A Short History of the University of Missouri

By JOSEPH GLENN BABB.
A.B.14, B.J.15

The history of the University of Missouri, covering seventy-six years now, has not always been a story of easy and uninterrupted progress. We are harvesting where brave pioneers, facing difficulties that at times seemed unsurmountable, have sown. Men of devoted and consecrated lives made Columbia the seat of the University, kept the struggling institution alive when war threatened to end its activities forever, and built out of the ashes of the old main building one of the greatest of American state universities. The University of Missouri is our heritage from the loyal and unselfish educators, statesmen, and citizens of Missouri, who, through the last three quarters of a century, have given their labor and their means for a greater University.

While the history of the University properly begins with the Geyer Act of 1839 by which it was established, there are chapters of pre-foundation history that have an important relation to succeeding events. In the Northwest Ordinance of 1787, the United States announced that "schools and the means of education should forever be encouraged." Following this policy a grant of two townships of land was made by the government to the newly created State of Missouri in 1820 "for the use of a seminary of learning." An act passed by Congress in 1827 authorized the selection of these lands. The greater part of them was located in Jackson County, 7612 acres within the present limits of Kansas City. Between

A. Ross Hill, the Present President of the University

1831 and 1835 the Legislature sold most of the land in accordance with permission granted by an act of Congress, 1831. The proceeds of the sale were about $78,000. They were invested in stock of the old bank of the State of Missouri. By 1839 the amount had grown to $100,000.

This was the original endowment of the University. All of it came from the government of the United States. It was not until the University was twenty-eight years old that the State of Missouri began to contribute to its support. To the grants of the national government and the generous self-sacrifice of the people of Boone County, the University owed its beginning and its existence for the first quarter-century of its history.

The Legislature of Missouri, in February, 1839, passed two acts providing for the establishment and location of a university. The first of these, the original Geyer Act, provided for a university that was to be the head of a system of public education, modelled after the Virginia system, consisting of a university, academies and colleges, and district schools. This system, too cumbrous to be maintained by so young a state, was modified by an amending act four years later.

Boone County Wins University

The second act, providing for the location of the new institution, was introduced in the Legislature by James S. Rollins, whose name is one of the great names in the University's history. By its provisions the six most central counties in the State were to offer bids of land and money and the University was to be located in the county making the highest bid. In the spirited contest that followed, Boone, Callaway, and Howard counties were the most active participants. When the bids were opened, Boone County had won with a bid of $117,921.75—$30,000 in land and the rest in money. Callaway County, with a bid of $96,000, was the closest competitor.

In 1839 Boone County was new, undeveloped, and not wealthy. The total wealth of the inhabitants was not much more than two million dollars. The influence of the panic of 1837 had not passed entirely, but the people of the county gave one-twentieth of their entire wealth to locate the University in Columbia. Their subscriptions amounted to more than twenty-three times the total taxes collected in Boone County in 1840.

Many men gave more than they possessed at the time the subscriptions were taken. Others gave from a third to a fifth of their property. On the "roll of honor" appear the names of laborers and mechanics beside those of wealthy proprietors. Charlie Burns, a Scotch well digger, gave $5—more than he was supposed to have had at any one time; but the $5 was forthcoming when due. Edward Camplin, who could neither read nor write, gave $3,000. Mr. Camplin was owner of the new library site at one time; and his signature, a rough cross, appears in the deed to this property. In spite of the drain this gift made on the resources of the people of Boone County, not a cent of the $117-921.75 was ever repudiated.

The first Board of Curators of the University, chosen by the Legislature, met in October, 1839, under a large sugar tree on the site selected for the University. This site was then practically in the wild woods—Columbia's growth to the south came later. After considering two other locations, one facing on what is now University avenue and the other on Seventh street, the site marked by the Columns was chosen. Plans for a main building of unusual magnificence for that time were accepted; and the contract for the erection of the edifice was let to Judson Clement. Phineas Kenyon, George D. Foote and Elliott P. Cunningham. The bid was $74,494.

