Foreword

THE human memory is a very imperfect machine. Often it fails us when we would recall the events and epochs of our lives which have long since been enacted. Some years from the publication of this volume, the mind of each one of us will crave to seek the memories of our high school days, to call back familiar faces which we shall never see again, to live again those care-free days of youth, and to muse over the follies and acts of wisdom which our comrades and ourselves were wont to commit. Then will it be, and only then, that we shall realize the true value of a book of this type. So, with this in mind, cherish this "Newtonian" as if it were a part of your very body, for sometime in the impenetrable future, there lies a day when only this book can serve to bring back memories unwarped by age, and undimmed by years.

History of the Tribe—1923

A STIFLING wind blew over the desert of Time. Small clouds of sand heralded the approach of scattered bands of men and women. Timidly did they hurry along, and with sighs of relief, catch sight of a green oasis. When all were gathered, realizing the need of leaders and of organization, in case of attack from the stronger neighboring tribes, 1923 chose Howard Whitmore head classman, Caroline Cummings his councilor, William North keeper of the papyrus rolls, and Margaret Williams chief of the exchequer, and named their pleasant home "Freshman."

Having gained confidence by their progress under able leadership, the most daring young men did venture to engage in friendly combat with chiefs from the surrounding oases, testing their skill in running, leaping, and hurling. Great was the rejoicing throughout the clan when its representatives were pronounced the victors. Very few tribes ever attained that honor at such an early stage.

It was not long, sad to relate, when the grasses of the Freshman oasis began to turn yellow, the springs to dry up, and the whole land to be parched. Sorrowfully the band left their habitation, and sought another haven.

On reaching their next resting place, "Sophomore," the company advanced in civilization with their leader Whitmore at the head, this time advised by Herbert Hansen, with William North still recording, and with Mary Robinson keeper of the wealth. The great stride forward was easily discernible in the fact that McQuiston, Swartz, and Esty won highest honors in bodily combats with the warlike neighbors.

Glories were not confined to the men alone, for Mary Edmands was fittingly recognized for her readiness of speech in wrangles with other quarrelsome women of the adjacent parts of the desert. Moreover, the Amazons of oasis Sophomore crushingly defeated all other women in such idle pastimes as leaping over stumps, swinging along low-hanging limbs, or scrambling up stately date palms.

The third haven this group did inhabit was called "Junior," and ruled by the same capable leader Whitmore, with Henry Crosby as chief advisor, North as keeper of the papyri, and Mary Robinson ruler over the funds.

This year, however, gloom did spread throughout the whole desert upon the death of the aged prophet and councilor to all the little communities round about. Each, however, felt an added responsibility and so did go about his work the more gravely.

Just before the tribe did abandon their dwellings for others in a more fertile part of the desert, since their wealth was exceeding great, they did invite to share their hospitality their nearest neighbors who had been forced from settlement a little early. It was always noted that of all the clansmen who did roam about the sands, the clan which was the most kind was that one now dwelling in "Junior".

It did seem but like a moment before this band of nomads were again in search of another home. In the course of their wanderings, they were joined by a small number of travelers from oasis "Sub Senior," head of this group, Doane Arnold.

Once having pitched their tents amid the palms of oasis "Senior," the clan did fall to work with exceeding great ardor, for this was to be the most advanced, the most prosperous period of its life.

The mighty men of 1923 fought most gallantly in the football attacks made by whole armies from far-lying groups of oases. Chief among the Senior warriors was Julius Kohler, who, with strengthening words and expressions of bravery, did lead his men to the fray.

Kohler was also head tribesman; Katharine Bingham and Barbara Cooke, both from the newly-added group, were respectively councilor-in-chief and keeper of the wealth; while North still did record on his papyrus rolls.

Aside from its prowess (for need I say that the Seniors not only proved themselves superior in the contest of running and leaping, but also in the competition among the women?) in addition 1923 was found to have developed a highly literary taste and talent. As an outlet for its flow of genius, and also to commemorate its mighty deeds, Herbert Hansen consented to undertake the responsibility of overseeing the inscribing upon the papyrus rolls headed "NEWTONITE." Almost immediately did the project become a success; messengers running many miles to procure rolls for their tribe. Such a wonderful stride of progress in the communication of man with man was hereby made that it has always been a source of amazement that it was not mentioned with that most marvelous invention, printing.

Also new to 1923 was the most sage and able wise man, Mr. Bacon. Miles had he tramped through the heat and sand storms from a distant part of the desert to guide the Seniors in their activities. Perhaps his greatest contribution to that glorious period of the clan's progress was his sponsoring of the drama. He did permit the most noteworthy actors and actresses among the number to play "My Lady Coquetry," a delightful comedy.

One balmy day, however, a strange thing happened. The tribe did assemble, and with hushed expectancy did receive each a papyrus roll called a diploma. With this newly-acquired possession under his arm, did every person say farewell, and depart to wander in his own course over the desert of Time.

No one ever saw that famous tribe of 1923 again, but even now if you should roam over the sands, perchance you should see one who was once a member. If such an honor were to fall upon you, let me urge you most vehemently to grasp your opportunity to bow yourself in humble reverence before one who is in bravery, industry, and worth, unequalled.

VOICE from a distance:—"Number, please."

Dame Education:—"West Newton $3\sqrt{4+\frac{3}{4}}-7$, Ring 11.

"No, Central, that last is 7, ring 11! Yes, please. (Aside) Goodness! That West Newton Exchange is very incompetent. It does not even improve with Time, since he has taken over the management. Hello-hello-hello-hello!! Time? This is Dame Education speaking. How are you?"

Father Time:—"Rather poorly, thank you. My friend, Thoughtlessness, came to call yesterday, and left his rubbers on my piazza. When I came out, running rather fast—for it was a beautiful afternoon—I tripped over them, and broke my leg. But I was obliged to go on, for, as you know, I never stop. Is there something that I can do for you?"

Dame Education:—"Yes, I have been going over my files, and I find that I am lacking a history of the Sub-Senior Class of 1922-23. Will you turn backward, and see if you have any record, please, because there are some things that you alone can tell, Time?"

Father Time:—"Hmm! That Circuit train, which stops behind my house, is late as usual—being always behind Time, you know—and I must see about it. But I will find it for you. Yes, here it is. 'Entered as Freshmen in September of the year 1919-20, and completed this year without any greater disgrace than the innocence with which they succumbed to the practical jokes of the Upper-Classmen.'

"Do you know, Dame Education, I should think that the Upper-Classmen would tire of always cracking the same jokes; even I, Time, can not wear them out. 'During the first three years, under the able leadership of President Howard Whitmore, they distinguished themselves as scholars and athletes, contributing much to the reputation and excellent standing of Newton High School.

"At the commencement of the year 1922-23, having again elected Howard Whitmore as President; with Edwin Dewing, Vice-President; Margaret Williams, Treasurer; and Howard Weeks, Secretary, they proceeded to make a name for themselves. Overcoming many difficulties in Review Math., Latin, College Board Examinations, and the like, they served as an excellent example for all other classes. Although their ranks were considerably depleted at the commencement of the year, owing to the fact that many of the Junior Class of 1921-22 did not enter the Sub-Senior Class, many Varsity players were obtained from their host of athletes. Both boys and girls starred in the gym and on the athletic field; and it is surmised that next year's Senior Class will carry away all honors—but concerning this, of course only Time can tell.' I do wish that they would not always bring my name into it. However, Dame Education, I will say, confidentially, that the present Sub-Seniors have done much, and will do more, to maintain the prestige of the Newton High School, and the history of this class shall go down in my annals. By the way, Education———”

A History of the Class of 1925

(With Apologies to Caesar.)

ALL Newton High is divided into four parts: the meek and verdant Freshmen, the sophisticated (?) Sophomores, the studious (?) Juniors, and the mighty Seniors, who lie next to the open, broad, and boisterous ocean called College Boards. Of all these, the Seniors are the bravest, because they are farthest away from the terrors of the underclassmen.

Pridie Idus Septembris, Anno Domini MCMXXII, the largest (and greenest) army—called the Class of 1925—that had ever invaded the sacred precincts of Newton High hastened through its awesome portals. About ten weeks later, 1925 struggled, by forced marches, through the territory of Exams. In Januarius 1925, in a narrow pass which was called Drill Shed, engaged in a series of skirmishes with its neighbors, 1925 did its very best, although it did not equal the other three parts in the Track Meet.

In Januarius, on a later day, the army held a council, and declared, by the voice of the soldiers; Imperator, Holmes Whitmore, Legatus, Katharine Bonner, Scribe, Barbara Angier, Custodian Pecuniae, Carleton McCullough. The army then retired into summer quarters.

When camp was pitched in the fall of the succeeding year, this illustrious army, 1925, was occupying that part of Newton High which was called Sophomores. It was now able to stare superciliously down upon the inferior part named Freshmen. It no longer feared that august ruler of the republic, Faculty, for it had acquired the sibylline art of "Bluff." But the fickle auxilium, "Bluff," failed it in the mortal battle, "Mid Years," and 1925 was sorely chastened.

A council of the soldiers was again called, and the trusty officers of the Freshman Year, Holmes Whitmore, Katharine Bonner, Barbara Angier, and Carleton McCullough, were again elected. The Leginarius Militarius showed great prowess in athletic combats, especially one Holbrook, who attained precision with the deadly weapon, denoted "the puck." The army not only excelled in hockey and Gymnastics, but it also, to use a good old Roman phrase, "shook a wicked shoulder" at the Sophomore Frolic.

When it had emerged victorious from the last sanguinary battle with the forces of Latin Syntax, and a bewildering maze of angles, arcs and chords, the invincible army of 1925 was judged by the Senate and the Populus Newtonus to have made excellent progress.

The History of Ferdinand the Freshie

(With Apologies to Safed the Sage)

IN the land which is called Newton there is a seat of learning which goeth by the name of THE NEWTON CLASSICAL HIGH SCHOOL. Not many moons ago, there could be perceived wandering about the many and winding corridors of this institution a strange species of animal, which a scientist would probably classify as an irremediablyignorant-hydrocephalouslyafflicted-prognosticatinglatitudinarian, but which in plain language goeth by the appellation of a FRESHMAN. These animate bits of protoplasm are easily distinguished from Seniors, Juniors, or Sophomores by their large, round, blue eyes, the innocent, inquiring expression on their faces, and lastly, but not leastly, their never-ceasing questions.

