INTRODUCTION

By COLONEL SIR EDWARD WARD, Bart., K.C.B., K.C.V.O.

WHEN the history of the component parts of the British Army which has fought in the great war comes to be written, the Officers' Training Corps will receive its due meed of commendation. Without the "O. T. C.," as it is popularly known, the success of the changes effected under the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act in 1907 would have been gravely imperilled by the lack of an efficient supply of officers. How the officering of the Territorial Force Battalions, which were created as part of the recasting of the British Army during the twelve years of peace which followed the South African War, would have been completed without its help it is difficult to imagine, for it is from this great reservoir of partly trained men, who had mastered during their service with the Corps at least the elements of their work, that the majority of the officers, not only of the Territorials, but also of the Service Battalions which formed the new armies, have been drawn.

It has always been one of my most pleasant recollections that, while Permanent Under-Secretary of State for War, I, as Chairman of the Committee which was appointed by the Army Council in August 1906 "to consider the deficiency in the Reserve of Officers, and also in the Yeomanry, Militia and Volunteers," was actively concerned in the organization of the Officers' Training Corps. This Committee, which included in its numbers representatives of Oxford, Cambridge, and Edinburgh Universities and the Public Schools, as well as Civil and War Office representatives, was greatly assisted by the active sympathy and very material help of numerous University and Public School Authorities.

I confess that, when I was busy with the creation of the Corps, I never contemplated that it would develop so splendidly as to give approximately 20,500 officers to the army between the outbreak of war and the Spring of 1915, and yet that is the number given by Captain Haig-Brown. A list is not given of the officers who received their commissions through the Oxford and Cambridge University Contingents. Many of these, however, doubtless served first in their School Contingents, and therefore their names are also included in the school records; but it is probably well within the mark to say that, from first to last, the O. T. C. has furnished the army with as many as 27,000 Officers.

The O. T. C. movement owes much of its success to the officers who have directed its fortunes. The quiet labours of Major Meiklejohn, Colonel Percival, and Major Merrick will not be forgotten, though none of the three survived to see the full fruition of their work. To Lieut-Col. Earle, D.S.O., and to many other regular officers who superintended the efficient training of the Corps on behalf of the War Office, the country owes a great debt. Many arm-chair critics, who looked askance at its inception, have now been forced to recognize its value and to commend the self-sacrificing labours of the officers commanding, who supplied the driving power. The efforts have been justified to an extent of which even our warmest friends have not dreamt.

During the first seven years of its existence the O. T. C. received but little praise, and it is precisely because these years of patriotic effort have met with so little recognition that I commend Captain Haig-Brown's book to all students of our Military Organization. None has worked harder or with a more vivid enthusiasm than Captain Haig-Brown.

Introduction

He has been connected with the O. T. C. movement from its inception, and no one knows better than he the story of its development and the nature of its activities. He and his many comrades, who have worked no less zealously, may well be proud of the long list of names of those who have found the O. T. C. an effectual door of entrance into our fighting forces. The greatest praise must also be given to those members of the Universities and the Public Schools who cheerfully added to their educational duties the burden of making themselves and their contingents efficient elements of our army system. The men who seized the opportunity to be trained may be no less proud that they answered to the call of patriotism during the years before our national existence was threatened.

The present achievements of the O. T. C. are a measure of its future development. I have read with interest the suggestions which Captain Haig-Brown has made. The time has not yet come to comment on them. The future of the O. T. C. is bound up with greater issues, but there is no reason why its working should not now be investigated and the many problems considered in good time. It is out of the efforts of the past that the future must arise, and I therefore commend this record of the work of the O. T. C. to all who are concerned in the glorious future which now, as in past days, lies ahead of the British Army.

THE O. T. C. AND THE GREAT WAR

CHAPTER I

THE BEGINNING OF IT ALL

THE Senior and Junior Divisions of the Officers Training Corps owe their existence mainly to the voluntary military work which was done in the educational world from 1860 to 1908. To those then who strove nobly and well in these early days will always belong the chief credit of having given rise to a force that has stood the country in such good stead in its greatest struggle. Although it is the Universities which make up the Senior portion of the O. T. C., I think that all the evidence goes to show that it was the Schools which now form the Junior Division that really prompted the conception of the magnificent idea of an Officers Training Corps. And chiefly did they do so by their admirable work in the Public Schools Camp which from 1889 onwards was held at the beginning of every Summer holiday. Going still further back we must look for those responsible for the first organization of that camp, and we find the names of Lieut.-Col. Hoare, C.B. (then Captain Hoare of Haileybury), Major R. Temperley, T.D., who commanded Bradfield from 1884-1889, Captain Glünicke, of Bedford (who incidentally had seen service in the German Army), and Capt. Wildman, of Sherborne. These, then, were the pioneers of serious military work at Public Schools, and to Lieut.-Col. Hoare must be given the first place amongst schoolmaster-soldiers and not a little of the praise for the evolution of the O. T. C., though he never actually saw service in that force. Nor are any of his brother officers now on duty amongst us. Alone of those who attended that first camp in 1889, Major W. F. Ingram remains commanding the Shrewsbury Corps after having long commanded Bradfield. But it was as a colour-sergeant of the latter school that he first saw the tents of what was later to become the Public Schools Brigade and, later still, the Junior Division of the O. T. C.

If then in this history I write rather more fully of the Junior Division of the O. T. C. than I do of the Senior, I must plead two reasons. The first, that the Schools are really the father of the O. T. C., and the second, that fortune has associated me more closely with them than with the Universities. Not only were the Schools far more strongly represented numerically in the old days of volunteering, but even in these times nearly every cadet in the Senior Division had done his first service in the Junior. But I am not blind to the immense task that has fallen upon the Universities and the Inns of Court in this great war. Theirs it has been chiefly and more immediately to supply the country's need of officers. But to separate School from University and Senior Division from Junior Division in this connection is neither easy nor necessary. Suffice it that the O. T. C., combining as it does the Inns of Court and every University and School of note in the United Kingdom, works without jealousy upon one single object, that is how best this great combination, scattered as it may be locally, can satisfy the demands of King and Empire.

While I was at some pains to discover exactly what political events first led to the founding of Volunteer Corps—or Rifle Corps as they were frequently called—amongst those who were still being educated, I was given a copy of The Harrovian. It contained an extract from a most interesting book in that school's library which clearly gives the circumstances that led to this great innovation. The extract runs as follows: "In the Spring of the year 1859 the Political Aspect of the Continent was such as to create considerable uneasiness in this country as to the power of self-defence possessed by England in the event of its being attacked. The rapid advances which had been made in scientific warfare and in facility of communication were supposed to have materially diminished the security which we had previously derived from our insular position. Accordingly on May 12th, 1859, a circular letter was issued by the Secretary of State for War, inviting the formation of Volunteer Corps. Such was the feeling throughout the country, that in the course of the following Autumn and Winter upwards of a hundred thousand volunteers were enrolled, the arms being supplied by Government, but all other expenses of equipment and of drill readily incurred by the volunteers themselves, aided by subscriptions from private individuals."

This then was the history of the Volunteer activity of 1860; from that time until 1899 the same idea was working, aided, as such things ever must be, by the force of example. In 1899 came the Boer War, and an additional keenness was given to the Volunteer movement. Lastly came the foundation of the Territorial Force and the O. T. C. It will be interesting to see how these three separate goads acted upon the individual contingents which now form the Senior and Junior Divisions of the O. T. C.

Both Oxford and Cambridge founded Corps in these earliest days. Oxford give their date as 1859, Cambridge 1860, but the latter had a Rifle Club in the previous year, and but for the opposition of the Lord-Lieutenant, would have been the Senior Corps in the county. As it was, they had to give place to the Town Corps, and the latter, on the occasion of the 'Varsity men's first parade, took the opportunity of also marching through the town later in the day with bayonets fixed. The 500 Cantabs had to show themselves without Arms, but as an off-set they had bandsmen in light-blue uniforms. In 1860 also the Inns of Court was born. About this same period Edinburgh University formed the No. 4 Company of the Queen's Edinburgh Rifles; later, in 1872, they supplied also the 1st Edinburgh City Royal Garrison Artillery Volunteers, and in 1890 added to their good work by enrolling a medical detachment. In 1882 St. Andrews University formed No. 7 Company of the 1st Fife R. G. A. Volunteers, while in 1898 Manchester University took up arms as "N" Company of the 2nd Vol. Batt. Manchester Regt. And these six contingents alone of those which now compose the Senior Division of the O. T. C. had any existence till the irregularities of President Kruger woke for a short while the easy-going British Public. Then in 1900 Birmingham University supplied the "U" Company of the 5th Batt. Royal Warwickshire Regt., and in that same year Aberystwyth University College made up the "E" Company of the 5th South Wales Borderers. In 1906 Reading University College formed a college troop for the Berkshire Yeomanry. In 1908 Durham University made the "K" Company of the 3rd Northumberland Fusiliers, but to the best of my knowledge all the remaining contingents of the Senior Division were only called into existence by the inauguration of the O. T. C. Numerically, then, that innovation had a great effect upon the University Corps, and produced contingents from Aberdeen, Belfast, Bristol, Edinburgh (Engineer Unit), Glasgow, Leeds, London, Nottingham, and Sheffield Universities, also from the University of Wales, Royal Agricultural College (Cirencester), Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland, and the Royal Veterinary Colleges of Ireland and Edinburgh. Similarly the formation of the O. T. C.

The Beginning of it All

had an effect upon the Schools, but not, as will be seen by the statistics that follow, quite to the same extent.

The appeal of 1859 brought into being the following Corps : Eton, Harrow, Rugby, Rossall, Felsted, and Hurstpierpoint, all of which were founded in 1860. A year later Marlborough followed their example, and in 1862 Cheltenham, Plymouth College, and Derby School started their military career. After that there was a lull in such activity for nearly ten years, which was brought to an end by Winchester in 1870 and Charterhouse in 1873, Whitgift in 1874, Glenalmond and Clifton College in 1875, King's College School in 1876, and Dulwich in 1877. Another lull of some five years, and then came Wellington in 1882, Bradfield, Malvern, and Forest in 1883, Portsmouth Grammar School in 1884, Merchiston Castle in 1885, Bedford Grammar School in 1886, Haileybury in 1887, Sherborne and St. Dunstan's College in 1888. There was no new foundation of Rifle or Cadet Corps from the Public Schools in 1889, but Epsom and St. Paul's started theirs in 1890, Berkhamsted in 1891, Highgate in 1892, Tonbridge and Kelvinside Academy in 1893, and Kelly College in 1895. A year later came Eastbourne College and King Edward VI's School, Bury St. Edmunds. Exeter School founded their Corps in 1897, St. Laurence College in 1898, and Solihull School in the same year.

The Boer War naturally caused tremendous activity in the Volunteer world, and in 1899, 1900, and 1901 a very large batch of Schools took up their proper duties. These were Uppingham, Bury Grammar School, Ellesmere, Merchant Taylors', Chigwell, Nottingham High School, Elstow, Dover, Skinner's, Stonyhurst, Blundell's, Wellingborough, Bedford Modern School, Repton, Lancing, Brighton, Cranleigh, The Leys, Denstone, Ipswich School, Cranbrook, Allhallows, Bristol Grammar School, Reading, King Edward's School (Bath), Hymer's College, Sedbergh,

The O. T. C. and the Great War

Kirkcaldy High School, Queen Mary's Grammar School, Hillhead High School, Shrewsbury, Liverpool Institute, Gresham's School, Framlingham College, Imperial Service College and City of London. Before peace was declared came yet others in Glasgow Academy, Elizabeth College (Guernsey), Dollar Institution, Sir Roger Manwood's School, Wellington School (Somerset), St. Alban's School, Glasgow High School, Westminster, Oundle, Hereford Cathedral School, and Ardingly. In 1903 the movement was still spreading. Victoria College (Jersey), St. Edmund's School, Cambridge and County School, and King's College (Taunton) came next, followed in 1904 by Christ's Hospital, Monkton Combe School, St. Bees, Worksop, and Louth, and in 1905 by Bournemouth, Hertford Grammar School, Grimsby Municipal College, Churcher's College, King's School (Grantham), George Watson's College, St. Edward's School (Oxford), and Perse; 1906 brought into being the Corps of Maidstone, Emmanuel School, Beaumont, and Trent, and 1907 those of Handsworth Grammar School, King Edward's (Birmingham), King Edward VII's School (Sheffield), and Reigate.

Formidable as this list was, the authorities were not unwilling to add to it when the Corps already mentioned were invited to form the Junior Division of the O. T. C. in 1908, and several Schools thereupon decided to begin military work and apply for membership. University College School, Aldenham, Newcastle-under-Lyme High School, Woodbridge, Edinburgh Academy, Bromsgrove, and Fettes, all came in practically at the very start of the O. T. C. In 1909 they were followed by King's School (Worcester), Dartford, George Heriot's School, Royal Grammar School (Guildford), Downside, Dean Close School, Leeds Grammar School, Liverpool College, Royal Grammar School (High Wycombe), Campbell College, Radley, Dorchester Grammar School, West Buckland School, Wellington College (Salop)

The Beginning of it All

King's School (Canterbury), and N.-E. County School (Barnard Castle). In 1910 came Cork Grammar School, Wilson's Grammar School, Royal Grammar School (Worcester), Oakham School, Morrison's Academy, Giggleswick, Bloxham, Manchester Grammar School, King Alfred's School (Wantage), King's School (Bruton), Bridlington Grammar School, and Loretto. In 1911 yet others in King William's College (Isle of Man), St. Dunstan's College, King's School (Rochester), Ampleforth, and Mill Hill School. There was no cessation of "recruits" in 1912, for that year brought in St. John's School (Leatherhead), St. Andrew's College (Dublin), St. Columba's College, and Wolverhampton School; and in 1913 Oratory School (Edgbaston), Taunton School, and St. Peter's School (York) joined the O. T. C. Not even the outbreak of war with Germany found the War Office too busy to deal with applications, and Durham School, Bradford Grammar School, Sutton Valence School, Royal Grammar School (Lancaster), Weymouth and Abingdon School, all formed Corps just too late for "The Day," at least for its dawn. Some thirteen contingents in the Senior Division and over fifty in the Junior thus came into military existence only when the Army Council formed the O. T. C. The remainder, ten in the Senior and over a hundred in the Junior, were already at work as Volunteer Rifle or Cadet Corps when the summons came to better regulated and more important duties.

But the labours upon which they were then employed were by no means without interest, and certainly not without value. In the Senior Division, Oxford, Cambridge, and the Inns of Court were engaged in usual Volunteer activities which consisted mainly of reviews and "training weeks" in addition to the ordinary routine. The earliest report of a review attended by either 'Varsity that I can find was one in 1870 at Brighton, to which Cambridge sent one company. Two years later the Light Blues, the Inns of Court, and Oxford attended the Autumn Manœuvres on Salisbury Plain, and for many years a week's training at Aldershot or Colchester was an important item in the University military calendar. Numbers steadily increased, and an average attendance for such training was about 200 in the period about 1890 onwards; in 1902 the total of undergraduates from Cambridge at Aldershot was 500, but after the heat of war was over and at the time when the O. T. C. was being originated not more than 350 to 400 Cantabs were going into camp on Salisbury Plain. The Inns of Court, Oxford, and Cambridge were all represented in the South African War. The former sent a large detachment as having older men enrolled, but owing to the conditions as to age and number of years' efficiency neither University could be in great force. Cambridge, for instance, sent a detachment, which formed part of the Volunteer Company of the Suffolk Regiment.

The Schools were at first not quite secure in their unfamiliar duties. Let me, for instance, quote from Major Tod's admirable book on Charterhouse concerning the first year or so of the Corps, which he afterwards so successfully commanded: "In 1873 it consisted of about sixty members. They possessed twelve Snider rifles, perhaps quite enough, for there was little drill and the only shooting was at glass bottles in a back-yard." And Charterhouse, who were afterwards to make such a name in the Ashburton Shield Competition, will forgive me if I further quote concerning their first attempt to win that trophy in 1874. Firing with a team of eleven "they made seventy-seven misses and seventy-seven hits." But they were not bottom of the list. And in that team was the Chief Scout, who, we may be sure, claimed fourteen of the hits.

In 1881 there was a big review of Volunteer Corps at Windsor, which was attended by some of the School Corps.

The Beginning of it All

About this time, too, Public School Field Days at Aldershot and elsewhere were coming into fashion. Such meetings gave great opportunity for comparison with others and self-examination, and doubtless helped much to improve the efficiency of various Corps. These Field Days grew and grew in popularity until they became altogether unwieldy. Railway journeys from divers parts of the country made a late start imperative—an early ending was equally necessary. The exact position of the luncheon tents was the most important part of the tactical scheme, and with forty or fifty Corps engaged, all of them determined to reach the firing line and reach it quickly, there was hardly that dignity and discipline about these operations which we have since come to associate with similar affairs in later years. Of one school it is told that the command “Cease fire” was met by a perfect fusillade. Upon the remonstrance of the officer in charge his innocent soldiers replied: “We thought you said ‘Please fire,’ sir.” And in these days it was not every officer who had his charges well in hand or a ready understanding of the drill book. A subaltern who congratulated his boys upon the way they had done some outpost work was reprimanded by his C. O. on the grounds that “the book” distinctly laid it down that no “compliments” were to be paid on outpost duty, and many an Aldershot mounted orderly received about this time a most correct salute from some Junior Officer.

In 1887 there were two big Jubilee Reviews, one in St. James’s Park and the other at Aldershot, both of which were attended by several of the Public Schools. In 1897 Queen Victoria again reviewed the Schools at Windsor. I cannot refrain from quoting the adventure of one cadet, now a distinguished soldier, in connection with this last event. For some breach of discipline he was forbidden to attend, but disregarding the order he hid himself beneath a railway carriage seat and arrived at Windsor. Here his good fortune failed him and he was detected, put under arrest, and left in the waiting-room to ponder on the dangers of excessive loyalty.

All these years shooting was proceeding gaily on the School Ranges, and the Ashburton and other trophies were being competed for annually at Wimbledon till 1889, and afterwards at Bisley. The history of these matches is contained in another chapter, but herein is the place to tell of the greatest event in the history of Public School Corps, namely, the First Camp. As already noted, Lieut.-Col. Hoare, C.B., was the instigator of the movement. At his earliest attempt negotiations fell through, and the O. T. C. Review tells that these negotiations were first opened in the compartment of a railway carriage on the return journey from an Aldershot Field Day. As a matter of fact a camp in Panshanger Park was tentatively arranged for 1888, but it did not take shape owing to a small response and the subsequent intervention of the War Office. But the Commanding Officer of Haileybury was not to be lightly defeated. In 1889 four Public Schools—Bedford, Bradfield, Haileybury, and Sherborne—went under canvas on Churn Downs, and the total strength of the Force was 11 Officers, 6 Sergt.-Instructors, and 204 Cadets. Major Temperley, of Bradfield, was largely instrumental in helping the matter through. His Corps was attached to the Berkshire Volunteer Battalion, which belonged to the Home Counties Brigade, under the command of Lord Wantage. Bradfield had actually been to camp with the Berkshires in 1884, and Lord Wantage, pleased with the success of the experiment, readily agreed to a repetition of it on a larger scale. He took these pioneers of the Public Schools Brigade under his charge, appointed his second-in-command, Major Colebrooke Carter, as Commandant of their camp, and henceforward proved himself as staunch a friend of the whole movement as any of its supporters could wish.

