, were Elias Harrington, and Kittridge Hill who never resided upon it, and who sold it to Jonas Harwood in 1833. Lieut. Bush named his youngest son for Mr. Bradshaw — Eleazer Bradshaw Bush. Dr. Snell, in his account of Mr. Bradshaw, says, that "He accumulated $40,000 or $50,000; lived in an old house where Mr. J. Harwood now lives; was a bachelor — never attended meeting though he cheerfully supported the Gospel." Mrs. Frances A. Brooks, a descendant of a niece of said Eleazer, among other things says of him, "that he gave a bell for a meeting house, erected in Petersham about 1788; is also remembered as appearing there on a fine white horse in pursuit of Shay's men under Gen. Lincoln, where the rebellion was eventually checked. He is said to have always kept his broad brimmed hat on, which gave rise to the impression that he was a Quaker, though hardly consistent with the report of his military career.

For a fuller account of the Bradshaws, see Vol. 1, by Hon. Chas. Adams, jr., in Town Clerk's office.

DELAND, DE LAND, originally DELANE, Philip 1, probably a Frenchman (as per History of Newbury), came to Newbury from Portsmouth, N.H., in 1694, with wife Margery and two children (names not given). No conveyance of real estate, or probate matter, recorded in his name in Essex County, and nothing of his personal history can be gleaned from local records. If, as it is said, he removed with his family to Brookfield, more can probably be learned of him from Worcester County Record of Probate and Deeds. From a letter of a correspondent the following epitaph of Mr. De Land is copied, viz.: —

"Humble and meek, a lowly path he trod;
 And while he lived on earth he walked with God:
 Good without show — obliging without art,
 His speech the faithful language of his heart;
 His hope was grace, and his delight was prayer,
 His wish was Heaven, Oh! may we meet him there."

The foregoing shows him at least to have been an exemplary Christian, and doubtless a member of the Church. His wife Margery d. Newbury, Aug. 26, 1694; m. (2) 1695, Jane Atkinson. Children (Newbury), Daniel, b. June 24, 1694; Charles, b. Oct. 1698, d. December following; Paul, b. Oct. 16, 1699 2; Joseph, b. June 22, 1702, d. Nov. 16, following; Eve, b. The Beverly Town Record gives the marriage of a Philip Deland to Abigail Bradford, published July 10, 1703; she was daughter of William Bradford and Rachel (Raymond), b. Beverly, Sept. 15, 1682, by whom he had one child, William, b. May 3, 1709. This Philip may have been the above Philip 1, or one of his two unnamed children who came with them to Newbury.

2. Paul, son of Philip 1, b. Newbury, Oct. 16, 1699, removed as said with his father to Brookfield about 1740 where he d. Feb. 6, 1796. He must have come earlier, or some at least of his children must have been born in Newbury; but all of them, however, are recorded in Brookfield. He or his father built the house in the south part of the town, where Paul, three successive Philips, and Martha M. Brown, daughter of Philip 3d, have lived. He m. —ember 30, 1725, Phebe, daughter of John Green of Brookfield, who d. there Mar. 25, 1787, aged eighty-two. Children (Newbury or Brookfield), Philip, b. Aug. 18, 1725-6 3; Mary, b. From the North Brookfield Journal of Oct. 16, 1880: "Mr. Parker Johnson, our most aged townsman, quietly passed away on Monday evening last. He came here with his father in 1799, at whose death he was called upon at the early age of sixteen years, to take charge of the farm where he has since resided, and to aid his mother in 'bringing up' his seven younger brothers and sisters, all of whom lived to see their families grow up around them here, esteemed by neighbors and friends. His first wife died soon after their marriage, and his second wife survives him with several children. . . . The quiet, uneventful life of a farmer offers but little of interest to the outside world, but those who had the pleasure of an acquaintance with Mr. Johnson will cherish the memory of his faithfulness in the discharge of every duty, his strict integrity, and his exemplary Christian life. In Sept. 1814, he marched as fifer in the Light Infantry Company of Brookfield, commanded by Capt. Lewis Abbott, the whole company being ordered to camp at South Boston in the regiment of Col. Salem Towne, in order to resist the landing of the British at Boston or vicinity. He was commissioned as fife major Sept. 12, 1817, and for many years afterward acted with the town militia in that capacity."

JUMEL, Madame. About half a mile southerly from the "Jenks place," now occupied by James H. Goodrich on the east side of the road leading by the "Hair Place," now occupied by Henry M. Green, is an old cellar-hole where a house once stood, in which, in 1794, a young girl lived with her sister, mother, and step-father in extreme poverty. This young girl afterwards became the distinguished personage whose name stands at the head of this paragraph. The following particulars of her most romantic life were given to Hon. Charles Adams, jr., by Thomas Henry Edsall, Esq., a lawyer of New York City, who was appointed with the late distinguished lawyer Charles O'Connor of New York to manage the legal proceedings hereinafter referred to.

About 1778 to 1780 a sailor named Bowen, belonging to Providence, R.I., was lost at sea, leaving in that place a widow, Phebe, with two young daughters, Polly and Betsey, both born probably between 1773 and 1777. On the 16th of Sept. 1790, the widow married Capt. Jonathan Clark, who had served in the Revolution, a native of Weymouth, by trade a shoemaker, poor and somewhat dissipated. They were married in Providence, and resided there with her two daughters (and perhaps a son) till June 4, 1791, when they were "expelled" from Providence, probably lest they should become a town charge. In Feb. 1793, they were in Rehoboth, an adjoining town across the Seekonk River in Massachusetts; in September of that year in Taunton, and in Feb. 1794, they were residing in Brookfield, at the house indicated above, whence they removed the next summer to Rutland, Mass., where they lived until the autumn of 1797. Their "manner of life" previously may be inferred from what it was in Rutland. There they lived in a small one-story cabin, partly under ground, about fifteen or twenty feet in area, built into the southerly side of a sand hill, called "Goose Hill," in what is known as "New Boston." The site of their house is now included in a town burying-ground, first used as such about sixty years ago, and stood where the gate now stands. It had but one room, which the whole family occupied in common, with a single chimney on one side; with two doors leading respectively to the road and to the roof. Just within the front door, opening upon a road now discontinued, Clark used to sit at his bench, and work at his trade. His wife worked out in the families of their neighbors, to whom she not unfrequently complained of the crossness of her husband. He had become quite dissipated, but retained his taste for reading, to which he was much given.

The family did not go to meeting, nor the girls to school, nor did the girls visit the neighboring houses; and some incidents related by old people who in 1834 recollected the family, indicated that the reputation of the young women was not above suspicion.

Mr. Edsall writes July 8, 1884, "I had fifteen receipts, which were given to Clark in Sept. 1797, the last month probably of his residence in Rutland, all except one given for 'one dollar in full of all demands,' which indicated that he spent that month in settling up with his neighbors, showing that he was not entirely impecunious. It is not impossible that their departure was made in anticipation of a 'warning' from the town authorities. Sometime that autumn (1797) Clark and his family removed to North Carolina, where both parents were carried off by an epidemic in 1798. The two girls managed in some way to get to Washington, and afterwards to New York, where Betsey, who possessed great beauty and an attractive manner, captivated the very wealthy French merchant Stephen Jumel, and became his wife. The date of their marriage cannot be accurately determined, but was about 1804 to 1808." Thus the lowly-born, uneducated Betsey Bowen rose from her obscurity and poverty, and became the wife of one of the merchant princes of New York, the possessor of wealth, and every thing that wealth could command.