These Freshies have, as Freshies always do, a very bewildering time for the first few weeks, but finally get it through their craniums that the office is not on the first floor, and settle down to acquire knowledge. Haughty upper-classmen hinder this worthy occupation by their insinuating remarks on the class color. But Seniors forget that they will be Freshmen next year!

The Freshmen show a good class spirit by the number of members out for sports, though they do not overcome the Sophomores every time.

These enterprising youngsters elected as bosses:

Supreme boss	WILLIAM CUMMINGS
Next-to-boss	MARION MARSHALL
Book-keeper	KATHRYN SMITH
Cashier	JOHN HOLT

At the same meeting, they voted to contribute fifty cents apiece for this year to provide for the carrying on of the class.

On the whole, taking it all in all, the whole in one, the class of 1926 hath proven itself worthy to be ranked among the best classes of NEWTON HIGH.

AT the start of the 1922 football season, Newton followers held high hopes for another wonder team and for possibly another championship. Nine members of the 1921 state championship eleven were returning and along with them Coach Dickenson had a wealth of new material to train and pick from. Alas, for our high hopes! Before the close of the season, Old Man Jinx had put out of commission no less than seven varsity players; and instead of a champion, Newton found herself in a tie for third place in the Suburban League with a Waltham defeat tied on for good measure.

The season started well with a 13—0 win over the strong Quincy High contingent and continued so the following week with another victory by the same score, this time with the Dean Academy second team for an opponent. The latter feat cost us dearly, however, as in this contest Bowen and Esty were injured so severely that they were out of uniform for over five weeks. As a result of the blow, on Columbus Day, Newton could do no better than to hold Everett to a scoreless tie in the first league game of the season. The school was vastly disappointed but worse was yet to come. The following Saturday Somerville went home on the long end of a 7—0 score and the team had suffered their first league defeat in three seasons!

Next came a 0—0 tie with Medford whom the team out-played consistently during the whole game but good naturedly refused to score upon. To show what they could do, the following week, by a 17—0 score, they white-washed Rindge Tech who later finished in a top place tie for league honors. Unable to keep up the good work however, our erratic varsity, by fumbling and all-round poor playing, allowed a much inferior Cambridge Latin team to hand out a 13—3 drubbing five days later. About this time, just to flavor matters, several more casualties took place in the squad.

NEWTON HIGH SCHOOL

On November 18th, Malden came to Newton for the first "big" game and went home to the tune of 13—7 a very crest-fallen aggregation. Newton played superbly in this contest which was the high-water mark of the year. It was her one really brilliant battle and showed to the sport world the "might-have-been." The next Saturday Waltham won 25—7 and Garden City fans finally gave up the ghost. A spiritless 0—0 tie with Brookline on Thanksgiving morning closed the season.

Although the work of the team as a whole was unsatisfactory, the individual performances of many of the players were excellent and would be well worth a detailed review if space permitted. Several of these players are returning next year and they should prove a nucleus for a team which may avenge the defeats of this past season. We wish all the luck in the world to them, to Coach Dickenson, and to Captain-elect, Tudor Bowen.

TEN games won; four losses recorded. Not a particularly brilliant record when compared with those of some Newton teams of recent years; and yet if one stops to consider that the beginning of the season only two real veterans reported to Dr. Martin, that Shipp, the team's captain-elect and star forward did not return to school at all this year, and that a continued lack of ice made any kind of early season practice impossible, one begins to realize that the team's record as a whole is pretty fair after all.

The first two games resulted in a 4-0 win over Boston Latin School, a 1-1 tie with Somerville and an 8-0 massacre at the expense of Rindge Tech. In the play-off with Somerville later in the season Newton romped home on the long end of a 7-1 score. Both of the latter encounters were league games. On January 17th, Stoneham High, universally recognized as one of the strongest teams in the state, came to Newton quite confident of a victory but was decisively beaten, 8-2 in one of the fastest games ever played at Bullough's Pond. The following Saturday the top-notch game of the season was reached when the local boys toppled the mighty Andover, 3-0, in a real hockey game. The team performed splendidly in this contest and have every reason to be justly proud of their victory.

The first set-back came the next week at the hands of Brookline. In spite of the fact that three Newton regulars were laid up, a long hard fight took place before the Blue and White finally nosed out a 3-2 win. Saturday of the same unlucky week Exeter, New England prep. school champions, beat the Garden City aggregation 3-1. Two rather spiritless ties with Cambridge Latin and St. Marks' school followed these defeats but then the team, recovering their speed, whipped English High soundly 6-1 on February 2.

NEWTON HIGH SCHOOL

The poorest work of the season was shown against Arlington, the next opponent, and this team won a much-deserved victory 3—0. To make up for this bad showing Newton took the following two games in handy fashion, beating Milton Academy and Deerfield High 3—1 and 6—1 respectively.

The last important game was played at Bullough's Pond with Melrose, later league leader and state champion, as the foe. Although the visitors won 4—0, several members of their team admitted that they never played a harder, faster brand of hockey than they did in this contest. The season closed with two rather easy wins over Stone School and Malden High.

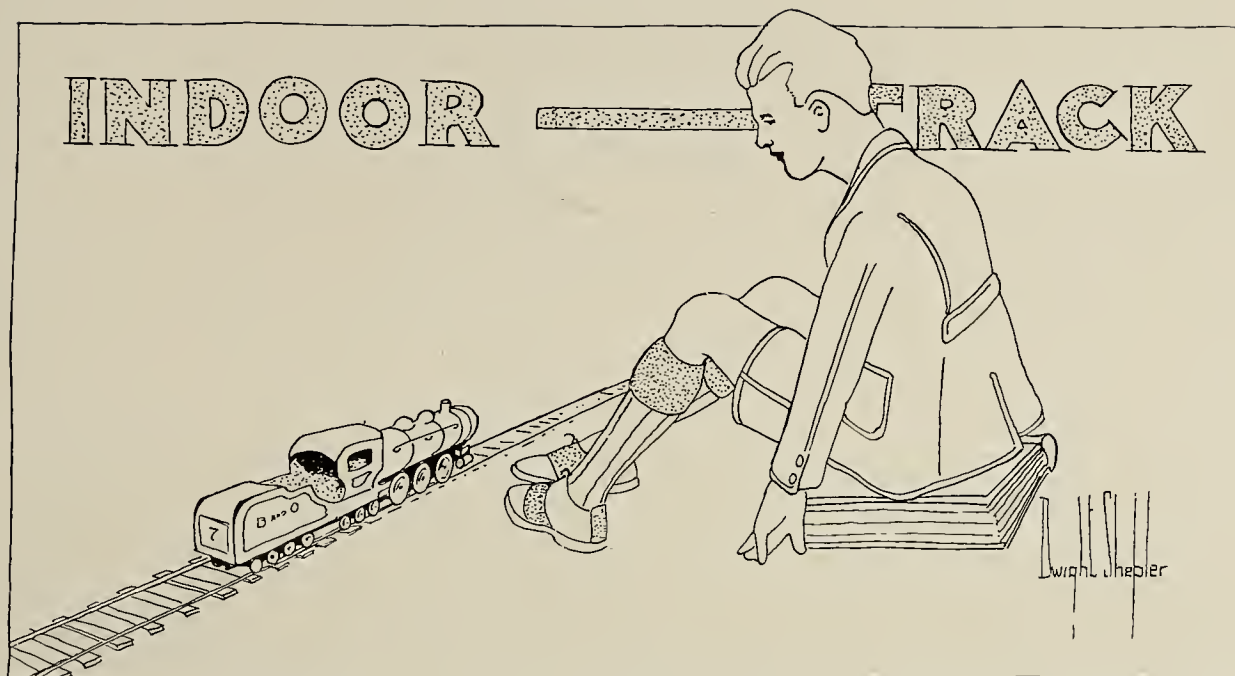

As only one member of the team will be lost by graduation and as the team was good enough to finish well up in the first division this year, there would seem to be ample reason to hope for a pennant winner next year.

THE indoor track season, one of the most brilliant in interscholastic history, resulted in an entire winter's battle between Newton and Medford for top honors. Unfortunately, owing to the inability of officials to agree, the supremacy was never satisfactorily established. The recognized winner of the state meet was Medford by less than one-half of a point over Newton, but Newton's claim to a first place in the broad jump for Kohler, which would give her the meet, has never been officially discredited. However, as the two teams are recognized by all as the finest interscholastic aggregations of the state, the result is creditable to Newton.

The season opened with the inter-class and Alumni meets, the former being won by the class of 1923 for the fourth successive time, the latter by the students for the first time in several years. Both meets proved ample rewards for the coaches' time and efforts and resulted in the breaking of several school records.

A close defeat by Brookline followed but this was wiped out two weeks later by an overwhelming beating administered to the Blue and White in the "barn." An honorable defeat in a practice meet with the Huntington "prep-schoolers" came next to be followed by Medford's well-earned victory in the dual meet. A second place in the Greater Boston Interscholastics and the excellent work in the state meet finished a very successful season.

The work of the team in general was splendid, but the development of Bauckman and Walter, both new men, was, in particular, remarkable. Jones, and Mercer, who was elected captain for the 1924 season, were other men of great promise whose chances were unfortunately brought to an abrupt end; the former's by the age limit, the latter's by illness. Veterans like Captain Dicks, Kohler, McQuiston, Ryall, Swartz, and Weeks need no commendation since the whole school knows and appreciates their worth.

