IN-VĪDĒRE (-video, vīdi, sum,) alicui, to envy, Cic. Acad. 4, 2. Or. 2, 52. Troâsin invideo, I envy the Trojan women, Ovid. Ep. 13, 137. mavelim (for malim) mihi inimicos invidere, quàm me inimicis meis, Plaut. Truc. 4, 2, 30. invidet ipsa sibi, she envies herself, i. e. prevents her own happiness, Ov. Fast. 2, 591.—* sometimes used without a case or absolutely: invidet aut favet semper dignitatis iudex iniquus populus, Cic. Planc. 3. qui invidet, minor est, Plin. Ep. 6, 17. non cadit autem invidere in sapientem, ergo ne misereri quidem, a wise man is incapable of envy, and consequently of pity, Cic. Tusc. 3, 10. so neque illè aut doluit miserans inopem, aut invidit habenti, sc. rem, neither has he been grieved with pity for the poor, nor has he envied the rich, Virg. G. 2, 499.—passiv. illi, quibus invidetur, rem habent, those who are envied, have an estate or are rich, Plaut. Truc. 4, 2, 32. sibi ne invidetur, caveat, Id. Bacch. 3, 6, 15. non modò non invidetur illi assati (sc. juventuti) verum etiam favetur, Cic. Off. 2, 13.—* ego cur invidior, for invidetur mihi, why am I envied, Hor. Art. P. 56. but this form of construction hardly occurs any where else.—* INVIDERE honori alicuius, to envy one's preferment, Cic. Rull. f. invident honori meo; ergo invident et labori, innocentiae, periculis etiam meis, Sallust. Jug. 85, 18. si fortunae vestrae fortuna inviderit, Id. Cat. 58 f. est haec seculi labes, et macula, invidere virtuti, Cic. Balb. 6. invidit operi, sc. Veteris, (for opus Veteri, envied or grudged Vetus the honour of the work, Tac. Ann. 13, 53. postquam non utilis auctor victibus invidit, some hurtful adviser envied or was displeas'd with the former simple food of men, Ovid. Met. 15, 104. paribus non invidet armis, does not envy your equal arms, i. e. does not envy you for having performed equal actions to his, (for Apollo, when a boy, slew the serpent Python with his arrows, in defence of his mother, as Ascanius slew Numanus, in defence of his country,) Virg. Æ. 9, 655.—* Cicero quotes from Accius, Quisnam florem liberum invidit meum, which, he says, seems to be improper, (malè Latinè videtur,) for flori. But some think that the phrase may be defended by supplying MIHI; thus, who hath envied or grudged me the flower of my children? or, by taking INVIDIT for FASCINAVIT, who has fascinated or bewitched, &c. Cic. Tusc. 3, 9. pass. laus atque gloria, cui maximè invideri solet, which uses to be envied, Cic. Or. 2, 51. video, non, ut antea putabam, novitati esse invisum meae, that my ignoble birth has not been envied, i. e. that I am not envied for having been raised to honour, though of mean birth, Cic. Fam. 1, 7, 19.—* nolite id mihi dare, quod multi invident, will envy, Nep. 8, 4. hence aula invidenda, to be envied, Hor. Od. 2, 10, 6. postes invidendi, ib. 3, 1, 45. non invidenter laudes suas mulieribus viri Romani, did not envy or grudge, were, not niggardly in bestowing, Liv. 2, 40. quia non, ut forsit honorem jure mihi invident quisvis, ita te quoque amicum, because, though or as perhaps any one may justly envy me the honour of being a military tribune in the army, he cannot so or with equal justice envy me your friendship, Hor. Sat. 6, 49. tene—invidit fortuna mihi? did fortune envy me the enjoyment of thee? i. e. has she invidiously snatched thee from me? Virg. Æ. 11, 43. Ascanione pater Romanus invidet arces? does he a father envy Ascanius the Roman towers? i. e. is it consistent with his paternal affection to envy or keep from Ascanius the glory of founding the empire of Rome? ib. 4, 234. nec bonus Eurytion praelato invidit honori, for honorem Acestae praelato sibi, envy the honour of Acestes, who was preferred to him, ib. 5, 541. jampri dem nobis caeli te regia, Caesar, invidet, envies us the enjoyment of thee, as our emperor, Virg. G. 1, 504. sed mihi—senectus invidet imperium, envies me the enjoyment of the empire, prevents me from accepting, Virg. Æ. 8, 509. invidit Amyntas, sc. fistulam mihi, Virg. E. 2, 39. liber pampineas invidit collibus um-bras, Bacchus has envied or refused the shade of the vines to the hills, i. e. the vines are parched or stript of their leaves by the heat, ib. 7, 58. nobis optimam naturam (al. magistram) invidisse videntur, to have envied us (or deprived us of) our best guide, Cic. Tusc. 3, 2. sunt qui tibi mensis honorem—invideant, grudge, Ovid. Fast. 4, 85. so Id. Pont. 2, 8, 59.—* Instead of the accus. of the thing, we sometimes find an infinitive or the part of a sentence; as, nullus est, quoi non invideant rem secundam obtingere, there is no one, whose prosperity they do not envy, Plaut. Bacch. 3, 6, 14. invidere alii bene esse, tibi male esse, miseria est, to be grieved that it is well with another, and ill with yourself, is misery, Id. Truc. 4, 2, 31. adfers —purpuram Tyriam. In qua tibi invidio, quòd unis vestimentis tamdiu lautus es, Cic. Flacc. 