THE high authority allowed to the works of Dr Adam, by classical scholars, and the teachers of the more eminent schools of Great Britain, supersedes the necessity of speaking of the merit or utility of the present publication. The beginning of the Latin and English Dictionary is considerably reduced in size from the large work, in which the author had long been engaged; the middle part is nearly the same as in the former edition; and the latter part is shortened, on the general principle adopted by the Editor. It is therefore presumed, that the whole will be found tolerably uniform, and well suited to the use, not only of younger, but likewise of more advanced students.

The want of an English and Latin Dictionary, and an Index of Proper Names, is now supplied; and in order to direct the judgment and form the taste in the composition of Latin, synonymous words have been carefully distinguished, and numerous phrases produced, from the best authors, to ascertain the different shades of their signification. In executing this task, the Editor acknowledges his obligations to Baret's Alvearium, Robertson's Phraseologia Generalis, Ausonius Popma de Differentiis Verborum, Dumesnil's Synonymes, and Crombie's Gymnasium.

It is intended to put to press, as soon as possible, the Thesaurus, the result of the etymological labours of the Author, in 2 vols. 4to. on a new type, of a large size; and also a small Latin and English Dictionary, for the use of the lower forms, left in a finished state, and apparently the groundwork of the author's researches.

PREFACE

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THE compiler of the following pages intended a much larger work than the present; but being discouraged from executing his design, by the high price of paper and printing, he resolved, in the mean time, to publish an abridgement for the use of learners: and, to render it useful also to more advanced Students, he has intermingled a fuller explication of such words, as appeared most important or difficult. Afraid, however, of increasing the book too much, he at first enlarged on very few words.—For the sake of brevity, the infinitive only of easy verbs is inserted, and the nouns derived from them, when the meaning is obvious, are marked by contraction: so likewise in the case of adverbs derived from adjectives and participles. These and other such abbreviations will be easily understood by the reader, who is supposed to be previously acquainted with the principles of grammar. The present of the infinitive, rather than the first person of the present of the indicative, is inserted, as answering best to the English, and because from it derivatives are usually formed. When there is any difficulty in the conjugation of a verb, its preterite and supine are marked; except in those compound verbs, which agree in conjugation with their primitives. A few names of gems, plants, and insects, which rarely occur, are omitted.

The compiler perceiving, as he proceeded, the utility of more copious illustrations, and that most of them might be included within moderate bounds, introduced them afterwards more frequently; and, in the latter part of the book, has enlarged almost on every word according to its importance: on several of them, nearly as much as he proposed in his larger work. He has endeavoured carefully to distinguish the different meanings of words, and to explain them by the most pertinent examples. When the various significations of a word could not easily be reduced to distinct heads, he has, with much pains, arranged the examples alphabetically.—In order to connect the knowledge of words and things together, whenever a beautiful moral sentiment occurred, or an allusion is made to a remarkable custom, to an historical fact, or the like, the whole sentence is transcribed, and if difficult, explained. When the example refers to any thing of peculiar importance to the idiom of the Latin language, it is farther illustrated by quoting similar passages from various authors. On this part of the work the compiler has bestowed the utmost attention, and hopes it will be found useful to readers of every description. Any one, who takes the trouble of examining only a few of the words, on which he has enlarged, and of comparing them with those in Ainsworth, or indeed in any other dictionary the compiler has met with, will perceive the pains he has taken, and how much still remains to be done, to facilitate the perusal of the Latin classics. If the public approve of the specimen, which he has here given, he will endeavour to complete his larger work to the best of his ability.

He has, as usual, borrowed with freedom, whatever he judged fit for his purpose. To enumerate the various authors he has consulted, would be tedious and useless. He has been indebted chiefly to Cooper and Ainsworth, to Gesner's edition of R. Stephani Thesaurus, to the Lexicon of Facciolati and Forcellini, to the Indexes of Burmannus, Cellarius, Ernesti, and the editors of the classics Ad usum Delphini.

The diphthongs ae and oe are printed without contraction, as they are found in ancient manuscripts, and as they are printed by several of the best modern editors, Gesner, Ernesti, Heynè, and Jani.—The compiler proposed to have subjoined two Appendices of proper names; the one containing the names of places, and the other of persons: but that being impracticable in this volume, he must refer the reader, for information on those subjects, to his Geographical Index, and Classical Biography.

It is now near four years since the printing of this book was begun. The delay has been occasioned by the difficulty of the work, and by making various alterations and additions.—Great care has been taken to correct the press; and considering the minute nature of the work, it is hoped that few typographical mistakes of any consequence will be found. For this, as for other favours, the compiler is much indebted to a friend, distinguished for his accuracy and classical taste, Professor DALZEL, who has been so obliging, as to read over with critical attention, all the sheets as they were printed, except a few: and he embraces, with great pleasure, this opportunity of acknowledging his obligations to that learned gentleman, for his kind assistance in revising and correcting occasionally all his former works, for above thirty years.

Particular attention has been paid to mark with accuracy the quotations from the classics, and from the best editions.—The editions of prose authors most frequently consulted, are the following; Cicero, by Ernesti and Verburgius: in Cicero's epistles ad Familiares, when the epistle is long, the subdivisions are marked from the edition of Cortius:—so in Pliny's epistles, from the editions of Cellarius, Cortius, and Longolius: Livy, by Drackenborch, Ruddiman, Crevier, and Ernesti: Sallust, by Cortius: Caesar, Cornelius Nepos, Florus, and Justin cum notis ad usum Delphini: Velleius Paterculus, cum notis Variorum: Tacitus, by Brotier, and Ernesti: Cato, Varro, Columella, and the other writers de re rusticâ, by Gesner: Suetonius, by Pitiscus, and Ernesti: Quintilian, by Gesner: Celsus, by Targa, with the excellent Index of G. Matthias: Pliny, by Franzius, Leipsic, 1778; and by Brotier, Paris, 1779. As this author has been very often quoted, not only the books and chapters are marked, but likewise the section, and sometimes also the subdivisions of the section, according to Hardouin.

CHAPTER I THE EARLY PERIOD

The first part of the history of the United States is the most interesting and important. It shows the growth of the nation from a few scattered colonies to a powerful and united people. The early years were marked by struggle and sacrifice, but the result was the establishment of a free and democratic government. The people of the United States are proud of their heritage and their achievements. They have built a nation that is respected and admired by all.

Rosc. Am. 16. Tu missus abibis, you shall get off, escape, or pass without blame, Hor. Sat. 2, 1, 86. Quò diversus abis, whither do you go out of the way? Virg. Æ. 5. 166. Ne in infinitum abeamus, that I may not be insufferably tedious, Plin. 17, 25. s. 38. Præceptis in vulnus Fabius abiit, fell down dead upon his face, Liv. 2, 46. Abiturum cum non esse denunciat, i. e. interfectum iri, Cic. Caecin. 7. Ne res ab Apronio abiret, lest Apronius should be outbidden at the sale, and thus lose what he wanted, Cic. Verr. 3, 64. Abire exulatum, to go into exile; deambulatum, to go to walk. Abiit rete pessum, hath sunk to the bottom, Plaut. Truc. 1, 1, 15. Id fides abierit, for ejus or circa id, that hath ceased to be credible or probable, Liv. 3, 10. Memoria vetustate abii, it is forgotten by length of time, Liv. 2. Spes salutis abiit, is gone, Ov. M. 7, 565. So nausea abiit, Cic. Att. 14, 10. pesilentia, Fam. 14, 1. Pretium retro abiit, is diminished, has sunk, Plin. ep. 3, 19. Postquam timor sibi cuique futurae inopiae abiit, each ceased to fear for himself, Liv. 2, 52. Abiit tempus, hora, dies, &c. is past; decem menses abierunt, have or are past; Abire magistratu, to go out of office at the usual time; but this phrase is also applied to those, who retained their power beyond the legal time, as the Decemviri: because, when that time was expired, they were no longer considered as legal magistrates, but usurpers, Liv. 3, 51. Abire ab emptione, to retract a bargain; in mores avi, to imitate, Liv. 1, 32. in serum, to turn, Plin. 16, 12. s. 23. so in salem, Id. 31, 7. in semen, 21, 11. s. 37. Abi in malam rem, crucem, pestem, malum cruciatum, &c. be gone, go to the mischief; forms of imprecation; but abi is also used by way of praise or encouragement, Donat. in Ter. Adelph. 5, 1, 1, & 4, 2, 25. or of contempt, ib. 2, 2, 13. 4, 4, 10. Plaut. Truc. 5, 1, 50. or to accelerate those who linger, Ter. And. 1, 2, 1. Plaut. Pan. 1, 3, 20, &c. Abire in ora hominum, to be in every body's mouth, to be the subject of general discourse, Liv. 2, 56. Non hoc tibi sic abibit, i. e. non ferēs impunè: Mirabar, hoc si sic abiret, would go off or pass so, Ter. And. 1, 2, 4.

ABĪTUR, -ibatur, -itum est, &c. imp. Abibitur, sc. a me, I shall depart, Plaut.; abitum quam aditum malis, sc. a te fuisse ad eas, you will wish rather that you had gone away than come to them, Plaut. Cist. 1, 1, 35.

Off. 1, 1. non vides solem deum esse, Lunamque, quorum alterum (the one) Apollinem Graeci, alteram (the other) Dianam putant, Id. N. D. 3, 20. so ad Herenn. 3, 20. Syll. 21. certam alter alteri obstrepere, bawled out the one against the other, Liv. 1, 40. quum alter alterum videmus, Cic. Fin. 3, 2. so Cic. N. D. 2, 29. Plaut. Truc. 2, 4, 30. Liv. 5, 11. Suet. Cal. 56. Plin. 11, 30. Senec. Ep. 7. alter ab altero adjutus, Cic. Br. 1. noxii ambo alter in alterum causam conferunt, Liv. 5, 11. ut altera altera non contingant sc. mala v. poma, that they may not touch one another, Col. 12, 45, 1. ille alter, the or that other, Ter. Eun. 2, 3, 8.—* We sometimes find alterae in the dat. sing. fem. Ter. Heaut. 2, 3, 30. Phor. 5, 7, 35. Plaut. Rud. 3, 4, 45. Nep. 18, 1.—alteris castris pervenit ad oppidum, by two encampments, i. e. in two days, Curt. 3, 7, 5. alteris jam literis nihil ad me de Attica, sc. scribis, in these last two letters, Cic. Att. 13, 22. aurea mala decem misi; cras altera mittam, other ten apples, Virg. Ecl. 3, 71. so Cic. Fam. 4, 14, & 3, 9. Varr. R. R. 1, 17, 1. 2, 2, 7.—* When alter, repeated, refers to two words going before, the first alter is applied to the former word, and the second to the latter; as, Cic. Off. 1, 26. Fam. 7, 3. Vell. 2, 61. but not always; as, Cic. Off. 1, 12. & 2, 16, & 18. Quint. 1. Rosc. Com. 6. Plin. Ep. 6, 8. Quinct. 9, 2, 6. Liv. 22, 57. &c.—Sometimes in place of the second alter, the proper name is repeated; as, Cic. Fin. 3, 30.

ALTER is commonly applied to two who are equal; when any inferiority is expressed, secundus is used; as, Nep. 4, 3.

ALTER is often put for alius; as, Cic. ad Brut. 4. Tusc. 2, 17. Fam. 6, 3, & 4, 14. Off. 1, 21. Tusc. 5. extr. Lael. 21.—And for diversus or dissimilis; as, sperat infestis, metuit secundis alteram sortem, a different lot, a change of fortune, Hor. Od. 2, 10, 14. quoties te speculo videris alterum, changed, ib. 4, 10, 6.—also for secundus or similis; as, conditor alter urbis CAMILLUS, a second founder, like to Romulus, Liv. 5, 49. AMĀRE, adv. bitterly. See AMĀRUS.