One of the red letter days in the University's history was that on which the corner stone of the first main building was laid July 4, 1840. Judge David Todd presided and James L. Minor of Jefferson City delivered the address. In the stone were placed a copy of the University charter, a list of the donors of the $117,921.75, the names of the curators, and United States coins of the period. This same corner stone, left by the fire of 1892, now rests in the basement of Academic Hall.

John H. Lathrop of Hamilton College, New York, was chosen president and assumed his duties in March, 1841. The University was opened later in the same year, classes being held in the Columbia College building. This building stood on Sixth street, across from the Parker Memorial Hospital, until it was razed a few years ago. By 1843, when President Lathrop made his first report to the Curators, the attendance had grown to seventy-four while the faculty numbered five, including the president.

The first commencement was held in 1843. Robert L. Todd and Robert B. Todd were graduated, both receiving the A. B. degree. Of these two, the University's first alumni, the former became a member of the Board of Curators and for twenty-five years was secretary of the board. The latter became a judge of the Louisiana Supreme Court.

The University building was completed in the same year and was dedicated July 4, 1843.

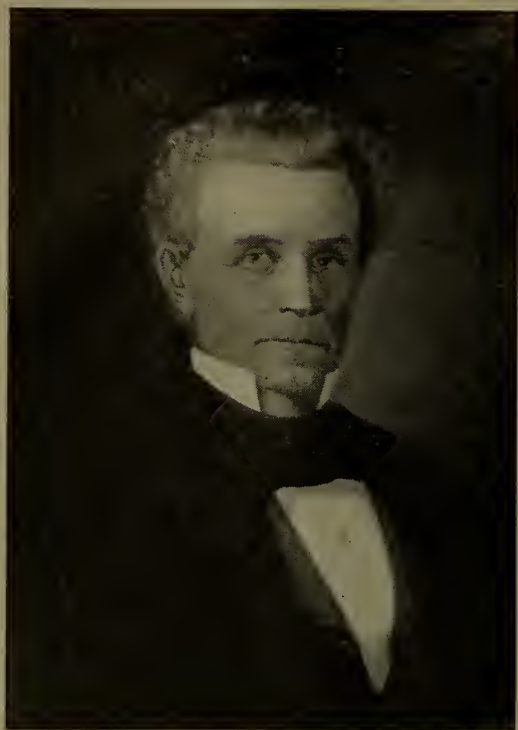

President Works for Half Salary

The history of the University from its birth to the close of the Civil War is a story of the struggle of the pioneers in the field of higher education in Missouri against almost overwhelmingly adverse conditions. The neglect of the State, financial embarrassment, legislative interference, sectarian jealousy, and local prejudice were some of the obstacles that confronted President Lathrop, his colleagues, and his successors. Boone County's gift had been used for buildings and equipment; and the seminary fund, the University's sole endowment paid rather uncertain dividends. So sorely did the institution need money that President Lathrop asked the curators to pay him $1250 annually instead of his regular salary of $2500. This spirit of self-sacrifice was characteristic of all President Lathrop's work through this trying period.

Dr. W. H. Duncan was treasurer of the University from 1841 to 1855. The University has preserved the wallet in which Doctor Duncan carried all the University's funds and the book in which he kept a record of all money paid out. The former is a stamped leather pocketbook of average size, not larger than the ordinary business man uses today. Its capacity could not have been more than a few hundred dollars, and it was not often that its capacity was taxed. The treasurer's book, in which is recorded all the money paid out by Doctor Duncan during these fourteen years, is no larger than an ordinary note book.