29. and by a Greek construction the genitive; as, neque illi sepositi ciceris nec longae invidit avenae, for cicer and avenam, he neither grudged him the hoarded vetches, nor the long oats, Hor. Sat. 2, 6, 83.—* After the age of Cicero, we find, Invidere alicui hac re, for hanc rem, Quintil. 9, 3, 1. thus, neque enim ego invidio alii bono, quo ipse careo, for bonum, Plin. Ep. 1, 10 f. quousque et tibi et nobis invidetis? tibi maximà laude: nobis voluptate? Id. 2, 10, 1. add. Id. 2, 20, 8. & 3, 8, 2. & 9, 13, 6. invidet igne rogi miseris, for ignem, Lucan. 7, 798. sed et hi (cervi) bono suo invident, for bonum, sc. nobis vel hominibus, grudge us the benefit of their horns when they cast them, Plin. 8, 32 s. 50. ne hostes quidem sepulturâ (al. sepulturam) invident, sc. mortuis, grudge, refuse, Tac. Ann. 1, 22. non invidetis exemplo, sc. tibi, I will not hinder you from exhibiting so noble an example, ib. 15, 63. (But EXEMPLO here may be in the dative; sc. tuo; as, invident honori meo, Sallust. Jug. 85.) INVIDENTES speciosis, envying men of high rank, Vell. 2, 73. alterius res secundae nihil nocent invidenti, the person that envies, Cic. Tusc. 4, 8. saevis Liburnis scilicet invidens privata deduci superbo non humilis mulier triumpho, i. e. invidet Caesarem hanc gloriam, ut deduceretur v. deportaretur, &c. being a queen (non humilis mulier) she scorned to be carried as a private person in the cruel Liburnian ships, (saevae, quia saevos portabant,) to adorn the proud triumph of Augustus, (superbo triumpho, in the dative, for ad triumphum;) or (it may be in the abl. sc. in,) in a proud triumph, Hor. Od. 1, 37, 30. The old scholiast on this passage informs us from Livy, that Cleopatra, when she was on purpose treated kindly by Augustus, often used to say, NON TRIUMPHABOR, I shall not be led in triumph.—INVIDIA, ae, f. envy. non in eo solum, qui invidet, dicitur; sed etiam in eo, cui invidetur, Cic. Tusc. 4, 7. invidiâ Siculi non invenere tyranni majus tormentum, than envy, i. e. the envy of the prosperity of others, Hor. Ep. 1, 2, 58. digna imitatione, non invidiâ hominum excellentium virtus, Cic. Phil. 14, 6. assidua eminentis fortunae invidia, Patere. 1, 9 f. sine invidia laudem invenias, without envy, i. e. without being envied by others, Ter. And. 1, 1, 39.—(II) incendium invidiæ, the flame of odium, blame, censure, or dislike, on account of the abuse of power, Cic. Cat. 1, 11 f. sed si quis est invidiæ metus; num est vehementius severitatis ac fortitudinis invidia quam inertiae ac nequitiae pertimescenda? ib.—* It is sometimes difficult to express precisely in English the meaning of the Latin word INVIDIA. Cicero thus distinguishes it from ODIIUM, hatred: In ODIIUM adducuntur, sc. adversarii, si quod eorum spurcè, superbè, crudeliter, malitiosè factum proferetur; in INVIDIAM, si vis eorum; potentia, divitiarum, cognatio, pecuniarum proferuntur atque eorum visus arrogans et intolerabilis; ut his rebus magis videantur, quam causae suae confidere, Cic. Inv. 1, 16. hic non effugit civium suorum invidiam, the odium or illwill, Nep. 2, 8. & 12, 3. add. Id. 5, 3, 7, 7. id factum magnæ erat invidiæ tyranno, brought great odium, illwill or hatred on the tyrant, Id. 10, 4. add. Liv. 4, 49. so quod dictum magna invidia consecuta est, Nep. 10, 6. crimen invidiæ, for invidiousness, Id. 7, 4. res in invidia erat, was odious, unpopular, publicly blamed, Sallust. Jug. 25. so Cic. Att. 2, 9. per invidiam decemviralem, taking occasion from the public aversion to the decemvirs, to mention or propose secretly to the common soldiers the creation of tribunes, &c. Liv. 3, 43. orant ac moment, sc. Patres, ut ipsis ab invidia caveatur, that they might be screened or protected from public resentment or odium, ib. 52 f. dandus invidiæ est sanguis, our blood must be shed to gratify the public odium or the spite of our enemies, ib. 54. in summam invidiam adductæ res, rendered odious or unpopular, Cic. Fam. 1, 1 f. invidiam commovere, concoctare, conflare, &c. in aliquem, to raise odium against one. so facere invidiam alicui, to make one odious, Cic. Fam. 11, 1 f. Ovid. Met. 4, 548. Suet. Cal. 56. invidiam ut deis lugendo facias, that you may raise odium against the gods by your grief, Senec. Herc. Oet. 1861. invidiâ aestuare, ardere, flagrare & conflagrare, to burn or blaze with odium, to be the object of public dislike. mortis illius in Flaccum Laelius conferebat, laid the odium or blame of his death on Flaccus, Cic. Flacc. 17. in invidiam aliquid adducere, rapere v. trahere, to expose to odium, Cic. invidiam lenire, mollire, placare, &c. to mitigate odium. non eris invidiæ ferendæ, sc. aptus v. par, you will not be able to bear the odium, Ovid. Amor. 3, 6, 21. add. Met. 10, 628.