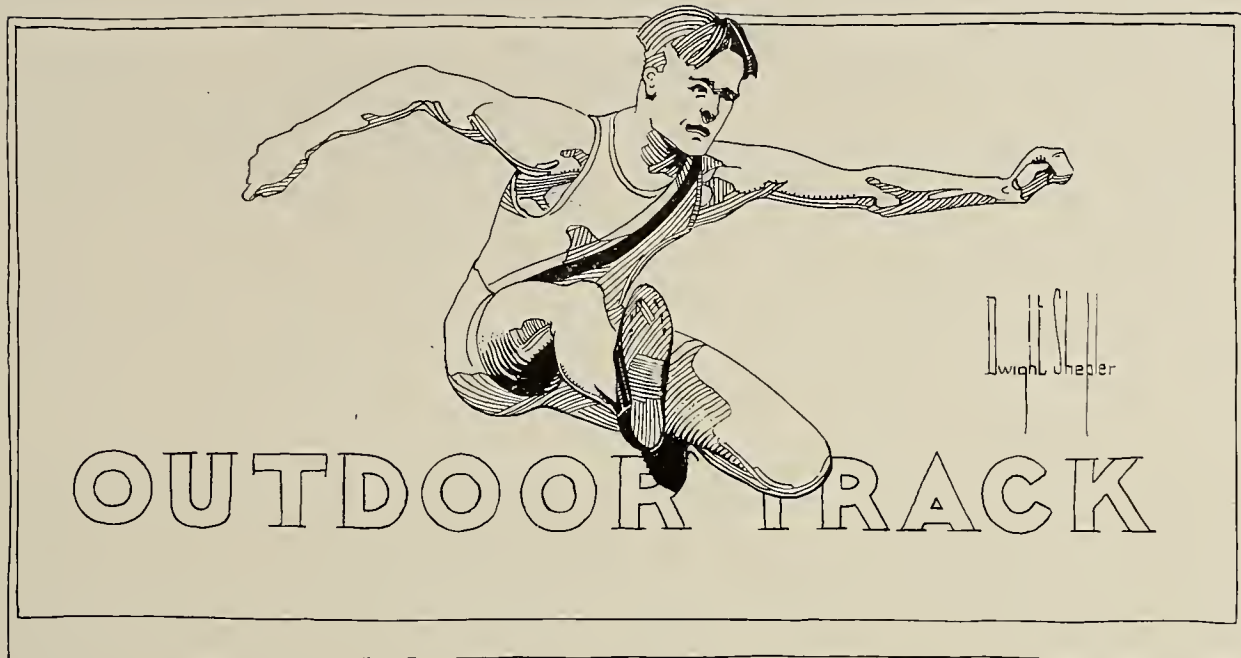

As only four of the letter men are graduating this year, the prospects for the next season are excellent.

PROSPECTS of a good season for the outdoor track team are quite evident at the time this goes to press, and there is every reason to believe that the school may expect a repetition of last year's state meet victory. Coach Roberts has again taken the reins and, with the capable assistance of Captain Weeks, should further develop the stars of his indoor season.

Dual meets have been arranged with the M. I. T. second team; Boston Commerce, Rindge Technical, B. U. Freshmen, Tufts Freshmen, Lynn Classical, and Lynn English, besides entrances in the Boston College Interscholastics, the Worcester Interscholastics, and the state meet. One of these meets, that with the M. I. T. men, has already been run and, although the Newton boys lost, they did well enough against the collegians to earn the commendation of many of the leading school-boy track critics.

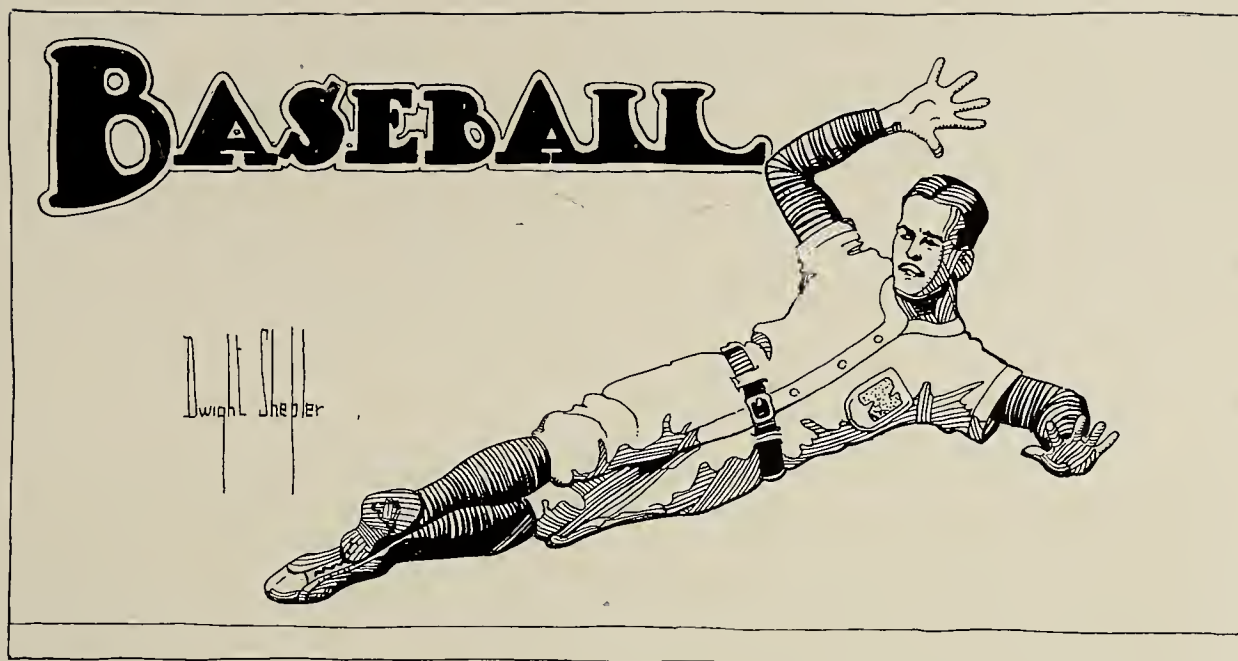

This new branch of sport is undoubtedly holding its own with the older types and deserves the hearty support and cö-operation of the school at all times.

MAKING any sort of a prediction in an early season prospectus for the baseball team is like picking the next President of the United States. It cannot be done and should not be attempted.

The team, thus far, has had an in and out season, having won four games and lost three, the last of them to Malden on May 16th. With all due respect to the Maldenites, the defeat at their hands was due more to incompetent officiating than to any superiority on their part. Their pitcher was constantly in trouble and the wearers of the Orange and Black found no trouble in hitting him all over the lot.

Captain Whitmore has been twirling in his usual masterful fashion but thus far no capable alternate has been uncovered to relieve him. McMullin is barred from further participation by the age limit, while Sullivan, although a fine moundsman, lacks the experience which has proved so valuable to his leader.

By far the most promising feature of the work thus far has been the excellence of the younger candidates from the Freshman and Sophomore classes. Allan Shaw, Gilligan, Schlieparker, and several others have been showing a brand of baseball which bodes ill for the Suburban League contenders of future years.

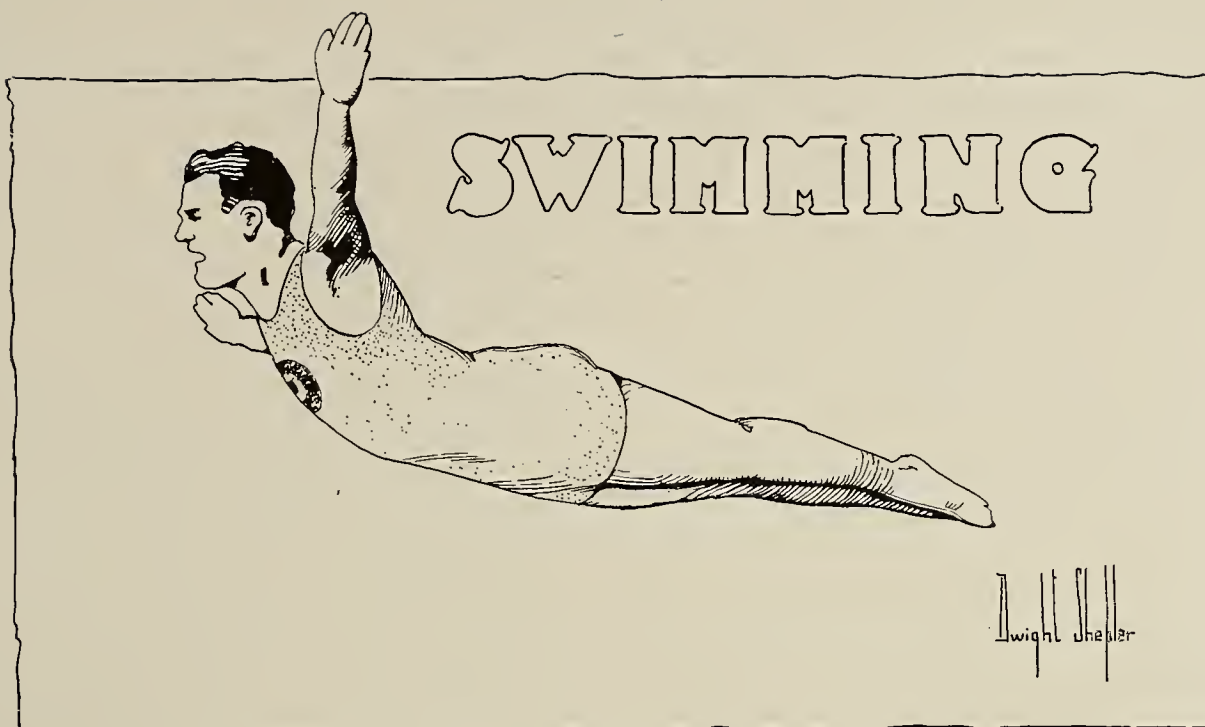

Taking the scarcity of veterans into consideration, the work of the team has been as well as may be expected. Since practically the entire squad will return next year, one feels justified in looking forward to a championship next season if not this one.

Second Place in George R. Meehan Interscholastics: 13 points.

FOR a first endeavor in a particular branch of sport, Newton's work in the swimming line has been remarkable. Although a glance at the record would seem to indicate that, as the team's number of actual defeats was quite a bit larger than its number of wins, the season had been rather unsuccessful, a closer scrutiny will change the reader's opinion. The one point losses to Rindge and Huntington were so close as to almost be counted ties and the Malden beating was rendered null by the wonderful return meet later in the year. It is true that the team was beaten by Brookline in both the dual meet and the Interscholastics, but then Brookline is state champion and—a team can't have everything its first year. The very fact that Newton got second place in the Interscholastics is significant of her remarkable ability.

