DEDHAM, October 8, 1868.

ERASTUS WORTHINGTON, Esq.,

Dear Sir,

In behalf of the Committee of Arrangements, having in charge the dedication of the "Memorial Hall," Sept. 29th, 1868, I hereby present you their sincere thanks for your very able and eloquent Address on the occasion of said dedication; and request you to furnish the Committee with a copy for publication.

Per order of the Committee.

Yours respectfully,

EZRA W. TAFT, Chairman.

DEDHAM, March 8, 1868.

Dear Sir,

Your courteous note of 8th October last, communicating the request of your Committee that a copy of the Address at the dedication of Memorial Hall, be furnished for publication, was duly received. I have delayed making any formal reply, because it has been understood by the Committee, that their request would be acceded to, so soon as the Address could be properly prepared with notes for publication.

It seemed to me that the historical value of the Address would be much enhanced if the municipal acts of the town, and the associated efforts of individuals, during the war, which are only alluded to, could be given more at length in an appendix.

I have also, with the valuable aid of JOHN D. COBB, Esq., late Adjutant of the Thirty-Fifth Mass. Infantry, undertaken to give the record of those claiming a connection with Dedham, who entered the military and naval service during the war. The investigation and labor of this latter undertaking has caused some delay, but which has been justified by the result, as I trust. This record, though it may be found incomplete, has been made as accurate as known sources of reliable information could make it, and perhaps will be found valuable for future reference.

With many thanks to your Committee for their kind indulgence, I now take great pleasure in placing the manuscript at their disposal.

Your obedient servant,

ERASTUS WORTHINGTON.

EZRA W. TAFT, Esq., Chairman.

MEMORIAL HALL.

At an adjourned legal meeting of the inhabitants of the town of Dedham, qualified to vote in Town affairs, held at the Town House, in Dedham, on the seventh day of May, A. D. 1866, in pursuance of a vote passed at meeting of April 5, 1866, it was voted—

1. That the town of Dedham cause to be erected a building, to be called "Memorial Hall;" the outer walls of the edifice to be constructed chiefly of Dedham granite, and the said building to be placed on the lot of land bounding on Church, High, and Centre Streets, in Dedham village, recently owned by Charles Coolidge, if the same shall be given and conveyed to the town for such use.

The objects for which said building shall be erected, are—

First—To provide a suitable place for the transaction of all the public business of the town.

Second—To provide a suitable memorial of the soldiers of Dedham, who died in the service of our country during the late war or rebellion.

The said building shall contain a hall and other suitable rooms, sufficient for the present and prospective municipal uses of the town, and also shall signify in some prominent and enduring form, its design to perpetuate the names and memory of those who yielded their lives in the military service of our country during the late war.

2. Voted, That a Building Committee, to consist of five, be chosen by the town at this meeting, to carry out these objects; the said Committee to have full authority, in behalf of the town, to procure and adopt a plan and specifications for such building, and to contract for and superintend the erection of the same, until its completion; but any contracts, in pursuance thereof, may be made at such time, within twelve months, as said Committee shall deem most advantageous for the interests of the town.

3. Voted, That the Town Treasurer, with the approval of the Selectmen, be authorized to borrow, in behalf of the town, a sum not exceeding thirty-five thousand dollars, to be expended in procuring plans and specifications, and in the construction and completion of said building; and that the Town Treasurer be authorized to pay over the same to said

Building Committee upon their written order, or the written order of a majority thereof, at such times and in such sums as they may require therefor.

A Building Committee were chosen in pursuance of the foregoing vote, consisting of the following persons ; Waldo Colburn, Augustus B. Endicott, William Ames, 2d, Addison Boyden, and Merrill D. Ellis.

The sum necessary for the purchase of the land mentioned in the foregoing vote of the town, was raised by the voluntary subscriptions of citizens, nearly all of whom were residents of Dedham village at that time. Their names appear in the deed of conveyance, of which the following is a copy :

At the annual meeting of the Town, held March 2, A. D. 1868, it was Voted, That the Town Treasurer, with the approval of the Selectmen, be authorized to borrow, in behalf of the town, a sum not exceeding Twelve thousand dollars, to be expended in completing the construction of Memorial Hall, and grading the lot, and that the Treasurer be authorized to pay over the same to the building committee of said Hall, upon the written order of a majority of said Committee, at such times and in such sums as they may require therefor.

The following is a brief description of the building :—

The design, which was by Messrs. Ware & Van Brunt, Architects, of Boston, recalls the provincial town halls of England, in outline and general character, and is carried out in the peculiar warm, yellow granite of the neighborhood, relieved by bands of blue Quincy granite. Its main exterior dimensions are 104 by 64 feet on the ground, with an elevation of 34 feet to the cornice, and 85 feet to the summit of the tower, which surmounts the middle division of the front on Centre street. On this front, in the most conspicuous place over the main entrance, is inserted a large tablet of Quincy granite, decorated with oak leaves and a crown of laurels, and bears this inscription :—

To Commemorate
The Patriotism and Fidelity
Of Her Sons
Who Fell
In Defence of The Union,
In The War
Of The Rebellion,
Dedham
Erects This Hall.
A. D.
MDCCLXVII.

In the main vestibule, from which stairs to the right and left conduct to the hall above, in a broad niche facing the entrance, are five marble tablets in a Gothic frame-work of black walnut. The central tablet, which is enriched by a carved canopy supported by columns, bears this inscription :—

The
Town of Dedham
Has Caused
To Be Inscribed Upon
These Tablets,
The names of her Sons,
Who Fell
Representing Her,
In Defence of the Union,
In The War Of
The Rebellion—1861-1865,
And In Whose Honor
She Has Erected
This Hall.

The tablets on either side contain the names of forty-six soldiers, with the rank, date and place of death in each case, arranged in order of regiments.

Opening from the vestibule are the Selectmen's room on the right, and the Post Office on the left. The rest of the first floor is for the present to be occupied by three stores on High street. The main hall on the second floor is 56 by 90 feet, with a balcony at the entrance and an ample stage opposite, from which there is ready retirement to four committee rooms, all of which are accessible from Church street by a private entrance and staircase. The hall is capable of accommodating one thousand people. It is in contemplation to give additional finish to the hall by decorating its walls and ceiling in colors. The interior work throughout is of chestnut.

The following correspondence explains the intentions of the donor, in placing the copy of "Stuart's Equestrian Portrait of Washington" in the Hall, and the condition on which the same was accepted by the Selectmen :—

DEDHAM, Sept. 17th, 1868.

TO THE SELECTMEN OF DEDHAM :

Gentlemen,—I desire to hang in its appropriate place, in the "Memorial Hall," soon to be dedicated, a copy of Stuart's large painting of Washington, in Faneuil Hall, Boston, which was executed by my late husband, Alvan Fisher, many years since.

It may not be deemed improper for me to say, as showing the painting to be worthy of so conspicuous a place, that competent judges who were familiar with the celebrated original, have commended this copy as possessing many of its merits. Among these I may mention the late Hon. Samuel A. Eliot, who, as Mayor of Boston, in a letter now in my possession, speaks of it "as faithful to the spirit and character of the original."

The painting is in excellent preservation, having always been carefully kept, and is mounted in a suitable frame.

In thus placing this painting in "Memorial Hall," it should be understood that my desire and intention is, that it shall remain there as permanently belonging to the Hall, and not subject to be removed. I should desire, therefore, if you accept my proposal, that so far as this purpose can now be secured by the terms of its acceptance, you should so signify on behalf of the town.

As the picture presents Washington standing amid the smoke of battle, and as it was executed by one who sincerely believed in the cause of the country, during the late conflict, though not permitted to see its glorious issue, I am assured it cannot be regarded otherwise than as appropriate, in an edifice erected to commemorate our fallen soldiers.

Most respectfully yours,

LYDIA E. FISHER.

DEDHAM, Sept. 18, 1868.

MRS. LYDIA E. FISHER :

Madam,—We are in receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, proposing to place in our hands, (as a gift to the town of Dedham) a copy of Stuart's painting of Washington, in Faneuil Hall, which was executed by your late husband and distinguished Artist, Alvan Fisher, Esq., it being understood that said painting is given for the purpose of being placed in the "Memorial Hall," soon to be dedicated, there to remain as a permanent fixture for all time to come.

We, the Selectmen of Dedham, in behalf of the citizens of the town, accept your splendid gift, on the condition mentioned in your letter, and which correspond substantially with those mentioned above.

Be pleased, Madam, to accept for ourselves, and in behalf of the town, our grateful and sincere thanks, for such a beautiful and appropriate painting, to be placed in the Hall, built in memory of fallen soldiers who laid down their lives in the late terrible and successful conflict, fighting to maintain and extend the liberties our fathers fought for, and handed down to us, to be preserved for our welfare, and those who are to come after us.

We trust and believe that the picture of Washington, in the Hall where our citizens are to assemble to transact business for the public good, will inspire them with that patriotism, and love of liberty and country, for which he was so distinguished. That it may do so is the sincere wish of

Yours respectfully,

THE SELECTMEN OF DEDHAM.

