THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH POETRY.

SECTION XLVI.

THE spirit of versifying the psalms, and other parts of the Bible, at the beginning of the reformation, was almost as epidemic as psalm-singing. William Hunnis, a gentleman of the chapel under Edward the Sixth, and afterwards chapel-master to queen Elisabeth, rendered into rhyme many select psalms*, which had not the good fortune to be rescued from oblivion by being incorporated into Hopkins's collection, nor to be sung in the royal chapel. They were printed in 1550, with this title, "Certayne Psalmes chosen out of the Psalter of David, and drawen furth into Englysh meter by William Hunnis servant to the ryght honourable syr William Harberd knight. Newly collected and imprinted^a."

I know not if among these are his SEVEN SOBS of a sorrowful soul for sin, comprehending the SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS in metre*. They are dedicated to Frances countess of Sussex, whose attachment to the gospel he much extols †, and who was afterwards the foundress of Sydney college in Cambridge. Hunnis also, under the happy title of a HANDFUL OF HONEY SUCKLES, published Blessings out of Deuteronomie, Prayers to Christ, Athanasius's Creed, and Meditations ‡, in metre with musical notes. But his spiritual nosegays are numerous. To say nothing of his RECREATIONS on Adam's banishment, Christ his Cribb, and the Lost Sheep, he translated into English rhyme the whole book of GENESIS, which he calls a HIVE FULL OF HONEY^b. But his honey-suckles and his honey are now no longer delicious. He was a large contributor to the PARADISE OF DAINTY DEVICES, of which more will be said in its place. In the year 1550, were also published by John Hall, or Hawle, Hunnis's "Seven Steps to Heaven" were also licensed in 1581. The love of alliteration had before produced "a Surge of Sorrowing Sobs," in the "gorgeous gallery of gallant inventions," 1578.—PARK.]

Thou God that guidst both heaven and earth,
On whom we all depend;
Preserve our Queene in perfect health,
And hir from harme defend.
Conserve hir life, in peace to reigne,
Augment hir joyes withall;
Increase hir friends, maintaine hir cause,
And heare us when we call!

So shall all we that faithfull be Rejoise and praise thy name:

Give care, and grant the same. Amen.

Turned into English Meetre by William Hunnis, one of the Gent. of her Majestie's Chappel and Maister to the Children of the same," &c. It is inscribed to Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, in an acrostic on his name, which is followed by another on the versifiers "to the friendlye reader." Thos. Newton has verses prefixed "in commendation of this his Frenedes travayle," which was written, as it seems, "in the winter of his age." He names as previous productions of Hunnis, "Enterludes and gallant layes, and rondelets and songs, his Nosegay and his Wydowes Myte, with other fancies of his forge." And he tells us, that in the prime of youth his pen "had depainted Sonets Sweete." This probably is allusive to his contributions in the "Paradise of Daintie Devises." a surgeon or physician of Maidstone in Kent, and author of many tracts in his profession, "Certayne chapters taken out of the proverbes of Solomon, with other chapters of the holy Scripture, and certayne Psalmes of David translated into English metre by John Hall c." By the remainder of the title it appears, that the proverbs had been in a former impression unfairly attributed to Thomas Sternhold. The other chapters of Scripture are from Ecclesiasticus and saint Paul's Epistles. We must not confound this John Hall with his cotemporary Eliseus Hall, who pretended to be a missionary from heaven to the queen, prophesied in the streets, and wrote a set of metrical visions d. Metre was now become the vehicle of enthusiasm, and the puritans seem to have appropriated it to themselves, in opposition to our service, which was in prose*.

William Baldwyn, of whom more will be said when we come to the MIRROR OF MAGISTRATES, published a Phrase-like declaration in English meeter on the CANTICLES or SONGS OF SOLOMON, in 1549 †. It is dedicated to Edward the Colophon: "Imprinted at London by William Baldwin, servaunt with Edwarde Whitchurche." Baldwin, in the dedication to his royal patron, expresses a pious wish that these swete and mystical songs may drive out of office "the baudy balades of lecherous love," which were indited and sung by idle courtiers in the houses of princes and noblemen. To forward the same purpose, he tells us his Majesty [Edw. VI.] had given a notable example, in causyng the Psalmes, brought into fine Englysh meter, by his godly disposed servaunt Thomas Sternholde, to be song openly before his grace, in the hearyng of all his subjectes." Baldwin's metrical paraphrase of the Song of Solomon, exhibits a greater facility of versification than the psalmody of his predecessor, and the lyrical varie-

Archbishop Parker also versified the psalter; not from any

A more brief and much more prosaic version of Solomon's Canticum Cantico-rum was published, in 1575, by a rhymer hitherto unrecorded in these annals, or in the typographical antiquities of Herbert. His book was entitled "A misti-call devise of the spirituall and godly love betweene Christ the spouse, and the Church or Congregation: first made by the wise prince Saloman, and now newly set forth in verse by JUD SMITH," &c. Printed by H. Kirckham, 16mo., b. l. A single stanza may suffice.

Come, wend unto my garden gay,
My sister and my spowse;
For I have gathered mirre with spice,
And other goodly bowes.

A fantastical and almost unintelligible pamphlet was printed in black letter, called "Beware the Cat," and was attributed to one Stremmer: but in the library of the Society of Antiquaries, a black letter copy of verses is preserved, which ascribes the production peremptorily to the pen of BALDWIN in these cryer-like lines:—

Wheras ther is a boke called Beware the Cat,

The verie truth is so that STREMMER made not that:

Nor no suche false fabels fell ever from his pen,

Nor from his hart or mouth, as' knoe mani honest men.

opposition to our liturgy, but, either for the private amusement and exercise of his religious exile, or that the people, whose predilection for psalmody could not be suppressed, might at least be furnished with a rational and proper translation. It was finished in 1557. And a few years afterwards printed by Day, the archbishop's printer, in quarto, with this title, "The whole Psalter translated into English metre, which containeth an hundredth and fifty psalmes. The first Quinquagene ^z. Quoniam omnis terræ deus, psallite sapienter. Ps. 14. 47. Imprinted at London by John Daye, dwelling over Aldersgate beneath Saint Martyr's. Cum privilegio per decennium ^b." Without date of the printer ¹, or name of the translator. In the metrical preface prefixed, he tries to remove the objections of those who censured versifications of Scripture, he pleads the comforts of such an employment to the persecuted theologist who suffers voluntary banishment, and thus displays the power of sacred music.

The psalmist stayde with tuned song

To Saule in fury cast.

With golden stringes such harmonie
His harpe so sweete did wrest,
That he reliev'd his phrenesie

Whatever might at first have been his design, it is certain that his version, although printed, was never published: and notwithstanding the formality of his metrical preface above mentioned, which was professedly written to shew the spiritual efficacy or virtue of the psalms in metre, and in which he directs a distinct and audible mode of congregational singing; he probably suppressed it, because he saw that the practice had been abused to the purposes of fanaticism, and adopted by the puritans in contradiction to the national worship; or at least that such a publication, whatever his private sentiments might have been, would not have suited the nature and dignity of his high office in the church. Some of our musical antiquaries, however, have justly conjectured, that the archbishop, who was skilled in music, and had formerly founded a music-school in his college of Stoke Clare*, intended these psalms, which are adapted to complicated tunes of four parts probably constructed by himself and here given in score, for the use of cathedrals; at a time, when compositions in counterpoint were uncommon in the church, and when that part of our choir-service called the motet or anthem, which admits a more artificial display of harmony, and which is recommended and allowed in queen Elizabeth's earliest ecclesiastical injunctions, was yet almost unknown, or but in a very imperfect state. Accordingly, although the direction is not quite comprehensible, he orders many of them to be sung by the rector chori, or chantor, and the quier, or choir, alternately. That at least he had a taste for music, we may conclude from the following not inelegant scale † of modulation, prefixed to his eight tunes above mentioned.

* [In the county of Suffolk. From the statutes of which college, as framed by Dr. Parker, Sir John Hawkins has given the following curious extract: "Item to be found in the college, henceforth a number of quiristers, to the number of eight or ten or more, as may be horne conveniently of the stock, to have sufficient meat, drink, broth, and learning. Of which said quiristers, after their breasts (i.e. voices) be changed, we will the most apt of wit and capacity be helpen with exhibition of forty shillings; four marks, or three pounds a-piece, to be students in some college in Cambridge." Hist. of Music, iii. 508.—PARK.]

† ["This scale, however elegant," says Mr. Ashby, "will not alone prove Archbishop Parker's right to this version of the psalms: because it is not only likely in general, that the translator would be a lover of music, but it so happens that the other claimant, John Keeper, had studied music and poetry at Wells." I presume that the following extract from the archbishop's diary will establish his claim to the performance. "This 6 August (his birth-day), Ann. Dom. 1557, I persist in the same constancy, upholden by the grace and goodness of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; by whose inspiration I have finished the Book of Psalms, turned

“THE NATURE OF THE EYGH TUNES.

The first is meke, devout to see,
 The second sad, in maiesty :
 The third doth rage, and roughly brayth,
 The fourth doth fawne, and flattry playth :
 The fifth deligth, and laugheth the more,
 The sixt bewayleth, it wepeth full sore.
 The seventh tredeth stoute in froward race,
 The eyghte goeth milde in modest pace.”

What follows is another proof, that he had proposed to introduce these psalms into the choir-service. “The tenor of these partes be for the people when they will syng alone, the other partes put for the greater quiers, or to suche as will syng or play them privately¹.”

How far this memorable prelate, perhaps the most accomplished scholar that had yet filled the archbishoprick of Canterbury, has succeeded in producing a translation of the psalter preferable to the common one, the reader may judge from these stanzas of a psalm highly poetical, in which I have exactly preserved the translator’s peculiar use of the hemistic punctuation.

Into vulgar verse.” (Strype’s Life of Archbishop Parker.) “Vulgar” here means vernacular; as in the ministration of baptism, the sponsors are directed to let the child be taught the creed &c. in the “vulgar tongue.” And in the prefix to Drant’s version of the Satires of Horace—“I have englished thinges not accordyng to the vaine of the Latin proprietie, but of our own vulgar tongue.”—PARK.]

¹ As the singing-psalms were never a part of our liturgy, no rubrical directions are any where given for the manner of performing them. In one of the PREFACES, written about 1550, it is ordered, “Whereas heretofore there hath been great diversitie of saying and singing in churches within this realm, some following Salisbury use, some Hereford use, some the use of Bangor, some of York, some of Lincoln; now from henceforth all the whole realm shall have but one use.” But this is said in reference to the chants, responds, suffrages, versicles, introites, kyrie-eleeysons, doxologies, and other melodies of the Book of Common Prayer, then newly published under lawful authority, with musical notes by Marbeck, and which are still used; that no arbitrary variations should be made in the manner of singing these melodies, as had been lately the case with the Roman missal, in performing which some cathedrals affected a manner of their own. The Salisbury missal was most famous and chiefly followed.

To feede my neede : he will me leade
 To pastures greene and fat :
 He forth brought me : in libertie,
 To waters delicate.

My soule and hart : he did conuert,
 To me he shewth the path :
 Of right wisnesse ; in holiness,
 His name such vertue hath.

Yea though I go : through Death his wo
 His vale and shadow wyde :
 I feare no dart : with me thou art
 With rod and staffe to guide.

Thou shalt provyde : a table wyde,
 For me against theyr spite :
 With oyle my head : thou hast bespred,
 My cup is fully dight.^m

I add, in the more sublime character, a part of the eighteenth psalm, in which Sternhold is supposed to have exerted his powers most successfully, and without the interruptions of the pointing which perhaps was designed for some regulations of the music, now unknown.

The earth did shake, for feare did quake,
 The hills they bases shooke ;
 Removed they were, in place most fayre,
 At God's ryght fearfull looke.

Darke smoke rose to hys face therefro,
 Hys mouthe as fire consumde,
 That coales as it were kyndled bright
 When he in anger fumde.

The heavens full lowe he made to bowe,
 And downe dyd he ensueⁿ ;
 And darkness great was undersete
 His feete in cloudy hue.

He rode on hye, and dyd so flye,
 Upon the Cherubins;
 He came in sight, and made his flight
 Upon the wyng of wyndes.

The Lorde from heaven sent downe his leaven
 And thundred thence in ire;
 He thunder cast in wondrous blast
 With hayle and coales of fyre.°

Here is some degree of spirit, and a choice of phraseology. But on the whole, and especially for this species of stanza, Parker will be found to want facility, and in general to have been unpractised in writing English verses. His abilities were destined to other studies, and adapted to employments of a more archiepiscopal nature.

The industrious Strype, Parker's biographer, after a diligent search never could gain a sight of this translation*: nor is it even mentioned by Ames, the inquisitive collector of our typographical antiquities. In the late Mr. West's library there was a superb copy, once belonging to bishop Kennet, who has remarked in a blank page, that the archbishop permitted his wife dame Margaret to present the book to some of the nobility. It is certainly at this time extremely scarce, and would be deservedly deemed a fortunate acquisition to those capricious students who labour only to collect a library of rarities. Yet it is not generally known, that there are two copies in the Bodleian library of this anonymous version, which have hitherto been given to an obscure poet by the name of John Keeper. One of them, in 1643, appears to have been the property of bishop Barlow: and on the opposite side of the title, in somewhat of an antient hand, is this manuscript insertion. "The auctor of this booke is one John Keeper†, who was brought upp in the close of Wells." Perhaps Antony Wood had no better authority than this slender unauthenticated note, for saying, that John Keeper, a native of Somersetshire, and a graduate at Oxford in the year 1564, and who afterwards studied music and poetry at Wells, translated The whole Psalter into English metre which containeth 150 psalms, etc. printed at London by John Day living over Aldersgate, about 1570 [1574], in quarto: and added thereunto The Gloria Patri, Te Deum, The Song of the three Children, Quicunque vult, Benedictus, &c. all in metre. At the end of which, are musical notes set in four parts to several psalms. What other things, he adds, of poetry, music, or other faculties, he has published, I know not; nor any thing more; yet I suppose he had some dignity in the church of Wells^p." If this version should really be the work of Keeper, I fear we are still to seek for 'archbishop Parker's psalms', with Strype and Ames^q.

by H. Denham, 12mo, b. 1. Dedicated to Ladie Anne Talbot. Among the recommendatory copies of verses is one signed "John Keeper, student." See also "J. K. to his friend H." fol. 27. a. and "H. to K." ibid. Again fol. 33. b. 34. a. 38, 39. &c.

Howell had another volume of verses in Pearson's collection, entitled "Devises for his owne exercise and his Friends pleasure," printed in 1581, 4to. The first of these occurs in the Bodleian library, and denotes him to have had a contraction of metrical spirit, which fitly adapted itself to posies for rings; ex. gr.

The following lines from a poem wherein a lover "describes his loss of liberty and craves return of love," are the very best I could trace in the volume, which is deemed unique, and therefore claimed an entire perusal.

^q [This suggestion of Mr. Warton drew forth the following satisfactory investigation, it is conjectured, from the Rev. Dr. Lort, who was chaplain to the archbishop of Canterbury. "In the Lambeth library is a beautiful copy of this edition of the Psalms, on the back of the title of which is written—to the right vertuouse and honorable Ladye the Countesse of Shrewsburye, from your lovinge frende, Margaret Parker." This is written in the hand of the time when she lived; and the binding of the book, which is richly gilded, seems also of the same date. But there is no date to the book, and where Antony Wood found that of 1570 for his copy, if it was of the same book with this, we are yet to

A considerable contributor to the metrical theology was Robert Crowley, educated in Magdalene college at Oxford, where he obtained a fellowship in 1542. In the reign of Edward the Sixth, he commenced printer and preacher in London. He lived in Ely-rents in Holborn: "where," says Wood, "he sold books; and at leisure times exercised the gift of preaching in the great city and elsewhere." In 1550 he printed the first edition of PIERCE PLOWMAN'S VISION; but with the ideas of a controversialist, and with the view of helping forward the reformation by the revival of a book which exposed the absurdities of popery in strong satire, and which at present is only valuable or useful, as it serves to gratify the harmless researches of those peaceable philosophers who study the progression of antient literature. His pulpit and his press, those two prolific sources of faction, happily co-operated in propagating his principles of predestination: and his shop and his sermons were alike frequented: Possessed of those talents which qualified him for captivating the attention and moving the passions of the multitude, under queen Elisabeth he held many dignities in a church, whose doctrines and polity his undiscerning zeal had a tendency to destroy. He translated into popular rhyme, not only the psalter, but the litany, with hymns, all which he printed together in 1549. In the same year, and in the same measure, he published The Voice of the last Trumpet blown by the seventh angel. This piece contains twelve several lessons, for the instruction or amendment of those who seemed at that time chiefly to need advice; and among whom he enumerates lewd priests, scholars, physicians, beggars, yeomen, gentlemen, magistrates, and women. He also attacked the abuses of his seek. If that date really belongs to it, it cannot probably be the same edition with that in the Lambeth library, which has Margaret Parker's name written in it, for she died (as Strype tells us) in 1570: and if the book was printed in this or the foregoing year, Keeper could not (according to Antony Wood's account of him) be above 22 or 23 years of age. age in thirty-one EPIGRAMS, first printed in 1551. The subjects are placed alphabetically. In his first alphabet are Abbayes, Alehouses, Alleys, and Almshouses. The second, Bailiffs, Bawds, Beggars, Bear-bayting, and Brawlers. They display, but without spirit or humour, the reprehensible practices and licentious manners which then prevailed. He published in 1551, a kind of metrical sermon on Pleasure and Pain, Heaven and Hell. Many of these, to say nothing of his almost innumerable controversial tracts in prose, had repeated editions, and from his own press. But one of his treatises, to prove that Lent is a human invention and a superstitious institution, deserves notice for its plan: it is a Dialogue between Lent and Liberty. The personification of Lent is a bold and a perfectly new prosopoeia. In an old poem* of this age against the papists, written by one doctor William Turner a physician, but afterwards dean of Wells, the Mass, or mistress MISSA, is personified, who, arrayed in all her meretricious trappings, must at least have been a more theatrical figure^s. Crowley likewise wrote, and printed in 1588, a rhyming manual, The School of Vertue and Book of good Nurture. This is a translation into metre, of many of the less exceptionable Latin hymns antiently used by the catholics, and still continuing to retain among the protestants a degree of popularity. One of these begins, Jam Lucis orto sydere. At the end are prayers and graces in rhyme. This book, which in Wood's time had been degraded to the stall of the ballad-singer, and is now only to be found on the shelf of the antiquary, was intended to supersede or abolish the original Latin hymns, which were only offensive because they were in Latin, and which were the recreation of scholars in our universities after dinner on festival days. At an archiepiscopal visitation of Merton college in Oxford, in the year 1562, it was a matter of enquiry, whether the superstitious hymns appointed to be sung in the Hall on holidays, were changed for the psalms in metre: and one of the fellows is accused of having attempted to prevent the singing of the metrical Te Deum in the refectory on All-saints day^t.

It will not be foreign to our purpose to remark here, that when doctor Cosins, prebendary of Durham, afterwards bishop, was cited before the parliament in 1640, for reviving or supporting papistic usages in his cathedral, it was alledged against him, that he had worn an embroidered cope, had repaired some ruinous cherubims, had used a consecrated knife for dividing the sacramental bread, had renovated the blue cap and golden beard of a little image of Christ on bishop Hatfield's tomb, had placed two lighted tapers on the altar, which was decorated with emblematic sculpture, and had forbidden the psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins to be sung in the choir^u.

SECTION XLVII.

BUT among the theological versifiers of these times, the most notable is Christopher Tye, a doctor of music at Cambridge in 1545, and musical preceptor to prince Edward, and probably to his sisters the princesses Mary and Elisabeth. In the reign of Elisabeth he was organist of the royal chapel, in which he had been educated. To his profession of music, he joined some knowledge of English literature: and having been taught, to believe that rhyme and edification were closely connected, and being persuaded that every part of the Scripture would be more instructive and better received if reduced into verse, he projected a translation of the ACTS OF THE APOSTLES into familiar metre. It appears that the BOOK OF KINGS had before been versified, which for many reasons was more capable of shining under the hands of a translator. But the most splendid historical book, I mean the most susceptible of poetic ornament, in the Old or New Testament, would have become ridiculous when clothed in the fashionable ecclesiastical stanza. Perhaps the plan of setting a narrative of this kind to music, was still more preposterous and exceptionable. However, he completed only the first fourteen chapters: and they were printed in 1553, by William Serres, with the following title, which, by the reader who is not acquainted with the peculiar complexion of this period, will hardly be suspected to be serious. "The ACTES OF THE APOSTLES translated into Englyshe metre, and dedicated to the kinges most excellent maiestye by Cristofer Tye, doctor in musyke, and one of the Gentylnen of hys graces most honourable Chappell, with notes to eche chapter to synge and also to play upon the Lute, very necessarye for studentes after theyr studye to fyle their wittes, and alsoe for all christians that cannot synge, to reade the good and godlye storyes of the lives of Christ, his apostles." It is dedicated in Sternhold's stanza, "To the vertuous and godlye learned prynce Edward the Sixth." As this singular dedication contains, not only anecdotes of the author and his work, but of his majesty's eminent attention to the study of the scripture, and of his skill in playing on the lute, I need not apologise for transcribing a few dull stanzas; especially as they will also serve as a specimen of the poet's native style and manner, unconfined by the fetters of translation.

Your Grace may note, from tyme to tyme,
 That some doth undertake
 Upon the Psalms to write in ryme,
 The verse plesant to make:
 And some doth take in hand to wryte
 Out of the Booke of Kynges;
 Because they se your Grace delyte
 In suche like godlye thynges^a.
 And last of all, I you're poore man,
 Whose doinges are full base,
 Yet glad to do the best I can
 To give unto your Grace,
 Have thought it good now to recyte
 The stories of the Actes
 Even of the Twelve, as Luke doth wryte,
 Of all their worthy factes.—
 Unto the text I do not ad,
 Nor nothyng take awaye;
 And though my style be gros and bad,
 The truth perceyve ye may.—

^a Strype says, that "Sternhold composed several psalms at first for his own solace. For he set and sung them to his organ. Which music king Edward vi. sometime hearing, for he was a Gentleman of the privy-chamber, was much delighted with them. Which occasioned his publication and dedication of them to the said king." ECCLES. MEMOR. B. i. ch. 2. p. 86.

My callinge is another waye,
 Your Grace shall herein fynde
 By notes set förth to synge or playe,
 To recreate the mynde.

And though they be not curious^b,
 But for the letter mete;
 Ye shall them fynde harmonious,
 And eke pleasaunt and swete.

A young monarch singing the ACTS OF THE APOSTLES in verse to his lute, is a royal character of which we have seldom heard. But he proceeds,

That such good thynges your Grace might move
 Your Lute when ye assaye,
 In stede of songes of wanton love,
 These stories then to play.

So shall your Grace please God the lorde
 In walkyng in his waye,
 His lawes and statutes to recorde
 In your heart night and day.

And eke your realme shall flourish styll,
 No good thyng shall decaye,
 Your subjectes shall with right good will,
 These wordes recorde and saye:

“Thy lyf, O kyng, to us doth shyne,
 As God’s boke doth thee teache;
 Thou dost us feede with such doctrine
 As Christes elect dyd preache.”

From this sample of his original vein, my reader will not perhaps hastily predetermine, that our author has communicated any considerable decorations to his ACTS OF THE APOSTLES in English verse. There is as much elegance and animation in the two following initial stanzas of the fourteenth chapter, as in any of the whole performance, which I shall therefore exhibit.

It chaunced in Iconium,

That they so spake to Jew and Greke
That many did bileve.

Doctor Tye's ACTS OF THE APOSTLES were sung for a time in the royal chapel of Edward the Sixth. But they never became popular*. The impropriety of the design, and the impotency of the execution, seem to have been perceived even by his own prejudiced and undiscerning age. This circumstance, however, had probably the fortunate and seasonable effect, of turning Tye's musical studies to another and a more rational system: to the composition of words judiciously selected from the prose psalms in four or five parts. Before the middle of the reign of Elisabeth, at a time when the more ornamental and intricate music was wanted in our service, he concurred with the celebrated Tallis and a few others in setting several anthems, which are not only justly supposed to retain much of the original strain of our antient choral melody before the reformation, but in respect of harmony, expression, contrivance, and general effect, are allowed to be perfect models of the genuine ecclesiastic style. Fuller informs us, that Tye was the chief restorer of the loss which the music of the church had sustained by the destruction of the monasteries^d. Tye also ap-mentioned, at the beginning of the reign of Elisabeth, and by proper authority, enriched the music of Marbeck's liturgy. He set to music the TE DEUM, BENEDICTUS, MAGNIFICAT, NUNC DIMITTIS, and other offices, to which Marbeck had pears to have been a translator of Italian. The History of Nastagio and Traversari translated out of Italian into English by C. T. perhaps Christopher Tye, was printed at London in 1569.^c

It is not my intention to pursue any farther the mob of religious rhymers, who, from principles of the most unfeigned piety, devoutly laboured to darken the lustre, and enervate the force, of the divine pages. And perhaps I have been already too prolix in examining a species of poetry, if it may be so called, which even impoverishes prose; or rather, by mixing the stile of prose with verse, and of verse with prose, destroys the character and effect of both. But in surveying the general course of a species of literature, absurdities as well as excellencies, the weakness and the vigour of the human mind, must have their historian. Nor is it displeasing to trace and to contemplate those strange incongruities, and false ideas of perfection, which at various times, either affectation, or caprice, or fashion, or opinion, or prejudice, or ignorance, or enthusiasm, present to the conceptions of men, in the shape of truth.

I must not, however, forget, that king Edward the Sixth is to be ranked among the religious poets of his own reign. Fox has published his metrical instructions concerning the eucharist, addressed to sir Antony Saint Leger. Bale also mentions his comedy called the WHORE OF BABYLON, which Holland the herologist, who perhaps had never seen it, and knew not whether it was a play or a ballad, in verse or prose, pronounces given only the canto fermo, or plain chant. He composed a new Litany still in use; and improved the simpler modulation of Marbeck's Suffrages, Kyries after the Commandments, and other versicles, as they are sung at present. There are two chants of Tallis, one to the VENITE EXULTEMUS, and another to the Athanasian Creed.

^c In duodecimo.—I had almost forgot to observe, that John Mardiley, clerk of the king's Mint, called Suffolk-house in Southwark, translated twenty-four of David's Psalms into English verse, about 1550. He wrote also Religious Hymns. Bale, par. post. p. 106. There is extant his Complaint against the stiff-necked papist in verse, Lond. by T. Reynolds, 1548. 8vo. And, a Short Reuytal of certyne holie doctors, against the real presence, collected in myter [metre] by John Mardiley. Lond. 12mo. to be a most elegant performance^f. Its elegance, with some, will not perhaps apologise or atone for its subject: and it may seem strange, that controversial ribaldry should have been suffered to enter into the education of a great monarch. But the genius, habits, and situation, of his age should be considered. The reformation was the great political topic of Edward's court. Intricate discussions in divinity were no longer confined to the schools or the clergy. The new religion, from its novelty, as well as importance, interested every mind, and was almost the sole object of the general attention. Men emancipated from the severities of a spiritual tyranny, reflected with horror on the slavery they had so long suffered, and with exultation on the triumph they had obtained. These feelings were often expressed in a strain of enthusiasm. The spirit of innovation, which had seized the times, often transgressed the bounds of truth. Every change of religion is attended with those ebullitions, which growing more moderate by degrees, afterwards appear eccentric and ridiculous.

We who live at a distance from this great and national struggle between popery and protestantism, when our church has been long and peaceably established, and in an age of good sense, of politeness and philosophy, are apt to view these effusions of royal piety as weak and unworthy the character of a king. But an ostentation of zeal and example in the young Edward, as it was natural so it was necessary, while the reformation was yet immature. It was the duty of his preceptors, to impress on his tender years, an abhorrence of the principles of Rome, and a predilection to that happy system which now seemed likely to prevail. His early diligence, his inclination to letters, and his seriousness of disposition, seconded their active endeavours to cultivate and to bias his mind in favour of the new theology, which was now become the fashionable knowledge. These and other amiable virtues his cotemporaries have given young Edward in an eminent degree. But it may be presumed, that the partiality which youth always commands, the specious prospects excited by expectation, and the flattering promises of religious liberty secured to a distant posterity, have had some small share in dictating his panegyric.

The new settlement of religion, by counteracting inveterate prejudices of the most interesting nature, by throwing the clergy into a state of contention, and by disseminating theological opinions among the people, excited so general a ferment, that even the popular ballads and the stage, were made the vehicles of the controversy between the papal and protestant communions^e.

The Ballad of LUTHER, the POPE, a CARDINAL, and a HUSBANDMAN, written in 1550, in defence of the reformation, has some spirit, and supports a degree of character in the speakers. There is another written about the same time, which is a lively satire on the English Bible, the vernacular liturgy, and the book of homilies^h. The measure of the last is that of PIERCE PLOWMAN, with the addition of rhyme: a sort of versification which now was not uncommon.

Strype has printed a poem called the PORE HELP*, of the year 1550, which is a lampoon against the new preachers or gospellers, not very elegant in its allusions, and in Skelton's style. The anonymous satirist mentions with applause Mayster Huggarde, or Miles Hoggard, a shoemaker of London, and who wrote several virulent pamphlets against the reformation, ^e See instances already given, before the Reformation had actually taken place, supr. vol. iii. p. 428.

* [My erudite friend Mr. Douce, who is supposed to possess the only ancient copy of this little libel now remaining, thinks it was probably written by Skelton. The following is its title:

And wepon to drive hence

Herbert, in his general history of printing, has blended this title with the

which were made important by extorting laboured answers from several eminent 'divines'. He also mentions a nobler clarke, whose learned Balad in defence of the holy Kyrke had triumphed over all the raillery of its numerous opponents^k. The same industrious annalist has also preserved A song on bishop Latimer, in the octave rhyme, by a poet of the same persuasion^l. And in the catalogue of modern English prohibited books delivered in 1542 to the parish priests, to the intent that their authors might be discovered and punished, there is the Burying of the Mass in English rithme^m. But it is not my intention to make a full and formal collection of these fugitive religious pasquinades, which died with their respective controversies.

In the year 1547, a proclamation was published to prohibit preaching. This was a temporary expedient to suppress the turbulent harangues of the catholic ministers, who still composed no small part of the parochial clergy: for the court of augmentations took care perpetually to supply the vacant benefices with the disincorporated monks, in order to exonerate the exchequer from the payment of their annuities. These men, both from inclination and interest, and hoping to restore the church to its antient orthodoxy and opulence, exerted all their powers of declamation in combating the doctrines of protestantism, and in alienating the minds of the people from the new doctrines and reformed rites of worship. Being silenced by authority, they had recourse to the stage; and from the pulpit removed their polemics to the play-house. Their farces became more successful than their sermons. The people flocked eagerly to the play-house, when deprived not only of their antient pageantries, but of their pastoral discourses, in the church. Archbishop Cranmer and the protector Somerset were the chief objects of these dramatic invectivesⁿ. At length, the same autho-erty which had checked the preachers, found it expedient to controul the players: and a new proclamation, which I think has not yet appeared in the history of the British drama, was promulgated in the following terms°. The inquisitive reader will observê, that from this instrument plays appear to have been long before a general and familiar species of entertainment, that they were acted not only in London but in the great towns, that the profession of a player, even in our present sense, was common and established; and that these satirical interludes are forbidden only in the English tongue. “Forasmuch as a great number of those that be COMMON PLAYERS of ENTERLUDES and PLAYES, as well within the city of London as elsewhere within the realm, doe for the most part play such ENTERLUDES, as contain matter tending to sedition, and contemning of sundry good orders and laws; whereupon are growñ and daily are likely to growe and ensue much disquiet, division, tumults and uprores in this realm^p: the Kinges Majesty, by ° Dat. 8 Edw. vi. Aug. 8.

^p It should, however, be remarked, that the reformers had themselves shewn the way to this sort of abuse long before. Bale’s comedy of THE THREE LAWS, printed in 1538, is commonly supposed to be a Mystery, and merely doctrinal: but it is a satirical play against popery, and perhaps the first of the kind in our language. I have mentioned it in general terms before, under Bale as a poet; but I reserved a more particular notice of it for this place. [See supr. vol. iii. p. 362.] It is exceedingly scarce, and has this colophon. “Thus endeth thys Comedy concernynge the thre lawes, of Nature, Moses, and Christ, corrupted by the Sodomytes, Pharisees, and Papystes, most wycked. . Compyled by Johan Bale. Anno m. d. xxxviii. And lately imprinted per Nicolaum Bamburgensem.” duod. It has these directions about the dresses, the first I remember to have seen, which shew the scope and spirit of the piece. SIGNAT. Omnipotens sempiternè Deus, qui ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram formasti laicos, da, quæsumus, ut sicut eorum sudoribus vivimus, ita eorum uxoribus, filiabus, et domicellis perpetuo frui mereamur, per dominum nostrum Papam.” Bale, a clergyman, and at length a bishop in Ireland, ought to have known, that this profane and impious parody was more offensive and injurious to true religion than any part of the missal which he means to ridicule. INFIDELITY then begins in English verse a conversation with LEX MOYSIS, containing the most low and licentious obscenity, which I am ashamed to transcribe, concerning the words of a Latin anteme, between an old fryre, or friar, with spectacles on hys nose, and dame Isabel an old nun, who crows like a capon. This is the most tolerable part of INFIDELITY’s dialogue. SIGNAT. C. iiij.

But when the short date of this proclamation expired, the reformers, availing themselves of the stratagems of an enemy, attacked the papists with their own weapons. One of the comedies on the side of reformation still remains^r. But the writer, while his own religion from its simple and impalpable form was much less exposed to the ridicule of scenic exhibition, has not taken advantage of that opportunity which the papistic ceremonies so obviously afforded to burlesque and drollery, from their visible pomp, their number, and their absurdities: nor did he perceive an effect which he might have turned to his own use, suggested by the practice of his catholic antagonists in the drama, who, by way of recommending their own superstitious solemnities, often made them contemptible by theatrical representation.

This piece is entitled, An Entèrlude called LUSTY JUVENUS: lively describing the Frailltie of youth: of Nature prone to Vyce: by Grace and Good Councell traynable to vertue^s. The author, of whom nothing more is known, was one R. Wever, as appears from the colophon. "Finis, quod R. Wever. Imprinted at London in Paules•churche yarde by Abraham Vele at the signe of the Lambe." Hypocrisy is its best character: who laments the loss of her superstitions to the devil, and recites a long catalogue of the trumpery of the popish worship in the metre and manner of Skelton^t. The chapter and verse of Scripture are often announced: and in one scene, a personage, called GOD'S MERCYFULL PROMISES, cites Ezekiel as from the pulpit.

The Lord by his prophet Ezekiel sayeth in this wise playnlye,
As in the xxiii chapter it doth appere:
Be converted, O ye children, &c.^u

From this interlude we learn, that the young men, which was natural, were eager to embrace the new religion, and that the old were unwilling to give up those doctrines and modes of worship, to which they had been habitually attached, and had paid the most implicit and reverential obedience, from their childhood. To this circumstance the devil, who is made to represent the Scripture as a novelty, attributes the destruction of his spiritual kingdom.

 But they wyll llyve as the Scripture teacheth them.^v ...

The devil then, in order to recover his interest, applies to his son Hypocrisy, who attempts to convert a young man to the antient faith, and says that the Scripture can teach no more than that God is a good man^w, a phrase which Shakespeare with great humour has put into the mouth of Dogberry^x. But he adds an argument in jest, which the papists sometimes seriously used against the protestants, and which, if we consider the poet's ultimate intention, had better been suppressed.

The world was never mery,
 Since children were so bolde:
 Now every boy will be a teacher,
 The father a foole, and the chyld a preacher.^y

It was among the reproaches of protestantism, that the inexperienced and the unlearned thought themselves at liberty to explain the Scriptures, and to debate the most abstruse and metaphysical topics of theological speculation. The two songs in the character of YOUTH, at the opening and close of this interlude, are flowery and not inelegant^z.

The protestants continued their plays in Mary's reign: for Strype has exhibited a remonstrance from the Privy-council to the lord President of the North, representing, that "certain lewd [ignorant*] persons, to the number of six or seven in a company, naming themselves to be servants of sir Frauncis Lake, and wearing his livery or badge on their sleeves, have wandered about those north parts, and representing certain Plays and Enterludes," reflecting on her majesty and king

Philip, and the formalities of the mass^a. These were family-minstrels or players, who were constantly distinguished by their master's livery or badge.

When the English liturgy was restored at the accession of Elisabeth, after its suppression under Mary, the papists renewed their hostilities from the stage; and again tried the intelligible mode of attack by ballads, farces, and interludes. A new injunction was then necessary, and it was again enacted in 1559, that no person, but under heavy forfeitures, should abuse the Common Prayer in "any Enterludes, Plays, songs or rimes^b." But under Henry the Eighth, so early as the year 1542, before the reformation was fixed or even intended on its present liberal establishment, yet when men had begun to discern and to reprobate many of the impostures of popery, it became an object of the legislature to curb the bold and seditious spirit of popular poetry. No sooner were the Scriptures translated and permitted in English, than they were brought upon the stage: they were not only misinterpreted and misunderstood by the multitude, but profaned or burlesqued in comedies and mummeries. Effectually to restrain these abuses, Henry, who loved to create a subject for persecution, who commonly proceeded to disannul what he had just confirmed, and who found that a freedom of enquiry tended to shake his ecclesiastical supremacy, framed a law, that not only Tyndale's English Bible, and all the printed English commentaries, expositions, annotations, defences, replies, and sermons, whether orthodox or heretical, which it had occasioned, should be utterly abolished; but that the kingdom should also be purged and cleansed of all religious plays, interludes, rhymes, ballads, and songs, which are equally pestiferous and noysome to the peace of the church^c.

Henry appears to have been piqued as an author and a theologian in adding the clause concerning his own INSTITUTION OF A CHRISTIAN MAN, which had been treated with the same sort of ridicule. Yet under the general injunction of suppressing all English books on religious subjects, he formally excepts, among others, some not properly belonging to that class, such as the CANTERBURY TALES, the works of Chaucer and Gower, CRONICLES, and STORIES OF MENS LIVES^d. There is also an exception added about plays, and those only are allowed which were called MORALITIES, or perhaps interludes of real character and action, "for the rebuking and reproaching of vices and the setting forth of virtue." MYSTERIES are totally rejected^e. The reservations which follow, concerning the use of a corrected English Bible, which was permitted, are curious for their quaint partiality, and they shew the embarrassment of administration, in the difficult business of confining that benefit to a few, from which all might reap advantage, but which threatened to become a general evil, without some degrees of restriction. It is absolutely forbidden to be read or expounded in the church. The lord chancellor, the speaker of the house of commons, captaines of the wars, justices of the peace, and recorders of cities, may quote passages to enforce their public harangues, as has been accustomed. A nobleman or gentleman may read it, in his house, orchards, or garden, yet quietly, and without disturbance "of good order." A merchant also may read it to himself privately. But the common people, who had already abused this liberty to the purpose of division and dissentions, and under the denomination of women, artificers, apprentices, journeymen, and servingmen, are to be punished with one month's imprisonment, as often as they are detected in reading the Bible either privately or openly.

It should be observed, that few of these had now learned to read. But such was the privilege of peerage, that ladies of quality might read "to themselves and alone, and not to others," any chapter either in the Old or New Testament^f. This has the air of a sumptuary law, which indulges the nobility with many superb articles of finery, that are interdicted to those of inferior degree^g. Undoubtedly the duchesses and countesses of this age, if not from principles of piety, at least from motives of curiosity, became eager to read a book which was made inaccessible to three parts of the nation. But the partial distribution of a treasure to which all had a right could not long remain. This was a MANNA to be gathered by every man. The claim of the people was too powerful to be overruled by the bigotry, the prejudice, or the caprice of Henry.

I must add here, in reference to my general subject, that the translation of the Bible, which in the reign of Edward the Sixth was admitted into the churches, is supposed to have fixed our language. It certainly has transmitted and perpetuated many antient words which would otherwise have been obsolete or unintelligible. I have never seen it remarked, that at the same time this translation contributed to enrich our native English at an early period, by importing and familiarising many Latin words^h.

An archbishop six black-birds at once, a bishop five, a dean four, an archdeacon two. If a dean has four dishes in his first course, he is not afterwards to have custards or fritters. An archbishop may have six snipes, an archdeacon only two. Rabbits, larks, pheasants, and partridges, are allowed in these proportions. A canon residentiary is to have a swan only on a Sunday. A rector of sixteen marks, only three black-birds in a week. See a similar instrument, Strype's PARKER, APPEND. p. 65.

In the British Museum, there is a beautiful manuscript on vellum of a French translation of the Bible, which was found in the tent of king John, king of France, after the battle of Poitiers. Perhaps his majesty possessed this book on the plan of an exclusive royal right. [As perhaps there were few such copies in that great kingdom, and very little spirit of reading in the laity.—АНЯВУ.]

^h More particularly in the Latin derivative substantives, such as, divination, perdition, adoption, manifestation, consolation, contribution, administration, consummation, reconciliation, operation, communication, retribution, preparation, immortality, principality, &c. &c. And in other words, frustrate, inexcusable, transfigure, concupiscence, &c. &c.

These were suggested by the Latin vulgate, which was used as a medium by the translators. Some of these, however, now interwoven into our common speech, could not have been understood by many readers even above the rank of the vulgar, when the Bible first appeared in English. Bishop Gardiner had therefore much less reason than we now imagine, for complaining of the too great clearness of the translation, when with an insidious view of keeping the people in their antient ignorance, he proposed, that instead of always using English phrases, many Latin words should still be preserved, because they contained an inherent significance and a genuine dignity, to which the common tongue afforded no correspondent expressions of sufficient energy¹.

To the reign of Edward the Sixth belongs Arthur Kelton, a native of Shropshire or Wales. He wrote the CRONICLE OF THE BRUTES in English verse. It is dedicated to the young king, who seems to have been the general patron; and was printed in 1547^k. Wood allows that he was an able antiquary; but laments, that he "being withall poetically given, must for-

Richard Harvey, the brother of Gabriel, published a prose tract in 1593, entitled "Philadelphus, or a defence of Brutes and the Brutans history," but of Arthur Kelton's work no notice is taken. It opens with a personal invective against Buchanan for his rejection of the Brute tradition, proceeds with an affected division of his subject into three portions, which he terms Anthropology, Chronology and Topography, and concludes with three sarcastic "supposes of a student concerning Historic." The tract is pompous, pedantic and silly. Warner in his Albion's, England, 1586, traces the genealogy of Brute (the conqueror of this island, which from him "had Britaine unto name") through all the wild fictions of mythology and allegory up to antediluvian origin, making him at once the grandson of Æneas, and calculating his descent to be thrice five degrees from Noah, and four times six from Adam. Warner's Chronicle is in metre, except an addition to his second book, which contains a breviat of the history of Æneas to the birth of his grandson Brutus. I do not observe, however, that any reference is made by him to Arthur Kelton.—PARK.]

sooth write and publish his lucubrations in verse; whereby, for rhyme's sake, many material matters, and the due timing of them, are omitted, and so consequently rejected by historians and antiquarians¹." Yet he has not supplied his want of genealogical and historical precision with those strokes of poetry, which his subject suggested; nor has his imagination been any impediment to his accuracy. At the end of his CRONICLE is the GENEALOGY OF THE BRUTES, in which the pedigree of king Edward the Sixth is lineally drawn through thirty-two generations, from Osiris the first king of Egypt. Here too Wood reproaches our author for his ignorance in genealogy. But in an heraldic enquiry, so difficult and so new, many mistakes are pardonable. It is extraordinary that a Welshman should have carried his genealogical researches into Egypt, or rather should have wished to prove that Edward was descended from Osiris: but this was with a design to shew, that the Egyptian monarch was the original progenitor of Brutus, the undoubted founder of Edward's family. Bale says that he wrote, and dedicated to sir William Herbert, afterwards earl of Pembroke, a most elegant poetical panegyric on the Cambro-Britons^m. But Bale's praises and censures are always regulated according to the religion of his authors.

The first CHANSON à BOIRE, or DRINKING-BALLAD, of any merit, in our language, appeared in the year 1551*. It has a vein of ease and humour, which we should not expect to have been inspired by the simple beverage of those times. I believe I shall not tire my reader by giving it at length; and am only afraid that in this specimen the transition will be thought too violent, from the poetry of the puritans to a convivial and un-godlie ballad. *

This song opens the second act of GAMMER GURTON'S NEEDLE, a comedy, written and printed in 1551^p, and soon afterwards acted at Christ's College in Cambridge. In the title of the old edition it is said to have been written "by Mr. S.* master of artes," who probably was a member of that society. This is held to be the first comedy in our language: that is, the first play which was neither Mystery nor Morality, and which handled a comic story with some disposition of plot, and some discrimination of character^q. The writer has a degree of jocularly which sometimes rises above buffoonery, but is often disgraced by lowness of incident[†]. Yet in a more polished age he would have chosen, nor would he perhaps have disgraced, a better subject. It has been thought surprising that a learned audience could have endured some of these indelicate scenes. But the established festivities of scholars were gross, and agreeable to their general habits: nor was learning in that age always accompanied by gentleness of manners. When the sermons of Hugh Latimer were in vogue at court, the university might be justified in applauding GAMMER GURTON'S NEEDLE[‡].

SECTION XLVIII.

TRUE genius, unseduced by the cabals and unalarmed by the dangers of faction, defies or neglects those events which destroy the peace of mankind, and often exerts its operations amidst the most violent commotions of a state. Without patronage and without readers, I may add without models, the earlier Italian writers, while their country was shook by the intestine tumults of the Guelfes and Guibelines, continued to produce original compositions both in prose and verse, which yet stand unrivalled. The age of Pericles and of the Peloponnesian war was the same. Careless of those who governed or disturbed the world, and superior to the calamities of a quarrel in which two mighty leaders contended for the prize of universal dominion, Lucretius wrote his sublime didactic poem on the system of nature, Virgil his bucolics, and Cicero his books of philosophy. The proscriptions of Augustus did not prevent the progress of the Roman literature.

In the turbulent and unpropitious reign of queen Mary, when controversy was no longer confined to speculation, and a spiritual warfare polluted every part of England with murders more atrocious than the slaughters of the most bloody civil contest, a poem was planned, although not fully completed, which illuminates with no common lustre that interval of darkness, which occupies the annals of English poetry from Surrey to Spenser, entitled, A MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES *.

More writers than one were concerned in the execution of this piece: but its primary inventor, and most distinguished contributor, was Thomas Sackville the first lord Buckhurst, and first earl of Dorset. Much about the same period, the same author wrote the first genuine English tragedy, which I shall consider in its proper place.

Sackville was born at Buckhurst, a principal seat of his antient and illustrious family in the parish of Withiam in Sussex. His birth is placed, but with evident inaccuracy, under the year 1536^a. At least it should be placed six years before. Discovering a vigorous understanding in his childhood, from a domestic tuition he was removed, as it may reasonably be conjectured, to Hart-hall, now Hertford-college, in Oxford. But he appears to have been a master of Arts at Cambridge^b. At both universities he became celebrated as a Latin and English poet; and he carried his love of poetry, which he seems to have almost solely cultivated, to the Inner Temple. It was now fashionable for every young man of fortune, before he began his travels, or was admitted into parliament, to be initiated in the study of the law. But instead of pursuing a science, which could not be his profession, and which was unaccommodated to the bias of his genius, he betrayed his predilection to a more pleasing species of literature, by composing the tragedy just mentioned, for the entertainment and honour of his fellow-students. His high birth, however, and ample patrimony, soon advanced him to more important situations and employments. His eminent accomplishments and abilities having acquired the confidence and esteem of queen Elisabeth, the poet was soon lost in the statesman, and negotiations and embassies extinguished the milder ambitions of the ingenuous Muse. Yet it should be remembered, that he was uncorrupted amidst the intrigues of an artful court, that in the character of a first minister he preserved the integrity of a private man, and that his family refused the offer of an apology to his memory, when it was insulted by the malicious insinuations of a rival party. Nor is it foreign to our purpose to remark, that his original elegance and brilliancy of mind sometimes broke forth, in the exercise of his more formal political functions. He was frequently disgusted at the pedantry and official barbarity of style, with which the public letters and instruments were usually framed: and Naunton relates, that his "secretaries had difficulty to please him, he was so facete and choice in his style ^c." Even in the decisions and pleadings of that rigid tribunal the star-chamber, which was never esteemed the school of rhetoric, he practiced and encouraged an unaccustomed strain of eloquent and graceful oratory: on which account, says Lloyd, "so flowing was his invention, that he was called the star-chamber bell ^d." After he was made a peer by the title of Lord Buckhurst, and had succeeded to a most extensive inheritance, and was now discharging the business of an envoy to Paris, he found time to prefix a Latin epistle to Clerke's Latin translation of Castilio's COURTIER, printed at London in 1571, which is not an unworthy recommendation of a treatise remarkable for its polite Latinity. It was either because his mistress Elisabeth paid a sincere compliment to his singular learning and fidelity, or because she was willing to indulge an affected fit of indignation against the object of her capricious passion, that when Sackville, in 1591, was a candidate for the chancellorship of the university of Oxford, she condescended earnestly to solicit the university in his favour, and in opposition to his competitor the earl of Essex. At least she appears to have approved the choice, for her majesty soon afterwards visited Oxford, where she was entertained by the new chancellor with splendid banquets and much solid erudition. It is neither my design nor my province, to develop the profound policy with which he conducted a peace with Spain, the address with which he penetrated or baffled the machinations of Essex, and the circumspection and success with which he managed the treasury of two opulent sovereigns. I return to Sackville as a poet, and to the history of the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES ^e.

About the year 1557, he formed the plan of a poem, in which all the illustrious but unfortunate characters of the English history, from the conquest to the end of the fourteenth century, were to pass in review before the poet, who descends like Dante into the infernal region, and is conducted by Sorrow. Although a descent into hell had been suggested by other poets, the application of such a fiction to the present design, is a conspicuous proof of genius and even of invention. Every personage was to recite his own misfortunes in a separate soliloquy*. But Sackville had leisure only to finish a poetical preface called an INDUCTION, and one legend, which is the life of Henry Stafford duke of Buckingham. Relinquishing therefore the design abruptly, and hastily adapting the close of his INDUCTION to the appearance of Buckingham, the only story he had yet written, and which was to have been the last in his series, he recommended the completion of the whole to Richard Baldwyne and George Ferrers.

Baldwyne seems to have been graduated at Oxford about the year 1532. He was an ecclesiastic, and engaged in the education of youth †. I have already mentioned his metrical version of SOLOMON'S SONG; dedicated to king Edward the Sixth †. His patron was Henry lord Stafford ‡.

George Ferrers, a man of superior rank, was born at Saint Albans, educated at Oxford, and a student of Lincolns-inn.

Leland, who has given him a place in his ENCOMIA, informs us, that he was patronised by lord Cromwell.^h He was in parliament under Henry the Eighth; and, in 1542, imprisoned by that whimsical tyrant, perhaps very unjustly, and for some cabal now not exactly known. About the same time, in his juridical capacity, he translated the MAGNA CHARTA from French into Latin and English, with some other statutes of Englandⁱ. In a scarce book, William Patten's Expedition into Scotlande of the most woorthely fortunate prince Edward duke of Somerset, printed at London in 1548^j, and partly incorporated into Hollinshed's history, it appears from the following passage that he was of the suite of the protector Somerset. "George Ferrers a gentleman of my lord Protector's, and one of the commissioners of the carriage of this army." He is said to have compiled the history of queen Mary's reign, which makes a part of Grafton's CHRONICLE^k. He was a composer almost by profession of occasional interludes for the diversion of the court: and in 1553, being then a member of Lincolns-inn, he bore the office of LORD OF MISRULE at the royal palace of Greenwich during the twelve days of Christmas. Stowe says, "George Ferrers gentleman of Lincolns-inn, being lord of the disportes all the 12 days of Christmas, anno MDLIII^l, at Greenwich: who so pleasantly and wisely behaved himself, that the king had great delight in his pastymes^m." No common talents were required for these festivities. Bale says that he wrote some rhymes, *rhythmos aliquot*ⁿ. He died at Flamstead in Hertfordshire in 1579. Baldwyne and Ferrers, perhaps deterred by the greatness of the attempt, did not attend to the series prescribed by Sackville; but inviting some others to their assistance, among which are Churchyard and Phayer, chose such lives from the newly published chronicles of Fabyan and Hall, as seemed to display the most affecting catastrophes, and which very probably were pointed out by Sackville. The civil wars of York and Lancaster, which Hall had compiled with a laborious investigation of the subject, appear to have been their chief resource.

These legends with their authors, including Sackville's part, are as follows. Robert Tresilian chief Justice of England, in 1388, by Ferrers. It was injudicious to choose so many stories which were then recent. Most of these events were at that time too well known to become the proper subject of poetry, and must have lost much of their solemnity by their notoriety. But Shakespeare has been guilty of the same fault. The objection, however, is now worn away, and age has given a dignity to familiar circumstances.

This collection, or set of poems, was printed in quarto, in 1559, with the following title. "A MYRROVRE FOR MAGISTRATES, Wherein may be seen by example of others, with howe greuous plages vices are punished, and howe frayl and vnstable worldly prosperitie is founde, euen of those whom Fortvne seemeth most highly to favour. Felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum. Anno 1559. Londini; in ædibus Thomæ Marshe." A Mirroure was a favorite title of a book, especially among the old French writers*. Some anecdotes of the publication may be collected from Baldwyne's DEDICATION TO THE NOBILITIE, prefixed. "The wurke was begun and parte of it prynted in Queene Maries tyme, but hyndred by the Lord Chancellour that then was^w: nevertheles, through the meanes of my lorde Stafford^x, the fyrst parte was licenced, and imprynted the fyrst yeare of the raygne of this our most noble and vertuous queene^y, and dedicated then to your honours with this preface. Since whych time, although I have been called to another trade of lyfe, yet my good lord Stafford hath not ceased to call upon me to publyshe so much as I had gotten at other mens hands, so that through his lordshyppes earnest meanes I have now also set furth another parte, conteyning as little of myne owne as the fyrst parte doth of other mens^z.”

The plan was confessedly borrowed from Boccace's DE CASIBUS PRINCIPUM, a book translated, as we have seen, by Lydgate, but which never was popular, because it had no English examples. But Baldwyne's scope and conduct, with respect to this and other circumstances, will best appear from his Preface, which cannot easily be found, and which I shall therefore insert at large. “When the printer had purposed with himselfe to printe Lydgate's translation of Bochas of the FALL OF PRINCES, and had made pryvye therto many both honourable and worshipfull, he was counsayled by dyvers of them, to procure to have the story contynewed from where as Bochas left, unto this present time; chiefly of such as Fortune had dalyed with in this ylande.—Which advyse lyked him so well, that he requyred me to take paines therin. But because it was a matter passyng my wit and skyll, and more thankles than gaineful to meddle in, I refused utterly to undertake it, except I might have the help of suche, as in wit were apte, in learnyng allowed, and in judgement and estymacyon able to wield and furnysh so weighty an enterpryse, thinkyng even so to shift my handes. But he, earnest and diligent in his affayres, procured Atlas to set under his shoulder. For shortly after, divers learned men, whose manye giftes nede fewe prayses, consented to take upon them parte of the travayle. And when certaine of them, to the nombre of seven, were through a general assent at an appoynted tyme and place gathered together to devyse thereupon, I resorted unto them; bearing with me the booke of Bochas translated by Dan Lidgate, for the better observation of his order. Which although we liked wel, yet would it not conveniently serve, seeing that both Bochas and Lidgate were dead; neither were there any alive that meddled with like argument, to whom the UNFORTUNATE might make their mone. To make therefore a state mete for the matter, they all agreed that I should usurpe Bochas rowme, and the WRETCHED PRINCES complayne unto me: and take upon themselves every man for his parte to be sundry personages, and in their behalves to bewaile unto ME their greevous chances, heavye destinies, and wofull misfortunes. This done, we opened such bookes of Cronicles as we had there present. And maister Ferrers, after he had found where Bochas left, which was about the ende of kinge Edwarde the Thirdeſ raigne, to begin the matter sayde thus."

"I marvayle what Bochas meaneth, to forget among his MISERABLE PRINCES such as wer of our nacion, whose numbere is as great, as their adventures wunderfull. For to let passe all, both Britons, Danes, and Saxons, and to come to the last Conquest, what a sorte are they^a, and some even in his [Boccace's] owne time, or not much before! As for example, king Richard the Fyrst, slayne with a quarle^b in his chyefe prosperitie. Also king John his brothier, as sum saye, poysoned. Are not their histories rufull, and of rare example? But as it should appeare, he being an Italian, minded most the Roman and Italike story, or els perhaps he wanted our countrey Cronicles. It were therefore a goodly and a notable matter, to search and discourse our whole story from the first beginning of the inhabiting of the yle. But seeing the printer's minde is, to have us folowe where Lidgate left, we will leave that great labour to other that may intend it, and (as blinde Bayard is alway boldest) I will begyn at the time of Rychard the Second, a time as unfortunate as the ruler therein. And forasmuch, frend Baldwyne, as it shal be your charge to note and pen orderlye the whole proces, I will, so far as my memorie and judgemente serveth, sumwhat further you in the truth of the storye. And therefore omittinge the ruffle of Jacke Strawe and his meyney^c, and the murther of manye notable men. which therby happened, for Jacke, as ye knowe, was but a poore pryncē; I will begin with a notable example which within a while after ensued. And although he be no Great Prynce, yet sithens he had a princely office, I will take upon me the miserable person of syr ROBERT TRESILIAN chyefe justyce of England, and of other which suffered with him. Therby to warne all of his authoritye and profession, to take hede of wrong judgements, misconstruyng of lawes, or wresting the same to serve the princes turnes, which ryghtfully brought theym to a miserable ende, which they may justly lament in manner ensuing^d.” Then follows sir ROBERT TRESILIAN’S legend or history, supposed to be spoken by himself, and addressed to Baldwyne.

* Here we see that a company was feigned to be assembled, each of which, one excepted, by turns personates a character of one of the great Unfortunate: and that the stories were all connected, by being related to the silent person of the assembly, who is like the chorus in the Greek tragedies, or the Host in Chaucer’s Canterbury Tales. The whole was to form a sort of dramatic interlude, including a series of independent soliloquies. A continuity to this imagined representation is preserved by the introduction, after every soliloquy, of a prose epilogue, which also serves as a prologue to the succeeding piece, and has the air of a stage-direction. Boccace had done this before. We have this interposition, which I give as a specimen, and which explains the method of the recital, between the tragedies of king RICHARD THE SECOND and OWEN GLENDOUR. “Whan he had ended this so wofull a tragedye, and to all PRINCES a right worthy instruction, we paused :

having passed through a miserable tyme, full of pyteous tragedies. And seyng the reygne of Henry the Fourth ensued, a man more ware and prosperous in hys doynge, although not untroubled with warres both of outforthe and inward enemyes, we began to serch what Pÿers [peers] were fallen therein, wherof the number was not small: and yet because theyr examples were not mucche to be noted for our purpose, we passed over all the Maskers, of whom kynge Rycharde's brother was chiefe: whych were all slayne and put to death for theyr trayterous attempt. And fyndyng Owen Glendoure next one of Fortune's owne whelpes, and the Percyes his confederates, I thought them unmete to be overpassed, and therefore sayd thus to the sylent cumpany, What, my maysters, is every one at once in a browne study, and hath no man affection to any of these storyes? You mynd so much some other be-lyke, that those do not move you. And to say the trouthe, there is no special cause why they should. Howbeyt Owen Glendoure, becaus he was one of Fortune's darlynges, rather than he should be forgotten, I will tel his tale for him, under the privelidge of Martine hundred. Which OWEN, cuming out of the wilde mountains lyke the Image of Death in al pointes, (his darte onlie excepted,) so sore hath famyne and hunger consumed hym, may lament his folly after this maner." This process was a departure from Sackville's idea: who supposes, as I have hinted, the scene laid in hell, and that the unfortunate princes appeared to him in succession, and uttered their respective complaints, at the gates of Elysium, under the guidance of SORROW.

Many stanzas in the legends written by Baldwyne^e and Ferrers, and their friends, have considerable merit, and often shew a command of language and versification^f. But their performances have not the pathos which the subject so naturally

SECTION XLIX.

SACKVILLE'S INDUCTION, which was to have been placed at the head of our English tragical story, and which loses much of its dignity and propriety by being prefixed to a single life, and that of no great historical importance, is opened with the following poetical landscape of winter^a.

The wrathfull winter, proching on apace,
 With blustering blasts had all ybard the treene;
 And old Saturnus with his frosty face
 With chilling colde had pearst the tender greene:
 The mantels rent, wherein enwrapped been
 The gladsom groves, that nowe laye overthrowen,
 The tapets torne, and every bloom downe blowne.
 The soile that earst so seemly was to seen,
 Was all despoyled of her beauty's hewe;
 And soote freshe flowres, wherewith the sommers queen
 Had clad the earth, now Boreas blastes downe blewe;
 And small fowles flocking in theyr song did rewe
 The winters wrath, wherewith eche thinge defaste.
 In wofull wise bewayld the sommer paste.

Hawthorne had lost his motley lyverye,
 The naked twigges were shivering all for colde;
 And droppinge downe the teares abundantly,
 Eche thing, methought, with weping eye me tolde

^a See fol. cxvi. [Warton's text is taken from the edition of 1610, corrected by the emendations of Capell in his Prologues. Some of these are manifestly erroneous, and the original readings have consequently been restored. Sir Egerton Brydges objects to the reading of the seventh line, because "bloom applies to spring, not autumn." Have we then no autumnal flowers? It may be questioned whether the modern abstract idea of "bloom" was current in Sackville's day. But the succeeding stanza clearly justifies Warton's election.—EDIT.]

The cruell season, bidding me witholde
 Myselfe within: for I was gotten out Into the felde where as I walkt about.

When loe the night, with mistie mantels spred,
 Gan darke the daye, and dim the azure skies, &c.

The altered scene of things, the flowers and verdure of summer deformed by the frosts and storms of winter, and the day suddenly overspread with darkness, remind the poet of the uncertainties of human life, the transient state of honour, and the instability of prosperity.

And sorrowing I to see the somimer flowers,
 The lively greene, the lusty leas forlornè,
 The sturdy trees so shattred with the showers,
 The fieldes so fade, that floorisht so beforne;
 It taught me wel, all earthly thinges be borne
 To dye the death, for nought long time may last:
 The somnors beauty yeelds to winters blast.

Then looking upwards to the heavens [l]eams,
 With nightès starres thick-powdred every where,
 Which erst so glistened with the golden streames
 That chearfull Phebus spred downe from his sphere,
 Beholding darke, oppressing day, so neare;
 The sodayne sight reduced to my mynde
 The sundry chaunges that in earth we fynde.

Immediately the figure of Sorrow suddenly appears, which shews the poet in a new and bolder mode of composition.

And strayt forth stalking with redoubled pace,
 For that I sawe the night drew on so fast,
 In black all clad there fell before my face
 A piteous wight, whom woe had all forwast;
 Furth from her iyen the crystall teares outbrast,
 And syghing sore her haunds she wronge and folde,
 Tare al her haire that ruth was to beholde.

Her body small, forwithered and forespent,
 As is the stalke that solliciters drought opprest ;
 Her wealked face with wofull teares bespreint,
 Her colour pale, and, as it seemed her best,
 In woe and playnt reposed was her rest :
 And as the stone that droppes of water weares,
 So dented were her cheekes with fall of teares.—

I stoode agast, beholding all her plight,
 Tween dread and dolour so distreynd in hart,
 That while my heares upstart with the sight,
 The teares outstreamde for sorowc of her smart.
 But when I sawe no ende, that could aparte
 The deadly dole which she so sore dyd make,
 With dolefull voyce then thus to her I spake.

Unwrap thy woes, whatever wight thou be !
 And stint betime to spill thyselfe with playnt.
 Tell what thou art, and whence, for well I see
 Thou canst not dure with sorowe thus attaynt.
 And with that worde, of sorrowe all forfaynt,
 She looked up, and prostrate as she laye,
 With piteous sounde, lo! thus she gan to saye.

Alas, I wretche, whom thus thou seest distrayned,
 With wasting woes, that never shall aslake,
 SORROWE I am, in endeles tormentes payned,
 Among the Furies in the infernall lake ;
 Where Pluto god of hell so grieslie blake
 Doth holde his throne, and Lethes deadly taste
 Doth reive remembrance of eche thyng forepast.

Whence come I am, the drery destinie,
 And luckles lot, for to bemone of those,
 Whom Fortune in this maze of miserie,
 Of wretched chauncé, most wofull myrrours chose :
 That when thou seest how lightly they did lose

Theyr pompe, theyr power, and that they thought most sure,
 • Thou mayest soon deeme no earthlye joye may dure.

Sorrow then conducts the poet to the classical hell, to the place of torments and the place of happiness.

I shall thee guyde first to the griesly lake,
 And thence unto the blissfull place of rest:
 Where thou shalt see and heare the playnt they make,
 That whilom here bare swinge^b among the best.
 This shalt thou see. But great is the unrest
 That thou must byde, before thou canst attayne
 Unto the dreadfull place where those remayne.

And with these wordes as I uprased stood
 And gan to folowe her that straight forth paste,
 Ere I was ware, into a desert wood
 We nowe were come: where hand in hand embraced,
 She led the way, and through the thicke so traced
 As, but I had beene guyded by her might,
 It was no waye for any mortal wight.

But loe! while thus amid the desert darke
 We passed on, with steppes and pace unmeete,
 A rumbling roar confusde, with howle and barke
 Of dogs, shooke all the grounde under our feete,
 And strooke the din within our eares so deepe,
 As half distraught unto the ground I fell,
 Besought returne, and not to visit hell.—

An hydeous hole al vast, withouten shape,
 Of endles depth, orehelmde with ragged stone,
 With oughly mouth and griesly jawes doth gape,
 And to our sight confounds itself in one.
 Here entred we, and yeding^c forth, anone
 An horrible lothly lake we might discernē,
 As black as pitche, that cleped^d is Auerne.

^b sway.^c going.^d called.

A deadly gulfe where nought but rubbish grôwes,
 With fowle blake swelth in unckened lumpes that lyés,
 Which upp in th' ayre such stinking vapour throves,
 That over there may flye no fowle, but dyes
 Choakt with the pest'lent savours that aryse.
 Hither we come, whence forth we still did pace,
 In dreadfull feare amid the dreadfull place.

Our author appears to have felt and to have conceived with true taste, that very romantic part of Virgil's Eneid which he has here happily copied and heightened. The imaginary beings which sate within the porch of hell, are all his own. I must not omit a single figure of this dreadful groupe, nor one compartment of the portraitures which are feigned to be sculptured or painted on the SHIELD of WAR, indented with gashes deepe and wide.

And, first, within the porch and jaws of hell
 Sat deep REMORSE OF CONSCIENCE, all besprent
 With tears; and to herself oft would she tell
 Her wretchedness, and, cursing, never stent
 To sob and sigh, but ever thus lament
 With thoughtful care; as she that, all in vain,
 Would wear and waste continually in pain:

Her eyes unstedfast, rolling here and there,
 Whirl'd on each place, as place that vengeance brought,
 So was her mind continually in fear,
 Tost and tormented with the tedious thought
 Of those detested crimes which she had wrought;
 With dreadful cheer, and looks thrown to the sky,
 Wishing for death, and yet she could not die:

Next, saw we DREAD, all trembling how he shook,
 With foot uncertain, profer'd here and there;
 Benumb'd with speech; and, with a gastly look,
 Search'd every place, all pale and dead for fear,
 His cap born up with staring of his hair;

'Stoin'd and amazed at his own shade for dread,
And fearing greater dangers than was need.