As an historical incident, it is of the greatest interest that the School Corps then in camp with the Berkshires were invited to the sham fight at Aldershot held in honour of the German Emperor Wilhelm II. General Blümenthal, of the Kaiser's staff, inspected them most critically, and they afterwards marched past the Emperor. History is often strange, but never quite so strange as in the matter of military compliments between nations.

Major Temperley writes feelingly of the difficulties of that first camp, of the lack of equipment, of the tragedy of losing the kitchen equipment on the rail, and all the pitfalls which have a way of excavating themselves amongst tents when the occupants of the latter are new to the experience of life under canvas. But he pays a great tribute to the interest of the Brigadier and the kindly instruction given by the Commandant and his Adjutant—Major Bowles, of the Yorkshire Regiment. And that camp was in every way a great success. From thence onwards it became an annual affair, gradually growing in strength, discipline, and efficiency, under the tender care of Col. Hoare, until in 1908 it had outgrown all proportions, and other arrangements had to be made for the overflow and a still further increase of members which the founding of the O. T. C. introduced.

But the making of the Public Schools Annual Camp was by no means as easy a matter as is the writing of it. Even after the first happy experience, there was a falling off in numbers at the next year's meeting, and there was always a vast amount of prejudice to be overcome on the part both of the boys and of their parents. In the matter of camp, boys may be divided into two classes: those who are born with a desire to go and those who have to be persuaded to attend. But the result in either case is nearly always the same—attendance at one camp is enough, and the boy who once gets there can almost always be relied upon to repeat the experiment indefinitely. Perhaps, however, I might add that there is yet a third class, namely, those who can never be persuaded to go. They are a small class, and theirs is the loss. Probably they have realized it by now.

Parents are a different matter; they again, may be divided into classes. There is the good British type that thinks camp a grand place for a boy. There is another class which is terribly afraid of damp mattresses, and a third type which somewhat hazily imagines that it is part of a soldier's education to learn to drink and swear and gamble, and fears camp for its sons for that reason! Hot Field Days do lead to an inordinate consumption of lemonade, but bookmakers are not encouraged, and if the concealed tent peg does trap the bare foot and cause a hasty exclamation it is the only opportunity for bad language that can be peculiarly ascribed to camp-life. Nevertheless it is not always easy to persuade parents of these things, nor of the fact that damp mattresses but rarely exist, and when they do, are not so dangerous as they appear in civilian life. The truth is that a wet camp is always a healthy camp, often considerably healthier than a hot and dry one.

Mercifully, however, most parents are of our first type, and all these years their number has been increasing, but it must have been uphill work converting many of the others and at the same time persuading the boys that it was more enjoyable to go and work hard under canvas than to go home for the Summer holidays. Nevertheless it was done. Close on ten thousand Public School boys were actually in camp when the great war broke out as against the two hundred odd who first made trial of the life on Churn Downs.

The Beginning of it All

In 1891 Sir Evelyn Wood, then General Officer Commanding Aldershot Command, invited the Schools to camp in Bourley Bottom. Next year the camp was placed in the grounds of Government House, and there it remained until it grew out of them and was removed to Danger Hill. After 1908 that ground was abandoned for Farnborough Common, and nowadays the Aldershot portion of the O. T. C. uses Mytchett Farm for its annual training. The Aldershot portion is only one-third of all the Schools that go to camp.

No one could have been better disposed to the Public Schools than was Sir Evelyn Wood. His successor, the Duke of Connaught, was equally kind, and he has kept up his interest. As lately as 1910 he reviewed the Schools then in camp at Tidworth Pennings, and I well remember one of my subalterns getting into serious trouble with him at a Field Day in the following week for not knowing the whereabouts of our Cavalry.

But the Regular Army as a whole has naturally been most good to the Public Schools and keenly interested in their training. We all owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to the Rifle Brigade and the Sixtieth for their professional help and guidance in those early camps. Later, they were to have their labour divided amongst the Guards and the Sandhurst Staff, but that was only after the O. T. C. was formed, and the camp divided first into two and then into three commands. For a great many years it was the Rifles and they alone who suffered us gladly and knocked us into shape.

Shortly after the Boer War, the uniforms of the School Corps began gradually to give place to khaki. Hitherto there had been many variations, scarlet, perhaps, preponderating amongst greys and blues and greens, each Corps taking the uniform of the unit to which it was attached. For economic reasons the change was a somewhat slow one, but it was accomplished in time, and now every Corps but one has service kit. Eton have always kept their grey, and it is of a sufficiently neutral tint not to make any change imperative, though doubtless those who wish for an alteration will win the day in the end.

It would be easy in a book of this description, which treats more of present time than of the past, to applaud the former unreservedly at the expense of the latter. To do so would be neither altogether truthful nor altogether just. The number of cadets in training has increased enormously; the number of School Corps has also increased considerably, and both have now an added efficiency and utility. But there was very little wrong with the Schools' Camp as organized by Col. Hoare and his successors and fashioned by the Rifles. In the Public Schools' Brigade—as distinct from the O. T. C.—discipline, smartness and efficiency were growing every year, and the best points of their camp are now the best points of that of the O. T. C. Let no one think that the School Corps, because they have changed their title, have jumped from being nothing in the military way to being everything. They have climbed step by step up the soldier's ladder—they are still climbing and will climb. Lieut.-Col. Hoare, perhaps more than anyone, first put the ladder to their feet and guided them. The War Office has now given us new rungs to reach, and means that we shall top them.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

CHAPTER II

THE BIRTH OF THE O. T. C.

THE good military work of which Public School boys are capable, and to which the success of the Cadet Corps movement clearly witnessed, did not long escape the attention of the War Office. It will have been seen from the preceding chapter that the custom of soldiering grew up gradually in the Schools, and that there were two distinct stages in its growth, namely, from about 1860 to 1900 and from 1900 down to the all-important year of 1908. This year was to see a complete and absolute change in the organization and management of Cadet Corps, a transition from an almost unrecognized existence to a definite position amongst His Majesty's Forces, and a permanent place in the Army list under the direct control of the War Office.

In the years before 1908 the Universities had been in happier case than the Schools. Oxford, Cambridge, and the Inns of Court had been duly recognized Volunteer Battalions, and so, too, had the Eton College Corps. Other Universities had also been connected with the Volunteer movement. But the remaining Schools had been Cadet Corps attached to their County Volunteer Battalions and dependent entirely upon them for such help and guidance as the latter chose to give. In some cases this was not inconsiderable; in others it was practically nothing. There was a system of enrolment by which cadets at school, over the age of seventeen, could become attached to the Local Volunteer Battalion, but only a few Corps took advantage of this opportunity. These cadets had to fire the Volunteer musketry course and to attend camp and a certain number of drills; such duties they were allowed to perform with their School Corps. They received pay whilst under canvas, and certain allowances of outfit and ammunition. The Local Volunteer Battalions did not altogether bless them; they never saw anything of their alleged members except possibly at the Annual Inspection, and their inclusion on their strength led to a large amount of clerical work and correspondence. I remember hearing the Sergt.-Major of a Volunteer Battalion complain that the twenty or so enrolled cadets he had on his books were more trouble to him than the whole of the rest of the Battalion. Nevertheless, such grants as the Schools received on behalf of these cadets were their sole outside source of revenue. Every other penny for the maintenance of the Cadet Corps came from the School itself. This point I shall refer to again. It is said to be difficult to get anything in this world for nothing. The British Public certainly got a good deal of military training done in the Public Schools at no expense whatever to themselves. Both in the Boer War and in the present war they reaped the benefit of it. There are many officers and men in our great New Armies to-day who bless the training of long ago which they did in a Cadet Corps, imperfect as it may have been. These do not find a place in this book, for they were not members of the O. T. C., which was only born in 1908. But they must be placed to the credit side of the Schools and Universities and of those in authority who worked under far harder and more discouraging conditions than we of a later generation did or do.

Financially, of course, a considerable part of what is now the Senior Division of the O. T. C. was far better off than the Schools were. As Volunteer Battalions with all their members enrolled, they had an annual income from the Government. But it cannot be pretended that at Oxford or Cambridge at any rate volunteering was popular. The opprobrious name of "Bug-shooter" was scornfully bestowed upon those who accepted service, and they were looked upon as harmless but lacking in intelligence. Military work, in fine, was not "the thing," and that is the whole story in a nutshell. There were, however, exceptional cases. Thus Edinburgh University was then, as now, renowned for its artillery unit, and Pembroke College, Cambridge, with a strong and very efficient company, amongst its many interests always paid keen attention to military matters. Keble College, Oxford, too, was also remarkably successful, both in the number and ability of its Volunteers. On the other hand, at one of the Universities a famous company, drawn from four of the wealthiest and most popular colleges, was never known to produce more than twenty members for a parade! Even the Inns of Court, which had done good service in South Africa and was certainly second to none amongst Volunteer Battalions, was by no means up to strength. Alone among all the contingents, both Senior and Junior, the "Devil's Own" and Cambridge University claim battle honours; but they cannot hope to add further titles to their "South Africa 1900-1901." All contingents of the O. T. C., both Senior and Junior, are now Instructional Corps—as such they will never step out to the sound of the guns, though an enormous number of their individual members must by now be familiar with the din of battle.

THE LATE MAJOR CHARLETON MERRICK, D.S.O.

The Birth of the O. T. C.

As with the Universities, so with the Schools in the time immediately previous to 1908. Some of their Cadet Corps were very strong and very good, and others were, to say the best of them, a little unorthodox when judged from a military standpoint. Speaking generally, soldiering in the educational world was at a somewhat low ebb; it badly needed a stimulus, a fillip, and the notice of the official eye. What is even more important, such military training as then was proceeding at School and University was developing along the wrong lines and with no definite end in view. Schoolboys and undergraduates were wanted in the future as officers rather than privates; when they went out into the larger world it was unlikely that they would continue to serve as the latter, and there was nothing then to suggest to them that their hand should be ready to grasp a sword. The moment was ripe for the formation of the O. T. C. and, as is usual in our history, the right men were waiting to give it to us.

Like many other splendid schemes, this idea of the O. T. C. was very simple. It was merely this. Our Universities all over the United Kingdom were to form the Senior Division, our Schools the Junior Division. Both Divisions were to work solidly for one object alone, and that was to keep up the supply of Officers in the Special Reserve and the Territorial Force. All training was to be undertaken with this end in view; the name of the Corps at once disposed of it as a fighting force, even if its members had all been of an age to take the field. But the work it had to perform was of tremendous importance. Much, very much was asked of our Public Schools and 'Varsities. That in itself was a good move, and looking back now over seven years, the last one of stupendous interest, I do not think that the Army Council asked in vain.

I was present on that hot Midsummer Day at the War Office when the whole project was laid before the Commanding Officers of School Corps by Sir Edward Ward. Nothing could have been clearer than his statements; nothing really more satisfactory from our point of view; nothing which promised a brighter outlook for those who cared for military training and work. Lord Haldane also came into the meeting and spoke to us, and it was easy to see how both he and Sir Edward Ward were heart and soul in the proposals they were fathering. Success was obvious from the outset. The whole matter had been most carefully thought out and planned; the actual details were waiting for us—there was really nothing to discuss. But where many schoolmasters are present lack of discussion is improbable, and if there are head masters amongst them, as in this case, impossible. One of the latter was at great pains to find out how the War Office was going to compensate the Schools for the stupendous amount of extra time they were being asked to spend on things military. He did not see that the obligation was on our side, and that the Army Council were really conferring a priceless benefit upon the Public Schools in distributing within their walls a systematic, regulated, and most carefully supervised modicum of military training.

Another questioner rose, of lower scholastic title, but happier intuition; he questioned Lord Haldane closely as to whether this scheme of training in the Public Schools was to be concurrent with a National Scheme of cadet training in the Elementary Schools. That had originally been part of the idea, but already it was politically dead, and Lord Haldane told his interrogator so in well-chosen words.

The Committee which was assembled by the War Office in October 1906 to consider the deficiency of officers in the Reserve of Officers, the Yeomanry, the Militia and the Volunteers, recommended the formation of the Officers' Training Corps and that the names of its members should be chronicled.

In the somewhat stilted official language, its duties were to consider "the various schemes for the creation of a Reserve of Officers which have been submitted to the Army Council and to report upon the methods best suited to supply the large deficiency of Officers now existing." This Committee reported in 1907.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

The Committee consisted of the following—

Chairman

Colonel Sir E. W. D. WARD, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary of State for War.

Members

Professor T. HUDSON BEARE, B.A., B.Sc. London, Regius Professor of Engineering and Convener of the Military Committee, Edinburgh University.

Professor G. C. BOURNE, M.A., D.Sc. Oxon., D.L., late Colonel Commanding 4th Batt. The King's (Shropshire Light Infantry).

The Rev. A. A. DAVID, M.A., Headmaster of Clifton College.

Colonel H. J. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, commanding C.U.V.R.C.

Major-General T. S. EWART, C.B., Director of Military Operations, late Military Secretary.

Lieut.-Colonel the Lord LOVAT, C.V.O., C.B., D.S.O., commanding Lovat's Scouts.

Mr. G. P. WRIGHT, Finance Department, War Office.

Brigadier-General H. H. WILSON, Commandant Staff College, late Assistant Director of Staff Duties ; and

Mr. B. M. DRAPER of the War Office as Secretary.

The Committee received much active sympathy and very material help from the authorities of the Universities and the Head Masters of the Public Schools.

We must look for a while into the chief proposals of the Army Council in the matter of the O. T. C. if we would realize how great a change was to be brought into life at University and School. Very largely the affair was an educational one, but the addition of the Inns of Court to the Senior Division prevented it being entirely so, and added greatly to the latter's strength. The natural step from School to 'Varsity would in many cases mean the passing of a boy from the Junior to the Senior Division and the continuance of his military training. But in these days there are a great number of boys who go straight to the City or to business when they leave school, and not these alone, but many others, the Inns of Court was able to take in hand and so play the part of military stepmother.

The greatest change of all came from the fact that the new Corps was henceforward to be directly under the War Office and no longer dependent on such impetus as its various departments might or might not receive from local military units, which already had their hands more than full with their own affairs. Everything, too, was to be standardized; a definite musketry course fixed; a definite modicum of drills performed by every cadet; attendance at camp was to be almost compulsory, and an annual grant to be paid over each year by the War Office to every contingent in proportion to its efficiency. A money payment was no new thing for the old Volunteer Corps, but it came as a delightful surprise to the old Cadet Corps, while even to the former it was to be on a much more generous scale. Annual Inspections were previously, in the Schools' case at any rate, matters of a somewhat farcical nature and of very spasmodic occurrence, but they were now to be carried out with regularity and rigidity and by a Staff Officer from the War Office.

Good as these innovations were, they were excelled by the name and intentions of the Corps thus to be re-born. Volunteer detachments had as their only stimulus to enlistment the prospect of invasion, a prospect always remote in the minds of the British, but nowhere quite so remote as along the tow-path of Oxford or around the goal-posts at Cambridge. As for examinations, so for war, it is a British custom to prepare overnight or early next morning. The Cadet Corps had even less to excite them; invasion or no invasion there was little prospect of their actual use, and it is not all boys that can see the advantages of education for education's sake or future events. But the suggestion in the name of "The Officers Training Corps" that there really was a need for officers, and that every member was to be trained to fit himself as a leader of men and as an important and desired servant of the Empire, was sufficient and more than sufficient to arouse both the undergraduate and the schoolboy mind. And neither the one nor the other seemed repelled at the idea of more examinations added to the already over-long list, but rather to approve of the implied seriousness in the addition. In a good cause—and there are few of them—one can suffer even examinations gladly.

Certificate A and Certificate B—the first for the Junior Division and both for the Senior Division—were no small part of the new scheme. To secure the first it is necessary to pass two written papers as well as a practical examination in drill, tactics, and musketry; the second demands a written knowledge of tactics and military law, and practical ability in the former and in drill. Possession of these certificates implies many advantages to those taking commissions. Thus “A” reduces the period of probationary training for an officer joining the Special Reserve, may exempt an officer in the Territorial Force from the examination for promotion to the rank of Lieutenant, and gives to the candidate for Sandhurst or Woolwich an assured 200 marks. “B” further reduces the probationary training in the Special Reserve, and in the case of the Territorial Force may exempt an officer from the examination for the rank of Captain, while to those who join the Special Reserve it offers a gratuity of £35. Nor were these examinations confined to Infantry. The new Corps was to embrace Artillery, Cavalry, Medical and Veterinary Units, and for all of these there were special tests with corresponding advantages.

The success of the O. T. C. from the first moment of its institution must, I think, have astounded even its originators. But that success must be strictly analysed. Almost at once Military Service was rendered popular at both School and University. Both in the Senior and in the Junior Division, new contingents were formed to a remarkable extent, and every previously existing organization added greatly to its strength, except in the few rare instances where such addition was impossible. The number of cadets undergoing military training must within a very short space of time have been doubled. Such increase, however, was very far from being the sole end of the War Office. The object to be gained was an increase in the number of officers joining the Territorial Force and the Special Reserve. Should the Training Corps fail in that, it would have to be regarded from the military standpoint as a failure, though unofficially it might remain a gigantic success from the point of view of National Service. It did not, however, fail; most undoubtedly it produced officers for the Special Reserve and the Territorial Force, and produced them in far greater numbers than had hitherto been coming in. What is more, it induced many boys to enter Woolwich and Sandhurst who without the stimulating influence of their O. T. C. would never have thought about a military career. Even the Authorities expressed themselves as satisfied. Few of those intimately associated with School and University can have been comfortably certain that the Corps was supplying a sufficiency of officers during the years 1908-1914. Nevertheless, the men were ready waiting their call, which came in August of the latter year. The moment it was heard a continuous stream of officers poured into all branches of His Majesty's Forces. A flood it was, rather than a stream, and the O. T. C. was exactly six years old! But that story must be left to a later chapter.

It will be easily understood that with a greater efficiency demanded, and with actual examinations impending, military training was to occupy much more time than had previously been given to it in an overcrowded School time-table. Nor was the case different at the Universities, and in both instances more attention was certainly paid to soldiering than had hitherto been the case. It was not by any means sufficient, as will be allowed when one realizes that a good School Corps still spent only about two hours on drill and tactics a week with perhaps another hour's indoor instruction added. But in fairness we must add to this attenuated time-table the many hours spent upon the ranges and the all-important ten days in camp of continuous military work. In the Senior Division the latter extended to fifteen days, but the week's average of work was considerably less than in the Junior Division. Under the circumstances the results as regards efficiency and knowledge which have been obtained are very remarkable indeed. But that they might have been better in everything except the ready response when the hour struck, I would most emphatically assert.

The transition from Cadet Corps to Officers' Training Corps made considerable difference to those who held commissioned rank in the former. Naturally the Officers at Oxford and Cambridge, Edinburgh, and in the Inns of Court were already Officers in the Territorial Force. Cadet Corps Officers, however, though commissioned, were simply Cadet Officers. Henceforward they became Officers of the Territorial Force (unattached list) with the same liabilities to service as the other officers of that force, and with the same regulations binding upon them as to examinations to pass for promotion and in other matters. In previous days some of the Cadet Corps Officers had held commissions in the Volunteer Force as well as in their school organization. That was still the case when war broke out, for a fair number of O. T. C. Officers held commissions both in their own Training Corps and also in some Special Reserve or Territorial Battalion. Such service is practically impossible for the Senior Officers, though at the moment of writing I can remember four officers actually commanding contingents who also held commissioned rank in other branches of His Majesty's Forces before the war. Anyone who undertakes this double task must be a veritable glutton for military work, one who is content to occupy his whole spare time with it the year round, a superman in fact—and we are proud to number supermen amongst us in the O. T. C.