EZRA W. TAFT, Chairman.

At a meeting of citizens, called by the Selectmen, at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, August 13th, 1868, for the purpose of choosing a Committee of Arrangements for the dedication of Memorial Hall, Ezra W. Taft was chosen Chairman, and John Cox, Jr., Secretary. A Committee appointed for that purpose reported the following list, which was unanimously adopted:

Ezra W. Taft, Samuel E. Pond, J. Bradford Baker, Benjamin Weatherbee, and John Cox, Jr., constituting the Board of Selectmen, and the following citizens: Eliphalet Stone, William Bullard, Thomas Sherwin, Jr., Henry Onion, William J. Wallace, Ephraim Roberts, Charles E. Lewis, Samuel H. Cox, A. B. Endicott, Ellery C. Daniell, Henry O. Hildreth, Addison Boyden, Sanford Carroll. Eliphalet Stone having declined to act on the Committee of Arrangements, owing to ill health, Thomas L. Wakefield was unanimously chosen to fill the vacancy.

At a subsequent meeting of the Committee of Arrangements, Ezra W. Taft was chosen Chairman, and Samuel H.

Cox, Secretary. Fisher A. Baker, of New York, a native of Dedham, and formerly Adjutant of the Eighteenth Mass. Infantry, and who served with that Regiment during its term of service, was invited to deliver the Address at the Dedication of the Hall, but owing to business engagements, he declined the invitation. The Committee then unanimously invited Erastus Worthington of Dedham to perform the duty, who accepted the invitation. Tuesday, 29th September, was fixed upon as the day for the dedication. Ezra W. Taft having peremptorily declined the invitation of the Committee to act as President of the day, Addison Boyden was chosen to that position.

At a meeting of the Committee of Arrangements, held after the dedication of the hall, a vote of thanks to Mr. Worthington for his patriotic and eloquent address was unanimously adopted, and the Chairman was instructed to ask a copy for publication.

William Bullard, Henry O. Hildreth, and John Cox, Jr., were appointed a Committee to prepare a report of the exercises for the press, and to superintend its publication, after which the Committee was dissolved.

Upon the day of the dedication, September 29, 1868, the hall was decorated by Lamprell & Marble of Boston. From the centre piece in the ceiling, bunting radiated to all parts of the hall, the sides of which were draped with the stars and stripes, and the windows were festooned with various national emblems. The gallery over the main entrance was decorated with flags tastefully looped up, and in the centre was a shield bearing the inscription "Honor and gratitude to the defenders of our country," while on either side were the shields of the State and of the United States.

The marble tablets in the vestibule were appropriately decorated with a border of lilies, salvias and gladiolas, judiciously interspersed with oak and beech leaves, the tasteful and tender tribute of the ladies to the memory of the dead.

At half-past one o'clock a procession was formed at Temperance Hall, and marched through Court and Norfolk Streets, Franklin Square, School Street, Village Avenue, Chestnut and High Streets to the Hall. The following was the order of procession:—

	Bates Cornet Band.
	Marshal —William Chickering, Jr.
	Assistant Marshal —Joseph H. Lathrop.
Aids.	Samuel H. Cox, and Clinton Bagley.	Aids.

	Committee of Arrangements.

	Invited Guests.
Aids.	J. W. Chase, C. A. Taft.	Aids.
	Citizens.

At 2¼ o'clock the procession entered the hall and were assigned seats. At 2½ o'clock, the hall being densely crowded, the invited guests were escorted to the platform. Among them were Hon. Theron Metcalf, formerly Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, and once a resident of Dedham, Chief Justice Seth Ames of the Superior Court, a native of the town, Judge J. P. Putnam, Gen. A. B. Underwood of Newton, the clergymen of the town, the authorities of neighboring towns, and others.

CEREMONIES OF DEDICATION.

After appropriate music by Gilmore's Band, the following introductory remarks were made by Addison Boyden, Esq., the President of the day :—

The Committee of Arrangements for these services have assigned to me the duty of presiding on this occasion.

Citizens of Dedham—it gives me great pleasure to welcome you to this Memorial Hall, which has been erected by you to perpetuate the names of the "Sons of Dedham who fell, representing her in defence of the Union, in the war of the rebellion, 1861-1865, and in whose honor she has erected this hall." To you, kindred of the departed dead, we extend the first welcome to-day. As your offering to the cause of liberty and patriotism, you gave your husbands, your sons, your brothers; and we have chiseled their names in enduring marble, to be consecrated to-day to their memory. Accept this offering of your fellow townsmen, and join us in these services, with a chastened joy, as you read their cherished names through your tears.

Our soldiers we welcome to this hall. It is the best tribute we have to offer you, as an enduring monument to the valor of your deceased comrades. May your visit to these tablets deepen your reverence for their heroism, and inspire you with a more ardent devotion to the cause in which they fell, and a stronger love for the country which still demands your loyalty.

Citizens of Dedham—a hearty welcome is extended to you all to the services of this occasion, and to this memorial hall which you have reared. As you read the names of your noble sons, who speak to you to-day from the marble below, may your own patriotism be quickened, and your reverence for the great principles which underlie as a foundation all good government, be deepened and strengthened.

Prayer was then offered by Rev. George Hill, Pastor of the Universalist Church, South Dedham.

The Report of the Building Committee was briefly made by its Chairman, Waldo Colburn, Esq., and the keys were delivered to Ezra W. Taft, Esq., Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, who responded as follows :—

Mr. Chairman—In behalf of the Selectmen, whom I represent, and in behalf of the town of Dedham, we accept from your hands the trust now confided to us. I am directed to bear our united testimony to the eminently successful manner in which you have performed your duty, and would most cordially thank you for it. The magnitude of the building, its monumental and memorial character, and the various uses for which it was built, must have required a great deal of thought and skill in building it, but the superior practical ability of your committee has overcome all difficulties. We would congratulate the town, also, in the great ability displayed by their committee, in producing a building so well adapted, in all its details, to the great purposes for which it was built, and for their economy in spending the money put into their hands. We presume there are few towns in the Commonwealth that have expended so much money to honor, and in memory of, her fallen soldiers, in proportion to valuation, as Dedham. If this is evidence of her patriotism, we certainly have reason to be proud of her.

Sir, in accepting the care of this building, we pledge to you and the town, that we will carefully guard and protect it from harm, and surrender it in as perfect a condition as possible, to our successors in office.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen—It gives me great pleasure to inform you of the splendid and appropriate gift to the town, of the painting of Washington, which, you now see, adorns the walls of this hall. It is a copy of Stuart's painting of Washington, that now hangs in Faneuil Hall, Boston. It represents him amid the fire and smoke of battle, on Dorchester Heights, during the evacuation of Boston, by Gen. Howe and the British army, in March, 1776. It was given to the town for the especial purpose of adorning this Memorial Hall, here to be kept for all time to come. The patriotic lady who has given this beautiful and appropriate painting to the town, is known by most of you—Mrs. Lydia E. Fisher, of Dedham village. It was executed by her late lamented husband—an artist of distinguished fame, and a highly respected citizen of Dedham—Alvan Fisher, Esq. The Selectmen have acknowledged the gift with suitable thanks, in behalf of the town, and pledged the honor of the town to adhere to the conditions on which it was given.

And now, fellow citizens, nothing more beautiful and appropriate could have been given to adorn this hall. It will serve to remind us of the traditions of our fathers—of their heroism in achieving our independence—of their patriotism, love of liberty and love of country, for which Washington and his associates were so distinguished;—and while we consecrate this hall to the memory of our fallen soldiers, whose names are cut in the enduring stone in yonder vestibule, may the principles for which they fought and died be inscribed on our memories, and borne on to generations yet to live.

Fellow citizens—While we consecrate this hall to the memory of our brave soldiers, who gave up their lives for their country, we also dedicate it to the town for municipal purposes. We this day bid good-by to the old town house, where the town has so long assembled, to provide for the common welfare. All honor to its memory. In the town houses of our country those measures were adopted, that, in the late terrible conflict, enabled it to maintain and extend liberty, equality, and justice all over our country. May the good deeds done in our old town house inspire us to do equally good, and even better ones, in this our new one. Here may the cause of education be carefully watched over, and prudently cared for, on which, with religion, the safety of all our institutions depends. May the law of kindness prevail in the management of all our schools, that the affections of all our children may be drawn to them, and the affections of all parents who hold their children dear. Here may all the powers delegated to the town, to enable it to provide for its general welfare, be executed with exact and equal justice to all.

The following hymn, written for the occasion by Mrs. William J. Adams of Dedham, was then sung by the audience to the tune of Boylston, the Band playing the accompaniment :

Sigh gently, Autumn wind ;
 Fall softly, fading leaf ;
 Send healing balm, O Nature kind ;
 It is a hallowed grief.

With mingled tears and prayer,
 We sent our sons to fight
 The saddest, but the holiest war,—
 For Conscience, and for Right.

Thank God, for those who live ;—
 Palace and cottage rude,
 Hillside and vale, the echo give
 Of daily gratitude.

Alas, for thousands slain !
 We clasp the mourner's hand,
 And in our memories again
 Enshrine the hero band.