AMĀRE, to love, to be fond of, to regard with affection.—AMARE denotes a greater degree of affection than diligere; inter amare et diligere, hoc interest, quòd amare vim habet majorem, diligere autem est leviùs amare, Non. 5, 3. Clodius, tribunus plebis designatus, valde me diligit, vel (ut $\mu\phi\alpha\tau\iota\omega\tau\epsilon\rho\nu$ dicam) valde me amat, Cic. Ad Brut. Ep. 1. quis erat, qui putaret ad eum amorem, quem erga te habebam, posse aliquid accedere? tantum accessit, ut mihi nunc denique amare videar, antea dilexisse, Cic. Fam. 9, 14, 11. quem ego quum olim mutuò diligerem, ex hac officii societate amare ardentius coepi, Plin. Ep. 3, 9, 7.—(DILIGERE est quasi ex multis eligere, et quodam habere; amare autem est impetu quodam et cupiditate amplecti: diligimus propter virtutem et ex ratione, amamus propter voluptatem et ex appetitu. Diligere is to regard or esteem one with a rational affection on account of his virtue, learning or other accomplishments; amare, to regard with a passionate affection or fondness.)—But these distinctions are not always observed; thus, dilexi tum te, non tantum ut vulgus amicum, sed pater ut gnatos diligit et generos, Catull. 71, 3. amare autem nihil aliud est, nisi eum ipsum diligere quem ames, &c. Cic. Amic. 27.—* amare and diligere are sometimes joined: Archagatus, homo nobilis, qui a suis te amari, et diligi vellet, to be loved and esteemed, or regarded, Cic. Verr. 4, 23. so te semper amavi, dilexique, Id. Fam. 15, 7. nos admodum diligit, amplectitur, amat, Cic. Att. 1, 13 m. non quòd quemquam plus amem, aut plus diligam, eò feci, sed, &c. Ter. Auson. Epist. 7, 50.—(VI) stamen scernit arundo, the reed separates the warp of a web in the loom, Ovid. Met. 6, 55.—ARUNDO is also used to denote a staff for striking with, Propert. 4, 7, 25. and a pole for supporting vines, Varr. R. R. 1, 8, 1.

ARUNDINEA fronde additâ, the leaves of reeds, Plin. 10, 29. mellaque arundineis inferre canalicibus, to introduce or convey honey into beehives by canals of reed, Virg. G. 4, 265. silva arundinea, i. e. arundinetum, a wood or thicket of reeds, Id. Æ. 10, 709.—frumentis folium ARUNDINACEUM, like the leaves of reeds, Plin. 18, 7.

ARUNDINOSA Cnidus, abounding in reeds, Cat. 37, 15.—Thybris ARUNDINIFERUM medio caput extulit alveo, Ovid. Fast. 5, 637.—minores halcyones in ARUNDINETIS canunt, Plin. 10, 32. per arundineti semitam aegrè evasit, Suet. Ner. 48.

ARVUM, a field ploughed, but not sown; any field: arvum quod aratum, necdum satum est, Col. 2, 9. Varr. R. R. 1, 29, 1. so Festus; & Scholiast. Horat. Ep. 1, 16, 2. arvorum cultus, Virg. G. 4, 1. nunc locus arvorum ingeniis, the proper place to treat of the nature of the different soils, Virg. G. 2, 177. externum patrio amicus arvum, more friendly than your native soil, Ovid. Met. 15, 444. arvum genitale, i. e. matrix equina, Virg. G. 3, 136. so Lucret. 4, 1105. optima putri arva solo, those fields are best which have a loose soil, Virg. G. 2, 262.—zephyrique tepentibus arvis laxant arva sinus, the fields open their bosoms to the warm breezes of the west wind, i. e. at the approach of spring, are freed from the frost, ib. 330. exercetque frequens tellurem, atque imperat arvis, by frequent tilling makes the fields produce a plentiful crop, ib. 1, 99. Senec. Tranq. 14. quid dicam, jacto qui semine comminus arva insequitur, cumulosque ruit malè pinguis arenae, immediately falls on the fields and levels the heaps of barren sand, or breaks the hard ridges jutting up, Ib. 104. cum flavis messorem induceret arvis agricola, brought the reapers into the yellow fields, or set them to cut down the ripe corn, ib. 316. arva aliena jugo premere, to press with the yoke, to reduce to subjection a country not their own, Virg. Æ. 10, 78 f. florentia proterit arva, treads down the flourishing fields, i. e. the corn, Ovid. Met. 2, 791. ne perconteris, fundus meus—arvo pascat herum, sc. an, with its ploughed land or corn, Hor. Ep. 1, 16, 2. arva marte populata, laid waste by war, Id. Od. 3, 5, 24. squalent abductis arva colonis, lie uncultivated, Virg. G. 1, 507. sic quoque mutatis requiescunt foetibus arva, the fields rest by a change of grain, which in some measure answers the same end as letting them lie fallow, ib. 82. ante Jovem nulli subigebant arva coloni, tilled, ib. 125. Numidae pabulo pecoris magis quàm arvo student, pay more attention to pasturage than agriculture, Sallust. Jug. 90.—Plautus uses ARVUS, thus, non arvus hic, sed pascuus est ager, Truc. 1, 2, 47. but here arvus seems to be an adjective, as pascuus. see Isidor. 15, 13.

ARX, arcis, f. (gen. pl. arcium,) a citadel or fortress: ab arcendo, quod is sit locus munitissimus urbis, a quo facillimè possit arceri hostis, Varr. L. L. 4, 32. vel per metathesin, ab arxos, summus, æquos; whence this word is applied to mountains, Virg. G. 1, 240. & 2, 534. Sil. 3, 496. & 15, 305. Val. Flac. 4, 261. Lucan. 3, 231. also to heaven; Ovid. Met. 1, 163. Amor. 3, 10, 21. & ad Albinovan. v. 61. Stat. Theb. 3, 246, 9.—But properly, arx est editus in civitate et munitus ad salutem omnium locus Ascon. in Cic. Caecil. 5. so Serv. ad Virg. Æ. 3, 134. Tarpeia arx, Ib. 8, 652. arce ex summâ, from the citadel of Carthage, Ib. 4, 410. arx Athenarum, Nep. 22. Syracusis, Id. 20, 3. so Plin. 4, 11. mimora castra inclusa majoribus, castelli atque arcis obtinebant locum, Caes. B. C. 3, 66.—Hence ARX is applied to every kind of refuge, or whatever we confide in; thus, arx omnium gentium, urbs Roma, Cic. Cat. 4, 6. arx omnium provinciarum, Africa, Id. Ligar. 7. in arce legis praesidia constituere defensionis meae non licet, Cic. Cluent. 57. arx sociorum (the security or protection, sc.) lex repetundarum est, Cic. Caec. 5. arx civium perditorum, Id. Pis. 5. arx amicorum suorum, the chief, Cic. Phil. 8, 8. arcem tu quidem Stoicorum defendis, the chief doctrine, Id. Divin. 1, 6. classis est arx commeatuum, Tac. Hist. 3, 13. arcem juris attingere, i. e. summum imperium tenere, Lucan. 7, 593. munite communem arcem bonorum, obstruite perurgia improborum, Cic. Sull. 28. cf. Pis. 5. constituere praesidia defensionis in arce legis, Cic. Cluent. 57. num potui magis in arcem illius causae invadere? could I have more attacked the fortress of that cause? could I have made a bolder attack on the party of Pompey and Caesar? Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 15.—But ARX is also put for the summit or top of any thing, height, pre-eminence: thus, celsa tu mentis ab arce despicis errantes, humanae gaudia rides, Stat. Silv. 2, 2, 131. Cicerone tum arcem eloquentiae tenente, being at the top of the bare Quinctil. 12, 11, 28. quae te via, fare, superbum ad decus, et summas laudum perduxit arces? Sil. 13, 770. ad arcem ostentationis operata pervenerunt, Plin. 35, 10 s. 36.—* protinus aërias Phaeacium abscondimus arces, we lose sight of, i. e. we pass the lofty promontories or mountains of the Phaeacians or Corcyra, Virg. Æ. 3, 291. festae Pallades arces, i. e. the citadel of Athens, Ovid. Met. 2, 713. sacrae arces, the sacred citadel, i. e. the capitol, Hor. Od. 1, 2, 3. arcem attollere tectis, to rear a citadel, Virg. Æ. 3, 134. Servius makes it, to build houses.—arceas attingit igneas, i. e. caelum, Ib. 3, 3, 10. arces Alpius impositae, the citadels or forts built on the Alps, Ib. 4, 14, 11. montibus, Id. Ep. 2, 1, 252. cum laceras aries balistaque concutit arces, shake the battered towers, Ovid. Met. 11, 509.

As vel ASSIS, assis, m. a pound, or any thing that may be divided into twelve parts; the name of a Roman coin.

ASSIPONDIIUM, i, n. the weight of an AS or pound, Varr. L. L. 4, 26.—Decussis, is, m. te asses; so centussis, an hundred. The parts into which the As is divided are, uncia, ac, f. an ounce; sextans, ntis, m. two ounces; quadrans, ntis, m. three ounces; triens, ntis, m. four ounces; quincunx, cis, m. five ounces; semis, issis, m. six ounces; septunx, cis, m. seven ounces; hes, hessis, m. eight ounces; dodrans, ntis, m. nine ounces; dextans, ntis, ten ounces; denunx, cis, m. eleven ounces.—(II) ex asse heres, the heir of one's whole estate, Martial. 3, 10. Quinctil. 7, 1, 20. ex triente, of the third; ex dodrante, of two-thirds, &c.—(III) the interest of money was also expressed by the parts of the AS; thus, when a whole AS was paid for the use of a hundred each month, it was called USURA CENTESIMA, because in a hundred months it equalled the original sum; or more frequently in the plural, usurae centesimae, &c. as we call it, twelve per cent. per annum: so usurae semisses, six per cent.; trientes, four per cent.; quadrantes, three per cent. &c. See USURA.—(IV) The AS was a brazen coin, at first weighing a pound. asse populo modium dare, a peck for an AS, Cic. Off. 2, 17. ad assem impendium reddes, you shall refund the expence to a penny, Plin. Ep. 1, 15. assem para, et auream accipe fabulam, prepare your penny, and hear a pleasant story; an AS used to be given by the hearers to a pleasant story-teller, Ib. 2, 20. aestimare aliquid assis, Cat. 5, 2. emptum plus minus asse Caiano, at the lowest price; in allusion, as some think, to the AS, mutually exchanged in marriage, when the bridegroom called his bride CAIA, and she called him CAIUS (A. 466); or rather to the diminution of the weight of the AS by Caius Caligula, Stat. Silv. 4, 9, 22. unius assis non unquam pretio pluris licuisse, was never valued more than the worth of one penny, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 13. miles collecta viatica multis aerumnis ad assem perdiderat, Id. Ep. 2, 2, 27. si comminuas (sc. immensum pondus auri atque argenti), vilem rediget ad assem, to a poor or paltry penny, Id. Sat. 1, 1, 43. in trivis fixum quum se demittat ob assem, stoops for a farthing fixed in the streets by the boys, to impose on those who passed, Id. Ep. 1, 16, 64. so Pers. 5, 111.

ASA, anciently put for ARA, Gell. 4, 3. Macrob. Sat. 3, 2.

