PREFACE.

WHILST rambling in Ayrshire one day, with the late lamented John Galt, the conversation turned upon what was the most beautiful object in nature. There were four in our party. Galt gave the palm to trees, while another gave it to women, a third to stars, and a fourth to flowers, upon which a long debate ensued; and not being able, satisfactorily, to convince one another what was strictly the meaning of the word "beautiful," the following compromise was agreed to:—That stars should be considered the most sublime objects in nature, women the most enchanting, children the most interesting, and flowers the prettiest.

That this compromise, so far as flowers is concerned, is correct, I am not prepared to say, for I think it must be allowed on all hands, that they are the most beautiful objects in nature; and not only afford to the eye a pleasing sensation, but also, in most instances, to the brain, do they yield the varied fragrances of many sweet odours.

Sight and smell are the two senses acted upon naturally and physically by flowers—but there is also an artificial and mental enjoyment to be had in studying the language, which romance has diffused around them.

The language of flowers is said to have originally come from the East, and to have been of very ancient origin. That it may have come originally from the East is possible, as in Persia, Arabia, and Egypt, it is used as a means of communication at the present day—but I am certain that we are more indebted to the Occidentals than the Orientals for the contents of the present volume.

In America the language of flowers seems to have more disciples and patrons than in any other part of the world, at least if we are to judge from the number and splendour of the works which have appeared on the subject during the last ten years in Philadelphia, Boston, and New York. Yet America receives no credit for its exertions; whilst the lazy Turk, who knows nothing about either flowers or their language, is erroneously supposed to be better skilled in their mysteries than the inhabitants of any other nation.

In the present volume much will be found that has already been before the British public, but much will also be found that never has appeared in any publication in this country—and if it amuses the disciples of “Flora’s language” in the studying of it, as it has amused the compiler in gathering the materials together, the labour bestowed upon it will not have been lost; for the arrangement of its contents served to charm away many a lonely night when, seated in the “Garden of Europe,” the howling of the dogs and jackalls too forcibly told him that what nature had made a garden man had turned into a wilderness.

RULES

NECESSARY TO BE OBSERVED IN ORDER FULLY TO UNDERSTAND
THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS, ETC.

I. Simple significations take precedence of sentences, unless the flower is held, presented, or sent in a peculiar mode.

II. Flowers presented inclining to the right express an affirmative—to the left, a negative; viz. :—Lavender and Ivy presented inclining to the right, would signify, “I distrust your friendship”—but inclining to the left, “I distrust not your friendship;” while Juniper and Mint to the right signify, “I will succour your virtue”—to the left, “I will not succour your virtue.”

III. Flowers placed upon the head signify anxiety regarding the subject of which it may be the emblem—on the lips secrecy, on the heart love, on the breast weariness.

IV. Flowers thrown on the ground signify carelessness or indifference to the sentiment.

V. Flowers worn in the band of a lady's dress, or in the button hole of a gentleman's, are to be considered in compliment to the gentleman or lady whose attention these flowers have been placed there to attract.

NOTE.

WHEN the vulgar name of a flower is given along with the botanical one, the former is placed between parenthesis, and always follows the botanical name.

EXAMPLE:

Anemone. (Zephyr's Flower.)

When the European and American sentiments attached to a flower disagree, the American sentiment is printed in italics, and follows the European one.

EXAMPLE:

Anemone. (Zephyr's Flower.) Sickness; Expectation.

MAPS FOR THE MILLION.

SIXPENCE EACH.

THESE Maps, which embrace all the more recent discoveries, are 19 inches by 16. They are beautifully engraved; printed on a fine thick paper, and accurately coloured. The high price hitherto charged for Maps, has confined to a comparatively small circle the knowledge of a science, without the aid of which all that portion of history which relates to Geography can never be understood. The encouragement which the Publisher has received has induced him to add to the Maps formerly published,

PALESTINE, OR THE HOLY LAND.

To Teachers and Guardians, the low charge for this Map, which is much used in Seminaries of Education, and has hitherto been sold at an extravagant price, is a strong recommendation. The entire series comprehends,—