They lived together until 1832, when Jumel died, having settled upon his wife a very large estate, and she was designated as "Madame Jumel."

But she was destined to fill a much higher and more distinguished social position.

Late in the same year, 1832, she was married to Aaron Burr, who had been Vice-President of the United States from 1801 to 1805, the first term of President Jefferson's administration.

This was an ill-advised, unhappy, and brief union. He was then seventy-six, and she about fifty-five. They separated in 1833, and she commenced a suit for divorce that year or the next.

The date of the decree of divorce is not found on the records of New York; and it is not impossible that none was obtained; but by decree or without one, they were separated, and she took the name of her first husband, and was ever afterwards known as "Madame Jumel."

Having unlimited means at her disposal, she spent much of her time in France, residing alternately in the French capital and in our own commercial metropolis.

She was for many years well known at Saratoga Springs and Niagara Falls by most of the fashionable visitors at these fashionable places, and occasionally spent a winter in New Orleans. The estate settled on her by her first husband consisted largely in real estate in New York City, — on Broadway, Seventh Avenue, and other streets, — and a large tract of land on Washington Heights, including the historic mansion of the English Col. Morris, overlooking Harlem River, in which she resided at the time of her death.

She owned a large amount of real estate at Saratoga Springs, purchased by herself; and here she used to make great display of dress and equipage at her annual visits.

Madame Jumel was endowed by nature with wonderful personal beauty of form and feature, united with a most attractive and fascinating manner, and these characteristics, together with great mental vivacity, she retained to old age, even to the very verge of life. She died at the "Jumel Mansion" in New York, June 14, 1865, aged over ninety years.

After her death her will was admitted to probate, giving the bulk of her estate to the Episcopal Church and its rector at Washington Heights, and to various charitable societies and institutions. The members of her family, consisting of a nephew and niece, children of a daughter of her sister Polly, whom she had adopted, and their father Nelson Chase, Esq., a lawyer of New York City, all of whom resided with her, and had reasonably expected to succeed to her estate, were given but little.

The late celebrated Charles O'Connor was retained on their behalf, and he brought suit to annul the will. It was in the course of his preparation for the trial of this case which engrossed all his great learning, and which he intended to make the crowning effort of his professional career, that the early history of "Madame Jumel" was hunted up, and the clouds of romance which had surrounded it were dissipated.

The will was set aside, and Mr. Chase and his children became possessed of the estate. But their tenure was soon assailed from another quarter. By the laws of New York, an illegitimate child inherits from the mother.

The will being out of the way, George Washington Bowen, a citizen of Providence, R.I., brought suit to recover a part of the property, claiming to be the son of Betsey Bowen born out of marriage at that place in 1794. After a long and severe contest, in which Hon. George F. Hoar of Massachusetts was leading counsel for the claimant, Mr. O'Connor scored another victory for his clients. Still another attack was made by the children of Polly Bowen, who had married a brass-founder named Jones, and claimed the estate as heirs-at-law of their aunt. In this case the notorious Count Johannes, once an actor, named George Jones, represented the plaintiffs, who were defeated. Finally, the heirs of Stephen Jumel in France and elsewhere, came forward to assert their claims to the estate, and brought suit which resulted in a compromise; and the property which has so long been the subject of litigation has now been sold, and its proceeds divided.

Mr. Chase became the purchaser of the "Jumel Mansion," which he now occupies as his residence. The compromises which ended the litigation were successively made within a year or so (i.e., in 1882 or 1883). The value of the property at that time (parts of it having been theretofore taken for public use — for a reservoir at High Bridge, and for other purposes, besides what was dissipated in the many litigations), was probably more than a million of dollars. Lower prices were obtained at the public sale than could have been realized at private sale a few years before, when there was speculation in up-town lots.

Mr. Chase once told Mr. Edsall that he had received a bona fide offer of three million dollars for the up-town tracts, which he had reason to think was made in behalf of the late imperial family of France on the eve of its downfall.

The following was copied from a New York paper:—

"MADAME JUMEL'S PROPERTY TO BE SOLD, New York, June 30, 1881. After protracted litigation Judge Barrett to-day rendered a decision decreeing the sale of old Madame Jumel's property, possession of which has been contested by the heirs since 1865. The property consists of 1,400 lots in different parts of the city."

Apr. 24, 1878, Homer Bishop of Cedar Rapids, Ia.

When 21 years old, Hon. Bonum Nye commenced teaching common schools, and taught 20 terms in 19 successive years. At the same age he began land surveying, which he still continues. In 1823 he was commissioned ensign; in 1826 lieutenant; in 1828 captain of Massachusetts Militia, and was honorably discharged from military service at his own request in 1829. In 1823, first chosen town assessor, serving at different times about 15 years; also serving as selectman, overseer of poor, and school committee about the same number of years in each capacity; a justice of peace ever since 1835. From 1850 to 1857 he was a county commissioner, and chairman of the Board the last three years; civil engineer of the Board during the whole time, and afterwards a special commissioner 3 years. A trustee of the North Brookfield Savings Bank from its organization in 1854, and its treasurer since Jan. 1, 1864. He was appointed by the Governor (with Francis H. Dewey of Worcester and Asaph Wood of Gardner), commissioner to ascertain the true boundary line between the towns of Uxbridge and Douglas; reporting to the General Court of 1864. He has made more deeds and wills, and settled and aided in settling more estates, than any other man in North Brookfield. He became a member of the First Congregational Society when 21 years old, and united with the church in 1819; and was clerk of the church 18 or 20 years, and is now the oldest member of the church and of the society, and the oldest man in the town; a member of the Sabbath School committee several years, and a Sabbath School teacher for more than 60 years. A director and president of the North Brookfield Railroad Co. ever since its organization in 1875. In all the offices held by him in his native town and county, he has discharged his duties with ability and fidelity. His long life of activity and usefulness has rarely if ever been equalled by any person in this vicinity. In the society and church he has ever taken an earnest and unflinching interest. His services in the schools of the town, both as teacher and committee, have been of great value. Industry, accuracy, and strict attention to the minutest details of all matters intrusted to him, have always been his marked characteristics. He has been a most valuable citizen, and now enjoys the respect and esteem of the very large number of people to whom he has become known during his long and busy life.

Oct. 30, 1860, Carrie Carlton of Cambridge, Vt., and d. North Brookfield, June 10, 1864.

Col. Pliny Nye was for more than fifty years one of the most prominent of North Brookfield citizens. In 1817, he bought property in the west part of the town, which in 1826 he exchanged for the place in the (then) Centre Village, where he died; living there forty-nine and a half years.

The life of Col. Nye may safely be called successful; not in the accumulation of great wealth, but in acquiring a competency of this world's goods, doing faithfully whatever he undertook, and establishing and maintaining through life a character for honesty and integrity that is above all price. He was emphatically a self-made man. Deprived in infancy of his natural guardians, and left to the care of comparative strangers, his education was much neglected, and consequently defective; but supplemented by a naturally strong mind, a retentive memory, untiring industry, and indomitable perseverance, the defect was to a great extent overcome, and he acquired a very fair education, not formal nor ornamental, but eminently practical.