INVIDENTIA, æ, f. the act of envying the property of another. ab invidendo invidentia recte dici potest, Cic. Tusc. 3, 9. invidentiam esse dicunt aegritudinem susceptam propter alterius res secundas, quæ nihil noceant invidenti, ib. 4, 8.—* a word seldom used, Invidentia, (utendum esse enim docendi causâ, verbo minus usitato; quoniam invidia non in eo, qui invidet, solum dicitur; sed etiam in eo, cui invidetur,) ib. 4, 7.—

INVIDÛS, a, um, envious. fortuna viris invidiæ fortibus, envious of, Senec. Herc. fur. 524. nox, coeptis invidiæ nostris envied my attempts by shortening my pleasure, Ovid. Met. 9, 485.— INVIDIOSUS, a, invidious; both in an active and passive sense. invidiosus dici potest et qui invidet et qui invidetur, Gell. 9, 12. tempus edax rerum, tuque invidiosa vetustas, omnia destruitis, grieved at their continuance, and therefore wishing their destruction, malignant, Ovid. Met. 15, 234. ante Jovem passis stetit invidiosa capillis, full of rancour, for the loss of her daughter Proserpine, spiteful, Id. Met. 5, 513. so invidiosâ Saturnia, inflamed with hatred against the Romans, as being descended from the Trojans, Id. Fast. 1, 266.—(II) But it is used more frequently in a passive sense.—duplex invidia; altera invidium, altera invidiosum facit, there are two kinds of envy or hatred; the one makes a person envious of the prosperity of others, the other makes them the object of envy, odium or dislike to others, Quintil. 6, 2, 21. sunt enim illi invidiosi apud bonos, odious, objects of dislike or aversion among men of worth, Cic. Att. 2, 19. quæ sunt invidiosa, ea laudando et efferendo invidiosiora faciunt, more odious, Cic. Or. 2, 75. quod in illo iudicio invidiosissimum, Cic. Cluent. 37. moenia finitimis invidiosa locis, fit to raise the envy of the neighbouring states, Ovid. Ep. 7, 120. arma invidiosa tulisti, you have borne arms in an odious cause, against your mother Clytaemnestra and Aegysthus, Ovid. Ep. 8, 49. invidiosa feri radiabant arria regis, the odious palace of the cruel tyrant Nero shone with gold, Martial. 1, 2, 3. hence called domus AUREA, Suet. 31. comes, a companion that would bring odium on him, Ovid. Met. 8, 144. crimen, Cic. Cluent. 52. fortuna Caesaris, odious on account of his having oppressed the liberty of his country, Paet. 2, 60. imploratio, invidious, tending to excite odium or indignation in the minds of the hearers, Quintil. 9, 2, 38. iudicium illud, for judges illi, odious on account of the infamy of having received a bribe, Cic. Cluent. 50. so iudex, ib. 58. quò mors foret invidiosior, more odious or offensive to the gods, Ov. Met. 7, 603. inventor muneris etiam diis invidiosi, envied by, or an object of envy to the gods, on account of its excellence, Plin. 32, 2 f. nomen sapientiarum et invidiosum et obscurum, disliked, hated, Cic. Anic. 5. so nomen invidiosum voluptatis, Cic. Acad. 4. & Fin. 2, 4. fecit itaque nomen parentis non filio invidiosum, sed ipsi, in quam dicebatur, to excite odium not against the son, but against the mother herself, against whom the pleading was made, Quintil. 11, 1, 63. Pactolus—invidiosus arenis, (in the abl.) to be envied for its sands, which produced gold, Ov. M. 11, 88. pecunia, Cic. Balb. 25. possessiones, Id. Rull. 2, 26. præmia, rewards which would raise odium against them, Ovid. Met. 13, 414. rapina, odious, Ovid. Amor. 1, 8, 55. so res, Quintil. 6, 5, 9. reus, Cic. Cluent. 59 f. spes, invidious, the acquisition of which would cause envy to others, Ovid. Met. 4, 795. & 9, 10.