Now, we a blessing seek,
To consecrate this Hall.—
That Truth may dwell, and Wisdom speak,
While Freedom waves o'er all.

Our Patriots, true and brave!
Memorial this shall be
Of you, who to our Country gave
A new-born liberty.

The Dedicatory Prayer was offered by the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, pastor of the Allin Evangelical Church, in Dedham.

ADDRESS.

We have assembled today upon an occasion of unusual significance. Nothing of like interest has ever occurred in our local history, or perhaps ever will occur again. We stand for the first time in an edifice built at the common expense for the municipal and public uses of the town, and with such appropriateness of architectural design, of such ample proportions, thorough construction and enduring materials that, under the blessing of Providence, we may reasonably hope our children and children's children to remote generations, may gather within its walls and call to grateful remembrance this work of ours. Upon an ordinary occasion of inaugurating a new town hall, it is customary to dwell upon the remote or recent events of local history, and although the current of events in the old town has generally moved slowly and calmly down from generation to generation, like the current of the placid river winding through yonder meadows, yet were we here today to talk over our history as a town, we should easily find enough to quicken our attachments for the play-grounds of our youth, and increase our reverence for the graves of our sires.

But such themes as these must be put aside today. This building would not stand here had the rule of peaceful life been undisturbed. Nor would the foundations of such an edifice as this ever have been laid if we had only designed to build a Town Hall. Its architecture reveals that conceptions and purposes other than those of simple utility entered into its design. By the recorded vote of the town; by the inscription upon its granite front; by the memorial tablets in the vestibule; by these patriotic emblems; by this gathering of men whom we recognize as our defenders upon the battle field; by the solemn dirge and the starting tear; we know and feel in our hearts, that this is a day to recall the scenes of war, and to linger awhile upon their tender and inspiring memories.

These ceremonies then are in commemoration of those who, by their deaths, have once made us all mourners at their bier; and whose names we now have written upon marble, so that if the memory of men shall grow dim as the years wear on, the generations to come after us may yet read the roll of honor so long as these stones shall remain one upon another. Shall we not call these men our heroes, since who can better deserve the name than they who seal their devotion to the country with their blood? No doubt they were led by different motives into military life, but whether prompted by a youthful love of adventure, or allured by the dream of glory, or weary of the routine of their daily lives, or whether impelled by that keen sense of their duty to their country and a righteous cause, which dominated over the love of ease, the whisperings of fear, and even the endearments of home—they all alike went from among us, voluntarily assuming the dangers, hardships and trials of military life, and when in the appointed time they met their "last enemy," the record closed upon them with their armor on, and they stand enrolled as faithful alike in victory and defeat, in life and death.

But we come not here to pay funereal honors to the dead. The dread clash of arms has ceased for years, and they whom we commemorate died before the dawn of peace. Some of them lie in yonder burial ground, and in others within the town, whither their mortal remains were borne from the distant field, and there buried with solemn rites.¹

¹ It is estimated that the remains of fifteen repose in the burial ground of the First Parish, two in the Second Parish, and three in the Third Parish.

Some repose in our national cemeteries—and some others still slumber in the soldier's grave in the field whereon they fell. Others lie where no man can trace them, and a few dropped from the ranks on the battle field, never again responded at the sergeant's roll call, and nothing more is known. In the simple and touching ceremony we observed last spring,² we revived and deepened our interest in the grave of the soldier, and which I trust may never be lost.

“ In the South alone and far,
Or beneath the Northern star,
Wherso'er our soldier keep,
Scatter flowers upon his sleep.”

This is no mausoleum where the dust of mortal men reposes. Neither crypt, nor sarcophagus, nor effigy can be found within its walls. It claims none of the sacredness which hallows the burial place of the dead. We could not have reared such a monument if we had so desired. Our choice was confined to a cenotaph of the usual monumental form, and a memorial building. We chose the latter; and where, I ask, is a more suitable place to put our memorial of these names, than where men must gather for successive generations, to exercise the prerogative of the citizen—the ballot—or to deliberate concerning their local interests in the “town meeting?” Here within these solid walls, the rough elements cannot enter to mar and consume our memorials, and we need not trust to the friendly chisel of some “Old Mortality” of the next century to revive the fading inscriptions. We thus have ensured, so far as human device could ensure it, a public, permanent, and distinct record of what we desire to commemorate, and this answers fully all the requirements of a suitable memorial.

But some may say there is something incongruous in thus blending in one structure the memory of the dead and the turmoil, conflicts of opinion, and the frivolities of some public assemblies. If this were the place of sepulture, where friends gathered to recall the virtues and image of the deceased, this objection might not be easily answered. But we cannot invest this edifice with any such sacred and solemn associations. It is to tell a story of duty done, of patriotic sacrifice, of noble triumph. It is to proclaim that in her hour of need, the country summoned men to fight her battles, and from these peaceful plains of Dedham, men rose up and went voluntarily. Nay more, when the conflict was imminent, and they were ordered to the front in the battle, there they were found also; and when at last life was demanded, they gave that too. Is it not better to inscribe this story of lofty sacrifice where the lesson may be most impressive? Will not the association of these patriotic memories with present duties, serve to dignify and elevate our public discussions here, by reminding us of what patriotism has once required and may require again, that thus all empty declamation and personal revilings may stand rebuked, and men become impressed with that just respect for the rights of others which ought to characterize every public assembly?

A memorial edifice is no novel conception of ours. A memorial church all through the Christian world is deemed the most fitting monument to commemorate the piety, charities or self-sacrifice of some departed one, to the end that even the memory of the dead may thus actively bless the living. In this way that eminent American, Mr. Peabody, chose recently to commemorate his departed mother in his native town. Turning to the University whose sons, in all periods of New England history, have been leaders in public opinion upon all questions, we find to-day her graduates and friends preparing to erect a costly and imposing edifice, where she may hold her literary and social festivals, and where also she chooses to perpetuate the long roll of heroes who shed a new lustre upon the name of Harvard in the same struggle we contemplate today.

Let then this our Memorial Hall receive a benediction from us all today. God keep it ever from the lightning stroke and the consuming fire. Bring hither your choicest gifts—the bust, the portrait, and whatever else shall befit its memorial character—that from its walls it shall speak to men of heroic deeds, and remind them of what they so often forget—the high responsibilities of the American citizen.

A great deal has been written and said among us during the last quarter of a century to diminish public respect for the virtues of the soldier. For a time both pulpit and platform seemed to join in proclaiming war an unmitigated barbarism, which, in our high civilization, should be abandoned as unworthy and wicked. The horrors of war have been held up in the same light as the avenging of private wrongs by blood, and the soldier pronounced a criminal in the sight of God. I need not on such an occasion as this, and in this presence, undertake to refute these fallacies at length. The events of our civil war have rooted them out so effectually, that we can scarcely believe that such doctrines once nearly annihilated the militia system of Massachusetts, and if again revived and adopted, will surely paralyze the right arm of the nation's defence. We must all believe today that he who smites even with sword and fire the enemies of his country, when found in arms against her peace, fulfils a high and sacred duty, in the just performance of which the laws of God and man, and the noblest attributes of our nature, concur alike in sustaining him. When a gigantic wrong becomes strongly intrenched; when truth and justice lose their sway; when men break through the obligations of public faith, and trample upon their country's flag; and maintain all these things at the cannon's mouth, then it is high time to appeal to the arbitrament of arms and to the God of battles.

Such an emergency as this was the 14th of April, 1861, when a long series of treasonable acts culminated in the reduction of Fort Sumter, with its starved garrison of sixty men, under the fire of nineteen batteries, with a force of five thousand men behind them, on the third day of its bombardment. When the flag went down on that fort of the United States, the loyal masses sprang to their feet. The dream of peace was broken; delusions were dispelled; the scales fell from men's eyes, and they saw alike for once their duties and their dangers. When, therefore, the President issued his call for 75,000 volunteers to sustain him in executing the laws of the land, there was a ready and willing response in the place of doubt and cavillings.