This, united with his strong common sense, and his well-known integrity, gave him, while quite a young man, a prominence among his fellow-citizens, seldom accorded in those days to a man of his age. He held at different times nearly every office of honor or trust within the gift of the town, representing it in the General Court of 1839. He was promoted through all the military grades up to colonel of militia. He was well read in general history, and his knowledge of American history and biography was very extensive and accurate. He was also well informed upon all the current topics of the day. Attendance at town and parish meetings was a duty, which in health he was never known to neglect. He usually took an active part in the discussion of all matters pertaining to the public welfare, always advocating with voice and vote all measures for the promotion of education, and the good morals of the people. His remarks, at all times characterized by candor and good sense, were listened to with attention and respect, and few men exercised more influence than he in the public affairs of the town. In the course of his business life he had occasion to employ at different times a large number of young men, who were for the time received into his family, and treated as members of it. To them he extended his friendly, almost paternal, care and advice.

The friendships he then formed with them were never broken. Some of them now are prominent members of other and distant communities; but they never forgot their benefactor; nor to call on him for advice when in want of it; and it was always kindly and candidly given. "He was my friend, faithful and just to me," as was said by one at his funeral. His sympathies were on the side of humanity and justice. He was a temperance man from the beginning of that reform. He was also early and earnestly in the anti-slavery movement (being really converted to it long before it took form here, from witnessing the workings and results of slavery while living in South Carolina as early 1811 and 1812).

He joined the Liberty Party at its organization, a stand thirty years ago requiring no small degree of self-sacrifice, and sometimes even involving social ostracism. His anti-slavery views were not unfrequently assailed, but were held with unflinching firmness and defended with zeal and ability, and yet with courtesy towards all who differed from him in opinion. Col. Nye never made a public profession of his religious belief, but "the tree is known by its fruit," and judged by that standard he was undoubtedly a Christian. He will long be remembered as an upright man.

Luther Poland went to Vermont, Oct. 1814, with an ox-team and load of goods. His older brother Joseph carried his wife and babe with a horse and wagon. He spent the following winter in Westford with Mr. George Dewing, who married his sister Lucy. They lived in a small frame house covered with a single thickness of boards without lath, plaster, clapboards or even battens. In the spring of 1816, he moved into a new house which he had built on a lot of land he had purchased, adjoining the farm of Mr. Dewing, but lying in the town of Underhill. This year occurred the famous "cold season," when there was a heavy snow-fall in June, and an early frost in the fall. The corn was entirely destroyed, and most of the other crops. Two or three seasons following were of similar character, though somewhat milder; and the wolf actually stood at the door of not a few of the scattered settlers. Mr. Poland said it seemed as if his family must have suffered from hunger but for his mechanical trade (carpenter and joiner) which brought him a scanty income. After living here a few years, he and his neighbors began to think about a school for their children. There was no schoolhouse within a mile and a half; and a few families living upon the creek road in Underhill, with Mr. Dewing in Westford, petitioned to be set off as a school district, and after a hard struggle their request was granted. All of them being poor they proceeded to build a log schoolhouse fourteen by sixteen feet square, and hired a girl to teach; and here commenced the education of his children and those of several others, nearly all of whom have made worthy men and women.

In the spring of 1821, Mr. Poland removed to Coit's Gore, an unorganized section in Franklin County, and in 1825 was largely instrumental in securing its organization into the town of Waterville. He was its first representative to the State Legislature, and had repeated re-elections.

For twenty years he was annually elected a justice of the peace, performing nearly all the marriage ceremonies which occurred in the town.

In 1823, he with a few others organized a Congregational Church, of which he was one of the deacons for more than twenty years, until he removed from town. The Vermont Watchman and State Journal of June 23, 1880, announces the death of Deacon Luther Poland in the ninety-first year of his age. It further says: "Father Poland was a great reader, and became a very well informed man, but he was of a very modest and retiring disposition, and always enjoyed the quiet of home and retired life far better than official place, yet in all these he served most faithfully."

He was a humble and sincere, but not an ostentatious or bigoted, Christian. Always of limited pecuniary means, but possessed of a liberal spirit, ready to bear his full share of public burdens. His long life was without a stain or blemish.

15. John Cheney, son of Dr. Cheney 8. He early manifested a disposition to apply himself closely to his studies or business, rather than to mingle in the amusements of boys of his age. Withdrawn from school at the age of fourteen, he entered for a time the employ of his brother, then was for two or three years in the store of E. W. and S. H. Skerry at Oakham. Returning to North Brookfield, he became a partner in the mercantile firm of Carey, Ward, & Potter. In 1836, he accepted a partnership in the wholesale boot and shoe firm of Walker, Emerson, & Co. of Boston, which, on the retirement of Mr. Amasa Walker, became Emerson, Harris, & Potter. At the end of the term of copartnership he became senior partner, and remained so until his retirement from active business in 1854. He lived in Boston till 1850, when he purchased a fine estate in Walnut Park, Newton, where he resided until his death. In 1863, he became treasurer of a worsted mill in Newton. In 1866, he was elected president of the National Shoe and Leather Bank of Boston, which office he continued to hold. In 1858, he with his wife united with the Eliot Church of Newton, Rev. Dr. Wellman, pastor. In 1862-3, with his wife and daughter, he spent about seventeen months in Europe. While yet a young man, his habits of industry and business fidelity enabled him to accumulate a competent fortune, which he used in beautifying his house and grounds in Newton, and also in numerous and constant benefactions to public and private charities. After a long and painful illness, he died, Apr. 26, 1870. His pastor preached an appropriate memorial sermon from the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

PUTNAM, Rufus, was son of Deacon Elisha of Sutton, where he was b. Apr. 9, 1738. His father died when he was about seven years old; and after 1747, he lived with his step-father, Capt. John Saddler of Upton. In Mar. 1754, he was bound as apprentice to his brother-in-law, Daniel Matthews of Brookfield, a millwright, where he worked till Mar. 15, 1757, when he enlisted in Capt. Ebenezer Learned's Company for service at Fort Edward, and remained till Feb. 2, 1758. He again enlisted in 1758, in Capt. Jos. Whitcomb's Company, Col. T. Ruggles' Regiment, and served near Lake George. He enlisted Apr. 2, 1759, in Capt. John Sibley's Company (transferred to Capt. William Page's) for the Ticonderoga campaign; returned to Brookfield Dec. 16. He was out in the campaign of 1760, and received a commission of ensign; returned home Dec. 1.

Mar. 3, 1761, Mr. Putnam bought the "mill privilege, mill, and tools," on Horsepond brook in North Brookfield, of Joseph Bartlett. In 1768, Bartlett sells his farm, the mill privilege excepted, to Zebulon Rice; and Jan. 4, 1775, Rice sells the same to Putnam.

Mr. Putnam resided there till the spring of 1781, May 24th of which year he bought the confiscated estate of Daniel Murray of Rutland, for £900, silver money. He remained in Rutland till he removed to Ohio, in Dec. 1787. He d. at Marietta, O., May 4, 1824.