President Jno. H. Lathrop, 1841-1849,
1865-1866

President James Shannon, 1849-1856

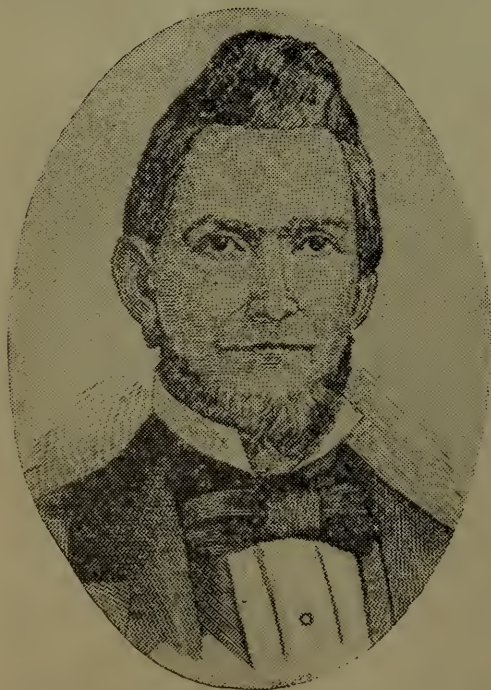

The Reverend James Shannon succeeded President Lathrop in 1849, when the latter, harassed and opposed by politicians and sectarians, resigned to become Chancellor of the University of Wisconsin.

Acting President Geo. H. Matthews,
1859-1860

President Shannon, a man of great personal magnetism, aroused the ire of the politicians and sectarians by his stand on political and religious questions; and in 1855 the Legislature declared all the chairs of the faculty vacant. President W. W. Hudson succeeded President Shannon and during his administration, from 1856 to his death in 1859, managed to placate the enemies of the University. George H. Matthews was acting president of the University during the year 1859-1860.

Then came the Civil War, and the University did not escape unscathed. President B. B. Minor headed the University during the first year of the war. Columbia was occupied by Federal troops during most of the four years the war lasted and the University buildings were used as barracks, stables, hospitals, and prisons. In 1862, the curators, facing a $7,000 debt owed the faculty on back salaries, and having no reliable or sufficient source of income, were forced to discontinue paying salaries. The University was closed from the spring of that year until November, although some members of the faculty remained in Columbia and conducted classes without any remuneration. Although reopened in November, 1862, the University barely lived until 1865. The close of the war was signaled by the return of President Lathrop to the helm of the institution.

Soldiers Hold University

At the time of the war the University buildings were four in number, the main building, the president's mansion, the astronomical observatory and the grammar school. These were set in a campus shaded by magnificent forest trees. During their occupation the soldiers killed most of the trees and made an almost barren plain out of what had been a splendid natural park. The president's mansion was burned and the main building and grammar school were badly damaged by vandal soldiers. Valuable books were taken from the library, and a geological collection of considerable value was destroyed or carried off. Horses were stabled in some of the buildings. Rooms in the main building were used for prisons and holes were cut in the floors and walls by prisoners trying to escape.

At the close of the war the University was reorganized with a faculty of four members. But just as the brighter era for the University was dawning, the untimely death of President Lathrop deprived the institution of that leader who had led the way through the most trying period of its history. President Lathrop, with the Promised Land in sight, died August 6, 1866. Through this first period he had been the hand that had moulded the University's growth. And though he did not live to see the greater advance that followed his death, his ideals and his dreams became the achievements of his followers. "I have tried to do my duty", were his last words.

Aided and encouraged by the generosity of the national government, the State of Missouri, and the people of Columbia and Boone County, Presidents Read and Laws administered the affairs of the University through twenty years of hitherto unparalleled expansion. Daniel Read had been associated with President Lathrop at Wisconsin and was chosen his successor in 1866. President Read came to Columbia when the blight of war was still prevalent, the University's income small and uncertain, and the curators' warrants sold on the streets for sixty cents on the dollar. He made the Legislature realize that without State aid the University must be closed. The