It found us in Dedham without any organized militia, no military company having existed here for nearly thirty years.³ Eighty-six years before, on the morning of the Lexington fight, Dedham responded to the messenger with four companies, besides the minute men, which left the town almost literally without a male inhabitant below the age of seventy, and above that of sixteen.⁴ How great the contrast in the preparation made for the two conflicts! But in all save organization, our people in 1861 were not behind our ancestors of the Revolution. There were differences among us as to the causes of the war, but there were none as to the duty of sustaining the government. Those who were sojourning among us belonging to companies elsewhere, and there were several,⁵ repaired to their standards with alacrity. Our young men immediately took steps to raise a company, justly anticipating that their services would soon be needed. The ladies, too, with great promptness, forwarded to the Governor garments for the regiments about to depart.⁶ All classes of citizens joined in the patriotic work. The town, at a legal meeting held May 6th, by formal resolution pledged itself "to stand by the volunteers, and protect their families during the war," and appropriated ten thousand dollars for these general purposes. The Massachusetts regiments were filled so rapidly that the War Department could not receive them, and the Governor was soon obliged to solicit from the general government opportunities for more regiments. Our first company was formed early in May, and while waiting for a regimental position, employed themselves in perfecting their drill, and in military exercise. The town supplied them with uniforms, and allowed them a per diem compensation during a certain period. It was not until July, that they were finally incorporated with the 18th Mass. Infantry as Co. F. All the commissioned officers and fifty-six men of this Company belonged in Dedham. Nine Dedham men also enlisted in Co. H.⁷ The regiment was commanded by Col. James Barnes, a graduate of West Point in the class of 1829, whose high qualifications as an officer were subsequently demonstrated both in camp and on the field. On the 26th August the regiment marched out of camp with eight companies,⁸ and departed for the seat of war. We parted with them expecting a short campaign and a speedy return, so little did we understand the nature of the conflict at its beginning. Upon arriving at Washington on the 3d September, it was ordered to report to Gen. Fitz John Porter, and assigned to Martindale's brigade. The regiment was engaged in drill and in working upon the fortifications of Washington until the 26th, when it advanced with the army and took its position at Hall's Hill, Va. At a grand review of the army, the Eighteenth received one of three prizes for drill and general proficiency in discipline, being a complete set of uniforms, camp equipage and tents, imported from France by the general government. Mr. Russell, in one of his letters to the London Times, (an authority which will be credited when complimentary,) writes thus of the regiment at this period:—"I went out to see the Eighteenth Massachusetts, the other day, and found them pitching their tents with all the rawness of new hands; but their equipments were excellent, their transport magnificent, and the men equal in youth, health, stature and bulk, to any regiment (not picked like the Guards) in our service."

The long winter of inaction at Hall's Hill taught them that were prominent among the duties of the soldier. But they were not forgotten at home. The ladies sent them a welcome supply of garments, and our citizens generally provided and sent to them a generous feast on New Year's day. Some of their townsmen visited them in camp; a few obtained furloughs to visit their homes, and they all were made to understand that we meant to follow them with kind offices to the field. Three deaths occurred during the winter—Sergeant Damrell, and Privates Guild, and Stevens, —whose remains were brought home for burial.

"To labor and to wait"

At length on the 10th March, 1862, with the magnificent and well-appointed army of the Potomac, they moved to Hampton Roads and entered upon the Peninsular campaign. They were before Yorktown during its siege for twenty-four days, and most of the time under fire. Then passing up the York River by transports, and disembarking at West Point, they participated in the movements of the division until the 26th June. They missed the battle at Hanover Court House (May 27th) by being ordered to rest after picket duty during a driving rain storm in the preceding night. On the day previous to the battle at Gaines' Mills, (June 27th) the Eighteenth was ordered to join an expedition under Gen. Stoneman, fitted out to repel an anticipated attack upon the right flank of the army by the enemy under "Stonewall" Jackson. They marched towards White House, on the Pamunkey, and passing down the York and up the James by transports, they rejoined the army at Harrison's Landing, after the battles of the Chickahominy and Malvern Hill. During all those battles, therefore, the Eighteenth was detached from its brigade.

The record discloses, however, that one man of the Eighteenth fell at Gaines' Mills, although, as we have seen, the regiment was not there. The apparent discrepancy is thus explained. That one, the first of the regiment to fall on the field, was a Dedham boy—Private Jordan, of Co. II. He was a youth of eighteen, and finding that his regiment was not to be engaged on the succeeding day, he mingled with the ranks of the Ninth Mass., joined in their charge, and never came out alive. The fact of his death was fully substantiated, and his name appears upon our tablets as the first of our soldiers to fall in battle.⁹

The Peninsular campaign terminated, and with what heaviness of heart we read the bulletin which announced that the first and best disciplined of our armies had retired before the spires of Richmond, and from the victorious field of Malvern Hill. But while the campaign had brought sorrow upon many households in the Commonwealth, with the single exception named, our own had escaped. The day of fearful trial, however, was close at hand. On the 20th August the regiment left Hampton Roads, and disembarking at Acquia Creek, proceeded to Falmouth. The army had now come within the department of Gen. Pope, and were subject to his orders. A series of movements for eight days with Porter's corps,¹⁰ brought our soldiers to the vicinity of Bull Run, an insignificant stream, but now famous in history as the place where, in two general battles, disaster befell the Union arms. "Stonewall" Jackson, with his corps, had for several days previous successfully eluded the attempts of the Union commander to overcome him, before reinforcements could arrive from Gen. Lee. On the 30th occurred what is known to us as the "second battle of Bull Run." On that day Porter's corps was ordered to make a vigorous assault upon the Confederate position, and nobly did they perform it. The Eighteenth was the first regiment to advance to the attack, and the last to leave the field.¹¹ Line after line of the corps was swept away by the infantry fire of Jackson's men in front, and an enfilading fire from the artillery of Longstreet, who had on that day, very inopportunately for Gen. Pope, brought his corps through the mountains. Porter's corps withdrew only when the enemy had advanced so closely as to fire into the very faces of the men.¹² The Eighteenth regiment was highly and especially commended for its steadiness and gallantry on this hard-fought and disastrous field. But such assaults as these are always made at a fearful cost. The number of the regiment engaged on that day was 325, many being sick and unfit for duty. Of these, three officers and thirty-seven men were killed, five officers and ninety-six men were wounded, and twenty-eight men were missing, being a total loss of one hundred and sixty-nine men, or fifty-two per cent.¹³ Our tablets show the names of seven who were either killed or died afterwards of wounds there received. CARROLL, the brave and patriotic Captain of Co. F, fell mortally wounded, was left on the field within the rebel lines, where he died three days after.¹⁴ Corporal Edward Holmes, Privates Robert R. Covey, George O. Kingsbury, and Henry D. Smith, were killed on the field. Privates Edmund L. Thomas and George N. Worthen lingered, mortally wounded, but a few days in the hospitals, and died soon after—the former near Washington, and the latter at Philadelphia. Five others were wounded more or less severely, and it is stated that of forty men in our Company engaged, fourteen only came out unharmed.¹⁵

The shadows of war now rested upon our hearthstones, the dead were mourned in our streets, and the hearts of patriots were burdened with anxiety for the cause of the country. Our high hopes, based upon the discipline and ¹⁴ Charles Whiting Carroll was born in Dedham, May 30, 1836; was fitted for college in the Dedham High School; was graduated at Dartmouth College, class of 1859, and was a member of the Suffolk Bar. He was commissioned 1st Lieut. of Co. F, July 26, 1861, and Captain, Oct. 29, 1861. In the charge at Bull Run, Capt. Carroll acted as Lieut. Colonel of the regiment. While retiring from the field, and bringing up the rear of the regiment, he was struck by a ball near the shoulder blade, which probably penetrated the spinal column, as he was rendered helpless, and in the confusion of retreat, was left behind. His friend, Adj. Baker, two days after, succeeded in passing the rebel lines under a flag of truce, and found him where he had fallen, and in a state of suffering, although he had not been wholly uncared for by the enemy. The next day, a carriage was sent to bring him within the Union lines, but he died two hours before it reached its destination. He was decently buried on the field, but the remains were subsequently brought home and buried with solemn rites.

My friends, recall that Sunday (Aug. 31, 1862) when the first vague rumors of these disasters reached us. We had read the despatch sent by the Union commander, and published in the newspapers of the day previous, "that the enemy were retreating to the mountains." But while at our respective places of worship, on that serene, summer day, perhaps sending up our thanksgivings for victory, with prayers for the safety of our defenders, a messenger caused our devotions to be suddenly arrested with the announcement that a great battle had been fought, and with an urgent call for lint, bandages and stimulants, words that made hearts shrink and faces pale. It seemed as if we heard the enemy's cannon, and were called personally to administer to the wounded and dying, so near did this message bring the war to us. And let it never be forgotten how on that sad and sacred day the quick sympathies and ready hands of woman rendered a full answer to the call, ere the sun went down.¹⁶

The results of the Peninsula campaign, as they gradually became known, had revealed the necessity of replenishing the army, and early in July the President had called for 300,000 men for three years, and assigned the quota of Massachusetts at 15,000 men. The quota of Dedham was sixty-nine, and our Selectmen, through whom thenceforward all recruiting during the war was carried on, issued their call for that number. On the 21st July the town voted to pay a bounty of $100 to each volunteer, with aid to families, and appropriated $6900 for the bounties.

The realities of war having been brought home to us, it was evident that long marches and hard fighting were to be the inevitable lot of the volunteer. The bounty of itself was no sufficient inducement to enlist, but it served to aid in removing the pecuniary obstacle which operated to deter some men, especially those having families. The times especially demanded men of patriotic motives, and to this the second and most urgent call, there were soon found such men to answer.

One of the largest and most impressive of our public meetings, during the war, was held July 10th, before the legal town meeting. Men were there inspired by an earnest purpose to devote themselves to the country. The preliminary discussion as to bounties being ended, the roll was opened, and then came a pause, when it seemed doubtful if any would come forward. The first man to sign that roll was the father of the boy of the Eighteenth who had been killed at Gaines' Mills. Another was a young man who had been recently graduated at the University, and was beginning his professional studies. A third announced his purpose in impressive and earnest words, to the sincerity of which, a severe wound received in battle, nearly a year's confinement in four rebel prisons, and a close adherence to his regiment to the last day of its service, afterwards bore ample testimony.