* ASSARŌTON, i, n. (ex à priv. et ασψω, verro,) a kind of pavement, made of small pebbles, or tiles died with different colours, where the crums or scraps which fall from the table, and such things as used to be swept away, seemed to be left, Plin. 36, 25 s. 60. Stat. Silv. 1, 3, 56.

* ASSĀRUM, i, n. wild spikenard, an herb, Plin. 12, 13. 21, 6 & 19.

AUCTRIX, icis, f. is used by some later writers, but does not occur in the classics.

AUCTORITAS is used in nearly as many different senses as AUCTOR: it denotes in general that influence which one has from age, wisdom, wealth, virtue, dignity, power, or the like. AUTHORITY is a peculiar attribute of the Roman senate; (potestas in populo, auctoritas in senatu sit, Cic. Legg. 3, 12.) Sext. 65. and expresses the power of that order, which was different at different periods of the state, Liv. 1, 17. (A. 20.) but AUCTORITAS Senatûs is also put for Senatûs Consultum, a decree of the Senate; thus, Senatûs vetus auctoritas de Bacchanalibus, Cic. Leg. 2, 15. so Id. Fam. 1, 2. Off. 3, 30. when the tribunes of the commons interposed their negative, (intercedebant,) Cic. Fam. 8, 8, 18.—sometimes auctoritas senatûs simply signifies the will of the senate; as, C. Flaminius agrum Picenum contra auctoritatem senatus virum dividebat, Cic. Sen. 4. or an opinion of its wisdom, Id. Cluent. 55. Phil. 3, 5. Dom. 19.—(II) AUCTORITAS is sometimes applied also to the people; as, citra senatus populique auctoritatem, without, Suet. Caes. 28.—cedere auctoritati senatus, to submit to the decree or authority of the senate, Liv. 4, 57. non esse in auctoritate senatus, not to submit to it, ib. 56. so se in auctoritate Tarentinorum manere, submitted to the determination of, Liv. 9, 14.—(III) auctoritas antiquitatis, Quinct. 1, 6, 39. audientium, the dignity or respectability, Id. 12, 5, 1. deorum, Quinctil. 12, 10, 8. frontis, Quinctil. 12, 5, 5.—Pliny uses auctoritas for the value or estimation in which a thing is held; as, quibus vinis auctoritas fuerit, 14, 14 s. 17. tanta ebori auctoritas erat, 12, 4 s. 8. 29, 6 s. 39. 32, 2 s. 11. 33, 7 s. 38. so also Varr. R. R. 2, 5, 3.—AUCTORITAS sometimes is referred to that kind of external appearance, which commands respect.—AUCTORITATES praescriptae, (al. perscriptae,) the names of those senators who staid to see the decree of the senate written out, (qui scribendo adfuerunt,) which were prefixed to the decree, Cic. de Or. 3, 2. Fam. 8, 8, 12.—auctoritates publicae, public papers or documents, written out and sealed, to prove some fact, Cic. I. Act. Verr.—testibus auctoritatibus convincitur, by authentic proofs, Cic. Verr. 5, 39 f. pilis et gladiis, non consiliis neque auctoritatibus de jure publico disceptatur, not by opinions, Cic. Fam. 6, 1. so nostrae auctoritates, my opinions, Id. Cluent. 50.—AUCTORITAS ab oratoribus vel historicis peti solet, the authority for using a word, Quinctil. 1, 6, 2. repetere auctoritatem a plurimis versibus, to take an authority or example, Id. 3, 11, 39.—AUCTORITAS, among lawgivers, denotes the right of property or of claiming any thing as one's property; as, adversus hostem (i. e. a foreigner) aeterna auctoritas esto, let the right of claiming the property of any thing against a foreigner be perpetual; that is, a foreigner can by no length of possession, or prescription, as it is called, secure the property of any thing against the claims of a Roman citizen, Cic. Off. 1, 12. so Gell. 17, 7, usus auctoritas fundi biennium est, i. e. auctoritas fundi ex usucapione biennii paratur, the property of a farm is acquired among citizens by the undisputed possession of it for two years, Cic. Top. 4. lex usum, et auctoritatem (the right of property derived from use or possession) jubet esse biennium, Cic. Caecin. 19. so that usus auctoritas, and usus et auctoritas, signify the same thing.—aquaeductus, haustus, iter, actus, a patre, (sc. relinquuntur;) sed rata auctoritas harum rerum omnium a jure civili sumitur, the secure or certain property, Cic. Caecin. 26.

AUCTORARE, vel Auctorari, (dep.) to sell one's self for hire, chiefly to fight as a gladiator; rarely used except in the participle perfect.—AUCTORAMENTUM, i, n. wages or hire given to induce one to fight as a gladiator, or to do any other service: quid refert ari virgis, ferroque nerari AUCTORATUS eas? sc. an, what difference does it make as to your being a slave, whether you be bound, &c. Hor. Sat. 2, 7, 59. eo pig-nore velut auctoratum sibi esse proditore m-ratus, bound, Liv. 37, 10. est enim in illis (sc. sordidis quaestibus, in mean trades,) ipsa merces, AUCTORAMENTUM servitutis, their wages is the price at which they sell themselves for slaves, Cic. Off. 1, 42. jugulati civis auctoramentum, the reward given by Sylla for butchering a citizen, Paterc. 2, 28. auctoramento funebri ad conservatoris quondam reipublicae tantique consulis (sc. Ciceronis) irritare necem, said of Antony, ib. 66.

AUCTUS, ūs, m. an increase, &c. See AUGERE.

AUCUPARI, to fowl; AUCUPIUM, fowling, &c. See AUCUPES.

AUDERE, (audeo, ausus,) to dare: audere majora viribus, to attempt, Virg. Æ. 10, 811. praelium, Tac. Ann. 13, 36. scelus aliquid, Ovid. Ep. 14, 6. ultima, Liv. 2, 2. vim cultoribus ac oppidanis, ac—navicularios audebant, Tac. Ann. 12, 55. non ausis aciem hostibus, not daring to fight, Tac. Ann. 12, 32 & 23. nihil ultra fremitum et minas ausus, Id. Hist. 1, 15. ausurosque nocturnam castrorum oppugnationem, Id. Ann. 2, 12. ultionem ausus dubiis rebus, ib. 62. audendum dextrâ, Virg. Æ. 9, 320. auctor audendi, ib. 12, 159. audendi majora fidem fecere immensae vires, gave Caesar confidence to attempt, Lucan. 1, 462. pictoribus atque poetis quidlibet audendi semper fuit aequa potestas, Hor. Art. P. 9.—(II) AUDEO is sometimes used in the passive: thus, multa dolo, pleraque per vim audebantur, Liv. 29, 9. si animadverterent, auderi (impers. sc. ab Atheniensibus, for Athenienses audere,) adversus se tam exiguis copiis dimicare, Nep. 1, 4. hence AUSUS has also a passive sense; ausi omnes immane nefas, ausoque potiti, they all attempted horrid wickedness, and accomplished what they attempted, Virg. Æ. 6, 624. so ausis ad Caesarem codicillis, having ventured or presumed to send, Tac. Ann. 3, 67. hence AUSUM, i, n. sc. negotium, a thing dared, an attempt: ausi nullius capax natura, ib. 13, 47. auso foret ille potitus, would have succeeded in his enterprise, Ovid. Met. 11, 942. fortia ausa, Virg. Æ. 9, 281. ausa crudelia, Ovid. Ep. 14, 49. magnis tamen excidit ausis, he failed in a great attempt, Ovid. Met. 2, 328. AUDENS, ntis, a. daring; audentes fortuna juvat, assists the brave, Virg. Æn. 10, 283. so Ovid. Metam. 10, 586. tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito, Virg. Æn. 6, 95. audentissimus quisque, Tac. Agric. 33. audentior oratio, poetical, Dial. de Or. 14. inde Syriam audentioribus spatiis petebat, through a more dangerous part of the sea, by a bolder voyage, Tac. Hist. 2, 2.—ceteri audentius circumstistere, ib. 78. so Ann. 4, 47.—AUDENTIA, ae, f. boldness: nec deficit audentia Druso, boldness, courage, Tac. Germ. 34. rara et privata cujusque audennia, ib. 31. ut quisque audientiae habuisset, sc. plurimum, Id. Ann. 15, 53. si datur Homero vocabula contrahere, extendere, inflectere; cur tibi similis audentia—negetur? freedom, Plin. Ep. 8, 4.—

AUDAX, a. bold; animus audax, daring, Sallust. Cat. 5. audax omnia perpeti Gens humana, Hor. Od. 1, 3, 25. audacibus annue coeptis, favour my bold attempt, Virg. G. 1, 40. audacior ad facinus, sc. solito, uncommonly bold or daring to commit, Cic. Cat. 2, 5. audacissimus ego ex omnibus, Id. Rosc. Am. 1.—audaciora verba sc. aequo, too bold, i. e. poetical expressions, Quintil. 10, 5, 4.—

AUDENTER, AUDACITER, & AUDACTER, adv. boldly: inhaerent quidam molestissima diligentiae perversitate, ut AUDACITER potius dicant, quam AUDACTER, licet omnes oratores aliud sequantur, Quintil. 1, 6, 17. AUDACITER, however, is retained by the best editors, in Cic. Rosc. Am. 34. Cael. 6. Sen. 22. Liv. 22, 25 & 40. dicere liberius atque audacius, Caes. B. G. 1, 18. audacissime prorumpere, ib. 5, 15. so 2, 10. Liv. 30, 30.—

AUDACIA, ae, f. boldness, courage, bravery: animus paratus ad periculum, si sua cupiditate, non utilitate communi impellitur, audaciae potius nomen habeat, quam fortitudinis, Cic. Off. 1, 19. audacia et audentia hoc differunt; quod audentia fortitudinis est; audacia, temeritatis, Non. 5, 84. but this observation does not always hold: in the example which Nonius quotes, (audacia pro muro habetur,) audacia denotes courage or bravery, Sallust. Cat. 58. so duabus his artibus audacia in bello, ubi pax venerat, aequitate, &c. ib. 9. ceteris audaciam addere, Id. Jug. 94. so Propert. 2, 10, 5. in general, however, audacia is taken in a bad sense; thus, imitator fortitudinem audacia, audacity, Cic. Partit. 23.—audacia cullida, immanis, impudens, ingens, petulans, praecipens, singularis, &c.