And, next, within the entry of this lake,
Sat fell REVENGE, gnashing her teeth for ire;
Devising means how she may vengeance take;
Never in rest, 'till she have her desire;
But frets within so far forth with the fire
Of wreaking flames, that now determines she
To die by death, or 'veng'd by death to be.

When fell REVENGE, with bloody foul pretence,
Had show'd herself, as next in order set,
With trembling limbs we softly parted thence;
'Till in our eyes another sight we met;
When fro my heart a sigh forthwith I fet,
Ruing, alas, upon the woeful plight
Of MISERY, that next appear'd in sight:

His face was lean, and some-deal pin'd away,
And eke his hands consumed to the bone;
But, what his body was, I cannot say,
For on his carkass rayment had he none,
Save clouts and patches pieced one by one;
With staff in hand, and scrip on shoulders cast,
His chief defence against the winter's blast:

His food, for most, was wild fruits of the tree,
Unless sometime some crums fell to his share,
Which in his wallet long, God wot, kept he,
As on the which full daint'ly would he fare;
His drink, the running stream, his cup, the bare
Of his palm closed; his bed, the hard cold ground;
'To this poor life was MISERY ybound.

Whose wretched state when we had well beheld,
With tender ruth on him, and on his feers,
In thoughtful cares forth then our pace we held;

And, by and by, another shape appears
 Of greedy CARE, still brushing up the beers;
 His knuckles knob'd, his flesh deep dinted in,
 With tawed hands, and hard ytanned skin:

The morrow grey no sooner hath begun
 To spread his light, e'en peeping in our eyes,
 But he is up, and to his work yrun;
 But let the night's black misty mantles rise,
 And with foul dark never so much disguise
 The fair bright day, yet ceaseth he no while,
 But hath his candles to prolong his toil.

By him lay heavy SLEEP, the cousin of Death,
 Flat on the ground, and still as any stone,
 A very corpse, save yielding forth a breath;
 Small keep took he, whom fortune frowned on,
 Or whom she lifted up into the throne
 • Of high renown, but, as a living death,
 So dead alive, of life he drew the breath:

The body's rest, the quiet of the heart,
 The travel's ease, the still night's feer was he,
 And of our life in earth the better part;
 Rever of sight, and yet in whom we see Things oft that [tyde] and oft that never be;
 Without respect, esteem[ing] equally
 King CROESUS' pomp and IRUS' poverty.

And next, in order sad, OLD-AGE we found:
 His beard all hoar, his eyes hollow and blind;
 With drooping cheer still poring on the ground,
 As on the place where nature him assign'd
 To rest, when that the sisters had untwin'd
 His vital thread, and ended with their knife
 The fleeting course of fast-declining life:

There heard we him with broke and hollow plaint
 Rue with himself his end approaching fast,
 And all for nought his wretched mind torment

With sweet remembrance of his pleasures past,
 And fresh delights of lusty youth forewaste;
 Recounting which, how would he sob and shriek,
 And to be young again of Jove beseeke!

But, an' the cruel fates so fixed be
 That time forepast cannot return again,
 This one request of Jove yet prayed he;—
 That, in such wither'd plight, and wretched pain,
 As eld, accompany'd with her lothsome train,
 Had brought on him, all were it woe and grief,
 He might a while yet linger forth his lief,

And not so soon descend into the pit;
 Where Death, when he the mortal corpse hath slain,
 With reckless hand in grave doth cover it;
 Thereafter never to enjoy again
 The gladsome light, but, in the ground ylain,
 In depth of darkness waste and wear to nought,
 As he had ne'er into the world been brought:

But who had seen him sobbing how he stood
 Unto himself, and how he would bemoan
 His youth forepast,—as though it wrought him good
 To talk of youth, all were his youth foregone,—
 He would have mus'd, and marvel'd much, whereon
 This wretched Age should life desire so fain,
 And knows full well life doth but length his pain:

Crook-back'd he was, tooth-shaken, and blear-eyed;
 Went on three feet, and, sometime, crept on four;
 With old lame bones, that rattled by his side;
 His scalp all pil'd, and he with eld forelore,
 His wither'd fist still knocking at death's door;
 Fumbling, and driveling, as he draws his breath;
 For brief, the shape and messenger of Death.

And fast by him pale MALADY was placed:
 Sore sick in bed, her colour all foregone;
 Bereft of stomach, savour, and of taste,

Ne could she brook no meat but broths alone ;
 Her breath corrupt ; her keepers every one
 Abhorring her ; her sickness past recure,
 Detesting physick, and all physick's cure.

But, O, the doleful sight that then we see !
 We turn'd our look, and on the other side
 A grisly shape of FAMINE mought we see :
 With greedy looks, and gaping mouth, that cry'd
 And roar'd for meat, as she should there have dy'd ;
 Her body thin and bare as any bone,
 Whereto was left nought but the case alone,

And that, alas, was gnaw'n on every where,
 All full of holes ; that I ne mought refrain
 From tears, to see how she her arms could tear,
 And with her teeth gnash on the bones in vain,
 When, all for nought, she fain would so sustain
 Her starven corpse, that rather seem'd a shade
 Than any substance of a creature made :

Great was her force, whom stone-wall could not stay :
 Her tearing nails snatching at all she saw ;
 With gaping jaws, that by no means ymay
 Be satisfy'd from hunger of her maw,
 But eats herself as she that hath no law ;
 Gnawing, alas, her carkass all in vain,
 Where you may count each sinew, bone, and vein.

On her while we thus firmly fix'd our eyes,
 That bled for ruth of such a dreary sight,
 Lo, suddenly she shrigh in so huge wise
 As made hell gates to shiver with the might ;
 Wherewith, a dart we saw, how it did light
 Right on her breast, and, therewithal, pale DEATH
 Enthrilling it, to reve her of her breath :

And, by and by, a dumb dead corpse we saw,
 Heavy, and cold, the shape of Death aright,
 That daunts all earthly creatures to his law,

Against whose force in vain it is to fight;
 Ne peers, ne princes, nor no mortal wight,
 No towns, ne realms, cities, ne strongest tower,
 But all, perforce, must yield unto his power :

His dart, anon, out of the corpse he tooke,
 And in his hand (a dreadful sight to see)
 With great triumph estoons the same he shook,
 That most of all my fears affrayed me ;
 His body dight with nought but bones, pardy ;
 The naked shape of man there saw I plain,
 All save the flesh, the sinew, and the vein.

Lastly, stood WAR, in glittering arms yclad,
 With visage grim, stern look[es] and blackly hued:
 In his right hand a naked sword he had,
 That to the hilts was all with blood imbrued ;
 And in his left (that kings and kingdoms rued)
 Famine and fire he held, and therewithal
 He razed towns, and threw down towers and all :

Cities he sack'd, and realms (that whilom flower'd
 In honour, glory', and rule, above the rest)
 He overwhelm'd, and all their fame devour'd,
 Consum'd, destroy'd, wasted, and never ceas'd
 'Till he their wealth, their name, and all oppress'd :
 His face forehew'd with wounds ; and by his side
 There hung his TARGE, with gashes deep and wide :

In mids of which depainted there we found
 Deadly DEBATE, all full of snaky hair
 That with a bloody fillet was ybound, Outbreathing nought but discord every where :
 And round about were pourtray'd, here and there,
 The huggy hosts ; DARIUS and his power,
 His kings, his princes, peers, and all his flower.—

XERXES, the Persian king, yet saw I there,
 With his huge host, that drank the rivers dry,
 Dismounted hills, and made the vales uprear ;

His host and all yet saw I slain, pardy:
 Thebes I saw, all razed how it did lie
 In heaps of stones; and Tyrus put to spoil,
 With walls and towers flat-even'd with the soil.

But Troy, (alás!) methought, above them all,
 It made mine eyes in very tears consume;
 When I beheld the woeful word befall,
 That by the wrathful will of gods was come,
 And Jove's unmoved sentence and foredoom
 On PRIAM king and on his town so bent,
 I could not lin but I must there lament;

And that the more, sith destiny was so stern
 As, force perforcé, there might no force avail
 But she must fall: and, by her fall, we learn
 That cities, towers, wealth, world, and all shall quail;
 No manhood, might, nor nothing mought prevail;
 All were there prest, full many a prince and peer,
 And many a knight that sold his death full dear:

Not worthy HECTOR, worthiest of them all,
 Her hope, her joy, his force is now for nought:
 O Troy, Troy, Troy, there is no boot but bale!
 The hudy horse within thy walls is brought;
 Thy turrets fall; thy knights, that whilom fought
 In arms amid the field, are slain in bed;
 Thy gods defil'd, and all thy honour dead:

The flames upspring, and cruelly they creep
 From wall to roof, 'till all to cinders waste:
 Some fire the houses where the wretches sleep;
 Some rush in here, some run in there as fast;
 In every where or sword, or fire, they taste:
 The walls are torn, the towers whirl'd to the ground;
 There is no mischief but may there be found.

CASSANDRA yet there saw I how they hal'd
 From PALLAS' house, with spercled tress undone,
 Her wrists fast bound, and with Greek rout impal'd;

And PRIAM eke, in vain how he did run
 To arms, whom PYRRHUS with despite hath done
 To cruel death, and bath'd him in the baign
 Of his son's blood before the altar slain.

But how can I describe the doleful sight
 That in the shield so lively fair did shine?
 Sith in this world, I think, was never wight
 Could have set forth the half not half so fine:
 I can no more, but tell how there is seen
 Fair ILIUM fall in burning red gledes down,
 And, from the soil, great Troy, NEPTUNUS' town.

These shadowy inhabitants of hell-gate are conceived with the vigour of a creative imagination, and described with great force of expression. They are delineated with that fulness of proportion, that invention of picturesque attributes, distinctness, animation, and amplitude, of which Spenser is commonly supposed to have given the first specimens in our language, and which are characteristic of his poetry. We may venture to pronounce that Spenser, at least, caught his manner of designing allegorical personages from this model, which so greatly enlarged the former narrow bounds of our ideal imagery, as that it may justly be deemed an original in that style of painting. For we must not forget, that it is to this INDUCTION that Spenser alludes, in a sonnet prefixed to his Pastorals, in 1579, addressed To the right honourable THE LORD OF BUCKHURST, one of her maiesties priuie counsell.

In vaine I thinke, right honourable lord,
 By this rude rime to memorize thy name,
 Whose learned Muse hath writ her owne record,
 In golden verse, worthy immortal fame.
 Thou much more fit, were leisure for the same,
 Thy gracious soveraignes prayses to compile,
 And her imperiall majestie to frame
 In loftie numbers and heroick stile.

The readers of the FAERIE QUEENE will easily point out many particular passages which Sackville's INDUCTION suggested to Spenser.

From this scene Sorrow, who is well known to Charon, and to Cerberus the Tideous hound of hell, leads the poet over the loathsome lake of ryde Acheron, to the dominions of Pluto, which are described in numbers too beautiful to have been relished by his cotemporaries, or equalled by his successors.

Thence come we to the horrour and the hell,
 The large great kyngdomes, and the dreadful raygne
 Of Pluto in his trone where he dyd dwell,
 The wide waste places, and the hugie playne;
 The waylinges, shrykes, and sundry sorts of payne,
 The syghes, the sobbes, the depe and deadly groane,
 Earth, ayer, and all resounding playnt and moane. ^e

Thence did we passe the threefold emperie
 To the utmost boundes where Rhadamanthus raignes,
 Where proud folke waile their wofull miserie;
 Where dreadfull din of thousand dragging chaines,
 And baleful shriekes of ghosts in deadly paines
 Torturd eternally are heard most brim ^f
 Through silent shades of night so darke and dim.

From hence upon our way we forward passe,
 And through the groves and uncoth pathes we goe,
 Which leade unto the Cyclops walles of brasse:
 And where that mayne broad flood for aye doth floe,
 Which parts the gladsome fields from place of woe:

Nothing more fully illustrates and ascertains the respective merits and genius of different poets, than a juxtaposition of their performances on similar subjects. Having examined at large Sackville's Descent into Hell, for the sake of throwing a still stronger light on his manner of treating a fiction which gives so large a scope to fancy, I shall employ the remainder of this Section in setting before my reader a general view of Dante's Italian poem, entitled COMMEDIA, containing a description of Hell, Paradise, and Purgatory, and written about the year 1310. In the mean time, I presume that most of my readers will recollect and apply the sixth Book of Virgil: to which, however, it may be necessary to refer occasionally.

Although I have before insinuated that Dante has in this poem used the ghost of Virgil for a mystagogue, in imitation of Tully, who in the SOMNIUM Scipionis supposes Scipio to have been shewn the other world by his ancestor Africanus, yet at the same time in the invention of his introduction, he seems to have had an eye on the exordium of an old forgotten Florentine poem called TESORETTO, written in Frottola, or a short irregular measure, exhibiting a cyclopede of theoretic and practic philosophy, and composed by his preceptor Brunetto Latini about the year 1270^h. Brunetto supposes himself lost in a wood, at the foot of a mountain covered with animals, flowers, plants, and fruits of every species, and subject to the supreme command of a wonderful Lady, whom he thus describes. "Her head touched the heavens, which served at once for a veil and an ornament. The sky grew dark or serene at her voice, and her arms extended to the extremities of the earthⁱ." This bold personification, one of the earliest of the rude ages of poetry, is NATURE. She converses with the poet, and describes the creation of the world. She enters upon a most unphilosophical and indeed unpoetical detail of the physical system: develops the head of man, and points out the seat of intelligence and of memory. From physics she proceeds to morals: but her principles are here confined to theology and the laws of the church, which she couches in technical rhymes ^k.

Dante, like his master Brunetto, is bewildered in an unfrequented forest. He attempts to climb a mountain, whose summit is illuminated by the rising sun. A furious leopard, pressed by hunger, and a lion³ at whose aspect the air is affrighted, ac-

The Tesoro was afterwards translated into Italian by one Bono Giamboni, and printed at Trevisa, viz. "IL TESORO di Messer Brunetto Latino, Fiorentino, Precettore del divino poeta Dante: nel qual si tratta di tutte le cose che a mortali se appartengono. In Trivisa. 1474. fol. After a table of chapters is another title, "Qui inchonincia el Tesoro di S. Brunetto Latino di firenze: e parla del nascimento e della natura di tutte le cose." It was printed again at Venice, by Marchio Sessa, 1533. octavo. Mabilion seems to have confounded this Italian translation with the French original. IT. ITALIC. p. 169. See also Salviati, AVERTIS. DECAM. ii. xii. Dante introduces Brunetto in the fifteenth Canto of the INFERNO: and after the colophon of the first edition of the Italian TESORO above mentioned, is this insertion. "Risposta di Dante a Brunetto Latino ritrovado da lui nel quindodecimo canto nel suo Inferno." The TESORETTO or Little Treasure, mentioned above in the text, has been printed, but is exceedingly scarce.

^k Brunetto's TESORETTO was abstracted by himself from his larger prose work on the same subject, written in old French and never printed, entitled TESORO. See supr. vol. ii. 422. iii. 56. And HIST. ACAD. INSCRIPT. tom. vii. 296. seq. [No two works can be more opposite in their nature than the Tesoro and Tesoretto of Brunetto Latino. The former is a vast repository of all the learning current in the thirteenth century; and the latter, though thus spoken of by its Neapolitan editor, "Nel Tesoretto quasi affatto si ristringa (sc. Brunetto) a formar l'uomo nelle morali virtù, sull'orme di Severino Boezio," has been more happily characterized by the Academy "poesia a foggia di frollota." It has been called "Tesoretto" by way of distinction from his larger work. In the middle of a vast solitude he perceives a spectre, of whom he implores pity and help: The spectre hastens to his cries: it was the shade of Virgil, whom Beatrix, Dante's mistress, had sent, to give him courage, and to guide him into the regions of hell^m. Virgil begins a long discourse with Dante; and expostulates with him for chusing to wander through the rough obscurities of a barren and dreary vale, when the top of the neighbouring mountain afforded every delight. The conversation of Virgil, and the name of Beatrix, by degrees dissipate the fears of the poet, who explains his situation. He returns to himself, and compares this revival of his strength and spirits to a flower smitten by the frost of a night, which again lifts its shrinking head, and expands its vivid colours, at the first gleamings of the morning-sun.

Dante, under the conduct of Virgil, penetrates hell. But he does not on this occasion always avail himself of Virgil's descriptions and mythologies. At least the formation of Dante's imageries are of another school. He feigns his hell to be a prodigious and almost bottomless abyss, which from its aperture to its lowest depth preserves a rotund shape: or rather, an imⁿ CANT. ii. In another part of the INF. ERNO, Virgil is angry with Dante, but is soon reconciled. Here the poet compares himself to a cottager in the early part of a promising spring, who looks out in the morning from his humble shed, and sees the fields covered with a severe and unexpected frost. But the sun soon melts the ground, and he drives his goats afield. CANT. xxiv. mense perpendicular cavern, which opening as it descends into different circles, forms so many distinct subterraneous regions. We are struck with horror at the commencement of this dreadful adventure.

The first object which the poet perceives is a gate of brass, over which were inscribed in characters of a dark hue, di colore oscuro, these verses.

Per me si vâ nella città dolente:
 Per me si vâ nel eterno dolore:
 Per me si vâ trà la perduta gente.
 Giustizia ~~ross~~ e' l mio alto fattore:
 Fece me li divina potestate,
 La somma Sapienzia, e 'l primo Amore^o.
 Dinanzi a me non fur cose create:
 Se non eterne, el io duro eterno.
 Lasçate ogni speranza voi ch' entraste.^p

That is, "By me is the way to the woeful city. By me is the way to the eternal pains. By me is the way to the damned race. My mighty maker was divine Justice and Power, the Supreme Wisdom, and the First Love. Before me nothing was created. If not eternal, I shall eternally remain. Put away all hope, ye that enter."

There is a severe solemnity in these abrupt and comprehensive sentences, and they are a striking preparation to the scenes that ensue. But the idea of such an inscription on the brazen portal of hell, was suggested to Dañte by books of chivalry; in which the gate of an impregnable enchanted castle, is often inscribed with words importing the dangers or wonders to be found within. Over the door of every chamber in Spenser's necromantic palace of Busyrane, was written a threat to the champions who presumed to attempt to enter^q. This total exclusion of hope from hell, here so finely introduced and so for-

Regions of sorrow, dolefull shades, where peace

I have not time to follow Dante regularly through his dialogues and adventures with the crouds of ghosts, antient and modern, which he meets in the course of this infernal journey. In these interviews, there is often much of the party and politics of his own times, and of allusion to recent facts. Nor have I leisure particularly to display our author's punishments and phantoms. I observe in general, that the ground-work of his hell is classical, yet with many Gothic and extravagant innovations. The burning lakes, the fosses, and fiery towers which surround the city of Dis, and the three Furies which wait at its entrance, are touched with new strokes^s. The Gorgons, the Hydra, the Chimera, Cerberus, the serpent of Lerna, and the rest of Virgil's, or rather Homer's, infernal apparitions, are dilated with new touches of the terrible, and sometimes made ridiculous by the addition of comic or incongruous circumstances, yet without any intention of burlesque. Because Virgil had mentioned the Harpies in a single word only^t, in one of the loathsome groves which Dante passes, consisting of trees whose leaves are black, and whose knotted boughs are hard as iron, the Harpies build their nests.^u

Non frondi verdi, ma di color fosco,
Non rami schietti, ma nodosi e 'nvolti,
Non pomi v' eran, ma stecchi con toscò.

INFERNO from a magnificent nightly representation of hell, exhibited by the pope in honour of the bishop of Ostia on the river Arno at Florence, in the year 1304. This is mentioned by the Italian critics in extenuation of Dante's choice of so strange a subject. But why should we attempt to excuse any absurdity in the writings or manners of the middle ages? Dante chose this subject as a reader of Virgil and Homer. The religious MYSTERY represented on the river Arno, however magnificent, was perhaps a spectacle purely orthodox, and perfectly conformable to the ideas of the church. And if we allow that it might hint the subject, with all its inconsistencies, it never could have furnished any considerable part of this wonderful compound of classical and romantic fancy, of pagan and christian theology, of real and fictitious history, of tragical and comic incidents, of familiar and heroic manners, and of satirical and sublime poetry. But the grossest improprieties of this poem discover an originality of invention, and its absurdities often border on sublimity. We are surprised that a poet should write one hundred cantos on hell, paradise and purgatory. But this prolixity is partly owing to the want of art and method; and is common to all early compositions, in which every thing is related circumstantially and without rejection, and not in those general terms which are used by modern writers.

Dante has beautifully enlarged Virgil's short comparison of the souls lingering on the banks of Lethe, to the numerous leaves falling from the trees in Autumn.

Come d'Autumno si levan le foglie
 L'un appresso del'altra, infin che'l ramo
 Vede a la terre tutte le sue spoglie;
 Similmente, il mal seme d'Adamo
 Getta-si di quel lito ad una ad una
 Per cenni, com'augel per suo richiamo.†

† CANT. iii.

In the Fields inhabited by unhappy lovers he sees Semiramis, Achilles, Paris, and Tristan, or sir Tristram. One of the old Italian commentators on this poem says, that the last was an English knight born in Cornodaglio, or Cornwall, a city of England^z.

Among many others of his friends, he sees Francisca the daughter of Guido di Polenta, in whose palace Dante died at Ravenna, and Paulo one of the sons of Malatesta lord of Rimini. This lady fell in love with Paulo; the passion was mutual, and she was betrothed to him in marriage: but her family chose rather that she should be married to Lanciotto, Paulo's eldest brother. This match had the most fatal consequences. The injured lovers could not dissemble or stifle their affection: they were surprised, and both assassinated by Lanciotto. Dante finds the shades of these distinguished victims of an unfortunate attachment at a distance from the rest, in a region of his INFERNO desolated by the most violent tempests. He accosts them both, and Francisca relates their history: yet the conversation is carried on with some difficulty, on account of the impetuosity of the storm which was perpetually raging. Dante, who from many circumstances of his own amours, appears to have possessed the most refined sensibilities about the delicacies of love, inquires in what manner, when in the other world, they first communicated their passion to each other. Francisca answers, that they were one day sitting together, and reading the romance of LANCELOT; where two lovers were represented in the same critical situation with themselves. Their changes of colour and countenance, while they were reading, often tacitly betrayed their yet undiscovered feelings. When they came to that passage in the romance, where the lovers, after many tender approaches, are gradually drawn by one uniform reciprocation of involuntary attraction to kiss each other, the book dropped from their hands. By a sudden impulse and an irresistible sympathy, they are tempted to do the same. Here was the commencement of their tragical history.

Noi leggiavam' un giorno per diletto
 Di LANCIOTTO, cūme amor le strinse;
 Soli eravamo, e senza alcun sospetto.
 Per più fiate gli occhi ci sospinse
 Quella lettura, e scolorocce il viso:
 Ma sol un punto fù qual che ci vinse.
 Quando legemmo il disiato riso

 Questi che mai da me no fia diviso
 La bocca mi basciò tutto tremante:

But this picture, in which nature, sentiment, and the graces are concerned, I have to contrast with scenes of a very different nature. Salvator Rosa has here borrowed the pencil of Correggio. Dante's beauties are not of the soft and gentle kind.

— — Through many a dark and dreary vale
 They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
 O'er many a frozen many a fiery Alp.^c

A hurricane suddenly rising on the banks of the river Styx is thus described.

Et gia venia sù per le torbid onde

 Per cui tremavan amendue le sponde;
 Non altrimenti fatto che d'un vento

Dante and his mystagogue meet the monster Geryon. He has the face of a man with a mild and benign aspect, but his human form ends in a serpent with a voluminous tail of immense length, terminated by a sting, which he brandishes like a scorpion. His hands are rough with bristles and scales. His breast, back, and sides have all the rich colours displayed in the textures of Tartary and Turkey, or in the labours of Arachne. To speak in Spenser's language, he is, ———A dragon, horrible and bright^e.

No monster of romance is more savage or superb.

Lo dosso, e'l petto, ad amenduo le coste,
Dipinte avea di nodi, e di rotelle,
Con più color sommesse e sopraposte
Non fur ma' in drappo Tartari ne Turchi,
Ne fur tar tale per Aragne imposte.^f

The conformation of this heterogeneous beast, as a fabulous hell is the subject, perhaps immediately gave rise to one of the formidable shapes which sate on either side of the gates of hell in Milton. Although the fiction is founded in the classics,

The one seem'd woman to the waste and fair,
But ended foul in many a scaly fold
Voluminous and vast, a serpent arm'd
With mortal sting^g.——

Virgil, seeming to acknowledge him as an old acquaintance, mounts the back of Geryon. At the same time Dante mounts, whom Virgil places before, "that you may not," says he, "be exposed to the monster's venomous sting." Virgil then commands Geryon not to move too rapidly, "for, consider, what a new burthen you carry!"

^e FAIR. QU. i. ix. 52.

^f CANT. xvii. Dante says, that he lay on the banks of a river like a Beaver, the CASTOR. But this foolish comparison is affect'dly introduced by our author for a display of his natural knowledge from Pliny, or rather from the TESORO of his master Brunetto.

^g PAR. L. ii. 649.

—“ Gerion muoviti omai,
Le ruote large, e lo scender sia poco:
Pensa la nuova soma che tu hai.^h”

In this manner they travel in the air through Tartarus: and from the back of the monster Geryon, Dante looks down on the burning lake of Phlegethon. This imagery is at once great and ridiculous. But much later Italian poets have fallen into the same strange mixture. In this horrid situation says Dante,

Ì sentia già dalla man destra il gorgo
Far sotto noi un orribile stroschio:
Perche con gli oçchi in giù la testa sporsi
Allor fu io più timido allo scoscio
Perioch'i vidi fuochi, e sente pianti,
Oud' io tremando tutto mi rancosco.ⁱ

This airy journey is copied from the flight of Icarus and Phaeton, and at length produced the Ippogrifo of Ariosto. Nor is it quite improbable, that Milton, although he has greatly improved and dignified the idea, might have caught from hence his fiction of Satan soaring over the infernal abyss. At length Geryon, having circuited the air like a falcon towering without prey, deposits his burthen and vanishes^k.

While they are wandering along the banks of Phlegethon, as the twilight of evening approaches, Dante suddenly hears the sound of a horn more loud than thunder, or the horn of Orlando^l.

Ma io senti sonare alto corno:—
Non sono si terribilmente Orlando.^m

But Virgil informs Dante that he is deceived by appearances, and that these are not towers but the giants.

Sappi, che non son torri ma giganti
E son nel pezzo intorno della ripa
D'all umbilico in guiso, tutti quanti.^o

One of them cries out to Dante with horrible voice. Another, Ephialtes, is cloathed in iron and bound with huge chains. Dante wishes to see Briareus: he is answered, that he lies in an interior cavern biting his chain. Immediately Ephialtes arose from another cavern, and shook himself like an earthquake.

Non fu tremuoto già tanto rubesto,
Che schotesse una torri così forte,
Come Fialte a scuotersi fu presto.^p

Dante views the horn which had sounded so vehemently hanging by a leathern thong from the neck of one of the giants. Antaeus, whose body stands ten ells high from the pit, is commanded by Virgil to advance. They both mount on his shoulders, and are thus carried about Cocytus. The giant, says the poet, moved off with us like the mast of a ship^q. One cannot help observing, what has been indeed already hinted, how judiciously Milton, in a similar argument, has retained the just beauties, and avoided the childish or ludicrous excesses of these bold inventions. At the same time we may remark, how Dante has sometimes heightened, and sometimes diminished by improper additions or misrepresentations, the legitimate descriptions of Virgil.

One of the torments of the Damned in Dante's INFERNO, is the punishment of being eternally confined in lakes of ice.

Eran l'ombre dolenti nell ghiaccia
Mettendo i denti in nota di cicogna.^r

The ice is described to be like that of the Danube or Tanais. This species of infernal torment, which is neither directly warranted by scripture, nor suggested in the systems of the Platonic fabulists, and which has been adopted both by Shakespeare and Milton, has its origin in the legendary hell of the monks. The hint seems to have been taken from an obscure text in the Book of Job, dilated by Saint Jerom and the early commentators^s. The torments of hell, in which the punishment by cold is painted at large, had formed a visionary romance, under the name of Saint Patrick's Purgatory or Cave, long before Dante wrote^t. The venerable Bede, who lived in the seventh century, has framed a future mansion of existence for departed souls with this mode of torture. In the hands of Dante it has assumed many fantastic and grotesque circumstances, which make us laugh and shudder at the same time.

In another department, Dante represents some of his criminals rolling themselves in human ordure. If his subject led him to such a description, he might at least have used decent expressions. But his diction is not here less sordid than his imagery. I am almost afraid to transcribe this gross passage, even in the disguise of the old Tuscan phraseology.

— Quindi giù nel fosso
Vidi gente attuffata in uno sterco,
Che dagli uman privati para mosso;

^v CANT. xviii.

The humour of the last line does not make amends for the nastiness of the image.

It is not to be supposed, that a man of strong sense and genius, whose understanding had been cultivated by a most exact education, and who had passed his life in the courts of sovereign princes, would have indulged himself in these disgusting fooleries, had he been at all apprehensive that his readers would have been disgusted. But rude and early poets describe every thing. They follow the public manners: and if they are either obscene or indelicate, it should be remembered that they wrote before obscenity or indelicacy became offensive.

Some of the Guilty are made objects of contempt by a transformation into beastly or ridiculous shapes. This was from the fable of Circe. In others, the human figure is rendered ridiculous by distortion. There is one set of criminals whose faces are turned round towards their backs.

— E'l piante de gli occhi
Le natiche bagnava per lo fesso.^u

But Dante has displayed more true poetry in describing a real event than in the best of his fictions. This is in the story of Ugolino count of Pisa, the subject of a very capital picture by Reynolds. The poet, wandering through the depths of hell, sees two of the Damned gnawing the skulls of each other, which was their daily food. He inquires the meaning of this dreadful repast.

La bocca sollevò dal fiero pasto
Quel peccator, forbendola a capelli
Del capo ch'egli havea di retro guasto.^w

Ugolino quitting his companion's half devoured skull, begins his tale to this effect. "We are Ugolin count of Pisa, and archbishop Ruggieri. Trusting in the perfidious counsels of Ruggieri, I was brought to a miserable death. I was committed with four of my children to the dungeon of hunger. The time came when we expected food to be brought. Instead of which, I heard the gates of the horrible tower more closely barred. I looked at my children, and could not speak.

— L'ora s'appressava
 Che'l cibo ne soleva essere adotto;
 E per suo sogno ciascun dubitava:
 Ed io senti chiavar l'uscio di sotto
 A l'ORRIBILE TORRE, ond'io guardai
 Nel viso à miei figliuoli, senza far metta.

I could not complain. I was petrified. My children cried: and my little Anselm, Anselmuccio mio, said, Father, you look on us, what is the matter?

— Tu guardi sì, padre, che hai?

I could neither weep, nor answer, all that day and the following night. When the scanty rays of the sun began to glimmer through the dolorous prison,

Com'un poco di raggio si fù messo
 Nel doloroso carcere,——

and I could again see those four countenances on which my own image was stamped, I gnawed both my hands for grief. My children supposing I did this through a desire to eat, lifting themselves suddenly up, exclaimed, O father, our grief would be less, if you would eat us!

Ambo le mani per dolor mi morsi:
 E quei pensandò ch'io'l fessi per voglia
 Di manicar, di subito levorsi
 Et disser, Padre, assai ci sia men doglia
Se tu mangi di noi!—— ——

I restrained myself that I might not make them more miserable. We were all silent, that day and the following. Ah cruel earth, why didst thou not swallow us up at once!

Quel di, et l'altro, stemmo tutta muti.

Ahi! dura terra, perche non l'apristi?

The fourth day being come, Gaddo falling all along at my feet, cried out, My father, why do not you help me, and died. The other three expired, one after the other, between the fifth and sixth days, famished as you see me now. And I being seized with blindness began to crawl over them, sovra ciascuno, on hands and feet; and for three days after they were dead, continued calling them by their names. At length, famine finished my torments." Having said this, the poet adds, "with distorted eyes he again fixed his teeth on the mangled scull"^x. It is not improbable, that the shades of unfortunate men, who, described under peculiar situations and with their proper attributes, are introduced relating at large their histories in hell to Dante, might have given the hint to Boccace's book DE CASIBUS VIRORUM ILLUSTRUM, On the Misfortunes of Illustrious Personages, the original model of the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES.

Dante's PURGATORY is not on the whole less fantastic than his HELL. As his hell was a vast perpendicular cavity in the earth, he supposes Purgatory to be a cylindric mass elevated to a prodigious height. At intervals are recesses projecting from the outside of the cylinder. In these recesses, some higher and some lower, the wicked expiate their crimes, according to the proportion of their guilt. From one department they pass to another by steps of stone exceedingly steep. On the top of the whole, or the summit of Purgatory, is a platform adorned with trees and vegetables of every kind. This is the Terrestrial Paradise, which has been transported hither we know not how, and which forms an avenue to the Paradise Celestial. It is extraordinary that some of the Gothic painters should not have given us this subject.

Dante describes not disagreeably the first region which he traverses on leaving hell. The heavens are tinged with sapphire, and the star of love, or the sun, makes all the orient laugh. He sees a venerable sage approach. This is Cato of Utica, who, astonished to see a living man in the mansion of ghosts, questions Dante and Virgil about the business which brought them hither. Virgil answers: and Cato advises Virgil to wash Dante's face, which was soiled with the smoke of hell, and to cover his head with one of the reeds which grew on the borders of the neighbouring river. Virgil takes his advice; and having gathered one reed, sees another spring up in its place. This is the golden bough of the Eneid, uno avulso non deficit alter. The shades also, as in Virgil, crowd to be ferried over Styx: but an angel performs the office of Charon, admitting some into the boat, and rejecting others. This confusion of fable and religion destroys the graces of the one and the majesty of the other.

Through adventure and scenes more strange and wild than any in the Pilgrim's Progress, we at length arrive at the twenty-first Canto. A concussion of the earth announces the deliverance of a soul from Purgatory. This is the soul of Statius, the favourite poet of the dark ages. Although a very improper companion for Virgil, he immediately joins our adventurers, and accompanies them in their progress. It is difficult to discover what pagan or christian idea regulates Dante's dispensation of rewards and punishments. Statius passes from Purgatory to Paradise, Cato remains in the place of expiation, and Virgil is condemned to eternal torments.

Dante meets his old acquaintance Forese, a debauchee of Florence. On finishing the conversation, Forese asks Dante when he shall have the pleasure of seeing him again. This question in Purgatory is diverting enough. Dante answers with much serious gravity, "I know not the time of death: but it cannot be too near. Look back on the troubles in which my country is involved!" The dispute between the pontificate and the empire, appears to have been the predominant topic of Dante's mind. This circumstance has filled Dante's poem with strokes of satire. Every reader of Voltaire must remember that lively writer's paraphrase from the INFERNO, of the story of count Guido, in which are these inimitable lines. A Franciscan friar abandoned to Beelzebub thus exclaims:

— — “Monsieur de Lucifer !
 Je suis un Saint ; voyes ma robe grise :
 Je fus absous par le Chef de l'Eglise.
 J'aurai, toujours, repondit le Demon,
 Un grand respect pour l'Absolution ;
 On est lavé de ses vieilles sotises,
 Pourvu qu'après autres ne soient commises.
 J'ai fait souvent cette distinction
 A tes pareils : et, grâce a l'Italie,
 Le Diable sait la Theologie.
 Il dit et rit. Je ne repliquai rien
 A Belzebut, il raisonnoit trop bien.
 Lors il m'empoigne, et d'un bras roide et ferme
 Il appliqua sur ma triste épiderme
 Vingt coups de fouet, dont bien fort il me cuit :
 Que Dieu le rend à Boniface huit.”

Dante thus translated would have had many more readers than at present. I take this opportunity of remarking, that our author's perpetual reference to recent facts and characters is in imitation of Virgil, yet with this very material difference : The persons recognised in Virgil's sixth book, for instance the chiefs of the Trojan war, are the cotemporaries of the hero not of the poet. The truth is, Dante's poem is a satirical history of his own times.

Dante sees some of the ghosts of Purgatory advancing forward, more meagre and emaciated than the rest. He asks how this could happen in a place where all live alike without nourishment. Virgil quotes the example of Meleager, who wasted with a firebrand, on the gradual extinction of which his life depended. He also produces the comparison of a mirror reflecting a figure. These obscure explications do not satisfy the doubts of Dante. Statius, for his better instruction, explains how a child grows in the womb of the mother, how it is enlarged, and by degrees receives life and intellect. The drift of our author is apparent in these profound illustrations. He means to shew his skill in a sort of metaphysical anatomy. We see something of this in the TESORETTO of Brunetto. Unintelligible solutions of a similar sort, drawn from a frivolous and mysterious philosophy, mark the writers of Dante's age.

The PARADISE of Dante, the third part of this poem, resembles his PURGATORY. Its fictions, and its allegories which suffer by being explained, are all conceived in the same chimerical spirit. The poet successively views the glory of the saints, of angels, of the holy Virgin, and at last of God himself.

Heaven as well as hell, among the monks, had its legendary description; which it was heresy to disbelieve, and which was formed on perversion or misinterpretations of scripture. Our author's vision ends with the Deity, and we know not by what miraculous assistance he returns to earth.

It must be allowed, that the scenes of Virgil's sixth book have many fine strokes of the terrible. But Dante's colouring is of a more gloomy temperature. There is a sombrous cast in his imagination: and he has given new shades of horror to the classical hell. We may say of Dante, that

—— Hell

The sensations of fear impressed by the Roman poet are less harassing to the repose of the mind: they have a more equable and placid effect. The terror of Virgil's tremendous objects is diminished by correctness of composition and elegance of style. We are reconciled to his Gorgons and Hydras, by the grace of expression, and the charms of versification.

In the mean time, it may seem a matter of surprise, that the Italian poets of the thirteenth century, who restored, admired, and studied the classics, did not imitate their beauties. But while they possessed the genuine models of antiquity, their unnatural and eccentric habits of mind and manners, their attachments to system, their scholastic theology, superstition, ideal love, and above all their chivalry, had corrupted every true principle of life and literature, and consequently prevented the progress of taste and propriety. They could not conform to the practices and notions of their own age, and to the ideas of the antients, at the same time. They were dazzled with the imageries of Virgil and Homer, which they could not always understand or apply: or which they saw through the mist of prejudice and misconception. Their genius having once taken a false direction, when recalled to copy a just pattern, produced only constraint and affectation, a distorted and displeasing resemblance. The early Italian poets disfigured, instead of adorning their works, by attempting to imitate the classics. The charms which we so much admire in Dante, do not belong to the Greeks and Romans. They are derived from another origin, and must be traced back to a different stock. Nor is it at the same time less surprising, that the later Italian poets, in more enlightened times, should have paid so respectful a compliment to Dante as to acknowledge no other model, and with his excellencies, to transcribe and perpetuate all his extravagancies.

SECTION L.

I NOW return to the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES, and to Sackville's Legend of Buckingham, which follows his INDUCTION.

The Complaynt of HENRYE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, is written with a force and even elegance of expression, a copiousness of phraseology, and an exactness of versification, not to be found in any other parts of the collection. On the whole, it may be thought tedious and languid. But that objection unavoidably results from the general plan of these pieces. It is impossible that soliloquies of such prolixity, and designed to include much historical and even biographical matter; should every where sustain a proper degree of spirit, pathos, and interest. In the exordium are these nervous and correct couplets.

Whom flattering Fortune falsely so beguilde,
That loe, she slew, where earst ful smooth she smilde.

Again,

And paynt it forth, that all estates may knowe:
Have they the warning, and be mine the woe.

Buckingham is made to enter thus rapidly, yet with much address, into his fatal share of the civil broils between York and Lancaster.

But what may boot to stay the Sisters three,
When Atropos perforce will cut the thred?
The dolefull day was come*, when you might see Northampton field with armed men orespred.

* [Shakespeare seems to have burlesqued these lines in one of Pistol's rants.

—Abridge my doleful days!

Let grisly, gaping, ghastly wounds, unbind the sisters three,
Come, Atropos, I say.—PARK.]

In these lines there is great energy. .

O would to God the cruell dismall day
That gave me light fyrst to behold thy face,
With foule eclipse had rest my sight away,
The unhappie hower, the time, and eke the day, &c.

And the following are an example of the simple and sublime united.

And thou, Alecto, feede me with thy foode !
Let fall thy serpents from thy snaky heare !
For such reliefe well fits me in my moode,
To feed my plaint with horroure and with feare !
With rage afresh thy venom'd worme areare.

Many comparisons are introduced by the distressed speaker. But it is common for the best poets to forget that they are describing what is only related or spoken. The captive Proteus has his simile of the nightingale; and Eneas decorates his narrative of the disastrous conflagration of Troy with a variety of the most laboured comparisons.

Buckingham in his reproaches against the traiterous behaviour of his antient friend Banastre, utters this forcible exclamation, which breathes the genuine spirit of revenge, and is unloaded with poetical superfluities.

Hated be thou, disdainde of everie wight,
And pointed at whereever thou shalt goe:
A traiterous wretch, unworthy of the light
Be thou esteemde: and, to increase thy woe,
The sound be hatefull of thy name alsoe.
And in this sort, with shame and sharpe reproch,
Leade thou thy life, till greater grief approach.

The ingenious writers of these times are perpetually deserting propriety for the sake of learned allusions. Buckingham exhorts the peers and princes to remember the fate of some of the most renowned heroes of antiquity, whose lives and misfortunes he relates at large, and often in the most glowing colours of poetry. Alexander's murder of Clitus is thus described in stanzas, pronounced by the poet and not by Buckingham.

And deeply grave within your stonie harts
The dreerie dole, that mightie Macedo
With teares unfolded, wrapt in deadlie smarts,
When he the death of Clitus sorrowed so,
Whom erst he murdred with the deadlie blow;
Raught in his rage upon his friend so deare,
For which, behold loe how his panges appeare !

The launced speare he writhes out of the wound,
From which the purple blood spins in his face:
His heinous guilt when he returned found,
He throwes himself uppon the corps, alas !
And in his armes howe off doth he imbrace
His murdred friend ! And kissing him in vaine,
Forth flowe the floudes of salt repentant raine.

His friendes amazde at such a murther done,
In fearfull flockes begin to shrinke away ;
And he thereat, with heapes of grief fordone,
Hateth himselfe, wishing his latter day.—

He calls for death, and loathing longer life,
Bent to his bane refuseth kindlie foode,
And plungde in depth of death and dolours strife
Had queld^a himselfe, had not his friendes withstoode.
Loe he that thus has shed the guiltlesse bloode,
Though he were king and keper over all,
Yet chose he death, to guerdon death withall.

This prince, whose peere was never under sunne,
Whose glistening fame the earth did overglide,
Which with his power the worlde welnigh had wonne,

^a killed : manqueller is murderer.

His bloody handes himselfe could not abide,
 But folly bent with famine to have dide;
 The worthie prince deemed in his regard
 That death for death could be but just reward.

Our MIRROR, having had three new editions in 1563^b, 1571, and 1574^c, was reprinted in quarto in the year 1587^d, with the addition of many new lives, under the conduct of John Higgins.

Higgins lived at Winsham in Somersetshire^e. He was educated at Oxford, was a clergyman, and engaged in the instruction of youth. As a preceptor of boys, on the plan of a former collection by Nicholas Udal, a celebrated master of Eton school, he compiled the FLOSCULI OF TERENCE, a manual famous in its time, and applauded in a Latin epigram by the elegant Latin encomiast Thomas Newton of Cheshire^f. In the pedagogic character he also published "HOLCOT'S DICTIONARIE, newlie corrected, amended, set in order, and enlarged, with many names of men, townes, beastes, fowles, etc. By which you may

They are all in quarto, and in black letter. [The propriety of this title is now substantiated, by the discovery of an edition of Higgins's work, unknown to Warton. It is in folio, and printed for Thomas Marshe at London, 1572. The dedication to sir George Peckham, knight, is written by Higgins, and is a good specimen of his classical accomplishments. He calls Peckham his principal friend, and the most eminent patron of letters. A recommendatory copy of verses by Churchyard the poet is prefixed, with four Latin epigrams by others. Another of his works in the same profession is the NOMENCLATOR of Adrian Junius, translated into English, in conjunction with Abraham Flemming, and printed at London, for Newberie and Durham, in 1585^h. It is dedicated in Latin to his most bountiful patron, Doctor Valentine, master of Requests, and dean of Wells, from Winshamⁱ, 1584. From this dedication, Higgins seems to have been connected with the school of Ilminster, a neighbouring town in Somersetshire^k. He appears to have been living so late as the year 1602. For in that year he published an Answer to William Perkins, a forgotten controversialist, concerning Christ's descent into hell, dedicated from Winsham.

To the MIRROR OF MAGISTRATES Higgins wrote a new INDUCTION in the octave stanza; and without assistance of friends, began a new series from Albanact the youngest son of Brutus, and the first king of Albanie or Scotland, continued to the emperor Caracalla^l. In this edition by Higgins, among the pieces after the Conquest, first appeared the Life of CARDINAL WOLSEY, by Churchyard^m; of SIR NICHOLAS BURDET, by Baldwine [Higgins]ⁿ; and of ELEANOR COBHAM^o, and of HUMFREY DUKE OF GLOUCESTER^p, by Ferrers. Also the Legend of KING JAMES THE FOURTH OF SCOTLAND^q, said to have been penned fiftie yeares ago^r; and of FLODDEN FIELD, said to be of equal antiquity, and subscribed FRANCIS DINGLEY^s, the name of a poet who has not otherwise occurred. Prefixed is a recommendatory poem in stanzas by the above-mentioned Thomas Newton of Cheshire^t, who understood much more of Latin than of English poetry*.

But Higgins found his own version better, which he therefore published, yet with a part of his friend's.

The most poetical passage of Higgins's performance in this collection is in his Legend of QUEENE CORDILA, or Cordelia, king Lear's youngest daughter^u. Being imprisoned in a dungeon, and coucht on strawe, she sees amid the darkness of the night a griously ghost approach,

Eke nearer still with stealing steps shee drewe :
Shee was of colour pale and deadly hewe.

Her garment was figured with various sorts of imprisonment, and pictures of violent and premature death.

Her clothes resembled thousand Kindes of thrall,
And pictures plaine of hastened deathes withall.

Cordelia, in extreme terror, asks,

———What wight art thou, a foe or fawning friend?
If Death thou art, I pray thee make an end———

cate his open wrong with the best blood in his body, did not his old years utterly forbid such combat.—This anecdote occurs before a reprint of Shore's Wife, augmented by 21 stanzas, in CHURCHYARD'S CHALLENGE, 1593. Nash, probably in reference to the above, thus complimented the old court-poet in the same year. "SHORE'S WIFE is young, though you be stept in years; in her shall you live, when you are dead." Four Letters Confuted, &c. Anthony Chute published, in 1593, "Beautie Dishonoured," written under the title of SHORE'S

But th' art not Death!—Art thou some Fury sent
My woefull corps with paynes more to torment?

With that she spake, “I am thy frend DESPAYRE.—

* * * * *

Now if thou art to dye no whit afrayde
Here shalt thou choose of Instruments, beholde, Shall rid thy restlesse life.”——

DESPAIR then, throwing her robe aside, shews Cordelia a thousand instruments of death, knives, sharp swordes, and ponyards, all bedyde with bloode and poysons. She presents the sword with which queen Dido slew herself.

“Lo! here the blade that Dido of Carthage hight,” &c.

Cordelia takes this sword, but doubtfull yet to dye. DESPAIR then represents to her the state and power which she enjoyed in France, her troops of attendants, and the pleasures of the court she had left. She then points out her present melancholy condition and dreary situation.

She shewde me all the dongeon where I sate,
The dankish walles, the darkes, and bade me smell
And byde the savour if I like it well.

Cordelia gropes for the sword, or fatall knife, in the dark, which DESPAIR places in her hand.

DESPAYRE to ayde my senceless limmes was glad,
And gave the blade: to end my woes she bad.

At length, Cordelia's sight fails her so that she can see only DESPAIR, who exhorts her to strike.

And by her elbowe DEATH for me did watch.

DESPAIR at last gives the blow. The temptation of the Red-crosse knight by DESPAIR in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE, seems to have been copied, yet with high improvements, from this scene. These stanzas of Spenser bear a strong resemblance to what I have cited from CORDELIA'S Legend.

Then gan the villaine^w him to oueraw,
 And brought uñto him swords, ropes, poysons, fire,
 And all that might him to perdition draw;
 And bade him chuse what death he would desire:
 For death was due to him that had prouokt God's ire.

But when as none of them he sawe him take,
 He to him raught a dagger sharpe and keene,
 And gaue it him in hand: his hand did quake
 And tremble like a leafe of aspin greene,
 And troubled bloud through his pale face was seene
 To come and goe, with tydinges from the hart,
 As it a running messenger had beene.

At last, resolv'd to worke his finall smart
 He lifted up his hand that backe againe did start.*

The three first books of the FAERIE QUEENE were published in 1590. Higgins's Legend of Cordelia in 1587 [1574].

At length the whole was digested anew with additions, in 1610, by Richard Niccols, an ingenious poet, of whom more will be said hereafter, under the following title: "A MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES^y, being a true Chronicle-history of the vntimely falles of such vnfortunate princes and men of note as haue happened since the first entrance of Brute into this Iland vntill this our age. NEWLY ENLARGED with a last part called a WINTER NIGHT'S VISION being an addition of such Tragedies especially famous as are exemted in the former Historie, with a poem annexed called ENGLANDS ELIZA. At London, imprinted by Felix Kyngston, 1610^z." Niccols arranged his edition thus. Higgins's INDUCTION is at the head of the Lives from Brutus to the Conquest. Those from the Conquest to

LOED CROMWELL's legend written by Drayton and now first added^a, are introduced by Sackville's INDUCTION. After this are placed such lives as had been before omitted, ten in number, written by Niccols himself, with an INDUCTION^b. As it illustrates the history of this work, especially of Sackville's share in it, I will here insert a part of Niccols's preface prefixed to those TRAGEDIES which happened after the Conquest, beginning with that of Robert Tresilian. "Hauing hitherto continued the storie from the first entrance of BRUTE into this island, with the FALLES of svch PRINCES as were neuer before this time in one volume comprised, I now proceed with the rest, which take their beginning from the Conquest: whose penmen being many and diuerse, all diuerslie affected in the method of this their MIRROR, I purpose onlie to follow the intended scope of that most honorable personage, who by how mvch he did surpass the rest in the eminence of his noble condition, by so mvch he hath exceeded them all in the excellencie of his heroicall stile, which with golden pen he hath limmed out to posteritie in that worthie object of his minde the TRAGEDIE OF THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, and in his Preface then intituled MASTER SACKVILLS INDUCTION. This worthy president of learning intended to perfect all this storie of himselfe from the Conquest. Being called to a more serious expence of his time in the great state affaires of his most royall ladie and soueraigne, he left the dispose thereof to M. Baldwine, M. Ferrers, and others, the composers of these Tragedies: who contining their methode, which was by way of dialogue or interlocvtion betwixt euerie Tragedie, gaue it onlie place before the dvke of Bvckingham's COMPLAINT. Which order I since hauing altered, haue placed the INDUCTION in the beginnunge, with euerie Tragedie following according to svccession and iust compvtation of time, which before was not obserued^c."

^a Drayton wrote three other legends on this plan, Robert duke of Normandy, Matilda, and Pierce Gaveston, of which I shall speak more particularly under that writer.

^b Fol. 555.

^c Fol. 253. Compare Baldwyne's Prologue at fol. cxiv. b. edit. 1559. ut supr.

In the Legend of King Richard the Third, Niccols appears to have copied some passages from Shakespeare's Tragedy on that history. In the opening of the play Richard says, //

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
 Our bruised arms hung up for monuments:
 Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings:
 Our dreadfull marches to delightfull measures*.
 Grim-visag'd War hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
 And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds,
 To fright the souls of fearfull adversaries,
 He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
 To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.^c

These lines evidently gave rise to part of Richard's soliloquy in Niccols's Legend.

—— The battels fought in field before
 Were turn'd to meetings of sweet amitie:
 The war-god's thundring cannons dreadfull rore,
 And rattling drum-sounds warlike harmonie,
 To sweet-tun'd noise of pleasing ministralsie.——

God Mars laid by his Launce and tooke his Lute,
 And turn'd his rugged frownes to smiling lookes;
 In stead of crimson fields, warres fatall fruit,
 He bathed his limbes in Cypre's warbling brookes,
 And set his thoughts upon her wanton lookes.^d

Part of the tent-scene in Shakespeare is also imitated by Niccols. Richard, starting from his horrid dream, says,

Methought the souls of all that I had murder'd
 Came to my tent; and every one did threat
 To morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.^e

^e Act v. Sc. ult. Drayton has also described these visionary terrors of Richard. POLYOLB. S. xxii.

When to the guilty king, the black fore-running night,

So Niccols,

I thought that all those murdered ghosts, whom I
By death had sent to their vntimely graue,
With balefull noise about my tent did crie,
And of the heauens with sad complaint did craue,
That they on guiltie wretch might vengeance haue :
To whom I thought the iudge of heauen gaue eare,
And gainst me gaue a iudgement full of feare. f

But some of the stanzas immediately following, which are formed on Shakespeare's ideas, yet with some original imagination, will give the reader the most favourable idea of Niccols as a contributor to this work.

For loe, eftsoones, a thousand hellish hags,
Leauing th' abode of their infernall cell,
Seasing on me, my hatefull body drags
From forth my bed into a place like hell,
Where fiends did naught but bellow, howle, and yell,
Who in sterne strife stood gainst each other bent,
Who should my hatefull bodie most torment.

Tormented in such trance long did I lie,
Till extreme feare did rouze me where I lay,
And caus'd me from my naked bed to flie :
Alone within my tente I durst not stay,
This dreadfull dreame my soule did so affray :
When wakt I was from sleepe, I for a space
Thought I had beene in some infernall place.

About mine eares a buzzing feare still flew,
My fainting knees languish for want of might ;
Vpon my bodie stands an icie dew ;

Appear the dreadful ghosts of Henry and his Son,
Of his owne brother George and his two nephewes, done
Most cruelly to death, and of his Wife, and friend

Lord Hastings, with pale hands prepared as they would rend
Him peacemeal : at which oft he roareth in his sleep.

My heart is dead within, and with affright
 The haire vpon my head doth stand vpright:
 Each limbe abovt me quaking, doth resemble
 A riuers rush, that with the wind doth tremble.

Thus with my guiltie soules sad torture torne
 The darke nights dismall houres I past away:
 But at cockes crowe, the message of the morne,
 My feare I did conceale, &c.^s

If internal evidence was not a proof, we are sure from other evidences that Shakespeare's tragedy preceded Niccols's legend. The tragedy was written about 1597. Niccols, at eighteen years of age, was admitted into Magdalene college in Oxford, in the year 1602^h. It is easy to point out other marks of imitation. Shakespeare has taken nothing from Seagars's Richard the Third, printed in Baldwine's collection, or first edition, in the year 1559. Shakespeare, however, probably caught the idea of the royal shades, in the same scene of the tragedy before us, appearing in succession and speaking to Richard and Richmond, from the general plan of the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES: more especially, as many of Shakespeare's ghosts there introduced, for instance, King Henry the Sixth, Clarence, Rivers, Hastings, and Buckingham, are the personages of five of the legends belonging to this poem.

SECTION LI.

BY way of recapitulating what has been said, and in order to give a connected and uniform view of the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES in its most complete and extended state, its original contents and additions, I will here detail the subjects of this poem as they stand in this last or Niccols's edition of 1610, with reference to two preceding editions, and some other incidental particularities.

Niccols's edition, (after the Epistle Dedicatorie prefixed to Higgins's edition of 1587, an Advertisement To the Reader by Niccols, a Table of Contents, and Thomas Newton's commendatory verses above mentioned,) begins with an Induction called the AUTHOR'S INDUCTION, written by Higgins *, and properly belonging to his edition. Then follow these Lives.

Albanact youngest son of Brutus ^a. Humber king of the Huns. King Locrine eldest son of Brutus. Queen Elstride concubine of Locrine. Sabrtha daughter of Locrine. King Madan. King Malin. King Mempric. King Bladud. Queen Cordelia. Morgan king of Albany. King Jago. Ferrex. Porrex. King Pinnar slain by Molucius Donwallo. King Stater. King Rudacke of Wales. King Kimarus. King Morindus. King Emerianus. King Cherinnus. King Varianus. Irelanglas cousin to Cassibelane. Julius Cesar. Claudius Tiberius Nero. Caligula. King Guiderius. Lelius Hamo. Tiberius Drusus. Domitius Nero. Galba. Vitellius. Londric the Pict. Severus. Fulgentius a Pict. Geta. Caracalla ^b. All these from Albanact, and in the same order, form the first part of Higgins's edition of the year 1587^c. But none of them are in Baldwyne's, or the first, collection, of the year 1559. And, as I presume, these lives are all written by Higgins. Then follow in Niccols's edition, Carausius, Queen Helena, Vortigern, Uther Pendragon, Cadwallader, Sigebert, Ebba, Egelred, Edric, and Harold, all written by Thomas Blener Hasset, and never before printed*. We have next a new title^d, "The variable Fortvne and vnhappy Falles of svch princes as hath happened since the Conquest. Wherein may be seene, &c. At London, by Felix Kyngston. 1609." Then, after an Epistle to the Reader, subscribed R. N. (that is Richard Niccols,) follow, Sackville's INDUCTION. Cavyll's Roger Mortimer. Ferrers's Tresilian. Ferrers's Thomas of Woodstock. Churchyard's [Chaloner's] Mowbray. Ferrers's King Richard the Second. Phaer's Owen Glendour. Henry Percy. Baldwyne's Richard earl of Cambridge. Baldwyne's Montague earl of Salisbury. Ferrers's Eleanor Cobham. Ferrers's Humfrey duke of Gloucester. Baldwyne's William De La Poole earl of Suffolk. Baldwyne's Jack Cade. Ferrers's Edmund duke of Somerset. Richard Plantagenet duke of York. Lord Clifford. Tiptoft earl of Worcester. Richard lord Warwick. King Henry the Sixth. George[†] Plantagenet duke of Clarence. Skelton's King Edward the Fourth. Woodvile lord Rivers. Dolman's Lord Hastings. Sackville's Duke of Buckingham. Collingburne. Cavyll's Blacksmith. Higgins's Sir Nicholas Burdet. Churchyard's Jane Shore. Churchyard's Wolsey. Drayton's Lord Cromwell. All these^e, (Humfrey, Cobham, Burdet, Cromwell, and Wolsey, excepted,) form the whole, but in a less chronological disposition, of Baldwyne's collection, or edition, of the year 1559, as we have seen above: from whence they were reprinted, with the addition of Humfrey, Cobham, Burdet, and Wolsey, by Higgins, in his edition aforesaid of 1587, and where Wolsey closes the work. Another title then appears in Niccols's edition^f, "A WINTER NIGHTS

An Epistle to the Reader, and an elegant Sonnet to Lord Charles Howard lord High Admiral, both by Niccols, are prefixed ^g. Then follows Niccols's INDUCTION to these new lives ^h. They are, King Arthur. Edmund Ironside. Prince Alfred. Godwin earl of Kent. Robert Curthose. King Richard the First. King John. King Edward the Second. The two Young Princes murdered in the Tower, and King Richard the Third ⁱ. Our author, but with little propriety, has annexed "ENGLAND'S ELIZA, or the victorions and triumphant reigne of that virgin empressse of sacred memorie Elizabeth Queene of England, &c. At London, by Felix Kyngston, 1610." This is a title page. Then follows a Sonnet, to the virtuous Ladie the Lady Elisabeth Clere, wife to sir Francis Clere, and an Epistle to the Reader: A very poetical INDUCTION is prefixed to the ELIZA, which contains the history of queen Elisabeth, then just dead, in the octave stanza. Niccols, however, has not entirely preserved the whole of the old collection, although he made large additions. He has omitted King James the First of Scotland, which appears in Baldwyne's edition of 1559 ^k, and in Higgins's of 1587 ^l. He has also omitted, and probably for the same obvious reason, King James the Fourth of Scotland, which we find in Higgins ^m. the Fourth of Scotland, and of his son. fol. 22. b. The whole title is, "THE FLOWER OF FAME, containing the bright renowne and most fortunate reigne of Henry viii; Wherein is mention of matters by the rest of our chronographers overpassed. Compyled by Vipian Fullwell." Annexed is a panegyric of three of the same Henry's noble and vertuous queenes. And "The service done at Haddington in Scotland the seconde year of the reigne of King Edward the Sixt." Bl. leit. Fullwell will occur hereafter in his proper place.

tion ^a. Niccols has also omitted Seagars's King Richard the Third, which first occurs in Baldwyne's edition of 1559 ^o, and afterwards in Higgins's of 1587 ^p. But Niccols has written a new Legend on this subject, cited above, and one of the best of his additional lives ^q. This edition by Niccols, printed by Felix Kyngston in 1610, I believe was never reprinted ^{*}. It contains eight hundred and seventy-five pages.

The MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES is obliquely ridiculed in bishop Hall's SATIRES, published in 1597.

Another, whose more heave-hearted saint
Delights in nought but notes of ruefull plaint,
Urgeth his melting muse with soleimn teares,
Rhyme of some drearie fates of LUCKLESS PEERS.
Then brings he up some BRANDED WHINING GHOST
To tell how old Misfortunes have him tost ^r.

That it should have been the object even of an ingenious satirist, is so far from proving that it wanted either merit or popularity, that the contrary conclusion may be justly inferred. It was, however, at length superseded by the growing reputation of a new poetical chronicle, entitled ALBION'S ENGLAND, published before the beginning of the reign of James the First [†].

That it was in high esteem throughout the reign of queen Elizabeth, appears not only from its numerous editions, but from the testimony of sir Philip Sidney, and other cotemporary writers *. It must be remembered that only Baldwyne's part had yet appeared, and that the translator is supposed to be speaking to Seneca.

In a small black-lettered tract entitled the TOUCH-STONE OF WITTES, chiefly compiled, with some slender additions, from William Webbe's DISCOURSE OF ENGLISH POËTRIE, written by Edward Hake, and printed at London by Edmund Botifaut in 1588, this poem is mentioned with applause. "Then have we the MIRROR OF MAGISTRATES lately augmented by my friend mayster John Higgins, and penned by the choyssest learned wittes, which for the stately-proportioned uaine of the heroick style, and good meetly proportion of uerse, may challenge the best of Lydgate, and all our late rhymers^b." That

^b Fol. vii. a. duodecim. I know but little more of this forgotten writer, than that he wrote also, "A TOUCHSTONE for this time present, expressly declaring such ruines, enormities, and abuses, as trouble the church of God and our christian commonwealth at this daye, &c. Newly sett fourth by E. H. Imprinted at London by Thomas Hacket, and are to be solde at his shop at the Greene Dragon in the Royall Exchange, 1574." duodec. At the end of the "Epistle dedicatorie to his knowne friende Mayster Edward Godfrey, merchant," his name EDWARD HAKE is subscribed at length. Annexed is, "A Compendious fourme of education, to be diligently obserued of all parentes and scholemasters in the trayning vp of their children and schollers in learning. Gathered into Englishe meeter by Edward Hake." It is an epitome of a Latin tract De pueris statim ac liberaliter instituendis. In the dedication, to maister John Harlowe his approoued friende, he calls himself an attorney in the Common Pleas, observing at the same time, that the "name of an Attourney in the common place [pleas] is now a dayes growen into contempt." He adds another circumstance of his life, that he was educated under John Hopkins, whom I suppose to be the translator of the Psalms. [See supr. vol. iii. p. 451.] "You being trained vp together with me your poore schoolfellow, with the instructions of that learned and sensible old English critic Edmund Bolton, in a general criticism on the style of our most noted poets before the year 1600*, places the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES in a high rank. It is under that head of his HYPERCRITICA, entitled "Prime Gardens for gathering English according to the true gage or standard of the tongue about fifteen or sixteen years ago." The extract is a curious piece of criticism, as written by a judicious cotemporary. Having mentioned our prose writers, the chief of which are More, Sidney, queen Elisabeth, Hooker, Saville, cardinal Alan, Bacon, and Raleigh, he proceeds thus: "In verse there are Edmund Spenser's HYMNES^c. I cannot advise the allowance of other his poems as for practick English, no more than I can Jeffrey Chaucer, Lydgate, Pierce Plowman, or LAUREATE Skelton. It was laid as a fault to the charge of Salust, that he used some old outworn words stoln out of Cato in his books de Originibus. And for an historian in our tongue to affect the like out of those our poets, would be accounted a foul oversight.—My judgement is nothing at all in poems or poesie, and therefore I dare not go far; but will simply deliver my mind concerning those authors among us, whose English hath in my conceit most propriety, and is nearest to the phrase of court, and to the speech used among the noble, and among the better sort in London: the two sovereign seats, and as it were parliament tribunals, to try the question exquisite teacher, Maister JOHN HOPKINS, that worthy schoolemaister, nay rather that most worthy parent vnto all children committed to his charge of education. Of whose memory, if I should in such an opportunity as this is, be forgetful," &c. I will give a specimen of this little piece, which shews at least that he learned versification under his master Hopkins. He is speaking of the Latin tongue. (Signat. G. 4.)

^c The pieces mentioned in this extract will be considered in their proper places.

in. o Brave language are Chapman's Iliads.—The works of Samuel Daniel containe somewhat aflat, but yet withal a very pure and copious English, and words as warrantable as any mans, and fitter perhaps for prose than measure. Michael Drayton's Heroical Epistles are well worth the reading also, for the purpose of our subject, which is to furnish an English historian with choice and copy of tongue. Queen Elizabeth's verses, those which I have seen and read, some exstant in the elegant, witty, and artificial book of the ART OF ENGLISH POETRIE, the work, as the fame is, of one of her gentlemen-pensioners, Puttenham, are princely as her prose. Never must be forgotten St. PETER'S COMPLAINT, and those other serious poems said to be father Southwell's: the English whereof, as it is most proper, so the sharpness and light of wit is very rare in them. Noble Henry Constable was a great master in English tongue, nor had any gentleman of our nation a more pure, quick, or higher delivery of conceit, witness among all other, that Sonnet* of his before his Majesty's LEPANTO. I have not seen much of sir Edward Dyer's poetry†: Among the lesser

* [A very poor specimen of Constable's poetic talent, the praise of which confers an equal honour on Bolton's critical judgement.—PARK.]

† [Puttenham says, "For dittie and amorous ode I finde Sir Walter Rawleygh's wayne most loftie, insolent, and passionate, Maister Edward Dyar, for elegie most sweete, solempne, and of high conceit."

[To this passage Drummond thus adverted, in his conversation with Ben Jonson, "He who writeth the arte of English poesie, praiseth much Rawleigh and Dyer; but their works are so few that are come to my hands, I cannot well say any thing of them." Drummond's Works, p. 226, 1711. fol.

[It is the further remark of Mr. Ellis, that the lot of Dyer, as a poet, has been rather singular: "His name is generally coupled with that of Sir P. Sidney and of the most fashionable writers of the age; and yet Bolton, who was almost a contemporary critic, professes not to have seen much of his poetry." Specim. of Engl. Poets, ii. 186.

