BRACING WEATHER.
At last the misty days give place
To those more keen and glancing,
That stir the blood and mend the pace
And set the thought dancing.

A "spare rib" of pork replaced the usual turkey at Squire Arnold's, for
the poultry had all gone early in the summer to feed a band of marauding
British troops.

"Then we marched back to Fort George, and there the British flag was still flying. The redcoats had nailed
it to the flag-staff and taken down the steps that it should not be removed.

[Special correspondence of the Gazette.]
Our Boston Letter.
BOSTON, Nov. 26, 1879.
We have had some musical sensations of late at the Hub, and you all know how we delight in musical sensations! Among other things we have had with us—as they say at the Sunday-School concerts—the great
and glorious author of the "Pinafore"
music, Dr. Arthur Sullivan, whom we have feted and feasted to our hearts' content, and presumed to his stomachs.

ple which complete my list for to-day
—all of which came in the package
from Lee & Shepard's—the most valuable is the third of George M.
Towler's "Heroes of History" series,
Magellan, or the First Voyage Round
the World, "Vasco da Gama" and
"Pizarro" have preceded; "Marco Polo" is in press; others are in preparation; and every parent who would
give his boys and girls books at once
interesting and instructive, will not fail to secure every number of the set.
From the pen of J. T. Frowbridge,
a favorite with young people, comes a
volume of bright, sparkling stories,
called "Young Joe and Other Boys;"
and from that of the Rev. Daniel Wise, D. D., comes the third of the
"Winwood Cliff Series," "Roderick Ashcroft," a story showing how a
may boy and a noble girl bravely
battled with great troubles.

DR. GEORGE L. AUSTIN & CO.,
70 MILK STREET, BOSTON, MASS.
FOR SALE BY
John Townsend, Ph. G.,
Broad St., East Weymouth,
Also at WYMAN'S, and the
WEYMOUTH DRUG STORE.

OUR FIRST THANKSGIVING.
It was the autumn of 1783, a cold
season the people said; a hard one for the poor, and a harder one was con-ting. The seven years' strain upon the finances of the young nation was making itself felt in the innermost
recesses of country homes as well as
among the discontented troops clamoring for their long-delayed pay and scheming to crown their patriotic
struggle for liberty by establishing an absolute monarchy, with their well-
beloved leader at its head as king.

Priscilla, the Squire's
"home-girl," was by no means either servant or slave. The daughter of a farmer in a neighboring village, she had been brought up by Madam Arnold, instructed in all the housekeeping lore of the day, and was as well
qualified as any New England girl
whatever to sit at the head of a doctor's, judge's, or minister's table.—
The enviable position of President of the United States not then having assumed its place as an incentive to school-boy ambition.

WEYMOUTH
HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
WEYMOUTH, Oct. 4th, 1879.
A few days since the writer had described to him the location of a long
neglected and forgotten burial-place,
probably known to but very few of the present generation. On visiting the spot he found a few legible inscriptions, which are given below.—
Hardly a single stone was erect, but
broken and shattered beyond all repairing, their inscriptions defaced and utterly lost.

—According to the investigations
of a Russian professor, Dr. Monassein, singing is an excellent means
of preventing consumption, and for the development and strengthening
of the chest it is more efficient than even gymnastic exercises. The professor has examined 229 singers varying in age from 9 to 53 years, and found that the chest is greater and
stronger among them than among
persons of any other occupation.

HONORED AND BLESSED.
When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced,
which would cure such a wide range
of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many
were sceptical; but proof of its merit
by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and today has discovered that
that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.

AUSTIN'S PHOSPHATINE.
INVALUABLE

PERILS OF MODERN DRIVING.
The pipe of the equal in the stablefield, The scent of the new-mown hay, And all day long the shout and throng Of the reaper so far away.

The restless racket amid the grain, The noise of the reaping machine, And ever again the low of pain, Comes o'er the meadows green.

Oh! sweet is the field where meadow arks fit, And singlets in tows and drees, Where the ganger sits, and yells a fight, His fingers among the leaves.

No longer we fear on the hillside serene, The scythe's clinkety-clink, But the mowing-machine cuts his leg, I swear, Before he ever gets to the grain.

With forebodings and teases good wife hears, The man of the house good-bye; The man of the house good-bye; The man of the house good-bye; Sicking four inches off his eye.

When the threshers come with wall and din, How burdened with sows the hour, As they pause to scan what left of the man Chawed up in an eight-rose power.

Oh! pause and listen! I have over the hills, What voice for the doct'rs begs? To the stable where he lies, an ailed to tell, The steam harrow ran o'er his legs.

Literary Reading.

A YANKEE CINDERELLA.

"I love music so dearly that when the little Spensers tump on the wrong notes by accident, with their stubbed fingers, I long to shake the poor little souls limb from limb."

"I mean to try something else, though I'm not fitted for any nice proper thing, see me I'd be expected to do. Mrs. Livingstone asked me the other day why I didn't write books. She had heard of some young lady who supported a widowed mother and herself in luxury by her pen! I couldn't help laughing."

"To present such a very unusual young lady to me, who had never written a line for the press! At the prices I have heard that authors get, except very noted ones, I imagine one would have to write by the cord to live in luxury."

"But we are not looking for that, mother dear. All we want is an easy mind between us—lissen—I've a lovely plan to unfold."

"You remember old Miss Elkins who sometimes scolded for us. She used to tell me of a very little seashore town she went to summers, where things were so cheap. So what did I do last week but write to the postmaster, and ask him if there was a furnished house in town to let cheap—and what do you think he says? Why, that Mrs. Abiel Smith has gone to Oregon for a year to see her step-daughter, and that her son will let her house for fifty dollars. We have two hundred dollars and don't owe a cent."

"Will you come, come, come over the hills from here, in my Abiel Smith's house take pleasure share?"

"The very thought of sea-air does me good," said Mrs. Leeds, "but will two hundred dollars stretch over a year if you stretch it ever so thin?"

"I'll make it," said Ella, laughing in her old merry way, which cheered her mother's heart. "Play I'm a good fairy who will do such pleasing things if you won't ask questions. Starring in the county would be better than stitting in this hot, close room all summer. I never thought we'd live in a 'cheap' story book, like the folks in Dickens's stories."

Before the middle of May, Ella and her mother were settled in Mrs. Smith's little yellow-washed house. What a pleasant change it was from the three hard years which had passed since the happy old days when Mr. Leeds was living.

"I'm to be the maid," said Ella, "and why should not I? Here's the bill of fare—oatmeal and milk for breakfast, with coffee (and milk for tea)."

AUSTIN'S PHOSPHATINE.

PERILS OF MODERN DRIVING.
The pipe of the equal in the stablefield, The scent of the new-mown hay, And all day long the shout and throng Of the reaper so far away.

The restless racket amid the grain, The noise of the reaping machine, And ever again the low of pain, Comes o'er the meadows green.

Oh! sweet is the field where meadow arks fit, And singlets in tows and drees, Where the ganger sits, and yells a fight, His fingers among the leaves.

No longer we fear on the hillside serene, The scythe's clinkety-clink, But the mowing-machine cuts his leg, I swear, Before he ever gets to the grain.

With forebodings and teases good wife hears, The man of the house good-bye; The man of the house good-bye; The man of the house good-bye; Sicking four inches off his eye.

When the threshers come with wall and din, How burdened with sows the hour, As they pause to scan what left of the man Chawed up in an eight-rose power.

Oh! pause and listen! I have over the hills, What voice for the doct'rs begs? To the stable where he lies, an ailed to tell, The steam harrow ran o'er his legs.

A YANKEE CINDERELLA.

"I love music so dearly that when the little Spensers tump on the wrong notes by accident, with their stubbed fingers, I long to shake the poor little souls limb from limb."

"I mean to try something else, though I'm not fitted for any nice proper thing, see me I'd be expected to do. Mrs. Livingstone asked me the other day why I didn't write books. She had heard of some young lady who supported a widowed mother and herself in luxury by her pen! I couldn't help laughing."

"To present such a very unusual young lady to me, who had never written a line for the press! At the prices I have heard that authors get, except very noted ones, I imagine one would have to write by the cord to live in luxury."

"But we are not looking for that, mother dear. All we want is an easy mind between us—lissen—I've a lovely plan to unfold."

"You remember old Miss Elkins who sometimes scolded for us. She used to tell me of a very little seashore town she went to summers, where things were so cheap. So what did I do last week but write to the postmaster, and ask him if there was a furnished house in town to let cheap—and what do you think he says? Why, that Mrs. Abiel Smith has gone to Oregon for a year to see her step-daughter, and that her son will let her house for fifty dollars. We have two hundred dollars and don't owe a cent."

"Will you come, come, come over the hills from here, in my Abiel Smith's house take pleasure share?"

"The very thought of sea-air does me good," said Mrs. Leeds, "but will two hundred dollars stretch over a year if you stretch it ever so thin?"