The Army Council took a broad view of the terms "University" and "Public School" in forming the O. T. C. It was open to all educational establishments to offer themselves for acceptance, and few in the early stages were rejected provided they could show some reasonable hope of success and some tolerably good facilities for training. All the Universities and a huge majority of the Schools came in at once, and so full is the Junior Division to-day that membership is now exceedingly difficult to obtain, although the Corps has not yet been definitely closed to fresh aspirants. In the case of the Junior Division, I have heard much criticism of this "open arms" attitude of the authorities, but both from a military and a political point of view it was undoubtedly a wise one. Nothing would have been more difficult than to say to any School, "Your establishment is not worthy to provide a contingent to the O. T. C." unless it had proved its unworthiness. This could not have been proved until it had had the opportunity to try. On the other hand, nothing is easier—and the regulations make full preparation for such action—than to say, "You have been tried and found wanting—depart from amongst us." I am very strongly of opinion that action should be quickly taken in cases where Schools have shown themselves, after a period of probation, to be lacking in discipline or efficiency or quite inappreciative of the distinction they enjoy in belonging to the O. T. C. The standard of the O. T. C. cannot be kept too high; its honour is as warmly valued by us who serve it as the honour of any Regiment in the Army is treasured by its officers.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

CHAPTER III

ORGANIZATION AND FINANCE

As suggested in the last chapter, it is open to any University or School in the United Kingdom to apply to the Army Council for inclusion in the O. T. C., providing that they can show an enrolled strength of at least one officer and thirty cadets. In the case of the Senior Division, a University wishing to join must also possess a committee of military education. Such applications are considered by the Army Council with direct reference to the applicant's likelihood of carrying out efficiently the work prescribed and increasing the supply of officers for the Special Reserve and Territorial Force. The Irish contingents are directly under the General-Officer-Commanding-in-Chief in Ireland, but the remainder are under the War Office, and the Chief of the Imperial General Staff directs the training. Contingents, though not officially connected with any local units, except in the limited sense that will be noted in a later paragraph, are advised to take full advantage of such opportunities for training as the latter may offer them. Officers of the O. T. C. have the same liability for service as officers of the Territorial Force, and, indeed, belong to that force unless they also hold commissions in the Special Reserve. Neither Senior nor Junior Cadets have any legal liability for service, and they are not required to take the oath of allegiance. The terms of enrolment of all cadets are left to officers commanding contingents.

Though they may vary in special cases, the general system in Senior Contingents is that cadets enroll for two years and then for each succeeding year, as opportunity may offer. A cadet in the Senior Division can resign at the end of the first year by making good such pecuniary losses as his resignation means to his contingent. In the Junior Division there is no contract as to service; a cadet resigns at will, though he may have some moral difficulty in thus approaching his commanding officer. Should he also meet with physical difficulty, the responsibility is not assigned, but it is in point of fact an exceedingly rare thing for any cadet to resign from the Junior Contingent. It is so rare that I question if there are any local rules to meet the case. Masters employed on the staff of schools are allowed to enroll, if intending subsequently to take commissions, while cadets may be appointed to the status of cadet officers. Though the latter have no official position outside their own contingent, the association of the two foregoing possibilities opens up to a cadet the chance of having his Form-Master in his platoon. But it is a situation which does not lead to the difficulties that might be anticipated. On the whole, it is more common to find masters serving in the ranks than to find boys as cadet officers. Opinions differ widely as to the wisdom of the latter step, but, under the four-company organization, it is liable to become more generally adopted than it was under the old system. A platoon commander has a more definite responsibility than ever the half-company commander had, and, rightly or wrongly, in the O. T. C. the section commander used to gain more experience than did the half-company commander. But there will always be difficulties about making boys cadet officers. The chief of these is experienced in camp, where such boys have no recognition, yet, if they are put back to non-commissioned rank, they must take the place of others who have hitherto been doing the work. In my opinion the most satisfactory course to adopt is to give cadets the command of a platoon wherever possible, but not to promote them above non-commissioned rank. The question of promotion is in all its stages left to the discretion of Commanding Officers, subject to the proviso that no boy may receive two stripes who has not attended camp.

In the matter of help from Regular Officers, the Senior Contingents, as containing material more nearly approaching the end of preliminary training, and more likely quickly to be transformed into commissioned rank, are far more generously treated than are the Junior Contingents. Large Senior Contingents have a Regular Officer supplied to them as Adjutant, and, when such contingents are small, one Adjutant is appointed to minister to a group. Junior Contingents may, in certain cases, also have a Regular Officer as Adjutant—at their own expense. They are at liberty to apply for assistance to their nearest depot, and the expenses of such officers as may visit them are not borne by the contingent unless such visits exceed ten in the military year. Senior Contingents also are supplied with Sergt.-Instructors at the rate of one such instructor for every Squadron or Battery, or every 1-2 companies. The Junior Contingents have to bear the whole expense of their instructors to whatever number they may find it necessary to employ them. Both to the Senior and Junior Divisions the Authorities supply a free grant of arms, and an annual and generous supply of ammunition, cleaning material, and many accessories useful for training. Much interesting literature also finds its way free of all cost to every orderly room, in the way of training manuals and official books.

It will be readily admitted that the officers of the O. T. C.

Organization and Finance

have most responsible work to do. Consequently every opportunity is given them to attend courses of instruction at various training centres, to witness important events like company training with the Regular Army, to attend Grand Manœuvres, and, in fine, to fit themselves as best they may for their duties. Staff rides, too, under the direction of the War Office, are frequently organized during holidays, and in camp all officers have additional opportunities of instruction from the very best of Regular Officers. During attendance at any of the above, the O. T. C. Officer is paid on the scale of his Army rank, and receives in addition the ordinary allowances that are due for messing, and when not lodged in public quarters; otherwise, he receives not one penny for his ordinary routine of military work. In this he is treated in the same way as the Territorial Officers, but I question very much if any Territorial Officer—or, for that matter, any Regular Officer—has the incessant round of duties which fall to the lot of the officer commanding an O. T. C. The latter's working days are some 250 in each year, exclusive of any "holiday" he may take at Hythe, Aldershot, Chelsea, or a similar centre. He has duties of organization, of instruction, of supervision, and, withal, a voluminous correspondence not unattended by a mass of book-keeping. If he is fortunate enough to have plenty of Sergt.-Instructors and other officers to help him, he may so detail his labours in accordance with the energy of the former and the good nature of the latter that they are not oppressive, but it is good, honest hard work for all that. As one peculiarly blessed in the afore-mentioned ways, and also not over-impressed by the importance of the Latin Grammar or German without Tears (save the mark), I offer no personal complaint. Nevertheless, there are some officers who must find the burden a very heavy one, though it is rare to hear one word of grumbling. It must never be forgotten that the O. T. C.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

Officer, in the intervals between parade-ground and range, between range and orderly room, has also to find time for trifles like the binomial theorem, the effect of H_2SO_4 on blue litmus paper, or a learned discourse on the meaning of a meaningless Greek chorus. Little as those of whom I write will thank me for the remark, I cannot believe that so much purely gratuitous service was ever given to a great object as has been given to the O. T. C. movement by its officers, and that in spite of the fact that their hours of so-called leisure, in which they must do their military work, are hemmed in with other important tasks.

The annual income of an O. T. C., as far as the Government grant goes, is dependent almost entirely upon the number of efficient cadets it contains. Conditions of efficiency vary more in degree than in kind in the two Divisions. In order to satisfy the requirements, Senior cadets have to attend at least fifteen parades a year, to undergo the prescribed training in musketry, and to attend camp for not less than eight days. Junior cadets must be present at a minimum of thirty drills, they must undergo the prescribed training in musketry, and attend the Annual Inspection. They need not go to camp, but when the efficiency grant is claimed for a certain number of cadets it is only valid to its full extent if half the number claimed for have been under canvas during the year.

In the Senior Division each unit receives annually £2 for every efficient cadet; it receives in addition a half-capitation grant for every efficient cadet above the number for which the annual grant was last paid. Contingents are also entitled to draw a certain number of great-coat allowances (£1); they receive £5 for every cadet who obtains Certificate B, and also a payment of 3s. a day for each one of their members who attends camp. They are thus able to give a free issue of uniform to each cadet when he joins, and to take him to camp without mulcting him for that privilege. Senior Contingents differ somewhat with regard to their interior economy, and in some cases a charge is made for uniforms. Speaking generally, however, the annual expense to each cadet who joins the Senior Division is not more than a modest yearly subscription of some five shillings, together with such private and incidental expenses which, though not strictly necessary, always crop up in connection with military service. The Inns of Court are financed as a Territorial Battalion, and not as an O. T. C., and charge an annual subscription of one guinea per head.

In the Junior Division things are very different. Here we have only one pound a year paid from public funds for each efficient candidate, no payment for camp attendance, no presentation and upkeep of Regular Officers and Sergt.-Instructors, no grant for the obtaining of Certificate A, but, instead, a £10 allowance for every cadet who, having gained that Certificate, takes a commission in the Special Reserve or Territorial Force. Cadets are not allowed to enroll in the Junior Division until they are thirteen; they cannot become efficient in a pecuniary sense until they are fifteen. The capitation grant, then, is seldom recoverable upon all the members of a Junior Contingent, but a unit two hundred strong should probably earn about £170 a year. What, then, are the expenses? How are they covered by the annual grant? To answer this question fairly, we must realize that there is always the original outlay in the starting of a corps. The Authorities now give some small assistance to new contingents that are formed if they require it, but none of the older contingents have ever received any payment under this heading. The initial cost of uniform alone for a Corps of 200 boys would not fall far short of £400 for bare necessities; it might easily amount to £500. But when once the start has been made, if an exchange bureau for uniforms is instituted to meet the case of the ever-growing boy, the annual expenditure on clothes might be as low as £50. It might be considerably more, but with the average number of recruits coming in and with the usual wear and tear going on, it could not very well be much less. The wages of one Sergt.-Instructor—and two would be too many—are at least £100. In a corps two hundred strong, not less than one hundred would be expected to attend camp, and the cost would be about £150. Add to this “two Field Days” away from home each year, and we get another £100 disbursed, and a total for the year spent upon necessities alone of £400 as against £170 of public grant. We will, however, add to this latter sum three bonuses of £10 each for three cadets, who, having obtained Certificate A when at school, have since taken commissions in the Special Reserve or Territorial Force. Even so, we shall find that the School has to find £200 a year in hard cash to pay for its military training, and that without the slightest extravagance. Nevertheless, things accounted as luxuries are almost essential to contingents of the O. T. C. in a sound and healthy condition, and if we add on to our bill for what we must have things which we might do without if we were anxious to show what Spartans we could be, we shall get a rather alarming total. Thus on bands and band instructors, on Bisley and rifles, on ranges and their upkeep, on armouries and their fittings, on extra Field Days, and various other items of instruction or equipment, it is exceedingly easy to make away with an extra three or four hundred pounds a year. Five hundred a year, then, over and above outside income, would not be an outrageous estimate for what a Corps of two hundred boys may cost if run upon generous and up-to-date lines, with no stinting of necessities and with no refusal of apparent luxuries. Naturally, however, it can be done on considerably less, and very often has to be, but in no case can a contingent

Organization and Finance

live upon its annual grant. The excess of expenditure over income has, therefore, to be made good, and this is done by the boys themselves, or, to speak more exactly, by their parents. In most cases an entrance fee is charged to cover the initial cost of uniform, and that is followed by a terminal subscription. Both of these items vary considerably, and I believe that occasionally the former is dispensed with altogether. Let us, however, take the case of a typical Public School, and see what is the most a boy's parents will have to pay for military training. We will put the entrance fee at £2, and the term's subscription at 10s., camp at 30s., Field Days away from home at £1. This will make an expenditure of £5 to be met by each parent for the first year, and £3 for subsequent years, and bearing in mind that, quite apart from training, the boy will out of this money be kept for ten days of the holidays while he is in camp, I think it can be urged with complete justice that both boy and parents get their money's worth to the utmost farthing. I have purposely taken rather high rates; some Schools charge considerably less, one or two even a little more, but the training a boy gets in a good contingent of the O. T. C. would not be dear if we doubled or even trebled the bill that I have taken in the typical case. It is difficult to write of these things in terms of pounds, shillings and pence. Camp alone, as an educational factor, is beyond price. While, however, it is easy to urge that those who can well afford to pay for these things are wise from their own point of view to do so, a different situation arises in cases where parents are not quite so well-to-do. Education as offered by the better Public Schools is an expensive affair—every "extra" helps to make it more so. And in any future consideration of the Junior Division of the O. T. C. it may be advisable to readjust the financial side so that it cannot fall too heavily upon the less fortunate. Non-membership of the O. T. C. is a loss both to any individual boy and to the nation at large, and the best embryo officers are not always those whose parents have the largest motor-cars. On the other hand, those contingents which have to cut down their expenses to avoid asking for liberal subscriptions from parents must suffer to a certain degree in efficiency. Financial stability I would count as the first essential of a really successful Corps.

But it must not for a moment be thought that any extravagance is officially countenanced in the O. T. C. Officers upon joining receive an outfit allowance which secures them service dress, and in the Junior Division that and that alone are they officially required to wear. They are not even supposed to wear "undress," and if I cannot help thinking I have seen officers so garbed in camp at Mytchett or Tidworth, or Rugeley, my eyes have probably played me false. In the Senior Division full dress for levées or ceremonial purposes is permitted, as also is a mess dress and "undress." Cadets, however, of either division must be content with service uniform; no walking-out dress is permitted, at least in so far as public funds are used to purchase it. Only by cap, badges, and by brass or black metal lettering on the shoulder straps can the different contingents be distinguished, and I believe that Eton alone now wears any other uniform than the official "drab," they having remained ever faithful to their grey and light-blue facings. In the Junior Division some Schools have retained the badge of the regiment to which they were attached as Cadet Corps, while others wear their school crest as a cap badge. Badges of rank and for skill at arms are generally the same as those authorized for the Territorial Force, but the O. T. C. has some which are peculiar to itself. Thus a musketry-efficiency badge for those who qualify in the annual course is a rifle in worsted embroidery worn horizontally on the left forearm. Above this, a cadet who represents his school in the Ashburton Shield may wear the school crest in gold embroidery, providing such badge does not exceed one and a half inches in diameter. A hollow diamond of white piping on red cloth worn on the right forearm denotes efficiency for the year. In the Harrow contingent this badge is white on dark blue. A marksman's badge can only be worn by a cadet who has qualified as a marksman according to the conditions of the Territorial Force. The full records of every cadet, his annual drills, his attendance or non-attendance at the annual inspection or camp, his musketry performances, etc. etc., are all entered carefully into Army Book 214, and at the end of his time of service he is presented with his discharge certificate, which tells of his military career to date.

No chapter on the organization of the O. T. C. would be complete without reference to the happy relations that exist between the War Office and the Corps. New to both sides were those relations which commenced in October 1908. As to how they have found us it is not for me to suggest, but we on our part have ever experienced a ready sympathy and help, a marvellous understanding of our internal and private arrangements, a complete readiness to consult our convenience wherever possible, an unfailing interest in our work, and a generous appreciation of our efforts. No time or trouble has been spared to make soldiers of us, and only the most perfect tact could have so completely satisfied some two hundred organizations, each of them in itself a little world. Great is the debt of the O. T. C. to the War Office, and may we be privileged to pay it to the full! As to the living, it would not become the author to write particularly of his superior officers. Of those who are gone, we mourn in common Major Meiklejohn, V.C., who died a V.C.'s death in Hyde Park in 1912, and Major Merrick, who, within six months, shared the fate of so many pioneers of aviation. The present war has taken from us Major Percival and other officers connected in one way or another with the training of the O. T. C. From the heights of Olympus may they look down upon their pupils at the work of vengeance! By way of tribute, their portraits are included in this volume, and the tablet set up to Major Meiklejohn's memory is also illustrated.

CHAPTER IV

THE O. T. C. IN CAMP

THERE is little doubt that the most important period of the year for the O. T. C. is the ten or fifteen days which its contingents spend under canvas. Removed altogether from the influences of ordinary everyday life, uniformed and under strict discipline, clearly understanding that the first requirements of the moment are always military ones, the members of the Corps must necessarily learn in these days as much again as they can in the scattered hours that go to make up the training of the rest of the year.

And to this obvious result of camp must be added other considerations no less important, chief of which is supervision and command in varying degree by the very best of Regular Officers. How much the Junior Division owe, for instance, to the officers of the Brigade of Guards, the Rifle Brigade and the King's Royal Rifles, and of late years also to the Sandhurst staff, it would be impossible to suggest. The Senior Division is only in less degree beholden to the Regular Officer for assistance in camp, for they have, in addition to their Adjutants appointed from the Staff, other officers from the same source attached to them for this period of training in the proportion of one or two per Battalion.

Nowadays, moreover, camp means numbers, and numbers mean much in added military endeavour and fulfilment. The Senior Division sends practically every cadet under canvas, and if contingents are small they are joined with others to make full Battalions. In the Junior Division several Schools meet together for training. Thus in both cases the spirit of wholesome rivalry creeps in, and the intangible idea of the "honour of the regiment" is awakened.

I cannot hope to give all the camping arrangements of the O. T. C., for each year the arrangements are liable to vary both in locality and in grouping. I can only aim at suggesting a broad outline of the organization. In the Senior Division there are, in some cases, Artillery, Cavalry, and Infantry to be dealt with, and it is rare for all three Arms to have the opportunity of working together in the annual camp period. Usually the Artillery will go independently to Bulford or Larkhill, or some other suitable centre, while the Cavalry and Infantry combine in their dwelling if not in their working arrangements.

Medical, Engineer, and Army Service Corps Units, where they exist, are also separately provided for in some place valuable from their special point of view. Oxford and Cambridge do not go under canvas together; various camping grounds in the neighbourhood of Aldershot and Salisbury are their usual areas. The Inns of Court, being a Territorial Battalion as well as an Officers Training Corps, is grouped for the camp period in the latter capacity and accompanies its own Brigade in the 2nd London Division for summer work. Camberley, Blackdown, Salisbury Plain, and Abergavenny have been amongst the localities recently occupied by this contingent, and they usually go into camp later in the year than the Universities, whose training period follows the ending of their Summer Term. In cases where University Contingents are smaller than those already mentioned, they train together: the grouping of Manchester, Leeds, Nottingham, Birmingham, Bristol, and Sheffield is a case in point.

Very naturally the Junior Division adheres to the principle of combined training, though before the birth of the O. T. C. Eton used to go to camp apart from all the other Public Schools. The English contingents are now arranged in groups, and each year the combination of these groups is altered so as to give all Schools a chance of meeting one another on some occasion in the three years' circle. The training centres are Mytchett Farm (Farnborough), Hagley Park (Rugeley), and Tidworth Pennings (Andover), and from forty to fifty contingents are detailed for each place, with a combined strength in each instance of between two and three thousand cadets. Different arrangements have to be made in the case of Scotland and Ireland; the Scotch Schools train at Barry, and camps giving accommodation to about a thousand cadets are held at different times of the year. In Ireland camping centres have been held at Kinsale Barracks and Mosney, but the number of contingents in Ireland is small, and they are not in themselves of great strength. Altogether in the Junior Division close on four hundred officers and between eight and nine thousand cadets annually give up the first ten days of their Summer holidays to military work. Except for the fact that each year sees some unfortunate contingents debarred from attending owing to infectious disease, the number would be a clear ten thousand.