[In the Paradise of Daintie Devices, one poem signed M. D. is presumed by Ritson in his Bibliographia to denote Master Dyer. Six pieces preserved in England's Helicon are warrantably assigned to him; other short poems occur among the Rawlinson MSS. in the Bodleian library, and one of them bears the popular burden of "My mind to me a kingdom is."

[The time of Sir Edward Dyer's birth and death are alike veiled in uncertainty. The former Mr. Ellis computes to have been about 1540, and he lived till the reign of King James. According to Aubrey he was of the same family as the judge, and proved a great spendthrift. Aubrey styles him of Sharpham park, Somersetshire. He was educated at Oxford, and as Wood intimates at Baliol College. Obtaining the character of a well-bred man, and having Sidney and other distinguished persons for his associates, he was taken into the service of the court. By Queen Elizabeth he was sent on several embassies, particularly to Denmark in 1589, and had the chancel-late poets, George Gascoigne's Works may be endured. But the best of these times, if Albion's England be not preferred, for our business, is the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES, and in that MIRROUR, Sackvil's INDUCTION, the work of Thomas afterward earl of Dorset and lord treasurer of England: whose also the famous Tragedy of GORDOUC, was the best of that time, even in sir Philip Sidney's judgement; and all skillful Englishmen cannot but ascribe as much thereto, for his phrase and eloquence therein. But before in age, if not also in noble, courtly, and lustrous English, is that of the Songes and Sonnettes of Henry Howard earl of Surrey, (son of that victorious prince the duke of Norfolk, and father of that learned Howard his most lively image Henry earl of Northampton,) written chiefly by him, and by sir Thomas Wiat, not the dangerous commotioner, but his worthy father. Nevertheless, they who commend those poems and exercises of honourable wit, if they have seen that incomparable earl of Surrey his English translation of Virgil's Eneids, which, for a book or two, he admirably rendreth, almost line for line, will bear me witness that those other were foils and sportives. The English poems of sir Walter Raleigh, of John Donne, of Hugh Holland, but especially of sir Foulk Grevile in his matchless MUSTAPHA, are not easily to be mended. I dare not presume to speak of his Majesty's exercises in this heroick kind. Because I see them all left out in that which Montague lord bishop of Winchester hath given us of his royal writings. But if I should declare mine own rudeness rudely, I should then confess, that I never tasted English more to my liking, nor more smart, and put to the height of use in poetry, than in that vital, judicious, and most practicable language of Benjamin Jonson's poems^d."

lorship of the garter conferred on him at his return, with the honour of knighthood. It is not improbable that his property was squandered, as Aubrey affirms it to have been, by his credulous attachment to roscrusian chemistry under those infatuated devotees Dr. Dee and Edward Kelly. Wood erroneously speaks of him as a contributor to the collection of poetical flowers, called "England's Parnassus," 1600: perhaps he misnamed the title for that of "Belvedere, or the Garden of the Muses." The "Sheapheardes Logike," a folio MS. cited in the British Bibliographia, ii. 276, has dedicatory verses by Abr. Fraunce, to the "ryght worshypful Mr. Edwarde Dyer."—PARK.]

The manuscript is among Cod. MSS. A. Wood, Mus. Ashmole. 8471. 9. quarto, with a few notes by Wood. (See Hearne's Lel. COLLECTAN. vol. vi. p. 60. edit. 1770.) In it he supports a specious theory, that Stonehenge was a monument erected by the Britons to Boadicea, ch. xxv. At the end is his HISTORICAL PARALLEL, shewing the difference between epitomes and just histories, "heretofore privately written to my good and noble friend Endymion Porter, one of the gentlemen of the Prince's chamber." He instances in the accounts given by Florus and Polybius of the battle between Hannibal and Scipio: observing, that generalities are not so interesting as facts and circumstances, and that Florus gives us "in proper words the flowers and tops of noble matter, but Polybius sets the things themselves, in all their necessary parts, before our eyes." He therefore concludes, "that all spacious minutes, attended with the felicities of means and leisure, will fly abridgements as bane." He published, however, an English version of Florus. He wrote the Life of the Emperor Tiberius, never printed.

He compiled the Life of king Henry the Second for Speed's Chronicle: but Bolton being a catholic, and speaking too favourably of Becket, another Life was written by Doctor John Barcham, dean of Bocking. See THE SURVEY TO A. B. C. Lond. 12mo. 1656. p. 22. Written by Dr. Henry King, author of poems in 1657, son of King bishop of London. Compare HYPERCRIT. p. 220. Another work in the walk of philological antiquity, was his "VINDICLÆ BRITANNICÆ, or London righted," &c. Never printed, but prepared for the press by the author. Among other ingenious paradoxes, the principal aim of this treatise is to prove, that London was a great and flourishing city in the time of Nero; and that consequently Julius Cesar's general description of all the British towns, in his COMMENTARIES, is false and unjust. Hugh Howard, esquire, (see GEN. DICT. iii. 446.) had a fair manuscript of this book, very accurately written in a thin folio of forty-five pages. It is not known when or where he died. One Edmund Bolton, most probably the same, occurs as a CONVICTOR, that is, an independent member, of Trinity-college Oxford, under the year 1586. In Archiv. ibid. Wood (MS. NOTES, ut supr.) supposed the HYPERCRITICA to have been written about 1610. But our author himself, (HYPERCRIT. p. 237.) mentions king James's Works published by bishop Montague. That edition is dated 1616. A few particularities relating to this writer's NERO CÆSAR, and some other of the times, is called "One that has read Marcus Aurelius^c, Gesta Romanorum, and the MIRROR OF MAGISTRATES^f."

The books of poetry which abounded in the reign of queen Elisabeth, and were more numerous than any other kinds of writing in our language, gave birth to two collections of FLOWERS selected from the works of the most fashionable poets. The first of these is, "ENGLAND'S PARNASSUS. Or, the choysrest Flowers of our moderne Poets, with their poeticall Comparisons, Descriptions of Bewties, Personages, Castles, Pallaces, Mountaines, Groues, Seas, Springs, Riuers, &c. Whereunto are annexed other various Discourses^g both pleasaunt and profitable. Imprinted at London for N. I., C. B. and Th. Hayes. 1600^h." The collector is probably Robert Allotⁱ, whose iniof his pieces, may be seen in Hearne's MSS. COLL. Vol. 50. p. 125. Vol. 132. p. 94. Vol. 52. pp. 171. 192. 186. See also Original Letters from Anstis to Hearne. MSS. Bibl. Bodl. RAWLINS. I add, that Edmund Bolton has a Latin copy of recommendatory verses, in company with George Chapman, Hugh Holland, Donne, Selden, Beaumont, Fletcher, and others, prefixed to the old folio edition of Benjamin Jonson's Works in 1616.

ⁱ A copy which I have seen has R. Allot, instead of R. A. There is a contemporary bookseller of that name. But in a little book of EPIGRAMS by John Weever, printed in 1599. (12mo.) I find the following compliment.

"Ad Robertum Allot et Christopherum Middletonum.

Quicke are your wits, sharpe your conceits,

Short, and more sweet, your lays;
Quick but no wit, sharp no conceit,
Siort and lesse sweet my Praise."

[The following hexameters by Rob. Allott were prefixed to Chr. Middleton's LEGEND OF DUKE HUMPHREY, Lond. 1600. 4to.

tials R. A. appear subscribed to two Sonnets prefixed, one to sir Thomas Mounson, and the other to the Reader. The other compilation of this sort is entitled, "BELVIDERE, or the Garden of the Muses. London, imprinted for Hugh Astly, 1600^l." The compiler is one John Bodenham. In both of these, especially the former, the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES is cited at large, and has a conspicuous share^k. l "Or, sentences gathered out of all kinds of poets, referred to certaine methodical heads, profitable for the use of those times to rhyme upon any occasion at a little warning." Octavo. But the compiler does not cite the names of the poets with the extracts. This work is ridiculed in an anonymous old play, "THE RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, Or the Scourge of Simony, publicly acted by the students in Saint John's College Cambridge, 1606." quarto. Judicious says, "Considering the furies of the times, I could better see these young can-quaffing hucksters shoot off their pellets, so they could keep them from these ENGLISH FLORES POETARUM; but now the world is come to that pass, that there starts up every day an old goose that sits hatching up these eggs which have been filched from the nest of crows and kestrels," &c. ACT i. Sc. ii. Then follows a criticism on Spenser, Constable, Lodge, Daniel, Watson, Drayton, Davis, Marston, Marlowe, Churchyard, Nashe, Locke, and Hudson. Churchyard is commended for his Legend of SHORE'S WIFE in the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES.

Hath not Shores Wife, although a light-skirts she,

Given him a long and lasting memory?

By the way, in the Register of the Stationers, Jun. 19. 1594, The lamentable end of SHORE'S WIFE is mentioned as a part of Shakespeare's Richard the Third. And in a pamphlet called PSYLLICO, OR RUN AWAY REDCAP, printed in 1596, the well-frequented play of SHORE is mentioned with PERICLES PRINCE OF TYRE. From Beaumont and Fletcher's KNIGHT OF THE BURNING PESTLE, written 1619,

JANE SHORE appears to have been a celebrated tragedy. And in the Stationer's Register (Oxenbridge and Busby, Aug. 28. 1599.) occurs "The History of the Life and Death of Master Shore and JANE SHORE his wife, as it was lately acted by the earl Derby his servants."

^k Allot's is much the most complete performance of the two. The method is by far more judicious, the extracts more copious, and made with a degree of taste. With the extracts he respectively cites the names of the poets, which are as follows. THOMAS ACHELLEY. THOMAS BASTARD. GEORGE CHAPMAN. THOMAS CHURCHYARD. HENRY CONSTABLE. SAMUEL DANIEL. JOHN DAVIES. MICHAEL DRAYTON. THOMAS DRKKAR. EDWARD FAIRFAX. CHARLES FITZ-JEFFREY. ABRAHAM FRAUNCE. GEORGE GASCOIGNE. EDWARD GILPIN. ROBERT GREENE. FULKE GREVILLE. SIR JOHN HARRINGTON. JOHN HIGGINS. I suspect that Wood, by mistake, has attributed this collection by Allot, to Charles Fitz-jeffrey as mentioned, a poet before and after. But I will quote Wood's words: "Fitz-jeffrey hath also made, as tis said, A Collection reign of queen Elisabeth, as I am informed from some curious manuscript authorities, a thin quarto in the black^e letter was published, with this title, "The MIRROR OF MIRRORS, or all the tragedys of the Mirrov for Magistrates abbreviated in breefe histories in prose. Very necessary for those that haue not the Cronicle. London, imprinted for James Roberts in Barbican, 1598¹." This was an attempt to familiarise and illustrate this favourite series of historic soliloquies: or a plan to present its subjects, which were now become universally popular in rhyme, in the dress of prose.

It is reasonable to suppose, that the publication of the MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES enriched the stores, and extended the limits, of our drama. These lives are so many tragical speeches in character. We have seen, that they suggested of choice Flowers and Descriptions, as well out of his, as the works of several others the most renowned poets of our nation, collected about the beginning of the reign of King James I. But this tho I have been years seeking after, yet I cannot get a sight of it." ATH. OXON. i. 606. But the most comprehensive and exact COMMON-PLACE of the works of our most eminent poets throughout the reign of queen Elisabeth, and afterwards, was published about forty years ago, by Mr. Thomas Hayward of Hungerford in Berkshire, viz. "The BRITISH MUSE, A Collection of THOUGHTS, MORAL, NATURAL, and SUBLIME, of our ENGLISH POETS, who flourished in the sixteenth and seventeenth Centuries. With several curious Topicks, and beautiful Passages, never before extracted, from Shakespeare, Jonson, Beaumont, Fletcher, and above a Hundred more. The whole digested alphabetically, &c. In three volumes. London, Printed for F. Cogan, &c. 1738." 12mo. The PREFACE, of twenty pages, was written by Mr. William Oldys, with the super-visual and corrections of his friend doctor Campbell. This anecdote I learn from a manuscript insertion by Oldys in my copy of Allot's ENGLANDS PARNASSUS, above mentioned, which once belonged to Oldys.

[Hayward's BRITISH MUSE was in

1740 entitled "The Quintessence of English Poetry," and the name of Mr. Oldys was added as author of the Preface. Other collections of a similar kind had been previously published by Poole, Bysshe and Gildon. Edward Phillips had previously attributed England's Parnassus to Fitz-geoffry, and seems to have been followed implicitly by Wood. See Theatr. Poetr. 1675. p. 219.—PARK.]

He died in London April 19, 1747 [of a fever, which grew from a cold he caught at an auction of books over Exeter Change, or by sitting up late at the tavern afterwards. scenes to Shakespeare. Some critics imagine, that HISTORICAL Plays owed their origin to this collection. At least it is certain that the writers of this MIRROR were the first who made a poetical use of the English chronicles recently compiled by Fabyan, Hall, and Hollinshed, which opened a new field of subjects and events; and, I may add, produced a great revolution in the state of popular knowledge. For before those elaborate and voluminous compilations appeared, the History of England, which had been shut up in the Latin narratives of the monkish annalists, was unfamiliar and almost unknown to the general reader*.

* [Among the historical poems which seem to have been written in imitation of those entitled "The Mirror for Magistrates," perhaps with an intention of being engrafted on the popular stock of Baldwin and Higgins, must be noticed the "Legend of Mary Queen of Scots," first published from an original MS. by Mr. Fry of Kingsdown near Bristol in 1810, and attributed by its editor to the pen of Thomas Wenman in 1601; a writer of whom nothing material has since been added to the short account of Wood, which describes him as an excellent scholar¹, who took his degree of M. A. in 1590, was afterwards Fellow of Baliol College, and public orator of the University of Oxford in 1594. The editor claims for this historic legend a higher rank than what Mr. Warton has assigned to the generality of the rhyming chronicles contained in the Mirror for Magistrates: but I rather doubt whether our poetical historian would have ratified the claim; since it appears to run singularly parallel in its construction, in its rhythmical cadence and versification, to the greater portion of the pieces in that once popular collection.

In the Poetical Works¹ of William Browne, 1772, there is a reprint of Verses by him prefixed to "Richard the Third, his character, legend and tragedy," a poem in quarto with the date of 1614. This poem I do not recollect to have seen, but its title makes it presunable to have been of Baldwin's class. Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond first printed in 1592, may be numbered in the same class; and so may Niccols's Vision of Sir Thomas Overbury, &c. published in 1616.

Another of these imitative histories in verse, which from its extreme rarity was not likely to fall under the observation of Mr. Fry, is entitled "Beawtie dishonoured, written under the title of Shore's Wife," printed at London by John Wolfe in 1593, 4to. It contains 197 six-line stanzas, and is inscribed to sir Edward Winckfield knight, by his "worship's most bounden, A. C." that is, A. Chute or Chewt, who speaks of it as an infant labour, and the "first invention of his beginning Muse." As the poem is upon the whole inferior to that of Churchyard on the same subject, which had been published a few years before, it seems rather strange that Chute should have tried his juvenile strength against that of the veteran bard, who published his "Tragedie" in the same year, with 21 additional stanzas, "in as fine a forme as the first impression thereof," and with a soldier-like protestation, that the production was entirely his own, though some malignant it seems had denied him the credit of producing it. Chute did not in his rival effort adopt the seven-line stanza of Churchyard, but many passages bear such partial resemblance, as a choice of the same personal history was likely to induce. A late reprint of the Mirror for Magistrates will give to many an opportunity of perusing Churchyard's work; but as that of Chute remains in an unique copy, I proceed to extract a few of the best stanzas. The ghost of Shore's Wife is made to narrate her own story, on the plan of Baldwin's heroes and heroines. The following lines express her compunction for having yielded to the criminal passion of Edward IV.

Who sees the chast liv'd turtle on a tree
In unfrequented groves sit, and complaine her;
Whether alone all desolate, poore shee,
And for her lost love seemeth to restraine her;
And there, sad thoughted, howleth to the ayre
The excellencie of her lost-mate's fayre²:
So I, when sinne had drown'd my soule¹
in badgesse,
To solitarie muse my selfe retired,
Where wrought by greefe to discontented sadnesse,
Repentant thoughts my new won shame admired;
And I, the monster of myne owne misfortune,
My hart with grones and sorrow did importune.
She proceeds to lament that posterity will consign her memory to defamation.
Thus in thy life, thus in thy death, and boath
Dishonored by thy fact, what mayst thou doe?
Though now thy soule the touch of sinne
doth loath,
And thou abhorst thy life, and thy selfe too:
Yet cannot this redeeme thy spotted name,
Nor interdict thy body of her shame.
But he that could command thee, made thee sin:
Yet that is no priviledge, no sheeld to thee.
Now thou thyselfe hast drown'd thyselfe therein,
Thou art defam'd thyselfe, and so is

SECTION LII.

IN tracing the gradual accessions of the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES, an incidental departure from the general line of our chronologic series has been incurred. But such an anticipation was unavoidable, in order to exhibit a full and uninterrupted view of that poem, which originated in the reign of Mary, and was not finally completed till the beginning of the seventeenth century. I now therefore return to the reign of queen Mary.

To this reign I assign Richard Edwards, a native of Somersetshire about the year 1523. He is said by Wood to have been a scholar of Corpus Christi college in Oxford: but in his early years, he was employed in some department about the court. This circumstance appears from one of his poems in the PARADISE OF DAINTIE DEVICES, a miscellany which contains many of his pieces.

In youthfull yeares when first my young desires began
 To pricke me forth to serve in court, a slender tall young man,
 My fathers blessing then, I asked upon my knee,
 Who blessing me with trembling hand, these wordes gan say to me,
 My sonne, God guide thy way, and shield thee from mischaunce,
 And make thy just desartes in court, thy poore estate to advance, &c.^a

In the year 1547, he was appointed a senior student of Christ-church in Oxford, then newly founded. In the British Museum there is a small set of manuscript sonnets signed with his initials, addressed to some of the beauties of the courts of queen Mary, and of queen Elisabeth^b. Hence we may conjecture, that he did not long remain at the university. About this time he was probably a member of Lincoln's-inn. In the year 1561, he was constituted a gentleman of the royal chapel by queen Elisabeth, and master of the singing boys there. He had received his musical education, while at Oxford, under George Etheridge^c.

When queen Elisabeth visited Oxford in 1566, she was attended by Edwards, who was on this occasion employed to compose a play called PALAMON AND ARCITE, which was acted before her majesty in Christ-church hall^d. I believe it was

The rest bear the signatures of Norton (the dramatic associate probably of Lord Buckhurst) Surre (i. e. Surrey) Va. Pig. and six are unsigned. That quoted by Mr. Warton may be seen at length in Nug. ^c George Etheridge, born at Thame in Oxfordshire, was admitted Scholar of Corpus Christi college Oxford, under the tuition of the learned John Shepreve, in 1534. Fellow, in 1539. In 1553, he was made royal professor of Greek at Oxford. In 1556, he was recommended by lord Williams of Thame, to Sir Thomas Pope founder of Trinity college in Oxford, to be admitted a fellow of his college at its first foundation. But Etheridge chusing to pursue the medical line, that scheme did not take effect. He was persecuted for popery by queen Elisabeth at her accession: but afterwards practised physic at Oxford with much reputation, and established a private seminary there for the instruction of catholic youths in the classics, music, and logic. Notwithstanding his active perseverance in the papistic persuasion, he presented to the queen, when she visited Oxford in 1566, an Encomium in Greek verse on her father Henry, now in the British Museum, MSS. BIBL. REG. 16 C. x. He prefixed a not inelegant preface in Latin verse to his tutor Shepreve's HYPEROLYTUS, an Answer to Ovid's PHÆDRA, which he published in 1584. Pits his cotemporary says, "He was an able mathematician, and one of the most excellent vocal and instrumental musicians in England, but he chiefly delighted in the lute and lyre. A most elegant poet, and a most exact composer of English, Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, verses, which he used to set to his harp with the greatest skill." ANGL. SCRIPT. p. 784. Paris. 1619. Pits adds, that he translated several of David's Psalms into a short Hebrew metre for music. [The harpers used a short verse, and Ethridge, it seems, was a harper: but why was this called a translation?—ASHM.] Wood mentions his musical compositions in manuscript. His familiar friend Leland addresses him in an encomiastic epigram, and asserts that his many excellent writings were highly pleasing to king Henry the Eighth. ENCOM. Lond. 1589. p. 111. His chief patrons seem to have been, Lord Williams, Sir Thomas Pope, Sir Walter Mildmay, and Robertson, dean of Durham. He died in 1583, at Oxford. I have given Etheridge so long a note, because he appears from Pits to have been an English poet. Compare Fox, MARTYROLOG. iii. 500.

never printed. Another of his plays is DAMON AND PYTHIAS, which was acted at court. It is a mistake, that the first edition of this play is the same that is among Mr. Garrick's collection printed by Richard Johnes, and dated 1571^c. The first edition* was printed by William How in Fleet-street, in 1570, with this title, "The tragical comedie of DAMON AND PYTHIAS, newly imprinted as the same was playde before the queenes maiestie by the children of her graces chapple. Made by Mayster Edward then being master of the children^f." There is some degree of low humour in the dialogues between Grimme the collier and the two lacquies, which I presume was highly pleasing to the queen. He probably wrôte many other dramatic pieces now lost. Puttenham having mentioned lord Buckhurst and Master Edward Ferrys, or Ferrers, as most eminent in tragedy, gives the prize to Edwards for Comedy and Interlude^g. The word Interlude is here of wide extent. For Edwards, besides that he was a writer of regular dramas, appears to have been a contriver of masques, and a composer of poetry for pageants. In a word, he united all those arts and accomplishments which minister to popular pleasantry: he was the first fiddle, the most fashionable sonneteer, the readiest rhymèr, and the most facetious mimic, of the court. In consequence of his love and his knowledge of the histrionic art, he taught the choristers over which he presided to act plays; and they were formed into a company of players, like those of saint Paul's cathedral, by the queen's licence, under the superintendency of Edwards^h.

The most poetical of Edwards's ditties in the PARADISE OF DAIN-TIE DEVICES is a description of Mayⁱ. The rest are moral sentences in stanzas. His SOUL-KNEEL, supposed to have been written on his death-bed, was once celebrated^k. His popularity seems to have altogether arisen from those pleasing talents of which no specimens could be transmitted to posterity, and which prejudiced his partial cotemporaries in favour of his poetry. He died in the year 1566^l.

In the Epitaphs, Songs, and Sonets of George Turberville, printed in [1567 and] 1570, there are two elegies on his death; which record the places of his education, ascertain his poetical and musical character, and bear ample testimony to the high distinction in which his performances, more particularly of the dramatic kind, were held. The second is by Turberville himself, entitled, "An Epitaph on Maister Edwards, sometime Maister of the Children of the Chappell and gentleman of Lyncolnes inne of court."

The other is written by Thomas Twyne, an assistant in Phaer's Translation of Virgil's Eneid into English verse, educated a few years after Edwards at Corpus Christi college, and an actor in Edwards's play of PALAMON AND ARCITE before queen Elisabeth at Oxford in 1566^p. It is entitled, "An Epitaph vpon the death of the worshipfull Mayster Richarde

Colwell in 1564, beginning, "I am not the fyrst that hath taken in hande, The wear-ynge of the willowe garlande." This song, often reprinted, seems to have been written in consequence of that sung by Desdemona in OTHELLO, with the burden, Sing, O the green willowe shall be my garland. OTHELLO. ACT IV. SC. 3. See REGISTER OF THE STATIONERS, A. fol. 119. b. Hence the antiquity of Desdemona's song may in some degree be ascertained. I take this opportunity of observing, that the ballad of SUSANNAH, part of which is sung by sir Toby in TWELFTH NIGHT, was licenced to T. Colwell, in 1562, with the title, "The godlye and constante wyfe Susanna." Ibid. fol. 89. b. There is a play on this subject, ibid. fol. 176. a. See T. W. N.

^p Miles Winsore of the same college was another actor in that play, and I suppose his performance was much liked by the queen. For when her majesty left Oxford, after this visit, he was appointed by the university to speak an oration before her at lord Windsor's at Bradenham in Bucks: and when he had done speaking, the queen turning to Gama de Sylva, the Spanish ambassador, and looking wistly on Winsore, said to the ambassador, Is not this a pretty young man? Wood, ATH. ^t While the royal chapel and its singing-boys remain.

In a puritanical pamphlet without name, printed in 1569, and entitled; "The Children of the Chapel stript and whipt," among bishop Tanner's books at Oxford, it is said, "Plaies will neuer be supprest, while her maiesties unfledged minions flaunt it in silkes and sattens. They had as well be at their popish service, in the deuils garments," &c. fol. xii. a. 12mo. This is perhaps the earliest notice now to be found in print, of this young company of comedians, at least the earliest proof of their celebrity. From the same pamphlet we learn, that it gave still greater offence to the puritans, that they were suffered to act plays on profane subjects in the royal chapel itself. "Even in her maiesties chappel do these pretty vpstart youthes profane the Lordes Day by the lasciuious writhing of their tender limbs, and gorgeous decking of their apparell, in feigning bawdie fables gathered from the idolatrous heathen poets," &c. ibid. fol. xiii. b. But this practice soon ceased in the royal chapels. Yet in one of Stephen Gosson's books against the stage, written in 1579, is this passage. "In playes, either those thinges are fained that neuer were, as CUPID AND PSYCHE plaid at PAULES, and a great many comedies more at the Blackfriars, and in euerie playhouse in London," &c. SIGNAT. D. 4. Undoubtedly the actors of this play of CUPID AND PSYCHE were the choristers of saint Paul's cathedral: but it may be doubted, whether by Paules we are here to understand the Cathedral or its Singing school, the last of which was the usual theatre of those choristers. See Gosson's "PLAYES CONFUTED IN FIVE ACTIONS, &c. Prouing that they are not to be suffred in a christian common weale, by the waye both the cauils of Thomas Lodge, and the Play of Playes, written in their defence, and other objections of Players frcndes, are truly set downe and directly aunsweward." Lond. Impr. for T. Gosson, no date. bl. lett. 12mo. We are sure that RELIGIOUS plays were presented in our churches long after the reformation. Not to repeat or multiply instances, see SECOND AND THIRD BLAST OF RETRAIT FROM PLAIES, printed 1580, pag. 77. 12mo. And Gosson's SCHOOLE OF ABUSE, p. 24. b. edit. 1579. As to the exhibition of plays on SUNDAYS after the reformation, we are told by John Field, in his DECLARATION OF GOD'S JUDGEMENT at Paris Garden, that in the year 1580, "The Magistrates of the city of London obtained from queene Elizabeth, that all heathenish playes and enterludes should be banished upon sabbath dayes." fol. ix. Lond. 1583. 8vo. It appears from this painphlet, that a prodigious concourse of people were assembled at Paris Garden, to see plays and a bear-baiting, on Sunday Jan. 13, 1583, when the whole theatre fell to the ground, by which accident many of the spectators were killed. [As this accident happened three years after the above order was issued, Dr. Asliby supposes that the order extended only to the city, and that Paris Garden was out of that jurisdiction.—PARK.] (See also Henry Cave's [Carre's] Narration of the Fall of Paris Garden, Lond. 1588. And Stubbs's Anatomie of Abuses, p. 134, 135. edit. Lond. 1595.) And we learn from Richard Roulidges's Monster lately found out and discovered, or the Scourging of Tiplers, a circumstance not generally known in our dramatic history, and perhaps occasioned by these profanations of the sabbath, that "Many godly citizens and wel-disposed gentlemen of London, considering that play-houses and dicing-houses were traps for yong gentlemen and others,—made humble suite to queene Elizabeth and her Privy-councill, and obtained leave from her Majesty, to thrust the Players out of the city; and to pull downe all Play-houses and Dicing-houses within their liberties: which accordingly was effected, and the Play-houses, in GRACIOUS [Gracechurch] STREET, BISHOPS GATE STREET, that nigh PAULES, that on LUDGATE-HILL, and the WHITE-FRIERS, were quite put downe and suppressed, by the care of the religious senators." Lond.

1628. pp. 2, 3, 4. Compare G. Whetstone's MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES OF CITIES, Lond. 1586. fol. 24. But notwithstanding these precise measures of the city magistrates and the privy-council, the queen appears to have been a constant attendant at plays, especially those presented by the children of her chapel. [So, also, she retained some relics of popery, as tapers on the altar, &c. which greatly offended the puritans.—ASHBY.]

^b I have never seen any of Antony Munday's plays. It appears from Kemp's NINE DAIES WONDER, printed in 1600, that he was famous for writing ballads. In The request to the impudent generation of Ballad-makers, Kemp calls Munday "one whose employment of the pageant was utterly spent, he being knowne to be Elderton's immediate heire," &c. SIGNAT. D. 2. See the next note. He seems to have been much employed by the booksellers as a publisher and compiler both in verse and prose. He was bred at Rome in the English college, and was thence usually called the Pope's scholar. See his pamphlet The Englishman's Roman Life, or how Englishmen live at Rome. Lond. 1582. 4to. But he afterwards turned protestant. He published "The Discoverie of Edmund Campion the Jesuit," in 1582. 12mo. Lond. for E. White. He published also, and dedicated to the earl of Leicester, Two godly and learned Sermons made by that famous and worthy instrument in God's church M. John Calvin, translated into English by Horne bishop of Winchester, during his exile. "Published by A. M." For Henry Car, Lond. 1584. 12mo. Munday frequently used his initials only. Also, a Brief CHRONICLE from the creation to this time, Lond. 1611. 8vo. This seems to be cited by Hutten, ANTIQVIT. OXF. p. 281. edit. Hearne. See REGISTR. STATION. B. fol. 143. b.

He was a city-poet, and a composer and contriver of the city pageants. These are, CHRYSO-TRIUMPHOS, &c. devised and written by A. Munday, 1611.—TRIUMPHS OF OLD DRAPERIE, &c. by A. M. 1616.—METROPOLIS CORONATA, &c. by A. M. 1615. with the story of ROBIN-HOOD. Printed by G. Purstowe.—CHRYSANALEIA, [The golden-fishery] or the honor of fishmongers, concerning Mr. John Lemans being twice Lord-mayor, by A. M. 1616. 4to.—THE TRIUMPHS OF REUNITED BRITANNIA, &c. by A. Munday, citizen and draper of London, 4to. Probably Meres, as in the text, calls him the best plotter, from his invention in these or the like shows. William Webbe in the Discourse of

Chapman, Porter, Wilson, Hathway, and Henry Chettle.^c Puttenham, the author of the Arte of English Poesie, mentions

ENGLISH POETRY, printed in 1586, says, that he has seen by Anthony Munday, "an earnest traveller in this art, very excellent works, especially upon nymphs and shepherds, well worthy to be viewed, and to be esteemed as rare poetry." In an old play attributed to Jonson, called The Case is altered, he is ridiculed under the name of ANTONIO BALLADINO, and as a pageant-poet. In the same scene, there is an oblique stroke on Meres, for calling him the BEST PLOTTER. "You are in print already for the BEST PLOTTER." With his city-pageants, I suppose he was DUMPSHOW maker to the stage.

Munday's DISCOVERY OF CAMPION gave great offence to the catholics, and produced an anonymous reply called "A True Reporte of the death and martyrdom of M. Campion; &c. Whereunto is annexed certayne verses made by sundrie persons." Without date of year or place. Bl. lett. Never seen by Wood, [ATH. OXON. col. 166.] Published, I suppose, in 1583, 8vo. At the end is a CAUEAT, containing some curious anecdotes of Munday. "Munday was first a stage player; after an apprentice, which time he well serued by with deceeuing of his master. Then wandring towards Italy, by his owne reporte, became a cosener in his journey. Coming to Rome, in his shorte abode there, was charitably relieved, but neuer admitted in the Seminary, as he pleseth to lye in the title of his boke; and being wery of well doing, returned home to his first vomite, and was hist from his stage for folly. Being thereby discouraged, he set forth a balet against playes,—tho he afterwards began again to ruffle upon the stage. I omit among other places his behavioure in Barbican with his good mistres, and mother. Two things however must not be passed over of this boyes infelicitie two seuerall wayes of late notorious. First, he writing upon the death of Everaud Haunse was immediately controled and disproued by one of his owne hatche. And shortly after setting forth the Aprehension of Mr. Campion," &c. The last piece is, "a breek Discourse of the Taking of Edmund Campion, and diuers other papists in Barkshire, &c. Gathered by A. M." For W. Wrighte, 1581.

He published in 1618, a new edition of Stowe's SURVEY OF LONDON, with the addition of materials which he pretends to have received from the author's own hands. See DEDICATION. He was a citizen of London, and is buried in Coleman-street church; where his epitaph gives him the character of a learned antiquary. SEYMOUR'S SURV. LOND. i. 322. He collected the Arms of the county of Middlesex, lately transferred from sir Simeon Stuart's library to the British Museum.

* Fol. 282. I do not recollect to have seen any of Chettle's comedies. He wrote a little romance, with some verses intermixed, entitled, "PIERS PLAINEES seauen yeres Prentiship, by H. C. Nuda Veritas. Printed at London by J. Danter for Thomas Gosson, and are to be sold at his shop by London-bridge gate, 1595." 4to. bl. lett. He wrote another pamphlet, containing anecdotes of the petty literary squabbles, in which he was concerned with Greene, Nashe, Tarleton, and the players, called "KINDE-HARTS DREAME. Containing five Apparitions with their inuectiues against abuses reigning. Delivered by seuerall Ghosts vnto him to be publisht after Piers Penillesse Post had refused the carriage. Inuita Inuidia. By H. C. Imprinted at London for William Wright." 4to. without date. Bl. Lett. In the Epistle prefixed, To the Gentlemen Readers, and signed Henrie Chettle, he says, "About three moneths since died M. Robert Greene, [in 1592] leaving many papers in sundry Booke sellers handes, among others his GOATS WORTH OF WIT, in which a letter written to diuers PLAY-MAKERS is offensively by one or two of them taken," &c. In the same, he mentions an Epistle prefixed to the second part of GERILION, falsely attributed to Nashe. The work consists of four or five Addresses. The first is an ironical Admonition to the Ballad-singers of London, from Antonie Now Now, or An-

the "earle of Oxford, and maister Edwardes of her majesties chappel, for comedy and enterlude ^d."

Among the books of my friend the late Mr. William Collins of Chichæster, now dispersed, was a Collection of short comic stories in prose, printed in the black letter under the year 1570, "sett forth by maister Richard Edwardes mayster of her maiestony Munday, just mentioned in the text, a great Ballad-writer. From this piece it appears, that the antient and respectable profession of ballad-making, as well as of ballad-singing, was in high repute about the metropolis and in the country fairs. SIGNAT. C. "When I was liked, says Anthonie, there was no thought of that idle vvpstart generation of ballad-singers, neither was there a Printer so lewd that would set his finger to a lasciuious line." But now, he adds, "ballads are abusively chanted in every street; and from London this evil has overspread Essex and the adjoining counties. There is many a tradesman, of a worshipfull trade, yet no stationer, who after a little bringing vppe apprentices to singing brokerie, takes into his shoppe some fresh men, and trustes his olde servauntes of a two months standing with a dossen groates worth of ballads. In which if they prove thriftie, he makes them pretty chapmen, able to spred moze pamphlets by the state forbidden, than all the booksellers in London," &c. The names of many ballads are here also recorded, WATKINS ALE, The CARMANS WHISTLE, CHOPPING-KNIVES, and FRIER FOX-TAILE. Out-roaringe Dick, and Wat Wiinbars, two celebrated trebles, are said to have got twenty shillings a day by singing at Braintree fair in Essex. Another of these Addresses is from Robert Greene to Peirce Penniless. SIGNAT. E. Another from Tarleton the Player to all maligners of honest mirth. E. 2. "Is it not lamentable, says he, that a man should spende his two pence on plays in an afternoone!—If players were suppressed, it would be to the no smal profit of the Bowlinge Alleys in Bedlam and other places, that were [are] wont in the afternoones to be left empty by the recourse of good fellowes into that vnprofitable recreation of stage-playing. And it were not much amisse woulde they ioine with the Dicing-houses to make sute againe for their longer restrainte, though the Sickness cease.—While Playes are vsde, halfe the daye is by most youthes that haue libertie spent vppon them, or at least the greatest company drawne to the places where they frequent," &c. This is all in pure irony. The last address is from William Cuckowe, a famous master of legerdemain, on the tricks of jugglers. I could not suffer this opportunity, accidentally offered, to pass, of giving a note to a forgotten old writer of comedy, whose name may not perhaps occur again. But I must add, that the initials H. C. to pieces of this period do not always mean Henry Chettle. In ENGLAND'S HELICON are many pieces signed H. C. Probably for Henry Constable, a noted sonnet-writer of these times. I have "DIANA, or the excellent conceitfull Sonnets of H. C. Augmented with diuers quatorzains of honorable and learned personages, Diuided into viij. Decads. Vincitur a facibus qui jacit ipse faces." At Lond. 1596. 16mo. These are perhaps by Henry Constable. The last Sonnet is on a Lady born 1588. In my copy, those by H. C. are marked H. C. with a pen. Henry Constable will be examined in his proper place. Chettle is mentioned, as a player I think, in the last page of Dekker's KNIGHTS CONJURING, printed in 1607. [In the tract here cited, Bentley and not Chettle is introduced as a player. The sonnets of Constable, from a M.S. in the possession of Mr. Todd, have been printed in a late Supplement to the Harleian Miscellany.—PARK.] ties reuels." Undoubtedly this is the same Edwards: "who from this title expressly appears to have been the general conductor of the court festivities: and who most probably succeeded in this office George Ferrers, one of the original authors of the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES°. Among these tales was that of the INDUCTION OF THE TINKER in Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW: and perhaps Edwards's story-book was the immediate source from which Shakespeare, or rather the author

° Who had certainly quitted that office before the year 1575. For in George Gascoigne's Narrative of queen Elisabeth's splendid visit at Kenilworth-castle in Warwickshire, entitled the PRINCELIE PLEASURES OF KENILWORTH-CASTLE, the octave stanzas spoken by the Lady of the Lake, are said to have been "devised and penned by M. [Master] Ferrers, sometime Lord of Misrule in the Court." Signat. A. iij. See also Signat. B. ij. This was GEORGE FERRERS mentioned in the text, a contributor to the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES. I take this opportunity of insinuating my suspicions, that I have too closely followed the testimony of Philips, Wood, and Tanner, in supposing that this GEORGE FERRERS, and EDWARD FERRERS a writer of plays, were two distinct persons. See supr. p. 37. I am now convinced that they have been confounded, and that they are one and the same man. We have already seen, and from good authority, that GEORGE FERRERS was Lord of Misrule to the court, that is, among other things of a like kind, a writer of court interludes or plays; and that king Edward the Sixth had great delight in his pastimes. See supr. vol. iii. 208. The confusion appears to have originated from Puttenham, the author of the ARTE OF ENGLISH POESIE, who has inadvertently given to GEORGE the christian name of EDWARD. But his account, or character, of this EDWARD FERRERS has served to lead us to the truth. "But the principall man in this profession [poetry] at the same time [of Edward the Sixth] was maister EDWARD FERRYS, a man of no lesse mirth and felicitie that way, but of much more skil and magnificence in his meeter, and therefore wrate for the most part to the stage in Tragedie and sometimes in Comedie, or Enterlude, wherein he gave the king so much good recreation, as he had thereby many good rewardes." Lib. i. ch. xxxi. p. 49. edit. 1589. And again, "For Tragedie the Lord of Buckhurst, and maister Edward Ferrys, for such doings as I have sene of theirs, do deserve the highest price." Ibid. p. 51. His Tragedies, with the magnificent meeter, are perhaps nothing more than the stately monologues in the MIRROUR OF MAGISTRATES; and he might have written others either for the stage in general, or the more private entertainment of the court, now lost, and probably never printed. His Comedie and Enterlude are perhaps to be understood, to have been, not so much regular and professed dramas for a theatre, as little dramatic mummeries for the court-holidays, or other occasional festivities. The court-shows, like this at Kenilworth, were accompanied with personated dialogues in verse, and the whole pageantry was often stiled an interlude. This reasoning also accounts for Puttenham's seeming omission, in not having enumerated the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES, by name, among the shining poems of his age. I have before observed, what is much to our purpose, that no plays of an EDWARD FERRERS, (or FERRYS, which is the same,) in print or manuscript, are now known to exist, nor are mentioned by any writer of the times with which we are now concerned. GEORGE FERRERS at least, from what actually remains of him, has some title to the dramatic character. Our GEORGE FERRERS, from the part he bore in the exhibitions at Kenilworth, appears to have been employed as a writer of metrical speeches or dialogues to be spoken in character, long after he had left the office of lord of misrule. A proof of his reof the old TAMING OF A SHREW, drew that diverting apologue^f. If I recollect right, the circumstances almost exactly tallied with an incident which Heuterus relates, from an Epistle of Ludovicus Vives, to have actually happened at the marriage of Duke Philip the Good of Burgundy, about the year 1440. I will give it in the words, either of Vives, or of that perspicuous annalist, who flourished about the year 1580. “Nocte quadam a cæna cum aliquot præcipuis amicorum per urbem deambulans, jacentem conspicatus est medio foro hominem de plebe ebrium, altum stertentem. In eo visum est experiri quale esset vitæ nostræ ludicrum, de quo illi interdum essent collocuti. Prolata sunt Ducis vestimenta. Mirari homo ubi se eo loci vidit. Indutus est, prodiit e cubiculo, adfuere proceres qui illum ad sacellum deducerent. Accensis luminibus inducta sunt musica instrumenta, puellæ atque nobiles adolescentes saltarunt, exhibitæ sunt fabulæ, dehinc comessatio quæ hilaritate atque invitationibus ad potandum producta est in multam noctem. To an irresistible digression, into which the magic of Shakespeare's name has insensibly seduced us, I hope to be pardoned for adding another narrative of this frolic, from the ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY by Democritus junior, or Robert Burton, a very learned and ingenious writer of the reign of king James the First. “When as by reason of unseasonable weather, he could neither hawke nor hunt, and was now tired with cards and dice, and such other domesticall sports, or to see ladies dance with some of his courtiers, he would in the evening walke disguised all about the towne. It so fortunèd, as he was walking late one night, he found a country fellow dead drunke, snorting on a bulke : hee caused his followers to bring him to his palace, and then stripping him of his old clothes, and attyring him in the court-fashion, when he wakened, he and they were all ready to attend upon his Excellency, and persuaded him he was some great Duke. The poore fellow admiring how he came there, was served in state all day long : after supper he saw them dance, heard musicke, and all the rest of those court-like pleasures. But late at night, when he was well tipledd, and againe faste asleepe, they put on his old robes, and so conveyed him to the place where they first found him. Now the fellowe had not made there so good sport the day before, as he did now when he returned to himselfe ; all the jest was, to see how he looked upon it. In conclusion, after some little admiration, the poore man told his friends he

If this is a true story, it is a curious specimen of the winter-diversions of a very polite court of France in the middle of the fifteenth century. The merit of the contrivance, however, and comic effect of this practical joke, will atone in some measure for many indelicate circumstances with which it must have necessarily been attended. I presume it first appeared in Vives's Epistle. I have seen the story of a tinker disguised like a lord in recent collections of humorous tales, probably transmitted from Edwards's story-book, which I wish I had examined more carefully.

I have assigned Edwards to queen Mary's reign, as his reputation in the character of general poetry seems to have been then at its height. I have mentioned his sonnets addressed to the court-beauties of that reign, and of the beginning of the reign of queen Elisabethⁱ.

SECTION LIII.

ABOUT the same time flourished Thomas Tusser, one of our earliest didactic poets, in a science of the highest utility, and which produced one of the most beautiful poems of antiquity. The vicissitudes of this man's life have uncommon variety and novelty for the life of an author, and his history conveys some curious traces of the times as well as of himself. He seems to have been alike the sport of fortune, and a dupe to his own discontented disposition and his perpetual propensity to change of situation.

He was born of an ancient family, about the year 1523, at Rivenhall in Essex; and was placed as a chorister, or singing-boy, in the collegiate chapel of the castle of Wallingford in Berkshire^a. Having a fine voice, he was impressed from Wallingford college into the king's chapel. Soon afterwards he was admitted into the choir of saint Paul's cathedral in London; where he made great improvements under the instruction of John Redford the organist, a famous musician. He was next sent to Eton-school, where, at one chastisement, he received fifty-three stripes of the rod, from the severe but celebrated master Nicholas Udall^b. His academical education was at Trinity-hall in Cambridge: but Hatcher affirms, that he was from Eton admitted a scholar of King's College in that university, under the year 1543^c. From the university he was called up to court by his singular and generous patron William

^a This chapel had a dean, six prebendaries, six clerks, and four choristers. It was dissolved in 1549.

^b Udall's English interludes, mentioned above, were perhaps written for his scholars. Thirty-five lines of one of

lord Paget, in whose family he appears to have been a retainer^d. In this department he lived ten years: but being disgusted with the vices, and wearied with the quarrels of the courtiers, he retired into the country, and embraced the profession of a farmer, which he successively practised at Ratwood in Sussex, Ipswich in Suffolk, Fairstead in Essex, Norwich, and other places^e. Here his patrons were sir Richard Southwell^f, and Salisbury dean of Norwich. Under the latter he procured the place of a singing-man in Norwich cathedral. At length, having perhaps too much philosophy and too little experience to succeed in the business of agriculture, he returned to London: but the plague drove him away from town, and he took shelter at Trinity college in Cambridge. Without a tincture of careless imprudence, or vicious extravagance, this desultory character seems to have thrived in no vocation. Fuller says, that his stone, which gathered no moss, was the stone of Sisyphus. His plough and his poetry were alike unprofitable. He was by turns a fiddler and a farmer, a grasier and a poet, with equal success. He died very aged at London in 1580*, and was buried in saint Mildred's church in the Poultry^g.

^d Our author's HUSBANDRIE is dedicated to his son Lord Thomas Paget of Beaudesert, fol. 7. ch. ii. edit. ut infr.

^e In Peacham's MINERVA, a book of emblems printed in 1612, there is the device of a whetstone and a scythe with these lines, fol. 61. edit. 4to.

* [If Tusser was born in 1523, he could not die very aged in 1580; as he was only 57. If he went to college in 1543, aged 20, staid there three years, and then followed the court for ten years, he must have been 33 at least when he married: this brings us to 1556, and the very next year produced the first edition of his Husbandry: which seems too

Before I proceed, I must say a few words concerning the very remarkable practice implied in these stanzas, of seizing boys by a warrant for the service of the king's chapel. Strype has printed an abstract of an instrument, by which it appears, that emissaries were dispatched into various parts of England with full powers to take boys from any choir for the use of the chapel of king Edward the Sixth. Under the year 1550, says Strype, there was a grant of a commission "to Philip Van Wilder gentleman of the Privy Chamber, in anie churches or chappells within England to take to the king's use, such and as many singing children and choristers, as he or his deputy shall think good^l." And again, in the following year, 'the master of the king's chapel, that is, the master of the king's singing-boys, has licence "to take up from time to time as many children [boys] to serve in the king's chapel as he shall think fit^m." Under the year 1454, there is a commission of the same sort from king Henry the Sixth, De ministrallis propter solatium regis providendis, for procuring minstrels, even by force, for the solace or entertainment of the king: and it is required, that the minstrels so procured, should be not only skilled in arte ministrallatus, in the art of minstrelsy, but membris naturalibus elegantes, handsome and elegantly shapedⁿ. As the word Minstrel is of an extensive signification, and is applied as a general term to every character of that species of men whose business it was to entertain, either with oral recitation, music, gesticulation, and singing, or with a mixture of all these arts united, it is certainly difficult to determine, whether singers only, more particularly singers for the royal chapel, were here intended. The last clause may perhaps more immediately seem to point out tumblers or posture-masters^o. But in the register of the capitulary acts of York cathedral, it is ordered as an indispensable qualification, that the chorister who is annually to be elected the boy-bishop, should be competenter corpore formosus. I will transcribe an article of the register, relating to that ridiculous ceremony. "Dec. 2. 1367. Joannes de Quixly confirmatur Episcopus Puerorum, et Capitulum ordinavit, quod electio episcopi Puerorum in ecclesia Eboracensi de cetero fieret de eo, qui diutius et magis in dicta ecclesia laboraverit, et magis idoneus repertus fuerit, dum tamen competenter sit cor-

ⁿ Rym. Poed. xi. 375.

^o Even so late as the present reign of queen Mary, we find tumblers introduced for the diversion of the court. In 1556, at a grand military review of the queen's pensioners in Greenwich park, "came a Tumbler and played many pretty feats, the queen and Cardinal [Pole] looking on; whereat she was observed to laugh heartily," &c. Strype's Eccl. Mex. iii. p. 312. ch. xxxix. Mr. Astle has a roll of some private expences of king Edward the Second: among which it appears, that fifty shillings were paid to a person who danced before the king on a table, "et lui fist tres-grandement rire." And that twenty shillings were allowed to another, who rode before his majesty, and often fell from his horse, at which his majesty laughed heartily, de queux roy rya grantement. The laughter of kings was thought worthy to be recorded.

pore formosus, et quod aliter facta electio non valebit^p." It is certainly a matter of no consequence, whether we understand these Minstrels of Henry the Sixth to have been singers, pipers, players, or posture-masters. From the known character of that king, I should rather suppose them performers for his chapel. In any sense, this is an instance of the same oppressive and arbitrary privilege that was practised on our poet.

Our author Tusser wrote, during his residence at Ratwood in Sussex, a work in rhyme entitled A HUNDRETH GOOD POINTES OF HUSBANDRIE, which was printed at London in 1557^q. But it was soon afterwards reprinted, with additions and improvements, under the following title, "Five hundred pointes of good Husbandrie as well for the Champion or open countrie, as also for the Woodland or Severall, mixed in euerie moneth with Huswiferie, ouer and besides the booke of HUSWIFERIE. Corrected, better ordered, and newlie augmented a fourth part more, with diuers other lessons, as a diet for the farmer, of the properties of windes, planets, hops, herbs, bees, and approved remedies for sheepe and cattell, with manie other matters both profitabell and not vnpleasant for the Reader. Also a table of HUSBANDRIE at the beginning of this booke, and another of HUSWIFERIE* at the end, &c. Newlie set forth by THOMAS TUSSER gentleman^r."

In the Salisbury-missal, in the office of EPISCOPUS PUERORUM, among the suffrages we read, "Corpore enim formosus es, O fili, et diffusa est gratia in labiis tuis," &c. In further proof of the solemnity with which this farce was conducted, I will cite another extract from the chapter-registers at York. "xj febr. 1370. In Scriptoria capituli Ebor. dominus Johannes Gisson, magister chorum ecclesie Eboracensis, liberavit Roberto de Holme choristæ, qui tunc ultimo fuerat episcopus puerorum, iij libras, xv s. id. ob. de perquisitis ipsius episcopi per ipsum Johannem receptis, et dictus Robertus ad sancta dei evangelia per ipsum corporaliter tacta iuravit, quod nunquam molestaret dictum dominum Johannem de summa pecunie prædicta." It must be acknowledged, that this old English georgic has much more of the simplicity of Hesiod, than of the elegance of Virgil: and a modern reader would suspect, that many of its salutary maxims originally decorated the margins, and illustrated the calendars, of an antient almanac. It is without invocations, digressions, and descriptions: no pleasing pictures of rural imagery are drawn from meadows covered with flocks and fields waving with corn, nor are Pan and Ceres once named. Yet it is valuable, as a genuine picture of the agriculture, the rural arts, and the domestic economy and customs, of our industrious ancestors.

I must begin my examination of this work with the apology of Virgil on a similar subject,

* [Barnabe Googe, in his preface to the translation of Heresbach's four books of Husbandrie, 1578, sets Fitzherbert and Tusser on a level with Varro and Columella and Palladius: but the sedate Stillingfleet would rather compare Tusser to old Hesiod, from the following considerations. They both wrote in the infancy of husbandry, in their different countries. Both gave good general precepts, without entering into the detail, though Tusser has more of it than Hesiod. They both seem desirous to improve the morals of their readers as well as their farms, by recommending industry and economy: and, that which perhaps may be looked upon as the greatest resemblance, they both wrote in verse; probably for the same reason, namely, to propagate their doctrines more effectually. But here the resemblance ends:

SECTION LIV.

AMONG Antony Wood's manuscripts in the Bodleian library at Oxford, I find a poem of considerable length written by William Forrest, chaplain to queen Mary^a. It is entitled, "A true and most notable History of a right noble and famous Lady produced in Spayne entitled the second GRESIELD, practised not long out of this time in much part tragedious as delectable both to hearers and readers." This is a panegyric history in octave rhyme, of the life of queen Catharine, the first queen of king Henry the Eighth. The poet compares Catharine to patient Grisild, celebrated by Petrarch and Chaucer, and Henry to earl Walter her husband^b. Catharine had certainly the patience and conjugal compliance of Grisild; but Henry's cruelty was not, like Walter's, only artificial and assumed. It is dedicated to queen Mary^c: and Wood's manuscript, which was once very superbly bound and embossed, and is elegantly written on vellum, evidently appears to have been the book presented by the author to her majesty. Much of its antient finery is tarnished: but on the brass bosses at each corner is still discernible AVE. MARIA GRATIA PLENA. At the end is this colophon: "Here endeth the Historye of Grysilde the second, dulie meanyng Queene Catharine mother to our most dread souveraigne Lady queene Mary, fynysched the xxv

^b The affecting story of PATIENT GRISILD seems to have long kept up its celebrity. In the books of the Stationers, in 1565, Owen Rogers has a licence to print "a ballat intituled the songe of pacyent Gressell vnto hyr make" REGISTER. A. fol. 132. b. Two ballads are entered in 1565, "to the tune of pacyente Gressell." Ibid. fol. 135. a. In the same year T. Colwell has licence to print "The History of meke and pacyent Gressell." Ibid. fol. 139. a. Colwell has a second edition of this history in 1568. Ibid. fol. 177. a. Instances occur much lower.

day of June, the yeare of owre Lorde 1558. By the symple and unlearned Syr Wylliam Forrest p̄æiste, propria manu." The poem, which consists of twenty chapters, contains a zealous condemnation of Henry's divorce: and, I believe, preserves some anecdotes, yet apparently misrepresented by the writer's religious and political bigotry, not extant in any of our printed histories. Forrest was a student at Oxford, at the time when this notable and knotty point of casuistry prostituted the learning of all the universities of Europe, to the gratification of the capricious amours of a libidinous and implacable tyrant. He has recorded many particulars and local incidents of what passed in Oxford during that transaction^c. At the end of the poem is a metrical ORATION CONSOLATORY, in six leaves, to queen Mary.

In the British Museum is another of Forrest's poems, written in two splendid folio volumes on vellum, called "The tragedious troubles of the most chaste and innocent Joseph, son to the holy patriarch Jacob," and dedicated to Thomas Howard duke of Norfolk^d. In the same repository is another of his pieces, never printed, dedicated to king Edward the Sixth, "A notable warke called The PLEASANT POESIE OF PRINCELIE PRACTISE, composed of late by the simple and unlearned sir William Forrest priest, much part collected out of a booke entitled the GOVERNANCE OF NOBLEMEN, which booke the wyse philosopher Aristotle wrote to his disciple Alexander the Great^e." The book here mentioned is Ægidius Romanus de REGIMINE PRINCIPIUM, which yet retained its reputation and popularity

^c In the first chapter, he thus speaks of the towardliness of the princess Catharine's younger years.

With stoole and needyl she was not to seeke,
And other practisingis for ladyes meete;
To pastyme at tables, ticktack, or gleeke,
Cardys, dyce, &c.

He adds, that she was a pure virgin when married to the king: and that her first husband prince Arthur, on account of his tender years, never slept with her.

from the middle age^f. I ought to have observed before, that Forrest translated into English metre fifty of David's Psalms, in 1551, which are dedicated to the duke of Somerset, the Protector^g. Hence we are led to suspect, that our author could accommodate his faith to the reigning powers. . . Many more of his manuscript pieces both in prose and verse, all professional and of the religious kind, were in the hands of Robert earl of Ailesbury^h. Forrest, who must have been living at Oxford, as appears from his poem on queen Catharine, so early as the year 1530, was in reception of an annual pension of six pounds from Christ-church in that university, in the year 1555ⁱ. He was eminently skilled in music: and with much diligence and expence, he collected the works of the most excellent English composers, that were his cotemporaries. These, being the choicest compositions of John Taverner of Boston, organist of Cardinal-college now Christ-church at Oxford, John Merbeck who first digested our present church-service from the notes of the Roman missal, Fairfax, Tye, Sheppard, Norman, and others, falling after Forrest's death into the possession of doctor William Hether, founder of the musical praxis and professorship at Oxford in 1623, are now fortunately preserved at Oxford, in the archives of the music-school assigned to that institution.

Lond. 1528. 4to. To what I have before said of Robert Copland as a poet (supr. vol. iii. p. 129.) may be added, that he prefixed an English copy of verses to the Mirroure of the Church of saynt Austine of Abyngdon, &c. Printed by himself, 1521. 4to. Another to Andrew Chertsey's PASSIO DOMINI, ibid. 1521. 4to. (See supr. iii. p. 364.) He and his brother William printed several romances before 1530.

ⁱ MSS. Le Neve. From a long chapter in his KATHARINE, about the building of Christ-church and the regimen of it, he appears to have been of that college.

In the year 1554, a poem of two sheets, in the spirit and stanza of Sternhold, was printed under the title, "The VNGODLINESSE OF THE HETHNICKE GODDES or The Downfall of Diana of the Ephesians, by J. D. an exile for the word, late a minister in London, MDLIV^k." I presume it was printed at Geneva, and imported into England with other books of the same tendency, and which were afterwards suppressed by a proclamation. The writer, whose arguments are as weak as his poetry, attempts to prove, that the customary mode of training youths in the Roman poets encouraged idolatry and pagan superstition. This was a topic much laboured by the puritans. Prynne, in that chapter of his HISTRIOMASTIX, where he exposes "the obscenity, ribaldry, amorousnesse, HEATHENISHNESSE, and prophanesse, of most play-bookes, Arcadias, and fained histories that are now so much in admiration," acquaints us, that the infallible leaders of the puritan persuasion in the reign of queen Elisabeth, among which are two bishops, have solemnly prohibited all christians, "to pen, to print, to sell, to read, or school-masters and others to teach, any amorous wanton Play-bookes, Histories, or Heathen authors, especially Ovid's wanton Epistles and Bookes of love, Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius, Martiall, the Comedies of Plautus, Terence, and other such amorous bookes, savoring either of Pagan Gods, of Ethnicke rites and ceremonies, of scurrility, amorousnesse, and prophanesse^l." But the classics were at length condemned by a much higher authority. In the year 1582, one Christopher Ocland, a schoolmaster of Cheltenham, published two poems in Latin hexameters, one entitled ANGLORUM PRÆLIA, the other ELIZABETHA^m. To these poems, which are written in a low style of Latin versification, is prefixed an edict from the not suspecting that they were acting in opposition to their own principles and intentions, exert their endeavours to bring back barbarism, and to obstruct the progress of truth and good sense^o.

Hollingshead mentions Lucas Shepherd of Colchester, as an eminent poet of queen Mary's reign^p. I do not pretend to any great talents for decyphering; but I presume, that this is the same person who is called by Bale, from a most injudicious affectation of Latinity, Lucas OPILIO. Bale affirms, that his cotemporary, Opilio, was a very facetious poet: and means to pay him a still higher compliment in pronouncing him not inferior even to Skelton, for his rhimes^q. It is unlucky, that Bale, by disguising his name, should have contributed to conceal this writer so long from the notice of posterity, and even to counteract his own partiality. Lucas Shepherd, however, appears to have been nothing more than a petty pamphleteer in the cause of Calvinism, and to have acquired the character of a poet from a metrical translation of some of David's Psalms about the year 1554. Bale's narrow prejudices are well known. The puritans never suspected that they were greater bigots than the papists. I believe one or two of Shepherd's pieces in prose are among bishop Tanner's books at Oxford.

Bale also mentions metrical English versions of ECCLESIASTES; of the histories of ESTHER, SUSANNAH, JUDITH, and of the TESTAMENT OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS, printed and written about this period, by John Pullaine, one of the original students of Christ-church at Oxford, and at length archdeacon of Colchester. He was chaplain to the duchess of Suffolk; and, either by choice or compulsion, imbibed ideas of reformation at Geneva^q. I have seen the name of John Pullayne, affixed in manuscript to a copy of an anonymous version of Solomon's Song, or "Salomon's balads in metre," above mentioned^r, in which is this stanza.

There were numerous versions of Solomon's SONG before the year 1600: and perhaps no portion of scripture was selected with more propriety to be cloathed in verse. Beside those I have mentioned, there is, "The SONG OF SONGS, that is the most excellent Song which was Solomon's, translated out of the Hebrue into Englishe meater with as little libertie in departing from the wordes as anie plaine translation in prose can vse, and interpreted by a short commentarie." The CANTICLES in English verse are among the best poems of Spenser ‡. Compositors at this time often were learned men: and Baldwin was perhaps occasionally employed by Whitchurch, both as a compositor and an author."

Although the translation of the scriptures into English rhyme was for the most part an exercise of the enlightened puritans, the recent publication of Sternhold's psalms taught that mode of writing to many of the papists, after the sudden revival of the mass under queen Mary. One Richard Beearde, parson of saint Mary-hill in London, celebrated the accession of that queen in a godly psalm printed in 1553 ^a. Much about the same time, George Marshall wrote A compendious treatise in metre, declaring the first original of sacrifice and of building churches and aultars, and of the first receiving the cristen faith here in England, dedicated to George Wharton, esquire, and printed at London in 1554 ^b.

Near the same period, a translation of ECCLESIASTES into rhyme by Oliver Starkey occurs in bishop Tanner's library*, if I recollect right, together with his Translation of Sallust's two histories. By the way, there was another vernacular versification of ECCLESIASTES by Henry Lok, or Lock, of whom more will be said hereafter, printed in 1597. This book was also translated into Latin hexameters by Drant, who will occur again in 1572. The ECCLESIASTES was versified in English by Spenser †.

I have before mentioned the SCHOOL-HOUSE OF WOMEN, a satire against the fair sex^e. This was answered by Edward More of Hambledon in Buckinghamshire, about the year 1557, before he was twenty years of age. It required no very powerful abilities either of genius or judgment to confute such a groundless and malignant invective. More's book is entitled, The DEFENCE OF WOMEN, especially English women, against a book intituled the SCHOOL-HOUSE OF WOMEN. It is dedicated to Master William Page, secretary to his neighbour and patron sir Edward Hoby of Bisham-abbey, and was printed at London in 1560.^f

"Venus unto thee for help, good Lady, do I call."

Our author, if I remember right, has furnished some arguments to one William

With the catholic liturgy, all the pageantries of popery were restored to their antient splendour by queen Mary. Among others, the procession of the boy-bishop was too popular a mummerly to be forgotten. In the preceding reign of king Edward the Sixth, Hugh Rhodes, a gentleman & musician of the royal chapel, published an English poem with the title, THE BOKE OF NURTUR for men seruants and children, or of the gouernance of youth, with STANS PUER AD MENSAM^s. In the following reign of Mary, the same poet printed a poem consisting of thirty-six octave stanzas, entituled, "The SONG of the CHYLDBYSSHOP, as it was songe^h before the queenes maiestie in her priuie chamber at her manour of saynt James in the ffeldes on saynt Nicholas day and Innocents day this yeare nowe present, by the chylde bysshope of Poules churchⁱ with his company. LONDINI, in ædibus Johannis Cawood typographi reginæ, 1555. Cum privilegio," &c.^k By admitting this spectacle into her presence, it appears that her majesty's bigotry condescended to give countenance to the most ridiculous and unmeaning cere-

Heale of Exeter college; who wrote, in 1609, AN APOLOGY FOR WOMAN, in opposition to Dr. Gager above-mentioned, who had maintained at the Public Act, that it was useful for husbands to beat their wives. Wood says, that Heale "was always esteemed an ingenious man, but weak, as being too much devoted to the female sex." ATH. OXON. i. 314.

^s In quarto. [small 8vo.] Bl. lett. Pr. Prol. "There is few things to be understood." The poem begins, "Alle ye that wolde learn and wolde be called wyse." [As this book is said to be newly corrected, Mr. Ritson infers "there must have been an earlier edition."—Edrr.]

^h In the church of York, no chorister was to be elected boy-bishop, "nisi habuerit clarum vocem puerilem." Registr. Capitul. Eccles. Ebor. sub ann. 1390. MS. ut supr.

ⁱ In the old statutes of saint Pauls, are many orders about this mock-solemnity. One is, that the canon, called STAGNARIUS, shall find the boy-bishop his robes, and "equitatum honestum." MS. fol. 86. Diceto dean. In the statutes of Salisbury cathedral, it is ordered, that the boy-bishop shall not make a feast, "sed in domo comifuni cum sociis conuersetur, nisi eum ut Choristam, ad domum Canonici, causa solatii, ad mensam contigerit evocari." Sub anno 1319. Tit. xiv. DE STATU CHORISTARUM. MS.

^k In quarto. Bl. lett. Strypt says, that in 1556, "On S. Nicolas even, Saint Nicolas, that is a boy habited like a bishop in pontificalibus, went abroad in most parts of London, singing after the old fashion, and was received with many ignorant but well-disposed people into their houses; and had as much good cheer as ever was wont to be had before." ECCL. MEM. iii. 310. ch. xxxix. See also p. 387. ch. l. In 1554, Nov. 13, an edict was issued by the bishop of London, to all the clergy of his diocese, to have a boy-bishop in procession, &c. mony of the Roman ritual. As to the song itself, it is a fulsome panegyric on the queen's devotion: in which she is compared to Judith, Esther, the queen of Sheba, and the virgin Mary¹. This show of the boy-bishop, not so much for its superstition as its levity and absurdity, had been formally abrogated by king Henry the Eighth, fourteen years before, in the year 1542, as appears by a "Proclamation devised by the King's Majesty by the advys of his Highness Counsel the xxii day of Julie, 33 Hen. viij, commanding the ffeasts of saint Luke, saint Mark, saint Marie Magdalene, Invention of the Crosse, and saint Laurence, which had been abrogated, should be nowe againe celebrated and kept holie days," of which the following is the concluding clause. See a curious passage in bishop Fisher's Sermon of the MONY MINDE of Margaret countess of Richmond. Where it is said, that she praied to S. Nicholas the patron and helper of all true maydens, when nine years old, about the choice of a husband: and that the saint appeared in a vision, and announced the earl of Richmond. Edit. Baker, pag. 8. There is a precept issued to the sheriff of Oxford from Edward the First, in 1305, to prohibit tournaments being intermixed with the sports of the scholars on saint Nicholas's day. Rot. Claus. 33 Edw. I. memb. 2.

I have already given traces of this practice in the colleges of Winchester and Eton. [see supr. vol. iii. p. 216.] To which I here add another. Registr. Coll. Wint. sub ann. 1427. "Crux deaurata de cupro [copper] cum Baculo, pro EPISCOPO RUFORUM." But it appears that the practice subsisted in common grammar-schools. "Hoc anno,

^a The reader will recollect the old play of Saint Catharine, LUDUS CATHARINÆ, exhibited at saint Albans abbey in 1160. Strype says, in 1556, "On Saint Katharines day, at six of the clock at night, S. Katharine went about the battlements of S. Paul's church accompanied with fine singing and great lights. This was saint Katharine's Procession." ECCL. MEM. iii. 309. ch. xxxix. Again, her procession, in 1553, is celebrated with five hundred great lights, round saint Paul's steeple, &c. Ibid. p. 51. ch. v. And p. 57. ch. v.