With such a spirit animating them, others enrolled themselves, and soon the number was complete. Uniting with men from Needham and Weston, they constituted Co. I, 35th Mass. Infantry, (Col. Wild.)¹⁷ Without any opportunities for drill or organization, the regiment left the State, August 22, 1862, for the seat of war. On their arrival at Washington they were immediately assigned to the defences of the city, in throwing up earthworks and doing picket duty. They were near their townsmen of the Eighteenth, who had preceded them one year in the service, and they heard the guns around Centreville on the day of the battle at Bull Run.

¹⁷ See Roll of this Company, in Appendix.

Both companies were now in the army of the Potomac, the elder having the discipline of veterans with thinned ranks, while the younger, yet imperfect in the duties of the soldier, was fresh and vigorous. The Eighteenth still remained with Porter's Corps, and the Thirty-fifth was in the 2d Brigade, 2d Division, Ninth Corps, under Gen. Burnside.

The army was then in motion towards Maryland, to meet Lee in his first invasion of what may be termed the neutral ground of the rebellion. The necessities of those days were inexorable, and called for long and rapid marches. Burnside's Corps started first, and on the 14th September, —only three weeks after they had left their homes—our men of the Thirty-fifth met the enemy at South Mountain. The Thirty-fifth on that day dislodged rebel sharpshooters from an extensive tract of forest, and received a sharp attack from the enemy. Here Private George F. Whiting was fatally wounded, and died on the 7th October. Sergeant Henry W. Tisdale and Private Clinton Bagley were wounded, the former severely. With no knowledge of batallion movements, and having had but a brief period for drill, this new regiment encountered the disciplined brigades of the enemy, and stood the test firmly.

But South Mountain was a prelude only to the memorable battle of Antietam, three days after. Porter's Corps, which left Washington on the 12th, now joined the main army, and on the 17th supported batteries in the battle. The Thirty-fifth was engaged in the movements of Burnside's Corps, which had a highly important part in the battle. They charged the enemy, drove him over the bridge, and held the crest of the second hill beyond, until ordered to retire. They behaved with such steadiness and gallantry as to receive the highest encomiums of their commander. Thus within a month from their departure from home, our company had been twice on hard-fought fields, and in the thickest of the battles.

But these had told fearfully upon the regiment. Of those present, two-thirds of the officers and nearly one-third of the men, had been disabled.¹⁸ At Antietam, Corporal Edward E. Hatton, (a true man and brave soldier) and Privates Charles H. Sulkoski and Joseph P. White, of South Dedham, were killed. Corporal Edmund Davis was very severely wounded, and six others wounded more or less severely, of whom Private Nathan C. Treadwell died about a month after. Besides these, there were two killed and several wounded of the company who belonged elsewhere. Such was the share of Co. I in the glory and sacrifices of Antietam.

Co. F of the Eighteenth sustained no loss at Antietam, but at Shepardstown, on the 20th, they were engaged with their regiment, which lost three killed and eleven wounded.

The Maryland campaign ended with the retirement of Lee into Virginia, and whither also returned the army of the Potomac, but with unequal steps.

Let us now recur a moment to events transpiring at home. Soon after the call under which Dedham had furnished sixty-nine men for the Thirty-fifth regiment, there came yet another call from the President, with an order for a draft, to which Dedham was required to respond with one hundred and twenty-two men for nine months' service. In anticipation of the draft, the town offered a bounty of $200, with aid to families, to volunteers. The short term of service was a great inducement for some who were unable to enlist for three years, and soon the requisite number was made up, almost exclusively from Dedham. These chiefly constituted Co. D, Forty-third Regiment, Mass. Infantry,¹⁹ (Col. Holbrook) which, on the 24th October, 1862, was ordered to North Carolina, where it remained during nearly ¹⁸ Adj. Gen. Report, 1862, p. 348.

¹⁹ See Roll of Company, in Appendix. Those enlisting on the Dedham quota from other towns, joined the 42d, 43d, and 45th Regiments, and Company of Sharpshooters.

the whole term of its service. The regiment was under fire at Kinston and Whitehall in December. Our company, with two others, were detached for picket duty for a time, and afterwards marched with the regiment on Trenton; was ordered to the relief of Little Washington, and encountered the enemy at Blount's Creek. It was then occupied in picket duty, and those other nameless duties which constitute so large a part of a soldier's life in camp. On the 27th June, it was ordered to report to Gen. Dix, and proceeded to White House on the Pamunkey, in Virginia, thence to Fortress Monroe, and thence to Baltimore. On the 7th July, the term of service having expired, it was left to the option of the men to go to the front (this being immediately after the battle of Gettysburg,) or to return home, and two hundred of the regiment remained, among whom were thirteen of our townsmen. These returned home July 21st, and all were mustered out, July 30, 1863.

Such briefly is the record of our company of nine months' men. But one name of its number appears on our tablets, and his was an accidental death at Readville. It will not do, however, to infer from this that their service was light or unimportant. They were in a department where no considerable active operations were carried on during their term of service. But whenever called upon, as they often were, for special duty, their record shows it was well performed; and there is no doubt but they would have acquitted themselves with honor in any exigency of the service.

Nothing decisive had occurred with the army of the Potomac, after the battle of Antietam, until the 13th December, 1862, when occurred that saddest of all the battles of the war—the assault upon Fredericksburg. The army was now under Burnside, and his name is inseparably associated with that ill-starred movement. In this assault, both of our companies bore a very prominent part. The Eighteenth was the leading regiment of its corps; and on the 13th, having remained until one o'clock on the opposite side of the river, then crossed, and engaged in the battle, which lasted until dark. The regiment charged the enemy, and nearly penetrated his fortified position and stronghold on Mary's Heights, when it was compelled to return. It rallied again, however, and was in advance of the corps throughout the battle. The record adds: "It is believed that the dead of this regiment lay nearer the enemy's works than those of any other engaged upon that part of the field."²⁰ Two of our men in this regiment were killed—Privates Jonathan H. Keyes and Daniel Leahy, and several were wounded. The regiment lost two officers and eleven men killed, and nine officers and one hundred and twelve men wounded.

The position of the Thirty-fifth was scarcely less exposed, being in the advance of its corps, and they received a deadly fire at short range. They held their ground until, their ammunition being exhausted, their brigade was relieved. It was the last regiment but one to leave Fredericksburg. The gallant Major Willard, who commanded the regiment in the assault, was mortally wounded while leading his men, sword in hand. He was the first Captain of Co. I, although not a resident of Dedham. Lieut. William Hill, of Co. I, but who on that day was in command of Co. K, and Private George C. Bunker, were killed on the heights, and buried on the field. Four of our Dedham soldiers, of this company, were wounded more or less severely. The whole loss of the regiment was about sixty. The survivors of both of our companies may recall with satisfaction and soldierly pride the deeds performed on that bloody and unsuccessful day at Fredericksburg.

The army now ceased active operations until the spring of 1863, when Gen. Hooker assumed command, and we come to the Chancellorsville campaign. On the 2d and 3d May, the Eighteenth was engaged, and lost one officer and thirteen men killed, but none of these were from Dedham. In the Second Mass. Infantry, Private Michael Henihan, a Dedham soldier, was killed—his being the only name of that heroic regiment borne upon our tablets.

The Thirty-fifth had now been detached from the army of the Potomac, and sent to another and distant department. In March, 1863, it had proceeded with the reorganized Ninth Corps (Burnside's) to the South-west, where its services were much needed. April and May they passed in Kentucky. Thence they were transported down the Mississippi to the vicinity of Vicksburg, where they threw up earthworks and defences. They were now with the army of the Tennessee under the command of Gen. Grant. Under Sherman after the surrender of Vicksburg, they marched into the interior of Mississippi, in pursuit of the force of Gen. Johnston. After days of toilsome and painful marches, with frequent skirmishing, and a brief siege, they captured Jackson, the capital of the State. Here the Thirty-fifth had the honor of being the first regiment to plant its colors within the city, pulling down the rebel ensign from the State House, and of throwing to the breeze, from that abode of treason, the stars and stripes.²¹ In this campaign, Private David Phalen died in camp, of disease. In August, the regiment almost exactly retraced its steps, and on the 1st October were in Kentucky, where we will leave them for the present.

The army of the Potomac, in the meantime, had again moved into Maryland and Pennsylvania, to repel Lee's second invasion. In the great victory of Gettysburg the Eighteenth was engaged, and lost one man killed and thirteen wounded, but the name of no Dedham soldier appears among them. But Dedham was not without its representative in the sacrifices of that victorious field. On the 3d July, Sergeant Edward Hutchins, of the First Co. Andrew's Sharpshooters, received his death-wound, and lingered but two hours. He was a faithful and fearless soldier, and one well qualified for his peculiar service.

The Eighteenth was in the battle at Rappahannock Station, Nov. 7th, and at Mine Creek on the 29th and 30th of the same month. These concluded their campaigns in 1863.