AUDIRE, (audio, i, vi, itum,) to hear: ab auribus videntur dicta audio et ausculto, Varr. L. L. 5, 8. liquidius audiunt talpae, Plin. 10, 69.—clarissime audire produntur, mugil, lupus, salpa, pisces, ib. 70. parum auribus audire, Cato, R. R. 157. si mihi pergat, quae vult, dicere, ea quae non vult audiet, Ter. And. 5, 4, 17. et breviter Trojae supremum audire laborem, i. e. breviter enarratum, a short relation of, Virg. A. 2, 11. audire Socratem aut Platonem, to hear, i. e. to be scholar of, Cic. Acad. 1, 9. Nat. D. 1, 14. Off. 1, 1. audiendi studiosus ex hoc enim disci facillime arbitratur, Nep. 15, 3.—(II) Audio is also applied to inanimate things; as, neque audit currus habenas, the chariot, i. e. the horses do not regard the reins, Virg. G. 1, 513. nec quae magis audeat arcum, sc. sagitta, which would more obey the bow, i. e. would fly as it was directed, Ovid. Met. 5, 382. arma cessant, teque languenti manu non audit arcus, Senec. Herc. Act. 975. hence arcus surdus, Stat. Theb. 9, 864. clavum audire negantem, a rudder which cannot be managed for the storm, ib. 5, 412. dirigit huc puppim miseri quoque dextra Telonis, qua nul-

lam melius, pelago turbante, carinae audire manum, dexterous at managing the rudder, Luc. 3, 594. si quod tardius audit virus, if any poison obeys too slowly, Id. 9, 931.—(III) Audio is used in various senses, according to the words, with which it is joined.—

AUDIRE, a, e, ex, et de aliquo, to hear from any one: saepe hoc audivi de patre et de socero meo, from Cic. de Or. 3, 33. so Sen. 13. Off. 1, 30. Ter. And. 3, 1, 2. But audire de aliquo, or de aliqua re, commonly signifies to hear of or concerning; as, cum de te ex te ipso audiebam, Cic. Fam. 2, 11, 2.—AUDIO (I hear or understand) is elegantly used when we grant something to an opponent, Cic. Verr. 2, 59 & 60. Rosc. Am. 18. or when one simply assents, Ter. Eun. 2, 3, 78 or ironically, when one disapproves of what is said, Id. Phorm. 1, 3, 8. non audio, I reject what you have said, Cic. Verr. 3, 34. ponere aliquid, ad quod te audiam, sc. dicere, to propose some question on which I may hear you speak, Cic. Fat. 2 f. si me audies, vitabis inimicitias, if you will take my advice, Cic. Fam. 2, 18. nec audiendi quidam, ought they to be regarded, Quintil. 3, 3, 4. so Cic. Amic. 15. si fabulas audire volumus, to credit or believe, Cic. Tusc. 1, 58. nec Homerum audio, Ib. 26. P. Semprenium civem vestrum non audistis, arma capere, ac se iubentem sequi; Annibalem paulo post audistis, castra prodi, et arma tradi iubentem, obeyed, Liv. 22, 60. non sum auditurus, NON ERAM ROMAE, vel OCCUPATOR ERAM, I will not admit these excuses, Plin. Ep. 2, 2. audietur a populo vir primarius, eques Romanus, L. Flavius, his evidence as a witness will be regarded or he will be believed, Cic. Verr. 1, 5.—BENE aut MALE AUDIRE, to be well or ill spoken of, to have a good or bad character, to be praised or blamed; thus, benedictis si certasset, audisset bene, sc. a nobis, he should have been commended, Ter. Phorm. prol. 20. so 2, 3, 12. est hominis ingenui et liberaliter educati, velle bene audire a parentibus, Cic. Fin. 3, 17. so Id. Legg. 1, 19. Tusc. 5, 40. Verr. 3. mater appellabitur; neque unquam illa ita de suo sceleret et immanitate audiet, ut naturae nomen amittat, so blamed for or accused of, Cic. Cluent. 5. saepe reverendum laudasti, rexque, paterque, audisti coram, nec verbo parcius absens, have been called to your face or in your presence, Hor. Ep. 1, 7, 37. tu recte vivis, si curas esse, quod audis, what you are called or are said to be, ib. 1, 16, 7.—(IV) As AUDIRE is sometimes put for INTELLIGERE, so it also signifies to understand, or to supply some word or words purposely omitted in a sentence; as, hoc nomine (νομαστος) donarunt ea, quae non dicunt, verum intelligi volunt, ut in eum quem saepius a ludo (sc. gladiatorio) redenerat soror, agentem cum ea talionis, (bringing an action of retaliation against her,) quod ei pollicem dormienti recidisset, eras dignus, ut haberes integram manum. sic enim auditur, (i. e. subintellige vel supple,) ut depugnares, Quintil. 8, 5, 12.—Plautus sometimes uses AUDIBO for au-

diam, Poen. 1, 2, 97. Capt. 3, 4, 86. see Non. 9, 11.—In the time of Quintilian AUDISSE was rather used than AUDIVISSE, 1, 6, 17. but both occur in the best authors, as Cicero observes concerning nôsse and judicâsse, Orat. 47 pr.—AUDIENS is sometimes used as a substantive: thus, animum audientis movere, of the hearer, Cic. Orat. 17. animos audientium permovere, Id. Brut. DICTO AUDIENTEM ESSE, to be obedient, is always followed by another dative; which is a remarkable expression, as AUDIO itself is never so construed: thus, ego sum Jovi dicto audiens, Plaut. Amph. 3, 4, 6.—Hac re AUDITA, Nep. 2, 4. hoc non auditum, sed cognitum praedicamus, this we affirm, not from hearsay, but from personal knowledge, Nep. 25, 13 f. carmina non prius audita canto, verses not before heard at Rome, as Horace was the first Roman lyric poet, Hor. Od. 3, 1, 3. hujus audita virtus, heard of, Cic. Balb. 6 f. Romae cuncta in deterius audita Mutianum angebant, Tac. Hist. 4, 19. audita recordari, Virg. Æ. 3, 107. repetere, to recollect, Ovid. Ep. 19, 193.—AUDITO in the ablative is sometimes used absolutely; thus, ipse, audito castellum Luppiae flumini appositum obsideri, sex legiones eò duxit, having heard; and the following part of the sentence is to be considered as the substantive, with which AUDITO agrees, Tac. Ann. 2, 7. so ib. 14. 7. Liv. 27, 7. & 34, 9. post victoriam audito crudelior Sulla, than was ever heard of, Vell. 2, 25. vidistin' an de auditio nuncias, from hearsay or report, Plaut. Merc. 5, 2, 62. so Id. Bacch. 3, 3, 65. ex auditis, Lucr. 5, 1132. nihil praeter auditum habeo, Cic. Off. 1. 10 f.—

AUDĪTUS, ūs, m. the sense of hearing, and sometimes the act.—auditus (i. e. sensus audiendi) cui hominum primò negatus est, huic et sermonis usus ablatum, Plin. 10, 69 s. 88. auditus semper patet, the sense of hearing, Cic. N. D. 2, 57. vereor ne hoc quod dicam, non perinde intelligi auditu possit, atque ego ipse cogitans sentio, by hearing or by being heard, Cic. Marcell.—brevi auditu quamvis magna transibat Vitellius, passed them over with a short hearing, i. e. did not mind them, Tac. Hist. 2, 57.—

AUDITIO, ōnis, f. the act of hearing, a report. auditione expetere coepit, sc. signum Cereris, cum id ipse non vidisset, by report, Cic. Verr. 4, 46.—

AUDIENTIA, ae, f. an audience: audientiam facere praekonem jussit, to make a hearing, i. e. to produce silence, Liv. 43, 16. exsurge, praeco, fac populo audientiam, bid the people be silent and attentive, Plaut. Poen. prol. 11 f. facit persaepe ipsa sibi audientiam disertis senis comita et mitis oratio, gains attention, Cic. Sen. 9. cf. Cic. Caecil. 13. de Orat. 2, 80. Heren. 4, 54.—

AUDĪTOR, ōris, m. a hearer; semper ego auditor tantum, nunquamne reponam? must I always hear poets repeat their verses, and never reply? Juvenal. 1, 1. de gloriâ misit tibi, sc. meos libros v. librum. custodies igitur, ut soles: sed notentur eclogarii, (sc. loci, the choicest passages), quos Salvius bonos auditores nactus, (having got a company of well disposed hearers.) in convivio duntaxat legat, Cic. Att. 16, 2.—

(II) Initio contumeliae causâ a deridentibus discipuli Latronis AUDITORES vocabantur; deinde in usu verbum esse coepit, et promiscue poni pro discipulo auditor, Senec. Contr. 25. Strato auditor Theophrasti, the scholar, Cic. Acad. 1, 9. so Eudoxus Platonis auditor, Id. Div. 2, 42. praebebo me tibi attentum auditorem, Cic. N. D. 3, 1.—(III) calumniis auditor, a cavilling reader, Varr. L. L. 5, 1. because the Romans, instead of reading themselves, had slaves who read books to them.—

AUDITORIUM, ii, n. a school, an assembly of hearers, an auditory: auditorium extruit, a place where one may read his verses or declaim to a number of hearers, Dial. de Orat. 9. ab auditoriis et theatris in forum et ad causas vocare, from the exercises of declamation to real business at the bar, ib. 10. non eadem est conditio fori et auditorii, the manner of speaking at the bar or in the forum, and in a rhetorical school, is not the same, Quintil. 10, 1, 36. Isocrates auditoris se, non iudicis comparat, had fitted himself for declaiming in a school, not for pleading in a real trial, Id.

AVE, vel HAVE, aveto vel haveto, be thou safe, hail, all health to you; a form of salutation: plur.—

AVĒTE, 2. pl. imper.—

AVĒRE, a defective verb; found in no other part; for AVEO, ēre, to desire, is a different word.—* AVE, or SALVE, was the word commonly used in the morning salutation; as VALE was in the evening, Suet. Galb. 4. et matutinum portat ineptus ave, carries the morning salutation, Martial. 1, 56. 6. manē tibi pro me dicat avere liber, ib. 109, 10. ave Latinum, χαῖρας non potest Graecum, he can pronounce the Latin word of salutation AVE, but not the Greek, Id. 5, 52 7.—AVE, or HAVE, was also used as a salutation to a person after a long absence; thus, Caesar, simul atque have mihi dixit, quid de te audisset, mihi exposuit, Cic. Fam. 8, 16, 8. see Martial. 9, 8. Gell. 15, 7.—We find, however, HAVETO put for VALETO, farewell, Sallust. Cat. 35. so have, Catull. 102, 8.—In the time of Quintilian AVĒTE had become obsolete, instead of which they used HAVETE, 1, 6, 21.

AVEHĒRE, (ēho, xi, ctum; ex a & veho,) to carry away: is venit, ut sēcum avehat, sc. eam, Ter. Adel. 4, 5, 19. creditis avectos hostes? sc. navibus, are gone, or have sailed away, Virg. Æ. 2, 43. add. ib. 179. & 11, 205.

AVELLĒRE, (ello, elli, & ulsi, ulsum; ex a & vello,) to pull or tear away, to pluck off, to take away or carry off by force.—

AVULSIO, ōnis, f. the act of pulling away: nascuntur omnia aut semine aut avulsione, all garden herbs are produced by seed, or by pulling a slip from the mother plant, Plin. 19, 7 s. 36 so 17, 10.—

AVULSOR, ōris, m. he who tears away: ubi avulsorem sentiunt, contractae multo difficilius abstrahuntur, sc. spongiae, when they feel one pulling or plucking them off, Id. 9, 45 s. 69.

AVENA, ae, f. oats,—metaph. a pipe.—* AVENA commonly denotes wild oats, (STERILES AVENAE,) Virg. E. 5, 37. & G. 1, 154. which the ancients falsely imagined were produced by a degeneracy of wheat or barley, Plin. 18, 14 s. 44. Hence Servius on Virgil says that they were called STERILES, to distinguish them from those which were sown, ib. and were usually cut for fodder, Col. 2, 11, 9. They were sometimes made into meal; hence farina avinacea, oatmeal, Plin. 29, 6. and the people of Germany used no other pottage, (neque aliâ pulte vivunt,) Plin. 18, 17 s. 44.—cicada avenaria, a kind of cicada, which appears when the corn grows ripe, Plin. 11, 27 s. 32.—As shepherds use to play on an oat-stalk, hence AVENA is put for a pipe; thus, silvestrem tenui musam meditaris avenâ, you play a pastoral air or rural tune on a slender oat-stalk or pipe, Virg. E. 1, 2. so 3, 27. Martial. 8, 3 f. Tibul. 3, 4, 71. structis cantat avenis, plays on oat-stalks joined together, Ov. Met. 1, 677. for the shepherd's pipe, in its improved state, was composed of several reeds of different lengths: sic rustica quondam fistula disparibus paulatim surgit avenis, ib. 8, 192.