^o Among the church-processions reviewed by Queen Mary, that of S. Clement's church, in honour of this saint, was by far the most splendid of any in London. Their procession to Saint Paul's in 1557, "was made very pompous with fourscore banners and streamers, and the waits of the city playing, and threescore priests and clarkes in copes. And divers of the Inns of Court were there, who went next the priests," &c. Strype, ubi supr. iii. 337. ch. xlix.

^p In the SYNODUS CARNOTENSIS, under the year 1526, It is ordered, "In festo sancti Nicholai, Catharinæ, Innocentium, aut alio quovis die, prætextu recreationis, ne Scholastici, Clerici, Sacerdotesve, stultum aliquod aut ridiculum faciant in ecclesia. Denique ab ecclesia ejiciantur vestes fatuorum personas SCENICAS argentium." See Bochellus, Decret. ECCLES. GALL. lib. iv. TIT. vii. C. 43. 44. 46. p. 586. Yet these sports seem to have remained in France so late as 1585. For in the Synod of Aix, 1585, it is enjoined, "Cessent in die Sanctorum Innocentium ludibria omnia et pueriles ac theatrales, Jusus." Bochell. ibid. C. 45. p. 586. A Synod of Tholouse, an. 1590, removes plays, spectacles, and histrionum circulationes, from churches and their cemeteries. Bochell. ibid. lib. iv. TIT. 1. C. 98. p. 560.

specified in this edict, in a very mutilated fragment of a COMPUTUS, or annual Accompt-roll, of saint Swithin's cathedral Priory at Winchester, under the year 1441, a disbursement is made to the singing-boys of the monastery, who, together with the choristers of saint Elisabeth's collegiate chapel near that city, were dressed up like girls, and exhibited their sports before the abbess and nuns of saint Mary's abbey at Winchester, in the public refectory of that convent, on Innocent's day ⁹. "Pro Pueris Eleemosynariæ una cum Pueris Capellæ sanctæ Elizabethæ, ornatis more puellarum, et saltantibus, cantantibus, et ludentibus, coram domina Abbatisa et monialibus Abbathiæ beatæ Mariæ virginis, in aula ibidem in die sanctorum Innocentium ¹." And again, in a fragment of an Accompt of the Celerar of Hyde Abbey at Winchester, under the year 1490. "In larvis et aliis indumentis Puerorum visentium Dominum apud Wulsey, et Constabularium Castri Winton, in apparatu suo, necnon subintrantium omnia monasteria civitatis Winton, in festo sancti Nicholai ²." ⁹ In the Register of Wodeloke bishop of Winchester, the following is an article among the INJUNCTIONS given to the nuns of the convent of Rumsey in Hampshire, in consequence of an episcopal visitation, under the year 1310. "Item prohibemus, ne cubent in dormitorio pueri masculi cum monialibus, vel foemellæ, nec per moniales ducantur in Chorum, dum ibidem divinum officium celebratur." fol. 134. In the same Register these Injunctions follow in a literal French translation, made for the convenience of the nuns.

¹ MS. in Archiv. Wulves. apud Winton. It appears to have been a practice for itinerant players to gain admittance into the nunneries, and to play Latin MYSTERIES before the nuns. There is a curious Canon of the COUNCIL of COLLOGNE, in 1349, which is to this effect.

"We have been informed that certain Actors of Comedies, not contented with the stage and theatres, have even entered the nunneries, in order to recreate the nuns, ubi virginibus commoveant voluptatem, with their profane, amorous, and secular gesticulations. Which spectacles, or plays, although they consisted of sacred and pious subjects, can yet notwithstanding leave little good, but on the contrary much harm, in the minds of the nuns, who behold and admire the outward gestures of the performers, and understand not the words. Therefore we decree, that henceforward no Plays, Comedias, shall be admitted into the convents of nuns," &c. Sur. CONCIL. tom. iv. p. 852. Binius, tom. iv, p. 765.

formed by children on these feasts; it was not only celebrated by boys, but there is an injunction given to the Benedictine nunnery of Godstowe in Oxfordshire, by archbishop Peckham, in the year 1278, that on Innocent's day, the public prayers should not any more be said in the church of that monastery PER PARVULAS, that is, by little girls †.

The ground-work of this religious mockery of the boy-bishop, which is evidently founded on modes of barbarous life, may perhaps be traced backward at least as far as the year 867 †. At the Constantinopolitan synod under that year, at which were present three hundred and seventy-three bishops, it was found to be a solemn custom in the courts of princes, on certain stated days, to dress some layman in the episcopal apparel, who should exactly personate a bishop both in his tonsure and ornaments: as also to create a burlesque patriarch, who might make sport for the company †. This scandal to the clergy was anathematised. But ecclesiastical synods and censures have often proved too weak to suppress popular spectacles, which take deep root in the public manners, and are only concealed for a while, to spring up afresh with new vigour.

After the form of a legitimate stage had appeared in England, MYSTERIES and MIRACLES were also revived by queen Mary, as an appendage of the papistic worship.

In the year 1556, a goodly stage-play of the PASSION OF CHRIST was presented at the Grey friers in London, on Corpus-Christi day, before the lord mayor, the privy-council, and many great estates of the realm^y. Strype also mentions, under the year 1557, a stage-play at the Grey-friers, of the Passion of Christ, on the day that war was proclaimed in London against France, and in honour of that occasion^z. On saint Olave's day in the same year, the holiday of the church in Silver-street which is dedicated to that saint, was kept with much solemnity. At eight of the clock at night, began a stage-play, of goodly matter, being the miraculous history of the life of that saint^a, which continued four hours, and was concluded with many religious songs^b.

Many curious circumstances of the nature of these miracle-plays, appear in a roll of the church-wardens of Bassingborne in Cambridgeshire, which is an accompt of the expences and receptions for acting the play of SAINT GEORGE at Bassingborne, on the feast of saint Margaret in the year 1511. They collected upwards of four pounds in twenty-seven neighbouring parishes for furnishing the play. They disbursed about two pounds in the representation. Scenical decorations and machinery* which employed the genius and invention of Inigo Jones, in the reigns of the first James and Charles, seem to have migrated from the masques at court to the public theatre. In the instrument here cited, the priest who wrote the play, and received only two shillings and eight pence for his labour, seems to have been worse paid in proportion than any of the other persons concerned. tion of religious interludes, which abounded in Germany. They are in Latin, and not taken from Legends but the Bible.

The puritans were highly offended at these religious plays now revived^c. But they were hardly less averse to the theatrical representation of the christian than of the gentile story. Yet for different reasons. To hate a theatre was a part of their creed, and therefore plays were an improper vehicle of religion. The heathen fables they judged to be dangerous, as too nearly resembling the superstitions of popery*.

^c A very late scripture-play is "A newe merry and witte comedie or enterlude, newlie imprinted treating the history of JACOB AND ESAU," &c. for H. Bynneman, 1568. 4to. Bl. lett. But this play had appeared in queen Mary's reign, "An enterlude vpon the history of Jacobe and Esawe," &c. Licenced to Henry Sutton, in 1557. REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 23. a. It is certain, however, that the fashion of religious interludes was not entirely discontinued in the reign of queen Elisabeth. For, I find licenced to T. Hackett in 1561, "A newe enterlude of the ij synnes of kyng Dauyde." Ibid. fol. 75. a. And to Pickeringe in 1560-1, the play of queen Esther. Ibid. fol. 62. b. Again, there is licenced to T. Colwell, in 1565, "A playe of the story of kyng Darius from Esdras." Ibid. fol. 133. b. Also "A pleasaunte recytail worthy of the readinge contaynyng the effecte of iij worthye squyres of Daryus the kinge of Persia," licenced to Griffiths in 1565. Ibid. fol. 132. b. Often reprinted. And in 1566, John Charlewood is licenced to print "An enterlude of the repentance of Mary Magdalen." Ibid. fol. 152. a. Of this piece I have cited an antient manuscript. Also, not to multiply instances, Colwell in 1568 is licenced to print "The playe of Susanna." Ibid. fol. 176. a. Ballads on Scripture subjects are now innumerable. Peele's DAVID AND BATHISHEBA is a remain of the fashion of scripture-plays. I have mentioned the play of HOLOFERNES acted at Hatfield in 1556. LIFE OF SIR THOMAS POPE, p. 87. In 1556, was printed "A ballet intituled the historye of Judith and Holyfernes." REGISTR. ut sup. fol. 154. b. And Registr. B. fol. 227. In Hearne's Manuscript COLLECTANEA, there is a licence dated 1571, from the queen, directed to the officers of Middlesex, permitting one John Swinton Powlter, "to have and use some playes and games at or vpon nine severall sondaies," within the said county. And because greate resorte of people is lyke to come thercunto, he is required, for the preservation of the peace, and for the sake of good order, to take with him four or five discreet and substantial men of those places where the games shall be put in practice, to superintend duringe the contynuance of the games or playes. Some of the exhibitions are then specified, such as Shotinge with the brode arrowe, The lepping for men, The pitchynge of the barre, and the like. But then follows this very general clause, "With all suche other games, as haue at anye time heretofore or now be lycensed, used, or played." COLL. MSS. Hearne, tom. lxi. p. 78. One wishes to know, whether any interludes, and whether religious or profane, were included in this instrument.

SECTION LV.

IT appears, however, that the cultivation of an English style began to be now regarded. At the general restoration of knowledge and taste, it was a great impediment to the progress of our language, that all the learned and ingenious, aiming at the character of erudition, wrote in Latin. English books were written only by the superficial and illiterate, at a time when judgment and genius should have been exerted in the nice and critical task of polishing a rude speech. Long after the invention of typography, our vernacular style, instead of being strengthened and refined by numerous compositions, was only corrupted with new barbarisms and affectations, for want of able and judicious writers in English. Unless we except sir Thomas More, whose DIALOGUE ON TRIBULATION, and HISTORY OF RICHARD THE THIRD, were esteemed standards of style so low as the reign of James the First, Roger Ascham was perhaps the first of our scholars who ventured to break the shackles of Latinity, by publishing his Toxophilus in English; chiefly with a view of giving a pure and correct model of English composition, or rather of shewing how a subject might be treated with grace and propriety in English as well as in Latin. His own vindication of his conduct in attempting this great innovation is too sensible to be omitted, and reflects light on the revolutions of our poetry. "As for the Lattine or Greecke tongue, euerye thinge is so excellentlye done in Them, that none can do better. In the Englishe tongue contrary, euery thing in a maner so meanlye, both for the matter and handlinge, that no man can do worse. For therein the learned for the most part haue bene alwayes most redye to write. And they which had least hope in Lattine haue bene most bould in

Englishe: when surely euerye man that is most ready to talke, is not most able to write. He that will write well in any tongue, must folow this counsell of Aristotle; to speake as the common people do, to thinke as wise men do. And so shoulde euerye man vnderstand him, and the iudgement of wise men allowe him. Manye Englishe writers haue not done so; but vsinge straunge wordes, as Lattine, French, and Italian, do make all thinges darke and harde. Ones I communed with a man, which reasoned the Englishe tongue to be enriched and encreased thereby, sayinge, Who will not prayse that feast where a man shall drinke at a dinner both wyne, ale, and beere? Truly, quoth I, they be al good, euery one taken by himselfe alone; but if you put Malmesye and sacke, redde wyne and white, ale and beere, and al in one pot, you shall make a drinke neither easye to be knowen, nor yet holsome for the bodye. Cicero in folowing Isocrates, Plato, and Demosthenes, encreased the Lattine tongue after another sort. This way, because diuers men that write do not know, they can neyther folow it because of their ignorance, nor yet will prayse it for uery arrogancy: two faultes seldome the one out of the others companye. Englishe writers by diuersitie of tyme haue taken diuers matters in hand. In our fathers time nothing was red, but bookes of fayned cheualrie, wherein a man by readinge should be led to none other ende but only to manslaughter and baudrye. If anye man suppose they were good enough to passe the time withall, he is deceiued. For surely vaine wordes do worke no smal thinge in vaine, ignorant, and yong mindes, specially if they be geuen any thing thervnto of their owne nature. These bookes, as I haue heard say, were made the most part in abbayes and monasteries, a very likely and fit fruite of such an ydle and blind kind of living^a. In our time

^a Ho says in his SCHOOLEMASTER, written soon after the year 1563, "There be more of these vngracious bookes set out in print within these few monethes, than haue bene scene in England many score years before." B. i. fol. 26. a. edit. 1589. 4to. [These ungracious books could not be recent productions of monasteries, says Dr. Ashby, and quere as to the fact?—PARK.]

now, when euery man is geuen to know much rather than liue wel, very many do write, but after such a fashion as very many do shoote. Some shooters take in hande stronger bowes than they be able to maintaine. This thinge maketh them sometime to ouershoot the marke, sometime to shoot far wyde and perchance hurt some that loke on. Other, that neuer learned to shoote, nor yet knoweth good shaft nor bowe, will be as busie as the best^b.”

Ascham's example was followed by other learned men. But the chief was Thomas Wilson, who published a system of LOGIC and RHETORIC both in English. Of his LOGIC I have already spoken. I have at present only to speak of the latter, which is not only written in English, but with a view of giving rules for composing in the English language. It appeared in 1553, the first year of queen Mary, and is entitled, *THE ARTE OF RHETORIKE for the vse of all suche as are studious of Eloquence, sette forth in Englishe by THOMAS WILSON^c. Leonard Cox, a schoolmaster, patronised by Farringdon the last abbot of Reading, had published in 1530, as I have observed, an English tract on rhetoric, which is nothing more than a technical and elementary manual. Wilson's treatise is more liberal, and discursive; illustrating the arts of eloquence by example, and examining and ascertaining the beauties of composition with the speculative skill and sagacity of a critic. It may therefore be justly considered as the first book or system of criticism in our language. A few extracts from so curious a performance need no apology; which will also serve to throw light on the present period, and indeed on our general subject, by displaying the state of critical knowledge, and the ideas of writing, which now prevailed.

* [Puttenham tells us that "Master secretary Wilson, giving an English name to his Arte of Logicke, called it Witcraft." Qu. whether this term was not the conceit of Raphe Leve who in 1573 published "The Arte of Reason, rightly termed Witcraft, teaching a perfect way to argue and dispute." This quaint author was fond of new devised terms, whence he uses Speachcraft for rhetoric, and forespeach for preface. ^c Lond. 1553. 4to. Dedicated to John Dudley, earl of Warwick. In the Dedication he says, that he wrote great part of this treatise during the last summer vacation in the country, at the house of sir Edward Dimmoke. And that it originated from a late conversation with his lordship, "emonge other talke of learnyng." It was reprinted by Jhon Kingston in 1560. Lond. 4to. With "A Prologue to the Reader," dated Dec. 7. 1560. Again, 1567, 1580, and 1585. 4to. In the PROLOGUE, he mentions his escape at Rome, which I have above related: and adds, "If others neuer gette more by bookes than I have doen, it wer better be a carter than a scholar, for worldlie profite."

I must premise, that Wilson, one of the most accomplished scholars of his time, was originally a fellow of King's College^d, where he was tutor to the two celebrated youths Henry and Charles Brandon dukes of Suffolk. Being a doctor of laws, he was afterwards one of the ordinary masters of requests, master of saint Katharine's hospital near the Tower, a frequent ambassador from queen Elisabeth to Mary queen of Scots, and into the Low-countries*, a secretary of state and a privy counsellor, and at length, in 1579, dean of Durham. He died in 1581. His remarkable diligence and dispatch in negotiation is said to have resulted from an uncommon strength of memory. It is another proof of his attention to the advancement of our English style, that he translated seven orations of Demosthenes, which, in 1570, he dedicated to sir William Cecil^e.

Under that chapter of his third book of RHETORIC which treats of the four parts belonging to elocution, Plainnesse, Aptnesse, Composition, Exornacion, Wilson has these observa-

^f Puttenham, in THE ARTE OF ENGLISH POESIE, where he treats of style and language, brings some illustrations from the practice of oratory in the reign of queen Mary, in whose court he lived: and although his book is dated 1589, it was manifestly written much earlier. He refers to sir Nicholas Bacon, who began to be high in the departments of the law in queen Mary's time, and died in 1579. Having told a story from his own knowledge in the year 1553, of a ridiculous oration made in parliament by a new speaker of the house, who came from Yorkshire, and had more knowledge in the affairs of his country, and of the law, than gracefulness or delicacy of language, he proceeds, "And though graue and wise counsellours in their consultations do not vse much superfluous eloquence, and also in their iudiciall hearings do much mislike all scholasticall rhetoricks: yet in such a case as it may be (and as this parliament was) if the lord chancelour of England or archbishop of Canterbury himselfe were to speke, he ought to do it cunningly and eloquently, which cannot be without the vse of figures: and neuertheless, none impeachment or blemish to the grauitie of their persons or of the cause: wherein I report me to them that knew sir Nicholas Bacon lord Keeper of the great seale, or the now lord treasurer of England, and haue bene conuersant with their speeches made in the parliament house and starre chamber. From whose lippes I haue seene to proceede more graue and naturall eloquence, than from all the oratours of Oxford and Cambridge.—I have come to the lord Keeper sir Nicholas Bacon, and found him sitting in his gallery alone, with the workes of Quintilian before him. In deede he was a most eloquent man and of rare learning and wisdom as euer I knew England to breed, and one that ioyed as much in learned men and men of good witts." Lib. iii. ch. ii. pag. 116. seq. What follows soon afterwards is equally apposite: "This part in our maker or poet must be heedily looked vnto, that it [his language] be naturall, pure, and the most vsuall of all his countray: and for the same purpose, rather that which is spoken in the kinges court, or in the good townes and ciities within the land, than in the marches and frontiers, or in port townes where straungers haunt for traffike sake, or yet in vniuersities where schollars vse much peevisch affectation of words out of the primitiue languages; or finally, in any vplandish village or corner of the realme, &c. But he shall follow generally the better brought vp sort, such as the Greekes call charicetes, men ciuill and graciously behaoured and bred. Our maker therefore at these dayes shall not follow PIERS PLOWMAN, nor Gower, nor Lydgate, nor yet Chaucer, for their language is now out of vse with vs: neither shall he take the termes of northerne men, suche as they vse in daily talke, whether they be noblemen or gentlemen, or of their best clarkes, all is a matter, &c. Ye shall therefore take the vsuall speach of the court, and that of London, and the shires lying about London within lx myles, and not much about. I say not this, but that in euery shyre of England there be gentlemen and others that speke, but specially write, as good Southerne as we of Middlesex or Surrey do, but not the common people of euery shire, to whom the gentlemen, and also their learned clarkes, do for the most part condescend: but herein we are already here svche a letter as William Sommer^s himself, could not make a better for that purpose,—devised by a Lincolneshire man for a voide benefice^h.” This point he illustrates with other familiar and pleasant instancesⁱ.

In enforcing the application and explaining the nature of fables, for the purpose of amplification, he gives a general idea of the Iliad and Odyssey. “The saying of poetes, and al their fables, are not to be forgotten. For by them we maie talke at large, and win men by perswasion, if we declare before hand; that these tales wer not fained of suche wisemen without cause, neither yet continued vntill this time, and kept in memorie without good consideracion, and therevpon declare the true meanyng of all svché writyng. For vndoubtedly, there is no one Tale among all the poetes, but vnder the same is comprehended somethyng that perteyneth either to the amendement of maners, to the knowledge of truth, to the setting forth of natures worke, or els to the vnderstanding of some notable thing doen. For what other is the painful trauaile of Vlisses, ruled by the English Dictionaries, and other bookes written by learned men. Albeit peradventure some small admonition be not impertinent; for we finde in our English writers many wordes and speeches amendable, and ye shall see in some many ink-horne termes so ill affected brought in by men of learning, as preachers and schoolemasters, and many straunge termes of other languages by secretaries and marchants and trauellours, and many darke wordes and not vsuall nor well sounding, though they be daily spoken at court.” Ibid. Ch. iii. fol. 120, 121.

^h King Henry’s Jester. In another place he gives us one of Sommer’s jests. “William Sommer seying muche adoe for accomptes making, and that Henry the Eight wanted money, such as was due to him, And please your grace, quoth he, you haue so many Frauditors, so many Conucighers, and so many Deceiuers, to get vp your money, that they get all to themselues.” That is, Auditors, Surveyors, and Receivers. fol. 102. b. I have seen an old narrative of a progress of king Henry the Eight and queen Katharine, to Newbery in Berkshire, where Sommer, who had accompanied their majesties as court-buffoon, fell into disgrace with the people for his impertinence, was detained, and obliged to submit to many ridiculous indignities: but extricated himself from all his difficulties by comic expedients and the readiness of his wit. On returning to court, he gave their majesties, who were inconsolable for his long absence, a minute account of these low adventures, with which they were infinitely entertained. What shall we think of the manners of such a court?

described so largely by Homere, but a liuely picture of mans miserie in this life? And as Plutarche saith, and likewise Basilius Magnus, in the ILIADES are described strength and valiantnesse of bodie: in ODISSEA, is set forth a liuely paterne of the mynde. The Poetes were Wisemen, and wisshed in harte the redresse of thinges, the which when for feare thei durst not openly rebuke, they did in colours paint them out, and tolde men by shadowes what thei shold do in good sothe: or els, because the wicked were vnworthy to heare the trueth, thei spake so that none might vnderstande but those vnto whom thei please to vtter their meanyng, and knewe them to be men of honest conuersacionⁱ”

Wilson thus recommends the force of circumstantial description, or, what he calls, An euident or plaine setting forth of a thing as though it were presently doen. “An example. If our enemies shal inuade and by treason win the victory, we al shal die euery mothers sonne of vs, and our citee shal be destroyed, sticke and stone: I se our children made slaues, our daughters rauished, our wiues carried away, the father forced to kill his owne sonne, the mother her daughter, the sonne his father, the sucking childe slain in his mothers bosom, one standyng to the knees in anothers blood, churches spoiled, houses plucte down, and al set on fire round about vs, euery one cursing the daie of their birth, children cryng, women wailing, &c. Thus, where I might haue said, We shal al be destroyed, and say no more, I haue by description set the euill forth at large^k.” It must be owned that this picture of a sacked city is literally translated from Quintilian. But it is a proof, that we were now beginning to make the beauties of the antients our own.

On the necessity of a due preservation of character he has the following precepts, which seem to be directed to the writers of Historical Plays. “In describyng of persons, there ought alwaies a comelnesse to be vsed, so that nothing be spoken which may be thought is not in them. As if one shold describe Henry the Sixth, he might call hym jentle, milde of nature, ledde by perswacion, and ready to forgiue, carelesse for wealth, suspecting none, mercifull to al, fearful in aduersitie, and without forecast to espie his misfortvne. Againe, for Richarde the Thirde, I might brynge him in cruell of harte, ambicious by nature, enuious of minde, a deepe dissembler, a close man for weightie matters, hardie to reuenge and fearefull to lose hys high estate, trustie to none, liberall for a purpose, castyng still the worste, and hoping euer the best¹. By this figure^m also, we imagine a talke for some one to speake, and accordyng to his persone we frame the oration. As if one shoulde bryng in noble Henry the Eight of moste famous memory, to enuegh against rebelles, thus he might ordeꝛ his oration. What if Henry the Eight were aliue, and sawe suche rebellion in the realme, would he not saie thus and thus? Yea methinkes I heare hym speake euen now. And so sette forthe suche wordes as we would haue hym to sayⁿ." Shakespeare himself has not delineated the characters of these English monarchs with more truth. And the first writers of the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES, who imagine a talke for some one to speake, and according to his person frame the oration, appear to have availed themselves of these directions, if not to have caught the notion of their whole plan from this remarkable passage.

He next shews the advantages of personification in enlivening a composition. "Some times it is good to make God, the Countray, or some one Towne, to speake; and looke what we would saie in our owne persone, to frame the whole tale to them. Such varietie doeth much good to auoide tediousnesse. For he that speaketh all in one sorte, though he speake thinges neuer so wittilie, shall sone weary his hearers. Figures therefore were inuented, to auoide satietie, and cause delite: to re^p Yet he has here also a reference to the utility of tales both at the Bar and in the Pulpit. For in another place, professedly both speaking of Pleadings and Sermons, he says, "If tyme maie so serue, it were good when menne be wearied, to make them somewhat merie, and to begin with some pleasaunte tale, or take occasion to ieste wittellie," &c. fol. 55. b. Again, "Men commonlie tarie the ende of a merie Plaie, and cannot abide the half hearyng of a sower checkyng Sermon. Therefore euen these aunciente preachers muste nowe and then plaie the foolles in the pulpito to serue the tickle eares of their hearyng audience," &c. fol. 2. a. I know not if he means Latimer here, whom he commends, "There is no better preacher among them al except Hugh Latimer the father of al preachers." fol. 63. a. And again, "I would thinke it not amisse to speake muche accordyng to the nature and phansie of the ignorant, that the rather they might be wonne through fables to learne more weightie and graue matters. For al men cannot brooke sage causes and auncient collations, but will like earnest matters the rather, if something be spoken there among agreeing to their natures. The multitude, as Horace doth saie, is a beast or rather a monster that hath many heddes, and therefore, like vnto the diuersitie of natvres, varietie of inuention must alwaies be vsed. Talke altogether of moste graue matters, or deppely searche out the ground of thynges, or vse the quiddities of Duncie [Duns Scotus] to set forth Gods misteries, you shal se the ignorant, I warrant you, either fall aslepe, or els bid you farewell. The multitude must nedes be made merry; and the more foolish your talke is, the more wise will they counte it to be. And yet it is no foolishnes but rather wisdom to win men, by telling of fables to heare Gods goodnes." fol. 101. a. See also fol. 52. a. 69. a. Much to the same purpose he says, "Euen in this our tyme, some offende muche in tediousnesse, whose parte it were to comfort all men with cherefulness. Yea, the preachers of God mind so muche edifyng of soules, that they often forgette we have any bodies. And therefore, some doe not so muche good with tellyng the truthe, as they doe harme with dullyng the hearers; beyng so farre gone in their matters, that oftentimes they cannot tell when to make an ende." fol. 70. a. Yet still he allows much praise to the preachers in general of his age. "Yea, what tell I nowe of suche lessons, seeyng God hath raised suche worthy preachers in this our tyme, that their godlie and learned doynge maie be a most iuste example for all other to followe." fol. 55. b. By the way, although a zealous gospeller, in another place he obliquely censures the rapacity with which the reformation was conducted under Edward the Sixth. [See supr. vol. iii. p. 275.] "I had rather, said one, make my child a cobler than a preacher, a tankard-bearer than a scholar. For what shall my sonne seke for learnyng, when he shall neuer get thereby any livyng? Set my sonne to that whereby he maie get somewhat. Doe you not see, how euery one catcheth and pulleth from the church what they can? I feare me, one daie they will plucke downe church and all. And whatsoeuer he is, that can aptlie tell his tale, and with countenaunce, voice, and gesture, so tēper his reporte; that the hearers may still takē delite, hym coompte I a man worthie to be highlie esteemed. For vndoubtedly no man can doe any such thing excepte that thei haue a greate mother witte, and by experience confirmed suche their comelinesse, whervnto by nature thei were most apte. He thus describes the literary and ornamental qualifications of a young nobleman which were then in fashion, and which he exemplifies in the characters of his lamented pupils*, Henry duke of Suffolk and lord Charles Brandon his brother†. “I maie commende hym for his learnyng, for his skill in the French or in the Italian, for his knowlege in cosmographie, for his skill in the lawes, in the histories of al countrees, and for his gift of enditing. Againe, I maie commende him for playing at weapons, for running vpon a great horse, for charyng his staffe at the tilt, for vaulting, for plaiyng upon instrumentes, yea and for painting, or drawing of a plat, as in olde time noble princes muche delited therin.” And again, “Suche a man is an excellent fellowe, saithe one, he can speake the tongues well, he plaies of instrumentes, fewe men better, he feigneth to the lyte marveilous sweetlie^w, he endites excellentlie: but for al this, the more is the pitee, he hath his faultes, he will be dronke once a daie, he loues women well,” &c.^x

The following passage acquaints us, among other things, that many now studied, and with the highest applause, to write elegantly in English as well as in Latin. “When we haue learned vsuall and accvstomable wordes to set forthe our meanyege, we ought to ioyne them together in apte order, that the eare maie delite in hearyng the harmonie. ^y This work is enlivened with a variety of little illustrative stories, not ill told, of which the following is a specimen. "An Italian havynge a sute here in Englande to the archbushoppe of Yorke that then was, and comynge to Yorke toun, when one of the Prebendaries there brake his bread, as they terme it, and therevpon made a solemne longe diner, the whiche perhaps began at eleuen and continued well nigh till fower in the afternoone, at the whiche dinner this bishoppe was: It fortvned that as they were sette, the Italian knockt at the gate, vnto whom the porter, perceiuing his errand, answered, that my lorde bisshoppe was at diner. The Italian departed, and returned betwixte twelve and one; the porter answered they were yet at dinner. He came againe at twoo of the clocke; the porter tolde hym they had not half dined. He came at three a clocke, vnto whom the porter in a heate answered neuer a worde, but churlishlie did shutte the gates vpon him. Wherevpon, others told the Italian, that ther was no speaking with my Lord, almoste all that daie, for the solemne diner sake. The gentelman Italian, wonderynge muche at suche a long sitting, and greatly greued because he could not then speake with the archbysshoppes grace, departed straight towards London; and leauynge the dispatche of his matters with a dere frende of his, toke his journey towards Italie. Three yeres after, it hapened that an Englishman came to Roime, with whom this Italian by chaunce fallynge acquainted, asked him if he knewe the archbisshoppe of Yorke? The Englishman said, he knewe hym right well. I praie you tell me, quoth the Italian, hath that archbishop yet dined?" The Italian explaining himself, they both laughed heartily. fol. 78. b. 79. a.

He commendes Dr. Haddon's latinity, which is not always of the purest cast. "There is no better Latine man within England, except Gualter Haddon the lawier." fol. 63. a. Again, he commendes a^r prosopoiea of the duchess of Suffolk, in Haddon's Oratio de vita et obitu fratrum Suffolciensium Henrici et Caroli Brandon. [edit. Hatcher, Lond. 1577. 4to. p. 89. viz. LUCUBRATIONES G. Haddon.] fol. 94. a.

He condemns, in an example, the growing practice of mothers who do not suckle their own children, which he endeavours to prove to be both against the law of nature and the will of God. fol. 56. a. Here is an early proof of a custom, which may seem to have originated in a more luxurious and delicate age.

To these miscellancous extracts I shall only add, that our author, who was always esteemed a sincere advocate for protestantism, and never suspected of leaning to popery, speaking of an artificial memory, has this theory concerning the use of images in churches. "When I see a lion, the image thereof abideth faster in my minde, than if I should heare some reporte made of a lion. Emong all the senses, the iye [eye] sight is most quicke, and containeth the impression of thinges more assuredlie than any of the other senses doe. And the rather, when a manne both heareth and seeth a thing, (as by artificiall memorie he doeth almost see thinges liuely,) he doeth remember it muche the better. The sight printeth thinges in a mans memorie as a seale doeth printe a mans name in waxe: And therefore, heretofore Images were sette vp for remembrance of saintes, to be LAIE-MENNES BOOKES, that the rather by seying [seeing] the pictures of suche men, they might be stirred to followe their good living.—Marry, for this purpose whereof we now write, this would haue serued gailie well." fol. 111. a.

Some, not best disposed, wished the Preacher a Lute, that with his rimed sermon he might vse some pleasaunte melodie, and so the people might take pleasure diuers waies, and daunce if thei liste.” Some writers, he observes, disturbed the natural arrangement of their words: others were copious when they should be concise. The most frequent fault seems to have been, the rejection of common and proper phrases, for those that were more curious, refined, and unintelligible^a.

^z Preaching and controversial tracts occasioned much writing in English after the reformation.

This translator Wilson I presume is the person mentioned by Meres as a poet, “Who for learning and extemporall witte in this facultie is without compare or compeere, as to his great and eternall commendations he manifested in his challenge at the Swanne on the Bank side.” WITS TREAS. edit. 1598. 12mo. 11 supr. fol. 285. p. 2. The English RHETORIC of Richard Sherry, school-master of Magdalene college at Oxford, published in 1555^b, is a jejune and a very different performance from Wilson's, and seems intended only as a manual for school-boys. It is entitled, "A treatise of the figures of grammar and rhetorike, profitable to all that be studious of eloquence, and in especiall for such as in grammar scholes doe reade moste eloquente poetes and orators. Wherevnto is ioyned the Oration which Cicero made to Cesar, geuing thanks vnto him for pardonyng and restoring again of that noble man Marcus Marcellus. William Fullwood, in his Enemie of idleness, teaching the manner and style howe to endyte and write all sorts of epistles and letters, set forth in English by William Fullwood merchant, published in 1571^d, written partly in prose and partly in verse, has left this notice. "Whoso will more circumspectly and narrowly entreat of such matters, let them read the rhetorike of maister doctour Wilson, or of maister Richard Rainolde^e." I have never seen Richard

Wilson as an eminent dramatic writer, perhaps the same: Ibid. fol. 282. There is, by one Thomas Wilson, an EXPOSITION ON THE PSALMS, Lond. 1591. 4to. And an EXPOSITION ON THE PROVERBS, Lond. 1589. 4to. Among the twelve players sworn the queen's servants in 1583, were "two rare men, viz. He wrote also a Latin tract dedicated to the duke of Norfolk, on the condition of princes and noblemen^g: and there is an old CRONICLE in quarto by one Richard Reynolds^h. I trust it will be deemed a pardonable anticipation, if I add here, for the sake of connection, that Richard Mulcaster, who from King's college in Cambridge was removed to a Studentship of Christ-church in Oxford about the year 1555, and soon afterwards, on account of his distinguished accomplishments in philology, was appointed the first master of Merchant-Taylors' school in Londonⁱ, published a book which contains many judicious criticisms and observations on the English language, entitled, "The first part of the ELEMENTARIE, which entreateth chefully of the right

Saint John's college had been then established about seven years, which Mulcaster soon filled with excellent scholars till the year 1586. In the Latin plays acted before queen Elisabeth and James the First at Oxford, the students of this college were distinguished. This was in consequence of their being educated under Mulcaster. He was afterwards, in 1596, master of saint Paul's school. He was a prebendary of Salisbury, and at length was rewarded by the queen with the opulent rectory of Stanford-Rivers in Essex, where he died in 1611. This little piece is also called, "W. Bullokar's abbreviation of his Grammar for English extracted out of his Grammar at larg for the speedie parcing of English spech, and the eazier coming to the knowledge of grammar for other langages^m." It is in the black letter, but with many novelties in the type, and affectations of spelling. In the preface, which is in verse, and contains an account of his life, he promises a dictionary of the English language, which, he adds, will make his third workⁿ. His first work I apprehend to be "A Treatise of Orthographie in Englishe by William Bullokar," licenced to Henry Denham in 1580^o. Among Tanner's books is a copy of his bref grammar above mentioned, interpolated and corrected with the author's own hand, as it appears, for a new impression. In one of these manuscript insertions, he calls this, "the first grammar for Englishe that euer waz, except my grammar at large^p."

The French have vernacular critical and rhetorical systems at a much higher period. I believe one of their earliest is "Le JARDIN de plaisance et FLEUR de rhetorique, contenant plusieurs beaux livres." It is in quarto, in the gothic type with wooden cuts, printed at Lyons by Olivier Arnoullett for Martin Boullon, and without date. But it was probably printed early in 1500^a. In one of its poems, LA PIPEE ou chasse de dieu d'amour is cited the year 1491^r. Another edition, in the same letter, but in octavo, appeared at Paris in 1547, Veuve de Jehan Tréperel et Jehan Jehannot. Beside the system of Rhetoric, which is only introductory, and has the separate title of L'ART DE RHETORIQUE, de ses couleurs, figures et especes^s, it comprehends a miscellaneous collection of Balades, rondeaux, chansons, dicties, comedies, and other entertaining little pieces^t, chiefly on the subject of the sentimental and ceremonious love which then prevailed*. The whole, I am speaking of the oldest edition, contains one hundred and ninety leaves. The RHETORIC is written in the short French rhyme: and the tenth chapter consists of rules for composing Moralities, Farces, Mysteries, and other ROMANS. That chapter is thus introduced, under the Latin rubric PROSECUTIO.

^x See Verdier ii. §49. From an ingenious correspondent, who has not given me the honour of his name, and who appears to be well acquainted with the manners and literature of Spain, I have received the following notices relating to this institution, of which other particulars may be seen in the old French History of Languedoc. "At the end of the second volume of Mayan's ORIGINES DE LA LINGUA ESPANOLA, printed in duodecimo at Madrid in 1737, is an extract from a manuscript entitled, Libro de la Arte de Trovar, ò Gaya Sciencia, por Don Enrique de Villena, said to exist in the library of the cathedral of Toledo, and perhaps to be found in other libraries of Spain. It has these particulars.—The TROVADORES had their origin at Tholouse, about the middle of the twelfth century. A CON-SISTORIO de la Gaya Sciencia was there founded by Ramon Vidal de Besalin, containing more than one hundred and twenty celebrated poets, and among these, princes, kings, and emperors. Their art was extended throughout Europe, and gave rise to the Italian and Spanish poetry, servio el Garouu de Hippocrène. To Ramon Vidal de Besalin succeeded Jofre de Foxa, Monge negro, who enlarged the plan, and wrote what he called Continuacion de trovar. After him Belenguer de Troya came from Majorca, and compiled a treatise de Figuras y Colores Rhetoricos. And next Gul. Verdal of Majorca wrote La Suma Vitulina. To support the GAYA SCIENCIA at the poetical college of Tholouse, the king of France appropriated privileges and revenues: appointing seven Mantenedores, que liciesen Leyes. These constituted the LAWS OF LOVE, which were afterwards abridged by Guill. Moluier under the title Tratado de las Flores. Next Fray Ramon framed a system called Doctrinal, which was censured by Castilnon. From thence nothing was written in Spanish on the subject, till the time of Don Enrique de Villena.—So great was the credit of the GAY SCIENCE, that Don Juan the first king of Arragon, who died 1393, sent an embassy to the king of France requesting that some Troubadours might be transmitted to teach this art in his kingdom. Accordingly two Mantenedores were dispatched from Tholouse, who founded a college for poetry in Barcelona, consisting of four Mantenedores, a Cavalier, a Master in Theology, a Master in Law, and an honourable Citizen. Disputes about Don Juan's successor occasioned the removal of the college to Tortosa. But Don Ferdinand being elected King, Don Enrique de Villena was taken into his service: who restored the college, and was chosen principal. The subjects he proposed, were sometimes, the Praises of the Holy Virgin, of Arms, of Love, y de buenas Costumbres. An Art de plein Rhetorique" in two books, written by Pierre Fabri, properly Le Fevre, an ecclesiastic of Rouen, for teaching elegance in prose as well as rhyme, is dated still higher. Goujet mentions a Gothic edition of this tract in 1521^y. It contains remarks on the versification of mysteries and farces, and throws many lights on the old French writers.

But the French had even an ART OF POETRY so early as the year 1548. In that year Thomas Sibilet published his Art poetique at Paris, Veuve François Regnault^z. This piece preserves many valuable anecdotes of the old French poetry: and, among other particulars which develop the state of the old French drama, has the following sensible strictures. "The French farce contains little or nothing of the Latin comedy.

account of the ceremonies of their public Acts then follows, in which every composition was recited; being written en papeles Damasquinos dediversos colores, con letras de oro y de plata, et illuminaduras formosas, lo major qua cada una podio. The best performance had a crown of gold placed upon it: and the author, being presented with a coron, or prize, received a licence to cantar y decir in publico. He was afterwards conducted home in form, escorted among others by two Mantenedores, and preceded by minstrels and trumpets, where he gave an entertainment of confects and wine."— [See supr. vol. i. p. 153. ii. 303.]

[Mr. Ashby thinks it probable that the anonymous correspondent was the Rev. Mr. John Bowles.—PARK.]

There seems to have been a similar establishment at Amsterdam, called Rhederiicker camer, or the CHAMBER OF RHETORICIANS, mentioned by Isaacus Pontanus. Who adds, "Sunt autem hi rhetores viri amœni et poetici spiritus, qui lingua vernacula, aut prosa aut versa oratione, comœdias, tragœdias, subinde que et mutas personas, et facta maiorum notantes, magna spectantium voluptate exhibent." RER. ET URB. AMST. Lib. ii. c. xvi. pag. 118. edit. 1611. fol. In the preceding chapter, he says, that this fraternity of rhetoricians erected a temporary theatre, at the solemn entry of prince Maurice into Amsterdam in 1594, where they exhibited in numa show the history of David and Goliath. Ibid. c. xv. p. 117.

Meteranus, in his Belgic history, speaks largely of the annual prizes, assemblies, and contests, of the guilds or colleges of the rhetoricians; in Holland and the Low Countries. They answered in rhyme, questions proposed by the dukes of Burgundy and Brabant. At Ghent in 1539, twenty of these colleges met with great pomp, to discuss an ethical question, and each gave a solution in a moral comedy, magnificently presented in the public theatre. In 1561, the rhetorical guild of Antwerp, called the VIOLET, challenged all the neighbouring cities to a decision of the same sort. On this occasion, three hundred and forty rhetoricians of Brussels appeared on horseback, richly but fantastically habited, accompanied with an infinite variety of pageantries, sports and shows. These had a garland, as a reward for the superior splendor of their entry. Many days were spent in determining the grand questions: during which, there were feastings, bonfires, farces, tumbling, and every popular diversion. BELG. HISTOR. UNIVERSAL. fol. 1597. ^z In 16mo.

It has neither acts nor scenes, which would only serve to introduce a tedious prolixity: for the true subject of the French farce, or SORTIE, is every sort of foolery which has a tendency to provoke laughter.—The subject of the Greek and Latin comedy was totally different from every thing on the French stage. For it had more morality than drollery, and often as much truth as fiction. Our MORALITIES hold a place indifferently between tragedy and comedy: but our farces are really what the Romans called mimes, or Priapées, the intended end and effect of which was excessive laughter, and on that account they admitted all kinds of licentiousness, as our farces do at present. In the meantime, their pleasantry does not derive much advantage from rhymes, however flowing, of eight syllables^a.” Sibilet’s work is chiefly founded on Horace. His definitions are clear and just, and his precepts well explained. The most curious part of it is the enumeration of the poets who in his time were of most repute. Jacques Pelletier du Mans, a physician, a mathematician, a poet, and a voluminous writer on various subjects both in prose and verse, also published an ART POÉTIQUE at Lyons, in 1555^b. This critic had sufficient penetration to perceive the false and corrupt taste of his cotemporaries. “Instead of the regular ode and sonnet, our language is sophisticated by ballads, rondeaux, lays, and triolets. But with these we must rest contented, till the farces which have so long infatuated our nation are converted into comedy, our martyr-plays into tragedy, and our romances into heroic poems^c.” And again, “We have no pieces in our language written in the genuine comic form, except some affected and unnatural MORALITIES, and other plays of the same character, which do not deserve the name of comedy. The drama would appear to advantage, did it but resume its proper state and antient dignity. We have, however, some tragedies in French learnedly translated, among which is the HECUBA of Euripides by Lazare de Baïf," &c.^d Of rhyme the same writer says, "S'il n'étoit question que de parler ornement, il ne faudroit sinon écrire en prose, ou s'il n'étoit question que de rimer, il ne faudroit, sinon rimer en farceur: mais en poesie, il faut faire tous les deux, et BIEN DIRE, et BIEN RIMER^e." His chapters on IMITATION and TRANSLATION have much more philosophy and reflection than are to be expected for his age, and contain observations which might edify modern critics^f. Nor must I forget, that Pelletier also published a French translation of Horace's ART OF POETRY at Paris in 1545^g. I presume, that Joachim du Bellay's Deffense et Illustration de la LANGUE FRANÇOISE was published at no great distance from the year 1550. He has the same just notion of the drama. "As to tragedies and comedies, if kings and states would restore them in their antient glory, which has been usurped by farces and MORALITIES, I am of opinion that you would lend your assistance; and if you wish to adorn our language, you know where to find models^h."

The Italian vernacular criticism began chiefly in commentaries and discourses on the language and phraseology of Dante, Petrarch, and Boccace. I believe one of the first of that kind is, "Le tre fontane di Nicolò Liburnio sopra la grammatica, e Peloquenza di Dante, del Petrarca, e del Boccaccio. In Venezia, per Gregorio Gregori, 1526ⁱ." Numerous expositions, lectures, annotations, and discourses of the same sort, especially on Dante's Inferno, and the Florentine dialect, appeared soon afterwards. Immediately after the publication of their respective poems, Ariosto, whose ORLANDO FURIOSO was styled the nuova poesia, and Tasso, were illustrated or expounded by commentators more intricate than their text. One of the earliest of these is, "Sposizione de Simon Fornari da Reggio sopra l'Orlando Furioso di Lodovico Ariosto. In Firenze per Lorenzo Torrentino 1549^k." Perhaps the first criticism on what the Italians call the Volgar Lingua is by Pietro Bembo, "Prose di Pietro Bembo della volgar Lingua divise in tre libri. In Firenze per Lorenzo Torrentino, 1549^l." But the first edition seems to have been in 1525. This subject was discussed in an endless succession of Regole grammaticali, Osservazioni, Avvertimenti, and Ragionamenti. Here might also be mentioned, the annotations, although they are altogether explanatory, which often accompanied the early translations of the Greek and Latin classics into Italian. But I resign this labyrinth of research to the superior opportunities and abilities of the French and Italian antiquaries in their native literature. To have said nothing on the subject might have been thought an omission, and to have said more, impertinent. I therefore return to our own poetical annals.

Our three great poets, Chaucer, Gower, and Lydgate, seem to have maintained their rank, and to have been in high reputation, during the period of which we are now treating. Splendid impressions of large works were at this time great undertakings. A sumptuous edition of Gower's CONFESSIO AMANTIS was published by Berthelette in 1554. On the same ample plan, in 1555, Robert Braham printed with great accuracy, and a diligent investigation of the ancient copies, the first correct edition of Lydgate's ТРОЙВОКЕ^m. I have before incidentally remarkedⁿ, that Nicholas Briggam, a polite scholar, a student at Oxford and at the Inns of Court, and a writer of poetry, in the year 1555, deposited the bones of Chaucer under a new tomb, erected at his own cost, and inscribed with a new epitaph, in the chapel of bishop Blase in Westminster abbey, which still remains^o. lines, which he says was composed by Stephanus Surigonus of Milan, at the request of William Caxton the printer: and which, Leland adds, was written on a white tablet by Surigonus, on a pillar near Chaucer's grave in the south ile at Westminster. *SCRIPT. tion from his RHETORIC, records an anecdote, that the more accomplished and elegant courtiers were perpetually quoting Chaucer. Yet this must be restricted to the courtiers of Edward the Sixth. And indeed there is a peculiar reason why Chaucer, exclusive of his real excellence, should have been the favorite of a court which laid the foundations of the reformation of religion. It was, that his poems abounded with satirical strokes against the corruptions of the church, and the dissolute manners of the monks. And undoubtedly Chaucer long before, a lively and popular writer, greatly assisted the doctrines of his cotemporary Wickliffe, in opening the eyes of the people to the absurdities of popery, and exposing its impostures in a vein of humour and pleasantry. Fox the martyrologist, a weak and a credulous compiler, perhaps goes too far in affirming, that Chaucer has undeniably proved the pope to be the anti-christ of the apocalypse^p.

Of the reign of queen Mary, we are accustomed to conceive every thing that is calamitous and disgusting. But when we turn our eyes from its political evils to the objects which its literary history presents, a fair and flourishing scene appears. In this prospect, the mind feels a repose from contemplating the fates of those venerable prelates, who suffered the most excruciating death for the purity and inflexibility of their faith; and whose unburied bodies, dissipated in ashes, and undistinguished in the common mass, have acquired a more glorious monument, than if they had been interred in magnificent shrines, which might have been visited by pilgrims, loaded with superstitious gifts, and venerated with the pomp of mistaken devotion.

Caxton's CHAUCER. Wood says, that Briggam "exercised his muse much in poetry, and took great delight in the works of Jeffrey Chaucer: for whose memory he had so great a respect, that he removed his bones into the south cross-ile or transept of S. Peter's church," &c. ATH. OXON. i. 130. I do not apprehend there was any removal, in this case, from one part of the abbey to another. Chaucer's tomb has appropriated this aisle, or transept, to the sepulture or to the honorary monuments of our poets.

SECTION LVI.

THE first pœm which presents itself at the commencement of the reign of queen Elisabeth, is the play of GORBODUC, written by Thomas Sackville lord Buckhurst, the original contriver of the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES^a. Thomas Norton, already mentioned as an associate with Sternhold and Hopkins in the metrical version of David's Psalms, is said to have been his coadjutor^b.

It is no part of my plan, accurately to mark the progress of our drama, much less to examine the merit of particular plays. But as this piece is perhaps the first specimen in our language of an heroic tale, written in blank verse, divided into acts and

^a It is scarcely worth observing, that one Thomas Brice, at the accession of Elisabeth, printed in English metre a Register of the Martyrs and Confessors under queen Mary, Lond. for R. Adams, 1559, 8vo. I know not how far Fox might profit by this work. I think he has not mentioned it. In the Stationers registers, in 1567, were entered to Henry Binneman, SONGES and SONNETS by Thomas Brice. REGISTR. A. fol. 164. a. I have never seen the book. In 1570, an elegy, called "An epitaph on Mr. Bryce preacher" occurs, licenced to John Alde. Ibid. fol. 205. b. Again; we have the COURT OF VENUS, I suppose a ballad, MORALISED, in 1566, by Thomas Bryce, for Hugh Singleton. Ibid. fol. 156. a. [Brice, at the end of his Metrical Register" has a poem of the ballad kind, which he calls "The Wishes of the Wise."

It begins:—

When shal this time of travail cease,
Which we with wo sustayne?
When shal the daies of rest and peace
Returne to us againe?

Before his Register he expresses an earnest wish and desire, that "the author and endightyng were halfe so worthy as the matter, that it myght bee conveyed and delyvered to the Quenes Majesties owne handes."—PARK.]

^b See supr. vol. iii. p. 453. See Preface to GORBODUC, edit. 1571. Strype says, that Thomas Norton was a clergyman, a puritan, a man of parts and learning, well known to secretary Cecil and archbishop Parker, and that he was suspected, but without foundation, of writing an answer to Whitgift's book against the puritans, published in 1572. LIFE OF PARKER, p. 364. LIFE OF WHITGIFT, p. 28. I forgot to mention before, that Norton has a copy of recommendatory verses prefixed to Turner's PRESERVATIVE, a tract against the Pelagians, dedicated to Hugh Latimer, printed Lond. 1551. 12mo. In the Conferences in the Tower with Campion the Jesuit, in 1581, one Norton, but not our author, seems to have been employed as a notary. See "A TRUE REPORTE OF THE DISPUTATION," &c. Lond. 1583. scenes, and cloathed in all the formalities of a regular tragedy, it seems justly to deserve a more minute and a distinct discussion in this general view of our poetry.

It was first exhibited in the great Hall of the Inner Temple, by the students of that Society, as part of the entertainment of a grand Christmas*, and afterwards before queen Elisabeth at Whitehall, on the eighteenth day of January in 1561. It was never intended for the press. But being surreptitiously and very carelessly printed in 1565, an exact edition, with the consent and under the inspection of the authors, appeared in 1571, in black letter, thus entitled. "The TRAGIDIE OF FERREX AND PORREX, set forth without addition or alteration, but altogether as the same was showed on stage before the queenes Majestie about nine yeare past, viz. The xvij day of Januarie, 1561. By the gentlemen of the Inner Temple. Seen and allowed, &c. Imprinted at London by John Daye dwelling ouer Aldersgate." It has no date, nor notation of pages, and contains only thirty-one leaves in small octavo^c. In the edition of 1565, it is called the TRAGEDIE OF GORBODUC. The whole title of that edition runs thus. "The Tragedie of GORBODUC, whereof three actes were wrytten by Thomas Nortone and the two laste by Thomas Sackvyle. Sett forthé as the same was shewed before the queenes most excellent maiestie in her highnes court of Whitehall, the 18 Jan. 1561. By the gentlemen of thynner Temple in London. Sept. 22, 1565." Printed by William Griffith at the sign of the falcon in Fleet-street, in quarto^d. I have a most incorrect black lettered copy in duo-

^c For the benefit of those who wish to gain a full and exact information about this edition, so as to distinguish it from all the rest, I will here exhibit the arrangement of the lines of the title-page. "The Tragidie of Ferrex | and Porrex, | set forth without addition or alteration but altogether as the same was shewed | on stage before the queenes maiestie, | about nine yeares past, viz. the | xvij daie of Januarie. 1561. by the Gentlemen of the | Inner Temple. | Seen and allowed &c. | Imprinted at London by | John Daye, dwelling ouer Aldersgate." With the Bodleian copy of this edition, are bound up four pamphlets against the papists by Thomas Norton.

decimo, without title, but with the printer's monogram in the last page, I suspect of 1569, which once belonged to Pope^c, and from which the late Mr. Spence most faithfully printed a modern edition of the tragedy, in the year 1736. I believe it was printed before that of 1571, for it retains all the errors of Griffith's first or spurious edition of 1565. In the Preface prefixed to the edition of 1571, is the following passage. "Where [whereas] this tragedy was for furniture of part of the grand Christmase in the Inner-temple, first written about nine years ago by the right honourable Thomas now lord Buckhurst, and by T. Norton; and afterwards showed before her maiestie, and neuer intended by the authors thereof to be published: Yet one W. G. getting a copie thereof at some young mans hand, that lacked a little money and much discretion, in the last great plague anno 1565, about five yeares past, while the said lord was out of England, and T. Norton far out of London, and neither of them both made priuy, put it forth exceedingly corrupted," &c. W. G. is William Griffith, the printer in Fleet-street, above mentioned. Mr. Garrick had another old quarto edition, printed by Alde, in 1590.

These are the circumstances of the fable of this tragedy. Gorboduc, a king of Britain about six hundred years before Christ, made in his life-time a division of his kingdom to his sons Ferrex and Porrex. The two young princes within five years quarrelled for universal sovereignty. A civil war ensued, and Porrex slew his elder brother Ferrex. Their mother Viden, who loved Ferrex best, revenged his death by entering Porrex's chamber in the night, and murdering him in his sleep. The people, exasperated at the cruelty and treachery of this murder, rose in rebellion, and killed both Viden and Gorboduc. The nobility then assembled, collected an army, and destroyed the rebels. An intestine war commenced between the chief lords:

^c In the year 1717, my father, then a fellow of Magdalene college at Oxford, gave this copy to Mr. Pope, as appears by a letter of Pope to R. Digby, dat. Jun. 2, 1717. See Pope's LETTERS, vol. ix. p. 39. edit. 12mo. 1754. "Mr. War-ton forced me to take Gorboduc," &c. Pope gave it to the late bishop Warbur-ton, who gave it to me about ten years ago, 1770.

the succession of the crown became uncertain and arbitrary, for want of the lineal royal issue: and the country, destitute of a king, and wasted by domestic slaughter, was reduced to a state of the most miserable desolation.

In the dramatic conduct of this tale, the unities of time and place are eminently and visibly violated: a defect which Shakespeare so frequently commits, but which he covers by the magic of his poetry. The greater part of this long and eventful history is included in the representation. But in a story so fertile of bloodshed, no murder is committed on the stage. It is worthy of remark, that the death of Porrex in the bed-chamber is only related. Perhaps the players had not yet learned to die, nor was the ponyard so essential an article as at present among the implements of the property-room. Nor is it improbable, that to kill a man on the stage was not now avoided as a spectacle shocking to humanity, but because it was difficult and inconvenient to be represented. The writer has followed the series of facts related in the chronicles without any material variation, or fictitious embarrassments, and with the addition only of a few necessary and obvious characters.

There is a Chorus of Four Antient and Sage Men of Britain, who regularly close every Act, the last excepted, with an ode in long-lined stanzas, drawing back the attention of the audience to the substance of what has just passed, and illustrating it by recapitulatory moral reflections, and poetical or historical allusions. Of these the best is that which terminates the fourth Act, in which prince Porrex is murdered by his mother Viden. These are the two first stanzas.

When greedie lust in royall seat to reigne,
 Hath reft all care of goddes, and eke of men,
 And Cruell Heart, Wrath, Treason, and Disdaine,
 Within th' ambitious breast are lodged, then
 Behold howe MISCHIEFE wide herselfe displaies,
 And with the brothers hand the brother slaies!

When blood thus shed doth staine the heauens face,
 Crying to Joue for vengeance of the deede,
 The mightie god euen moueth from his place,
 With wrath to wreak. Then sendes he forth with spede
 The dreadful Furies, daughters of the night,
 With serpents girt, carrying the whip of ire,
 With haire of stinging snakes, and shining bright
 With flames and blood, and with a brande of fire.
 These for reuenge of wretched murder done
 Do make the mother kill her onelie son !

Blood asketh blood, and death must death requite :
 Joue, by his iust and euerlasting doom,
 Justly hath euer so required it, &c. ^f

In the imagery of these verses, we discern no faint traces of the hand which drew the terrible guardians of hell-gate, in the INDUCTION to the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES.

The moral beauties and the spirit of the following ode, which closes the third act, will perhaps be more pleasing to many readers.

The lust of kingdom^s knowes no sacred faithe,
 No rule of reason, no regarde of right,
 No kindlie loue, no feare of heauens wrathe :
 But with contempt of goddes, and man's despight,
 Through blodie slaughter doth prepare the waies
 To fatall scepter, and accursed reigne :
 The sonne so lothes the fathers linyerunge daies,
 Ne dreads his hande in brothers blode to staine !
 O wretched prince ! ne dost thou yet recorde
 The yet fressh murthers done within the lande,
 Of thie forefathers, when the cruell sworde
 Bereft Morgain his liefe with cosyn's hande ?

^f Act iv. Sc. ult.

^s 'kingdoms,' edit. 1565.

Thus fatall plagues pursue the giltie race,
Whose murderous hand, imbrued with gittles bloode,
Askes vengeaunce still ^h, before the heauens face,
With endles mischiefes on the cursed broode.

The wicked child thus ⁱ bringes to wofull sier
The mournfull plaintes, to waste his wery ^k life:
Thus do the cruell flames of civyll fier.
Destroye the parted reigne with hatefull strife:
And hence doth spring the well; from which doth flo,
The dead black streames of mourning ^l, plaint, and wo. ^m

Every Act is introducèd, as was the custom in our old plays, with a piece of machinery called the DUMB SHOW, shadowing by an allegorical exhibition the matter that was immediately to follow. In the construction of this spectacle and its personifications, much poetry and imagination was often displayed. It is some apology for these prefigurations, that they were commonly too mysterious and obscure, to forestal the future events with any degree of clearness and precision. Not that this mute mimicry was always typical of the ensuing incidents. It sometimes served for a compendious introduction of such circumstances, as could not commodiously be comprehended within the bounds of the representation. It sometimes supplied deficiencies, and covered the want of business. Our ancestors were easily satisfied with this artificial supplement of one of the most important unities, which abundantly filled up the interval that was necessary to pass, while a hero was expected from the Holy Land, or a princess was imported, married, and brought to bed. In the mean time, the greater part of the audience were probably more pleased with the emblematical pageantry than the poetical dialogue, although both were alike unintelligible.

I will give a specimen in the DOMME SHEWE preceding the fourth act. "First, the musick of howeboies began to plaie.

^m Act iii. Sc. ult.

Duringe whiche, there came forth from vnder the stage, as though out of hell, three Furies, ALECTO, MEGERA; and CTESIPHONEⁿ, clad in blacke garments sprinkled with bloud and flames, their bodies girt with snakes, their heds spread with serpents instead of heare, the one bearing in her hande a snake, the other a whip, and the thirde a burning firebrande: eche driuyng before them a kynge and a queene, which moued by Furies vnnaturally had slaine their owne children. The names of the kinges and queenes were these, TANTALUS, MEDEA, ATHAMAS, INO, CAMBISES, ALTHEA. After that the Furies, and these, had passed aboute the stage thrise, they departed, and then the musicke ceased. Hereby was signified the vnnaturall murders to followe, that is to saie, Porrex slaine by his owne mother. And of king Gorboduc and queene Viden killed by their owne subjectes." Here, by the way, the visionary procession of kings and queens long since dead, evidently resembles our author Sackville's original model of the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES; and, for the same reason, reminds us of a similar train of royal spectres in the tent-scène of Shakespeare's KING RICHARD THE THIRD.

I take this opportunity of expressing my surprise, that this ostensible comment of the Dumb Shew should not regularly appear in the tragedies of Shakespeare. There are even proofs that he treated it with contempt and ridicule. Although some critics are of opinion, that because it is never described in form at the close or commencement of his acts, it was therefore never introduced. Shakespeare's aim was to collect an audience, and for this purpose all the common expedients were necessary. No dramatic writer of his age has more battles or ghosts. His representations abound with the usual appendages of mechanical terror, and he adopts all the superstitions of the theatre. This problem can only be resolved into the activity or the superiority of a mind, which either would not be entangled by the formality, or which saw through the futility, of this unnatural and extrinsic ornament. It was not by declamation or by pantomime that Shakespeare was to fix his eternal dominion over the hearts of mankind.

To return to Sackville. That this tragedy was never a favourite among our ancestors, and has long fallen into general oblivion, is to be attributed to the nakedness and uninteresting nature of the plot, the tedious length of the speeches, the want of a discrimination of character, and almost a total absence of pathetic or critical situations. It is true that a mother kills her own son. But this act of barbarous and unnatural impiety, to say nothing of its almost unexampled atrocity in the tender sex, proceeds only from a brutal principle of sudden and impetuous revenge. It is not the consequence of any deep machination, nor is it founded in a proper preparation of previous circumstances. She is never before introduced to our notice as a wicked or designing character. She murders her son Porrex, because in the commotions of a civil dissension, in self-defence, after repeated provocations, and the strongest proofs of the basest ingratitude and treachery, he had slain his rival brother, not without the deepest compunction and remorse for what he had done. A mother murdering a son is a fact which must be received with horror; but it required to be complicated with other motives, and prompted by a cooperation of other causes, to rouse our attention, and work upon our passions. I do not mean that any other motive could have been found, to palliate a murder of such a nature. Yet it was possible to heighten and to divide the distress, by rendering this bloody mother, under the notions of human frailty, an object of our compassion as well as of our abhorrence. But perhaps these artifices were not yet known or wanted. The general story of the play is great in its political consequences; and the leading incidents are important, but not sufficiently intricate to awaken our curiosity, and hold us in suspense. Nothing is perplexed and nothing unravelled. The opposition of interests is such as does not affect our nicer feelings. In the plot of a play, our pleasure arises in proportion as our expectation is excited.

Yet it must be granted, that the language of GORBODUC* has great purity and perspicuity; and that it is entirely free from that tumid phraseology, which does not seem to have taken place till play-writing had become a trade, and our poets found it their interest to captivate the multitude by the false sublime, and by those exaggerated imageries and pedantic metaphors, which are the chief blemishes of the scenes of Shakspeare, and which are at this day mistaken for his capital beauties by too many readers. Here also we perceive another and a strong reason why this play was never popular †.

Sir Philip Sydney, in his admirable DEFENCE OF POESIE, remarks, that this tragedy is full of notable moralitie. But tragedies are not to instruct us by the intermixture of moral sentences, but by the force of example, and the effect of the story. In the first act, the three counsellors are introduced debating about the division of the kingdom in long and elaborate speeches, which are replete with political advice and maxims of civil prudence. But this stately sort of declamation, whatever eloquence it may display, and whatever policy it may teach, is undramatic, unanimated, and unaffecting. Sentiment and argument

[* Rymer termed Gorboduc "a fable better turn'd for tragedy than any on this side the Alps, in the time of Lord Buckhurst, and might have been a better direction to Shakspeare and Ben Jonson, than any guide they have had the luck to follow." Short View of Tragedy, p. 84. Mr. Pope also observed, that "the writers of the succeeding age might have improved by copying from this drama, a propriety in the sentiments and dignity in the sentences, and an unaffected perspicuity of style, which are essential to tragedy." Yet Dryden and Oldham both spoke contemptuously of this piece, and apparently without having perused it; since they supposed Gorboduc to have been a female, and the former calls it the tragedy of "Queen Gorboduc." See Scott's Edit. of his Works, ii. 118. and Biog. Dram. ii. 238.—PARK.]

† [If Shakspeare could not of himself find out what was natural and right in language and sentiment, Gorboduc might have taught him. But Mr. Warton supposes that what we now reckon a beauty and merit, was a strong reason why Gorboduc never became popular. Was not this reason enough for Shakspeare, whose only endeavours were populo ut placerent quas fecisset fabulas, to take another course? Had Shakspeare ever stretched his views to fame and posterity, he would at least have printed some of his plays. But it is not easy to conceive how a man can write for a future generation. It is not in his power to know what they will like; though he may be able to please his contemporaries, by giving them what they have been accustomed to approve.—ASHBY.] will never supply the place of action upon the stage. Not to mention, that these grave harangues have some tincture of the formal modes of address, and the ceremonious oratory, which were then in fashion. But we must allow, that in the strain of dialogue in which they are professedly written, they have uncommon merit, even without drawing an apology in their favour from their antiquity: and that they contain much dignity, strength of reflection, and good sense, couched in clear expression and polished numbers. I shall first produce a specimen from the speech of Arostus, who is styled a Counsellor to the King, and who is made to defend a specious yet perhaps the least rational side of the question.

And in your lyfe, while you shall so beholde
 Their rule, their vertues, and their noble deedes,
 Such as their kinde behighteth to vs all;
 Great be the profites that shall growe thereof:
 Your age in quiet shall the longer last,
 Your lastinge age shall be their longer staie:
 For cares of kynges, that rule, as you haue rulde,
 For publike wealth, and not for private ioye,
 Do waste mannes lyfe, and hasten crooked age,

From an obsequious complaisance to the king, who is present, the topic is not agitated with that opposition of opinion and variety of arguments which it naturally suggests, and which would have enlivened the disputation and displayed diversity of character. But Eubulus, the king's secretary, declares his sentiments with some freedom, and seems to be the most animated of all our three political orators.

 But worst of all for this our native land:

The illustration from Brutus is here both apposite and poetical.

Spence, with a reference to the situation of the author lord Buckhurst in the court of queen Elisabeth, has observed in his preface to the modern edition of this tragedy, that "'tis no wonder, if the language of kings and statesmen should be less happily imitated by a poet than a privy counsellor*." [* If Norton wrote the first three acts of Gorboduc, as the title-page of 1565 sets forth, and the later edition does not contradict, (supra, p. 179.) then the excellence of the speech above cited from Act i. cannot have arisen from its being penned by a privy-counsellor. Could Richelieu write so good a tragedy as Cornéille or Racine? asks Mr. Ashby, while he relates the following anecdote in reply. Queen Caroline was fond of talking to learned men. One day she was earnest with bishop Gibson to tell her, which he liked best, tragedy or comedy? The bishop parried the question by alledging, he had not read or seen any thing of that kind a long while. The queen still persisting in her inquiry, he said, "Though I cannot answer your majesty's question, yet your majesty can inform me in one particular that nobody else can." She expressed great readiness to do so, and he added, "Pray do kings and queens, when alone, talk such fine language as on the stage?" This was enough.—PARK.] an insinuation that Shakespear, who has left many historical tragedies, was less able to conduct some parts of a royal story than the statesman lord Buckhurst. But I will venture to pronounce, that whatever merit there is in this play, and particularly in the speeches we have just been examining, it is more owing to the poet than the privy counsellor. If a first minister was to write a "tragedy, I believe the piece will be the better, the less it has of the first minister. When a statesman turns poet, I should not wish him to fetch his ideas or his language from the cabinet. I know not why a king should be better qualified than a private man, to make kings talk in blank verse.