The Thirty-fifth, in October, marched across the mountains through Cumberland Gap to Knoxville, Tennessee. It was engaged at Loudon Bridge and Campbell's Station, and then fell back to Knoxville, then besieged by the enemy under Gen. Longstreet. It was during this campaign that Private Charles Henry Ellis, the regimental clerk, was taken prisoner, was confined in Belle Isle prison, and, it is supposed, died in Richmond the succeeding year. During this winter the regiment suffered much for want of food and clothing. In March their Western campaign ended, and they were transported again to Annapolis, Maryland, where the Ninth Corps was again reorganized.

We are now brought to the last and greatest act of the drama—Grant's Overland Campaign—which on the one hand is characterized as "a campaign unsurpassed by any on record in the elements which make war grand, terrible, and bloody,"²² but on the other it should also be said, a campaign invested with a glory that will never fade, since it brought us to victory and to peace. At home, the summer and autumn of 1864 were the darkest period of the war. Men had learned to feel the dread hazards of battle to the cause of the country, as well as to the lives of our soldiers. All our available able-bodied men had been sent to the field.

²² Swinton's Campaigns, p. 413.

The draft, like a heavy cloud, brooded over our community. A Presidential campaign had intervened to divide us in our counsels, if it did not destroy our harmony of action. Our community seemed to rest under a shadow which nothing could dispel. It was, however, the darkness which precedes the dawn, though the day was as yet afar off.

Again our two companies were in Virginia; the Eighteenth regiment being in Ayre's Brigade, Fifth Corps, (Warren's) numbering about three hundred men.²³ The Thirty-fifth remained in the Ninth Corps, with about two hundred and fifty men ready for duty.²⁴ The Corps was still under Burnside, whose command was independent of Gen. Meade, then commanding the army of the Potomac. All acted under the orders of Gen. Grant.

On the 3d May, 1864, at midnight, the march began, the Fifth Corps having the right of the column. On the 5th May, while reconnoitering for the enemy, the Eighteenth was the first regiment to encounter Ewell's Corps, then moving in pursuit. The first infantry man killed in the campaign belonged to the Eighteenth,²⁵ and it received the brunt of the first assault of the enemy in the battles of the Wilderness. During all those marvellous battles, lasting three days, where neither cavalry nor artillery could be used, where "not only were the lines of battle entirely hidden from the sight of the commander, but no officer could see ten files from him,"²⁶ the Eighteenth was engaged in skirmishing and in assaults upon intrenchments. No fatal casualties occurred among our Dedham men, but Col. Hayes was severely wounded, and several were killed and wounded in the regiment.

The Thirty-fifth, with the Ninth Corps, crossed the Rapidan two days later, and passing over the battlegrounds at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, arrived in the Wilderness during the second day's battle. In the movement toward Spottsylvania, the Fifth Corps were charged with the duty of seizing Spottsylvania Court House. Both the Fifth and Ninth Corps were in line of battle on the north of Spottsylvania.²⁷ Here occurred one of the most fierce and deadly struggles of the war. In the engagement of 18th May, the Thirty-fifth participated. The result of the battles leaving the Union lines intact, another turning movement was determined upon. On the 20th May, the hostile armies again confronted each other at the North Anna River. The Eighteenth, crossing at Jericho Ford, was then detached from its brigade to occupy an eminence where it was exposed to a heavy fire from Hill's Corps, during which assault Lieut. Col. White was wounded. The Thirty-fifth crossed on the 24th, when it began a brilliant skirmish, followed by the whole brigade. The enemy were driven into their works, but a sudden storm, and a fresh force of the enemy, compelled them to retire.²⁸

On the 23d May, at the battle on the North Anna River, Sergeant John Finn, Jr., 22d Mass. Infantry—a Dedham soldier who had well earned promotion—received a wound on his arm, which rendered amputation necessary, and he died from its effects on the 5th June.

Another flank movement of the Union army turned it towards the Chickahominy, "a wet ditch on the outer fortifications of Richmond," and a place of sad memories for soldiers of the campaign of 1862. But before the passage of the Chickahominy, another fearful battle awaited them at Cold Harbor. Warren's Corps, a few days previous, had encountered the enemy on the Shady Church road, where a branch of the Tolopotomy crossed it, and had frequent skirmishes with the enemy.²⁹ While near Bethesda Church, and holding a line nearly four miles in extent, the enemy fell upon it with great vigor, and inflicted a considerable loss. In the assault at Cold Harbor, the Fifth Corps did not actively participate. The Ninth Corps was partially engaged, and the Thirty-fifth was employed in throwing up earth works. But in that bloody battle we had a representative in the list of the killed. The Twentieth Mass. Infantry was with the Second Corps, (Hancock's) holding the left of the assaulting column. On the 3d June, Private Albert C. Bean, of Co. I, was wounded, and died five days after. On the 7th June, the Eighteenth reached the Chickahominy, and after some days' skirmishing, crossed on the 13th June. They passed the James on the 16th June, and marched directly to the fortifications in front of Petersburg. Here they were engaged in throwing up earth-works in the presence of the enemy. On the 5th July, Private Cyrus D. Tewksbury, who had served from the beginning, was killed, the last man of the Eighteenth to fall in battle. It is a somewhat curious fact, and perhaps worthy of mention, that the first of our Dedham men who fell in battle in 1862, and the last just named, were cousins, both belonging to the same company and regiment, and on fields not many miles distant from each other.

²⁷ Swinton's Campaigns, p. 441.

²⁸ Adj. Gen. Report, 1864-1866.

The Eighteenth had now reached nearly the end of its term of service of three years, and on the 20th July it was ordered to Washington in anticipation of discharge. Twelve of our Dedham men had re-enlisted, and these, together with those whose term was not ended,³⁰ remained with the Eighteenth Battalion, and did good service. When the officers were mustered out, this battalion was merged in the Thirty-second Regiment. Among these men was Private Henry C. Everett, who died in Washington, Jan. 19, 1865.

²⁹ Swinton's Campaigns. p. 480.

³⁰ Recruits which had been added during the war.

On the 3d September, 1864, the old Eighteenth was mustered out of service, and its honorable record closed. It had participated in some fifteen battles. Of the fifty-eight who enlisted from Dedham, eleven had fallen in the field, six had died from disease and wounds received in battle, eight had been discharged by reason of wounds, and thirteen by reason of disability resulting from wounds. Of the whole company, twenty-three men had either died or fallen in battle.

The regiment bore an honorable part in nearly all the great general battles of the army of the Potomac except those of the Peninsula before Richmond, and its tattered battle-flag bears no stain, save from the blood of its defenders. While often called to share in the defeat of our arms, yet in the darkest hours of the war it kept its high discipline, unswerving fidelity and patriotic faith; and though it saw not the days of final victory, it aided in accomplishing those unparalleled movements, and fighting those continuous battles, which made complete victory possible at the last. Upon the return of the few brave men left of our company, we welcomed them with fitting ceremonies, in which we all joined with grateful hearts, though sensible that the formalities of a public occasion but inadequately expressed our debt of gratitude.

Our men of the Thirty-fifth were now destined to bear a part in the siege of Petersburg, and the closing campaign. At first they were employed "in throwing up earth-works and batteries, laying down abattis," and in the construction of works necessary for a besieging army. At the memorable explosion of the "Mine," July 30th, it was their duty to advance, after the explosion, and turn the works of the enemy, which they accomplished. Private Michael Colbert was killed in the advance of the regiment over the works, and the regiment lost one officer and nine men killed, and three officers and twenty-eight men wounded.³¹ The dead were buried under a flag of truce. Being now in the immediate presence of the enemy, they were frequently engaged, and suffered considerable losses, especially while in position on the Weldon Railroad. At Poplar Spring Church, Sept. 30th, the regiment was repulsed by an attack on the right and rear, with a loss of nine killed, and one hundred and fifty prisoners. In the same action, John W. Fiske, formerly a Sergeant in Co. I, but recently promoted to be First Lieut. in the Fifty-eighth Mass. Infantry, which was also engaged, was killed, and buried on the field. He was an efficient officer, and much beloved.

Nothing decisive occurred to the regiment during the winter of 1864-5. In March, 1865, it was removed to a part of Fort Sedgwick, about four hundred yards from the enemy's works—a post of great danger, being subject to an almost continuous fire,—where they passed one month. On the 2d April, they assaulted Fort Mahone, the rebel work opposite, and held a portion of it. During the same night Petersburg was evacuated by the enemy, and on the next morning, the men had the proud satisfaction of marching through the streets of Petersburg with colors flying, band playing, and of receiving, with shouts of victory and welcome, the President of the United States, as he rode along their lines. On the 9th April occurred the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House, and at last peace had come, crowned with honor and victory. The regiment passed in review at Washington, May 23d, reached Massachusetts on the 13th June, and were mustered out of service on the 27th.