Some instantaneous views of both Houses from the galleries. The falling of the Gavel, the Senate over the financial and political news.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7th. Congress is with us again and I presume we should be happy. A due regard for executive power, however, compels me to assert boldly and defiantly, that during my somewhat extended observation I cannot recall a period when such utter and startling indifference to the presence or absence of that distinguished crowd has existed as at the present moment. I am inclined to believe, as a gentleman from the West informed me the other evening, that for once in the history of the republic, the country is altogether too busy to bother itself with the petty wranglings of politicians. Taken all in all it was a gloomy opening. I have frequently attended funeral oratories, where the ceremonies were decidedly more cheerful than those at the Capitol on Monday. Still I do not know where there is any particular reason why the majority in Congress should be wildly and frantically hilarious over the meeting. I recall at this moment the words of Mr. Thurman uttered during the closing hours of the extra session, when referring to the issue between Congress and the President he said: "The Democratic party is satisfied to rest its case with the people, and mark my words,"—this with a wild flourish of the famous bandanna—"I mark my words, the people at the polls will so grandly demonstrate their approval of our course that even the dullest intellect will not fail to hear and understand." Considering that the dullest intellect is possible that the people at the polls did not demonstrate as grandly as they were expected to. Hence these tears.

In the Senate chamber, the audience was small and the floor subdued and dignified. Mr. Wheeler occupied the chair for the first time since May, and the President of the Senate ad interim, devoted his time and attention to receiving visits of condolence and blowing defiant blasts which had the effect of converting his freshness into the semblance of a freshly boiled lobster. Senator Burnside was as magnificent as ever; and Eaton of Connecticut as effusive as a schoolboy returned from the holidays; Matt Carpenter and Long lounged about with lighted cigars and were frowned upon by Edmunds, who resembles more than ever the saintly Jerome. Together with Mr. Bayard, who had assisted each other to kill the recess at the German Spa's, he was the recipient of many and evidently cordial congratulations over their safe return, and I think I detected something like a smile flick across his aesthetic frontispiece as he wrestled with one of Senator Hoar's herculean jokes. Now don't repeat that as coming from me, if you please, for as nothing of the kind was ever charged against him, it smacks somewhat of a yarn and no one would believe you, and I should be suspected of an attempt at black mail. I looked in vain for the festive Blaine, but Hamlin alone resplendent shone, in the shabbiest swallow tail within the remembrance of the oldest inhabitant. All of which is both poetic and exact. No one would ever have suspected Mr. Conkling, as he strolled along the aisle to his seat, of having administered a hearty spanking to a late Presidential candidate in New York. He was noticeably pale from his recent sickness, but cordial and graceful as ever, as surrounded by a close group of senators, he held an impromptu reception until the gavel of the V. P. came down and dispersed it. Hill, Hampton, Lamar, Pendleton, and Butler were among the absentees, and the number of the same was decidedly increased, as the Clerk in a resonant voice started in on the Message, which had been an old story for some thirty-six hours, and its wildness exciting at the best. At its conclusion, Senator Ferry arose to announce the death of Senator Chandler, and to move an adjournment, and the session ended as solemnly as it had opened.

In the House, the crowd was sufficient without being eager or enthusiastic, and the spectacle on the floor a trifle more inspiring than a funeral, and not near as lively as an execution. Mr. Cox and Mr. Blackburn supplied their accustomed recklessness of manner; and Gov. Tom Young and Gen. Hawley hid behind huge pyramids of flowers, sent up an occasional peal of laughter that seemed altogether out of place amid the ghastly surroundings. Gen. Joe Johnston and Fernando Wood sat high and dry, and the Rev. Dr. DeLamater, the High Priest of Greenbackism, like a facetious undertaker smiled with an expression that was ghostly, grim and grandiloquent. Hendrick B. Wright, whose committee "on the causes of the present Depression of Labor," have been junketing about the country for the past four months without having noticed any particular activity outside of his own membership; Heister Clymer, who has sacrificed his huge venerable beard during the vacation; Conger, of Michigan, grown smaller and a decade older over the worry occasioned by his failure to succeed Senator Chandler; Leopold Morse, as jolly, good natured and communicative as though he had a customer for a full suit in hand; and Garfield, bearing a smile that wouldn't have pleased Thurman worth a cent, were among the portraits caught on the fly from the gallery just a few minutes before twelve. About this hour Alexander

H. Stephens sent his chair spinning down the area in front of the Speaker's desk, and Mr. Randall moved out from a little group of mourners and mounted to the chair with about the same air of cheerfulness as he would have mounted the scaffold. He too, had been impatient to appeal to the country by the way, and the majority that replied from Pennsylvania gave him such a fright as to bring on a fit of indigestion with threatenings of apoplexy, that seriously alarms his friends and puzzles his enemies. The only example of animation in any manner displayed during the ceremonies, was when Mr. Rogers appeared with the message. It was a simultaneous movement in good order, accompanied with haste and expedition, and while the reading proceeded with about half a quorum present, some of the members followed the reader from pamphlet copies as if expecting to catch him tipping or dropping a comma, or straggling over one of Mr. Everts' sentences, and the balance read and talked and pronounced the floor, and made more noise than the clerk, who went to sleep and was roused again several times, until finally his voice ceased to be heard altogether amid the general buzz and noise and confusion, but as his lips continued to move with regularity it is presumed he struggled heroically to the end. Then an adjournment was moved and the agony was over. Thus ended the first chapter. The only excitement of the week has been over the panic caused by the suggestions of the President and Secretary Sherman relative to the retirement of the greenbacks. Considering that by a careful computation, there are a trifle over three hundred and fifty separate and distinct plans in Congress looking to the financial salvation of the Executive in presuming to increase the number could not be expected to meet with other than a crushing reception. Three hundred and fifty odd Congressional souls were immediately in arms with regard for the President and Secretary. The President's feelings were moved to their innermost depths, until on Thursday, Senator Carpenter sprang into the breach with a sagacious bill to let well enough alone, and the three hundred and fifty hearts, more or less, ceased to palpitate at a fever heat and the country is no longer on the verge of dissolution. Everything at the present writing is particularly lovely, and the goose of party expediency hangs at a corresponding elevation.

TOWN AND VICINITY.

WEYMOUTH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The December meeting of the Historical Society, held on Saturday evening last, was one of great interest, although, owing to the unpleasant weather, the number present was smaller than usual. The principal attraction was a paper from Robert B. Hull, Esq., of New York, an honorary member of the Society, on the subject of the full account yet presented to the public of his ancestor, Rev. Joseph Hull, of Somersetshire, England, who came over from Weymouth, Eng., with a colony of some twenty or more families, and settled in Wessagusset, in 1633. As one of the very earliest ministers of this town, much importance attaches to his history, in throwing light upon our scanty record, and the addition of so many well authenticated facts as are contained in this paper will prove of great value to our future historian.

THE CONCERT.

Given in Lincoln Hall last Monday evening, under the management of Mr. Nate C. Wheeler, was a gratifying evidence of the popularity of the wide awake manager, an overflowing house being a not unexpected response to his invitation, and the numbers of the programme were of a character which could be expected to interest the large audience. Want of room forbids enlargement upon the various features of the concert, and we can only make brief mention of the performance. The piano selections of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wheeler were finely rendered, the duet, "Fascination," being a charming exhibition of their skill and producing a lively response of appreciation from the audience. Mrs. Burrell, Misses Young and Nolan, who presented vocal solos, were the recipients of general applause and demands for re-appearing, and the readings by Mrs. F. T. Hunt, especially "The Minister's Bedquilt," were marked with a perfection of character which ensures her a favorable reception wherever she appears in her native land. She was vigorously cheered and responded cheerfully to the repeated calls. Mr. W. Burrell was the accompanist for the soloists and Mr. Arthur H. Murphy furnished a couple of ballads, being encored in both sections. Mr. Wheeler's comicallities, in connection with his new original songs, "The day I walked Fitzgerald for the belt" and "falling for dot turkey," as might be expected, were received with shouts of laughter and tumultuous applause, with encors which compelled repeated appearances on his part. The solo of Mrs. W. Burrell, "The day I walked Fitzgerald for the belt," was a most successful one, and the manager's success which attends his efforts to provide entertainments of a popular and pleasing character.

Business Notes.

Messrs. Cobb, Bates & Yerxa, the famous grocery house of Boston, have arranged for a grand presentation of Christmas sweets, and a stock of one hundred and twenty-five boxes of candies which they have had in mind to make their establishment an attractive resort for the buyers of holiday gifts.

Social.

Delta Lodge, F. & A. M., have made arrangements for a series of social entertainments, the proceeds to aid in the discharge of a debt. The first of the series was given in their hall last Friday evening, and was a most successful one, the programme including readings by Mrs. Hubbard, and vocal and instrumental music of a pleasing character. A collection and dancing followed the entertainment.

Anniversary.

Friday evening of next week the tenth anniversary of the organization of Delta Lodge, K. of P., will be observed in Washington Hall by a grand entertainment, and containing important information. It is also accompanied by a letter from Gen. Lord Sterling in the same connection. Among the other contributions were the following: From Hon. Charles Hudson, of Lexington, "The Lexington Centennial, 1775 to 1875." Bound.

in Paris. Rev. Mr. Fray, who is making a tour of the Old World, was in Paris Sunday, the 9th ult., and in company with a party of 50 Americans, spent the evening at the rooms of Dr. Mitchell, where they passed the evening in singing and listening to remarks by several missionaries who were on their way to the remote east, and French Protestant preachers, who gave accounts of the progress of religious liberty in that country.