The chaste elegance of the following description of a region abounding in every convenience, will gratify the lover of classical purity.

Yea, and that half, which in^d abounding store

The close of Marcella's narration of the murther of Porrex by the queen, which many poets of a more enlightened age would have exhibited to the spectators, is perhaps the most moving and pathetic speech in the play†. The reader will observe, that our author, yet to a good purpose, has transferred the ceremonies of the tournament to the court of an old British king.

 Shyning in armour bright before thy tylte,
 And with thy mistresse' sleaué tied on thy helme,
 And chargè thy staffe, to please thy ladies eie,

Marcella, the only lady in the play except the queen, is one of the maids of honour ; and a modern writer of tragedy would have made her in love with the young prince who is murdered.

The queen laments the loss of her eldest and favorite son, whose defeat and death had just been announced, in the following soliloquy. The ideas are too general, although happily expressed : but there is some imagination in her wishing the old massy palace had long ago fallen, and crushed her to death.

posed to be immediately descended from the Trojan Brutus, and that consequently they were acquainted with the pagan history and mythology, Gorboduc has a long allusion to the miseries of the siege of Troy^s.

In this strain of correct versification and language, Porrex explains to his father Gorboduc, the treachery of his brother Ferrex.

As the notions of subordination, of the royal authority, and the divine institution of kings, predominated in the reign of queen Elisabeth, it is extraordinary, that eight lines, inculcating in plain terms the doctrine of passive and unresisting obedience to the prince, which appeared in the fifth act of the first edition of this tragedy, should have been expunged in the edition of 1571, published under the immediate inspection of the authors^w. It is well known, that the Calvinists carried their ideas of reformation and refinement into government as well as religion: and it seems probable, that these eight verses were suppressed by Thomas Norton, Sackville's supposed assistant in the play, who was not only an active and I believe a sensible puritan, but a licencer of the publication of books under the commission of the bishop of London^x.

As to Norton's assistance in this play, it is said on better authority than that of Antony Wood, who supposes GORBODUC to have been in old English rhyme, that the three first acts were written by Thomas Norton, and the two last by Sackville*. But the force of internal evidence often prevails over the authority of assertion, a testimony which is diminished by time, and may be rendered suspicious from a variety of other circumstances. Throughout the whole piece, there is an invariable uniformity of diction and versification. Sackville has two poems of considerable length in the MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES, which fortunately furnish us with the means of comparison: and every scene of GORBODUC is visibly marked with his characteristic manner †, which consists in a perspicuity of style, and a command of numbers, superior to the tone of his times. Thomas Norton's poetry is of a very different and a subordinate cast: and if we may judge from his share in our metrical psalmody, he seems to have been much more properly qualified to shine in the miserable mediocrity of Sternhold's stanza, and to write spiritual rhymes for the solace of his illuminated brethren, than to reach the bold and impassioned elevations of tragedy.

The same may be said of Sackville's third part, on the behaviour of Court-ladies, appears to have been translated in 1551, at the request of the marchioness of Northampton. The SONNET prefixed to Thomas Hoby's English version of Castiglio's Il Cortegiano, first printed in 1556. The

SECTION LVII.

THIS appearance of a regular tragedy, with the division of acts and scenes, and the accompaniment of the antient chorus, represented both at the Middle-temple and at Whitehall, and written by the most accomplished nobleman of the court of queen Elisabeth, seems to have directed the attention of our more learned poets to the study of the old classical drama, and in a short time to have produced vernacular versions of the Jocasta of Euripides, as it is called, and of the ten Tragedies of Seneca. I do not find that it was speedily followed by any original compositions on the same legitimate model.

The Jocasta of Euripides was translated by George Gascoigne and Francis Kinwelmersh, both students of Grays-inn, and acted in the refectory of that society, in the year 1566. Gascoigne translated the second, third*, and fifth acts, and Kinwelmersh the first, and fourth. It was printed in Gascoigne's poems, of which more will be said hereafter, in 1577, under the following title, "Jocasta, a Tragedie written in Greeke by Euripides. Translated and digested into Acte, by George Gascoigne and Francis Kinwelmershe of Graies inn, and there by them presented, An. 1566." The Epilogue was written in quatrains by Christopher Yelverton, then one of their brother students. So strongly were our audiences still attached to spectacle, that the authors did not venture to present their play, without introducing a DUMB SHEW at the beginning of every act. For this, however, they had the example and authority of Gorboduc. Some of the earliest specimens of Inigo Jones's Grecian architecture are marred by Gothic ornaments.

*[This third act has no denotation of its translator, in edit. 1575.—PARK.]

It must, however, be observed, that this is by no means a just or exact translation of the Jocasta, that is the Phoenissæ, of Euripides. It is partly a paraphrase, and partly an abridgement, of the Greek tragedy. There are many omissions, retrenchments, and transpositions. The chorus, the characters, and the substance of the story, are entirely retained, and the tenor of the dialogue is often preserved through whole scenes. Some of the beautiful odes of the Greek chorus are neglected, and others substituted in their places, newly written by the translators. In the favorite address to Mars^a, Gascoigne has totally deserted the rich imagery of Euripides, yet has found means to form an original ode, which is by no means destitute of pathos or imagination.

O fierce and furious Mars! whose harmefull hart
 Reioiceth most to shed the giltlesse blood;
 Whose headie will doth all the world subvert,
 And doth enuie the pleasant merry mood
 Of our estate, that erst in quiet stood:
 Why dost thou thus our harmlesse towne annoy,
 Whych mighty Bacchus gouerned in ioy?
 Father of warre and death, that doost remoue,
 With wrathfull wrecke, from wofull mothers brest
 The trusty pledges of their tender loue!
 So graunt the goddes, that for our finall rest
 Dame Venus' pleasant lookes may please thee best:
 Whereby, when thou shalt all amazed stand,
 The sword may fall out of thy trembling hand^b:
 And thou mayst proue some other way ful wel
 The bloody prowess of thy mighty speare,
 Wherewith thou raisest from the depth of hel
 The wrathful sprites of all the Furies there;
 Who, when they wake, do wander euery where,

I am of opinion, that our translators thought the many mythological and historical allusions in the Greek chorus, too remote and unintelligible, perhaps too cumbersome, to be exhibited in English. In the ode to CONCORD, which finishes the fourth act, translated by Kinwelmershe, there is great elegance of expression and versification. It is not in Euripides.

O blissefull CONCORD, bred in sacred brest
Of hym that rules the restlesse-rolling skie,
That to the earth, for mans assured rest,

 In flowring youth to choose their proper feeres^e;
 With whom they liue in league of lasting loue,
 Till fearfull death doth flitting life remoue:
 And looke howe fast to death man payes his due!
 So fast agayne doest thou his stock renue.

By thee the basest thing aduanced is:
 Thou euery where doest graffe such golden peace,
 As filleth man with more than earthly blisse:

The constant practice of ending every act with a long ode sung by the chorus, seems to have been adopted from GORBODUC§.

But I will give a specimen of this performance as a translation, from that affecting scene, in which Oedipus, blind and exiled from the city, is led on by his daughter Antigone, the rival in filial fidelity of Lear's Cordelia, to touch the dead and murdered bodies of his queen Jocasta, and his sons Eteocles and Polynices. It appears to be the chief fault of the translators, that they have weakened the force of the original, which consists in a pathetic brevity, by needless dilatations, and the affectations of circumlocution. The whole dialogue in the original is carried on in single lines. Such, however, is the preg-

So sudden were the changes or the refinements of our language, that in the second edition of this play, printed again with Gascoigne's poems in 1587*, it was thought necessary to affix marginal explanations of many words, not long before in common use, but now become obsolete and unintelligible. to secretary Cecil. To the end of the fifth act our translator has added a whole scene: for the purpose of relating the death of Cassandra, the imprisonment of Electra, and the flight of Orestes. Yet these circumstances were all known and told before. The narrator is Euribates, who in the commencement of the third act had informed Clitemnestra of Agamemnon's return. These efforts, however imperfect or improper, to improve the plot of a drama by a new conduct or contrivance, deserve particular notice at this infancy of our theatrical taste and knowledge. They shew that authors now began to think for themselves, and that they were not always implicitly enslaved to the prescribed letter of their models. Studley, who appears to have been qualified for better studies, misapplied his time and talents in translating Bale's Acts of the Popes. That translation, dedicated to Thomas lord Essex, was printed in 1574^b. He has left twenty Latin distichs on the death of the learned Nicholas Carr, Cheke's successor in the Greek professorship at Cambridge^c.

This version is for the most part executed in the heroic rhyming couplet. All the rest of the translators have used, except in the chorus, the Alexandrine measure, in which Sternhold and Hopkins rendered the Psalms, perhaps the most unsuitable species of English versification that could have been applied to this purpose. Alexander Nevyle translated, or rather paraphrased, the OEDIPUS, in the sixteenth year of his age, and in the year 1560, not printed till the year 1581⁵. It is dedicated to doctor Wootton, a privy counsellor, and his godfather. Notwithstanding the translator's youth, it is by far the most spirited and elegant version in the whole collection, and it is to be regretted that he did not undertake all the rest. He seems to have been persuaded by his friends, who were of the graver sort, that poetry was only one of the lighter accomplishments of a young man, and that it should soon give way to the more weighty pursuits of literature. The first act of his OEDIPUS begins with these lines, spoken by Oedipus.

The night is gon, and dreadfull day begins at length
t'apeere,

And Phœbus, all bedimde with clowdes, himselfe aloft doth reere :

And gliding forth with deadly hue, a dolefull blase in skies
Doth beare : great terror and dismay to the beholders eyes !
Now shall the houses voyde be seene, with Plague deuoured

And slaughter which the night hath made, shall day bring forth to light.

Doth any man in princely throne reioyce ? O brittle ioy !

He wrote a Latin narrative of the Norfolk insurrection under Kett, which is dedicated to archbishop Parker, and was printed in 1575ⁿ. To this he added a Latin account of Norwich, printed the same year, called NORVICUS, the plates of which were executed by Lyne and Hogenberg, archbishop Parker's domestic engravers, in 1574^o. He published the Cambridge verses on the death of sir Philip Sydney, which he dedicated to lord Leicester, in 1587^p. He projected, but I suspect never completed, an English translation of Livy, in 1577^q. He died in 1614^r.

The HERCULES FURENS, THYESTES, and TROAS, were translated into English by Jasper Heywood*. The HERCULES FURENS was first printed at London in 1561^s, and dedicated to William Herbert lord Pembroke, with the following pedantic Latin title. "Lucii Annaei Senecae traggedia prima, quæ inscribitur HERCULES FURENS, nuper recognita, et ab omnibus mendis quibus scatebat sedulo purgata, et in studiosæ juventutis utilitatem in Anglicum tanta fide conversa, ut carmen pro carmine, quoad Anglica lingua patiat, pene redditum videas, per Jasperum Heywodum Oxoniensem." The THYESTES, said to be faithfully Englished by Iasper Heywood fellow of Alsolne colledge in Oxenforde, was also first separately printed by Berthelette at London, in 1560^t. He has added a scene to the fourth act, a soliloquy by Thyestes, who bewails his own mis-

^t In 12mo. It is dedicated in verse to sir John Mason. Then follows in verse also, "The translatur to the booke." From the metrical Preface which next follows, I have cited many stanzas. See supr. p. 96. This is a Vision of the poet Seneca, containing 27 pages. In the course of this PREFACE, he laments a promising youth just dead, whom he means to compliment by saying, that he now "lyues with Joue, another Ganymede." But he is happy that the father survives, who seems to be sir John Mason. Among the old Roman poets he mentions Pa-fortunes, and implores vengeance on Atreus. In this scene, the speaker's application of all the torments of hell, to Atreus's unparalleled guilt of feasting on the bowels of his children, furnishes a sort of nauseous bombast, which not only violates the laws of criticism, but provokes the abhorrence of our common sensibilities. A few of the first lines are tolerable.

O kyng of Dytyis dungeon darke, and grysly ghost of hell,
That in the deepe and dreadfull denne of blackest Tartare dwell,

Where leane and pale Diseases lye, where Feare and Famyne are,

Where Discord standes with bleeding browes, where euery
kinde of care;

Where Furies fight on beds of steele, and heares of crawling snakes,

Where Gorgon gremme, where Harpies are, and lothsom limbo lakes,

Where most prodigious^u vgly things the hollow hell doth hyde,
If yet a monster more mishapt, &c.

In the TROAS, which was first faultily printed in or before 1560^w, afterwards reprinted* in 1581 by Newton, he has taken ingenius. After Seneca has delivered him the THYESTES to translate, he feels an unusual agitation, and implores Megaera to inspire him with tragic rage.

"O thou Megaera, then I sayd,

If might of thyne it bee

(Wherewith thou Tantal drouste from

That thus dysturbeth mee, [hell]

Enspyre my pen!"—

This sayde, I felt the Furies force

Enflame me more and more :

And ten tymes more now chafte I was

Than euer yet before.

My haire stooode vp, I waxed wood^l,

My synewes all dyd shake :

And, as the Furye had me vext,

My teethe began to quake.

And thus enflamede, &c.

He then enters on his translation. Nothing is here wanting but a better stanza.

greater liberties. At the end of the chorus after the first act, he has added about sixty verses of his own invention. In the beginning of the second act, he has added a new scene, in which he introduces the spectre of Achilles raised from hell, and demanding the sacrifice of Polyxena. This scene, which is in the octave stanza, has much of the air of one of the legends in the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES. To the chorus of this act, he has subjoined three stanzas. Instead of translating the chorus of the third act, which abounds with the hard names of the antient geography, and which would both have puzzled the translator and tired the English reader, he has substituted a new ode. In his preface to the reader, from which he appears to be yet a fellow of All Souls college, he modestly apologises for these licentious innovations, and hopes to be pardoned for his seeming arrogance, in attempting "to set forth in English this present piece of the flowre of all writers Seneca, among so many fine wittes, and towardly youth, with which England this day flourisheth^x." Our translator Jasper Heywood has several poems extant in the Paradise of Daintie Devises, published in 1573*. He was the son of John Heywood, commonly called the epigrammatist, and born in London. In 1547, at twelve years of age, he was sent to Oxford, and in 1553 elected fellow of Merton college. But inheriting too large a share of his father's facetious and free disposition, he sometimes in the early part of life indulged his festive vein in extravagancies and indiscretions, for which being threatened with expulsion, he resigned his fellowship^y. He exercised the office of Christmas-prince, or lord of misrule, to the college: and seems to have given offence, by suffering the levities and jocularities of that character to mix with his life and general conversation^z. In the year 1558, he was recommended by cardinal Pole, as a polite scholar, an able disputant, and a steady catholic, to sir Thomas Pope founder of Trinity college in the same university, to be put in nomination for a fellowship of that college, then just founded. But this scheme did not take place^a. He was, however, appointed fellow of All Souls college the same year. Dissatisfied with the change of the national religion, within four years he left England, and became a catholic priest and a Jesuit at Rome, in 1562*. Soon afterwards he was placed in the theological chair at Dilling in Switzerland, which he held for seventeen years. At length returning to England, in the capacity of a popish missionary, he was imprisoned, but released by the interest of the earl of Warwick. For the deliverance from so perilous a situation, he complimented the earl in a copy of English verses, two of which, containing a most miserable paronomasy on his own name, almost bad enough to have condemned the writer to another imprisonment, are recorded in Harrington's Epigrams^b. At length he retired to Naples, where he died in 1597^c. He is said to have been an accurate critic in the Hebrew language^d. His translation of the TROAS, not of Virgil as it seems, is mentioned in a copy of verses by T. B.^e prefixed to the first edition, above mentioned, of Studley's AGAMEMNON. He was intimately connected abroad with the biographer Pitts, who has given him rather too partial a panegyric.

Thomas Newton, the publisher of all the ten tragedies of Seneca in English, in one volume, as I have already remarked, in 1581^f, himself added only one to these versions of Studley,

Nevile, Nuce, and Jasper Heywood. This is the THEBAIS, probably not written by Seneca, as it so essentially differs in the catastrophe from his OEDIPUS. Nor is it likely the same poet should have composed two tragedies on the same subject, even with a variation of incidents. It is without the chorus and a fifth act. Newton appears to have made his translation in 1581, and perhaps with a view only of completing the collection. He is more prosaic than most of his fellow-labourers, and seems to have paid the chief attention to perspicuity and fidelity. In the general EPISTLE DEDICATORY to sir Thomas Henneage, prefixed to the volume, he says, "I durst not haue geuen the aduenture to approach your presence, vpon trust of any singularity, that in this Booke hath vnskilfully dropped out of myne owne penne, but that I hoped the perfection of others artificiall workmanship that haue trauayled herein, as well as myselfe, should somewhat couer my nakednesse, and purchase my pardon.—Theirs I knowe to be deliuered with singular dexterity: myne, I confesse to be an vnflidge [unfledged] nestling, vnable to flye; an vnnatural abortion, and an vnperfect embryon: neyther throughlye laboured at Aristophanes and Cleanthes candle, neither yet exactly waighed in Critolaus his precise ballaunce. I am informed by a manuscript note of Oldys, that Richard Robinson translated the THEBAIS. Of this I know no more, but R. Robinson was a large writer both in verse and prose. Some of his pieces I have already mentioned. He wrote also "CHRISTMAS RECREATIONS of histories and moralizations aplied for our solace and consolacions," licenced to T. East, Dec. 5, 1576. REGISTR. STATION. B. fol. 136. b. And, in 1569, is entered to Binneman, "The ruefull tra-

He was a citizen of London. The reader recollects his English GESTA ROMANORUM, in 1577. He wrote also "The auncient order, societie, and vnitie laudable, of PRINCE ARTHURE, and his knightly armory of the ROUND TABLE. With a threefold assertion, &c. Translated and collected by R. R." Lond. for J. Wolfe, 1583. bl. lett. 4to. This work is in metre, and the armorial bearings of the knights are in verse. Pre-

Of Thomas Newton, a slender contributor to this volume, yet perhaps the chief instrument of bringing about a general translation of Seneca, and otherwise deserving well of the literature of this period, some notices seem necessary. The first letter of his English THEBAIS is a large capital D. Within it is a shield exhibiting a sable Lion rampant, crossed in argent on the shoulder, and a half moon argent in the dexter corner, I suppose his armorial bearing. In a compartment, towards the head, and under the semicircle, of the letter, are his initials, T. N. He was descended from a respectable family in Cheshire, and was sent while very young, about thirteen years of age, to Trinity college in Oxford^b. Soon afterwards he went to Queen's college in Cambridge; but returned within a very few years to Oxford, where he was readmitted into Trinity collegeⁱ. He quickly became famous for the pure elegance of his Latin poetry. Of this he has left a specimen in his ILLUSTRIA ALI- fixed is a poem by Churchyard, in praise of the Bow. His translation of Leland's ASSERTIO ARTHURI (bl. lett. 4to) is entered to J. Wolfe, Ann. 6, 1582. REGISTR. STATION. B. fol. 189. b. [It was published in the same year.—PARR.] I find, licenced to R. James in 1565, "A boke intituled of very pleasaunte sonnettes and storyes in myter [metre] by Clement Robynson." REGISTR. B. fol. 141. a.

[In 1584 was printed "A Handefull of pleasant Delites, containing sundrie new sonets and delectable histories, in diuers kinds of meeter, newly devised to the newest times, &c. by Clement Robynson and others." 16mo. Extracts from this Miscellany are given in Censura Literaria, vol. iv. and Ellis's Specimens, vol. ii. Richard Robynson put forth the following works, "The Rewarde of Wickednesse, discoursing the sundrye monstrous Abuses of wicked and ungodlye Worldeinges, in such sort set downe and written, as the same have been dyversely practised in the persones of popes, harlots, proude princes, tyrauntes, Romish byshoppes, and others," &c. From this tract it appears, that R. Robynson was in the household service of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and employed by him as a domestic centinel over the Q. of Scots. In 1576, he published a work, which Mr. Warton had entered as duly licenced. It was entitled "Robynson's Poems; certain selected histories for Christian recreations, with their several Moralizations. Brought into English verse, and are to be sung with several notes composed by Rich. Robynson." Lond. for H. Kirkham. In 1578 he printed "A Dyall of dayly Contemplacion, or devine Exercise of the Mind; instructing us to live unto God, and to dye unto the world," &c. Lond. by Hugh Singleton. This was translated from the Latin of Fox, bishop of Durham and Winchester. A work of a similar kind, translated from the Latin of Dr. Urbanus, was printed in 1587-1590, and, lastly, by R. Jones in 1594. It was called "The Solace of Sion and Joy of Jerusalem, or Consolation of God's Church in the latter Age, redeemed by the preaching of the Gospell universalie." QUOT ANGLORUM ENCOMIA, published at London in 1589^k. He is perhaps the first Englishman that wrote Latin elegiacs with a classical clearness and terseness after Leland, the plan of whose ENCOMIA and TROPHÆA he seems to have followed in this little work^l. Most of the learned and ingenious men of that age appear to have courted the favours of this polite and popular encomiast. His chief patron was the unfortunate Robert earl of Essex. I have often incidentally mentioned some of Newton's commendatory verses, both in English and Latin, prefixed to cotemporary books, according to the mode of that age. One of his earliest philological publications is a NOTABLE HISTORIE OF THE SARACENS, digested from Curio, in three books, printed at London in 1575^m. I unavoidably anticipate in remarking here, that he wrote a poem on the death of queen Elisabeth, called "ΑΤΡΟΠΟΙΟΝ ΔΕΛΙΟΝ," or, "the Death of Delia with the Tears of her funeral." A poetical exclusive discourse of our late Eliza. By T. N. G. * Lond. 1603ⁿ." The next year he published a flowery romance; "A plesant new history, or a fragrant posie made of three flowers Rosa, Rosalynd, and Rosemary, London, 1604^o." Phillips, in his THEATRUM POETARUM, attributes to Newton, a tragedy in two parts, called TAMBURLAIN THE GREAT, OR THE SCYTHIAN SHEPHERD. But this play, printed at London in 1593, was written by Christopher Marlowe^p. He seems to have been a partisan of the puritans, from his pamphlet of CHRISTIAN FRIENDSHIP, with an Invective against dice-play and other profane games, printed at London, 1586^q. author practised physic, and, in the character of that profession, wrote or translated many medical tracts. The first of these, on a curious subject, A direction for the health of magistrates and students, from Gratarolus, appeared in 1574. At length taking orders, he first taught school at Macclesfield in Cheshire, and afterwards at Little Ilford in Essex, where he was beneficed. In this department, and in 1596, he published a correct edition of Stanbridge's Latin Prosody^r. In the general character of an author, he was a voluminous and a laborious writer. He died at Little Ilford, and was interred in his church, in 1607. From a long and habitual course of studious and industrious pursuits, he had acquired a considerable fortune, a portion of which he bequeathed in charitable legacies.

It is remarkable, that Shakespeare has borrowed nothing from the English Seneca*. Perhaps a copy might not fall in his way. Shakespeare was only a reader by accident†. Hollinshed and translated Italian novels supplied most of his plots or stories. His storehouse of learned history was North's Plutarch. The only poetical fable of antiquity which he has worked into a play, is TROILUS. But this he borrowed from the romance of Troy. Modern fiction and English history were his principal resources. These perhaps were more suitable to his taste: at least he found that they produced the most popular subjects. Shakespeare was above the bondage of the classics.

I must not forget to remark here, that, according to Ames, among the copies of Henry Denham recited in the register of the Company of Stationers^s, that printer is said, on the eighth of January, in 1583, among other books, to have yielded into the hands and dispositions of the master, wardens, and assistants, of that fraternity, "Two or three of Seneca his tragedies." These, if printed after 1581, cannot be new impressions of any single plays of Seneca, of those published in Newton's edition of all the ten tragedies.

... Among Hatton's manuscripts in the Bodleian library at Oxford^u, there is a long translation from the HERCULES OETAÆUS of Seneca, by queen Elisabeth. It is remarkable that it is blank verse, a measure which her majesty perhaps adopted from GORBODUC; and which therefore proves it to have been done after the year 1561. It has, however, no other recommendation but its royalty.

I take this opportunity of acknowledging my great obligations to that very respectable society, who in the most liberal manner have indulged me with a free and unreserved examination of their original records: particularly to the kind assistance and attention of one of its members, Mr. Lockyer Davies, Bookseller in Holbourn.

BUT, as scholars began to direct their attention to our vernacular poetry, many more of the antient poets now appeared in English verse. Before the year 1600, Homer, Musaeus, Virgil, Horace, Ovid, and Martial, were translated. Indeed most of these versions were published before the year 1580. For the sake of presenting a connected display of these early translators, I am obliged to trespass, in a slight degree, on that chronological order which it has been my prescribed and constant method to observe. In the mean time we must remember, that their versions, while they contributed to familiarise the ideas of the antient poets to English readers, improved our language and versification; and that in a general view, they ought to be considered as valuable and important accessions to the stock of our poetical literature. These were the classics of Shakespeare.

I shall begin with those that were translated first in the reign of Elisabeth. But I must premise, that this inquiry will necessarily draw with it many other notices much to our purpose, and which could not otherwise have been so conveniently disposed and displayed.

Thomas Phaier, already mentioned as the writer of the story of OWEN GLENDOUR in the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES, a native of Pembroke-shire, educated at Oxford, a student of Lincoln's Inn, and an advocate to the council for the Marches of Wales, but afterwards doctorated in medicine at Oxford, translated the seven first books of the Eneid of Virgil*, on his

He afterwards finished the eighth book on the tenth of September, within forty days, in 1558. The ninth, in thirty days, in 1560. Dying at Kilgarran the same year, he lived only to begin the tenth^b. All that was thus done by Phaer^c, one William Wightman published in 1562, with a dedication to Sir Nicholas Bacon, "The nyne first books of the Eneidos of Virgil conuerted into English verse by Thomas Phaer doctour of physick," &c.^c The imperfect work was at

At the end of the seventh book is this colophon, "Per Thomam Phaer in foresta Kilgerran finitum iij Decembris. Anno 1557. Opus xij dierum." And at the end of every book is a similar colophon, to the same purpose. The first book was finished in eleven days, in 1555. The second in twenty days, in the same year. The third in twenty days, in the same year. The fourth in fifteen days, in 1556. The fifth in twenty-four days, on May the third, in 1557, "post periculum eius Karmerdini," i. e. at Caermarthen. The sixth in twenty days, in 1557.

Phaer has left many large works in his several professions of law and medicine. He is pathetically lamented by sir Thomas Chaloner as a most skilful physician, ENCOM. p. 356. Lond. 1579. 4to. He has a recommendatory English poem prefixed to Philip Betham's MILITARY PRÆCEPTS, translated from the Latin of James earl of Purlilias, dedicated to lord Studley, Lond. 1544. 4to. For E. The ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth books were finished at London in 1573^e. The whole was printed at London in 1584, with a dedication, dated that year from Lewes, to Robert Sackville^f, the eldest son of lord Buckhurst, who lived in the dissolved monastery of the Cluniacs at Lewes^g. So well received was this work, that it was followed by three new editions in 1596^h, 1607, and 1620ⁱ. Soon after the last-mentioned period, it became obsolete and was forgotten^k.

Phaier undertook this translation for the defence, to use his own phrase, of the English language, which had been by too many deemed incapable of elegance and propriety, and for the

It is addressed to, and published by, with an epistle, his said son THOMAS. Laurence, a fellow of All Souls and a civilian, and John Twyne, both THOMAS's brothers, have copies of verses prefixed to several contemporary books, about the reign of queen Elisabeth. THOMAS wrote and translated many tracts, which it would be superfluous and tedious to enumerate here. To his BREVIARIE OF BRITAIN, a translation from the Latin of Humphrey Lhuyd, in 1573, are prefixed commendatory verses, by Browne prebendary, and Grant the learned schoolmaster, of Westminster, Lodowyke Lloyd a poet in the PARADISE OF DAIN-TIE DEVICES, and his two brothers, aforesaid, Laurence and John.

Our translator, THOMAS TWYNE, died in 1613, aged 70, and was buried in the chancel of saint Anne's church at Lewes, where his epitaph of fourteen verses still,

I believe, remains on a brass plate affixed to the eastern wall.

Large antiquarian and historical manuscript collections, by the father JOHN TWYNE, are now in Corpus Christi library at Oxford. The measure is the fourteen-footed Alexandrine of Sternhold and Hopkins. I will give a short specimen from the siege of Troy, in the second book. Venus addresses her son Eneas.

The popular ear, from its familiarity, was tuned to this measure. It was now used in most works of length and gravity, but seems to have been consecrated to translation. Whatever absolute and original dignity it may boast, at present it is almost ridiculous, from an unavoidable association of ideas, and because it necessarily recalls the tone of the versification of the puritans. I suspect it might have acquired a degree of importance and reverence, from the imaginary merit of its being the established poetic vehicle of scripture, and its adoption into the celebration of divine service.

I take this opportunity of observing, that I have seen an old ballad called GADS-HILL by Faire, that is probably our translator Phaier. In the Registers of the Stationers, among seven Ballettes licenced to William Bedell and Richard Lante, one is entitled "The Robbery at Gads hill," under the year 1558ⁿ. I know not how far it might contribute to illustrate Shakespeare's HENRY THE FOURTH. The title is promising.

After the associated labours of Phaier and Twyne, it is hard to say what could induce* Richard Stanyhurst, a native of

he writes: "But fortune respecting Master Stanihursts praise, would that Phaer shoulde fall that hee might rise, whose heroicall poetry infired, I should say inspired, with an hexameter furie recalled to life whatever hissed barbarisme hath bin buried this hundred yeare, and revived by his ragged quill such carterlie varietie as no hedge plowman in a countrie but would have held as the extremitie of clownerie," &c. Dublin, to translate the first four books of Virgil's Eneid into English hexameters, which he printed at London in 1583, and dedicated to his brother Peter Plunket*, the lord baron of Dunsanay in Ireland^o. Stanyhurst at this time was living at Leyden, having left England for some time on account of the change of religion. In the choice of his measure, he is more unfortunate than his predecessors, and in other respects succeeded worse. It may be remarked, that Meres, in his WITS TREASURIE, printed in 1598, among the learned translators, mentions only "Phaier, for Virgil's Aeneads^o." And William Webbe, in his DISCOURSE OF ENGLISH POETS printed in 1586^q, entirely omits our author, and places Phaier at the

The father of Stanyhurst was recorder of Dublin, and himself was educated under Peter Whyte, some time dean of Waterford. He married Janetta the daughter of Sir Charles Barnwell, knt. who died in child-birth at Knightsbridge near London 1579. His poetical conceits convey this information, and contain a description of his mistress at the Hague 1582, and he writes himself "Sacellanus serenissimorum principum," which we may interpret chaplain to the Archduke of Austria. At the end of the Virgil are the four first of David's psalms Englished in Latin measures, p. 82. Then follow "Certayne Poetical Conceits (in Latyn and English) Lond. 1583." Afterwards are printed Epitaphs written by our author, both in Latin and English. The first, in Latin, is on James earl of Ormond, who died at Ely-house, Octob. 18, 1546. There is another on his father, James Stanyhurst, Recorder of Dublin, who died, aged 51, Dec. 27, 1573. With translations from More's Epigrams. Stanyhurst has a copy of recommendatory verses prefixed to Verstegan's RESTITUTION OF DECAYED INTELLIGENCE, Antwerp, 1605. 4to.

[Two other epitaphs by Stanyhurst are in English: one upon the Baron of Louth, who was traiterously murdered about 1577; another upon the death of Gerald Fitzgerald Baron of Offalye, who died June 30, 1580, with verses by the latter entitled "A penitent sonnet," which constitutes him a noble author. Ritson seems to think from an entry in the Stationers' books, that the volume was first printed at Leyden; yet such an edition was unknown to Ames or Herbert, (Bibl. Poetica, p. 381.)—PARK.]

^q For John Charlewood. But there is a former edition for Walley 1585, 4to. I know not to which translation of Virgil, Puttenham in THE ARTE OF ENGLISH POESIE refers, where he says, "And as one who translating certaine bookes of Virgil's ÆNEIDOS into English meëtre, said, that Æneas was fayne to trudge out of Troy, which terme became better to be spoken of a beggar, or of a rogue or a lackey," &c. Lib. iii. ch. xxiii. p. 229.

[Puttenham evidently refers to the version of Stanyhurst, which (as Mr. Southey has observed before his poetic Specimens) "could excite nothing but wonder, ridicule and disgust." Nashe has aptly characterized the tenor of this translation by the term "Thrasonical huffe-snuffe," a term indeed derived from the translator himself. "So terrible," he adds, "was his stile to all milde eares, as would have affrighted our head of all the English translators'. Thomas Nashe, in his APOLOGY OF PIERCE PENNILESS, printed in 1593, observes, that "Stanyhurst the otherwise learned, trod a foul, lumbring, boisterous, wallowing measure in his translation of Virgil.— He had neuer been praised by Gabriel Harvey^s for his labour, if therein he had not been so famously absurd^t." Harvey, Spenser's friend, was one of the chief patrons, if not the inventor, of the English hexameter, here used by Stanyhurst. I will give a specimen in the first four lines of the second book :

With tentiue listning each wight was setled in harkning ;
Then father Æneas chronicled from loftie bed hautie :
You bid me, O princeesse, to scarifie a festered old sore,
How that the Troians were prest by the Grecian armie.^u

With all this foolish pedantry, Stanyhurst was certainly a scholar. But in this translation he calls Cherebus, one of the Trojan chiefs, a bedlamite ; he says that old Priam girded on his sword Morglay, the name of a sword in the Gothic ro-able poets from intermeddling hereafter with that quarreling kinde of verse, had not sweete Master Fraunce, by his excellent translation of Master Thomas Watsons sugred Amyntas animated their dulled spirits to such high witted endeavors". Epist. ubi supra. Bishop Hall had also slurred these uncouth fooleries in his Satires, and exclaimed :

Fie on the forged mint that did create
New coin of words, never articulate.

One of our modern poets has supplied the following remarks : "As Chaucer has been called the well of English undefiled, so might Stanihurst be denominated the common sewer of the language. It seems impossible that a man could have written in such a style without intending to burlesque what he was about, and yet it is certain that Stanihurst intended to write heroic poetry. His version is exceedingly rare, and deserves to be reprinted for its incomparable oddity." Southey's Omniana, i. 193.—PARK.]

Lond. 1592. 4to.

[In the same publication he exclaims : "If I never deserve any better remembrance, let me be epitaphed the Inuentour of the English hexameter! whose learned Mr. Stanihurst imitated in his Virgill, and excellent Sir P. Sidney disdained not to follow in his Arcadia, and elsewhere." Ascham in 1564 had well observed that "carmen hexametrum doth rather trotte and hobble than runne smoothly in our English tong." It was not printed till 1597. The story of Rhomeo and Julietta in Painter's Palace of Pleasure in the tragical history of Romeus and Juliet, by Arthur Brooke, might have formed the sources of conjectural allusion.—PARK.]

Abraham Fleming, brother to Samuel^c, published a version of the BUCOLICS of Virgil, in 1575, with notes, and a dedication to Peter Osborne esquire. This is the title, "The BUCOLIKES of P. Virgilius Maro, with alphabeticall Annotations, &c. Drawne into plaine and familiar Englishe verse by Abr. Fleming student, &c. London by John Charlewood, &c. 1575." Fourteen years afterwards, in 1589, the same author published a new version both of the BUCOLICS and GEORGICS of Virgil, with notes, which he dedicated to John Whitgift archbishop of Canterbury^d. This is commonly said and supposed to be in blank verse, but it is in the regular Alexandrine without rhyme. It is entitled, "The BUKOLIKES of P. O Muses of Sicilia ile, let's greater matters singe !
 Shrubs, groves, and bushes lowe, delight and please not every man :

If we do singe of woodes, the woods be worthy of a consul.
 Nowe is the last age come, whereof Sybilla's verse foretold;
 And now the Virgin come againe, and Saturnes kingdom come.

The fourth Georgic thus begins :

^m For the sake of juxtaposition, I ob-defence of the new fashion of English hexameters, he has given us his own version of two of Virgil's BUCOLICS, written in that unnatural and impracticable mode of versification^a. I must not forget here, that the same Webbe ranks Abraham Fleming as a translator, after Barnabe Googe the translator of Palingenius's ZODIAC, not without a compliment to the poetry and the learning of his brother Samuel, whose excellent Inventions, he adds, had not yet been made public.

Abraham Fraunce*, in 1591, translated Virgil's ALEXIS into English hexameters, verse for verse, which he calls The lamentation of Corydon for the love of Alexis^o. It must be owned, that the selection of this particular Eclogue from all the ten for an English version, is somewhat extraordinary. But in the reign of queen Elisabeth, I could point out whole sets of sonnets written with this sort of attachment, for which perhaps it will be but an inadequate apology, that they are free from direct impurity of expression and open immodesty of sentiment. Such at least is our observance of external propriety, and so strong the principles of a general decorum, that a writer of the present age who was to print love-verses in this style, would be severely reproached, and universally proscribed. I will instance only in the *AFFECTIONATE SHEPHERD of Richard Barnefielde, printed in 1595. Here, through the course of twenty sonnets, not inelegant, and which were exceedingly popular, the poet bewails his unsuccessful love for a beautiful youth, by the name of Ganymede, in a strain of the most tender passion†, yet with professions of the chastest affection^p. Many descriptions and incidents which have a like complexion may be found in the futile novels of Lodge and Lilly.

Fraunce is also the writer of a book, with the affected and unmeaning title of the “ARCADIAN RHETORIKE, or the pre- ceptes of Rhetoricke made plaine by examples, Greeke, Latyne, Englishshe, Italian, Frenche, and Spanishe." It was printed in 1588, and is valuable for its English examples^a.

In consequence of the versions of Virgil's Bucolics, a piece appeared in 1584, called "A Comoedie of Titerus and Galathea^r." I suppose this to be Lilly's play called GALLATHEA, played before the queen at Greenwich on New Year's day by the choristers of saint Pauls.

It will perhaps be sufficient barely to mention Spenser's CULEX, which is a vague and arbitrary paraphrase, of a poem not properly belonging to Virgil. From the testimony of many early Latin writers it may be justly concluded, that Virgil wrote an elegant poem with this title. Nor is it improbable that in the CULEX at present attributed to Virgil, some very few of the original phrases, and even verses, may remain, under the accumulated incrustation of critics, imitators, interpolators, and paraphrasts, which corrupts what it conceals. But the texture, the character, and substance, of the genuine poem is almost entirely lost. The CEIRIS, or the fable of Nisus and Scylla, which follows, although never mentioned by any writer of antiquity, has much fairer pretensions to genuineness. At least the CEIRIS, allowing for uncommon depravations of time and transcription, appears in its present state to be a poem of the Augustan age, and is perhaps the identical piece dedicated to the Messala whose patronage it solicits. It has that rotundity of versification, which seems to have been studied after the Roman poetry emerged from barbarism. It has a general simplicity, and often a native strength, of colouring; nor is it tinctured, except by the casual innovation of grammarians, with those sophistications both of sentiment and expression, which afterwards of course took place among the Roman poets, and which would have betrayed a recent forgery. It seems to be the work of a young poet: but its digressions and descriptions, which are often too prolix, are not only the marks of a young poet, but of early poetry. It is interspersed with many lines, now in the Eclogues, Georgics, and Eneid. Here is an argument which seems to assign it to Virgil. A cotemporary poet would not have ventured to steal from poems so well-known. It was natural, at least allowable, for Virgil to steal from a performance of his youth, on which he did not set any great value, and which he did not scruple to rob of a few ornaments, deserving a better place. This consideration excludes Cornelius Gallus, to whom Fontanini, with much acute criticism, has ascribed the CÆIRIS. Nor, for the reason given, would Virgil have stolen from Gallus. The writer has at least the art of Virgil, in either suppressing, or throwing into shade, the trite and uninteresting incidents of the common fabulous history of Scylla, which were incapable of decoration, or had been preoccupied by other poets. The dialogue between the young princess Scylla, who is deeply in love, and her nurse, has much of the pathos of Virgil. There are some traces which discover an imitation of Lucretius: but on the whole, the structure of the verses, and the predominant cast and manner of the composition, exactly resemble the ARGONAUTICA of Catullus, or the EPITHALAMIUM of PELEUS AND THETIS. I will instance in the following passage, in which every thing is distinctly and circumstantially touched, and in an affected pomp of numbers. He is alluding to the stole of Minerva, interwoven with the battle of the giants, and exhibited at Athens in the magnificent Panathenaic festival. The classical reader will perceive one or two interpolations: and lament, that this rich piece of embroidery has suffered a little from being unskilfully darned by another and a more modern artificer.

Sed magno intexens, si fas est dicere, peplo,
 Qualis Erectheis olim portatur Athenis,
 Debita cum castæ solvuntur vota Minervæ,
 Tardaque confecto redeunt quinquennia lustris,
 Cum levis alterno Zephyrus concrebuit Euro,
 Et prono gravidum provexit pondere cursum.

Felix ille dies, felix et dicitur annus :
 Felices qui talē annum videre, diēque !
 Ergo Palladiæ texuntur in ordine pugnae :

 Horrida sanguineo pinguntur prælia cocco.
 Additur aurata dejectus cuspage Typho,
 Qui prius Ossæis consternens æthera saxis,
 Emæthio celsum duplicabat vertice Olympum.
 Tale deæ velum solemnī in tempore portant. ⁶

The same stately march of hexameters is observable in Tibullus's tedious panegyric on Messala: a poem, which, if it should not be believed to be of Tibullus's hand, may at least from this reasoning be adjudged to his age. We are sure that Catullus could not have been the author of the CEIRIS, as Messala, to whom it is inscribed, was born but a very few years before the death of Catullus. One of the chief circumstances of the story is a purple lock of hair, which grew on the head of Nisus king of Megara, and on the preservation of which the safety of that city, now besieged by Minos king of Crete, entirely depended. Scylla, Nisus's daughter, falls in love with Minos, whom she sees from the walls of Megara: she finds means to cut off this sacred ringlet, the city is taken, and she is married to Minos. I am of opinion that Tibullus, in the following passage, alludes to the CEIRIS, then newly published, and which he points out by this leading and fundamental fiction of Nisus's purple lock.

Pieridas, pueri, doctos et amate poetas;
 Aurea nec superent munera Pieridas !
 CARMINE PURPUREA est Nisi coma: carmina ni sint,
 Ex humero Pelopis non nituisset ebur. ⁶

Tibullus here, in recommending the study of the poets to the Roman youth, illustrates the power of poetry; and, for this purpose, with much address he selects a familiar instance from a piece recently written, perhaps by one of his friends.

⁶ ELEG. Lib. i. iv. 61.

Spenser seems to have shewn a particular regard to these two little poems, supposed to be the work of Virgil's younger years. Of the CULEX he has left a paraphrase, under the title of VIRGIL'S GNAZ, dedicated to lord Leicester, who died in 1588. It was printed without a title page at the end of the "TEARES OF THE MUSES, by Ed. Sp. London, imprinted for William Ponsonbie dwelling in Paules church-yard at the sign of the bishops head, 1591^u." From the CEIRIS he has copied a long passage, which forms the first part of the legend of Britomart in the third book of the FAIRY QUEEN.

Although the story of MEDEA existed in Guido de Columna, and perhaps other modern writers in Latin, yet we seem to have had a version of Valerius Flaccus in 1565. For in that year, I know not if in verse or prose, was entered to Purfoote, "The story of Jason, how he gotte the golden flece, and howe he did begyle Media [Medea], oute of Laten into Englisshē by Nycholas Whyte^w." Of the translator Whyte, I know nothing more.

Of Ovid's METAMORPHOSIS, the four first books were translated by Arthur Golding in 1565^x. "The fyrst fower bookes of the Metamorphosis^y owte of Latin into English meter by Arthur Golding, gentleman, &c. Imprinted at London by William Seres 1565^y." But soon afterwards he printed the whole, or, "The xv. Bookes of P. Ouidius Naso entytuled METAMORPHOSIS, translated out of Latin into English meetre, by Arthur Golding Gentleman. A worke uery pleasant and delectable. Lond. 1575." William Seres was the printer, as before^z. This work became a favorite, and was reprinted in 1587, 1603, and 1612^a. The dedication, an epistle in verse, is to Robert earl of Leicester, and dated at Berwick, April 20, 1567. In the metrical Preface to the Reader, which immediately follows, he apologises for having named so many fictitious and heathen gods. This apology seems to be intended for the weaker puritans^b. His style is poetical and spirited, and his versification clear: his manner ornamental and diffuse, yet with a sufficient observance of the original. On the whole, I think him a better poet and a better translator than Phœaier. This will appear from a few of the first lines of the second book, which his readers took for a description of an enchanted castle,

The princely pallace of the Sun, stood gorgeous to behold,
 On stately pillars builded high, of yellow burnisht gold;
 Beset with sparkling carbuncles, that like to fire did shine,
 The rooffe was framed curiously, of yubrie pure and fine.
 The two-doore-leves of siluer clere, a radiant light did cast:
 But yet the cunning workemanship of thinges therein far past
 The stuffe whereof the doores were made: for there a perfect plat
 Had Vulcane drawne of all the world, both of the sources that Embrace the earth with winding waves, and of the stedfast ground,
 And of the heauen itself also, that both encloseth round:
 And first and foremost of the sea, the gods thereof did stand,
 Loude-sounding Tryton, with his shrill and writen trumpe

 Unstable Protew, changing aye his figure and his hue,
 From shape to shape a thousand sights, as list him to renue.—

translator seems to have felt Ovid's imagery, and this perhaps is an imagery in which Ovid excells.

Golding's version of the METAMORPHOSIS kept its ground, till Sandys's English Ovid appeared in 1632. I know not who was the author of what is called a ballet, perhaps a translation from the Metamorphosis, licenced to John Charlewood, in 1569, "The vnfortunate ende of Iphis sonne vnto Teucer kynge of Troye^b." Nor must I omit "The tragicall and lamentable Historie of two faythfull mates Ceyx kynge of Thrachine, and Alcione his wife, drawn into English meeter by William Hubbard, 1569!" In stanzas*.

Golding was of a gentleman's family, a native of London, and lived with secretary Cecil at his house in the Strand^k. Among his patrons, as we may collect from his dedications, were also sir Walter Mildmay, William lord Cobham, Henry earl of Huntingdon, lord Leicester, sir Christopher Hatton, lord Oxford, and Robert earl of Essex. He was connected with sir Philip Sydney: for he finished an English translation of Philip Mornay's treatise in French on the Truth of Christianity, which had been begun by Sydney, and was published in 1587^l. He enlarged our knowledge of the treasures of antiquity by publishing English translations, of Justin's History

He has left versions of many modern Latin writers, which then had their use, and suited the condition and opinions of the times; and which are now forgotten, by the introduction of better books, and the general change of the system of knowledge. I think his only original work is an account of an Earthquake in 1580. Of his original poetry I recollect nothing more, than an encomiastic copy of verses prefixed to Baret's ALVEARE published in 1580. It may be regretted, that he gave so much of his time to translation. In GEORGE GASCOIGNE'S PRINCELY PLEASURES OF KENILWORTH-CASTLE, an entertainment in the year 1575*, he seems to have been a writer of some of the verses, "The devise of the Ladie of the Lake also was master Hunnes—The verses, as I think, were penned, some by master Hunnes, some by master Ferrers, and some by master Goldingham^q." The want of exactness through haste or carelessness, in writing or pronouncing names, even by cotemporaries; is a common fault, especially in our old writers; and I suspect Golding is intended in the last name^r. He is ranked among the celebrated translators by Webbe and Meres[†].

The learned Ascham wishes that some of these translators had used blank verse instead of rhyme. But by blank verse*, he seems to mean the English hexameter or some other Latin measure. He says, "Indeed Chaucer, Thomas Norton of Bristow, my Lord of Surry, M. Wiat, Thomas Phaier, and other gentlemen, in translating Ouide, Palingenius, and Seneça, haue gone as farre to their great praise as the cobby they followed could cary them. But if such good wittes, and forward diligence, had been directed to followe the best examples, and not haue beene caryed by tyme and custome to content themselves with that barbarous and rude Ryming, amongst theyr other woorthye prayses which they haue iustly deserued, this had not been the least, to be counted among men of learning and skill, more like vnto the Grecians than the Gothians in handling of theyr verse." The sentiments of another cotemporary critic on this subject were somewhat different. "In queene Maries time florished aboue any other doctour Phaier, one that was learned, and excellently well translated into English verse heroicall, certaine bookes of Virgil's Æneidos. Since him followed maister Arthur Golding, who with no less commendation turned into English meetre the Metamorphosis of Ouide, and that other doctour who made the supplement to those bookes of Virgil's Æneidos, which maister Phaier left vndoone." Again, he commends "Phaier and Golding, for a learned and well connected verse, specially in translation cleare, and verry faithfully answering their authours intent."

I learn from Coxeter's notes, that the FASTI were translated into English verse before the year 1570. If so, the many little pieces now current on the subject of LUCRETIA, although her legend is in Chaucer, might immediately originate from this source. In 1568, occurs, a Ballett called "the greivous complaynt of Lucrece^u." And afterwards, in the year 1569, is ^x It is remarkable, that the sign of Berthelette the king's printer in Fleetstreet, who flourished about 1540, was the Lucretia, or as he writes it, LUCRETIA ROMANA.

There is another Lucretia belonging to our old poetic story. Laneham, in his Narrative of the queen's visit at Kenilworth-castle in 1575, mentions among the favorite story-books "Lucrece and Euryalus." p. 24. This is, "A booke of ij lovers Euryalus and Lucreyssia [Lucretia] pleasaunte and dilectable," entered to T. Norton, in 1569. REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 189. a. Again, under the title of "A booke entituled the excellent historie of Euryalus and Lucretia," to T. Creede, Oct. 19, 1596. REGISTR. C. fol. 14. b. This story was first written in Latin prose, and partly from a real event, about the year 1440, by Æneas Sylvius, then imperial poet and secretary, afterwards pope Pius the Second. It may be seen in EPISTOLARUM LACONICARUM ET SELECTARUM FARRAGINES DUÆ, collected by Gilbertus Cognatus, and printed at Basil, 1554. 12mo. (See FARRAG. ii. p. 386.) In the course of the narrative, Lucretia is compared by her lover to Polyxena, Venus, and ÆMILIA. The last is the Emilia of Boccace's Theseid, or Palamon and Arcite, p. 481.

^y It is licenced to Colwell that year, with the title of the "pleasaunte fable of Ovide intituled Salmacis and Hermaphroditus." REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 135. a. [The printed title bears: "The pleasant fable of Hermaphroditus and Salmacis, by T. Peend, gent. with a morall in English verse. Anno Domini 1565, mense Decembris." 8vo. It begins:

Golding, was engaged in the same undertaking. Peend has a recommendatory poem prefixed to Studley's version of Seneca's AGAMEMNON, in 1566. In 1562, was licenced "the boke of Perymus and Thesbye," copied perhaps in the MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. I suppose a translation from Ovid's fable of Pyramus and Thisbe ².

The fable of Narcissus had been translated, and printed separately in 1560, by a nameless author, "The fable of Ovid tretting of Narcissus translated out of Latin into English mytre, with a moral thereunto, very plesante to rede, Lond. 1560 ²."

³ REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 92. a. To William Griffiths. I know not whether the following were regular versions of Ovid, or poems formed from his works now circulating in English. Such as, "the Ballet of Pygmalion," to R. Jones, in 1568. Ibid. fol. 176. a. Afterwards reprinted and a favourite story. There is the "Ballet of Pygmalion," in 1568. Ibid. fol. 176. a.—"A ballet intituled the Golden Apple," to W. Pickering, in 1568. Ibid. fol. 175. a.—"A ballet intituled, Hercules and his Ende," to W. Griffiths, in 1563. Ibid. fol. 102. b. There is also, which yet may be referred to another source, "A ballet intituled the History of Troilus, whose troth had well been tryed," to Purfoote, in 1565. Ibid. fol. 134. b. This occurs again in 1581, and 1608. The same may be said of the "History of the tow [two] mooste noble prynces of the worlde Astionux and Polixene [Astyanax] of Troy," to T. Hackett, in 1565. Ibid. fol. 139. a. Again, in 1567, "the ballet of Acrisious," that is, Acrisius the father of Danae. Ibid. fol. 177. b. Also, "A ballet of the mesyrable state of king Medas," or Midas, in 1569. Ibid. fol. 185. b. These are a few and early instances out of many. Of the METAMORPHOSIS OF PYGMALIONS IMAGE, by Marston, printed 1598, and alluded to by Shakespeare, [M.E.A.S. M.E.A.S. iii. 2.] more will be said here-⁴ after.

There is likewise, which may be referred hither, a "booke intituled Procris and Cephalus divided into four parts," licenced Oct. 22, 1598, to J. Wolfe, perhaps a play, and probably ridiculed in the MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, under the title Shefalus and Procrus. REGISTR. STATION. B. fol. 302. a. [Procris and Cephalus by A. Chute, is mentioned with his poem of Shore's Wife in Nashe's "Have with you to Saffron Walden," 1596, where he alludes to a number of Paphlagonian things more.—PARK.]

There is also, at least originating from the English Ovid, a pastoral play, presented by the queen's choir-boys, Peele's ARRAIGNEMENT OF PARIS, in 1584. And I have seen a little novel on that subject, with the same compliment to the queen, by Dickenson, in 1593. By the way, some passages are transferred from that novel into another written by Dickenson, "ARISBAS, Euphues amidst his slumbers, or Cupid's Journey to hell, &c. By J. D. Lond. For T. Creede, 1594. 4to." One of them, where Pomona falls in love with a beautiful boy named Hyalus, is as follows. Signat. E 3. "She, desirous to winne him with ouer-cloying kindnesse, fed him with apples, gaue him plumes, presented him peares. Having made this entrance into her future solace, she would vse oft his company, kisse him, coll him, check him, chucked him, walke with him, weepe for him, in the fields, neere the fountaines, sit with him, sue to him, omitting no kindes of dalliance to woe him," &c. I have selected this passage, because I think it was recollected by Shakespeare in the MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, where he describes the caresses bestowed

The translator's name was luckily suppressed. But at the close of the work are his initials, "Finis. T. H.*" Annexed to the fable is a moralisation of twice the length in the octave stanza. Almost every narrative was antiently supposed or made to be allegorical, and to contain a moral meaning. I have enlarged on this subject in the DISSERTATION ON THE GESTA ROMANORUM. In the reign of Elisabeth, a popular ballad had no sooner been circulated, than it was converted into a practical instruction, and followed by its MORALISATION. The old registers of the Stationers afford numerous instances of this custom, which was encouraged by the increase of puritanism^b.

To return. There is, to omit later instances, "A proper ballet dialogue-wise between Troylus and Cressida," Jun. 23, in 1581. REGISTR. STATION. B. fol. 180. b. "Endimion and Phebe," a booke, to John Busbye, April 12, 1595. Ibid. fol. 131. b. A ballad, "a mirror meete for wanton and insolent dames by example of Medusa kinge of Phorcus his daughter." Feb. 13, 1577. Ibid. fol. 145. b. "The History of Glaucus and Scylla," to R. Jones, Sept. 22, 1589. Ibid. fol. 248. b. Narcissus and Phaeton were turned into plays before 1610. See Heywood's APOLOG. ACTORS. Lilly's SAPHO and PHAO, ENDIMION, and MIDAS, are almost too well known to be enumerated here. The two last, with his GALATHEA, were licenced to T. Man, Oct. 1, 1590. [But see supr. p. 232.] Of PENELOPES WEBBE, unless Greene's, I can say nothing, licenced to E. Aggas, Jun. 26, 1587. Ibid. fol. 219. b. Among Har-

These initials have been hitherto undecyphered. At the end of Knox's APPELLATION to the Scotch bishops, printed at Geneva in 1558, is psalm 93, turned into metre by W. Kethe. 12mo. He wrote, about the same time, A ballad on the fall of the whore of Babylon, called "Tye the mare Tom-boy." See vol. iii. p. 453. n. And Strype, ANN. REF. vol. ii. Ovid's IBIS was translated, and illustrated with annotations, by Thomas Underdowne, born, and I suppose educated, at Oxford. It was printed at London in 1569^d, with a dedication to Thomas Sackville, lord Buckhurst*, the author of GORBO-DUC, and entitled, "Ouid his inuective against Ibis Translated into meeter, whereunto is added by the translator a short draught of all the stories and tales contayned therein uery pleasant to read. ^e Both are in octavo. Salmacis and Hermaphroditus was translated by F. Beaumont, 1602. He also translated part of Ovid's REMEDY OF LOVE. As did sir T. Overbury the whole soon afterwards, Lond. 1620. 8vo. But I believe there is a former edition, no date, 8vo.

Whole fiftie yeares be gone and past

The same author opened a new field of romance, and which seems partly to have suggested sir Philip Sydney's ARCADIA, in translating into English prose the ten books of Heliodorus's Ethiopic history, in 1577^f. This work, the beginning of which was afterwards versified by Abraham Fraunce in 1591, is dedicated to Edward earl of Oxford. The knights and dames of chivalry, sir Tristram and Bel Isoulde, now began to give place to new lovers and intrigues: and our author published the Excellent historie of Theseus and Ariadne, most probably suggested by Ovid, which was printed at London in 1566^g.

The ELEGIES of Ovid, which convey the obscenities of the brothel in elegant language, but are seldom tinctured with the sentiments of a serious and melancholy love, were translated by Christopher Marlowe below mentioned, and printed at Middleburgh without date. This book was ordered to be burnt at Stationers' hall, in 1599, by command of the archbishop of Canterbury and the bishop of London^h.

Ovid's REMEDY OF LOVE had an anonymous translator in 1599ⁱ. But this version was printed the next year under the title of "Ovidius Naso his REMEDIE OF LOVE, translated and entituled to the youth of England, by F. L. London 1600^k."

The HEROICAL EPISTLES of Ovid, with Sabinus's Answers, were set out and translated by George Turberville, a celebrated writer of poems in the reign of queen Elisabeth, and of whom more will be said in his proper place^l. This version was printed in 1567, and followed by two editions^m. It is dedicated to Thomas Howard viscount Byndonⁿ. Six of the Epistles are rendered in blank verse. The rest in four-lined stanzas. The printer is John Charlewood, who appears to have been printer to the family of Howard, and probably was retained as a domestic for that liberal purpose in Arundel-house, the seat of elegance and literature till Cromwell's usurpation^o. Turberville was a polite scholar, and some of the passages are not unhappily turned. From Penelope to Ulysses.

Coxeter says, that he had seen one of Ovid's Epistles translated by Robert earl of Essex. This I have never seen; and, if it could be recovered, I trust it would only be valued as a curiosity. A few of his sonnets are in the Ashmolean Museum, which have no marks of poetic genius. He is a vigorous and elegant writer of prose. But if Essex was no poet, few noblemen of his age were more courted by poets. From Spenser to the lowest rhymers he was the subject of numerous sonnets, or popular ballads. I will not except Sydney. I could produce evidence to prove, that he scarce ever went out of England, or even left London, on the most frivolous enterprise, without a pastoral in his praise, or a panegyric in metre, which were sold and sung in the streets. Having interested himself in the fashionable poetry of the times, he was placed high in the ideal Arcadia now just established: and among other instances which might be brought, on his return from Portugal in 1589, he was complimented with a poem, called "An Egloge gratulatorie entituled to the right honourable and renowned shepherd of Albions Arcadie Robert earl of Essex and for his returne lately into England⁹." This is a light in which lord Essex is seldom viewed. I know not if the queen's fatal partiality, or his own inherent attractions, his love of literature, his heroism, integrity, and generosity, qualities which abundantly overbalance his presumption, his vanity, and impetuosity, had the greater share in dictating these praises. If adulation were any where justifiable, it must be when paid to the man who endeavoured to save Spenser from starving in the streets of Dublin, and who buried him in Westminster-abbey with becoming solemnity. Spenser was persecuted by Burleigh, because he was patronised by Essex.

Thomas Churchyard, who will occur again, rendered the three first of the TRISTIA, which he dedicated to sir Christopher Hatton, and printed at London in 1580^r.

Among Coxeter's papers is mentioned the ballet of Helen's epistle to Paris, from Ovid, in 1570, by B. G. I suspect this B. G. to be the author of a poem called "A booke intituled a new tragicall historye of too lovers," as it is entered in the register of the Stationers, where it is licenced to Alexander Lacy, under the year 1563^t. Ames recites this piece as written by Ber. Gar. perhaps Bernard Garter^t. Unless Gar, which I do not think, be the full name. The title of BALLET was often applied to poems of considerable length. Thus in the register of the Stationers, Sackville's LEGEND OF BUCKINGHAM, a part of the MIRROUR FOR MAGISTRATES, is recited, under the year 1557, among a great number of ballads, some of which seem to be properly so styled, and entitled, "The murninge of Edward duke of Buckynham." Colwell, in 1565^w." This was from the grand romance of Alexander^x. Sometimes a Ballad is a work in prose. I cannot say whether, "A ballet intituled the incorraggen all kynde of men to the reedyfyng and buyldynge Poules steeple againe," printed in 1564^y, was a pathetic ditty, or a pious homily, or both. A play or interlude was sometimes called a ballet, as, "A Ballet intituled AN ENTERLUDE, The cruel detter by Wayer," printed for Colwell, in 1565^z. Religious subjects were frequently called by this vague and indiscriminating name. In 1561, was published "A new ballet of iiij commandements^a." That is, four of the Ten Commandments in metre. Again, among many others of the same kind, as puritanism gained ground, "A ballet intituled the xvijth chapter of the iiijth [second] boke of Kynges^b." To this licentious publication, of which my friend Mr. Douce possesses a fragment, John Hall designed his COURTE OF VERTUE as a moral and religious antidote. In his metrical prologue it is thus described and stigmatized, as the study of loose readers,

A booke also of songes they have,
And VENUS' COURT they doe it name:
No fylthy mynde a songe can crave,

But therin he may finde the same:
And in such songes is all their game.

Nashe also in his "Anatomic of Absurditie," 1589, passed a censure on Venus' Court. As the Courte of Vertue by Hall is a book of uncommon rarity, I subjoin a short specimen. It is taken from a ditty named 'Blame not my lute.'

Blame not my lute, though it doe sounde

It is extraordinary, that Horace's ODES should not have been translated within the period of which we are speaking^d. Imprinted at London in Fletestrete nere to S. Dunstones church, by Thomas Marshe, 1567^h.” This version is very paraphrastic,

Blame not my lute, I you desyre,

What follows is too curious not to be transcribed, as it is a picture of the popular learning, and a ridicule of the idle narratives, of the reign of queen Elisabeth. Hollinshed's and Stowe's CRONICLES became at length the only fashionable reading. In The Guls Horn-book, it is said, "The top [the leads] of saint Paules contains more names than Stowe's Cronicle." Horace's satirical writings, and even his Odes, are undoubtedly more difficult to translate than the narrations of epic poetry, which depend more on things than words: nor is it to be expected, that his satires and epistles should be happily rendered into English at this infancy of style and taste, when his delicate turns could not be expressed, his humour and his urbanity justly relished, and his good sense and observations on life understood. Drant seems to have succeeded best in the exquisite Epistle to Tibullus, which I will therefore give entire.

Drant undertook this version in the character of a grave divine, and as a teacher of morality. He was educated at saint John's college in Cambridge; where he was graduated in theology, in the year 1569^s. The same year he was appointed prebendary of Chichester and of 'saint Pauls. The following year he was installed archdeacon of Lewes in the cathedral of Chichester. These preferments he probably procured by the interest of Grindall archbishop of York, of whom he was a domestic chaplain^t. He was a tolerable Latin poet. He translated the ECCLESIASTES into Latin hexameters, which he dedicated to sir Thomas Henneage, a common and a liberal patron of these times, and printed at London in 1572^u. At the beginning and end of this work, are six smaller pieces in Latin verse. Among these are the first sixteen lines of a paraphrase on the book of JOB. He has two miscellanies of Latin poetry extant, the one entitled SYLVA, dedicated to queen Elisabeth,

In the SYLVA, he mentions his new version of David's psalms, I suppose in English verse ^x. In the same collection, he says he had begun to translate the Iliad, but had gone no further than the fourth book ^y. He mentions also his version of the Greek EPIGRAMS of Gregory Nazianzen ^z. But we are at a loss to discover, whether the latter were English, or Latin versions. The indefatigably inquisitive bishop Tanner has collected our translator's Sermons, six in number, which are more to be valued for their type than their doctrine, and at present are of little more use, than to fill the catalogue of the typographical antiquary ^a. Two of them were preached at

He has a Latin epitaph, or elegy, on the death of doctor Cuthbert Scot, designed bishop of Chester, but deposed by queen Elizabeth for popery, who died a fugitive at Louvaine, Lond. 1565. He probably wrote this piece abroad. There is licensed to T. Marsh, in 1565, "An Epigram of the death of Cuthbert Skotte by Roger Sherlock, and replied agaynste by Thomas Drant." *REGISTR. D., and these are what he intended probably to assign to the Archdeacon.—PARK.]

Historical ballads occur about this period with the initials T. D. These may easily be mistaken for Thomas Drant, but they stand for Thomas Deloney, a famous ballad writer of these times*, mentioned by Kemp, one of the original actors in Shakespeare's plays, in his NINE DATES WONDER. Kemp's miraculous morris-dance, performed in nine days from London to Norwich, had been misrepresented in the popular ballads, and he thus remonstrates against some of their authors. "I haue made a priuie search what priuate jig-monger of your jolly number had been the author of these abhominable ballets written of me. I was told it was the great ballade maker T. D. or Thomas Deloney, chronicler of the memorable Lives of the SIX YEOMEN OF THE WEST, JACK OF NEWBERY^c, THE GENTLE CRAFT^d, and such like honest men, omitted by Stowe, Hollinshed, Grafton, Hall, Froysart, and the rest of those well-deseruing writers^e."

I am informed from some manuscript authorities, that in the year 1571, Drant printed an English translation from Tully, which he called, The chosen eloquent oration of Marcus Tullius Cicero for the poet Archias, selected from his orations, and now first published in English^f. I have never seen this version, but I am of opinion that the translator might have made a more happy choice. For in this favorite piece of superficial declamation, the specious orator, when he is led to a formal defence of the value and dignity of poetry; instead of illustrating his subject by insisting on the higher utilities of poetry, its political nature, and its importance to society, enlarges only on the immortality which the art confers, on the poetic faculty being communicated by divine inspiration, on the public honours paid to Homer and Ennius, on the esteem with which poets were regarded by Alexander and Themistocles, on the wonderful phenomenon of an extemporaneous effusion of a great number of verses, and even recurs to the trite and obvious topics of a school-boy in saying, that poems are a pleasant relief after fatigue of the mind, and that hard rocks and savage beasts have been moved by the power of song. A modern philosopher would have considered such a subject with more penetration, comprehension, and force of reflection. His excuse must be, that he was uttering a popular harangue,

SECTION LIX.