AVENACEUS, adj. oat-stalk, made of oats.—
AVENARIUS, adj. of or belonging to oats.

AVĒO, ĕre, to desire eagerly: itaque quem sumus negotiis curisque vacui, tum avemus aliquid audire et discere, Cic. Off. 1, 4. valde avco, scire quid agas, Cic. Att. 2, 15. & 2, 1. parto, quod avebas, having gotten what you desired, Hor. Sat. 1, 1, 93. so 1, 14, 87. & 2, 4, 1. It is sometimes written HAVEO, Cic. Att. 1, 15 s. & 20.

AVĪDUS, a. desirous, eager, greedy, covetous: avidior ad rem aliquid, too fond of money, Ter. Eun. 1, 2, 51. cibi avidus, ib. 5, 4, 16. avidissimus gloriae, Cic. Marcél. 8. servorum manus subitis (dat.) avidae, intent on sudden wealth, Tac. Hist. 1, 7. avida Charybdis, greedy of devouring ships, Ovid. Met. 14, 75. spiritus, covetous, Hor. Od. 2, 9. tigris, greedy of blood, Lucan. 6, 487. Vulcanus, eager for battle, Horat. Od. 3, 4, 58. Lucretius uses avidus for magnus, 5, 202. & 471.

AVĪDE, adv. eagerly: pransus non avidè, not greedily, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 127. edere avidè, Ov. Art. Am. 3, 659.

AVĪDITAS, âtis, f. an eager desire: aviditatis legendi, Cic. Fin. 3, 2. ad aliquid faciendum, Plin. 17, 18. ad cibos, Id. 20, 16. pecuniae, Cic. Parad. 1. sermonis, Id. Sen. 14.

AVĒRNUM, i, m. pl. -a. n. a lake of Campania of a disagreeable steam, Geog. p. 151. put for the entrance to the infernal regions, Virg. Æ. 6, 237. or for the abode of the dead; hence called Tartareus Avernus, Stat. Theb. 3, 108. vacuus, because possessed by incorporeal shades, Claudian. de Rapt. Prosepe. 1, 20. umbrosus, ib. 1, 116.—* used as an adjective; thus, Avernas exire valles, to leave the infernal regions, Ovid. Met. 6, 738. loca Averna, Virg. G. 2, 164. degeneres tenebris animas damnavit Avernis, to infernal darkness, Sil. 15, 76.—put also for Pluto, Val. Flac. 2, 693. & 5, 348.—hence Avernales aquae, the waters of Avernus, Hor. Epod. 5, 26. the same with what Virgil calls latices fontis Averni, Virg. Æ. 4, 512. Avernales nymphae, the infernal nymphs, Ovid. Met. 5, 540.

AVĒRUNCĀRE, (ex a & verruncus), to avert, to expiate: placuit averruncandae deum irae, victimas caedi, Liv. 8, 6. averruncare prodigia, ib. 10, 23. dii averruncant, Cic. Att. 9, 2. so Cato, R. R. 141.

AVĒRTĒRE, (a-verta, ti, sum), to turn away, to avert.

AVĒRSUS, a, um, averse.

AVĒRSIO, onis, f. a turning away.

AVĒRSOR, ōris, m. a purloiner or embezzler of the public money.

AVĒRSOR, âtus, ari, to turn from, to dislike, to abhor.

AVĒRSATIO, ōnis, f. aversion, abhorrence.

AVĒRSABILIS, e, detestable—* Lepidus, Antonio diadema Caesari imponente, se AVĒRTIT, Cic. Phil. 5, 14. avertere oculos, Ovid. Met. 2, 770. vultum, ib. 5, 179. se totum, Cic. Balb. 5. Antonium ab urbe, Id. Fam. 3, 2. atque ut in aedificiis architecti avertunt ab oculis et naribus dominorum, ea quae profuentia necessarii tetri essent aliquid habitura; sic natura res similes procul amandavit a sensibus, Cic. Nat. D. 2, 56. animum ab aliquo, Cic. Am. 1. ut totius Galliae animi a se averterentur, were alienated, Caes. B. G. 1, 20. di talem avertite casum, avert, Virg. Æ. 3, 265. causam doloris, to dissemble, Liv. 6, 34 f. curas dictis, to remove, Virg. Æ. 4, 394. avertit equos in castra, led away, Virg. Æ. 1, 472. Italiâ Teucrorum avertere regem, to drive or keep from, ib. 38. morbos, Hor. Ep. 2, 1, 136. quod omen Dii avertant, Cic. Fam. 12, 6. Phil. 11, 5. pecuniam publicam, to purloin or embezzle, Cic. Verr. 1, 4, Tac. Hist. 1, 53. so hereditatem, Cic. Fam. 12, 26. & 13, 29. avertere pecuniam domum, to convert it to one's private advantage, Cic. Div. 1, 17. scientia auguratûs, the knowledge of augury, ib.—quae ista AUGURATIO est ex passeribus, annorum potius, quam aut mensium, aut dierum? (what kind of divining or conjecturing is that?) Cic. de Div. 2, 30.

AUGUSTUS, a, um, august, sacred, venerable. sanctus augustusque fons, Cic. T. 5, 13. AUGUSTÈ, adv. venerably, with reverence.—augustè sanctèque deos venerari, reverently, Cic. N. D. 3, 21. so 2, 24. augustiùs de religione dicere, Id. Brut. 21.—

AUGUSTUS, i, m. a name given to Caesar Octavianus, and from him to the month of August.—The meaning and derivation of AUGUSTUS began to be disputed when that title was conferred on the grand nephew and adopted son of Julius Caesar; some deriving it from AUGEÒ, and others from AUGUR. Ovid fluctuates between the two; thus, sancta vocant augusta patres vocantur templa, sacerdotum dicata manu. hujus et Augurium dependet origine verbi, et quodcumque sua Jupiter auget ope, Fast. 1, 607. cf. so Suet. Aug. 7. loca religiosa, et in quibus auguratò quid consecratum, AUGUSTA dicuntur, ab auctu, vel ab avium gestu gustuque: sicut etiam Ennius docet scribens, augusto augurio postquam incluta condita Roma est.—Virgil uses it as a proper name; Augustus Caesar divi genus, i. e. the adopted son of Julius Caesar, who was ranked among the gods, Æn. 6, 793. so 8, 678. but Claudian uses it as a common name; belliger augustus, the warlike emperor Theodosius, Claudian. Consul. Probi et Olyb. 74.—* The name of AUGUSTA was given to the wives, sometimes also to the mothers, and even to the daughters or other near female relations of the emperors, Tac. Ann. 1, 8. & 12, 26. & 15, 23. Hist. 2, 89. Plin. Pan. 84.—* The name of AUGUSTA was given to several towns in different countries of the empire: see Geog. Index. Ovid applies AUGUSTUS to any thing belonging to the emperor; thus, aures Augustae, the ears of Augustus, Pont. 1, 2, 117. forum Augustum, the forum built by Augustus, Fast. 5, 552. loca, his palace, Id. Trist. 1, 1, 71. so postes Augusti, Ov. M. 1, 56. augustae fores, Trist. 3, 1, 40. caput Augustum, the head of Augustus, Met. 15, 869. numen Augustum adorare, the majesty or divinity of Augustus, Trist. 3, 8, 13. pace Augusta frui, peace procured by Augustus, Pont. 2, 5, 18. alius, sc. suasit, ut omne tempus a primo die natali ad exitum ejus, seculum Augustum appellaretur, Suet. Aug. 100.—* Sextilem mensem e suo cognomine nuncupavit, sc. Augustus, Suet. Aug. 31.—

AUGUSTALE, is, u. the general's tent, Quinctil. 8, 2, 8. But the best editors read, AUGURALE.

AVIA, a grandmother. See AVUS.

AVIDUS, a, um, desirous, &c. See AVÈRE.

AVIS, is, f. a bird.—

AVIARIUM, i, n. an inclosed place where birds are bred or kept, an aviary.—

AVIARIUS, a, of a bird, pertaining to birds, Varr. R. R. 3, 5.—

AVIARIUS, i, m. one who has the charge of an aviary.—sequitur natura AVIUM, the nature of birds comes next to be treated of, Plin. 10, 1. alba avis, i. e. a rare thing, Cic. Fam. 7, 28. so Juvenal. 7, 202.—White birds were reckoned of a lucky omen; hence non albae aves, unlucky birds, Ovid. Amor. 3, 12, 2. aves quasdam, et alites et oscines (both those which give omens by flying, and those that give omens by singing,) ut nostri augures appellant, rerum agendarum causâ esse natas putamus, Cic. N. D. 2, 64. malâ ducis avi domum, sc. Helenam, with a bad omen, Hor. Od. 1, 15, 5. add. Epod. 10, 1. inculca aviaria, sequestered groves, frequented by birds, Virg. G. 2, 430. & ibi Serv.

AVITUS, a, of a grandfather. See AVUS.

AVIUS, a, um, (ex a i. e. sine et via,) through which there is no way, pathless, impassable, inaccessible, unfrequented, lonely.—

AVIA, orum, sc. loca, pathless places: avia Pieridum peragro loca, nullius ante trita solo, Lucr. 1, 925. & 4, 1.—(II) metaph. avius a vera longe ratione vagaris, astray, Lucr. 2, 81. add. ib. 229. & 3, 464. inquit nunc avia coepto consilia, adverse to, Sil. 12, 493.—avia dum gursu dum sequor, by running I make for pathless or lonely places, Virg. Æ. 2, 736. aditum per avia quaerit, Ib. 12, 58. so Tacit. An. 6, 21.

AULA, ae, f. a hall, a large place at the entrance of great houses, open at top. See ATRIUM: also a palace, a court: lectus genialis in aula est, in the hall or atrium, Hor. Ep. 1, 1, 87. (A. 467).—aulai (for aulae) in medio libabant pocula Bacchi, in the middle of the hall or atrium, Virg. Æ. 3, 55.—AULA is also put for the stable of cattle, Propert. 3, 11, 39. from the Greek αὐλή; (Graeci AULAS vocant animalium receptacula, unde in sacris aedibus et tribunaliis, septa quae turbas prohibent, aulas vocamus.) Serv. ad Virg. Æ. 9, 60.—But AULA commonly denotes the palace or court of kings; thus, exeat aula, qui volet esse pius: virtus et summa potestas non coëunt, Lucan. 8, 494.—Virgil uses AULA metaphorically for a bee-hive, as being the palace of the king of the bees, G. 4, 90. & 202.—(II) The ancients wrote AULA for OLLA, a pot, Plaut. Aul. 4, 2, 3, & 10, Curc. 2, 3, 89. Rud. 1, 2, 47. Cato, R. R. 85, & 52. & 81. Quinct. 7, 9, 4. whence—AULŪLA, ae, f. a little pot; and AULULARIA, the name of one of the plays of Plautus, in which the finding of a pot of gold is an important incident, Plin. 18, 11.

AULICUS, a, of or pertaining to a palace or court: s. a courtier: aulico apparatu gladiatores inducere, splendidly drest, in the court library, Suet. Dom. 4. luctatores aulici, the wrestlers kept by the emperor in the palace, Suet. Ner. 45.—(II) Datames invidiam aulicorum excepit, incurred the envy or dislike of the courtiers, Nep. 14, 5. interiores aulici, the courtiers most intimate with the emperor, Suet. Cal. 19.

AULAR, āris, n. a pot-lid, Varr. R. R. 3, 15, 2. aulicōqua exta, i. e. in olla elixa vel cocta, Festus.