Election of Officers.

Reynolds Post 25, G. A. R., held their annual meeting Tuesday evening of last week, and elected officers, as follows: Commander, B. S. Lovell; Senior Vice, David Dunbar; Junior Vice, J. M. H. Cobb; Adjutant, Charles W. Hastings; Quartermaster, George N. Sargent; Musician, Joseph Clapton; John Henry, Officer of the Day; John H. Whelan; Officer of the Guard, Thomas L. Sargent; Major, Harvey E. Raymond; Quartermaster Sergeant, James J. Mahoney, Jr.

Amusements.

The fifth rehearsal last Sunday evening, by the Weymouth Singing Society, of the oratorio of the Seasons proved that commendable progress has been made. Mr. Webb was absent, being ill, but will probably attend the next rehearsal. Some soloists were not present, by the same cause, but it is hoped they will be able to appear next Sunday evening, when the oratorio will be given in connection with the Spring. F. H. T.

Wales.

Sam'l Curtis, auctioneer, sold a large lot of standing wood on Sunday last, at the residence of Mr. S. B. Robinson, to 60 lots, the average bids being $2 a lot.

Loss.

Mr. Henry L. Thayer, livery stable keeper, lost a valuable horse last Wednesday, by contagion and lung fever.

Quick Returns.

Dr. Goodwin's Cough Syrup was advertised in our paper last week, and he has already received many new orders for the remedy. This speedy return is a sufficient refutation of the statements of parties who have recently endeavored to discredit the efficacy of the syrup. It proves that the presentation of business announcements through the weekly press is the most effective method of securing public attention.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

Weymouth Reform Club: You are cordially invited to the eleventh anniversary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Weymouth, which will be celebrated on Monday evening, Dec. 15, 1879, at six o'clock. Please meet the ladies in their reading room at six o'clock, at which time they will adjourn to Odd Fellows Hall, for a collation and the social entertainment of the evening.

A Soberable: Was held the vestry of Rev. Mr. Stanton's church last Monday evening, at the Ladies Circle, at which time the following report of the fair was read by the pastor: Entrance money at the door, $4.15; Table of fancy goods, $1.17; Miscellaneous, $3.70; Ice cream, $3.15; Art gallery, $1.85; Mrs. Stanton's table, $5.50; Candy table, $9.17; Miscellaneous, $1.00; Total, $37.44.

Change of Name.

The 2nd Cong'l church of Weymouth, Rev. Geo. F. Stanton's, are taking preliminary steps toward a change of name, to preserve the identity of letters. They will probably adopt the name of the 1st Cong'l Church of South Weymouth. Last Sabbath this church re-elected its officers, and the Rev. Bradford Gay to its membership by their profession of faith.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN.

That the subscribers to the Weymouth Standard, published by Mr. Frost, known as "Frost's Allegory and Tableau of scenes in the life of Joseph and his daughter, as narrated in the Bible," are invited to pay for the same. It is utterly false to pretend to describe what is unspokeable beautiful, and it is not to be described in any other way than by the words of the author. The representation possesses a charm which is wholly beyond the power of the most graphic pen to describe, and only adds to the delight the senses with their dazzling beauty, but they seem to imbue the soul with a reverential feeling beyond the power of any other art to produce. The principal solo vocal parts were very finely sustained by Miss Nellie Gray, and the instrumental parts by the Weymouth Singing Society.  BREVETTED.

Not here! Not here! Not where the sparkling waters
 Fade into mocking sounds as we draw near,
 Where in the wilderness each footstep falters;
 I shall be satisfied—but oh, not here!

Not here, where every dream of bliss deceives us,
 Where the worn spirit never gains its goal,
 Where haunted by the thoughts that grieve us,
 Across as floods of bitter memory roll.

There is a land where every pulse is thrilling
 With rapture earth's sojourners may not know,
 Where Heaven's repose the weary heart is stilling

And peacefully life's time crossed currents flow,
 Far out of sight, while yet the flesh enfolds us,
 Lies the fair country where our hearts abide;
 And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us
 Than these few words "I shall be satisfied!"

Satisfied! Satisfied! the spirits yearning
 For sweet companionship with kindred minds,
 The silent love that here meets wondrous told us
 The inspiration which no language finds—
 Shall they be satisfied? The soul's vague longing,
 The aching void which nothing earth fills?
 Oh, what desires upon my soul are thronging
 As I look upward to the heavenly hills!

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending!
 Savior and Lord, with thy frail child abide!
 Guide me towards home, where, all my wander-
 ings ended,
 I shall see Thee and "be satisfied."

WON.
 A number of years ago I had occasion
 to visit Ladang, on the coast of Sumatra. The firm in whose employ
 I was was desirous of locating coffee
 plantation interests on the island,
 which business I had completed, and was
 busily engaged looking up transportation
 for Singapore, from whence I could secure passage to almost any point.

But few crafts visited the place; it
 was comparatively at the time I write
 but imperfectly known to the commercial world, and consequently but seldom visited by ships of civilized
 countries.

The only craft I could find willing to take me to Singapore was a small,
 native-built craft, fore-and-aft rigged,
 with heavy, cumbersome sails, and a narrow confined cabin, reeking with
 fumes of tobacco, chenan and beetle
 nuts. A bargain was struck with the dark, tawny Malay who saluted me
 before me, announcing himself as captain. The crew, numbering eleven,
 were a motley mixture of Malay, Chinese and Coolies, fierce, determined
 looking fellows, with eyes as keen as dagger points, and sparkling with the
 baleful brilliancy of a serpent's.

I was anything but favorably impressed either with their aspect or
 but on the other hand if I allowed the opportunity to pass by, weeks might elapse before I could again find means to reach Singapore. Beside, the captain had told me that the other passengers had taken berth in the cabin,
 which fact decided me upon making
 the attempt. Misery likes company,
 and I argued that if the other passengers could put up with dirt, and the confined stalling space in the cabin, I could well bear my part. As for treacher or danger, my navy Cof
 or trusty body were companions who
 would never prove me false.

With some curiosity to know who
 my fellow-voyagers were to be, mingled
 with a slight dash of impatience, I walked up and down the deck of the
 sharp-built craft, glancing alternately
 up the crazy bamboo wharf jutting
 out from the sloping shores of the island.

A sharp cry of pain, mingled with
 the dull thud of heavy blows, attracted
 my attention, and just forward of
 the foremast I beheld a tall, brawny Malay seaman brutally assaulting a slight, inoffensive Chinese lad, who attended on the wants of those belonging to the after portion of the vessel.

The dark, swarthy face of the Malay
 was distorted by passion, while his eyes glowed like coals of fire. The boy struggled ineffectually in his
 powerful grasp, begging in piteous tones
 for mercy.

In what manner he had offended
 the native I did not stop to inquire,
 but rapidly descending to the main
 deck, I grasped the fellow by the arm,
 spinning him half way round, at the same time letting him have the benefit of a good Saxon blow full between
 the eyes, which sent him reeling and staggering against the mast.

Wiping the blood from his eyes, the
 fellow with a growl of rage, not un-
 like a wild animal, rushed upon me,
 swinging his arms about like the ap-pendage of a wind mill. Again I struck the furious native, who, as he gained his feet, deliberately drew the
 crooked creese hanging from his belt.
 But the captain rushing up, grasped
 his arm, muttered a few, harsh, guttural sentences in his ear, pointed to
 the wharf, and the bully, with a scowl
 of hatred, skulked away out of sight.

I had made sure of his ill will, but I cared little for the circumstance. Regaining my original position, I saw a large palangin followed by several natives coming slowly down the wharf.

with eyes so deep, so blue, so languishing, that I gazed in almost rude
 admiration, but in hand on the lady
 passenger with my assistance jumped
 over the board.

The sun was slowly sinking to rest
 beneath the high hills bounding the western horizon as preparations were made to get under way, and with some
 curiosity I watched the pompons strut
 of the turbaned skipper, and listened to the excited cries of the mate and crew as they cast off and singled the
 stiff coil lines and fuses.

The fresh land breeze caught the outlooking sails, filling them to their utmost capacity, and with the water
 boiling and gurgling under the bows,
 the native proa sped gallantly through
 the water.

The evening was uncommonly fine,
 the air soft and balmy, laden with all
 the perfumes purloined by the wanton
 breeze from the fragrant shrubs
 ashore. The stars glittered and sparkled with unusual brilliancy, and
 tempered by the smooth water, pure
 air, and delicious coolness of the evening, the two passengers issued forth
 from the hot, stifling cabin, and I assisted the lady to a snug little nook
 behind the mainmast.

Introducing myself as George Mal-
 com, an American, on business for the firm I represented, I received in return the name of Vincent Oswald
 and his sister, Miss Amy Oswald,
 travelling for health and pleasure,
 having left England, their native
 country, nearly a year previous. They had been recommended to inhale the balmy, spice-laden atmosphere of Sumatra, and the young man, with a sad, weary tone, informed me that he had gone from point to point without having received the slightest benefit.