The Thirty-fifth saw nearly three years of active and arduous service, beginning almost with the day of their arrival in the field. On its colors are inscribed, by an order of Gen. Meade, the names of thirteen battles, to which was afterwards added a fourteenth. The record shows that their campaigns were not limited by a State or a Department, but that in Kentucky, East Tennessee and Mississippi, as well as in Maryland and Virginia, they were actively employed. In many of their battles, their position was among the most exposed to the enemy, and sometimes in the most deadly conflicts. Indeed, it became a proverb among the soldiers that the commanding officer of the Thirty-fifth was sure to be struck down in every engagement. Of the sixty-eight who enlisted from Dedham, six were killed in battle, and one more died soon after of his wounds, five died in the service from disease, eight were discharged on account of their wounds, and eleven for disability.

At the expiration of their service, we desired to give them a public welcome, but with a soldierly modesty they declined the invitation, saying they preferred to pass without ceremony from the life of the soldier to that of the citizen. While then, we commemorate today the patriotic dead, let us not forget to render to the no less patriotic survivors the homage of our hearts. They went from us when days were dark, and men were few; they returned when the anthems of victory were resounding in our midst, and we would have given them glad shouts of welcome and of gratitude. Yet in their triumphs, as in their trials, they were true to themselves, and chose the conscious rewards of duty done, rather than the loud plaudits of their fellow citizens.

The roll of the dead is not yet complete. In other regiments than those to which I have already alluded,—both of our own Commonwealth and of other States—are to be found the names of men born and reared in Dedham. The Twenty-fourth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, and Fifty-sixth, each have one representative upon our tablets. From two regiments of Massachusetts cavalry, three names appear. Three died as prisoners of war, without a friend to minister to their last necessities, or even to raise for them a humble headstone. In that hecatomb at Fort Wagner—where the negro so nobly vindicated his right to the name and fame of the soldier—Dedham had one representative. Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia, hold the ashes of Dedham men today. And on the banks of a river in far-off Louisiana, while leading his men to the charge, the gallant Lathrop fell,³² closing a long and honorable service, in which rank was nobly earned, with a triumphant and peaceful death.³³

Here I turn the last page of this sad but glorious record. It has seemed to be my duty to dwell upon it with some minuteness of detail, in order that, if possible, we might today form some conception of what our soldiers did in the war. But how much must be left untold. What painful marches and sleepless nights; what dangers in the picket line; what sufferings from hunger and scanty clothing—all these the soldier himself cannot make us realize. But the memory of these men, and what they did, does not depend upon any words of mine. Should the tablets, on which you have inscribed the names of the dead, crumble and fade away—should even this edifice itself be razed to the ground,—there never will be wanting some faithful witness to repeat to coming generations how they gave all that a man has to give for national unity and freedom.

“How sleep the brave who sink to rest,
With all their country’s wishes blest:
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy’s feet have ever trod.

³² Julius M. Lathrop was born May 5, 1840, and was educated at the Dedham High School; enlisted in 1861 in the 24th Mass. Infantry; was commissioned 1st Lieut. Sept. 14, 1862, and Capt. Feb. 27, 1863, in the 38th Mass. Infantry. He was mortally wounded at the battle of Cane River, La., 23d April, 1864, and died at Alexandria, La., 26th April, 1864. I find in the “Story of the Thirty-eighth Regt. Mass. Volunteers,” by Geo. W. Powers, the following statement of the circumstances of his death:—“Capt. Lathrop had rode in an ambulance the day previous, unable to march; but upon the approach of an engagement, had taken command of his company, and was leading his men when he received the fatal shot.”—p. 140.

“By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen, their dirge is sung.
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay,
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell, a weeping hermit, there.”

If there be any in this assembly who doubtfully asks to what end was all this suffering and sacrifice, and how could these confer a lasting benefit upon the country, to him this answer may now be given. Not in our day and generation, perhaps, will the purposes of these years of trial and blood be fully realized. The Divine plans ripen in cycles of time which no man shall venture to compute. But some results are plain and unmistakeable.

In the first place, the odious system of human bondage has become extinct, and in a most marvellous way. To human foresight, a few years since, this event seemed well-nigh impossible. Never was a social or political problem beset with greater difficulties than any scheme of emancipation. No political party, up to the beginning of the war, ever inscribed upon its banner that dreaded name. But the sword has cut the Gordian knot which a century of discussion and legislation might have failed to untie. The war has made every man under the flag a freeman, and henceforth slaves cannot breathe in the American Union. In the words of a statesman of ripe experience, one brought up under the shadow of slavery—I refer to our present minister to the Court of St. James—“dreadful as the havoc has been, prevailing as the slaughter was,—literally miring almost every battle-field with blood—in future times it will be said that all was well spent in getting rid of that blot, not of our own creation, but of that blot that tarnished the fair fame of the United States, and gave the lie to the Declaration of Independence, by which we claim our right to freedom.”

Again, I answer, the war has settled the supremacy of the Union over the capricious will of a disaffected State. Secession was made an obsolete word, with the surrender at Appomattox Court House, and so let it remain forever.

The war has cemented bonds of fraternal affection between citizens of distant loyal States. Side by side, under the same flag, and with the same war cry, the regiments of Massachusetts and Wisconsin, Maine and Minnesota, Kansas and California, advanced to the deadly strife; and think you, that either they or their descendants will ever forget their common sacrifices in a common cause; that they can ever be found arrayed against each other through causeless jealousies, or that they will prove unfaithful to the old flag? In this way the war has done more to consolidate and strengthen the national sentiment, than orator or poet. For some things the sword is mightier than the pen.

The war has taught us to have a renewed faith in a government of the people. No sovereignty perhaps ever withstood so severe a trial of its existence as ours. The issue directly involved the question whether a government, chosen in accordance with the constitution and laws, should be permitted to exercise the authority which these conferred. To maintain this right the loyal masses rose in their majesty, transformed themselves into an immense army, cheerfully submitted to the reverses, disappointments and trials of many severe campaigns, and when called, heroically laid down their lives. That army, surpassing in numbers and character any the world had seen, in spite of all discouragements at home and abroad, never fought to accomplish a revolution, but to preserve the spirit and life of the institutions which had been transmitted to them by the fathers. Had the greatest or the most beloved of its commanders at any time dared to suggest a revolution, in which they should become masters, not a musket in the lines would have signified approval. And when at last they had achieved their high purpose, a million and more of fighting men, who, under some ambitious leader, could have seized the reins of government, overturned its popular framework, and erected a military despotism, peacefully laid down the weaponry of war, and returned to their accustomed avocations, with an attachment to the country and its institutions ten-fold greater than ever. Our army has proved not a danger, but a strong bulwark of our national liberties. Achievements like these confound all the maxims of statesmen, and violate all the precedents of history, save one ; and that one was the sublime act by which, at the close of the American Revolution, the Father of his country resigned his sword, retired to Mount Vernon, and became, by his own choice, only the citizen, George Washington.

No, fellow-citizens, the blood of these men whom we commemorate today, was not shed in vain. The Almighty Father, without whom not a sparrow falls, doth not so order the universe. The nation needed a purification by blood, and He called upon us to yield our bravest and our best for the sacrifice. The price was a fearful one—but it purchased for us Union, Freedom, Honor, Justice, and Peace.

POEM.

Written for the occasion and delivered by HORACE H.
CURRIER, Esq. :

When Treason's bloody portents glared
Along the Southern sky;
And, like a summons-blast, the roar
Of Sumter's guns swept by,—

How mightily the Nation roused !
As when the slumbering sea,
A black storm smites with rage, and stirs
The deep immensity.

The bugle's strain, the roll of drums,
Alarm, were in the air;
And armed men were thick, and flags
Were streaming everywhere.

It was the arm of Freedom raised
With martial energy,—
It was our Country roused to save
Her grand integrity.

And, mingling with that warrior host,
In panoplied array,
There stood our own brave sons, whose fame
We celebrate to-day.

Forth from their peaceful homes they went,
By loyal zeal led on;
The worthy sons of Dedham's sires
Who marched to Lexington.

They bore our symbol-banner on,
The Union's standard sheet;
Or high, or low, yet honored still,
In triumph or defeat.

They tracked Potomac's battle-shores,
South Mountain's fiery side;
And o'er Antietam's crimson field
Rolled back the gory tide.

Like veterans stood where Jackson dashed
Down from Mechanicsville;
Or where McClellan's thunders shook
The slopes of Malvern Hill.

They faced the hordes of Longstreet's men
In Eastern Tennessee;
And felt the iron hail pour down
The Heights of St. Marie.

Like flowers whose glory fades too soon,
Lives pure and young, they gave,
On Bull Run's sad and ill-starred field,
By dark Cane River's wave.

Or hastened on where Vicksburg belched
Her flaming challenge out,
And East and West in blended lines
Had pitched their camps about;

They dared the frowning citadel,
They stormed the haughty town,
And rent the air with loyal shouts
As the rebel rag went down.

Or trod the plains of Gettysburg,
That rang with red alarm,
When Freedom reinforced her hills
With Valor's mighty arm;

Where 'neath the favoring smile of Heaven,
With hero-hearts aglow,
The marshalled Freemen of the North
Hurled back the invading foe.