It is, however, a pleasant sign of the times that restriction in the attendance at camp of a school which has had a case or cases of infectious disease amongst its numbers during term time is becoming less severe, inasmuch as the school doctor has now some say in the matter. But it is at least questionable whether all the childish diseases might not safely be ignored in this connection, for the loss to a contingent of its annual camp training is very serious. Schools in quarantine might be allowed to attend subject to a careful daily medical inspection, and, if necessary, members of it might be debarred from attending the nightly "sing-song." Elsewhere the risk of infection in an outdoor life must be infinitesimal except to those who share the same tent with the unlucky victim. In any case, owing to the short duration of camp and to the general dispersal at its close, there can be no fear of a widespread outbreak as a result of a youthful soldier developing chickenpox or the like whilst endeavouring to serve his King. Most schoolmasters will be familiar with a strange malady called Rubela; for twenty-four hours the patient has a red face and for fifteen days afterwards he lives in ease, idleness, perfect health, mischief and quarantine. It would be difficult to establish how many cadets, content with this apology for a disease, have been prevented from doing their annual training, but it must be some quite extravagant number. Infectious diseases in this connection might profitably be classified and treated according to their merits.

The work done by the Senior Division is naturally somewhat more strenuous than that done by the younger cadets, but on the other hand, the Seniors have, in some cases, a greater luxury of living. They sleep four in a tent as against eight in the Schools Camps, and they also have their meals in a marquee. Some such idea has frequently been suggested in the case of the Junior Division, but so far they have continued cheerfully and uncomplainingly to mingle their food with the dust of toil in the lines. There is much to be said for this conservatism, in that it gives the luxuriously living Public School boy a taste of the hardships of life and teaches him a little of what military exigencies may demand of him in after time. On the other hand, messing in the company lines may, unless it is managed very well and carefully by each contingent, easily lead to some cadet less assertive than his companions going without his fair share of a meal. Moreover, it really entails an extraordinary amount of tidying up after each repast and a quite appreciable waste of good food. There is none too much spare time in any camp period, and the labour spent on the lines is very honest and very good without the picking up of bread-crumbs and of those other things which have no occasion to fall from the campaigner's table. The stuff of which British schoolboys are made does not need any education in how to rough it. It is innate in them to adapt themselves to circumstances—their readiness to do so is written in all the Empire's history—it is a characteristic of the breed and not a lesson which has to be learned. But once again, I would admit the other side of the argument and agree that the best officers are those who have been through all things experienced under canvas by the men whom they will some day command.

If the Senior Division in camp is somewhat harder worked and catered for more daintily than the Junior Division, evidence does not suggest that they have a happier or more profitable time in their annual training. Perhaps it stands to reason that the gathering together of some fifty Schools must lead to a more interesting event than can be enjoyed by a single University or by small groups of them. There is the tremendous stimulus of numbers and of rivalry, which is far keener amongst Schools than among their more grown-up cousins, and there is also, for many of the Junior cadets, a wonderful and new experience quite outside anything previously known. In organization and management the camps of the Junior Division are as nearly perfect as possible, and their importance in the education of a portion of the country's youth is absolutely unique. I had the pleasure, a year or two ago, of taking a French Staff Officer round the tents at Mytchett Farm. He was extraordinarily impressed, and at first thought that the boys were compelled to attend. When he heard that they came voluntarily he was amazed, but, when I further told him that they paid to come, I am sure he thought I had never learnt properly to speak the truth.

Nowadays, there is nothing very astonishing in the fact that boys should cheerfully pay for ten days' work in camp. Many of them readily admit that it is the best time of the year, and those who have other strong interests cannot complain that it keeps them from grouse, partridge, or cub-hunting. These things happily await the end of camp, and they are the crown of work performed. Cricket, however, is a difficulty, and among the changes for which we may look with reason after the war should be an alteration in the date of the School Matches now played during camp time and also of the annual fixtures which the M.C.C. arrange for chosen members of various Public Schools, most of whom hold important posts in their School Corps. It is not seemly that such strong counter-attractions should be offered at a time when the Schools do the most serious part of their military training. Holiday cricket might well follow the example of that good bird the grouse and enjoy a close time until the tents are struck.

The institution of the Public Schools Camps was by no means built up in a day. It has all the advantages of tradition with none of its drawbacks. Unlike some of the Schools themselves, it has not been afraid of change: it has maintained its strength and shed its weaknesses.

Much as we owe to the officers in the Regular Army, greatly as we appreciate the work they have done for us and with us, their personal influence has been necessarily passing, though the succession of men of like ideas and similarly splendid training has left its mark upon every aspect of camp life. But we must with justice give a large share of the credit for the extraordinary success of camp to the permanent officials, officers of the O. T. C., to men like

Major Ingram of Shrewsbury, Major Parsons of Berkhamsted, and Major Montague Jones of St. Albans. By hard work in season and out, by careful organization and tremendous energy they have planned, plotted and contrived to suit and please all parties, and yet to insist upon no sacrifice of efficiency or essentials. They have been aided, too, by no less enthusiastic brother-officers of the O. T. C. who have guided the wheels of trains or—more congenial of tasks—sampled the vintages that should adorn the tables of the Mess. Upon the Camp Secretaries especially, and next to them upon their Transport Officers, their Quartermasters and their Mess Presidents, depends all the organization of camp in its most unattractive form.

There would, however, be few members of the O. T. C. camp staff who would not wish to give the climax of praise and credit to the Quartermasters of the Regular Army, who have studied our needs and mapped out camps, menus, and management with that genius in their own department which their names guarantee. Major Duff of the R. M. C., Capt. Wright of the Coldstreams, and Lieut. Judge of the Rifles have never yet been associated with a Public School camp which has not been a model of health, convenience, and appetizing fare.

And if in this appreciation I leave to the last the War Office Staff and the Regular Officers who command the Brigade and the Battalions, it is only because the first named are so intimately connected with all the work of the O. T. C. and not merely with camp, and because the latter for the most part change with the changing years. To the Staff we owe the scheme of training, and to the Regular Officer the carrying out of the scheme: both the plan and its performances win annual admiration and respect.

How much the actual work of the Junior Division in camp depends upon the Army Officer will best be realized by the fact that the Brigadier, the Brigade Major, the Battalion

The O. T. C. and the Great War

Commanders and their Adjutants, are all chosen from the Regulars—Guards, Rifles, or Sandhurst. They give us yearly of their best, men who spare themselves not at all, who raise our ideals of military work rather than lower their own, who work assiduously every hour of the day, not only to make soldiering instructive and interesting to all whom they command, but also to instil into the mind of the amateur all that is best in the best of all Armies in the world.

Of actual work in camp there is plenty, and it is now most satisfactorily arranged. The day starts with a short parade for prayers. After breakfast the Battalions march out for field work, which permits of a return about two o'clock, when dinners are served. The short afternoon is left to the boys for various duties and amusements, except for perhaps an hour's lecture on tactics to the N. C. O.'s. The old idea of tiring the boys out in order to keep them quiet has long since disappeared. Discipline is now so good that they can safely be trusted not to "get above themselves" if they do not have a long afternoon's parade in addition to the morning's work. Training goes through a definite course, even though time is short. First the Company, then the Battalion, and finally the Brigade, and the last day's operations are sometimes even on a bigger scale. Night operations also take place once or twice during training. If it is permitted to offer any criticism of the work, it may perhaps be suggested that a daily addition of three-quarters of an hour's really keen close-order drill would be of considerable benefit to all. There are some officers of the O. T. C. who have grown out of close-order drill, and think that their contingents have done so too. I am not amongst them, nor have I any desire for such adolescence, believing that close-order drill is the foundation of all satisfactory work in the field and of all discipline. More especially is this the case with a force like the O. T. C., which only has a limited time for training. Cadets may or may not like close-order work—that matters really very little—but their attitude towards it depends very largely upon how they carry it out. Bad close-order drill handsomely defeats its own object, but the kind of close-order work which we have had, rather too sparingly, in camp must have been of considerable value to all who took part in it.

There is a multitude of off-parade duties which have to be performed by the boys, and they go far to give a real glimpse of military life.

From the humble tent orderly to the Battalion orderly sergeant, each one has almost hourly tasks which help to teach him the work of a soldier. Guards, too, are posted nightly, and to be a member of a smart one is a highly-sought-for privilege. This much amazes regular N. C. O.'s, who see with surprise cadets with sergeants' stripes parading as privates when their position exempts them from duty—"asking for trouble," as the regular soldier has been heard to put it. Perhaps the greatest pride of the camp is the "lines," kept spotlessly clean and arranged in most orderly style. Certainly there is not a camp in the country which could show better arranged kits than those displayed by several of the good contingents in the O. T. C.

When the tents are struck and the boys all gone, a fair epitaph on a departed contingent can be written after viewing the state in which it leaves the ground that has been occupied. It is enough to say that it would not be a good one if it could be written in bread crumbs and pieces of silver paper. But such epitaphs are few and far between.

The evenings in camp are full of incident. Guard mounting, when the Guardsmen are commanding us, is always a most impressive affair and a sight that is watched by hundreds of spectators. The massed bands of the O. T. C. Brigade turn out in force for it, and they gather again later for Tattoo. No mention of the Brigade Band must be made without reference to Sergt.-Major Moody of Eastbourne, who has nursed it for years and educated it into both strength and excellence with untiring interest. Thanks largely to him there are now numberless efficient buglers and drummers in the O. T. C., and the fife is creeping in to struggle for supremacy with the less melodious bugle owing to the admirable example of Whitgift. "Sing-song" in the recreation tent, under the tactful guidance of one or both of our good padres, brings the camp day nearly to its close, and the variety entertainment that nightly draws a packed audience of officers and cadets is perhaps the most popular event of all. "Lights out" sees all the cadets and all the thoughtful officers to bed, and a wonderful silence hangs over the great white camp. Only in the Officers' Mess the more lively spirits—shame upon them—hesitate to end so good a day until another starts.

Visitors' Day, as the only Saturday spent in camp is called, is honoured by mothers, sisters, fathers, aunts and cousins. Usually it starts with a March Past, and that is followed by various competitions for bands, for drummers, buglers, tent-pitchers and signallers. These things are the "side-shows" in the O. T. C. world—they excite much interest and produce much excellence. May they ever be encouraged in all possible ways! Unimportant as they may appear in comparison to field training, they help above all things to keep a contingent alive and awake—they arouse enthusiasm, and they attract attention to useful military accomplishments, none of which ill-becomes a future officer. As a direct influence of these camp competitions, the standard of school bands alone has increased amazingly in past years. And a band is the best Recruiting Sergeant in the world.

Sunday under canvas gives us a short and impressive church parade, which is followed by an inordinate demand for "passes out" to various friends. That day, too, is a most popular one for the many inter-school football matches under both codes of rules, which are a feature of spare time in camp. Stump cricket, with a pail for wicket, keeps busy the otherwise unemployed, and I think that no one regrets the arrival of Monday.

But all days are good in this little transient world, with its rows and rows of tents, its great marquees where dwell photographers and vendors of all things that appeal to the weary body and never wearied stomach, its feet-worn streets and scorched parade grounds. Happy as are the kit-bag-laden crowds that hasten to the station with the rise of the sun on the last day of camp and the first day of well-earned holidays, there are few among them who did not hear with sadness the "Last Post" ringing on the evening air the night before. Alas, that for so many of them it should have sounded, yet again in stern reality, and that never more will they look upon the trim, white-tented streets of Mytchett, Tidworth, or Hagley Park!

The O. T. C. and the Great War

CHAPTER V

THE O. T. C. ON THE RANGES

MUSKETRY is an essential of military training. This point is not always realized, the correct use of the rifle and all that it implies is too often but a side-issue in voluntary soldiering. Too often is it forgotten that the value of a tactical exercise is nothing unless it is combined with the true principles of musketry. Although the actual employment of the rifle, especially in target practices, by no means covers the term "musketry," yet it is the centre-spot around which all that science is grouped. Rifle-shooting, both for its one effective value and for the study of tactics which interest in it arouses, cannot receive too much attention from the youth of the country. And that is why I put so much value on the competitive side of what is both a pastime and a duty, for without it we should have very little to show either at School or University in the way of marksmanship.

Unfortunately the comparative lack of service ranges is a real difficulty in a thickly populated country like our own. Some contingents of the O. T. C., both Senior and Junior, suffer severely from want of proper accommodation: others are peculiarly blessed in the possession of private ranges. In the first case the miniature range helps in a measure to save the situation, and in the second also it is a very valuable assistance, but so far as I am aware few, if any, contingents avail themselves of that useful substitute for the real thing, the thirty yards range. So general is the misunderstanding of this aid to musketry, that perhaps I may be forgiven by expert readers if I explain to the less fortunate that a thirty yards range is not an overgrown miniature range. On the contrary, it is a place where a service rifle with a service cartridge can be used, and it may be built almost anywhere with reasonable cheapness and with perfect safety. A thirty yards range would be a most valuable acquisition for a contingent situated at any considerable distance from a service range, and it provides far better training than can result from the use of the '22 rifle and its diminutive charge. Compared, however, with the numbers of contingents which have good opportunities of firing up to six hundred yards, the proportion of those which can gain access to a field-practice range is lamentably small. If the annual camps could always be placed in close proximity to one of the latter, the training of all ranks would be enormously improved. One collective field practice is worth quite half-a-dozen Field Days, for in the former fire control and fire discipline are stern necessities, in the latter they are but happy accidents.

All cadets of the Senior and Junior Divisions, if they are to become efficient for the military year, must go through the prescribed musketry course of their Division. In the case of the Seniors this consists of either Table A or Table B, Territorial Force, but in cases where range accommodation is insufficient a modified course is fired. Table A, the recruits' course, consists of grouping, snap-shooting, application and firing with a rest at 500 yards. Table B, the trained man's course, covers grouping, snap-shooting, deliberate and rapid fire. The Junior Divisions, where possible, fire exactly the same practices as the Seniors, but there are not a few contingents which, owing to the distance of a service range, have to be content with the miniature course. This has been very cleverly compiled, and its practices are as nearly as possible similar to those of the service range. Instead of rapid fire, however, a cadet has to run a hundred yards and fire five rounds within a given time.

Class firing, as these practices are generally called, is variously viewed, at any rate in peace time, by cadets. Some are really interested, some are frankly bored, some regard it as a very real danger to the great national game of cricket, some look upon it as a duty which it is pleasant to have performed. So long as military work at 'Varsity and School is sandwiched wherever possible amongst a score or so of other interests, so long as a hard-worked staff has to "get through" so many cadets in a limited time, I can see no prospect of genuine interest and real affection for shooting, and subsequently for musketry, gripping the great majority of cadets—which is a pity, because it is hoped that they will become officers.

As soon, however, as we get into the realms of competition shooting all is changed. Here only the enthusiasts are left who spare neither time nor patience to perfect themselves. Rude things are often said about them, not infrequently they are called "pot-hunters," and so they sometimes are, on the understanding that every "pot" they win costs them about three times as much as it is worth. Also it is always conveniently forgotten by those who decry competition shooting that in team shooting—and O. T. C. cadets do little else—a unity and combination is required which is only equalled in the demands of boat-racing. Five men, six, all, indeed, save one, may fail in a cricket match and the hero may carry the others on his back to victory, but there never yet was a shooting team that had room for more than one "passenger." and many have found even that one a cause of defeat. Competition shooting amongst the various contingents of the O. T. C. varies exceedingly in kind. Many contingents have their own private competitions either for individuals or teams, some have both. There are also shooting matches with a trophy for reward confined to certain groups of Universities or Schools. Thus we may instance the Hopkinson-Glazebrook Cup fired for by teams from Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Leeds, Nottingham, and Sheffield Universities. In the six years during which this prize has been fired for, Manchester has been successful three times, and Birmingham University took the cup at the last three meetings.

The Brock Shield was instituted for Scotch Schools, and there is a trophy shot for by Schools in the Eastern Command situated north of the Thames. There is a Public Schools' Cup confined to the Schools of Kent and Sussex and fired for in connection with the South-Eastern District Rifle Meeting, and many other similar events. Competitions of this latter kind have so far been almost entirely under N.R.A. rules. Naturally, however, it is at the annual Bisley Meeting that the Universities and Schools indulge chiefly in rifle-shooting contests. So far, however, there has been no trophy offered for open competition to Senior Divisions of the O. T. C. Oxford and Cambridge continue their rivalry in this as in almost every other field, but I cannot find that any other Senior Division of the O. T. C. has ever competed as such at Bisley. Individuals from various Senior Contingents take part in the open events, but there is unfortunately no team shoot open to them all. Oxford and Cambridge have, however, the Humphry Cup (900, 1000, 1100 yards), and the Chancellor's Plate (200, 500, 600 yards), as well as the Universities' Snap-shooting Match (200 yards) and the Universities' Revolver Match. The first two competitions date back earlier than 1870, and so far Oxford has been the more successful in the Humphry Cup and Cambridge in the Chancellor's. In 1910, Oxford University O. T. C. had the proud privilege of finding the winner of the King's Prize in Corporal F. R. Radice, but it cannot be claimed that rifle shooting flourishes extensively in the Senior Division of the O. T. C. Witness, for instance, the fact that Oxford and Cambridge alone are represented by teams at Bisley, and compare the numbers of those who fire when boys at school with those who keep it up in their undergraduate days. Very largely is the falling off due to consideration of expense, and unfortunately rifle shooting must be reckoned amongst those amusements which cost a lot of money.

In the Junior Division, however, competition rifle shooting flourishes as does nothing else on the whole of the varied time-table of the Public School world, though complaint is sometimes heard of the money that has to be expended in railway fares, new barrels and ammunition. For this excellent state of affairs the fullest acknowledgment must be made to the members of the N. R. A. Council, who have ever made the study of the Schools their special care, who have spared no effort to make admirable arrangements for them at their meeting, and who have done everything in their power to make schoolboys fond of a rifle. How well they have succeeded can clearly be seen when it is stated that over fifty contingents of the O. T. C. shoot shoulder to shoulder against each other at the Bisley Meeting. No other pastime in which Public Schools take part can show anything approaching this result, and, when we realize that rifle shooting is something very much more than a pastime, there is every reason to feel the liveliest satisfaction and to express a very real gratitude to Lord Cheylesmore, Lt.-Col. Crosse, and many others who have "nursed" the school riflemen.

Before going on to the history of the various shooting

THE ASHBURTON SHIELD.

The "Ashburton" Challenge Shield—the "Blue Ribbon" of the Schools' Rifle Shooting—was given in 1861 by the third Baron Ashburton, and has been competed for annually, first at Wimbledon and then at Bisley. In 1861 three schools shot for the Shield, in 1913 fifty-five schools competed.

The O. T. C. on the Ranges

competitions which are maintained by the N. R. A. in the interests of the Junior Division of the O. T. C. we must retire a little over past history. Either at Wimbledon or Bisley the Schools have been shooting against each other for more than fifty years; gradually the numbers have been increasing. In 1861 three Schools shot for the Ashburton, in 1913, fifty-five. As the competitors gathered in strength, it became necessary to form a Committee, and for years Major Godsall ruled it as chairman with the utmost zeal and success. Upon his resignation in 1911, there was found to be a feeling amongst some Public Schools representatives that the N. R. A. conditions were not of a sufficiently military nature in view of the increase of military work inaugurated by the birth of the O. T. C. The majority of the Schools, however, were in favour of leaving things as they were, and a Committee, pledged in no way to interfere with the existing conditions of the Ashburton Shield, was elected with Mr. H. J. Humphry, M.V.O., in the chair, and remains in power to this day.