THE EPIGRAMS of Martial were translated in part by Timothy Kendall, born at North Aston in Oxfordshire, successively educated at Eton and at Oxford, and afterwards a student of the law at Staple's-inn. This performance, which cannot properly or strictly be called a translation of Martial, has the following title, "FLOWRES OF EPIGRAMMES out of sundrie the most singular authors selected, etc. By Timothie Kendall late of the vniuersitie of Oxford, now student of Staple Inn. London, 1577^a." It is dedicated to Robert earl of Leicester. The epigrams translated are from Martial, Pictorius, Borbonius, Politian, Bruno, Textor, Ausonius, the Greeke anthology, Beza, sir Thomas More, Henry Stephens, Haddon^b, Parkhurst^c, and others. But by much the greater part is from Martial^d. It is charitable to hope, that our translator Timothy Kendall wasted no more of his time at Staples-inn in culling these fugitive blossoms. Yet he has annexed to these versions his TRIFLES or juvenile epigrams, which are dated the same year^e.

^d Kendall is mentioned among the English EPIGRAMMATISTS by Meres, ubi supr. fol. 274.

^e The first line is,

"Borbon in France bears bell awaie,"

That is, Nicholas Borbonius, whose NUGÆ, or Latin Epigrams, then celebrated, have great elegance. But Joachim du Bellu made this epigram on the Title:

Meres, in his WITS TREASURY, mentions doctor Johnson, as the translator of Homer's BATRACHOMUOMACHY, and Watson of Sophocles's ANTIGONE, but with such ambiguity, that it is difficult to determine from his words whether these versions are in Latin or English^f. That no reader may be misled, I observe here, that Christopher Johnson, a celebrated head-master of Winchester school, afterwards a physician, translated Homer's FROGS AND MICE into Latin hexameters, which appeared in quarto, at London, in 1580^g. Thomas Watson, author of a HUNDRED SONNETS, or the passionate century of Love, published a Latin ANTIGONE in 1581^h. The latter publication, however, shews at this time an attention to the Greek tragedies.

Christopher Marlowe, or Marloe, educated in elegant letters at Cambridge, Shakespeare's cotemporary on the stage, often applauded both by queen Elisabeth and king James the First, as a judicious player, esteemed for his poetry by Jonson and Drayton, and one of the most distinguished tragic poets of his age, translated Coluthus's RAPE OF HELEN into English rhyme, in the year 1587. I have never seen it; and I owe this information to the manuscript papers of a diligent collector of these fugacious anecdotesⁱ. But there is entered to Jones, in 1595, "A booke entituled RAPTUS HELENÆ, Helens Rape, by the Athenian duke Theseus^k." Coluthus's poem was probably brought into vogue, and suggested to Marlowe's notice, by being paraphrased in Latin verse the preceding year by Thomas Watson, the writer of sonnets just mentioned^l. Before the year 1598, appeared Marlowe's translation of the LOVES OF HERO AND LEANDER, the elegant prolusion of an unknown

The translation, as the entire work of Marlowe, is mentioned twice in Nashe's LENTEN STUFF, printed in 1599. It occurs again in the registers of the Stationers, in 1597, 1598, and 1600. REGISTR. C. fol. 31. a. 34. a. I learn from Mr. Malone, that Marlowe finished only the two first Sestiads, and about one hundred lines of the third. Chapman did the remainder. Petowe published the Whipping of Runaways, for Burbie, in 1603.

There is an old ballad on Jephtha judge of Israel, by William Petowe. In the year 1567, there is an entry to Alexander Lacy, of "A ballett intituled the Songe of Jesphas dowghter at his death." REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 162. a. Perhaps this is the old song of which Hamlet in joke throws out some scraps to Polonius, and which has been recovered by Mr. Stevens. HAMLET, Act ii. Sc. 7. [See also Jeffa judge of Israel, in REGISTR. D. fol. 93. Dec. 14, 1624.] This is one of the pieces which Hamlet calls pious chansons; and which taking their rise from the Reformation, abounded in the reign of Elisabeth. Hence, by the way, we see the propriety of reading pious chansons, and not pons chansons, or ballads sung on bridges, with Pope. Rowe arbitrarily substituted Rubric, not that the titles of old ballads were ever printed in red. Rubric came at length simply to signify title, because, in the old manuscripts, it was the custom to write the titles or heads of chapters in red ink. In the Statutes of Winchester and New college, every statute is therefore called a RUBRICA.

ⁿ But this version of Lucan is entered, as above, Sept. 28, 1593, to John Wolfe, Ibid. fol. 300. b. Nor does it always appear at the end of MUSÆUS in 1600. There is an edition that year by P. Short.

To the joint version of Marlow and Chapman, Cokain thus alludes in his "Remedy for Love:":

It probably suggested to Shakespeare the allusion to Hero and Leander, in the MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, under the player's blunder of Limander and Helen, where the interlude of 'Thisbe is presented^p. It has many nervous and polished verses. His tragedies manifest traces of a just dramatic conception, but they abound with tedious and uninteresting scenes, or with such extravagancies as proceeded from a want of judgment, and those barbarous ideas of the times, over which it was the peculiar gift of Shakespeare's genius alone to triumph and to predominate^q. His TRAGEDY OF DIDO QUEEN OF CARTHAGE was completed and published by his friend Thomas Nashe, in 1594^r.

^q Nashe in his Elegy prefixed to Marlowe's Dido, mentions five of his plays. Mr. Malone is of opinion, from a similarity of style, that the Tragedy of Locrine, published in 1595, attributed to Shakespeare, was written by Marlowe. SUPPL. SHAKESP. ii. 190. He conjectures also Marlowe to be the author of the old KING JOHN. Ibid. i. 163. And of TITUS ANDRONICUS, and of the lines spoken by the players in the interlude in HAMLET. Ibid. i. 371.

"Come gentle Ganimed!"

It has been frequently confounded with

John Rightwise's play on the same subject performed at saint Paul's school before Cardinal Wolsey, and afterwards before queen Elisabeth at Cambridge, in 1564.

[I doubt whether any play that had been acted before Cardinal Wolsey, could be performed again before queen Elisabeth, as on such occasions I believe they never exhibited stale or second-hand goods, but fresh for the nonce.—ASHBY.]

I have before mentioned the Latin tragedy of Dido and Eneas, performed at Oxford, in 1583, before the prince Alasco. [See supr. iii. 210.] See what Hamlet says to the first Player on this favorite story. In 1564, was entered a "ballet of a lover blamyng his fortune by Dido and Eneas for thayre vntruth." REGISTR. STATION. A. fol. 116. a. In the TEMPEST, Gonzalo mentions the "widow Dido." ACT iii. Sc. i. On old ballads we read the Tune of queen Dido. Perhaps from some ballad on the subject, Shakespeare took his idea of Dido standing with a willow in her hand on the sea-shore, and beckoning Encas back to Carthage. MENCH. VEN. ACT v. Sc. i. Shakespeare has also strangely falsified Dido's story, in the S. P. of K. HENRY THE SIXTH, ACT iii. Sc. ii. In the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, a sort of critical play, acted at Cambridge in 1606, Marlowe's buskined MUSE is celebrated^u. His cotemporary Decker, Jonson's antagonist, having allotted to Chaucer and graue Spenser, the highest seat in the Elisian grove of Bayes, has thus arranged Marlowe. "In another companie sat learned Atchlow* and, (tho he had ben a player molded out of their pennes, yet because he had been their louer and register to the Muse) inimitable Bentley†: these were likewise carousing out of the holy well, &c. That Marlowe was a favorite with Jonson, appears from the Preface to one Bosworth's poems; who says, that Jonson used to call the mighty lines of Marlowe's MUSÆUS fitter for admiration than parallel. Thomas Heywood, who published Marlowe's JEW OF MALTA, in 1633, wrote the Prologue, spoken at the Cockpit, in which Marlowe is highly commended both as a player and a poet. It was in this play that Allen, the founder of Dulwich college; acted the JEW with so much applause.

Heywood, in his Apologie, celebrates "Knell, Bentley, Mills, Wilson, and Lanam, as players who by the report of many judicial auditors, performed many parts so absolute, that it were a sin to drowne their works in Lethæ." John Bentley is introduced by Ritson in Bibl. Poetica, as the author of a few short poems in an ancient MS. belonging to Samuel Lysons, Esq. Marlowe's wit and spriteliness of conversation had often the unhappy effect of tempting him to sport with sacred subjects; more perhaps from the preposterous ambition of courting the casual applause of profligate and unprincipled companions, than from any systematic disbelief of religion. His scepticism, whatever it might be, was construed by the prejudiced and peevish puritans into absolute atheism: and they took pains to represent the unfortunate catastrophe of his untimely death, as an immediate judgment from heaven upon his execrable impiety^x. He was in love, and had for his rival, to use the significant words of Wood, "a bawdy servingman, one rather fitter to be a pimp, than an ingenious amoretto, as Marlowe conceived himself to be^y." The consequence was, that an affray ensued; in which the antagonist having by superior agility gained an opportunity of strongly grasping Marlow's wrist, plunged his dagger with his own hand into his own head. By the way, Marlowe in his EDWARD THE SECOND, seems to have ridiculed the puritans under the character of the scholar Spencer, who "says a long grace at a tables end, wears a little band, buttons like pins heads, and Though inwardly licentious enough," &c.

A proof of the credulous ignorance which still prevailed, and a specimen of the subjects which then were thought not improper for tragedy, A tale which at the close of the sixteenth century had the possession of the public theatres of our metropolis, now only frightens children at a puppet-show in a country-town. But that the learned John Faust continued to maintain the character of a conjuror in the sixteenth century even by authority, appears from a "Ballad of the life and death of doctor Faustus the great congerer," which in 1588 was licenced to be printed by the learned Aylmer bishop of London^b.

As Marlowe, being now considered as a translator, and otherwise being generally ranked only as a dramatic poet, will not occur again, I take this opportunity of remarking here, that the delicate sonnet called the PASSIONATE SHEPHERD TO HIS LOVE, falsely attributed to Shakespeare, and which occurs in the third act of THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, followed by the nymph's Reply, was written by Marlowe^c. Isaac Walton in his COMPLETE ANGLER, a book perhaps composed about the year 1640, although not published till 1653, has inserted this sonnet, with the reply, under the character of "that smooth song which was made by Kit Marlowe, now at least fifty years ago: and—^dan Answer to it which was made by sir Walter Raleigh, in his younger days: old fashioned poetry, but choicely good." That Marlowe was admirably qualified for what Mr. Mason, with a happy and judicious propriety, calls PURE POETRY, will appear from the following passage of his forgotten tragedy of EDWARD THE SECOND, written in the year 1590, and first printed in 1598. The highest entertainments, then in fashion, are contrived for the gratification of the infatuated Edward, by his profligate minion Piers Gaveston*.

Another very able critic (Ritson) contends that this signature was affixed by the publisher to express by it his ignorance of the author's name. It must be allowed that these lines are in Marlowe's best manner. His chief fault in description is an indulgence of the florid style, and an accumulation of conceits, yet resulting from a warm and brilliant fancy. As in the following description of a river.

Criticisms of this kind were not common, after the national taste had been just corrupted^l by the false and capricious refinements of the court of Charles the Second.

Ten books of Homer's ILLIAD were translated from a métrical French version into English by A. H. or Arthur Hall esquire, of Grantham, and a member of parliament¹, and printed at London by Ralph Newberie, in 1581^m. This translation has no other merit than that of being the first appearance of a part of the Iliad in an English dress. I do not find that he used any known French version[†]. He sometimes consulted the Latin interpretation, where his French copy failed. It is done in the Alexandrine of Sternhold. In the Dedication to sir Thomas Cecil, he compliments the distinguished translators of his age, Phaier, Golding, Jasper Heywood, and Googe; together with the worthy workes of lord Buckhurst, "and the pretie pythie Conceits of M. couragement of, "Mr. Robert Askame", a familiar acquaintance of Homer."

But a complete and regular version of Homer was reserved for George Chapman. He began with printing the Shield of Achilles, in 1596°. This was followed by seven books of the ILIAD the same year°. Fifteen books were printed in 1600°. At length appeared without date, an entire translation of the ILIAD under the following title, "The ILIADS OF HOMER Prince of Poets. Neuer before in any language truely translated. With a comment uppon some of his chief places: Done according to the Greeke by George Chapman. At London, printed for Nathaniell Butter." It is dedicated in English heroics to Prince Henry. This circumstance proves that the book was printed at least after the year 1603, in which James the First acceded to the throne°. Then follows an anagram on the name of his gracious Mccenas prince Henry, and a sonnet to the sole empressse of beautie queen Anne. In a metrical address to the reader he remarks, but with little truth, that the English language, abounding in consonant monosyllables, is eminently adapted to rhythmical poetry. The doctrine that an allegorical sense was hid under the narratives of epic poetry had not yet ceased; and he here promises a poem on the mysteries he had newly discovered in Homer. In the Preface, he declares that the last twelve books were translated in fifteen weeks: yet with the advice of his learned and valued friends, Master Robert Hews°, and Master Harriots. It is certain that the whole performance betrays the negligence of haste. He pays his acknowledgements to his "most ancient, learned, and right noble friend, Master Richard Stapilton", the first most desertfull mouer in the frame of our Homer." He endeavours to obviate a popular objection, perhaps not totally groundless, that he consulted the prose Latin version more than the Greek original. He says, sensibly enough, "it is the part of euery knowing and iudicious interpreter, not to follow the number and order of words, but the materiall things themselues, and sentences to weigh diligently; and to clothe and adorne them with words, and such a stile and forme of oration, as are most apt for the language into which they are conuerted." The danger lies, in too lavish an application of this sort of cloathing, that it may not disguise what it should only adorn. I do not say that this is Chapman's fault: but he has by no means represented the dignity or the simplicity of Homer. He is sometimes paraphrastic and redundant, but more frequently retrenches or impoverishes what he could not feel and express. In the mean time, he labours with the inconvenience of an aukward, inharmonious, and unheroic measure, imposed by custom, but disgustful to modern ears. Yet he is not always without strength or spirit. He has enriched our language with many compound epithets, so much in the manner of Homer, such as the silver-footed Thetis, the silver-throned Juno, the triple-feathered helme, the high-walled Thebes, the faire-haired boy, the silver-flowing floods, the hugely-peopled towns, the Grecians navy-bound, the strong-winged lance, and many more which might be collected. Dryden reports, that Waller never could read Chapman's Homer without a degree of transport. Pope is of opinion, that Chapman covers his defects "by a daring fiery spirit that animates his translation, which is something like what one might imagine Homer himself to have writ before he arrived to years of discretion."

But his fire is too frequently darkened, by that sort of fustian which now disfigured the diction of our tragedy.

times to the length of a paragraph of twelve lines*. A diligent observer will easily discern, that Pope was no careless reader of his rude predecessor. Pope complains that Chapman took advantage of an unmeasurable length of line. But in reality Pope's lines are longer than Chapman's. If Chapman affected the reputation of rendering line for line, the specious expedient of chusing a protracted measure which concatenated two lines together, undoubtedly favoured his usual propensity to periphrasis.

Chapman's commentary is only incidental, contains but a small degree of critical excursion, and is for the most part a pedantic compilation from Spondanus. He was the boldness severely to censure Scaliger's impertinence. It is remarkable that he has taken no illustrations from Eustathius, except through the citations of other commentators. But of Eustathius there was no Latin interpretation.

This volume is closed with sixteen Sonnets by the author, addressed to the chief nobility^c. It was now a common practice, by these unpoetical and empty panegyrics, to attempt to conciliate the attention, and secure the protection, of the great, without which it was supposed to be impossible for any poem to struggle into celebrity. Habits of submission, and the notions of subordination, now prevailed in a high degree; and men looked up to peers, on whose smiles or frowns they believed all sublunary good and evil to depend, with a reverential awe. Henry Lock subjoined to his metrical paraphrase of Ecclesiastes, and his Sundry Christian Passions contained in two hundred Sonnets, both printed together for Field, in 1597,

And, not to multiply more instances, Spenser in compliance with a disgraceful custom, or rather in obedience to the established tyranny of patronage, prefixed to the FAIRY QUEENE fifteen of these adulatory pieces, which in every respect are to be numbered among the meanest of his compositions^e.

In the year 1614, Chapman printed his version of the ODYSSEY, which he dedicated to king James's favorite, Carr earl of Somerset. This was soon followed by the BATRACHOMUOMACHY, and the HYMNS, and EPIGRAMS. But I find long before Chapman's time, "A Ballett betweene the myce and the frogges," licenced to Thomas East the printer, in 1568^f. And there is a ballad, "A moste strange weddinge of the frogge and the mouse," in 1580^g.

He is also supposed to have translated Hesiod. But this notion seems to have arisen from these lines of Drayton, which also contain a general and a very honourable commendation of Chapman's skill as a translator^h.

I believe Chapman only translated about fourteen lines from the beginning of the second book of Hesiod's WORKS AND DAYS, "as well as I could in haste," which are inserted in his commentary on the thirteenth Iliad for an occasional illustration^k. Here is a proof on what slight grounds assertions of this sort are often founded, and, for want of examination, transmitted to posterity^l.

^m But this is said not without some degree of restriction. For Chapman lations, therefore, which were begun before the year 1600, require that we should here acquaint the reader with some particulars of his life. He wrote eighteen plays, which, although now forgotten, must have contributed in no inconsiderable degree to enrich and advance the English stage*. He was born in 1557, perhaps in Kent. He passed about two years at Trinity college in Oxford, with a contempt of philosophy, but in a close attention to the Greek and Roman classics^a. Leaving the university about 1576, he seems to have been led to London in the character of a poet; where he soon commenced a friendship with Spenser, Shakespeare, Marlowe, and Daniel, and attracted the notice of secretary Walsingham. He probably acquired some appointment in the court of king James the First; where untimely death, and unexpected disgrace, quickly deprived him of his liberal patrons Prince Henry and Carr. Jonson was commonly too proud, either to assist, or to be assisted; yet he engaged with Chapman and Marston in writing the comedy of EASTWARD HOE, which was performed by the children of the revels in 1605^o. But this association wrote "OVID'S BANQUET OF SARCASMS, A Coronet for his mistress Philosophy and his amorous Zodiac. Lond. 1595. 4to." To which is added, "THE AMOROUS CONTENTION of Phillis and Flora," a translation by Chapman from a Latin poem, written, as he says, by a Friar in the year 1400. There is also his PERSUS AND ANDROMEDA, dedicated in a prolix metrical Epistle to Carr earl of Somerset and Frances his countess. Lond. 1614. 4to. Chapman wrote a vindication of this piece, both in prose and verse, called, A free and offenceless Justification of a late published and misinterpreted poem entitled ANDROMEDA LIBERATA. Lond. 1614. 4to.

Among Chapman's pieces recited by Wood, the following does not appear. "A booke called Petrarkes seauen penitentiall psalmes in verse, paraphrastically translated, with other poems philosophical, and a hymne to Christ upon the crosse, written by Geo. Chapman." To Matthew Selman, Jan. 19, 1611. REGISTER. STATION. C. fol. 215. a.

* [In the Epigrams of Freeman, 1614, Chapman was thus quaintly complimented for having surpassed his cotemporary playwrights, and more nearly approached to the style of the writers of ancient comedy.

Our comedians thou outstrippest quite,
And all the hearers more than all do-

With unaffected stile and sweetest straine
Thy inambitious pen keeps on her pace,
And commeth near'st the ancient com-mick vaine.

gave Jonson an opportunity of throwing out many satirical parodies on Shakespeare with more security*. All the three authors, however, were in danger of being pilloried for some reflections on the Scotch nation, which were too seriously understood by James the First. When the societies of Lincoln's-inn and the Middle-temple, in 1613, had resolved to exhibit a splendid masque at Whitehall in honour of the nuptials of the Palsgrave and the princess Elisabeth, Chapman was employed for the poetry, and Inigo Jones for the machinery. It is not clear, whether Dryden's resolution to burn annually one copy of Chapman's best tragedy BUSSY D'AMBOISE, to the memory of Jonson, was a censure or a compliment^p. He says, however, that this play pleased only in the representation, like a star which glitters only while it shoots. The manes of Jonson perhaps required some reconciliatory rites: for Jonson being delivered from Shakespeare, began unexpectedly to be disturbed at the rising reputation of a new theatric rival. Wood says, that Chapman was "a person of most reverend aspect, religious and temperate, QUALITIES RARELY MEETING IN A POET^q!" The truth is, he does not seem to have mingled in the dissipations and indiscretions, which then marked his profession †. friend Inigo Jones planned and erected a monument to his memory, in the style of the new architecture, which was unluckily destroyed with the old church^r. There was an intimate friendship between our author and this celebrated restorer of Grecian palaces. Chapman's MUSÆUS, not that begun by Marlowe, but published in 1616, has a dedication to Jones: in which he is addressed as the most skilful and ingenious architect that England had yet seen.

As a poetical novel of Greece, it will not be improper to mention here, the CLITOPHON AND LEUCIPPE of Achilles Tatius, under the title of "The most delectable and plesant Historye of Clitophon and Leucippe from the Greek of Achilles Statius, &c. by W. B. Lond. 1577^s." The president Montesquieu, whose refined taste was equal to his political wisdom, is of opinion, that a certain notion of tranquillity in the fields of Greece, gave rise to the description of soft and amorous sentiments in the Greek romance of the middle age. But that gallantry sprung from the tales of Gothic chivalry. "Une certaine idée de tranquillité dans les campagnes de la Grece, fit decuire les sentimens de l'amour. On peut voir les Romans de Grecs du moyen age. L'idée des Paladins, protecteurs de la vertu et de la beauté des femmes, conduisit à celle de la galanterie^t." * [Thus largely entitled; "The Zo-diake of Life, written by the excellent and Christian poet Marcellus Palingenius Stellatus. Wherein are contained twelve severall labours, pointing out most lively, the whole compass of the world, the reformation of manners, the miseries of mankinde, the path way to vertue and vice, the eternitie of the soule, the course of the heavens, the misteries of nature, and diuers other circumstances of great learning, and no lesse iudgement. ters of every kind are omitted^c. This edition is dedicated to lord Buckhurst^d.

From the title of this work, ZODIACUS VITÆ, written in Latin hexameters by Marcello Palingeni, an Italian, about the year 1531, the reader at least expects some astronomical allusions. But it has not the most distant connection with the stars: except that the poet is once transported to the moon, not to measure her diameter, but for a moral purpose; and that he once takes occasion, in his general survey of the world, and in reference to his title, to introduce a philosophic explanation of the zodiacal system^e. The author meaning to divide his poem into twelve books, chose to distinguish each with a name of the celestial signs: just as Herodotus, but with less affectation and inconsistency, marked the nine books or divisions of his history with the names of the nine Muses. Yet so strange and pedantic a title is not totally without a conceit, as the author was born at Stellada, or Stellata, a province of Ferrara, and from whence he calls himself Marcellus Palingenius Stellatus^f.

This poem is a general satire on life, yet without peevishness or malevolence; and with more of the solemnity of the censor, than the petulance of the satirist*. Much of the morality is couched under allegorical personages and adventures. The words as of matters mentioned in this whole worke. Imp. at London by Robert Robinson dwelling in Fetter Lane neere Holborne 1588." In this edition appears a translation of the Author's original preface addressed to Hercules II. Duke of Ferrar. The dedication is addressed to his former patron, Lord Burghley (not Buckhurst); and in this he declares, that although the number of faults in his rude translation made it impossible for him to amend it in all points, yet in overpassing many jarring discords, he had set the whole in as good tune as he could. He expresses an intention hereafter to attempt some matter worthy of the noble personage to whom he inscribes this.—PARK.]

From such a specimen it might be expected that alliteration had been studiously pursued in Googe's version, but this does not appear.—PARK.]

Latinity is tolerably pure, but there is a mediocrity in the versification. Palingenius's transitions often discover more quickness of imagination, and fertility of reflection, than solidity of judgment. Having started a topic, he pursues it through all its possible affinities, and deviates into the most distant and unnecessary digressions. Yet there is a facility in his manner, which is not always displeasing: nor is the general conduct of the work void of art and method. He moralises with a boldness and a liberality of sentiment, which were then unusual; and his maxims and strictures are sometimes tinged with a spirit of libertinism, which, without exposing the opinions, must have offended the gravity, of the more orthodox ecclesiastics. He fancies that a confident philosopher, who rashly presumes to scrutinise the remote mysteries of nature, is shewn in heaven like an ape, for the public diversion of the gods. A thought evidently borrowed by Pope^s. Although he submits his performance to the sentence of the church, he treats the authority of the popes, and the voluptuous lives of the monks, with the severest acrimony. It was the last circumstance that chiefly contributed to give this poem almost the rank of a classic in the reformed countries, and probably produced an early English translation. After his death, he was pronounced an heretic; and his body was taken up, and committed to the flames. A measure which only contributed to spread his book, and disseminate his doctrines.

Googe seems chiefly to have excelled in rendering the descriptive and flowery passages of this moral ZODIAC. He thus describes the Spring.

The earth againe doth florish greenè,
 The trees repaire their springe;
 With pleasaunt notes the nightingale
 Beginneth new to sing.
 With flowers fresh their heads bedect,

There is some poetic imagination in SAGITTARIUS, or the ninth book, where a divine mystagogue opens to the poet's eyes an unknown region of infernal kings and inhabitants. But this is an imitation of Dante. As a specimen of the translation, and of the author's fancy, I will transcribe some of this imagery.

Then follows a mixture of classical and christian history and mythology. This poem has many symptoms of the wildness and wanderings of Italian fiction.

One cannot but remark, that the conduct and machinery of the old visionary poems is commonly the same. A rural scene, generally a wilderness, is supposed. An imaginary being of consummate wisdom, a hermit, a goddess, or an angel, appears; and having purged the poet's eye with a few drops of some celestial elixir, conducts him to the top of an inaccessible mountain, which commands an unbounded plain filled with all nations. A cavern opens, and displays the torments of the damned: he next is introduced into heaven, by way of the moon, the only planet which was thought big enough for a poetical visit. Although suddenly deserted by his mystic intelligencer, he finds himself weary and desolate, on the seashore, in an impassable forest, or a flowery meadow.

The following is the passage which Pope has copied from Palingenius: and as Pope was a great reader of the old English poets, it is most probable that he took it immediately from our translator, or found it by his direction^q.

An Ape, quoth she, and iesting-stock
 Is Man, to god in skye,
 As oft as he doth trust his wit
 Too much, presuming hie,

Googe, supposed to have been a native of Alvingham in Lincolnshire, was a scholar, and was educated both at Christ's college in Cambridge, and New-college in Oxford. He is complimented more than oncè in Turberville's SONNETS^t. He published other translations in English. I have already cited his version of Naogeorgus's hexametrical poem on ANTICHRIST, or the PAPAL DOMINION^{*}, printed at London in 1570, and dedicated to his chief patron sir William Cecil^u. The dedication is dated from Staples-inn, where he was a student. At the end of the book, is his version of the same author's SPIRITUAL AGRICULTURE, dedicated to queen Elisabeth^w. Thomas Naogeorgus, a German, whose real name is Kirchmaier, was one of the many moral or rather theological Latin poets produced by the reformation^x. Googe also translated and enlarged Conrade Heresbach's treatise on agriculture, gardening, orchards, cattle, and domestic fowls¹. This version was printed in 1577, and dedicated from Kingston to sir William Fitzwilliams². Among Crynes's curious books in the Bodleian at Oxford³, is Googe's translation from the Spanish of Lopez de Mendoza's PROVERBES, dedicated to Cecill, which I have never seen elsewhere, printed at London by R. Watkins in 1579^b. In this book the old Spanish paraphrast mentions Boccace's THESEID^c.

But it was not only to these later and degenerate classics, and to modern tracts, that Googe's industry was confined. He also translated into English what he called Aristotle's TABLE OF THE TEN CATEGORIES^d, that capital example of ingenious but useless subtlety, of method which cannot be applied to practice, and of that affectation of unnecessary deduction and frivolous investigation, which characterises the philosophy of the Greeks, and which is conspicuous not only in the demonstrations of Euclid, but in the Socratic disputations recorded by Xenophon. The solid simplicity of common sense would have been much less subject to circumlocution, embarrassment, and ambiguity. We do not want to be told by a chain of proofs, that two and two make four. This specific character of the schools of the Greeks, is perhaps to be traced backwards to the loquacity, the love of paradox, and the fondness for argumentative discourse, so peculiar to their nation. Even the good sense of Epictetus was not proof against this captious phrenzy. What patience can endure the solemn quibbles, which mark the stoical conferences of that philosopher preserved by Arrian? It is to this spirit, not solely from a principle of invidious malignity, that Tully alludes, where he calls the Greeks, "Homines contentionis quam veritatis cupidiores^e." And in another part of the same work he says, that it is a principal and even a national fault of this people, "Quocunque in loco, quocunque inter homines visum est, de rebus aut difficillimis aut non necessariis, argutissime disputare." The natural liveliness of the Athenians, heightened by the free politics of a democracy, seems to have tinged their conversation with this sort of declamatory disputation, which they frequently practised under an earnest pretence of discovering the truth, but in reality to indulge their native disposition to debate, to display their abundance of words, and their address of argument, to amuse, surprise, and perplex. Some of Plato's dialogues, professing a profundity of speculation, have much of this talkative humour. ☉

Beside these versions of the Greek and Roman poets, and of the ancient writers in prose, incidentally mentioned in this review, it will be sufficient to observe here in general, that almost all the Greek and Roman classics appeared in English before the year 1600. The effect and influence of these translations on our poetry, will be considered in a future section.

SECTION LX.

BUT the ardour of translation was not now circumscribed within the bounds of the classics, whether poets, historians, orators, or critics, of Greece and Rome.

I have before observed, that with our frequent tours through Italy, and our affectation of Italian manners, about the middle of the sixteenth century, the Italian poets became fashionable, and that this circumstance, for a time at least, gave a new turn to our poetry. The Italian poets, however, were but in few hands; and a practice of a more popular and general nature, yet still resulting from our communications with Italy, now began to prevail, which produced still greater revolutions. This was the translation of Italian books, chiefly on fictitious and narrative subjects, into English.

The learned Ascham thought this novelty in our literature too important to be passed over without observation, in his reflections on the course of an ingenuous education. It will be much to our purpose to transcribe what he has said on this subject: although I think his arguments are more like the reasonings of a rigid puritan, than of a man of liberal views and true penetration; and that he endeavours to account for the origin, and to state the consequences, of these translations, more in the spirit of an early calvinistic preacher, than as a sensible critic or a polite scholar. "These be the inchauntments of Circe, brought out of Italie to marre mens manners in England: much, by example of ill life, but more by precepts of fonde bookes, of late translated oute of Italian into English, solde in euery shop in London, commended by honest titles, the sooner to corrupt honest manners, dedicated ouer boldly to vertuous and honorable personages, the easelyer to beguile simple and honest wittes. It is pittie, that those which haue authoritie and charge to allow and disallow works to be printed, be no more circumspect herein than they are. Ten Sermons at Paules Crosse doe not so much good for mouing men to true doctrine, as one of these bookes does harme with inticing men, to ill living. Yea I say farther, these bookes tend not so much to corrupt honest liuing, as they doe to subuert true religion. More papists be made by your merry bookes of Italy, than by your earnest bookes of Louain^a.—When the busie and open papists could not, by their contentious bookes, turne men in Englande faste inough from troth and right iudgemente in doctrine, then the suttle and secret papists at home procured bawdie bookes to be translated out of the Italian toong, whereby ouermany yong willes and witts, allured to wantonnes, doe now boldly contemne all seuerer bookes that sound to honestie and godlines. In our forefathers time, when papistrie, as a standing poole, couered and ouerflowed all England, few bookes were red in our toong, sauyng certayne Bookes of Chiualrie, as they sayd for pastime and pleasure, which, as some say, were made in monasteries by idle monkes or wanton chanons: as one for example, MORTE ARTHUR, the whole pleasure of which booke standeth in two specyall poyntes, in open mans slaughter and bolde bawdrie: in which booke those be counted the noblest knights that doe kill most men without any quarrell, and commit fowlest aduouleries by sutlest shifts: as, syr Launcelote with the wife of king Arthure his maister: syr Tristram with the wife of king Marke his vncke: syr Lamerocke with the wife of king Lote that was his own aunte. This is good stuffe for wise men to laughe at, or honest men to take pleasure at. Yet I knowe when Gods Bible was banished the court, and MORTE ARTHUR receaued into the princes chamber. What toyes the dayly reading of such a booke may worke in the will of a yong ientleman, or a yong maide, that liueth welthely and idly, wise men can iudge, and honest men doe pittie. And yet ten MORTE ARTHURES doe not the tenth part so much harme, as one of these bookes made in Italie, and translated in England. They open, not fond and common ways to vice, but such suttile, cunning, new and diuerse shifts, to carry yong willes to vanitie and yong wittes to mischiefe, to teache old bawdes new schoole pointes, as the simple head of an Englishman is not hable to inuent, nor neuer was heard of in England before; yea when papistrie ouerflowed all. Suffer these bookes to be read, and they shall soon displace all bookes of godly learning. For they, carrying the will to vanitie, and marring good manners, shall easily corrupt the minde with ill opinions, and false judgement in doctrine: first to thinke ill of all true religion, and at last, to thinke nothing of God himselfe, one speciall poynt that is to be learned in Italie and Italian bookes. And that which is most to be lamented, and therefore more nedefull to be looked to, there be more of these vngracious bookes set out in print within these fewe moneths, than haue been seene in England many score yeares before. And because our Englishmen made Italians cannot hurt but certaine persons, and in certaine places, therefore these Italian bookes are made English, to bringe mischiefe inough openly and boldly to all states^b, great and meane, yong and old, euery where.—Our English men Italianated haue more in reuerence the TRIUMPHES of Petrarche^c, than the GENESIS of Moyses. They make more accompt of Tullies Offices, than saint Paules Epistles: of a Tale in Boccace, than the Story of the Bible,^d &c.^d

Ascham talks here exactly in the style of Prynne's HISTRIOMASTIX. It must indeed be confessed, that by these books many pernicious obscenities were circulated, and perhaps the doctrine of intrigue more accurately taught and exemplified than before. But every advantage is attended with its incon-

^b conditions of life.

^c In such universal vogue were the TRIUMPHS of Petrarch, or his TRIONFI D' AMOUR, that they were made into a public pageant at the entrance, I think, of Charles the Fifth into Madrid.

veniencies and abuses. That to procure translations of Italian tales was a plot of the papists, either for the purpose of facilitating the propagation of their opinions, of polluting the minds of our youth, or of diffusing a spirit of scepticism, I am by no means convinced. But I have nothing to do with the moral effects of these versions. I mean only to shew their influence on our literature, more particularly on our poetry, although I reserve the discussion of this point for a future section. At present, my design is to give the reader a full and uniform view of the chief of these translations from the Italian, which appeared in England before the year 1600.

I will begin with Boccace. The reader recollects Boccace's THESEID and TROILUS, many of his Tales, and large passages from Petrarch and Dante, translated by Chaucer. But the golden mine of Italian fiction opened by Chaucer, was soon closed and forgotten. I must however premise, that the Italian language now began to grow so fashionable, that it was explained in lexicons and grammars, written in English, and with a view to the illustration of the three principal Italian poets. So early as 1550, were published, "Principal rules of the Italian grammar, With a dictionarie for the better vnderstanding of Boccace, Petrarche, and Dante, gathered into this tongue by William Thomas ^c." It is dedicated to sir Thomas Chaloner, an accomplished scholar. The third edition of this book is dated in 1567. Scipio Lentulo's Italian grammar was translated into English in 1578, by Henry Grantham ^f. Soon afterwards appeared, in 1583, "CAMPO DI FIOR, or The Flourie Field of four Languages of M. Claudius Desainliens, for the furtherance of the learners of the Latine, French, and English, but chieffie of the Italian tongue ^g." In 1591, Thomas Woodcock printed "Florio's second frutes to be gathered of twelve trees of divers but delightfull tastes to the tongues of

And not to extend this catalogue, which I fear is not hitherto complete, any further, The ITALIAN SCHOOLE-MASTER was published in 1591^k. But to proceed.

Before the year 1570, William Paynter, clerk of the Office of Arms within the Tower of London, and who seems to have been master of the school of Sevenoaks in Kent, printed a very considerable part of Boccace's novels. His first collection is entitled, "The PALACE OF PLEASURE, the first volume, containing sixty novels out of Boccacio, London, 1566." It is dedicated to lord Warwick^l. A second volume soon appeared, "The PALLACE OF PLEASURE the second volume containing thirty-four novels, London, 1567^m." This is dedicated to sir George Howard; and dated from his house near the Tower, as is the former volume. It would be superfluous to point out here the uses which Shakespear made of these volumes, after the full investigation which his antient allusions and his plots have so lately received. One William Painter, undoubtedly the same, translated William Fulk's ANTI-PROGNOSTICON, a treatise written to expose the astrologers of those timesⁿ. He also prefixed a Latin tetrastic to Fulk's original, printed in 1570^o.

^h But his First Frute, or, Dialogues in Italian and English, with instruction for the Italian, appeared in 1578. His Italian dictionary, in 1595.

With Painter's PALACE OF PLEASURE, we must not confound "A petite Pallace of Pettie his plesure," although properly claiming a place here, a book of stories from Italian and other writers, translated and collected by William Pettie, a student of Christ-church in Oxford about the year 1576^p. It is said to contain, "manie prettie histories by him set forth in comely colors and most delightfully discoursed." The first edition I have seen was printed in 1598, the year before our author's death, by James Roberts. The first tale is SINORIX AND CAMMA, two lovers of Sienna in Italy, the last ALEXIUS^q. Among Antony Wood's books in the Ashmolean Museum, is a second edition dated 1608^r. But Wood, who purchased and carefully preserved this performance, solely because it was written by his great-uncle, is of opinion, that "it is now so far from being excellent or fine, that it is more fit to be read by a school-boy, or rustically amoretto, than by a gentleman of mode and language^s." Most of the stories are classical, perhaps supplied by the English Ovid, yet with a variety of innovations, and a mixture of modern manners.

Painter at the end of his second volume, has left us this curious notice. "Because sodaynly, contrary to expectation, this Volume is risen to greater heape of leaves, I doe omit for this present time SUNDRY NOVELS of mery devise, reserving the same to be joyned with the rest of an other part, wherein shall succede the remnant of Bandello, specially sutch, sufferable, as the learned French man François de Belleforrest hath selected, and the choysiest done in the Italian. And it is probable, that Painter by the interest of his booksellers, in compliance with the prevailing mode of publication, and for the accommodation of universal readers, was afterwards persuaded to print his sundry novels in the perishable form of separate pamphlets, which cannot now be recovered.

Boccace's FIAMETTA was translated by an Italian, who seems to have borne some office about the court, in 1587, with this title, "AMOROUS FIAMETTA, wherein is sette downe a catalogve of all and singlar passions of loue and ielousie incident to an enamored yong gentlewoman, with a notable caueat for all women to eschew deceitfull and wicked loue, by an apparent example of a Neapolitan lady, her approued and long miseries, and wyth many sound dehortations from the same. Fyrst written in Italian by master John Boccace, the learned Florentine, and poet lavreat. And now done into English by B. Giouanno del M. Temp^t." The same year was also printed, "Thirteene most pleasaunt and delectable questions entituled A DISPORT of diuers noble personages from Boccace. Imprinted at London by A. W. for Thomas Woodcock, 1587^u."

Several tales of Boccace's DECAMERON were now translated into English rhymes. The celebrated story of the friendship of TITUS AND GESIPPUS was rendered by Edward Lewicke, a name not known in the catalogue of English poets, in 1562^w. The title is forgotten with the translator. It is not suspected, that those affecting stories, the CYMON AND IPHIGENIA, and the THEODORE AND HONORIA, of Boccace, so beautifully paraphrased by Dryden, appeared in English verse, early in the reign of queen Elisabeth.

THEODORE AND HONORIA was translated, in 1569, by doctor Christopher Tye, the musician, already mentioned as a voluminous versifier of scripture in the reign of Edward the Sixth. The names of the lovers are disguised, in the following title. "A notable historye of Nastagio and Trauersari, no less pitiefull than pleasaunt, translated out of Italian into English verse by C. T. Imprinted at London in Poules churchyarde, by Thomas Purefoote dwelling at the signe of the Lucrece. Anno 1569." Tye has unluckily applied to this tale, the same stanza which he used in translating the ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. The knight of hell pursuing the lady, is thus described.

He sawe approche with swiftie foote
The place where he did staye,
A dame, with scattred heares vntrussde,
Bereft of her araye.—

Besides all this, two mastiffes great
Both fierce and full he sawe,

† [This rare publication occurs in the Bodleian Library, and is inscribed in a copy of Latin verses to Frederick Count Palatine, the brother-in-law of prince Henry. The songs are seven in number, and seem of sufficient merit to afford a specimen of Campion's lyric verse. The following is addressed to the illustrious Frederic.

How like a golden dreame you met and parted,

That pleasing straight doth vanish :

O, who can ever banish

The thought of one so princely and free-hearted !

But hee was pul'd up in his prime by fate,

And love for him must mourne, though all too late.

Teares to the dead are due, let none forbid

Sad harts to sigh, true griefe cannot be hid.

Yet the most bitter storme to height increased,

By heav'n againe is ceased :

O time that all things movest,

In griefe and joy thou equall measure lovest.

Such the condition is of humane life,
Care must with pleasure mixe, and peace with strife :

Thoughts with the dayes must change,
as tapers waste,

So must our griefes, day breakes when night is past.

Campion also wrote "The Description of a Maske presented before the King at Whitehall on Twelfth Night, in honour of the marriage of Lord Hayes with the daughter of Lord Denny." 1607. 4to. To this other short poems are adjoined. See MS. Addenda to Gildon, in the Bodleian Library, by T. It is not at all improbable, that these old translations, now entirely forgotten and obsolete, suggested these stories to Dryden's notice. To Dryden they were not more antient, than pieces are to us, written soon after the restoration of Charles the Second: and they were then of sufficient antiquity not to be too commonly known, and of such mediocrity, as not to preclude a new translation. I think we may trace Dryden in some of the rhymes and expressions^c.

It must not be forgot, that Sachetti published tales before Boccace†. But the publication of Boccace's DECAMERON gave a stability to this mode of composition, which had existed in a rude state before the revival of letters in Italy. Boccace col-

Some few perhaps are of his own invention. He was soon imitated, yet often unsuccessfully, by many of his countrymen, Poggio, Bandello, the anonymous author of *LE CIENTO NOVELLE ANTÍKE, Cinthio, Firenzuola, Malespini, and others. Even Machiavel, who united the liveliest wit with the profoundest reflection, and who composed two comedies while he was compiling a political history of his country, condescended to adorn this fashionable species of writing with his NOVELLA DI BELFEGOR, or the tale of Belphegor.

In Burton's MELANCHOLY, there is a curious account of the diversions in which our ancestors passed their winter-evenings. They were not totally inelegant or irrational. One of them was to read Boccace's novels aloud. "The ordinary recreations which we have in winter, are cardes, tables and dice, shouel-board, chesse-play, the philosopher's game, small trunks, balliardes, musicke, masks, singing, dancing, vlc-games^d, catches, purposes, questions: merry tales, of errant knights, kings, queenes, louers, lords, ladies, giants, dwarfes, thieves, fayries, BOCCACE'S NOUELLES, and the rest^e."

The late ingenious and industrious editors of Shakespeare have revived an antient metrical paraphrase, by Arthur Brooke, of Bandello's history of Romeo and Juliet. "THE TRAGICALL HYSTORY OF ROMEUS AND JULIET: Contayning in it a rare example of true Constancie, with the subtill Counsels and practises of an old fryer and ther ill event. Imprinted at London in Fleete-streete within Temple Barre at the signe of the hand and starre by Richard Tottill the xix day of November. Ann. Dom. 1562^f." and an identity of phraseology, that this was Shakespeare's original, and not the meagre outline which appears in Painter. Among the copies delivered by Tottel the printer to the stationers of London, in 1582, is a booke called ROMEO AND JULIETTA^g. But I believe there were two different translations in verse. It must be remembered here, that the original writer of this story was Luigi da Porto, a gentleman of Verona, who died in 1529. His narrative appeared at Venice in 1535, under the title of LA GIULIETTA, and was soon afterwards adopted by Bandello. Shakespeare, misled by the English poem, missed the opportunity of introducing a most affecting scene by the natural and obvious conclusion of the story. In Luigi's novel, Juliet awakes from her trance in the tomb before the death of Romeo. From Turberville's poems printed in 1567, we learn, that Arthur Brooke was drowned in his passage to New-haven, and that he was the author of this translation, which was the distinguished proof of his excellent poetical abilities.

Apollo lent him lute for solace sake,
 To sound his verse by touch of stately string;
 And of the neuer fading baye did make
 A laurell crowne, about his browes to clinge,
 In prooffe that he for myter did excell,
 As may be iudge by Iulyet and her Mate;
 For ther he shewde his cunning passing well
 When he the tale to English did translate.—

Arthur Brooke's poetry, and will be gratified with the dullest anecdotes of an author to whom perhaps we owe the existence of a tragedy at which we have all wept. I can discover nothing more of Arthur Brooke, than that he translated from French into English, The Agreement of sundrie places of Scripture seeming to iarre, which was printed at London in 1563. At the end is a copy of verses written by the editor Thomas Brooke the younger, I suppose his brother; by which it appears, that the author Arthur Brooke was shipwrecked before the year 1563ⁱ. Juliet soon furnished a female name to a new novel. For in 1577, Hugh Jackson printed "The renowned Historie of Cleomenes and Juliet^k." Unless this be Brooke's story disguised and altered.

Bishop Tanner, I think, in his correspondence with the learned and accurate Thomas Baker of Cambridge, mentions a prose English version of the NOVELLE of Bandello, who endeavoured to avoid the obscenities of Boccace and the improbabilities of Cinthio, in 1580, by W. W. Had I seen this performance, for which I have searched Tanner's library in vain, I would have informed the inquisitive reader, how far it accommodated Shakespeare in the conduct of the Tragedy of ROMEO AND JULIET. As to the translator, I make no doubt that the initials W. W. imply William Warner the author of ALBION'S ENGLAND^l, who was esteemed by his cotemporaries as one of the refiners of our language, and is said in Meres's WIT'S TREASURY, to be one of those by whom "the English tongue is mightily enriched, and gorgeously invested in rare ornaments and resplendent habiliments^m." Warner was also a translator of Plautus; and wrote a novel, or rather a suite of

Warner in his ALBION'S ENGLAND, commonly supposed to be first printed in 1592^o, says, "Written haue I already in Prose, allowed of some, and now offer I Verse, attending indifferent censvres."

Among George Gascoigne's WEEDES printed in 1575, is the tale of Ferdinando Jeronimi*, or "The pleasant fable of Ferdinando Ieronimi and Leonora de Valasco, translated out of the Italian riding tales of Bartello." Much poetry is interwoven into the narrative. Nor, on the mention of Gascoigne, will it be foreign to the present purpose to add here, that in the year 1566 he translated one of Ariosto's comedies called SUPPOSITI, which was acted the same year at Gray's-inn. title is "SUPPOSES. A comedie written in the Italian tongue by Ariosto, Englished by George Gascoigne of Graies inne esquire, and there presented, 1566^a." This comedy was first written in prose by Ariosto, and afterwards reduced into rhyme. Gascoigne's translation is in prose. The dialogue is supported with much spirit and ease, and has often the air of a modern conversation. As Gascoigne was the first who exhibited on our stage a story from Euripides, so in this play he is the first that produced an English comedy in prose. By the way, the quaint name of Petruchio; and the incident of the master and servant changing habits and characters, and persuading the Scenese to personate the father, by frightening him with the hazard of his travelling from Sienna to Ferrara against the commands of government, was transferred into the TAMING OF THE SHREW. I doubt not, however, that there was an Italian novel on the subject. From this play also the ridiculous name and character of Doctor Dodipoll seems to have got into our old drama^r. But to return.

In 1587, George Turberville the poet, already mentioned as the translator of Ovid's EPISTLES, published a set of tragical tales* in verse, selected from various Italian novelists. He was a skilful master of the modern languages, and went into Russia in the quality of secretary to Thomas Randolph esquire, envoy to the emperor of Russia^x. This collection, which is dedicated to his brother Nicholas, is entitled, "TRAGICAL TALES, translated by Turberville in time of his troubles, out of sundrie Italians, with the argument and lenvoy to each tale^y."

Among Mr. Oldys's Books, was the "Life of Sir Meliado a Brittish knight^z," translated from the Italian, in 1572. By the way, we are not here to suppose that BRITISH means English. A BRITISH knight means a knight of Bretagne or Brittany, in France. This is a common mistake; arising from an equivocation which has converted many a French knight into an Englishman. The learned Nicholas Antonio, in his SPANISH LIBRARY, affords a remarkable example of this confusion, and a proof of its frequency, where he is speaking of the Spanish translation of the romance of TIRANTE THE WHITE, in 1480. "Ad fabularum artificem stylum convertimus, Joannem Martorell* Valentiaë regni civem, cujus est liber hujus commatis, TIRANT...LE BLANCH inscriptus, atque anno 1480, ut aiunt, Valentiaë in folio editus. * [Concerning this writer and his production, Ritson entered into the following elaborate discussion. "John or Joanot Martorell, the author of the romance of Tirant le Blanch, in his dedication thereof to Don Ferdinand, prince of Portugal and duke of Visco, brother of Alphonsus V., and then (in 1460) presumptive heir to the crown, to which his son Emanuel afterwards succeeded, positively declares that the history and acts of the said Tirant were written in the English tongue (en lengua Anglesa;) that he had translated them out of that language into the Portuguese, at the direct instance of the above prince, who thought that as Martorell had been some time in England (en la illa de Angleterra) he would know the tongue better than others: that he had since translated the book out of Portuguese into his native dialect, the Valencian: and apologises for the defects of his version, as being in some measure occasioned by the peculiar difficulties of the English language, which he had in many places found it impracticable to translate. It is strange enough that an author, more especially of Martorell's consequence, should have the confidence to impose upon his patron, not only a feigned original, but a feigned command to translate it, and an imaginary translation too. It is not impossible, however, that Martorell might actually pick up some part of his subject during his residence in England. What makes the conjecture the less improbable, is the use he has made of the story of Guy earl of Warwick (Comte Gillem de Varoych) which we know to have been then extant in English. The origin of the Garter, the magnificent celebration of the nuptials of the king of England (alluding most likely to those of Richard the Second) with the king of France's daughter, and some few other particulars, he may undoubtedly have got here: though one might be led to think, that he has derived his principal information on these heads from old Froissart, a favourite historian during the continuance of chivalry. But, independent of his own assertions, the venial deceptions of a romantic age, there is the strongest and most conclusive evidence, as well intrinsic as extrinsic, that Martorell, whether he wrote first in Portuguese or Valencian, was the original author. As to the work itself, it is a most ingenious and admirable performance, well deserving the praises bestowed on it by Cervantes in Don Quixote, and much beyond any thing of the kind ever produced in England." The hero is a gentleman of Bretagne, and the book was first written in the language of that country. I take this opportunity of observing, that these mistakes of England for Brittany, tend to confirm my hypothesis, that Bretagne, or Armorica†, was anciently a copious source of romance: an hypothesis, which I have the happiness to find was the opinion of the most learned and ingenious M. La Croze, as I am but just now informed from an entertaining little work, Histoire de la vie et des ouvrages de Monsieur La Croze, printed by M. Jordan at Amsterdam, in 1741^b. French, and English, in 1588^z. I was informed by the late Mr. Collins of Chichester, that Shakespeare's TEMPEST, for which no origin is yet assigned, was formed on this favorite romance. But although this information has not proved true on examination, an useful conclusion may be drawn from it, that Shakespeare's story is somewhere to be found in an Italian novel, at least that the story preceded Shakespeare. Mr. Collins had searched this subject with no less fidelity, than judgment and industry: but his memory failing in his last calamitous indisposition, he probably gave me the name of one novel for another. I remember he added a circumstance, which may lead to a discovery, that the principal character of the romance, answering to Shakespeare's Prospero, was a chemical necromancer, who had bound a spirit like Ariel to obey his call and perform his services. It was a common pretence of the dealers in the occult sciences to have a demon at command. At least Aurelio, or Orelia, was probably one of the names of this romance, the production and multiplication of gold being the grand object of alchemy. Taken at large, the magical part of the TEMPEST is founded in that sort of philosophy which was practised by John Dee and his associates, and has been called the Rosicrusian. The name Ariel came from the Talmudic mysteries with which the learned Jews had infected this science.

To this head must also be referred, the Collections which appeared before 1600, of tales drawn indiscriminately from French and Spanish, as well as Italian authors, all perhaps originally of Italian growth, and recommended by the general love of fable and fiction which now prevailed. I will mention a few.

The predominating love of narrative, more especially when the exploits of a favorite nation were the subject, rendered this book very popular; and it came recommended to the public by a title page which promised almost the entertainment of a romance, "The historie of Guiccardin, containing the warres of Italie, and other partes, continued for many yeares under sundry kings and princes, together with the variations of the same, Diuided into twenty bookes, &c. Reduced into English by Geoffrey Fenton. Mon heur viendra °." It is probably to this book that Gabriel Harvey, Spenser's Hobbinol, alludes, where he says, "Even Guiccardin's siluer Historie, and Ariosto's golden Cantos, growe out of request, and the countess of Pembroke's Arcadia is not greene enough for queasie stomaches but they must haue Greene's Arcadia," &c.^p Among his versions are also, the GOLDEN EPISTLES of Antonio de Guevara, the secretary of Charles the Fifth, and now a favorite author, addressed to Anne countess of Oxford, from his chamber at the Dominican or black friars, the fourth of February, 1575^q. A work of a similar nature appeared in 1571, by Thomas Fortescue. It is divided into four books, and called "The FOREST or collection of Historyes no lesse profitable, than pleasant and necessary, doone out of Frenche into English by Thomas Fortescue^w." It is dedicated to John Fortescue esquire, keeper of the wardrobe. The genius of these tales may be discerned from their history. The book is said to have been written in Spanish by Petro de Messia, then translated into Italian, thence into French by Claude Cruget a citizen of Paris, and lastly from French into English by Fortescue. But many of the stories seem to have originally migrated* from Italy into Spain^x.

The learned doctor Farmer has restored to the public notice a compilation of this class, unmentioned by any typographic annalist, and entitled, "The ORATOR, handling a hundred severall Discourses in form of Declamations: some of the Arguments being drawne from Titus Livi^{us}, and other ancient writers, the rest of the author's own Invention. Part of which are of matters happened in our age. Written in French by Alexander Silvayn, and Englished by L. P. [or Lazarus Pilot*.] London, printed by Adam Islip, 1596^v." The sub-novel entitled, "A MARGARITE OF AMERICA. By T. Lodge. Printed for John Busbie, &c. 1596." 4to. Bl. lett. This piece has never yet been recited among Lodge's works. In the Dedication to Lady Russell, and Preface to the gentlemen readers, he says, that being at sea four years before with M. Cavendish, he found this history in the Spanish tongue in the library of the Jesuits of Sanctum; and that he translated it in the ship, in passing through the Straits of Magellan. Many sonnets and metrical inscriptions are intermixed. One of the sonnets is said to be in imitation of Dolce the Italian. SIGNAT. C. Again; SIGNAT. K 3. About the walls of the chamber of prince Protomachus, "in curious imagerie were the Seuen Sages of Greece, set forth with their severall vertues eloquently discovered in Arabicke verses." The arch of the bed is of ebonie sett with pretious stones, and depicted with the stages of man's life from infancy to old-age. SIGNAT. B 3. The chamber of Margarite, in the same castle, is much more sumptuous. Over the portico were carved in the whitest marble, Diana blushing at the sudden intrusion of Acteon, and her "naked Nymphes, who with one hand couering their owne secret pleasures, with blushes, with the other cast a beautifull vaile ower their mistresse daintie nakedness. The two pillars of the doore were beautified with the two Cupides of Anacreon, which well-shaped Modestie often seemed to whip, lest they should growe ouer-wanton." Within, "All the chaste Ladies of the world inched out of siluer, looking through faire mirrors of chrisolites, carbuncles, sapphires, and greene emeralts, fixed their eyes on the picture of Eternitie," &c. In the tapestry, was the story of Orpheus, &c. SIGN. B 3. A sonnet of "that excellent poet of Italie Lodouico Pascale," is introduced. SIGNAT. L. Another, "in imitation of Martelli, hauing the right nature of an Italian melancholic," SIGNAT. L. Much poetry is intermixed. A recommendatory poem in the octave stanza is prefixed by Lodge, who says he corrected the work, and has now laid his muse aside. There is another in the same stanza by R. W. But it would be endless to pursue publications of this sort. I only add, that Barnabe Riche above mentioned wrote in prose THE HONESTIE OF THIS AGE, &c. Lond. 1615. 4to. A curious picture of the times. Also "the PATHWAY TO MILITARY PRACTICE, with a kalendar for the ymbattallinge of men, newly written by Barnabe Riche," entered to R. Walley, 22 March, 1586. REGISTER. Many faults in the conduct of incidents for which Shakespeare's judgement is arraigned, often flowed from the casual book of the day, whose mistakes he implicitly followed without looking for a better model, and from a too hasty acquiescence in the present accommodation. But without a book of this sort, Shakespeare would often have been at a loss for a subject. Yet at the same time, we look with wonder at the structures which he forms, and even without labour or deliberation, of the basest materials^g. maxfry, as tending to corrupt the pure and unidolatrour worship of the one God, and as one of the deadly snares of popish deception^r. In the history of the puritans, their apprehensions that the reformed faith was yet in danger from paganism, are not sufficiently noted. And it should be remembered, that a PANTHEON had before appeared; rather indeed with a view of exposing the heathen superstitions, and of shewing their conformity to the papistic, than of illustrating the religious fable of antiquity. But the scope and design of the writer will appear from his title, which from its archness alone deserves to be inserted. "The GOLDEN BOOKE OF THE LEADEN GODDES, wherein is described the vayne imaginations of the heathen pagans, and counterfeit christians. The writer, however, doctor Stephen Batman, had been domestic chaplain to archbishop Parker, and is better known by his general chronicle of prodigies called Batman's DOOM^t." He was also the last translator of the Gothic Pliny, BARTHOLOMEUS DE PROPRIETATIBUS RERUM, and collected more than a thousand manuscripts for archbishop Parker's library.

This enquiry might be much further enlarged and extended. But let it be sufficient to observe here in general, that the best stories of the early and original Italian novelists, either by immediate translation, or through the mediation of Spanish, French, or Latin versions, by paraphrase, abridgement, imitation, and often under the disguise of licentious innovations of names, incidents, and characters, appeared in an English dress, before the close of the reign of Elisabeth, and for the most part, even before the publication of the first volume of Belleforrest's grand repository of tragical narratives, a compilation from the Italian writers, in 1583. bered, that many translations of Tales from the modern languages were licenced to be printed, but afterwards suppressed by the interest of the puritans. It appears from the register of the Stationers, that among others, in the year 1619, "The DECAMERON of Mr. John Boccace Florentine," was revoked by a sudden inhibition of Abbot, archbishop of Canterbury.^w. But not only the clamours of the Calvinists, but caprice and ignorance, perhaps partiality, seem to have had some share in this business of licencing books. The rigid arbiters of the press who condemned Boccace in the gross, could not with propriety spare all the licentious cantos of Ariosto. That writer's libertine friar, metamorphosis of Richardetto, Alcina and Rogero, Anselmo, and host's tale of Astolfo, are shocking to common decency. When the four or five first books of AMADIS DE GAUL in French were delivered to Wolfe to be translated into English and to be printed, in the year 1592, the signature of bishop Aylmer was affixed to every book of the original^x. The romance of PALMERIN OF ENGLAND was licenced to be printed in 1580, on condition, that if any thing reprehensible was found in the book after publication, all the copies should be committed to the flames^y. Notwithstanding, it is remarkable, that in 1587, a new edition of Boccace's DECAMERON in Italian^z by Wolfe, should have been permitted by archbishop Whitgift^a: and the English AMOROUS FIAMETTA* of Boccace, above mentioned, in the same year by the bishop of London^b.

SECTION LXI.

ENOUGH has been opened of the reign of queen Elisabeth, to afford us an opportunity of forming some general reflections, tending to establish a full estimate of the genius of the poetry of that reign; and which, by drawing conclusions from what has been said, and directing the reader to what he is to expect, will at once be recapitulatory and preparatory. Such a survey perhaps might have stood with more propriety as an introduction to this reign. But it was first necessary to clear the way, by many circumstantial details, and the regular narration of those particulars, which lay the foundation of principles, and suggest matter for discursive observation. My sentiments on this subject shall therefore compose the concluding section of the present volume.

The age of queen Elisabeth is commonly called the golden age of English poetry. It certainly may not improperly be styled the most POETICAL age of these annals.

Among the great features which strike us in the poetry of this period, are the predominancy of fable, of fiction, and fancy, and a predilection for interesting adventures and pathetic events. I will endeavour to assign and explain the cause of this characteristic distinction, which may chiefly be referred to the following principles, sometimes blended, and sometimes operating singly: The revival and vernacular versions of the classics, the importation and translation of Italian novels, the visionary reveries or refinements of false philosophy, a degree of superstition sufficient for the purposes of poetry, the adoption of the machineries of romance, and the frequency and improvements of allegoric exhibition in the popular spectacles.

When the corruptions and impostures of popery were abolished, the fashion of cultivating the Greek and Roman learning became universal: and the literary character was no longer appropriated to scholars by profession, but assumed by the nobility and gentry. The ecclesiastics had found it their interest to keep the languages of antiquity to themselves, and men were eager to know what had been so long injuriously concealed. Truth propagates truth, and the mantle of mystery was removed not only from religion but from literature. The laity, who had now been taught to assert their natural privileges, became impatient of the old monopoly of knowledge, and demanded admittance to the usurpations of the clergy. The general curiosity for new discoveries, heightened either by just or imaginary ideas of the treasures contained in the Greek and Roman writers, excited all persons of leisure and fortune to study the classics. The pedantry of the present age was the politeness of the last. An accurate comprehension of the phraseology and peculiarities of the antient poets, historians, and orators, which yet seldom went further than a kind of technical erudition, was an indispensable and almost the principal object in the circle of a gentleman's education. Every young lady of fashion was carefully instituted in classical letters: and the daughter of a duchess was taught, not only to distil strong waters, but to construe Greek. Among the learned females of high distinction, queen Elisabeth herself was the most conspicuous. Roger Ascham, her preceptor, speaks with rapture of her astonishing progress in the Greek nouns; and declares with no small degree of triumph, that during a long residence at Windsor-castle, she was accustomed to read more Greek in a day, than "some prebendary of that church did Latin, in one week^a." And although perhaps a princess looking out words in a lexicon, and writing down hard phrases from Plutarch's Lives, may be thought at present a more incompatible and extraordinary character, than a canon of Windsor understanding no Greek and but little Latin, yet Elisabeth's passion for these acquisitions was then natural, and resulted from the genius and habitudes of her age.

The books of antiquity being thus familiarised to the great, every thing was tinctured with antient history and mythology. The heathen gods, although discountenanced by the Calvinists on a suspicion of their tending to cherish and revive a spirit of idolatry, came into general vogue. When the queen paraded through a country-town, almost every pageant was a pantheon. When she paid a visit at the house of any of her nobility, at entering the hall she was saluted by the Penates, and conducted to her privy-chamber by Mercury. Even the pastry-cooks were expert mythologists. At dinner, select transformations of Ovid's metamorphoses were exhibited in confectonary: and the splendid icing of an immense historic plum-cake, was embossed with a delicious basso-relievo of the destruction of Troy. In the afternoon, when she condescended to walk in the garden, the lake was covered with Tritons and Nereids; the pages of the family were converted into Wood-nymphs who peeped from every bower; and the footmen gamboled over the lawns in the figure of Satyrs. I speak it without designing to insinuate any unfavourable suspicions, but it seems difficult to say, why Elisabeth's virginity should have been made the theme of perpetual and excessive panegyric: nor does it immediately appear, that there is less merit or glory in a married than a maiden queen. Yet, the next morning, after sleeping in a room hung with the tapestry of the voyage of Eneas, when her majesty hunted in the Park, she was met by Diana, who pronouncing our royal prude to be the brightest paragon of unspotted chastity, invited her to groves free from the intrusions of Acteon. The truth is, she was so profusely flattered for this virtue, because it was esteemed the characteristical ornament of the heroines, as fantastic honour was the chief pride of the champions, of the old barbarous romance. It was in conformity to the sentiments of chivalry, which still continued in vogue, that she was celebrated for-chastity: the compliment, however, was paid in a classical allusion.

Queens must be ridiculous when they would appear as women. The softer attractions of sex vanish on the throne. Elisabeth sought all occasions of being extolled for her beauty, of which indeed in the prime of her youth she possessed but a small share, whatever might have been her pretensions to absolute virginity. Notwithstanding her exaggerated habits of dignity and ceremony, and a certain affectation of imperial severity, she did not perceive this ambition of being complimented for beauty, to be an idle and unpardonable levity, totally inconsistent with her high station and character. As she conquered all nations with her arms, it matters not what were the triumphs of her eyes. Of what consequence was the complexion of the mistress of the world? Not less vain of her person than her politics, this stately coquet, the guardian of the protestant faith, the terror of the sea, the mediatrix of the factions of France, and the scourge of Spain, was infinitely mortified, if an ambassador, at the first audience, did not tell her she was the finest woman in Europe. No negotiation succeeded unless she was addressed as a goddess. Encomiastic harangues drawn from this topic, even on the supposition of youth and beauty, were surely superfluous, unsuitable, and unworthy; and were offered and received with an equal impropriety. Yet when she rode through the streets of the city of Norwich, Cupid, at the command of the mayor and aldermen, advancing from a groupe of gods who had left Olympus to grace the procession, gave her a golden arrow, the most effective weapon of his well-furnished quiver, which under the influence of such irresistible charms was sure to wound the most obdurate heart. "A gift," says honest Hollinshed, "which her majesty, now verging to her fiftieth year, received very thankfullie^b." In one of the fulsome interludes at court, where she was present, the singing-boys of her chapel presented the story of the three rival goddesses on mount Ida, to which her majesty was ingeniously added as a fourth: and Paris was arraigned in form for adjudging the golden apple to Venus, which was due to the queen alone.

This inundation of classical pedantry soon infected our poetry. Our writers, already trained in the school of fancy, were suddenly dazzled with these novel imaginations; and the divinities and heroes of pagan antiquity decorated every composition. The perpetual allusions to antient fable were often introduced without the least regard to propriety. Shakespeare's Mrs. Page, who is not intended in any degree to be a learned or an affected lady*, laughing at the cumbersome courtship of her corpulent lover Falstaffe, says, "I had rather be a giantess and lie under mount Pelion^c." This familiarity with the pagan story was not, however, so much owing to the prevailing study of the original authors, as to the numerous English versions of them, which were consequently made. The translations of the classics, which now employed every pen, gave a currency and a celebrity to these fancies, and had the effect of diffusing them among the people. No sooner were they delivered from the pale of the scholastic languages, than they acquired a general notoriety. Ovid's metamorphoses just translated by Golding, to instance no further, disclosed a new world of fiction, even to the illiterate. As we had now all the antient fables in English, learned allusions, whether in a poem or a pageant, were no longer obscure and unintelligible to common readers and common spectators. And here we are led to observe, that at this restoration of the classics, we were

* [This I cannot allow. I rather think that Shakespeare here spouted all his own knowledge, rather than that of an honest dame; because we do not find any more of it in this play, or any other of his. We might therefore as well affirm that all the valets and chambermaids in Queen Anne's time were infinitely witty, because Congreve has made them as much so as their masters and mistresses: that is, the poet bestowed all the wit he had upon all his characters indiscriminately.—ASHBY. But was it not the peculiar felicity and unrivalled merit of Shakespeare, to make his characters utter no more than nature herself set down for them? first struck only with their fabulous inventions. We did not attend to their regularity of design and justness of sentiment. A rude age, beginning to read these writers, imitated their extravagancies, not their natural beauties. And these, like other novelties, were pursued to a blameable excess:

I have before given a sketch of the introduction of classical stories, in the splendid show exhibited at the coronation of queen Anne Boleyn. But that is a rare and a premature instance: and the pagan fictions are there complicated with the barbarisms of the catholic worship, and the doctrines of scholastic theology. Classical learning was not then so widely spread, either by study or translation, to bring these learned spectacles into fashion, to frame them with sufficient skill, and to present them with propriety.