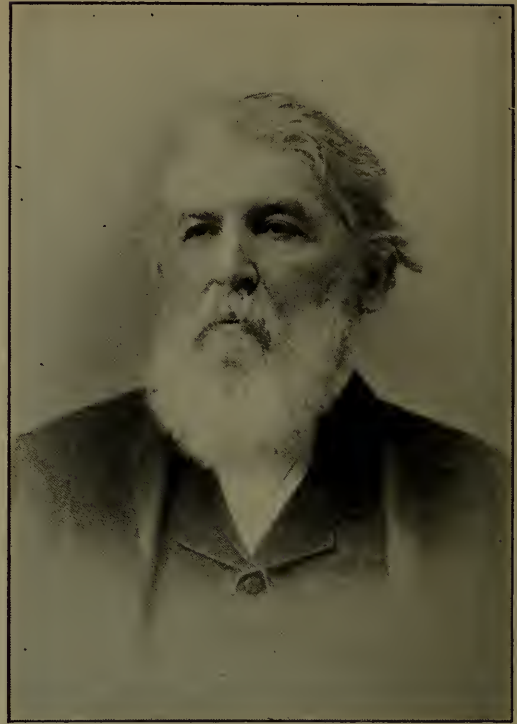

President Daniel Read, 1866-1876

Legislature responded with the first appropriation the school had ever received from the State, an appropriation of $10,000 to rebuild the president's mansion, destroyed by fire during the war, together with a small percentage of the general revenue for maintenance.

The University grew rapidly. New divisions were created in quick succession and the number of students and teachers increased. In 1875 the curators' report showed a faculty of twenty-eight members and a student body of more than five hundred. In the next decade the enrollment had almost doubled. It must be remembered, however, that then the enrollment figures included a large number of preparatory students and others that would not be counted today.

The Normal Department, forerunner of the School of Education and the first professional division of the University, began work September, 1868. E. L. Ripley was made dean. In the same year a chair of military science and tactics was created although it was not until 1890 that the Missouri State Military School came into existence.

Many New Divisions Added

The College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts was provided for by an act of Congress as early as 1862. It was not until 1870, however, that it was located at Columbia and made part of the University. The people of Boone County came forward with a bonus of $90,000, one third in money and the rest in land, thus securing the College of Agriculture for Columbia. The act locating the college in Columbia was passed in February, 1870. Senator James S. Rollins was again the leader of the University forces in the Legislature. Two years later the Board of Curators, recognizing his labors in behalf of the University, voted him the title, "Pater Universitatis Missouriensis".

The corner stone of the Agricultural Building was laid with approprivate ceremonies in 1871, and the building was completed in the following year. This building is now the home of the School of Journalism; its name has been changed to Switzler Hall. Colonel William F. Switzler, for whom it is named, was the University's historian and the editor of the Columbia Statesman.

Within the next decade four new divisions were born: the School of Mines and Metallurgy at Rolla in 1871; the School of Law, 1872; the School of Medicine, 1873; the School of Engineering, 1877. Dr. A. W. McAlester, now emeritus professor of surgery, was a member of the first faculty of the School of Medicine; and it was, in part, his unselfishness that made the founding of this division possible. Doctor McAlester taught the first five months without expecting or receiving a cent of remuneration.

The same year the School of Medicine was established, Dr. Paul Schweitzer, one of the best loved of all the University's teachers, was called to the University to become head of the newly established department of applied and analytical chemistry. Schweitzer Hall, the home of the department of agricultural chemistry, is named for him.

President Read resigned in 1876 and the Board of Curators elected Dr. Samuel S. Laws to succeed him. During President Laws' administration the University continued to expand. The Agricultural Experiment Station was established in 1888 and the Missouri State Military School followed two years later. The growing liberality of the Legislature was an important cause of this development. The biennial appropriation grew steadily and for the years 1889 and 1890 it was $67,000.

Acting President M. M. Fisher, 1889-1891

The material equipment of the University kept pace with the advance in other lines. President Laws, in 1880, improved the astronomical observatory and gave some new instruments. In 1888 Benton Hall was built, costing $20,000. Between 1883 and 1885 the main building was enlarged and improved at a cost of $125,000. The University, thus enlarged and improved, was rededicated in 1885.

President Laws' administration was terminated by his resignation in 1889. Like President Read, he was a man of forceful character and uncompromising will. Doctor Laws, more than 90 years old, is still living in Washington, D. C. M. M. Fisher was acting president of the University for the years 1889 and 1890.