"I am going home now," he said,
 "to die. Poor sister Amy has only me
 left in the world, and she will soon be alone, with no one to care for her."
 So the ice was broken, reserve cast
 to the winds, and before we parted
 for the night we were on the best of
 terms, and seemingly as well acquainted as if our friendship had extended over a period of years instead
 of hours.

With the young lady I exerted myself to the very utmost to render myself agreeable, and she possessed a magnetic influence which attracted me
 in spite of myself.

The hours glided rapidly by until,
 warned by the night dew, the lovely
 girl descended to the cabin, where her
 brother had preceded her, and, throwing a last glance around the horizon,
 I too sought my narrow berth, and was soon sound asleep.

The next day I noted a decided
 change in the demeanor of the skipper
 and his crew. Twice the rascal
 whom I had so soundly thrashed
 pushed by me, almost throwing me off
 my feet. His hand was on his creese,
 his intention evidently being to assault a quarrel, but I wisely held my passion within bounds, being promptly soothed by considerations of Miss Oswald and her brother. Any undue excitement would act in a manner
 detrimental to his nervous system,
 which was extremely delicate.

I complained, however, to the dirty,
 surly skipper, and received a scowl
 of hatred and a low-muttered curse in his native tongue.

Keeping my own counsel, I carefully overhauled my revolver, slipped
 the hammer in hand, drawing a bead on
 a belt underneath my coat, and as
 night came resolved to watch narrowly for the slightest indication of
 any treachery, and punish it in a summary manner. I was leaning against the rail in the waist, partially concealed from view by the shadow cast
 by the lug-foresail. The breeze,
 strong and steady, was forcing the
 craft through the water at a rapid rate.

The water, dark and gloomy, was occasionally relieved by phosphorescent
 patches, that withered and
 eddied astern, forming a glittering silver wake in pleasing contrast to the sombre night. The loose, flying scud
 swept furiously by, and the hissing
 water sped rapidly astern, occasionally varied by a spiteful splash on deck.

During the early hours of the evening the dark-skinned crew had been gazing steadily backward and forward in a manner very suspicious,
 while an occasional whispered conference between the rascals boded no
 good to the Europeans on board.

My heart beat with increased rapidity
 as I caught a glimpse of Amy Oswald, her light drapery but partially concealed by the graceful folds of an India shawl, standing by the cabin
 door. The bare thought of that delicate, fragile girl, in the power of the
 dusky fiends on board was sufficient
 to cause the blood to course rapidly
 through my veins, and my hand seized
 instinctively the butt of my revolver.

A dark shadow glided rapidly by
 and disappeared; the hoarse, guttural
 exclamations of the crew grated unpleasantly on my ear; my nerves were braced up to my utmost tension—so much so that I could with difficulty
 refuse an outcry, as I felt a slight
 pressure on my arm and a soft
 "hush!" uttered in a caution tone
 from the outside of the low bulkheads.

In an instant I was myself, and glancing over the rail I recognized
 the form of the Chinese boy whom I had rescued from the Malay seaman.
 In an agitated voice, scarcely audible, he told me that the crew, headed
 by the captain, had determined upon murdering the passengers. The baggage, supposed to contain money and

jewels, was to be divided up among them, then the craft run ashore on the rocks, deserted, and the gang each
 one there take his own path and scatter over the island.

This was the boy's grateful return
 for the service I had rendered him,
 and although it but verified my suspicions, still I was relieved to have
 my convictions rendered doubly sure.
 Bidding him keep well aft, and to gain my side in case of an alarm, I walked hastily aft to where Miss Oswald was standing. In a few words
 I explained to her the peril we were
 in. Like a good, sensible girl, she did not falter or scream, but assured
 me that she had every faith in my
 courage and judgment; that if need
 be she would stand by my side and
 lend her aid; that she had a revolver,
 and knew how to use it. I pressed
 her hand in silent admiration, bade
 her go below and leave all to me,
 which she did, first slipping into my
 hand a weapon for the Chinese boy,
 which she had secreted in her pocket.

I felt rather dubious about trusting
 my new ally, having but a poor opinion of his fighting qualities. However, it was a forlorn hope; it could
 do no great harm, and might work
 to my advantage, so with the first opportunity I pressed the revolver into his hand, and the next instant I was alone
 on the damp, slippery deck.

Walking aft, I pretended to glance
 into the ill-lighted binnacle. The skipper was standing by, and I purposely bared my neck in a most tempting manner before him. My blood was up; I could brook no suspense. If there was to be a struggle
 the sooner it was decided the better,
 and probably the tall, stalwart brute
 by my side was much of the same manner of thinking.

With a quick, stealthy motion he drew his formidable creese from the
 wooden sheath, aiming a furious blow
 at my unprotected neck, but I was watching every movement he made,
 although seeming careless and unconcerned.

Leaping aside, I easily avoided the
 thrust delivered with all the strength
 he was capable of exerting. He stumbled and fell, and the next instant the crack of my revolver rang
 out sharp and clear on the light evening air.

I hardly think the skipper ever
 realized what hurt him; it was all accomplished so quickly.

With a savage whoop, the tawny,
 half-naked rascal at the wheel deserted his post, rushing upon me, knife
 in hand; but before he could get
 within striking distance, I had finished his career. Then I turned to confront the crew, who, yelling like
 fiends, came rushing aft in a body,
 showering their compliments in a
 forward of balls from their old-fashioned firearms purchased from the Dutch traders. But I had foreseen
 the danger; the mainmast formed a convenient breastwork, and in all probability saved my life.

Before I could exchange another shot, however, I heard the report of a pistol close by my side. It was the Chinese cabin boy standing bravely
 by and exposing his body with a recklessness I had not given him credit
 for. A second report from the after companionway caused me to throw a hasty glance in that direction, and
 there was the undaunted English girl,
 covered with fine bullet wounds and
 forming an amphitheatre, which terminates
 only in a distant circle of hills. The Mediterranean, with its marvelous
 combinations of blue, playing at our
 feet; the flags of many nations waving
 idly in the sun; the throngs of
 people representing well nigh every great country on the globe; the
 wharves covered with cargoes of palm
 oil and grain; the markets with their pyramids of vegetables and tropical
 fruits; great gables filled with birds
 valued for plumage and for song—
 I had thought to say something of "Genoa the superb," but my moment
 of leisure and your space are limited.

There is an old and a new harbor.
 The old harbor, a basin 3000 feet long
 by 1000 broad, and extending far up
 into the heart of the city, is capable
 of accommodating a thousand merchant ships at once. This harbor was literally packed with shipping, and as we looked down from a neighboring
 height or walked along the crowded
 quays, we had before us a most animated picture. The ground sweeping away from the water on all sides
 was covered with fine buildings and
 forming an amphitheatre, which terminates
 only in a distant circle of hills. The

 combinations of blue, playing at our

From Marseilles we proceeded to Nice, where we remained a couple of days, thus having an opportunity of seeing a favorite winter retreat of residents of England and northern France. Indeed, Nice may with truth be styled an English colony on French soil. Built close down upon the shore, defended from the north
 winds by the encircling arm of a spur
 of the Maritime Alps, its mild temperature, bright sunlight and comparative freedom from rains render it a sort of physical paradise to persons of
 frail health confronted by the choking
 mists and perennial fogs of a London winter. The place is rapidly increasing, and we are greeted with so much dust and din and odor of fresh mortar and paint as to be reminded of
 some American village whose inhabitants have suddenly concluded to make it the "Growing Metropolis of the West."

There is a long and gracefully curved beach at Nice, but it by no means equals in beauty our own Nantasket.
 My traveling companion would read
 this last remark with a sneer, but he does not reside in the vicinity of Weymouth; moreover he is out walking at the present moment. I therefore make the assertion boldly and
 defy contradiction on all quarters.

I will remind you that our route
 from Marseilles to Genoa has been

The latest phase in the Presidential nomination case. A new and unexpected applicant for the honor. How many more may be good until another is told.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14th. In the absence of any important news in the capital, which the daily press has not sufficiently honored by telegraphic notice, I am forced to the rather paltry alternation of intruding some merely personal opinions, which may be of no particular value, but like all things else in this life, must possibly follow in the course of time.

I am led into this particular path by reason of a hint which I find in my note-book, and which may have something very important or nothing at all; probably and most probably the latter. The hint in question is the single word "Randall."

Now why I should have written that particular name of individual, without prefix or affix, is wholly beyond my present comprehension. I don't remember that Randall, either as an individual or a class, has ever rendered me any particular offense, nor on the other hand do I recall any attempt on my own part to ever desire to be particularly offensive to Randall.