Another capital source of the poetry peculiar to this period, consisted in the numerous translations of Italian tales into English. These narratives, not dealing altogether in romantic inventions, but in real life and manners, and in artful arrangements of fictitious yet probable events, afforded a new gratification to a people which yet retained their antient relish for tale-telling, and became the fashionable amusement of all who professed to read for pleasure. They gave rise to innumerable plays and poems, which would not otherwise have existed; and turned the thoughts of our writers to new inventions of the same kind. Before these books became common, affecting situations, the combination of incident, and the pathos of catastrophe, were almost unknown. Distress, especially that arising from the conflicts of the tender passion, had not yet been shewn in its most interesting forms. It was hence our poets, particularly the dramatic, borrowed ideas of a legitimate plot, and the complication of facts necessary to constitute a story either of the comic or tragic species. In proportion as knowledge increased, genius had wanted subjects and materials. These pieces usurped the place of legends and chronicles. And although the old historical songs of the minstrels contained much bold adventure, heroic enterprise, and strong touches of rude delineation, yet they failed in that multiplication and disposition of circumstances, and in that description of characters and events approaching nearer to truth and reality, which were demanded by a more discerning and curious age. Even the rugged features of the original Gothic romance were softened by this sort of reading: and the Italian pastoral, yet with some mixture of the kind of incidents described in Heliodorus's Ethiopic history now newly translated, was engrafted on the feudal manners in Sydney's ARCADIA.

But the reformation had not yet destroyed every delusion, nor disenchanted all the strong holds of superstition. A few dim characters were yet legible in the mouldering creed of tradition. Every goblin of ignorance did not vanish at the first glimmerings of the morning of science. Reason suffered a few demons still to linger, which she chose to retain in her service under the guidance of poetry. Men believed, or were willing to believe, that spirits were yet hovering around, who brought with them airs from heaven, or blasts from hell, that the ghost was duly released from his prison of torment at the sound of the curfew, and that fairies imprinted mysterious circles on the turf by moonlight. Much of this credulity was even consecrated by the name of science and profound speculation. Prospero had not yet broken and buried his staff, nor drowned his book deeper than did ever plummet sound. It was now that the alchemist, and the judicial astrologer, conducted his occult operations by the potent intercourse of some preternatural being, who came obsequious to his call, and was bound to accomplish his severest services, under certain conditions, and for a limited duration of time. It was actually one of the pretended feats of these fantastic philosophers, to evoke the queen of the Fairies in the solitude of a gloomy grove, who, preceded by a sudden rustling of the leaves, appeared in robes of transcendent lustre^d. The Shakespeare of a more instructed and polished age, would not have given us a magician darkening

the sun at noon, the sabbath of the witches, and the cauldron of incantation.

Undoubtedly most of these notions were credited and entertained in a much higher degree, in the preceding periods. But the arts of composition had not then made a sufficient progress, nor would the poets of those periods have managed them with so much address and judgement. We were now arrived at that point, when the national credulity, chastened by reason, had produced a sort of civilised superstition, and left a set of traditions, fanciful enough for poetic decoration, and yet not too violent and chimerical for common sense. Hobbes, although no friend to this doctrine, observes happily, "In a good poem both judgement and fancy are required; but the fancy must be more eminent, because they please for the EXTRAVAGANCY, but ought not to displease by INDISCRETION ^e."

In the mean time the Gothic romance, although somewhat shook by the classical fictions, and by the tales of Boccace and Bandello, still maintained its ground: and the daring machineries of giants, dragons, and enchanted castles, borrowed from the magic storehouse of Boiardo, Ariosto, and Tasso, began to be employed by the epic muse. These ornaments have been censured by the bigotry of precise and servile critics, as abounding in whimsical absurdities, and as unwarrantable deviations from the practice of Homer and Virgil. The author of AN ENQUIRY INTO THE LIFE AND WRITINGS OF HOMER is willing to allow a fertility of genius, and a felicity of expression, to Tasso and Ariosto; but at the same time complains, that, "quitting life, they betook themselves to aerial beings and Utopian characters, and filled their works with Charms and Visions, the modern Supplements of the Marvellous and Sublime. The best poets copy nature, and give it such as they find it. When once they lose sight of this, they write false, be their talents ever so great ^f." But what shall we say of those Utopians, the Cyclopes and the Lestrigons in the Odyssey? The hippogrif of Ariosto may be opposed to the harpies of Virgil. If leaves are turned into ships in the Orlando, nymphs are transformed into ships in the Eneid. Cacus is a more unnatural savage than Caliban. Nor am I convinced, that the imagery of Ismeno's necromantic forest in the Gierusalemme Liberata, guarded by walls and battlements of fire, is less marvellous and sublime, than the leap of Juno's horses in the Iliad, celebrated by Longinus for its singular magnificence and dignity[§]. On the principles of this critic, Voltaire's Henriad may be placed at the head of the modern epic*. But I forbear to anticipate my opinion of a system, which will more properly be considered when I come to speak of Spenser. I must, however, observe here, that the Gothic and pagan fictions were now frequently blended and incorporated. The Lady of the Lake floated in the suite of Neptune before queen Elisabeth at Kenilworth; Ariel assumes the semblance of a sea-nymph; and Hecate, by an easy association, conducts the rites of the weird sisters in Macbeth.

Allegory had been derived from the religious dramas into our civil spectacles. The masques and pageantries of the age of Elisabeth were not only furnished by the heathen divinities, but often by the virtues and vices impersonated, significantly decorated, accurately distinguished by their proper types, and represented by living actors. The antient symbolical shews of this sort began now to lose their old barbarism and a mixture of religion, and to assume a degree of poetical elegance and precision. Nor was it only in the conformation of particular figures that much fancy was shewn, but in the contexture of some of the fables or devices presented by groupes of ideal personages. These exhibitions quickened creative invention, and reflected back on poetry what poetry had given. From their familiarity and public nature, they formed a national taste for allegory; and the allegorical poets were now writing to the people. Even romance was turned into this channel. In the Fairy Queen, allegory is wrought upon chivalry, and the feats and figments of Arthur's round table are moralised. The virtues of magnificence and chastity are here personified: but they are imaged with the forms, and under the agency, of romantic knights and damsels. What was an after-thought in Tasso, appears to have been Spenser's premeditated and primary design. In the mean time, we must not confound these moral combatants of the Fairy Queen with some of its other embodied abstractions, which are purely and professedly allegorical.

It may here be added, that only a few critical treatises, and but one ART OF POETRY, were now written. Sentiments and images were not absolutely determined by the canons of composition: nor was genius awed by the consciousness of a future and final arraignment at the tribunal of taste. A certain dignity of inattention to niceties is now visible in our writers. Without too closely consulting a criterion of correctness, every man indulged his own capriciousness of invention. The poet's appeal was chiefly to his own voluntary feelings, his own immediate and peculiar mode of conception. And this freedom of thought was often expressed in an undisguised frankness of diction. A circumstance, by the way, that greatly contributed to give the flowing modulation* which now marked the measures of our poets, and which soon degenerated into the opposite extreme of dissonance and asperity. Selection and discrimination were often overlooked. Shakespeare wandered in pursuit of universal nature. The glancings of his eye are from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven. We behold him break-

* [This modulation, Mr. Ellis thinks, is likely to have resulted from the musical studies which now formed a part of general education. "The lyrical compositions of this time are so far," he adds, "from being marked by a faulty negligence, that excess of ornament and laboured affectation are their characteristic blemishes. Such as are free from conceit and antithesis are in general exquisitely polished, and may safely be compared with the most elegant and finished specimens of modern poetry." Spec. of early English Poetry.—Mr. Ashby also thought, that the modulation of the poetry was a good deal owing to a general attention to Church Music, which would form the public ear more universally than all our present spectacles, because all may attend church gratis. And this is really the case in Italy. Daines Barrington remarks that many a girl in the country has a good voice, but all sing false, because they never hear good singing: in London it is just the contrary.—PARK.] ing the barriers of imaginary method. In the same scene, he descends from his meridian of the noblest tragic sublimity, to puns and quibbles, to the meanest merriments of a plebeian farce. In the midst of his dignity, he resembles his own Richard the Second, the skipping king, who sometimes discarding the state of a monarch,

Mingled his royalty with carping fools^h.

He seems not to have seen any impropriety, in the most abrupt transitions, from dukes to buffoons, from senators to sailors, from counsellors to constables, and from kings to clowns. Like Virgil's majestic oak,

No Satires, properly so called, were written till towards the latter end of the queen's reign, and then but a few. Pictures drawn at large of the vices of the times, did not suit readers who loved to wander in the regions of artificial manners. The Muse, like the people, was too solemn and reserved, too ceremonious and pedantic, to stoop to common life. Satire is the poetry of a nation highly polished*.

The importance of the female character was not yet acknowledged, nor were women admitted into the general commerce of society†. The effect of that intercourse had not imparted a comic air to poetry, nor softened the severer tone of our versification with the levities of gallantry, and the familiarities of compliment, sometimes perhaps operating on serious subjects, and imperceptibly spreading themselves in the general habits of style and thought. I do not mean to insinuate, that our poetry has suffered from the great change of manners, which this assumption of the gentler sex, or rather the improved state of female education, has produced, by giving elegance and variety to life, by enlarging the sphere of conversation, and by multiplying the topics and enriching the stores of wit and humour. But I am marking the peculiarities of composition: and my meaning was to suggest, that the absence of so important a circumstance from the modes and constitution of antient life, must have influenced the cotemporary poetry. Of the state of manners among our ancestors respecting this point, many traces remain. Their style of courtship may be collected from the love-dialogues of Hamlet, young Percy, Henry the Fifth, and Master Fenton. Their tragic heroines, their Desdemonas and Ophelias, although of so much consequence in the piece, are degraded to the back-ground. In comedy, their ladies are nothing more than MERRY WIVES, plain and cheerful matrons, who stand upon the chariness of their honesty. In the smaller poems, if a lover praises his mistress, she is complimented in strains neither polite nor pathetic, without elegance and without affection: she is described, not in the address of intelligible yet artful panegyric, not in the real colours, and with the genuine accomplishments, of nature, but as an eccentric ideal being of another system, and as inspiring sentiments equally unmeaning, hyperbolical, and unnatural.

All or most of these circumstances contributed to give a descriptive, a picturesque, and a figurative cast to the poetical language. This effect appears even in the prose compositions of the reign of Elisabeth. In the subsequent age, prose became the language of poetry.

In the mean time, general knowledge was increasing with a wide diffusion and a hasty rapidity. Books began to be multiplied, and a variety of the most useful and rational topics had been discussed in our own language. But science had not made too great advances. On the whole, we were now arrived at that period, propitious to the operations of original and true poetry, when the coyness of fancy was not always proof against the approaches of reason, when genius was rather directed than governed by judgement, and when taste and learning had so far only disciplined imagination, as to suffer its excesses to pass without censure or controul, for the sake of the beauties to which they were allied.

SECTION LXII.

MORE poetry was written in the single reign of Elisabeth, than in the two preceding centuries. The same causes, among others already enumerated and explained, which called forth genius and imagination, such as the new sources of fiction opened by a study of the classics, a familiarity with the French, Italian and Spanish writers, the growing elegancies of the English language, the diffusion of polished manners, the felicities of long peace and public prosperity, and a certain freedom and activity of mind which immediately followed the national emancipation from superstition, contributed also to produce innumerable compositions in poetry. In prosecuting my further examination of the poetical annals of this reign, it therefore becomes necessary to reduce such a latitude of materials to some sort of methodical arrangement. On which account, I shall class and consider the poets of this reign under the general heads, or divisions, of SATIRE, SONNET, PASTORAL, and MISCELLANEOUS poetry. Spenser will stand alone, without a class, and without a rival.

Satire, specifically so called, did not commence in England till the latter end of the reign of queen Elizabeth. We have seen, indeed, that eclogues and allegories were made the vehicle of satire, and that many poems of a satirical tendency had been published, long ago. And here, the censure was rather confined to the corruptions of the clergy, than extended to popular follies and vices. But the first professed English satirist*, to speak technically, is bishop Joseph Hall, successively bishop of Exeter and Norwich, born at Bristow-park within the parish of Ashby de la Zouch in Leicestershire, in the year 1574, and at the age of fifteen, in the year 1588, admitted into Emanuel-college at Cambridge, where he remained about eight years. He soon became eminent in the theology of those times, preached against predestination before prince Henry with unrivalled applause, and discussed the doctrines of Arminianism in voluminous dissertations. But so variable are our studies, and so fickle is opinion, that the poet is better known to posterity than the prelate or the polemic. His satires have outlived his sermons at court*, and his laborious confutations of the Brownists. One of his later controversial tracts is, however, remembered on account of the celebrity of its antagonist. When Milton descended from his dignity to plead the cause of fanaticism and ideal liberty, bishop Hall was the defender of our hierarchical establishment. Bayle, who knew Hall only as a theologian, seems to have written his life merely because he was one of the English divines at the Synod of Dort, in 1618. From his inflexible and conscientious attachment to the royal and episcopal cause under king Charles the First, he suffered in his old age the severities of imprisonment and sequestration; and lived to see his cathedral converted into a barrack, and his palace into an ale-house. His uncommon learning was meliorated with great penetration and knowledge of the world, and his mildness of manners and his humility were characteristic. He died, and was obscurely buried without a memorial on his grave, in 1656, and in his eighty-second year, at Heigham a small village near Norwich, where he had sought shelter from the storms of usurpation, and the intolerance of presbyterianism †.

I have had the good fortune to see bishop Hall's funeral-

† [The following lines may serve in the way of epitaph. They occur in a poem, printed at the end of Whitefoote's funeral sermon upon the much lamented death of the reverend father Joseph, late lord bishop of Norwich.

sermon, preached some days after his interment, on the thirtieth day of September, 1656, at saint Peter's church in Norwich, by one John Whitefoote, Master of Arts, and rector of Heigham. The preacher, no contemptible orator, before he proceeds to draw a parallel between our prelate and the patriarch Israel, thus illustrates that part of his character with which we are chiefly concerned, and which I am now hastening to consider. "Two yeares together he was chosen rhetoric professor in the universitie of Cambridge, and performed the office with extraordinary applause. He was noted for a singular wit from his youth: a most acute rhetorician, and an elegant poet. He understood many tongues; and in the rhetoric of his own, he was second to none that lived in his time^a." It is much to our present purpose to observe, that the style of his prose is strongly tinctured with the manner of Seneca. The writer of the satires is perceptible in some of his gravest polemical or scriptural treatises; which are perpetually interspersed with excursive illustrations, familiar allusions, and observations on life. Many of them were early translated into French; and their character is well drawn by himself, in a dedication to James the First, who perhaps would have much better relished a more sedate and profound theology. "Seldome any man hath offered to your royall hands a greater bundle of his owne thoughts, nor perhaps more varietie of discourse. For here shall your maiestie find Moralitie, like a good handmaid, waiting on Divinitie: and Divinitie, like some great lady, euery day in seuerall dresses. ^b WORKS, Lond. 1628. fol. vol. i. p. 3.

At the age of twenty-three, while a student at Emanuel-college, and in the year 1597, he published at London three Books of anonymous Satires, which he called Toothless SATYRS, poetical, academical, moral^c. They were printed by Thomas Creede for Robert Dexter, and are not recited in the registers of the Stationers of London. The following year, and licenced by the stationers, three more books appeared, entitled, "VIRGIDEMIARUM, The three last Bookes of Byting Satyres." These are without his name, and were printed by Richard Bradock for Robert Dexter, in the size and letter of the last^d. All the six Books were printed together in 1599, in the same form, with this title, "VIRGIDEMIARUM, The three last Bookes of *byting Satyres corrected and amended with some additions by J. H. [John Hall.] LONDON, for R. Dexter, &c. 1599." A most incomprehensive and inaccurate title: for this edition, the last and the best, contains the three first as well as the three last Books^e. It begins with the first three books: then at the end of the third book, follow the three last, but preceded by a new title, "VIRGIDEMIARUM. The three last Bookes, of byting Satyres. ^e A modern edition, however, a thin duodecimo, was printed at Oxford, for R. Clements, 1753, under the direction of Mr. Thomson, late fellow of Queen's college Oxford. The editors followed an edition bought from Lord Oxford's library, which they destroyed when the new one was finished.

Northfolke gentleman, And now first published by J. S. I. The stately tragedy of Guistard and Sismond. II. The Northerne mother's blessing. III. The way to Thrifte. Imprinted at London for R. D. 1597." Dedicated, "to the worthiest poet Maister Ed. Spenser." To this identical impression of Hall's Satires, and the Norfolk gentleman's manuscript poems annexed, a false title appeared in 1602, "VIRGIDEMIARUM. Sixe Boukes. First three bookes, Of toothlesse Satyrs. 1. POETICALL. 2. ACADEMICALL. 3. MORAL. London, Printed by John Harison, for Robert Dexter, 1602." All that follows is exactly what is in the edition of 1599. By VIRGIDEMIA, an uncouth and uncommon word, we are to understand a Gathering or Harvest of rods, in reference to the nature of the subject.

These satires are marked with a classical precision, to which English poetry had yet rarely attained. They are replete with animation of style and sentiment. The indignation of the satirist is always the result of good sense. Nor are the thorns of severe invective unmixed with the flowers of pure poetry. The characters are delineated in strong and lively colouring, and their discriminations are touched with the masterly traces of genuine humour. The versification is equally energetic and elegant, and the fabric of the couplets approaches to the modern standard. It is no inconsiderable proof of a genius predominating over the general taste of an age when every preacher was a punster, to have written verses, where laughter was to be raised, and the reader to be entertained with sallies of pleasantry, without quibbles and conceits. His chief fault is obscurity, arising from a remote phraseology, constrained combinations, unfamiliar allusions, elleiptical apostrophes, and abruptness of expression. Perhaps some will think, that his manner betrays too much of the laborious exactness and pedantic anxiety of the scholar and the student. Ariosto in Italian, and Regnier in French, were now almost the only modern writers of satire: and I believe there had been an English translation of Ariosto's satires. But Hall's acknowledged patterns are Juvenal and Persius, not without some touches of the urbanity of Horace. His parodies of these poets, or rather his adaptations of ancient to modern manners, a mode of imitation not unhappily practised by Oldham, Rochester, and Pope, discover great facility and dexterity of invention. The moral gravity and the censorial declamation of Juvenal, he frequently enlivens with a train of more refined reflection, or adorns with a novelty and variety of images.

In the opening of his general PROLOGUE, he expresses a decent consciousness of the difficulty and danger of his new undertaking. The laurel which he sought had been unworn, and it was not to be won without hazard.

I FIRST ADVENTURE*, with fool-hardy might,
To tread the steps of perilous desight:
I FIRST ADVENTURE, follow me who list,
And be the SECOND ENGLISH SATIRIST.

His first book, containing nine satires, is aimed at the numerous impotent yet fashionable scribblers with which his age was infested. It must be esteemed a curious and valuable picture, drawn from real life, of the abuses of poetical composi-

* [Though Hall designates himself the first English satirist, yet this is not true in fact, observed Dr. Joseph Warton: "for sir Thomas Wyatt, the friend and favourite of Henry VIII., was our first writer of satire worth notice." Essay on Pope, ii. 422. To Wyatt may be added Gascoigne, who published his "Steele Glass" in 1576, which is not only a shrewd and poignant satire well expressed, but what should be still remembered to the credit of so antiquated a poet, it is an attempt to shake off the shackles of rhyme for the freedom of blank verse, or what the old bard himself styled "rhimeless verse." Lodge also published his "Fig for Momus," containing regular satires, in 1595, two years before the appearance of Hall's first three books and in his prefatory address he thus speaks for them priority, if not originality, in point of composition. "I have thought good (he says) to include Satyres, Ecolgues, and Epistles: first, by reason that I studied to delight with varietie; next, because I would write in that forme wherein no man might challenge me with servile imitation." It appears also that what he then sent forth was only a small sample of a considerable stock in his possession. "My Satyres (he proceeds) are rather placed here to prepare and trie the case than to feede it; because if it passe well, the whole centon of them, alreadie in my hands, shall sodainly be published." Of Lodge's satiric Fig, which our historian had not seen, Mr. Alex. Boswell has given a correct reimpression from the Auchinleck press. Dr. Warton considers the "Universal Passion" of Dr. Young as the first characteristic satires in our language; but surely those of Hall may put in a long preceding and justly admitted claim to the praise of this distinction.—PARK.]

tion which then prevailed; and which our author has at once exposed with the wit of a spirited satirist, and the good taste of a judicious critic. Of Spenser, who could not have been his cotemporary at Cambridge, as some have thought, but perhaps was his friend, he constantly speaks with respect and applause.

I avail myself of a more minute analysis of this Book, not only as displaying the critical talents of our satirist, but as historical of the poetry of the present period, and illustrative of my general subject. And if, in general, I should be thought too copious and prolix in my examination of these satires, my apology must be, my wish to revive a neglected writer of real genius; and my opinion, that the first legitimate author in our language of a species of poetry of the most important and popular utility, which our countrymen have so successfully cultivated, and from which Pope derives his chief celebrity, deserved to be distinguished with a particular degree of attention.

From the first satire, which I shall exhibit at length, we learn what kinds of pieces were then most in fashion, and in what manner they were written. They seem to have been, tales of love and chivalry, amatorial sonnets, tragedies, comedies, and pastorals.

Nor ladie's wanton loue, nor wandering knight,
 Legend I out in rimes all richly dight:
 Nor fright the reader, with the pagan vaunt
 Of mightie Mahound, and great Termagaunt^f.
 Nor list I sonnet of my mistress' face,
 To paint some Blowesse^g with a borrow'd grace.
 Nor can I bide^h to pen some hungrieⁱ scene
 For thick-skin ears, and undiscerning eene:
 Nor euer could my scornfull Muse abide
 With tragicke shoes^k her anckies for to hide.

ⁱ Perhaps the true reading is angrie, that is, impassioned. These satires have been most carelessly printed.

^k buskins.

Nor can I crouch, and writhe my fawning taylor,
 To some great patron, for my best auayle.
 Such hunger-starven trencher poetrie¹,
 Or let it neuer liue, or timely die!
 Nor vnder euerie bank, and euerie tree,
 Speake rimes vnto mine oaten minstrelsie:
 Nor carol out so pleasing liuely laies
 As might the Graces moue my mirth to praise^m.
 Trumpet, and reeds, and socks, and buskins fine,
 I them bequeatheⁿ, whose statues wandring twine
 Of iuie, mix'd with bayes, circles around,
 Their liuing temples likewise lawrel-bound.
 Rather had I, albe in careless rimes,
 Check the disorder'd world, and lawless times.
 Nor need I craue the Muse's midwifry,
 To bring to light so worthless poetry.
 Or, if we list^o, what baser Muse can bide
 To sit and sing by Granta's naked side?
 They haunt the tided Thames and salt Medway,
 Eer since the fame of their late bridal day.
 Nought have we here but willow-shaded shore,
 To tell our Grant his bankes are left forelore.^p

The compliment in the close to Spenser, is introduced and turned with singular address and elegance. The allusion is to Spenser's beautiful episode of the marriage of Thames and Medway, recently published, in 1595, in the fourth book of the second part of the FAIRY QUEEN^q. But had I, says the poet, been inclined to invoke the assistance of a Muse, what Muse, even of a lower order, is there now to be found, who would condescend to sit and sing on the desolated margin of the Cam?

¹ Poetry written by hirelings for bread.

^m Perhaps this couplet means Comedy.

ⁿ Heroic poetry, pastorals, comedy, and tragedy, I leave to the celebrated established masters in those different kinds of composition, such as Spenser and Shakespeare. Unless the classic poets are intended. The imitation from Persius's PROLOGUE is obvious.

^q B. iv. C. xi.

The Muses frequent other rivers, ever since Spenser celebrated the nuptials of Thames and Medway. Cam has now nothing on his banks but willows, the types of desertion.

I observe here in general, that Thomas Hudson and Henry Lock were the Bavius and Mevius of this age. In the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, 1606, they are thus consigned to oblivion by Judicio. "Locke and Hudson, sleep you quiet shavers among the shavings of the press, and let your books lie in some old nook amongst old boots and shoes, so you may avoid my censure." Hudson now translated into English Du Bartas's poem of JUDITH AND HOLOFERNES, in which is this couplet,

And at her eare a pearle of greater valew
There hung, than that th' Egyptian queene did swallow.

Yet he is commended by Harrington for making this translation in a "verie good and sweet English verse," and is largely cited in ENGLAND'S PARNASSUS, 1600. Lock applied the Sonnet to a spiritual purpose, and substituting christian love in the place of amorous passion, made it the vehicle of humiliation, holy comfort, and thanksgiving. This book he dedicated, under the title of the PASSIONATE PRESENT, to queen Elizabeth, who perhaps from the title expected to be entertained with a subject of very different nature.

In the second satire, our author poetically laments that the nine Muses are no longer vestal virgins.

Whilom the sisters nine were vestal maides,
And held their temple in the secret shades
Of faire Parnassvs, that two-headed hill
Whose avncient fame the southern world did fill:
And in the stead of their eternal fame
Was the cool stream, that took his endless name which appeared in 1597 [supr. p. 272]. That was a second edition. To his ECCLESIASTES there is a recommendatory poem by Lilly. Some of David's Psalms in verse appear with his name the same year.

From out the fertile hoof of winged steed:
There did they sit, and do their holy deed
That pleas'd both heaven and earth. ———

He complains, that the rubblements of rymesters new have engrafted the myrtle on the bay; and that poetry, departing from its antient moral tendency, has been unnaturally perverted to the purposes of corruption and impurity. The Muses have changed, in defiance of chastity,

Their modest stole to garish looser weed,
Deckt with loue-fauours, their late whoredom's meed.

While the pellucid spring of Pyrene is converted into a poisonous and muddy puddle,

— — — whose infectious staine
Corrupteth all the lowly fruitfull plaine.*

Marlow's OVID'S ELEGIES, and some of the dissolute sallies of Green and Nash, seem to be here pointed out. I know not of any edition of Marston's PYGMALION'S IMAGE before the year 1598, and the CALTHA POETARUM, OR BUMBLE-BEE, one of the most exceptionable books of this kind, written by T. Cutwode, appeared in 1599^t. Shakespeare's VENUS AND ADONIS, published in 1593, had given great offence to the graver readers of English verse^u.

In the subsequent satire, our author more particularly censures the intemperance of his brethren; and illustrates their absolute inability to write, till their imaginations were animated

As frozen dunghills in a winter's morn,
That void of vapours seemed all beforne,
Soon as the sun sends out his piercing beams,
Exhale forth filthy smoak, and stinking steams;
So doth the base and the fore-barren brain,
Soon as the raging wine begins to raigne.

In the succeeding lines, he confines his attack to Marlow, eminent for his drunken frolicks, who was both a player and a poet, and whose tragedy of TAMERLANE THE GREAT, represented before the year 1588, published in 1590, and confessedly one of the worst of his plays, abounds in bombast. Its false splendour was also burlesqued by Beaumont and Fletcher in the COXCOMB; and it has these two lines, which are ridiculed by Pistol, in Shakespeare's KING HENRY THE FOURTH^w, addressed to the captive princes who drew Tamerlane's chariot.

Holla, you pamper'd jades of Asia,
What, can ye draw but twenty miles a day?

We should, in the mean time, remember, that by many of the most skilful of our dramatic writers, tragedy was now thought almost essentially and solely to consist, in the pomp of declamation, in sounding expressions, and unnatural amplifications of style. But to proceed.

One, higher pitch'd, doth set his soaring thought

^x There is a piece entered to R. Jones, Aug. 14. 1590, entitled, "Comicall discourses of Tamberlain the Cithian [Scythian] shepherd." REGISTR. STATION. B. f. 262. b. Probably the story of Tamerlane was introduced into our early drama from the following publication, "The historie of the great emperor Tamerlane, drawn from the antient monuments of the Arabians. By messire Jean du Bec, abbot of Mortimer. Translated into English by H. M. London, for W. Ponsombie, 1597." 4to. I cite from a second edition.

Then weeneth he his base drink-drowned spright
 Rapt to the threefold loft of heauen's hight:
 When he conceiues upon his faigned stage
 The stalking steps of his great personage
 Graced with huff-cap termes, and thundering threats,
 That his poor hearers hair qvite vpright sets,
 So soon as some braue-minded hungrie youth
 Sees fitly frame to his wide-strained mouth,
 He vaunts his voice vpon a hired stage,
 With high-set steps, and princelie carriage.—
 There if he can with termes Italianate,
 Big-sounding sentences, and words of state,
 Faire patch me vp¹ his pure iambicke verse,
 He rauishes the gazing scoffolders v.

But, adds the critical satirist, that the minds of the astonished audience may not be too powerfully impressed with the terrors of tragic solemnity, a VICE, or buffoon, is suddenly and most seasonably introduced.

Now lest such frightful shews of fortvne's fall,
 And bloody tyrant's rage, should chance appall
 The dead-struck audience, mid the silent rout
 Comes leaping in a self-misformed lout,
 And latghs, and grins, and frames his mimic face,
 And jostles straight into the prince's place.—
 A goodlie hotch-potch, when vile russetings
 Are match'd with monarchs, and with mighty kings:
 A goodly grace to sober tragick muse,
 When each' base clowne his clumsy fist doth bruise²!

for adding the paragraph immediately following, which records the infancy of theatric criticism.

Meanwhile our poets, in high parliament,
 Sit watching euerie word and gesturement,
 Like curious censors, of some doutie gear,
 Whispering their verdict in their fellows eaz.
 Woe to the word, whose margent in their scrole^a
 Is noted with a black condemning coal!
 But if each period might the synod please,
 Ho! bring the iwie boughs, and bands of bayes^b.

In the beginning of the next satire, he resumes this topic. He seems to have conceived a contempt for blank verse; observing that the English iambic is written with little trouble, and seems rather a spontaneous effusion, than an artificial construction.

Too popular is tragick poesie,
 Straining his tiptoes for a farthing fee:
 And doth, beside, on rimeless numbers tread:
 Unbid iambicks flow from careless head.

He next inveighs against the poet, who
 ——— in high heroic rimes
 Compileth worm-eat stories of old times.

To these antique tales he condemns the application of the extravagant enchantments of Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, particularly of such licentious fictions as the removal of Merlin's tomb from Wales into France, or Tuscany, by the magic operations of the sorceress Melissa^c. The ORLANDO had been just now translated by Harrington.

And maketh up his hard-betaken tale

 Of some Melissa, that by magick doom
 To Tuscans soile transporteth Merlin's tomb.

But he suddenly checks his career, and retracts his thoughtless temerity in presuming to blaine such themes as had been immortalised by the fairy muse of Spenser.

Th' eternal legends of thy faerie muse,
Renowned Spenser ! whom no earthly wight
Dares once to emulate, much less dares despight.
Salust^d of France, and Tuscan Ariost,
Yield vp the lawrell garland ye haue lost!^e

In the fifth, he ridicules the whining ghosts of the MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES, which the ungenerous and unpitying poet sends back to hell, without a penny to pay Charon for their return over the river Styx^f.

In the sixth, he laughs at the hexametrical versification of the Roman prosody, so contrary to the genius of our language; lately introduced into English poetry by Stanihurst the translator of Virgil, and patronised by Gabriel Harvey and sir Philip Sidney.

Another scorns the homespun thread of rimes,
Match'd with the lofty feet of elder times.
Giue me the numbred verse that Virgil sung,
And Virgil's selfe shall speake the English tounge.—

His own lines on the subject are a proof that English verse wanted to borrow no graces from the Roman.

The false and foolish compliments of the sonnet-writer, are the object of the seventh satire.

Be she all sooty black, or berry brown,
She's white as morrow's milk, or flakes new-blown.

He judges it absurd, that the world should be troubled with the history of the smiles or frowns of a lady; as if all mankind were deeply interested in the privacies of a lover's heart, and the momentary revolutions of his hope and despair^b.

In the eighth, our author insinuates his disapprobation of sacred poetry, and the metrical versions of scripture, which were encouraged and circulated by the puritans. He glances at Robert Southwell's SAINT PETER'S COMPLAINTⁱ, in which the saint weeps pure Helicon, published this year; and the same writer's FUNERALL TEARES of the two Marias. He then, but without mentioning his name, ridicules Markham's STON'S MUSE, a translation of Solomon's Song^k. Here, says our satirical critic, Solomon assumes the character of a modern sonneteer; and celebrates the sacred spouse of Christ with the levities and in the language of a lover singing the praises of his mistress^l.

The hero of the next satire I suspect to be Robert Greene, who practised the vices which he so freely displayed in his poems. Greene, however, died three or four years before the publication of these satires^m. Nor is it very likely that he should have been, as Oldys has suggested in some manuscript papers, Hall's cotemporary at Cambridge, for he was incorporated into the University of Oxford, as a Master of Arts from Cambridge, in July, under the year 1588ⁿ. But why should we be solicitous to recover a name, which indecency, most probably joined with dulness, has long ago deservedly delivered to oblivion? Whoever he was, he is surely unworthy of these elegant lines.

Envy, ye Muses, at your thriving mate!
 Cupid hath crowned a new laureate.
 I sawe his statue gayly tir'd in green,
 As if he had some second Phebus been:
 His statue trimm'd with the Venerean tree,
 And shrined fair within your sanctuary.
 What he, that erst to gain the rhyming goal, &c.

He then proceeds, with a liberal disdain, and with an eye on the stately buildings of his university, to reprobate the Muses for this unworthy profanation of their dignity.

Take this, ye Muses, this so high despight,
 And let all hatefull, luckless birds of night,
 Let screeching owles nest in your razed roofs;
 And let your floor with horned satyr's hoofs
 Be dinted and defiled euerie morn,
 And let your walls be an eternal scorn!

His execration of the infamy of adding to the mischiefs of obscenity, by making it the subject of a book, is strongly expressed.

What if some Shoreditch^o fury shoud incite
 Some lust-stung lecher, must he needs indite
 The beastly rites of hired venery,

 Did neuer yet no damned libertine,

Our poets, too frequently the children of idleness, too naturally the lovers of pleasure, began now to be men of the world, and affected to mingle in the dissipations and debaucheries of the metropolis. To support a popularity of character, not so easily attainable in the obscurities of retirement and study, they frequented taverns, became libertines and buffoons, and exhilarated the circles of the polite and the profligate. Their way of life gave the colour to their writings; and what had been the favourite topic of conversation, was sure to please, when recommended by the graces of poetry. Add to this, that poets now began to write for hire, and a rapid sale was to be obtained at the expence of the purity of the reader's mind*. The author of the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, acted in 1806, says of Drayton a true genius, "However, he wants one true note of a poet of our times, and that is this: he cannot swagger it well in a tavern^a."

The first satire of the second Book properly belongs to the last. In it, our author continues his just and pointed animadversions on immodest poetry, and hits^b at some pernicious versions from the FACETIÆ of Poggius Florentinus, and from Rabelais. The last couplet of the passage I am going to transcribe, is most elegantly expressive.

But who conjur'd this bawdie Poggie's ghost
From out the stewes of his lewde home-bred coast;
Or wicked Rablais' drunken reuellings^r,
To grace the misrule of our tauernings?
Or who put bayes into blind Cupid's fist,
That he should crowne what laureates him list^c?

[A short passage from this satire (I. ii.)

in addition to what Mr. Warton has cited, I take the liberty of subjoining, for the sake of introducing a pointed allusion to it in the Baviad, by an English Juvenal of the present day. Hall complains, as Horace did before, Scri-bimus indocti doctique poemata passim.

Write they that can, tho they that cannot doe;

But who knows that, but they that do not know?

Lo! what it is that makes white rags so deare,

That men must give a teston for a queare.
Lo! what it is that makes goose-wings
so scant,

That the distressed semster did them want.

By tauernings, he means the encreasing fashion of frequenting taverns, which seem to have multiplied with the play-houses. As new modes of entertainment sprung up, and new places of public resort became common, the people were more often called together, and the scale of convivial life in London was enlarged. From the play-house they went to the tavern. In one of Decker's pamphlets, printed in 1609, there is a curious chapter, "How a yong Gallant should behaue himself in an Ordinarie^t." One of the most expensive and elegant meetings of this kind in London is here described. It appears that the company dined so very late, as at half an hour after eleven in the morning; and that it was the fashion to ride to this polite symposium on a Spanish jennet, a servant running before with his master's cloak. After dinner they went on horseback to the newest play. The same author in his BELMAN'S NIGHT WALKES^u, a lively description of London, almost two centuries ago, gives the following instructions. "Haunt tavernes, there shalt thou find prodigalls: pay thy two pence to a player in his gallerie, there shalt thou sit by an harlot. At ORDINARIES thou maist dine with silken fooles^w."

In the second satire, he celebrates the wisdom and liberality of our ancestors, in erecting magnificent mansions for the accommodation of scholars, which yet at present have little more use than that of reproaching the rich with their comparative neglect of learning. The verses have much dignity, and are equal to the subject.

To what end did our lavish auncestours
 Erect of old those statelie piles of ours?
 For thread-bare clerks, and for the ragged muse,
 Whom better fit some cotes of sad secluse?
 Blush, niggard Ago, be asham'd to see
 Those monuments of wiser auncestrie!
 And ye, faire heapes, the Muses sacred shrines,

 In latter euen, or midst of winter nights,
 Ill-smelling oyles, or some still-watching lights, &c.[•]

He concludes his complaint of the general disregard of the literary profession, with a spirited paraphrase of that passage of Persius, in which the philosophy of the profound Arcesilaus and of the ærumnosi Solones, is proved to be of so little use and estimation^y.

In the third, he laments the lucrative injustice of the law, while ingenuous science is without emolument or reward. The exordium is a fine improvement of his original.

Who doubts, the Laws fell downe from heauen's hight,
 Like to some gliding starre in winters night?
 Themis, the scribe of god, did long ago
 Engrave them deepe in during marble stone:

^x Of learning.

^y B. ii. 2. f. 28. In the last line of this satire he says,

Let swinish Grill delight in dunghill clay.

Gryllus is one of Ulysses's companions transformed into a hog by Circe, who refuses to be restored to his human shape. But perhaps the allusion is immediately to Spenser, FAIR. QU. ii. 12. 81.

And cast them downe on this unruly clay,
That men might know to rule and to obey.

The interview between the anxious client and the rapacious lawyer, is drawn with much humour: and shews the authoritative superiority and the mean subordination subsisting between the two characters, at that time.

The crouching client, with low-bended knee,
And manie worships, and faire flatterie,
Tells on his tale as smoothly as him list;
But still the lawyer's eye squints on his fist:
If that seem lined with a larger fee,
"Doubt not the suite, the law is plaine for thee."
Tho' must he buy his vainer hope with price,
Disclout his crownes^a, and thanke him for advice.^b

The fourth displays the difficulties and discouragements of the physician. Here we learn, that the sick lady and the gouty peer were then topics of the ridicule of the satirist.

The sickly ladie, and the gowtie peere,
Still would I haunt, that loue their life so deere:
Where life is deere, who cares for coyned drosse?
That spent is counted gaine, and spared losse.

He thus laughs at the quintessence of a sublimated mineral elixir.

Purchaseth realmes, and life prolonged brings.^c

^c B. ii. 3. f. 31.

I cite a couplet from this satire to explain it.

Genus and Species long since barfoote went

Upon their tentoes in wilde wonderment, &c.

This is an allusion to an old distich, made and often quoted in the age of scholastic science.

Dat Galenus opes, dat Justinianus honores,

Sed Genus et Species cogitur ire pedes.

That is, the study of medicine produces riches, and jurisprudence leads to stations and offices of honour; while the professor of logic is poor, and obliged to walk on foot.

high antiquity: and perhaps the puffs of quackery were formerly more ostentatious than even at present, before the profession of medicine was freed from the operations of a spurious and superstitious alchemy, and when there were mystics in philosophy as well as in religion. Paracelsus was the father of empiricism.

From the fifth we learn, that advertisements of a LIVING WANTED were affixed on one of the doors of Saint Paul's cathedral.

Sawst thou ere SQUIS^d patch'd on Paul's church dore,
To seeke some vacant vicarage before?

The sixth, one of the most perspicuous and easy, perhaps the most humorous, in the whole collection, and which I shall therefore give at length, exhibits the servile condition of a domestic preceptor in the family of an esquire. Several of the satires of this second Book, are intended to shew the depressed state of modest and true genius, and the inattention of men of fortune to literary merit.

A gentle squire would gladly entertaine
Into his house some trencher-chapelaine^e;
Some willing man, that might instruct his sons,
And that would stand to good conditions.
First, that he lie vpon the truckle-bed,
While his young maister lieth oer his head^f:

^d SQUIS was the first word of advertisements, often published on the doors of Saint Paul's. Decker says, "The first time that you enter into Paules, pass thorough the body of the church like a porter; yet presume not to fetch so much as one whole turne in the middle ile, nor to cast an eye vpon SQUIS doore, pasted and plaistered vp with seruimgmens supplications," &c. THE GULLS HORNE BOOKE, 1609. p. 21. And in Wroth's EPIGRAMS, 1620. EPIGR. 93.

A mery Greeke set vp a SQUIS late,
To signifie a stranger come to towne
Who could great noses, &c.

* Or, a table-chaplain. In the same sense we have trencher-knight, in LOVES LABOUR LOST.

^e This indulgence allowed to the pupil, is the reverse of a rule antiently practised in our universities. In the Statutes of Corpus Christi college at Oxford, given in 1516, the Scholars are ordered to sleep respectively under the beds of the Fellows, in a truckle-bed, or small bed shifted about upon wheels. "Sit unum [cubile] altius, et aliud humile et rotale, et in altiori cubet Socius, in altero semper Discipulus." Cap. xxxvii. Much the same injunction is ordered in the statutes of Magdalen college Oxford, given 1459. "Sint duo lecti principales, et duo lecti rotales, Trockyll beddys vulgariter nuncu-

Second, that he doj upon no default,
 Neuer presume to sit aboute the salt^s :
 Third, that he neuer change his trencher twise;
 Fourth, that he use all common courtesies :
 Sit bare at meales, and one half rise and wait :
 Last, that he never his yong maister beat ;
 But he must aske his mother to define
 How manie jerks she would his breech should line.
 All these observ'd, he could contented be,
 To give five markes, and winter liverie.^b

From those who despised learning, he makes a transition to those who abused or degraded it by false pretences. Judicial astrology is the subject of the seventh satire. He supposes that Astrology was the daughter of one of the Egyptian midwives, and that having been nursed by Superstition, she assumed the garb of Science.

That now, who pares his nailes, or libs his swine?
 But he must first take covnsel of the signe.

Again, of the believer in the stars, he says,
 His feare or hope, for plentie or for lack,
 Hangs all vpon his new-year's Almanack.

pati," &c. Cap. xlv. And in those of Trinity college Oxford, given 1556, where troclee bed, the old spelling of the word truckle bed, ascertains the etymology from troclea, a wheel. Cap. xxvi. In an old Comedy THE RETURN FROM PARMASSUS, acted at Cambridge in 1606, Amoretto says, "When I was in Cambridge, and lay in a trundle-bed under my tutor," &c. A. ii. Sc. vi.

⁶ Towards the head of the table was placed a large and lofty piece of plate, the top of which, in a broad cavity, held the salt for the whole company. One of these stately salt-sellars is still preserved, and in use, at Winchester college. With this idea, we must understand the following passage, of a table meanly decked. B. vi. i. f. 83.

Now shalt thou never see the Salt beset
 With a big-bellied gallon flagonet.

In Jonson's CYNTHIA'S REVELLS, acted in 1600, it is said of an affected coxcomb, "His fashion is, not to take knowledge of him that is beneath him in clothes. He never drinks below the salt." A. i. S. ii.

So Dekker, GULS HORNE BOOKS, p. 26. "At your twelue penny Ordinarie, you may giue any iustice of the peace, or young knight, if he sit but one degree towards the Equinoctiall of the Saltsellar, leaue to pay for the wine," &c. See more illustrations, in Reed's OLD PLAYS, edit. 1780. vol. iii. 285. In Parrot's SPRINGES FOR WOODCOCKES, 1613, a guest complains of the indignity of being degraded below the salt. Lib. ii. ERIGR. 188.

And swears that he below the Salt was sett.

^b B., ii. 6. f. 38.

If chance once in the spring his head should áke,
It was fortold : “ thus says mine Almanack.”

The numerous astrological tracts, particularly pieces called PROGNOSTICATIONS, published in the reign of queen Elizabeth, are a proof how strongly the people were infatuated with this sort of divination. One of the most remarkable, was a treatise written in the year 1582, by Richard Harvey*, brother to Gabriel Harvey, a learned astrologer of Cambridge, predicting the portentous conjunction of the primary planets, Saturn and Jupiter, which was to happen the next year. It had the immediate effect of throwing the whole kingdom into the most violent consternation. When the fears of the people were over, Nash published a droll account of their opinions and apprehensions while this formidable phenomenon was impending; and Elderton a ballad-maker, and Tarleton the comedian, joined in the laugh. This was the best way of confuting the impertinencies of the science of the stars. True knowledge must have been beginning to dawn, when these profound fooleries became the objects of wit and ridicule¹.

* [Nash says of Gab. Harvey in his “Have with You,” &c. 1596, “The best wit-craft I can turn him too, to get three pence a weeke, is to write Prognostications and Almanacks, and that alone must be his best philosophers stone till hys last destiny.” Sig. I. 3. 6.—PARK.]

SECTION LXIII.

THE opening of the first satire of the third Book, which is a contrast of antient parsimony with modern luxury, is so witty, so elegant, and so poetical an enlargement of a shining passage in Juvenal, that the reader will pardon another long quotation.

Time was, and that was term'd the time of gold,
 When world and time were young, that now are old:
 When quiet Saturne sway'd the mace of lead,
 And pride was yet unborne, and yet unbred.
 Time was, that whiles the autumnne-fall did last,
 Our hungrie sires gap'd for the falling mast.
 Could no unhusked akorne leaue the tree,
 But there was challenge made whose it might be.
 And if some nice and liquorous appetite
 Desir'd more daintie dish of rare delite,
 They scal'd the stored crab with clasped knee,
 Till they had sated their delicious ee.
 Or search'd the hopefull thicks of hedgy-rows,
 For brierie berries, hawes, or sowerer sloes:
 Or when they meant to fare the fin'st of all,
 They lick'd oake-leaues besprint with hony-fall.
 As for the thrise three-angled beech-nut shell,
 Or chesnut's armed huske, and hid kernell,
 Nor squire durst touch, the lawe would not afford,
 Kept for the court, and for the king's owne board.
 Their royall plate was clay, or wood, or stone,
 The vulgar, saue his hand, else he had none.
 Their onlie cellar was the neighbour brooke,
 None did for better care, for better looke.

Was then no 'plaining of the brewer's scape,
 Nor greedie vintner mix'd the strained grape.
 The king's pavilion was the grassie green,
 Vnder safe shelter of the shadie-treen.——
 But when, by Ceres' huswifrie and paine,
 Men learn'd to burie the reuiuing graine,
 And father Janus taught the new-found vine
 Rise on the elme, with manie a friendly twine:
 And base desire bade men to deluen lowe
 For needlesse metalls, then gan mischief growe:
 Then farewell, fayrest age! &c.——

He then, in the prosecution of a sort of poetical philosophy, which prefers civilized to savage life, wishes for the nakedness or the furs of our simple ancestors, in comparison of the fantastic fopperies of the exotic apparel of his own age.

They, naked went, or clad in ruder hide,
 Or homespun russet void of foraine pride.
 But thou canst maske in garish gawderie,
 To suite a Fool's far-fetched liuerie.
 A Frenche head joyn'd to necke Italian,
 Thy thighs from Germanie, and breast from Spain:
 An Englishman in none, a foole in all,
 Many in one, and one in seuerall.^b

One of the vanities of the age of Elizabeth was the erection of monuments, equally costly and cumbersome, charged with a waste of capricious decorations, and loaded with superfluous and disproportionate sculpture. They succeeded to the rich solemnity of the gothic shrine, which yet, amid a profusion of embellishments, preserved uniform principles of architecture.

In the second satire, our author moralises on these empty memorials, which were alike allotted to illustrious or infamous characters.

Some stately tombe he builds, Egyptian-wise,
 REX REGUM written on the pyramis:

^a cheats.

^b B. iii. 1. f. 45.

Whereas great Arthur lies in ruder oke,
 That neuer felt none but the feller's stroke^c,
 Small honour can be got with gaudie graue,
 Nor it thy rotten name from death can saue.
 The fairer tombe, the fowler is thy name,
 The greater pompe procuring greater shame.
 Thy monument make thou thy living deeds,
 No other tomb than that true virtue needs!
 What, had he nought whereby he might be knowne,
 But costly pilements of some curious stone?
 The matter nature's, and the workman's frame
 His purse's cost:—where then is Osmond's name?
 Deservedst thou ill? Well were thy name and thee;
 Wert thou inditched in great secrecie;
 Whereas no passengers might curse thy dust, &c.^d

The third is the description of a citizen's feast, to which he was invited,

With hollow words, and ouerly^e request.

But the great profusion of the entertainment was not the effect of liberality, but a hint that no second invitation must be expected. The effort was too great to be repeated. The guest who dined at this table often, had only a single dish^f.

The fourth is an arraignment of ostentatious piety, and of those who strove to push themselves into notice and esteem by petty pretensions. The illustrations are highly humorous.

Who euer giues a paire of velvet shoes
 To th' holy rood^g, or liberally allows

^c He alludes to the discovery of king Arthur's body in Glastonbury abbey. Lately, in digging up a barrow, or tumulus, on the downs near Dorchester, the body of a Danish chief, as it seemed, was found in the hollow trunk of a huge oak for a coffin.

^d B. iii. 2. f. 50.

^f B. iii. 3. f. 52.

^g In a gallery over the screen, at entering the choir, was a large crucifix, or rood, with the images of the holy Virgin and saint John. The velvet shoes were for the feet of Christ on the cross, or of one of the attendant figures. A rich lady sometimes bequeathed her wedding-gown, with necklace and ear-rings, to dress up the Virgin Mary. This place was called the Rood-loft.

But a new rope to ring the curfew bell?
 But he desires that his great deed may dwell,
 Or grauen in the chancell-window glasse,
 Or in the lasting tombe of plated brasse.

The same affectation appeared in dress.

Nor can good Myron weare on his left hand,
 A signet ring of Bristol-diamond;
 But he must cut his gloue to shew his pride,
 That his trim jewel might be better spied:
 And, that men might some burgesse^b him repute,
 With sattin sleeves hathⁱ grac'd his sacke-cloth suit.^k

The fifth is a droll portrait of the distress of a lustie courtier, or fine gentleman, whose periwinkle, or peruke, was suddenly blown off by a boisterous puff of wind while he was making his bows^l.

He lights, and runs and quicklie hath him sped^m
 To ouertake his ouer-running head, &c.

These are our satirist's reflections on this disgraceful accident.

Fie on all courtesie, and unruly windes,
 Two only foes that faire disguisement findes!
 Strange curse, but fit for such a fickle age,
 When scalpes are subject to such vassalage!—
 Is't not sweet pride, when men their crownes must shade
 With that which jerkes the hams of everie jade!^m

^b some rich citizen.

ⁱ That is, he hath, &c.

^k B. iii. 4. f. 55.

^l In a set of articles of enquiry sent to a college in Oxford, about the year 1676, by the visitor bishop Morley, the commissary is ordered diligently to remark, and report, whether any of the senior fellows wore periwigs. I will not suppose that bobwigs are here intended. But after such a proscription, who could imagine, that the bushy grizzle-wig should ever have been adopted as a badge of gravity? So arbitrary are ideas of dignity or levity in dress! There is an epigram in Harrington, written perhaps about 1600, "Of Galla's goodly periwigge." B. i. 66. This was undoubtedly false hair. In Hayman's Quodlibets or Epigrams, printed 1628, there is one "to a Periwiggian." B. i. 65. p. 10. Again, "to a certaine Periwiggian." B. ii. 9. p. 21. Our author mentions a periwig again, B. v. 2. f. 63.

A golden periwig on a blackmoor's brow.

^m B. iii. 5. f. 57.

In the next is the figure of a famished Gallant, or beau, which is much better drawn than in any of the comedies of those times. His hand is perpetually on the hilt of his rapier. He picks his teeth, but has dined with duke Humphry^a. He professes to keep a plentiful and open house for every stragglng cavaliere, where the dinners are long and enlivened with music, and where many a gay youth, with a high-plumed hat, chooses to dine, much rather than to pay his shilling. He is so emaciated for want of eating, that his sword-belt hangs loose over his hip, the effect of hunger and heavy iron. Yet he is dressed in the height of the fashion,

All trapped in the new-found brauerie.

He pretends to have been at the conquest of Cales, where the nuns worked his bonnet. His hair stands upright in the French style, with one long lock hanging low on his shoulders, which, the satirist adds, puts us in mind of a native cord, the truly English rope which he probably will one day wear.

His linen collar labyrinthian set,

Whose thousand double turnings neuer met;

His sleeves half-hid with elbow-pinionings,

As if he meant to fly with linen wings^o.

But when I looke, and cast mine eyes below,

What monster meets mine eyes in human show?

^a That is, he has walked all day in saint Paul's church without a dinner. In the body of old saint Paul's, was a huge and conspicuous monument of sir John Beauchamp, buried in 1358, son of Guy and brother of Thomas, earls of Warwick. This, by a vulgar mistake, was at length called the tomb of Humphry duke of Gloucester, who was really buried at St. Alban's, where his magnificent shrine now remains. The middle ile of Saint Paul's is called the Dukes gallery, in a chapter of the GULS HORNE BOOKE, "How a gallant should behaue himself in Powles Walkes." CU. iii. p. 17. Of the humours of this famous ambulatory, the general rendezvous of lawyers and their clients, pickpockets, cheats, bucks, pimps, whores, poets, players, and many others who either for idleness or business found it convenient to frequent the most fashionable crowd in London, a more particular description may be seen, in Dekker's "DEAD TERME, or Westminster's Complaint for long Vacations and short Termes, under the chapter, Powles Steeples complaint." SIGNAT. D. 3. Lond. for John Hodgetts, 1608. 4to. Bl. lett.

^o Barnaby Rich in his IRISH HUBBUB, printed 1617, thus describes four GALLANTS coming from an Ordinary. "The third was in a yellow-starched band, that made him looke as if he had been troubled with the yellow iaudis.— They were all four in white bootes and gylt spurres," &c. Lond. 1617. 4to. p. 36.

So slender waist, with such an abbot's loyne,
 Did neuer sober nature sure conjoyne!
 Lik'st a strawe scare-crow in the new-sowne field,
 Rear'd on some sticke the tender corne to shield.^p

In the Prologue to this book, our author strives to obviate the objections of certain critics who falsely and foolishly thought his satires too perspicuous. Nothing could be more absurd, than the notion, that because Persius is obscure, therefore obscurity must be necessarily one of the qualities of satire. If Persius, under the severities of a proscriptive and sanguinary government, was often obliged to conceal his meaning, this was not the case of Hall. But the darkness and difficulties of Persius arise in great measure from his own affectation and false taste. He would have been enigmatical under the mildest government. To be unintelligible can never naturally or properly belong to any species of writing. Hall of himself is certainly obscure: yet he owes some of his obscurity to an imitation of this ideal excellence of the Roman satirists.

The fourth Book breathes a stronger spirit of indignation, and abounds with applications of Juvenal to modern manners, yet with the appearance of original and unborrowed satire.

The first is miscellaneous and excursive, but the subjects often lead to an unbecoming licentiousness of language and images. In the following nervous lines, he has caught and finely heightened the force and manner of his master.

Who list, excuse, when chaster dames can hire
 Some snout-fair stripling to their apple squire^q,
 Whom staked vp, like to some stallion steed,
 They keep with eggs and oysters for the breed.

^p B. iii. 7. f. 62.

^q Some fair-faced stripling to be their page. Marston has this epithet, Sc. VII. LAN. B. i. 3.

Had I some snout-faire brats, they should indure

The newly-found Castilion calenture,

Before some pedant, &c.

In Satires and Epigrams, called THE LETTING OF HUMORS BLOOD IN THE HEAD-VAYNE, 1600, we have "Some pippin-squire." EPIGR. 33.

O Lucine! barren Caia hath an heir,
 After her husband's dozen years despair:
 And now the bribed midwife sweares apace,
 The bastard babe doth beare his father's face.

He thus enhances the value of certain novelties, by declaring them to be Worth little less than landing of a whale,

 Or Gades spoils^r, or a churl's funerals:

The allusion is to Spenser's Talus in the following couplet,

Gird but the cynicke's helmet on his head,
 Cares he for Talus, or his flayle of leade?

He adds, that the guilty person, when marked, destroys all distinction, like the cuttle-fish concealed in his own blackness.

Long as the craftie cuttle lieth sure,
 In the blacke cloud of his thicke vomiture;
 Who list, complaine of wronged faith or fame,
 When he may shift it to another's name.

He thus describes the effect of his satire, and the enjoyment of his own success in this species of poetry.

Now see I fire-flakes sparkle from his eyes,
 Like to a comet's taylor in th' angrie skies:
 His powting cheeks puffed vp above his brow,
 Like a swolne toad touch'd with the spider's blow:
 His mouth shrinks side-ways like a scornful playse^r;
 To take his tired ear's ingrateful place. ———
 Nowe laugh I loud, and breake my splene to see
 This pleasing pastime of my poesie:
 Much better than a Paris-garden beare^r,
 Or prating poppet on a theater;

^r Cadiz was newly taken.

^r A fish. Jonson says in the SILENT WOMAN, "Of a fool, that would stand thus, with a playse-mouth," &c. A. i. S. ii. See more instances in OLD PLAYS, vol. iii. p. 395. edit. 1780.

^r "Then led they cosin [the gull] to

Or Mimo's whistling to his tabouret^u,
Selling a laughter for a cold meal's meat.

It is in Juvenal's style to make illustrations satirical. They are here very artfully and ingeniously introduced^w.

The second is the character of an old country squire, 'who starves himself, to breed his son a lawyer and a gentleman.' It appears, that the vanity or luxury of purchasing dainties at an exorbitant price began early.

Let sweet-mouth'd Mercia bid what crowns she please,
For half-red cherries, or greene garden pease,
Or the first artichoak of all the yeare,
To make so lavish cost for little cheare.
When Lollo feasteth in his revelling fit,
Some starved pullen scoures the rusted spit:
For els how should his son maintained be
At inns of court or of the chancery, &c.
The tenants wonder at their landlord's son,
And blesse them^x at so sudden coming on!
More than who gives his pence to view some trickes
Of strange Morocco's dumbe arithmetickes,
Or the young elephant, or two-tayl'd steere,
Or the ridg'd camel, or the fiddling freere^z. —

Again, ibid. "Some ii or iii [pick-pockets] hath Paules church on charge, other hath Westminster hawle in terme time, diuerse Chepesyde with the flesh and fishe shambles, some the Borough and Bearebayting, some the court," &c. Paris-garden was in the borough.

^z Shewes of those times. He says in this satire,

— 'Gin not thy gaites
Untill the evening owl, or bloody bat;

Neuer untill the lamps of Paul's been light:

And niggard lanterns shade the moon-shine night.

The lamps about Saint Paul's, were at this time the only regular night-illuminations of London. But in an old Collection of Jests, some Bucks coming drunk from a tavern, and reeling through the city, amused themselves in pulling down the lanterns which hung before the doors of the houses. A grave citizen unexpectedly came out and seized one of them, who said in defence, "I am only snuffing your candle." "JESTS TO MAKE YOU MERIE. Written by T. D. and George Wilkins. Lond. 1607." 4to. p. 6. JEST 17.

Fools they may feede on words, and liue on ayre^a,
 That climbe to honour by the pulpit's stayre; ..
 Sit seuen yeares pining in an anchor's cheyre^b,
 To win some patched shreds of minivere^c!

He predicts, with no small sagacity, that Lollo's son's distant posterity will rack their rents to a treble proportion,

And hedge in all their neighbours common lands.

Enclosures of waste lands were among the great and national grievances of our author's age^d. It may be presumed, that the practice was then carried on with the most arbitrary spirit of oppression and monopoly.

The third is on the pride of pedigree. The introduction is from Juvenal's eighth satire; and the substitution of the memorials of English ancestry, such as were then fashionable, in the place of Juvenal's parade of family statues without arms or ears, is remarkably happy. But the humour is half lost, unless by recollecting the Roman original, the reader perceives the unexpected parallel.

Or call some old church-windowe to record
 The age of thy fair armes.—
 Or find some figures half obliterate,
 In rain-beat marble neare to the church-gate,
 Upon a crosse-legg'd tombe. What boots it thee,
 To shewe the rusted buckle that did tie
 The garter of thy greatest grandsire's knee?

^a The law is the only way to riches. Fools only will seek preferment in the church, &c.

He adds,

And seuen more, plod at a patron's

To get some gilded Chapel's cheaper

I believe the true reading is gelded chapel. A benefice robbed of its tythes, &c. Sayle is Sale. So in the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, A. iii. S. 1. "He hath a proper gelded parsonage."

^d Without attending to this circumstance, we miss the meaning and humour of the following lines, B. v. 1.

Pardon, ye glowing cares! Needes will it out,
 Though brazen walls compass'd my tongue about,
 As thick as wealthy Scrobio's quick-set rowes
 In the wide common that he did enclose.

Great part of the third satire of the same book turns on this idea.

What, to reserve their relicks many yeares,
 Their siluer spurs, or spils of broken speares?
 Or cite old Ocland's verse^e, how they did wield
 The wars in Turwin or in Turney field?

Afterwards, some adventurers for raising a fortune are introduced. One trades to Guiana for gold. This is a glance at sir Walter Rawleigh's expedition to that country. Another, with more success, seeks it in the philosopher's stone.

When half his lands are spent in golden smoke,
 And now his second hopefull glasse is broke.
 But yet, if haply his third fornace hold,
 Devoteth all his pots and pans to gold.

Some well-known classical passages are thus happily mixed, modernised, and accommodated to his general purpose.

Was neuer foxe but wily cubs begets;
 The bear his fiercenesse to his brood besets:
 Nor fearfull hare falls from the lyon's seed,
 Nor eagle wont the tender doue to breed.
 Crete euer wont the cypresse sad to bear,
 Acheron's banks the palish popelar:
 The palm doth rifely rise in Jury field^f,
 And Alpheus' waters nought but oliue yield:
 Asopus breeds big bullrushes alone,
 Meander heath; peaches by Nilus growne:
 An English wolfe, an Irish toad to see,
 Were as a chaste man nurs'd in Italy^g.

In the fourth, these diversions of a delicate youth of fashion and refined manners are mentioned, as opposed to the rougher employments of a military life.

Gallio may pull me roses ere they fall,
 Or in his net entrap the tennis-ball;
 Or tend his spar-hawke mantling in her mewe,
 Or yelping beagles busy heeles pursue:

^e See supr. p. 139.

^g B. iv. 3. f. 26.

Or watch a sinking corke vpon the shore^h,
 Or halter finches through a privy dooreⁱ;
 Or list he spend the time in sportful game, &c.

He adds,

Seest thou the rose-leaues fall ungathered?
 Then hye thee, wanton Gallio, to wed. —
 Hye thee, and giue the world yet one dwarfe more,
 Svch as it got, when thou thyself was bore.

In the contrast between the martial and effeminate life, which includes a general ridicule of the foolish passion which now prevailed, of making it a part of the education of our youth to bear arms in the wars of the Netherlands, are some of Hall's most spirited and nervous verses.

If Martius in boisterous buffs be drest,
 Branded with iron plates upon the breast,
 And pointed on the shoulders for the nonce^k,
 As new come from the Belgian-garrisons;
 What should thou need to enuy aught at that,
 When as thou smellest like a ciuet-cat?
 When as thine oyled locks smooth-platted fall,
 Shining like varnish'd pictures on a wall?
 When a plum'd fanne^l may shade thy chalked^m face,
 And lawny strips thy naked bosom grace?
 If brabbling Makefray, at each fair and 'sizeⁿ,
 Picks quarrels for to shew his valiantize,
 Straight pressed for an hyngrý Switzer's pay
 To thrust his fist to each part of the pray;
 And piping hot, puffs toward the pointed^o plaine,

^z B. iv. 4. In a couplet of this satire, he alludes to the SCHOLA SALERNITANA, an old metrical system in rhyming verse, which chiefly describes the qualities of diet.

The neuer haue I Salerne rimes profest,
 To be some lady's trencher-critick guest.

There is much humour in trencher-critick. Collingborn, mentioned in the beginning of this satire, is the same whose Legend is in the MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES, and who was hanged for a distich on Catesby, Ratcliff, Lord Lovel, and king Richard the Third, about the year 1484. See MIRR. MAG. p. 455. edit. 1610. 4to. Our author says,

Or lucklesse Collingbourne feeding of

That is, he was food for the crows when on the gallows. At the end, is the first use I have seen, of a witty apothegmatical comparison, of a libidinous old man.

The maidens mocke, and call him

 That with a greene tayle has an hoary

[It is used by Boccacio in his introduction to the second part of the Decamerone—and most probably was current before his time.—EDIT.]

The fifth, the most obscure of any, exhibits the extremes of prodigality and avarice, and affords the first instance I remember to have seen, of nominal initials with dashes. Yet in his POSTSCRIPT, he professes to have avoided all personal applications^a.

In the sixth, from Juvenal's position that every man is naturally discontented, and wishes to change his proper condition and character, he ingeniously takes occasion to expose some of the new fashions and affectations.

Out from the Gades to the eastern morne,
 Not one but holds his native state forlorne.
 When comely striplings wish it were their chance,
 For Cenis' distaffe to exchange their lance;
 And weare curl'd periwigs, and chalk their face,
 And still are poring on their pocket-glasse;
 Tyr'd^b with pinn'd ruffs, and fans, and partlet strips,
 And buskes and verdingales about their hips:
 And tread on corked stilts a prisoner's pace.

Besides what is here said, we have before seen, that perukes were now among the novelties in dress. From what follows it appears that coaches were now in common use^c.

Is't not a shame, to see each homely groome

^c Of the rapid increase of the number of coaches, but more particularly of Hackney-coaches, we have a curious proof in A pleasant Dispute between Coach and Sedan, Lond. 1636. 4to. "The most eminent places for stoppage are Pawles-gate into Cheapside, Ludgate and Ludgate-hill, especially when the Play is done at the Friars: then Holborne Conduit, and Holborne-bridge, is villainously pestered with them, Hosier-lane, Smithfield, and Cow-lane, sending all about their new or old mended coaches. Then about the Stockes, and Poultrie, Temple-Barre, Fetter-lane, and Shoe-Lane next to Fleetstreete. But to see their multitude, either when there is a Masque at Whitehall, or a Lord Mayor's Feast, or a New Play at some of the playhouses, you would admire to see them how close they stand together, like mutton-pies in a cook's oven," &c. Signat. F. Marston, in 1598, speaks of the jouling Coach of a Messalina. Sc. VILLAN. B. i. 3. And in Marston's Postscript to PYGMALION, 1598, we are to understand a coach, where he says,

— — — Run as sweet
 As doth a tumbrell through the paved street.