It was during this second period of the University's history, during the administrations of Presidents Read and Laws, that the student body began to take on some of its present characteristics and to be formed into something like its present scheme of organization.

Women Are Admitted

A step of far reaching importance—the most important event in the history of the school for the University women—was taken by the Board of Curators in the early seventies. As early as 1869 young women had been admitted to the Normal Department. The board, “seeing that the young women did no manner of harm in the Normal Department,” took under consideration the question of throwing the doors of the entire University open to young women. This question “was approached with cautious and doubting steps, for it was considered a bold and hazardous undertaking,” says Colonel Switzler, the University’s faithful chronicler.

However, the board, with fear and trembling, took this “bold and hazardous step”, and in 1872 women students were admitted to all departments of the University. It took some time for the caution and doubt of the authorities to wear off. At first the young women were closely watched. They were not permitted to use the library at the same hours the men did; and when they attended chapel exercises, they were marched in a line between two vigilant chaperons. No serious results following, the faculty and curators ceased worrying about their “hazardous experiment,” and the women were gradually placed on the same basis as the men.

Miss Eliza Ann Gentry, now Mrs. C. A. Young of Kansas City, was the first woman to be graduated from the University. She received the degree of Normal Graduate in 1871. The following commencement three other young women became alumnae of the University of Missouri, Miss Helen A. Packer, Miss Gertrude C.

Seward and Miss Anna Ware, now Mrs. Anna Ware Taggart.

From the founding of the University down to 1890 and even later the literary societies were the centers of University student activity. They filled the place now filled by the fraternities, other organizations and all forms of competitive sport. But about 1870 the supremacy of the literary societies began to be challenged by a new institution in student life, the Greek letter secret society. The new societies were not received cordially by either the faculty or the student body outside, and for the next two decades the war between the Greeks and the “Barbs” waxed hot at frequent intervals. A chapter of Phi Kappa Psi appeared in 1869 but lived only a few years. In the next year two other chapters were founded that exist to this day, Zeta Phi, a local fraternity, affiliated with Beta Theta Pi twenty years later, and a chapter of Phi Delta Theta. These occupied the field alone for more than a decade. In the early seventies a movement was started to exclude all fraternity men from the literary and debating societies. Later, President Laws required every student to take a pledge not to join a fraternity. However, by 1890 the Greek letter secret society had become well established as an institution of student life at the University of Missouri.

Eugene Field, the laureate of children, was one of those who helped to make student history in the early seventies. Field was one of the fraternity leaders in the anti-Greek struggle. He was a student in the University during the session of 1871-1872. His first journalistic work was done on the University Missourian, a journal long since dead and not concerned with the more prosperous publication that bears that name today.

When Field studied was a puzzle to his classmates; most of his time seemed to be devoted to planning and perpetrating practical jokes. President Read was one of his favorite victims. But Field was a brilliant student and won more than his share of the honors. Some of his first poems were written here. One of them, "Sniping on the Hinkson", recalls the time when that quaint sport flourished along the banks of that classic stream.

Before leaving the second period of the University's history, two other events should be noted. James S. Rollins, the "Father of the University", died January 9, 1888, just four years before the fire. He was the leader of the generous citizens of Boone County who brought the University to Columbia in 1839, and for half a century he had been the champion and benefactor of the struggling institution. The Rollins Scholarships are present day reminders of his generosity and unselfish service.

In 1889, by an act of the Legislature, the composition of the Board of Curators was changed in such a way that local prejudice against the University was reduced to a minimum. Before this time rabid enemies of the school at Columbia had called it "Columbia College" and "Boone County Academy". This act provided that not more than one curator could be chosen from any congressional district. Before that, three curators had come from Boone County and two from Phelps County, where the School of Mines is located.

After an interregnum of almost two years, Dr. Richard Henry Jesse, in December, 1890, was called to the presidency of the University. President Jesse, although a classical scholar, saw the importance of professional training and a closer co-ordination between the parts of the State's educational system. His greatest work was done along the line of rounding out the curricula of the University and making it the head of a system of standardized, accredited high schools.