Personal. Our friend Mr. Nate C. Wheeler, says that as soon as he gets over his Christmas business he's going to make it hot for those Rockland parties who put his name on a bill without his consent, or ever letting him know the contents of the same. 'Twas an ungentlemanly thing, an unintentional wrong in the mere suggestion. If so, I beg Mr. Randall's pardon. Certainly no one ever accused him of anything of the kind, that I ever heard of. If I were called upon to express a calm and unbiased opinion of the present speaker of the House, I should be very much pleased. I don't think of any one ever held a calm and unbiased opinion on the subject. As a politician, he certainly has no superior. Let us concede that by way of compensation. Randall is among the few men in public life to whom politics is a profession. If he has any other calling, I never heard of it. He has certainly held public office for thirty years, though his prominence merely dates from about 1874. As a ward politician, he served a long apprenticeship in the best of schools and graduated with the highest of honors. No one better than he knows the precise purchasing power of a gallon of Monongahela, nor how to place a campaign fund where it will do the most good. Hence he has been successful, and for the past ten to fifteen years well nigh irresistible in Pennsylvania politics. But within the past year or two, things have been going bad for Randall and from him they have grown worse. There is a wicked man in the Senate from Pennsylvania who answers to the name of Wallace, and this wicked man, having no fear of consequences before his eyes, has presumed in his arrogance to snap his fingers in the face of the illustrious Speaker of the House, and to supplant him in the hearts of the great unwashed who have their abiding place in the state aforesaid. As if this was not enough, a vile and irrelevant assemblage having their haunts at Harrisburg have taken it upon themselves to redirect the state without consulting the Hon. Samuel, and it happens that in the process a sufficient number of republican voters have been made to become residents of the same District as the honorable gentleman in question, as to render his return to Congress a moral, mental and physical impossibility. All of which has tended to vex the heart of the aforesaid, full sore.

Now it has come to pass that the virtuous Randall is a firm and uncompromising friend of the sage of Grandmery Park, and a stout advocate of his renomination, while the wicked Wallace is as stout an opponent to both. Early and late, in season and out of season, does Randall exalt the name and fame of the other Samuel J. and swear by his own good sword that none but he, can, shall and will receive the nomination, and at the same time no one better than he knows that such nomination is altogether suicidal and impossible. But such intense devotion should be rewarded. Randall is doubtless the only living American who has stood by "the claimant" to the present moment and encourages him with the hope of success. Tilden has "a cause," and possibly a considerable influence. Suppose Tilden, becoming convinced of his own inability, to secure the nomination, should compromise the situation by consenting to withdraw if permitted to name his successor. And supposing this right be conceded, what more natural than that he should name his dear friend and servitor, the Hon. Speaker of the House? For this means would the wily and wicked Wallace be confounded and the rape of the 1st District of Pennsylvania be avenged. Now as matter of fact this is the latest development in the Presidential field, and greater men than you and I, my dear editor, are admitting its possibility and working night and day to bring about its certainty or its defeat. And this I presume is the reason why I find the name of "Randall" occupying so prominent and solitary a position on my note book.

TOWN AND VICINITY.

Removed. The machinery in the fan factory of A. S. White & Co., at the Landing depot, has been removed, and the building suspended for some time past. There is an excellent opportunity for some manufacturer to obtain convenient and roomy quarters, and it is hoped that the factory will be occupied for some business enterprise.

The Weymouth Drug Store has at its display of Perfumes, Ink Stands, Cigar Cases, Celluloid Sets and Velveteen Frames, as can be found in town.

Accident. Mr. A. S. White sustained a severe injury to one of his arms last Thursday, while assisting in the removal of the machinery from the fan factory. He stepped off a platform in the dark, causing him to fall.

Personal. Mr. Francis M. Adlington, the venerable pastor of our community, and for forty or more years a citizen of this town, will reach his 90th birthday on the 24th inst. He has the world from those knowing of the household agitation of that eventful day, that he was born on Christmas eve, the earlier part of his married days were spent in Boston, where he rendered a slight service in the war of 1812. Mr. Adlington's health is fair for his age and he bids fair to be with us yet many years. Such are the wishes of his many friends.

The Old Weymouth Ground. A communication was published last week, referring to the ancient burying ground on Pleasant street, South Weymouth, and in this connection the following transcript of inscriptions on the headstones remaining there will be found of interest. Taking into consideration the dilapidated and neglected condition of this ancient burial place, the preservation of these records of the ancestry of many of our people by presenting them in print is certainly desirable.

Here lies buried ye body of Lieut. John Pratt, who died Feb. 8, 1743, in ye 51st year of his age.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

Anniversary. The eleventh anniversary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of East Weymouth, took place last Monday evening, at Mechanics Temple of Honor hall, where a large number were assembled, who anticipated an enjoyable occasion very fully realized.

Deaths. Peter McGowan, who was injured on board a vessel at the Phosphate Works, some two weeks ago, died at the hospital on Thursday last week.

Enterprising. Mr. Daniel Vining has fitted up a convenient shop in the basement of his house, and is filling it up with a gang of boot and shoe bottomers. He has the promise of all the work he wants, and intends to employ twelve to fifteen men.

Our Highway Surveyor. In Ward I has proved himself a very competent man for the situation. He has done all that every one could do with the money at his command.

Contract. Mr. Charles Chubbuck has the contract for building the new hotel at the bank of the Monaquot river, at the end of Sea street and opposite the residence of Edward Blanchard, Esq.

Accident. Ella, 8 years old, daughter of James Munroe, while getting out of a farm cart, one day last week, placed her foot on a spoke of one of the wheels, which being in motion, the result was a badly bruised leg.

Collision. Dr. Fitzgerald, of Abington, collided with the stromer trough at the public pump, last Tuesday evening. He didn't hurt the trough any, but the shafts of the vehicle had to be spliced before he could proceed.

Opened. Almon A. Holbrook has commenced manufacturing in his commodious remodelled apartments, and is getting out a choice line of fine goods.

The Hop at Music Hall last Friday evening had a very good assembly of dancers from all parts, certainly a more encouraging outlook than the opening night one year ago.

Members of Mechanics Temple, with their ladies, to the number of 33, were conveyed to West Scituate, by Mr. Geo. W. Young, to celebrate the anniversary of the Union Social Temple, connected with Corner Stone Temple, of that place.

THE SUN FOR 1880.
THE SUN will deal with the events of the year 1880 in its own fashion, now pretty well understood by everybody. From January 1st until December 31st it will be conducted as a newspaper, written in the English language, and will contain all the news of the world, political and personal, and all the news of the day, and all the news of the week, and all the news of the month, and all the news of the year.

THE BRACON LIGHT.
My bark is sailing o'er
Life's stormy sea;
A light from yonder shore
Beams bright on me;
Gleaming along my way,
Changing the night to day,
It marks with golden ray
My course all free.

I hail this light divine,
So true and tried;
Thou changeful Beacon mine,
My fears subside.
Once Jesus tyed the sea,
And bid it peaceful be;
His Word now comes to me,
And calms its tide.

Careering on I go,
And safely ride,
What way the wind may blow
To toss the tide;
If tempests wrap the sky,
And waves run mountains high,
One presence e'er is nigh,
My Heavenly Guide.

O bright and joyous land,
Nearer I come!
Faith sees the shining strand,
Where angels roam;
My loved one gone before
Now beckons from the shore,
And Christ invites the more
To Thee, my Home.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

"Come, Ruth, hurry up, so as you can fix my hair for me; you can do it so much nicer than I, if you ever get through with those puffs and braids of Marion's."

"I want her to baste the ruffles in the neck and sleeves of my dress," said Marion, "but she can do your hair first, I suppose."

"I should think she could. She isn't your waiting-maid that I know of," said Maude, scornfully.

"I cannot tie this knot of ribbon decent," said a tall, dark-eyed girl, yet in short dresses, turning impatiently from one of the mirrors in the large chamber where they were dressing.

"I hope you will get time to do it for me, Ruth, if you ever get hair through with those two. I'd ask Maude, only she's so cross."

The girl whose services were then claimed by the trio hurried faster with the dark braids she was arranging on Marion's head, glancing anxiously at Maude, who, in the meantime, was standing before a large mirror making unsuccessful attempts to coax her golden hair into the crescent-shaped French twist.

"There," said Letty, with the outspokenness of thirteen, as she watched her, "you needn't try to fix up for Mr. Campbell. He's the sweetest on Marion, anyone can see. If I were you, Maude, I wouldn't try so hard to catch him as you do, and, besides, he don't like yellow hair and blue eyes. He told me so the other day when we were looking over some colored photographs."

An angry flush rushed into Maude's face, and she jerked down the hair she had been trying to arrange, and said, impatiently:

"Are you ever going to get round to my hair, Ruth? I wish you'd stop your nonsense, Letty. What do I care for Mr. Campbell's opinion. Marion is welcome to him if she wants him."

"O, how independent we are all at once," said aggravating Letty, "when you've almost strained your eyes out working something—I know what—to put on the Christmas tree to-night for him."

Maude bit her lips with anger. Ruth was just putting the finishing touches to Marion's hair and now hastened to her. "You've come at last. Well, I shall be thankful if I get to the church before the folks are leaving," Maude said, ungraciously.

You might let Ruth tie my ribbon first, it would only take her a minute," whined Letty.

"No; you can wait until older ones are served," said Maude, in an irritable tone, "and yet over the sting of Letty's words."

"I should think, girls, you'd have dignity enough to keep from quarrelling," said Marion, as she walked to the glass to see if her hair was becoming.