The team's success was due for the most part to the efforts of Coach Carling and that stellar athlete, Capt. Todd Wallace. Too much credit cannot be given Wallace. He was a winner in every event in which he entered and, at some time during the season, he entered every event except the diving contest. Mr. Carling deserves great praise for developing the inexperienced material he had into the excellent team that he turned out.

Marshall and Alexander, 200 yard men; Kimball, dash; Hammond, a plunger; and Patterson and Morrissey, divers, also did exceptional work. The relay team was well up to standard and secured second place in the state meet.

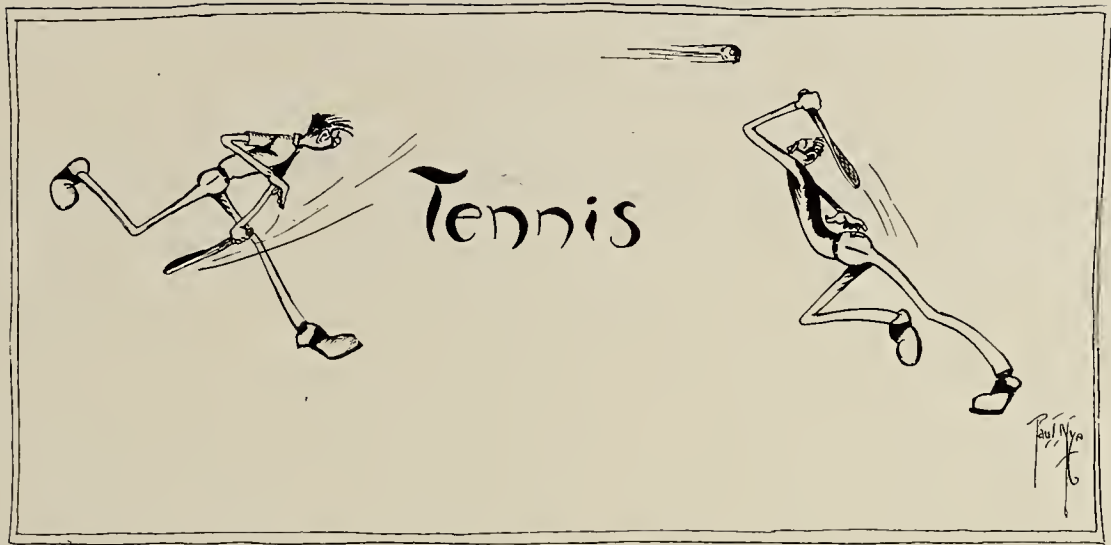

Although swimming is as yet a minor sport, the Athletic Committee voted major sport letters to Capt. Wallace and Alexander for placing it in the Interscholastic Meet finals. Stanley Kimball, a prominent and capable member of this year's team, was elected captain for the 1924 season.

THE Newton tennis team for 1923, which was picked after the fall tournament, consists of Capt. Hill, Johnson, Turner, Wales, Martin, Hartzell, and Gotshall as alternate. As all of the team are experienced players, and as they are under the capable leadership of Hill, who is universally recognized as one of the premier school-boy tennis players of the country, they should do some work this year of which Newton may well be proud.

A trip to Rhode Island and Connecticut during the spring vacation resulted in two Newton victories and gave the fellows some excellent practice for the coming matches. The schedule is as follows:

April 20	Loomis at Winsor
April 21	Providence at Providence
May 2	Andover at Andover
May 3	Rivers at Newton
May 8	St. John's at Danvers
May 9	Harvard 2nd at Cambridge

THE golf team for this year, composed of Captain Stimpson, Manager Willing, Arnold, Donnelly, Lowell, and Holden, has been doing some excellent work so far and should establish an enviable record before the season is over. As all of the team were also members of last year's aggregation, more is expected of them than usual.

Meets have been or are being arranged with Brookline, Dorchester, Watertown, Exeter, and Fessenden. Undoubtedly several more will be added to the schedule before the season is over.

Three of the matches have already been played and, of these, that with Exeter, which Newton lost 4-1, was perhaps the most important in spite of the defeat. The Newton boys played some excellent golf and Arnold's victory over our alumnus, "Prec" Drowne, was especially noteworthy.

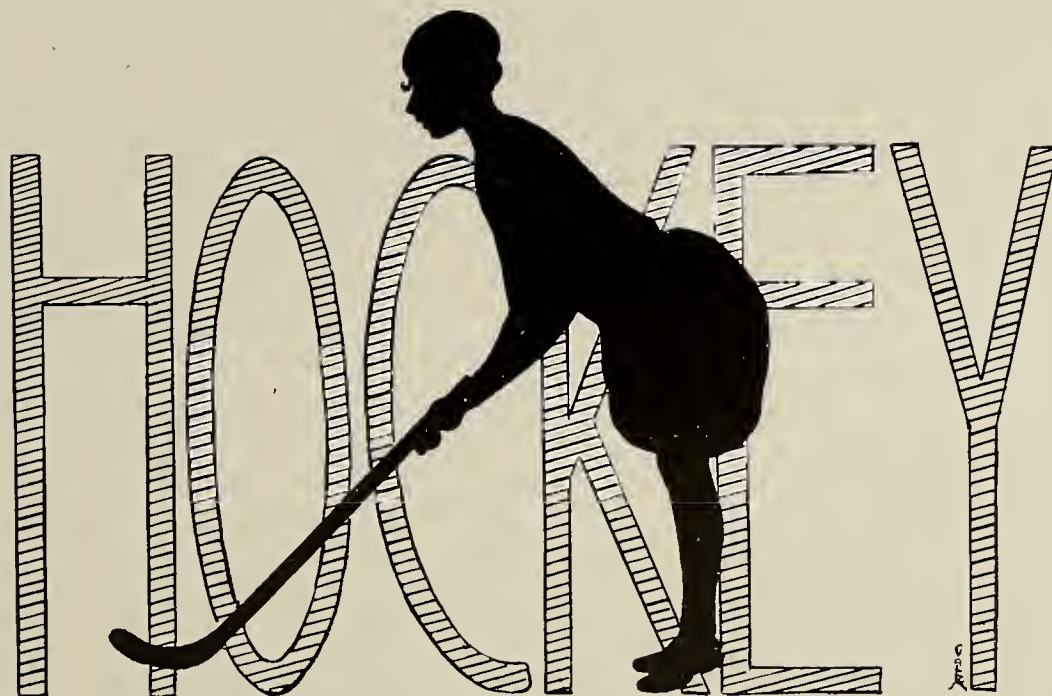

All of the team have been doing excellently, as has been said above, but Capt. Stimpson and Donnelly have been showing exceptional golf.

ONE hundred and fifty girls reported to Cabot Field on Wednesday, September 28th. This was the largest showing which we have had for many years, and great enthusiasm was evident, especially among the candidates of the two lower classes. We are glad to say that this large attendance was maintained throughout the season.

The class teams were soon chosen and two sets of class games were played. The Seniors defeated the Juniors; while the Sophomores won from the Freshmen. In the final game, the Seniors played the Sophomores and won by a narrow margin.

Miss Flanders, our coach, chose the following team after some deliberation:

Doris Jerauld,	C.	Veda Leonard,	L. H. B.
Marion Maxim,	R. I.	Margaret Williams,	R. W.
Katharine Collins,	L. I.	Muriel McClelland,	L. W.
Muriel Howard,	R. H. B.	Bertha Adams,	R. F. B.
Marjorie Dow,	C. H. B.	Katharine Rand,	L. F. B.
	Sylvia Dow,	G.

Ruth Pearson also received her "N" for playing in three out of the five games.

The first game of the season was with Milton Academy at Milton, where the team was beaten, 7-0. After a week of practicing, the team went to Lasell and there won by the score of 4-3. Our team played well and only in the last few moments of play was its opponent able to score.

NEWTON HIGH SCHOOL

The following Saturday the team played Winsor at Cabot Field and were again defeated by the score, 8-2. The next game was with Winchester. After a hard struggle, the game ended in Newton's favor. The score was 1-0.

The final game of the season with Alunnae proved an interesting as well as humorous affair. Although the muddy field somewhat hindered the progress of the players, it was a close game in which the Alunnae were beaten.

At the close of the season, Mr. Rand entertained the team at a luncheon, at which each player was presented with a small circular pin. The team also went to the "Green Bough" Tea Room for a final gathering. Here the "N's" were given to each member of the team and Miss Flanders was presented with a gold pencil by the team in appreciation of all which she had done.

We are confident that next year will be a banner year for the team under the leadership of Muriel McClelland, the new Captain.

BASKETBALL started out with a remarkable showing from every class. So much enthusiasm was shown that all the players could not be taken care of at the same time. Therefore, the time was divided evenly between the two upper and two lower classes.

After Christmas, a squad of twenty-five members were selected, out of which the varsity team was chosen as follows:

Doris Cole	Sylvia Dow	Louise Harris
Helen Clark	Shirley Eddy	Eleanor Sheridan
Marjorie Dow	Nina Harrington	Barbara Ziegler

This year the basketball court was shortened considerably, thereby limiting the number of players to only six, instead of the usual nine. This was a difficult change to observe and handicapped the players in more than one way. However, in spite of the fact that we lost by close scores to Wellesley, Lasell, and Winsor, we came off victorious in our game with the Alumni and won a 60-5 triumph over Belmont.

A round-robin series of class games was played in which the Seniors easily came out on top. Fine enthusiasm and spirit was shown by each class and the prospect is bright for next year with Eleanor Sheridan as captain, to whom we wish the best of luck.