Briefly, the arguments on either side were as follows: Those who wished for more strictly military conditions of shooting objected to the use of sling and aperture sight and to deliberate firing at known ranges with the result of every shot signalled. The conservatives argued that only under such conditions could there be any competition worthy of the name. They pointed to the signal success of the Ashburton and other competitions, and suggested that a good shot under N. R. A. conditions would prove himself a good shot under all conditions. They also drew attention to the fact that the aperture sight must soon become a battle sight because of its extraordinary effectiveness, and they argued that the competitors were but boys for whom deliberate shooting and use of the sling were stepping-stones of education in the use of the rifle. Both sides were agreed that it was a pity that rich Schools must always have the advantage which money could bring by the purchase of new rifle-barrels every year and more frequent practice, but neither side could show how this could be prevented by any alterations in the conditions. So the latter remain unchanged in any essential point, but it may here be said with confidence that should the suggestions of the Army Council be adopted by the N. R. A., the Public Schools will certainly not ask to be allowed to remain outside any such scheme of alteration. Prophecy is bold, but if ultimately the rules which govern firing for the Ashburton Shield are deliberate firing, no slings, and sights similar to those of the latest pattern service rifle, all parties will be as nearly in agreement as is possible.

But if the new Committee was unwilling to tamper with the Ashburton Shield, it effected a very radical change in the conditions for the Public Schools' Rapid Firing Match, and turned this competition into one on very similar lines to those proposed by its opponents for the conduct of the Ashburton firing. Hitherto the "Schools' Rapid" had been a very unsatisfactory affair. Each team lay down on the two hundred yards firing-point, a target appeared on the end of a pole, and the whole team fired at it simultaneously. This happened seven times, and the competition lacked interest mainly because it was impossible to tell how each individual shot had fared. With the new conditions there is snap-shooting at 200 yards and modified "rapid fire" at 500, and each man has a target to himself. The Schools' Snap-shooting Match, as it is now called, has the makings of an admirable and valuable competition, and its present conditions can readily be rendered more difficult by shortening the time for the exposure of the targets at 200 yards and by increasing the number of rounds that have to be fired in the minute at 500. The beautiful trophy which is held for a year by the winners was the gift of the Daily Graphic five seasons ago. Under the old conditions it has been won by Harrow, Denstone, and Rossall, under the new by Rugby and Lancing. It is, perhaps, permissible to note that in the year of Rugby's victory the same team was second in the Ashburton, while Lancing were fifth in that competition when they won the snap-shooting match. The contention that teams which did well under Ashburton conditions would do well under any other conditions has so far been borne out, and it must be remembered that, in addition to the quicker firing which is necessary for the snap-shooting match, the shooting has to be done with open sights and a rifle unsupported by a sling. In the Ashburton the sling and the aperture sight are both permissible, and a team is allowed eighty minutes at each range (200 yards and 500 yards) in which to fire fifty-six shots.

The latter competition, of course, is considered by the Public Schools to be of the chief importance at Bisley. It was started fifty-four years ago and has been going on each season merrily ever since. There are few prettier sights than Ashburton Day at Bisley, few more exciting things to witness than the firing for the shield, the destination of which is often unsettled until the last shot has been signalled. A splendid test of nerves it is for the marksmen, and they do not always survive the ordeal. Many a good team has gone to pieces on the Great Day; many a school knows what it is to lose a high place through a shot fired at the wrong target. No eight can hope to win that is not in its very best form at the right moment, for the shooting is of extraordinarily high merit, and in many instances would not disgrace the most accomplished of veterans. So far only twenty-five Schools have ever finished amongst the first three on Ashburton Day. The following have actually won the trophy: Harrow (eleven times), Charterhouse (nine times), Eton (six times), Winchester (five times), Rugby (five times), Bradfield (three times), Cheltenham (three times), Clifton (three times), Dulwich (twice), and Marlborough, Rossall, Dover, Edinburgh Academy, Repton, and Sedbergh (once each). Wellington, Berkhamsted, Uppingham, Lancing, Malvern, Glenalmond, Haileybury, Bedford, Victoria College (Jersey), and Whitgift have all been "placed" without ever having been the winners. It must, however, be clearly understood that competition in the earlier days was nothing compared with what it is now. The Ashburton has been shot for with almost every kind of rifle—muzzle-loaders, Sniders, Martini-Henries and '303 magazine rifles, and the number of Schools that now fire side by side is seventeen times greater than it was when the third Baron Ashburton first presented the shield.

Only in a less degree is this true of the Cadets' Trophy, a bronze shield fired for by a pair from each school under similar conditions as the Ashburton, except that the shooters have to be under seventeen years of age. The competition was inaugurated in 1877, when eight teams took part; in 1913 this number had risen to forty-one. Schools that have been most successful in shooting for the trophy are Marlborough, with six wins to its credit, Charterhouse with five, Cheltenham, Rugby, and Clifton with three, and Winchester, Eastbourne, Dover, and Lancing have each won on two occasions. Felsted, Dulwich, Wellington, Haileybury, Sherborne, Uppingham, Harrow, St. Paul's, Malvern, and Whitgift have won once. The Spencer Cup (the gift of Earl Spencer, K.G.) is as old as the Ashburton Shield. It is a competition for individuals, one from each school that has previously fired for the shield, at five hundred yards. Here again competition has increased in exactly the same proportion as it has for the Ashburton, and Harrow (nine wins) and Cheltenham (eight) have the best records for the cup. Other winners have been Eton (five), Glenalmond and Dulwich (four), Marlborough and Uppingham (three), Whitgift and Rugby (two), Wellington, Tonbridge, and Blair Lodge (two each), and Charterhouse, Winchester, Whitgift, Bradfield, Rossall, Felsted, Sherborne, and Oundle have each held the cup for one year. Shooting for this trophy is, again, remarkably good; it has frequently been won with a "highest possible," though that score is not always good enough to win with. Thus in 1913 Oundle, Tonbridge, and Lancing all scored the maximum of bulls'-eyes and the last two Schools dropped out in the "tie" shots. Compare this, say, with the result of 1864, when twelve points out of twenty-eight were sufficient to give Cheltenham a victory. It must, however, be remembered that rifles and sights have improved since those days, and it is not too easy to say how much the high scores of the present time are due to that fact alone. Undoubtedly, however, rifle shooting is much more scientifically and carefully taught than it was fifty years ago. The Veterans' Trophy is hardly of real importance to the O. T. C., for this competition is not confined to cadets of either Division. It is an affair of "Old Boys," who need not previously have served in their School Corps, though most of the shooters will probably be found to have done so. It was first fired for in 1874, and Rugby, Eton, and Cheltenham have met with the most success, though many other "Old Boys'" teams have also had the pleasure of winning this prize.

In 1914 a new competition was arranged for the Junior Division of the O. T. C. through the generosity of the proprietors of Country Life. This was a shoot at six hundred yards, and the object of the donors was to introduce cadets to this range, firing at which constitutes so important a part in all match shooting when one has left school. Moreover, 600 yards is, from the military point of view, the limit of "individual" fire. Twenty-two contingents competed, and Charterhouse won this quaint and elegant trophy (a pair of replicas in silver of a famous Elizabethan steeple "salt") for the first time. With the exception of the winner's performance the shooting was remarkably poor, and clearly showed the difficulties which the extra hundred yards introduces; otherwise the conditions were the same as they are for the Ashburton Shield. That this competition will grow in popularity, as all other matches at Bisley have done, there can be little doubt, and if it induces cadets to continue their rifle shooting in greater numbers than at present after they have left school, it will have done very valuable work.

Apart from Bisley there is only one other shooting match on the service range which claims the undivided attention of cadets of the Junior O. T. C., and that is the Schools of Empire Competition. The cup, which the winners hold for a year, was presented in 1903 by H.M. the King when Prince of Wales. Contingents may shoot for this prize on any range and on any day from June 1 to the following January 1, providing they have an "outside" umpire both in the butts and on the firing-point. Schools throughout the British Empire that possess a Corps are eligible to compete. Charterhouse (three times), Rugby, Bradfield, and Tonbridge have so far won the cup for Great Britain and themselves, as against two wins by Australian Schools, two by South African, and one by an Indian School. Conditions of firing are almost identical with those of the Ashburton. It is much to be feared that interest in this match is flagging. The reason is obvious. To shoot in July and not to hear the result until the following April or May is sufficient to damp the enthusiasm of anyone, especially a youthful rifle shot. If a month in the year could be chosen climatically suitable to all parts of the British Empire, and shooting confined to that month, and if, furthermore, all scores had to be wired or cabled immediately after shooting, so that a provisional order of merit could be published quickly, enthusiasm for the Schools of Empire Match would speedily revive; or, supposing this to be impossible, the British Schools might quite reasonably be given the month of July only in which to compete, and an order of merit published pending the arrival of Colonial results which might be cabled and made known, subject, of course, to after-confirmation. There is another Empire Match for teams under seventeen years of age. It was started in 1906, but has never attracted much British competition. However, in 1911 Wellington won this trophy, which in every other year has fallen to a Colonial team.

Until fairly recently there was little competition shooting on the miniature range for the O. T. C. In 1911, however, Country Life introduced to the Junior Division a novel and most useful match from the military point of view. Each team consists of ten cadets, and they fire a grouping practice, a rapid practice (ten rounds in a minute), and a snap-shooting practice (targets exposed for three seconds). Then four of the team under a fire leader are faced with a picture target. The leader is handed a sealed envelope containing a small replica of the target to be shot at. On this card there is a mark or marks, and the leader by word of mouth either concentrates or distributes the fire of his men on to the required target: three rounds are fired by each man, and the time allowed for the whole process is one and a half minutes. In every way this competition is exceedingly desirable for an O. T. C., and it has met with a most deserved popularity. The contingents are divided into two groups, and the winners of each group get a handsome silver cup and medals. The first group consists of those Schools which have three or more platoons, and the second group of the contingents which have not more than two platoons.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

Radley so far has been the only school to gain this trophy among the first group, while Lancing (twice), Rossall (twice), Rugby, and Sherborne have been "placed." Curiously enough in the second group Trent College has been successful in all three years, while the "placed" Schools have been King's Cathedral School, Worcester (twice), Beaumont College, Exeter School, Oratory School, and King's College, Taunton.

The generous prizes offered by Lieut.-Col. Schumacher for miniature-range shooting amongst schoolboys of the British Empire have not attracted the O. T. C. contingents to any considerable extent. The Senior and Junior Imperial Challenge Trophies are shot for each year by every conceivable boy organization in the British Empire. "Any company of the O. T. C." may compete, and the size of the team is based on the size of the company or whatever the organization may be. For the Juniors, who must be under fifteen years of age, firing is deliberate at bull's-eye and figure target. For the Seniors, it is deliberate at the first and rapid (ten shots in ninety seconds) at the latter. An enormous number of teams competes and a great quantity of prizes is given. Last year's results showed an entry of over six hundred for the Senior competition alone. "A" Company, Lancing College, and "A" Company, Dover College, were bracketed seventh. The first-named school has also been fourth in the Senior Competition and third in the Junior; a few other O. T. C.'s have appeared in the extensive prize list.* So far these competitions have not received the attention they deserve from the O. T. C., which is a pity, as they originate from a truly imperial spirit and encourage the youthful shots especially. For the rest, competition shooting on the miniature range is confined, in the case of the O. T. C., to various local trophies. These are usually shot for at the County Meetings, and some contingents have time and opportunity to put up a fight for them. It will thus be seen that ample provision has been made for the Junior Division of the O. T. C. in all branches of rifle shooting. If it is thought that too much attention has been paid here to mere target firing, I can only repeat that it is always thus that a boy's interest in shooting is stimulated, and that he is thereby encouraged to proceed on his way down all the intricate paths of more serious musketry. One word by way of closing this chapter. From the point of view of military training in schools, too much attention cannot be given to the splendid annual gathering at Bisley. Its power of bringing contingents together, of giving force to the whole O. T. C. movement, and of encouraging boys to shoot and shoot well cannot be too strongly emphasized. Ashburton Day at Bisley is unique and its object incontestable, however much we may debate the means of securing that object. Yet in July 1914 a proposal was put forward by the Head Masters' Conference to divert this meeting from the N. R. A. week to the holidays, irrespective of whether such procedure was possible or not, because it took two or three days away from the time spent at school. There was no hint that Lord's or Henley or various other purely athletic diversions took boys away from their work. Bisley alone was the culprit and the scapegoat. That was in July 1914. On August 4, 1914—but I need go no further.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

CHAPTER VI

THE YEARLY ROUND OF THE O. T. C.

ALTHOUGH I regard the actual time spent on parade by contingents of the O. T. C. before the war as rather insufficient, there has always been an enormous amount of activity expended by individual enthusiasts in various departments. Thus signalling, bugling, drumming, scouting, have all to be learned—if learned they are—in a cadet's own time, and he is not on these grounds excused any attendance at ordinary parades. Quite remarkable efficiency has been obtained by some schoolboys in these achievements, and it is difficult to see how they have managed it. In a keen contingent of the O. T. C. every spare moment is snatched for such practice, and the flutter of a flag, the note of a bugle, and the beat of a drum are common sights and sounds in the somewhat rare intervals between work and games. But, in the main, outside encouragement has not been too kind. Civilian influence and ideas have been strong in our educational centres up to the present time. Not without opposition did military training assure its place in school life; its supporters have had an uphill struggle, and they have ever been watched with a jealous eye to see that they did not encroach an inch upon the claims of work or the necessities of games. Yet, hemmed in on every side, they have accomplished much, and their task should be easier in the future until the world begins again to forget.

It requires not a little tact and energy to fit in, under the circumstances suggested, the special course of instruction that is necessary for Certificate A. Certificate B cannot present so much difficulty at the University, for there a candidate is largely a free agent in the matter of time. For that reason, partly, the percentage of failures in "B" is much lower than it is in "A," fifty per cent. as against nearly seventy. At the Schools the preparation for the two annual examinations is a matter for much scheming and arrangement. Lectures and special parades for Certificate A are, perhaps, the most important part of a contingent's regular work. Next to them comes the musketry course that has to be fired by each cadet. This does not entail a vast amount of time on the part of the individual, but it causes in the aggregate a tremendous expenditure of both time and energy by those responsible for its fulfilment.

The year's work, then, of an Officers Training Corps is large and varied. It implies the exercise in musketry of a hundred per cent. of its members, and the special coaching of some twenty per cent. or even more for two separate and special examinations. In addition there is the training of a team for Bisley and preparation for camp, to be followed by ten days under canvas. The instruction of bandsmen, signallers, and scouts has also to be fitted in, to say nothing of the extra parades required by recruits. Each week will see two "turn outs" of the whole contingent, the climax of which is the Inspection in the Summer Term. Furthermore there will be two or three large Field Days in the course of a year which will entail a considerable amount of arrangement and forethought. Such a heavy annual programme will by some be thought to weaken the claim (made on a later page) for further allowances of time for military work at school. But if the catalogue put together above be carefully examined, it will easily be seen that the work falls upon officers and certain individuals and not upon the cadets in general. It is the latter I would like to see more frequently employed as soldiers, and if this calls for yet more service on the part of the officers, they at least would welcome, rather than complain at, any such increase in their labours.

The Annual Inspection of contingents is carried out by a Staff Officer in practically every case. It consists of the General Salute, a March Past, an examination of each company in drill and manœuvre under its officers and N. C. O.'s individually, an inspection of bandsmen and signallers, a scrutiny of the contingent's books and a tour through its armoury and round its ranges. It is followed in all cases by a detailed War Office Report, which has to be laid before the Head Master, and, should it be unsatisfactory in its conclusions, it can cause a withholding of the Annual Grant.

Next in importance during the year's routine to the inspection and to camp are what may be called "outside" Field Days. The huge scrimmages described in the first chapter have been completely abolished, and such Field Days as are now arranged are confined to a few Schools in each case. They are carefully thought out and managed, and a Staff Officer is generally present to assist as umpire. For the purpose of such manœuvres, Schools situated reasonably close together join, and different localities are chosen if possible for each occasion. There will be many such days in a year, but each school will probably not attend more than three. A large amount of blank ammunition graces such outings and, properly used, does much to help training. When these Field Days are held close to Aldershot or some other training centre, cavalry and guns frequently take part, an Officer of the Regular Army commands on either side, and several Regular Officers act as umpires. These outings are of considerable value to cadets; from the military point of view they interest them and make them anxious to do their best in distinguished company, while they often illustrate excellent tactical lessons. From the social point of view, they give a boy a change from the everyday routine of school life and an opportunity for many meals. Their general influence upon Officers Training Corps work is immense, and every school ought to be assured of one such day at least in each term. Possibly the best method of organization is by counties, as was done in Sussex last year, when the Officers of the Depot of the Royal Sussex Regiment arranged two very successful days for the Schools of the neighbourhood. Occasionally a Field Day gives opportunity for meeting the Senior Division. Cambridge, for instance, invited some of the Schools to their ground for manœuvres a few years ago, but more usually the Senior Divisions have their own Field Days.

The early days of the Summer holidays are busy enough for the cadets of all contingents. Otherwise the vacation is fairly free from military exercises, if we except regimental tours for officers both at Easter and Christmas, and special courses of instruction which are frequently in progress at the various depots. Nor are training courses always confined to officers. Cadets of the Senior Division are given opportunities to attend at Hythe, and annually at Easter a composite company drawn from the Universities of Leeds, Manchester, Birmingham, Nottingham, Bristol, Sheffield, and the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, spends a week at the Depot of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment at Warwick for purposes of instruction for Certificates A and B. One or two of the Schools spend a short portion of the Easter holidays on the ranges at Bisley, but there is no official training for cadets of the Junior Division in the holidays otherwise than that provided at camp. The latter is occasionally extended by contingents which live within reasonable distance of the appointed ground and march there, sometimes bivouacking for the night on the road.

The O. T. C. has few opportunities for social functions; inspection days are thus utilized by some contingents, and the Visitors' Day at the various camps has already been mentioned. But the annual dinner at the Waldorf Hotel, which is held on the first day of the Christmas holidays, gives officers an additional and delightful chance of gathering together, and is often attended by members of the General Staff and other distinguished Regular Officers as guests of the O. T. C. This function is the special occasion of the O. T. C. Club for Officers, which was founded by Major Montague Jones. The club has its own colours and its own magazine—The O. T. C. Review—published terminally—and is well supported by all officers of the Junior Division. The O. T. C. publishes in one way and another quite a quantity of literature. Many contingents have their own handbooks, some publish annual reports, one at least produces an elaborately illustrated magazine each year. Christmas cards of a military nature are very popular in some quarters, and the number of picture post cards, which is the harvest of each O. T. C. camp, is past all telling. Shortly before the war a paper called the Contingent was started, with intent to appeal to all units indiscriminately. It was well illustrated and had a fair success; it is to be hoped it will come forth once more when its editor returns from the war. There is certainly room for such a paper in spite of the view, not infrequently expressed with regard to the O. T. C., that no one is interested in any contingent but his own. If this is so, it is more than a pity, for the aim of the O. T. C. is imperial, and the spirit which inspires its composite parts should be so equally. Speaking personally, nothing interests me more than to read and learn of the various work being done by different contingents all over the kingdom, and I invariably hunt the pages of every School and 'Varsity magazine which comes into my hands for news of the Corps. We can all learn something from each other, and if in our pride we imagine there is nothing which we can assimilate from the excellence of others, we can at least take profit from their mistakes! But except at camp and Bisley, and for brief moments at Field Days and other functions, we see and hear nothing from each other. The Senior and Junior Divisions are separated by impenetrable darkness, and any illustrated paper which faithfully recorded each month the activities of all units of the O. T. C. would be of the utmost value to those who look broadly at the aim and objects of the Corps.

