Wiki-what?

Wikipedia

The free encyclopedia we all use. (since when?)

Useful editions available in about 100 languages. (And about 200 more in earlier stages.)

Over 20 million articles total. Over 6 million Eng.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

The Wikimedia Vision

Imagine a world in which every single human being can freely share in the sum of all knowledge. That's our commitment.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

So there are sister projects!

Free digital editions of thousands of public domain works are collected in Wikisource.

64 million free media objects (photos, videos, music) are collected in Wikimedia Commons

Structured [meta-]data about 90 million things collected in machine-queryable Wikidata.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Together, they are Wikimedia

Wikimedia is the family of free knowledge, culture, and media projects.

Wikimedia is also the movement of volunteers and organizations supporting this cause.

The Wikimedia Foundation raises donations, pays the bills, employs core engineering team, legal support, etc.

About 180 local affiliates are groups of Wikimedians who speak the local language and are ready to partner with you!

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Who does all this?

Volunteers!

About 80 thousand regularly active volunteers around the world.

And many more casual contributors.

But who are they?

They are folks like you and me!

Students, professors, professionals, teenagers, retirees...

...and quite a few librarians!

Wikimedia and Libraries are natural partners

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

We pursue the same goals,
For the same reasons
To serve the same public...
...in different methods.

WIKIMEDIA
FOUNDATION

Different methods?

Libraries (traditionally!) curate and store knowledge in the original publications it was published in; it is up to the library patrons (perhaps with librarian help) to do any synthesis, check for up-to-dateness, etc.

Wikipedia offers (ideally) up-to-date syntheses of multiple reliable sources, yielding a single general narrative about various aspects of the topic. Wikipedia also refers readers to further reading, much of it not online, i.e. in libraries!

Mircea Eliade   [edit]

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

"Eliade" redirects here. For other persons of the same name, see Eliade (surname).

Mircea Eliade (Romanian: [ˈmirt͡ʃe̯a eliˈade]; March 9 [O.S. February 24] 1907 – April 22, 1986) was a Romanian historian of religion, fiction writer, philosopher, and professor at the University of Chicago. He was a leading interpreter of religious experience, who established paradigms in religious studies that persist to this day. His theory that hierophanies form the basis of religion, splitting the human experience of reality into sacred and profane space and time, has proved influential.[1] One of his most instrumental contributions to religious studies was his theory of eternal return, which holds that myths and rituals do not simply commemorate hierophanies, but, at least to the minds of the religious, actually participate in them.[1]

His literary works belong to the fantastic and autobiographical genres. The best known are the novels Maitreyi ('La Nuit Bengali' or 'Bengal Nights'), Noaptea de Sânziene ('The Forbidden Forest'), Isabel și apele diavolului ('Isabel and the Devil's Waters'), and Romanul Adolescentului Miop ('Novel of the Nearsighted Adolescent'); the novellas Domnișoara Christina ('Miss Christina') and Tinerețe fără tinerețe ('Youth Without Youth'); and the short stories Secretul doctorului Honigberger ('The Secret of Dr. Honigberger') and La Țigănci ('With the Gypsy Girls').

Early in his life, Eliade was a journalist and essayist, a disciple of Romanian far-right philosopher and journalist Nae Ionescu, and a member of the literary society Criterion. In the 1940s, he served as cultural attaché to the United Kingdom and Portugal. Several times during the late 1930s, Eliade publicly expressed his support for the Iron Guard, a fascist and antisemitic political organization. His political involvement at the time, as well as his other far right connections, were frequently criticised after World War II.

Noted for his vast erudition, Eliade had fluent command of five languages (Romanian, French, German, Italian, and English) and a reading knowledge of three others (Hebrew, Persian, and Sanskrit). He was elected a posthumous member of the Romanian Academy.

This is fun, but what does it have to do with libraries?

All this magic depends on structured data.

You know, like MARC and other kinds of meta-data!

To serve the same public…

Wikimedia is a natural partner to libraries as they evolve from serving consumers to encouraging makers, from observers to participants, etc.

So what can Wikimedia volunteers and libraries do together?

Opportunities for Collaboration

WIKIMEDIA

Opportunities for collaboration

1. Partner with your local Wikimedia community (or start one!)
2. Host Wikimedia events
3. Teach information literacy using Wikimedia
4. Contribute directly to the wikis
5. Provide an online reference desk for Wikimedians

WIKIMEDIA

Partner with local Wikimedians

Chances are good that there is a lively Wikimedia community around you. Invite them to the library for coffee and a chat!