AULAEUM, i, n. oftener in the plural AULAEA, orum, painted curtains, like what we call tapestry hangings; said to have been first invented in the palace (AULA) of Attālus, king of Pergamus.—aulaea dicta sunt ab AULA Attali regis, in qua primum inventa vela illa ingentia, Serv. ad Virg. G. 3, 25. These Aulaea were first used in houses for various purposes; thus, aulaeis jam se regina superbis aureā composuit spondā, reclined herself on a golden couch, covered with superb or rich tapestry, Virg. Æ. 1, 697. lectis circumdāre aulaea, purpurā auroque fulgentia, Curt. 9, 15, interea suspensa graves aulaea ruinas in patinam fecere, the hangings suspended below the ceiling of the apartment, in which they supped, to catch the dust, Hor. Sat. 2, 8, 54. sine aulaeis et ostro, without these hangings, and without purple coverings for the couches, or perhaps the latter only are meant, (i. e. sine aulaeis purpureis.) Hor. Od. 3, 29, 15. porticus aulaeis nobilis Attalicis, with hangings to keep off the dust and heat of the sun, Propert. 2, 32, 12.—(II) particularly in the theatre; sic ubi tolluntur festis aulaea theatris, when the hangings are drawn up in the joyful theatres, or on holidays, or as we say, the curtain is dropt, Ovid. Met. 3, 11. for the ancients, contrary to the modern custom, when they wanted to conceal what was doing in the back part of the stage, raised (tollebant) the curtain from the floor to the top, and drew it down (premebant) when the back part of the stage was exposed: quatuor aut plures aulaea premuntur in horas, the curtain is kept down or withdrawn, i. e. the acting of the play is suspended, for four hours or more, while the representation of a battle and a triumph is exhibited, Hor. Ep. 2, 1, 189. See Cic. Fam. 7, 1. aulaeum tollitur, the curtain is drawn up, as we say, falls or is dropt; i. e. the play or farce is over, Cic. Coel. 27. Si plausoris eges aulaea momentis, i. e. donec aulaea tollantur vel leventur, if you wish an applauder or favourable audience, who will wait the conclusion of the play, Hor. Art. p. 154. quoties aulaea recondita cessant, are laid up or lie concealed, i. e. no plays are acted, Juvenal. 6, 67.

AULESTRIS, ūdis, f. a female player on the flute, a music girl, Quinct. 7, 9, 4.

AULĒTES, ae, m. a player on the flute, Cic. Mur. 13. but the best editors have AULOEDUS, whence—AULETĪCUS, a, um, fit for making flutes, Plin. 16, 36, s. 66.

AULOEDUS, i, m. one who sung to the flute or in concert with it, Cic. Mur. 13. See Pausan. Phoc. p. 322.

AVŌCO, are, (a & voco,) to call off, to lead aside, to withdraw.—avocare aliquem a proelii, Cic. Rosc. Am. 32. a foedissimis factis, Id. Phil. 2, 45. a contuendis malis, Id. Tusc. 3, 16. a peccatis, Id. Leg. 2, 4. avocata rebus gerendis senectus, Cic. Sen. 5. a curā vocis dicentem affectus, Quinctil. 11, 3, 25. avocare arma, to divert his arms; said of a gladiator, when by feigning to attack a different part of his antagonist's body, from what he really means to strike, he induces him to turn aside his armour, and leave that part exposed, Quinctil. 9, 1, 20.

AVOCATIO, ōnis, f. a calling off or withdrawing.—levationem aegritudinis in duabus rebus ponit; avocatione a cogitanda molestia, et revocatione ad contemplandas voluptates, Cic. Tusc. 3, 15.

AVOCAMENTUM, i, n. an avocation, an amusement or diversion.—omnia mihi avocamenta exemit dolor, has made me incapable of all amusements, Plin. Ep. 3, 23. add. Ib. 5. & Pan. 82.

AVŌLO, āre, (a & volo,) to fly away, Cic. Att. 9, 10. Tusc. 1, 43. & Fin. 2, 32.

AURA, ae, f. a breeze, a gale, a wind; the air, breath; applause, or any thing which leads a person to do what he otherwise would not.—tepentes aurae, Qvid. Met. 1, 107. aurarum leves animae, Lucr. 5, 237. jucundae aurae, Catull. 44, 3. de nocte ad occasionem aurae evectus est, upon occasion of a breeze he put to sea, Suet. Aug. 97. dulcis compositis spiravit crinibus aura, a fragrant gale or odour, Virg.

Æ. 4, 417. aspirant auræ in noctem, Id. Æ. 7, 8. auræ vela vocant, Virg. Æ. 3, 956. æquatae spirant auræ, ib. 5, 844. rapidâ velocius aurâ, than the rapid wind, Ovid. Met. 3, 209. cf. 1, 502. & 13, 807. vernâ incertior aurâ, Id. Ep. 6, 109. alii taurinis follibus auræ accipiunt redduntque, take in and let out air from bellows, made of bull hides, Virg. G. 4, 171. quippe ferant rapidi secum, verrantque per auras, through the air, Virg. Æ. 1, 59. aetheriâ aurâ vescitur, i. e. vivit, ib. 546. & 3, 339. auras vitales carpis, ib. 1, 387. atque affigit (ad. affligit) humo divinae particulam auræ, i. e. animum, Hor. Sat. 2, 2, 79. discolor unde auri per ramos aura refulsit, the gleam or splendour, Virg. Æ. 6, 204. tua ne retardet aura maritos, your beauty; or, according to others, the fragrance of your breath, or the smell of you, Hor. Od. 2, 3, 24. as si tantum notas odor attulit auras, sc. equis, for si auræ attulerunt iis notum odorem, Virg. G. 3, 251. so Lucr. 2, 850. ad nos vix famæ tenuis perlabitur auræ, a small breath of fame, a faint report reaches to us, Virg. Æ. 7, 646.—From a breeze swelling or impelling the sails is derived the phrase AURA POPULARIS, popular favour or applause, Cic. Har. Resp. 20. Liv. 30. 45. gaudens popularibus auris, Virg. Æ. 6, 815.

AURATA, æ, f. a fish, called gilt-head, Martial. 13, 90. Plin. 32, 5. & 9, 16 s. 25.

AURIFODĪNA, ae, f. a gold mine, Plin. 33, 4.—

* AURUM is supposed to be derived from aurā, a yellow or bright colour, Serv. ad Virg. 6, 204. aurum—metallum omnium pretiosissimum. Praecipuam gratiam huic fuisse arbitror, non colore, qui in argento clarior est, et ideò militaribus signis similior, quoniam is longius fulget; nec pondere,—sed quia rerum uni nihil igne deperit: quinimmo quo saepius arsit, proficit ad bonitatem, Plin. 33, 3 s. 19. quasi aurum igni, sic benevolentia fidelis periculo aliquo perspicui potest, Cic. Fam. 9, 16, 3. aurum factum, gold made into plate, rings or other ornaments.—infectum, gold in the mass. sunt auri pondera facti infectique mihi, Virg. Æ. 9, 527. aurum effingere in auro, ib. 6, 32. abacos ornare argento, auroque caelato, Cic. Tusc. 5, 21. cautum erat, quo ne plus auri et argenti facta, quo ne plus signati argenti et aeris domi haberemus, we were prohibited from having more than a certain quantity of wrought gold and silver, and of coined silver and brass in our houses, Liv. 34, 6. aurum Philippeum, pure gold, Plaut. Curc. 3, 70, such as the coins called PHILIPPI, which bore the image of Philip, king of Macedonia, Plaut. Bacch. 2, 2, 52. aurum Judaicum, gold which used to be exported by the Jews, from Italy and all the provinces of the Roman empire to Je- rusalem, Cic. Flacc. 28. aurum coronarium, See CORONA. Auro contra ceddò modestum amatorem, give me for an equal weight of gold, or as we say, shew me a modest lover and I will give you his weight in gold, Plaut. Rud. 5, 3, 53. so non carus est auro contra, sc. appenso, he is worth his weight of gold, Plaut. Epid. 3, 9, 30. saevo cūm nox accenditur auro, is enlightened by a comet, Val. Flac. 5, 370. cf. 2, 58.—AURARIA metalla, gold mines, Plin. 37, 12 s. 74. & 34. 18 s. 55. negotium hoc ad me attinet aerarium, the charge of procuring money, Plaut. Bacch. 2, 2, 51.—AUREA dicta, useful, valuable, Lucr. 3, 12. aurea gens, a virtuous or happy race, such as was in the golden age, Virg. E. 4, 9. aureae horae, precious, Catull. 64, 39. imago, Ovid. Ep. 20, 237. luna, Ovid. Met. 10, 448. mala, golden apples, i. e. pomegranates of a yellow colour, Virg. E. 3, 71. So poma, Ovid. Am. 43. aureus ramus, Virg. Æ. 6, 187. saecula, ib. 8, 324. sidera, bright, ib. 2, 488. Sol, Id. G. 1, 232. aurea sponda, Id. Æ. 1, 702. vestis, supposed by Servius to be put for the beard of a yellow colour, ib. 8, 659. according to Lucr. 5, 672. but it may be taken literally.—(II) Aureus is sometimes put for AURATUS; as, Suet. Aug. 52. Hor. Epod. 9, 21. Cic. Phil. 2, 34.—(III) AUREUS nummus, Cic. Phil. 12, 8. or AUREUS, sc. nummus, a gold coin, Plin. 35, 10 s. 36, 15. equal to an hundred sestertii or nummi, sc. argentei, Suet. Oth. 4. & Tac. Hist. 1, 24. and so CENTUM AUREI, the highest fee permitted to be given a lawyer, under the emperors, (for under the republic, fees to lawyers were prohibited,) were equal to DENA SESTERTIA, Tac. Ann. 11, 7. Digest. 1, 12. de Extr. Cognit. And as 100 sestertii were equal to 25 denarii; hence some explain, aureis tribus vitae peractis, i. e. thrice 25 years, or 75 years being completed, Martial. 10, 24, 9. But the best editors read Areis. See AREA.

AUSCULTO, āre, (ab auris, anciently written ausis, & colo), to hear with attention, to listen, to hearken; to obey.—

AUSCULTĀTO, onis, f. a listening.—

AUSCULTATOR, ōris, m. a listener or hear-kener.—AUSCULTAMUS non nisi volentes, Gell. 1, 15. ausculto, atque adverto animum sedulo, Plaut. Stich. 1, 4, 40. ausculto paucis, listen to a few words, Ter. Adel. 5, 3. ta ausculto libens, Plaut. Ps. 1, 5, 38. so Poen. 4, 2, 19. Trin. 3, 2, 36. crimina, Id. Aul. 3, 5, 22. & Ps. 1, 5, 12. ausculto quod superest fallaciae, sc. id, Ter. Heaut. 4, 5, 23. populum auscultare, Catul. 66, 39.—* ab audiendo etiam auscultare declinamus, quòd hi auscultare dicuntur, qui auditis parent, Varro, de Lat. Ling. 5, 8. auscultes mihi, hearken to me, take my advice, Plaut. Curc. 2, 1, 8. nec quid agam certum est, Pamphilumne adjutem, an auscultem seni, obey or comply with, Ter. And. 1, 3, 4. Hence audio and ausculto are opposed; thus, magis audiendum, quam auscultandum censeo, Cic. Div. 1, 57.—(III) Impersonal. auscultabitur, sc. a me, I will attend to you or hear you, Plaut. Merc. 3, 3, 127.

AUSIM, (contracted for ausus sim,) ausis, ausit,—ausint; a defect. verb. the same with audeam, I dare, I should venture.—de grege non ausim quidquam deponere tecum, I dare not, Virg. E. 3. 32. ausim vel tenui vitem committere sulco, I should venture to plant, Id. G. 2, 289. nec si sciam, dicere ausim, dare I say it, Liv. Praef. 1. hoc ausim confirmare, Lucr. 2, 178.

