The mother bird was sitting in the wee nest, keeping her little babies warm; after a while she flew away in search of food, and then the children tiptoed close to the nest and saw three feathery chirping baby birds. The Chinese are a backward race. They waste their opportunities because of ignorance and because of the intense selfishness which centuries of living down to false ideals of peace has bred. China would be well off under Japanese rule. The Japanese would make a country out of it. It would be "The Orient for Orientals' with a vengeance. Think of those five hundred millions of people trained and equipped by the Japanese—the "Yankees of the Far vam," a copy of which is among the East." The vision might well give pause to the nations of the West. Undoubtedly the Japanese would profit greatly by the overlordship of such a country as China and if the present war in Europe should at Cleveland the first year of the go on much longer it would not be astonishing to see Japan, which now knows her own strength, going into China and taking things in hand.