This general equation really works well: Library resources + volunteer energy and initiatives = great projects

Email asaf@wikimedia.org if you need help connecting with your local community.

WIKIMEDIA

Partner with local Wikimedians

Engaging your local Wikimedia community in a long-term dialogue will open the way for ideas and initiatives to be born.

Creating this relationship will make pursuing the following recommendations easier.

What if there's no community?

If there's no truly local Wikimedia volunteers in your vicinity, you can help seed a local volunteer community! We can connect you with volunteers elsewhere in the country or the world, offer curriculum, do distance-training, to help you train and gather a new free-knowledge volunteer community centered on your library!

WIKIMEDIA FOUNDATION

Email asaf@wikimedia.org if you need help starting a local community.

Host Wikimedia events

Libraries are perfectly positioned to host events related to Wikimedia's Vision of free knowledge for all.

These events can range from trainings and workshops, through free-culture performances, to lectures and discussions on a variety of topics.

Focus on Information Literacy

- Information literacy is a crucial 21st-century skill
- The Wikimedia ecosystem, both as readers/consumers and as participants and co-curators, offers an excellent real-world context for teaching information literacy and critical thinking, and dynamics of discourse and debate, as well as valuable lessons on knowledge production and what is truth.

Trainings and Workshops

- How to make the most of Wikipedia
  - Teaching information literacy (assessing sources, detecting bias, evaluating tone, …)
  - Demonstrating less-known features of Wikipedia (categories, talk pages, history, …)
- Basic Wikipedia editing workshop
  - How to edit articles; focusing on principles, not technique.
  - Wikipedia's approach to controversy.

Workshops with an Agenda

- Editing get-togethers (including or after a basic editing workshop) focused on addressing a content gap or a participation gap
  - E.g. improving coverage of women scientists; people of color; national minorities; etc.
- ...or on local history, local notable people
- ...or on curation of existing materials (media into articles, articles into categories, inter-linking, ...)

(systemic bias; recentism; copyright-induced outdatedness)

Contribute directly to the wikis

- Library staff (and volunteers) can make valuable direct contributions to the various Wikimedia wikis
- For example, add references to reliable sources to Wikipedia articles. (see the #1lib1ref campaign)
  - In 2019, more than half of the total participants in the campaign were new editors. Participants made 13,261 edits in more than 50 languages with over 4.12 million words added.

WIKIMEDIA

Contribute directly to the wikis

- Upload unique media from library holdings (minding copyright, but also avoiding copyright paralysis!), like local history documents, photos, archival material.
- Upload recordings of cultural events or lectures held at the library (with permission)

Zero hosting or maintenance costs to your institution!

Contribute directly to the wikis

- For example, the State Library of Queensland, Australia, donated 50 thousand historic photographs to Wikimedia Commons.
- The British Library's Mechanical Curator project released one million images via Flickr, from which Wikimedia volunteers extracted and catalogued more than 50 thousand historic maps.

Examples from IFLA's "Opportunities for Public Libraries and Wikipedia", 2016.

Start an online reference desk

- Wikimedians are always needing access to sources. They mostly work outside your library, and won't come in just to use your reference desk.
- But what if they could submit requests online?
- Create a channel (e-mail, real time chat, whatever) and announce it to your local-language Wikimedia communities. It could be the beginning of a beautiful friendship. :)

For example: the National Library of Israel maintains a "virtual reference desk" inside Hebrew Wikipedia!

WIKIMEDIA

Fits within your existing workflows.

Add a Wikimedia angle to existing workflows

- Do you run a book club? Encourage reading (and improving?) Wikipedia coverage of the author, the book, the subject matter, etc.

- Are you hosting lectures or concerts? Review quality and coverage of performers, composers, etc. Secure permission to contribute the recording to Wikimedia Commons.

Add a Wikimedia angle to existing workflows

- Do you run computer literacy courses for senior citizens? Teach them how to proofread OCRed scans for the digital editions in Wikisource!

Think long-term

- Wikipedia is a long-term project: small actions add up to huge impact.
- So is your library's relationship with the Wikimedia communities in your country/language.
- Dream big, start small, and grow together.

Summary of Major Benefits

- Information and media literacy are crucial 21st century skills, valued by your funders and public.
- Working with Wikimedia requires no long-term commitment, upkeep costs, or maintenance nightmares.
- Wikimedia provides eye-opening statistics on both contributorship and readership; easy to visualize and prove impact!