Thus it appears that Gen. Putnam's home, from 1754 to 1781, was in North Brookfield. He united with the First Congregational Church there, Feb. 15, 1770. May 21, 1770, he, in company with Deacon Thomas Rich and Joseph Packard, received from the town a grant of two hundred and sixteen acres of land on Great Ragged Hill. He held various town offices in Brookfield, and was on the Committee of Correspondence in 1774.

Gen. Putnam's military career was sketched in the account of the American Revolution, and need not be repeated here. [See ante, pp. 233, 235, 236.] He subscribed one hundred pounds to the original fund of Leicester Academy, and was a member of the first Board of Trustees, in 1784. His business in Brookfield was running his mill, building mills, and land surveying, in which he was an expert, and the study and practice of which prepared him for the distinguished part he bore, as engineer, in the army — though it should be stated that he made a special study of engineering under Col. Timothy Dwight of Northampton.

Samuel G. Reed commenced carriage making in North Brookfield, June 30, 1830. Cary & Rice bought the land on which the shop was built, at the corner of the streets by the burying-ground, purchasing at the same time all the land west in the same lot bounded by three roads and Col. Adams' mowing lot, on the west, being about ten acres, for $1,000. There were no buildings on the whole lot, except Cary & Rice's store at the south-east corner. The shop built in 1830 was the first building raised in town without liquor. And the marriage of Fannie L. Tilton at Boylston, 1832, was the first wedding without something stronger than coffee as appears by church records at Boylston. In his communication, Mr. Reed further says: "The first Temperance Society was formed in 1830 or 1831, joined by most of the young men, followed by a great revival. If I mistake not, the stoves were first placed in the Meeting-House 1830, or 1831 (1833, C. A., jr), as I recollect Mr. Chauncy Edmonds stating that our feet would be colder than before, etc. When I came to N. B., in 1830, Ezra Batcheller's and Wid. Potter's houses were the only new dwellings in sight. The Whitney Kittridge house was soon raised, and very many were begun in 1831-1833. I commenced building my brick house 1832 (it stood on site of the hotel), and sold it to John C. Potter in 1835 or 1836, and the shops to Freeman Walker in 1835. Bought of Daniel Gilbert, Esq., the lot on which M. T. Reed's houses stand, in 1836, and built the shop the same year, and the house of M. T. Reed in 1837. I recollect Esquire Gilbert said he remembered the rebel Shay laying the single wall that was upon the west side of the road from the burying-ground to Dr. Snell's, for his father. My shop of 1835 was the first building on the lot that extended beyond Charles Duncan's, except the brick store might have been built" (corner of South Main and Summer Streets).

SKERRY, Capt. Samuel 1, son of Samuel, b. Salem, Jan. 18, 1772, and d. there Oct. 22, 1808. In a sermon on his death, Dr. Snell says: "Capt. Skerry removed with his family from Salem to North Brookfield, in the spring of 1805, to enjoy the tranquil pleasures of an agricultural life. On the Tuesday before his death he left his family in health, to transport some of the fruits of his industry to Salem for market. On the Saturday following, about five o'clock P.M., while in Mr. Pope's stable viewing a span of horses, he was kicked by one of them in the lower part of the bowels. Conveyed to the house of a friend, relief was sought for him in vain from human skill and every kind attention. He died on Sabbath evening aged thirty-six, leaving a wife and five small children." 2. Edward N., son of Nathaniel 1. He was gifted with a remarkable inventive genius; was the inventor of the paper-folding machine now in use by many of the newspaper and book-publishing houses in this country and in England, and one of the very important inventions of the times. He also invented a machine for grinding and polishing convex lenses for telescopes and other optical instruments. He shared the common fate of inventors, dying in comparative obscurity, if not in poverty. Having gathered up all his worldly possessions at Washington, D.C., he came here to die, at the age of forty-nine. He had less than one hundred dollars in gold; and when at his request it was taken from his valise, being scarcely able to speak, he exclaimed, "There, see the last dregs of a miserable inventor." 2. Edmund, son of Jacob L. He worked at farming with his father in New Hampshire till he was 19 years old, when he bought his time and came to this town on foot, without money, and brought all his worldly effects in a small bundle. He worked at the currier's trade a short time with Joshua Barnard; then learned the trade of making sale shoes, and worked for Mr. Oliver Ward at that business for two or three years, and then at cutting leather for him in his manufactory. He subsequently began the business of manufacturing on his own account, and soon entered into a contract with Messrs. T. & E. Batcheller & Co. for the manufacture of russet brogans, which he continued several years to the advantage of both parties. In this business he accumulated a handsome property which he invested in real estate; the present "Batcheller House" being built by him for his own residence. Closing his contract with Messrs. Batcheller, he again manufactured for himself; later he became interested with his son-in-law in Chicago; sold his real estate here, went west, and ultimately settled in Detroit, where he died Aug. 31, 1881. He was a man of great industry and perseverance, and will long be remembered here by the numerous buildings and improvements in real estate which he left behind, — monuments of his taste and enterprise. 10. William W., son of Rev. Thomas 5, fitted for college at Monson Academy, and at the Manual-Labor School at Worcester: but, as he says, in a letter, "The college part of it I left out, and took to studying machinery; was in the machine-shop of Otis Tufts in Boston one year; then travelled through the Southern and Western States nearly three years," paying his expenses by taking daguerreotypes. In the spring of 1849 began work in the Essex Machine Shop in Lawrence, remaining in Lawrence six years, most of the time in this shop; a short time in the Pacific mills; went to Rushford, Minn., in the spring of 1855, and located there. Calling the few inhabitants together for a prayer and conference meeting; finding he had all the talking to do, his talking soon took the form of sermonizing, and he was soon established there as a preacher, and has remained there to the present time. He speaks of his three years' travelling as his "college course," and his experience in the machine shop as his "theological course,"—doing for him, he says, "what books alone never could." He is very much respected and beloved by his own people, and in all that region. He m. Dec. 24, 1850, Jane Fay of Winehester, N.H. Children, Thomas C., b. Lawrence, Nov. 11, 1852, d. 4. Roger, son of Roger 3, came to Brookfield with his father, and settled his estate. He lived on what is now North Brookfield territory, and had numerous descendants, not fewer than six of them building houses on what was then, and very properly, called Stevens Street, between the crossing of the brook, below Charles K. Stoddard's house, and what is now the head of "Furnace Pond," where very early a dam was built and mills erected. These mills were owned very early by Capt. Church, father of Mrs. Jeduthan Stevens, but were probably built before his ownership. The houses were on this street, all within a distance of half a mile; first, east of the brook, north side of the road, a small house built by Roger 4; next, on same side, a large house built by Roger 5, and descending from him to his son, Roger 6, who lived and died there in 1849, aged seventy-three; the next house was on the south side, and built and occupied by Silas, a brother of Roger 5; the next, or fourth in order, was on the north side, built and occupied by Ezekiel 7, a brother of the two latter; he never was married, but was a man of much business; the next house was Jude's, another brother of same family, and was on the south side. Jude married, but had no children. The last house toward the pond was a small one, and was for many years occupied by Justus, a son of Silas, who reared a numerous family there. The house was probably occupied by others before his day.

12. Jeduthan, son of Silas 6, was a man of rare business capacity. After the death of his uncle Ezekiel, with whom he had been associated, and who built a pottery a few rods east of his house on Stevens street, he enlarged and continued that business, on quite a large scale for those days. He rebuilt, owned and operated the mills at the east end of that street, for many years; he also engaged largely in the manufacture of brick; he also owned and cultivated a large tract of land in that vicinity, including a large part of the meadows bordering on the brook or river below his mills, which river then ran unobstructed from his mills quite to Quabaug or Podunk Pond.