AUSPEX, ūcis, m. (ab avis & specio,) properly an observer of birds, one who pretended to discover the will of the gods, &c.; to foretell future events, from the flight, the sounds, and feeding of birds, or in any other manner; an augur, a soothsayer, one who authorises the doing of a thing, a leader.—ego quid timebo providus AUSPEX? a provident or skilful augur, Hor. Od. 3, 27, 8. auspices legis Curiatae, those who patronized the Lex Curiata, whereby Clodius was adopted by a plebeian, i. e. Caesar and Pompey, the favourers or supporters of that law, Cic. Att. 2, 7.—The magistrate who took the auspices before a law was passed, and declared that the omens were favourable, was properly called AUSPEX LEGIS, Div. 38, 13. victoriarum toto orbe partarum auspices, sc. galli gallinacei, the cocks by their feeding (See TRIPUDIA SOLISTIMA) gave omens which presaged the victories gained by the Roman people, and thus were the foretellers of them, Plin. 10. 21 s. 24. auspices nuptiarum, the augurs who took the auspices, before the celebration of a marriage, and declared whether the omens were favourable or not, Cic. Div. 1, 16. but this custom was dropt, Cic. ib. Val. Max. 2, 1.—diis auspibus, under the conduct or direction of the gods, Virg. Æ. 4, 45. Teucro duce, et auspice, Hor. Od. 1, 7, 27. auspice musâ, Id. Ep. 1, 3, 13. Phoebæ auspice, Stat. Silv. 2, 2, 39. sacra diis ferebam auspibus coeptorum operum, the authors or favourers, Virg. Æ. 3, 20.

AUSPICUM, ii, n. an auspice; a method of soothsaying, among the Romans, or of foretelling future events from the flight, chirping, or feeding of birds, or from any other appearance; for by such signs the gods were supposed to intimate their will or intentions with respect to futurity; also authority, conduct, a beginning.—auspicium ab ave specienda, Festus.—te mihi in auspicio esse volo, I wish you to assist me in taking the auspices; the words of the magistrate to an augur, when he desired his assistance in taking the auspices, (in auspiciū adhibebat,) Cic. Div. 2, 34. (A. 88.)—Before consuls were created from among the plebeians, none but patricians had the right of taking the auspices, Liv. 6, 41. cf. Cic. Leg. 8, 12. nos nisi dum a populo auspicia accepta habemus, (have got the right of taking the auspices,) as the greater magistrates, or those who commanded armies,) quàm multum iis utimur? i. e. raro auspiciis nunc utimur, Cic. Div. 2, 36. optimum, Cic. Sen. 4. secundum, prosperous, Hor. Od. 4, 14, 16. salvis auspiciis, not against the auspices, Cic. Prov. Cons. 19. vitiosum, Id. Div. 1, 16. utile, Ovid. Fast. 1, 219. additibus auspiciis, the omens being favourable, Tacit. An. 2, 14.—auspicia dissolvere, to destroy, to vilify the authority of the auspices, Cic. Vat. 8 f. eumentiri, to falsify, to tell that an omen had happened, which had not, Cic. Div. 1, 16.—(II) As the superior magistrates alone had the power of taking the auspices; hence, AUSPICUM is put for supreme command or power, and is sometimes distinguished from DUCTUS, so that AUSPICUM is referred to the supreme commander, even when absent, and DUCTUS, to him who performs any thing in person, or who acts as lieutenant to the chief commander; thus, ductu Germanici, auspiciis Tiberii, Tac. Ann. 2, 41. alia ductu meo, (in person,) alia imperio auspicioque (by my lieutenants) perdomui, Curt. 6, 3, 2.—* When a chief commander performed any thing in person, he was sometimes said to do it, both by his conduct and his auspices; thus, supplicatio fuit, ob res prosperè gestas in Hispaniâ, ductu auspicioque Ap. Claudii proconsulis, Liv. 41, 28.—When the consuls commanded each one day alternately, he who commanded was said Habere auspiciū vel -ia; thus, Quoniam in provincia Livii res gesta esset, et eo forte die, quo pugnatum esset, auspiciū ejus fuisset, &c. Liv. 28, 9. hence communem hunc ergo populum paribusque regamus auspiciis, with equal authority, Virg. Æ. 4, 102. me si fata meis paterentur ducere vitam auspiciis, according to my own pleasure, by my own direction, ib. 340. auspiciū cui das grande, deosque tuos, power, military command, Ovid. Trist. 2, 174. But dare auspiciū jusque in certamina, i. e. potestatem pugnandi, leave to fight, Sil. 13, 154. cf. 7, 231.—auspicia belli a parricidio incipientes, beginning the war with, Justin. 26, 2. add. 27. castrorum auspiciū, beginning to serve in the army, Stat. Silv. 5, 2, 10.—AUSPICĀLIS, e, pertaining to auspices, ominous. AUSPICĀRI, (-or, ātus,) vel AUSPICĀRE, to take the auspices or omens, to begin.—C. Flaminius, cūm tripudium auspiciaretur, (was taking the auspices by feeding chickens,) pullarius diem praelii committendi diferebat, i. e. differendum dicebat, Cic. Div. 1, 35. illi autem, qui in auspiciū adhibetur, quum ita imperavit is, qui auspiciatur, DICITO, &c. when the consul ordered the augur, &c. ib. 2, 34. (II) animal caeteris imperaturum, i. e. homo, a supplicii vitam auspiciatur, begins his life with supplications, Plin. 7. proem. so auspiciari militiam, Suet. Aug. 38. culturarum officium, Col. 11, 2, 3. add. 3, 1, 1. anno novo legere, scribere, dicere aliquid—auspicabar, Senec. Ep. 83. cf. Ovid. Fast. 1, 164. quem militiae gradum (sc. tribunatum) sub patre tuo auspiciatus, having first obtained,—perfruo, Vell. 2, 101.—AUSPICĀTUS, a. lucky, fortunate.—auspica-

tus locus, consecrated by the augurs, sacred, Cic. C. Rabir. 4. auspicata sedes, lucky, Justin. 18, 15. impetus non auspicatus, unlucky, Hor. Od. 3, 6, 10. rebus agendis hoc auspicatissimum initium credunt, Tac. G. 11. urbs toto orbe auspicatissima, Just. 18, 5. nec auspicator in Lesbo insula arbor, Plin. 13, 22. quis ullos homines beatiores vidit? quis venerem auspicatorem? Catull. 43, 26.—

AUSPICĀTO, adv. fortunately.—Romulus auspicatō urbem condidit, after having consulted the gods by auspices, Cic. Div. 1, 2. nihil belli domique nisi auspicatō gerebatur, without taking the auspices, Liv. 1, 36. § 6, 41.

AUSTER, tri, m. the south wind.—austri venientis sibilus, the whisper, Virg. AVULSUS, avulsor, &c. See AVELLĒRE.

AVUNCŪLUS, i, m. the mother's brother, an uncle by the mother's side.—Traxit appellationem inde, quod aequè tertius a me ut avus est, sed non ejusdem juris; ideoque vocabuli diminutio est: Sive AVUNCULUS appellatur, quod avi locum obtineat, et proximitate tueatur sororis filium, Festus. Magnus avunculus, the grandmother's brother, Cic. Brut. 62. avunculus major, the great-grandmother's brother, Digest. But this distinction is not always observed. Thus, Julius Caesar is called simply Augusti Avunculus, Suet. Aug. 8 & 10 & 68. who was properly major avunculus, as being the brother of the grandmother of Augustus: and the same author calls the same Caesar, major avunculus Augusti, Aug. 7. so Vell. Paterc. 2, 59. In like manner Augustus is called avunculus major Claudii, Suet. Cl. 3. when he ought to have been called magnus avunculus, as Octavia, the grandmother of Claudius by the mother's side, was the sister of Augustus. Seneca calls the husband of his mother's sister (matertērae) his avunculus, Consol. ad Helv. 17. Persius, to express any remote ancestor, says, et mihi ritu Manius hic generis prope major avunculus exit, 6, 60.

AVUS, i, m. a grandfather, the father's or mother's father. avus maternus atque paternus, a grandfather by the mother's and father's side, Hor. Sat. 1, 6, 3. avi numerant avorum, Virg. G. 4, 209. despectis ortus avis, sprung from contemptible ancestors, Ovid. Ep. 20, 224. AVIA, ae, f. a grandmother. aviā nihil superest, i. e. de bonis avia, Pers. 6, 55. veteres avia, i. e. delirae, Id. 5, 92.

AVĪTUS, a, of an ancestor. avita bona, Cic. Coel. 14. celeritatem avitam mulus refert, Col. 6, 37. cellis avitis depromere Caecubum, to take Caecuban wine from the cellars in which one's grandfather had laid it up, Hor. Od. 1, 37, 6. avitus fundus, a farm received by inheritance from his grandfather or ancestors, an hereditary farm, Hor. Od. 1, 12, 43. avitum mihi hospitium est cum Lyso, I have with Lyso a league of hospitality first formed with his grandfather, Cic. Fam. 13, 34. at Numa nec Janum, nec avitas praeterit umbras, of his ancestors, Ovid. Fast. 1, 43.

Capt. 2, 3, 64. in luce collocare, Cic. Tusc. 2, 26.

BNEFICUS, a, um, (bene & facio,) beneficent, prone to do good; friendly, kind.

BENEFICENTIA, ac, f. benefecence, kindness. benefica voluntate beneyolentia movetur, etiam si res forte non suppetat, Cic. Off. 2, 9. ubi enim beneficus, si nemo alterius causâ benigne facit, Cic. Leg. 1, 18. ut enim beneficii liberalesque sumus, non ut exigamus gratiam, Id. Amic. 9. vid. Gell. 17, 5. beneficentior adversus bene merentes, Sen. Ben. 1, 4. beneficentissimus, Cic. N. D. 2, 25. Priscian quotes beneficissimus, from Cato, l. 3.—BENEFICÈ, adv. Gell. 17, 5.—JUSTITIA CONJUNCTA BENEFICENTIAE quam eandem vel benignitatem, vel liberalitatem appellari licet, Cic. Off. 1, 7. & 2, 15. N. D. 1, 43.