"O, you think you are just the thing! A 1, because Mr. Campbell pays some attention to you, and you hope to marry him. If you weren't so sulky now, you would—"

"Silence!" said Marion, sternly. And Letty thought she had better stop for the time. Ruth made no remarks, though the changes in her countenance showed that she was not uninterested in the comments of the sisters. With deft fingers she arranged Maude's luxuriant tresses as she had vainly tried to herself, then tied the bright ribbon in a becoming bow at Letty's throat, and stood ready to put finishing touches when the others should call her.

"I wonder how many presents I shall get?" said Letty, who seemed to be the chief speaker. "I know two I'll get, and I know two Mr. Campbell will get," with a sidelong meaning glance at her sisters.

At last they were all dressed. Maude could not be displeased with the fair vision of girlish beauty that met her in the glass, though the fabrication of Letty still rankled in her heart. It would be a severe critic indeed who could find fault with the dainty form in the navy-blue suit, or the delicate blonde face that looked fairer with the effect of the azure silk facing and white ostrich tips of her jaunty hat. Then Marion swept up and surveyed her tall figure and Spanish face, surmounted by the stylish hat, trimmed in gold and scarlet, with much satisfaction.

"Good!" said the irrepressible, who favored Marion more than Maude, because it was for her interest to do right sure, for you do look stunning. I'd rather you'd get him than Maude, and I guess he would, too, if he knew as much as I do."

Maude attempted to box her ears, but she dodged it.

"Be sure and replenish the grate in Mr. Campbell's room before you go, and take care of the lamps," said Ruth to Letty, as they were leaving the room.

"Yes," Ruth said wearily, while Letty rushed down stairs, saying: "Mr. Campbell is waiting in the parlor for us. I heard him go down long ago."

The girls entered the parlor, Letty ahead, and the handsome gentleman who was contemplating a painting turned to greet them with a smile, while Ruth ascended another flight of stairs to her own attic room.

"I've a great mind not to go at all," she thought, as she stood before the poor, little glass and saw the reflection of her pale and tired, drooping face by the lamp she had lighted. "They all look so nice, and I've got so little to wear. Dear, dear," as she sat down on the side of her bed to rest the tired limbs that had been running for others all day. "This a hard world, and I'm most discouraged. My studies I'm not getting along in my studies as I ought, and that it will be a long time before I get enough education to be a teacher, for I have so little time to study out of school, and Mrs. Hastings don't want me to sit up late. But there, I ought to be glad I have as good a home as this and a chance to go to school at all, and, above all, to such a good teacher as Mr. Campbell is, though he is so clever he must think me dreadfully stupid sometimes," and a soft light came into her brown eyes as she thought of him. She was an orphan of good parentage, who had been thrown upon the cold charities of the world. She had been received into Squire Hastings' family upon stipulation—that she should work for her board when out of school. They were a selfish, though not absolutely unkind family, and they found her so useful and willing that they never seemed to think she had longed for.

have the handsome, fastidious teacher note the contrast of their holiday array with hers. Every face was animated, everybody seemed joyful as they should be on Christmas. The tall tree was laden with gifts of all sorts, and there were piles of things beside it that it wouldn't hold. The faces that were turned expectantly towards it shone almost as brilliantly as the tapers that lighted it. There was a continual hum of conversation and light bubbling laughter as the overflowing gladness of the season communicated itself one to another. "Everybody seems happier than I," Ruth thought, the tears filling her eyes. She could see Marion and Maude chatting with Mr. Campbell, their faces wreathed in smiles, and Letty deep in talk with a girl of her own age. There was to be a little entertainment before the distribution of Christmas presents, and the crowd was called to order. First, a glad Christmas carol, jubilant in measure as were the hearts of the listeners, was sung by a chorus of youthful voices. Then there were prettily dressed children who lisped about "Babe of Bethlehem," and scenes were watched a broad-mouthed clown to see Santa Claus and his wife whisk down with hands full of presents, which they deposited in the stockings hung to receive them, and disappeared up the chimney again in a twinkling. The curtain fell for the last time, and then Santa Claus with his bushy beard reaching to his knees stood by the tree to deliver the gifts to the impatient waiters. Then the merriment re-commenced. There were all sorts of presents. One young man whose sweetheart had jilted him was rather heartlessly presented with a string of onions, for no doubt in such a case the tears would flow freely enough without artificial appliances. A newly married couple were presented with a pair of baby socks and a tin rattle, and a colored individual who had aspiring ideas about dress as well as white folks, was put in possession of an antiquated tall hat in a neat hat box, which he received with grins of approval and wore it to church the next Sunday. But these were some of the comic features of the occasion. Scores of hearts were made glad by things useful, beautiful and much longed for. Mr. Campbell's name was called twice, and the girls beside him tried to look unconscious as they saw the parcels their own hands had that day made for him.

"Some one has been thoughtful for me," he said. "I shall not investigate until I get home."

"Miss Ruth Norris!" the nasal tones of the presiding genius drawled out.

Ruth's heart beat fast. Surely that could be her name! but no, it could not be here.

"Miss Ruth Norris!" the voice called out, more loudly and unmistakably this time, and the blood that had receded from her face surged back and centred in a burning spot on each cheek. "Who should give her anything?" Her schoolmate whispered: "It's you he's calling; you must go right up."

The surprised sisters and Mr. Campbell saw a slight, dark-brown figure, with a fleecy scarf thrown gracefully over her shoulders, pass up the further aisle to the tree, and, with vivid cheek and drooping eyes, reach out for the large square parcel tied up in white paper.

"I am afraid that some one has been playing a practical joke on her," Marion whispered to Mr. Campbell, in a tone meant to sound sympathetic. "I hope not, for she'll feel badly, poor girl."

"Let us hope none would be so cruel," said Mr. Campbell, concisely. "I don't care, Ruth looks pretty to-night," Letty whispered fondly to Marion.

Ruth went back quietly to her seat. "What is it? What is it?" questioned her mate, eagerly. "Open it and let us see. Ain't you most dying with curiosity?"

Ruth did not know what to do, but the red vest opening parcels and she thought she would just take a peep. With trembling fingers she undid the fastenings, and a lovely little rose-wood writing-desk, with inlaid figures of curious design, met her delighted eyes. She lifted the cover, and on a crimson velvet bed were sheets of dainty-tinted note-paper, creamy envelopes, a bijou of an ink-stand, and all the necessary accouters.

"O, isn't it just lovely? Who could have given it to you?" said the girl beside her, ecstatically.

That was the question Ruth was asking herself. There was no one in the village who had shown her marked kindness except the old doctor, who had attended her parents in their last moments; but it could not be him. It could be no one at the Hastings'. Letty's present would be all she'd get there, unless it was—but of course it was not him—how preposterous for the thought to cross her mind.

"I wish I had one like it," said her friend, "it's just the handsomest writing-desk I ever saw. Why your eyes shine like stars, Ruth, and your cheeks are almost the color of that velvet lining."

There was a goodly number of gifts on the parlor table at the Hastings' when they all got home. Mr. Campbell displayed a pair of handsomely wrought slippers, and a watch-case done with colored silks and beads, and was profuse in his admiration of them, not betraying that he knew them to be the work of the white fingers of Maude and Marion. The girls had numerous presents. They were discussing things volubly when Ruth came in. "O, Ruth, what did you get?" said Letty, as she pounced upon her. "We are nearly dead to know."

"I hope it is something nice," Marion said, patronizingly, as Ruth, with a bright face that seemed like a new creation, displayed her treasure.

All were enthusiastic over it. Why, who could have given it to you?" said Marion, secretly piqued that the present that had given her a prettier than she had given to her own.

"I don't know of any one except old Dr. Page," said Letty, flippantly. "Perhaps he wants her for a second wife."

Ruth's face grew redder with the laugh this fall caused. Mr. Campbell's dark grave eyes rested upon her for a moment with something like admiration shining in them.

"Whoever gave them to me I cannot thank them enough," Ruth said, as she carried the treasures up stairs.

School recommenced after the holidays, and things jogged on as before. Ruth attended it, but had as much put upon her as ever by the family. Still she made astonishing progress in her studies, and her teacher's grave smile of approval was reward enough.

"I am going away to-morrow, Ruth."

She lifted her eyes a moment to the face of the dignified teacher who seemed so far superior to her and said timidly: "Yes; I know, and I am sorry, you have been so kind to me, and helped me so much that I shall never forget it."

"Ruth, dear," in a lower tone, "I want you to go with me."

He saw the quick blush that dyed her cheek. The unexpected words from the man she had long ago learned to love, startled her.

"Why, Mr. Campbell, what do you mean?" she found words to say.

"That I want you to be my wife, Ruth," he said, taking her little cold hands in his.

"What did you think?"

"Did you? That shows you are lacking in discernment, little one."

For a moment Ruth allowed her hands to rest in his. Then she drew them away, saying:

"O, Mr. Campbell, I cannot, I cannot; I am not fit to be your wife."

"Let me be the judge of that, Ruth. Do you think I have seen your beautiful, uncomplaining patience in this house without learning to admire your character? Besides you are the sweetest, prettiest little girl in the world to me, and your presence in the school room has brightened it for me for months. But if you don't like me, look up and tell me, and I will not trouble you any more."

