The Sculpture Gallery.

23 x 30

This subject depicts visitors in a Roman Sculpture Gallery, the specimens being taken from some celebrated antique works. The Vase in the centre from that in the Naples Museum: the portrait of "Agrippina" from that in the Capitol at Rome; the Bronze Horse from that in the Naples Museum; the portrait of "Pericles" from that in the Vatican; the Silver Dish upon the table from that in the Berlin Museum; the Table from that in the Casa Rufi at Pompeii; and the "Hercules Strangling the Serpents" is also well known to archæologists. The room in the background is an emporium for minor works, where customers may be seen purchasing Lamps, etc.

Louis XIV and the Grand Conde.

54 x 37

Painted to order, 1878.

(Extract of Letter from the Artist.)

“ In order to deliver your picture of the ‘ Reception of the Prince of Condé by Louis XIV,’ I have worked upon it without intermission to reach the desired end, and I hope that I have succeeded. I hope also that you will be satisfied, for I have done my best to arrive at this result. A few lines about the subject will make you understand it in its details. The reception takes place on the grand staircase at Versailles. This staircase no longer exists. It was destroyed under Louis XV, but there remains an engraving of it at that time, very well executed, which has enabled me to reconstruct it with truth. In the year 1674 Condé had returned to Court, where he was received in triumph. The King came forward to meet him on the grand staircase, which was not his usual habit. The Prince was going up slowly, on account of the gout, which made him almost helpless. As soon as he saw the monarch, ‘Sire,’ said he, ‘I beg your Majesty’s pardon, to make you wait so long.’ ‘My cousin,’ answered the King, ‘do not hurry. When one is so loaded with laurels as you are, it is difficult to walk quickly.’ Louis XIV pressed him in his arms, and embraced him repeatedly. By the side of Louis XIV stands his son, the Duke of Burgundy, whom they called the Great Dauphin, at that time thirteen years old. He died while young, without having reigned, and was the father of Louis XV. Behind him is his preceptor Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux. On the right and on the left are members of the Court.”

ALMA TADEMA (L.) R. A. London

The Picture Gallery.

23 x 30

This represents a Gallery of Antique Paintings. Several visitors are making good use of the catalogues and references which they have found in the boxes on the tables. On the easel is a Monochrome by "Apelles"; above which appears part of a large Picture, taken from the great Mosaic in the Naples Museum, which is probably a copy of the painting "The Battle of Issus," by Philoxenos, of Eretria. The Picture over the doorway might be attributed to Marcus Ludius, the inventor of that most charming and well-known architectural decoration in which Pompeii abounds. Through the doorway is seen another work, taken from a Mosaic in the Naples Museum, representing "Strength Captivated by Love." The life-size figure is, by some archæologists, believed to be the "Medea" by Timomachos of Byzantium, which picture Julius Cæsar bought from the artist for 40 talents (£8,000) for his collection in the gardens on the Tiber, and left by will to the Roman people. Next to this, "The Sacrifice of Iphigenia," by Timanthes, is a picture much praised by ancient writers; to the right appears a foreshortened Lion, which there is reason to believe is the work of Pausias, who is said to have been the first to paint objects in foreshortening, and never to have been surpassed in that branch of art. The Picture above it represents "A Theatrical Rehearsal," taken from a Mosaic in the Naples Museum.

These pictures have recently been engraved by A. Blanchard.

The Bride of Lammermoor.

29 x 40

Dated 1878.

Lucy, scarcely yet recovered from the bewilderment of her terror and the faintness of her swoon, clings with all her light weight to the stranger's arm, while yet she seems to be urging him onward. There is a look of entreaty, blended with trust and helplessness, in the beseeching blue eyes and in the wistful face. The plaid, which she wears in the graceful old Scottish fashion, folded mantilla wise over her head and shoulders, still wet with the water he has used to restore her to consciousness, clings closely round the fair face and neck and slender figure. Her small gloved hands are clasped clingingly round his strong arm. He, with knit brow and dark eyes fixed in a far-off look—it may be that he now first sees the enemy of his house, the author of his father's ruin and death, the usurper of his birthright; or that he already reads, as in a vision, the mysterious interweaving of his fate with that of the innocent daughter of his and his house's enemy, who clings to his arm, with dreamy eyes, that seem, like his own, to see far into the future.

NICOL (Erskine) A. R. A. . . . London

Medal (E. U.), 1867.

Paying the Rent.

64 x 46

Exhibited at the Royal Academy and Universal Exposition, 1867.
From the collection of the late Mr. F. O. Day, St. Louis.

Dated 1866.

(Extract of Letter from the Artist.)