Then sweeping down their Chieftain's trail
From Rapidan to James,
They marched, like thunders in the sky,
Through battle-clouds and flames.

And when the bursting Mine wide-yawned
 On the red verge of day,
 Into the crater's jaws of flame,
 They urged a bloody way;

Or heard the bells defiance ring
 From the doomed city's spire,
 Watching amid the lightning glare
 Of Fort Hell's breath of fire.

'Till through the rifted cloud of war
 Appeared outstretched on high,
 The God of Battle's mighty arm
 Against the Union sky.

The meaning of that vision fell,
 Like horror on the foe:—
 The hostile power of God above,
 The loyal host below.

On, like a torrent flood amain,
 The avenging columns sped;
 Before the might of Freedom's sons,
 The rebel legions fled,—

On, through the streets of Petersburg,
 The shattered army flew;
 Behind victorious banners waved,
 And conquering bugles blew,—

On, till the vanquished hosts of Lee,
 Their guilty banners furled,
 And Freedom's bells and wild huzzas
 Rang round the listening world.

The story of their long career
 Is proud, but sad to tell;
 Of glorious fields and triumphs won,
 The Loved and True who fell;

Of toilsome march and prison-pain,
 The bivouac's anxious glow;
 Of sports and mirth the soldier shares,
 And weaves with scenes of woe;

How back they came as conquerors,
All battle-scarred and worn;
With names so bright and glorious,
And banners stained and torn;

We saw those tattered ensigns wave,
And heard the martial tread;
But looked, alas! in vain to see
The marching of the Dead.

No! not in vain! but hovering round,
Their spirits seemed to be,
Chanting aloft rejoicing songs
Of Peace and Victory!

Oh! let applauding tongues proclaim
Their deeds of glory done;
Who Liberty with Union joined,
And made forever one!

Who kept the faith our Fathers loved,
And bore it in the van;
And dying, broke the bondman's chain,
And made the slave a man!

Sleep on, brave Hearts! heroic Dead!
Who slumber with the slain;
They wear immortal crowns, who die
On Freedom's battle-plain!

Joined to the immortal Blest above,
Their glorious spirits dwell;
Where LINCOLN finds a martyr's home,
Where ANDREW rests so well.

Pale Sorrow comes, and leaning weeps
Over each hero's tomb;
While Glory weaves her immortelles,
And strews the laurel's bloom.

Such names as theirs, too grand to die,
We tenderly recall;
And to their worth now dedicate
This proud Memorial Hall.

Keep bright upon these tablet-walls
 The Martyr-roll of Fame;
 And it shall fill this stately pile
 With Freedom's holy flame.

Here Age shall come, with constaut faith,
 In reverent homage bow;
 Here Youth shall learn a patriot's worth,
 And take a patriot's vow.

Ay, make this place a hallowed shrine,
 The patriot's Ark of Light,
 Our Faith and Deed to consecrate
 To Country, God, and Right!

The audience then joined in singing, to the tune of Greenville, the following Hymn, written for the occasion by WILLIAM EVERETT, Esquire, of Boston :

Raise aloft the joyful chorus !
 Finished stands our stately hall;—
 Spreading wide its gate before us,
 Strong and steadfast, fair and tall.
 Strong in goodly stones and timbers,
 Fair in craftsmen's cunning arts,—
 Fairer yet in names of honor,
 Stronger yet in earnest hearts.

Those that in our quiet valley
 Peaceful toiled, nor dreamed of strife,
 Sprang when Freedom bade them "Rally !
 "Arm to save your country's life."
 Siege and battle, camp and fortress
 Found them faithful, bold and wise,
 Till the hour they yielded smiling
 That last, holiest sacrifice.

Now to keep their fame immortal
Here we build a lofty shrine,
Ever from above its portal
Like to stars their names shall shine.
Ne'er shall base or timid counsel
Dare within these walls to come,—
None but spotless souls and loyal
Dare to throng the patriot's home.

Brothers, ye whose martyred spirits
Look from brighter regions down,
Take the gift your service merits
From our dear old native town.
And may he whose arm of glory
Led the land through toil and fight,
Nerve our souls with equal courage
In his war for truth and right.

The services of Dedication closed with the Benediction, which was pronounced by Rev. I. J. Burgess, pastor of the Baptist Church in West Dedham.

APPENDIX.

[A—p. 27.]

(From the Dedham Gazette, April 27, 1861.)

On Monday (April 22, 1861) a very large gathering of ladies took place at the Vestry of the Unitarian Church, for the purpose of preparing clothing and other necessary articles for the troops. A large amount of material had already been obtained, and work was at once commenced; and before twelve o'clock the following morning nearly one hundred flannel shirts had been made up, sixty of which were at once sent to Governor Andrew, accompanied by the following note :

“Dedham, April 23, 1861.

GOVERNOR ANDREW,

Dear Sir,—

The Ladies of Dedham have the satisfaction of sending you sixty flannel shirts, for the troops who are about going South in the defence of our country and the support of her government. We send these garments with our blessing and our prayers, with a tender sympathy and an earnest God-speed to the true-hearted patriots who are ready to sacrifice so much in a noble cause.

May the dark clouds now gathering around us, ere long be dispersed, and our beloved country become again the abode of prosperity and peace.”

More than three hundred dollars worth of material has already been made into garments by the ladies, most of which will be applied to the use of the volunteers from this town, and this noble work of good women has by no means ceased.

[B—p. 32.]

(From the Dedham Gazette, Sept. 6, 1862.)

A SUNDAY WELL SPENT.—Dedham was in no sense behind her sister towns in the good work of furnishing aid and succor to the sick and wounded of our soldiers, in response to the call so suddenly made on Sunday morning last. The usual services in the churches were at once suspended, and men, women and children went to work with a will. Such a day was never before seen in this town. Sixteen large packages of necessary articles were sent on Sunday afternoon, including a large amount of clothing, bandages, lint, jellies, cordials, &c., and more has since been despatched to the same destination.

[C—p. 46.]

One name was not mentioned in the delivery of this address, which must have recurred to the memories of many of my hearers, as it did frequently to mine in preparing it. I refer to the late Commodore Gershom J. Van Brunt, U. S. N., for many years a resident in Dedham. The necessity of adhering to a succinct narrative of the campaigns of our soldiers, in order to bring my address within reasonable limits, restrained me from any extended personal tributes—even to the character of this gallant officer and true-hearted man. He was a native of New Jersey, and entered the service from that State in 1818. In the spring of 1861 he was assigned to the command of the steam frigate Minnesota, was employed in the severe and trying blockade service at Hampton Roads, and also took an important part in the reduction of the Hatteras Forts. He was subsequently entrusted with the supervision and equipment of the expedition to New Orleans, under Gen. Banks, and at the time of his death was acting under the orders of the War Department as Inspector of Transports for the New England District. He received his commission as Commodore in July, 1862. He died at his residence in Dedham, December 17, 1863. Those of us who saw him in the early days of the rebellion, or who knew of his services afterwards, will not soon forget his fervent zeal, lofty patriotism and unswerving faith in the ultimate triumph of the flag of his country.

[D.]

As any account of what was done in Dedham for our soldiers during the war would be imperfect which omitted to mention the faithful and efficient labors of the "Dedham Ladies' Soldiers Aid Society," the following abstracts are made from the Secretary's Report for the year ending Oct. 12, 1865:

This Society was organized Oct. 12, 1861, with suitable officers, and held weekly meetings till the end of armed resistance to the government. The funds received during the four years, amounted to $3040.96, and the expenditures to $2921.42. These moneys were raised by annual assessments, by donations from individuals, by the sale of some articles left from the Dedham table at the Sanitary Fair in Boston, by collections taken in the various religious societies, by concerts, amateur theatrical entertainments, tableaux, lectures, &c.

Of the materials purchased, the ladies made up a large part themselves, and the rest was made at their individual expense. Many contributions of partly worn clothing were received, repaired and forwarded.

Besides contributing bandages, the Society re-rolled many hundreds of them, sent from the Sanitary Commission rooms in Boston, and several times received the thanks of the Executive Committee for the important aid thus rendered.

During the first year the supplies were sent in various directions; to the Sanitary Commission; the Union Aid Society at St. Louis; the N. E. W. A. A. in Boston; to ladies in Philadelphia; to Cavalry Regiment at Readville; to Hospital at Alexandria, Va.; to Forts Warren and Independence; and on Sunday, Aug. 31, 1862, the inhabitants of Dedham united in sending fifteen boxes to Washington.

The second year the supplies, with few exceptions, were sent sometimes to the hospitals in Philadelphia, and sometimes to the N. E. W. A. A. Since Oct. 1862, all contributions have been sent to the latter Association, except a present of mittens, needle cases, &c., to the 9th Regt. U. S. Colored Troops.

The total number of articles forwarded, as nearly as can be now ascertained, is 7967. This does not include bandages, rolls of cotton, linen and flannel, some of which accompanied nearly every contribution, nor wines, jellies, and other delicacies so necessary in a hospital, of which nearly every box contained more or less.

Besides this Society, a similar one existed in South Dedham, of whose labors no account is now accessible.