About the year 1812, he purchased a large tract of land, bordering along on both sides of the "Great Road," so called, in the south-east part of North Brookfield, and built the large brick hotel, known far and wide as the "Stevens Tavern," on or near the spot now occupied by the J. N. Vaughn brick house, which, to a large extent, was constructed from the materials of the old tavern. He opened this tavern in Nov. 1814. In 1825 he bought the meadow adjoining his own, down the river, and built the dam over which the road now passes, and flowed the meadow quite back to, and over his old mill-dam, and making what is now known as the "furnace pond" or "Lake Lashaway." At the south end of this pond the "Brookfield Furnace Company" erected their large works. He was a large owner in the company; but it was not a success, and was discontinued after a few years. The water-power created by the foresight of Mr. Stevens, was the beginning of what is now the flourishing village of East Brookfield, of which he may well be called the father and founder. He possessed sound judgment, skill, courage, energy and perseverance; a man of integrity and punctuality, strictly reliable in all his engagements. He was lieutenant in the militia — a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and also in the war of the Shay's Rebellion. He held from time to time, all the principal offices in town. He d. Sept. 28, 1844. STONE, Francis 1, the first of his family who settled in our neighborhood came to that part of New Braintree which was afterwards annexed to North Brookfield before 1742, when and where his son Francis was born. They were both in the French war; the father was killed at Quebec under Gen. Wolfe in 1759. Francis, jr., being then but seventeen years of age and the eldest son of the family, was sent home to care for his widowed mother. The place occupied by them was the "tan-yard place," occupied successively by their descendants, and afterwards by Col. Pliny Nye, Charles A. Hibbard, James M. Haskins, and others. Children, Francis, b. 1742 2; Jonathan, b. 1751 3.

2. Francis, son of Francis 1; tanner and farmer. He was a man of great decision of character; actively engaged with his father who was killed in the French war, and afterwards in the war of the Revolution, where he soon distinguished himself, and was promoted to the rank of captain. He had the reputation in the service of being a brave and daring soldier, and a successful leader of scouting parties. It was probably on account of his character as an officer in the Revolutionary army that he was selected as a leader in the "Shays' Rebellion" to which he attached himself, and in which he became very prominent, not only as a military leader, but also as chairman of their meetings and of the Committee of Correspondence, in which he manifested great ability as well as zeal; indeed, if there was any wisdom in counselling rebellion, he was one of the wisest counsellors in that ill-advised and ill-resulting movement. At the defeat and final dispersion of the rebel army at Petersham in Feb. 1787, he was among those who fled for refuge to the State of Vermont, where he remained until the decree of amnesty was issued by Gov. Hancock, when he returned to his home and the occupations of peace. He always justified the rebellion, and never was heard to express any regret in relation to it, except at its failure. He m. (1) Sept. 11, 1760, Martha Chase, daughter of Abel and Sarah of Sutton; (2) June, 1777, Sarah Witt, d. Dec. 12, 1802, aged sixty. Children, Amy, b. —, unmarried, d. Mar. 1, 1839; Sally, m. Hugh Barr of New Braintree; Luther, left home and not heard from; Jonathan, drowned in a clay-pit in North Brookfield in infancy; Calvin, d. Enfield, m. (1) Esther Dane of West Brookfield, and had six children; (2) Sophia Abbott of West Brookfield, and had three children; Francis, b. Nov. 9, 1779 4.

3. Jonathan, son of Francis 1, surveyor and farmer; was b. on the "tan-yard place," near Waite's Corner; was 8 years old when his father was killed; means of education limited; he, however, learned surveying, which afterwards became of service to him; was apprenticed to his elder brother, who was a farmer and tanner; left before his term of service was out, and went on a two years' whaling voyage; returned, and enlisted in the Revolutionary army, Col. Larned's regiment; was made an orderly sergeant, and lieutenant, in 1776; was with Gen. Rufus Putnam at the siege of Boston, when he erected the fortifications which compelled the British to evacuate Boston. In Jan. 1777, he was commissioned paymaster in Gen. Putnam's regiment; was at Saratoga and Stillwater, and under Gates at the surrender of Burgoyne. In 1778 he was at West Point; in 1781 was made captain, in which rank he served to the end of the war. He then bought a farm in North Brookfield, which was then the home of Gen. Putnam, with whom, in 1786-7, he surveyed the lands in Maine, then belonging to Massachusetts; was with the government troops in defence of the public stores in Springfield, against the Shays' Rebellion (when his brother, Capt. Francis, was with Shays). In or about 1788, he joined the "Ohio Company," and in that year went to Marietta to explore; 1789, July 4, he left Brookfield with his family, arriving at his new home at Belpre, O., near Marietta, in December of that year. They went with two ox-teams, with a large wagon, with cows for family use, and a horse for each of the ladies; several other families being in their company. After crossing the mountains, they obtained a flat-boat, in which they went down the river to Belpre, where they built and lived in a log cabin, like all others of the new settlers. They had scarcely got settled in their new home when the Indian war broke out, and threatened destruction to their settlement. Nearly all were obliged to take refuge in the fort. Capt. Stone removed his family into "Farmer's Castle," the Belpre garrison, but afterwards, with his neighbors, erected four block-houses on his farm, moved into them, and remained till the war was over. Every man had to perform military duty in some capacity. A guard was kept constantly on duty. Sentinels, duly posted in the bastions at night, every half-hour called out the time, saying, "Look out sharp!" and were answered by all the others in turn, "All's well;" doors and windows all made bullet-proof. Scouts continually searching the woods for Indians; all alternately laboring and keeping guard. Here Capt. Stone's military experience was of great advantage, and made him one of the most efficient defenders of the place. During this war, there were killed in the Ohio Company's settlement, and on the opposite shore of the Ohio, 38 persons, and 10 taken prisoners. It is not known that more than 4 Indians were killed. Not till the peace of 1795 was the success of the settlement assured. After that they left the garrison, improved their farms, and opened up the country. Capt. Stone was appointed treasurer of Washington County by Winthrop Sargent, acting governor of the territory in 1792. He was also appointed by the territorial legislature in 1799, with Rufus Putnam and Benjamin Ives Gilman, to lay out the University lands at Athens. He d. before this work was completed, Mar. 24, 1801. He was a member of the society or order of the "Cincinnati." He and every member of the settlement were staunch Federalists, and, in spite of the great efforts in favor of Jefferson, they were all firm adherents of Washington, with whom Capt. Stone, and several others of the company, had been associated in military camp life. His patriotism seemed to be inherited by his grandsons, no fewer than nine of them being in the late war against the Rebellion: of Benjamin F.'s sons, John in Ohio 39th, George N. in Ohio 73d, wounded at Bull Run, d. in hospital at Washington; Francis's son Edward in Ohio 39th; Samuel's son James in commissary department, with rank of captain, brevetted major at the close of the war. His service was in Missouri. Col. John had four sons in the war: Bradley B., in Ohio 92d, followed Sherman to the sea, was promoted to captain before he was discharged at the end of the war; Simon Bolivar, Augustus D., Jonathan F., all in 148th Ohio National Guards, were at City Point and Bermuda Hundred, where Simon Bolivar d. of malarial fever. TOMBLIN. The ancestors of Oren A. Tomblin were undoubtedly of those who came from England about 1630, and later. Savage says Edward Tomblin of Lynn came, no doubt, in the fleet with Winthrop; admitted freeman, 1631; representative at the first court of deputies, 1634, and the next year "clerk of the writs." 2d, Edward, of Lynn, perhaps son, perhaps nephew, of the preceding, came in the "Susan and Ellen," in 1635, but went home again, lived in London, a merchant; bought of Joseph Belknap, Jan. 31, 1649, his estate called Blackbush right, near Hampton Court. 3d, Timothy of Lynn, freeman, Mar. 4, 1633, representative in almost every court from 1635 to 1644. 4th, Benjamin, at Lynn, came in the "Susan and Ellen" in 1635, aged 18, with another Edward, aged 30, supposed to be brothers, and likely to be sons of either the first Edward or his brother. 5th, John of Boston, m. Dec. 26, 1660, Sarah, daughter of Matthew Barnes. 6th, Ralph, Massachusetts, 1636, of whom no more is heard.