“The subject is a representation of what is usually to be seen in the business-room of an 'agent,' where, as our Scottish Burns expresses it, 'Puir tenant bodies, scant o' cash,' drop in one after the other to pay rents and arrears, often with great difficulty to themselves, and sometimes not without unwillingness, even when they can, from a failing not uncommon in frail human nature, viz., a distaste to part with the cash. The agent, accustomed to the work, and used to the many complaints of 'high rents, hard times, failure of crops,' etc., takes it all as a philosopher, and quietly listens, chats, and nibs his pen, having but one point in view—getting the cash. The particular incident illustrates what is not uncommon—a difficulty in arranging contra-accounts, and for work 'done for his Honor, and which his Honor said himself was to be deducted from the rint.' The Lady, who is sometimes the better man of the two, is active and looking after their interests, knowing that a mistake might be made; while the clerk, likely to be more sharp than polite, feels that, in his, for the day, imposing and responsible position, he is called upon to look closely into such charges, if a mistake exists, it may be in their favor, and, in all probability, will in the end have to refer the matter to his superior. The other figures are all accessories of the same story: The man coming in warm, rubbing his head with his kerchief, chatting to the old man of the weather and the hard run he has had to be in time before his Honor got busy, as he had to go look after some heifers in the field beyant Patsy Conroy's after he had done his business; another stooping to pick up some papers he has dropped out of his hat; while the agent's 'own man' is seen coming in at the door with some books which will be required in the course of the day. This is something like what I intended. After the warm reception the picture has met with in Paris, I think I may venture to hope it will still add to my reputation."

(Extract of a Letter from the Artist.)

“ Believe me, I consider it a great honor to have one of my pictures in your collection. You may be assured that I will take every pains with your picture, not only for myself but for you, to make it one of my best works. Nothing shall be neglected in the finishing of it, as I wish with all my heart to give you satisfaction. * * * The subject of the painting is ‘The Portrait.’ A young lady of noble birth is having her portrait painted. She is sitting on a stairway covered with rich tapestries. An attendant amuses her with some music. A young man near her is held by her conversation and the animation of her face. In the foreground is the artist with his easel and canvas. While he works a group of lords contemplate the picture. At the left a page prepares some refreshments. The costumes are of Holland, early in the seventeenth century.”

46 x 32

Painted to order, 1878.

(Extract of a Letter from the Artist.)

“The title of my picture is ‘The Arrest of an Ambulance, Eastern Part of France, January, 1871.’ They are civil Ambulanciers, who have been taken by a Prussian patrol in a village where a battle has taken place. When their papers have been examined and recognized in order by the Prussian general, they will be released and authorized to collect the wounded and assist in the German infirmaries. The spot where the scene is laid is a village in Franche-Comté; they have fought there; the Germans occupy it. The foot-soldiers who surround the ambulances are Prussian Chasseurs (Rheinisches, jager, Batallion No. 8). The Prussian general is accompanied by an officer of the Hussars (Leibhusarem, Regiment No. 2), and by an officer of the staff; his cap and cloak-facing of amaranth. The two other officers are, the one in blue tunic and yellow collar, an officer of the Dragoons; the other, an officer of the Cuirassiers (Brandenburgisches Cuirassier, Regiment No. 6, Kaiser Nicholas I. von Russland). The dead body in the foreground is that of a Bavarian foot-soldier. Those are also Bavarians who are at the end of the street, and at the entrance of the house under the façade, and pierced by bullets. Here are very minute explanations, but I thought that Mr. Vanderbilt would be pleased to have all possible details about his picture. I hope that he may be satisfied with it, and that it will receive many compliments.”

Gorges d'Apremont,
 Forest of Fontainebleau.

39 x 26

Exhibited in the Paris Salon of 1859, and the Universal Exposition of 1867. Purchased 1882.

“The Salon of 1859 contained five compositions; one was a chef d'œuvre, the Gorges d'Apremont, in the evening when the sun sets behind the mountains of Rochefort. It is the hour when the cool air touches the earth and strikes the trees, prognosticating the arrival of night. The circle is vast, the rocks which tower above it have a dry and primitive look, making a fitting place for a nocturnal visit of Macbethian witches. Nothing is exaggerated or too nervous in this picture, which is painted with a light touch, perfectly representing great calm and serenity of the atmosphere."—Alfred Sensier's "Life of Rousseau," 1872.

Pia de Tolomei.

39 x 56

Dated 1876.

Extract of a Letter from the Artist.

“ I have received with great pleasure your obliging letter. No one can be more sensible than I to the expressions of sympathy which it contains. You must have already received the picture of ‘ Pia de Tolomei,’ which I have painted for you. I will give you the passage of history which inspired my work. Pia, of the noble family of the Tolomei, of Siena, was shut up in a castle of the Maremma, by her husband, Nello della Pietra, who accused her of infidelity. The poisoned air of this region killed her. I have, then, imagined her upon the terrace of the castle, strong in her innocence, and defying her evil destiny. Pia has been for many years a favorite subject with Italian painters and poets. Her story is a mysterious one, and her personality has always attracted a noble sympathy. Dante, who places her in his ‘ Purgatory,’ devotes to her only a few lines of the Fifth Canto, but these few lines are a poem in themselves :

‘ Ah ! when thou hast returned unto the world,
And rested there from thy long journeying. * * * * *