But she did not look up, and he drew her into his arms and kissed the red, tremulous mouth. Just then Letty rushed into the sitting-room unceremoniously with: "Ruth! Marion wants you to—!" and stopped suddenly, struck dumb with the tableau that met her eyes. Ruth struggled, but her crimson with shame, but Mr. Campbell held her close and said:

"She cannot go now. She's engaged with me at present."

And Letty's flying feet carried her back, and she burst into the chamber where the girls were discussing their prospective spring outfit and waiting for Ruth to dress their hair for them.

"O! girls, Mr. Campbell has got Ruth in his arms, and he just kissed her as I opened the door, and he told me to tell you she—couldn't come, she was engaged with him."

The mortified surprise of the girls when they found upon whom Mr. C.'s choice had fallen may be better imagined than described. The mystery of the writing-desk was made plain.

WATER POWER RAILWAY.
At the Giesbach Fall, on the border of Lake Brienz, in Switzerland, there is a high bridge above the Lake, with a carriage road ascending to it by zigzags. A unique railroad has lately been built from the steamboat landing to the hotel, the fall furnishing the motive power, which is applied by means of a cable. The rails are three in number, of which one is cogged; at each extremity of the cable is attached a wagon in which forty persons can be carried, and which is also provided with a tank to receive the water. When passengers wish to go up from the lake to the hotel, the reservoir of the wagon at the hotel is filled so as to outweigh the wagon below, whose reservoir has been emptied of the water which it contained. The former then descends, and the latter slowly ascends with the passengers.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DON CAMERON.

The new chairman of the Republican Committee...

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20th.

Now that Congress has come and gone, for the holidays, the social and political scene fairly inaugurated and the nation once more on the road to progress, the occasion offers to pick up a few of the threads that have been dropped in the process, and among them I know of none more important than the action of the Republican National Executive Committee and its selection of a chairman.

I think our political history presents few examples of success achieved by the power of personal application, as prominent as that of Don Cameron.

Within a period of five years, a young and unknown aspirant for fame's eternal niche, burst suddenly and unheralded from a limited private sphere of existence, has managed to climb from obscurity to the leadership of a great party, overleaping the traditional chasms of long and tried service and swinging far and squarely to the fore, despite the opposition of his party associates.

Personal daring and intrepidity are the sole secrets of Don Cameron's success. It has been his wonderful and unsuspected dash and energy that has enabled him to distance all competitors, and capture the Republican Executive Committee with such men as Blaine and Sherman as antagonists.

There is much of the method and recklessness of Napoleon in the sudden movements and rapid marches and unexpected falling upon the flanks of the adversary, that has marked the course of this most successful of modern political leaders.

From the moment of his emerging from the retirement of Harrisburg, Don Cameron has made no mistake. His assumption of personal responsibility in emergencies, is no type of a coward. He has never spared the party whip, and I have noticed that men who have made the best mark in political life have been those whose lash has been the longest and who reached the most backs.

Ten days ago, the fact of the near meeting of the Republican National Committee at Washington, first commenced to be talked about.

Zach Chandler had left a vacancy in the chairmanship, and a dozen names were mentioned for the succession, none of them with special prominence, but with a general impression that Blaine held the winning cards.

No one knew exactly what was to be trumped. The chairmanship of this Committee is the most prominent position in a Presidential campaign.

He has generally the control of its managements; selects the time of meeting of the nominating Convention, and calls it to order; raises and disburses the campaign fund, and places it where it will do the most good; dictates the plan and method of prosecution, and generally holds the reins of the music-chariot as the procession moves onward.

A man in such a position cannot well avoid responsibility, even should he desire to. He is likely to be held to strict accountability, without much reward in case of defeat.

For a few weeks, a few men are competent to offer for master-whips. Zach Chandler had been tried in the furnace and not found wanting. "Hayes has one hundred and eighty-five votes and is elected," said he, at a moment when every other republican from Maine to Oregon had accepted Tilden as an accomplished fact, and one hundred and eight, "five it was, even through the labyrinth of an Electoral Commission.

Zach Chandler never evaded responsibility, and was to be depended upon. But Zach Chandler was beyond the reach of political complications and no one had any idea who could succeed him.

In the meantime Grant was moving grandly across the state of Pennsylvania, and incidentally the telegraph informed us that he had held an interview at Harrisburg with Don Cameron.

Well, there was nothing strange in that. Cameron was known to be an intense admirer of Grant, a stout advocate for a third term, and a "stall-ward" without evasion.

Beside that, Cameron had been Grant's Minister of War. What more natural than that Cameron should have an interview with his old chief, or any number of interviews for that matter, without there attaching any political significance to any one need to trouble themselves about.

Suddenly the Harrisburg interview breaks up; the silent man proceeds onward to Philadelphia and Don Cameron packs his valise for Washington.

A man by the name of Freeman— whoever heard of Freeman?—resigns as the member of the R. N. Ex. Com. and Don Cameron is appointed to succeed him.

Who appointed him? Probably Don Cameron. D. C. appoints pretty much everybody and everything in Pennsylvania. It is really of no consequence. Freeman disappears, and Cameron emerges from the place of his exit.

Then somebody starts the rumor that Cameron is a candidate for the chairmanship. The Blaine men laugh at the idea; and the Sherman men smile, as though the presumption was a sufficient explanation of the rumor.

Nevertheless the Blaine men commence to confer, and are amazed to discover that they haven't exactly a sure thing after all.

Then they assume the lead and assemble. Cameron is the lead and assemble. His forces at his residence on the eve of the meeting. A candidate is selected and goes into the meeting with nineteen votes. Twenty-two is a bare majority, and twenty-two was precisely the number cast for J. Donald Cameron.

No one believes but that he would have needed a dozen more, they would have been elected, and every one knows, that had the Blaine men had another day or two to prepare, Don Cameron never have carried away the prize.

Dash, nerve, daring, activity, are the winning cards in peace as in war. What does it mean? Well, nine out of ten believe it means Grant, and ten believe it means what it does mean.

It is certain that Grant is the first choice of Cameron and that if he is to receive the nomination, it will be to be prosecuted on a stalwart, no-compromise, no-surrender platform, wherein every trick shall count and nothing be left to chance.

He is taking up, in a dashing, brilliant, audacious campaign, with plenty of music and bold, reckless charging along the whole line.

Don Cameron leads, no republican need be ashamed to follow. Joined to this sudden dash and abandon, the new chairman joins a Scottish instinct of common sense, which is the probability that he is likely to receive his prosecution of the coming campaign from all sentimentality and foolishness.

It has been a character through fear rather than love. They have been admitted and feared, as party leaders rather than beloved.

But through an industrious and sagacious process of personal attachments, he has multiplied friends and won over the opposition of his party associates.

He has been successful in commanding success without at all times deserving it. The Camerons have always looked upon party, money, money, money, and government purely in a business sense.

They are all means to accomplish ends, and generally the end is sufficient with them. They have never failed to reward loyalty and obedience, and thousands of Pennsylvania politicians are prepared to testify to the fact.

They have failed to punish with equal liberality and promptitude. It is therefore probable that the change of commanders creates a change of tactics.

It is generally acknowledged that Don Cameron has a fair prestige of success to start with. As chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation to Cincinnati he made Haynes and Fremont, as a Minister of War he protected the republican voter in the South and elected him.

He carried Pennsylvania in 1854, and Massachusetts in New York, Ohio, Indiana, New Jersey, and Connecticut were swept by the tidal wave of democracy, and he piled up a majority of sixty thousand a month ago where every one prophesied defeat.

It is therefore more than likely that his sublime audacity and well considered judgment will tend to inject a certain brilliancy into the coming contest that will make things quite as lively as the most enthusiastic democrat can ask for.

CAMERON.

Wildier Memorial Hall.

The dedication of the Wildier Memorial Hall at South Hingham, on Thursday, December 18th, was an occasion of much more than ordinary interest, and the life of Martin Wildier, whose thoughtful liberality paved the way for the pleasure and improvement of the people of that portion of his native town in which he was born, was in many respects a remarkable one.

We believe, without a parallel in our country and in our life, that his wife, Mary Hersey had twenty-one children, Martin being the twelfth. The first of these was stillborn, and the second, a girl, died in infancy. These three were all girls. The remaining eighteen—thirteen of them five boys—lived to maturity, most of them to a good old age.

Fifteen of them were married, and all did well; as was remarked by one of the speakers at the dedication, there was not one black sheep in the flock. Of the family but two were living, viz., Mrs. Anna Wildier, widow of John Grant, born Nov. 11, 1791—the thirtieth child; Matilda, widow of Hawkes Peering, born Nov. 23, 1792—the eighteenth child.

Martin Wildier was born in the south parish, Hingham, Nov. 10, 1790. He served his time as a carriage-maker with the late Mr. Joseph Hawley street, Boston, and finally succeeded to the business of that firm, in which he lived and labored until he was quite successful. Though possessed of no ambition for political distinction and public life, Mr. Wildier was active in a variety of ways in the service of his country. He was a member of the Massachusetts State Convention of 1820, and in 1821, he was elected to the office of Justice of the Peace for the town of Hingham.

