

WIKIMEDIA RESOURCE CENTER

Find what you are looking for.

The Wikimedia Resource Center is a new portal intended to be a single point of entry for Wikimedians all over the world to access specific Wikimedia resources, including documented best practices, program support, toolkits, and financial resources.

It was designed, with a user-centered approach. This means that the interface was informed by feedback provided by Wikimedia community members on different channels, and adjusted to best support their needs.

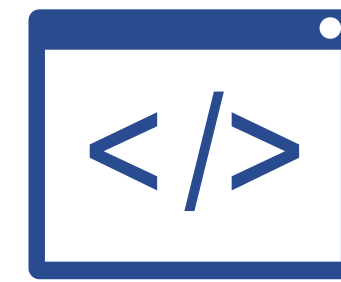

In the second iteration, we filtered resources by user personas, identifying key audiences that would interact with the platform.

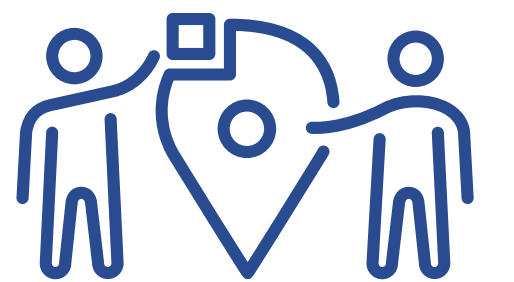

Program coordinators

Content contributors

Volunteer developers

Community organizers

We also enabled contributions, so that any Wikimedian can share resources they create with others, and promote their documentation across the movement.

What's next?

In the third phase of the Wikimedia Resource Center, we will enable social features that will help Wikimedians to connect to other Wikimedians that can support them.