In the course of these pages I have now covered most of the work which regularly falls to the lot of a contingent. From time to time exceptional occasions arise which affect the O. T. C. Thus there were representatives of both Senior and Junior Divisions at the funeral of his late Majesty King Edward VII and at the coronation of King George V. But certainly the greatest event in the history of the O. T. C. was when our Colonel-in-Chief, King George, reviewed the Corps in Windsor Great Park on July 3, 1911. The Senior Division was represented almost to a man, but there were a few absentees from the Junior Division who were physically hardly strong enough nor of ripe enough years to endure that long and tiring, if altogether brilliant day. Several contingents which had to travel from afar spent the week-end under canvas in the park, but there were numbers of special trains arriving all the morning of the Monday. It was perhaps the most gloriously sunny day of all that splendid summer of 1911, and the giant trees of the park trembled in a haze of heat. I cannot do better than quote from the special correspondent of the Times to show how the whole ceremony struck one who was in no way connected with the O. T. C. "For years," he wrote, "the large majority of this country have given no heed to the demands of Empire upon the Mother Country or the simple obligation of citizenship. There in the Windsor Great Park among the ancient oak trees in summer foliage the spectators saw pass in review before the King and Queen no fewer than 17,000 University undergraduates and Public School boys. This force practically represented the entire intellectual reinforcement that the military forces controlling the Empire will receive five or six years hence. It was no mummer's rabble that defiled before the King, it was no semi-organized collection of train bands, it was a force of young soldiers led by seasoned soldiers, trained by seasoned soldiers, quitting themselves like men, like citizens of a Great Empire." And writing of the March Past the same writer goes on to say: "It is quite impossible to do justice in one short article to every unit that took part in this inspiring and altogether wonderful parade. When I say that there was nothing slovenly or unsoldierlike in any detachment, I say nothing but what every soldier present will endorse."

The O. T. C. was for this parade under the command of Major-General A. J. Murray. The Senior Division was represented by Artillery, Cavalry, Engineers, Infantry and Medical Units; the Junior Division by Engineers and Infantry. The King was accompanied by the Duke of Connaught, Prince Christian, Lord Roberts, Field-Marshal Sir W. G. Nicholson, and Sir John French. He had with him also his Equerries and Indian Aides-de-Camp. After the Royal Salute, the King rode round the Brigades, and he was followed by the Queen in her carriage with the Prince of Wales, Princess Christian and Princess Mary.

H.M. KING GEORGE V. REVIEWING THE O.T.C. AT WINDSOR, 1911.

The Yearly Round of the O. T. C.

This inspection over, the Corps marched past the saluting base in column to the music of the massed band of the Brigade of Guards. The Junior Division then dispersed, but the Seniors formed up opposite the saluting base, advanced in review order, and after the final Royal Salute gave three cheers for His Majesty the King. This was the ending to a most memorable day, one that must have left an impression on all who witnessed it and a still deeper one upon all who took part in it. Nothing would be more interesting than to know how many of those seventeen thousand who paraded in the Great Park that golden July day now hold commissions in His Majesty's Forces. Fifty per cent. would be a low estimate, the figure is probably much higher. The first review of the old Public Schools' Brigade took place before the German Emperor; the O. T. C. made its public debut before its King and Colonel, George V.

Not very long after the Royal Review—some two years to be exact—His Majesty gave further evidence of his appreciation of the Corps by sanctioning the enrolment of the Prince of Wales in the Oxford University contingent. He served as a private, which must be an unusual rôle for a Prince of the Blood Royal, and in that capacity encamped with Oxford at Mytchett Farm in 1913. Gazetted from there to the Grenadier Guards, he heads the long list of those who after service in the O. T. C. have since been appointed to commissions in His Majesty's Forces. At the moment of writing, as all the world knows, he is serving on the staff of Field-Marshal Sir John French across the water. Prince Henry has now followed in his brother's steps and is serving with the Eton contingent.

Thus from 1908 to 1914 the O. T. C. travelled down the months, the ordinary routine of work rendered the more attractive by such landmarks on its way as I have briefly told. In the first year of its existence there were thirteen thousand cadets enrolled; by 1911 the number had risen to twenty-four thousand. At the outbreak of war there would be serving in all some two thousand or more in excess of the last figure. How they and their predecessors fared at the beginning of that mighty trial of strength is the subject of the pages that follow.

CHAPTER VII

THE O. T. C. AND THE WAR

THE gloom of war fell upon the Junior Division of the O. T. C. in the midst of their annual camp. The Senior Division had not long departed home after a fortnight's exceptionally hard work, but the Schools and the crisis arrived almost simultaneously at Mytchett, Tidworth, and Rugeley. On board the train bound for the tents we had discussed the situation as it then existed. That was on Tuesday, July 28, and unanimously we dismissed the whole affair as one of midsummer madness and cheerfully forgot all about it, at least until the Friday.

On Saturday things began to look serious, and Sunday morning broke in a torrential downpour and with the news that the fleet was mobilizing. All that afternoon and next morning various officers and soldiers of the Regular Army were leaving mysteriously. By Monday morning Battalion Commanders were reduced to bicycles—their horses had all departed—and the Army cooks had vanished, apparently in the smoke of the field kitchens. Their places were taken by the boys, and to their credit be it here set forth that the whole camp declared that never before had the meals been better cooked when under canvas. On returning to camp after Monday morning's training we were met with the news that cadets were to disperse immediately to their homes and the officers to their peace stations. By Tuesday at nine o'clock there was not a tent left standing; exactly a week ago we had marched into as trim a camp as ever was pitched, a camp thrilling with life and excitement. Now it was an abandoned desert. My last recollection of it was the stern figure of the Mess President grimly pursuing a little herd of female pillagers among some hillocks of piled heavy luggage. A sullen shower was beating up, and the wind was flicking about a few pieces of white paper. There was a hint already in the air of the devastation of war, and all through the past week the boys had been singing on the march: "It's a long, long way to Tipperary." I have spoken of the gloom which was the chief accompaniment of this usually happy camp, and no other word would describe accurately the atmosphere of that week-end. In the first place, there was a not ill-founded dread that Great Britain would stand apart. As that dispersed, there was an intensely serious appreciation of the greatness of the task that awaited her. Amongst the boys there was not the slightest hint of jingoism or flag-wagging. Even they did not want a war. It may have been that the moment—the beginning of the Summer holidays—was an ill-chosen one from their point of view, and that they would have thought otherwise if all this had happened at the beginning of term. But often since then I have compared the serious silence at this time of Young England—the most irresponsible and light-hearted portion of the Empire—with the "hochs" that were then heard from the throats of grown-up citizens in Berlin.

Of course, the mobilization of our land forces affected differently the officers and cadets of the O. T. C. The latter were for the moment civilians, but the former were on the active list of the Crown. Not a few of the officers belonged to a Battalion of the Special Reserve or Territorial Force, and they had orders to rejoin their regiments at once. For the rest of us mobilization was an altogether unexplored region, and our place had yet to be assigned. Officially our position was the Unattached List of the Territorial Force, and most of us expected to be dispatched immediately to wherever a vacancy might await us therein. The offers of service were legion, so much so that in answer to this altogether commendable and pardonable, if somewhat impatient enthusiasm, a rebuke came from high quarters to the effect that, though we might be schoolmasters and accustomed to dictate, we were also soldiers whose duty it was to obey. When our orders came they were simply "Carry on." Disappointing as this was to many, it was undoubtedly the highest compliment that could be paid to the O. T. C. To be told to go on doing exactly what we had been doing in peace time in the midst of a national earthquake was official proof that we had been engaged on Imperial work. And there were wiser heads than ours at work. To have disbanded the O. T. C. at the beginning of a long war would have been an act of sheer folly. Badly as its officers may have been needed elsewhere, they were quite indispensable where they already were. A large number of Sergt.-Instructors, who were on the Reserve, were at once called up on mobilization. To have let the officers go as well would have meant the destruction of the Corps and the slaughter of a hen that was prepared to go on laying eggs until Germany should call for a change of diet. A certain number of officers, some fifty or sixty, were allowed to take commissions in the New Army, but the departure of each one was only permitted subject to the understanding that the efficiency of the O. T. C. to which he belonged would not suffer from his absence. The part which the rest of us have so far been called upon to perform in this Great War is that for which we are most suited—it is our profession—namely, the part of instructors. It may not be heroic work, but it is certainly useful, and, if not indispensable, something marvellously akin to it. We may yet be called to other tasks before the war is ended—that only Time can show.

It must also be placed on record that the officers of the O. T. C. have in several instances helped considerably in the making of the New Armies. They have assisted in the training of N. C. O.'s and men as well as officers, and they have lent equipment at a time when it could not be had for love or money. A lot of such work has been done officially and much quite unofficially, but I have little doubt that it was in all cases well done and with the greatest eagerness, and in most cases in addition to the ordinary routine of O. T. C. work. Pleasanter employment it would be difficult to imagine, for there never were keener, more intelligent, or more attentive pupils than the majority of the men who flocked to form our new forces. Of the greatest importance have been the special courses for officers, held by some of the Senior Contingents in addition to the management of the actual members of their own command. Short as may be the training of some of the officers of the New Armies, the greatest effort has been made to render it as thorough as it could be, and hundreds of newly gazetted men have been sent straight away to be put through the mill by the Senior Division of the O. T. C.

The supreme indifference of the British Public in peace time to anything which has to do with the Army, its needs, its comfort, its efficiency and strength is only equalled by its adulation of the soldiers in war. I know an unfortunate and gallant member of the New Army who was unlucky enough to mistake his thumb-nail for a tent peg what time he had a mallet in his other hand, and so, with his arm in a sling, he went thoughtlessly to a music-hall that same evening. Like one man the whole house rose and cheered him. Just for one moment of his life—though doubtless there will be others—he was as a professional footballer making for goal or a cricketer who has topped the century. This was in October 1914. Had he gone in his uniform to a popular place of amusement, say in June or July of the same year, he might have been arrested—he would certainly have been refused a whisky and soda. It is not so very long ago that I read violent attacks upon the Territorial Force, which was called, if I am not mistaken, “Our Sham Army.” It was vilified in a way that was meant to wound, but it only made greater heroes and patriots of those who supported it. The British Public read these things and smiled in ignorance and acquiescence. But August came with a “scrap of paper” borne upon the wind, and the arms of the British Public were round the necks of the Territorials before they could escape to France, to Egypt, to Malta, to India, to Gibraltar, or Scarborough, and the Press was slobbering over them as it had never slobbered before.

The position which the O. T. C. filled in the public eye in peace time was less than microscopic. We received a certain amount of reflected abuse from the Territorial Army, and on the occasion of the Royal Review in Windsor Great Park excited nearly as much attention as a third- or fourth-class murder mystery. Peculiarly heavy “Military Critics,” with a view to showing that they were quite au fait with all branches of His Majesty’s Forces, occasionally discussed whether the O. T. C. was worth what it cost the country and invariably came to the conclusion that it was not—by a good many more pounds than had ever been expended upon us. Whether any “Military Critics” ever went so far as to visit a contingent of the O. T. C. I do not know—they probably did not think it worth their splendid while, but judging by the hints on training which some of them have given us since the outbreak of the war, I think they would have profited by such energy. Except for once being called the “spoilt child of the War Office,” I cannot find that the doings of the O. T. C. ever interested anyone outside the real military circles, though an occasional attempt was made to "write us up" when we were under canvas. In this case much more excitement was apparently aroused by the vision of an undergraduate or a Public School boy washing himself or carrying a bucket than by any attempts he might make to learn the real work of soldiering.

Since the declaration of war, I have happened on no serious or intelligent suggestion as to how both Senior and Junior Divisions have helped to officer the forces that have sprung from the earth, as armed men once sprang from the sowing of Dragon's teeth. In the eyes of the British Public the O. T. C. movement is unrecognized in peace or in war time. From the point of view of the O. T. C. this matters little, but the country would undoubtedly benefit from a proper understanding of what it has been found possible to do in the military training of its youth. From these facts it might deduce how easy it would be to extend the principle infinitely, and bring it to bear in various ways upon all classes. The O. T. C. gladly shares the obscurity of His Majesty's Forces in peace time; by its very nature it can claim no part of their glories in war. But there is no officer of the Corps who does not feel himself rewarded by the fruits of his efforts in the past and the generous meed of praise which his work has ever won from the best amongst the soldiers of the King.

This book is primarily concerned with the career of the O. T. C. previous to the outbreak of war and the effect which it had immediately upon the conduct of hostilities. But the work of both Senior Division and Junior Division was more than doubled after the departure of the Expeditionary Force. There has been and still is a stupendous effort being made by every contingent to keep up a continuous flow of officers to fit whatever sized force it may be necessary to put into the field. Upon the Senior Division the bulk of this work has fallen. Oxford and Cambridge, the Inns of Court, Edinburgh, Dublin and London Universities especially have had to deal with an enormous number of aspirants for a commission and to fit them for their duties. Other contingents, both Senior and Junior, have been only less energetic, and the whole machinery for training officers which was born in 1908 has been found with a little elasticity and expansion to be exactly what was wanted to aid in the raising of a worthy force. A short time ago it was little expected that the doings of the Artists Rifles would have found a place in a book that deals solely with Officers Training Corps. All, however, who read Sir John French's second dispatch from France will have learned from that how he, having had experience of the O. T. C. in peace time, resolved to make a contingent ready to his hand at the front to fill the immediate vacancies in the commissioned ranks of the Expeditionary Force. When, therefore, that fine Battalion of the Middlesex Regiment arrived abroad under Colonel May on its way to the firing line as a fighting force, its immediate object was changed under the direction of the G. O. C., who was unwilling thus to sacrifice so much promising officer material. Thus the Artists Rifles became an Officers Training Corps at the base, and has kept up a constant supply of subalterns for the forces engaged at the Front. A very excellent name have these new officers made for themselves, good men to start with, as evidenced by the regiment to which they belonged, and improved as to their new duties by first-class instruction on the field of battle.

It is no secret that the Artists Rifles were invited in 1908 to become a contingent of the O. T. C., but they preferred to remain a Territorial Battalion, and in this capacity to add to their already fine reputation. It was always understood, however, that in the event of war they would supply a number of officers to the forces from their ranks.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

Nevertheless they could hardly have anticipated so sudden and complete a change in their organization as actually befell them, and, if their disappointment at being unable to fight as a unit was great, so also must be reckoned the compliment which prevented them from doing so. I have not, however, added to the lists which appear at the end of this book the names of those gazetted from the Artists, because the 28th Batt. of the Middlesex Regt. could not be counted as an Officers Training Corps until the day when Sir John French transformed it into such after the battle had been joined. But finely as the Artists would have fought as a Battalion, they have undoubtedly rendered greater service to their country in their present capacity.

Had the O. T. C. been twenty or thirty years old, it would have solved the difficult problem of supplying senior as well as junior officers, and even now it has helped in a measure to overcome this obstacle by taking to itself men of mature age and making officers of them. Such "cadets," by their knowledge of the world and by their power of handling men, have soon proved their worth after being commissioned to higher rank than sub-lieutenancy. Germany has never denied our ability to raise large armies, but she has laughed at our ability to train them, and denied altogether the possibility of officering them. But Germany has made other miscalculations.

It is, however, the junior and senior subaltern which the O. T. C., aged six years, has chiefly been employed in supplying, and it is with the harvest which followed its work before the war that I now proceed to deal.

By July 1914 the Junior Division Officers Training Corps had supplied to the Special Reserve some three hundred and seventy officers and to the Territorial Force about eight hundred and fifty. This was entirely exclusive of 'Varsity candidates who took the pleasant method of passing through the Senior O. T. C. and the subsequent military examination into the Regular Army, and entirely exclusive of all those who passed through the Junior Division of the O. T. C. into Woolwich or Sandhurst. Then came "The Day," and about a week after its lurid dawn an official notice appeared in the Sunday papers asking for two thousand junior officers. I believe this notice also appeared on the Monday, but I am quite certain it never appeared again. By this time not a few O. T. C. cadets had already obtained commissions or, to speak more accurately, had been promised them, and not a few had also enlisted. Thus, within three days of the declaration of war one Territorial Battalion was up to its strength of officers and had seventeen on the waiting list. But the response to the official invitation for officers must have almost overwhelmed the Authorities, and one heard strange stories of rooms at the War Office knee-deep in applications, of piles of correspondence which would take days merely to unseal. A very large number of these applications came from the members of the O. T. C. both past and present. Here let a word be said in answer to those who suggest that the heroic thing to do was to enlist, and that seeking a commission was a soft way out of an arduous duty. Every member of an O. T. C. who felt that he had any real military knowledge or power, was justified and more than justified in seeking for a commission at this period. All the days of his previous service it had been dinned into his ears that he was wanted as an officer; high officials had told him so on parade, official pamphlets had conveyed that intelligence to him from time to time, the very name of the Corps to which he belonged thundered that idea into his head. It is a mistake that could be only made by an unmilitary nation like ours to imagine that an officer's job is a soft one. In times like the present, and still more so on active service, the good officer never rests, though the private soldier often may. Commissioned rank may bring with it a certain amount of comparative luxury, service as a private soldier may entail a certain amount of discomfort, but if it comes to a comparison of work where all is arduous and all is difficult, the man in the ranks has ever the greater freedom from mental strain, from responsibility, and even from bodily fatigue. The pity certainly was not that so many O. T. C. cadets applied for commissions, but rather that so many of the best of them straightway and impatiently enlisted. In many cases it has been exceedingly difficult to dig them out again, and some of them, though capable, have voluntarily preferred the duties of private or non-commissioned officer to commissioned rank. However much their ready service in either of the former capacities may be applauded, it is impossible to avoid the feeling that they have not fulfilled their destiny. There must be an enormous number of former O. T. C. cadets now serving in the ranks. Some of them are quite rightly there; they will make good soldiers though they could never make good officers. It is a pity that their record cannot find a place in this volume; it would be most interesting and I think quite surprising, but in the writing of its history the strict object of the O. T. C. must ever be kept in view. Only this passing reference to the many brave soldiers—as distinct from officers—it has produced is herein practicable.

The way to commissioned rank was made very easy for the members of the Senior O. T. C. At Oxford and Cambridge Military Boards were held, which dispatched to the War Office a list of those who applied and satisfied doctor and critic, and the commissions came in due course. The Junior Division members were hardly so fortunate, for in their case they had to obtain on their application form the signature of a colonel who was willing to take them. In those days colonels were not always easy to find; in any case a colonel who interviewed a boy for five minutes could not possibly form as good an opinion of his merits as his past commanding officer who had known him intimately for four or five years. It would have been far more satisfactory from all points of view if the commanding officers at least of those O. T. C.'s which had proved their worth had been asked to receive applications from their cadets who wished for commissions and to forward a selected list of them to official quarters. In fairness it must be admitted that, under the actual scheme employed, not many promising young officers were ultimately lost to the service, and the Authorities were most courteous in attending to recommendations from commanding officers. On the other hand, not a few cadets were gazetted who had little prospect of satisfying the searching requirements of officer's rank and who could not have received the honest recommendation of their past trainer. One must be just to the Authorities and recognize to the full that the outbreak of the greatest war in history was not the moment for changing existing systems, but one must be just also to the Junior Division of the O. T. C. If, therefore, there are colonels who are not satisfied with the goods which we delivered in particular instances, they should know that upon the application form which those young gentlemen sent in to headquarters there was no recommendation from their late commanding officers. There was no space reserved for such a comment on Army Form $\frac{M.T.}{393}$, and doubtless the dissatisfied colonels and ourselves would now find that we are in complete agreement as to the ability (or lack of it) of certain dashing subalterns. But under any system it would have been difficult—if not impossible—to keep out what a distinguished soldier described as the "rabbits which crept in."