BENEFICIUM, i. n. a benefit, a favour, a privilege, advancement in the army: beneficium est, quod alienus det; alienus est, qui sine reprehensione potuit cessare: officium est filii, uxoris, et earum personarum, quas necessitudo suscitavit, et ferre opem jubet; ministerium est servi, &c. Sed adeo dominis servi beneficia possunt dare, ut ipsos saepe beneficii sui fecerint, that they have often made them indebted to their favour for themselves, i. e. that they owed to them their life and every thing, (some read beneficia sua.) Senec. Benef. 3, 18. commeatu a senatu peti solitos beneficii sui fecit, Claudius made the leave of absence which used to be asked from the senate to depend on his favour or gift, i. e. he assumed to himself the power of granting to senators the licence of going out of Italy, which power had before belonged to the senate, Suet. Claud. 23. However, that he might appear to exercise this right by law, he procured a decree of the senate to be made for that purpose, Dio. 60, 25. LEGATIO LIBERA.—In like manner those were called BENEFICIA, whom a proconsul or governor of a province, upon his return to Rome, after the expiration of his command, recommended to the public, for their zeal and fidelity in their respective functions, and gave in a list of their names at the same time with his accounts to the treasury. These were said in beneficiis ad aërium deferri, Cic. Arch. 5. Thus, Quod scribis de beneficiis; scito a me et tribunos militares et praefectos, et contubernales duntaxat meos delatos esse. In quo quidem ratio me fessellit: liberum enim mihi tempus ad eos deferendos existimabam dari, I thought I might give in their names at any time. Postea certior sum factus, triginta diebus deferri necesse esse, quibus rationes retulisses, that it is necessary to present this list, within thirty days after exhibiting the accounts. Sane moleste tui, non illa beneficia tuae potius ambitioni reservata esse, potius quam meae, qui ambitione non uter, I was vexed that the nomination of those recommended to public favour for their services was not reserved to you, who by that compliment might have conferred an obligation on those persons, and thus secured their interest to promote your future views of ambition or preferment, as I have no ambitious views to serve by nominating them myself. De centurionibus tamen et de tribunorum militarium contubernalibus res est in integro, with respect to the centurions and companions of the military tribunes, the matter is still open; there is nothing done about it; you may still present a list of their names yourself. Genus enim horum beneficiorum definitum lege non erat, for the law has not fixed any time for presenting that list, Cic. Fam. 5, 20. In praetura, in consulatu praefectum fabrûm detulit, sc. in beneficiis, Caesar gave in the name of Balbus, his chief engineer, in the list of those whom he recommended for their services, Cic. Balb. 28. It does not appear, that those whose names were thus given in to the treasury, (in beneficiis ad aërium delati sunt,) received any pecuniary emolument from the public; as the attendants of the overseers of aqueducts, Frontin de Aqued. Art. 100, p. 179. Poleni. The inserting of any person's name in this list seems to have been merely honorary, and to serve as a recommendation to future preferment.—* Cavianum meo beneficio in Novocomenses retulit, sc. Caesar, Caesar, by my recommendation, admitted him into the corporation of Novocomum, or ranked him amongst its citizens, Cic. Fam. 13, 35. Beneficia, virtutis causâ, tribuere, Cic. Balb. 16 f. Cum propter quosdam sordidos homines, qui beneficia Caesaris vendebant, (sold the privileges (of being Roman citizens) granted by Caesar,) tabulam in qua nomina civitate donatorum incisâ essent, revelli jussisset, sc. Caesar, Caesar ordered the brazen table on which their names were engraved to be pulled, and consequently those grants to be revoked.—Dolabellae dixit, nihil esse, quod de Mega vereretur, beneficium suum in eo manere, that his benefaction or favour to him should remain in its full force, that Mega should still continue to be a Roman citizen, ib. 36. Praeclara senatûs consulta fecisti, ne qua post Idus Martias immunitatis tabula, neve cujusquam beneficii figeretur, that no table, containing the names of those on whom Caesar had bestowed any immunity or privilege, should be fixed up in public, Cic. Phil. 2, 36. Itaque quum ita civitas Italiae data est, (the right of being Roman citizens was given to the Italians,) ut in octo tribus distribuerentur novi cives; ne potentia eorum et multitudo veterum civium dignitatem frangeret, plusque possent recepti in beneficium, (the Italians admitted into the freedom of the city should be more powerful,) quam auctores beneficii, (than the Romans, who had conferred that favour or privilege,) Cinna in omnibus tribubus eos se distributurum pollicitus est, Paterc. 2, 20. Rogo itaque, ut beneficio tuo legitime frui possit, (legally to enjoy the complete privileges of a Roman, i. e. Jus Quiritium), tribuas ei, et Alexandrinam civitatem et Romanam, Plin. Ep. 10, 22.—* Cooptatio collegiorum ad populi beneficium transferebatur, the right of choosing proper persons to supply vacancies in the different colleges of priests, which used to belong to the members of the colleges themselves, was transferred to the people, Cic. Amic. 25.—BENEFICIUM in the civil law usually denotes a privilege or peculiar right annexed to persons of a particular age, act or condition, Digest. passim.—beneficio alicujus, by means of any one, ib. so tuo beneficio, by your means, Cic. Fam. 11, 22. beneficio fortunæ, ib. 10, 4. ætatis, Quintil. 3; 1, 9. ingenii, Id. 2, 1, 2 et 5, 10, 121. beneficio illo legis—nihil tuitur, he does not avail himself of the privilege or indulgence granted him by the law, Cic. Phor. 2, 1, 22. triumphi plebis certamen sine effectu in beneficio apud primores patrum reliquere, gave up the fruitless contest, which they wished to be considered as an obligation conferred on the chief senators, Liv. 4, 7. Est enim ita comparatum (sc. naturâ), ut antiquiora beneficia subvertas, nisi illa posterioribus cumules, it is so ordered by nature, such is the disposition of mankind, that you cancel former favours, unless you grant new ones, Plin. Ep. 3, 4. meum erga te parentem tuum beneficium tueri debeo, to support, to make it of use by a new favour, Cic. Coel. 3.

BENEFICIARIUS, a, um, that may be given as a favour: quid haberes, quod in philosophia suspiceres, si beneficiaria res esset, if it could be given or received as a favour, Senec. Ep. 90.

BENEFICIARIUM, orum, soldiers exempted from certain services in the camp: beneficiarii—qui vocabant muneris, (al. munere vel muneribus,) beneficio, (sc. ducis,) who were exempted from certain military services, particularly in the camp; as the digging of the rampart, the carrying of fodder, wood, &c. Festus. Veget. 2, 19. Some purchased this exemption (vacatio munerum,) with money for a time, Tac. Ann. 1, 17 & 35. Hist. 1, 46. Those who obtained it in perpetuity by the favour of their general or tribune were called BENEFICIARIUM, beneficiary or privileged soldiers; and were esteemed very faithful, Caes. B. C. 1, 75. & 3, 88. They were superior to common soldiers, Veget. 2, 7. and under the Emperors were employed for various purposes, particularly to attend on governors of provinces, and to aid magistrates in the discharge of certain functions, Plin. Ep. 10, 32. & 36.

BENEVOLENS vel BENIVOLUS, a, um & BENEVOLENS, tis, (bene & volo,) benevolent, amicable, kind. Comp. benevolentior, benevolentissimus.

BENEVOLENS, adv. benevolently.—BENEVOLENTIA, æ, f. benevolence, good-will, kindness, favour.—* BENEVOLENS alicui, Cic. Cluent. 63. erga aliquem, Plaut. Capt. 2, 2, 100. tui BENEVOLENS, a friend of yours, Plaut. BUCINĀTOR a vocis similitudine (sono BU) et cantu dictus, Varr. L. L. 5, 7. Those who write BUCŪNA with a double C, derive it from BUCŒA, because it requires inflated cheeks to blow it. The BUCŪNA was at first made of the horn of an ox or goat, but afterwards of brass: tuba, quae directae est, appellatur, buccina, quae in semet ipsum aereo circulo flectitur, Veg. 3, 5. It was used to give a signal to shepherds or peasants, and to soldiers in war. pastorale canit (sc. Alecto) signum, cornuque recurvo Tartaream intendit vocem, i. e. buccinā, Virg. A. 7, 513 & 519. cava buccina sumitur illi (i. e. a Tritone) Tortilis, quae turbins crescit ab imo, Ov. Met. 1, 335. signum quod erat notum vicinitate, buccinā datur, Cic. Verr. 4, 44. bello dat signum rauco cruentum buccina, Virg. A. 11, 474. The BUCŪNA was particularly used in giving the signal when the watches were changed. et jam quarta canit venturum buccina lucem, Propert. 4, 4, 63. te gallorum, illum buccinarum cantus exsuscitat, the sound of the cocks rouses you (a lawyer in the city); the sound of the buccinae rouses him (an officer in the camp,) Cic. Muræen. 9. nam si Virgilio puer, et tolerabile desit hospitium, caderent omnes a crinibus hydra: surda nihil emeret grave buccina, had Virgil wanted a servant, and a tolerable lodging, all the snakes would have fallen from the hair of the fury Alecto, (whom he describes, A. 7, 447.) her dumb trumpet would have uttered no dreadful sound, (as, A. 7, 513.) i. e. if Virgil had not enjoyed all the conveniences of life, by the bounty of Maecenas, he would not have written with so great spirit, Juv. 7, 69. sed qui sermones? quae foedae buccinae famae? but what do men say of you? how loud the trumpet of your base fame? i. e. what a foul character have you abroad? (said of a miser. N.B. Fame is commonly painted with a trumpet.) Juv. 14, 152.

BUCŪNUM, i, n. a trumpet, or the sound of a trumpet; also a kind of shell-fish. buccinum est clangor buccinae, Isidor. 18, 4. Pliny speaking of bees, says, interdum statio ad portas more castrorum, noctu quies in matutinum, donec una (sc. apis) excitet gemino aut simplicis bombo, ut buccino aliquo, (by a trumpet,) Plin. 11, 10 pr. & fin. buccini purpura, purple of the best kind, Quinctil. 12, 10, 76. But this passage is read and explained differently.

BUCŪNO, āre, v. a. to sound a trumpet: saepe declamante illo ter buccinavit. (impers.) the trumpet sounded thrice, i. e. three hours elapsed; for it appears a buccina was sounded at the end of every hour, Sen. Controv. 3 praef. quum buccinatum est, aperiant, ut exire possint, when the signal is given with the trumpet, they open the folds that the cattle may go out, Varr. R. R. 2, 4, 20.

BUCŪNĀTOR, ōris, m. a trumpeter: buccinatore in castris relicto, a trumpeter who sounded at the changing of the watches, Caes. B. C. 2; 35.—metaph. Polliceris tē buccinatorem fore existimationis meae, Cic. Fam. 16, 21.

BULLA, æ, f, a bubble in water; a stud or boss:—intumuit; sic, ut pluvio perlucida caelo surgere bulla solet, as a transparent bubble uses to rise in rainy weather, Ov. Met. 10, 734. est homo bulla, Varr. R. R. pr. nos non pluris sumus, quam bullae, Petron. 42. Tungri civitas Galliae fontem habet insignem, plurimis bullis stellantem, sparkling with numerous bubbles, Plin. 31. 2 s. 8.—hence from similitude, aurea bullis cingula, belts with golden bosses or studs, Virg. Æ. 9, 359. so et notis fulserunt cingula bullis, ib. 12, 942. quis procul ille, humerus nodis (i. e. bullis) cui balteus asper subligat, Val. Flacc. 5, 579. jussine in splendorem dari bullas has foribus nostris? did I not order these studs on our door to be scoured or made bright? (the ancients used to ornament their doors with nails with large heads, made either of brass or some metal gilt and polished:) Plaut. Asin. 2, 4, 20. bullas aureas omnes ex valvis non dubitavi auferre, Cic. Verr. 4, 56. bulla super frontem (sc. servi) parvis argentea loris vincta movebatur, a silver ball or boss tied with small straps, moved on his forehead, Ovid. Met. 10, 114. A similar kind of boss or stud seems to be denoted, Vitruv. 9, 9. & Petron. c. 30.—quis enim tam nudus, ut illum bis ferat, Hetruscum puero si contigit aurum, (if he has worn a golden boss when a boy,

i. e. is a free-born citizen,) vel nodus tantum, et signum de paupere loro? (or only a poor leathern boss, i. e. is the son of a freed man,) Juvenal. 5, 164. The BULLA is called Hetruscum aurum, because the custom of wearing it was brought from Etruria, ib. It was anciently peculiar to the sons of nobility, but afterwards permitted to all free-born citizens, Macrob. ib. Boys laid aside the bulla with the toga praetexta, and consecrated it to the LARES, Pers. 5, 30. Propert. 4, 1, 131. dic senior bullâ dignissime, you simple old man, worthy again to wear the bulla, Juvenal. 13, 33.—A gold boss is mentioned among the toys of girls; et bulla aurea est, pater quam dedit mihi natali die, Plaut.
