this—his darling scheme. We have, therefore, every reason to believe that the people of Kansas will be permitted to pass upon the labors of the Constitutional Convention. In such event, the social condition of the inschate State is determined in advance: for it the Constitution contains a clause recognizing slavery, and the electors are allowed to vote separately on that provision, they will assuredly reject it. If the law should require them to vote against the entire Constitution, they will seal it with their reprobation, if it contains a pro-slavery feature. No despise and repeated waters and his policy, and that a preservery Blade Constitution, should be framed, adopted, not submitted to the people, and sent up forthwith to the Congress of the United Blates for action, and that there it should be finally passed, and thus become the organic law of Karsasa—how long would such a Constitution be suffered to exist without amendment? We have already seen that on the very first political topics on which the popular will of Karsasa has been registered, a direct and unequivooal expression of sympathy with Northern Abolition destrines has been manifested, by the success of the Freesoil party. Explain it as we may; sacribe it to no matter what sinister and treacherous sightences, this is the fact. The majority of the voters of Karsas voters recignized under the infamous heresy which bestows the right of suffrage or residents of three mouths' standing, and on aliens who have not renounced their birth—are of the Black Republican stripe. If, then, by the action of the Constitutional Convention, or in any other conceivable manner, Kansas were to enter the United as a slave State, we presume that the very first Legislature which would assemble in the new State would provide for taxing the sense of the people on expunging so much of the Constitution as related to slavery. NEW ORLEANS, TUESDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 20, 1857.

From the Continent we have nothing to supersede in interest the meeting of the Emperors of France and Russia at Weimar. The Continental papers devote a large space to a discussion of probable results. The continental papers devote a large space to a discussion of probable results. The results of the interview is a guarantee of the stability of peace, and that indeed the Sovereigns of France and Russia have been the pacifications of Europe.

Advices from Madrid state that the Ministerial crists approaches its end. Karvaer, hated by the Court and by all whom he has driven from power, is now isolated.