The following are supposed to be descended from John above, but record evidence is wanting:—

TOMBLIN, Isaac 1, of Brookfield, m. Dec. 10, 1696, to Mary Waite of Marlboro, where he was deacon in the church. His children were, Isaac, b. 1697 2; Hezekiah, b. 1700; Sarah; Ruhamah 3.

He lived in what is now Westboro, on the farm of the late Deacon Isaac Davis. His wife d. Nov. 16, 1725. He d. June 24, 1745. Hezekiah lived on "Tomblin Hill," near the line of Shrewsbury. When the church in Northboro was formed, he and his father were set off to that church.

TUCKER, Robert, b. Dorsetshire, England, d. in Milton, Mass., 1682, aged 80. Most of the families by the name of Tucker residing in this vicinity are the descendants of this Robert Tucker, who settled in Weymouth about 1635, where he had nine children, viz.: Sarah, b. 1639; James, b. 1640; Joseph, b. 1643; Elizabeth, b. 1644; Benjamin, b. 1646; Ephraim, b. 1652; Manasseh, b. 1654; Rebecca; and Mary. He removed to Milton about 1662, and purchased a tract of land still known as "Brush Hill," where "his character and education exercised an important influence for many years." In his will, dated Mar. 7, 1681, he speaks of his "new house," indicating that he built a house not long before. This is still standing on its original site, and, in 1868, was occupied by some of his descendants. Ephraim Tucker, son of Robert, had a son Ephraim, who lived on Brush Hill until 1745, when he removed to Pomfret, Ct., where he d. Jan. 26, 1774. His descendants are represented in North Brookfield in the person of Lyman Tucker. Benjamin, son of Robert, m. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Spencer.

He was also a proprietor in the town of Woodstock, Ct., at the laying out of that town, which was then called New Roxbury, and considered a part of Worcester County.

The second Benjamin had a son Samuel, b. July 5, 1716, who settled in Spencer, and was the ancestor of most of the families by the name of Tucker who originated there.

Joseph, sixth son of Benjamin, with several others, bought land in the south part of the so called "Mash Mugget Purchase," now Pomfret, Ct., and was the first of the name to settle in that vicinity. He also inherited land there in the settlement of his father's estate. His name appears in connection with twenty-two others in the list of those who founded the church, May 3, 1713. He had a son Joseph, who m. Aug. 6, 1744, Elizabeth Gassett, and d. June 13, 1745, at the siege of Louisburg, Cape Breton Island, leaving an infant son Ephraim, b. 6. Phineas, son of Nathaniel 5, blacksmith; moved to Sturbridge with his father, whence he removed to Woodstock, Ct.

He bought a large tract of land in Stafford, Vt., commenced clearing it, built a saw-mill, intending to remove his family there, which was then a frontier settlement. But his brother-in-law, Asa Hyde, who owned a farm in Woodstock, exchanged it with him for a part of his Vermont purchase, and removed there, Mr. Walker remaining in Woodstock. His patriotism was illustrated by the fact that when he was making his purchase in Vermont he had in his saddle-bags a thousand silver dollars, for which he was offered the whole town of Peacham; but, knowing that the colonies were in almost "perishing need" of money, and in as much as he was not then actively in the field, he chose to serve his country by loaning to it the thousand dollars; for which he only received, long after, a piece of land worth about fifty dollars.

He had previously been in the French war, and also in the battles of Crown Point and Ticonderoga. A man of sterling principles, prominent in all the reforms of the time; a strong temperance man; a humble and devout Christian. He lived respected, and died lamented.

He was captain of the Military Company in Woodstock, Ct., during the Revolutionary war; and was called out thirteen times for longer or shorter periods, once during the whole season, and his wife did the work on the farm with the help of her son Leonard, who was only twelve years old. He d. 1829. He m. Susanna Hyde, d. 1838, aged ninety-five. Children, Leonard, b. Oct. 4, 1766; blacksmith and card maker; d. Sept. 9, 1851; m. Mar. 31, 1790, Chloe Child of Woodstock, d. 7. Deacon Walter, son of Phineas 6, b. in Woodstock, Ct., May 27, 1773; blacksmith and farmer. He removed from Woodstock, Ct., to the North Parish in Brookfield in the year 1800, and purchased for $550 six and a half acres of land with a house, barn, and blacksmith shop thereon, and succeeded to the blacksmithing business of Rufus Hardy, a former owner of the place. He here erected new buildings which were located on the rising land a hundred rods north of the present First Congregational Meeting-house, one of the pleasantest situations in town, afterwards owned and occupied by his son Amasa, who improved the place by adding a front of more modern style of architecture to the house, beautifying the grounds, planting trees, etc. The place is now owned by Mrs. A. H. Batcheller, daughter of Hon. Amasa Walker.

Here Deacon Walker lived over thirty years, and died Dec. 14, 1835. He was appointed deacon of the Second Church in Brookfield, now the First Congregational Church of North Brookfield, in 1806, which office he held till his death. He was a prominent citizen for many years, or during his entire residence here. His whole character is justly described by Rev. Dr. Snell in his fortieth anniversary sermon in 1838:—

“Deacon Walker, who continued in office nearly thirty years, was a very useful man in church as well as in society. His influence was uniformly in support of order, peace, and religion. He aided in works of benevolence at home and abroad, and wished that to be done which would promote the cause of Christ, while he afforded his personal service in the prayer-meeting, the religious conference, and the Sabbath school.” He m. Lyman Whiting, now Rev. Lyman Whiting, D.D., was b. Apr. 28, 1817, and lived till fifteen years old on the old homestead with his father, attending the common school when not at work on the farm; in his fourteenth year he experienced a change of life, determined to obtain a public education, and attended one term at Amherst Academy.

In March, 1835, commenced the study of Greek, and the following October was admitted to Amherst College; having attended a select school in town during the summer. Owing to intense application to study, his health failed before the middle of the second year. A year at home on the farm, the winter spent in teaching the Centre School, restored his health. The next spring went to Cambridge, where in private study and teaching, the years of college life were passed, bringing the beginning of theological study. He graduated at Andover in 1842; was married to Miss Sophia Chamberlin of Westboro, Jan. 5, 1843; was settled the same year in Brookfield, as colleague with Rev. Micah Stone, remaining there four years; settled over the First Congregational Church in Lawrence, Mass., in June, 1847.

