Plants in space are plants grown in outer space typically in a weightless but pressurized controlled environment in specific space gardens.^[1] In the context of human spaceflight, they can be consumed as food and/or provide a refreshing atmosphere.^[2] Plants can metabolize carbon dioxide in the air to produce valuable oxygen, and can help control cabin humidity.^[3] Growing plants in space may provide a psychological benefit to human spaceflight crews.^[3]

The first challenge in growing plants in space is how to get plants to grow without gravity.^[4] This runs into difficulties regarding the effects of gravity on root development, providing appropriate types of lighting, and other challenges. In particular, the nutrient supply to root as well as the nutrient

A screenshot of a web-based translation tool interface. At the top, there is a toolbar with icons for back, forward, font size, link, list, quote, and a 'Cite' button. Below the toolbar, there is a section for 'Initial translation' with a dropdown menu set to 'Use Google Translate'. The main content area is titled 'Issues' and contains a warning message: '⚠ Part of your translation contains 92% of unmodified text'. The message explains that automatic translation is only a starting point and that the content must be accurate and natural. It also states that the translation is likely to be deleted if reviewed by other editors. A 'Learn more' link is provided. At the bottom of the issues section, there is a '✓ Mark as resolved' button.

Sejarah

The ukulele is commonly associated with music from Hawaii where the name roughly translates as "jumping flea", perhaps because of the movement of the player's fingers. Legend attributes it to the nickname of the Englishman Edward William Purvis, one of King Kalākaua's officers, because of his small size, fidgety manner, and playing expertise. One of the earliest appearances of the word ukulele in print (in the sense of a stringed instrument) is in the Metropolitan Museum of

Proposed translation from Google ...

Ukulele umumnya dikaitkan dengan musik dari Hawaii di mana namanya secara kasar diterjemahkan sebagai "jumping flea", mungkin karena gerakan jari-jari pemain.