The Appendix at the end of this book gives a clear idea as to the quantity of the officers supplied to the New Armies by the O. T. C. The list is a very striking

one, incomplete though it certainly is, and the good work is not yet finished, but there remains the more important and more interesting discussion as to their quality. Speaking generally, they suffered from one common fault which they will all grow out of, sorry as they may be to do so, and that is youth. Those appointed from the Senior Division were naturally much better off in this respect than those who were chosen from the Junior Division, and from the point of view of dash and endurance it would be difficult to find a more suitable candidate for a commission than a 'Varsity man in his third year. Such a candidate, too, would have reaped a very real advantage from that communion with other men and that knowledge of at least the outskirts of the world which is possible to those in statu pupillari. The Public School boy who had just left school would here be at a disadvantage, but he would have his very real adaptability as a set-off, an adaptability which has served him most effectually in a large number of cases. And they lived in stirring times, did officers in the early days of the New Armies. One cadet who was a private in his O. T. C. (Junior Division) in July, found himself in September in command of two hundred and fifty men for some weeks, and he came through the ordeal with credit. There must have been many other incidents of similar nature, and if ever the unconquerable spirit of Great Britain showed itself it did so in those early days of the war, in the splendid fight against Hell that was going on in France and in the only less splendid struggle against difficulties which was going on at home. This is hardly the place to speak generally of the officers of the New Armies, and in any case I could only do so with a comparatively limited vision. My justification, however, must be that even in the early days there were many old O. T. C. members amongst them, and there was great and heroic work being done cheerfully, unflinchingly and without a grumble. Obstacles were surmounted with a smile, impossibilities were swept aside with only a laugh at their humorous and entertaining side.

The great disadvantage from which all officers appointed from the O. T. C. would at first suffer would be inexperience in the handling of men other than their own companions. Such a disadvantage would be similar in the case of men who had passed through Woolwich or Sandhurst, but it would be easily removed in a comparatively short time. Except for this drawback there were undoubtedly men coming straight from the O. T. C.—not a great many it is true, but most certainly some—entirely ready to take their place in the battle-field, and there they very soon found themselves. It has, however, never been suggested that the O. T. C. should turn out a supply of ready-made officers for a European War. Behind the scheme there has always been the shadow of the Fleet and the possibility of further training after the outbreak of war, and I would make so bold as to assert that an enormous percentage of the O. T. C. cadets who found their way into the New Armies have, after six months, trained into officers worthy in every way to uphold the traditions of junior officers who preceded them in the Army before the war. Most of these new-comers had had a thorough grounding in elementary military work; they had known the discipline of camp and of parade; in most cases they had been accustomed to leading others and, in a measure, to looking after their comfort. They are the flower of the British youth with the principles of honour, manhood, justice, and courage instilled into them, and with a very real idea of what sacrifices of ease and luxury and possibly of life are demanded to-day. I am speaking generally, and have not forgotten the "rabbits." The latter will no doubt find their due reward. The rest may be divided into separate classes: the first, those who will under any circumstances make good officers; the second, those who will only do so if they in their turn are well led and well governed. An enormous responsibility rests upon the senior officers who have under them a number of young men full of life and vested quite suddenly and unexpectedly with authority. Not a few of the latter under slack guidance will find the strain too much for them, but wherever they are made to "pull their heels in," to know their places and to realize their duties before their privileges, there will they give such service as may well surprise the world, even if they have been called upon to don their belts before their hour had truly struck.

What has chiefly to be realized is that the work of the O. T. C. before the war and after its declaration made the forming of the New Armies an absolute possibility and not a chaotic dream. It is possible to train officers and men together—it is indeed the common practice of the Army—but you cannot start a New Army in which nobody knows anything and train it into an officered and efficient force. It was just the start which certain men in this country had received in the O. T. C. that made the enormous increase in our forces feasible. They were familiar with the groundwork of military training; they were accustomed to lead, and they were ready to take their place. They took it, they are still taking it, and will continue so to do. The making of more armies, almost unlimited armies, is a problem rather of officers than of men, and to the O. T. C. of the country and to those who founded it we must give the credit for having realized that fact. It will, perhaps, be wondered why at the end of this book those who have passed through Woolwich and Sandhurst as well as through their School Corps are included in the list of officers from the O. T. C. There are many justifications for this course, and every officer commanding a junior contingent will be aware how membership of that contingent has definitely induced boys to become soldiers who otherwise would have had no mind for it. I have had letters of complaint from parents upon this very point! I am well aware of the story of the Instructors at Sandhurst who used to say: "Now all those who have been in a school cadet corps fall in here for extra parade"; and I have even heard of a Woolwich official who said to his cadets: "Now, gentlemen, try and forget everything you learned in your O. T. C." I have, however, little doubt what the real verdict of the staff at Woolwich or Sandhurst would be as to the utility of the O. T. C. both before and since the war. The Sandhurst staff have made our acquaintance in camp, and they have spoken most highly of the Corps. In the strenuous days that followed August 4, I had a letter from one of them which said: "We here bless the O. T. C.—those who have served in it are, from our point of view, three months ahead of those who have not." Three months is a lot when we are within sound of the cannon.

And now I must bring this already over-long chapter to a close, quite content to leave the reader to decide who were right—the "Military Critics" who thought us an expensive luxury, a spoiled child, or those who claim that the O. T. C., quite apart from its already handsome contribution to His Majesty's Officers before the declaration of war, immediately filled the vacancies in the commissioned ranks of Territorial Force and Special Reserve, rendered entirely possible the officering of our New Armies with junior officers, and sent its overflow to serve as private soldiers. More than once I have heard the remark that the O. T. C. saved the Empire, and, if I am inclined to treat this as merely a pleasant conversational exaggeration, it is chiefly because I believe the British spirit to be indomitable in whatever maze of difficulties it may find itself involved.

CHAPTER VIII

THE O. T. C. AND THE FUTURE

IT is impossible to say what the end of the war will bring, nor will it be easy until three or four years after peace—strange word!—has returned, to judge what the future attitude of the world towards war will be. Maybe we shall burn our ships and make clergymen of all our officers: more probably we shall not. That there will be a great reaction against the bloodiness of battle there can be little doubt, but I think we shall learn from past experiences the great lessons that only the strong man armed can keep his house in safety, and that if we wish for peace we must prepare for war. Some day, perhaps, will come the time when we shall so tumble over each other to make self-sacrifice that the only danger of fighting will arise from our eagerness to give rather than to receive. But that time is not yet, nor will it arrive after the end of the great struggle that began in 1914. There is always the obvious danger in preparation for war that you have the means ready to your hand to make it. But it is the spirit behind the preparation that makes the difference. Thus Germany preparing for war wished for war, while Great Britain preparing her Navy wished for peace, and, had she prepared her Army as well as her Navy, would have assured it. Different, too, as were the aims and objects with which Great Britain and Germany entered upon this struggle, either side fights in the end for at least one similar object, that is, to emerge so strong and inviolable that no one will dare again to attack. If you have things worth taking, you must be well guarded. That is true of nations as well as of householders, and only an efficient police force and a strong safe can make the diamond tiara secure. But the householder desires nothing less, for all his safeguards, than a struggle with a desperate burglar. Nevertheless he invites it if he dismisses the policeman from his beat, sells his revolver, and leaves front door and safe ajar. In every state of society there are Germans!

So I think that for many years to come we shall retain our policeman and our revolvers internally, and externally live in a state of preparation for war. When human nature changes, it will be time to change our methods. Evil as war undoubtedly is, hateful, cruel, and bitter as it is in effect, the same can by no means be said of preparation for it. Economically it may be a pity to spend huge sums of money upon weapons of destruction when such money might be spent upon objects that would benefit mankind, but this form of expenditure is a form of insurance which we are at present as unable to do without as we are unable to leave our houses uninsured against fire and robbery. Without doubt, however, we shall be always anxious to assure that the premium we have to pay is as small as is consistent with safety, and so long as we retain our mastery of the sea we can afford to rely upon an Army more remarkable for its elasticity than for its immediate size. No doubt we shall endeavour somehow to secure that the fullest possible preparation is made for such elasticity in times of peace; never again must it be thought that we shall wait for the outbreak of war to fashion the hands that will perform the stretching of the elastic.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

At once the cheapest and the most effective form of military training in its elementary stages can be secured in our Schools. This volume is concerned only with a portion of them, namely, the Public Schools, and with the suggestions for their future conduct in this matter I will now busy myself. To undertake such a task may smack of arrogance, but I do not speak without experience, nor am I guided by any other thought than how we may improve ourselves both from an Imperial and educational point of view. They do a great wrong to the cause of progress who assume that our Public Schools are incapable of improvement. The Cadet Corps improved them, the O. T. C. did even more for them; an enlightened adaptation of O. T. C. principles would put the Schools upon a pedestal. In military training, properly applied, there is nothing which is not both good and glorious. It implies self-sacrifice, toil, endurance, it encourages chivalry and pluck, it insists on smartness, cleanliness and physical fitness, and it inspires a love of honour, country and King. It quickens the wits, makes supple the limbs, forms friendships innumerable and binds all its members together with a unity that is never found in any other occupation. It may have its evil side, as shown by Germany, but that is the outcome of national temperament. Between military training as made in Germany and found in Great Britain there is just this subtle difference, their variety teaches the officers to knock the wayfarer off the pavement, ours suggests to them to step into the gutter to make room for the passers-by.

If we look into our Public Schools, we find their weaknesses are just those which military training would tend to remove. We find a touch of haughtiness and aloofness, concealed but in being, entirely out of keeping with the spirit of the age. But in the training of the officer it is taught that his first and foremost duty is the care for the well-being of his men, consideration for others, in fact, in preference to self-interest. We sometimes find also a general sloppiness in carriage and demeanour, amazing in institutions which pride themselves upon athletic prowess, and comparing most unfavourably with the bright buttons, the smart and alert bearing of Osborne and Dartmouth cadets. For the truth must be told that the great gods of football and cricket have feet of clay as far as good general results go in physical well-being. By the exercise they imply, by the opportunities they give for fresh air, they are not without their uses, but they serve chiefly to improve the natural athlete and only in a very limited way to strengthen the great mass of moderate performers who look to them for physique and carriage. The physical training that is so important a feature in the training of our Armies would do an incredible amount of good to Public School boys. Many of our Schools dabble in physical training, none take it seriously, some neglect it altogether. A definite feature of future O. T. C. work should be that every single boy in the school must have twenty minutes to half-an-hour a day of such training under proper instruction and discipline. If this exercise is allowed for out of the overcrowded time-table of work, both brain and body will be the richer for it, but it will be of no benefit if it is not regular and daily. It would, too, do boys little harm if they were talked to a little oftener about the glory of the Empire and the conditions of our greatness. Our peace-time patriotism at school is a little thin. It is largely a matter of the foreign football and cricket match, an excellent stepping-stone, no doubt, but liable to stop at that. Why rely so much upon the I Z. and the M.C.C. when we have the past history of centuries whispering in our ears, the needs of the future thundering to us from afar? Nothing brings home to boys the spirit of unity and the need for combined effort, and yet the feeling of invincibility, like the tramp of their own marching feet, if only there be enough of them; which leads to another point: Are there always enough of those marching feet in every Public School—in peace time? We know the scurry of those who wish to join the ranks when the war dogs are loosed, but must it ever be the British custom to prepare after the event instead of before it? Surely it is for the upper classes to point the way by their own example. I am not a conscriptionist—I never have been—but I am convinced that boys should be made to undergo military training. It is not for them to say if they like it or not, any more than it is for them to say if they like washing or lessons; it is for them to be led, to be shown their duty and thus to learn to lead. In some few cases, Schools have filled their Corps in peace time on a voluntary basis. Such results have been mainly due to the personality of the commanding officer, which is altogether too unstable a foundation upon which to build the great future of the O. T. C. Membership of the O. T. C. should be compulsory to every schoolboy, and all Schools must act together and with complete unity upon this point. Neither must there be any shirking by means of the medical certificate: boys who are not strong enough to do the modified training of an O. T. C. are not strong enough to go to a Public School at all. Quite apart from all other considerations it is only in military work that we can ever get that complete unity in action which is so stimulating an educational asset. Imagine a football or cricket match—eleven play, four hundred shout encouragement, but four hundred and eleven will march to meet a rival in mimic battle, and the work of the private will only be less important than the work of the N. C. O. Take an O. T. C. drawn up for inspection—one rifle held at a wrong angle makes an eyesore in a picture, a movement of a single head, however small, makes havoc of what was nearly a triumph. In no other branch of school life are we so dependent upon the combined efforts of great and small as in military efficiency. I am convinced that with compulsory training for the whole nation, we should have a military machine capable of the widest possible expansion in time of war and a Territorial Force in peace time full to overflowing, always supposing that this body of admirable men is not allowed to become again the shuttlecock of politicians. We must honour our soldiers in peace time as well as in war; we must reckon membership of the Territorial Force the privilege that it is; we must see that those who serve have not to bite their under-lip as they do so because of the taunts that are hurled at them.

The O. T. C. and the Future

Digression at this stage is easy—so closely are the Schools connected with our future military history in its voluntary aspect. But I must return to matters with which I am more authorized to deal, and treat next of the position of the Corps in the School. Hitherto it has been an undefined one—neither work nor play—a little less important than the first and a great deal less important than the second. Its duties have been sandwiched in at any odd moment; they have seldom had an immovable place in the time-table, and when they have had one it has been rather inadequate. I would ask for two afternoons a week for practical work in uniform and two periods a week for military lectures in classroom hours. The passing of Certificate A examination should become a necessary adjunct to the gaining of the Higher or Leaving Certificate, and this admirable test of reasoning power, of initiative and common sense, could only be improved by an additional paper on the all-important subject of musketry. That matter is not sufficiently cared for as a sub-head in the practical part of the examination.

Sufficient stress cannot be laid upon the benefit to the military side of our Public Schools of War Office control and inspection. This latter event I would like to see made terminal, instead of annual, and of an even more exacting nature than it is at present. Compulsory camp is the natural outcome of compulsory military training, and this should be binding on every boy over fifteen years of age. For ever must we rid ourselves of the reproach of allowing the shirkers to go off for their Summer holidays while their more patriotic companions entrain to bear the heat and burden of the early August days. But so valuable educationally is military training both in quickening the mind and hardening the body, that we can well afford to take seven days for the annual training from the School Term, and only three days from the boy's vacation.

I do not think there is in my suggestions anything of a drastically radical nature, certainly nothing which can be said to alter materially the nature of our Public Schools or destroy in any way the peculiar and often excellent product of these establishments. Five or six hours a week I suggest for military training, seven days a year out of three School Terms, and a further twenty minutes a day for physical training. And I ask for the fullest recognition of military needs and military service amongst our wealthier classes. These things are the price of Empire, and parents and boys may well be made aware of the fact. They are the price, too, of a sound body, a mind that is quick to act, a heart that is full of consideration for others, a spirit undaunted by what the future may hold. Thus shall we help to make true citizens of all our sons, citizens who seek the common rather than any individual good.

Although I have written principally of the Junior Division of the O. T. C., I can find no idea that I have expressed which is not equally applicable to the Universities. Why not compulsory service as the first step towards a degree?

The O. T. C. and the Future

Why not Certificate B at least as an alternative subject in the gaining of an Honours degree? Why not physical training for all undergraduates?—for, in good truth, some need it sorely enough. Why not a higher appreciation at the 'Varsity of all that military service implies, all that it has meant in the past and may mean again in the future?

Are two parades a week in uniform, two military lectures attended, a few short periods of physical drill, too much to ask of the manhood of a great Empire? Little enough it sounds, and both at School and University I would place it as the minimum, with ample scope and opportunity for those who wish to dig more deeply into matters military. Our ordinary School and 'Varsity life is always helping to form the greatest attributes of a good officer, namely, personality and the power of leadership. Excellent, however, as these things are, they are an actual danger, from the military point of view, when not accompanied by technical knowledge and experience. No one can be a soldier, and least of all an officer, without constant and definite attention being paid to the internal nature of that business. In any other country than this, such a remark would be a platitude, but even to-day there are amongst us those who really imagine that Wellington trained his officers between the goal-posts.

In any of the suggestions I have made, there is nothing which I claim to be in the least illuminating. They will have occurred to dozens of other people, all of whom would probably have expressed them better than I have been able to do. But the present occasion offers an opportunity for a warning. After the war there will be for a time a wild enthusiasm for military life, and then a reaction in which we shall fall back into our old familiar ways. On the principle, therefore, of striking while the iron is hot, I urge that our first act of peace be to make membership of the O. T. C. compulsory on all members of Schools and Universities. There are other reasons for this step, and the chief of them is discipline. The O. T. C. is purely an instructional and not a fighting force; compulsion to serve can meet with none of the objections which might possibly be urged against compulsion to fight. It is a hopeless travesty of discipline and all that it implies to put into the hands of boys and very young men the power to resign a duty out of pique, or because the work appears irksome. However successful an O. T. C., however full its ranks, its discipline can never be truly of the military type if members feel that the key to any difficult situation is in their hands and not in the keeping of their officers. If the last word is allowed to remain with the embryo soldier, he is learning the worst possible lesson he can learn and one that goes far to destroy any benefit he may otherwise have gathered from his apprenticeship. With men of mature age and with the honour of the regiment, permanent and not ephemeral, in their thoughts this danger is not so acute. Nevertheless it is a very real argument against any form of voluntary service, and unanswerable unless the inducements to continue to serve are such as to outweigh any temporary temptation "to get one's own back."

There is, too, another strong reason for making membership of the O. T. C. compulsory, and that is to assure that there will be large numbers from which to make choice of officers. Under the voluntary system some of the very best men and boys are lost, and the more numerous the interests of the individual, and the more capably they are fostered, the greater the temptation to shirk his more obvious duty. I am not amongst those, if any such exist, who consider that training in an Officers Training Corps necessarily produces an officer. There are some men who will never make leaders, and the opportunity must exist to choose only those who have the natural aptitude as well as the special training. Methods adopted perforce in the midst of a tremendous war will naturally give place in peace time to more reasoned judgment and keener discrimination. This will not be possible unless there are numbers—big numbers—to choose from. If the position of officer is made really difficult of attainment in all except the pecuniary way, the greater will be the competition to enjoy it. Once establish such a situation, as may easily be done in the after-enthusiasm of the war, and the problem of officering the Special Reserve and Territorial Force in peace time will no longer be a problem at all, always providing that such officers are treated with the honour and privileges which their place deserves. Not the least of these latter I would count the acknowledged right at all times to be distinguished by their Army rank. A Territorial Major or Captain to-day may die in the trenches; less than a year ago it would have been accounted to him for “side” if he had dared to claim his title in private life.