In 1851, he was settled over the church in Reading, Mass., and, in a few months, his health failing, his people sent him to Europe to recover. This was the year of the World's Exposition, concerning which he wrote a lecture, which was very popular, and its repetition more than paid the expense of his European tour.

He was soon settled in Portsmouth, N.H., and remained there three years, when he accepted a call to Brooklyn, N.Y., where he remained but a few months. He then accepted a call to the High Street Church, Providence, R.I.,—the renewal of a call he had seven years before declined,—and near the close of the year 1859 was settled there. After a pastorate there of little more than five years, he was called to Dubuque, Ia., to a church struggling under a discouraging debt, and otherwise in a low condition, but under his ministry they were soon enabled to pay their debts; their membership was doubled, so that they were able to pay his successor double the amount of salary he received. He left Dubuque, and accepted a call to the church in Janesville, Wis. He says, "Its beautiful new sanctuary, and cultured, ongoing people, made it, as it still is, one of the choicest gates of Zion to be found in the land, and happy is the watchman called to stand over its portal." In the fourth year there, he was seized with a painful lameness, which prevented him from freely associating with his people; compelled him, if he preached, to do so supported by crutch, or sitting; and after several months of suffering, obliged him to relinquish his charge.

After a few months, he accepted the pastoral charge of a Congregational church in Philadelphia, where he remained three years.

It is now disbanded. His next settlement was at Charlestown, W. Va., where he labored a few years. He is now acting pastor at South Williamstown. In addition to his pastoral labors, he has been much employed in delivering sermons and addresses on various occasions, religious, literary, and historical; writing for magazines and journals, among them the Congregational and Presbyterian Reviews. He was for a while associate editor of an eight page monthly, which was after merged in the "Advance." He adds, "In the ten years lived there (the Western States), upwards of thirty orations and addresses were made before theological seminaries, colleges and academies in four adjoining States." Also he was trustee in two colleges and the leading ladies' seminary in the West. He received the honorary degree of A.M. at Amherst College in 1844, and D.D. at Iowa College in 1868. Dr. Whiting is still engaged in the work of the ministry, with the prospect of many years of usefulness before him; though in his long career he has devoted himself primarily and assiduously to his parochial work, he has been well and widely known. And wherever known, he has been recognized, it is believed, as a laborious student, an original thinker, a terse and striking writer, an impressive preacher, and a sound and able theologian, true to his convictions, and faithful in his utterance of the truth.

ELIZABETH X TURNER.

There is a probability that John Woolcott the signer of the above deed was father of John 2, who was born 1632-3, and married at Newbury, Nov. 20, 1653, Mary, daughter of Richard Thurlow of Newbury. He was one of several petitioners belonging to Newbury, who in May, 1659, received a grant of land eight miles square, on Saco river [Wells, Me. ?]; he owned a homestead of one hundred acres in Newbury; and in Oct. 1661 sells six hundred acres on the Merrimack river, joining Newbury town line. He built the bridge between Newbury and Rowley in June, 1663, and a windmill at Marblehead in 1679, when he was called a millwright, though he is designated carpenter usually.

Mr. Woolcott was one of Capt. Appleton's Troopers, who were sent in September, 1675, on an expedition to protect the settlements on the Connecticut river, then menaced by the Indians; and as the line of march took the company through Brookfield, it is likely that he noticed and was favorably impressed with the location, where he afterwards made his home. He sold his homestead and rights of freehold in Newbury (reserving two freehold lots), April, 1687, to Benjamin Rolf, and removed with family to Brookfield, where his son John had pitched the year before. The house then erected by the father or son, or by both jointly, at what is known as "Woolcott's Corner," was one of the first dwellings set up on what is now North Brookfield territory. The following grants of land are on record: "May 27, 1687, granted to Mr. Woolcott, 40 acres of upland, bounded W. by his son John's land. Feb. 24, 1687-8, to Mr. Woolcott, 20 acres meadow, 4 acres lieth S. of the road against Joseph Woolcott's upland, and next to 8 acres that lyeth more easterly, only the road parteth it, and the 8 acres turns N. to the cranberry bushes and so along by Smith's land, thence to Mr. Woolcott's, and so on W. and N. by his lands: Also 8 acres meadow on Seven-mile river, and between the Seven and Five-mile rivers, the whole piece in that neck on the E. side of Five-mile river and to the upland of the Seven-mile river. March 3, 1687-8, to Mr. Woolcott, 10 acres on the Pine Plain."

In the fall of 1688, as appears from Major Pyncheon's Diary, Mr. Woolcott was in charge of the garrison then stationed at Brookfield; probably the soldiers were quartered at his own house. He died at Brookfield in the latter part of September, 1690. His will recorded in the Registry at Northampton is as follows:—

his last will & testam^t as followz.

Dated in Brookfield this 21 day of Sept^r 1690.

This by the wil of Mr. John Woolcot is given to his daughter Mary fifteen pound, and to his daughter Sarah fifteen pound, and to his daughter Elizabeth thirty pound,

ANNAH X OEN.

In the prsence of the Corte at Springfield Sept. 30, 1690:

Sam^l Oen [Owen] one of the witnesses hereto made oath that he was prsent wⁿ Jno. Woolcot, deceased, did signe and seale this Instrument as his Last Wil & Testam^t, & that he was of sound mind wⁿ he did it, but seeing the Testator constituted no Executor, This Corte do grant to Mary Woolcot (widow to s^d Jno. Woolcot) & to John Woolcot and to Joseph Woolcot, Administratorship, intending & expecting that they perform according to the above s^d Will of s^d deceased.

Attest SAM^l PARTRIGG, Clerke.

Decemb^r: 31: 1690: This Will of the above mentioned John Woolcot is here entered in these Records frō the original on file.

pr John Holyoke Clerke.

From the peculiar terms of the will it is evident that all the eight children were then living; that the three older daughters, named in the order of birth, were then married, and received specific legacies; and the three younger daughters, "unmarried," and then under age, were to be cared for by their mother, and at her decease to receive all the personal estate, money and goods then remaining.

The children of John and Mary Woolcott (born in Newbury), were: Mary, b. 1654; Sarah, b. Aug. 23, 1657, m. Apr. 6, 1674, Thomas Chadwick of Newbury, who removed to Watertown 1678; John, b. Oct. 25, 1660 3; Joseph, b. Feb. 2, 1663-4 4; Elizabeth, b. Jan. 24, 1666-7; Martha, b. Sept. 13, 1670; Lydia, b. Jan. 15, 1673-4; Hannah, b. Apr. 18, 1679.