Captain and Manager, MARION EATON

THE outlook for the girls' tennis team seems bright with a fighting force including the following players:

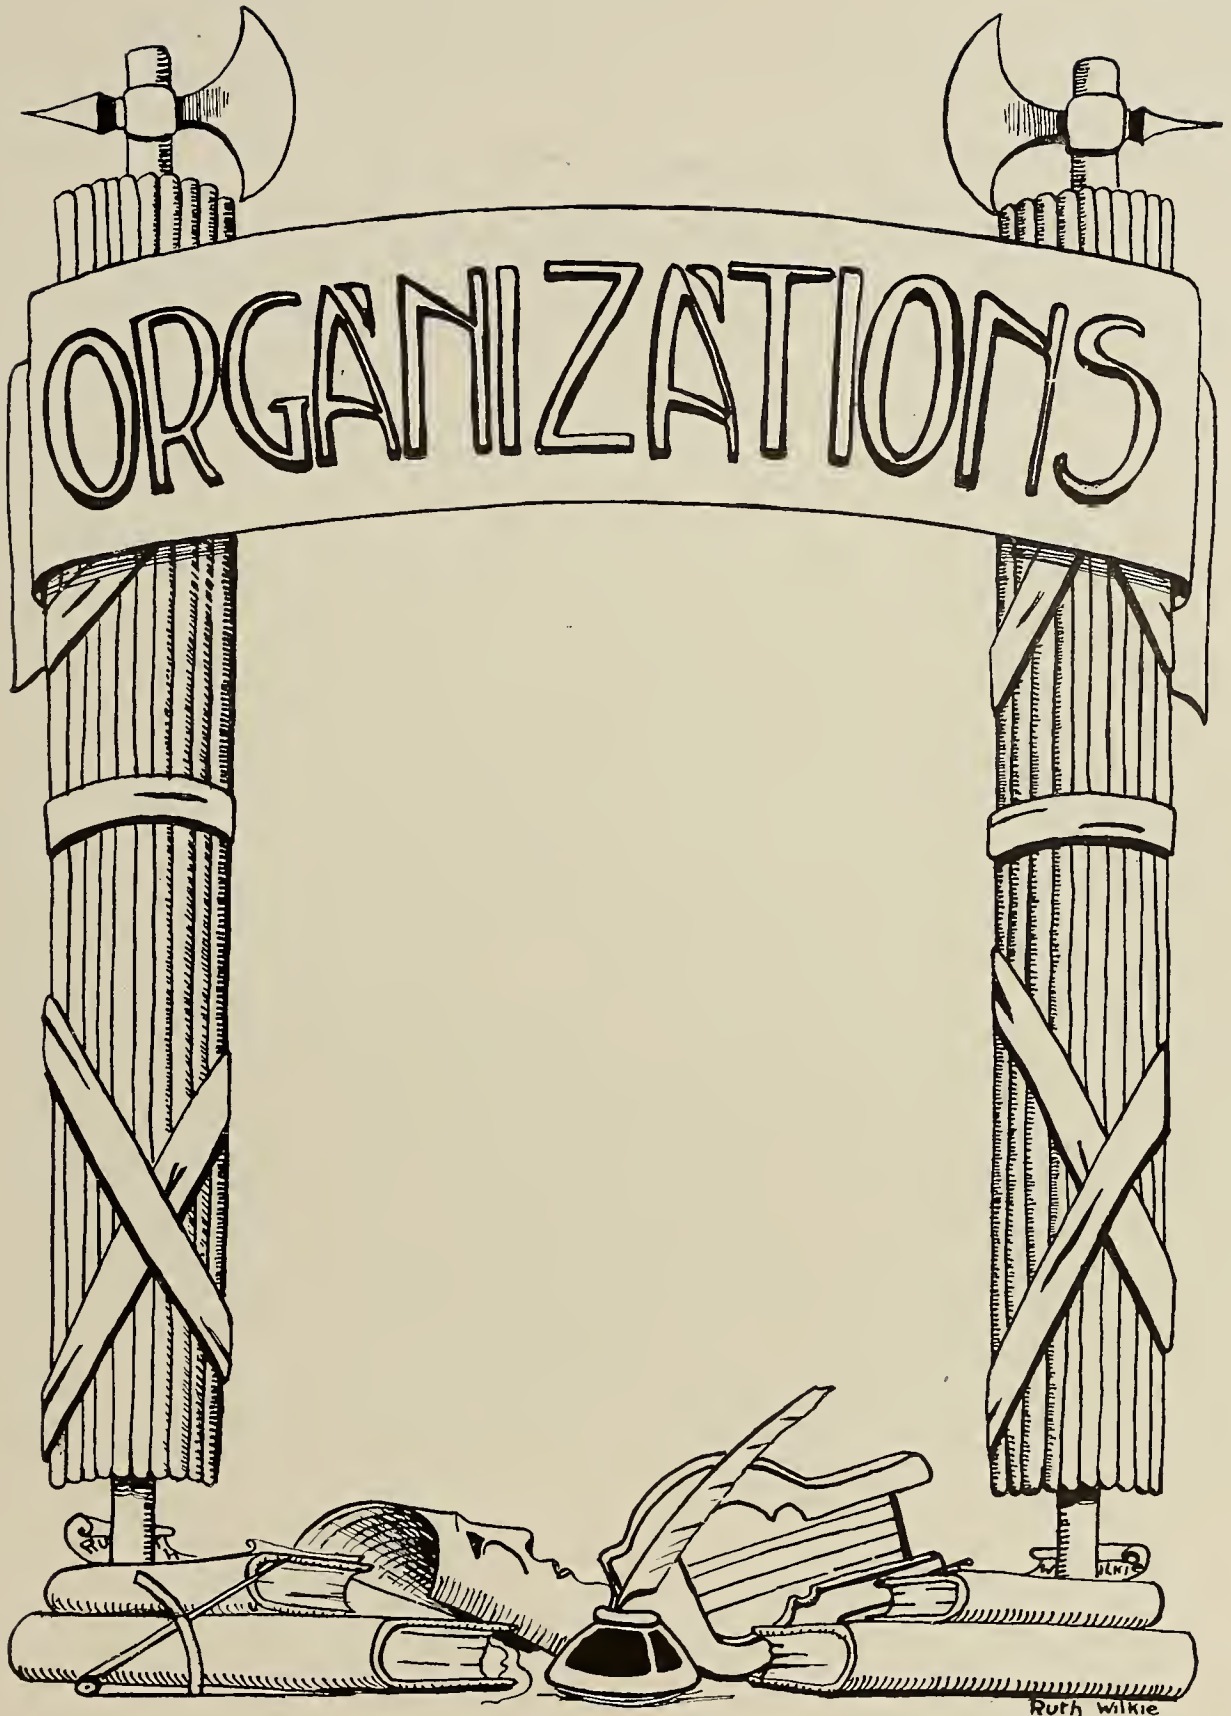

Sylvia Dow
Marion Eaton

Kathleen Huntress
Muriel McClelland

The following schedule has been arranged:

May 10 Brookline at Newton
May 15 Winchester at Newton
May 17 Lasell at Lasell
May 22 Wellesley at Newton
May 24 Melrose at Newton
May 31 Melrose at Melrose

The substitutes will be Katharine Bingham and Dorothy Fernald and their skill combined with that of the regular members of the team should insure a successful season this year.

THE year 1923 saw the passing of two organizations which up to this time have held a most important place in the school, the Boys' and Girls' Debating Clubs. In their stead, a new and more interesting organization, "The Forum", consisting of fifty senior boys and girls, was formed early in the year.

The Forum has had for its purpose, the training of its members in the much-sought art of "thinking on one's feet", and in speaking with ease. To attain this end, many varied programs have been offered by the committees in charge of the different meetings. Extemporaneous speeches, after-dinner speeches, story-telling, open discussions, and formal debates, are some of the means by which the Forum members have attained poise, confidence, and eloquence.

The weekly meetings have been interesting, instructive, and oftentimes amusing, to those fortunate enough to be members. Therefore, in order that the whole school might receive the benefits of the instruction showered on the club, the Forum has twice entertained the upperclassmen, once at a Christmas Assembly, and again at a Wednesday morning gathering.

Surely, this first year of the Forum has been a splendid start toward an organization which will soon be one of the most active and useful in the school, for the possibilities of a club of this kind are unlimited. A great part of the success of the year is due to the efforts of the officers, the executive committee and to Mr. Marson, faculty advisor.

It is for the Class of 1924 to demonstrate whether the Forum is to be a worth-while and permanent organization.

The Newtonite

THIS year, Newton departed from its glorious old traditions, and took a long leap forward to the publishing of a weekly newspaper. Although the Senior Class voted "Oriole" as the name of the paper, this was not approved by the authorities and the name "Newtonite" was chosen. There have been twenty-four regular numbers and a Literary Supplement, all of which were popular and well-supported. Our exchanges have been widely sought, and other schools were generous in their praises.

The "Newtonite" is strictly a newspaper, and full accounts of all games, club meetings, and entertainments, live editorials and letters from parents and friends have all helped to make it such.

Although the "Review" has departed, a paper in every respect worthy of taking its place has been started. How much the name of "Mr. Thurber" means to every member of the first staff will, I'm afraid never be known entirely, for it is far beyond our poor power to express it, or to properly extend our gratitude and appreciation of his tireless efforts.

THE recently-formed Spanish Club is a brand-new organization in the school, but in spite of its youth, it is very popular and instructive. Meetings were held regularly, at which an interesting program was usually given under the direction of the Vice-President. These were led by various club members, and besides being very amusing, gave us a larger vocabulary and a revived interest in things Spanish. Miss Lewis, head of the Spanish Department, has kept the Club on a well-running basis through her constant interest and appreciation, and all of us "would-be-Spaniards" are very grateful to her. The Treasurer did not have much business, but what she did have was faithfully attended to.

We are leaving the Club well started and we hope that next year will be as successful as this has been.

THE Mathematics Club, or Alpha Gamma Tau, is a newly-formed, but by no means a slow or backward organization. By means of its frequent and interesting meetings a lively interest in the problems of Algebra and Geometry has been stimulated. An occasional speaker and a Mathematical Track Meet all served to arouse our lagging minds. A special feature of the Club has been the Student Aid Committee, members of which volunteered to help Freshmen and Sophomores in their perplexing examples and theorems. Since a mark of B or A is necessary for membership in the Club, all members were capable of giving this aid.

Of course, a play was given: "The Trial of 'A' versus 'B'". The leading parts were taken by Herbert Hunter, Harland Sisk, Loomis Patrick, and Herbert Hansen. These four, with Judge, Jury, and Court Officers ably entertained the School in two performances.

Much of the success of Alpha Gamma Tau is due to Miss South and Mr. Mergendahl, and with their help and guidance, we hope that next year may surpass this, and so on, for years to come.