During his administration the requirements for entrance were raised, the preparatory department was done away with and all standards of the University were made higher. An enormous increase in enrollment accompanied these changes. The period covered by the terms of President Jesse and his successor, A. Ross Hill, the present head of the University, has been the period of the University's greatest growth in material equipment, in endowment, in numbers of students and teachers, in service rendered the people of Missouri, and in the confidence and support with which the people and their representatives in the Legislature have rewarded these services.

University Main Building Burns

President Jesse had been the University's head for only a year when he was called upon to meet one of the greatest crises in the school's history. On the night of January 9, 1892, the main building of the University was destroyed by fire. Practically all its contents, libraries, apparatus, valuable paintings and other works of art, geological and zoological collections were lost. The damage amounted to about a quarter of a million dollars, about half covered by insurance.

There was no suspension of regular work in the University—not even for a day. Every public building in Columbia was placed at the disposal of the University, and classes were conducted just as if the conflagration had never occurred. Only one or two of the students went home; the rest rallied to the support of the president. Three days after the fire the Board of Curators met in Columbia and took up at once the task of re-building.

As soon as the Legislature met in special session, after the fire, an agitation was started to take the school away from Columbia. Sedalia was the place suggested. It was a spirited contest, but for the third time the unflinching generosity and unselfish devotion of the people of Boone County to the University won. This time $50,000 were raised to insure the new and larger University to Columbia.

Then began the era of the University's greatest growth and expansion. The fire proved a blessing in disguise for out of the ruins of the old main building has grown the University that we know today. To replace the one building that burned, a score of buildings have been erected. Switzler Hall, Benton Hall, the president's house and the Laws Observatory are all that is left of the University before the fire. All other buildings are new.

Between 1892 and 1895 the buildings on the Quadrangle were built. The power house was completed in the year of the fire. In the next year the Law Building, Chemistry Building, Geology and Zoology (now Commerce) Building, Mechanic Arts Building, and the Engineering Building were finished. The Mechanic Arts Building burned in 1911. In 1895 Academic Hall, the present center of University activities, was completed at a cost of $260,000.

In the two decades since the completion of the Quadrangle the material growth of the University has continued unchecked. Generous support by the Legislature and the income derived from the collateral inheritance tax have been important contributing causes to this advance. Most of the new buildings have been erected from money that came to the University from the collateral inheritance tax. This tax was authorized by the Legislature in 1899.

Three new buildings have been erected on the West Campus since 1898, Lathrop Hall, the Parker Memorial Hospital and the Medical Building. Read Hall and the Horticultural Building were built on the East Campus in 1903 and in the same year work was begun on the buildings on the University Farm. Within the last six years the new East Campus has sprung up, with its fine white buildings. Every year we see some architect's or landscape gardener's dream become a reality. Two new buildings, the Biology Building and the Stock Judging Pavilion, were completed in 1914. A new Library Building is almost finished.

But these material evidences of progress are not all that testify to the advance the University has made under Presidents Jesse and

President Richard H. Jesse, 1891-1908

Hill. While the value of the buildings and equipment has been increased six or seven fold, the annual income increased in even larger proportion, the endowment doubled, a similar advance has been made along other lines.

The faculty in 1915 is six times as strong numerically as the faculty of 1890. The standards for all ranks of teachers have been raised; better work is done in all departments.

In 1890, 515 students were enrolled in the University. For the session of 1914-1915 the enrollment was 3839. This increase was made at the same time the entrance requirements for all divisions were being steadily raised and the preparatory department lopped off.

The expansion in the curricula offered in the different divisions is another evidence of the University's growth. New departments have been created in the College of Arts and Science. The School of Engineering has grown from a chair of civil engineering to a full-fledged division. The School of Education, preceded by the Teachers College, has replaced the old Normal Department. The department of physical education was not in existence in 1890.