In CYNTHIA'S REVELS, 1600, a spend-thrift is introduced, who among other

The rustic wishing to turn soldier, is pictured in these lively and poetical colours.

 And nowe he gins to loathe his former state:

 Nor list he nowe go whistling to the carre,
 But sells his teeme, and settleth to the warre.

polite extravagancies, is "able to maintaine a ladie in her two carroches a day." A. iv. S. ii. However, in the old comedy of RAM-ALLEY, or MERRY TRICKS, first printed in 1611, a coach and a caroche seem different vehicles, A. iv. S. ii.

In horslitters, [in] coaches or caroaches. Unless the poet means a synonyme for coach.

In some old account I have seen of queen Elizabeth's progress to Cambridge, in 1564, it is said, that lord Leicester went in a coach, because he had hurt his leg. In a comedy, so late as the reign of Charles the First, among many studied wonders of fictitious and hyperbolical luxury, a lover promises his lady that she shall ride in a coach to the next door. Cartwright's LOVES CONVERT. A. ii. S. vi. Lond. 1651. WORKS, p. 125.

— Thou shalt

Take coach to the next door, and as it were

An Expedition not a Visit, be Bound for an house not ten strides off,

Aloof in indignation of the earth.

Stowe says, "In the year 1564, Guyl-liam Boonen, a Dutchman, became the Queene's coachmanne, and was the first that brought the vse of coaches into England. And after a while, diuers great ladies, with as great icalousie of the queene's displeasure, made them coaches, and rid in them vp and downe the countries to the great admiration of all the beholders, but then by little and little they grew vsuall among the nobilitie, and others of sort, and within twenty yeares became a great trade of coachmaking. And about that time began long wagons to come in vse, such as now come to London, from Caunterbury, Norwich, Ipswich, Gloucester, &c. with passengers and commodities. Lastly, even at this time, 1605, began the ordinary vse of caroaches." Edit. fol. 1615. p. 867. col. 2.

From a comparison of the former and latter part of the context, it will perhaps appear that Coaches and Caroaches were the same.

^d This sort of stuff is mentioned in a statute of Richard the Second, an. 12. A. D. 1389.

Having traced various scenes of dissatisfaction, and the desultory pursuits of the world, he comes home to himself, and concludes, that real happiness is only to be found in the academic life. This was a natural conclusion from one who had experienced no other situation^h.

^g These lines seem to be levelled at William Elderton, a celebrated drunken ballad-writer. Stowe says, that he was an attorney of the Shoriff's court in the city of London about the year 1570, and quotes some verses which he wrote about that time, on the erection of the new portico with images, at Guildhall. SURV. LOND. edit. 1599. p. 217. 4to. He has two epitaphs in Camden's REMAINS, edit. 1674. p. 533. seq. Hervey in his FOUR LETTERS, printed in 1592, mentions him with Greene. "If [Spenser's] MOTHER HUBBARD, in the vaine of Chawcer, happen to tell one Canicular tale, Father Elderton and hisson Greene, in the vaine of Skelton or Skoggin, will counterfeit an hundred dogged fables, libels," &c. p. 7. Nash, in his APOLOGY OF PIERS PENNILESS, says that "Tarleton at the theater made jests of him [Hervey,] and W. Elderton consumed his ale-crammed nose to nothing, in bear-baiting him with whole bundles of ballads." Signat. E. edit. 1593. 4to. And Harvey, ubi supr. p. 34. ^h In this Satire, among the lying narratives of travellers, our author, with Mandeville and others, mentions the SPANISH DECADS. It is an old black-letter quarto, a translation from the Spanish into English, about 1590. In the old anonymous play of LINGUA, 1607, Mendacio says, "Sir John Mandeviles trauells, and great part of the DECADS, were of my doing." A. ii. S. 15

In skill to want, and wanting seeke for more;
In weale nor want, nor wish for greater store.¹

The last of this Book, is a satire on the pageantries of the papal chair, and the superstitious practices of popery, with which it is easy to make sport. But our author has done this, by an uncommon quickness of allusion, poignancy of ridicule, and fertility of burlesque invention. Were Juvenal to appear at Rome, he says,

How his enraged ghost would stamp and stare,
That Cesar's throne is turn'd to Peter's chaire:
To see an old shorne lozel perched high,
Crouching beneath a golden canopie!
And, for the lordly Fasces borne of old,
To see two quiet crossed keyes of gold!—
But that he most would gaze, and wonder at,
Is, th' horned mitre, and the bloody hat^k;
The crooked staffe^l, the coule's strange form and store^m,
Saue that he saw the same in hell before.

The following ludicrous ideas are annexed to the exclusive appropriation of the eucharistic wine to the priest in the mass.

The whiles the liquorous priest spits every trice,
With longing for his morning sacrifice:
Which he reares vp quite perpendiculare,
That the mid church doth spight the chancel's fare.ⁿ

But this sort of ridicule is improper and dangerous. It has a tendency, even without an entire parity of circumstances, to burlesque the celebration of this awful solemnity in the reformed church. In laughing at false religion, we may sometimes hurt the true. Though the rites of the papistic eucharist are erroneous and absurd, yet great part of the ceremony, and above all the radical idea, belong also to the protestant communion.

SECTION LXIV.

THE argument of the first satire of the fifth Book, is the oppressive exaction of landlords, the consequence of the growing decrease of the value of money. One of these had perhaps a poor grandsire, who grew rich by availing himself of the general rapine at the dissolution of the monasteries. There is great pleasantry in one of the lines, that he Begg'd a cast abbey' in the church's wayne.

In the mean time, the old patrimonial mansion is desolated; and even the parish-church unroofed and dilapidated, through the poverty of the inhabitants, and neglect or avarice of the patron.

Would it not vex thee, where thy sires did keep^a,
 To see the dunged folds of dag-tayl'd sheep?
 And ruin'd house where holy things were said,
 Whose free-stone walls the thatched rooff vpbraid;
 Whose shrill saints-bell hangs on his lovery,
 While the rest are damned to the plumbery^b:
 Yet pure devotion lets the steeple stand,
 And idle battlements on either hand, &c.^c

By an enumeration of real circumstances, he gives us the following lively draught of the miserable tenement, yet ample services, of a poor copyholder.

^a live, inhabit.

^b The bells were all sold, and melted down; except that for necessary use the Saints-bell, or sanctus-bell, was only suffered to remain within its lovery, that is louver, or turret, usually placed between the chancel and body of the church. Marston has "pitch-black louveries." Sc. VILLAN. B. ii. 5.

^c Just to keep up the appearance of a church.

Of one bay's breadth, god wot, a silly cote,
 Whose thatched spars are furr'd with sluttish soote,
 A whole inch thick, shining like black-moor's brows,
 Through smöke that downe the headlesse barrel blows.
 At his bed's feete feeden his stalled teame,
 His swin^e beneath, his pullen oer the beame.
 A starued tenement, such as I guesse
 Stands straggling on the wastes of Holdernesse:
 Or such as shivers on a Peake hill side, &c. —
 Yet must he haunt his greedy landlord's hall
 With often presents at each festivall:
 With crammed capons euerie New-yeare's morne,
 Or with greene cheeses when his sheepe are shorne:
 Or many maunds-full^d of his mellow fruite, &c.

The lord's acceptance of these presents is touched with much humour.

The smiling landlord shewes a sunshine face,
 Feigning that he will grant him further grace;
 And leers like Esop's foxe vpon the crane,
 Whose neck he craves for his chirurgian.^e

In the second^f, he reprehends the incongruity of splendid edifices and worthless inhabitants.

 That overcroweth all the world beside^g;

 With his big title, an Italian motⁱ,
 Laves siege unto the backward buyer's grot, &c.

He then beautifully draws, and with a selection of the most picturesque natural circumstances, the inhospitality or rather desertion of an old magnificent rural mansion.

Beat the broad gates, a goodly hollow sound
 With double echoes doth againe rebound;
 But not a dog doth bark to welcome thee,
 Nor churlish porter canst thou chafing see:
 All dumb and silent, like the dead of night,
 Or dwelling of some sleepy Sybarite!
 The marble pavement, hid with desert weed,
 With house-leek, thistle, dock, and hemlock-seed. —
 Look to the towered chimnies, which should be
 The wind-pipes of good hospitalitie: ———
 Lo, there th' unthankful swallow takes her rest,
 And fills the tunnell with her circled nest^k!

Afterwards, the figure of Famine is thus imagined.

Grim Famine sits in their fore-pined face,
 All full of angles of vnequal space,
 Like to the plane of many-sided squares
 That wont be drawne out by geometars.^l

In the third, a satire is compared to the porcupine.

^h As when.

^l In this age, the three modern languages were studied to affectation. In the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, above quoted, a fashionable fop tells his Page, "Sirrah, boy, remember me when I come in Paul's Church-yard, to buy a Ronsard and Dubartas in French, an Arete in Italian, and our hardest writers in Spanish," &c. A. ii. Sc. iii.

^k The motto on the front of the house ΟΥΔΕΙΣ ΕΙΣΙΤΩ, which he calls a fragment of Plato's poetry, is a humorous alteration of Plato's ΟΥΔΕΙΣ ΑΚΑΘΑΡΤΟΣ ΕΙΣΙΤΩ.

^l B. v. 2.

The satire should be like the porcupine,
That shoots sharp quills out in each angry line.^f

This ingenious thought, though founded on a vulgar error, has been copied, among other passages, by Oldham. Of a true writer of satire, he says,

He'd shoot his quills just like a porcupine,
At view, and make them stab in every line.ⁿ

In the fourth and last of this Book, he enumerates the extravagancies of a married spendthrift, a farmer's heir, of twenty pounds a year. He rides with two liveries, and keeps a pack of hounds.

But whiles ten pound goes to his wife's new gowne,
Not little less can serue to suite his owne:
While one piece pays her idle waiting-man,
Or buys an hood, or siluer-handled fan:
Or hires a Friezeland trotter; halfe yard deepe,
To drag his tumbrell through the staring Cheape.^o

The last Book, consisting of one long satire only, is a sort of epilogue to the whole, and contains a humorous ironical description of the effect of his satires, and a recapitulatory view of many of the characters and foibles which he had before delineated. But the scribblers seem to have the chief share. The character of Labeo, already repeatedly mentioned, who was some cotemporary poet, a constant censurer of our author, and who from pastoral proceeded to heroic poetry, is here more distinctly represented. He was a writer who affected compound epithets, which sir Philip Sydney had imported from France, and first used in his ARCADIA^p. The character in many respects suits Chapman; though I do not recollect that he wrote any pastorals.

Well might these checks have fitted

That Labeo reades right, who can deny,
 The true straines of heroick poesy;
 For he can tell how fury reft his sense,
 And Phebus fill'd him with intelligence:
 He can implore the heathen deities,
 To guide his bold and busy enterprise:
 Or filch whole pages at a clap for need,
 From honest Petrarch, clad in English weed;
 While big BUT OH's each stanza can begin,

 Which sweet Philisides fetch'd late from France,
 That well beseem'd^h his high-stil'd ARCADY,
 Though others marre it with much liberty,
 In epithets to joine two words in one,
 Forsooth, for adjectives can't stand alone.

The arts of composition must have been much practised, and a knowledge of critical niceties widely diffused, when observations of this kind could be written. He proceeds to remark, it was now customary for every poet, before he attempted the dignity of heroic verse, to try his strength by writing pastorals^q.

But ere his Muse her weapon learn to wield,
 Or dance a sober Pirrhicke^r in the field; —

In the old comedy, the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, we are told of a coxcomb who could bear no poetry "but fly-blown sonnets of his mistress, and her loving pretty creatures her monkey and her puppet^u."

One is surprised to recollect, that these satires are the production of a young man of twenty-three. They rather seem the work of an experienced master, of long observation, of study and practice in composition.

They are recited among the best performances of the kind, and with applause, by Francis Meres, a cotemporary critic, who wrote in 1598^x. But whatever fame they had acquired, it soon received a check, which was never recovered. They were condemned to the flames, as licentious and immoral, by an order of bishop Bancroft in 1599. And this is obviously the chief reason why they are not named by our author in the SPECIALITIES of his Life, written by himself after his preferment to a bishoprick^y. They were, however, admired and imitated by Oldham. And Pope, who modernised Donne, is said to have wished he had seen Hall's satires sooner. But had Pope undertaken to modernise Hall, he must have adopted, because he could not have improved, many of his lines. Hall is too finished and smooth for such an operation. Donne, though he lived so many years later, was susceptible of modern refinement, and his asperities were such as wanted and would bear the chissel.

I was informed, by the late learned bishop of Gloucester, that in a copy of Hall's Satires in Pope's library, the whole first satire of the sixth book was corrected in the margin, or interlined, in Pope's own hand; and that Pope had written at the head of that satire, OPTIMA SATIRA.

Milton, who had a controversy with Hall, as I have observed in a remonstrance called an APOLOGY FOR SMECTYMNUUS, published in 1641, rather unsuitably and disingenuously goes out of his way, to attack these satires, a juvenile effort of his dignified adversary, and under every consideration alien to the dispute. heat, (for certain he was on the frozen zone miserably benumbed,) with thoughts lower than any beadle's, betakes him to whip the sign-posts of Cambridge alehouses, the ordinary subject of freshmens tales, and in a strain as pitiful. Which, for him who would be counted the FIRST ENGLISH SATYRIST, to abase himselfe to, who might have learned better among the Latin and Italian Satyrists, and in our own tongue from the VISION AND CREEDE OF PIERCE PLOWMAN, besides others before him, manifested a presumptuous undertaking with weak and unexamined shoulders. For a Satyr is as it were born out of a Tragedy, so ought to resemble his parentage, to strike high, and adventure dangerously at the most eminent vices among the greatest persons, and not to creep into every blind taphouse that fears a constable more than a satyr. But that such a poem should be TOOTHLESS, I still affirm it to be a bull, taking away the essence of that which it calls itself. For if it bite neither the persons nor the vices, how is it a satyr? And if it bite either, how is it toothless? So that TOOTHLESS SATYRS, are as much as if he had said TOOTHLESS TEETH^c," &c.

With Hall's SATIRES should be ranked his MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, an ingenious satirical fiction in prose, where under a pretended description of the TERRA AUSTRALIS, he forms a pleasant invective against the characteristic vices of various nations, and is remarkably severe on the church of Rome. This piece was written about the year 1600, before he had quitted the classics for the fathers, and published some years afterwards, against his consent. Under the same class should also be mentioned his CHARACTERISMES OF VERTUES, a set of sensible and lively moral essays, which contain traces of the satires^d.

I take the opportunity of observing here, that among Hall's prose-works are some metaphrastic versions in metre of a few of David's Psalms^c, and three anthems or hymns written for the use of his cathedral. Hall, in his Satires, had condemned this sort of poetry.

An able inquirer into the literature of this period has affirmed, that Hall's Epistles, written before the year 1613^f, are the first example of epistolary composition which England had seen. "Bishop Hall, he says, was not only our first satirist, but was the first who brought epistolary writing to the view of the public: which was common in that age to other parts of Europe, but not practiced in England till he published his own Epistles^g." And Hall himself in the Dedication of his Epistles to Prince Henry observes, "Your grace shall herein perceiue a new fashion of discourse by EPISTLES, new to our language, vsuall to others: and, as nouelty is neuer without plea of vse, more free, more familiar^h."

The first of our countrymen, however, who published a set of his own Letters, though not in English, was Roger Ascham,

B. iv. 3.] "His talke is, how many mourners he has furnished with gownes at his father's funerals, what exploits he did at Cales and Newport," &c. p. 194, 195. Of the BUSIE BODIE. "If he see but two men talke and reade a letter in the streete, he runnes to them and askes if he may not be partner of that secret relation: and if they deny it, he offers to tell, since he cannot heare, wonders: and then falls vpon the report of the Scottish Mine, or of the great fish taken vp at Linne, or of the freezing of the Thames," &c. p. 188. Of the SURREPTIOUS. "He never goes without an Erra Pater in his pocket.—Every lantern is a ghost, and every noise is of chaines," &c. p. 189. who flourished about the time of the Reformation; and when that mode of writing had been cultivated by the best scholars in various parts of Europe, was celebrated for the terseness of his epistolary style. I believe the second published correspondence of this kind, and in our own language, at least of any importance after Hall, will be found to be EPISTOLÆ HOELIANÆ, or the Letters of James Howell, a great traveller, an intimate friend of Jónson, and the first who bore the office of the royal historiographer, which discover a variety of literature, and abound with much entertaining and useful information¹.

I must not dismiss our satirist without observing, that Fuller has preserved a witty encomiastic English epigram by Hall, written at Cambridge, on Greenham's Book of the Sabbath, before the year 1592. CHURCH-HISTORY, B. ix. CENT. xvi. §. vii. pag. 220. edit. 1655. fol. I find it also prefixed to Greenham's WORKS, in folio, 1601.

SECTION LXV.

IN the same year, 1598, soon after the appearance of Hall's Satires, John Marston, probably educated at Cambridge, a dramatic writer who rose above mediocrity, and the friend and coadjutor of Jonson, published "The metamorphosis of Pigmalion's image. And Certaine Satyres. By John Marston. At London, printed for Edmond Matts^a, and are to be sold at the signe of the hand and plough in Fleetstreete, 1598^b." I have nothing to do with PIGMALIONS IMAGE, one of Ovid's transformations heightened with much paraphrastic obscenity^c. The Satires here specified are only four in number. In Charles Fitzgeoffry's AFFANIE, a set of Latin epigrams, printed at Oxford in 1601, he is not inelegantly complimented as the second English Satirist, or rather as dividing the palm of priority and excellence in English satire with Hall.

^b In duodecimo. With vignettes. Pages 82. They are entered to Matts, May 27, 1598. REGISTR. STATION. C. f. 36. b. Hall's Satires are entered only the thirtieth day of March preceding.

^c Of this piece I shall say little more, than that it is thought by some, notwithstanding the title-page just produced, not to be Marston's. But in his SCOURGE OF VILLANIE he cites it as his own. B. ii. 6. Again, B. iii. 10. And in ENGLAND'S PARNASSUS, published in 1600, part of the dedication to OPINION is quoted, with the name J. Marston, p. 221. He seems to have written it in ridicule of Shakespeare's VENUS AND ADONIS. He offers this apology, B. i. 6. (ut supr.)

The author of the Satires appears in stanzas, x. xiv. xix. I have thought that this poem suggested to Shakespeare what Lucio says in MEASURE FOR MEASURE. A. iii. S. ii. Vol. ii. p. 92. [See supr. p. 243.

Ad JOHANNEM MARSTONIUM.

Gloria Marstoni satyrarum proxima primæ,

 Sin primam duplicare nefas, tu gloria saltem
 Marstoni primæ proxima semper eris.
 Nec te pœniteat stationis, Jane : secundus,
 Cum duo sunt tantum, est neuter, et ambo pares.^d

In general it is not easy to give a specimen of Marston's satires, as his strongest lines are either openly vitiated with gross expression, or pervaded with a hidden vein of impure sentiment. The following humorous portrait of a sick inamorato is in his best, at least in his chastest, manner of drawing a character.

For when my eares receau'd a fearfull sound
 That he was sicke, I went, and there I found Him laide of loue^e, and newly brought to bed
 Of monstrous folly, and a franticke head.
 His chamber hang'd about with elegies,
 With sad complaints of his loue's miseries :
 His windows strôw'd with sonnets, and the glasse
 Drawne full of loue-knotts. I approacht the asse,
 And straight he weepes, and sighes some sonnet out
 To his faire loue ! Anđ then he goes about
 For to perfyme her rare perfection
 With some sweet-smelling pink-epitheton.
 Then with a melting looke he writhes his head,
 And straight in passion riseth in his bed ;
 And hauing kist his hand, strok'd vp his haire,
 Made a French congè, cryes, O cruell Faire,
 To th' antique bed-post ! — — —

^d Lib. ii. Sig. F. 4. In Davies's SCOURGE OF FOLLY, there is an Epigram to "The acute Mr. John Marston," on his comedy of the MALECONTENT. R. 105.

[In a curious MS. described by Mr. Todd in his edition of Milton, the following couplet occurs, which may be surmised to glance at this comedy.

JOHN MARSTONE had his friends unto a play ;

But being come, they bad themselves away.—PARK.]

^e The midwife's phrase.

In these lines there is great elegance of allusion, and vigour of expression. He addresses the objects of his satire, as the sons of the giants,

Is Minos dead, is Rhadamanth asleepe,
That thus ye dare vnto Ioue's palace creepe?
What, hath Rhamnusia spent her knotted whip,
That ye dare striue on Hebe's cup to sip?
Yet know, Apollo's quiuer is not spent,
But can abate your daring hardiment.
Python is slaine, yet his accursed race
Dare looke diuine Astrea in the face.ⁱ

In the same satire he calls himself ^{et}

A beadle to the world's impuritie!

Marston seems to have been the poetic rival of Hall at Cambridge, whom he repeatedly censures or ridicules. In the fourth satire, he supposes Hall's criticisms on Dubartas, the versions of David's Psalms by Sternhold and king James, Southwell's MARY and SAINT PETER'S TEARS, the MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES, and other pieces of equal reputation, to be the production of pedantry or malignity. And the remainder of this satire is no unpleasant parody of Hall's prefatory stanzas against envy^k.

ⁱ Sat. 5.

^k It appears from the SCOURGE OF VILLANIE, that Hall had caused a severe Epigram to be pasted on the last page of every copy of Marston's PIGMALION'S IMAGE, that was sent from London to the booksellers of Cambridge. B. iii. 10. The Epigram is there cited. This tenth satire of the third Book was added in the second edition, in 1599. It is addressed "to his very friend maister E. G." One Edward Gilpin is cited in ENGLAND'S PARNASSUS, 1600.

It appears from this Satire, that the devices on shields and banners, at tournaments, were now taken from the classics.

He who upon his glorious scutchion,
Can quaintly show wits newe inuention,
Advancing forth some thirstie Tantalus,
Or els the vulturo on Prometheus,
With some short motto of a dozen lines,
&c.

Peacham says, that of Emblems and Impresses, "the best I haue seen haue been the devices of tilting, whereof many were till of late reserved in the private gallery at White-Hall, of sir Philip Sydney, the earl of Cumberland, sir Henry Leigh, the earl of Essex, with many others: most of which I once collected with intent to publish them, but the charge dissuaded me." COMPL. GENT. CAL. xviii. p. 277. edit. 3^d. 1661. 4to.

A Thrasonical captain, fresh from the siege of Cadiz, is delineated in this lively colouring.

Great Tubrio's feather gallantly doth waue,
 Full twenty falls do make him wondrous braue!
 Oh golden jerkin! Royall arming coate!
 Like ship on sea, he on the land doth floate.—
 — — — What newes from Rodio?
 "Hot seruice, by the lord," cries Tubrio.
 Why dost thou halt? "Why, six times through each thigh
 Push'd with the pike of the hotemie.
 Hot seruice, Ho!—The Spaniard is a man.—
 I say no more—And as a gentleman
 I serued in his face. Farwell, Adew!"
 Welcome from Netherland—from steaming stew.ⁱ

Marston's allusions often want truth and accuracy. In describing the ruff of a beau, he says,

His ruffe did eate more time in neatest setting,
 Than Woodstock-worke in painfull perfecting.

The comparison of the workmanship of a laced and plaited ruff, to the laboured nicety of the steel-work of Woodstock, is just. He adds, with an appearance of wit,

It hath more doubles farre than Ajax shield.

This was no exaggeration. The shield of Ajax was only sevenfold. To say nothing of one of the leading ideas, the delicacy of contexture, which could not belong to such a shield.

But Marston is much better known as a satirist by a larger and a separate collection, yet entirely in the strain of the last, called the SCOURGE OF VILLANY, published the same year. I will give the title exactly and at length. "THE SCOURGE OF VILLANIE. Three Bookes of SATYRES. [No Name of the Author.]—Nec scombros metuentia carmina nec thus. At London, Printed by I. R. [James Roberts,] and are to be sold by John Buzbie, in Pawles churchyard, at the signe of the Crane, 1598*." He here assumes the appellation of KINSAYDER, by which he is recognised among other cotemporary poets in the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS. In his metrical introduction, he wishes all readers of fashion would pass over his poetry, and rather examine the play-bills pasted on every post, or buy some ballad about the fairy king, and king Cophetua and the female beggar. Instead of a Muse, he invokes REPROOF, in this elegant and animated address.

I inuocate no Delian deitie,
 Nor sacred offspring of Mnemosyne:
 I pray in aid of no Castalian Musē,
 No Nymph, no female angell, to infuse
 A sprightly wit to raise my flagging wings,
 And teach me tune these harsh discordant strings:
 I craue no Syrens of our halcyon-times,
 To grace the accents of my rough-hew'd rimes:
 But grim Reproofe, sterne Hate of villany,
 Inspire and guide a satyr's poesie!
 Faire Detestation of fowle odious sinne,
 In which our swinish times lie wallowing,
 Be thou my conduct and my Genius,
 My wit's inticing sweet-breath'd Zephirus!
 Oh that a satyr's hand had force to pluck
 Some floodgate vp, to purge the world from muck!
 Would god, I could turne Alpheus' riuier in,
 To purge this Augean stable from fowle sinne!
 Well, I will try.—Awake, Impuritie!
 And view the vaile drawne from thy villanie.¹

* In duodecimo. With vignettes. Wh. let. The signatures run inclusively to Sign. I. 3. The title of the second edition is "THE SCOURGE OF VILLANIE. By John Marston. Nec scombros, &c. At London. Printed by I. R. Anno Dom. 1599." The tenth Satire is not in the former edition. All Marston's SATIRES, with other pieces of old poetry, were reprinted, Lond. for R. Horsfield; 1764, 12mo.

[This reprint was edited by the Rev. J. Bowles, known to the literary world by his edition of Don Quixote in the Spanish language.—PARK.]

The passage reminds us of a witty line in Young's UNIVERSAL PASSION, I know not if borrowed from hence.

And cleanse the Augean stable with thy quill^m.

Part of the following nervous paragraph has been copied either by Dryden or Oldham.

Who would not shake a satyr's knotty rod,
 When to defile the sacred name of god,
 Is but accounted gentlemen's disport?
 To snort in filth, each hower to resort
 To brothell-pits: alas, a venial crime,
 Nay royal, to be last in thirtieth slime?ⁿ

In an invocation to RIME, while he is not inelegantly illustrating the pleasingness of an easy association of consonant syllables, he artfully intermixes the severities of satire.

Come prettie pleasing symphonie of words,
 Ye well-match'd twins, whose like-tun'd tongue affords
 Such musicall delight, come willingly,
 And daunce Levoltos^o in my poesie!
 Come all as easie as spruce Curio will,
 In some court-hall to shew his capering skill:—
 As willingly as wenches trip around,
 About a may-pole, to the bagpipe's sound.—
 — — — Let not my ruder hand
 Seeme once to force you in my lines to stand:
 Be not so fearefull, prettie soules, to meete,
 As Flaccus is, the sergeant's face to greeete:
 Be not so backward-loth to grace my sense,
 As Drusus is, to haue intelligence,
 His dad's aliuie: but come into my head,
 As iocundly, as, when his wife was dead,

^m There is a thought like this in Dekker's GUILS HORNE BOOKE, 1609, p. 4. "To pvrge [the world] will be a sorer labour, than the cleansing of Augcas' stable, or the scouring of Moore-ditch."

ⁿ B. i. 2.

He thus wages war with his brother-bards, especially the dreamers in fairy land.

 His new-falne lids, dreames: straight, ten pounds to

 And tells him wonders of some flowery vale;
 He wakes, he rubs his eyes, and prints his tale.^t

Lib. iii. 11. He says,
Praise but ORCHESTRA, and the skipping

This is an allusion to sir John Davies's ORCHESTRA, a poetical dialogue between Penelope and one of her wooers, on the antiquity and excellency of Dancing, printed with his NOSCE TEMPUS in 1599. This piece occasioned a humorous epigram from Harrington, EPICR. B. ii. 67.

A few lines afterwards Marston says, Room for the spheres, the orbes celestiall

Gosson, Kemp's Newe Iigge betwixt a soldier and a miser. Ibid. f. 3. b. In Kemp's NINE DAIES WONDER, printed in 1600, is the character of an innkeeper at Rockland, which could not be written by Kemp, and was most probably a contribution from his friend and fellow-player, Shakespeare. He may vie with our host of the Tabard. SIGNAT. B. 3.

With a full cup of nut-browne ale.
Turwyn and Turney's siede were hot,
Yet all my hoast remembers not:
Kets field, and Musseleborough fray,
Were battles fought but yesterday.

In the same strain, is a description of a plump country lass, who officiates to Kemp in his morris-dance, as his Maid Marian. SIGNAT. B. 3. Jonson alludes "to Kemp's performance of this morris-dance, from London to Norwich in nine dayes. EPICR. cxxxiv.

But to return to Marston.

In the Preface called In lectores prorsus indignos, is the word "Proface." I do not recollect that the passage has been adduced by the late editors of Shakespeare. Vol. v. p. 595. edit. 1778.

What though some John a stile will basely toile.

This is the first use I remember of John a Stiles. But we have below, B. ii. 7.

Looke you, comes John a noke, and John a stile.

He means two lawyers.

B. ii. 7. Of a gallant,

Note his French herring-bones. —

His band-strings. Wood says, that
Dr. Owen, dean of Christ church, and Cromwell's vice-chancellor at Oxford, in 1652, used to go, in contempt of form,
"like a young scholar, with powdered hair, snakebone bandstrings, or band-strings with very large tassels, lawn band, a large set of ribbands, pointed, at his knees, and Spanish-leather boots with large lawn tops, and his hat mostly cocked." ATHEN. OXON. ii. 738. Num.
572.

B. ii. 7. He is speaking of a Judge;
in his furred damaske-coate.

He's nought but budge. —

That is, fur. So Milton in COMUS,
v. 707.

Those budge doctors of the stoick fur.

He alludes to the furred gown of a graduate. See Life of Sir T. POPE, p. 285.
edit. 2.

B. iii. 9. He speaks of a critic abus-ing Mortimer's numbers. I believe he means Drayton's epistle of MORTIMER TO QUEEN ISABEL. Drayton's EPISTLES appeared in 1597. Or perhaps Drayton's MORTIMERIADOS, published in 1596.

B. iii. 11.

— — Lothsome brothell-rime,
That stinks like Ajax-froth, or muckpit slime.

He means sir John Harrington's Ajax, which gave great offence to queen Elizabeth. See Harrington's EPICRAMS,
B. i. 51. And Jonson, EPICR. cxxxiv.

My Muse has plough'd with his that sung A-JAX.

B. ii. 7.

He nowe is forc'd his paunch and guts to pack

In a faire tumbrell. —

That is, To ride in a Coach, [See supr.
p. 370.]

New set are easily mou'd, and pluck'd away;
But elder roots clip faster in the clay.²

Of the influence of the drama, which now began to be the most polite and popular diversion, on conversation, we have the following instance.

Luscus, what's plaid to day? Faith, now I know,
I set thy lips abroach, from whence doth flow
Nought but pure JULIET AND ROMEO.
Say, who acts best, Drusus or Roscio?
Nowe I have him, that nere, if aught, did speake
But when of playes or players he did treat:
Hath made a common-place book, out of playes,
And speakes in print: at least whateer he sayes,

B. ii. 7.

Her seate of sense is her rebato set.

The set of her rebato is the stiffness of her ruff newly plaided, starched, and poked. To set a hat, is to cock a hat, in provincial language. The ruff was adjusted or trimmed by what they called a poking-stick, made of iron, which was gently heated. A pamphlet is entered to W. Wright, Jul. 4. 1590, called "Blue starch and poking-sticks." REGISTR. STATION. B. f. 260. a. Jonson says of a smoking cockcomb; "The other opened his nostrils with a poaking-sticke, to giue the smoake more free deliuerie." EVERIE M. OUT OF HIS H. Act iii. Sc. iii.

In Goddard's Dogges from the Antipedes, a lady says, whose ruff was decomposed, SAT. 29.

"Lord! my ruffe! SETT it with thy finger, Iohn!"

And our author, Sc. VILL. i. 2.

Lucia, new set thy ruffe. —

In the GULS HORNE BOOKE, p. 7. "Your stiff-necked rebatoes, that have more arches for pride to rowe vnder, than can stand vnder siue London bridges, durst not then set themselves out in print." And hence we must explain a line in Hall, iii. 7.

His linnen collar Labyrinthian set.

B. i. 3.

A Crabs bakt guts, a lobsters buttered thigh, &c.

So in Marston's MALECONTENT, printed 1604. A. ii. S. ii. "Crabs guts baked, distilled ox-pith, the pulverized hairs of a lions upper lip," &c.

SAT. iii. 8.

I sawe him court his mistresse looking-glasse,

Worship a buske-point. —

A buske was a flexile pin or stick for keeping a woman's stays tight before. Marston's context too clearly explains the meaning of the word. So in PIGMALION'S IMAGE, st. xix.

Loue is a child contented with a toy,

A buske-point or some favour stills the boy.

But see OLD-PLAYS, v. 251.

SATYRES, Sat. iv.

Ye Granta's white Nymphs come! —

White was antiently used as a term of fondling or endearment. In the RETURN FROM PARNASSUS, 1606, Amoretto's Page says, "When he returns, I'll tell twenty admirable lies of his hawk; and then I shall be his little rogue, his white villain, for a whole week after." A. ii. S. vi. Doctor Busby used to call his favourite scholars, his White Boys. I could add a variety of other combinations. ² B. i. 4.

Is warranted by curtaine-plaudities.
 If eer you heard him courting Lesbia's eyes,
 Say, courteous sir, speakes he not movingly
 From out some new pathetique tragedy?^a

He appears to have been a violent enemy of the puritans.

—— ——— But thou, rank Puritan,
 I'll make an ape as good a christian :
 I'll force him chatter, turning vp his eye,
 Look sad, go graue, Demure civilitie
 Shall scorne to say, good brother, sister deare!
 As for the rest, to snort in belly cheere,
 To bite, to gnaw, and boldly intermell
 With holy things, in which thou dost excell, Vnforc'd he'll doe. O take compassion
 Euen on your soules: make not Religion
 A bawde to lewdnesse. Civil Socrates,
 Clip not the youth of Alcibiades
 With vnchast armes. Disguised Messaline,
 I'll teare thy mask, and bare thee to the eyne, &c.^b

It is not that I am afraid of being tedious, that I find myself obliged to refrain from producing any more citations. There are however a few more passages which may safely be quoted, but which I choose to reserve for future illustration.

There is a carelessness and laxity in Marston's versification, but there is a freedom and facility, which Hall has too frequently missed, by labouring to confine the sense to the couplet. Hall's measures are more musical, not because the music of verse consists in uniformity of pause, and regularity of cadence. Hall had a correcter ear; and his lines have a tuneful strength, in proportion as his language is more polished, his phraseology more select, and his structure more studied. Hall's meaning, among other reasons, is not always so soon apprehended, on account of his compression both in sentiment and diction. Marston is more perspicuous, as he thinks less and writes hastily. Hall is superiour in penetration, accurate conception of character, acuteness of reflection, and the accumulation of thoughts and images. Hall has more humour, Marston more acrimony. Hall often draws his materials from books and the diligent perusal of other satirists, Marston from real life. Yet Hall has a larger variety of characters. He possessed the talent of borrowing with address, and of giving originality to his copies. On the whole, Hall is more elegant, exact, and elaborate.

^a B. iii. 11.

^b B. iii. 9.

It is Marston's misfortune, that he can never keep clear of the impurities of the brothel. His stream of poetry, if sometimes bright and unpolluted, almost always betrays a muddy bottom. The satirist who too freely indulges himself in the display of that licentiousness which he means to proscribe, absolutely defeats his own design. He inflames those passions which he professes to suppress, gratifies the depravations of a prurient curiosity, and seduces innocent minds to an acquaintance with ideas which they might never have known.

The satires of Hall and Marston were condemned to the same flame and by the same authority. But Hall certainly deserved a milder sentence. Hall exposes vice, not in the wantonness of description, but with the reserve of a cautious yet lively moralist. Perhaps every censurer of obscenity does some harm, by turning the attention to an immodest object. But this effect is to be counteracted by the force and propriety of his reproof, by shewing the pernicious consequences of voluptuous excesses, by suggesting motives to an opposite conduct, and by making the picture disgusting by dashes of deformity. When Vice is led forth to be sacrificed at the shrine of Virtue, the victim should not be too richly dressed.

SECTION LXVI.

THE popularity of Hall's and Marston's Satires, notwithstanding their proscription or rather extermination by spiritual authority, produced an innumerable crop of SATIRISTS, and of a set of writers, differing but little more than in name, and now properly belonging to the same species, EPIGRAMMATISTS.

In 1598, printed at London, appeared "SKIALETHEIA, OR A SHADOWE OF TRUTH in certaine Epigrams and Satyres." The same year, SEUEN SATIRES, applied to the week, including the world's ridiculous follies^a. This form was an imitation of the SEMAINES of Du Bartas, just translated into English by Delisle. The same year, "A SHADOWE OF TRUTH in certaine Epigrams and Satires^b." This year also, as I conjecture, were published Epigrams by sir John Davies, author of NOSCE TEIPSUM^c. These must not be confounded with the SCOURGE

^a Entered to William Fyrebrand, May 3, 1598. REGISTR. STATION. C. f. 34. b.

^c Marlowe's OVID'S ELEGIES were accompanied with these Epigrams. The whole title is, "Epigrammes and Elegies, by J. D. and C. M. [Marlowe.] at Middleburgh." No date. Davies's Epigrams are commended in Jonson's Epigrams, xviii. And in Fitzgeoffry's ARFANLE, Lib. ii. Signat. E. 4.

DAVISIOS lædat mihi, Jonsoniosque lacessat.

[One edition of these Epigrams, which appears to have been the earliest, had Marlowe's name annexed to the title of Ovid's Elegies. From the printed conversation between Drummond and Ben Jonson, the Epigrams are ascertained to belong to sir John Davis the Judge, and not to Davies of Hereford the writing-master, as was conceived by Mr. Chalmers. See Apol. The author in Skialetheia is styled our English Martial, and at that period the appellation seems not to have been misapplied.—EDR.]

[The following specimen becomes interesting from its allusions to remarkable persons and events.

Gereon's mouldy memory corrects
Old Holinshed, our famous chronicler,
With morall rules, and policy collects
Out of all actions done these fourescore yeares:

Accounts the time of every old event,
Not from Christ's birth, nor from the prince's raigne,
But from some other famous accident,
Which in men's generall notice doth re-maine:

The siege of Bulloigne and the plaguy sweat,
The going to saint Quintin's and New-haven,

OF FOLLY, by John Davies of Hereford, printed in 1611. In 1598 also, was published in quarto, "Tyros roaring Megge, planted against the walls of Melancholy, London, 1598." With two Decads of Epigrams^d. The author appears to have been of Cambridge. Tyro is perhaps a real name. The dedication is to Master John Lucas.

In the year 1598, was also published, under the general title of CHRESTOLOROS, seven Books of Epigrams, by Thomas Bastard^e. Bastard, a native of Blandford in Dorsetshire, was removed from a fellowship of New-College Oxford, in 1591; being, as Wood says, "much guilty of the vices belonging to the poets," and "given to libelling^f." Harrington, the translator of Ariosto, has an Epigram addressed to "Master Bastard, a minister, that made a pleasant Booke of English Epigrams^g." Wood, in his manuscript Collection of Oxford libels and lampoons, which perhaps he took as much pleasure in collecting as the authors in writing, now remaining in the Ashmolean Museum, and composed by various students of Oxford in the reign of queen Elizabeth, has preserved two of Bastard's satirical pieces^h. By the patronage or favour of lord-treasurer Suffolk, he was made vicar of Bere-regis, and rector of Hamer in Dorsetshire; and from writing smart epigrams in his youth,

The rising in the North, the frost so great,

That cart wheels prints on Thamis face were scene;

The fall of money and burning of Paul's steeple,

The blazing starre, and Spaniards overthrow:

By these events, notorious to the people,
He-measures times, and things forepast doth show.

But most of all he chiefly reckons by
A private chance—the death of his curst wife!

This is to him the dearest memory
And the happiest accident of all his life.

^h One of them is entitled, "An Admonition to the City of Oxford, or Mareplate's Bastardine." In this piece, says Wood, he "reflects upon all persons of note in Oxford, who were guilty of amorous exploits, or that mixed themselves with other men's wives, or with wanton houswives in Oxon." The other is a disavowal of this lampoon, written after his expulsion, and beginning Jenkin, why, man, &c. See Meres, WITS TR. f. 284.

became in his graver years a quaint preacher¹. He died a prisoner for debt, in Dorchester gaol, April 19, 1618. He was an elegant classic scholar, and appears to have been better qualified for that species of the occasional pointed Latin epigram established by his fellow-collegian John Owen, than for any sort of English versification.

In 1599, appeared "MICROCYNICON, sixe snarling satyres by T. M. Gentleman," perhaps Thomas Middleton. About the same time appeared, without date, in quarto, written by William Goddard, "A MASTIF WHELP, with other ruff-i-land-like currs fetcht from amongst the Antipedes, which bite and barke at the fantastical humourists and abusers of the time. Imprinted at the Antipedes, and are to be bought where they are to be sold." It contains eighty-five satires. To these is added, "Dogges from the Antipedes," containing forty-one^k.

¹ There are two sets of his Sermons, Five, London, 1615, 4to. The three first of these are called the MARIGOLD OF THE SUN. Twelve, London, 1615. 4to.

^k The name of the author, who appears to have been a soldier, is added in the Dedication, to some of his flat-cappe friends at the Temple. The Satires were written after Bastard's EPIGRAMS, which are [thus] commended, SAT. 81.

[Talke you with Poet Asse, sitting in's seate,

You'le heare him ex'lent Epigrames re- peate ;

Demaund him "whose they bee, they runn soe fine?"

He answers straight—"Fruits of this brayne of myne ;"

Yet let a well-read Poet heare the vaine,

Hee'lle finde they came out of a BASTARDES braine.

Thomas Bastarde has a copy of Latin verses, "In laudem Annæ Comitiſſæ Oxoniensis Carmen," Lansd. MSS. 104. —PARK.]

I will give a specimen from the second part, SAT. 5.

To see Morilla in her coach to ride,

With her long locke of haire vpon one side ;

With hatt and feather worn in swag- gring guise,

With buttred boddice, skirted dub- blett-wise,

Vnmaskt, and sit i' th' booth without a fanne :

Speake, could you iudge her lesse than be some manne, &c.

Here is the dress of a modern amazon, in what is called a Riding-habit. The side-lock of hair, which was common both to men and women, was called the French Lock. So Freeman of a beau, in RUR AND A GREAT CAST, edit. 1614, EPIGR. 32.

Beside a long French locke. —

And Hall, SAT. iii. 7.

His haire French-like stares on his frighted head,

One locke, amazon-like, disheveled.

Hence may be illustrated a passage in a Letting of Humours blood, &c. printed about 1600. EPIGR. 27.

Aske Humors why a feather he doth weare, —

Or what he doth with such a horse-tail locke.

A satyirical piece in stanzas, which has considerable merit, called PASQUILL'S MAD-CAP, was printed at London in quarto, for V. S. in the year 1600¹. With Pasquill's MESSAGE. Also by the same author, perhaps Nicholas Breton, Pasquill's FOOLE-CAP, printed for T. Johnes in the same year, the dedication signed, N. B.* At the end is "Pasquill's passion for the world's waiwardnesse^m." In the year 1601, was published in duodecimo, "The whipper of the Satyre, his pennance in a white sheete, Or the Beadles Confutation, Imprinted at London, by John Fasket, 1601." And by way of reply, "No whippinge nor trippinge, but a kind of snippinge, London, 1601." Again, "The whipping of the SATYRE, Imprinted at London for John Fasket, 1601ⁿ." About the same time, as "

Must take tobacco, and must weare a lock.

Compare Warburton's note on MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, A. v. S. i. "He wears a key in his ear, and a long lock hanging by it," &c. I add but one more instance, from the character of a RUFFIAN, or bully. "When without money, his gingling spurre hath last his voyce, his head his locke," &c. WHIMZIES, or a new Cast of CHARACTERS, Lond. 1631. 16mo. p. 136.

And tell prose writers, STORIES are so stale,

That penie ballads make a better sale.

He mentions country-players, p. 31. PASQUILL'S MAD-CAP is applauded in THE WHIPPING OF THE SATYRE, 1601. Signat. F. 3.

That MAD-CAP yet superiour praise doth win, &c.

In Dekker's GUL'S HORNE BOOK, 1609, we have, "I am the Pasquill's MAD-CAPPE that will doot." p. 8. "PASQUILL'S TESTS, with the merriments of mother Bunch," were published, Lond. 1629. Bl. lett. 4to. But this I suppose not to have been the first edition. And in reference to Pasquill's MAD-CAP, there is, "Old Mad-cappes new gallimaufry, made into a merrie messe of mingle mangle, 1602."

* [Nicholas Breton.]

^m Under the title of PASQUIN, we have also the following coeval pieces. "PASQUILL'S MISTRESSE, or the worthie and unworthie woman, 1600.—PASQUILL'S PASSE, and passeth not, set downe in three pees, 1600. [by N. Breton].—PASQUILL'S PALINODIA, and his Progresse to the tavern, where, after the survey of the Sellar, you are presented with a pleasant pynte of poeticall sherry, 1619."

ⁿ In duodecimo. It is dedicated to the "Vayne glorious, the HUMOURIST, SATYRIST, and EPIGRAMMATIST." The writer's initials are I. W. I believe this piece to be a Reply to Rowlands. But in one place he seems to attack Marston. Signat. D. 2.

But harke, I heare the Cynicke Satyre crie,

In 1619, "Newe Epigrams, having in their Companie a mad satyre, by Joseph Martin, London, for Elde^r." In 1613, were published two books of epigrams, written by Henry Perrot, entitled, "LAQUEI RIDICULOSI, or Springes for Woodcockes. Caveat emptor. Lond. for J. Busbie, 1613^r." Many of them are worthy to be revived in modern collections. I am tempted to transcribe a specimen.

A Welshman and an Englishman disputed,
Which of their Lands^t maintain'd the greatest state:
The Englishman the Welshman quite confuted;
Yet would the Welshman nought his brags abate;

The following commendatory verses are said to be better than the author's own, which are more remarkable, says Mr. B., for quaintness than elegance, for coarseness than for wit.

IN AUTHOREM.

I wish my rough hewne lines might gratifie
The first born of thy pleasing poesie ;
These be but blossomes, what will be the fruite
When time and age hath made thee more acute ?

When witte [wittie] verse is worthily regarded,
Then shall thy verse be thankfully rewarded.

To the opening of 1600, I would also assign "The MASTIVE or young Whelpe of the old dogge. Epigrams and Satyres. London, printed by Thomas Creede. In quarto, without date." The Advertisement to the reader is subscribed H. P.² We are sure that they were at least written after Churchyard's beyond the writer's imagination.

Thomas Freeman was a Gloucestershire man, and born near Tewksbury, about 1590. At the age of 16, he became a student at Magd. Coll. Oxon, where he took the degree of B. A. Retiring from thence to London, he set up for a poet, says Wood¹, and was shortly after held in esteem by Daniel Donne, Shakspere, Chapman, and others. To the poets here named, and also to Spenser's Fairy Queen, and Nash, he appears to have addressed Epigrams; but it is not hence to be affirmed that he was personally acquainted with all of them. The specimen here given of our author's humour, acquaints us, even in his time, that "London itself seemed going out of Town." In the last edition of Mr.

Ellis's Specimens, a more favourable instance has been shown of Freeman's poetical talents.—PARK.]

Some of the critics of the author's days are thus described.

The mending poet takes it next in hand ;
Who hauing oft the verses ouerscan'd,
" O filching ! " straight doth to the stat'ner say,
" Here's foure lines stolen from my last newe play. " —
Then comes my Innes of court-man in his gowne, Cryes, Mew! What hackney orought this wit to towne ?
But soone again my gallant youth is gon,

" It may be good, saith he, for those that vse it :
" Shewe me king ARTHUR, BEUIS, or SIR GUY, " &c.^d

In these days, the young students of the Inns of Court seem to have been the most formidable of the critics^e.

^a I have some faint remembrance of a collection of Epigrams, by Thomas Harman, about the year 1599. Perhaps he is the same who wrote the following very curious tract, unmentioned by Ames. " A Caueat for common cvsitors, vulgariter called Uagabondes, set forth by Thomas Harman, esquier, for the vilitie and proffyt of his naturall countrey. Newly augmented and imprinted Anno domini M. D. LXVII. Imprinted at London in fletestrete, at the signe of the faulcon, by Wylliam Gryffith, and are to be solde at his shoope, in saynt Dunstones churchyard, in the west. " A quarto in black letter, with a wooden cut in the title. In the work, is a reference to the first edition in the preceding year, 1566. It is dedicated, with singular impropriety, to Elizabeth countess of Shrewsbury. The writer speaks of his lodgings " at the White fryers within the cloyster. " fol. 20. b. This seems to have given rise to another piece of the same sort, unnoticed also by Ames, " The fraternitie of vacabondes, as wel of ruslyng vacabondes, as of beggerly, as women as of men, of gyrles as of boyes, &c. Wherevnto also is adioyned the xxv order of Knaues, &c. Imprinted at London, by Iohn Awdely, dwelling in little Britayne streete, without Aldersgate, 1575. " Bl. let. 4to. [Another edition by the same printer appeared in 1565, which renders Warton's conjecture (that the work was suggested by Harman's book) impossible. See Brit. Bibliograph. vol. ii. p. 12. —EDIT.] These, by the way, are some of the first books exhibiting, not only the tricks but the language, of thieves, which Jonson has introduced into his MASQUE OF GIPSIES. Compare Ames, HIST. PR. p. 423.

^e Hence, among a variety of instances, says Marston in the second preface to his SCOURGE OF VILLANY :

The figure and stratagems of the hungry captain, fresh from abroad, are thus exposed.

The wars in Spain and the Low-countries filled the metropolis with a set of needy military adventurers, returning from those expeditions, who were a mixture of swaggering and submission, of flattery and ferocity, of cowardice and courage, who assumed a sort of professional magnanimity, yet stooped to the most ignominious insults, who endeavoured to attract the attention of the public, by the splendour of martial habiliments, were ready for any adventures of riot and debauchery, and insinuated themselves into favour by hyperbolical narrations of their hazardous achievements. Jonson's Bobadill was of this race of heroic rakes. We have seen one of them admirably described by Marston^h.

The great man's head, if the true reading, must be a cant-word for the Sign of some tavern. Harrington has an Epigram of one getting drunk at the Saracens head. B. i. 52. W. Fenner mentions the Saracen's head, without Newgate, and another without Bishopsgate, both famous for ferocity of feature. The Compter's Commonwealth, &c. p. 3. Lond. 1617. 4to. In 1600 appeared, a mixture of Satires and Epigrams, "THE LETTING OF HUMOURS BLOOD IN THE HEAD VAINE, wjth a new morisco daunced by seauen satyrs, upon the bottom of Diogenes tubbe," written by Samuel Rowlands, and printed by William White^l.

In a panegyric on Charnico, a potation mentioned by Shakespeare, he alludes to the unfortunate death of three cotemporary poets, two of which are perhaps Green and Marlowe, or, perhaps George Peele^k.

As for the Worthies on his hoste's walle^l,
 He knowes three worthy drunkards passe them alle :
 The first of them, in many a taue;ne tride,
 At last subdued by Aquavitæ dide :
 His second worthy's date was brought to fine,
 Freshing with oysters, and braue Rhenish wine.
 The third, whom diuers Dutchmen held full deere,
 Was stabb'd by pickled herrings and stronge beere.
 Well, happy is the man doth rightly know,
 The vertue of three cuppes of Charnico !^m

The rotation of fashionable pleasures, and the mode of passing a day of polite dissipation in the metropolis, are thus represented. The speaker is SIR REVELL, who is elegantly dressed in a dish-crowned hat and square-toed shoes.

^l In small octavo. There is another edition, without date, in small quarto, exhibiting a very different title, "HUMORS ORDINARIE, where a man may be verie merrie, and exceedingly well vsed for his six-pence. At London, Printed for William Firebrand," &c. I know not which is the first of the two. He praises Tarleton the comedian, for his part of the Clowne, and his Clownishe stoppe, EPIGR. 30. And Pope for his part of the Clowne, SAT. iv. Singer the player is also mentioned. ibid. One Samuel Rowlands, I know not if the same, has left in verse, "The Betraying of Christ, Judas in despair, The seven wounds of our Saviour on the crosse, with other poems on the Passion," dedicated to sir Nicholas Walsh, knight, 1598, for Adam Islip, in quarto. Under the same name I have seen other religious poems, rather later. See Percy's BALL. iii. 117.

One of the swaggerers of the times, who in his rambles about the town, visits the Royal Exchange as a mercantile traveller, is not unluckily delineated.

Gabriel Harvey, in his Four Letters printed in 1592, quotes some English hexameters, from "those vnsatyrical Satyres, which Mr. Spenser long since embraced in an overloving sonnet^y." This passage seems to indicate a set of satires, now unknown, to which Spenser had prefixed the undeserved honour of a recommendatory sonnet, now equally forgotten.

Meres, who wrote in 1598, observes, "As Horace, Lucilius, Juvenal, Persius, and Lucullus, are the best for SATYRE among the Latins, so with us, in the same faculty these are chiefe: PIERS PLOWMAN, Lodge, Hall of Emanuel colledge in Cambridge, the author of PIGMALION'S IMAGE AND CERTAINE SATYRES^z, the author of SHIALETHIA^a." And in another place, having cited some of Marston's satires, he adds Rankins as a satirist^b. I have never elsewhere seen the name of Rankins. Nor have I seen Lodge's Satires, unless his "ALARUM AGAINST USURERS, containing tried experiences against worldly abuses," and its appendix his History of Forbonius and Priseria, printed at London in 1584, may be considered under that character*.

Wood also, a great dealer in the works of our old minor poets, yet at the same time a frequent transcriber from Meres, still more embarrasses this matter, where he says, that Lodge, after he left Trinity college at Oxford, about the year 1576, and "had spent some time in exercising his fancy among the poets in the great city, was esteemed, not Joseph Hall of Emanuel college excepted, the best for satyr among English men^c." Lodge was fitted for a different mode of composition. He was chiefly noted for pastorals, madrigals, and sonnets;

and for his EUPHUES GOLDEN LEGACY, which furnished the plot of the AS YOU LIKE IT of Shakespeare. In an extended acceptation, many of the prose-pamphlets written about this period, by Greene and Decker, which paint or expose popular foibles and fashions, particularly Decker's GUL'S HORN-BOOK, a manual or directory for initiating an unexperienced spendthrift into the gaities of the metropolis, might claim the appellation of satires^d. That the rage of writing satires, and satirical epigrams, continued long, will appear from a piece of some humour, called "An Inquisition against Paper-persecutors," written in 1625^e. But of this, more distinct proofs will appear in the progress of our history.

^d Harrington in his Epigrams, mentions the Satires of a poet whom he often attacks under the name of Lynus, B. i. 67.

His Distickes, SATYRES, Sonnets and Hexameters,
His Epigrams, his Lyricks, and Pentameters.

And again, he has an Epigram "Against a foolish Satyrist, called Lynus." B. i. 14. See also, B. i. 41.

Still shall the youths that walk the middle ile,

Whose titles each terme on the posts are rear'd,

In such abundance, it is to be fear'd
That they in time, if thus they go on, will Not only LITTLE but GREAT Britain fill,

With their infectious swarmes, whose guilty sheetes

The reader will recollect, that Saint Paul's church-yard and its environs, in which was LITTLE-BRITAIN, abounded with shops and stalls of booksellers: that its steeple was thrown down by lightning, in 1561; and that a general reparation of the church was now become a great object of the nation.

It must not be forgotten, that a second impression of an English version of Ariosto's Satires, which contain many anecdotes of his life and circumstances, and some humourous tales, and which are marked with a strong vein of free reprehension, but with much less obscenity than might be expected from satires written by the author of ORLANDO FURIOSO, appeared in long verse, by an anonymous translator, in 1611^f. I believe these satires are but little known or esteemed by the Italians.

For the sake of juxtaposition, I will here anticipate in throwing together the titles of some others of the most remarkable collections of satires and satirical epigrams, published between 1600 and 1620^g; meaning to consider hereafter those that best deserve, more critically and distinctly^h. THE COURT OF CONSCIENCE, or Dick Whipper's Sessions *, appeared in 1607. More fooles yet, a collection of Epigrams in quarto, by R. S., perhaps Richard Smith[†], in 1610. The most elegant and wittie Epigrams of sir James Harrington, the translator of Ariosto, in four books, in 1611^h. JONSON'S EPIGRAMS, ^f "Ariosto's SEVEN PLANETS governing Italie. Or, his Satyrs in seven famous discourses, &c. Newly corrected and augmented, &c. With a new edition of three most excellent ELEGIES, written by the same Lodovico Ariosto." By W. Stansby, 1611. 4to. I believe this title gave rise to the following. "A Booke of the seven planets, or seven wandring motions of William Alabaster's wit, retrograded or removed by John Racster." Lond. 1598. 4to. There is an edition of this translation of Ariosto's Satires, 1608. See supr. p. 312.

It is more certain that Ariosto's title gave rise to "The Philosophers Satyrs, or the Philosophers Seven Satyrs, aluding to the seven Planets," &c. By Robert Anton of Magdalene college, Cambridge. Lond. 1616. 4to. It may be sufficient to have mentioned these Satires here. [In 1617 they were entitled "Vices Anatomie scourged and corrected, in new Satires lately written by R. A. of Magdalen College, Cambridge.—PARK.]

^g I have seen "N. Britland's BOURE OF DELIGHT, Contayning Epigrams, Pastorals, Sonnets," &c. Printed for W. Jones, 1597. But these Epigrams do not so properly belong to the class before us. The same may be said of the Epigrams of George Turberville, and some few others.

† [Mr. Warton's copy, or that which he had seen, was probably imperfect; since the name of Roger Sharpe unveils the initials in the title-page.—PARK.]

^h Many of Harrington's Epigrams were certainly written before. Perhaps there was an older edition. In Fitzgeoffrey's Latin Epigrams, called ARFANLE, published 1601, there is an Epigram to Harrington, with these lines, preferring him to Haywood or Davies, as an English epigrammatist. Signat. B. 3.

Not being debarred the use of paper, pens and ink*, he wrote during his confinement, an apology to James the First, under the title of A SATYRE, printed the following year, for his censures of the government in his first book. But, like Prynne in the pillory railing at the bishops, instead of the lenient language of recantation and concession, in this piece he still perseveres in his invectives against the court^o. Being taken prisoner in the rebellion, by the royalists, he was sentenced to be hanged; but sir John Denham the poet prevailed with the king to spare his life, by telling his majesty, So long as Wither lives, I shall not be the worst poet in England. The revenge of our satirist was held so cheap, that he was lampooned by Taylor the water-poet^p. ^p The titles of Wither's numerous pieces may be seen in Wood, ATH. OXON. i. 392. seq. He was born in 1588, and died in 1667. He has left some anecdotes of the early part of his life, in the first book of his ABUSES. The OCCASION, p. 1. seq. umberland, admitted at Oriel college, Oxford, in 1604, and afterwards a student at Cambridge, chiefly remembered, if remembered at all, as one of the minor pastoral poets of the reign of James the First, published in 1619, "NATURES embassie, or the Wilde-mans measures, danced naked, by twelve Satyres, with sundry others," &c.⁹—DONNE'S SATIRES were written early in the reign of James the First, though they were not published till after his death, in the year 1633. JONSON sends one of his Epigrams to Lucy Countess of Bedford, with MR. DONNES SATYRES^r. It is conjectured by Wood, that a lively satirical piece, on the literature of the times, which I have already cited, with Donne's initials, and connected with another poem of the same cast, is one of Donne's juvenile performances. I had supposed John Davies*. But I will again exhibit the whole title of the Bodleian edition. "A

Rents rais'd, woods sold, house-keeping laid aside,
In all things sparing, for to spend on

The poore complaining country thus doth say—
"Our fathers lopt the boughs of trees

We, that more skill of greedy gaine have Cut down the bodies leவில் with the

The age that after our date shall suc-

Will dig up roots and all to serve their

^r EPIGR. xciii. See xcvi. Though Jonson's EPIGRAMS were printed in 1616, many were written long before. And among Freeman's Epigrams, RUN AND A GREAT CAST, 1614, we have the following. EPIGR. 84.

To JOHN DONNE.

The STORME described hath set thy name afloat,
Thy CALME a gale of famous winde hath got:
Thy SATYRS short too soone we them
o'erlook,
I prithee, Persius, write another booke!

* [Mr. Warton's supposition was better founded than the conjecture of Wood.
Davies of Hereford was the undoubted author of this piece, since it was first printed in his "Scourge of Folly" about the year 1612.—PARK.]

Scourge for paper-persecutors, by I. D. With an Inquisition against paper-persecutors, by A. H. London, for H. H. 1625," in quarto. But Wood had seen a detached edition of the former piece. He says, "Quære, whether John Donne published A Scourge for Paper Persecutors, printed in quarto, tempore Jacobi primi. The running title at the top of every page is PAPER'S COMPLAINT, in three sheets and a half. The date on the title pared out at the bottom^s." This must have been an older edition, than that in which it appears connected, from similarity of subject, with its companion, An Inquisition against paper-persecutors, in the year 1625, as I have just noticed.

Owen's idea of an epigram points out the notion which now prevailed of this kind of composition, and shows the propriety of blending the epigrams and satires of these times, under one class. A satire, he says, is an epigram on a larger scale. Epigrams are only satires in miniature. An epigram must be satyrical, and a satire epigrammatical^t. And Jonson, in the Dedication of his EPIGRAMS to Lord Pembroke, was so far from viewing this species of verse, in its original plan, as the most harmless and inoffensive species of verse, that he supposes it to be conversant above the likenesse of vice and facts,

* ATH. OXON. i. 556. [See above, p. 410.] He thus ridicules the minute commemorations of unhistorical occurrences in the Chronicles of Hollinshead and Stowe. Signat. B. 3.

Some chroniclers that write of kingdom's states,
Do so absurdly sableize my white
With maskes; and interludes, by day and night,
Bald may games, beare baytings, and
poore orations,
Made to some prince, by some poore corporations.
And if a bricke-bat from a chimney falls,
When puffing Boreas nere so little bralls;
Or wanton rig, or leacher dissolute,
Doe stand at Paules-crosse in a sheeten
sute:

All these, and thousand such like toyes
as these,
They close in Chronicles like butterflies.
And so confound grave matters of estate
With plaies of poppets, and I know not what. —

Ah good sir Thomas More, fame be with thee,
Thy hand did blesse the English histo-rie! —

As also when the weathercock of Paules
Amended was, this chronicler enroules,

^t Robert Hayman above quoted thus recommends his own Epigrams. QUOBLIBETS, B. iv. 19. p. 61.

Epigrams are like Satyrs, rough without,
Like chesnuts sweet; take thou the kernell out.

and is conscious that epigrams carry danger in the sound. Yet in one of his epigrams, addressed TO THE MEERE ENGLISH CENSVRER, he professes not exactly to follow the track of the late and most celebrated epigrammatists.

To thee my way in EPIGRAMMES seemes newe,
When both it is the old way and the true.
Thou saist that cannot be: for thou hast seene
DAVIS, and WEEVER, and the BEST have BEENE,
And mine come nothing like, &c.^u

This, however, discovers the opinion of the general reader*.

Of the popularity of the epigram about the year 1600, if no specimens had remained, a proof may be drawn, together with evidences of the nature of the composition, from Marston's humorous character of Tuscus, a retailer of wit.

But roome for Tuscus, that iest-moungering youth,
Who neer did ope his apish gerner mouth,

^u EPIGR. xviii. Freeman also celebrates Davis, RUN AND A GREAT CAST, 1614. 4to. EPIGR. 10Q.

Haywood wrote Epigrams, and so did Davis,
Reader, thou doubtst utrum horum maioris.

[The following celebration of the same Epigrammatists occurs in Sloan. MSS. 1889.

HAIWOOD and DAVIS, I avouch your writt
Famous for art, invention, and witt.
In you itt seem'd, by each your learned scrowle,
Successively descended Martiall's soule.
Compard to you, wee sluttish are and fowle,
Fearing the light, like the deformed owle:
Our bastard eglets dare not see the sun
So boldly as your true-borne babes have donne.

Yet bee it knowne, wee dare look tow'rds the light,
Though not like you, nor in so great a height.

In Dunbar's Latin Epigrams, published 1616, there is a compliment to Davies of Hereford, author of the SCOURGE OF FOLLY, as a Satyrist or Epigrammatist. CENT. xx. p. 66.

* [Hust, in his "Clara Stella," has the following odd tribute, addressed "To one that asked me why I would write an English epigram after Ben Jonson.

How! dost thou ask me why my ventrous pen
Durst write an English epigram after Ben?
Oh! after him is manners:—though it would
'Fore him have writ, if how it could have told.

 Your present talke, with, Sir, I'll tell a iest,—
 Of some sweet ladie, or grand lord at least.
 Then on he goes, and neer his tongue shall lie,
 Till his ingrossed iests are all drawne dry:
 But then as dumbe as Maurus, when at play,
 Hath lost his crownes, and paun'd his trim array.
 He doth nought but retaile iests: breake but one,
 Out flies his table-booke, let him alone,
 He'll haue it i' faith: Lad, hast an EPIGRAM,
 Wil't haue it put into the chaps of Fame?

 His proper issue, he will father it, &c.^w

And the same author says, in his Postscript to PIGMALION,

Now by the whyppes of EPIGRAMMATISTS,
 I'll not be lash'd. — — — — —

One of Harrington's Epigrams is a comparison of the Sonnet and the Epigram.

Once by mishap two poets fell a squaring,
 The Sonnet and our Epigram comparing.
 And Faustus hauing long demur'd vpon it
 Yet at the last gaue sentence for the Sonnet,
 Now, for such censvre, this his chiefe defence is,
 Their sugred tast best likes his likrous senses.
 Well, though I grant sugar may please the tast,
 Yet let my verse haue salt to make it last^x.

NOTE on p. (44) of the Editor's Preface.

FURTHER examination wholly excludes the supposed connection of the word FAIRY with the Persian Peri. Indeed as Féerie is obviously formed from Fée in the same manner as diablerie from diable, or chevalerie from cheval, the origin of the monosyllable Fay or Fée only is to be sought, without the formative termination; and the forms in which this word and its congeners exist in the Romance dialects seem to leave no doubt that the Latin Fatum is its real source.

Latin.	Italian.	Spanish.	French.
Fatum .	Fato .	Hado, fate .
Fata, the Fates .	Fata, enchantress .	Hadas, Hadadas, witches, enchanted nymphs .	Fée .
	Fatare, to charm .	Hadar, to divine .	Féer, to enchant .
Fatatum, destined .	Fatato destined, charmed .	Hadado, lucky .	Fée .
	Fatatura, charm .	Hadador, sorcerer .	Féerie .

Mr. Tyrwhitt has the following note on the word Faerie, in the Wif of Bathes Tale: "Féerie, Fr. from fée, the French name for those fantastical beings which in the Gothick languages are called Alfs or Elves. The corresponding names to fée in the other Romance dialects are fata, Ital., and hada, Span.; so that it is probable that all three are derived from the Lat. fatum, which in the barbarous ages was corrupted into fatus and fata. See Menage, in v. Fée. Du Cange, in v. Fadus."