AT last the Student Council has come into its own. At the beginning of the year we found it a tottering, half-sure body, supposedly representative of the different classes. Instead of this means of picking the body, home room elections were instituted by which three Seniors were chosen from each room, three Sub-Seniors, two Juniors, one Sophomore, and one Freshman. These members are directly responsible to the other members of their room. In this way, a much more efficient body has been built up. Civics, social, program, and lunchroom committees were organized and functioned actively, much to the benefit of the whole school. In addition to these committees, there has been formed a gigantic lunchroomsquad which co-öperates with the original committee. It is composed of twenty-four boys and twenty-four girls, twelve for each period, and has done wonderful work in improving the condition of the school property.

Early in the year, the Council ran a very successful Harvest Carnival in the "barn", the work of entertaining being continued in the regular Wednesday morning assemblies.

Of course, the Student Council has been criticized fairly and unfairly, but these criticisms often have proved helpful in overcoming some obstacle. Such important matters as standardizing the class pins, selling cheap little identifying buttons, and cleaning up the lunchroom and grounds originated in the regular bi-weekly meetings.

Much of the success of the Council has been due to Mr. Bacon, and we all join in heartily thanking him for his help and co-öperation.

“WHERE there is a will there’s a way”. So said some ancient philosopher who knew whereof he spoke. This year the English Club “willed” that it should do something worth while and live up to its reputation as an honor society. As in every undertaking, the next step was to set an objective toward which to work, and the English Club began by fixing a lofty and difficult goal. It ran thus: Resolved: that the English Club raise $500 for our school library, before the end of the year. Surely, this meant business.

Next came the “way”. In the middle of February, the Harvard Instrumental Clubs were engaged and many students and parents enjoyed a concert and dance which netted $200 as a beginning. No sooner was the money counted than the news was announced that two plays were to be put on in April, one by the students, and the other by the faculty. Nothing slow or inactive about the English Club this time. To make a long story short, the hall was filled as it was never filled before, even by Senior Play audiences, and many were turned away. Both plays were a tremendous success, and never will we forget Miss White’s stoic courage while being tortured by Mr. Mason’s merciless pincers, or the latter’s pitiful dying groans caused by the good aim of Miss Howard’s revolver. The financial returns from the plays exceeded $500, a sum which carried the club over the top by a wide margin.

At Christmas time the Club presented a special program for the lower classes which was much enjoyed, and united with the Forum in a Christmas Assembly for the two upper classes.

On account of these “big things” which the Club has accomplished, the monthly programs have not been as regular as usual. However, Mr. Bacon made one meeting interesting by recounting his experiences on the Allegash canoe trip. At another meeting, Rev. J. Edgar Park gave a fine talk on poetry.

The English Club has certainly been taking forward steps this year, and to no one is the credit due more than to Miss Richardson, who has given her valuable advice and ready assistance to every project.

NOT to be outdone by their elder brothers and sisters, fifty-odd Freshmen and Sophomores formed early in the year a new honor society of which only those pupils receiving A's or high B's in English might be members. This organization has practically the same standards and purposes as the organization, the English Club. At the first meeting of the Alpha Beta, officers were chosen and also various committees to conduct future meetings.

The officers and members showed great enthusiasm for the new society, and consequently several interesting programs were arranged for the meetings, at which the talent, musical and literary, of the members was shown to good advantage. The club enjoyed a talk by Mr. Bacon at another meeting.

Heretofore there has been no organization conducted solely for the lower classes, and it is felt that the Alpha Beta has done much to promote school spirit and co-öperation among the Freshmen and Sophomores. Therefore, great things will be expected of the present members when they outgrow the Alpha Beta and join their big sister the English Club.

A GREAT many old customs were given up this year, among others being the writing of the Senior Play. Instead of one written by a member of the Class, the Play Committee went outside and took a play written by Mr. Bacon. It was successfully presented in two performances at the Newton Centre Woman's Club. Both were well-attended and we felt very proud to be the first producers of such a charming and well-written piece.

The Orchestra

AS in former years, Mr. Walton called out candidates for the school orchestra in the middle of October. A large number responded, and the prospects for the year seemed very bright.

The first time that the school discovered the talent in the orchestra was in the early winter when the entire group played at a Wednesday morning assembly. The selections were well executed and showed a great deal of hard work.

The organization has practiced faithfully almost every Thursday afternoon under the direction of Mr. Walton, and the members have derived great benefit from the process. The school itself also shared in the benefits when the orchestra performed at the faculty and student plays given by the English Club.

Several members of the Freshman and Sophomore classes were among the musicians this year, a condition which promises well for the future. With such a company of musicians, it seems as if next year the orchestra would favor the school as well as themselves by playing more frequently at school functions.

Sir Roger at the Silent Drama

[This composition was awarded first prize in the Sir Roger de Coverley essay contest, conducted for senior classes studying Addison's essays].

Mica, mica, parva stella
Mira quaenam sis tam bella.

Twinkle, twinkle, little star
How I wonder what you are. A. PUNNE

MY friend, Sir Roger de Coverley, and I who have until recently been imprisoned in Paradise and only freed by the mortal discovery of the Ouija board, the other evening decided to cast aside our crowns of glory and descend from our ethereal residences in order to inspect our earth again. As Sir Roger had not been at a play these two hundred years, he begged that we make a play-house the object of our visit.

"The last play which I saw," said he, "was the 'Distressed Mother', an excellent school of English tragedy." My friend then asked me if there would be no danger in coming home late, calling to my mind that we were only shades and therefore likely not to be seen by careless coachmen in the dark and made to suffer immeasurable pain as we could not die, being already dead. Thinking this not a bad thought, I proposed to my friend that we apply for re-incarnation permits. This done, the knight said, "If we can persuade Captain Sentry to make one with us to-morrow night, and if you will call for me at four o'clock, we shall descend early to be at the house before it is full."

However, my good friend, the Captain, failed to meet me at the appointed hour and we needed to gain time. Our good friend, Sir Roger, came to our succor, remembering that newly arrived citizens had said that America held a place in the sun. So we reasoned that, being nearer to the sun than to the earth, we should make America our point of visit. But, on descending, we found that we had a difference of opinion as to which town to inspect. Again, we finally took our friend's advice and went to Boston from which place come our most austere fellow-spirits. "In doing this," added the knight, "we shall see the top of the universe as well as the play, as its inhabitants refer to the rest of the world as 'down east', 'down in Maine', and 'down in New York'."

As we neared the United States and Boston, we approached the most heavily lighted district. Coaches, without any apparent motive power, were rambling noiselessly at a breakneck speed. Suddenly we came to the end of the street, turned the corner, and were swept forward by the impact of the jostling.

THE 1923 NEWTONIAN

crowd. Being conscious of an extra strong light above me, I looked up as did my good friend, Sir Roger and the soldier, and saw emblazoned upon a board, with candles enclosed in different colored jars, the phrases "Rudolph Valentino" and "Blood and Sand".

Guiding Sir Roger and the captain whithersoever the crowd went, I soon found myself with my friends in a cavernous room with a stage of huge dimensions in front and boxes on either side of it. We seated ourselves in the pit and listened to the rendering of the "Sonata in S minor" from the "Carmen's Reunion" by the orchestra. Suddenly, the lights faded and went out; the curtain rose, and before us stood a spectral white sheet. Immediately, writing appeared on the sheet and then the unmistakable forms of men, animals, and scenery. I was very much attentive to my friend's remarks as I had reasoned that they would be the most natural and unprejudiced criticisms of the drama.

When Sir Roger saw Carmen's marriage to Gallardo, he whispered in my ear that he was of the opinion that the union was the best thing that could happen to Juan in his present state of popularity, adding that in his opinion, such would be the influence which would keep him from bad society. However, when he saw that Juan was notwithstandingly led astray by another woman, he remarked that Juan's love for Carmen was not true love, but a mere infatuation caused by her charms.

When ever bull-fight scenes were shown, my friend displayed great interest in their details. Once, as the audience applauded the killing of the bull, he whispered that he was of the opinion that the real hero was the man who held the bull's tail outside the picture while Gallardo sent the beast to the "happy-hunting-grounds".

After the death of Juan, and the end of the drama, we departed into the bustling streets amid the crowd and the blinding lights. After we had walked a few paces, the silence of the group was broken by Sir Roger, whom, I could see was in deep thought.

"A poorer example for the young audience," said the baronet, "I couldn't conceive. The low ideals portrayed were appalling and would never have been allowed in our day. However, the people may have changed so with the times, that they have become impenetrable and are not affected by the dramas which they see. But knowing human nature as I do, I hold the opinion that they have degraded until they enjoy such a spectacle. And then," he concluded, "I'm probably not striking the foundation for their apparent enjoyment of such."

On saying this, my friend again lapsed into silence which neither the captain nor I interrupted. Then applying the saying, "The infinite is as near as you wish it", we stepped into our golden streets and bidding each farewell to the other, we went to our alabaster homes, thoroughly disgusted with the degeneracy of the times as we had seen it portrayed by the modern silent drama.

Scratches from India

[This essay was awarded first prize in the Senior essay contest.]

I WONDER if it is a sign of old age to enjoy remembering. If so, my hair should be white and my teeth infirm, for I love to remember. I love to surround myself with memories, then choose one, like a thread, and follow it through the tangle. My threads lead through mystic, glorious, sad old India, but they all start in a great, cool, one-storied bungalow at Ahmednagar.

First memory—the bungalow. I remember its big lowness, its tiled roof, its long, fern-covered verandahs, and its white mud walls. Dark, silent-footed servants go silently about. A lady picks flowers in the garden in front. The garden is full of ferns and potted plants, and surrounded by a blooming cactus hedge. All around, is a large compound, with tropical trees here and there, and a clump of bushes in one corner. There are wide, pitiful fields of grass—grass that is never green—and there is a deep old well with mystery in its depths. Then, back of the bungalow, there are rows of low mud buildings which are the servants' quarters. Little brown children chase chickens in and out of the doors. Indian mothers sing their nasal songs as they patiently grind their grain. Behind these houses, are the buildings of the boys' school. Red-brick, civilized, modern buildings and civilized, modern, live, young minds training in them. Bungalow, garden, trees, grass-fields, servants' houses and school, make, together, a little world of their own, and outside, beyond their walls is the bustling, oriental city. That for me was always forbidden ground and so, of course, held a strange charm.

All this is my home memory and was as natural then as a house in a Boston suburb is now.