Do thou remember me, who am the Pia ?
Siena made me ; unmade me, Maremma ;
He knoweth it who has encircled first,
Espousing me, my finger with his gem.’ *

“ Alfieri has written a fine tragedy, and many poets have

* The death of Pia de Tolomei occurred in the year 1295, or thirty years before the birth of Dante ; so that at the epoch at which Dante wrote his poem, the event must have been fresh in memory of men in Tuscany.

sung the beauty and the sad fate of Pia de Tolomei. You know my aspirations. I do not need, therefore, to tell you what an attraction this noble and touching figure must have for me. I have exerted myself, therefore, to the utmost to paint the subject as it presents itself to my imagination. My artist friends, and others in whom I place great confidence, have praised the picture very highly ; and, for my own part, I am well pleased that this picture is to go to you, for I consider it not only one of my very best works, but also one of the most affecting that I have painted."

The Water Carrier.

31 x 39

From the Hartmann Collection, Paris, 1881.

In a letter addressed to his friend Thore' in 1860, Millet refers to this picture as follows: "In the woman coming from drawing water, I did not try to portray a servant, but a wife who had just drawn water for her household needs, the water with which she makes her husband's soup, and that she should appear to be carrying neither more nor less than the weight of the full pails; that through the kind of grimace that is forced on her by the dragging down of the arms and the half-closed eyes, that just allow her to see, one could divine on her visage an air of rustic goodness. I have avoided, as I always do, with a sort of horror, anything that turned toward the sentimental; I wished, on the contrary, to show her accomplishing with simplicity and willingness an act which is, with the other household duties, an every-day part of her life."

The Sower.

32 x 41

“While patiently studying the action of his reapers, Millet produced a figure which had long occupied his thoughts. We know what a serious affair the sowing is to an agricultural people. Plowing, manuring and harrowing are done with comparative indifference, at any rate without heroic passion; but when a man puts on the white grain-bag, rolls it around his left arm, fills it with seed, the hope of the coming year, that man exercises a sort of sacred ministry. He says nothing, looks straight before him, measures the furrow, and, with a movement cadenced like the rhythm of a mysterious song, throws the grain which falls to the earth and will soon be covered by the harrow. The rhythmic walk of the sower and his action are superb. The importance of the deed is real, and he feels his responsibility. If he is a good laborer he will know how much seed to throw with every fling of his hand, adjusting the amount sown to the nature of the soil. I have seen sowers who, before they put foot upon the field, would toss a handful of grain into the air in the sign of a cross ; then, stepping upon the field, they would pronounce, in a low voice, some indistinct words which sounded like a prayer." The " Sower " was sent to the Salon of 1850, then held at the Palais Royal ; it made some noise ; the young school talked about it, reproduced it in lithography, and it has remained in the memory of artists as Millet's chef-d'œuvre. Théophile Gautier was touched by it. In the following quotation we see the impression made by this virile work :

“ ‘ The Sower,’ by M. J. F. Millet, impresses us as the first pages of ‘ Mare au Diable ’ of Georges Sand, which are about labor and rustic toil. The night is coming, spreading its gray wings over the earth ; the sower marches with a rhythmic step, flinging the grain in the furrow ; he is followed by a cloud of pecking birds ; he is covered with dark rags, his head by a curious cap. He is bony, swart, meager, under this livery of poverty, yet it is life which his large hand sheds ; he who has nothing pours upon the earth, with a superb gesture, the bread of the future. On the other side of the slope a last ray of the sun shows a pair of oxen at the end of their furrow, strong and gentle companions of man, whose recompense will one day be the slaughter-house. This is the only light of the picture, which is bathed in shadow, and presents to the eye, under a cloudy sky, nothing but newly plowed earth. Of all the peasants sent to the Salon this year, we much prefer 'The Sower.' There is something great and of the grand style in the figure, with its violent gesture, its proud raggedness, which seems to be painted with the very earth that the sower is planting."—(Sensier's "Life of Millet.")

From the gallery San-Donato, 1877.

Dated 1853.

On a road that crosses one of the vast plains of Hungary, appears in the midst of a cloud of dust a wagon filled with young men and drawn by three spirited horses at full gallop. The enthusiasm of the young volunteers is at its highest pitch ; they seem to be exciting each other by their shouts; one of them, standing in the middle of the wagon, is beating a drum : a second is waving his hat in the air ; others are smoking or singing ; the wagon is hung with various trophies.

the 1990s, the number of people with a disability has increased in all countries (ILO 2002).

There are many reasons for this increase. One of the most important is the increase in the life expectancy of people with a disability. In the 1990s, the life expectancy of people with a disability was around 40 years, but it has increased to around 50 years (ILO 2002). This means that people with a disability are living longer and are therefore more likely to be in the workforce.

Another reason for the increase in the number of people with a disability is the increase in the number of people with a disability who are in the workforce. In the 1990s, the number of people with a disability who were in the workforce was around 10 million, but it has increased to around 20 million (ILO 2002). This means that more people with a disability are now working and are therefore more likely to be in the workforce.
