APPENDIX to MOOR'S GREEK GRAMMAR; second edition. By ADAM DICKINSON.—8vo. 1s. sewed.

SELECTA GRAECE e VETERI et NOVO TESTAMENTIS; or, Selections in Greek from the Septuagint and New Testament, with Notes in English, adapted to Professor Dunbar's Exercises, and the most reputable Grammars in England and Scotland: together with a copious LEXICÓN, having the doubtful vowels marked. To which is added, the celebrated EPISTLE to DIOGNETUS, generally ascribed to Justin Martyr. By the same. Second edition, much improved.—12mo. 4s. bound.

"We have gone over with satisfaction the small publication before us,—a publication which we regard as well adapted for aiding the first steps of the Greek student in the acquisition of biblical literature, and to which even the more advanced may find it convenient occasionally to recur. The selections, upon the whole, are judiciously made, and very well adapted to the end the compiler had in view. The notes, which follow, are chiefly grammatical and etymological, pointing out the more difficult inflections, and elucidating such of the Greek idioms as might be most apt to perplex a beginner. For this we have no doubt they will be found useful."—Christian Instructor for September 1812.

BUCHANANI PSALMORUM PARAPHRASIS, et Pauca Miscellanea; with Notes and Scanning Tables. By the same.—12mo. 3s. bound; large paper, 6s. boards.

The greatest possible care was bestowed to make the text of this edition correct, and the notes as useful as possible to the young scholar.

"This work contains a treasure of knowledge, with which no student in Theology can dispense: it unites the most valuable observations which Lightfoot, Schoettgen, and Meuschen, have made from the works of Hebrew and Rabbinical writers—those which Carpzov and Krebs have made from Philo and Josephus—those which Raphel, Bos, Alberti, Eisner, Kypke, Palairat, and Munthe, have made from the Greek classics, together with an immense number which the author's own profound erudition supplied. The different senses of the words are investigated with the utmost philological precision; they are illustrated by the principal passages of the Greek Testament; and the whole is arranged in the most perspicuous manner."—Marsh's Opinion in his Michaelis Vol. iii, pt. 2, page 5, in notes.