My threads are becoming tangled, but as the second memory, I like to picture two little American children sitting on the back verandah steps of that bungalow, and chewing sugar cane. As they chew, they watch the intricate process of milking a buffalo, a task repeated every morning and evening. From those verandah steps—but oh what historical steps they were! There we received those wonderful boxes from home, containing everything from corn flakes to shoes. There, also, came Indian mothers with their sick babies, seeking help from the missionary lady. There came the newsboy with all the latest news. There we heard that war was declared.

But, to go back, I will follow a Saturday memory thread. How vividly I can see a school-teacher-missionary, off for a Saturday picnic with his wee small daughter. He rides his bicycle and she sits on a tiny seat on the handlebars. They start out of the compound and into the thronging city. Little boys follow the "sahib" calling, "Backsheesh, backsheesh, backsheesh"! Vendors of fruit and sweetmeats try to attract his attention. He passes children, driving home their cattle. And how many byways of pictures that city leads into! But the man pedals steadily on and soon they pass out from the city walls. There is a river to ford and deep sands to pass through, and then they reach the quiet country on the other side. They search for a shady spot to picnic, and finding nothing better, seat themselves in the shade of a crude pile of stones. Some Hindu farmer has erected that pile, and painted the stones red, making a shrine. Around it can be seen the signs of offerings.

Father and daughter have picnicked now and are tramping through the waving fields of sorghum and rye, tramping toward the sunset. There is a rare beauty in the Indian sunset.

Now they are riding home in the dusk. They enter the city, and as they pass along, suddenly the noises and confusion cease, and out across that stillness, steals the beautiful echoing call of a Mohammedan to worship. Wherever a follower of Mohammed may be, when he hears that call, he kneels, facing Mecca, bowing as he offers his prayers. Hundreds kneeling in one city, thousands all over India! The missionary and his daughter come peacefully home.

Again, picture this missionary out in his district, surrounded by a crowd of excited villagers who tell of the drought on the land. Cattle are dying, thin-faced men and women look up with anxious eyes. It is the rainy season, yet it has not rained for weeks. The crops are dry, and one of India's greatest tragedies is being slowly enacted. The missionary's heart is wrung, but he gathers a crowd about him to see his "magic lantern" pictures.

At another time, he and his little Ford are caught in one of the sudden river floods. Cactus and tree branches are driven down with the torrent, and the missionary barely reaches the shore in safety before his car is overturned and borne on down the river.

Another memory—India is a land of "fabulous wealth, and fabulous poverty". I recall seeing the Rajah of a native state, living in the utter richness of a marble palace, and feeding on the fat of the land. In that same native state, is such poverty as cannot be pictured. Yet Indians are not sad by nature. I would not convey that impression. Picture a throng of men and children and dancing girls celebrating a festival. They jump; they sing; they laugh; they shout; they wave anything they can get their hands upon;—and then in a moment, they are silent to do homage to some god of stone—rejoicing and worshipping together.

India is able. She can do well many things. How I wish that I could picture some of her beautiful buildings for you, some of the most beautiful in the world. Get yourself into a dreamy mood. Dream of marble halls and gold-domed temples, crystal palaces, and carved tombs. Dream of the most beautiful tomb that Venus could have fashioned, the Taj Mahal, wrought out of the love of a man for his wife. Imagine it in the moonlight, in its perfect symmetry, with the soft reflection in the Jumna river and its glorious dark setting of trees. But you cannot imagine it. Please go and see for yourself some day.

Now picture Benares, the center of the religious life of all religious India, a city teeming with people desirous of becoming clean. Picture its river banks reaching up in tier on tier of steps, blackened by thousands of bathers. Picture the dark temples with odors of incense filling their black recesses, with shining oily gods, and powerful Hindu priests. There are mingled all the mystery, groping, and blind passion of the Indian for something better, in these thousands at Benares. Their holy men, lying on beds of spikes or lashing themselves to death cannot but command our respect for their blind, ignorant courage. Oh, it is a heart-rending, wonderful city, Benares!

Now that our memory threads are thoroughly tangled, follow one down to South India. Can you not see the green palms, waving in the quiet sea breeze? Can you not see that little lithe figure climbing to get the toddy from the palms? The sea rolls in on a long beach. Little brown children play in the sand. The palms are behind you. All India is behind you. The glorious sea stretches out before you, white-capped on the far horizon. Can you help but love it all? Dear, dirty villagers, waving fields of rice and grain, beautiful buildings, fabulous richness, horrible poverty, crowds of Indian bathers, and India itself with its growing, splendid spirit, is it not a land to look at, and love, and be proud of?

“ ‘If you’ve ’eard the East a-callin’,
Why, you won’t ’eed nothin’ else,
No! You won’t ’eed nothin’ else,
But them spicy garlic smells
An’ the sunshine an’ the palm trees
An’ the tinkly temple bells!’ ”

The Charm of Scotland

[This essay was awarded second place in the Senior essay contest.]

“THE use of travel is to regulate the imagination by reality, and, instead of thinking how things may be, to see them as they are”. I cannot conceive of a definition which better covers the greatest achievement of travel. One may learn much from books, stories of strange lands, strange peoples and customs; but from such reading grows the desire to see, and from the sight springs the desire to see again. Thus it is when we read of fair Scotland, its history, its quaintness, and its open-hearted hospitality, that we wish to see these things in order to know them better and believe in them; and, seeing once, we wish to see once more. I have read and seen, and yet crave sight again, that I may lay bare those hidden treasures which escaped a hasty glance.

As another visit is, at present, beyond consideration, I seek comfort in the depths of retrospection. Thus buried in silent reverie, I am rudely startled to find memories giving way to thoughts and dreams of unreality. Therefore, I seek to record my memories, not that they may add one whit to the chronicles of travel, for my recollections are awkward, common things, but that, in setting them thus before me, I may find some treasured memory, forgotten in the rapid turn of life, and bring it forth again and keep it always there, linked with all others that I hold in mind.

When one reads of Scotland, he reads of time-worn castles, where were contested the destinies of kings; he reads of a country, beautiful and rugged, full to overflowing with quaint customs and tales of their origin, and of great cities where great deeds were done, great lives were lived, and still live in tales of blood and strife.

Edinburgh is, perhaps, the most interesting of these cities. Here events of history have been enacted for centuries past, until there is scarcely a nook or cranny of the “old city” but bears the markings of the part it played. Here is the spot where two princes were slain; here, the window from which the infant James I was lowered to safety; and, here again, the place where were confined the Covenanters, prisoners because of their religious belief,—and so it runs. On every side, from every moss-grown wall and pavement, from every dismal door or shaded alley, sweeps forth history, age and history, a damp and musty mist, which, like the deadly vapor of burning opium, holds a certain indescribable power over one who breathes it in. It brings a peaceful lull to the turmoil in his mind and gently wafts him back, as in a dream, to times long past where he sees, re-done, deeds which live for us only in the volumes of our libraries.

Far north of the great city, there lies a lesser one, which, though less is fully as great. It is the lesser; for its day has passed. It is fully as great; for it, too, has been immortalized by the great poet, and has been the home of kings. I speak of the old-time capital of the Scotch Highlands, Inverness, a city born in tradition but existing in reality. Here gather the hardy hill folk to buy and sell, and to enjoy themselves of an evening or holiday. How different it is from the stately Edinburgh! A holiday night finds the narrow streets crowded with people, generally men, who divide into little groups, some in idle talk, others in heated discussion which sometimes brings about blows; for all are none the better for drink. A solitary member of the pipers of some regiment in barracks occasionally steps forth from a group and, parading up and down the length of a block or two, plays over and over again a tune—if indeed it may be called such—which, though it seems to be composed of only a few notes, eventually becomes, by virtue of its monotony, agreeable to even a stranger's ears. But, oh! how sweet is this music to true Scotchmen! And lately it has grown sweet to me. I know not whether from association with pleasant memories, or for other reason; but it has worked its way into my heart, and I long to hear the "pipes o' Scotland" once more.

When one sees Scotland, he sees all these things and even greater sights. He may wander about great cities or little towns and completely lose himself in thoughts of history, of beautiful and simple folk-lore, handed down by word of mouth for generations uncounted and unknown, or he may hide himself away from man, amidst the rolling moorlands and there, lying upon a grassy slope, abandon himself to pleasant reverie by contemplation of the golden tufts of cloud drifting without aim, knowing no care save always to smile. The earth, a hilly mass of deep and fertile green, dotted here and there with banks of purest snow, for these lands are high above the sea; still other dots, like stars upon a purple field, where white sheep graze in a patch of bell-like heather; and the sky, gold and blue, possessing a something deeper and more wonderful than color,—all present a pleasing view for tired eyes. And, if, O happy being; fortune favors you with a shepherd watching over these scattered flocks whose bleating faintly carries to your ears, then you are blessed indeed! Let him but play his pipes, soft pipes sublime, and, mingled with the fresh breeze, their music, the bleating of the flocks, and the simple pastoral beauty of the scene, will carry you away to dreams of perfect peace.

From Inverness in the north, to Fort William in the west, there runs a rather famous waterway known as the Caledonian Canal. For one really wishing to see Scotland, this is the most interesting of trips. Up at six to get the boat, breakfast on board, and then out on deck to see Scotland.

Loch after loch, is passed, the surroundings of each lake becoming wilder and more mountainous than the one preceding, until the mountains rise abruptly on either side, and thrust their head and shoulders through the sheet of thin, gray cloud which overcasts the region. Soon one passes on into that immense wild part of Scotland where lived the ancient kings, and the great knights of Scottish history, into a land where "might was right and brawn met brawn". All that is left is ruin and destruction. The ruins, however, like the wars which caused them, have become beautiful with age and romance.

There rises from a prominent point which reaches boldly out into the loch, a single high tower, three sides of which are well preserved, the fourth seeming to have fallen away with the other walls of the once great, now beautiful, castle. To the left of this turret lie the remains of the central wall, covered with ivy and shrubs. To the right are the trees, so thickly planted that they hide from view whatever rests beneath them. I can make but a poor attempt to describe these picturesque old ruins, which are so frequently discovered in this strange, wild land, for they, like a portrait, are composed of something more than lines. They have an abstract quality, a pervading gloom which lurks in the cool recesses of the fallen walls and, creeping forth, weighs heavily upon one who sees its home and makes him sad. They are all that is left to us, these crumbling masses of rock and mortar, of that glorious age which gave birth to the traditions of a nation.