turba non invidiosa, not to be envied, despicable, Ovid. Fast. 3, 434.

INVIDIŌSE (adv.) vivis, in a manner to raise envy or odium, A. ad Heren. 4, 20. neque post Numidici exilium aut reditum, quisquam aut expulsus invidiosus, aut receptus est laetiùs; did any one's banishment cause greater odium, or his return greater joy than Cicero's, Paterc. 2, 45.

IN-VĪSUS, a.—dis, hominibus, odiosus or offensive, to, hated by, Cic. Q. Fr. 3, 1. caelestibus, Virg. Æ. 1, 387. divis, ib. 2, 647. numen, an odious or hated deity, ib. 7, 571. so caput, ib. 9, 496. facies, ib. 2, 601. lux, 4, 631. fratres, 6, 608.—filius invisa aratris, the fern detested by the ploughs, Virg. G. 1, 189. so invisa Minervae aranea, the spider hated by Minerva, ib. 4, 246. for the reason of which, see Ovid. Met. 15, 145. invisa dis regna, Virg. Æ. 8, 245. Troja jacet certè Danais, invisa puellis, Ovid. Ep. 1, 3. quid me invisum fatis genuisti? why didst thou bring me forth detested by the fates? Virg. G. 4, 324. quo enim quis versutior et callidior est, hoc invisor et suspectior, detractâ opinione probitatis, the more hated and suspected, Cic. Off. 2, 9. urticâ quid esse invisus potest? Plin. 22, 19. cuius marito inimicissimus, ipsi invisissimus fuerat, very odious to herself, Plin. Ep. 2, 20.* INVĪSUS is also used for non visus: maribus non invisa solum, sed etiam inaudita sacra, sacred rites not only not seen, or unlawful, to be seen by males, Cic. Arusp. Resp. 27. But we oftener find in this sense, IN-VĪSĪTATUS, a, um.—Clusini, quum formas hominum invisitatas cernebant, when they saw men of a form which they had not seen before, (al. inusitatas) Liv. 5, 35. invisitatis alienigenis, having never been visited by foreigners, Liv. 27, 39. quae enim est forma tam invisitata, (al. inusitata,) so uncommon, Cic. Div. 2, 67.