April 8th, 1825, he was admitted a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery, and was the same year commissioned captain of the Waterbury Artillery. By the Act of 1825, he was elected sergeant in 1828, second lieutenant in 1829, and armorer in 1841. On the 20th of his hundredth anniversary, he was elected sergeant in 1828, second lieutenant in 1829, and armorer in 1841. On the 20th of his hundredth anniversary, he was elected sergeant in 1828, second lieutenant in 1829, and armorer in 1841.

the trustees were finally granted leave by Judge Endicott to expend a portion of the accumulated income, not to exceed $2000, to erect a building for a library, lecture hall, school room, etc.

Acting upon that permission, they last May purchased the site of the building, on the corner of Main street, South Hingham, and on the 9th of August commenced to erect the building.

Description of the Building. The structure, which bears upon its front its name, WILDER MEMORIAL, is a neat building, attractive in appearance, but devoid of profuse ornamentation.

Forty feet front and fifty feet deep, two stories high with an attic and a French roof, and with an addition in the rear thirty-two feet by fifteen, and in every way a beautiful structure.

The entrance is through a vestibule 15x15, into a roomy entry 30x15, portion of which opens into a large hall, 30x15, with a ceiling nine feet wide, to the second story. The remaining ten feet of the front are taken up by a room 10x15, which is a study.

At half-past nine the audience was invited to the hall, which was filled with people. On that floor are two rooms each 10x10, one of which is to be used as a library and reading room, the other for an evening school.

The trustees conclude to try the experiment of establishing one. Adjoining these two rooms is a large dining hall 30x15, furnished with portable tables at which one hundred persons can be seated. The room is also admirably adapted for ball games.

The lower floor of the addition to the main building contains two entries, through one of which stairs are erected from the building in the rear; stairs leading to the second story; two toilet rooms, one for gentlemen, and one for ladies, and which will be supplied with accoutrements, and a fine, conveniently arranged kitchen, which opens by a large window directly into the dining hall.

In fact, the entire arrangement of the first floor is complete. There is a large cellar nine feet deep, under the whole building, and there may be seen the nine sixteen inches solid brick pillars, which support the strong timbers that appear, and the stone foundations, which appear as if they may stand for ages.

The large frame, made by J. & A. Kohler & Co., of Boston, and which will thoroughly protect the entire building in the coldest weather.

In the second story of the building is a beautiful hall, 30x30 feet, with a platform in the center, and a large hall, 10x15, on each side of which are small ante-rooms and the stairs. From the room on the left, as one faces the platform, stairs ascend to the attic. On the platform is a fine organ made by Messrs. Kimball, of Manchester, Mass., and a very handsome desk or stand for speakers.

On the wall above the platform is a great white marble tablet, bearing the following inscription: WILDER MEMORIAL. ERRECTED 1870.

FOR THE PROMOTION OF INDUSTRY AND EDUCATION, IN FULFILLMENT OF A BEQUEST TO THE WILDER MEMORIAL SOUTH PARISH IN HINGHAM.

GIVEN BY MARTIN WILDER, A BORN IN SAID PARISH NOVEMBER 10TH, 1790, DIED IN BILDERICA, MARCH 20, 1854. SON OF EDWARD WILDER AND MARY HERSEY.

DEDICATED DECEMBER 18TH, 1879, IN FULFILLMENT OF HIS BEQUEST.

ANDREW CUSHING, JAMES S. BEAL, JOSIAH M. LANE, TRUSTEES.

The hall is furnished with neat and comfortable seats, and will seat an audience of three hundred and fifty.

In the rear is a room 22x12, for the storage of the books, which is desirable to clear the floor which can be done in a very few minutes.

The upper hall is brilliantly lighted by five three-light chandeliers. The rooms on the lower floor, and there are two in the dining hall, are the establishment of Norcross & Sons, Boston. The rooms are all finished in a very neat and substantial manner in ash, with hard pine floors, and the building workmanship, reflects great credit on all who took part in its erection.

Mr. Geo. L. Shaw was a charming exhibition of his skill and produced a lively and interesting picture. The soloists were accompanied on the organ by Messrs. W. F. Burrell and Lewis Tilden.

At a late hour the company formed for the grand march to the banquet hall, where a turkey supper with fruits and sweetmeats was prepared.

There was a waiting, and after a blessing by Rev. Mr. Nordell, the predatory crowd dispersed, and the company returned to the hall, and the entertainment was continued by the music of the orchestra, which seemed never to have played better.

Musical. The fifth rehearsal of the "Seasons" was given by the Singing Society last Sunday evening, at Clapp's Hall.

On account of the sickness of Mr. Webb, Mr. Evans, of presentment, was given the sixth rehearsal, and was conducted by many of the honorary, and also of the active members, that the "Messiah," "Elijah," "Creation," or any other oratorio, be substituted in place of the "Seasons," as the last named has not given the satisfaction expected, both to the hearers and the performers.

It is also suggested that some means be taken to preserve order in the gallery, and that no long discussion be allowed.

W. C. T. U. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will meet in Lincoln Hall next Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 30, at 3 o'clock. Tea at 4 o'clock. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

S. R. HARRIS, Secretary. All lovers of artistic violin music will be pleased to learn that Mr. Nate Wheeler has secured Mr. Wm. H. Whiddon, who made so favorable an impression here before, at his next concert Monday evening, Jan. 19th.

A SOUVENIR FOR THE HOLIDAYS.—During the remainder of the present month Messrs. Macaulay, Parker & Company, of Boston, will give a copy of the library edition of King's Handbook of Boston to every purchaser of an overcoat or ulster from their retail clothing department. This edition is the most expensive ever issued, and is well appreciated. The author leaves no part of the city unexplored, and no public institution is passed by without description. His book is a key to the Boston of today, as well as a reflex of colonial and republican history. The collection of portraits is particularly valuable, and is well welcomed to all public libraries.

At the request of Rev. Mr. Jennings, Hon. John D. Long, relieved him of the duty of presiding at the table, and asked to Rev. Calvin Lincoln to ask a blessing upon the table. The collection of portraits was provided by the trustees and by contributions from the ladies of South Hingham. Eight tables were set in charge of those veteran caterers, Mr. Zenas Loring and Mrs. J. T. Sprague, who were aided and very agreeably assisted by a strong corps of young ladies and gentlemen, volunteer waiters.

The appointment of all having been fully satisfied, a return was made to the upper hall, where Mr. Long "in the chair," James W. Burrell, as Secretary, presided at the stewardship of himself and the other trustees. Mr. Long then called in succession upon the separated gentlemen, all of whom responded: Messrs. Burrell, Wilder of North Scituate, and J. O. Burdett, Rev. Mrs. Mason, Charles W. Cushing, Daniel Perkins, John Cushing, E. B. Whitcomb and Edwin Wilder, Rev. E. A. Horton and Rev. J. Osgood.

The speaking order, the company separated, all much delighted with the building and the entertainment that had been afforded.

In the evening there had another brilliant gathering at the hall, which was packed to its full capacity.

Cushing presided at the piano, and the company were favored with some excellent singing by the Whitesmith Family, Mrs. W. F. Burrell, Miss Nellie C. Young, Mrs. A. C. Cushing, Mr. John H. Tower and Miss F. Cushing, and readings by Mrs. Mary F. Andrews.

THE HOUR MAN.

There are some people who will not consent to be made happy. They find their greatest satisfaction in constant grumbling and repining. Of all these none more disagreeable than the sour tempered man, who is grumbling in the morning because it is time to get up; whose coffee is too hot or too cold, his toast and his steak either overdone or underdone, or who when he goes out invariably grumbles at the weather. If it is a little cold, he calls it Arctic; if mild, it is tropical; if drizzly, it rains; pitforks, or a gentle breeze is a hurricane.

THE HAIR.

Cutting the hair does not, as commonly thought, promote its growth. Most of the specifics recommended for baldness are mere stimulants, and some of them give rise to congestion of the scalp. When a stimulant is desirable, ammonia is the best.

SCHEINER FOR JANUARY

Opens with a spirited sketch of the U. S. Life Saving Service, with numerous engravings of remarkable vigor and correctness. This is followed by American Arms and Ammunition, by Col. Church, showing the extent to which Europe is using American arms, as well as their superiority. Young Artists' Life in New York is full of interest and elegantly illustrated. The Acadians of Louisiana describes a simple people whose history is a charming addition to periodical literature, and throws a kind of side-light on Mr. Cable's romance, "The Grandissimes," which in this number has a strong dramatic interest. A Revolutionary Congressman on Horseback, gives humorous extracts from the journal of Wm. Ellery in 1778, showing the difficulty of getting to the seat of government a century ago. The poetry of the number includes such writers as Julia Ward Howe, R. H. Stoddard, and others, and the many other papers we have not space to enumerate fully sustain the character of the magazine as a first class and valuable publication.

GOOD COMPANY, No. 4.

During the coming year Good Company will continue to make a specialty of good stories by popular writers, and will be increasingly attractive in all other features.