Scotland needs no adornment; its plain and open-hearted charm far surpasses any conscious work of man; its quaint and aged villages, inhabited by a strong and Christian race; its huge centers of thriving industry; its little thatched roofed farms; its rugged mountain regions; and finally, its vast rolling moorlands covered with purple heather and flocks of contented sheep,—all combined make a country surely worthy of the unaffected name of "Bonnie Scotland".

Rhetorical Retroaction

THE morning dawned bright, and soon the (Hayes) which had lingered over the mammoth (Oakes) that surrounded the clearing disappeared. In the distance, a (Brooks) lulling gurgle could be heard to the accompaniment of the whirl of the (Martin)'s wings. In other words, it was the typical (Fair-weather) for which the Canadian (North)-woods are noted. Walt and I climbed out of the double (Cotton) which we slept and each taking a drink of the water which we had brought from the (Spring) the (Nye)t before, we hastened, invigorated by the (Ayres) sharpness, to set about the (Cooke)ing of the breakfast. However, when we went to look for the (Bacon) which we had brought in the (Carr), we found it had disappeared as if on (Wing)s.

“Well if that wouldn't give a guy a (Paine)”, exclaimed Walt. “Probably one of the d——d (i. e. darned) hunters snitched it”.

“It's a sure bet he (Haase) nerve”, said I, feeling the same (Joyce) that I could see expressed in the melancholy physiognomy of my (Friend). “I hope he chokes while he's (Eaton) it”.

Then I saw Walt (Kneeland) examine the ground between the (Tufts) of (Brown) grass which grew here and (Thayer) about the place. Suddenly he stood up with a look of resignation and con(Stern)ation and said:

“I don't see how he did it. He didn't leave even one (Trackman). You know, I'm almost (Willing) to bet that it was one of those (Badgers) that are so sneaky that they never step on anything but grass”.

“Aw come on, Walt, forget it”, I begged him, “That bacon isn't the only thing we have to eat. I'm no (Baker), but if you pick me a little flower, I'll mix it with water and throw a rope over a limb by which I will be able to raise the dough and before long we'll have something in this camp that's at least bread in the open.”

But Walt did not care for my feeble attempt at humor and so bidding me get something ready to eat, he left the clearing. A few seconds later, I heard loud talking not far off and being curious, I went to find its source. I did not have to hunt long, for within hailing distance of the camp, I beheld Walt talking to a (Person) whom I shall never forget. Virgil might have said that no flowing robes draped his panting breast and no cumbersome toga obstructed the legs which understood his mighty body.

“I'm (King) around here,” he was saying, “and if you don't hand across some (Cashman), you'll be a (Huntsman) in the Indian Heaven ere the sun sets on the (Lane) that (Leeds) across that field”.

I laugh at all this now that it is past, but at that time it was serious. I say without the slightest conceit that my wonderful mind worked like lightning, that is by flashes with long intermittent pauses. After some five minutes, I conceived the fact that my friend was in danger and in less time than it takes to say the Chinese alphabet backwards, I came to the conclusion that if I didn't think of some plan, my friend would soon be the late (Walter) (Roberts). With movements as dynamic as my thoughts, I stepped from the bushes and walked up to the (Tower)ing individual.

"Hello, kid", I said, "How's the wife and kids?"

"Gone up to Lake George for a rest", said he, laconically, without the slightest pause, showing that he was not a native of these parts. Then I noticed two objects that hung about his neck, a (Bell) and a piece of (Cole).

"Where did you get that scarf"? I asked pleasantly, motioning to Walt to beat it and get our baby (Cannon).

"Oh these", answered the maniac calmly and then with a scream he let loose a flood of gesticulations which would have held Walter Camp's members motionless, and tried to bite the bell and coal until he was purple in the face.

By this time, Bill had arrived with our hunting outfit, a double-barrel shotgun, and I felt considerably relieved.

"Now my pretty lad, if you don't tell us the truth, you'll be a (Simpson). What are you doing here and where did you come from"? I demanded fiercely.

"Well boys", said he, calming down as the aspect of having his unmantled figure covered by a barrel did not please him, "I w(Osborne) in a little town in New York called Gotham. Last year, I lost a (Case) in court which cost me five dollars a bottle. Then I swore at a telephone girl because she disappointed me by giving me the right number after only fifteen attempts, and to cap the climax, I killed my coal-man because I hadn't seen a lump of coal for six months.

"For the crime of bootlegging, I was banished from the country; for swearing, I was sentenced to wear this metal Albatross until I die; and for killing the coal-man, I was sentenced to wear this black solitaire for five years. This is my story".

Walt and I bowed in reverence to this man's experiences.

"Praises be to 'Allah' ", we said in unison. "After this we shall live in the open spaces, where no hatred (Sears) the soul, where men have no reason to speak (Gile), where no flappers (Marr) the scenery, where men have no (Dyer) needs other than food and clothing, where men (Foster) none but the purest ideas, and where men forget how to pun and write ditties like that which you have just finished reading."

FIRST ESKIMO: "Where have you been for the last six months?"

SECOND ESKIMO: "I had to stay up with a sick friend all night."

PARENT (looking for Mr. Bacon during lunch hour): "Is Mr. Bacon in?"

MISS WISE: "No, he isn't."

PARENT: "Will he be in after lunch?"

MISS WISE: "No, that's what he went out after."

IF

If you had a date with a co-ed, as I did,
And she disposed of the family, as she did,
And you sat on the divan, as we did,
And she sat up close, as she did,
What would you do? That's what I did!

A MALE

He was straight as an arrow—
So polished and fine—
His form was just perfect—
His clothes up to date—
Something always around him—
Encircled in his fond embrace—
He is bashful and shy—
But never broke a heart—
"What kind of a man is he," you ask?
Only a hatrack, my dear.

NEWTON HIGH SCHOOL

HAMLET SCHOLARIZED

[With apologies to the shade of Willie Shakespere.]

To study or not to study, that is the question:
Whether it is better for the mind to bear
The scorns and anger of an outraged teacher,
Or to set afloat in a sea of knowledge
And by studying cross it. To study: to sleep
No more; and by the sleep to say we end
The anxiety, and the thousand other pangs
The scholar is heir to, 'tis a blissfulness
Devoutly to be wished. To study: to sleep;
To sleep, perchance to snore: ay there's the rub;
For in that sonorous sleep what missiles may be thrown
When we have shuffled off to dreamland
Must give us paws to scratch our heads. There's the thing
That makes calamity of a student's life.
For who would bear the mental flights of Virgil,
The blue card's shame, the school cars' tardiness,
The heart-throbs of a school-boy romance, the lunchroom fare.
The insolence of Seniors, and the cares
That hardly merit the meagre gains,
When he might tickle his palate
With wood alcohol? Who would the gymnasium bear,
To grunt and sweat without a shower in sight;
But that someone after supper,
That irate father, from whose wrath
No infidel escapes, rouses the fear;
And makes us rather bear the ills we have,
Than fly to others we know more of?
Thus schooling doth make cowards of us all,
And thus the native hue of countenance
Is covered over the the pale cast of powder;
And athletes of great pep and speed;
With this in mind, their signals oft forget,
And loose their rep. for action.

VONS.

DENTIST: "Open wider please".

PATIENT: "A-A-Ah".

DENTIST: (inserting rubber gag, towel, and sponge) "How's your family?"

A TRAGEDY

She laid the still white form beside those that had gone before. No groan, no sigh from her. Suddenly, she let forth a cry that pierced the still air, making it vibrate into a thousand echoes. It seemed to come from the very depths of her soul. Twice the cry was repeated, and then all was quiet again. She would lay another egg tomorrow.

Gardner Pratt and Priscilla Bache talking in corridor. Pratt has just picked up a lunchroom spoon from the floor.

COACH D. (seeing spoon): "Come, Pratt, no place for spooning here."

STARVATION

I'm hungry in the morning, I'm hungry in the night,
But I'm hungriest of all when lunch B heaves in sight.
The others all go down lunch A,
And I don't think it is quite right,
That some should have to keep away,
While others appease their appetite.

"I'm banking on you", said the billiard ball as he neared the cushion.

Have you ever heard the strange noises that come from the girls' dressing rooms?

The powder puffs—

The hair bangs and snarls—

The fur wraps—

The ear rings—

The lips-tick—

The overshoes flap—

The skirts "'hem"—

The Marcel waves come and go, and sometimes you can hear the bat bands.

FEATURES

The Newtonian is a very fine book,
At least so I've heard said,
But why do they make us write for it,
When we'd rather go to bed?

They started when we were Freshmen,
A limerick will do, they thought,
Or else a joke would be just the thing,
Never mind if your Feature is short.

And they did it when we were Sophomores,
And when Juniors and Seniors too,
And in these four years I've learned this much,
That that's one thing I cannot do.

OUR SCHOOL

"Rich windows that exclude the light,
And long passages that lead to nothing."

From Gray's "A Long Tale."

"She seems to be a plucky girl."

"What makes you think so?"

"Her eyebrows."

I used to think—
That when I smoked—
A cigarette—
I was the goods.
But now—
I do not smoke at all—
It's too effeminate.

—————
Fourth down on the one yard line, a pass, a fumble.

"Ball", cried the quarterback, and the fullback sat down and cried.

—————
"That's something I never do", said the co-ed as she blushed and looked down at her math. assignment.

—————
TWINS

My friend Mrs. Binns
Had a fine pair of twins
She christened them Patrick and Mike,
And none but the mother
Could tell one from the other
For they were exactly alike.

When I asked her to tell
How she knew them so well
Said she, "There's no secret in that,
I just put my finger
In Mike's little mouth
And if he bites me 'tis Pat!"

NEWTON HIGH BOYS

Samuel M. Felton, military director of railroads during the war, and now president of the Chicago and Great Western Railroad, speaking to high school boys, says :

"I have been in close contact with many thousands of men in my life, as employer and as employed, and I think that most of the failures are merely the result of a wrong start—the result of failing to sit down and take stock in the formative period of youth. The boy who imagines that the years from fifteen to twenty-five may be spent in having a good time is sadly mistaken. He really will not have any better time than those who apply themselves early to a definite object, but he will surely totally unfit himself for any career whatsoever. No kind of a career can be made without that, and it is never too early to think."