Four new divisions have been established since President Jesse came to Missouri. The Graduate School was founded in 1896. The first School of Journalism in America was founded at the University in 1908 with Walter Williams as dean. The Extension Division is now five years old. The new School of Commerce was added in 1914 with H. J. Davenport as dean.

Dr. Hill Heads University

Seven years ago, President Jesse was forced by failing health to resign. Seventeen years of devoted service to the University were ended in 1908 when he retired, becoming emeritus professor of ancient and mediaeval history. A. Ross Hill, then dean of the College of Arts and Science at Cornell University, was called to the president's chair and assumed his duties in September, 1908. President Hill is still a young man and his administration promises to be eminently successful.

Along with the progress of the University in material equipment, in curricula, in numbers of teachers and students, have come important changes in the composition and organization of the student body and in the characters and interests of the students that compose it.

Student life is infinitely more complex than it was a quarter of a century ago. With increasing numbers has come an increasing complexity in organization. The tendency for students to group themselves on the basis of common or supposedly common interests was never more pronounced. The number of student organizations is close to a hundred. Honor fraternities, professional fraternities, musical fraternities, social fraternities, sororities of as many different kinds, senior societies, junior societies, freshman societies, state, city and county clubs, literary and debating societies, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., all have grown up to take the place that used to be occupied solely by the Union Literary and Athenaeum Societies.

The state, city and county clubs are institutions that were started in the last decade. Now there is one for nearly every state and large city represented in the student body as well as for nearly every county in Missouri.

Intercollegiate athletics is another student institution that has had its beginning within the last twenty-five years. A football game with Washington University on Thanksgiving Day, 1890, was the first inter-collegiate athletic contest for the University of Missouri. The first annual Missouri-Kansas football game was played in 1891. In the same year the first baseball games with teams from other schools were played. The schedule for that year included games with Westminster, Mexico, and Columbia. The first dual track meet for the Tigers was a victory over Kansas in 1901.

Along with the growth of athletics has come the development of the department of physical education. Rothwell Gymnasium was built in 1906. The athletic fields, including Rollins Field with its concrete bleachers and its splendid running track, have been laid out and equipped within the last three decades.

Students Govern Themselves

The movement toward student self government has been an important tendency in the last six years. Four years ago the student body held the first regular student election for the selection of a student president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer and student councilmen. The student senate is about six years old. Both the council and the senate are growing in usefulness and responsibility. The University women have their own organization. A year ago the Women's Self Government Association was started. The Pan-Hellenic Council, a body that controls the activities of the fraternities, is another manifestation of this tendency toward student self government.

A better spirit among the student body has come with these other changes. Not merely better rooting, or more loyal support for athletic teams, or a larger membership for the "Old Guard", but a spirit of fraternity, of democracy, an appreciation of true worth in men and women, a truer evaluation of the ideals for which the University stands, these characterize the student body of 1915. The fight between the fraternity man and the non-fraternity man that raged so fiercely twenty-five years ago is forgotten. We are closer to that ideal of a democracy of opportunity and an aristocracy of achievement.

When the Board of Curators met three days after the fire that destroyed the old main building, they considered seriously tearing down the six Ionic Columns that had supported the portico of the burned edifice. A stream of protests from students, alumni, and citizens of the State made them decide to leave the Columns where they stood. The debris was removed from around their bases and concrete foundations were built to hold them firm.

Today they stand in the center of the Quadrangle amid the activity and stir of the life of a modern, progressive, advancing state university. They are the silent guardians of the traditions of the seventy-five years of the University's history. They have stood there almost from the beginning in 1839. They are the monuments of the heroes in the epic of the University of Missouri.

Class List

(EXPLANATION.—This list is published for purposes of class organization. It classifies living alumni only. Each person's name appears only once even if degrees have been conferred in more than one year. The basis of classification for those having degrees conferred on them in more than one year is this: persons who have received professional degrees are classified under the year in which the first professional degree was conferred; persons not holding any professional degrees are listed under the year in which the first academic degree was conferred. The great majority of alumni seem to prefer this basis of classification. However, several alumni have requested that their names be listed differently. Their wishes have been respected.)