3. John, son of John 2, b. Newbury, Oct. 25, 1660, m. Jan. 4, 1684-5, Joanna, daughter of Nathaniel Emerson of Ipswich. He was one of the first company that attempted the re-settlement of Brookfield in 1686; probably came upon the ground that spring, and took up land which was confirmed to him by grant of the Committee. Perhaps he built a house that year. He certainly was living here the next spring when his father came on in May. He received several grants of land, viz., a home-lot of forty acres in 1687 [besides one-half of his father's lands]; forty-five acres of meadow in 1707; fourteen acres of upland north of his meadow on Seven-mile river in 1710; ten acres in 1714; twenty acres in 1716; "July 12, 1718, the Committee taking into consideration the great expense Mr. John Woolcott hath been att in Brookfield in building a grist-mill; and now he is designing and has done considerable towards the building of a Saw-mill, which is probable to be very beneficial to the Town: grant him 40 acres of upland;" "Nov. 8, 1718, to John Woolcott, sen., 10 acres in his father's right, and 2 acres in his own right E. of Five-mile river, bounded E. on his own land, N. on Boston road, extending from the southwest corner of his own upland along by Boston road till it comes to Five-mile river, and from this river by the path, and so then bounded by the said river till it comes to his own meadow; and 20 acres more upland on the Pine plain, S. E. of his own house; Dec. 30, 1720, 20 acres upland lying east of meadow formerly Stephen Jennings', and 120 acres S. of Oxford road and E. on Town line, and 42 acres S. of his former grant on Pine plain."

The house which he built as early as 1723 is still standing, and known as the "Parks' Tavern stand," now owned by the widow of George Forbes. He was a leading man in civil affairs, selectman in 1727, and prominent in the church. In April, 1747, when he was eighty-seven years old, he and his wife Joanna join in deed-ing to their son Nathaniel "for his kindness to us in our old age," all their real and personal estate in Brookfield, excepting enough for their comfortable maintenance.

The children of John and Joanna Woolcott (so far as is known) were: Joanna, b. Newbury, Jan. 22, 1686-7, m. Samuel Wheeler of Brookfield, and d. July 4, 1751; Sarah, m. Apr. 13, 1719, Thomas Gibbs of Brookfield; Ruth, unmarried; administration on her estate granted to her father, Apr. 11, 1723; John, b. about 1696 5; Nathaniel 6; Lydia, m. Apr. 23, 1734, Ebenezer How of Brookfield; Hannah, m. Mar. 14, 1733-4, Roger Stevens of Brookfield.

4. Joseph, son John 2, b. Newbury, Feb. 2, 1663-4, m. Mar. 4, 1686, Rebecca, daughter of Launcelot and Joanna (Adams) Granger of Newbury (afterwards of Suffield, Ct.) He probably came to Brookfield with his brother, and took up a home-lot, which was confirmed to him by the Committee — though he may not have built and brought his family here till later. "Feb. 24, 1687-8, granted to Joseph Woolcott, 3 acres of meadow next his upland at S. corner. The brook is the bounds between his and his brother John's, making his complete grant of 15 acres; also 30 acres more on S. side of the road."

In the year 1692, Joseph Woolcott's house and most of his movable goods were destroyed by fire. And he had hardly got settled in his new house, when the terrible tragedy occurred, by which his home was broken up. [See ante, pp. 146-152.] He probably married a second wife, by whom he had Sarah and Rebecca, and perhaps a son Josiah. "Sarah Woolcott, singlewoman, of Newtown, Nassau Island, Queens Co., N.Y., for 20 shillings, sells Aug. 1, 1728, to Jonathan Nutting, gunsmith of Plainfield, Ct., 50 acres in Brookfield lying on the country road, formerly owned by Joseph Woolcott, deceased." "David Jones and wife Rebecca, daughter of said Joseph Woolcott, of Oyster Bay, Queens Co., Nassau Island, also execute Aug. 5, 1728, a release of claim in said land." [Registry at Springfield, E. 304.] He d. before 1710.

The children of Joseph and Rebecca Woolcott, found on the records were: Joanna, b. Suffield, Ct., Sept. 13, 1687, killed by the Indians July 27, 1693; Joseph, b. Aug. 30, 1689 7; Hannah, b. Nov. 8, 1691, killed by the Indians July 27, 1693.

5. John, son of John 3. [For his romantic history and tragic death, see ante, pp. 172-3.] He received the following grants of land in Brookfield: —

"Nov. 8, 1718, 25 acres on Pine plain, southeast of his father's house, and 9 acres bounded S. on the country road, W. on heirs of Stephen Jennings, deceased, and 6 acres meadow, on Five-mile river, N.E. of the road; Feb. 18, 1719, 40 acres bounded W. by the pond, and 20 acres, bounded W. on Amos Rice; Mar. 4, 1720, 20 acres on Pine plain, S. of the road; Jan. 10, 1720-1, 70 acres E. of Five-mile river near the old bridge, bounded S. on Edward Walker and E. on the Town line, and 10 acres W. of the last, N. on Bettis' meadow." He was in the military service, in Captain Samuel Wright's company, Nov. 1723 to June, 1724; and the next year was out with Capt. Timothy Dwight. He was killed by the Indians on Connecticut river, Apr. 17, 1728. He m. Oct. 12, 1727, Dinah, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Walker of Brookfield, who m. (2) 1730, Peter Rice. Child, John, b. 6. Nathaniel, son of John 3, b. about 1700, received a grant of 60 acres of land May 23, 1718, "on the same terms as to young men under age;" and later received grants in own right, amounting in all to 230 acres, and in addition inherited from his father his large estate including the mills. He was for many years a prominent man in town and church affairs; selectman 1747, '49, '59, and '60; was a soldier in Capt. Eleazar Melvin's Company "for the defence of the eastern frontier, May to Oct., 1754; captain in command of a company that marched to the relief of Fort William Henry in Aug. 1757; and was commissioned Oct. 1761, captain of the third company in Brookfield, in Third Regiment Worcester County Militia. He d. Nov. 1771. In the inventory of his estate is "one Negro man servant £30." He m. (1) Nov. 28, 1723, Deborah, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Walker of Brookfield; (2) July 21, 1743, Beulah, daughter of Joseph and Hannah Woolson of Weston; (3) Dorothy Richardson of Brookfield (intentions of marriage published Oct. 1755); (4) at Concord, Jan. 26, 1758, Mrs. Mary Jones of Concord, who survived him, and m. (3) Dec. 23, 1772, Capt. William Ayres of Brookfield as his third wife. Children, Olivier, b. Mar. 1, 1724-5, m. (1) Jan. 11, 1749, Abigail Mills, (2) Jan. 18, 1759, Elizabeth Butman; Ruth, b. Feb. 24, 1726-7, m. Nov. 6, 1755, William Henshaw of Brookfield; Martha, b. Jan. 7, 1728-9, m. 1752, Capt. John Waite of Brookfield, and d. Dec. 4, 1807; Nathaniel, b. May 3, 1730, m. Apr. 14, 1738, m. Dec. 2, 1767, Mary Adams.

7. Joseph, son of Joseph 4; carpenter. In Jan. 1710, he sells Capt. Thomas Baker of Brookfield forty acres and a house there, where his father formerly lived, inherited from his grandfather John Woolcott, deceased; and the following March sells to his uncle, John Woolcott, several lots of land formerly his grandfather's. He was of Springfield in 1711, where he sells his interest in the estate of his uncle, Robert Granger of Suffield. He was living in Roxbury in 1728; and in Brookfield in March 1732-3, when he sells to his uncle, John Woolcott, all his rights in the estate of his grandfather, John Woolcott, deceased. His after residence is unknown. He m. at Roxbury, July 14, 1725, Elizabeth Mossman.
