EXPRESS MAIL.

The Express mail is currently reported to-day to be in possession of intelligence from the Havana of the most important nature. The most important item we find in a postscript to the Diario de la Marina, declaring to call an extraordinary session of the Legislature, to meet the next day, to take into consideration the subject of the Queen's message. The postscript is as follows:

Gov. Rimer of Pennsylvania, declining to call an extra session of the Legislature, for the purpose of legislating upon the subject of the suspension of the banks, has issued a proclamation, addressed to the people, in which he says:

"The Legislature of Pennsylvania has been convened on two occasions during the present year, for the purpose of legislating upon the subject of the suspension of specie payments by the banks, and has failed to do so. The Governor has no power to call the Legislature together, except upon the application of both branches, or in case of disagreement between the two branches, upon the application of the Senate. The Senate has not made such application, and I am not aware that the House of Representatives has done so. Under these circumstances, I am not authorized to convene the Legislature, and I do not feel it my duty to do so, unless I am satisfied that the public interest requires it. I am not satisfied that the public interest requires the convening of the Legislature at this time. The banks have suspended specie payments, and have issued a large amount of small notes, which are now in circulation, and which are necessary for the transaction of the business of the country. The banks have not suspended with the intention of defrauding the people, but because they were unable to meet the demands upon them for specie. They have suspended in order to preserve their means to pay their debts. The suspension has been general throughout the country, and has been produced by causes which could not be controlled by the banks. The banks have been compelled to suspend, or submit to the ruin of the country. The suspension has been submitted to by the people, and is approved by them. The banks have been compelled to issue small notes, and the people have received them, and are willing to receive them, because they are convenient, and because they are necessary for the transaction of business. The banks have not issued small notes for the purpose of making money, but because they were