IN-VISIBILIS, e, invisible, that cannot be seen, Cels. praef. 28.

IN-VĪSĪERE (-so, si, -) aliquem hominem v. locum, to visit. ut invisas nos, suadeo, Cic. Att. 1, 20f. ad meam majorem filiam inviso domum, I am going home to visit my elder daughter, Plaut. Stich. 1, 2, 9.

IN-VĪGĪLARE rei alicui, to watch over, to pay attention to. aliae (sc. apes) victu invigilant, for victui, some labour to procure food, Virg. G. 4, 158. so venatu invigilant pueri, for venatui, are intent on hunting, keenly engaged in the chase, Id. Æ. 9, 605. invigilant animo curae, cares are awake in his mind, i. e. disturb his mind though asleep, Stat. Theb. 3, 4. so curam invigilare quieti, that care should disturb our repose while asleep, ib. 8, 623. curis invigilat mens, is awake to, is agitated by, Sil. 19, 331. so nec capiat somnos, invigiletque malis, Ovid. Fast. 4, 530.

G. 4, 469. rex fluviorum Eridānus, ib. 1, 482.—As the king of Persia was the most powerful monarch in ancient times, the title of REX is often appropriated to him; thus, vel rex semper maximas mihi agebat gratias, Ter. Eun. 3, 1, 7. in Asiam ad regem militatum abiit, Id. Heaut. 1, 1, 65. so Nep. 9, 4, 17, 2, &c. but under the emperors the title of REGUM REX was given to the king of Parthia, Suet. Cal. 5.—After the expulsion of Tarquin, the name of Rex was odious among the Romans, (regium nomen alibi magnum, Romae intolerabile esse, Liv. 27, 19.) and denoted a tyrant or absolute monarch. nam impune quaelibet facere, id est esse regem, Salust. Jug. 31, 26.—hence, to flatter that prejudice, an ambassador from Rhodes, addressing the senate, in answer to king Eumenes, says, reges serva omnia, et subjecta imperio suo esse volunt.—Barbara, quibus pro legibus semper dominorum imperia fuerunt, reges habeant; Graeci suam fortunam, vestros animos gerunt, Liv. 37, 54.—so nihil aliud actum, nisi ut decem reges, aerarii, vectigalium, provinciarum—domini constituerentur, ten tyrants, Cic. Rull. 2, 6. non regno, sed rege liberati videmur, we seem to be freed not from tyranny, but from the tyrant, i. e. Caesar, Cic. Fam. 12, 1. si Caesar rex fuerit, quod quidem mihi videtur, ib. 11, 27, 20.—But afterwards this title was sometimes given to the emperors; thus, Statius to Domitian, longamque tibi, rex magne, juvenam annuit, atque suos promisit Jupiter annos, Silv. 4, 1 f. so Martial, with still meaner adulation, terrarum domino, deoque rerum, promisit (sc. Janus) Pyliam quater senectam; addas, Jane, tuam, pater, rogamus, i. e. immortal, 8, 2, 6.—(II) REX is sometimes put for patronus; thus, coram rege suo de paupertate tacentes, plus poscente ferent, before their patron, Hor. Ep. 1, 17, 43. so rexque paterque audisti coram, nec verbo parcius absens, you have been called in your presence both my patron, &c. ib. 1, 7, 37.—also for a governor or tutor. memor actae non alio rege puertiae, for puertiae, of boyhood passed under the same preceptor or master, Hor. Od. 1, 36, 8.—or for any great or rich man. rex regnatorum, aliàs dominum, aliàs divitem significat, Donat. ad Ter. ibid. hence, according to the doctrine of the stoics, the wise or truly virtuous man (sapiens) is called REX REGUM, ib. 107.—

* REX sacrificulus v. sacrorum, king of sacred things; a priest who performed the sacred rites, which used formerly to be performed by the kings, Liv. 2, 2, & 40, 42. Cic. Dom. 14. Har.