I anticipate as the immediate answer to the suggestion of making all serve in the O. T. C. the cry “What need? Our ranks to-day are full to bursting—how shall we add one private to our Corps?” And to that cry I would reply with other two questions. The first: “Were your ranks full in July 1914? were they full on the night of August 3—the eve of the day when giants strove to cut the Empire’s throat?” And the second (this to the Senior Division): “Were the majority of your members ready to repair the very first wastages of war?” That much the Empire has the right to expect from its Senior Division, and that much also from the elder members of the Junior.

Finely and strongly as the O. T. C. has risen to the occasion in the present war, earnestly as it has striven and nobly as it has performed, in its future one looks for greater effort still and even greater accomplishment. We cannot go back, we must go forward. And so I bring to a close my brief history of a wonderful movement, a movement undertaken without thought of material reward and certainly with no realization of it, a movement of much toil amidst difficulties and with little honour at the end of it, and yet a movement which has given the greatest happiness and satisfaction to all who have leant against the collar. As one still on the active list of the O. T. C., I have not found my task an easy one; one praises with less conviction that to which oneself belongs. Lest that great wrong be done to my brother officers—not all of whom are personally known to me—the great wrong of praise from the wrong quarter, marring good work, let me here say that the part I have played in the O. T. C. has been a very small one, but that there are few who have had ampler opportunities of witnessing the great work done by others.

INTRODUCTION TO THE APPENDICES

IN Appendix B are given the names and regiments of 16,000 officers who were gazetted to His Majesty's Forces between August 4, 1914, and March 1915. This list requires some explanation, as the total number gazetted exceeds 20,500. It includes those who have served in all contingents of both the Senior and Junior Divisions of the O. T. C. with the exception of Oxford¹ and Cambridge Universities; Royal (Dick) Veterinary College, Edinburgh; Bristol Grammar School; Christ's Hospital; George Watson's; Kelvinside Academy; Merchant Taylors' and Sherborne. It is to be regretted that the officers commanding these contingents (nine out of one hundred and eighty-nine) were prevented by stress of work from providing their lists of names. (The numbers of officers supplied by the Oxford and Cambridge contingents are, however, included in the tables of Appendix A.) The deficiency, however, is not so serious as would appear, because many of the officers who took their commissions direct from the Oxford or Cambridge Contingents had previously served in the Junior Division, and their names are therefore recorded. Most Commanding Officers have found it impossible as yet to trace all their past cadets, and so it is not too much to say that in every case the returns of the contingents fall considerably short of the facts. Furthermore, it will be remembered that almost every day sees an increase in the number of those from the O. T. C. taking commissioned rank. The list has been made up to March 1915.

An endeavour has also been made to give some idea of the number of those serving in the ranks of the Army. Considerations of space prevented the giving of their names, and also the fact that the purpose of the O. T. C., which is to supply officers, must be clearly kept in view. A certain amount of criticism has been directed to the compilation of these lists, and may here be answered. It has been regretted that the names of those who took commissions before the war have not been printed. The answer to this is that it was impossible to obtain such returns from the majority of the contingents, and only with considerable difficulty has it been possible to arrive at approximate figures.

The O. T. C. and the Great War

One critic has said that it would be better to publish no list rather than an incomplete one. With this I emphatically disagree. It is easy to state that the O. T. C. has done a great work; without figures it is difficult to prove it. That is one reason for publishing the list, and the best. Another is that some day it will have to be made out completely, and what is now published will be a considerable help to the greater work that lies ahead. If, as I hope, a second edition of this book is called for, it will give opportunities for omissions to be made good.

Once more I offer very sincere thanks to all the Commanding Officers who have, in this busy time, helped in a work which will, I trust, be welcomed by all who have at heart the interests of the O. T. C. They will renew my obligation by letting me have a note of any error which they may detect. Finally, I must express my especial gratitude to my friend, Mr. T. P. Stiles, who undertook the severe labour of collating the lists of names supplied by the contingents, and has helped me in every way possible with unflagging zeal. The part he has played in the completion of this volume has been far more strenuous than my own.

IN this book the whole art of memorial design is now for the first time examined in all its aspects—historical, critical and practical. Most of the monuments of recent years, and notably those which followed the South African War, reveal a lamentable poverty of design, and the chief aim of this book is to establish a better standard. To that end the development of memorial design in England since the Middle Ages is clearly set out, and all possible treatments of modern memorials are discussed, with an exceeding wealth of illustration. To all who contemplate setting up a memorial, whether it be a small tablet to an individual or a monument to a great body of men, this book offers essential guidance.

The "Country Life" Library

A NEW SERIES OF ARCHITECTURAL BOOKS.

THE PROPRIETORS OF "COUNTRY LIFE" have pleasure in announcing an important series of Architectural Monographs under the general editorship of Lawrence Weaver, F.S.A., Hon. A.R.I.B.A.

The series will include books by authors of acknowledged authority on the work of great architects of the past, such as the Brothers Adam; on the architectural development of the minor arts of Plasterwork, Ironwork and the like; and on individual features of buildings, such as Fireplaces and Chimneypieces, Staircases and Panelled Rooms. The volumes will be uniform in size, type and style of binding. Two are now ready, and six more are in active preparation. The prices at which they are published will vary with the number of pages in each volume, but in all cases will be much lower than ever before attempted for books so fully and finely illustrated.

THE FIRST TWO VOLUMES IN THE SERIES ARE:

HOUSES AND GARDENS BY E. L. LUTYENS.

GRINLING GIBBONS AND THE WOODWORK OF HIS AGE.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION ARE:

THE WORK OF THE BROTHERS ADAM, by ARTHUR T. BOLTON, F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A.

DECORATIVE PLASTERWORK, by LAURENCE TURNER.

WROUGHT IRONWORK: GATES, RAILINGS AND SCREENS, by MAXWELL AYRTON.

ENGLISH PANELLED ROOMS, by W. H. WARD, M.A.Cantab., F.S.A., A.R.I.B.A.

ENGLISH FIREPLACES AND CHIMNEYPICES, by WALTER H. GODFREY.

STAIRCASES: THEIR DESIGN AND DECORATION, by SIR HERBERT JEKYLL and H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

HOUSES AND GARDENS BY E. L. LUTYENS

Described and criticised by LAWRENCE WEAVER

Large crown folio (16 by 11), bound in quarter buckram, gilt, 25/- net; in half morocco, 35/- net; by post, 10d. extra

NEARLY 400 PAGES AND 600 SUPERB ILLUSTRATIONS

This book is lavishly illustrated with photographs of about eighty of Mr. Lutyens' most typical houses and gardens, many of which have never previously been published. Interspersed in the text is a large number of plans, and there is an appendix of 22 pages giving a valuable series of scale drawings of typical buildings. The subjects are accompanied by descriptions and critical appreciations which incidentally throw considerable light on the general development of the domestic building of to-day. In all respects the book is the most important and interesting monograph on the work of an architect yet published.

The Scotsman says: "Among the English architects whose work has saved modern domestic architecture from the reproach of merely handing down the traditions of a lost art, none has done more or better work than Mr. E. L. Lutyens. . . . Mr. Lawrence Weaver has written a learned and judicious appreciation of the work of this busy and indefatigable master-builder, which covers an extraordinarily large and varied field. . . . Architects and students of architecture will pronounce it valuable in itself and of good promise for the series in which it appears."

The Morning Post says: "The publication of Mr. Weaver's work on the buildings and career of Mr. Lutyens is . . . an event in the world of architecture."

The Manchester Guardian says: "It is only when we see a publication such as this that we realise what quality characterises some of the building of to-day. Abundantly and splendidly illustrated, this book shows the work of a great master, whose influence is even greater than his most enthusiastic admirers can appreciate."

The Irish Times says: "The book is perfect of its kind. Nothing but praise is due to the arrangement; indexing, appendices, and general appearance of this most attractive volume."

The Aberdeen Free Press says: "It is a welcome and valuable addition to the modern literature of architecture."

GRINLING GIBBONS & the Woodwork of his Age (1648-1720)

By H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

250 MAGNIFICENT ILLUSTRATIONS, INCLUDING MEASURED DRAWINGS

Quarter bound in buckram, gilt, 25/- net; half-bound in morocco, 35/- net; by post, 10d. extra.

THE Publishers feel that they could not possibly have secured a more able pen than that of Mr. H. Avray Tipping to describe the work of the greatest carver in wood that the Renaissance produced. The Author's profound knowledge of the period and his intimate acquaintance with the art of Gibbons in all its manifestations give an unquestioned authority to a volume which, for the first time, gathers together a superb body of illustrations and detailed descriptions of all his best work.

It may indeed be stated with entire confidence that this volume is a complete and satisfying work of reference on the subject with which it deals.

"The proprietors of COUNTRY LIFE are rendering admirable service with their series of Architectural Monographs. In writing a life of Gibbons, Mr. Avray Tipping had by no means an easy task, but with painstaking care he has collected all the available material, skilfully focussed it, and for the first time we have Gibbons presented in true perspective. But Mr. Tipping's work is of more than biographical value. Equipped obviously with wide knowledge of his subject, he has written a comprehensive and luminous account of what may be described as the golden age of wood carving in England."—The Glasgow Herald.

"The book is rich in lessons for architects and amateurs of fine woodwork."—The Scotsman.

"Ought to find a place in the library of every architect, and, indeed, of everyone who is interested in decorative arts and the progress of British craftsmanship."—Aberdeen Free Press.

WINDSOR CASTLE

AN ARCHITECTURAL HISTORY

Collected and written by command of Their Majesties QUEEN VICTORIA
KING EDWARD VII and KING GEORGE V.

By SIR WILLIAM H. ST. JOHN HOPE, Litt.D., D.C.L.

Imperial Quarto, in Two Volumes, and a Portfolio. Bound in Half Sheepskin, £6 6s. net; Whole Sheepskin, £8 8s. net; Full Morocco, £10 10s. net.

Windsor Castle stands alone among the buildings of Great Britain. It is the greatest among our early fortresses and the most splendid of Royal Palaces. The story of English Building during eight centuries is very fully written in the stones of Windsor, but not so that everyone may read. The slow accretions of centuries are not easy to disentangle, and it needed the skill and wide archæological experience of Sir William H. St. John Hope to set out in its true proportions the fascinating story of the growth of this great architectural organism.

The edition is limited to 1,050 numbered copies, of which nearly 400 were subscribed prior to publication. It has been printed from new type on pure rag paper, specially made for this edition. It is illustrated by exquisite reproductions in colour of drawings by Paul Sandby; by a large number of collotype plates reproducing a unique collection of original drawings, engravings and photographs which show the Castle at every stage of its development; as well as by beautiful woodcuts, prepared expressly by the great engraver Orlando Jewitt for this History, when it was first projected. Many of the illustrations are reproduced for the first time, by special permission of His Majesty the King, from originals in the Royal Library at Windsor.

The work is issued in two sumptuous volumes, together with a portfolio containing a notable reproduction of Norden's View of Windsor and a complete series of plans, specially printed in fourteen colours, which show the dates of all the buildings in the Castle and their successive changes.

The Times says: "A piece of historical research and reconstruction of which all who have been concerned in it may be proud."

The Manchester Guardian says: "It may at once be safely said that no monograph on a single building has ever before been attempted on such a scale, or has been carried out in so sumptuous and at the same time so scholarly a manner."

These four notable volumes form together an unequalled pictorial survey of the domestic architecture of England of every style and period. They are, moreover, a treasury, not only of the life stories of the notable men and women who have lived in our historic homes, but of those county and village traditions which throw so much light on the larger issues that have made the history of the nation.

"A veritable revelation of the wealth of internal adornments, architectural and other, contained in the great country mansions of England. To turn over the pages is to obtain keen pleasure, as well as enlightenment, concerning a treasury of domestic art and archæology which to a large extent is kept closed from the common eye."—Scotsman.

GARDENS OLD AND NEW

The Country House and its Garden Environment

EDITED BY

H. AVRAY TIPPING, M.A., F.S.A.

The illustrations being from Photographs specially taken by CHARLES LATHAM

Crown folio (15 in. by 10 in.). Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt edges

VOLUMES I, II AND III

£2 2s. net each.

By post, £2 3s.

These three volumes illustrate the relationship between house and garden, and the beauties of every type of garden, both formal and natural, in a way never before attempted. They afford a complete survey of the whole history of garden design and garden architecture, considered from every point of view, historical, artistic and horticultural.

"These beautiful books owe their charm to the wonderful collection of photographs of gardens and garden architecture which such a paper as COUNTRY LIFE has had a unique opportunity of making. The principle conveyed in the letterpress is that held by all great gardeners and architects—that house and garden are, or should be, intimately associated, and that the character of the possessors should be reflected in both. The accounts of lovely garden after lovely garden are most agreeable reading. There is no country in the world where man-created sylvan beauty can be found comparable to this in England, and as albums of charming pictures for the garden lovers and a mine of elegant suggestion to the garden-maker, these volumes are the best thing of their kind we have ever seen."—Daily Chronicle.

GARDENS for SMALL
COUNTRY HOUSES

By GERTRUDE JEKYLL
AND LAWRENCE WEAVER

Third edition, revised and enlarged, large 4to, cloth gilt, 15/- net

By post (inland), 15/7; Foreign and Colonial Post, 16/7

300 PAGES, AND OVER 400 ILLUSTRATIONS, WITH COLOURED FRONTISPIECE

Amongst the vast number of books on all aspects of gardening this volume takes a new and distinctive place. It deals with garden design as a whole, with reference both to the proportions and architectural elements which govern a successful plan, and to right and artistic planting. The first seven chapters describe in detail some beautiful gardens of varying type which illustrate the solving of different problems. Very important are the planting plans by Miss Jekyll, whose reputation as a deviser of colour schemes is world-wide. In other chapters the treatment of various kinds of sites is discussed in detail, with scores of plans and photographs of examples by well known designers. The chief architectural features of gardens, such as pergolas, pools and fountains, walls, steps and paving, garden houses, seats and sundials, are described with a lavish series of illustrations. Others deal with cultural problems such as the planting of retaining walls and the use of climbing plants. The illustrations are of a beauty and educational value impossible to over-estimate. No owner of a small country house who wishes to improve its garden can afford to be without this notable book.

The Spectator says : " There could be no more helpful book than this to consult."

SMALL COUNTRY HOUSES OF TO-DAY

Edited by LAWRENCE WEAVER

Large quarto, cloth, gilt, 15/- net;

by post (inland) 15/6. Foreign and Colonial Post, 16/6

224 PAGES, 300 ILLUSTRATIONS

This volume fills a distinctive place, because not only is the picked work of more than forty of the best architects of the day shown by plan and photograph, but it is discussed in detail, frankly yet sympathetically. As the houses illustrated, nearly fifty in all, vary from whitewashed week-end cottages costing less than £500 to dignified country homes costing £5,000, all sorts of internal arrangement and architectural and garden treatment are brought under review. To all of moderate means who contemplate building a country house, this book will be of the utmost value.

THE HOUSE AND ITS EQUIPMENT

Edited by LAWRENCE WEAVER

Large quarto, cloth, gilt, 15/- net;

by post (inland) 15/6. Foreign and Colonial Post, 16/6

212 PAGES, 240 ILLUSTRATIONS

It is impossible that any one writer can deal with the many problems that arise out of the artistic and practical equipment of a house, at least with equal knowledge and sympathy. The scheme of this volume, with its forty-three chapters contributed by twenty-three experts of acknowledged ability, ensures the throwing of fresh light on scores of questions that concern the comfort and pleasure of everyone. To all who own a home, and are not wholly satisfied with it, and to all who contemplate improving an existing house or building anew, this volume will be of the utmost value.

SMALL COUNTRY HOUSES:

THEIR REPAIR AND ENLARGEMENT

Forty Examples Chosen from Five Centuries

By LAWRENCE WEAVER

Large quarto, cloth, gilt, 15/- net. By post (inland) 15/6. Foreign and Colonial post, 16/6. Nearly 250 pages and 300 illustrations

The growing tendency to rescue old buildings from neglect and the important problems which are raised by such work prompted the issue of this book. Detailed descriptions reveal how houses of bygone days have been re-equipped as modern needs demand, without destroying the witness they bear to the old traditions of building. Incidentally, the author has shown in how many cases the records of modest little houses have been preserved, and how intimately their local story is woven into the larger fabric of national history. The book is an invaluable guide to all who are desirous of repairing an old house, and who wish to achieve it in the right spirit.

THE "COUNTRY LIFE" BOOK OF COTTAGES COSTING FROM £150 TO £600

By LAWRENCE WEAVER

Large 8vo, cloth, gilt, 5/- net. By post (inland) 5/5. Foreign & Colonial post, 6/-. Nearly 250 pages and 300 illustrations and plans

The aim of this phenomenally successful book is to set out some of the problems and conditions imposed by varying limits of cost, and to show how modern architects have succeeded in providing convenient and successful cottages at reasonable prices. In this book full consideration has been given to all types of cottages—for the rural labourer, the estate servant, the small-holder, the clerk who lives outside the town, the "week-ender," and those of limited means who want a permanent home of refined character in the country at the smallest possible cost.

It is an indispensable book to all estate owners; to everyone who contemplates building a cottage of any sort, and to all who are interested in Housing questions.

OUR COMMON SEA-BIRDS

CORMORANTS, TERNS, GULLS, SKUAS, PETRELS, AND AUKS

By PERCY R. LOWE, B.A., M.B., B.C.

With Chapters by BENTLEY BEETHAM, FRANCIS HEATHERLEY, W. R. OGILVIE-GRANT, OLIVER G. PIKE, W. P. PYCRAFT, A. J. ROBERTS, etc.

Large quarto, cloth, gilt, with over 300 pages and nearly 250 illustrations. 15/- net. Post free (inland) 15/7

Unlike the majority of books dealing with birds, this volume is of interest to the general reader and to the student of ornithology alike.

It is a book that enables the reader to identify our Sea-birds by name, to understand their movements, their habits, their nests and their eggs.

The Observer says:—"We marvel at the snapshots that have been taken of birds. Every movement of their flight is now recorded: the taking off, the alighting, the swooping, the settling, the 'planing,' the struggling against the wind. And they are just the birds which the ordinary man wants to know about, because he has such opportunities of seeing them for himself on any walk along the cliff."

THE PEREGRINE FALCON AT THE EYRIE

By FRANCIS HEATHERLEY, F.R.C.S.

Illustrated with wonderful photographs by the AUTHOR and C. J. KING.

Demy quarto, cloth, gilt, 5/- net; by inland post, 5/6

This fascinating book on the Peregrine Falcon—the grandest bird of prey left in England—combines the salient facts of almost innumerable field notes, written at the eyrie itself. It is a book that should appeal with irresistible force to all true nature lovers. Many striking and unexpected facts were revealed to the author as a result of unwearied patience in a diminutive hut slung from the precipice of a lonely islet. These records are now set forth in a wonderful narrative which discloses the life history of the Peregrine Falcon from the moment of its hatching to the day it finally leaves the eyrie.

The Times says:—"We commend this faithful and truly scientific inquiry to all lovers of animals and to those who are in quest of a real knowledge of nature."

THOROUGHLY TYPICAL OF MR. ARMOUR'S ART

This volume is sure of a warm welcome from every Sportsman and Sportswoman of to-day. In the beautiful picture gallery disclosed through its pages, Mr. Armour presents a wonderfully representative collection of his art. Whether it is the field in "full cry," the grouse coming over the heather, the polo player dashing towards the goal, or the otter hound surging through the rapids, all are portrayed with individuality and fidelity, by means which have the appealing merit of simplicity and directness. The plates are perfect specimens of pictorial art. Each one deserves, and, indeed, demands, a frame.
